HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 15, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEWART (COCHRANE)—FAILURE TO DISPLAY CANADIAN FLAG IN HOUSE

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on this day, the 15th of February, because it is six years ago that a new Canadian flag was promulgated in Canada. It has long been my contention that regardless of the opinions we may have individually as to the design of that flag, we all wish to honour the flag of our country in a way that is befitting.

Mr. Horner: Stop the government cutting it up.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Since most legislatures in the world display their flags at their centres of government and since in Canada we have never had that custom in the House of Commons, it would appear to me that there would be unanimous consent by hon. members to have the flag of Canada displayed in this House.

My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, rests on the point that the members of this House are denied the presence of the flag in the House when enacting the laws of this country and that the people of Canada who come here to visit would also like to see their flag displayed here but up to now have been denied this privilege.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane has given the Chair notice of the question of privilege he proposes to submit to the House at this time. As the hon. member knows, the Chair is required to rule whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I think the House will agree with the Chair that although the hon. member may have a point of debate and a valuable suggestion for consideration by the House, the matter should not be raised by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member may have a motion which could be submitted to the House in the regular way, but it cannot be brought to our attention in this way. I regret, therefore, that the matter cannot be pursued further by way of a question of privilege.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ISRAEL RESPECTING COMMERCIAL SCHEDULED AIR SERVICES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table in French and English an agreement recently entered into by the government of Canada with the government of Israel concerning commercial scheduled air services.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 80—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Would the Minister without Portfolio responsible for Information Canada table in Parliament all the background studies, consultant reports, etc., that were prepared by the Task Force on Government Information?

2. Would the Minister also table in the House all the reports, documents, studies, undertaken in the Privy Council Office regarding the establishment of Information Canada?

Mr. Barney J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the studies and reports prepared by the Task Force on Government Information are at present being assembled and indexed. When this work is completed it is proposed to submit a set to the Library of Parliament, where they will be available to all members.

In reply to part 2, Mr. Speaker, these internal documents and as such are privileged and not customarily disclosed.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ARRESTS OF MEMBERS OF COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 371—Mr. Coates:

1. Were any members of the Company of Young Canadians arrested under the War Measures Act since October 16, 1970 and, if so (a) what are the names of the persons arrested (b) where did they reside (c) how long were they held in each instance (d) were charges laid against any of them (e) are they still members of the Company of Young Canadians?

2. Were any of the offices of the Company of Young Canadians closed since October 16, 1970 and, if so (a) which offices (b) at whose request (c) in each instance, what were the names of people involved in these offices as members of the Company of Young Canadians?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Solicitor General and the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1. Yes. One as of November 5, 1970. (a) It is not in the public interest to release the name of any person who is arrested under the War Measures Act and then released without being charged. (b) Quebec city. (c) Held five days. (d) No. (e) Yes.

2. No.

DEFECTIVE TIRES

Question No. 522—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring tire manufacturers to maintain records of the names and addresses of tire purchasers so that they may be notified if the tires prove defective?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Motor Vehicle Safety Act does not require tire manufacturers to maintain records of the names and addresses of tire purchasers so that they may be notified if the tires prove defective. Such defect notification, under the Act, is the responsibility of the vehicle manufacturer, distributor or importer in respect to the tires with which the vehicle is equipped. The provincial authorities are reviewing the quality control of tires retailed in their provinces and consideration is being given to tire standards regulations.

MOTORCYCLE CONTROLS

Question No. 523—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring the standardization of motorcycle controls as to location, operation and identification of such controls to facilitate their safe operation?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Over the years, a standard set of controls has evolved for such motor vehicles as passenger cars and trucks. Where operators may frequently change vehicle, such standardization of control location, operation and identification contributes to the safe operation of the vehicle. Consideration is now being given to standardization of controls on both motorcycles and snowmobiles.

EQUIPMENT OF MOTORCYCLES WITH SIGNAL LAMPS

Question No. 524—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring that all motorcycles be equipped with turn signal lamps?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Motorcycles present a poorly defined target in the general traffic environment, particularly at night, and are capable of high mobility. These two factors combine to make it desirable to increase the visual impact of this type of vehicle and the intentions of the operator. A contribution to this end can be made by requiring the fitting of the signal lamps to all motorcycles, and consideration is being given to this.

AUTOMOBILES—CONSUMER INFORMATION BOOKLET

Question No. 525—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to the publication of an annual consumer information booklet designed to help the new car buyer know more about the safety performance of the automobile?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The publication of an annual consumer information booklet about the safety performance of motor vehicles is under review. So far it has not been established that this information would be of practical value to the consumer or that it would be an appropriate requirement of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act.

DISABLED VEHICLE WARNING DEVICES

Question No. 526—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring motor vehicle manufacturers to equip new vehicles with warning devices, which, in emergencies, can be erected on or near the roadside to alert approaching drivers of the presence of a disabled vehicle?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): For many years, provincial regulation of truck operations has included requirements relating to the provision and use of emergency flares or equivalent devices. Such devices offer an advance warning of any disabled vehicle. Consideration is being given to extending this practice and assisting provincial regulation through a requirement that all motor vehicles be equipped with devices having specified characteristics.

CONTROL OF TRUCKS AND BUSES NOISE LEVELS

Question No. 567—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to setting standards to control the noise level inside trucks and buses?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Motor Vehicle Safety Act provides authority to establish standards limiting the noise level of vehicles. Noise regulations have already been issued for snowmobiles and consideration is now being given to further regulations establishing standards to control the noise levels of trucks and buses.

CNR—NEWFOUNDLAND PASSENGER SERVICE

Question No. 587—Mr. Carter:

1. What was the number of revenue passengers carried in 1969 and up to September 30, 1970, by CNR in Newfoundland?

2. What was the total revenue received?

3. What was the cost of operating CNR's passenger transport service in Newfoundland during the same period?

4. What was the profit or losses on the operation during the same period?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

	1969	January-November 1970
1. Revenue passengers	137,169	138,905
2. Total revenue	$807,498	$ 766,177
3. Operating expenses	$975,866	$1,145,474*
4. Loss	$168,368	$ 379,297

* The increase in operating expenses is attributable to higher wages for bus drivers, repair costs (due to heavy accumulation of mileage resulting in major overhauls), modifications to buses to comply with the requirements of the provincial government and an increase in the number of buses operated from 20 to 22.

CNR—NUMBER OF PASSENGERS TRAVELLING BETWEEN MONTREAL AND OTTAWA

Question No. 640—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many pasengers travelled on CNR trains, Ottawa to Montreal and Montreal to Ottawa, each week for the past three years?

2. What percentage of full capacity did this represent?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. The weekly average number of passengers travelling on all trains operating between Montreal and Ottawa were as follows:

Ottawa to Montreal	2637	2577	2755

2. As train consists are adjusted to meet the day to day and seasonal demands, the information required to answer the question is not readily available and would entail considerable time and expense to develop.

CNR—NUMBER OF MEALS SERVED ON TRAINS TRAVELLING BETWEEN MONTREAL AND OTTAWA

Question No. 641—Mr. Orlikow:

How many meals were served on CNR trains, Ottawa to Montreal and Montreal to Ottawa, each week for the past three years?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: The weekly average number of meals served on all trains operating between Montreal and Ottawa were as follows:

Ottawa to Montreal	811	792	705

For the year 1970 the weekly average represents about fifty meals per one way dining car trip or approximately two sittings per one way trip.

MAXIMUM SPEED CONTROL ON AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 653—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring the installation of a device on motor vehicles which will limit speed to a maximum of 85 miles per hour and which will automatically blow such vehicle's horns when that speed is reached?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Consideration is being given to a proposed standard for high speed warning and control on motor vehicles. One proposed standard currently under discussion in the United States would require that the vehicle's horn be actuated and the vehicular warning signals flash continuously when the vehicle exceeds a designated speed.

AIR CANADA—MANAGEMENT CONSULTATION REPORT

Question No. 663—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the government tabled the management consultation report on Air Canada, and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reasons?

2. What company acted as management consultant?

3. What was it paid?

4. Is the administrative reorganization of Air Canada completed?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: In so far as Air Canada is concerned: re: 1, 2, 3 and 4: The document requested is a proprietary internal company document relating to internal matters of management and administration within the Company and it is not intended, therefore, to table it in Parliament. However, as the Minister of Transport has previously indicated in reply to earlier similar enquiries, questions relating to the reorganization of Air Canada might quite properly be addressed to the executive officers of Air Canada at the appropriate time when they appear before Parliamentary Committee, in view of the complexity of this subject.

PENITENTIARY ACT—NUMBER OF PERSONS CONFINED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 698—Mr. Sullivan:

1. As of January 1, 1971, how many persons were confined in institutions operated by the Government of Canada under the Penitentiaries Act?

2. Of those in such institutions, how many were in the age groups (a) 13-15 (b) 16-20 (c) 21-24 (d) 25-30 (e) 31-40 (f) 41-50 (g) 51-60 (h) over 61?

3. What are the names and locations of all such institutions and the number of inmates by institution?

4. What different types, e.g. maximum security, minimum security, etc., is each such institution?

5. What are the names and salaries of all (a) psychiatrists (b) psychologists (c) sociologists (d) social workers (e) welfare and classification officers (f) correctional officers, employed and rendering services to inmates of all such institutions?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. 7,154.

2. (a) None; (b) 857; (c) 1,588; (d) 1,857; (e) 1,703; (f) 811; (g) 250; (h) 88.

3 and 4.

TRAINING OF PENITENTIARY CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

Question No. 700—Mr. Sullivan:

1. What training, if any, is given to guards or correctional officers before hire into the Penitentiary Service?

2. How many staff colleges for the training of personnel for the Penitentiary Service were operated by the Government of Canada since September 1, 1969?

3. How many persons in the federal Penitentiary Service have been dismissed since September 1, 1969 and for what reasons?

4. How many employees of the federal Penitentiary Service have been disciplined in the last twelve months and for what reasons?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. On recruitment by the Canadian Penitentiary Service on a probationary basis, each correctional officer is given a six weeks' course regarding his custodial duties before he is given further on-the-job training.

2. Three.

3. Eleven employees of the federal Penitentiary Service have been dismissed for the following reasons, since September 1, 1969: Abandoning their posts, 8; Unsatisfactory performance during probationary period, 2; Committing a criminal offence, 1.

4. Ninety-eight employees of the federal Penitentiary Service have been disciplined for the following reasons during the period Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1970; Absence without leave, 18; Negligently performing duties, 29; Under influence of alcohol, 6; Abuse of leave privileges, 6; Sleeping while on duty, 8; Failure to obey lawful orders, 21; Being insolent or insulting to superiors, 3; Committing an act that is unbecoming as a member of the Service, 4; Causing damage to government property, 1; Refusing to answer a question when required to do so at an institutional court, 1; Making a false statement related to his appointment or employment, 1; Total 98.

PUNISHMENT AND SUICIDES IN FEDERAL PENAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 701—Mr. Sullivan:

1. How many inmates in federal penal institutions received physical or corporal punishment in such institutions since September 1, 1969?

2. (a) How many cases of (i) suicide (ii) attempted suicide, occurred in such institutions since September 1, 1969 (b) on what dates (c) at what institutions did the acts take place?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. One, administered at Kingston Penitentiary by order of an outside court.

2. Act	Dates	Institution
(a)(i) Suicides 23:	(b) September 6; December 16, 1969	(c) Dorchester Penitentiary

Note: Thirty-five of the attempted suicide cases were considered to be manipulative gestures on the part of the inmates concerned. However, there is no positive way to differentiate between those and genuine suicidal attempts.

FEDERAL PENAL INSTITUTIONS—HOSTAGES TAKEN

Question No. 702—Mr. Sullivan:

How many times since September 1, 1969, have hostages been taken by inmates in federal penal institutions?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Eight times.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CARIBBEAN REGION

Question No. 739—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many Caribbean countries are to receive financial support by way of grants and/or loans in the year 1971?
2. What is the amount of each?
3. What are the terms of repayment, if any?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Allocations for fiscal year 1971/72 have not been approved by Cabinet but during fiscal year 1970/71 the following countries, country groups, and institutions received allocations for development assistance under Canada's program of assistance to the Caribbean region in the amounts indicated:

	Grants	Loans	Total
Jamaica	1.20	4.00	5.20
Trinidad and Tobago	—	5.00	5.00
Guyana	2.00	2.50	4.50
Barbados	.80	1.00	1.80
British Honduras	.50	—	.50
Leeward and Windward Islands	6.00	—	6.00
University of the West Indies	1.00	—	1.00
Total	11.50	12.50	24.00

3. In the case of a grant, no repayment is required. Development loans are made to Guyana, on terms of 0 per cent interest repayable over 50 years, including a ten-year grace period. Loans to Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and Barbados are made on terms of 3 per cent interest repayable over 30 years, including a seven-year grace period.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT—GRANTS MADE TO RESIDENTS OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON

Question No. 743—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. What grants have been made under the Small Businesses Loans Act to residents of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon?

2. What were the amounts of the grants and to whom were they made?

3. What was the location of the proposed business and what was the purpose of each grant?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1, 2, and 3. The Small Businesses Loans Act does not provide for grants to be made. The Federal government guarantees certain loans made to individual applicants by the chartered banks and other designated lenders. The lenders then report their loans under the program, by bank region. Small Businesses Loans made to borrowers in the Yukon and Northwest Territories are reported under the bank regions concerned, British Columbia and Alberta respectively, and it would not be practicable to extract the information requested.

EXCISE TAX RECEIVED FROM TOBACCO SALES

Question No. 757—Mr. Robinson:

What is the total amount of excise tax received from the sale of tobacco for each of the years 1960 to 1970 inclusive?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue):

Statement of Excise Tax Collected on Tobacco Products for Fiscal Years Ending March 31, 1960 to March 31, 1970

Year	Cigars	Cigarettes	Manufactured Tobacco	Totals
1959-60	$2,602,765.19	$163,607,872.50	$19,291,881.28	$185,502,518.97
1960-61	2,754,955.93	172,196,637.28	18,697,064.97	193,648,658.18
1961-62	2,775,551.41	185,175,768.13	19,599,179.12	207,550,498.66
1962-63	3,372,009.87	195,312,891.31	19,122,793.69	217,807,694.87

1969-70	4,785,933.84	272,949,317.77	18,109,977.02	295,845,228.63

PAYMENTS MADE UNDER P.F.A.A. PROGRAM AND CROP INSURANCE PLAN

Question No. 771—Mr. Southam:

1. What were the total amounts paid out in 1970 to farmers under PFAA in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

2. What were the total amounts paid to farmers for 1970 in each province under the Crop Insurance Plan?

3. Is it the intention of the government to expand the present all-risk crop insurance plan to cover crops other than the present wheat, oats and barley, and to all areas of the provinces?

4. Is it the government's intention to carry on with the PFAA program?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Manitoba, $637,166.50; Saskatchewan, $1,131,121.50; Alberta, $3,683,-867.50.

Note: The above figures apply to payments made in the calendar year 1970 which include payments with respect to crop losses in both 1969 and 1970. Payments made in 1970 with respect to 1970 crop losses are as follows: Manitoba, $984; Saskatchewan, $115,551; Alberta, $146,-965.

2. Manitoba, $1,918,000; Saskatchewan, $175,000; Alberta, $1,650,000.

3. The provinces are responsible for initiating any expansion of crop insurance plans to take in new areas or cover additional crops. The federal Crop Insurance Act and Regulations permit federal contributions to be made with respect to insurance of all major crops produced in Canada in any area covered by a federal-provincial crop insurance agreement.

4. Any government decision with respect to the future of P.F.A.A. will be announced in the usual manner.

AGRICULTURE—IRRIGATION AND DRY LAND FARMING STUDIES

Question No. 841—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture conducted any studies as to the added costs incurred in irrigation farming as compared to cost of dry-land farming in the Outlook district of Saskatchewan?

2. Have any specific studies been undertaken or completed as to the economic viability of irrigation farming and, if so, are these studies available?

3. Has the Department given consideration to conducting personal interviews with farmers who are now engaged in irrigation farming, in order to determine whether such an operation is viable and, if not, would the Department give consideration to such interviews?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The only study in which the Department participated was done in 1951 in co-operation with Professor H. Van Vliet of the University of Saskatchewan, which was an economic appraisal of the South Saskatchewan River Development.

2. Yes.

3. Yes; but other priorities for staff available have prevented carrying out such a study. An economist of the provincial department is conducting economic evaluations on particular aspects of irrigated farm production at Outlook.

NEW BRUNSWICK—SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 850—Mr. Crossman:

1. What amount of money did the Government of Canada pay to the Province of New Brunswick in provincial sales taxes on building materials during each of the past five fiscal years?

2. What amount of money did the Government of Canada generate for the Province of New Brunswick in the form of revenue from the provincial sales tax on building materials during each of the past five fiscal years (a) with respect to publicly financed housing (b) with respect to technical, trades and vocational schools (c) other cost shared projects (d) with respect to other purchases?

Order for Return

3. What percentage would that be of the total revenue under the provincial sales tax on building materials?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Government departments do not pay provincial sales tax, although their contractors as final consumers of the building materials do pay the tax. Thus federal departments bear the tax, but since it is indirect, have no records of the amounts which could be attributed to tax payments.

The Crown corporations listed in the schedule to the Crown Corporations (Provincial Taxes and Fees) Act do pay provincial sales taxes on purchases of goods including building materials. However, even in these cases, most of their construction work is carried out by contractors who pay the tax, and indirectly pass it on to the corporation.

2 and 3. Information is not available.

RATE OF DUTY ON TIMBER IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES

Question No. 873—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Do Canadian firms who carry out timber operations in the State of Maine and ship the timber into Canada have to pay duty at the border and, if so, at what rate?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Timber imported by Canadian firms operating in Maine is required to be entered at Customs in the normal manner. Providing the timber is not further manufactured than sawn it is admissible under Tariff Item 50040-1, free of Duty from the United States.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Question No. 216—Mr. Hales:

1. What was the net amount received by the government for the HMCS Bonaventure?

2. Was it a cash deal or were credit arrangements made?

3. What instruments, fittings or other material was salvaged from the Bonaventure before it was sold for scrap by the government?

4. Which items have been sold, and what was the payment received for each?

5. What is the anticipated value of each remaining item?

6. When are the remaining items expected to be sold?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCREASED FEDERAL WELFARE COST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He may still be involved in duties in Saskatoon, but I am sure the Minister of Finance will be able, in any event, to give me the answer. Does the minister or the government have an estimate of the increased cost of welfare to the federal government caused by the increased levels of unemployment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of the question with regard to the expected increased costs of welfare for this year. I would be glad to get the figure for my hon. friend.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister obtain this information and give it to the House, particularly for the benefit of the Prime Minister who seems to think that high welfare costs would result from programs designed to get the economy moving again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ESTIMATES OF SEASONALLY ADJUSTED FIGURE AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT FOR 1971

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the speech which he made in Regina on Saturday night. Referring to the present economic recession and high rate of unemployment, the Prime Minister said:

> The federal government is determined that we shall get over this temporary problem.

In an endeavour to find out how temporary is "temporary", may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has any estimate as to what will be the seasonally adjusted figure for unemployment for 1971 and whether the government has any estimate as to the GNP growth rate in constant dollars for the same year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the time of budget speeches we try to give these forecasts to the House and to the country as best we can, but it is not usual—

Mr. Woolliams: You are never right.

Mr. Trudeau: As the member says.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EXTENSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS AND WELFARE PAYMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the same speech the Prime Minister stated:

> The challenge is to remedy the wrongs and to assist the injured.

I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to do anything about the present unemployment insurance benefits and the eligibility provisions. Also, does the government intend to do anything about providing adequate welfare for those who are presently banned because of the fact they are transients?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer, of course, is that we have just recently increased the benefits to the unemployed by 10 per cent, and that very soon we will have a bill before the House which will present to the House a much improved unemployment insurance system. We hope we will have the support of all parties in passing it.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF CROWN CORPORATIONS AS MEANS OF REDUCING UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this morning's CBC program, "The World at Eight", contained a statement that the federal minister, "Jean-Lac" Pepin, said that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The federal trade minister, Jean-Luc Pepin, said that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —increasing the number of crown corporations may be one way of reducing unemployment in Canada. I ask the Prime Minister if the minister was making a statement of government policy? If so, which Crown corporations does the government have in mind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of the statement, Mr. Speaker. I will ask Mr. "Jean-Lac" Pepin about it.

FINANCE MINISTER'S FORECAST OF REDUCED UNEMPLOYMENT—RELATIONSHIP TO INCREASE IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. The minister has made repeated statements that the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment will decline substantially through 1971. Is this based on any forecast with regard to the real increase in the gross national product?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made some forecasts in my recent budget speech about the general outlook in Canada for 1971, with which most responsible economists agree—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Name one.

Mr. Benson: —which will lead to an increase in the gross national product throughout 1971 with a resultant decrease in unemployment throughout the year—not quickly, as I have said previously. Dealing with seasonally adjusted rates, which my friend sometimes supports in summer and hates in winter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister be good enough to answer a simple question in a straightforward manner? Will he tell the House whether his forecasts with regard to a reduction in unemployment are based upon a specific estimate with regard to the growth of the GNP in 1971?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would let me answer his question instead of jumping up, I would be pleased to answer it. We are continually making forecasts as to what will happen to the GNP, productivity and business activity in 1971. I would not state there would be a decline in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment if I did not think there was going to be an increase in the GNP during 1971.

Mr. Stanfield: If the Minister of Finance is making these forecasts, will he tell the House what the estimated increase in the gross national product is? That is a simple question and one capable of a simple answer instead of all this skating and evasion.

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to give a simple answer when I make my next budget statement to the House.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

AVAILABILITY OF INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS TO RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour prompted by the erroneous statement of the Prime Minister. Would the Minister of Labour assure us that the miners idled in Cape Breton through the efforts of a Crown company will get the 10 per cent increase which was made available on January 3, 1971?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The policy of the Unemployment Insurance Commission as far as the 10 per cent increase is concerned was not to take this into consideration when assessing other income. In other words, no one was to be penalized for the special benefit as a result of the 10 per cent.

Mr. MacInnis: When the minister says nobody will be penalized, does he mean that Devco will not be penalized but that the men will be?

Mr. Mackasey: I am more interested in the men than I am in Devco.

Mr. MacInnis: Will the minister follow through and make sure the men will get the 10 per cent, not Devco?

Mr. Mackasey: The men who are on retirement from Devco between the ages of 60 and 65 are in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits and if they are entitled to the maximum they are deriving $58 from unemployment insurance benefits. The Unemployment Insurance Commission has—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might return to the question raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond in a few moments, but there are other supplementaries, I believe, on the general question raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Perhaps we might return to this matter in a few minutes.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I shall only take the time of the House long enough to tell the minister that the statement he has just made is not in accordance with the facts.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—NUMBER OF PERSONS WHOSE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS HAVE EXPIRED

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): In view of the fact that unemployment insurance benefits can run out after a period of only 15 weeks, can the Minister of Labour advise the House as to the number of persons who have exhausted their right to unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I could inquire and find out, but the hon. member is asking for statistical information and to obtain it would take a little research.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will allow the hon. member a supplementary, but he might resume his seat. I am inclined to agree with the hon. minister's comment made in his reply to the hon. member's question, but the hon. member might like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Rose: I fully appreciate that this is information which could be given as part of a statement on motions. I was about to ask the minister whether he would include the number of people who are in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits and who, because these benefits are inadequate, are also in receipt of welfare?

Mr. Mackasey: One of the attractive features of the new plan is that it will be unnecessary for those drawing unemployment insurance benefits to supplement it with welfare.

An hon. Member: Next year.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ENGLISH AND FRENCH TEXTS OF STATEMENT OF CONCLUSIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, Friday last, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I asked the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) whether he could explain the difference between the French and English texts of the communique published following the last federal-provincial conference, as recorded moreover at page 3325 of Hansard, especially the terms "exprimer sa sympathie" and "admettre ou accepter la proposition".

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister has effectively submitted the problem to me. I cannot evidently say more than the following: the communique was drawn up partly in English and partly in French and the translators have done their best to give the same meaning to both texts. I, for one, to do not see any significant difference between the English expression "expressed its sympathy for this basic social objective" and the French expression "se déclare en accord avec cet objectif social fondamental". The Conference has not decided which of the two versions would be the official one, and I think that under the circumstances, everyone may choose the meaning he prefers.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister will agree that there is a difference between the two versions and that if in Quebec one refers to the French version, that would be quite a different proposition from, let us say, in Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LAPSING OF SEASONAL BENEFITS IN MAY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Is his department giving consideration to the problems that will arise for the very large number of people who are now drawing seasonal unemployment insurance benefits when these benefits cease automatically on May 15 if they are still unemployed? Is the government giving consideration to what can be done to alleviate the ill effects of this situation on the people concerned as well as on the municipalities which will have to carry them on welfare if something is not done?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical to the extent that we do not know what the employment figures will be in the month of May.

We do not know what the position will be on May 15 and what will happen to the people who were drawing seasonal unemployment insurance benefits. If and when any change in government policy in regard to extending the period is arrived at, it will be announced in the usual manner in the House.

WELFARE

MEETING OF CERTAIN LIBERAL MEMBERS WITH METRO TORONTO COUNCIL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since certain Liberal members are meeting with the Metro Toronto council today, which meeting, I believe, is not being blessed by the local ministers from the city of Toronto, I wonder whether the Prime Minister and the government have indicated to these members any particular direction the government is following regarding the great problem of welfare—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton West on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: If Your Honour was worried about the preamble to my question, I can certainly cut it short. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether any special indication was given these members regarding what to say to the Metro Toronto council—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that his inquiry is not in order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

IMMEDIATE AMENDMENT TO HELP THOSE OUT OF WORK LONGER THAN SIX MONTHS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether the government has any immediate plan to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to try to help the 108,000 people who have been out of work for longer than six months?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question, of course, has been asked on a number of occasions. I suggest to the hon. member and to the House that if this kind of information is to be given to the House by the government it should be given by way of a statement on motions. The hon. member is inviting the government to make a general statement. Perhaps he would indicate whether this is what he would like the minister to do in due course.

Mr. Lundrigan: No, Mr. Speaker, not in due course; I should like the minister to answer, yes or no, whether the government has a plan. It is quite a simple question.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has made it very clear that there will be a complete overhaul of the Unemployment Insurance Act very shortly. This consideration has been preceded by a white paper and by an in-depth study of the proposal by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I think the Prime Minister has indicated that we should be tabling a bill very soon, so I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is going to have to contain his impatience until that time.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER TO EXAMINE ADMINISTRATIVE PROBLEMS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the administrative problems in regard to payment of unemployment insurance seem to be increasing, would the minister consider appointing a special commissioner, someone outside the commission, to look into these problems and to make a recommendation in this regard as quickly as possible?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been very concerned over the last year about this problem and has made many constructive suggestions in writing, all of which have been taken into consideration. An in-depth study of the whole administration is proceeding at the same time as we are formulating the legislation, and I think we should see some basic changes in the administration introduced at the same time as we introduce the legislation.

RAPESEED—PERIOD UNDER DELIVERY QUOTAS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board arising out of the confusion in reference to rapeseed. Would the minister advise the House how long rapeseed has been placed on a quota basis under the Canadian Wheat Board, and is he prepared to table a copy of the regulations that introduced quotas for this production?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board has been operating quotas for rapeseed for some time in connection with over-all responsibility to see to it that handling facilities are equitably available for the various grains. I do not have at hand the specific dates but I would be glad to find them and furnish them to the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of producers who seem to have had their permit books seized by officers because of a misunderstanding. First of all, they had long-term contracts, and then they came under quotas and neither the elevator agents nor the producers knew about it. Are these people in fact going to be charged under the law with an offence?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the individual cases to which the hon. member has made reference if he will give me the information. There has been no sudden or recent change in the quota requirements, although there may well have been some misunderstanding on the part of some people. I will certainly be glad to investigate this.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, since the minister is going to look into this matter, and as he has not told us yet when rapeseed was put on quota, will he look into the situation of those producers who had long-term contracts and who have been frustrated completely by a silent, quiet Order in Council?

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This is the second time recently that I have asked a question which I believe to be in order and the minister has not been allowed to answer. This is a very serious question affecting thousands of people in western Canada and their livelihood. The minister wanted to answer the question and he was getting to his feet but you cut him off.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point. Perhaps the minister should have been allowed to reply. I will give him the floor at this time.

Mr. Lang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rapeseed quotas have been in effect for quite some time.

Mr. Woolliams: How long?

Mr. Lang: It depends on what the hon. member is talking about, Mr. Speaker. Rapeseed quotas for crushing mills have existed this year. Rapeseed quotas for producers have existed for several years. There has been no recent change and, of course, the quota system cannot be over-ridden by individual contracts entered into by individual producers. I very much wanted to answer, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure that most farmers know the answer and so I was not so concerned if the question was unanswered.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister is this. If what he says, and I am not arguing with him because he has knowledge of his department, is correct, why were thousands of producers in western Canada permitted to enter into contracts, apart from any quota system, under which they sold their rapeseed and other commodities without any interference from the minister or the department?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that the hon. member, who knows a good deal more about law than he does about grain, would know that contracts between individuals are not only basically within provincial jurisdiction but are something that it is very difficult to do anything about in advance of the fact.

FAILURE OF INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE TO REACH AGREEMENT ON PRICES—ADVICE TO FARMERS PRIOR TO PLANTING

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Since no agreement on grain prices has been reached at the United Nations wheat conference at Geneva, will the minister indicate what advice he will be giving to farmers with regard to growing wheat in the coming year since the time for planting is approaching?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we anticipate still that it may be possible to give a package of information to producers prior to March 1, including information which may help them in their final planting decisions. Of course, on the subject of the grains arrangement itself, as I indicated earlier there has been a significant degree of co-operation concerning prices as well as some order in respect of pricing even without an effective minimum under the grains arrangement. Therefore nothing very much has changed as a result of the events in Geneva.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—MEETINGS WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS ON PROTECTION OF PRODUCERS' POSITION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that at the meeting he had with the Federation of Agriculture last week it was stated by that organization that the proposals in respect of the grain receipts policy do not represent an adequate undertaking by the federal government to assist in protecting the position of the Prairie grain producers, is it his intention to meet with the organizations and work out a position mutually satisfactory to the government and these organizations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we had a very good discussion with the Federation of Agriculture. Of course, the point was made that the farm organizations and the farmers may never be completely satisfied that the amount which is being paid by the government or the treasury for their particular industry is enough, and we might be left with a difference of opinion in this regard. I think we did agree that this was a matter which required continual discussion and consideration. The point was also made, of course, that while what we are doing may not be regarded by them as enough, it was a substantial improvement over the previous situation, and in that regard I think they did express some gratitude.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, since the representations made to the government by the federation were substantially backed by a previous meeting with the National Farmers Union, would the minister not concede that the condition of the farmer is really not that good?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the supplementary question asked by the hon. member is in the form of an argument and is not in order.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—ACCEPTANCE OF NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION PROPOSALS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the 14-point proposals put to him by the National Farmers Union and the request by the Farmers Union that the government re-examine its proposals on the grain stabilization program, will he say whether some or all of these 14 points will be implemented and whether or not the government is re-examining its position on the grain stabilization program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether the word "re-examination" is the correct word to use when an examination in fact is going on. A good number of the points made by the Farmers' Union, as well as by the CFA, are matters really endorsing what we have already proposed to do. Of course, much of the rest of their briefs contain matters which we are examining and considering on the way to a final decision.

FISHERIES

FAILURE OF NOVA SCOTIA TO PARTICIPATE IN SALTFISH CORPORATION—ACTION TO PREVENT LOSS OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. Since the government of Nova Scotia has not agreed to enabling legislation which would permit Nova Scotia to become a participating province in the Saltfish Corporation, will the minister use his influence with the provincial premier in order to prevent the closing down of this traditional industry in Nova Scotia, which will further add to the problems of the fishing industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the saltfish industry can operate either within or outside the Saltfish Corporation. It is my understanding, however, that only Newfoundland-Labrador and the North Shore in Quebec will come under the corporation in 1971.

REASON FOR SHIPS HAVING TO WAIT TO BE LOADED AT VANCOUVER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board how many vessels are waiting in Vancouver harbour for the loading of grain and, if the number is substantial, what is the reason for this?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of whether it is substantial or not is one of opinion. There have been several vessels waiting for berths there in the last little while. The Wheat Board has indicated in a press release which came into my hands today that many ships which were booked in for November and December are only arriving now because of congestion in foreign ports at times when they should have been unloading. The Wheat Board has explained that in the interest of attempting to move the maximum amount of grain they must run the risk that on occasion more boats will be there than there are berths available. They have also indicated that the grain is moving very quickly into these boats and that there should not be any great delay in berthing the remaining boats.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell us how many vessels are waiting?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly have to check that to give the figure for this very moment.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL DEBATE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the views expressed over the weekend by farm organizations I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board whether he will now reconsider his previous statements and hold discussions with the Government House Leader and others with a view to providing for a special debate on the government's grain policy proposals before the government finalizes its position?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think we have been having a very good general debate on the farm proposals and farm policy throughout the country, and I look forward to the occasion of a debate on these matters in the House at the time the legislation comes forward.

PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY—PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON WHEAT BOARD TO ASSIST DISCUSSION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In order to aid in the discussion that is going on with regard to grain policy, is it the minister's intention to see to it that the Menzies Report on the Canadian Wheat Board is made public?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Wheat Board is in the process of having the report printed and as soon as that is completed the report will be made public.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF BREATHALIZER PROVISIONS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Since several judges in Canada have questioned the breathalizer as a criterion to determine whether an accused person is guilty and several others have challenged its legality, can the Minister of Justice tell us whether this provision of the Criminal Code can be amended?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

FILMS

TAKEOVER OF CINEPIX BY KALVEX INCORPORATED OF NEW YORK—PROTECTION OF DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION INVESTMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. On February 4 I inquired about the sale of Cinepix, a Canadian film company, to Kalvex of New York. I inquired particularly concerning what steps have been taken to protect the investment of the Canadian Film Development Corporation in this former Canadian company.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that I had already replied to the hon. member that all necessary steps had been taken, at the time of the transaction, for adequate protection not only of interest-bearing loans, but also of loans involving profit-sharing arrangements regarding films produced by Cinepix.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, is it the policy of the Canadian Film Development Corporation to invest in other than Canadian Companies or does it exclusively support only Canadian companies?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: No, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there are marginal cases, if you wish, such as co-productions. Canada has signed co-production agreements with some foreign countries. However, it would take too long to explain in detail the CFDC's policy in this regard. Briefly, the policy consists in requiring, in order that a company may obtain a loan or other assistance from the Canadian Film Development Corporation, that a certain number of conditions be fulfilled so that the film may be 50 per cent Canadian at the least. But a simple answer to the question whether it is the CFDC's policy to finance foreign film companies would be no.

SWORDFISH—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF POLLUTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. How soon does the hon. gentleman expect to announce the decision made with regard to the mercury pollution problem in the swordfishery and what will the decision be?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we are working closely with the province of Nova Scotia and we hope to be able to make an announcement shortly as to the precise arrangements for swordfishermen.

CONSULTATION WITH U.S. FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION ON TOLERABLE MERCURY LEVEL IN FISH

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the minister had any further contact with the United States Food and Drug Administration to ascertain whether the tolerable level of mercury in fish can be increased above the present level of .5 parts per million?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, a conference is scheduled for later this week in Ottawa sponsored by the Royal Society to deal with this subject. Experts from all over the world are coming here. After that conference is over we may have information which will be useful in this regard.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY—ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF RETURN OF BASIC INCREASE BY CERTAIN PENSIONERS—USE MADE OF MONEY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that many old age pensioners, either directly or through members of this House, are sending contributions of 42 cents to the minister, I wonder if receipt of these contributions is being acknowledged and what use is being made of the money?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received three such amounts of money. I am acknowledging those letters. The money will be deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. I would hope my hon. friends opposite would be honest enough to send their money to me too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister be good enough to acknowledge those I shall send to him very shortly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

RENFREW—PLANS TO ASSIST AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY TO MAINTAIN OPERATIONS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I wish to ask the minister whether the town of Renfrew falls within the category of a designated or depressed area and, if so, what plans the government proposes in order to assist the aircraft industry there which is about to close and put 300 highly skilled employees out of work?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we met with a delegation from Renfrew this morning in connection with this matter. Should there be a company interested in acquiring the United Aircraft plants, we will be pleased to help such a venture. We will be pleased also to support any local initiative to this end.

[English]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour what steps he proposes to take to find employment for these highly skilled employees?

[Mr. Crouse.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, without appearing to be facetious, I think that question should be directed to the Minister of Manpower who has that responsibility.

RENFREW—ACTION TO FIND REPLACEMENT FOR AIRCRAFT COMPANY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. What initiative is the minister's department taking to find a replacement for this company in view of the minister's statutory responsibility with regard to creating employment during periods of peak unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are authorized by legislation to grant subsidies to business wanting to set up facilities in designated areas. Renfrew is a designated area. We will do all we can for companies that will request grants in order to promote industrial expansion. However, I cannot make the requests on their behalf.

SIGNING OF GENERAL AGREEMENT WITH NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. When he and the hon. member complete their discussion across the floor of the House I will direct it to him. I notice from the newspapers that today is supposed to be the day that his department and the province of Nova Scotia enter into the next general, broad agreement. I also notice the absence of the Government House Leader and I wonder, since today is the day the agreement is to be entered into, whether the Government House Leader is home grabbing a little more glory for himself?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question as asked is not in order. He may want the floor again for the purpose of rephrasing the question. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. Forrestall: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion could indicate whether or not the federal authority and the province of Nova Scotia will today enter into their broad general agreement or whether this has been postponed indefinitely?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, nothing has been delayed. The agreement must be signed by a minister from Nova Scotia and myself. I have not signed any document this morning and I shall not sign any this afternoon either.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion would care to indicate whether or not the agreement will be entered into this week and, if so, who will sign it on behalf of the government?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If there is an agreement to be signed, Mr. Speaker, it will be signed by the responsible minister as provided for by the legislation.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF PARTI QUEBECOIS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice who I believe is Acting Solicitor General today. Has the minister seen a statement attributed to Mr. Claude Charron, a member of the Parti Quebecois and of the Quebec National Assembly, to the effect that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have infiltrated the Parti Quebecois? If the minister has seen that statement, would he care to comment on it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question would have to be asked directly. The hon. member cannot ask the minister to comment on a statement which has been made outside the House. Perhaps he might ask the question in another form.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think it had to be prefaced in that way so that it would be put in the proper context, but may I ask whether the RCMP are in fact infiltrating the Parti Quebecois?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

POLLUTION

THREAT POSED BY TANKER TRANSPORT OF OIL FROM VALDEZ, ALASKA, TO CHERRY POINT, WASHINGTON

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the statement made over the weekend by his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to the effect that Canada is strongly opposed to the shipment of oil by tanker from Alaska down the British Columbia coast to Washington refineries, and the minister's own statement that only the cooperation of the United States can help to meet this threat of pollution, can the minister indicate what the policy of the government is on this very important matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement made in the speech by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the statement I made I hope indicated our very serious concern about the dangers of pollution arising from the movement of oil by tanker down the Pacific coast, and we hope that public opinion both in Canada and the United States will be aroused to avoid a possible disaster.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, would the minister care to tell us what alternatives the government is proposing which it would favour?

Mr. Sharp: As my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has said, we certainly would be prepared to consider a pipeline down the Mackenzie valley but, as hon. members probably know, objections have been raised even to that particular route.

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the minister indicate whether the government is doing any studies of this route to see whether it is the best one for Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have been doing some studies on the ecological consequences of a pipeline, which I think is one of the first bits of information we would need before a firm decision could be made either by us or by anyone else, such as an American company that might want to build such a pipeline.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier in the proceedings today the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre regarding the return of 42 cents to him by disgruntled senior citizens, said, and I think I am quoting his words, "I hope that all members of the House will be honest enough to send the money to the Minister of Finance". The minister left the implication that all members of this chamber may not be honest enough to do so. I think the minister should not have used the words "honest enough."

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if there was any implication that I meant people in the House were dishonest I apologize sincerely. May I say I do not think I will get many cheques for $28 from the people in Canada who really needed the increase in the supplementary old age pension.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the minister is going beyond the question of privilege. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME LIMIT ON SPEECHES ON BUSINESS SUPPLY MOTION

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the debate which is about to commence there have been discussions with regard to the length of time for speeches in order that the House may have the benefit of hearing from as many members as possible. It has been suggested that we might vary the rules so that the first speaker from each party would have 20 minutes and each speaker thereafter would be limited to 15 minutes. This suggestion has been made. There is some willingness to accept it but I do not know if it is complete.

Mr. Downey: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member for Battle River, who has a question of privilege, to indicate what it is, and then return to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, in Saturday's Calgary Herald it was reported that the provincial Minister of Agriculture for Alberta stated that he had not received an invitation to appear before the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture which has been studying the marketing board legislation. Could the Minister of Agriculture assure the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is, of course, not a question of privilege. The hon. member knows that if the rule is adhered to strictly, notice has to be given. If the hon. member wants to ask a question, this might be done tomorrow. We will now return to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, consultations were held with respect to the length of speeches during the debate today and certainly agreed to that aspect concerning the length of speeches after the first speaker for each party has spoken. However, rather than reduce the length of the initial speeches from 40 minutes to 20 minutes we would prefer that it be reduced to 30 minutes. We would agree that the first speaker for each party should have 30 minutes and that thereafter speeches be limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. Baldwin: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think the rule is 30 rather than 40 minutes for the two lead-off speakers, so we are extending the time for the lead-off speakers for the other two parties. We agree to the first speaker for each party having 30 minutes and thereafter 15 minutes for the succeeding speakers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what has been arrived at is what we arrived at some time ago.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe there is agreement in the House to the suggestion made by hon. members. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP RESULTING IN DAMAGE TO COMMUNITIES AND PEOPLE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That this House condemns the government's lack of leadership which has humiliated the disadvantaged, dislocated the finances of provinces and municipalities, and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies.

He said: Mr. Speaker, by consent the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) is speaking first in my place.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to note, according to reports that came out of Saskatoon over the weekend, that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was concerned about the effect of criticisms of his government on the confidence of the people in that government. I would say he has reason to be concerned. I could not help but smile last night—it really is not the right way to express it because anything so serious as this must be of grave concern to every one of us—at reports of the Prime Minister's efforts to rationalize the unemployment situation that exists at the present time. If there is one phrase that has confused the Canadian public it is, "seasonally adjusted." It is very easy to rationalize statistics in terms of such vague generalities but the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that we are told by the Bureau of Statistics that at the present time in Canada there are 668,000 people unemployed.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Thompson: In fact, the other day the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) noted that there were approximately 640,000 Canadians registered with the manpower offices across the country as seeking employment. Some of the labour leaders in the country say that the actual statistics as far as unemployed people are concerned show the figure more accurately to be over 800,000. These figures indicate a tragic situation for Canada, one of the wealthiest countries in the world. With all the ability and knowhow that we have, it is incredible that a situation such as this should exist. In my opinion, it exists because of the government's restrictive economic and fiscal policies and because of its failure to alleviate the plight of the unemployed. It also results from the lack of assistance to the provinces and the municipal governments of the country. It is for these reasons that we are forced today to move this motion which, in effect, is a motion of non-confidence.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we condemn the government's lack of leadership which has humiliated the disadvantaged, dislocated the finances of provinces and municipalities, and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies.

The Economic Council of Canada recently estimated that the Canadian output performance for the current year is $4 billion below potential. I suppose that might be rationalized by saying "seasonally adjusted", though not with the seasons of the year, perhaps, but with the seasons of the ups and downs of the present government.

Mr. McGrath: The ministers responsible are not even here.

Mr. Thompson: The fact is that the chairman of the Economic Council, Mr. Arthur Smith, just the other day pointed out that one of the basic reasons the government is facing a deficit of approximately $350 million in place of the $250 million surplus which they budgeted for is that the income of the government has decreased. Mr. Smith suggested that, while no one knows exactly at the present time, it might be reasonable to expect that the income of the government in the form of taxes is down approximately $1 billion from what it ought to have been if the expansion and growth of the country had gone forward at the same rate as in the last several years and as it might have done had the government not followed the policies which have brought us to this present situation.

It has been emphasized by many newspaper editorials across the country and it has also been the opinion of leading economists, that the government has taken the historically dangerous route of fighting inflation by bringing about a greater extent of unemployment and general economic slackness. It does not require the training of an economist to know what happens when jobs are cut back and production is restricted, when money is withdrawn from circulation and when interest rates increase. The answer is simply that less is produced and, therefore, there are fewer jobs for people in the area of production and distribution. When that happens, Mr. Speaker, there is less money to spend and we find ourselves in the downward cycle in which we have been for the last ten months.

The government has realized this and, during the last three months, has attempted to reverse the situation. They have doubled the money supply in circulation, have lowered the cost of interest, have desperately brought in policies that will stimulate the economy because they know that their restrictive policies have inhibited the economy, resulted in unemployment and that these negative policies were bringing the country to the brink of disaster.

These are basic economic principles which experience confirms, yet when these facts were brought before this House in the debates on the budget last spring the government said they knew what they were doing. In a country, such as Canada, with an economy as diverse as its regions and industries, it seems to me that the government should operate a fiscal and monetary policy in a regional perspective to bring this situation under control. When unemployment is the intentional creation of a government under the pretext of trying to lower the rate of inflation, that government ought to be honest and acknowledge overkill. They should make an effort to restore jobs and provide a livelihood for those Canadians who want to work and to contribute to the industrial expansion of this country. They should be provided with work or at least with the opportunity to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, the situation which we face at this time is tragic for many Canadians and I think that makes the motion before us a relative thing for most Canadians at the present time. It is not only the fiscal and monetary policies which are at fault in this regard, but also the tax reforms proposed in the white paper. I think there is no single act of the government which has caused such a slowing down in the economy as the recommendations included in the original white paper when it was brought in nearly a year ago. It was brought in as a basis for discussion and there has been a tremendous amount of discussion during recent months. That aspect has been good, but when the government brings in a white paper reflecting the policy of the government—because it is drafted for this Parliament and the Canadian people by the government—and when the wrong and illogical contents of such a document cause distrust, fear and suspicion in the business and industrial segments of the economy, then the only thing that can happen is a deliberate slowing down because of the uncertainties which its recommendations generate. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has said that he is certainly not going to implement all of the recommendations and that there will be some changes from the white paper in his next budget, but the damage has already been done. Although the money supply today has increased in volume, the lack of confidence of the general economy in the government's policies is such that it refuses to pick up this extra money or use this lower interest rate which would prevent, under normal circumstances, this intolerable situation.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It is important that I refer here to the provincial governments and to their increased burden of responsibility, as well as that of municipal governments. There is no place in the economy where the pinch is felt as much as it is at this level. When the recent constitutional committee met I think every one of the premiers expressed grave concern about unemployment and the general economic conditions. This concern is already beginning to show itself in the budgets about to be introduced by the various provincial legislatures. The financial strain that has been imposed upon the provinces, the tremendous effects of the high rates of interest and the lack of money for public development, have worked hardship at that level of government far more than at the federal level. That is why, in the present situation, it is clear that the provincial governments are the ones most concerned about the actual levels of unemployment. They are concerned first, because they have not been able to undertake many projects relating to expansion of sewage facilities, pollution control, the expansion and building of hospitals and schools and, secondly, because one of the side effects of unemployment has been that welfare costs have increased for both provincial and municipal governments. These welfare programs are now very costly for the municipalities. In 1970, as a result of high unemployment, municipal governments in total spent $275 million to finance welfare expenditures, as compared with $213 million in 1969. That is a 23 per cent increase. This is one reason the economic community, provincial and municipal governments have lost confidence in this government.

The government has the responsibility of administering the affairs of the country and to initiate proper economic and fiscal policies as it sees fit. We can only talk to the government and draw its attention to those things that we are trying to recommend, because we think that our suggestions might be useful in the situation. That is why the motion we are considering was moved. I believe that we are speaking on behalf of the vast majority of Canadians who know that the situation is grim, and know the realities of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: The last two days of the budget debate were spent in debating unemployment. May I mention one or two points at this time to emphasize again that this is still the most crucial problem that we face at present. If we could have confidence in the pronouncements of the government and the Prime Minister, that this is merely a seasonal situation, that it has been a difficult and cold winter, that other factors have contributed to the situation and that, since spring will be here in a month or so, unemployment will go down rapidly, perhaps we would not be so concerned. I am concerned now because the change in the financial policy has had such little effect. The influx of a greater volume of money into the economy has done little except put a bit of moisture into the sponge. The availability of money is not great enough to stimulate the development of the country. The same degree of unemployment still exists.

It is true that unemployment will go down somewhat this spring and summer; yet the indications are that the level of unemployment among students this year will not go down to the level it reached last year. I am not concerned so much about what will happen in the coming spring and summer, as I am about students who are completing their education and who will not be able to obtain employment. I am even more concerned about what will happen next fall and next winter; that is when the real impact of present policies will be felt. We warned the government about the situation and hoped that they would do more than they have to correct it. I think that the government must consider lowering the unemployment level to a more desirable figure. I say that because that is a prerequisite of social justice. Too many of our young people are unemployed; too many cannot find jobs in the summer or after leaving university. Those who have completed their formal education expect and desire to find work. If we deny them the opportunity to work we shall erode their faith in the future of their country and in the ability of the government, which has responsibility in this area, to provide what has been promised, what has been expected, and what it is the right of these Canadians to expect.

How can we expect our young people to have confidence in a country which cannot provide them with the means to live and which puts them on welfare. Such actions do not encourage the initiative, the enterprise and ability of which our young people are capable. Our nation needs those abilities. It is high time that the government revitalized its policies to meet the situation. In order that full employment may be generated—I do not use the term "full employment" in the sense that 100 per cent of our work force will be at work, because that would be impossible when one considers our climate, regional disparities and distances, but in the sense that not more than 2 per cent of our work force is unemployed—it will be necessary, by 1975, to create between 1.3 million and 1.4 million new jobs. As the Economic Council of Canada has indicated, our present output performance is below average. How then can we expect the necessary jobs to be available within the specified time? The growth in employment in 1970 was 1.3 per cent, the lowest growth in employment since 1950.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Thompson: These are statistics that we cannot rationalize away by using phrases such as "seasonally adjusted".

May I refer, Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes to the expansion and growth of our economy. I think that unless this economy can be expanded, unless our gross national product can increase year by year, the jobs so necessary to provide work for our people just will not be available. In my province, Alberta, there are literally thousands of oil wells. We are grateful for that tremendous petroleum reserve. We note with interest that reports in today's newspapers indicate that as a result of agreement between oil companies and middle eastern countries, the price of imported of oil will go up. That agreement, which for the time being, will solve the petroleum needs of Europe and, in part, of our eastern seaboard, will mean an increased price. In my opinion, although there had not been a price increase for a number of years and the middle eastern countries were quite justified in asking for more money for their oil, this agreement is bound to have a tremendous effect on the oil industry in this country.

It has been said that it is impossible to ship western oil economically to eastern Canadian markets. That argument will no longer be effective in view of the increased price of oil coming to our eastern seaboard. Our own oil coming from the west to the eastern provinces will be cheaper than oil coming from outside, under the new price agreement. Certainly, the time has come for us to consider extending our oil transportation system, at least to Montreal. The facts of economics dictate this. No longer does the argument that this course is not economically sound hold water. Above all, the present agreement has forced the United States government to realize, and it ought to force this government to realize as well, that we must depend more upon our own oil resources than upon those of the Middle East or South America. The agreement, I am sure, will have a tremendously stimulating effect upon the expansion of our own oil industry. The industry will undertake more exploration and develop more pipelines that will supply our own markets with our own oil. We must be thankful that we have such oil to develop.

You know, Mr. Speaker, of the thousands of oil wells in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia, it is difficult to find many that are actually owned by Canadians. More than 90 per cent have been drilled by, and are owned by, subsidiaries of United States companies. My purpose in bringing up this matter at present is not to condemn the United States because the financial interests of Americans and their tax policies have allowed them to do for us something that we did not do for ourselves. That being so, we do not really have too much reason to complain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: In this country there are thousands of oil wells. More will need to be drilled. Who will carry out this exploration and this development? Because of the present tax policies of the government, it will not be Canadians. It is almost impossible to find Canadian financial backing for any venture that is based on the search for much needed oil resources. There are at least $12 billion in the savings accounts of the Canadian people. In addition there are billions of dollars in the hands of insurance companies, trust companies, and mutual funds. The money is here. We have the know-how as well. Perhaps the exploration ability of the Canadian mineral resource industry is unsurpassed by any country in the world, including the United States. The tragedy is that the resources are there and Canadians do not develop them. With regard to the petroleum industry, the oil is there but something is lacking. What is it?

• (3:20 p.m.)

There is a complete lack of concern, vision and action on the part of the Canadian government, the Canadian financial authorities and the securities commissions which have the financial responsibility. If they did have the concern, the situation would not be as it is at the present. Furthermore, the discriminatory tax laws of Canada place Canadian investors in an inferior position to American or European investors. If there are losses involved in risk investments, the Canadian investor is not allowed to deduct them in calculating his income tax. Although mineral exploration is a high risk venture, the opportunity is not there for Canadians. However, it is there for American and European investors. They can afford to invest in Canadian oil development. Canadians cannot because of the tax policies that are presently followed by the federal government.

Mr. Woolliams: And the fear of them.

Mr. Thompson: The tax reform recommendations in the white paper on taxation do not do anything to correct the situation. In fact, they make it worse. They destroy confidence and incentive. This is why Canadian money is not being put into our investments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: I want to ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who know as much about this as I do, if investment in Canadian development is good for Americans, why is it not good for Canadians? I would like the answer to that question.

Mr. Olson: We do not reach that conclusion.

Mr. Thompson: The money is available in Canada today. The monetary supply has doubled in the last few months since the government reversed its monetary policy. The banks have more money available than they can find people to borrow. They are even advertising for borrowers. Yet, the Canadian investor is afraid to invest. He lacks confidence in the policies of the present government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: An independent, fully Canadian-owned oil company recently drilled two producing oil wells in central northern Alberta, thus establishing a new field. To drill out this area, the returns from which are now just as certain as catching fish in a barrel, this company needs $7½ million to drill some 40 wells, the estimated number of wells necessary to adequately develop this particular area. Where does this independent company go for the $7½ million capital? It wants to obtain this money from Canadian sources rather than sell out to American interests. The financial resources are there if they can find them. If this company seeks to obtain this money from Canadian sources, it will have to wait from three to five months for the Alberta Security Commission to grant approval for a new issue of shares. That is the first obstacle it will meet. Then, the company must go to Canadian financial houses in Toronto or elsewhere and literally beg on their knees for investment in their project.

This is what happens when a company tries to sell a Canadian low-risk development investment proposition to Canadians? The company does not have money available for such a procedure. As a result, it goes to Houston, Dallas, New Orleans or Denver where it gets the money within 48 hours. The representative of the company does not have to physically make the trip. He can make all arrangements on the telephone. Bay Street brokerage houses will not do anything for them. They are more interested in selling eastern Canadian mining ventures or United States industrial stock, often highly speculative, than they are in selling those of western or northern Canada. American investors are looking for investment opportunities, even high-risk investment opportunities. A Canadian company does not have to even send its president to these places. Everything can be done over the telephone. This is a travesty of justice. It is a tragedy. Anyone who knows the situation knows that this is true. It is not only easier to go south to the border to obtain investment money, it is cheaper and more satisfactory. A side comment here on Canadian know how is that the United States exploration success ratio in oil drilling is only one sixth of that in Canada.

The Minister of Finance talks about buying back Canada through the Canada Development Corporation. I went through my file on the CDC before I rose to speak. I noted that for the past seven years there has been mention in Speeches from the Throne and in policy statements of Liberal governments that a Canada Development Corporation would be initiated and implemented. Finally, after a seven or eight year gestation period, the baby has been born. What do we have? We have something that could just as well have been aborted because it will not be useful to correct this situation. It will not encourage new companies, investment and development. It certainly will not accomplish what Mr. Gordon said could be accomplished through such an organization. Others have talked about it as well. It could accomplish these things if it were organized on the right basis.

Why can the government not draft legislation which will let Canadians compete on an even basis with American investors? In the United States, the individual and the corporate investor have the right to invest their money in the United States or in Canada before they pay their taxes. If the investment is not successful or profitable, the United States taxpayer can deduct his losses. In Canada there is no such provision. If the Canadian taxpayer is not careful, he will be charged by the Department of National Revenue. In fact, it seems that the tax department looks upon the Canadian investor with suspician and doubtful motivation. All too often he is judged guilty before he even acts. This is a tragedy. We are faced with unemployment, a lack of confidence in government and a situation which relates to provincial and municipal governments. The whole problem with regard to our economic position has been brought about because of a lack of policy and lack of confidence. If we cannot expand, how can we provide jobs? How can this country go forward? This is the question of the hour. It is up to the government to answer this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to this very important motion. It is indicative of the situation in this country that such a motion should be discussed in the House today. The motion states that this government has failed to meet the needs of the citizens of Canada. It reads:

[Mr. Thompson.]

—dislocated the finances of provinces and municipalities, and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Only a short while ago the urban municipalities were conducting a survey of the situation which they were facing. I wish to talk mainly about the farm and grain situation. It is a fact of our economic life that farmers, whether they are in grain or livestock or fruit, do not live in isolation economically from the rest of the community. Neither, of course, do those who live in cities live in isolation from the farm community. At no time has this been better demonstrated than it is now, in western Canada and in Saskatchewan in particular. The Star Phoenix, reporting on a white paper put out by the provincial government in December, used a black headline "Economic Boost seen for province". Underneath, it said: "White paper indicates recession low point passed". The old term used to be "turned the corner". Now, we say the low point has passed—we have bottomed out. I do not know whether we have bottomed out or not.

The agricultural policies which the government is proposing must be judged in the light of the circumstances which presently exist. They must be judged in the light of whether or not they meet these circumstances and whether they will correct the malaise which exists in a major part of the farming and rural communities of Canada, particularly in western Canada. Meanwhile, the low earning power of the farmers finds its expression in the empty storefronts in some of our small towns and in some of our cities. It is reflected in the conversation of the businessmen who live in the area.

Last Friday, in the city of Saskatoon, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) together with a large number of other cabinet ministers met the farmers in a ballroom at the Bessborough Hotel. The seating accommodation was entirely taken up, and all who could stand crowded in as well. The size of the meeting indicates the degree of concern which exists in the province. I wish to read briefly, now, from the grains policy proposals for the western grains industry. I shall begin with the last paragraph on the last page. It reads, under the heading "Encourage adjustment of farm units to more efficient sizes":

The problem of farm consolidation is one which is not peculiar to the prairie region and which, perhaps, is less critical in this region than in other areas of Canada. It is therefore believed that it would be inappropriate to proposed programs for the prairie region to deal with the consolidation issue in advance of the availability of programs to deal with this problem in Canadian agriculture generally. Such a general plan is in preparation.

So, the government apparently has under consideration a plan for farmers. It proposes the establishment of farms of a more efficient size. You know, Mr. Speaker, this final paragraph on the last page is perhaps the most important part of the whole document.

Mr. Benjamin: It scares us most, anyway.

Mr. Gleave: The rest of it is made up of proposals intended to relieve the government from having to pay out too much money, from having to take too much responsibility, from embarking on too large a commitment to the farming and rural community of western Canada.

The government is now bringing forward two major measures which will affect the direction and destiny of agriculture in Canada generally, and grain production in the west in particular. One is the marketing bill, Bill C-176, and the other is the grains policy white paper or proposals to which I have referred. We need to examine these policies but we also need to assess the situation they propose to deal with. While the Prime Minister and the other ministers were in Saskatoon, the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, under a Liberal government, was releasing a white paper on the subject of the economy of that province. It said, among other things, that the average Saskatchewan farmer owed the Wheat Board between $1,070 and $1,250. This means that farmers, in addition to living off their depreciation, have been selling their grain ahead of time because they did not have sufficient funds, and are now trying to pay this money back. If hon. members want to bring a statement of this kind on to an individual level, let them talk to a man who lives on a good farm and is unable to pay his taxes in full because he is determined that his son, who is at a university, should stay there.

The white paper said realized net income would show a decrease as compared with 1969. It blames the decline on lower production due to a reduction of seeded acreage under the federal government's Lift program, and a minimal final payment on wheat, oats and barley sold in previous years. It put the blame where it belongs. The provincial white paper goes on to say that grain delivery was approximately 40 per cent higher in 1970 than in the previous year but that receipts from the sale of grain were only 22.6 per cent higher as a result of lower final payments and lower unit prices.

These are the circumstances with which the government's proposals purport to deal. As I say, I am convinced they are intended not so much to deal with the situation which is so well described as to ensure that the government does not become too deeply involved at a time when the country finds itself in a fairly serious situation. The object is to limit government involvement. These government proposals are not based on the need to increase or even to maintain income but, as the paper says, on stabilization of income. This means stabilization of income equal to the coverage of the previous five years, not on the farmer's cost of production. The government ignores the need to correct the situation; instead it bases its proposals on a previous five-year period, the record of which has not been all that good, namely a five-year average and an initial price which can only be related to international market terms.

During the question period today, I asked the minister what his reaction was to this statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

> —we must on this occasion stress as strongly as we can that the government grains receipts and stabilization proposals—which clearly will be on all our minds as we meet here today—do not represent an adequate undertaking by the federal government to assist and protect the position of prairie grain producers. They do not represent a sufficient acceptance of responsibility by the government, on behalf of the Canadian public and in the national interest, to share the costs of maintaining this vital industry in the face of widespread, highly subsidized international competition, violent swings in market and price conditions and intense competitive pressures.

In the submission of the National Farmers Union which was presented to the federal government at Saskatoon there is this statement:

> Secondly, while producers contribute to the program as individuals, stabilization payments are determined on the amount of the industry-wide aggregate short-fall or gross income from grain sales. Consequently, there is no guarantee of individuals income needs being, in fact, stabilized in times of greatest need. What is required is a larger allocation of funds from the federal treasury to provide the comprehensive program required. Indications are the minister in charge of this program is hamstrung by the conventional wisdom the government is employing in its approach to this important problem. We, therefore, request government re-examine its position on this matter.

I noted with some interest that one of the ministers of the Crown said in Regina it was too bad that the farm organizations could not agree on their approach to the government. I have referred to the agreement and also to the similar stand taken by the two farm organizations that are most representative of farmers in that particular area, and they express their reaction. They have good cause to take the position they do.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the total program must be examined in terms of the existing situation. The situation is that last week the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had to inform hon. members that all attempts to reach a real agreement on the international marketing of what had failed and that the negotiations for an international wheat agreement had come to a standstill. In other words, the government are well aware that we are now entering into a period of absolutely cut-throat competition overseas. We may or may not be able to continue to negotiate an agreement to hold the line on prices with other governments. As a result, for the first time in many years the farmers will be taking the full brunt of savage competition in export markets.

What does the government propose to do to meet this situation? It has brought in a proposal under the grain stabilization program that would largely relieve the government of the responsibility of supporting the wheat farmer in the export market. I say this in view of the fact that initial prices of wheat to date have been tied to the International Wheat Agreement. These initial prices are established each year and reflect two factors: firstly, the level of the minimums reached in the international wheat agreements or secondly, the production costs within the economy.

The government has announced that it has a stabilization program that is going to follow the pattern of the previous five years. Initial prices are going to be set at the beginning of each crop year. However, the government carefully refrains from announcing that those initial prices are going to be set in accordance with the needs of the farmers, their production costs, or any other consideration of that sort. Anyone who does not examine the facts of life in this situation is missing the point, namely that the government is relieving itself of its responsibility to the farmers, it having allowed international arrangements or agreements on the pricing of wheat to break down and fall apart.

I do not think we can lay the whole blame for this at the door of the government. I think most of those who are close to the situation are aware that the United States did not particularly want another agreement with stated minimums; at least, that is the conclusion I draw. If it had wanted an agreement, we would not have had to renew the old International Wheat Agreement on two or three occasions previously, and then travel to Geneva and negotiate a new IGA that was as full of holes as a sieve.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): With an 11-month gap.

Mr. Gleave: Yes, a period when the market was wide open. So, I only lay partial blame at the door of the government. Under these circumstances, the government is telling the farmers: "Not only will you cut your cloth according to your purse, but we are going to do the tailoring after you have cut the cloth". This, in effect, is what the government is saying in the final paragraph on page 20 of its statement "If there is too much trouble", the government is saying to the farmers, "you can take it from there".

I do not know whether there was a little bit of kidding going on a year or two ago, but when the minister introduced the Lift program, he said Canadian farmers were going to reduce wheat acreage. He clearly implied that other countries were going to join us in reducing their acreage. Now, I don't know where they got their commitments from, but...

Mr. Olson: And did they not do so?

Mr. Gleave: No, they did not.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member should check his facts. That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Gleave: If the minister thinks he has something then God bless him. Certainly, I hope he has a great deal more than he has shown. I hope the government has a couple of hole cards because it is certainly going to need them, and so are we. If the minister could say to this House that we are to reduce acreage and other nations are to reduce acreage also, then by clear implication we would be dealing with nations who, in the immediate future, would be prepared to meet us around a bargaining table and come to terms on price and quantity. There is no other implication one could draw, because what good is an acreage reduction program without a price factor since we would get the worst of both worlds. We would reduce our acreage and there would be no possibility of having maximum efficiency and production. For what? For a great big zero.

Let us have some elementary economics in the picture. This is where we stand. I say we are left with uncertain days ahead. I do not think we are faced with a disaster unless the government should continue to act with lack of determination to back up the farmer and give him some confidence. That is the critical factor in this area because the farmer cannot enter the international market on his own under the circumstances which he faces. He cannot expect to survive on his own because he does not have enough money in the kitty and, under these circumstances, whoever is marketing our grain must compete with the U.S. treasury, the European Economic Common Market, the Australians and other people in the market who are supported by government. That is the game. With a few exceptions, there are centralized selling and buying agencies in the major markets of the world, so we are in that kind of game.

A year ago barley, at the point where I deliver, was worth 64 cents a bushel. We said we would go into the market and sell the barley. Good enough; that is what we should have done. The government picked up some of the deficit. I do not know what will happen this year. There are people who know, but that is not the important thing. But how, with any conscience, in another year can we lower that initial price? We know we ought to increase it if the farmer is to continue to produce. If we do lower it, who will pick up the tab? The government obviously should. Yet in this paper which the minister has put out there is no mention of any commitment whatsoever to maintain an initial price which relates to the cost of production. That commitment is not there. Indeed, the responsible minister on more than one occasion has said that whatever is done must be done within certain limits. He is approaching this thing from the wrong end. The proper way to approach it is to see what is needed so that the farmers may operate as a unit and be competitive in the market. The proper thing to do is to ascertain what is necessary, see what we can afford and then tell the western Canadian farmer what is going to be done. I say that the Canadian farmer is just not buying this program.

Mr. Olson: Try to help sell it.

Mr. Gleave: Me help sell it! If the government would bring out a program that would help the farmer in Saskatchewan be viable, be able to use all the technology, his efficiency and know-how in order to stay in business, then I would support such a program.

Mr. Olson: That is what it is all about.

Mr. Gleave: When that kind of program is put on the table, I will support it. However, I do not intend to support a program that is designed basically to get the government in the position of putting a minimum amount in the pot so that it can sit back and say: Don't bother coming back to us again; you have all you are going to get.

I wanted to put these thoughts before the House today, Mr. Speaker. I support the motion that has been moved and seconded by the two hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, rereading the text of the motion before the House, I realize that the wording used reveals, in learned terms, that its purpose is to point out several administrative blunders in various fields and to prove that the numberous errors of the pesent administrators have helped discourage the farmers in particular.

Of course, the topic is very important; it deserves the contribution of as many members as possible, and their greatest possible understanding, with a view to calling the attention of those whose responsibility it is to take decisions on the various reactions of the people, many of whom I feel have exhausted their reserve of patience, after having multiplied their representations and their claims, whenever they felt them to be timely.

We all know that farming methods have changed, as methods have in other fields, and that the consequences of those periods of adjustment or orientation imposed sacrifices on a large percentage of the farmers who, in large numbers, were forced to borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation. Moreover, the fact that too many politicians seem to have considered agriculture as an industry of little importance, except at election time, has not helped them any.

For a number of years, the various governments were concerned with getting as many workers as possible into agriculture and now, this same farmer cannot operate his farm economically without relying on government assistance.

I have read a very up to the point article by Mr. Lucien Gosselin, a realistic agronomist of my area, which I will quote in part:

> It is often said that agriculture is a school of common sense and observation, which leads the farmer of today to seek the middle term between the theoreticians lost in the clouds and those who will not give up ancient farming methods. It will be argued that some routine methods of our grandfathers must be dropped, but it is often comforting to rely on their good judgment always based on plain common sense. That is perhaps one of our natural resources which is most threatened today by the sheer might of our techniques.
> Some claim that the size, the enlargement of farms might be a solution. I can understand that a farmer should have a reasonably large farm, but the acreage is not necessarily the solution to the problem. By enlarging farms exceedingly, do we not run the risk of creating other problems more difficult to solve? Is the problem of western wheat producers solved? And yet their farms are certainly big enough.

We must at all cost preserve the importance of farming, because of the permanent role it assumes as regards production of human food.

The world is facing now the most serious problem on earth which is to feed a constantly increasing population. "We might, in a few years, be faced with a problem which will overshadow all our present concerns", said Dr. Raymond Ewell, vice-president of the State University of New York. Experts who have considered the problem of world hunger have made several other statements to the effect that starvation could very well become one of the greatest calamities of history.

On the basis of all these statements, we have the right to wonder what are the intimate thoughts of our leaders, of our government heads, or of all the other groups, when they advocate a decrease in the number of farmers. Our government goes even as far as subsidizing some farmers for not producing like what is happening in Western Canada. This is not the first time that our politicians implement such a policy. In 1938, the Canadian taxpayers contributed several million dollars in taxes to be deprived of bread. The government at that time could not find a better solution to the problem of farmers producing too much wheat.

With respect to the dairy industry in Eastern Canada, this government has changed its program by resorting to deductions from subsidy payments in order to pay for the operating costs involved in surplus production.

In 1967-68 farmers from Eastern Canada paid more than four million dollars. In 1968-69 they paid seven million and in 1969-70 more than 13 million. It is a kind of fine they have to pay because they produce too much. It is levied against them because they produce too much milk. The reports are incomplete. That is a rather strange way of encouraging production. In our present system things get complicated when there are too many products. Advocates of the "just society" are unable to spread abundance and prefer to follow the guidelines of the scarcity system dictated by the financiers.

We could build up sufficient food reserves and make them available to the Canadian people and this for several years in advance. There are various means to process raw materials and modern methods of conservation and we can also alter the distribution system of goods. We could establish a mechanism for adequate purchasing power in order to make that wealth of goods available to the citizens instead of depriving them for the only purpose of maintaining prices at a certain level.

We could also set up a distribution chain of foodstuffs to feed under nourished people. While Canadians would be assured of a decent living, they would also be ready to help underprivileged countries. Such a policy, in addition to being an example of Christian charity, would be more readily accepted by Canadians than interest-free loans due in 50 years or more, while in Canada, a great number of people have to make do with a welfare allowance which barely enables them to subsist.

For several years already, practical suggestions have been submitted to governments by those concerned with finding solutions to the problems of food supply, through a marketing of dairy products with various flavours. We feel that milk could advantageously replace our numerous soft drinks. It would be better for the health of children, especially now that we favour a return to healthy habits and to natural food. This would also be excellent for dairy producers, particularly when one thinks of the millions of dollars that are spent yearly on publicity by the major manufacturers of soft drinks. If we compare with the budgets of groups concerned with the consumption of milk and dairy products, the situation becomes dramatic.

Unfortunately, all of us can see that the butter market is invaded by margarine. Why the increase in the consumption of margarine? It is not because this product has a better flavour than butter. No. It is because it is cheaper. We always come back to the question of purchasing power. Some people interested in margarine sales maintain that this artificial product, with colour added if required, costs less and is more within the means of low-salaried people.

It does not seem fair to me that good natural butter be reserved for people in easy circumstances and that a substitute be offered to manual workers. All citizens are entitled to consume one of our best Canadian foods, and let us not make the serious mistake of antagonizing consumers and turning them away from agricultural products to the point where our market is flooded with substitutes whose acceptance will be detrimental to the sales and revenues of our dairy farms. Butter sales drop in the same proportion that margarine sales increase.

Instead of trying to solve the problem by starting with the farmers, who are already too hard-pressed, and by asking them to bear cost price reductions, it might be advisable to re-organize the marketing of dairy products. For this purpose, one could perhaps look to other fields, that of the automobile for instance, where the entry of foreign cars into the country is subject to control.

The problem results from the lack of markets for dairy products. It would be advisable to attempt to enlighten some people who do not realize that they are contributing to under-consumption in our population through the adoption of certain legislative measures that reduce purchasing power instead of stabilizing it. The variety of our taxes is a striking example of this.

I admit that a well-balanced dairy policy, which would enable farmers to sell their products, would be ideal. Meanwhile, a policy of subsidies may be beneficial if it is tailored to the needs.

The production system in Canada, in agriculture as elsewhere, has constantly improved. I do not think there is a single Canadian who fears that, in 10 or even 50 yeras, his country will not longer be able to produce wheat, butter or meat. Canadians have full confidence in the production system. On the other hand, the financial system is not in harmony with the production system. Canadian farmers produce everything that nourishes, while the financial system depletes credit.

Some men are capable of dreadful thoughtlessness. It is unbelievable to find to what extent the habit of seeing prevents them from looking. It is not at all necessary to have a university degree to understand that under the present system freedom is conditioned by the amount of money left in one's wallet. If the government takes too much, by levying taxes, whether visible or invisible, the citizens will revolt and rightly so.

A vigourous publicity program would be needed to increase consumption of butter and other dairy products.

It is not normal that in a country such as ours, workers' families should be deprived of good Canadian butter to use margarine because of their low income.

I also believe that most farmers support fully all programs established under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, that is ARDA.

The purpose of these programs is to redevelop and improve the use of farm lands, water resources, forests and, finally, to improve the profitability and efficiency of farms.

So, ARDA should be administered with objectiveness and care so as to minimize economic and human problems which will necessarily be brought about by these adjustments in the field of agriculture.

As these present needs are urgent, we are asking the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, to try to define and develop the outline of the policy for ARDA in the years to come. We are also asking that financial assistance be sufficient to prevent any dealy in the implementation of existing programs. Let me now describe what is happening.

In my constituency of Kamouraska, we have a program for the construction of dikes along the shores of the St. Lawrence river, which would permit the recovery of thousands of acres and would considerably increase the land yield in several waterfront parishes. This project has been under study since 1937. I would like to point this out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and to his Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Lessard). At that time, 34 riparian owners signed an agreement regarding a free right of way on their properties so that necessary repairs could be made.

A survey made in 1951 shows that there are 325 acres of fertile soil to be recuperated in certain areas. In November 1951, a sum of $81.12 was paid to the Quebec Department of Agriculture by the county council for certain projects carried out by the department with regard to this dike.

In 1953, the hon. Laurent Barré, then provincial Minister of Agriculture, estimated the construction cost of the dike at approximately $50,000 and requested a $5,000 grant from the council before authorizing the work, which those involved considered to be too expensive in the circumstances.

In 1956, Mr. Avila Bédard, Deputy Minister of Lands and Forests of Quebec, authorized surveyor Marc Thiboutôt of Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière to carry out the survey, draw up the plans and prepare the books of reference in order that titles might be issued to future purchasers.

In 1961, the Department of Lands and Forests turned the shore rights over to the Department of Natural Resources.

In 1962, the Minister of Natural Resources sold the shore rights to citizens of Saint-Denis and Saint-Louis-de-Kamouraska by patent letters, at the price of $1 per arpent. From now on, the price will be $1.50 per arpent.

At present, the dike is in its initial condition. There are no construction plans, no estimates, no evaluation and above all no money. The dike should be rebuilt closer to sea and according to a master plan.

Dikes were built some 50 years ago at a time when each did his bit as he saw fit, when timber was not selling well. Nowadays, timber is too expensive.

The Saint-Germain dike would allow to recuperate from 1,000 to 1,200 acres of land; the one at Saint-André, a few hundred acres; something could also be done at Notre-Dame-du-Portage. At Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière and Rivière-Ouelle, recuperation would be more significant, which in my opinion, means that despite the high cost, it would be worthwhile to achieve the project. With machines and materials available today, the dikes could be built under favourable conditions. The county council is very interested and so are a great number of farmers because many think the best lands would be those close to the river.

It is obvious the assistance of public authorities is needed to achieve this vast project. I believe it is an area where ARDA could apply, but decisions must be taken by the responsible authorities. It is not enough to say in reply to requests for assistance that the problem will be taken into consideration while results and decisions never come.

I have here a letter dated July 21, 1970 from the Assistant Deputy Minister, Central region, Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which says that the matter will be discussed with representatives of the Quebec Department of Agriculture. On November 2, 1970, the secretary of the municipal corporation of the Kamouraska riding received from the assistant executive secretary to the Minister of Agriculture and Colonization of the Quebec government the following reply:

According to the information received, I am sorry to advise you that we will be unable to implement your first resolution concerning the construction of functional dikes on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River. The reason for this refusal is very simple: all problems relating in any way whatsoever to the river fall strictly within federal jurisdiction.

I say therefore to the members of the government party that the time has come to act with regard to the dikes in the riding of Kamouraska.

The resolution that was the object of the debate adds that the government helped disorganize the finances of the provinces and municipalities, and was prejudicial to rural communities. Allow me to point out that that disorganization unfortunately dates back a long time and that several successive governments contributed to it in no small measure. The defenders of the corrupt financial system we have today are responsible for that situation.

During a federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa on January 14 and 15, 1941, the Premier of Ontario, Hon. Mitchell F. Hepburn, read part of a letter he had received from the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, on November 2, 1960, and I quote:

While the cost of unemployment relief has been reduced, the war has cast additional burdens on governments and taxpayers alike. It has inevitably increased the competition between governments to secure revenues, and has aggravated the overlapping, cumbersome and discriminatory character of much of our tax structure.

Things were already going rather badly at that time.

At the end of his speech, the Premier of Ontario said to those participating to that conference, and I quote:

And while you thus obligated yourselves to fight this war with the last drop of printer's ink and to the last page of Hansard, confusion, utter confusion, would prevail in all governments as existing tax machinery bogged down.

Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Premier of British Columbia, said the following as shown on page 42 of the report:

MONEY ROOT OF TROUBLE

Money, of course, is at the root of this whole question. While monetary measures should be based upon the productive capacity of our people, the productive capacity of our people can be amplified by wise monetary measures and other considerations.

Another premier, Alberta's Honourable William Aberhart—he who had succeeded in putting the financial administration of that province back in order—after having mentioned the advantages and disadvantages of speaking last, made the following remarks intended to the various heads of governments:

I do not believe that the British North America Act, or confederation, or whatever you like to call it, has been responsible since that time for the three D's which have marked the industrial history of some of our provinces—I mean, decadence, debilitation, and death. I do not believe that confederation was the cause of these things, but I avow, sir, that something has been responsible for the awful plight that has settled upon the provinces. I notice sadly that the Ethiopian is still at large; the blight continues.

And further in the same speech, Mr. Aberhart stated and I quote:

Now, what is the job of each of us at this moment? Is this conference a ration line, where we are to receive our dole, or is it a place in which each must grab all that he can carry away with him? Is it not rather a conference to which we are privileged to bring, for the benefit of the Canadian nation, the combined gifts of thoughtfulness, wisdom, foresight, vision, tolerance and understanding with which we Canadians may be endowed?

Is this not our golden opportunity to lay the foundations for the never-before realized gifts of fraternity, freedom equality of opportunity, and, what is also important, financial security? We are here, honourable chairman and gentlemen, I take it, to make it possible at some near future date to formulate for Canadians a series of decisions which will give them security in old age and the right to enjoy, according to their needs, the abundance of food and clothing and the comforts of adequate and sanitary shelter which the limitless resources of this great dominion can provide. We are here, I assert, to establish a heritage of education for those who seek to learn; of health for those who suffer pain or disease; of security and delivrance from debt of those who have builded homes in their prime of life and who may face eviction and the loss of their sacred firesides when the lean years descend.

Economic Conditions in Rural Communities

• (4:20 p.m.)

We are here, I believe, to draft a scheme of things for the Canada of the future, a scheme of things which will bring to that Canada a standard of justice which shall place human values above dollar values, a scheme of things that will provide for our fighting heroes when they return a standard of national viewpoint which shall not only recognize, as you have publicly stated, Mr. Prime Minister, but which shall further decree, that that which is physically desirable is financially possible.

Judging from the events which occurred in Canada since then, I note that the recommendations made during the federal-provincial conferences are far from being implemented. We would rather go on floundering in the stupid system of today, making every effort through every possible means to deprive the Canadian citizens, through a variety of taxes, from the revenue they need with the resulting disorganization of farming, unemployment, unpaid and unpayable public debts of municipal, school, provincial and federal governments. And I do not think that the solution to the many Canadian problems will be found with such small constitutional reforms as we have been witnessing for too long.

What we need is a true monetary reform which would take into account the needs of the people and would allow for an intelligent and just distribution of the abundant production which is available to us.

If we go on looking for solutions along tracks already beaten by selfish financiers we run the risk of finding ourselves all in designated areas where Canadians will be numbered, classified, taxed and riddled with debts and asking themselves with anguish when they will be integrated, disclassified, retrained or nationalized. There are indeed enough examples to incite us to direct our decisions towards a better end.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks about agricultural policy and the development of that policy over the past few months. I think, however, that the composition of this motion again demonstrates the ingenuity of the opposition and, particularly, of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to be negative and destructive, to initiate and perpetuate a myth, to ignore the facts and to continue to widen the credibility gap between his party and the Canadian citizen.

Mr. Alexander: Six hundred and thirty-eight thousand are unemployed.

Mr. Olson: That is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. The motion provides me with an opportunity to discuss some developments in the area of agricultural policy and program changes which have taken place during the past few months. Before I embark on those comments, I suppose I ought to reply briefly to the main theme brought forward by opposition spokesmen who have so far participated in the debate. It seems to me that the comments of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) bore very little relevance to the wording of the motion. At one point he tried to suggest that the government ought to stop making proposals to the Canadian people by way of white papers and that sort of thing.

Mr. Thompson: I did not say that.

Mr. Olson: He is very, very wrong indeed if he thinks that he can, either by that speech or any other way, persuade the government to stop putting proposals before the people and asking them to respond to those proposals before coming out with hard and fast positions. We began some time ago this very useful process of consultation with the people of Canada. We have done this so that we shall not "govern by surprise". The people of Canada accept that as good policy. That is part of the process of the development of policy and it is a process which we intend to continue.

Mr. Thompson: It is a good process so long as the proposals are proper.

Mr. Olson: Next, I refer to the comments of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). I am sorry that he did not have time to stay and listen to this important debate on agriculture.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there is no privilege here; the hon. member is not in the House, and that is all I have said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will both hon. members please resume their seats? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege and to ask the minister if he is not aware of the fact that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is meeting with our caucus at the present time, and that that is why the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) is not here? I stayed here in case something like this was tried.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am also aware that whenever there is not one particular minister in the House, no matter how valid the reason for his absence may be, the hon. member gets up and comments about it. He always draws the attention of the House to that fact and decries it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: I think that the members of the NDP, who are so good at this sort of thing, ought to be reminded that only one of their members is present in the House while the debate on agricultural policy is taking place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will admit that he is a pretty good one, though.

Mr. Olson: Oh, yes; he is a good member, although he might not be very good at agriculture.

I think that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar ought to get his facts straight before perpetuating the kind of myth he tried to bring before the House respecting what has happened during the past 12 or 18 months.

He talked about those things that are tremendously important in the field of agriculture, and particularly about grains policy. The result of the international meetings in the field of grains policy has led to a much more satisfactory climate on the selling side, and this is evident in that international market today. I will have more to say about this in a minute.

I listened very attentively to the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne). I think he tried to outline some of the problems facing farmers and tried to suggest that these problems could not be solved by consolidating farms. I suggest to him that perhaps he ought to consult with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who sits behind him. He will learn that the great problem of poverty and low incomes in agriculture in most parts of Canada today is directly related to the advance of technology. Far units must become economic units if they are to stay competitive in the production of those commodities; and, therefore, we are doing agriculture a service by providing policies that may lead to the kind of consolidation that will transform farms into economic units.

Regardless of all the weeping and wailing that may go on from time to time with regard to the overproduction of food in some areas, and the underconsumption or lack of food affecting people in other parts of the world, the fact is that all farmers must live with the market place. This is the place from which they derive their income. That is where they obtain their gross receipts with which they must pay their operating costs and from which they derive their net income. May I say that the total amount laid out by the Canadian treasury at present for food aid and other international programs is many, many times what it was before this government came to office. The outlay for food outlay alone will approach perhaps close to $100 million in this year. We have gone almost as far as we can without upsetting markets, etc., in the recipient countries. I know of no case where a government has made a request to us under the rules that are usually respected in the international field with regard to gifts of food aid where this government has not responded and provided whatever we had to meet that request. I repeat that farmers have to live with the supply and marketing conditions within our area. They must not produce more than the effective market can absorb, notwithstanding the fact that there may be people somewhere in the world who can use this food. We have to bear in mind that it is cash receipts that are important to the well-being of farmers in Canada.

I now wish to deal specifically with our agricultural policy. The motion claims that serious damage to rural communities and to farmers was brought about by the failure of the present government to provide adequate agricultural policies. Any objective member of this House who wants to use even a little integrity and honesty in his assertions will agree there is probably more agricultural policy, leadership and new departures in coming to grips with the fundamental problems in agriculture before the farmers, the country and this Parliament than at any other time in recent history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: I think that the proposals we have made, the meetings we have had, the great agricultural congresses which have been successful in having the kind of discussion that the farmers want to have and, as well as other means of consultation, have led to the evolvement of policies for the general improvement of the agricultural community.

In addition, for the first time in the history of the Canadian Parliament, all of the agriculture bills have gone to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The committee can call witnesses and listen to opinions of farm organizations during the process of passing these bills. I think it is fair to say that in almost every case very important amendments have been made to these bills based on the representations of the farm organizations. I suggest that the kind of assertion in the motion at this time is not in keeping with the facts.

Mr. Yewchuk: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: I wonder if hon. members could hold their questions until the end of my speech. I only have 30 minutes. I have so many things to say that I am afraid I might not get them all into that 30 minute period. If there is time at the end of my speech, I will be very happy to answer the hon. member's question and other questions.

I think that the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and other departments are spending a greater portion of their time than ever before on the marketing aspects of agricultural products, both in the domestic and international field. I think that is a proper attitude and change of emphasis. I say that because I realize that our production technology has advanced to the point where Canadian farmers are capable of overproducing almost any commodity when they set out to produce to their maximum capability. What is more important, they can overproduce all commodities at the same time. The technology and know-how that our farmers possess today enables them to produce so much more in relation to a few years ago that we now have to turn the emphasis on finding better ways and means of having orderly production and marketing rather than constantly producing against the depressed prices that surpluses create.

I suggest that Bill C-176 is one step in the program of coming to grips with the basic structural requirements by way of amendments to policies and programs that will lead us there. From time to time temporary action has to be taken until the organizations are functioning well under the authority of Bill C-176. Occasionally this has been done under the authority of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. During the past few months we have taken action on such things as potatoes, apples and broilers under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. We have also taken action on corn under another authority. We will continue to do this when we find a particular sector or commodity within the industry in difficulty. Farmers and provincial governments agree that there is now a deficit in the total legislative authority that is required to really come to grips with some of these fundamental problems. I hope that members opposite will cooperate with the government to reach the point where we can significantly and substantially improve this situation in the shortest possible time. That kind of co-operation has not been made manifest up to this time.

I now wish to deal with the dairy policy. Hon. members are aware that there have been some very important changes in the past 12 months; first, in the general improvement in the economic well-being of the dairy industry, and second, in the kind of structures to keep it that way and to keep moving up from the very unsatisfactory position which has existed for a number of years. I want to offer my appreciation and congratulations to the dairy farmers of Canada and to other interested organizations, particularly organizations at the provincial level, which have spent a great deal of time and effort during this past year in order to reach the agreement which was formally signed on January 14 of this year.

Under the new market quota system that is now in effect, we have reached the stage where we do not have any surplus of Canadian cheddar cheese. But the end of the dairy year, March 31, we will probably have virtually no surplus skim milk powder. We probably have approximately 30 million pounds more butterfat than is required for usual commercial marketing. However, now that we have increased the price of these commodities, we have an even greater responsibility to ensure that we manage this with the co-operation of the industry in such a way as to keep the industry healthy. I think that hon. members will agree that more milk should be diverted to the cheese factories for the production of cheese. Recently, the price has been around 55 cents which is 8 cents more than it was under the old support price program. This is something we should weigh very carefully.

On the one hand, if there were a large diversion to cheese we could do a great deal of damage to the satisfactory situation which exists today. On the other hand, if we fail to divert enough milk to cheese making we might cause a sharp increase in the price of cheese because of temporary shortage. This would inhibit an expanding market in Canada and possibly cause a very large diversion of milk to cheese production, as a result of which we would be faced, first of all, with unhappy customers because of higher prices and then, when the price came down, with unhappy producers. So, there is a delicate balance to be maintained and the situation has to be watched carefully. The domestic market is growing quite satisfactorily. Now that we have all the milk, not only in the manufacturing sector but also the over-quota milk from the fluid milk sector under these quotas, we have to make sure that we produce enough to supply the market, and not more, at a reasonable price.

Turning to grain, I am the first to acknowledge that the grains industry, particularly in western Canada, has come through a very difficult period. I do not believe we have yet reached a point at which we can say that no further difficulties are likely with respect to cash flow and farm incomes, but I think it is fair to say that the federal government has recognized that producers were having a difficult time. Hon. members can look back over the figures at the size of the transfers which were made from the federal treasury into the grain economy during that period. It is, indeed, significant. Well over $200 million has been paid in the last 12 months through the various programs which have been in effect, programs such as the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the Lift program, cash advances, the deficits in the wheat pool accounts which were paid by the treasury, and so on. I am sure no member of this House and, indeed, no farmer in western Canada, would wish the situation to remain such that it was necessary for the federal government to transfer this amount of money into the grain economy every year. I believe it is fully justified in a situation where there is a depressed market and very limited marketing opportunities but, hopefully, the action we have taken in co-operation with other producer countries around the world has resulted in a much healthier and more satisfactory international market. In these circumstances, therefore, there will be no need during the next 12 months for sums quite as huge to be transferred in order to keep this industry viable.

Some hon. members complain that no satisfactory agreement was reached in Geneva during the past few days. I suggest that what came out of this conference was, in fact, a most useful agreement. It is an agreement which provides, or continues to provide, for consultation and for the monitoring of prices. It continues to place some obligation on all the exporting countries to monitor their prices and to consult immediately if there is a serious downward trend in prices. It provides for other useful things as well. Some hon. members have focussed solely on the price range which was contained in the old International Grains Arrangement and in some of the international wheat agreements prior to that. They have complained that such a feature is absent from the agreement. But the history of these international commodity agreements shows that when there is a price range, from a floor price to a maximum, and when there is production in excess of requirement imposing a downward pressure on prices, almost without exception the price has gone through the floor. The last time this happened, hon. members opposite were the first to complain that Canada had waited too long before adjusting her price after other nations had penetrated the floor as far as prices were concerned.

There is another thing I want to say with respect to this grains proposal and what went on in the past 12 months. I might point out that what took place was not really negotiations; they were discussions with all the other leading exporting countries of the world. They were meetings with representatives of the United States, Australia, Argentina, the European Economic Community and other exporting nations. I am not trying to persuade the House that what Canada did under the Lift program by way of reducing the acreage was solely responsible for the improvement in the international market. I realize, too, that there was no formal agreement signed between Canada and the other countries concerned. But look at the record, and see what happened. Canada reduced her acreage under wheat, because of huge, unmanageable surpluses, by about 50 per cent, from 24.8 million acres in 1969 to just over 12 million acres in 1970.

In Australia they have a different system. What they do, under their wheat board, is to announce in advance how much grain they will take from all producers. Presumably there is no market available at all for grain produced beyond that amount unless world markets suddenly open up. In other words, there is no guarantee. What they did was announce in advance that they would be taking 257 million bushels of wheat, a 40 per cent reduction compared with the year before. Bear in mind that the year before they had registered production in excess of 500 million bushels. Between 1968 and 1969, and again between 1969 and 1970, the allocation for wheat acreage in the United States was reduced by about 15 per cent in each period. There were reductions in the acreage shown in other parts of the world as well.

The action which we in Canada took is not solely responsible for the present improvement in the situation, nor is the action taken individually by any other country. But as a result of these meetings, as a result of the situation in which all these countries found themselves, which was basically similar, I suggest that the action taken together by all these countries did lead to the greatly improved situation which is evident in the market today. I believe my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) can take a great deal of credit for his participation in these meetings.

I wish to touch briefly, now, on two or three other matters. Under the Farm Credit Corporation program we have made a number of commitments during the last 12 to 18 months. For example, we have provided credit for diversification, credit which was not provided for under the regulations prior to that time. We have provided credit for debt consolidation which was essential in the circumstances encountered in some areas during the difficult years. We have provided for deferment of payment by farmers who could show it would work hardship, or be impossible, for them to obtain the financial resources from their sales to meet payments on time. There is much, much more. And I can say this: we shall be bringing in further amendments to the farm credit corporation program to make sure that this very important organization which has done so much for agriculture generally will be able to keep abreast of changing conditions and meet the requirements of modern agriculture.

The government advised the House many months ago that it was prepared to bring in an agricultural adjustment program to deal with the problem facing those farms that are so small that the operators find it impossible to compete, to pay their expenses and enjoy a decent standard of living as a result of their labours. I am pleased to advise the House that I now have authority from the cabinet to initiate a program that the government would be prepared to introduce. Hon. members are aware that $10 million was provided in the current main estimates for this program. The Prime Minister has written to the first ministers of all the provinces in the past few days outlining in general terms what the government is prepared to do. I have written a letter to each minister of agriculture outlining more or less the same proposal, and also suggesting a number of dates for getting together to finalize this policy and put the program into operation.

Discussions with the provinces must be held in order to ensure there is no duplication of, or contradiction between, the programs the provinces have to deal with this particular problem and the federal government's program. Our program is going to be a national program. In almost every agricultural area of Canada, communities are facing the same kind of problem I have outlined, though some of the provinces are in a substantially better financial position to remedy the situation. Not only this, Mr. Speaker, but there are individuals within those communities faced with economic problems who are now reaching the age when they should retire from agriculture. In my view, it is essential that this program be a national one that can be applied and administered uniformly across the country, embracing all sectors of agriculture—the dairy, grains, livestock, fruit and vegetable production, and so on.

Consolidation into economic units is not by itself going to be sufficient; some way must be found through this program to enable farmers to utilize the assets they have. If farmers decide to retire from agriculture because they are at or near retirement age, the program will allow them to do so with a high degree of dignity and security, something that has not been available to them, in my view, in the past. I hope it will not be long before I can announce the details of the program to the House, having had discussions with the provinces.

In conclusion, I wish to assert again that during the past year and a half or so there has probably been more leadership, more consultation, more policy changes and more new departures from established programs requiring more courage to come to grips with the fundamental and basic sectors of agriculture than ever before, quite contrary to what the motion alleges. I suggest the action taken by the government is going to lead to an improvement of the economic wellbeing of farmers generally in whatever sector of agriculture they are engaged.

One additional thing we need to do—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but I must do so to advise him that the time allocated to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give the minister unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, certainly I will not abuse that privilege; I had reached the concluding sentence of my remarks. May I say in conclusion—and I say this very sincerely—that what we need now is a great deal more co-operation from all members of the House to implement the programs that are before this Parliament. The greatest service we can do the farming community of this country is to implement the government's programs. After experience thus gained, we will be able to make further amendments to them if this is found necessary.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuck)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Program "Sesame Street"—Classification of content—Educational value; the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey)—Grain—Lift program—Extension of deadline date for payments for hail damage; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Pensions—Old age security—Acknowledgement of return of basic increase by certain pensioners—Use made of money.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP RESULTING IN DAMAGE TO COMMUNITIES AND PEOPLE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baldwin:

That this House condemns the government's lack of leadership which has humiliated the disadvantaged, dislocated the finances of provinces and municipalities, and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, having heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) telling the House that his country has never seen so much leadership from him and his government, I am wondering why this "travelling circus" has just returned from the western provinces. I think they went out there to give support to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board as well as to the Minister of Agriculture. Indeed, there is no doubt about that. As I understand it, the minister's trip was not too successful.

Mr. Olson: We had wonderful success.

Mr. Alexander: In any event, it appears to me to have been an exercise in futility, and I think this will be borne out later by the remarks of those more expert than I in matters of agriculture.

The minister alleged that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) had not spoken to the motion. This motion is so framed that no matter what you say about the government's fiscal and monetary policies you are still within the ambit of the motion.

[Mr. Olson.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Alexander: Let not hon. members opposite refer to the pork barrel reorganization bill, which is another devious ploy on the part of the government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said: "It does not matter how many camels I ride, if unemployment increases we won't be in government". That may be a little out of context, but the gist of his remarks is there. There is a feeling of pessimism and despair running through this country at the present time purely as a result of the fiscal and monetary policies of the government which have created unemployment. The government has created an horrendous situation, one that we cannot tolerate. We cannot tolerate it because it affects our prime resource, human beings who want to stay in the labour force or who want to get into the labour force. It is all very well for the government to announce that the seasonally adjusted rate has dropped, but this is cold comfort both for the 668,000 individuals who are unemployed and for the municipalities whose welfare facilities are already strained to the limit.

• (5:00 p.m.)

When I go back to the city of Hamilton and find the unemployed lining up for welfare at the rate of 60 a day because they cannot get unemployment insurance, I question whether the government is at all sincere. As I understand it, the unemployment insurance fund has increased from $450 million to almost $500 million. Yet it seems to me the government is more concerned about its anti-inflationary fiscal and monetary policies than with the hardships suffered by hundreds of thousands of people who are unemployed. This is obvious to anyone who is interested, because we are not interested in statistics, seasonally adjusted, unadjusted or any kind of adjusted. The actual figures indicate that the unemployment rate is 8 per cent which is 668,000 people. What is disturbing is that when we extend this figure to include the families, we find a large number of families are involved, businesses affected and so on all down the line. The Lord knows how many people are affected by the policies this government seems to accept and force on the people in this country.

Mr. Baldwin: There are only nine Liberals in the House and they will be unemployed pretty soon.

Mr. Alexander: The unfortunate thing is that the government continually boasts about the success of its schemes. I would like to remind the government that unemployment was the creation of the Liberal government because of its obsession with inflation. It was the government's insistence on coping with inflation which brought public opinion so heavily to bear on unemployment that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was forced to make an enormous infusion of money into the Canadian economy. Unemployment is not licked so long as there are over 600,000 people in the labour force who are unsuccessful in finding jobs.

Then, we come to the regional area which is extremely important. For some regions, the worst unemployment is yet to come. Not all provinces will participate equally in the initial stages of recovery. Daily, there are new reports of mass firings by floundering companies. Obviously, this creates pockets of severe regional unemployment not included in the national figure. When I returned to Hamilton I spoke to representatives of several industries there. These people were extremely concerned about the government's restrictive policies which leads one to the conclusion that we will see more unemployment. For one thing, the policies the government brings forward are not incentives; they are disincentives. One of the greatest disincentives was brought to bear by the fact that this monstrosity, the white paper on tax reform, was thrown upon the people of Canada. It has brought about uncertainty, fear and a lack of confidence. So long as we have this area of concern in respect of that item alone, I would say we are in trouble.

It seems to me the government does not want to back down. It will not admit that its policies have failed and tries to hoodwink the Canadian people in terms of the seasonally adjusted rate. I am very concerned about this, particulary when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) indicates there is a problem in respect of unemployment and the striking worker. The government indicated that it was worried about man-days lost through industrial disputes and the consequent impact on the economy. One is led to believe that the industrial disputes have had a good deal to do with unemployment. My figures indicate that the number of man-days lost through unemployment in 1970 was 124.2 million and that only 7.8 million man-days were lost through industrial disputes. What further discouraged me was the fact that in Ontario, which is the one region which is supposed to have benefited from the government's policies, the seasonally adjusted rate is reduced. If it is reduced for Ontario, I respectfully state that the other provinces must be in dire straits. The provinces and the municipalities are suffering, and I am amazed at the fact that this government continually sloughs them off when their welfare rolls continue to increase rapidly with no help from the government.

The government deliberately creates unemployment and does not bring in effective reform through the white paper on unemployment insurance. Therefore, there has been no updating of the unemployment insurance payments and the same people who take advantage of the $500 million fund are going on the welfare rolls. The cities today take a dim view of this. A recent survey conducted by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has served to assess the impact of high levels of unemployment on welfare expenditures at the local level of government. Fifty-one municipal units, representing 91 per cent of the total number of respondents, replied that the impact of high unemployment levels has been to raise their welfare expenditures substantially above original budget estimates. The persistence of high unemployment levels, and their consequent effect on welfare expenditures therefore, can place severe strains on the financial capabilities of some municipal units. I wonder what members from the Toronto area are saying in Toronto today when they meet with the Metro council? I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) is smiling in his charming manner. Perhaps he will become involved in this debate and tell us what they had to say to the city of Toronto, because if they do not have anything to tell they will not be around after 1972. I believe the parliamentary secretary knows this.

An hon. Member: We will be right back here.

Mr. Alexander: I doubt that you will be back unless you become more credible in respect of the demands of the Canadian people, their problems and the fact that you do not have any solutions for them. What concerns me also is the fact that there are unemployed in every class, from professionals to labourers, from students to highly qualified new graduates who expect to find employment on graduation. There are married men who wish a means to support their families and married women who wish to supplement the family income. I notice the Minister of Finance, as recorded in Hansard at page 2545, stated this:

> ... the official opposition, the Conservative party, appears to have as many ideas about the economy as it has spokesmen. This should come as no surprise to anyone, for when they were in office several years ago—and some members of that government are still seated on benches opposite—the nation suffered through the longest and most severe bout of unemployment in the postwar period.

It is not true that unemployment was more serious in 1958-62 than it is now. On CBC News Magazine of January 24, 1971 a university economist denied this allegation by the Minister of Finance. He stated four major points to substantiate his belief that the unemployment situation is much more serious now than a decade before. The following are his four points: First, unemployment now is extremely severe among young people, the age group which is extremely vulnerable to suffering a greater degree of deprivation than other groups because of their lack of sufficient build-up of unemployment insurance benefits and so on. In 1958 to 1962 unemployment was not concentrated among the young. Second, unemployment during the 1958-62 period was concentrated among the unskilled; now, persons of all varieties of skills, including the highly educated and the highly skilled are suffering from unemployment. Third, unemployment during the 1958-62 period came after a long period of upswing in the economy; the same is not true now. Fourth, unemployment now, but not during 1958-62, has come during a period of cultural tension. This fact, in itself, calls for more government intervention to alleviate unemployment than in previous years of decline.

Let me put something else on record in respect of the comments of the Minister of Finance, as recorded at page 2546 of Hansard, when the Leader of the Opposition indicated—he said this on several occasions—that we should have tax cuts, particularly for those on low income and even those in the middle income group. He mentioned that he would like to see the surtax removed. He also mentioned the fact that the white paper on tax reform is unacceptable. The Leader of the Opposition has mentioned that the 11 per cent sales tax on building material should be removed. In short, he said that what we have to do is bring back confidence in the economy, to which the government has said "baloney". In fact, the Minister of Finance dared the Leader of the Opposition to try his tax cut program on the provincial governments. As recorded at page 2546 of Hansard, the minister said:

> This would mean a loss to—
> —governments, because reductions in federal income taxes also reduce the revenues of provinces which the Leader of the Opposition says have not enough money now. I hope he drops in on the Conservative Premier of Ontario as well as the Conservative Premier of New Brunswick and tries that idea out on them.

In November, 1970, the Hon. C. MacNaughton, Treasurer of Ontario and Minister of Economics, had this to say about tax cuts in a speech in the Ontario Legislature:

> In the context of our concern for the growing tax burden in Canada, I want to comment today on one particular tax measure that deserves immediate attention. While I recognize that tax reform now cannot become effective before January 1, 1972, I suggest to this House that at least one relief measure can be undertaken for the coming year.
> I refer of course to the present 3 per cent surtax on personal incomes, which was imposed in 1968 as an anti-inflation measure. Our reform paper takes a strong position that this temporary surtax should not be incorporated as a built-in component of a reformed income tax structure.
> Ontario urges that this 3 per cent surtax be terminated explicitly at the end of 1970, and that the white paper rate schedule be revised downward to reflect this fact.
> This step would be positive and progressive on a number of counts. First, it would generate an immediate stimulus to the Canadian economy, which is required if we are to reduce unemployment and regain momentum and growth. Second, it would demonstrate to our taxpayers that temporary tax increases for economic stabilization purposes are indeed temporary. Third, by reducing taxes, it would restore confidence that governments are genuinely seeking reforms that benefit taxpayers.

An hon. Member: Genuine reforms.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I hear a voice in the wilderness over there. I wonder if the member is going to become involved in this debate or sit back and pussyfoot like the rest of them over there. I hope he has something concrete to say. If he has, I will listen.

I see that my time is starting to run out. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that the government must create confidence. There is no sense in its going around talking about a seasonally unadjusted rate or adjusted rate if in fact 668,000 of our people are out of work. To hon. members opposite I say: look to the Leader of the Opposition who has given you leadership, who has given you direction in a number of areas, one of which I mentioned at length and which has been endorsed by the Provincial Treasurer of Ontario as a means whereby this problem can be alleviated.

To return to the Prime Minister, I wonder if he still sticks with that great statement he made some time ago that, "If the Canadian people do not like my policies they can lump them." Was that just another great boo-boo he made? Let me close by repeating my first statement, that it does not matter how many camels you ride or how many orang-outangs you court, if the unemployment rate continues to rise as it has—and it will—hon. members opposite will not be back in government.

Mr. Barney Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed the humour in the debate this afternoon. I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). In fact, it was good to see him live today after watching him on television the other night until the wee hours of the morning. Incidentally, it is amazing how the Conservatives could take good Liberal voting machines and get all fouled up. They certainly do not understand our policies and they do not understand our voting machines.

I am sorry if the hon. member thought I was smiling while he was making his remarks. I always look that way before I get ill.

Mr. McCleave: Get on with your speech.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I could call this a dog's breakfast motion. I cannot figure out exactly at what it is supposed to be aimed, but it certainly gives a lot of scope. A part of the motion deals with agriculture, and certainly the hon. member for Hamilton West has handled the fertilizer pretty well. The hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned that he does not care about percentages, that he does not care about seasonally adjusted rates, that he just cares about people. I believe that. I think we all do, and I think that is the prime concern of everyone in this House. The question is: are the right things being done or the wrong things? Are we trying to be short-term, medium-term or long-term in our approach? Fundamentally, there are three time phases involved in this question. First, there is the immediate unemployment, then there is the medium term aspect involving the provision of summer jobs for students. Finally, there is the long-range aspect which involves regional disparities and the total economic goals of our country.

The hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned the meeting which was held in Toronto this morning. Mr. Speaker, I attended that meeting, and had to leave it a little early because of my duties here. The meeting was a very constructive one, and was attended by members of all parties, including the convert Conservative member from Toronto, a couple of members from the other party down the chamber, members of the provincial legislature and of the provincial cabinet, and members of the municipal council. The Mayor of the city of Toronto wisely had specific proposals to make, proposals which I think made a great deal of sense. They happen to fit in with the loan fund program of the federal government under which, I understand, Ontario will get $17 million, of which $5 million will go to Metro Toronto. This amount will help accomplish a fair share of the proposals put forward.

It was rather encouraging for members of this House to be able to meet with other levels of government and find specific proposals that matched specific programs, although all proposals did not match those programs. The trouble with debates like this, Mr. Speaker, is that we always seem to be trying to score debating points, and we do have a lot of fun with each other. But this is not a very humorous subject.

Mr. Alexander: I'm not joking; it's a very serious problem.

Mr. Danson: Then, you shouldn't talk about camels and orang-outangs. I hardly think that was a serious interjection, but that does not matter. I understand the hon. member for Hamilton West, and boys will be boys. The fact is that there are difficulties which are cyclical in any economy, and one government deals with them one way and another in another way. I know that when the Conservative party was in power they had their problems in 1962 and 1963, but I would like to deal with those problems which I think the present situation creates. I should like to mention how I think we should face them and deal with them in very specific ways.

I think the present situation presents business management with some very real facts of life. I think that industry, to a very large extent, was enjoying a boom over a long number of years, in fact unprecedented in our history, and as a result got into some rather sloppy habits. This is part of the reason for a necessary readjustment. It is one of the things that contributed to inflation. This is a tough way for management to have to become efficient, but in our market economy it is one of the things that happen to work. I think that management is looking at its own organization as it never has before. This one of the healthy manifestations of the situation, and in this country if we are to survive economically with our very high standard of living we must give more attention to the techniques of management that will help us avoid these cycles. May I say I also hope members of trained management will join us in government where their help will be valuable.

I think management must look at the competitive situation not only within our country but also in the export field. This involves a very serious look at the research and development policies within industry. Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward very much to the second report of the Senate Committee on Science Policy. The first one was extremely interesting reading, giving a historical review, but I look forward to the second one in the hope that it will make specific recommendations which will enable us to point our industry in the right direction selectively, and make productive and profitable.

I suspect that one of the problems, although I cannot pin it down, is that we have another bank operating in the market place today. I call it the BCF and BAR., the Bank of Cash Flow, or Bank of Accounts Receivable. It is a very odd thing in our economy today, and it is having a very important effect on the morale of business. We have come from a period of high interest rates and tight money. Now, interest rates are going down, money is looser, banks are much more willing to lend but the uncertainty within the business community has made it reluctant to borrow. Another special factor is involved, namely, that during this process everybody started banking on everybody else. Customers did not pay their suppliers, who in turn did not pay their suppliers. In business today, there is so much energy and time wasted in trying to keep the cash flow going that businessmen are forgetting to do those things which are productive. Not all of them are forgetting, of course, but I do not think any businessman is unaffected by the cash flow problem. While he might be able to borrow money from the bank more easily than before, he is afraid to do so because then his customers will use him as their banker.

An hon. Member: Have you heard of the white paper?

Mr. Danson: You could call the white paper a red herring in this context. I think the people have misunderstood and have blamed the white paper for this situation, but I don't know if that is what we should be blaming here. I think there is undue uncertainty in many cases, but that is not the point I am trying to get at. However, perhaps it is one contributing factor, whether justified or not. The fact is, people are reticent and while this tremendous cash flow problem exists people are reluctant to hire and reluctant to invest. I am presenting a problem rather than answers, but I suspect that underlying a great deal of the uncertainty is the question of cash flow and this is something which must be overcome. Every businessman is trying to keep a tight rein in order to survive and meet his payroll. If he cannot relax in that atmosphere he cannot think ahead. I do not think there is an easy answer to this.

Mr. Alexander: Ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

Mr. Danson: I think it is worth discussing with him if we can reach a solution to break the psychology. It is part of the psychology which exists and about which people are concerned.

Over a year ago when we were discussing inflation in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in a semi-facetious way I suggested that people stop using the credit card system so freely. People were being seduced by the "red convertible loan" type of advertising to buy things they could not afford. I suggested that people should get a discount for paying cash.

Mr. McCleave: How did it go over?

Mr. Danson: I produced these cards called "Cashex". Normally, when a person goes into a store and uses the Chargex or Diners' Club or American Express card the storekeeper has to pay a 4 per cent to 7 per cent service charge. My idea met with a tremendous response and the card is now in its fourth printing in a year, representing some 17,000 cards. I have not tried to promote it but people responded. Editorials have appeared in the publications of a consumers' group, the civil service union and in some newspapers. At this moment, letters and requests for cards are coming in at the rate of 50 to 100 a day, so people are concerned.

Mr. Alexander: What about the 668,000 people who have no cash?

Mr. Danson: This is not a panacea for all problems, but it is part of the cash flow psychology. If a storekeeper has cash as a result of not taking credit cards, he can use that cash to do his buying on much better terms and this should make things far more competitive. This is a concern which I did want to highlight, the question of cash flow, and I am only expressing it as a concern because I think it is destructive to the economy.

One of the other things that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the problem of summer employment for students. I was speaking to my son and my daughter-in-law to be, who is from Hamilton—

Mr. Alexander: Tell him to vote for—

Mr. Danson: I am going to be back next time, my friend, but we will miss you terribly. Of course, I will visit you when I visit my daughter-in-law in Hamilton. She is an arts student at York University and when we were discussing the problem of jobs and youth today, she pointed out that the universities are full of students in the general arts, political science and economics courses who do not know what they will do for a living. They wonder what we are going to do about it. We are spending an immense amount of our resources on education, not uselessly but not specifically either. These young people say that they did not know what they wanted in Grade XIII and their counsellors and guidance teachers did not know, either. When we look at the problem this summer we will have to look beyond it as well to understand what we are building—a generation of educated children with high expectations but no place to go. Perhaps that disturbs me more than anything.

An hon. Member: That is the just society.

Mr. Danson: The students in technical schools and in the sciences do have a specific place to go but the students with general arts degrees, for which we are spending tremendous amounts of money, have no place to go when they are through. This is an area which is provincial and not federal, but nevertheless we cannot help but be concerned and I do not think we should be afraid to deal with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam).

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The time of the hon. member has expired.

An hon. Member: But he has not made his speech yet.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the fact that the hon. parliamentary secretary raised the point about the meeting between the federal members and the Metro Council, I wonder if, with the unanimous consent of the House, he could elaborate on that. He said that some constructive things had been decided upon, so perhaps he could let the cat out of the bag and let us know what occurred at that important meeting.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, there was no cat in the bag. It was a preliminary meeting and the mayor had some specific proposals which were rather interesting. I had to leave to catch a plane before the meeting was over, but I am looking forward to the further report of my colleagues. There was a considerable amount of enthusiasm for the reinstitution of winter works programs, assistance to the municipalities, and additional welfare benefits. The question of grants versus loans was also discussed, as was the new loans program to assist municipalities.

This brings up an interesting problem in the case of the city of Toronto because although they want grants, these are more expensive to Toronto than loans. Ontario gets back only 80 cents of every tax dollar it contributes to the federal treasury as a result of the equalization grants.

Quite properly, proudly and justifiably, we enjoy a greater income. We hope to distribute some of this to the less favoured parts of the country so that they may become prosperous. I think that is a reasonable summary of the meetings. Certainly it is not over. When I left it, it was hoped we would meet again in one week so that the programs which have been referred to could be further discussed. In my opinion that sort of trilevel communication is very helpful. Perhaps the hon. member would like to do something like that in Hamilton so that the local people could talk about such matters.

Mr. Alexander: They have heard that sort of thing before. We want action.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is my urgent duty to rise in my place today and lend my full support to this motion condemning the government for the very serious plight in which our people find themselves. It is a plight brought about by the maladministration of this federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Southam: I was interested in hearing several hon. members on the government side say that this was one of the most all-encompassing motions ever to be presented to the House. Why should we not present such a motion? As the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) pointed out so well a few minutes ago, you can look at any part of the economy and you will find difficulties. So we had to bring in an all-encompassing motion. We have in Canada at present the highest degree of unemployment that we have experienced since the dirty thirties; we are experiencing our highest cost of living, the worst inflation and the highest interest rates that we have ever known. The agricultural industry is staggering, we have a housing crisis and we have disunity in the country. You name it; we have it.

I listened with interest to the tortuous defence that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) put forward in respect of the government's agricultural policies or, rather, its lack of them. Replying to several members, the minister dispensed his usual plausible nonsense. The fact is that his smokescreen covered up the government's lack of agricultural policies. He attempted to say—this is the inference that I drew from his remarks and no doubt it is also what other hon. members think—that the farmers of this country had never had it so good.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McCleave: Tell that to the farmers. They will not believe it.

Mr. Southam: Two of the main economic problems raised today revolve around two of the basic sectors of our economy. Those problems are, firstly, the plight of our manpower forces, a plight brought about by the highest degree of unemployment in Canada since the hungry thirties and, secondly, the very seriously depressed condition of the Canadian agricultural industry. My own province of Saskatchewan has, in common with all other provinces, been hard hit by unemployment. This problem was debated seriously in the House during the past few days and I shall have more to say about it later in my remarks.

I wish to speak in the short time allotted to me about the serious plight facing our agricultural industry. The agri-industry in Canada represents the second largest source of income in our country, wood pulp and paper being first. Today agriculture is in the worst state of depression since the dust-bowl days of the thirties. Why has this situation come about in Canada? It is not nearly so bad in other countries. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that this government and the previous government headed by Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson have lacked the experience necessary—I would even say, at times, the interest—to administer this most important segment of our economy.

Evidence of this lack of experience and lack of policy is found in all the royal commissions, task forces, agricultural congresses, grains committees, conferences, white papers and emergency meetings which have been set up to study the problems of our great agricultural industry. All these studies have done is create a great big political mirage which has led the farmer to believe that something is being done—and all of it has turned out to be window-dressing. The fact is that the costs of agriculture are accelerating by leaps and bounds and the return that the farmer receives for his produce in most cases is going down. The cost-price squeeze is now worse than ever before.

To further substantiate my charge, Mr. Speaker, that this government is floundering in the area of agricultural policy one only has to listen to the many questions that farmers are asking about government policies. The following are just a few of the many they have raised. They ask, first, what will replace the stability of grain prices once enjoyed under the International Wheat Agreement and more recently under the International Grains Arrangement which has just collapsed. Will there be a domestic two-price system that our competitors in other countries enjoy? Second, will acreage reduction programs be carried on in a similar way to the Lift program?

Third, will forage crop acreage increases be subsidized? Fourth, when will initial prices for the new crop year be set? Fifth, when will the new quota formula be established? Sixth, when will the various suggestions made under last fall's stabilization of grains policy be adopted and announced? Seventh, when will the Menzies report on the Canadian Wheat Board administration be released? Eighth, when will the serious fears relating to the government's white paper on tax reform be removed? I am talking of those fears which apply to agriculture. Ninth, does the government plan to move small farmers off the farm? Tenth, does the government intend to establish a special sales force to sell Canadian grains and products around the world? So the questions go, Mr. Speaker. All around there is widespread concern and confusion.

I wish to comment for a few moments on the minister's announcement of Thursday last concerning the collapse of the International Grains Arrangement. This announcement, I might say, was greeted with expressions of utter dismay, shock and even horror.

Mr. McCleave: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is leaving the chamber. He will not wait.

Mr. Southam: The minister referred to this general question—

Mr. McCleave: The minister is leaving. He should stop and listen.

Mr. Southam: —and went on to say that a great deal of good could emanate from the present arrangement even though there had been a complete collapse.

Mr. McCleave: The minister has gone.

Mr. Southam: I am referring to what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who reports to the House for the Canadian Wheat Board, said last Thursday. I quote from page 3275 of Hansard for February 11. The minister said in part:

> The results of this conference are far removed from what Canada had sought to obtain. However it should be borne in mind that the price provisions of the 1967 agreement have not been operative for some time. While the new wheat agreement now being concluded is of only limited significance—

Think about that, Mr. Speaker. That is quite the contrary of what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has just stated.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister to whom the hon. member has just referred, the Minister of Agriculture, has left. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who reports for the Canadian Wheat Board, was never here during the debate.

Mr. McGrath: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I did not want to intervene. I regret that the hon. member should have raised this type of question of privilege. However, since he has raised it, that is that.

Mr. Francis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is present. The minister is temporarily engaged. Another minister left just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his intervention. One can see that what I and others have been saying for a long time is correct. Apparently the government is not overly concerned about the problems of agriculture. If I may return to the International Wheat Agreement and to the discussions on that subject which have just collapsed, I think it might be worth while putting some facts on record. I think the government ought not to go unchallenged or uncriticized for what has happened in this area.

It has taken a backward step with respect to a matter in which over the years there was international co-operation. This agreement was made in 1949, after 12 years of behind the scenes negotiation involving 50 exporting and importing countries. The agreement entered into in 1949 worked successfully until 1961. On that occasion when the International Wheat Agreement was discussed—this was in the cycle of three-year meetings which the grains council or the wheat council called—a price increase of 12 cents per bushel was adopted. That price, it was hoped, would enable us to carry on successfully in the future. However, at that time many countries realized that some countries, and especially our friends to the south, had overly large surpluses. As a result, when the wheat question came up for study again in 1964 under the three-year cycle, our American friends persuaded other nations to agree to terms being set only on a one-year basis.

This led up to the 1967 meeting when the International Grains Arrangement was mooted at the conference in Geneva. The result was that the 11-month lapse that occurred in bringing in a new grains arrangement gave our competitors the opportunity of entering the market and playing around with it. In other words, while that took place the gentleman's agreement did not prove effective: several nations, including the United States, France and Australia, broke the agreement with respect to prices subsidies of transportation rates.

In the spring of 1965 the then Minister of Finance, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was responsible for the Wheat Board. Instead of supporting this international agreement we were faced with the situation where the United States cut the price by 18 cents in 10 days. Instead of consulting with his counterparts in the United States, the minister advised the Wheat Board to cut prices, which they did. As a result, our Canadian agriculturists, particularly the western farmers, lost $90 million. This was exactly the trap into which the United States wanted Canada to fall. In case hon. members think I am being unduly hard on our neighbours to the south, I have mentioned previously in this House who was responsible for first breaking this agreement.

I wish to quote from a very revealing document, the "Pool Broadcast" for February 5, 1971. It refers to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture conference held in Ottawa two weeks ago. The guest speaker at that conference was Tony Deschant, president of the Farmers' Union of the United States.

> Mr. Deschant said if the United States and Canada had observed their pledges, the floor price of the IGA would have been maintained.

This is the salient point:

> He said it was the U.S. that first broke the price.

The Canadian agricultural industry and agricultural industries throughout the world are the losers.

A classic example of the kind of distorted thought-processes that underlie a recent budget is a statement the Minister of Manpower and Immigration made in Saskatoon on February 2, 1971. I wish to quote from the minister's press release. It gives a false sense of security or importance to the western philosophy. I quote as follows:

> Inflation is under control, the economy is expanding and every Canada Manpower Centre has long lists of educated, trained, experienced, aggressive, hard working personnel—

That is not a record of which to be proud. While the minister's statements on wheat exports often seem to be drafted by his immigration staff, this statement on manpower and the Saskatchewan economy must surely have come from the proverbial "down on the farm". Carried away by the Lift program, the minister's aides have coined a new one—Operation Earlybird. The basis of this bold scheme is that Manpower will be ready when the private sector of Saskatchewan dutifully divides itself into groundhogs and earlybirds. The earlybirds correctly go to Manpower to select new employees from an exceptionally wide supply of willing workers. I quote from the minister's statement:

> —every Canada Manpower Centre has long lists of educated, trained, experienced, aggressive, hard working personnel—

The long lists, of course, are with the compliments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The Minister of Manpower and Immigration has no idea what the groundhogs will be doing. For the cautious, it should be pointed out that in our part of the country groundhogs have had an honourable and essential role in forecasting the length of winter. After reviewing the splendid contribution made by the federal government to Saskatchewan, the minister indicated that he will be going around saying, "I've just got to be optimistic". Perhaps he has concluded that the difference between a groundhog in the private sector and one on the Treasury Board is simply a frame of mind. More likely it is a degree of financial solvency or bankruptcy.

In Saskatoon, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration spoke of the federal government pouring $60 million into Saskatchewan in 1970 through regional economic expansion, and $6.7 million into Saskatoon through CMHC. What he did not say, and what he has neither sold nor evidently tried to sell the budget makers, are the following facts about his native province: one, Saskatchewan got only two per cent of total federal public works spending in 1970; two, the number of housing starts fell to 993 from 4,425 in 1969 on a January to September basis; three, the number of motor vehicle registrations fell in absolute terms by 5,800 from 1969 on a January to September basis; four, retail sales fell by approximately $40 million on a January to October basis; five, capital investment fell by approximtely $70 million for 1970; six, gross personal income fell by approximately $200 million for 1970; seven, the total population of Saskatchewan fell by 23,000 people on a January to October basis.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Perhaps we might proceed a little informally. The Chair is not sure whether there has been agreement between hon. members as to who is to speak next. I do not want to do anything unfair. In the remaining 10 minutes perhaps we could hear from the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) who apparently has something to share with the Chair.

Mr. Rose: I thought there was agreement with the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). He agreed that I could go first because of my illness. He was rather shocked—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this would probably be in order as far as the Chair is concerned. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Southam: I do not want to differ with Your Honour's ruling as to the time I took to make my speech, but Your Honour will recall there was dialogue at great length by two other hon. members, which took up part of my time.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on the point of order raised by Your Honour. If the two hon. members cannot agree about who should speak next, I want Your Honour to know that I am ready to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it would be easier if we called it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think at this point the Chair might recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I thank the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) for allowing me to go forward on compassionate grounds. I appreciate it because I have a very bad cold. I would like Your Honour to know that my speech is not to be sneezed at. I am interested in this debate. I just left a meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at which the problems of rural Canada were thoroughly examined. That group expressed its concern for the future of rural Canada. It is important to remember that policies that affect rural Canada ultimately affect urban Canada. I am sure everyone agrees that it is very important that rural Canada be kept as healthy as possible.

I am pleased to congratulate the mover and seconder of this motion. It may be regarded by some as a hydra-headed kind of motion; it gives us an opportunity to discuss matters of concern to particular members. My contribution in the 10 minutes at my disposal may be regarded as rather general. I prefer to think of them as being rather philosophical. They will not deal with any particular program which the government has placed before us but with what is happening in Canada in general.

I have entitled my little thought-piece "A new landed gentry". I say this because in many of the older societies such as are found in Europe and South America the people have been stifled. This is because the land in those countries has been delegated to a relatively few landed families or rural aristocracy. It does not need much study of the lessons of history to see that in Britain and Europe some of the most resplendent of the aristocracy traced their titles back to the huge estates they held over the years. In that situation, in older societies you find a concentration of land held in a few hands and, coincidentally, great masses of landless peasantry held in various form of bondage and, indeed, in some societies into the present century they have been used as agricultural labour.

It is to the landless that the revolutionary first appealed. We can cite the example of the Soviet Union, the Russian revolution. The same thing occurred in China, to some extent in Algeria and certainly in Cuba. I think we can predict that other parts of South America might be on this course. Remember, landless people have everything to gain and nothing to lose by revolting, and so the fight is on. I am sure the ancestors of many members of this House were attracted by the prospect of free land. That was the great appeal of America. So great was this appeal to the landless of Europe that within a century most of the land of North America, certainly in the western part, was taken up. We all know about that romantic era in our history. We harp back to it in all kinds of things like horse operas and television shows.

In Canada as opposed to America, about the same time as the land was being taken up, before the completion of occupation, came the technological revolution in agriculture. So with the introduction of new techniques and machines Canadian agriculture ultimately became so efficient that you could have one man on a farm feeding up to 40 people in the city. At the same time the land was filling up there was a migration of young people from that land into the urban areas, so we did not create in Canada a rural peasantry. I know there is a problem of rural poor in Canada but not to the same extent as in other countries. Instead, there was a constant drift to the cities.

We are told that within a generation 90 per cent of the population will become city-dwellers. A recent report indicates that the most favoured areas for urban growth in the next 25 years will be the Niagara peninsula and the constituency I am privileged to represent in the Fraser Valley, both, because of climatic and soil conditions, about the best agricultural land in the country.

An hon. Member: Next to Norfolk.

Mr. Rose: Pollution will be concentrated in these areas and thousands of acres will be blacktopped because the redundant sons and daughters of rural Canada will gravitate to the growth areas having experienced the problems of living in rural areas. They will consequently depopulate the other regions of Canada, notably the Prairies.

Of course—this was the fear expressed many times on the agricultural committee's tour recently to hear representations on Bill C-176—this depopulation will lead to a weakening of political power because we have, at least in essence, representation by population. But an even more serious concern in my opinion is the trend to larger and larger agricultural units in western and prairie Canada and the coincidental phenomenon of more and more apartment dwellers, renters or tenants in the cities. It follows that if you have larger and larger agricultural units in a depopulated section of Canada and consequently a diminution of landholders in total numbers, and you have more and more renters in the urban areas, there will be a larger and larger number of landless people. They may not be a rural peasantry but they might well show a special concern about the urban problems of our society. They might be an urban peasantry.

This is what has been going on. I think it continues to go on. When you get people out of the prairie region and you have larger agricultural units, you do not remove all the problems; you create problems in the cities because of the effects of this concentration upon the quality of life. You have problems of housing, pollution, transportation, education, police costs, delinquency and all the rest of it. On the Prairies, of course, the big land owners are often faceless corporations. These new, larger land owners, often absentee land owners, will become the new landed gentry. There is a great opportunity for the new landless tenants to become the new villains. I think we should be concerned about this.

I know it can be argued with some justification that no one should own land anyway; that it is ridiculous, except in the case of large financial corporations, to turn land over from generation to generation on the basis of ownership. Leasing might be much better. Incidentally, some of the suspicions attached to the new marketing legislation have their roots in this very concern by people who live in rural Canada, particularly prairie Canada, that if you concentrate our people in a particular area of Canada, Ontario, the Niagara peninsula or British Columbia in the Lower Fraser Valley, or perhaps Quebec, what you have is a gravitation of political strength to those areas. Consequently, it does not matter how a particular party appeals to a particular area; the strength lies with numbers and it lies within a certain area. So after a hundred years are we not in danger of completing the cycle—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to take part in this debate. However, I regret the bitter and unfair wording of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who is becoming famous for vitriolic statements which almost invariably exaggerate the situation far beyond recognition.

It is my intention to address most of my remarks to farm policy, but I should like first of all to record my opposition to the suggestion in the motion that this government has "humiliated the disadvantaged." The hon. member cannot be referring to the old age pensioners who have little other income, because they will shortly be receiving a substantial increase in their guaranteed income supplement. Neither can he be referring to the unemployed, who have had an interim increase of 10 per cent and will soon have the benefit of much greater increases.

In addition, family allowances for low-income families will be increased from 100 per cent to 166 per cent in a very few months. The Canada Assistance Plan, which is administered by the provinces but supported on a dollar for dollar basis by the federal treasury, is constantly being improved from province to province. More and more housing is being provided, with federal assistance, for disadvantaged families. Policies for increased employment are beginning to be effective, and inflation has subsided. That record alone would be good enough to persuade me to vote against this motion if it should come to a vote.

As I said earlier, I intend to devote the little time I have—and it is far too short—to a discussion of the many things that the government has been doing for the farmers of Canada, particularly for the prairie farmers. I do this because the motion refers to the government's agricultural policies. On October 29 the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), tabled in the House of Commons a set of proposals for the prairie grain industry, including a very interesting grain income stabilization proposal. I had an opportunity to discuss these matters with several groups of farmers in my constituency during the Christmas break and I feel I can make some useful suggestions about some of the proposals. Incidentally, I refer to the grain income stabilization plan because an item of $100 million was included in the recent budget to finance such a plan and because I expect legislation soon to give effect to it.

There are those who have criticized the budget because they say there is little in it for the people of Saskatchewan. They completely overlook the $100 million estimate of the cost of this grain income stabilization plan, the greater part of which will accrue to grain farmers in Saskatchewan. It is estimated that the gross income from the six major grains in the three Prairie provinces in 1970 was $823 million, $457 million of which was received by Saskatchewan farmers—about 55 per cent. Alberta's share of the total was 29 per cent and Manitoba's was 16 per cent. So if this stabilization plan becomes operative for this crop year and distributes $100 million to Prairie farmers as expected, about $55 million will find its way directly into the hands of the grain farmers of the top grain growing province of Canada, Saskatchewan.

Now I want to make a few comments about the grain income stabilization proposal to which reference was made earlier today. It seems to me that most farmers accept the plan in principle, but there are changes we would like to see made to parts of it. The major change has to do with the contribution farmers would make toward the plan. That contribution, it is proposed, would be as much as 3 per cent of their gross receipts for the six major grains—wheat, oats, barley, rapeseed, flax, and rye—to a maximum of $10,000 in any one crop year. Right from the beginning I have said that a 3 per cent deduction off the gross grain income is too great a burden, especially when net income from grain farming is very low or non-existent at the present time. Responsible farm organizations have asked that the deduction be no greater than 1 per cent of gross grain receipts and I urge the government to give serious consideration to that request.

Because stabilization payments to individual farmers, in those years that the formula would require such payments, would rise or fall in accordance with the individual farmer's success or otherwise in obtaining grain income, much concern is felt in parts of the Prairies which are subject to crop failure. They fear the strong possibility that they may suffer two or three successive crop failures at the time a stabilization payment became available. There are several ways in which this danger could be at least partly overcome. Farmers might be given the option of using the three best years in the past five or six to determine their three-year average. This might pose severe administrative difficulties but it is certainly worthy of investigation. Another proposal is to count crop insurance, hail insurance and PFAA benefits as grain income for purposes of the stabilization plan. This seems to be a very appropriate suggestion and I ask the minister to give it favourable consideration.

Because all-risk crop insurance is very vital for grain farmers and will become even more vital with this stabilization plan, I again urge all those responsible to make the existing plans in the Prairie provinces more attractive to farmers by improving the coverage, reducing the premiums, or both, so that farmers can and will protect their individual incomes against the many hazards in grain production in the west. The very least that should be done is to make crop insurance available to every part of the Prairies. As many members will know, the federal and provincial governments each pay half the administrative costs of federal-provincial crop insurance plans, and the federal government also contributes 25 per cent of the premium cost. I take this opportunity to again ask the federal government to increase its contribution toward these crop insurance premiums from 25 per cent to 50 per cent.

There are many other suggestions I could make for minor improvements to the stabilization plan but I will discuss these again, as I already have, with the ministers who are developing the plan. However, I must refer to the lack in the plan of any protection against inflation. If it stabilizes grain income at the average of the five previous years, and if the value of our dollar continues to go down as it has through most of Canada's history, we are not really stabilizing incomes. Instead of stabilizing at 100 per cent of the five year average, we should stabilize at 100 plus "X" per cent. The "X" per cent would represent the change in the value of the dollar over the five-year period or the inflation in the cost of production, which is almost the same thing. All in all, I believe the stabilization plan is a good one and is acceptable to farmers, especially if it can be amended in accordance with some of the suggestions I have made.

There is another feature of the October 29 announcement regarding grain production that I would like to comment upon. The suggestion that high initial prices might be used to persuade farmers to grow certain kinds of grain which might appear to be in demand, with any losses resulting therefrom becoming a charge against a future pool of the same grain, received the same universal rejection which I registered as soon as I heard it. I believe such manipulation is unnecessary. I believe that if farmers are assured of a market for a certain kind of grain they will undoubtedly produce it with the normal type of initial pricing we have known throughout the years.

If farmers themselves were making decisions about the level of initial payments, it might be defensible to suggest that they be held responsible for any consequent losses; but since the Wheat Board is not a producer-controlled board the government should continue to stand behind the initial prices they set. If all the same producers were in consecutive pools it would not be too bad, but there is continuous change in the list of producers of a particular kind of grain. New producers enter farming, other producers cease farming and many move in or out of the production of one or more of our grains from year to year. The greatest objection to such a proposition is that while it might stimulate production in the first year of its operation, it could have the opposite effect in disastrous proportions in subsequent years if it became apparent that there would be a loss chargeable to the next year's pool.

Because some opposition speakers have tried to leave the impression that Liberals have no concern for grain farmers I would now like to spend a few minutes reviewing this government's record with respect to the grain industry. This government has done many things in the past 2.5 years to assist grain farmers. Interest free cash advances were doubled, the Export Development Act was passed to provide better credit terms to our grain customers and the "block system" was devised to improve our grain transportation system.

On July 1, 1969, the government appointed Charles Gibbings to the Wheat Board. He is a Saskatchewan grain farmer who had been president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for several years. The performance of the Wheat Board has been steadily improving ever since. Our antiquated quota system was investigated by a government-appointed committee which included the vice-president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Ted Boden. This report has already resulted in some improvements and others are to be made in the coming year.

A two-price system was begun in March, 1969, which pegged domestic wheat at $1.95.5, while export prices fell nearly 20 cents. The Canada Grain Act, unchanged for 40 years, has been revised—I might say, over the strenuous delaying tactics of the Conservatives—and soon protein grading will be a reality. A Durum payment of 25 cents per bushel was made last spring by special action of the government, which put $6.5 million into the hands of Durum producers which they otherwise would not have received. Incidentally, I believe that my efforts had a great deal to do with the government's decision to provide special funds for the Durum payment.

Over a year ago the government appointed Hon. Otto Lang as minister in charge of the Wheat Board. This was the first time a federal minister had been given exclusive responsibility for the grain industry. He started an aggressive campaign to sell wheat and feed grain, and sales are going steadily upward. He persuaded the government to budget $100 million for a wheat acreage reduction plan, called Lift. In spite of its shortcomings, this plan succeeded in cutting wheat production in half in 1970 and is putting $60 or $70 million of new money into our Prairie grain economy.

A former government appointed a task force on agriculture. This government has convened two Canadian congresses of agriculture to discuss their report, one in March, 1969, and another in November, 1970. Never before had we had a national meeting of all segments of agriculture to look at farm problems and consider possible solutions to them. The government has been paying increasingly larger sums to the Wheat Board for wheat storage. This accounted for most of the 12 cent final payment we received in the spring of 1969. Last year there was a deficit in the Wheat Board accounts, which required the government to put up $58 million to support the initial prices on wheat, oats and barley for the crop year 1968-69 and to allow that extraordinary 25 cents payment on 1968-69 Durum Wheat.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has stated that he will announce the initial prices for 1971-72 before March 1, 1971, and will at the same time indicate expected quota levels for the following crop year. He has already given preliminary recommendations for seeding next spring. These call for a 65 per cent increase in wheat, a 60 per cent increase in barley, a 50 per cent cut in flax, a cut of 35 per cent in summerfallow, an increase of 10 per cent in grass and not much change in other crops such as rapeseed and oats. The $10 an acre incentive to plant forage, spread over two years—which was a new program in 1970—will be continued for perhaps another two or three years. It was tied to wheat acreage reduction in 1970 but will not be so related in 1971.

The government has steadily increased Canada's food aid program. This year it is buying about $100 million worth of our grain for this purpose and is now one of the Wheat Board's best customers. The minister has two very important studies under way at present, one on the marketing methods used by the Wheat Board and the other on ways in which our grain handling and transportation systems can be made more efficient and less costly. Both of these hold great promise for a brighter future for our grain industry.

Time does not permit me to describe the many other programs which benefit grain farmers and which the government has maintained or expanded. There is the Farm Credit Corporation, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, accelerated depreciation on grain storage, removal of excise tax on manufactured grain bins, crop insurance, PFAA, PFRA, feed grain freight assistance, and so on. There is absolutely no question that the federal government is concerned about Prairie grain problems and has been taking meaningful action to provide assistance.

The government and Parliament have budgeted funds for a farm adjustment program. I hope this program will be announced soon and that it will make it possible for low-income farmers to get the assistance they need to attain viable units. Consideration should be given to better credit arrangements so that young, would-be farmers can get themselves established on an economic basis. Older low-income farmers should be assisted so that they can continue to live on their farms with security and a reasonable standard of living.

I again take this opportunity to impress upon the government the case for a much more satisfactory and equitable two-price system for wheat. Another cent or two on a loaf of bread added to the price the consumer pays would add $1 or more per bushel to the price of wheat obtained by farmers. This would be only modest compensation from our high-priced domestic economy to assist grain farmers, most of whose products are sold on world markets in competition with heavily subsidized grain producers in other countries.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to return briefly to the grain income stabilization proposal. I want to emphasize that this is not the cure-all for all our grain problems. Most of the current programs such as crop insurance, PFAA, interest free cash advances, international food aid, and so on, will be continued. The stabilization plan is not an insurance plan, a guaranteed income plan or a deficiency program. It is purely a stabilization plan which will help every individual farmer in years when grain income is down, and it will have a great stabilizing effect on our small rural communities and on the industries that serve grain farmers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the six o'clock recess I yielded to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose). I am glad I did so, not only because it gave him an opportunity to go home and nurse his cold but because it gives me an opportunity to reply to something he said. He referred to the old Socialist doctrine that is being revived again by a prominent group in the NDP, which maintains that the state should own all the land and that farmers should be only tenants. Let me tell you that farmers did not settle on the Prairies to become sharecroppers for the state. The old CCF party in Saskatchewan spent many years in the wilderness and it was not until they disowned the doctrine of state ownership of the land that they managed to gain power. This resurgence of the radical left wing Socialists who stridently advocate state ownership of almost everything, including farm land, is all that is needed to ensure the demise of the NDP in rural Canada.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, based on the enthusiastic reception accorded the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet in Saskatchewan on February 12 and 13, that the Liberal party is well on the way to regaining its rightful position as the dominant party in rural Canada. I am confident that the majority of Canadians support the government in its efforts to be fair to people in all parts of this great nation, which will remain united under the progressive and flexible leadership of our outstanding Prime Minister. Therefore, I cannot support this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, may I ask Your Honour if there is not a rule of the House of which the hon. member who just finished needs to be reminded? This is the sixth or seventh occasion on which he has treated us to a recitation read at violent speed, and I think there is a rule of the House which prohibits the reading of speeches.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has referred to a practice of the House, and it seems to the Chair that sometimes it is honoured in the breach. In any event, at this point the hon. member has concluded his remarks and so I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I regret that this motion will not come to a vote. It will not come to a vote because of what I consider to be one of the major inadequacies of the new rules of the House, and I hope that those rules will be reviewed before this House becomes nothing but a mere rubber-stamp for the government. And, Mr. Speaker, there is a great danger of that, especially as you look around this empty chamber tonight at a time when this country is in the midst of the highest unemployment it has experienced in many years.

Mr. Gray: What about the empty opposition benches?

Mr. McGrath: I make no distinction. I refer to empty benches all over the House. But the government has special responsibility and it is not discharging that responsibility. Its members should at least come into the House and listen to the legitimate representations of the members of the House who are daily subjected to the cries and the appeals of the unemployed and the disadvantaged. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) can relax. He will not have to wrestle with his conscience because he will not have to vote for or against the motion.

In examining the serious, critical problem of unemployment, particularly as it relates to the disadvantaged people of this country, we must examine it in the context of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the charge placed upon him by Parliament when at the beginning of this Parliament it enacted legislation setting up his new department. Parliament gave him special powers to create new jobs. He was given broad and sweeping powers and it was generally conceded that they were needed if he was to succeed in bringing regional disparity and its consequences to an end. But today we find ourselves in the midst of critically high unemployment, once again examining the functions of the minister and his department to see if they have been discharged properly. There is very little we can go on.

Certainly we cannot get much enlightenment from the minister's speeches. When the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion does make a non-partisan speech outside Quebec—and that is very rare—he very rarely says anything worth while. Last Friday during the government's crusade to western Canada the minister made one of his rare non-partisan speeches. I found it difficult to read anything into what he said because in actual fact he said nothing. He said nothing to enlighten us on how he is living up to his responsibilities in this period of critical unemployment. The only thing I could find in his speech worthy of quoting was the following, and I quote from his speech on February 12 at Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan:

> While we are working largely with economic tools, our basic concern is with improving the lot of people. In the last analysis, our success or failure will be measured by the extent to which we have helped the disadvantaged gain fuller access to the benefits of our Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very noble objective. It is an objective with which nobody can quarrel. It is an objective with which everybody will agree. Certainly every member of this House will agree with that statement. But is the minister doing that? Is the new department doing that? I ask what consolation it is to the 800,000 Canadians who are unemployed to hear that noble and high-sounding phrase from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Hon. members may think that I am exaggerating when I say 800,000 unemployed in this country but I am quoting from a speech the minister made in this House a few days ago in the budget debate. What advantage can the poor people of this country draw from that phrase? I submit they get the same consolation they got from the phrase "just society" which is now, mercifully, forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this country expect more than high-sounding and noble phrases. They expect action, and the facts indicate that they are not getting it. What is more important, they are not getting it from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who has special responsibility in this area. The performance of the minister does not stand up to critical analysis. It is only fair to say that nobody expected miracles. When Parliament set up the new department and gave this minister these new powers, nobody expected him to create jobs overnight.

Everyone agreed that this would be a long-term program because it was a program to end regional disparity—the age old curse of confederation. Everybody agreed, Mr. Speaker, that this could not be done overnight. It was generally conceded by all members of the House that it would take time to restructure lagging economies and to create the type of economic climate in disadvantaged regions of the country that would provide the necessary jobs for the people to give them those advantages to which the minister alluded in his speech in Saskatchewan a few days ago—to give them, to use the words of the minister, "fuller access to the benefits of our Canadian society."

We were prepared to wait, Mr. Speaker. We figured that perhaps it would take ten or fifteen years. We did not expect the economic situation in the Atlantic provinces to be cured overnight. We did not expect the economic situation in northern Ontario or in parts of the west and northwest to be cured overnight. We felt that it would be a long-term program. But something happened. In the middle of this program there was an election in Quebec and a new government came into power. It came into power on the promise of creating 100,000 new jobs.

Mr. Woolliams: What nonsense!

Mr. McGrath: That was the promise made by that government, and now it finds itself having to fulfil an election promise to create 100,000 new jobs. That changed things, because the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, whilst he has this responsibility in the government of Canada also has special responsibilities in the government, both political and constitutional, with respect to the province of Quebec. Because of these factors the federal government felt it had an obligation to the new government of Quebec. It felt it had to move to get them off the political hook as a consequence of that irresponsible political promise.

I do not mean to diminish in any way the seriousness of the unemployment problem in Quebec. It is very serious. The latest DBS figures indicate that the province of Quebec has 234,000 people unemployed. That is more than twice as many as the new jobs they were promised by their government. The federal government then felt that it had to move in, and nobody quarrels with that. My quarrel is with the way in which they moved. They changed the whole philosophy of this long-term program to end regional disparity; it was a long-term, growth-oriented philosophy. They changed it by amending the Regional Development Incentives Act and they brought these amendments in just before the Christmas recess. They amended this particular statute, which is the cornerstone of the government's regional development policies, by declaring the city of Montreal a regionally disadvantaged area. That was the consequence of what they did.

They amended the act and designated the city of Montreal in the same terms as St. John's, Newfoundland, Halifax, Saint John, New Brunswick, or some of the more disadvantaged areas of the country. They changed the whole philosophy from a long-term regional development philosophy to a short-term program to cope with the situation of its own creation. Unemployment in Canada's largest city was created as a consequence of the government's monetary and fiscal policies to fight inflation. In doing so they destroyed the whole philosophy of regional development in this country. They did this by declaring the largest city in Canada, Montreal, a regionally disadvantaged area. At the committee stage we had an opportunity to examine the government and we heard evidence during the course of the amendments to that act. One of Canada's foremost experts on regional development, Professor Brewis, stated:

> The proportion of the population falling within designated regions of one sort or another will be increased from one third to one half. As a result the efficacy of the legislation to aid the formerly designated areas will be diluted. How far it will be diluted is open to question but there is no question that some of the formerly designated areas are going to be relatively worse off.

We are going to be worse off because the government changed a long-term regional development policy into a short-term policy to fulfil a political obligation in the province of Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, we have to bear the consequences of that action. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had something to say about this. Indeed, it seems that every time the subject of unemployment is raised in the speeches of the Prime Minister or any of the ministers they point to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion: it is the government's panacea to cure unemployment and the problems facing the country as a consequence.

Mr. Woolliams: Only nine members in the House.

Mr. McGrath: We face empty government benches every day in this House. The most we can hope for is ten ministers, but they had 18 in Saskatchewan. During the course of a speech in Saskatchewan when referring to the government's policy to combat unemployment, the Prime Minister said:

1. Creating new jobs in those regions of the country and in those industries hardest hit by slowdowns, and
2. Providing additional assistance to those individual Canadians facing the greatest hardship.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the government has failed in both objectives. If time permits I shall show where they failed in objective No. 1. In the second area they have failed by refusing to give the provinces a better deal under the Canada Assistance Plan to cope with the extraordinarily high welfare payments which the provinces have to pay as a result of the government-inspired high unemployment.

They have failed in the first instance, as indicated by the most recent figures showing the performance of the Regional Development Incentives Act up to November 30, 1970. They show conclusively that the program does not create jobs in the disadvantaged areas; that it creates jobs in the areas of highest employment and lowest unemployment. For example, the number of jobs created per application in the province of Newfoundland was three; the number created per application in Prince Edward Island was 26; the number created in Nova Scotia was 20; the number created in New Brunswick was 19; the number of jobs per application in Quebec was 60 and the number per application in Ontario was 77. That province has the lowest unemployment and highest employment. In that province were created the greatest number of jobs per application under this program. And so it goes across the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I do so to say that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree unanimously to allow the hon. member to continue?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For one minute.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I will not take advantage of the indulgence of the House. I merely want to conclude that part of my remarks which refers to the Prime Minister's statement about the success of the government's regional development policies in creating new jobs. My point was that the number of new jobs per application was highest in the provinces with low unemployment and lowest in the provinces with the highest unemployment.

I think the statistics I have placed on record, beginning with those for Newfoundland, the province with the highest unemployment in the country and with the lowest number of jobs per application, and ending with Ontario which has the lowest unemployment in the country and the highest number of jobs per application, show the failure of the government's regional development program. I shall place other statistics on the record during a future debate which will show the futility and utter failure of the government's regional development policies in coping with the very serious problem of unemployment in this country. More particularly, they will show the failure of the government's regional development policy in fulfilling the obligation placed upon it by Parliament; the obligation of creating an economic climate in the regionally disadvantaged areas of the country which will make it possible for the people of those areas to find suitable employment.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will not exceed the time allowed members for the present debate.

Since today is an allotted day set aside for the opposition, it is quite normal that more opposition members than government members are present. The simple reason for that is that they want to air their grievances against the government.

To criticize is easy, and I find it rather strange that opposition members should do today what they have always done, that is to base their criticism on non valid and unfounded arguments. It is always easy to criticize when one is a member of the opposition, because one always dreams of being one day on this side of the House.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, a sentence written by Jean Rostand which I quoted last Friday: One may say that science has made men out of us without first having made us people worthy of the quality of human beings. I could say of the hon. members of the opposition that politics has made gods of them before giving them the quality of true politicians. That may be why they have not been listened to very attentively by the government and why their criticism, which could often be constructive, most frequently shows hatred and lack of responsibility.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) tabled in the House not long ago a white paper on social security which I could qualify as a masterpiece. The matter was under consideration for several years and was well established. In view of the available tax revenues, it was the best policy which the federal government could carry out, in order to help underprivileged citizens. He accepted the principle of redistribution and selectivity rather than that of universality. It is a principle which is all to his credit and this without burdening further the budget of our fellow citizens.

Those various programmes will inject almost half a billion dollars into the economy in favour of the underprivileged. It is an extremely satisfying initiative which will certainly enable a great number of people to have a more decent living than at the present time.

This principle was studied, worked on and analysed by several experts who finally opted for selectivity rather than universality. It is simple: 70 per cent of Canadians draw a salary of less than $10,000 per year. Obviously, we had to redistribute the money in a better way, so as to increase their standard of living and to pull these people out of the misery into which they had been for some years.

It must also be said that the principle of selectivity was chosen over that of universality because 20 per cent of the people earn only $4,500 per year or less, and that 640,000 Canadian families, out of 3 million, include children under 16. This means paying allowances to 1,560,000 recipients who will profit, up to a certain point, by family allowances, which means 50 per cent of the 3,000,000 Canadian families.

Needless to say that this is a very fortunate redistribution and a formula for the 70s that no government could object to.

Mr. Speaker, the government is often accused of sins it has not committed but which could well have been committed by the provinces mainly as regards social security which is constitutionally under their jurisdiction.

But had it not been for the federal government, I wonder what our social security programs would be today. It is always the federal government because of its concern about our citizens which initiated these programs.

And today I wonder, mainly as regards social assistance for which the government gives the provinces 50 per cent of what they have to pay to recipients, if fewer sins would be laid at our door if the administration of social security were assured by the federal government rather than by the provinces.

There is no need for figures. It is enough to take a walk through Ottawa and Hull to find that the people on welfare do not even know that the federal government is paying 50 per cent of the money they are getting, and that poor management by certain provinces is to blame for the fact that people on welfare cannot live decently.

During federal-provincial conferences, it has been suggested that these responsibilities should be given back to the provinces. Perhaps this is true but we should be careful and see to it that the provincial programs have the same objectives as the federal programs.

The federal programs generally follow the individuals wherever they go. Everyone knows what provincial programs are. For instance, as regards health insurance plans in force in the provinces, if a recipient leaves his province for three months, he is covered for three months by the other province, but after three months, he must pay taxes. Should he become ill and have nobody to care for him, no hospital will be able to look after him. He will receive extraordinarily high bills, because he will not be covered any more.

Federal programs keep up with the individual while provincial programs expire at the end of the period of time set by each province.

It is true that the lot of the underprivileged in Canada is an unfortunate one and that we should do more for them, but it is wrong to say that we should give $150 to everyone 65 and over. It would merely be a piecemeal solution.

Mention was also made of a guaranteed annual income. That would probably be the ideal solution but the society in which we live is not an ideal one, far from it. One has but to listen to the opposition members to know that we are far from an ideal society.

Such piecemeal solutions may make headlines in newspapers but are absolutely worthless in practice, for the Canadian citizens will be the ones to be taxed again, in order to refill the treasury and to redistribute that money to the ones who need it. But the levying of taxes must stop somewhere. Now with its intelligent policy, the government meant to provide better redistribution of tax revenue.

I do not think that quibbling and insults will help us to to do anything. I always thought that a frank and open discussion could bring tangible results, not tales like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. I cannot see what good it does to tell people in high government places that they have failed to keep their promises and to accuse them also of a host of other misdeeds.

Be it understood that on this earth, no man is perfect, and even less any government, since it is comprised of men. However, one cannot say that governments deliberately fail to do their duty. They do their best with the means available to them. I need not look long for examples. Not so long ago, we had a non-Liberal government, with a sweeping majority in the House, and it was defeated four or five years later. How can this be explained? Were there too many bright people together? Did high voltage cause the instrument panel to explode? It is probably so.

In their pride, did the members all cover the same post? Perhaps. Anyway, there are no perfect men: there are only ambitious men, especially in politics. In fact, it would seem that everybody here is born a prime minister.

I believe that our Prime Minister is extremely clever and gifted. I do not speak those words to praise him; the truth is that everybody, including the press, throughout Canada says so. He does his best, but he is human and so are the members of his cabinet. The federal government is the best government organization in all Canada.

My hon. friends might say that politics has become a career. In politics, you cannot make a career, you cannot become a politician, you can only play petty politics and you can do it by resorting to arguments you heard from the other side of the House.

You become a petty politician because you have the ambition to make politics your profession. They are sincere politicians, but not unlike seasons, they fade away. Whoever makes politics his profession loses his credibility with Canadians. Those who have been here for too long are not listening to their constituents any more. They have become the professionals of politics. They talk about all sorts of things, about Viet Nam or some other remote country, all things which, even though they should get some degree of attention in the House, are none of its everyday concern.

We know that we have an unemployment problem on our back. In March of 1970, there were approximately 570,000 unemployed. This year, this number has grown considerably. However, unemployment is not Canada's own problem, it affects other countries, too. Why? Because modern technology is and has been moving forward.

The problem lies in the educational system. We set up schools of sociology and other somewhat "variable" sciences. We establish new departments with an enrolment of as many as 10,000 students when only 400 jobs or so a year are provided. This is how unemployment springs up by itself.

It is none of the federal government's business to go and tell the provinces what they should be doing. They are supposed to know their way around. They have become unemployment mills and I think that we should concern ourselves with this situation, even though it is not of our jurisdiction, because we are providing the funds. As a matter of fact, it would seem we are encouraging unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I sincerely regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty in rising to support this motion which reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the government's lack of leadership which has humiliated the disadvantaged, dislocated the finances of provinces and municipalities, and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies.

A few minutes ago the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) objected to a suggestion made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) that all farm lands should be socialized, or something to that effect.

An hon. Member: He didn't say that.

Mr. Korchinski: I did not hear what the hon. member said; the objection was raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia. My point is, why is he raising this objection now? By the time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is finished with us through his proposed estate taxes in the white paper on taxation, the government will own them anyway. Despite all the protests he made in reading his speech, which was well prepared and documented—

An hon. Member: Are you not reading now?

Mr. Korchinski: —the Premier of Saskatchewan was interviewed over television last Sunday on the program "Question Period" and he protested that his province was not receiving proper attention with regard to the unemployment situation. He felt that the federal government was not giving Saskatchewan all that was necessary to keep the residents of the province happy.

• (9:00 p.m.)

An hon. Member: That is not what he said on Saturday night.

Mr. Korchinski: I don't know what he said on Saturday night, but I saw him on television on Sunday. I rise because last Thursday the minister responsible for the Wheat Board stated in the House that despite all the efforts made at Geneva, the International Grains Arrangement had not reached a successful conclusion. I quote some of his comments:

> We wished to include price levels which would reflect adequate returns to efficient wheat producers... While it is a matter of serious regret that an agreement including pricing provisions could not be concluded we are not unduly discouraged or pessimistic over the lack of such an agreement at this time.

Perhaps the minister is not discouraged or pessimistic, but I think a lot of the farmers are discouraged or pessimistic because of the position in which they have been placed. Most farmers are familiar with the old International Wheat Agreement which served them well over the years. At least they knew there would be a basis for price stability and that anything outside the agreement would be sold as a result of other arrangements. However, because the negotiations in which this government took part covered many other commodities beside grain there was a breakdown of the International Grains Arrangement. I wish to quote from the Star-Phoenix of January 16, 1971, as follows:

> Critics have suggested that the 1968-71 International Grains Arrangement, with its dazzling pledges of big price increases, sagged partly because negotiations were linked with huge tariff bargaining on industrial goods. The strength of the wheat agreement was reduced in exchange for industrial tariff concessions.

This underlines the fact that various concessions were given. I understand that the chemical industry was well treated as a result of this arrangement. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was hopeful that Britain's entry into the European Common Market would not hurt us generally, although he admitted it might do so as far as agricultural products are concerned. Other factors would compensate for the loss suffered by agriculture. Having made that blunder before, I wonder whether they tried to get out of the agreement with the suggestion that the western farmer was not looked after during the negotiations. Hardly was the ink dry when prices began to slump. As a result of this slump, the last several years have been years of near-disaster for wheat producers. In fact, they have been years of disaster for many. Many farmers have pulled out of the business.

In the few minutes left to me I wish to place one or two suggestions before the House. I am disappointed that no agreement was reached at Geneva. I am disappointed because after the old agreement expired, prices dropped from around $2.12 to $1.70. That is a drop of around 40 cents a bushel, a serious blow to grain producers. Since the government was not successful in negotiating an agreement I think that in line with the minister's policy of maintaining a fair price the government has an obligation to introduce a reasonable two-price system—not $1.95, the minimum under the old agreement, but a realistic figure.

An arrangement of this kind is an accomplished fact in the United States where wheat producers are assured of $2.85 a bushel for domestically-produced wheat. Similar assistance is an accomplished fact in the ECM and in Australia. This is what we have to face, and it is no longer reasonable to expect that the Canadian wheat farmer should be left high and dry without any kind of government intervention. A Canadian can buy a one-pound loaf of bread which it takes him four minutes to earn. It takes an American six minutes to earn the cash for the same sized loaf, a Frenchman 11 minutes, a Russian 12 minutes and a Japanese 27 minutes. This is an example of the take-home pay of Canadians generally—those who are employed. Is it not reasonable to expect that the Canadian farmer should have a corresponding return at least for wheat consumed in Canada?

The hon. member for Assiniboia paid special attention to the grain production and receipts policy. I should like to place before the House a table which I have prepared on the basis of an answer to a question on the Order Paper; I believe it was question No. 606. I shall read the table. I took the receipts from 1956 to 1969. I chose the year 1956 because that is the year in which the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was passed. From then on, payments were made under the act. The figures are as follows:

WHEAT RECEIPTS 1951-1969
Million Dollars

Year	Receipts	Previous 5-Year Average	Comparison of Previous 5 Year Ave. to Receipts
			Deficit	Surplus
1956	452	448		4
1957	367	458	91
1958	420	417		3
1959	423	374		49
1960	427	397		30
1961	467	418		49
1962	510	420		90
1963	578	450		128
1964	715	481		234
1965	642	539		103
1966	784	562		222
1967	742	646		96
1968	582	692	110
1969	459	693	234
TOTAL	7,568		(a) 435	1,008

Total deductions as proposed (3% of receipts—(b)	227
Grant required (a—b)	208
Payments under temporary wheat reserves Act (1956-69)	584
Payments under stabilization plan	208
Loss of income to farmers in same period	376

The point is that only in 1957 was there a lower realized income from wheat than the previous five-year average. The next year was 1968-69. In all other years there was a higher income derived than the previous five year average. Under this stabilization program the government will not contribute anything. As a matter of fact, in 14 years they would have contributed for only three years. In 1957, the deficit was $91 million, in 1968 it was $110 million and in 1969 it was $224 million.

During those years 1956-1969 the total contribution to the farmers would have been $435 million under the stabilization program. With the 3 per cent deduction, $227 million would have been taken from the farmers. In other words, the only contribution that the federal government would have made would have been $208 million. During the same period, payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act were $584 million. With payments under the stabilization plan of $208 million, there would have been a loss of income to the farmers of $376 million. This is the plan that the minister has told the Canadian farmers is going to be the answer to their woes. I should like to quote from an article written in the Globe and Mail of June 3, 1968, by Anthony Westell:

> A self-sustaining program to maintain farm incomes during bad years, without cost to the taxpayer, and a new idea on how to aid small farmers without perpetuating uneconomic operations were features of a major statement on agricultural policy issued last night by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

The article goes on to say:

> Liberal party aides said the plan would probably be on the insurance principles with farmers contributing in good years and drawing income in bad years. They said the only cost to the government and the taxpayer would be in loans that might be needed to get the program started.

Up until 1968 this fund would have had a surplus of $12 million. In 1967, $91 million would have been paid out, and $110 million would have been paid out in 1968. However, total deductions up until that time would have been $213 million. In other words, the federal government would have contributed nothing. How can any farmer accept such a proposal as this? There are many other disadvantages to it. For example, the initial payment is not a guarantee. Any money put into the fund in the future to replenish it would be from future sales. The proposals should be a supplementation, not a substitute. I think that if the federal government has not the nerve to ask the consumers of Canada to pay an extra $1 a bushel, then it should contribute from its own fund an amount equivalent to 50 million bushels. If the government has not the nerve to ask the Canadian consumer to pay a couple of cents more for a loaf of bread, then it is obligated to make up the difference.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member whose time has expired.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I support the motion moved by the official opposition. One part of the motion particularly attracts my attention. It is the part that reads "and caused injury and decline to our rural communities which are already seriously damaged by the government's failure to provide adequate agricultural policies". In my opinion the policies followed by this government and its predecessors ever since the end of the Second World War have coldly, calculatedly and deliberately been designed to eliminate hundreds of thousands of farm families, with the result that hundreds of prairie or rural communities of 500 to 5,000 population have become ghost towns and cities only slightly larger than that are dying on their feet.

The farmers of rural Canada have continually been told to rationalize, to be efficient and to diversify. There is not another industry that has become more efficient since the Second World War than the agricultural industry. The only one that comes even close to agriculture is the steel industry, though they lag some way behind even at that. So talk about farmers becoming more efficient is just talk.

So-called ex-agricultural experts and government spokesmen of whatever political stripe have been talking this way for the last 20 years. When they talk about efficiency, let me tell them that rural Canada has "efficiencied" itself to death. Not one other industry has kept pace with technological advances as has agriculture. Not one other industry has listened so closely to what experts have said about diversification. Agriculture has been through that mill more than once.

When the farmers were told to specialize, they specialized. When they specialized a little too well they were told to diversify. When they diversified too well they were told to specialize again. The farmers have been round and round the same circle several times since the Second World War. In 1946 there were 740,000 farm units in Canada. We are now down to 400,000. The proposals that the government are now putting forward mean that another 100,000 to 150,000 farmers have to go; they are given no choice. As a consequence, the felonies that we continue to perpetrate on the citizens of Canada are being compounded.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has presented proposals that I believe are designed to accomplish two things. First of all they are designed to reduce government involvement in agriculture. In other words, they are designed to save the government money, and the effect of these proposals will do exactly that. I submit that any amount that the government puts into the stabilization fund—if it puts any in at all—will amount to less than it would otherwise have had to pay under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

The second purpose of the proposals is to eliminate small farms. This is more of the so-called rationalization of the agricultural industry. The proposals of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board take no account of farm costs or farm net income. It is a good, businesslike proposition in the sense that it evens out cash flow, but if the cash flow, be it even or uneven, is insufficient to allow farmers to survive, then the stabilization fund is not worth the paper it is written on. The minister's proposals fly in the face of any sensible, reasonable or civilized approach to the establishment of a stabilization fund. I submit they pervert the whole principle of a stabilization fund. Certainly they fly in the face of any concept of a guaranteed income or any concept that would stabilize not only farm income but rural communities in Canada.

Abolition of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act means that the minister's proposal will cost the government nothing. The government is supporting the uranium industry to the tune of $120 million. I do not oppose this; it means the preservation of the livelihoods of a lot of workers in many towns and communities. But if the preservation of this industry is valid and logical, surely it is equally or more valid and logical that the same thing be done for agriculture and that the whole nation share the cost of storing a reasonable amount of all six of the grains.

An hon. Member: But how much?

Mr. Benjamin: Any figure you like to mention. I suggest 100 million or 50 million bushels of each grain. All that is required is for the government to accept the concept of a national granary that will be supported by the nation as a whole. This would provide for a minimal amount of grain storage, if for no other reason than to fulfil sales commitments.

Earlier this evening the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) stated he believes that the stabilization plan is a good one and will be accepted by the farmers. I do not know what kind of farmers the hon. member has been talking to or from which country they come, but certainly I have not found any farmers in Canada who agree it is a good plan. Just prior to the supper recess members of our group met with a delegation from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Members opposite are also meeting with the same group at this moment. If Liberals can read—though I sometimes wonder—I do not know how the hon. member for Assiniboia is able to say that the stabilization plan is a good one. Let me put on Hansard what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has to say about it:

> But we must on this occasion stress as strongly as we can that the government grains receipts and stabilization proposals—which clearly will be on all our minds as we meet here today—do not represent an adequate undertaking by the federal government to assist and protect the position of prairie grain producers.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be plainer than that. For the hon. member for Assiniboia to suggest that the plan is good and accepted by farmers is blatant nonsense which I cannot accept. Perhaps the only people who would accept it would be those who served coffee last weekend at meetings of the Regina Lake Centre-Assiniboia Liberal Associations. That is the only exception. No farm group supports or agree with the agricultural stabilization plan which the minister in charge of the Wheat Board proposes.

The hon. member for Assiniboia believes the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has been given exclusive responsibility for the Wheat Board. Boloney! He is the minister in charge of manpower and immigration. What is the Department of Manpower and Immigration for—laughs? When one looks at the unemployment rate, it is good for laughs and that is about all. It is also good for tears. But all the government's activities and programs in respect of grain in western Canada have been treated as nothing more than a sideline job by this government. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) had the job for a few months. He did not know one end of a boxcar from another, and it was taken away from him. I am sure it was offered to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) but he would not touch it with a 10-foot pole because he wanted to stay elected. He neither wants nor needs the Canadian Wheat Board under his jurisdiction. In fact, he needs it like a hole in the head. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) got the job, but he is the minister in charge of manpower and immigration and the Canadian Wheat Board is still treated as a sideline. That is all it has been in the eyes of this government every since it was elected. The hon. member for Assiniboia believes that if farmers were assured of markets they would grow grain. That was a brilliant statement, but he forgot to tell us about the International Grains Arrangement negotiations which collapsed last week. The government of Canada refused to place its power behind the farmers of Canada and consistently has refused to do so since the days of the International Wheat Agreement and since the first International Grains Arrangement was agreed to. No other country in the world apart from Canada refuses to support and back up their grain producers—no other government except the government of Canada be it Liberal or Tory.

Mr. Speaker, the negotiators on behalf of Canada at the International Grains Arrangement talks at Geneva were betrayed by their own government. Their own government refused to put behind the negotiators the strength and wealth of this nation. If some of our competitors in the grains industry wish to play unfair pool, Canada has some cards to play—but Canada refuses to play them. Farmers, in this instance grain farmers, have been betrayed again. The proposals the minister has placed before us now and the policies followed by the government have perpetrated what has been going on in Canada for 25 years.

I am not trying to be sentimental about this. The quarter section and half section farms in my riding are very efficient and some have survived better than have some of the one or two section farms, but the elimination of tens of thousands of family farms and farm families, whichever way you wish to put it, has forced thousands of people into the cities of Canada and has cost our nation much more than it would have cost to permit these people to operate a farm which would be economical and viable and make it possible for them to maintain a decent standard of living.

No one has ever counted the cost on the other side of the coin. All the major cities of Canada, if not another soul moved into them, would need ten years to catch up with the problems they have now in respect of urban pollution, housing, education and everything else. Yet we keep forcing more people into these cities. We can think of the towns and villages in rural Canada which have streets, sidewalks, water systems, electrification systems, curling rinks, community halls, and so on, and yet this government asks these people to walk away from them. This is how the government is dividing us. The proposals which are put forward are not worth the paper they are written on. I believe the motion is a perfectly valid one which deserves the support of members on all sides of this House who come from rural Canada.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this opposition motion because it is about the economy, unemployment, the exodus from rural regions of Canada, and the problems involved. That is very close to me because I represent a completely rural riding.

I listened to some of the speeches delivered today; more particularly, I listened attentively to the hon. members of the opposition, and I expected to find good ideas, ideas that would help solve the problems. But as always, there was nothing too stirring in their remarks, whether they were about the economy or regional development.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) does not have to worry, because I have a little more respect for the backbenchers of the New Democratic Party and the Ralliement Créditiste than I do for the members of the official opposition. At least, what they say, they say it with conviction, whereas there is confusion amongst the members of the official opposition, unless they deliberately want to mislead the Canadian people.

Indeed, the opposition objects to every budget intended to bring unemployment to heel, to nurse back to health the economy. They constantly preach that the present economic unrest is solely due to the government, that it is alone responsible for it and that it is to blame for regional disparities.

Yet it is very clear—and any economist will agree on that score—that what normally follows a period of steady growth, in any country whose economic system resembles ours, is a period of inflation and slower economic growth, rather than a recession. Now when I say that I have a little more respect for NDP members it is because some of them—and Créditistes—advocate a socialist doctrine. They claim they would have a closer control over economic growth from year to year and would curtail unemployment. Yet, the leaders of those parties—I say leaders because now they have one, two or perhaps three—are afraid to talk about socialism, because they want to be re-elected in the next election.

I understand why the NDP leader, his assistant and their financial critic do not want to admit they are socialists; they simply want to garner votes. They know quite well that socialist principles would not be accepted and while I do not agree with them, I respect their views. I respect the view according to which in a socialist system, the economy could be better controlled. However, our country cannot adjust itself to such a system. In any case, those arguments could be raised in another debate.

The official opposition, through the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), tried to blame the government for the depression. He was pleased to note that there were no Cabinet member in the House this evening. Now, if the ministers wasted their time to listen to such statements, the country would be in danger.

Inflation and unemployment do not only exist in Canada. The rate of increase of the national gross product in dollars in Canada and in the United States was almost comparable, at least until 1960-1965. Now, our rate is slightly lower than the American one.

We have presently a high unemployment rate as in the United States. This is unfortunate, and I do not want to look complacent about the fact that, in my own riding, the present unemployment rate is probably between 15 and 20 per cent.

As I said, it is unfortunate. I agree with members of the opposition when they say that in human terms, it is terrible, but what can you do? What is the use of crying for years and making long speeches to blame the government for mere political purposes?

I feel that the government has taken steps so as to fight inflation, but that one of the unfortunate results of this action was unemployment. I would like to ask those who do not approve of the policy against inflation, what the unemployment rate would be in Canada today, if nothing had been done to stop inflation. What would be our export prospects for next year? What would the export situation be in Canada today? What would be the foreign investment rate in Canada in this year 1971? I suggest they would be much lower than they are now. In support of my comments, I shall read an article published in Business Week, as quoted in today's Le Devoir:

It seems that the economic situation in Canada is better than in the United States.

Maybe this is nothing about which we have reason to brag, but it is nevertheless true. I quote further:

Compared with that of the United States, the Canadian economy is doing well, according to the February 13 edition of Business Week.

The Canadian economy is ready for a new boom in 1971—

That is what counts.

Mr. Benjamin: There is a bunch of friends of the farmers if I ever heard such.

Mr. Breau: I really do not understand the hon. member's remark. I am not talking about farming; I do not know very much about it. I listen with interest to the hon. member when he speaks about the rationalization of the farming industry and the disadvantages it causes in the rural areas, and I sympathize with him.

Mr. Benjamin: How are you going to vote?

Mr. Breau: There is not going to be a vote, and if there were I would vote against this very irresponsible motion moved by the official opposition. I think that the trend of debate we have had for the last month or two from the official opposition, indeed from the three opposition parties, has been pretty irresponsible.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the way you look.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) makes a speech I will listen to him because he really yells, but I cannot hear what he is saying now. I am saying that—

Mr. McGrath: Why don't you save it for your caucus?

Mr. Breau: There is another one of those enlightening remarks. It is just as brilliant as the speech I heard about half an hour ago from the hon. member speaking on regional disparities. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was trying to criticize the government's policies on regional development and he did not succeed very well. He was trying to say that regional disparity is very bad in Canada. I agree. There is no way I could disagree, because my area of the country, my province, is a slow-growth region. It is a depressed area, and more particularly my region of the province of New Brunswick. I agree with the hon. member up to that point, but when it comes to solutions—

Mr. McGrath: Go back to your text.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member had a text but I do not have one. You see, the research people in our caucus do not work at preparing speeches and we have to prepare our own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: When it comes to the matter of solutions I suggest to the hon. member for St. John's East that he speak to some people in his caucus who know something about the development of the Maritimes. I suggest that he speak to the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming) who was a very distinguished Premier of the New Brunswick.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: I am glad the hon. member applauds. I would applaud myself if I were not speaking. It would be kind of funny to applaud when I am speaking. I hope that members of the official opposition notice that the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte does not take part in these long drawn-out, say-nothing debates, like the hon. member for St. John's East, because he knows that if we have regional disparity in Canada it is not due to the government of the day; it is due to long standing circumstances that began when we joined confederation, when Canada was born. That is when it started. There are a lot of things, a lot of natural, geographical circumstances which contribute to the existence of regional disparity.

I agree with all hon. members from the Maritimes when they talk about the terrible things that are caused by regional disparity. I have lived with this problem; I still live with it; I know what it is. But they only try to distort the issue by blaming the government of the day when everyone knows that at no other time during the history of confederation has so much attention been paid to the Atlantic provinces, has so much been spent on the Atlantic provinces and has so much planning been done for the Atlantic provinces. That is the important thing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as we have succeeded in fighting inflation and restraining price increases, I think that prospects for the Canadian economy in 1971 are good. I regret the present unemployment rate, particularly because many young people under 25 are out of work.

We live in a certain economic and political context, and it is necessary to find solutions to the problems which arise. As I said earlier, at least the New Democratic Party offers a solution. So do the Créditistes and they strongly believe in theirs. But on the side of the official opposition, the greatest confusion prevails.

Maybe Progressive Conservative members want to mislead the people, or else they have no knowledge of the Canadian or the North American economy.

It is perhaps still federalism to want a free enterprise economic system in the framework of a federalism where the Canadian Parliament would have no control over-all expenses, or where an increase or a fluctuation in expenses by a few billion dollars could make all the difference. They advocate an economic system such as ours and say it is the wrong way to fight inflation.

They claim that unemployment was deliberately created. That is the biggest intellectual mix-up I have ever seen and it calls for explanations.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: That isn't confusion; it's a fact.

Mr. Breau: It is intellectual confusion, and that is a real fact. That is what I said. I am glad the hon. member across the way got the translation right.

Mr. Alexander: Six hundred and thirty-eight thousand out of work is a fact.

[Translation]

Let them explain to me in an economic context like that of Canada and North America how one can fight inflation without having unemployment.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (M. Stanfield) has made a lot of charges against the government the other day. He charged it of economic incompetence without suggesting anything positive however. Let me explain to me what would be today the economic outlook of Canada if we had not fought inflation! Let him explain to me what would be the unemployment rate today! The members of the Official Opposition will not say, because they know very well that the unemployment rate would be at the very least as high as it is now. They know very well that the economic outlook would not be good and that there would be less investment in Canada. They also know that their arguments are used only to serve their political aims, to justify their position and to try to mislead the electorate.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to tell the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) that when he made his statement on the dairy policy of the government last week, the agriculture committee of which I am a member was touring Western Canada to receive and study submissions by agricultural agencies and the provincial ministers of agriculture.

Consequently, I did not have the opportunity to comment on his statement. I might say today that I appreciate the price improvements. When someone takes an action that has been expected for a long time, we have to be honest about it and it would not be ethical for a member to say that it is a step backwards when it is a step forward. This I admit and appreciate, but it shows that I was right last year and again this week when I said that farmers, particularly industrial milk producers were treated as poor relations.

I made that statement in the House when I introduced the petition from 25,000 industrial milk producers in which they were requesting more justice and an emergency debate on the serious problem of dairy production. That petition was never taken into account and I find it regrettable. If the government House leader never informed the House before the end of the previous session, I disapprove him for I feel this is a blow to democracy.

Nevertheless, I think that we have made a step forward and that the claims contained in the petition from 25,000 industrial milk producers were justified. Therefore we will have to keep on fighting to ensure fairer income for those who are involved in the production of industrial milk and that they receive a fair share of the national income.

I reiterate my request on behalf of the people I represent so that when the new dairy policy for the year starting April 1, 1971 is announced, the Minister of Agriculture will propose a new policy likely to satisfy the legitimate demands of this hard-working class.

On the other hand, by speaking on this motion, I wish to call the attention of the government to the general problems of Canadian society and especially those of my area and also, to suggest some solutions to these thorny problems.

We are sometimes blamed for criticizing and offering no solutions, which is not always correct, far from it. The previous speaker, in his remarks, recognized the merits of my statements, and I appreciate his doing so.

The economic situation in general is deteriorating in Canada. Consequently, instead of moving nearer the coming of the just society, we are getting further from it every day.

The economic situation of a great many farmers is worse than ever. That of a great many workers—especially those who are unemployed—is most difficult, and God knows what a problem it is when a father who needs to work every day to support his wife and children is deprived of a paying job. God knows in which condition, in which anxiety this father is living!

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) said recently that there was no reason to get upset about the high level of unemployment as this level was normal. Normal? Yes, if you look at this problem from the point of view of the possibility to produce, while man is displaced more and more by machines. Then, if you produce for the sake of production, you can do it without man's contribution, because machines can do the job. If that is the objective, it is normal. But in the present situation it seems to me abnormal that in order to have access to the goods, to the available production, a number of able-bodied people must have participated in that process by their labour and have received a salary which is their purchasing power. If they have not done so, they have to do without.

Hence, taking into account the second consideration, it is then abnormal that there should be more than 600,000 workers deprived of their weekly income. This in turn reduces the purchasing power of several million people and prevents our economic system from fulfilling its purpose which is to ensure each and everyone a decent living or at the least the bare vital minimum.

Yet, every day, at the opening of the sitting in this House, we feel the need to ask God to give us our daily bread. It is readily noticeable that God does respond generously to our prayers. Let us consider for instance the glut of our natural resources, the huge production of all sorts of goods which is made possible and which we have the means to develop still further. But, unfortunately, there is another god that stands between man and his Creator and I mean the god of money that has become the unrivalled master of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and of his provincial counterparts. He is the father of all the trusts which exploit mankind and prevent our economic system from operating effectively in the area of distribution.

We, Créditistes, are fighting against this kind of dictatorship. We know beforehand that the fight will be tough, but our duty is to fight more fiercely than ever and reduce this god of money to the role of a mere servant of the people, as it should be. We are fighting against the strongest of all trusts, the one which like an octopus whose tentacles worm their way in all directions at the same time, control everything for just one purpose, profit, without regard for the welfare of the people.

We have quite a plentiful farm production but because of the government's economic theory, this production will have to be scaled down to suit demand. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said today that the farmers must adjust to market conditions. And yet it is only to the farmers that the government is using such language. We have a surplus of university graduates and yet the fees they charge are far from decreasing as is the case for certain farm products.

The government had an inquiry made on poverty in Canada. It is now aware that there are poor people in our country and that if they enjoyed the buying power corresponding to their needs, farm product consumption would be quite higher and Bill C-176 on marketing would have more chances of succeeding.

Under the pretense of giving farmers a higher standard of living, the government has decided on the elimination of all small farms. The same applies to the other industries; and under the pretense of efficiency the government wants to eliminate all small concerns. This is dangerous and the first to notice it will certainly be the powerful people in our society. Big fish which feed on small fish have always taken care by instinct not to destroy all the small ones so as to survive. Are men less intelligent than fish? The time has come to guarantee the farmers a fair and reasonable income because the current prices of various products are markedly inadequate and many farmers are about to go bankrupt.

This is the case for hog and broiler producers. I have here a letter dated December 22, 1970 from a Mr. Vézina from St. Justine in the constituency of Bellechasse, which reads:

—the elevator prices of feed grain in Quebec City, at Benguy's, are as follows: barley No. 1 feed: $2.78 per cwt; oats: $2.85 per cwt; wheat $2.78½ per cwt; American golden corn, size 3: $3.24¼ per cwt, and today the price of pork is 23 cents per lb; broilers are at 16 cts per lb and chicken is at 21 cents per lb.

And he goes on like this:

Mr. Lambert, let us compare this with prices for grain last year at the same date, December 22, 1969. Barley No. 1 feed: $2.12½ per cwt—

—now at $2.78—

—oats 1 feed: $2.18 per cwt—

—today at $2.78½, and—

—pork sold for 37 cents per lb—

—last year at the same time while it now sells for 23—

—broilers sold for 29 cents per lb—

—it sells for 16 cents today.

It just cannot work in these conditions.

And he goes on to say:

Here, in my area, we were raising broilers in St. Magloire, in St. Camille and in St. Sabine. The breeders are losing money, the hen houses are empty and the breeders are unable to pay us.

Then, he adds:

It is the same thing with hog producers, most of them have discontinued their operation and owe us money.

And he concludes by saying:

Our region was beginning to develop some breeding specialties with our financing; it is a failure; if grain prices do not go down, our business is bound to go bankrupt. It is regrettable. But I have invested my life's savings—I am 56 years of age—and the federal Farm Loans Corporation refuses to lend money to farmers from the upper sections of the county. I could give you the names of those who have been turned down. What do you say, Mr. Lambert?

What do I say? Well, I said it right from the start: we must give those producers an opportunity to sell their products at a price which would leave them a profit so that they can get their fair share of our national income and live decently.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there are also means of coping with the situation, namely by setting up new industries. People sometimes say: It is impossible to set up industries in areas such as eastern Quebec, it would not be feasible. Yet, we have seen some remarkable examples: Bombardier in Valcourt, Vachon in Sainte-Marie, les Industries provinciales in Saint-Damien and many others which were quite successful which shows it is possible to set up industries in some other places than in large centres.

However, if such an industrial development is to be successful, the government must be willing to reform the financial system, so as to enable the Canadian people to buy the production of existing as well as new industries, otherwise some will go bankrupt as was the case in 1970 As a matter of fact, a newspaper dated January 31 published the following, and I quote:

2,200 CANADIAN FIRMS WENT BANKRUPT IN 1970

Here is the last paragraph:

The survey shows that the majority of bankruptcies were registered in manufacturing and services' firms, especially manufacturers of transport equipment, machinery, leather and glass products.

That happened in Canada in 1970. In order to set up new industries that will not go bankrupt, we must provide them with a market and assist those who are in need: the unemployed, the families, the underprivileged, the poor, so as to provide them with an income, a purchasing power that will enable them to buy at least the necessities of life, to provide for their essential needs.

The previous speaker was saying earlier that the government could not fight inflation and at the same time prevent unemployment from settling among us. However, the Chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada, who is indeed not a friend of mine, stated the following:

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD REDUCE TAXES!

He said so on January 31, 1971. I am quoting Mr. McLaughlin, the Chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada. I now resume my quotation from a report on what he said:

—considers that should the government reduce taxes not only the taxpayers but also the government itself would benefit.

In his annual report, produced a few days ago, he said, in fact: "The type of inflation we are now fighting was never the result of excessive demand,

He went on to say: that personal and corporate income taxes should be reduced if we wanted economy to bounce again. And he concluded with these words:

It must be said that we were misled concerning inflation; it resulted not from an increase in total demand nor from prosperity prevailing among the great majority of our citizens, but rather from thoughtless increases in prices. Afterwards, prices went down and it was said that inflation declined. In fact, the purchasing power of the low-income people decreased.

This is what I said to the House, last year, during a debate on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, we must do something. We must grant the provinces and municipalities the facilities Canada has provided to some countries in Europe, Africa and Asia. We have loaned $419 million to those countries to help them develop. The loans are refundable over 50 or 60 years and are interest-free. Those countries will refund their loans if they can, later on, when we are no longer there. Anyway, we do help them and the government tells us, and rightly so, that Canada will benefit. Such countries will buy Canadian products which, in return, will provide work for our workers. I agree on that. However, the same results would be achieved if we granted interest-free loans to our provinces suffering from economic stagnation, to our municipalities no longer in a position to borrow or even to get rid of their snow because their budget funds are exhausted. That type of money would help those municipalities to undertake public works, the property of which they would keep. Some people sometimes say: But with your monetary philosophy, you the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, business transactions with foreign countries would no longer be possible. I shall tell you a short anecdote. I need only two minutes—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion are considered to have expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before we proceed with the adjournment debate. Perhaps the acting House leader can say what the business will be for tomorrow and Wednesday.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the intention of the government to call Bill C-207, the government organization bill, for consideration by committee of the whole tomorrow. I believe it is the intention to deal with the same item on Wednesday if it is not disposed of tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PROGRAM "SESAME STREET"—CLASSIFICATION OF CONTENT —EDUCATIONAL VALUE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a subject this evening which is causing a great deal of alarm among the majority of Canadian mothers who have children aged anywhere from two to 100. I want to discuss the arbitrary and high-handed way that the government, through the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), is threatening to withdraw from Canada one of the finest educational tools ever devised for the purpose of teaching young children. I am referring to a program which is well known to all members of this House. I am sure some of them who arrive late stay home to watch this program: it is known as "Sesame Street".

The CRTC is planning to remove some of the categories affecting the classification of programs in terms of Canadian content or foreign content. "Sesame Street" has been labelled as neutral content. It may be that this particular program does not contain anything which is obviously Canadian but on the other hand it does not contain anything which is obviously American, so I think a neutral category is a good place in which to put it.

From an educational point of view the program has been highly successful. When I refer to education I mean education in its wider sense, from learning to count to awareness of social questions. The program is the product of a United States non-commercial television system. It originates in New York. Progressive teaching methods are used and audiences are made up of children from various ethnic groups and socio-economic classes including Puerto Ricans, Italians, American Indians on occasion and, sometimes, children from outside New York. Originally the show was done on an experimental basis but it rapidly proved extremely popular and is now carried across the continent.

I wish to quote from a famous Canadian magazine, Reader's Digest. I see the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) scoffing at the idea that this is a Canadian magazine but I would remind him that the government he supports classified this journal as a Canadian magazine during the postal debate last year.

> There has never been anything like it before—on television or in education. Filled with fun, surprises and excitement it is an experimental show whose bold aim is to use television not only to find new ways of teaching pre-school children numbers and letters but to introduce them entertainingly to a multitude of people, places and things in the world into which they are growing.
> "Sesame Street" had its origin four years ago. In 1966, children's programs on commercial television were a swampland of tasteless cartoons filled with mindless violence, and a vapid, low-budget studio shows smothered in commercials. Parents were reacting with disgust.
> According to recent psychological findings, children are in their most crucial stage of intellectual development in preschool years—ages three to five. Between birth and age four, according to these studies, half of all growth in human intelligence takes place; another 30 per cent occurs between the ages of four and eight.
> Thus, two-thirds of a person's intellectual development occurs before he even begins his formal education. For many children, particularly children of poverty, lack of intellectual stimulus pre-ordains almost certain disaster in school and adult life. By the age of five or six, according to one report, slum children trail so far behind middle-class children that they are already remedial cases.

The program has been devised with the co-operation of a professor of education and development psychology, a board of professional educators, child development experts, psychologists, film-markers, illustrators, television producers, audience researchers and advertisers. All these fine people got their minds together to produce this show. I will read this sentence to show its popularity.

> A recent survey indicated that it was already reaching more than six million children a day.

In view of these facts and the tremendous concern that many mothers are expressing, I would ask the government what action it intends to take. All across the country petitions are being presented with the idea of trying to encourage the government to see the value of such a program and not to be so narrow-minded in its view of nationalism as to classify the program non-Canadian and threaten to remove it from the view of Canadian children.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity on behalf of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to respond to this question tonight. The issue raised by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is well known to me personally. Indeed, this program is very highly regarded in my own city. I should remind the hon. member that Parliament in its wisdom has delegated to the CRTC responsibility for carrying out the broadcasting policy that Parliament, not the government, has decided upon. Accordingly, the responsibility in this area lies with the CRTC as constituted by Parliament, not with the government.

With respect to the program, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has informed the Secretary of State as follows. Many people think that the CBC and the CRTC are responsible for keeping "Sesame Street" from being televised. Actually, the problem is that it is an American, non-commercial program that is presented five hours a week. Thus, the burden falls on the shoulders of stations who are affiliated with the CBC. A program such as "Sesame Street", because of its non-commercial nature, has not proven lucrative to the smaller affiliates when they carry it. Instead, they are turning to less-educational programs in order to acquire higher revenues.

Due to its high educational value and to the considerable number of requests from the public, the CRTC has authorized the CBC to carry "Sesame Street" for the 1970-71 season. Generally, the CBC is authorized to carry 30 per cent American programming, but in this special case the CRTC has given permission to exceed this 30 per cent limit—providing the excess is due only to the showing of "Sesame Street". As for next season, the CBC is willing to continue televising this program but this matter is presently under study by the CRTC and a final announcement is expected shortly.

GRAIN—LIFT PROGRAM—EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PAYMENTS FOR HAIL DAMAGE

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate the answer given to a question that I asked the minister in charge of the Wheat Board on February 11, regarding the possibility of making payments to farmers who were hailed out after the July 15 deadline. I refer to payments under the Lift program. The question I put to the minister, as reported at page 3281 of Hansard, was as follows:

> In view of the fact that payments under the Lift program fall far short of the $140 million allotted to the program, would the minister say whether he is now prepared to adjust the deadline date of July 15, 1970, in respect of payments for hail damage so that farmers who suffered hail damage after that date may now qualify for payment under the program?

The minister replied as follows:

> There is no intention to alter the date on which the land must be in a particular condition to comply with the Lift provisions. Of course, the amount of money available for Lift always depended on the extent to which farmers participated in the program, and participation has been regarded at the rate of $6 per acre and it will be rewarded at the rate of $10 per acre for forage, using the amount of money for which farmers have applied. The other figure to which the hon. member referred was always hypothetical. It was based on the total possible participation by farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the world "hypothetical" is the one which grabs me because all across the country during the summer when the Lift program had its inception, the minister created the impression to the farmers and the general public that this program would pour some $140 million into the western grain economy. This message immediately spread across the country. I have a number of press clippings here and shall refer to one in particular from the Leader Post of March 4, 1970. It states:

Ab Douglas, MP for Assiniboia, received mixed reaction Saturday when he spoke to more than 400 farmers here about the federal government's wheat acreage reduction program.

It continues:

Mr. Douglas said the program could inject up to $140 million into the western economy—

I note the words "up to". I am not saying he said $140 million, but he did indicate to the people of Canada that there would be a considerable amount in excess of $100 million pumped into the economy. Up until last Friday night $56,396,025 was paid out under the Lift program. That is a fairly up to date figure. It is estimated that the final amount will be something like $57 million. Actually there is a possibility that with forage the cost will be another $6 million. However, since it was stated there was forage seed for one one million acres last year, the figure will likely be at the most another $4 million. It is not likely that more than $61 million will be paid out. The Lift program will cost the federal government considerably less than the complete figure unless the cost of administration is much more than we think.

Mr. Speaker, my point is that farmers who were hailed out up to July 15 were paid under the Lift program, as well they should have been. Farmers who were hailed out two days later received nothing. I went to the minister with a list of 14 farmers in the Bashaw area whose crops had been wiped out by a vicious hail storm around July 19 or 20. Their crops were totally destroyed. I have a letter here from a Mr. Entrup, secretary of Unifarm in Alberta. I shall quote the letter in part:

—the executive secretary of Mr. Lang assured us that Mr. Lang had taken immediate action and had stated that he was standing behind his promise made at the meeting in Heisler.

I believe this was on July 17. The letter continues:

Even if letters were received from the appeal tribunal rejecting applications we were assured that cases out of the Viking storm area were going to be reviewed again and this time approved. As we understand an additional seven day's extension were granted after July 15, 1970.

I have a letter here from another source. There were cases of people who were insured and whose premises were inspected. The government covered the cost of inspection. Some, however, were later notified that they were late filers. There was evidence on the record that on September 14 one field, that of Mr. Ed Eisler whom I know, was inspected and on December 22 Mr. Eisler was notified that he was a late filer. Mr. Speaker, I am saying that this government can spend millions of dollars on bilingualism, on pornographic programming by the CBC and on an aircraft carrier which it then junks, but there is not enough flexibility or humanity in their souls to look after a handful of farmers who happen to be hailed out a few days after the deadline for the Lift program.

I suggest that if they paid each farmer in western Canada who made application, because he was hailed out, after this deadline the sum would be less than $1 million. That, Mr. Speaker, constitutes my problem and the problem of many farmers.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there was nothing in the presentation made by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) in addition to what he raised in the question the other day. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board gave him a reply then and the contents of that reply are just as valid now as when he gave it.

The hon. member ought to realize that when you set up a program like this you have to make provision for a deadline. It does not make very much difference when the deadline is set, because there will always be some difficulty about it. The hon. member of course failed to mention that because of some late applications regarding the physical condition of all of these fields up to July 15, the board of review, or appeal board, were given authority to make adjustments for those late applications. That means that those applications came in stating the conditions as of and up to July 15 and not after that.

Anyone who had seeded his crop and the condition of the field changed because of having plowed it down, because he swathed a cover crop, because of hail damage or whatever, had an opportunity to amend his application up to July 15; and even if the application did not come in until after July 15 that was taken into account. But with regard to anyone who had not changed his application prior to July 15, what was contained in his application was valid.

So far as the $140 million is concerned, the hon. member answered that question for himself. That was the total offer if there had been 100 per cent participation by western farmers based on their wheat plantings in 1969. Of course, as the minister replied to the hon. member, the total amount that would be paid out would be in compliance with the offer that was made. If it were 50 per cent, and that is what it was—from 24 million acres down to about 12 million acres—then 50 per cent of the estimated cost would be paid out. Of course, that was not determined by the government; it was determined by the farmers. That was the amount for which they applied.

In addition to this, when we talk about the other money the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has already announced, as has the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, some time later this year, and hopefully sooner than later when the new stabilization program comes in there will be an additional $100 million transferred into the wheat economy.

PENSIONS—OLD AGE SECURITY—ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF RETURN OF BASIC INCREASE BY CERTAIN PENSIONERS—USE MADE OF MONEY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) regarding old age pensioners who are sending in contributions of 42 cents, this being the figure by which the basic amount of the old age security pension was increased in January. I asked this question because I felt that old age pensioners who are making this gesture should be assured that their contributions will be acknowledged, and also because I felt that these pensioners had the right to know to what use their money is being put.

I confess I was quite surprised when the Minister of Finance in his reply indicated that he had received three of these contributions, and I took it that he meant he had received only three. This led me to a quick check of my own files this afternoon and I found that I have had seven letters from individuals who have told me that they sent 42-cent contributions to the government. Let it be clear that although most of them were sent to the Minister of Finance, in a couple of cases they went to the minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

In addition to these seven I have before me a couple of letters to the editors of newspapers. One is from L. Wright to the Editor of the Toronto Telegram and the other from C. G. Stockley to the Winnipeg Tribune. They indicate that they sent 42 cents either to the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister. That adds up to nine.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) indicated in the House a few days ago that he had received one of these 42-cent contributions and I understand that he transmitted it to the Minister of Finance. That makes ten. Some days ago the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) told me that he had received two of these contributions and had sent them to the Minister of Finance. That adds up to 12 within my direct knowledge. That is why I was surprised at the statement of the Minister of Finance this afternoon to the effect that he had received only three. I hope that the parliamentary secretary who is representing the minister tonight will have this matter checked. I have quoted only cases which I can document, but from the letters I am receiving and the cases I read about in the newspapers it strikes me that a great many of our pensioners are participating in this attempt to help the government out by providing it with these 42-cent contributions.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I have before me tonight some additional contributions. The last questioner raised a matter that would cost the government money, and we are often asked where the money is coming from for projects which we advocate. I have some of it here tonight. I have a Canadian postal order for 42 cents made out to Mr. Edgar Benson from Mr. George Anderson of Suite 11, 220 Jamison Avenue, Winnipeg 15, Manitoba. In his letter he suggested that I transmit this postal order to the Minister of Finance and that if the minister needed it for pipe tobacco he could use it for that purpose. I have two envelopes each containing 42 cents in cash—at least it says so on the outside but I have not opened them. They were sent in by Mr. J. Drinkwater of Suite 1, 239 Victoria Street, Kamloops, B.C. These contributions have come directly to me with the request that I transmit them to the Minister of Finance.

In addition, I have a cheque which was sent to the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather). It comes from Mrs. Mabel A. Hamilton of North Surrey, B.C., and is a cheque on her savings account for 42 cents made out to "Someone in need, care of Prime Minister P. E. Trudeau". Finally, in addition to the 42-cent contribution which the hon. member for Kootenay West sent in the other day I have another which he received since and which he asked me to present tonight. It is from Mr. Edward Hall of 1827 - 5th Avenue, Trail, B.C., and it consists of four dimes and two pennies scotch-taped to a card. It is addressed to "Scrooge and misers Benson and Trudeau from an old age pensioner and also a veteran from the First World War."

Mr. Speaker, here are five more of these contributions, and they add up to $2.10—quite a boost to the government. Perhaps the chief page would be good enough to take these across to the parliamentary secretary, together with a list of the donors and their names and addresses so that these contributions can be properly acknowledged. I hope that a record will be kept of them. This afternoon the Minister of Finance said that he was sending them to the Receiver General of Canada. He may have to open a special account and may even have to come back to Parliament for guidance as to what is to be done with the money.

At any rate, in addition to receiving this money from these people and confirming the assurance that they will be acknowledged, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) will convey to his minister and the government the motive behind this gesture on the part of these people. The plain fact of the matter is they, and many thousands of our senior citizens, feel insulted by such a small increase at a time when the basic amount of the old age pension ought to be increased substantially.

We have been debating today a motion in which there was the phrase that the government "has humiliated the disadvantaged." It is bad enough to be hard up or disadvantaged. It is even worse to have humiliation added to it. That is what these retired people feel about a basic increase in the old age pension of only 42 cents.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has had the opportunity to look further into this matter since the question was posed this afternoon. There have indeed been a number of payments of the nature referred to by the hon. member. These are being acknowledged and, where the payor can be identified, the payment is being returned. Where the payor cannot be identified, the money is, as the minister said, being deposited to the credit of the Receiver General.

The government has fully informed the people of Canada of the cost of maintaining all programs as they existed when this government assumed office following the last general election. One of the possiblities was to continue the programs unchanged at increasing costs, which would lead in time to a level of taxation unacceptable to Canadians and, indeed, detrimental to the Canadian economy. Rather than accept that, the government has reviewed and proposes changes to a number of programs, including the federal old age pension, with a view, to providing both improved programs and an acceptable level of taxation.

In dealing with the old age pension, the government has rejected the option to continue to pay all pensioners regardless of need an amount inadequate for those actually in need. Instead it has elected to limit the amount paid regardless of need and to effect a meaningful increase for those pensioners who actually require more assistance. In raising this question the hon. member deals with that portion of the federal old age pension payable regardless of need, the old age security payment. He ignores the guaranteed income supplement, the amount of which depends on need.

There are two very substantial improvements proposed for the GIS. Firstly, the limits of elegibility will be raised so that many more of Canada's senior citizens will be helped by the GIS. Previously, single pensioners with annual income exceeding $768 and married pensioners with income exceeding $1,536 were not eligible. These limits will be raised to $1,320 and $2,304 respectively.

Secondly, with implementation of increases in the guaranteed income supplement, federal old age pension payments will increase by as much as $23.59 per month, from $111.41 to $135.00 for a single pensioner and by as much $32.18 per month, from $222.52 to $255.00, for married pensioners. In annual terms, this represents an increase from $1,336.92 to $1,620.00 for a single pensioner and from $2,673.84 to $3,060.00 for a couple. It is expected that in the first year the substantial improvement in the federal old age pension will amount to $194 million in total.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEPIN—PRONUNCIATION OF NAME

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before requesting permission to table a return, may I rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker, yesterday my name was pronounced in this chamber.

[English]

I do not mind being called "Jeen", "John" or "Jake", although I prefer to be called "Jean". I do not mind being called "Lac", "Luke" or "Luck", although I prefer being called "Luc". I do not mind being called "Piep-in", "Papin" or "Peppin" although I prefer being called "Pepin". The only name I resent is "Peep-in".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The minister has not established the basis of his point of order or question of privilege. This is hardly a "pépin" (problem).

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT RESPECTING REGIONAL SEASONALLY ADJUSTED RATES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In the same line of thought, Mr. Speaker, may I table a document issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and dealing with seasonally adjusted regional rates of unemployment?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT—MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIVES ON PROJECTS TO PROVIDE WORK—TORONTO METRO CENTRE PROJECT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the seriousness of the unemployment problem and his concern about it and in view of the obvious difficulties of some cities and municipalities in getting projects under way, is it the intention of the government of Canada to meet with provincial and municipal representatives in order to iron out some of the existing difficulties and enable those projects to be undertaken? I refer specifically, of course, to conversations that took place in Toronto yesterday which exposed certain difficulties.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are always anxious to meet with representatives of provincial governments or municipalities who want to discuss ways in which we can co-operate in combating unemployment. Several provinces and municipalities have taken advantage of the $160 million that has been offered to them by way of loans in our December budget. Some have not. Obviously we are anxious to discuss with them what the advantages for them would be in using these funds to undertake projects which would create employment.

Mr. Stanfield: My question goes far beyond the loan fund of the government. Perhaps I might address a specific question to the Minister of Transport. Is the federal government now prepared to make the commitment requested by the city of Toronto with regard to subway and rail movement to enable the metro centre project to get off the ground and move forward?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that that particular aspect of the program is not necessarily or primarily the reason for any delay in the project. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition, as I have frequently stated in this House and outside, that we will give full co-operation to the project. As I understand it, in the the first instance it is a matter of the two railways deciding how and at what rate they want to proceed.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the answer given by the minister, it is obvious there is hardly a meeting of minds between the representatives of the city of Toronto and the minister. I therefore ask the Prime Minister if he will agree to undertake such a meeting. If he is not prepared to do that, is he at least prepared to have a meeting with some of his private members who represent the city of Toronto and who complain they cannot see, let alone speak, to the government?

Mr. Trudeau: We cannot very well telephone all the mayors of Canada to ask if they want to see us. I repeat that we are open to meeting with anyone who asks to see a minister or any of our federal officials at any time. Surely the Leader of the Opposition is not suggesting that I pick up the telephone and call here and there to see what we can do for them.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Along the lines of the answer given by the Prime Minister may I ask him whether, instead of telephoning, he could not announce a meeting inviting the heads of the major municipalities or all municipalities in Canada for the purpose of discussing what works may be undertaken? There is no need to telephone. He can call such a meeting by making an announcement.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not a very constructive suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Only last week we had a meeting with the provinces at which we discussed the economic situation and unemployment. Surely the hon. member knows that the municipalities come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. In that sense it would be very improper for us to convene them here.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—GRANTS INSTEAD OF LOANS—SHARING OF PROJECT COSTS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. As it is not too late, will the government reinstate the winter works program as an emergency measure, as requested yesterday by the mayor of Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As has been said several times, Mr. Speaker, we have replaced the winter works program with programs which are fourfold as generous as the winter works program ever was.

Mr. Ryan: As the mayor of Toronto stated that the city cannot get along on loans such as have been proposed by the government, will the government either make grants or institute a shared-cost program available to boroughs in the same position as the city of Toronto because of the great degree of unemployment?

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Trudeau: I am surprised to hear a member from the Toronto area suggest that the loans be replaced by grants. If that were the case, the grants would have to be paid by taxes. They would not be reimbursable. Grants would be paid by taxes which would be mainly levied around the city of Toronto.

Mr. Ryan: Would the Prime Minister not agree—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GRANTS INSTEAD OF LOANS—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

In view of his refusal to transform the loans into subsidies, can the Prime Minister tell us whether at the constitutional conference the premier of Quebec discussed the matter with one of his colleagues in the Cabinet, or with himself, and whether he has given Mr. Bourassa a reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, once more I repeat that it is not customary to reveal the subject matter of in camera conferences. If the hon. member wants to be informed of the position taken by the Quebec government and not made public, he must approach that government, or have some representative in the Quebec National Assembly put the question.

Mr. Valade: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister has been content with providing me with an evasive answer. I am asking him whether he has discussed with Quebec's premier the possibility of changing grants into loans to the provinces for winter works.

Mr. Trudeau: Not revealing the confidential position of the other parties is not being evasive, Mr. Speaker.

If the hon. member is inquiring about Quebec's position, my answer remains the same. If he is asking whether I have discussed the problem, the answer is negative.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LOAN FUND CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider tabling the correspondence between the federal government and the provinces concerning the loan fund?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Such correspondence did not come my way. I will find out from the ministers whether they have received any and whether the correspondence was confidential or otherwise. If there has been correspondence and the provinces do not object to its publication I cannot see that we would have any objection. But surely the proper course would be to address the question to the provinces themselves. If they want to make their position public they usually do not ask for our permission.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EARLY ANOUNCEMENT OF NEW PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEM

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Is the government planning to announce any new programs now or in the immediate future, or do we have to rely on the programs which have been instituted since last March, to quote the Prime Minister's speech in western Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I missed the last part of the question, but I do not think it is very important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Can I meekly, mildly and gently approach the esteemed and honourable gentleman who is occupying the throne of Canada at the moment—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that he cannot preface a question in this way. If he has a supplementary it should be asked in a direct manner. We do have to get on; we are still on the first question. I propose, after the hon. member's supplementary, to recognize the hon. member for Broadview and then go to the next question which will be asked by the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Lundrigan: On behalf of 686,000 Canadians and myself, perhaps I will leave my question for now as unemployment is not important—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is continuing in the same vein. He cannot ask a question in this way. He has the floor for the purpose of asking a supplementary and I hope he will ask it.

Mr. Lundrigan: I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would condescend to tell us whether any new programs are to be announced now—let them eat what? I did not get what the Prime Minister just said.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: Shame on you. Say it for Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Broadview. Order. I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, I want to say two things. First, I hope that the remark of the Prime Minister has been recorded. Second, he does not have the guts to say to the people of Canada what he has just said across the floor of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should proceed in an orderly fashion. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? The hon. member has to resume his seat when the Speaker wants to address the House. I gather that the hon. member has a question of privilege. He should state to the Chair what his question of privilege is; this is what I want to bring to his attention.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I am not permitted to use four-letter words in the House so I cannot quote for the record what the Prime Minister said. But let me say to the Lapalme workers that what they heard from the Prime Minister was mild compared with what he has just said to the House of Commons today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: As the Member of Parliament for one Newfoundland constituency I have all rights and privileges in representing my people and the people of the Canadian nation, including the right to present to the government any position or recommendation I think appropriate to alleviate the serious burden of unemployment. This attitude on the part of the Prime Minister is so contemptuous that it is certainly creating a tremendous amount of concern across Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Trudeau: I rise on the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that the right hon. Prime Minister is rising on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has accused me of uttering a four-letter word in this House. That is an absolute untruth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want the record to show that after I referred the remark made by the Prime Minister back to him in terms indicating he had used this four-letter word twice, he then looked at me and used the same word again. I will stand up and be a gentleman with respect to the position the Prime Minister holds, but under no conditions do I have to sit here representing 100,000 people and accept the type of abuse that has been thrown not only at me but at every member of the opposition. I think this is a shameful and unacceptable attitude for the Prime Minister of Canada to take.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I challenge any member opposite to say that they heard me utter a single sound, and I challenge the Hansard reporter to say whether or not he has recorded anything of that sort.

Mr. Alexander: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I thought the Prime Minister would back down, but any time you make a gesture like this there is no question about what it means.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Broadview has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Broadview. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is one concerning which I ask for your protection. The Prime Minister has just thrown out a challenge to the Hansard reporter. That does not lie with any of us. I ask Your Honour to protect the Hansard reporter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUESTED EXTENSION OF SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT CUT-OFF DATE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the time factor in respect of the programs which the government has implemented to cope with the unemployment situation, will the Prime Minister consider extending the seasonal benefits date, which is June 1, under the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to take care of the time lag regarding unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will be patient for a few days he will see that new Unemployment Insurance Act legislation will come before the House based on the white paper which was fully discussed by the House some time ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West on a supplementary question, although I indicated a moment ago that recognition should be given to the hon. member for Shefford.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ATTITUDE OF QUEBEC TO WHITE PAPER ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my anger is subdued somewhat as a result of the smile on the face of the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether in fact, as a result of the opposition to the white paper on unemployment insurance by the province of Quebec, all areas of concern have now been brought back to a common denominator, and is the province now prepared to go along with the terms of the white paper?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the province of Quebec. There have been several meetings with them. The hon. member will see the results of the white paper in the bill that will be put before the House. I cannot predict what the province of Quebec will say or how it will react to this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has indicated that we should recognize the hon. member for Shefford. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? I have indicated that there should not be any more supplementary questions for the moment on this very important matter. I will return to the hon. member for Spadina in a moment. I gather that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. I believe it is customary for each party to be allowed to ask one major question. No main question has been asked by this party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point being made by the hon. member. At times there are a number of supplementary questions on the first general question, in which two of the major opposition parties participate. As a result members of the party to the extreme left do not have the opportunity of asking a question. In equity and justice I feel that they should be given the opportunity to ask a question after about half of the question period has been taken up by two of the parties in the House. That is why I am inclined to make an exception this afternoon. The point has been well taken and I am sure the hon. member for Shefford is prepared to wait for a moment while we hear from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am quite prepared to wait if the hon. member for Shefford wants to proceed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING FREEZING OF SALARIES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, for a moment I thought that the faces made in this House would prevent me from asking questions.

I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister about the freezing of wages. As I note that often the Canadian policy is based on that of the United States as regards, for instance, the fluctuation of the Bank of Canada exchange rate, is the Canadian government contemplating, as does the United States government, early implementation of a wage freeze?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that the Americans have frozen wages but I am willing to inquire about the matter.

POLLUTION

POLICY RESPECTING PIPELINE DOWN MACKENZIE RIVER VALLEY FROM ALASKA—STUDIES OF ECOLOGICAL CONSEQUENCES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who for some time has not been able to be in the House although he has been on the roster, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It arises from a speech the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made in Vancouver last Thursday in which he quite properly deplored the plan for bringing oil from Alaska down to Cherry Point, Washington, in tankers and the attendant hazards this movement would entail. My question has to do with the minister's offer of the Canadian northland as a bridge for the movement of oil from Alaska down the Mackenzie River Valley. I should like to ask if this offer of the Canadian northland for this purpose is a statement of government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not seen the reference the hon. member has in mind. I will check into it, but there is no government policy to make any precise offer, if that is what the hon. member is asking. There has been, of course, the suggestion that this course might be a cheaper and more useful way of moving oil south. There has to be, of course, attendant upon that a caution about the danger of pollution in our own territory which might result from it. There has been no formal offer of which I know.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs said "we have been doing some studies on the ecological consequences of such a pipeline". I want to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether such studies on the ecological consequences of a pipeline down the Mackenzie River Valley have been undertaken, if they have been completed and whether or not they will be made available to Members of Parliament before this question has to be decided upon?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that studies along these lines are under way. The oil companies are also engaged in a major experiment at Inuvik with a view to designing a pipeline which will be compatible with our environment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, can the minister or the Prime Minister assure the House that until such studies have been made public and members of the House have had an opportunity to study the ecological effects of such a pipeline, no final decision will be made by the government in respect of giving consent for its construction?

Mr. Davis: I think we can assure the House we will not only look into the ecological consequences of a pipeline but also be communicating as effectively as possible with the public, and certainly with members of this House and with the public.

OIL

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE TO EASTERN CANADA IN LIGHT OF NEW OFFSHORE OIL PRICE AGREEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the new agreement in respect of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. I direct it to the Prime Minister in view of the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On January 20 and on February 9 I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Secretary of State for External Affairs about the possibility of the government initiating and promoting a feasibility study to ascertain the economics of building a pipeline from western Canada and the Arctic to supply the eastern Canadian market. In view of the OPEC agreement, would the Prime Minister and the government consider setting up a study group sponsored by the government and independent of free enterprise in view of the new economic situation which has developed as a result of this recent agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I put this supplementary. In view of the fact that last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that such a study would be left up to free enterprise and in view of the fact that free enterprise is capable of shipping crude petroleum from western Canada and importing it from the Near East, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to adopting a different viewpoint and set up a clearcut study of the economic feasibility as such a pipeline would be so important to the gross national product and particularly in providing jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take the second part of the speech as notice too, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF ORDERS FOR LOCKHEED TRI-STAR AIRCRAFT IN VIEW OF ROLLS-ROYCE FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES—EFFECT ON CANADIAN SUBCONTRACTORS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he inform the House what the status is of Air Canada orders for Tri-Star aircraft in light of the fact that, because of difficulties the RB-211 Rolls-Royce engines will not be available for these aircraft at the scheduled time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the comment that the engines will not be available is of course correct in terms of the specified time. I understand negotiations are proceeding in London today with the British government and Lockheed with a view to reactivating the order for the Rolls-Royce engines. In the interim Air Canada and all other airlines which have placed orders for the Tri-Star are holding their plans in abeyance until they see the outcome of the talks in London.

Mr. MacLean: Is it correct to assume that Air Canada has not developed any contingency plans yet to obtain substitute equipment if these orders are not filled?

Mr. Jamieson: I think that would be a correct assumption. There are alternative types of aircraft available which are roughly comparable. At the present time Air Canada still has its queue position in line for the Lockheed Tri-Star and will await the outcome of the talks in London.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the $30 million loan made on the British market by Air Canada recently, may I ask the minister whether or not that was for the purpose of orders for the Rolls-Royce engines and, if so, has any of this money yet been advanced to Rolls-Royce for these orders?

Mr. Jamieson: I would have to take that question as notice as to the details. My general assumption would be that there was no ill effect so far as Air Canada was concerned because it seems to me it was related to the delivery of the engines for Air Canada's use, but I will get a formal answer for the hon. member as soon as I can.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Supply and Services. I would like to ask him if he would say what effect the delay or cancellation of these orders by Air Canada would have on subcontractors in the Canadian aircraft industry and whether his department has any contingency plans to relieve the resultant further unemployment which would occur in the Canadian industry?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the delay in the Lockheed program will reduce the workload in a number of plants in Canada, in Edmonton, Winnipeg and other places, but the extent of that reduction cannot be gauged at the present time mainly for the reasons the Minister of Transport has just revealed to the House.

DRUGS

ALLEGED INCREASE IN SMUGGLING OF MARIJUANA AND HASHISH INTO CANADA—REPRESENTATIONS TO REDUCE SOURCES OF SUPPLY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Can the minister indicate whether there has been a substantial increase in the smuggling of marijuana and hashish into Canada comparable with that experienced in the United States in the past year and, if so, would he tell us what new initiatives are being taken to combat the problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer the question of the hon. member, but I can say that an official commission is now studying the problem, and that we are keeping in touch with its members. We are co-operating fully with the commission and we intend to take into consideration the recommendations it will make.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. Have any representations been made recently—and I am aware of the fact that the Le Dain commission is sitting at the present time—to Mexico and the countries of the Middle East, Central and South America and Southeast Asia to see whether more aggressive action can be taken to reduce the sources of supply of these drugs while awaiting the Le Dain Commission report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what or how many representations may have been made. If they have been made they would have been made through the minister responsible for external affairs. Perhaps the question could be addressed to him when he is in the House.

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO SPECIAL TARIFF CONCESSION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the government agreed to a special tariff concession to Michelin of Canada, and are other changes in the tariff structure on tires under consideration?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Michelin tariff arrangement was announced a long time ago. It was referred to in the House on a number of occasions. I will find the proper references and send copies to my hon. friend.

AGRICULTURE

MEASURES TO COMPENSATE FARMERS FOR LOSSES INCURRED

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture relating to the lower income registered by farmers as compared to last year.

Can the minister tell us what steps he intends to take to make up for the losses the farmers suffered because prices went down by 5.9 per cent in December 1970?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are many programs and amendments to programs that are under way now which I am sure the hon. member is aware of and which will help to relieve this situation.

PRESENTATION OF FARM CONSOLIDATION PLAN PRIOR TO LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING GRAIN PRODUCTION AND RECEIPTS POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he can assure the House that the government's plan for farm consolidation will be presented to the House prior to legislation being introduced to implement the grain receipts policy for the western grain industry?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): To repeat what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said a few days ago, to bring the stabilization program into full effect would require amendments to a number of Acts.

Mr. Gleave: In light of what the minister has said, and since it is necessary to know what type of farm and rural community structure is going to be stabilized under the plan to which he referred, is he not putting the cart before the horse, and will the minister reconsider the position and make a statement on motions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is in the form of a representation.

COMBINES

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF SO-CALLED PRICE WAR AMONG GROCERY CHAINS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of certain questions that have been asked in the House by me, by the hon. member for Don Valley and by other hon. members concerning the so-called price war among major grocery chains, is the minister now in a position to give us a report on what the Combines Investigation Branch has been doing in this regard?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I made it very clear that we have been following the situation in most of Canada where discount operations seem to be appearing from two points of view:

first, whether any offence under the Combines Investigation Act is being committed and, second, whether there has been any misleading advertising with regard to any of the claims respecting discount prices. Naturally, as is traditional in these matters which involve what are in essence criminal investigations, I am not in a position to report progress on any of these inquiries unless or until charges are laid.

Mr. Nesbitt: Since reports in the press and elsewhere indicate that prices have not in fact been going down as regards one of the major companies but going up, I wonder if the minister could do something to accelerate the investigations that are now going on in order to prevent at least some of the smaller grocery stores in Ontario being put out of business by what appears to be very suspicious activity?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF PROVINCIAL RECRUITMENT QUOTAS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister indicate whether his department is now planning to introduce a system of recruitment quotas for each of the provinces on or about April 1 and, if so, what is the nature or the level of these quotas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I would have to confirm this, but I know of no system of quotas on a provincial basis. There is, of course, a very detailed quota system with regard to specific trades.

Mr. Forrestall: Would the minister determine what the facts are in looking into the matter because there are rumours afloat that there is a system of quotas which would make a division between Anglophone and Francophone recruitment in the armed forces, and it seems to me that this should be cleared up once and for all.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could remind the hon. member that any Anglophone or Francophone differential would not be on a provincial basis.

ALLEGED GRANT TO THE CANADA COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware that Information Canada is alleged to have made a grant or to be prepared to make a grant to an organization called The Canada Committee? If so, is that one of the functions that have been assigned to Information Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will have to check into both questions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL SECURITY

QUEBEC—ALLEGED GUERILLA TRAINING CAMPS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Several days ago I put a question to the Solicitor General which he said he would like to look into. Perhaps I can repeat the question for his benefit. Has the government been able to locate any of the guerilla training camps supposedly in the interior of Quebec and, if so, what action has been taken and were any arrests made in this connection?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned, we feel that it is the responsibility of the Quebec police forces to supervise their own territory with respect to cases of the kind mentioned by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Noble: In view of the fact that a government representative stated last week in the United States that we could expect a continuation of violence in Canada, is the government keeping close surveillance on known trouble areas, and have the so-called guerilla training camps been obliterated?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, violence in Canada is tied up with a worldwide phenomenon and all societies should henceforth take whatever action is required to face it.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL

QUALIFICATIONS IN BILL OF SALE OF HMCS "BONAVENTURE"—ALLEGED USE BY NATIONALIST CHINA FOR TRAINING PURPOSES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Supply and Services responsible for Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Were any qualifications included in the bill of sale of HMCS Bonaventure recently sold, presumably for scrap?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): The qualification on the sale of Bonaventure was that it had to be scrapped.

Mr. Hales: I should like to put my question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he advise the House if the Chinese Nationalist government is in possession of the Bonaventure and whether Taiwan forces are training aboard it?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I would have to make inquiries in that regard.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY, "URBAN CANADA, PROBLEMS AND PERSPECTIVE"

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the minister in charge of housing. Will the minister table soon the Lithwick study entitled "Urban Canada: Problems and Perspective" which was commissioned by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? I ask this question because it is circulating among different government officials, private organizations such as the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, and the Department of Municipal Affairs of the government of Ontario, and I think we should have it also.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): That is my intention, and it is a surprise to me if it has been given such wide circulation.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUIREMENT THAT WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS APPLY FOR GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the anxiety expressed by many veterans 65 years of age or over who are receiving war veterans allowances because of a notice to the effect that they must apply for a guaranteed income supplement or be regarded as doing so, will the minister make a statement as to why this is being done and the authority for it?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that there will be increases of 10 per cent in disability pensions and 15 per cent in war veterans allowances. Recipients of war veterans allowances have been asked to go and receive their OAS and GIS first so that additional resources will be made available to them. This is quite satisfactory and there is no question concerning it. These people are aware of the situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister check into the aspect of the notice which tells these veterans that they must so apply and that if they do not do so they will be regarded as having done so? That is the point on which we would like to have an explanation.

Mr. Dubé: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO REPAIR DAMAGE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the flood damage which has occurred in Nova Scotia, especially in the town of Bridgewater where the bridge connecting the town with the main highway has been completely destroyed, has the Prime Minister received any request from the premier of that province for special disaster funds to aid in repairing the damage to this and other flooded areas in the province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not yet received such a request but I will check with my office to see whether any comes in.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—APPLICATION TO GROUPS OF PRODUCERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question which is very important in the eyes of farmers.

In recognition of the serious concerns which are felt by most farmers' groups with respect to the implications of Bill C-176, is the minister in a position to assure us that no marketing agency for a specific agricultural product will be established unless it has been approved by the absolute majority of the producers involved?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The selection of the officers and directors of the specific commodity boards will follow the agreements that are made between the federal and provincial governments because obviously these agencies will be administering delegated legislation from both levels of government. Therefore I cannot say in advance what those agreements will be.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct a question to the Secretary of State but because of the urgency I will address it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the President of the Canadian Citizenship Federation hopes to have a museum to record files and treasures of the ethnic groups of Canada—"Germaphones", "Ukraphones", "Polophones" and all other groups that belong to our multicultural society—would the Prime Minister please consider Mr. Casimir Stanczykowski's ethnic multicultural movement and make it a part of the National Arts Centre?

STATUS OF WOMEN

DESIGNATION OF MINISTER TO STUDY COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether it is the intention of the government to designate a minister to be responsible for studying the report on the status of women with a view to implementing its federal recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is not the responsibility of any one minister designated yet, Mr. Speaker; it is a responsibility of the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Perhaps the House would allow the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway a supplementary.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very great interest of the large women's organizations across the country who are writing letters in considerable numbers, could the Prime Minister give a date when someone in the cabinet will be designated to be in charge of this report and its implementation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is suggesting that we downgrade the report to the level of one minister. I say the full cabinet is concerned with it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for St. John's East rises on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING OF STANDING COMMITTEES WHILE GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order regarding the business of the House. My point of order refers to the meetings today of the Standing Committees of the House. This happens to be one of the inactive days so far as committees are concerned because only five committees are meeting. My point of order is based on the fact that three of those committees are meeting at 3.30 p.m. at a time when this House is going into Committee of the Whole to examine Bill C-207. Mr. Speaker, the government organization bill is of interest to every member of the House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: —and the fact that the House is going into Committee of the Whole, which by its very name implies it is a Committee of the Whole House, would suggest that this would preclude any Standing Committee of the House from meeting at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I find myself in a little bit of quandary—

An hon. Member: That is nothing new!

Mr. McGrath: I hope the trained seals on the other side who have no interest in this institution will restrain themselves. I find myself in a quandary because I happen to be a member of two of those Standing Committees. The Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs is meeting at 3.30 p.m. for a clause by clause examination of Bill C-180, the government's packaging bill. Amendments will be moved to that bill this afternoon. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications is meeting at four o'clock this afternoon for a clause by clause examination of the CNR financing bill, a subject in which most members of the House have a great deal of interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the House will be going into Committee of the Whole to examine clause by clause Bill C-207, the government's organization bill. I have a special interest in that bill and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that my privileges as a member of this House are being transgressed by the way the business of the House is organized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I think it is about time this matter was resolved, Mr. Speaker; otherwise this institution, as we saw this afternoon, will disappear because it is gradually losing its effectiveness by virtue of the new rules which in my opinion have destroyed the effectiveness of this House. Contributing to that demise of Parliament is the government's roster system which is contrary to Standing Order 5 of the rules of the House. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a denial of my rights and privileges as a member of the House, and subject to Your Honour's ruling on this point of order I will be raising a question of privilege and a motion based on it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the same point of order. Further to what the hon. member for St. John's East has said, this afternoon the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is to meet. As the hon. member said, the House is in a unique position today in that under the new rules we are going into Committee of the Whole. Surely this committee, sitting as a committee of the House, should override and surpass any of the Standing Committees? I agree with what the hon. member for St. John's East said, that it is impossible for this House to do its work properly if Standing Committees are going to meet in this fashion. If the House is in Committee of the Whole discussing an important bill to increase cabinet posts and parliamentary secretaries and the reorganization of many departments, surely these matters are important to the government generally and to Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. It is true that there are several Standing Committees meeting this afternoon and it is true that we are commencing the eleventh day of consideration of the government organization bill. However, if the hon. member and his colleagues are seriously interested in the efficiency of Parliament they ought to give some consideration to facilitating the passage of that bill so that we can move on to other important matters.

Mr. Bell: Closure!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member complains about the way we organize and run our common business but, as I understand it, each committee sitting this afternoon while the House is sitting has authority from the House to sit. Each committee has to come before us and ask for authority to sit and has received that authority. As Government House Leader I have no authority to determine when Standing Committees shall decide to convene. I realize this is a problem and I certainly have been considering how we can do the business of the House and maintain the importance that ought to be attached to this chamber—

Mr. Baldwin: Tell that to your colleagues in the cabinet.

Mr. MacEachen: —when so many Standing Committees are meeting at the same time. They have the same problem in the British House of Commons, They have established a standing or specialized committee system and are now complaining that it is taking away the importance that should exist in the chamber itself. I am quite prepared to consider any suggestions that can be implemented but I do not believe that the problem arises from any breach of order or ill will on the part of any hon. members. Rather, it is as a result of the general organization that we have adopted and sought and embedded in our rules.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of taking part in the argument that has arisen but to ask the Government House Leader if he would not like to correct one statement that he made. I realize he was not on the Procedure and Organization Committee when we amended the rules but his statement that each of these committees has come to the House and received permission to sit is not correct. Under our rules as amended, Standing Order 65 (8) states that committees may sit while the House is sitting. In other words, it is a standard provision, not something specially obtained as the minister said.

Mr. MacEachen: I certainly accept that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I was going to raise the same point as was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker. In addition, I seem to detect in the remarks of the President of the Privy Council a suggestion that he was imputing motives to the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —with respect to the debate on Bill C-207. I think the hon. gentleman has been here long enough, Mr. Speaker, to realize that it is the duty of the opposition to oppose and combat bad and obnoxious legislation.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully point out that at 3.30 p.m. this afternoon the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is also meeting. However, this meeting is taking place because of the absolute insistence of the Conservative members that it do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: You can never tell from which corner your support will come.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice that the hon. member for St. John's East seeks the floor. He has already spoken on the point of order. I wonder whether he wishes to speak for a second time on that point.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I really wanted to respond to the request of the Government House Leader to facilitate the business of the House and resolve this problem which has arisen, because the committee of the whole is to sit while standing committees are scheduled to sit. I suggest to the Government House Leader that the meetings of the standing committees of the House ought to be cancelled or postponed while this House sits in committee of the whole.

Mr. Woolliams: I support that suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East and other hon. members who have taken part in the debate on the point raised have drawn to the attention of the Chair and of the House that there is a difficulty today in that three or more important committees are to sit at the same time as the House, is sitting in committee of the whole. Hon. members no doubt realize that the House has been sitting in committee of the whole over many years and that, before the new rules were adopted, from session to session perhaps as much as two thirds of the time of the House of Commons was spent in considering matters in the committee of the whole. Even in those days, I am sure that standing committees sat at the same time as the House sat in committee of the whole.

An hon. Member: Not many committees sat.

Mr. Speaker: I may be wrong; I have simply been giving my impression. I am under the impression that we spent most of our time during each session in committee of the whole. Sometimes we spent week after week in committee of the whole. Some of the standing committees of the House must have sat during those debates. I may be wrong; I have nothing before me to confirm that impression which I am conveying to the House but that is my impression.

It is obvious that, according to our Standing Orders, and I think that the hon. member for St. John's East will be the first one to recognize this, what is being proposed this afternoon is permitted. The rules permit the House to sit in committee of the whole and, at the same time, two, three or more standing committees may sit in competition with the House. The President of the Privy Council has made the point that he agrees with the objection raised by hon. members from opposition parties that, really, the work of this House should be concentrated in this Chamber. This is where the accent ought to be and this is where most of the action should be.

An hon. Member: Then, we ought to change the rules.

Mr. Speaker: By permitting so many committees to sit at the same time in competition with the House, and in competition with the committee of the whole, we are complicating our work. In many ways we are weakening, I might say, or diluting the significance of the work which is being done or which ought to be done in this chamber. Although that grievance or complaint might be well founded, the Speaker can do very little about it. The hon. member will recognize that it is the duty of the Chair to see that the Standing Orders are observed. The Standing Orders make it possible for such committees to sit at the same time as the House of Commons sits in committee of the whole. I might suggest that an effort could well be made by the House Leaders to try to arrange the business in some other way so that conflicts such as we are experiencing today will not arise. This having been said I must, from a strictly procedural point, rule that there is nothing the Chair can do to rectify the situation about which hon. members have complained.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I had been trying to catch your eye and was not recognized before you made your ruling. Before the introduction of the new rules, most legislation was considered in this chamber and when we reached the committee of the whole stage, bills were considered in committee of the whole. It was implied when the new rules were being instituted, and this is a matter of record, that various pieces of legislation were to be referred from this House to the standing committees in order that the passage of those pieces of legislation might be expedited. It was implied that the purpose of those various committees was to consider legislation. Hon. members of this House often serve, at their own request, on one standing committee or on another, and it was felt that it would be quite possible for several pieces of legislation to go through the committee stage at one time. Legislation would be considered in committees sitting elsewhere than this chamber.

With respect, I do not think it was envisaged at the time that the anomalous situation would arise that we see today. We did not expect that two or three very important pieces of legislation would require the specialized attention of committees of this House while, at the same time, a piece of legislation affecting the whole future organization of this House and of the administration was being considered. That situation places members in a very awkward position. The question is whether members should be considering pieces of legislation which, by general agreement, may be considered in committees outside the House at the same time as the House in committee of the whole is considering a bill that affects the methods and procedures to be used in respect of future legislation.

I can understand why the Government House Leader is very anxious for the House to put this piece of legislation through, even if a number of hon. members are engaged elsewhere. If it goes through quickly, the government members can raise their own salaries quickly. I think the situation that has arisen is one to which Your Honour ought to give further consideration, perhaps not at this time but later.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Oxford for his additional suggestions. The point is well taken. To the extent that the Chair can exert influence in such matters, I will be pleased to intervene. I am not sure in what way that can be done. Perhaps I could do it by communicating within the next 24 hours, or even the next few days, with the House Leaders to try to bring about meetings between the House Leaders in an attempt to find an effective way to overcome the difficulty which has been brought to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has complained that Bill C-207 has taken too long before the committee of the whole. May I suggest to him that passage of this bill through committee of the whole would be speeded up if he were to make sure that the ministers who are responsible for the various clauses of the bill are present when those clauses are being discussed.

Mr. McGrath: Including the Prime Minister.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We are coming to part II of the bill which deals with the new department of energy, mines, resources and technical surveys. If the minister concerned is not in the House when that part is discussed, how can the government expect the committee of the whole to deal expeditiously with that part of the bill. The same remarks hold true for other parts of the bill which require the presence of the Prime Minister, the Postmaster General, and others. The President of the Treasury Board has been present throughout the discussions on the bill. In his case there has been no difficulty.

I want to make it clear that, so far as this party is concerned, if the minister whose powers are being augmented is not present when relevant clauses are being discussed, we shall insist on those clauses being stood until the minister is present. If the President of the Privy Council wants to speed up passage of this legislation, he ought to urge the ministers whose departments are under review and whose powers are being altered—

Mr. Drury: Augmented.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —or augmented to be present in the House when we are dealing with those particular parts of Bill C-207.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I respond briefly to the hon. member's point. I think his point is well taken. I certainly agree that if, at any particular moment, the minister concerned is not in the House, that that part of the bill ought to be stood until he is able to come to the House. That is understood.

In the past, when bills like this were brought forward in the name of the Prime Minister, the various relevant parts of the bill were carried in committee by the various ministers concerned. We hoped to follow this procedure on this occasion and bring in the appropriate minister at the appropriate stage. I regret that on Friday this system broke down temporarily. We were agreeable to standing that portion of the bill until the appropriate minister could come to the House. He is here today and we can deal with that part of the bill.

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Ways and Means motions to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for Mr. Benson) moved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the surtax imposed on individuals and corporations by Part IA of the Income Tax Act be applicable in the case of individuals to the 1971 taxation year and in the case of corporations to taxable income earned in 1971.

That it is expedient to amend the Income Tax Act to provide that a taxpayer who acquires prescribed property in the period between December 3, 1970 and April 1, 1972 for use in a manufacturing or processing business, shall, for the purpose of computing capital cost allowances in respect thereof and for other related purposes, be deemed to have acquired the property at a capital cost to the taxpayer equal to 115 per cent of his actual capital cost.

Motions agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Friday, February 12, consideration in committee of Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday, February 12, clause 6 of the bill with the amendment of the hon. member for Kootenay West was under consideration. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. In view of the fact that three very important standing committees are meeting this afternoon to examine important government bills which requires the presence of members of this House, I move that the committee do now adjourn. I wish to make a correction to put it in the proper phraseology. I move:

That the committee rise, report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: If the hon. member will let me have his motion in writing, I will be pleased to put it to the committee. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. McGrath) negatived: Yeas, 27; nays, 47.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

On clause 6—Protection of environmental quality.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, when we concluded our last sitting on this particular bill, there was an amendment to clause 6 before the committee which would add the word "national" in front of "objectives or standards" at the top of page three. We feel that this amendment is vital, because if we are to get to the root of pollution problems in this country and cut out the pollution havens, we must have national standards from one end of Canada to the other.

On Friday we had a very lengthy debate on this issue. A number of members on this side of the chamber expressed their views on the need for national standards in Canada. This morning I heard a radio report that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, who will be the minister of this new department, was urging some business people to get behind him in the fight to have tough standards. He talked in terms of national standards. He said that this was his objective and this was what the government wanted.

All we are asking is that the phrase "national standards" be included in the act. We are fed up with loose legislation which permits the government to say one thing, but when we get down to the nitty gritty of the legislation we find that it means something else. I suggest that this afternoon the minister should state his views on the type of standards we should have in Canada. I suggest to the minister that we must have the word "national" in this particular clause if we are going to have national standards in Canada.

There is no use saying you are in favour of national standards and then being afraid to put into the legislation exactly what is meant. If we can get some agreement on this issue, I am sure there will be little difficulty in having the clause passed early this afternoon. As I said before, we have had a good debate on this subject. I have expressed my views. This is the only way in which we shall prevent pollution havens from springing up in Canada. The minister has told us he wants this provision to apply nationally. What we are saying is: put it into the legislation and give a clear indication to the Canadian public that this is our objective, and that this is what we intend to achieve. I trust the minister will see fit to use the term "national" in the first line so that we may have national objectives or standards in Canada related to pollution control. If not, I presume there will be additional debate on this clause.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I believe very firmly in national standards. I expect that the government will support me and that I shall have the backing of Parliament with respect to national standards. I agree that there must be national standards if we are to avoid the creation of pollution havens. New legislation we are introducing to deal specifically with air, water and soil in this country will make specific reference to national standards. The hon. member for Kootenay West may not have studied the clean air bill which received first reading in this House recently. It makes frequent references to national objectives and national standards; in other words, the language he would have us apply in the case of Bill C-207 establishing this department is used in our new clean air bill.

Earlier, hon. members argued that the new department of the environment should be concerned with environmental affairs which are in some measure the concern of other departments. I would argue that the department of the environment should be concerned not simply with national standards but also, on occasion, with the development and promotion of international standards. My main reason for suggesting that we leave out the word "national" here, but use it in specific pieces of legislation such as the clean air bill, is this: we must not prevent the department of the environment from working with other countries and endeavouring to develop international standards, hopefully projecting our own standards internationally, and that this should not be a job reserved for another department, for example, the Department of External Affairs, simply because the terms of reference of the department of the environment refers exclusively to national standards as opposed, say, to international standards.

I am, however, sensitive to the point which the hon. member is making. He is really asking: Do you intend to leave out the word "national" to permit pollution havens, endorse regional standards, endorse provincial standards and even give federal approval to local standards? This is not the intention. It is not my intention as the responsible minister. It has no parallel in the particular piece of legislation we are about to pass.

Please note that regulations under the Fisheries Act are national. They are not local or regional; certainly, they are not provincial. The Canada Shipping Act is national in its scope, so our standards will be national under that piece of legislation. National health and welfare legislation is national, and our clean air bill was based on this assumption. One might of course allow that it was in the national interest occasionally for the department of the environment at the federal level to encourage provincial governments to develop standards which are province-wide in areas within provincial jurisdiction, so as to promote the adoption of objectives and standards which, in provincial cases, and I am talking now about provincial jurisdiction exclusively, might be desirable. These provincial standards may not be good enough. Nevertheless they would be desirable if we were raising standards in a provincial area of responsibility. Here is another reason for omitting the word "national".

I do not want to leave the impression that I would undermine national standards. We must have national standards. We must administer our national affairs in a national way from coast to coast. There must be no exceptions. On the other hands, I believe the department, when it is set up, should occasionally be able to move into the international arena and promote international standards. I would also think that on occasion we might do some research, and lend some aid and advice to provinces administering standards which are provincial under the law. I also want to be free to support provinces and municipalities which want to set standards higher than national standards.

In short, I am making a plea for full flexibility in the administration of the department while making it abundantly clear that our own legislation pertaining to the national affairs of Canada and to matters within federal jurisdiction should be national in scope. I think the word "national" should appear again and again in specific pieces of legislation but I do not think it should be included in this particular clause defining the whole range of the department's activities, since it would limit those activities exclusively to the pursuit of national objectives and standards.

Mr. Harding: If I might comment for a few moments—

The Chairman: Order. With respect, I suggest the Chair be given an opportunity to recognize hon. members before they begin to speak. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I make a comment on the minister's statement? I am pleased to hear him say once again that he is interested in national standards, but I want to make it clear that the hon. gentleman is just playing with words. Let him read the clause. He is saying, in effect: Let us leave this wide open so that provinces can set standards higher than national standards. I want to tell him that it is being left open in order that the provinces can set standards which are lower than national standards.

Mr. Davis: Not in areas under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Harding: Let us go back to the clause. It says the intention is to initiate, recommend, undertake and coordinate programs of the Government of Canada. We are not talking about the provinces but about the government of Canada. And what type of program? Programs which are designed to promote the establishment or adoption of objectives or standards relating to environmental quality of pollution control. We are talking here about federal government programs, and this is why we urge the minister to take another look at this clause. We want national objectives.

[Mr. Davis.]

The minister also maintained that the wording we suggest restrict his work internationally. Well, let him put in the word "international". That is simple enough. Make it "national or international", I don't care. But I believe he is doing a disservice to the legislation, to the general public and to the intentions of Parliament with regard to this legislation unless he agrees to the addition of the word "national" in that clause. I urge the minister once again to accept the new definition. We want national standards. The minister has told us he wants them, too, and that he intends to work toward them.

• (3:30 p.m.)

All we are requesting the department to do is to put this word in the legislation so we have no more loosely worded clauses that could mean anything. Once more, I urge the minister to read over this part of the bill dealing with federal programs. We must be firm and tough in our determination to tell industries, organizations, governments and individuals in Canada that we are aiming for high national objectives, and that these objectives are stated in the legislation. Without this word, the clause can mean anything, which is exactly what it will mean without it in the years to come.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated that I am going to support the amendment, but since the minister is here I should like to ask him one or two questions. I ask them objectively because I realize there are problems the minister has to face. Under our constitution, as it now exists, any federal government would face serious problems in dealing with environmental issues. In this regard, the question is not what should be done. From what I have seen of the minister and from what I have heard him say, I have the feeling he would like to go further than this legislation goes. However, I think he will agree with me that federal jurisdiction is now limited to jurisdiction based on the criminal law. This is the springboard of our jurisdiction, and it does offer only limited opportunities to the federal government.

This morning I was listening to a CBC radio report about some legislation that had just been introduced in the province of Alberta regarding pollution. The legislation provided for regulations to be made. Since the legislation dealt with matters of provincial jurisdiction the legislature was able to provide for regulations rather than simply imposing sanctions. Nevertheless, sanctions are essential. Large corporations and companies, as well as individuals, in Canada must understand that failure to comply with standards of safety in matters dealing with the environment will lead to some form of punishment, such as in the form of a fine. But in addition to this, the right to regulate, which is a very important one, ought to be available and it is very limited at the present time as far as the federal government is concerned. Regulations are only made vis-a-vis the Criminal Code, and it is this which poses great difficulties.

I do not need to elaborate on the importance of this subject. Although I will have a lot to say about other parts of this bill and will raise objection to them, with that part relating to the environment and attempts—imperfect though they may be—to consolidate all federal legislation dealing with the environment within some over-all authority, I am in full accord. After all, the earth is our home and our only home; we do not know what we will find on the moon or on Mars, so we have no other home to which to go. Consequently, a large number of people are deeply concerned about the permanent damage being done to our environment on earth and at the delays in rectifying the situation. As far as Canada is concerned, I do not blame the minister for these delays.

Eight years ago I was a member of a committee of this House—I believe, Mr. Chairman, you were on the committee as well—that dealt with environmental questions. The committee became involved in a study of the effects of agricultural pesticides and herbicides, and also had an opportunity to study the book "The Silent Spring" written by the late Rachel Carson. I believe this was in 1962, and this book was branded by some as being far too radical.

In light of what we know today, certainly it would not be so considered now. However, at that time some members of the committee thought that Miss Carson had made a very valid case. Her case was buttressed by statistical information and records, and I, myself, think that the committee rather cavalierly dismissed some of the propositions which had been advanced. Since that time there is no doubt whatever that the earth's environment has been even more poisoned by continual use of pesticides and herbicides. Within the last year the government has begun to recognize this, but who knows what incalculable and permanent damage may have been done in the interval? I think it will take generations to discover the effect that these poisons may have on the human species and other living organisms that inhabit the world.

I could give a lot of other illustrations but I do not have the time to give the details of all of these intricate constitutional arguments. In my opinion, if the people of this country had a choice they would want this subject handled in one way by one authority, the federal government, and not by 10 provincial governments. This would not preclude the implementation of policy at the provincial level, just as is the case with our national health and welfare programs. It is probably more logical and sensible that these programs be implemented at the provincial and possibly even the regional level. However, there must be one over-all, overriding, national, policy-making body, which can only be the federal government.

I am convinced that as the people of Canada begin more and more to realize within the next year or two the need for this, the proposition I have put forward will become accepted; and I think the minister feels this way, too. I did raise this question on Friday. The minister has referred to international treaties, and we are now much closer to the point where there must be international obligations in the environmental field. Not long ago I visited the Council of Europe meetings at Strasbourg, and the members of the consultative assembly of that Council have now reached the stage where they are even contemplating discussions with countries behind the Iron Curtain on environmental matters. They have come to realize just what the issue embraces, and since Europe consists of many small countries there must obviously be international standards and controls established.

I think we can assume that in Canada we shall have to enter into international treaties, possibly on a wide scale under the aegis of the United Nations or some other body. I think this country and the United States will probably have to work out some agreements in this regard. But how is the minister or any federal government going to be able to implement international obligations while provincial authorities may be in the position under our constitutional law—though this question has never been tested—of saying no?

I did make this point on Friday but let me repeat it for the benefit of the minister. A great many years ago this country solemnly entered into international obligations with regard to labour standards, some of which fell within the sole jurisdiction of the federal government. These have been implemented. But others have not been implemented, and cannot be implemented until agreement is reached with the provincial legislatures, and this looks unlikely. The United Nations declaration of human rights comes into the same category, and there are a great many other examples to which I could refer.

I am not asking the minister at this stage to set aside the constitution because I know he cannot do so. There are some who say that if the constitution is a difficulty, let us simply override it. I recall a case I had years ago when, as a young lawyer practising in the Peace River country, I defended a man on a charge of stealing a pig. He was not guilty. I never defend clients who are guilty and I should like you to know that. The evidence was bad and it appeared as though the accused was guilty. However, this distinguished judge, Mr. Justice Noel, even after he had found him guilty, sentenced him to a short period of incarceration. The Crown prosecutor said: "How can you do that?" And His Honour said: "It was such a little pig". I make that comparison because this matter involves a problem the minister must tackle. He must also obtain the support of his colleagues and members of this Parliament.

I do not want to initiate a provincial test, but I feel that in the final analysis there is only one jurisdiction which can deal with these matters, and that is the national jurisdiction. It must deal with these problems in co-operation with provincial legislatures with the greatest possible scope for provincial and regional implementation. We must set as our goal the objective of obtaining complete national control in respect of this important issue. We must decide on a national basis whether this world is going to survive and provide a decent place for human beings to live.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I recently attended a meeting of a Moose Jaw organization and I am sure the minister will have paid close attention to the number of briefs presented at that meeting. These briefs were directed towards the adoption of national standards.

These organizations believe if there are not national standards, the municipalities and the provinces will pay less attention to pollution standards than they might if there were a national policy in effect.

One of the important elements that came across at this hearing was the fact that the nation requires national leadership in respect of pollution control. Let me use as an example some of the municipalities which have in the past adopted municipal regulations. When they were asked to enforce their regulations they were confident that they would have the co-operation of the various industries involved. I am sure everyone here is aware of this situation. At the same time, I think the municipal or provincial people would deny that there should be this type of national legislation in this field, although they admit that there should be this type of leadership.

I can't understand why the minister refers in the same terms to the clean air act and to the national emission standards act, about which he spoke a while ago. It would seem to me that if he is prepared to put the national emission standards act and the clean air act before the House, this means that we are taking over the destiny of our own country as far as clean air is concerned. By the same token, we should put the word "national" in clause 6 of this bill.

We find that now we are talking about a national clean air act, and if we leave out the word "national" we will have a lot of people complaining about the reference to two separate acts. I still fail to understand why the minister would suggest that it would be difficult to include the word "national" in this bill as suggested by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I suggest that we included the word "national" in the clean air act we should include it in this measure in order to make this clause clear. It seems to me that control of air pollution internationally is as important as control of any other kind of pollution internationally or nationally.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister to give us some information in respect of the observations that were made yesterday during a very eloquent speech by the Minister of Transport. He said we should draw a happy balance between correct industrial growth and pollution control. I noticed that he threw out a challenge to engineers and the news media for assistance in securing a moral approach by industry. I am wondering whether he anticipates a danger of an over-reaction in respect of this whole business of ecological control, or whatever the correct term is.

I feel that in Canada we should appreciate the fact that in the United States, at every level of government, there does not seem to be the slightest attention being paid to port and industrial development. They seem to have gone wild in this area of ecological pollution control. It is impossible to obtain an orderly industrial development program. I should like the minister to take a minute or two to express his views on this aspect. Will it be possible for Canada to regulate pollution control in respect of industrial development. We are aware of great industrial growth and the continuation of this growth. I hope we do not lose everything in our mad dash to set up these controls.

I should like to ask the minister whether he has any thoughts in this regard, and whether he has a policy for the education of people, so we do not build up in our minds a fear which will prevent us from sitting down for a moment and thinking over a sensible approach to this pollution control problem. In eastern Canada, we are interested in port development and industrial growth. We believe in pollution control but, at the same time, we want to strike a happy balance such as the Minister of Transport referred to in his eloquent speech yesterday. I hope the minister will indicate that there will be an educational program to prevent people in this country from over-reacting to this whole business.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Peace River has quite rightly expressed the fact that the people of Canada are looking to the national government for leadership in the battle against pollution. I think it is up to us in this Parliament and this government to provide that leadership. The hon. member raised one difficulty, if I might call it that, which is the result of our present constitution. He referred to the possible difficulty of implementing international treaties entered into by the government of Canada with governments of other nations. To paraphrase his words, he suggested such treaties might not be enforceable because the provinces have certain powers of their own which are not enforceable by the federal government.

The hon. member may not have read the press release on policy from the last federal-provincial conference, but there was a federal proposal to the provinces which has been studied by the provinces on which there was some acceptance. The federal proposal involved a concurrency of powers in respect of environmental control. If the proposal made by the federal government was adopted by the provinces, it would help to clear up two difficulties; one involving the enforcement of legislation for the protection of the environment stemming from international agreements treaties. The other would help to clarify interprovincial boundary situations, which I gather are also uncertain from a legal or constitutional point of view in this country.

In other words, a proposal has been put forward by the federal government which has been considered at a federal-provincial conference, and which will again come up for review in June, 1971. We are looking at it from a national point of view, from the point of view of enforcing high standards interprovincially right across Canada, and also internationally in a binding way as between Canada and other nations.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw stressed the need for national standards and international standards. I agree 100 per cent with everything he said in that regard. He asked how we might project the new clean air bill into the international arena. Given flexibility in the terms of reference of the new department of the environment we can attempt to promote internationally pieces of legislation which we are imposing nationally in this country. He at least urged the inclusion of the word "international" with the word "national" in his amendment. I would prefer, however, to leave this matter open in the terms of reference of the department and make it quite specific in particular pieces of legislation such as the clean air bill.

The hon.. member for Saint John-Lancaster asked about over-reacting to the problems posed by pollution, the tendency to hold back job producing industries and to discourage perhaps economic growth in the guise of protecting the environment. Personally, I think with more care and more attention, we can have both economic growth and a clean environment. I know of a number of cases where properly designed plants have been more economic, more profitable and better able to pay high wages than others which were designed a few years earlier without any regard to the environment.

New pulp mills meeting our national standards and regulations under the Fisheries Act, for example, are perhaps faced with an increase of 2 per cent in the cost of new plants and less than 1 per cent in the cost of the product, but these costs are common to all new mills across Canada and, increasingly, to new mills built in other countries such as the Scandinavian countries which are beginning to adopt our new techniques. Eventually, the rules governing this industry will be the same the world over.

So, while these costs may be significant, though not large, they will be common the world over. They will not affect our competitive position. They will help preserve our environment and make other industries feasible in the nearby localities. In other words, we can have what the Minister of Transport envisaged as the best of both worlds, economic growth and a clean environment as well.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, in my view it is encumbent on every member of this House to become articulate and vigorous in supporting this proposal. Irrespective of where we sit in this House, it is our duty to do so. I am glad that these two ministers are in the House. The Minister of Public Works also took a position of this kind when he held another portfolio. I think there is a responsibility on the members of this House, and on the people who report what is said in this House to arouse, not inflame, public opinion in a reasonable way in respect of support for the proposal contained in this communiqué. That is the reason I spoke as I did. I am convinced members of our party will support that particular aspect—other members may debate other aspects—of the proposal and what is contained in the communiqué. There will be co-operation to the fullest extent, and I seek the same co-operation from all parties in the House.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, since I was absent attending another committee meeting, perhaps this question has already been put and, if so, it need not be answered. Does the minister foresee any difficulty in respect of jurisdiction? I am thinking now of the fact that some provinces have set up their own legislation. I know the province of Newfoundland established a clean air and water authority with appropriate legislation. Will there be any duplication of effort and are there any jurisdictional problems? If so, have these jurisdictional problems been resolved? Is there any working mechanism to be set up within the department so that both the federal and provincial authorities may work harmoniously toward a common objective?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the simple answer is that with divided responsibility in a federal country there are bound to be some difficulties. I think in this area of pollution control there are fewer difficulties than in other areas where there have been old disputes and a host of vested interests. In my travels across the country and in my discussions with ministers in the provinces having responsibility for the environment, there has been a willingness to talk about these matters and a willingness to work out standards which would apply right across Canada and project outside Canada. There has been surprisingly little concern about local problem areas, about constitutionality, about provincial boundaries, jurisdictions and old department names in our effort to start afresh in this field.

I could perhaps give an example. Currently, we are developing a national standard under the Fisheries Act. Representatives of the provinces have joined us in a national task force. The pulp and paper industry has supplied several experts. The task force has travelled to Scandinavia and the United States. It is developing one set of standards for pulp mills. A draft of the regulations will be sent to the provinces for comment. We will publish them nationally. We will listen to critical comment, but co-operation is the rule and the tendency is to enforce the highest standards. The various mills which have already put these standards into effect are having no trouble operating, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two brief comments to make on the amendment before us. It is obvious to me that the minister and the government are prepared to leave the objectives and standards in respect of pollution open to negotiation. No other interpretation can be taken from the legislation which is before us. The mere fact that the government has refused to accept the amendment is a clear indication that we will have different standards in different parts of this country. It is the same old story we had last year when the Canada water bill was before the committee. We could not get national standards. Now, apparently the minister accepts the view that the national standard issue should not be established in this bill. I am disappointed. However, we have had a good discussion on the amendment and I should like to see it come to a vote. I am disappointed in the minister and his approach to this particular amendment. This legislation is meaningless. It can mean a lot or nothing. This is not the type of legislation we should be placing on the statute books of Canada.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment to clause 6. I will read the amendment because it is now three or four days since the committee last dealt with it.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The hon. member for Kootenay West moved:

That clause 6, subsection (a) of Bill C-207 be amended by adding thereto on page 3, line 1, the word "national", so that line 1 will read "or adoption of national objectives or standards".

The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Harding) negatived: Yeas, 11; Nays, 34.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I think clause 5 has been stood. I am wondering whether you intend to go back to that clause now.

The Chairman: If hon. members agree, we might deal with clause 7 and then go back to clause 5. There is an amendment to clause 5 before the committee. Is it agreed that we deal with clause 7, and then go back to clause 5?

Mr. Crouse: Before clause 7 is carried, may I ask if it is the intention of the committee to go back not only to clause 5, to which there is an amendment, but also to clauses 1 and 2 which have been stood? The hon. member for St. John's East has an amendment that he wishes to move to clause 2 of the bill. So, from a procedural point of view I should like to have some guidance as to whether we will deal with that amendment this afternoon or whether it is the intention of the committee to proceed with the entire bill before going back to clause 2.

The Chairman: It has been the Chair's understanding that once we dispose of clause 7 we might go back to clause 5 to which there is an amendment, and then proceed to clause 2. We would then have completed that part, subject to returning to clause 1 later. I understand that, in the normal course, we would complete the other parts of the bill and return to clause 1 at the end.

Mr. Baldwin: Has not clause 2 been stood?

The Chairman: The suggestion I am making to the committee is that we deal with clause 5, when clause 7 is carried, and then go back to clause 2. Clause 1 relates to the whole bill, so we would deal with it as the last item. When we dispose of clause 2, we will have disposed of this part of the bill. Is this course agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 7—Annual Report.

The Chairman: Is clause 7 agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 5—Duties of Minister

[Mr. Harding.]

The Chairman: An amendment was moved to clause 5. The hon. member for Kootenay West moved:

That clause 5 of Bill C-207 be amended by adding thereto next after line 37 on page 2 a new subsection (h)
(h) pollution prevention and control

Mr. Harding: When the clause was stood several days ago, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that the government wished to see whether or not it could accept the amendment. Possibly the minister could indicate whether or not it is acceptable, and if it is, I do not think there will be much more discussion on it. This is the position in which we found ourselves last time the clause was debated, and possibly we should hear from the minister now.

Mr. Davis: The proposed subclause (h) adds an additional responsibility of the minister of the environment, namely, pollution prevention and control. I believe that this, in more restrictive words, repeats much of the intent of the preceding and presently worded subclause (e), the protection and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment, including water, air and soil quality. Subclause (e) is couched in broader terms. I might also describe those terms as clearer. We talk about quality in subclause (e). In the amendment, which would add a subclause, reference is made to pollution prevention and control. I think the words "environment and quality" are more generous, more positive, than the words "pollution prevention and control". I suggest that to add this subclause is redundant and also restrictive. For that reason, I urge that the proposed amendment which would add a subclause with the words "pollution prevention and control" be rejected.

Mr. Harding: I moved this amendment and I will briefly outline again my reasons for doing so. I think members of the committee should realize that the bill before us, which sets up a new department of the environment, does not cover all environmental problems in the nation. I believe that this is wrong. If a department is going to deal with environmental problems, nothing should be excluded. I gave as an example a large portion of northern Canada, which is 40 per cent of the total land mass of our country. We have land use regulations for that northern area which are going to be administered by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have the Arctic Waters Pollution Act which establishes a pollution control zone in the Arctic area. This zone is not included in this bill. Does the minister mean to tell me that the protection of this area is not part of the job of protecting the Canadian environment? Just how nonsensical can we become? If we are tackling environmental problems, let us tackle them with a central organization about which a number of members have spoken in this debate.

We are trying to make sure that the minister has the right, for example, to move into our northern territories if pollution control and prevention are needed.

Mr. Davis: How does the hon. member's amendment do that?

Mr. Harding: It is obvious that this amendment will add to the area over which the minister has jurisdiction. I want to say the minister should be proud that we are trying to give him firmer control over environmental problems in Canada. We are not trying to cut down the work of the department. We want to make it more effective, and we think this amendment will enlarge the scope of activities of the department.

Again, I say that we have covered this before. I point out to members of the committee that it makes common sense, if we set up a department of the environment, to let it do the job for all of Canada. One of our big troubles in the past has been divided jurisdictions, one department doing one job and another department doing another. There has been a lack of co-ordination and a host of legislation on the statute books which has never been enforced or only to a very limited degree. This is what we are trying to avoid and this is why I am suggesting that the new department of the environment be all embracing. This, in effect, is what this amendment will do and I am going to suggest that the House accept it.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Harding) negatived: Yeas 10, nays 28.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Shall clause 5 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who interjected is one of the members who should be on his feet talking about this problem in relation to Lake Erie. The municipalities in that area are going to be in trouble because they have to find the $30 million with which to buy the nutrient removal equipment that has to be added to sewage disposal plants. There are several members in this House who should be on their feet speaking about this question and I do not know why they are not putting more pressure on the minister to do some of the things that I feel he should be doing.

An hon. Member: Give us the bill.

Mr. Howe: Let's put some formula in the bill which will make it worth while. Mr. Chairman, the last time I spoke on this bill the minister in charge of housing was in the House and I asked him this question: In the new estimates for CMHC, how much of the budget is going to be directed towards helping the municipalities improve sewage treatment facilities? I understand that since then an announcement has been made, but I have not been able to find it. I wonder if the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry could tell me just how much of this budget for CMHC is to be spent this year in assisting municipalities to improve their sewage treatment facilities. Have there been discussions on what the figure is for this year?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to answer because I do not know whether an announcement has been made. I have discussed it with the minister in charge of housing and also the minister for the province of Ontario. A larger sum of money is allocated both nationally and to the province of Ontario. We are also looking at the possibility of mounting a special program, yet to be delineated, which could follow from recommendations of the International Joint Commission for the cleanup of Lake Erie. I have asked the Hon. George Kerr of Ontario to come up with a set of cost estimates. These additional requirements might be considered as additional to anything that has been announced so far by the minister responsible for housing.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, do I take it that, over and above the amount that is going to be given for local sewage treatment programs, the federal government is willing to help with that $30 million that is going to be required to put in the nutrient removal equipment?

Mr. Davis: I have asked the Hon. George Kerr for the figures, Mr. Chairman. When these are received I will take the matter to the government and it will be given serious consideration.

Mr. Howe: Now, Mr. Chairman, the question I keep asking in connection with this water development program is, what is the formula going to be. The commissions and the authorities looking after these river basins should have some idea when they start to plan how much assistance the federal government will provide. I think it is essential that there should be some indication of this by the federal government, as there was in the old water conservation assistance program. These people know what is needed for the Grand River and the Speed River, and all the areas that have problems.

In his speech the minister mentioned the necessity of private industry doing more for itself in this area. But private industry is not able to, Mr. Chairman. The time is now. By increasing the flow in a lot of these rivers and using other proper water management methods, we will be able to carry forward until the time when these companies can recycle their effluent and disposable waste. At the present time they do not have the technical knowledge to go forward. They do not know how to go about recycling their waste.

Probably some members read a suggestion in the Globe and Mail this morning outlining how paper can be made into cattle fodder with molasses and minerals added. Then, compost can be made from the manure. These things are important, Mr. Chairman, in relation to these particular environmental problems. I have a book here entitled "Garbage As You Like It". It has some very outspoken and new ideas on composting and things that can be done with garbage. Garbage will also come under the clean air bill because part of the air pollution of cities comes from the burning of garbage.

I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the formula which I think is so essential in the areas of water control and water management. Probably each should be treated differently, but if there were some base it would give encouragement to those people who have spent years studying water basins. They should be assisted in every way possible by every level of government. If the department had a base formula, it would be of tremendous assistance to them in trying to carry out the programs on which they have been working for so many years.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry? The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Drury: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, my attention has been drawn to the fact that in line 17, page 2, the French translation does not reflect exactly what is meant.

An hon. Member: It never did.

Mr. Drury: The French version—perhaps I should not say English translation or French translation—

Mr. Paproski: You will screw it up anyway.

An hon. Member: What was that word you used?

Mr. Paproski: It is better than the one the Prime Minister used.

Mr. Drury: The English version reads "non-domestic flora and fauna". "Non-domestic" and the term in French "non indigènes" are not quite the same. I move that we change the French version to substitute for the words "non indigènes" the word "sauvages". It would now read: "la flore et la faune sauvages".

Mr. Baldwin: Does that include the cabinet?

The Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment to clause 5. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 5 (as amended) agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 2.

On clause 2—Short title.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to clause 2 which relates to what will happen to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and the special responsibility that the minister has in relation thereto. Since the present minister took over the responsibilities that he now has, I think it is only fair to say that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has come into its own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: I do not mean to diminish in any way the importance of this department in the past because, indeed, it is one of the great federal departments of the government of Canada. It is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, departments. Prior to the administration of the present minister, the department always seemed to emerge in the scheme of things as the poor, black sheep, if you like, of the government. It never received the recognition it deserved from either the minister or the House. The minister has done a great deal to change all that.

Mr. Laing: Which minister is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. McGrath: I am talking about the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and about clause 2 of the bill.

Mr. Laing: I thought that the Department of Public Works had the record for being the best department.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I will extend the same accolade to the Minister of Public Works when he accepts some of the many requests which are pending from my constituency.

An hon. Member: Touché.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, the minister is a good Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. McGrath: It is true that down through the years the department of fisheries did not receive the recognition it deserved from the government of Canada or the Parliament of Canada. The present Minister of Fisheries and Forestry took over that department and brought to it new vitality. Of course, he was aided and abetted by Members of Parliament from the Atlantic provinces, not the least among whom are, I suggest with great humility, the Members of Parliament from Newfoundland. Through the coincidence of events involving the election of 1968 and the appointment of the minister to head that department, the department of fisheries finally came into its own. The department was given a new lease on life and began to envolve new and meaningful policies which gave new hope to this long down-trodden and sometimes forgotten industry. Today that industry in eastern Canada is in a relatively healthy state; it is certainly healthier than it has been for a long time. That is a direct result of policies which have emerged from the application of the expertise and knowledge of the minister, advice that has been tendered in this House and consultations which the minister has engaged in with individual members and with the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In the new scheme of things, the new department is to have a sexy name and the minister is to have sexy responsibilities. This, after all, is a very attractive proposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Everybody is talking about pollution. It is very much in vogue; it is very much the "in" thing.

We are concerned that with this new state of affairs, the special responsibilities of the minister relating to the fisheries of Canada will be forgotten. That is not an idle suggestion. It is based on concern that is being expressed in this House, in the Atlantic provinces and, I suspect, in the minister's own province of British Columbia.

I put on record during the debate on the second reading stage of the bill statistics supporting my contention that the fishing industry is important to the people of Canada and to the economy of Canada. That industry is of special importance and significance to the Atlantic provinces, to the Gaspé coast of Quebec and, perhaps to a lesser extent, to the province of British Columbia. Although it is important in that province, it is not quite as important there, in the over-all scheme, as it is to the economy of Atlantic Canada. The industry is important on the inland waters of Canada; I am thinking of the Great Lakes fisheries and the western freshwater fisheries. It is very important to the over-all economies of those regions. It generates substantial moneys for our balance of payments and pumps millions of dollars annually into the economy of Canada. Parliament has recognized that it has special responsibilities in this area and hence there has always been a department of fisheries, presided over by a minister whose prime and indeed sole responsibility has been the fisheries of Canada. In this case, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has that responsibility. Under this legislation, the name "Fisheries" is to be dropped. For the first time since confederation, there will not be in Canada a department of fisheries. The new department is to be the department of the environment. It is only natural that, as the name disappears, so the relative importance of the fisheries end of the department will diminish as a consequence. That is what concerns us; and it is a genuine concern.

I expect that the minister will reply by saying that so long as he is the minister of fisheries, this will never happen. I believe him. I believe that will be the case so long as the minister retains this responsibility. I believe that he will always give his prime attention to the fishing industry of Canada. Yet, he will not always be the minister of the environment, and therein lies the difficulty. He may very well be succeeded by somebody who is not interested in the fisheries of Canada, either on the west coast or the east coast. The new deputy minister has had no experience or connection with the fishing industry on either of the coasts of Canada. I think it is regrettable that the committee did not accept the amendment of the hon. member for South Shore to add two Deputy ministers to the department. The very same arguments that can be advanced for appointing two deputy ministers can be advanced for retaining the word "fisheries" in the name of the new department.

I put to the members of the committee and to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry this proposition: what would be wrong with calling the new department the department of "fisheries and the environment" or, if you like, "the department of the environment and fisheries". Either one would be acceptable. Either name would allay our fears, because we are afraid that the special responsibilities that Parliament has under our constitution with respect to the fishing industry will be diminished or forgotten.

There is ample precedent for including or retaining the name of the old department in the name of the new department. For example, previously there used to be the department of industry and the department of trade and commerce. Those departments were merged and became the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am sure that the old name was retained in the new to make sure that the special responsibilities of the government in promoting industry in this country would not be forgotten.

Going farther, we note what happened with respect to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is the successor to what used to be the department of mines and technical surveys. You will notice that in the new name of the department the word "mines" was retained, for the reason that the special responsibilities of the federal government with regard to natural resources of Canada and the exploitation of those resources had to be kept to the fore. Then, there was established the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which deals with equally important responsibilities under our constitution, both of which are spelled out in the name of that department. The same arguments could apply to the Department of National Health and Welfare. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs exercises two separate jurisdictions or responsibilities, each of them being equally important and each of them being spelled out in the name of the new department, to make sure that the minister will not lose sight of his responsibilities either in the field of consumer affairs or in that of corporate affairs.

The same arguments apply to the Department of Supply and Services and to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The name of the department delineates the responsibilities of the minister. There is the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. The department of forestry was created, and subsequently the government decided to merge it with the Department of Fisheries. There were valid reasons for merging the departments of forestry and of fisheries; yet the name of the original departments was retained. The new department became the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. Consequently, I ask, why cannot we ensure that the new department will retain the word "fisheries" in its name? That would not diminish in any way the concern of the House and of the people with respect to the environment and the steps which must be taken to protect it. The name should be changed in order to ensure that the minister or any subsequent minister who will follow him will not forget the special responsibilities that Parliament must exercise in relation to the fishing industry of this country.

I submit these arguments are reasonable, Mr. Chairman. I hope the minister will see fit to accept the amendment which I now submit for the approval of the committee. I move:

That clause 2 of Bill C-207 be amended by striking out the words "Department of the Environment" where they first appear, immediately after clause 1 on page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "Department of Fisheries and the Environment" and similarly thereafter in the Bill and Schedules thereto wheresoever the words "Department of the Environment" appear; and, consequential thereupon, that the words "Minister of the Environment" be struck out wheresoever in the Bill and Schedules thereto the same appear and the words "Minister of Fisheries and the Environment" substituted therefor.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has some reservations about the amendment. I have two reservations which relate to the procedural aspect. If the committee adopted this amendment, it would require the amendment of clauses of the bill that have already been dealt with by the committee. That is one aspect which comes immediately to mind. The other is not that important, but I will mention it. There is a reference with respect to amending short titles at page 560 of May's seventeenth edition. It reads:

The title can only be amended if the bill has been so altered—

In this particular case, we should read: "if the part has been so altered" because we are dealing with Part I.

—as to necessitate such an amendment; but any amendment to the title that may be necessary is made.

I think in this case the amendment is not necessary in the sense that May refers to it. He further states:

—an amendment . . . has been permitted to be made in the standing committee . . .

On that point, I also notice in clause 5(a), the minister would have authority with respect to the seacoast and inland fisheries. In my mind, unless hon. members on the government side want to argue it, I am prepared to accept the amendment with respect to clause 2. However, I have reservations as to whether we can now go as far as amending clauses which have already been adopted by the committee. I just throw out these suggestions. They might serve the purpose of the hon. member who moved the amendment. Subject to what hon. members have to say, I will accept that part of the amendment which reads:

That clause 2 of Bill C-207 be amended by striking out the words "Department of the Environment" where they first appear, immediately after clause 1 on page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "Department of Fisheries and the Environment".

I suggest to the hon. member that if this part of the amendment serves his purpose it would be acceptable to the Chair at this point, subject to what other hon. members may have to say.

Mr. McGrath: May I just point out that Your Honour's qualification of the amendment is acceptable. I will be pleased to move it in that form.

Mr. Crouse: I rise to speak briefly in support of the amendment.

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member. Before he speaks to the substance of the amendment, other hon. members should have the opportunity of speaking to the procedural point. If no member wishes to do so, the Chair is prepared to accept the amendment, as amended, with the consent of the hon. member for St. John's East.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The amendment is accepted.

Mr. Crouse: I rise to speak briefly in support of the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East. As the committee is aware, during previous discussions on this bill dealing with clause 4, I moved an amendment to appoint a deputy minister of fisheries who would be entirely responsible for fisheries matters. That amendment was overruled by the committee.

I share the concern of the hon. member for St. John's East that the department of fisheries will be swallowed up by the new department of the environment, with a consequent loss of identity to this important primary industry in so far as Canada is concerned. If it were not for the fisheries, Canada may never have been discovered. It was the prolific supplies of fish, particularly codfish, off the Atlantic coast of Canada which encouraged the French, English and many other nationals to come to this country to pursue the fishing industry. If it had not been for the prolific cod fishery off eastern Canada, we would never have known about such romantic ships as the Gertrude L. Thibauld, skippered by Captain Ben Pine, or the Bluenose captained by Captain Angus Walters, or the famous International Schooner races held off the coast near Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. Perhaps, we would not now have a replica of the famous sailing ship Bluenose on the back of our ten cent piece.

An hon. Member: Or the Newfoundland members of Parliament.

Mr. Crouse: Someone has suggested that we may not have the Newfoundland members of Parliament. That would be a tragedy. There is a great deal of tradition, romance and history associated with the department of fisheries. The federal government has jurisdiction over this resource under the British North America Act. The department has been known as the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and the department of fisheries and marine since confederation. I express genuine concern about its demise.

By phasing out this department, some of our problems may not be thoroughly investigated by a minister known only as the minister of the environment. By phasing out the department of fisheries and no longer having a minister of fisheries by that name, I believe we will lose a certain amount of advertising value which is essential to our fishing industry. I say this because this industry is now going through very troubled times. As hon. members are aware, this industry is suffering from incidents of mercury poisoning which have been found in the larger species of fish, mainly tuna and swordfish. We are also suffering from a decline in fish stocks which has resulted in a serious problem for the industry, particularly in Nova Scotia. Important decisions must soon be made on behalf of our fishing industry at an international conference to be held sometime in 1972. We need a representative at this conference who is knowledgeable on fisheries matters and who has the entire industry at heart, otherwise the discussions will bog down on questions of jurisdiction over seabed minerals while pollution control and the preservation of fisheries resources become issues of a secondary nature. This must not be allowed to happen.

We learned only recently that no progress has been made in talks between Canada and the United States to establish the median line which crosses Georges Bank and which should be an international boundary line dividing this section of the offshore banks between Canada and the United States. This boundary was established at the 1958 Geneva convention on the continental shelf on the basis of the median line between neighbouring coasts being the international boundary.

Since 1964, we have seen Ottawa issuing seismic exploration permits covering the northeast corner of the bank to a number of oil companies. But this begs the question. Is Ottawa following the proper course? If oil is discovered on Georges Bank, who will own this resource, Canada or the United States? Who will collect royalties if oil is found? Then again, if a major mishap occurs followed by an oil spill, who will clean up the mess? Who will pay for cleaning up the oil and which government will reimburse our fishermen for the losses they incur as a result of oil polluted waters? Will it be Canada or the United States? These are all very important questions, and they are questions which can only be resolved by an alert minister of fisheries, since obviously the Secretary of State for External Affairs is asleep at the switch, incapable or unable to reach agreement with the United States with regard to them.

Another area of concern is the thorny fisheries dispute involving Canada and the government of France which owns the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. In 1964 Parliament passed the Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act establishing a 12-mile limit off Canada's east coast. The Secretary of State for External Affairs at that time, the Hon. Paul Martin, told this House that the terms of the legislation were to be implemented as soon as possible. Well, they have not been implemented yet. It is true bits and pieces have been put into effect, and I will not detract from the efforts of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I think he is giving of himself in a manner unlike that of any previous Liberal minister of fisheries. He has worked hard at his job, but his job is a very complicated and difficult one.

Mr. McGrath: And now he is giving it up.

Mr. Crouse: And now, as my hon. friend from St. John's East says, it appears he is giving it up. These are situations which concern us. As I said, the legislation passed in 1964 has not been fully implemented and at the rate we are going our fishermen will have a new understanding of the meaning of the word eternity. I would ask the minister this question: is the median line the bone of contention in the dispute between Canada and France? I refer to the line which is in dispute between Canada and the United States as it crosses Georges Bank? This is a question which affects our territorial rights and fishing zones vis-à-vis the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. This is an important point and one which must be resolved, because the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated to us that Canada accepts the median line as the dividing line between Canada and the United States where it crosses Georges Bank. Are we being hoist on our own petard if we accept that median line as the dividing line, the international boundary line, between Canada and the United States? Do we accept this as the dividing line between Canada and the French-owned islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon?

If so, I should like to know whether the median line is the dividing line accepted by the French government. If this is the case it would appear we are issuing seismic survey permits and oil drilling permits with respect to sections of the continental shelf which may well be claimed by France. These are some of the questions which the present minister of fisheries has been unable to resolve. These are problems which have been given the brush-off by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Oh, he goes to international conferences, but when he returns and we ask him whether he has consulted with the French with regard to these and other matters he tells us he has not had the time. And when we ask him what progress is being made with regard to them he says they are still under discussion. This is not good enough.

What about our swordfish industry? The United States food and drug directorate has established a rule that five parts of mercury per million is a tolerable level of mercury but that no fish containing more than this amount of mercury is acceptable as an import into the United States. I know the minister has made representations to the United States authority to ascertain whether this standard could be relaxed in order that we might retain our swordfish industry. Some 50 ships will be tied up on the south shore of Nova Scotia alone as a result of these developments, throwing 300 men out of work through no fault of their own. These men are desperately seeking an alternative form of employment. Here again is a matter which should exercise the concern of a minister of fisheries who has no other duties but to look after this particular primary industry.

Speaking of mercury pollution, another question occurs to me. Has the same level for fitness for human consumption been set for tuna, for example? If so, does cooking the tuna lower the mercury content? Swordfish are sold fresh. Could they be processed in any way so that this delicious seafood could once again be made acceptable?

I could go on for another hour talking about the fishing industry—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Private Members' Hour begins at five o'clock.

Mr. Crouse: —but I am reminded that Private Members' Hour is approaching, so I shall not detain hon. members further at this time. But for the reasons I have given, I am happy to support the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from St. John's East. I hope that in the interests of maintaining the traditional name of the department and its association with the fishing industry the amendment will meet with the acceptance of this chamber.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, this is a simple amendment and I am sure it will meet with no opposition from the minister of fisheries or his friends on the government benches. After all, it does little more than give due recognition to an industry which is of great importance to eastern Quebec, four Atlantic provinces and British Columbia. A little more than a week ago, my hon. friend from the south shore of Nova Scotia moved an amendment which would have meant the appointment of a full-fledged deputy minister of fisheries. He, of course, would be the chief executive responsible for fisheries matters in Canada. At the moment, we have a minister of fisheries in the House of Commons and we shall continue to do so until this measure meets with parliamentary approval.

In the two years and eight months during which I have been a member of this House I have raised fisheries issues with the department on many occasions. I suppose there is hardly a member sitting here who has not expressed concern about the decline in stocks of fish off our coast as a result of exploitation by the Soviet Union, by the Scandinavian countries, the Iberian countries and, in fact, by all western European countries. Some of the North African countries are now planning to harvest fish along our continental shelf.

We have been pressuring the minister of fisheries to make an attempt to convene an international conference that will give our fishing industry some special direction and impetus to enable it to take its rightful place in the Canadian economy. This would provide our fishermen with a proper return for their labour, and also enable the fishing industry and our marine resources to make a proper contribution to the general welfare of the Canadian nation.

The passage of the bill now before the committee, which seeks to create a department of the environment and to subjugate the fisheries department to a minor role within the proposed department of the environment, we feel would seriously downgrade the role of the fishery in Canada. My colleague from St. John's East has put forward a very simple and sincere recommendation, namely that we give the fisheries department at least some semblance of its original status by renaming this proposed department the "department of fisheries and the environment". I cannot see any objection to the amendment and I am sure the minister of fisheries will accept it with the respect it deserves.

I imagine that in the very near future the minister of fisheries will have to sit down with the representatives of a number of European and Scandinavian countries, as well as the Soviet Union, and engage in a debate on the fishing industry and marine resources. I think he would have less status speaking as a minister of the environment responsible, on the one hand, for the effluent of the pulp and paper plant across the river here, as well as, on the other hand, for the fishing stocks in Groswater Bay or off the coast of Vancouver Island. He would have more status speaking as minister of fisheries and the environment, and this is the main reason I support the amendment.

It has been said that the fishing industry of Canada has never occupied the status position that it should have in the Canadian economy. I suppose there are a number of reasons for this. Successive governments, in my opinion, have not treated the fishery as an industry which could contribute to Canada's economic development. As an industry it has never been fully recognized, even though it was originally the staple industry in the Canadian economy.

For example, I can go back to the 15th century, when the original settlers from Europe came to what is now Canada in 1497 and exploited the fishery. I am sure the minister has become familiar with all the stories that have been told about this since he became minister. For example, he probably knows how they used these great baskets—unsubsidized baskets, by the way—put rocks in them, threw them overboard and then dragged them up full to overflowing with fish. In fact, fish were so plentiful that they rolled ashore on the beaches.

Cod are far from plentiful at the moment, though occasionally we do get hake on the shore. However, during the last 20 years or so there has been a tremendous decline in the fishing resources of the Atlantic. The minister is in his seat, and I presume he is listening to the debate, so must be aware that what I am saying is a fact. On Georges Bank the fishery is all but eliminated. On the Hamilton Inlet banks the Russians were responsible in 1968 for taking a quarter of a billion pounds of fish. I think that is the correct statistic, but certainly over a billion pounds of fish have been taken from the Hamilton Inlet banks. These are the spawning grounds of the Labrador fishery, which at one time was a major industry.

There was a time when thousands of men would sail down the coast of Labrador and set up residences somewhere for a few weeks or months in the summer to reap a great harvest of cod that was swimming along the shores and which populated the bays and inlets of Labrador. But during the last few years not only Russia and other countries, but Canada as well, have declared war on the fishing grounds on the Hamilton Inlet banks 250 miles east of the Labrador shore. As a result, we have seen the almost complete destruction—no, I submit the complete destruction—of the Labrador fishery, thus affecting the livelihoods of thousands of Canadians.

Let me put on the record once again the amount of fish that has been taken off the Hamilton Inlet banks off the Labrador coast. These fish would be sufficient to keep the largest plant in my riding going full blast at its present capacity and employment rate for 100 years. This particular plant, which is situated at Twillingate, Newfoundland, employs something of the order of 350 people during the peak period.

Even in spite of the tremendous exploitation of the fishery that has taken place, it is not too late for the Canadian government to ensure that end marine resources provide one of the major economic thrusts of this country. The fishery could be a top priority and the government should give it almost special status in terms of setting priorities for Canada. It should be given special status when it comes to negotiating a good deal with other countries for the Canadian fishery and conservation and management measures. Certainly, this is what I should like the Canadian government to do. It is what all Canadians would like, whether from British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or the Gaspé. Incidentally, I am waiting for my hon. friend from Gaspé, for whom I have a tremendous amount of respect, to make his position on this issue clear. We want the fishery given as much status as possible.

The amendment moved by my colleague from St. John's East seeks to give the fishery some of the status it deserves. I submit that eliminating the office of minister of fisheries is a retrograde step that will have a debilitating effect on our attitude to the fishery, which in turn will result in the downgrading of the role of the fishery in Canada.

I hope that when I continue my remarks this evening the government will see fit to accept this very simple amendment that has been moved with the best interests of the fishing industry at heart, and with that, Mr. Chairman, I call it five o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Information Canada—representations from publishers of original Canadian books respecting assistance; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Labour Conditions—Unemployment—immediate amendment of Unemployment Insurance Act in view of increase in fund—increase in federal share of welfare costs; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Agriculture—Consolidation of farms—preservation of family farms.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT AND THE INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OFF-STORE INSTALMENT SALES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved that Bill C-22, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act and the Interest Act (off-store instalment sales) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill which I sponsor today involves a principle which was the subject of a bill enacted in 1962 by the Conservative government in the United Kingdom. That bill was entitled "An Act to amend the law relating to hire-purchase and sales on credit of goods; and for purposes connected therewith". The purpose of this bill is to protect the Canadian consumer when he or she is approached in his or her home and is pressured into signing a contract for goods, services, labour or materials that are to be paid for by the consumer in future instalments. The principle of the bill is to afford the consumer a period for sober second thought.

I am sure there is not a Member of Parliament here who has not heard, either directly from one of his constituents or read in a newspaper publication, of the case of a high pressure salesman calling at the door, meeting a housewife or an individual living at the house who is retired or is on pension, and giving a high pressure sales talk resulting in the signing of a contract which obligates the person to purchase something like aluminum siding for his house, aluminum windows, the encyclopaedia Britannica or some other type of magazine.

The salesman very often creates the impression that this so-called service or product will be provided to the person to whom the sales pitch is being made at a very small cost; if not at a small total cost, at a small weekly or monthly cost. Very often people are charged substantially more than they might have paid if they had purchased the articles or the service in the regular way from a reputable place of business. Often they are lead to believe they will be given or provided with magazines, encyclopaedia or other items at little or no cost. Subsequently, they find to their horror that they have really obligated themselves to a contract for purchase. They often find they have agreed to purchase a large amount of aluminum siding for their house, which could amount to $1,000 or $2,000, or aluminum windows, which could run into hundreds of dollars, or a set of encyclopaedia which could cost $100 or $200, or even more. I might add that most people find little or no use for these books, magazines and other articles they become obligated to purchase at a cost of between $20 and $50 in interest on the contract.

Since I raised this matter first before the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate, which was looking into consumer credit, a number of individuals have dealt with the matter, and several provinces have initiated legislation patterned upon the bill originally passed in Great Britain. It is not surprising that provinces have done this because such contracts, about which I have been talking, involve property or civil rights which fall under provincial jurisdiction. These matters also involve the Bills of Exchange Act which is a federal measure.

I propose to deal with the problem under the heading: "provincial legislation", which has been passed and which is excellent, but varies from province to province. A number of provinces such as Manitoba and Ontario have such legislation. Some provinces, such as Quebec, are considering the passage of such legislation. A number of provinces do not have this type of legislation, but even those provinces have passed legislation containing provisions for the protection of consumers.

The amendment which I propose to the Bills of Exchange Act would give the consumer three full days to cancel any bill of exchange or promissory note given as collateral or security. It provides that if the bill or note has not been negotiated meanwhile to an innocent third party, the individual has no further liability.

The bill provides that if a third party has been involved, the responsibility of the person who originally signed the contract is limited. The kind of protection I have been referring to is not at all unusual; in fact it is very common. The Toronto Telegram of last week, February 12, in its regular feature called "The Action Line", in which letters are directed to Frank Drea, contained a half dozen examples of the sharp practice to which I am referring. Let me put on record a couple of examples which were printed in the "Action Line" column in the Toronto Telegram of February 12, 1971. The first reads:

> I need help. For some time now, I have been receiving magazines in the mail when I did not order or pay for them. I have returned them to the sender. In the mail today, I received three magazines.
> I also received a notice from Trail Collection Agency saying that it had been retained by Civic Reading Club to collect $19.70 from me. That notice said previous attempts to notify me that I was a delinquent had been ignored. How can there be an account when I returned the magazines immediately.
> I am a pensioner and have neither the means nor the desire for their magazines, (one that was sent was True). Now I have had a phone call and the lady asked for money. I told her I always returned the magazines with a note to say I did not want any more.

Mr. Drea, with the co-operation of the Consumer Protection Bureau of Ontario, had the contract cancelled. Let me read another letter:

> My husband signed a piece of paper for seven magazines from Civic Reading Club. I phoned this company as soon as I got home from work. I didn't want these magazines. I told them I wouldn't accept them.
> My husband does not read or write. He can write his name on a cheque and a few other things. But he can't read a letter or a contract. I tried to tell them this. In fact, the company provided the down payment of $5.90.
> Now, they expect me to pay $5.90 a month for the next two years. I don't read these magazines and I hardly get time to read the paper. I refuse to accept these magazines. I have to send back Look, Maclean's, Rod and Gun, Atlantic, Field and Stream, Argosy and one that I can't remember. Please do something.

Again, "Action Line" went to work with the Consumer Protection Bureau of Ontario and got the contract withdrawn. A look at the list of magazines to which this lady from Oshawa refers is an indication of how ridiculous the whole situation is. Individually, these are good magazines. I submit, however, that very few, if any, people would be interested in reading not just that many magazines but that spectrum of magazines. Field and Stream and Rod and Gun are magazines for people interested in fishing and hunting. Then, there is Argosy. I have not looked at it recently but as I remember it is a man's magazine; it is an adventure type magazine. Look magazine is a good magazine composed of articles and photographs. Maclean's magazine is a good Canadian magazine and Atlantic is a pretty high-class, high-brow, United States magazine. These are all good magazines, but I submit again that there would be very few people who would knowingly buy all these magazines.

What happened was precisely what this woman said in her letter. A very sharp, aggressive, knowledgeable salesman, interested in the very high commission he receives on each sale, made a very hard pitch to an old man who could neither read nor write and could hardly sign his name to a cheque. This man signed a contract in which he agreed to pay $5.90 a month for two years, making a total of something in the neighbourhood of $140 a year. I suggest to members of the House that what we have here, to say the least, is a very sharp practice. If it is not illegal under our laws, it certainly is an immoral practice. What I propose in my bill is that we provide, through a federal statute, the same kind of law a number of provinces have so that the consumer will have the type of protection he needs and to which he is entitled. Then, he will not be subjected to the kind of sharp practices which unfortunately are all too prevalent in this country. I do not think any legitimate businessman, retailer or company selling from door to door is involved.

My bill is not intended to be a blanket criticism of door-to-door selling. There is a very legitimate role to be played by business which sell from door-to-door. I have no objection to door-to-door selling. It is not the purpose of my bill to prohibit door-to-door selling or, indeed, to inhibit it where it is done in a legitimate way.

What this bill proposes, and I hope members of the House will support it, is that people who make purchases off premises, in other words people who make purchases not in a store but rather at home, will be given a period of three days in which to think about the purchase they have made and the obligation they have undertaken. In this way, they would have an opportunity to consult members of their family or friends who are more knowledgeable about business matters. Then, if they should feel they really did not wish to make the purchase, the contract could be voided by notifying the selling agency. I believe the fact that a number of provinces have already passed similar legislation is an indication that such legislation is useful in controlling the over exuberant selling which is sometimes practised. I believe this legislation is both worthwhile and necessary, and I hope members of the House will support this bill.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with this bill in a favourable light, although I believe it really touches the tip of the iceberg. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) outlined some of the complaints of citizens of Toronto as reported in a Toronto newspaper. I recall having been involved in business, not door-to-door although I was familiar with this type of selling, when we had the example of the water softener. This was an example of a confidence racket. The whole production and the presentation was drawn up in Boston, Massachusetts, by three psychiatrists. The presentation was so beautifully outlined that it would sell the water softener to anyone. I recall the training the salesmen received. I am speaking of a product which is in fairly frequent use at the present time.

The salesmen were trained to use the visual presentation, fear, and every conceivable apprehension to which a future customer could be subjected. When one looks into the facts, one finds that one would have to drink about 82,000 gallons of water a day in order to harm his health if the water were hard. Very few people could take in that much liquid. If a pot were used for 27½ years it would accumulate minerals to the extent that it could not be used, and a 79 cent pot would have to be thrown away. People today are purchasing water softeners at prices ranging between $400 and $1,400 strictly because of this door-to-door selling. The purchasers have every opportunity to break the contract but do not do so.

As I say, door-to-door selling is only the tip of the problem we really have here. The hon. member has pointed to the Bills of Exchange Act, which we control federally and which could have a great bearing on the conduct of business and consumer credit in general. I take it that the bill proposed by the hon. member would not take effect after delivery of the goods, but only before the goods have been delivered could the contract be cancelled. I take it also there would be a time limit in respect of when the notice should be sent. As the hon. member is aware, the salesman could predate the contract and provide witnesses to establish that the contract had been entered into on the specified date. So, it would be almost impossible to make this work.

As I have stated, the tip of the iceberg is there but the real issue is what we do in respect of consumer credit because that is really what we are talking about. We are talking about salesmen in and out of stores who tell a customer to buy the best merchandise, not to worry about the price, pay nothing down and eventually somehow it will work out. In Canada, there is approximately $13 billion outstanding in consumer credit. Since approximately 30 per cent of the families in Canada do not use consumer credit, according to my calculation the remaining families are each indebted to an average of approximately $3,700. The interest on that sum alone is upwards of $700. Yet, DBS tells us the disposable income of an average family is about $500. What we are doing in fact is becoming more deeply involved in consumer credit to the point that it is inconceivable the indebtedness will ever be repaid; it is impossible.

At one time, I was in discussion with a man fairly knowledgeable in finance who said "you may be right that this consumer debt can never be repaid. You are not only right, but it should not be repaid. Let us suppose that only 50 per cent of the people now obligated to pay money decide to pay the interest and principal and never to borrow again. The result would be that 75 per cent of our nation could not buy T.V. sets, clothing or furniture, and we would be in a depression the like of which the world has never seen." So here we are, stuck with a system which we ourselves have allowed and into which we are entering deeper and deeper. The result is that 18 per cent to 20 per cent interest now has to cover not only the interest but supposedly the principal as well. In other words, industry has acknowledged that this principal will never be paid back and that, therefore, they have to settle for the interest alone.

Why is this consumer credit so prolific, and why do people buy? I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that consumer credit is really promoted by industry, by people who manufacture the goods, but it is not promoted with any discretion. Industry does not say to a viewer of television or a reader of advertising in the newspaper that if your earnings are $14,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 a year you should buy this new car. Industry does not say "Be careful, do not go over your limit". There is absolutely no discretion, and industry promotes indiscriminately the purchase of a product, whether or not the purchaser is able to afford that product. However, the money is often collected through the courts. This is not done merely by an action in court, but rather by using many devious means.

For example, if there is a collection department within the finance company they will ask for a payment several times, following which they will telephone the employer and suggest that the debtor is far behind with his payments; that he is really not responsible. Then, they suggest that there may be a lien. The employer then finds a defence by telling his employee "get it straightened away or you will be out of a job. I will not bother with this type of thing". That is one way in which they act. If they do not succeed that way, they go to the court. They use the whole majesty of our courts to collect a debt which they themselves have promoted.

But I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of the original Bills of Exchange Act was not consumer credit. The act was introduced a long time ago for commercial credit for businessmen. It was introduced so that commerce could be conducted, so that in due course the holder of a note, a cheque, a conditional sale agreement, a bill of lading or a bill of exchange, would have a reliable document on which to collect his debt. At that time no one had heard of consumer credit, and if they had, the government would have automatically excluded the consumer purchaser from this act. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for Winnipeg North that the Bills of Exchange Act does not apply to any type of bill, note or document for consumer credit. We should eliminate completely the provisions of this act, and the great body of law based on this act, which permit finance companies to use the courts. We should say to them that they cannot use the courts to collect their money but rather they should use promotion. If they promoted the borrowing of that money, they should use the same promotion to get it back, or alternatively, be careful how they lend their money.

I think that consumer credit would still be granted, but this step would save us the fantastic cost with which each province is burdened and would take a lot of pressure off the courts. However, most important, I think that if this industry—which claims to be an industry, but at one time these people were called usurers—wants the goodies at the end it should also have the responsibility to ensure that all their sales and promotion are geared to the ability of the customer to pay. Then, society would not be burdened with the costs of collection.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, could I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Otto: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member stated a while ago that the bill was quite sensible and that he regretted having to discuss the matter. Could he tell us why, if the bill is so satisfactory, he does not hasten its passage?

[English]

Mr. Otto: I am all in favour of it. I cut my remarks short, so that the bill could carry now.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the speeches of my colleagues on Bill C-22 introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and upon reading the first paragraph of the explanatory notes, I realized that this bill is not only extremely important, but that it is designed to alleviate the problems facing Canadian consumers today.

Mr. Speaker, when one considers that Canadians as a whole owe more than 10 billion, whether in consumer credit or in loans of all kinds granted to individuals, that is an indication of the frightening indebtedness of Canadians, which the government does nothing at all to curb. That shows also the importance of the matter which interests the hon. member for Winnipeg North, namely the protection of the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote from the bill:

> The purpose of this bill is to protect the Canadian consumer when he or she is approached in his home or other "off-store" premises and is pressured into signing a contract for goods, services, or work, labour and materials that are to be paid for by the consumer in future instalments. The principle of the bill is to afford the consumer a period for "sober second thought"— —before getting involved in those gimmicks which will contribute to ruin him financially.

Mr. Speaker, recently, in Victoriaville, I saw several of my fellow citizens being submitted to pressure from aggressive salesmen who greatly annoyed the people. I even noticed in one case that some salesmen went to the homes of my fellow citizens and told them: We shall get you a product of such quality. Their sales pitch was the most convincing speech.

But, and that is the snag, those salesmen, even though they did not represent a bad company nor did they offer a bad product, claimed that the purchase of the goods could be financed with a loan from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at an interest rate of 4½ or 5 per cent.

Now, when one knows the current interest rate charged by CMHC and other credit sources, this claim becomes really extraordinary and my fellow-citizens, at that moment, have absolutely no way of obtaining information of the transaction.

It is well known that such salesmen say: Do this now, do not miss your chance? And people do not want to miss their chance; they need a certain product and they are swayed by certain arguments. And it is precisely those arguments that make them fall into the trap.

Consumer credit amounts to more than $10 billion. This is how the individual runs into debt. It shows how important is the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and how the House should readily support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, these pressure salesmen have two advantages: first, professional sales training and then, the ignorance of people on which they rely. Not that people are really ignorant and have no good sense, but they lack objective and full information. These salesmen speculate on the advantage of speed and swiftness and try to corner citizens into a position where they have no other choice but to sign the contract. At that time, it is certainly not a well considered purchase.

This is why, on the whole, this bill aims at automatically affording the consumer a period for "sober second thought" during which he will be able to seek advice from consultants, specialists, friends in order to take the wisest decision.

One cannot assuredly blame the advertisers of these products because sales methods are directed towards the use of pressure. But, when the two contribute to make Canadians run further into debt, in view of the appalling economic conditions that exist at this time, it is all the more important for the Canadian government to protect the consumers.

That is why I readily join with my colleagues in supporting Bill C-22 and I want to congratulate the sponsor of this bill.

In conclusion I simply say that when one sees the way Canadians are running into debt and considers the economic conditions that prevail at this time in Canada, one finds that the government has long been concentrating its efforts on production and protection of producers through fiscal policies and so on. The government protects producers, but does nothing for the consumers. A board for the protection of consumers has been set up, but it is just a joke. Things remained as they were and complaints directed to that board are dealt with ever so slowly. In fact you would have to wait ten years before a complaint is investigated by that board as red tape has the effect of burrying officials under tons of paper, which does not make for efficiency at all.

That is why it seems important to me that we pass legislation in this field, especially with regard to that economic problem and to the fact that Canadians are indebted for more than 10 billion dollars. It seems to me that in such a situation the government has to protect consumers against all these means used to squeeze money out of them.

That is why we shall support Bill C-22 and we hope that it will be passed as soon as possible.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, since pre-confederation itinerant sellers have performed a very real service to the Canadian housewife. This has been particularly true in rural areas, where the periodic visits of the man selling spices, thread, brushes or other household articles were social occasions and a great purchasing convenience. I remember my own experience as a boy visiting my grandparents on the Prairies. I know how it was when itinerant salesmen came with their horsedrawn vehicles and later on with their automobiles and trucks.

In the early days, the salesmen were usually small-scale merchants without any ties to large suppliers. Gradually, however, a number of companies saw opportunities for expansion in this field of endeavour and some of the enterprises which developed became very large and profitable. Many of these companies also acquired a high reputation for the quality of their products and the probity of their salesmen. There was always a small representation of rascals, however, who were overendowed with persuasive ability but not heavily burdened by conscience.

Mr. McGrath: Carpetbaggers.

Mr. Penner: These people regarded the farmers and housewives as fair game. The lightning-rod salesman of another day usually had the gift of the gab and it was said that he could sell lightning-rods to people who had never heard thunder. In more recent times these unscrupulous individuals have concentrated on more obvious symbols of affluence such as aluminum siding, encyclopedias, freezer plans, fire alarms, vacuum cleaners, correspondence courses and an amazing variety of get-rich-quick schemes.

Purchases of this type normally involve large expenditures and it was not long before some of the disreputable operators in the field of intinerant selling discovered the convenience of conditional sales contracts and promissory notes. It was typical of the shady operators to sell the promissory note as quickly as possible to a finance company or other financial institution which would normally acquire the status of a holder in due course. This meant that the purchaser was obliged to pay the holder of the promissory note even though the original transaction may have turned out to be completely unsatisfactory.

I have here an account of an actual case which illustrates the problem. It concerns an elderly lady who was crippled and living with her disabled husband on a small pension. A salesman called to try to sell them a mattress. She said the salesman was very nice and acted as if he were sincerely interested in helping her because it was apparent that she was crippled. The lady told the man that she did not need a mattress but had been thinking about getting a rug, which he said he could get for her with no difficulty. She had been prepared to pay $125, but after she had signed papers which the "nice" salesman offered she discovered that she would be paying $300, plus $30 down, plus a $10 delivery charge.

She realized she had made an error but felt there was nothing she could do about it because she had signed a contract. When Christmas and New Year came and she had no rug, she tried to cancel the order but was told this was impossible. The outcome of it was that she did not receive her rug and a finance company was trying to garnishee her husband's income for the amount of $300.

This kind of scandalous behaviour has, naturally, provoked a good deal of dissatisfaction and there has been increasing legislative action in recent years in providing a so-called cooling off period for transactions conducted by door to door salesmen. This whole matter was looked at in considerable detail by the Molony committee in Great Britain in 1962, which received a good many complaints on the subject. The committee reported that the activities of door to door salesmen provoked greater wrath and indignation among the witnesses than any other subject. As a result of this, the Molony committee recommended a change in the law which would permit a purchaser to withdraw from a so-called "doorstep sale" within 72 hours. The British Parliament accepted the principle and it was incorporated in the Hire Purchase Act in 1964 and 1965. Specifically, the British act allows the purchaser four days from the receipt of a notice to advise the seller that he has rescinded the agreement.

In the United States, statutes providing the right to cancel were passed in Pennsylvania and Michigan, but they were limited to contracts dealing with home improvements, a field which has been the focus of a good deal of fraudulent activity. About five years ago proposals for cooling off provisions of a more general sort began to appear and a number of statutes now provide for the cancellation of itinerant sales contracts. This issue was dealt with in the Uniform Consumer Credit Code which was drawn up by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Law.

In the final draft of this code, dated 1968, there is a recommendation that any buyer should have the right to cancel what they describe as a "home solicitation sale" until midnight of the third business day after the day on which the buyer signed the contract. The most recent development in the States has been the issuance of a proposed rule by the Federal Trade Commission which would impose a cooling off period quite generally. The brief presented to that commission specifically indicated that there was a need for a broad type of cooling off period to help citizens of that country.

Although I have been talking about developments in Great Britain and the United States it should not be taken to mean that the problem has not been dealt with in Canada as well. Since the passage of the first consumer protection bill in Nova Scotia in 1967, there has been a general adoption of similar legislation in all but one of the Canadian provinces. The province of Quebec has not yet passed its consumer protection act; it is currently before the committee of the Quebec Assembly and is known as Bill 45.

It is provided in all the provincial legislation of this type that doorstep contracts can be cancelled within a specific period. The period is not uniform in all provinces. Ontario provides two days while British Columbia provides three days. The three prairie provinces specify four days. Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia specify a five-day period, while Prince Edward Island allows seven days and Newfoundland ten days. These longer periods are a recognition of the fact that some people in the Atlantic provinces may be away from home for a longer period. There is, therefore, some extension of what is known as the "decompression period", a phrase used to describe the period after the signing of the contract when the intensity of the consumer's desire drops rapidly. This is sometimes a period for hand-wringing and sober second thought.

It is undoubtedly true that high-pressure selling techniques are used in stores as well as in the home, and there may well be many occasions when individuals find they have been mesmerized into concluding a contractual arrangement which they subsequently realized was unwise. The legislation which has been passed in this field in other countries and in the various provinces does make a distinction between these two methods of doing business. It is evidently the view that the need for protection is not as great in the case of persons who go to stores or visit showrooms because their interest in the articles on display is self-inspired.

It should also be pointed out that nearly all the provinces provide additional protection against unscrupulous, itinerant sellers apart from the cooling off period. It is generally the case in the Canadian provinces that door to door salesmen are required to be licensed by provincial bodies. In some cases there are also bonding requirements. This means that any sellers who generate complaints from consumers render themselves liable to investigation by the provincial authorities. This could in some cases lead to the cancellation of their licences.

Since door to door selling usually falls under the law of contracts it is primarily a matter under the jurisdiction of the provinces. It should be emphasized, however, that the federal government has taken definitive steps to eliminate certain types of abuses in this general field. There was a path-breaking amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act which became law on November 1, 1970, which changes the law governing promissory notes used in consumer purchases in a way which protects consumers generally. The amendment, of course, applies to any promissory note or similar instrument that is used in a consumer credit transaction.

The amendment is designed to stop abuses of promissory notes by unscrupulous or irresponsible sellers. Consumers who buy on credit often sign promissory notes attached to sales contracts without understanding that the promissory note will be sold to a third party such as a sales finance company. In most cases a third party holder of a promissory note can legally enforce payment of the note even if the seller of the goods does not live up to his part of the contract. This can lead to severe injustice when a seller has gone bankrupt, skipped out, broken a warranty or service agreement or has otherwise failed to perform his part of the contract. It has been possible for the so-called "holder in due course" of a promissory note to insist on payment when the goods bought by the consumer were not even delivered.

The amendment has two main provisions. The first is that all promissory notes given by consumers under sales contracts must be marked "consumer purchase" on their face. The second is that consumers will for the first time be able to offer as a defence, in case of suit for non-payment, the fact that the original seller did not fulfil his part of the bargain. This means that sales finance companies and others buying promissory notes will have to be careful that the sellers they buy them from are not engaged in any fraudulent or shady activity. The new rules will also apply to cheques which are postdated more than 30 days. This has been done to prevent any evasion of the intent of the amendment by substituting postdated cheques or other types of bills of exchange for promissory notes.

Promissory notes were originally used in transactions between merchants or businessmen who understood fully the nature of promissory notes. In more recent years, the widespread use of such notes in consumer credit sales has meant that often they have been signed by people who have not realized their unconditional obligation to pay. Fast talking and fly-by-night operators, interested in getting the signature of the consumer, neglect to explain the "holder in due course" aspect of the Bills of Exchange Act.

The change in the law follows recommendations made by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit, the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Consumer Council, provincial authorities responsible for consumer credit legislation and various experts on consumer law. It is a sad fact that legislation is not the sole answer to the kind of problem we are dealing with. It is also essential for individual consumers to behave in a prudent fashion. There are myriad warnings about the pitfalls of signing contracts with charming but unknown peddlers. The skill of certain salesmen in persuading people to sign documents is remarkable, and the point must be hammered home that care and time should be taken before a major purchase is made. It is often quite easy to make inquiries through friends, relatives, lawyers or others concerning the credentials of the sellers and the quality of their products.

There would be much less weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth if people would learn to resist the blandishments of the fast-talking salesman who is in a rush to have the deal concluded. It would be a great deal easier for all concerned if people would reflect on some of their plans and consider them in the cold light of early morning long after the salesman has gone, before signing some allegedly innocuous paper. Until people learn to be wary of glowing promises and claims of magic performance, they will involve themselves in difficulties. It is true that the assortment of consumer protection laws which we now have may permit them to escape serious financial harm if there is chicanery involved, but it would be simpler all around if consumers would exercise a reasonable degree of prudence and caution.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to number myself among those who have praised the basic principle of the legislation or at least the spirit behind it. I have some misgivings about its workability and constitutionality about which I will speak later. Others have spoken of a cooling off period of three days in the signing of door to door contracts. I am sure no one disagrees with this sound idea.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) is in the chamber. In line with her avid interest in family planning, it would be remarkable if the hon. member could come up with a three-day cooling off period for that sort of thing, something which would operate retroactively in the same way as the legislation now before us.

Mr. Orlikow: Find a way and we will support you.

Mr. Jerome: If you could find a way, I would support you. A three-day retroactive pill would be a big seller. I would like to be among those who had the patent on it, as well as the patent on legislation with the spirit of this bill.

Provincial jurisdictions have gone a long way on this road. I realize that the hon. member has introduced this legislation because only some of the provinces have taken the necessary steps. This brings me to the main reason for participating in the debate. If the spirit of this legislation is to be effective, we will be dealing with what is primarily provincial responsibility. I do not doubt that the spirit of the legislation now before us is a circuitous way of accomplishing a praiseworthy objective. If this is to be accomplished, the legislation must apply to all provinces. By dealing with amendments to the Interest Act and the Bills of Exchange Act, the hon. member is attempting to get at the law of contracts and at the root of contracts dealing with property and civil rights. This, of course, is fundamentally and essentially a provincial responsibility.

Mr. Penner: Will the parliamentary secretary permit a question?

Mr. Jerome: Certainly.

Mr. Penner: I am interested in the remarks he is making. Could the parliamentary secretary say from his own knowledge whether Bill C-22, if enacted, would give the consumer any real protection in addition to that now provided by the provinces in their legislation which allows for a cooling off period? The only exception is the province of Quebec which has not yet passed a bill of this type. It is now before a committee of their Assembly. Could the parliamentary secretary indicate whether any real, additional protection would be given to the consumer by this bill?

Mr. Jerome: My opinion on that is in the negative, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it is only a personal opinion. A question like that could be better answered at another time by experts in the constitutional and contract fields. The hon. member who sponsored the bill may want to comment on that matter at another time. In my opinion, the protection extended by this bill is no stronger than the basic protection under the Ontario legislation. This is actually a provincial responsibility. In the province of Ontario the legislation allows for a cooling-off period. What the hon. member is attempting to accomplish by this legislation has already been accomplished.

The intention of the legislation dealing with bills of exchange is to get away from the "holder in due course" aspect of the matter, which is the most infamous and odious. A holder in due course under a promissory note can pursue collection of the note regardless of the good faith or purpose of the original vendor. It has always been an extremely odious situation. Steps to correct the situation have already been taken by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. The time allotted for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Richard in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. When the committee rose at five o'clock an amendment to clause 2, moved by the hon. member for St. John's East, was under consideration.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, first I must congratulate the committee for arriving at a quorum so early this evening. Before the debate was interrupted at five o'clock we were talking about an amendment by my hon. friend from St. John's East regarding the need to reinstate in the bill now before the committee, the government reorganization bill in the name of the right honourable, esteemed and distinguished Prime Minister of Canada, a title which would give fisheries at least the status which it deserves as a priority economic issue in the Canadian nation. In presenting our amendment we have tried to show the importance of marine resources to this nation. When we say "marine resources" perhaps we ought to indicate what that phrase means in terms of the Canadian economy. We are not referring to the need for a minister to protect the cod fishing industry.

We are not referring to the need for a ministry or a fisheries department to protect flatfish or the groundfish industry. We are referring to the need for a spokesman in the House of Commons for everything to do with marine resources.

Most nations of the world, including the Soviet Union, the western European nations, the Scandinavian countries and the Iberian nations recognize marine resources as one of the last great frontiers in the development of their countries. Until the introduction of Bill C-207 we had a fisheries department in Canada which, though lacking in initiative, lacking in spark, in ingenuity and aggression, occupied some kind of prestigious position because the representative of the fisheries department did sit on the front bench and could assume responsibility for answering for the Canadian fishing industry.

It has been our contention that it is necessary for Canada to increase the prestige and the importance of the Department of Fisheries. We do not propose this on a sentimental basis. It is not my intention as a Canadian parliamentarian and as a representative of a fishing constituency, by and large, to argue that we should have a Department of Fisheries which occupies a top-level role in the Canadian government, on the basis of sentiment or simply to see our east coast and west coast marine areas recognized. It is primarily a consideration based on the fact that marine resources occupy a strategic position in the economy.

My hon. friend from South Shore, who moved an amendment in recent days, suggested that we should first reinstitute the Department of Fisheries and keep it as a unique and distinct department. Failing the acceptance of that recommendation we moved an amendment asking that there be a fully-fledged Deputy Minister of Fisheries who could assume the full role of a deputy minister answerable to the House of Commons. That proposal was defeated. I cannot recall exactly how the vote went but I do recall that every supporter of the government voted against the motion. This was unacceptable to the Canadian fishing industry. It was unacceptable to Canadian fishermen. It was an unbelievable response from the "just" Prime Minister of Canada who promised to eliminate regional disparity—and I am talking about the four Atlantic provinces, the eastern part of Quebec and British Columbia.

My hon. friend from St. John's East has moved an amendment which is very simple. It suggests that instead of having a department of the environment under which we have subsumed a number of branches, one of which is fisheries, another of which is ecology, the environment, everything to do with pollution—including the effluent produced by pulp and paper plants and the mercury effluent from various industries, and so on—we have a Fisheries Department which is recognized in the total title. It is suggested that we have a department of fisheries and the environment. I cannot imagine that the government of this nation will not accede to this very simple request that fisheries at least be placed in a recognized position in the Canadian economy.

An hon. Member: What about wheat?

Mr. Lundrigan: Back in 1957 we had a Department of Fisheries. Someone told me today that the Department of Fisheries gained its true status in 1932 after decades of talk, contemplation and activity by interested people in Canada. Perhaps we might have watered down the issue a little when talking about a Department of Fisheries and Foresty, but now we are taking steps completely to eliminate the Department of Fisheries and to set up a department of the environment which will have to do with all kinds of pollution including, I suppose, pollution caused by thermometer breakage. Last evening on national television I heard a report about so many pounds of mercury being released into the atmosphere as a result of the millions of thermometers which become broken during the course of a year.

I see the President of the Treasury Board, who holds the pursestrings, looking at me, and my hon. friend who spoke about pollution yesterday in Vancouver and wants part of the action is also in the chamber. Hopefully, these esteemed and honourable gentlemen have come into the committee to take part in the debate, and we have no objection to that. Everything having to do with the environment and the quality of life should occupy top priority in government circles today.

If we relegate the fisheries department to the third-grade level, if instead of having a fully-fledged Deputy Minister of Fisheries we are to have an acting deputy minister away down the line who once in a while, when he can get an appointment, is able to talk to the minister, then we should at least have a department of fisheries and the environment. The government cannot argue that this would be confusing or cumbersome because we already have multiple departments, such as the department of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who also looks after the Wheat Board, or I could refer to the present Department of Fisheries and Forestry.

We suggest that this would be a legitimate reason for accepting our amendment. It would give the fisheries department the prestige that it deserves in the Canadian nation as well as the prestige it deserves internationally. When we meet the various countries of the world in 1971 and in years to come we must speak as a nation that exemplifies and demonstrates great concern for the fishing industry of this country.

If the government cannot accept the amendment and demonstrate to the Canadian people in the Atlantic region, in Quebec and in British Columbia that it is concerned about the fisheries, then my recommendation to the Prime Minister, this right honourable, eminent, omnipotent gentleman, is that we renege our commitment to send candidates to these areas in the next election on the ground that we are not interested in the economy or the future of their people because we want to eliminate the fishery as an industry.

I notice that the Chair is getting a little anxious to get the amendment through, so perhaps the minister would get the floor and give the committee an indication that the government will accept the amendment. We could soothe present feelings in the House of Commons and shortcircuit a good deal of debate if the Minister of Fisheries, who could not attend a great economic conference in Newfoundland a few days ago because of his commitment to this bill, were willing to indicate the government's acceptance of the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's East, which provides that the new department be called the department of fisheries and the environment. If he were willing to accept the amendment we would be quite agreeable to allowing the vote to take place and—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. The hon. member's time expired some time ago.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps the minister would like to indicate his position on this amendment.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I feel impelled as a former Minister of Fisheries to say a few words about this amendment. I do so because I feel that the Department of Fisheries is not only an historic one but has been a very important department of government. There was a period when it included what are now some of the responsibilities of the Department of Transport. This was in the days when it was known as the Department of the Marine and Fisheries. It then became the Department of Fisheries and was responsible for the fisheries and nothing else. Subsequently it became the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. This old, historic department is now to disappear as a name from the departments of government.

I think this is unfortunate, not only because the commercial fishery is very important economically for Canada but also because the Canadian Department of Fisheries has rightly acquired a world wide reputation for capability, competence and efficiency. Furthermore, in a day when such matters as pollution and environmental control had little public interest, the Department of Fisheries as such, I think more than any other department of government, pioneered in the field of pollution control. The Department of Fisheries did much in the way of preventing pollution of our fish streams and the dumping of pollutants like mill waste, mine tailings and chemicals of various kinds into our water courses and lakes. The Department of Fisheries has a longer and more praiseworthy record of pollution control and environmental improvement than any other department of government.

Therefore, I think the government should reconsider its decision to call the proposed department simply the department of the environment and should agree to this very reasonable amendment which would set up a new department to be known as the department of fisheries and the environment. Or if the government has some other suggestion to make to the committee, I think we might be able to agree to it and in this way get on with the business of the House, having preserved an historic and important department. If that were so, then when ministers attend international conferences and deal with their opposite numbers from other countries they would be known as ministers of fisheries and the environment. It is true that very few countries have a department of fisheries as such. Many countries have departments of fisheries and agriculture, or fisheries and something else; but I suggest this is an important consideration that the government should not forget.

This is a field in which there is no hard and fast rule about what should come within the department and what it should be named. One could juggle the functions of departments endlessly and advance logical reasons for doing so in light of the current situation. We have had a lot of experience of this sort of thing during the last few years. Certain functions have been taken from one department and put into another from time to time. We have established such bodies as Information Canada and Statistics Canada. It seems to me that one of the reasons for these creations is the elimination of old, historic names such as the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, functions of government that have had the same name since confederation. I think it is unfortunate that we are losing some of this heritage. Sometimes I think this government is intent on innovation for the sake of innovation, change for the sake of change. If we wanted to do this I could make many suggestions. We could take the Department of Finance, part of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and part of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, put them under one minister and call it "unemployment Canada". We could do that if we wanted to be that ridiculous. I am serious about the suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That's no joke.

Mr. MacLean: It certainly is not. I am serious about this scrapping of the old, historical functions and names of departments which are well known not only to Canadians but throughout the world. I think we are losing something which we cannot replace through the creation of this new department with an entirely new name. I seriously recommend that the government reconsider its decision and include the word "fisheries" in the name of this new department.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the former Minister of Fisheries I found myself mentally referring to him as the hon. member for Queens. In that sense I might join him on this occasion by taking a small "c" conservative attitude toward certain things. Let me say a few words in support of the proposed amendment.

I, too, sentimentally reject the suggestion that the word "fisheries" should disappear from the title of a department of the Canadian government. I realize that the hon. member for Malpeque was not being merely sentimental when expressing his regret at the proposed disappearance of this name from a Canadian government department. Like the hon. member, I believe there is a series of valid reasons why there should be a Department of Fisheries in Canada. During the last two or three days I have attended a symposium on mercury pollution, under the auspices of the Royal Society of Canada, at the National Library. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say as a member of this House how proud I was of the contribution made to that symposium by the officers of the Department of Fisheries. They were a credit to that department, to this House and to Canada generally.

If it was not obvious to me before, I have realized in the last two days the very close relationship between Canadian fisheries resources and the state of the environment. One thing pointed out at that conference on mercury pollution—I should like to underline this as a member of the fisheries committee of this House—was that despite all the concern which has existed in recent months about the mercury content of fish, the officers of the department made it clear that fish products in Canada are relatively uncontaminated. There is no more input of mercury through the consumption of fish products than there is in the general range of food which Canadians consume.

The former minister has underlined my view that there are circumstances under which must be apparent both nationally and internationally that official voices are being raised in respect of the fisheries industry of Canada. When reflecting on the question raised by the amendment now before the House, it seems to me that in the international realm, if not domestically, it is important that it is known around the world that we have a fisheries department in Canada. It should also be known throughout the world that the Canadian government is responsible for the Canadian fishing industry. Canada is a signatory nation to many international fisheries treaties and conventions. I hope Canada will become increasingly involved in international negotiations leading to a more rational management of sea resources. For this reason I feel it is not merely a sentimental attachment that the preceding speaker and I express regret at the disappearance of this department which has been in existence since confederation. Consideration should be given to the retention of the word "fisheries" in the title of this department.

I think there is another reason of importance. We live close to another federal state where constitutional jurisdiction in respect of fisheries is different from ours. In the United States there are departments of fisheries in various states. The primary constitutional jurisdiction there, in respect of fisheries, rests with state governments. We also know that many provinces in Canada have fisheries departments. Unfortunately, the province from which I come has not in recent years seen fit to maintain a provincial department of fisheries. Nevertheless, it seems to me that if we abolish the title Department of Fisheries there may be a tendency on the part of people outside our borders who are interested in the development and administration of fisheries to direct their attention toward our provincial departments rather than to the federal government.

There are valid international reasons for the retention of the word "fisheries" in the title of the new department. During earlier discussions I suggested we should have two deputy ministers. At that time it was my view that it was quite proper to establish a department of the environment, that this should be a matter of great importance to the government and that it should establish a department concerned with general environmental problems. There is this close and natural relationship between the two departments. I was not quarrelling with the idea that the minister who has been the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is to be the minister who will head this new department. I think that is generally accepted by all members of the House. I believe, however, this is one of those cases where the government would be well advised to accept the proposal put forward from this side in good faith and with a good deal of seriousness.

I recall that in an earlier discussion on the reorganization of various branches and functions of government a proposal was placed before this House which would have done away with what was a fairly historic name in respect of government departments, namely, Indian Affairs. I remember at that time the hon. member for Skeena and myself, among others, took up the question of doing away with the title Indian Affairs in a department of government. We suggested that the title Indian Affairs should be added to the name of the department. This idea was taken up on the government side, and rather to our surprise the name of the new department when finally adopted was not the Department of Northern Development and Indian Affairs but, rather, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This, in effect, placed the name that was to have been abolished at the top of the totem pole.

The amendment which has been moved would do nothing more than was done in respect of Indian Affairs. I think it is agreed that that was a worth-while move in view of the developments which have taken place among the Indian people of Canada since that time. I suggest that the question of the fisheries of Canada will be a matter of increasing, rather than decreasing importance and that it would be right and proper that this House recognize that fact by adopting the name proposed in the amendment as the title of this new department.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not see the minister rising. If he would indicate his acceptance of the amendment I would quickly sit down. However, I believe arguments could be made for recognition of this historic department in addition to those so eloquently advanced during the past few hours. I make no apology for presenting my arguments now. For one thing, within Halifax-East Hants there exists the swordfishing capital of the north Atlantic, in the fishing village of Sambro, and we know that the swordfishery is in serious straits at this time.

Let me remind the minister of a few other points. We are a country with one of the longest, if not the longest sea coast in the world and it seems very strange that we pay remarkably little attention to our marine heritage. I would bet that if anyone attempted to take the Department of Agriculture and change it into something else, there would be a huge outcry from at least one-third of the membership of the House of Commons. So I do not understand why those of us who represent the fishing communities of Canada, although we are smaller in number than those interested in agriculture, should not stand up and speak as loudly for our rights.

I ask myself why this step is being taken in this strange reorganization bill. I think the obvious answer is that this happened to be the one department of government which had the expertise, the people available and the laboratory facilities which would make such a change possible. So this time-honoured department is to be the victim of twentieth century whims and notions simply because it is progressive and well ahead of other departments. Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will yet realize that we on this side of the House want to retain the name "fisheries" within the scheme of things. We cannot do it tonight if we are beaten down in our attempts, but we can bring forward other motions on third reading. We can fight it and fight it again. I hope the minister realizes that.

Now, to say something kind about the minister, I suggest the strongest thing that is selling the idea that there should be a department of the environment and that fisheries as a department should be swept away is the personality of the minister. I say this without flattery but simply as recognition of a fact. Probably what has enabled the government and the insensitive technocracy that has drawn up most of this bill to get away with it is that they can see they have a very reasonable minister to sell as head of the new department. The fact is the minister is a quite reasonable fellow; he is very conscientious and we know he takes his responsibilities seriously. But that may not be true in respect of ministers over the next ten years as we go down the "pike" of this venture.

So I do not believe we should allow the minister's good name and reputation to be used in bringing about this change. We resist it on that account. We do not do so because we distrust the minister; indeed, the reverse is true. We do have trust in him. We know that he can make bad judgments like anyone else around here, but we also know that at least he will have given the matter his thoughtful attention. So we do not object on that ground but, rather, on the ground that we are dealing with institutions which will continue for a long time, and not necessarily with the people who will lead them in the near future.

Finally, I was very pleased to receive in the mail an invitation from the minister to attend one of the parliamentary functions wherein we whoop it up on a Wednesday evening instead of looking around for something to do. The minister has asked us out to have some fish with him tomorrow night, which I think is splendid. I am sure the fish will be done up in the best methods of the experts of the Department of Fisheries. As soon as I received the invitation, I answered and accepted it—but I do not know that I would have been so happy to accept it if it had had above it the fearsome name of "minister of the environment". However, I am prepared to go along with the Minister of Fisheries tomorrow night and eat his fish, but I would not be prepared to go along with the minister and his government and eat their environment.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, for about two or three minutes I would like to say why I support this amendment. I think it is logical for "environment" to be in the title of the Minister of Fisheries. I hope the minister will not be shy about this. After all, look at the long title of "minister of energy, mines, resources and technical surveys" as it will be in the future. It is a title almost as long as he is and I am. I think the "minister of fisheries and the environment" is a logical title. I for one, and I think many members of this House feel that he is a minister who means business regarding our environment and its treatment.

We feel the same about the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We feel that he, more than some of his colleagues, means business. In addition, we like the Minister of Fisheries; we think he is a decent fellow and that his intention is much more apparent in terms of action than that of some of his colleagues. I hope he will be able to persuade his colleagues, who have been sitting around him in a huddle, to accept this amendment. As I said, he is a decent fellow and we think he should have both fisheries and environment in his title. I would hate the minister to not have one of these titles. It might make him only a half-decent fellow. This reminds me of the fellow who after making a reservation on Canadian National got into his lower berth and found two ladies there. He said, "I am sorry, ladies, but one of you will have to leave: I am a half-decent fellow".

In more serious vein, I believe this amendment will be looked upon by the minister and his colleagues as setting out the proper designation for the department. Probably it is one of the few areas where these two designations could be combined. While there is no fishing fleet in Regina-Lake Centre, there is an environment and I would feel much more comfortable if this function were under the jurisdiction of the minister rather than some of his colleagues whom I could name but will not. I express my support for the amendment and for the remarks made by previous speakers.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation in rising to support this amendment and what it implies. I think that the title of "fisheries and the environment" is extremely appropriate. I take this opportunity to reiterate what the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants said about the present head of the Department of Fisheries. But, like him, I feel there may be a little trading on his fine reputation in order to bring about this change.

My interest in this matter is probably not as intense as that of some hon. members from the Maritimes and from the east and west coasts. But I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are many people from the lower Great Lakes who are affected by pollution as it affects the fishing industry. I deplore the efforts which are being made to downgrade this industry. The problem in the lower Great Lakes is common to both these departments. It is extremely necessary that we have a department to look after the environment and to clean up pollution, because pollution has already depressed the fishing industry. The situation of the fishing industry in the lower Great Lakes is desperate. This is all the more reason why the fishermen should have a department to which they can turn.

The situation in that area is fresh in my mind because only last night I was speaking by telephone to a fisherman from the central Erie area. He is extremely upset and I will tell the committee why. A scientist, an academic, an egghead—and we need them—suggested to this fisherman that it would be better for him if the government gave him some money and moved him. He suggested that they move this man to an inland lake where he could continue to fish. What the heck did he think the man was fishing from—a rowboat or a canoe? How in the name of Harry is a 75-foot tug to be moved to an inland lake?

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCutcheon: If you would like to make a speech, get to your feet.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please.

An hon. Member: Yes, that hon. member is always yacking.

Mr. McCutcheon: That is right. The point is that the Minister of Fisheries is a dedicated individual and we feel sure he will do an excellent job. However, as the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants stated, the present minister will not always hold that position and the next minister may have a different approach to the matter. The question is whether this is the first step in the fishing industry being phased out. Lord, I hope not! In 1968 there were $6,717,000 worth of fish marketed out of the province of Ontario. This is no small amount. As I see it, when the department is downgraded the fishing industry is indirectly also downgraded.

Efforts must be made to clean up pollution, otherwise we will not be able to save the industry. Therefore, I place a very high value on environmental clean-up but I place an equally high value on steps to improve the fishing industry. These aims are complementary; they should be given the emphasis that I have mentioned. With the downgrading of the fishing industry and the fisheries department I fear that we may be blinded by the environmental aspect. Environmental clean-up constitutes a tremendous problem, but we may miss placing sufficient emphasis on the maintenance and improvement of the fishing industry. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the committee will accept this most reasonable amendment.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, under this clause of the bill the committee is being asked to give the minister additional powers in the new department and to co-ordinate some of the responsibilities presently held by other departments of government. The duties, powers and functions of the minister of the environment will extend to and include all matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction. These include:

(a) sea coast and inland fisheries;

(b) renewable resources, including

(i) the forest resources of Canada,

(ii) migratory birds, and

(iii) other non domestic flora and fauna;

(c) water;

(d) meteorologist;

(e) the protection and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment, including water, air and soil quality;

(f) technical surveys within the meaning of the Resources and Technical Surveys Act relating to any matter described in paragraphs (a) to (e); and

(g) notwithstanding paragraph (f) of section 5 of the Department of National Health and Welfare Act—

Mr. Chairman, I point this out to indicate additional grounds for our concern. In addition to all these new responsibilities which the minister will acquire if Parliament passes this bill, he will have responsibility for matters which now come within his jurisdiction as Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. These are substantial. I think it is worth while to spell them out because they are very important. The minister now has, and will continue to have, responsibility for the following:

Coastal Fisheries Protection Act
Fish Inspection Act
Fisheries Act
Fisheries Development Act
Fisheries Prices Support Act
Fisheries Research Board Act
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention Act
Northern Pacific Fisheries Convention Act
Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery Convention Act
Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention Act
Pacific Fur Seals Convention Act
Pacific Salmon Fisheries Convention Act
Whaling Convention Act

In my view, each of these statutes carries with it tremendous responsibilities which are significant and numerous enough to warrant retention of the name "fisheries" in the new department. I am sure the minister is just as concerned as we are. He is not concerned about the present administration because he knows he will continue to devote his attention to the fisheries. However, he does not know who will follow him, and we may very well end up with a minister of the environment who has no interest in the fisheries of Canada and who has not been remotely connected with them. Such a minister might very well devote his time to those provisions of the act dealing with the environment and the new air pollution bill which the minister introduced a few days ago, or to the Canada Water Act and all the additional legislation which will be introduced under the aegis of the proposed new department.

In his introductory remarks in the debate on second reading the minister suggested that the fisheries interests will be protected by a division of the new department to be designated as, I think, the Canadian fisheries service. This would place the special responsibilities of fisheries in the same category as the Canadian Wildlife Service, the meteorological service, the water section, now under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and parts of the environmental legislation currently under the Department of National Health and Welfare. By his suggestion the minister is inadvertently—I say inadvertently because this certainly is not his intention and I am not placing that construction on what he said—downgrading the department over which he has had responsibility since this Parliament convened 2½ years ago.

I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat, that the minister has dedicated himself to his responsibilities as Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. He has done a good job and has introduced new policies and given a new lease of life to the fishing industry of Canada. As a consequence he has made a reputation for himself in the government of Canada. I suggest to him that he is being patently unfair to the department over which he has presided and which has been so good to him. I am suggesting that the minister is selling out to the cabinet in this instance, because I believe the minister subscribes to the view that we should retain the name "fisheries" in the title of the new department. I believe he subscribes to that view because he is genuinely interested in ensuring for all time that this important aspect of the new department will receive the attention it deserves from whoever presides over it in the future.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps that is why the minister has been reluctant to enter the debate. I think it is very significant, Mr. Chairman, that members opposite, including the minister's new parliamentary secretary who comes from a fishing constituency in New Brunswick, have failed to get to their feet. It is also significant that the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, who has the honour to be chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, has failed to participate in this debate. I think it is significant, too, that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has not risen to his feet to participate in this debate.

Mr. Corbin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Westmorland-Kent is sick in bed. That is why he cannot be in the House tonight.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I apologize and I hope the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent will soon recover and be back on his feet so that he can return to the House and participate in this debate and give us the advantage of his great knowledge. However it would appear that the parliamentary secretary is in exceptionally good health tonight, so what excuse does he have for not participating in this debate? I am also surprised that the independently-minded member for Esquimalt-Saanich has not risen to his feet and seen fit to be present at the examination of this bill in committee. He has great responsibilities and great interest in fisheries, coming as he does from one of the fishing constituencies of British Columbia.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Since the hon. member seems to be taking a roll-call I would mention that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is in Washington participating in public hearings on the important question of transporting oil in tankers from Alaska to parts of the United States.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is a very important member of the House; that is very obvious. I think we ought to consider standing this clause of the bill until he is back in the House.

An hon. Member: What else is new?

Mr. McGrath: In all fairness, I know that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich would wish to participate in the debate. I therefore think that later this day consideration should be given to standing this part of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to see the kind of fish that you can catch with so little bait. It is intriguing. Perhaps I ought to make one more cast. I now refer to that distinguished young member for Gloucester.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. McGrath: He has great interest in this bill; I know how important are the Department of Fisheries and the fishing industry to his constituency. It strikes me as very strange that he has failed to speak either for or against this amendment. Perhaps before the evening is over he will honour us with a few remarks. Last, and by no means least, is the distinguished former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I am sorry that I do not see him in the chamber.

Mr. Whelan: I am here.

Mr. McGrath: I beg your pardon; I see the honourable and distinguished former parliamentary secretary in his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I hope that he, too, will honour us with a few words, because the Department of Fisheries was very good to him. It was not the Department of Fisheries that was responsible for his demise, so to speak. He should not take it out on the Department of Fisheries. When he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, the minister placed great stock in his expertise, not because he is a distinguished tomato farmer but because of his great interest in the fishery. He resides in an area where the freshwater fish industry used to thrive before pollution caught up with it.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that our area is still a fishing area.

An hon. Member: What is the hon. member's point?

Mr. Whelan: I, along with the fishermen of my area, am more interested in getting on with this legislation than participating in a filibuster. I suggest that the name of the new department ought to be the "department of environmental control and carping".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member certainly is an expert at carping. I can well understand his interest in the subject. I know how concerned he is about what is happening to the Department of Fisheries. I know that deep in his heart he subscribes to the arguments which were advanced this afternoon and evening, arguments for retaining the word "fisheries" in the name of the new department. Hope springs eternal in the human breast; perhaps some day he will again be Parliamentary Secretary to the present Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. We hope so, because he did an outstanding job. We shall have more to say about that matter when we reach the portion of the bill dealing with the appointment of additional parliamentary secretaries. We are concerned about the way the hon. member was treated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We are concerned about the hon. member and his colleagues who served Canada, on the periphery of the government, with such distinction. They never even had a look in. Mr. Chairman, I have run short of bait; the last fish that rose took it all. I have no more fishing to do. This bill before the committee is very important to the part of Canada that I represent. It is important in general to the Atlantic provinces and important to the part of the country represented by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I hope that before the minister gets to his feet the parliamentary secretary will live up to his responsibilities and make a useful contribution to this debate.

Mr. Corbin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I refer the hon. member for St. John's East to a speech I made at the opening of this debate. At that time I tried to cover the point that he has put before the committee this evening.

Mr. McCleave: Tell us again.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, we have not heard those remarks lately so perhaps the hon. member would honour us by repeating them tonight. Some of us did not have the privilege of hearing the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Corbin: The hon. member was not in the House.

Mr. McGrath: We shall wait until he has had a chance to pick up his music, so that he can contribute something to this debate. After all, he has a responsibility. I think it is a shame that the distinguished Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has sold out to the glory boys in the cabinet, because that is what he did. I know that he is just as concerned as every hon. member who has participated in the debate on this amendment. I want the minister to know that we are prepared to hold up this part of the bill until hell freezes over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity this afternoon of participating in the debate. Quite frankly, in view of the well thought-out and reasoned amendment that has been moved by my colleague for St. John's East I was hoping that the minister, having eaten a good fish dinner, would realize that it is a sensible amendment to the bill and would come to the committee and say that he and his party are willing to accept the amendment. Unfortunately, he has not said that that is his intention. I feel that I must again impress upon him the need for including the word "fisheries" first and foremost in the title of the new department. I am, therefore, adding some more words to those that I placed on the record earlier.

After enjoying a fish dinner, I had occasion to read the Ottawa Journal. In it I found a most interesting article which more or less endorses some of the remarks I made this afternoon. At that time I pointed out to the committee and to the minister my concern about the loss of one of the most important parts of the fishing industry, namely, the swordfishery of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. McCleave: That has meant $4 million down the drain.

Mr. Crouse: As my colleague has just said, that fishery was worth $4 million to our fishermen in Atlantic Canada. This industry will not easily be replaced. It is not easy for the men concerned to find some new type of employment. They face a multitude of problems which I shall not burden the committee with at this time. The cost of changing their ships to enable them to undertake another form of fishing involves a large sum of money that is beyond their reach.

I know that discussions have been held with the provincial Minister of Fisheries and officials of the federal department. However, to date there has been no solution of this problem. This raises the question whether the swordfishing industry should be placed in this position because of tests which have been carried out. It questions the validity of the tests and whether they are accurate. I wish to place on record parts of an article which appear in the February 16, edition of the Ottawa Journal. The article is entitled "The Great Mercury Mistake". In view of the importance of this industry and the fact that Atlantic Canada is a depressed area, we cannot afford any mistakes that will add to the unemployment we already have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: I do not know where the regional desks are which advise the Liberal party. If they are functioning, Mr. Chairman, they should be made aware that there are 675,000 unemployed people in Canada. We have more than our fair share of unemployment in Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: It is time we stopped playing politics and got down to the nitty-gritty of this issue. It is time we tried to do something not for our political parties but for the people of Canada who sent us here and expect us to do something about the problem.

An hon. Member: All they do is laugh.

Mr. Crouse: Some members may laugh. I read my mail daily. Some of the pleas I receive and forward to members of the cabinet are not funny, Mr. Chairman: they are no laughing matter.

Mr. Bell: Watch your language.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you Mr. Whip. I will try to watch my language. I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to statements made in this article as follows:

> Even the best scientist using the most sensitive and accurate instrument techniques can make mistakes.
> In the case of what may become known as "The Great Mercury Mistake of 1970," the public may have become unduly alarmed about reported contamination of important Canadian foodstuffs.
> Or at least so thinks Dr. Emmanuel Somers of the federal food and drug directorate (FDD).
> And Dr. Somers attempted Monday to set the scientific record straight at the special symposium on Mercury in Man's Environment, sponsored by the Royal Society of Canada and attended by some of the world's leading mercury experts.
> Dr. Robert Jervis, a University of Toronto chemist, had reported in May at a Toronto chemical meeting that he had uncovered an "alarming" level of about 0.4 parts per million of mercury in Manitoba wheat flour gathered by federal health officials the previous November.
> The accepted maximum level for mercury in food products is 0.5 ppm. Dr. Jervis reported similar levels of mercury in samples of wheat.
> Concerned FDD officials, on receiving seven of the wheat and flour samples back from Dr. Jervis, ran some tests of their own later in the summer. They used a technique called atomic absorption, which produced results about one per cent of those reported by Jervis. A later check using neutron activation analysis, the same technique used by Jervis, produced similarly small results.
> For example, Dr. Jervis had reported a level of 0.4 ppm. of mercury in a wheat sample. The FDD and other private laboratories revealed levels of 0.007 and 0.012 ppm. of mercury in portions of the same sample.
> Similarly, where Jervis showed 0.38 ppm in flour, the FDD and other labs showed 0.007 and 0.010 ppm of mercury.
> As a further confirmation, FDD experts believe, a larger "basket" survey of foods purchased in Ottawa area stores in 1969 had shown there were no residues of mercury above the detection limit of the technique used, 0.02 ppm.—
> Dr. Somers emphasized that no analytical technique is free from error.
> And he criticized the public news media for publicizing what he considered to be unsubstantiated "startling" findings.

These facts are very relevant to the situation which exists today. The federal Department of Fisheries have carried out tests on swordfish. We do not know the method they used or the accuracy of their tests. We do know that the fishermen have contributed fish to the Department of Fisheries, in one case over $34 worth which the federal government is unable to pay for. They have taken samples of fish. The fisherman waiting to sell his fish not only cannot sell his catch but cannot get payment for the samples taken by the federal government for testing. This is the way in which the fishermen are being treated. The Minister of Fisheries who will assume responsibility for this industry must take it much more seriously than at present. I gave the minister every kudos this afternoon for being one of the best Liberal fisheries ministers we have ever had—but his work is far from finished. If he is of the opinion that he can now lay the fishing industry aside and go on to other things, he has another thought coming.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: In a press release to Members of Parliament on December 10 it is stated:

> The offshore catch has increased since 1960, and the inshore catch has fallen off as a result of increased activity out over Canada's continental shelf.
> Fisheries and Forestry Minister Jack Davis said: "While fishing with foreign fleets does not conflict with the international law it threatens to deplete our fish stocks. Overfishing has occurred in important areas off Newfoundland and Labrador and entire species are in danger of extinction. This cannot go on—

I agree with the minister 100 per cent that this must stop. What action has the minister taken since this statement was issued that is in any way stopping the overfishing on our offshore banks? I submit there has been no action. What has been the result. The result is that we have yet another industry in Nova Scotia going to the wall. I refer to the saltfishing industry. The minister and his government established the Saltfish Corporation. One of the stipulations in the corporation being established was that the provinces of Atlantic Canada would have to participate in order to be able to buy salt codfish. In answer to a question I directed to the minister recently, he stated that only two provinces, Newfoundland and Quebec, were today participating provinces. Where does this leave those who have a tremendous investment in the saltfishing industry in my native province of Nova Scotia, or those who have an investment in Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick? The minister has been made aware of these problems. In reply to a letter from A. M. Smith & Co. Ltd., dated November 5, the minister stated:

> In 1971, there will obviously have to be a system, and both the corporation and the advisory committee are now concentrating on this problem. Moreover, the 1971 season will also call for a rationalization of the industry because the drying capacity is much too large, both on the basis of 1970 production and what may be expected in future. Allocation of fish to individual plants involves, of course, determination of which plants are really needed in the long run, and what is to be the position of plants in a non-participating province.

This is a serious matter, Mr. Chairman. Yet another of our fishing industries may have to close down. At the present time Nova Scotia is not a participating province. I asked the minister a few days ago what efforts he had made and whether he had used his influence on the Premier of Nova Scotia so that it would become a participating province and could purchase supplies of codfish from Newfoundland. In reading the minister's reply, I was not very impressed. As a matter of fact, he did not choose to answer my question; he simply stated that only Quebec and Newfoundland would be participating provinces. This means approximately 200 more people engaged in processing saltfish in my native province of Nova Scotia will more than likely be unemployed in the near future.

The Minister of Fisheries gave the assurance that Nova Scotia saltfish plants which can perform the services needed, at no greater cost, would receive a reasonable share of fish. However, it would appear that the share allocated to Nova Scotia fish processors has been very small indeed. I mention these matters so that hon. members may realize the extent of the problems facing the fishing industry. These are not dissimilar to those which face other primary producers. I have sat in this House and listened to what has been said on behalf of wheat farmers and western producers. In Atlantic Canada we face equally serious difficulties which require the concentrated effort and attention of a minister of fisheries.

The bill before the House calls for a minister of the environment. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from St. John's East asks that it be amended to provide for a minister of fisheries and the environment. I see only one objection to that amendment—that it comes from this side of the House and has been made by a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament. This makes the amendment partisan and therefore it cannot be accepted by the government. What a farce this government is and what a sham and delusion it is making of power. Not one Liberal member from Atlantic Canada has had the backbone to stand up and declare himself on this issue. They have the backbone of a jellyfish.

An hon. Member: Hear hear!

Mr. Crouse: They are as limp as the net which hangs over the side of a ship.

An hon. Member: They are afraid of what the Prime Minister might say.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Crouse: As one of my hon. friends has said, they are afraid of what the Prime Minister might say if they take a stand to indicate that the interests of the people in Atlantic Canada and of those who make a living from the sea ought to be given a measure of priority by the government. I ask, in the name of this vital industry which is struggling desperately for its place in the sun, that we at least give it the benefit of the advertising advantage which would accrue to it if we had a minister of fisheries and the environment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to present the argument again from a slightly different aspect than we have heard so eloquently for the last hour or so. I make no apology for it. The last two speeches have been powerful indeed but they have also accomplished something else. We know that my hon. friend from St. John's East, by a skilful flick of his wrist was able to induce many fish to snap at the bait he was throwing out to the committee. This was an amusing display in itself and I hope we all profited from it, including, most of all, the victims. I will not name the victims because they have stood up and been counted.

What impressed me more than that, though my hon. friend from St. John's East is a pretty good angler, was that the message is finally getting home. One could see landlubber members on the other side appreciate that there is more than just a quibbling exercise going on this evening; that there are people here from a part of Canada that feels very strongly that a department which has had strong ties with the history of Parliament should not be allowed to disappear in the way that insensitive technocrats propose it should. I intend to elaborate on this argument again because I think it is important.

As I said before, there is no primary producer in this country who would willingly allow the name of the department serving him to disappear. If we tried to get rid of the Department of Agriculture there would be such a beating of plowshares about the ears of a minister who proposed such a dastardly step that the country would echo and re-echo with it. Perhaps we do not have the same power on behalf of our fishermen or the same acreage to represent, but we intend to do what we can for them.

It seems to me that when my hon. friend from St. John's East was casting his skilful line and drawing those responses, and also when my hon. friend from my neighbouring riding in Nova Scotia, South Western Nova, was making his point, that suddenly there were members on the other side whose consciences were becoming alerted—

Mr. McGrath: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. McCleave: I wonder if I could finish the sentence first? Then I will be glad to accept a question.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants prepared to accept a question?

Mr. McCleave: I would like to finish the sentence first and then I will permit a question. I was trying to make a point that there is more than simple pride involved here; there are basic principles involved. Now I will be glad to accept the question.

Mr. McGrath: Would my hon. friend tell the committee whether there is a minister designated as the minister of fisheries in Nova Scotia? Perhaps he could tell the committee how the government of Nova Scotia would react to the downgrading of the department of fisheries and, indeed, the elimination of the department of fisheries in this legislation.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, there is a department of fisheries in the government of Nova Scotia. The minister of that department has several other occupations at the present time. I do not think I should get myself into that subject. My hon. friend from St. John's East is so skilful in casting bait—

Mr. McGrath: I am trying to get a rise from the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. McCleave: I prefer to deal with the issue which is before us. I am pleased that the speech made by the hon. member and the speech made by the hon. member from the riding next to mine should have encountered such a reception, because I think that is where the heart of Parliament lies—its essential guts and its essential workability to the people of Canada—when it can respond in a human way, and I suggest that this argument is very much along those lines.

The hon. member who preceded me spoke about the blow which the swordfish industry has received because of the mercury problem. This illustrates the problems the minister will face when he marches off with his new title as minister of the environment. As we know, because the catches have contained a certain level of mercury the whole industry has become suspect and the fish cannot be sold for human consumption. There are serious questions whether the level of mercury, the measuring device, is too high. I shall not deal with this matter. But I would draw attention to the schizophrenic element which is imposed on the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, soon to become minister of the environment. On the one hand he is being asked to look after fisheries matters, and on the other he is being asked to look after the environment in which all of us live.

I suggest that there are essential conflicts in the duties of the position that the minister must occupy. He must weigh one factor against the other. If he makes a decision relating to one part of his responsibilities, the other part may suffer, which I think is asking too much of any minister of the Crown. I would prefer to see the ministry split into two; then both ministers could be conscientious and could present the best argument that they could make. If one minister was of the opinion that swordfish containing a certain level of mercury would be damaging to human life, the other would be able to argue that over the years swordfish had entered streams containing a fairly high content of mercury and had thus become contaminated. In this way the two ministers could argue back and forth and somebody else could be arbiter. I think no man, even one with the wisdom of Solomon and the sharpest of faculties in the world, should be put in the position of both judge and jury.

Another factor that has to be taken into account both bureaucratically and ministerially is the good old Ottawa pecking order. We all know that within the ranks of the public service of Canada there is a pecking order, and a precious thing indeed it is when you see it in operation. When you have a pecking order within a department consisting of a deputy minister and two assistant deputy ministers, one dealing with the environment and the other with fisheries, who pecks first? Who does the chasing as far as expenditure is concerned? So on the ground of pecking order alone, in addition to this schizophrenic aspect to which I refer, no minister faced with such a conflict could make a success of his portfolio.

As I talk of these things in this chamber I can close my eyes, eliminate the cackle and buzz from opposite and think of parts of Canada where life is lived to the full. Instead of the hubbub and indifference opposite I can visualize parts of Canada where people go out in all kinds of weather to take part in the advancement of this country. I think of people who venture forth in miserable weather to support their families, feed their neighbours and the like.

I can visualize the fishing village of Sambro with its great wharf, albeit inadequate to meet the needs of the fishermen who have made Sambro, in Halifax county, the fishing capital of the North Atlantic. Most of these fishermen are not very talkative, but by God they can fish and bring in the catch. They are not as polished or sophisticated as the yackers opposite, but they know where the action is. Each of these fishermen who owns a fishing vessel is financially obligated to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars. I would ask members of the opposite side, or on this side for that matter, how they would feel if they were faced with such an obligation. What would the minister say—not the one with the money, the other one—if he had a capital obligation of $50,000 to meet at an interest rate of 8 to 10 per cent on a short-term loan, which is all one can get on an asset like a fishing vessel?

I have pressed the minister on three different occasions in the House on this matter. These sword fishermen are facing personal disaster. If they go bankkrupt, then no amount of retraining for any other kind of fishing will help them. If you sent them out fishing sardines tomorrow it would not help them meet their financial obligations. Special boats are required in the swordfishery. This is the sort of conflict that would arise if the fishery and the environment were combined within one department. The minister can sentence these men to a life of debt from which they can never escape; it is as simple as that.

I wonder how many members here tonight would like to be put in that position.

I have made this point because we want greater recognition of this most ancient of government departments. With that I rest my case and I hope the minister will see fit to change his position.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question having to do with the schizophrenia that he mentioned in his speech. I listened very carefully to his speech a few days ago and his objection to the bill was that there were too many ministers, too many parliamentary secretaries and too many departments being created. If I heard him correctly this evening, he now wants a minister of fisheries as distinct from a minister of the environment.

Mr. Crouse: That is not true. That is typical Grit distortion.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for York East who wishes to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I answer the hon. member's question? This was a point that I made in my speech, it is true, and I have to thank the hon. member for York East for reminding me of it. However, I think a fair reading of my speech would reveal that I was not complaining about the number of ministers so much as about the number of floating ministers, the four or five who will have no specific responsibilities. If the hon. member reads my speech on second reading I think he will find that I did say that. I said I thought it was a shame that with all the reorganization that was planned there could not be one minister specifically assigned to an ancient and honoured government department. I know I said that in my speech.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I am really relaxed because the Prime Minister is not in the House.

Mr. Paproski: No, he is not here tonight.

Mr. Lundrigan: Even though it is the Prime Minister's Bill C-207, he is not here and we can be assured that he will not make a contribution to air pollution in the House this evening.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: I have lots of support from the rump and I am honoured because I am an unofficial member of that area. I have been invited to their next festival, and I indicate to the committee that I accept that invitation right now. As of today, Mr. Chairman, I understand we do not have to pay.

I want to go on record as strongly supporting the presentations of my three colleagues, two from Nova Scotia and the distinguished member for St. John's East, Newfoundland. Those hon. members presented a very logical argument in support of the amendment that the new department be entitled the department of fisheries and the environment. This seems to be the appropriate nomenclature for the proposed department.

The establishment of this department is the result of a decision by the Prime Minister who is very much aware of pollution in Canada and is concerned about trying to establish a government department to take advantage of an issue which now exists in the United States. Let me direct a question to hon. members from western Canada who are interested in agriculture. I am looking at the government benches across the way and I see that we have here the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for the Wheat Board. This minister has a special designation. He answers to Parliament for the Wheat Board.

An hon. Member: That's just a sideline.

Mr. Lundrigan: One of my colleagues indicates that this is just a sideline. Nevertheless, he is responsible for the Wheat Board. I see another hon. gentleman who is away down the list of importance, the hon. member for Medicine Hat who is called the Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: Yahoo!

Mr. Lundrigan: And we have another minister who is called the minister of—I can't remember the name but he is the hon. member for Langelier. I must be careful of my pronunciation in view of the remarks today of the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin. As a member from a small Newfoundland fishing community, I have to be very careful that I pronounce these names properly. In any event, he is an hon. member from somewhere in la belle province. This gentleman answers to the House in respect of regional economic expansion. When we talk about regional economic expansion we are talking about the great province of British Columbia, we are talking about the great oil sands of Alberta, we are talking about the great northern part of the prairie provinces which are rich in resources. This is an area which some members claim to be the great hinterland development of Canada.

We are also talking about the minister from Cornwall and the minister from Renfrew, where they unfortunately lost their great industry and now have some 200 people unemployed. In any event, he is the minister for that area. We are also talking about the minister who represents a great deal of Quebec where there are 200,000 unemployed at this moment. We are also talking about the minister from Prince Edward Island, the minister from New Brunswick, the minister from Nova Scotia and the minister from the cultural province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Chairman, the last three ministers I have mentioned could really be classified as ministers of rural affairs or rural development, or something to do with rural Canada. I have in mind the Minister of Agriculture, the minister of regional disparity and the minister in charge of unemployment and the disadvantaged areas of Canada. Surely this is what we are talking about. I wonder how the members from western Canada—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. With great respect, I should like to ask the hon. member whether he is thinking about the amendment which is before the committee.

It is some hours since the amendment was proposed and I should like to remind hon. members that the committee should now be considering that subject. I will not read the amendment, but it is essentially a proposal to change clause 2 of the bill in order to incorporate the word "fisheries" in the title of the new department of the environment. With great respect it seems to me that we should try to relate our remarks to that matter and the question of whether the word "fisheries should be incorporated in the title of that department. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to that subject.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I always have the greatest admiration and respect for your person and your office. Perhaps it has not become apparent that my remarks relate to the amendment presently before the committee and I will hasten to abide by the rules of the House and direct my remarks to that subject. I know other hon. members wish to speak on this matter so I will direct my remarks in a relevant way, as Your Honour has proposed to the amendment.

Mr. Alexander: You are right on, John.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, what I am really saying is that the designation of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board and for immigration—

An hon. Member: And statistics.

Mr. Lundrigan: —statistics, unemployment and manpower, and the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion are all involved with rural development. How would hon. members from western Canada, including the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member from Camrose, the hon. member for Vegreville, the hon. member for Vermillion—

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Lundrigan: —the hon. member for Edmonton Centre, hon. members from the great province of Manitoba and from the great province of Saskatchewan, feel about the government deciding to eliminate the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Agriculture and the Wheat Board and create a department of rural development?

An hon. Member: They don't have to; they are fragmented into non-existence anyhow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I am getting all kinds of side remarks. How would these hon. members react to such a change? How would these hon. members who are on the bandwagon of the right hon. gentleman—I suppose I can still call him the right hon. gentleman—react to a bill changing the name of those departments? I have in mind the hon. member from western Canada who attended a Liberal organization meeting in Regina. He is concerned with unemployment in Canada. I wonder how the eminent gentleman from Assiniboia would react to a change in the name of the Department of Agriculture. I wonder how the hon. gentleman from the Prairies and the hon. member from the Gaspé—I almost left him out—would react to such changes? That hon. member is a distinguished Canadian who is in favour of retaining the word "fisheries". I should also like to know the reaction of the hon. member who now holds the position of parliamentary secretary. How would the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria react to the creation of a department of rural development through the elimination of some departments which have been in existence for years? I should like to know how hon. members from the province of Quebec would react to this change. How would they resign themselves to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce being eliminated and having in its place a department of manufacturing? What would they say if we put all aspects of economic development, in terms of manufacturing, under one department? How would those hon. members react to the creation of that kind of a department as a subsidiary of another department? I would like those hon. members to stand in their places and indicate how they would react to that kind of situation. I raise this suggestion in the hope that my friends from the rural parts of Canada will indicate how they would feel about that kind of distinction being made in respect of government departments.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Of course, we have not yet reached the stage where we can have a major voice in the Canadian economy. Members from various Canadian provinces have expressed concern today. Our concern about the degradation and downgrading of the Department of Fisheries is not a minor concern; it is a major concern. When Bill C-207 becomes legislation over our dead bodies—

Mr. McGrath: Over the dead bodies of the fishermen.

Mr. Lundrigan: —over the dead bodies of those who are concerned about the fishing industry in Canada, we will represent the only part of Canada which has no department of fisheries. Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, the federal government taking an initiative to downgrade fisheries to this point? In British Columbia there is a minister of fisheries. His colleague is now visiting Washington, but he will be back and I have great confidence in his ability to show the Canadian people his concern for the fishing industry. We have many members from British Columbia. Last year, as a member of the fisheries committee I visited the southern part of British Columbia and Vancouver Island, as well as some parts of the great constituency of the Minister of Public Works for whom I have great admiration.

The point I wish to make is that I also visited the northwestern part of British Columbia and the area of Prince Rupert. I remember running into a gentleman there who is a member of the Legislative Assembly. I refer to Mr. Britt who comes from Prince Rupert. Some members are acquainted with him. He was not only a member of the British Columbia Legislature but he also became a great mayor of the municipality of Prince Rupert. This man was born in Fogo, Newfoundland and in the constituency of Gander-Twillingate.

Of course, this is how we have contributed to Canadian confederation: we have exported our great men to the various parts of Canada and they have contributed in many fields, not the least of which is the fishery. In any event, the fact is the department of fisheries in British Columbia is a major department. This industry is a major one in British Columbia's economy. In the various prairie provinces where the fishery does not have a position of great priority it is, of course, a recognized feature of the economy of some areas in terms of the freshwater fishery.

I remember reading about the impact of the fresh fish marketing board and the legislation introduced by the Minister of Fisheries, which I believe was piloted through the committee inadequately by an hon. member who is sitting in the chamber tonight. Then we come to the province of Quebec where there is a minister of fisheries, and Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island which also have ministers of fisheries. Newfoundland has a minister of fisheries. In that province this title was assumed over the last 20 years. I am trying to point out that in all these provinces this is a major aspect of the economy. Now we are to have a downgrading of the fisheries department to the point where it will no longer exist even on the Prime Minister's roster which is open to a great deal of question.

When we became part of Canada 22 years ago we did so with the understanding that there would be at least some initiative on the part of the federal government in respect of fisheries. I do not doubt for a moment that it is questionable whether constitutionally the federal government can move toward eliminating a department of government which has responsibility for a major part of our economy, without consultation with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, some members of the Liberal party are not satisfied with that suggestion. I raised this matter in the House of Commons some time ago. I asked the Minister of Fisheries what consultation had taken place and he said that we do not interfere with their legislation so why should they interfere with ours? He said that if we want to have a department of the environment and eliminate the Department of Fisheries, what does that have to do with the governments of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick?

I remind the minister that when we entered the Canadian confederation we assumed that fisheries would occupy a priority position in this nation. I say right now that the hon. member who says we are being double-crossed is right; this is what is happening. A major part of the economy in our province is the fishery. The hon. gentleman who sits on his fanny down in the rump and does not say anything day after day—what is his name; would someone place his name on the record? He sits here day after day and does not say a word. What is that gentleman's name? This hon. gentleman sums up the concern of members opposite for the fisheries, and that is not very much.

We came into confederation on the assumption that the government of Canada would pay some attention to the problem of our environment and our economy. Out of 75,000 workers in Newfoundland there are 20,000 in the fishing industry. Am I to stand up here as a member representing these people and see fisheries go out the window? Would that be responsible behaviour on my part? Should I not accept the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's East and the arguments of my colleagues from Nova Scotia?

As a member of a confederation of 22 million Canadians, representing 75,000 Newfoundlanders in this House of Commons—and this should apply to a member from any province in Canada—I cannot permit this kind of legislation to pass, because it will downgrade the role of one of our major industries to a level where it will never be heard from again in this House of Commons.

I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board what the business will be for tomorrow.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue the filibuster.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Ricard: Will the minister be the first speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INFORMATION CANADA—REPRESENTATIONS FROM PUBLISHERS OF ORIGINAL CANADIAN BOOKS RESPECTING ASSISTANCE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, January 27, as recorded at page 2820 of Hansard, I asked the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada whether he had received representations from Canadian publishers of original Canadian textbooks requesting government assistance and, if so, whether the government had given consideration to those requests, and also when the House might expect a statement on government policy concerning this matter. The question of making viable the Canadian book publishing industry is one which must interest any Canadian concerned about the continued existence of this nation.

In the autumn of this year W. J. A. Gage Limited, a Canadian publishing company, was taken over by U.S. interests and the government did not utter a peep. In answer to a question which I placed on the Order Paper, question No. 270, I was informed that in 1968, at the time when W.J.A. Gage was still Canadian-owned, 22 Canadian companies supplied textbooks to Canadian schools and provided only 40.3 per cent of the total factory shipments of textbooks to Canadian schools.

Since then W.J.A. Gage and Ryerson Press, two of the largest Canadian publishers of textbooks, have been sold to American interests, again in the case of Ryerson Press without a peep being uttered by the government. Thus, the percentage of the textbooks being supplied to Canadian schools by Canadian publishers must be substantially below the 40 per cent figure supplied to me in answer to my question. I suppose that figure now would be approximately 20 per cent, since Ryerson and Gage were two of the largest publishers of textbooks.

What has been the result of this situation? I can give one small example from my own experience. I have a seven-year old son who is attending a Canadian school. The teaching aids provided to his teachers for assisting him in the learning process are issued by U.S. publishing houses. The result is that he knows all about the American Pilgram Fathers, even the obscure fact that a ship called Speedwell accompanied the Mayflower on the first portion of her voyage across the Atlantic. Had it not been for his mother and myself, he would know nothing about Cabot, Cartier, Champlain, LaVerendrye and the other Canadian explorers.

What I am saying is that because of our government's lack of interest in ensuring that Canadian literature, Canadian textbooks and Canadian magazines are given the same opportunities to be seen, purchased and read by the Canadian public as are their American equivalents, all that remains of a distinctive set of values, attitudes and outlooks—the underpinnings of a distinctive way of life in this country—is rapidly being engulfed and submerged by the wave of printed material from south of the border. No wonder we are confused when we attempt to define the Canadian identity.

I am also suggesting that it is essential that the government take immediate action to correct this situation, which perhaps constitutes an even more pressing danger to our existence as a nation than does the U.S. ownership of most of the other key areas of our economy—and that makes my hair stand on end. I suggest that the government must immediately give financial assistance to the Canadian book publishing industry if more Canadian publishers are not to go broke or be taken over, and if the nation is to avoid a cultural catastrophe. The Massey commission made us see the need in other areas of cultural endeavour and the Canada Council is one of the results. We need a similarly imaginative approach if we are to save what is left of our book publishing industry and to foster a native Canadian literary tradition.

I am not suggesting any sort of artificiality; I am suggesting that Canadians possess the talents and intellectual resources to produce in this area of endeavour if the opportunity were presented to them. It is not being presented to them largely because the economics of research and production militate against Canadian publishers being able to compete on any sort of equal footing with their U.S. counterparts, especially when the distribution and sale of general trade books and magazines in Canada is also in the hands of U.S. owned companies such as Benjamin News, American News and United Cigar Stores. To meet the need in Canada for a healthy publishing industry, a need which must be met if we are to remain a sovereign entity, this government must take action in a number of areas simultaneously.

First, it must create a Canadian book development corporation similar to the Canadian Film Corporation, which would share the cost of the printing of books likely to make a profit and which would also share the profits. Here it is necessary to caution that books could not be considered individually but, rather, each publisher would submit a group of books for consideration, hoping to achieve a profit with the whole group while perhaps sustaining a loss on one or two of the books within the group.

Second, the Industrial Development Bank or an extension of it would have to make long-term, low interest loans available to publishers so that they would not become totally dependent on the Canadian book development corporation for operating capital, since that organization might very well develop certain rigidities.

Third, regulations would have to be developed to ensure a market outlet for Canadian books, something which is not presently the case because, in part, the distribution system is largely controlled by American companies. This would enable greater quantities of Canadian books to be printed, thereby making them competitive in price with their American counterparts.

Fourth, more funds must be made available through the Canada Council and the Humanities Research Council for the production of scholarly and prestige publications, and both those organizations must be made more responsive to the needs of Canadian book publishers.

Fifth, a Canadian publishing house must be established in the United States, just as foreign publishers are now represented in Canada, in order to give Canadian books meaningful access to the vast American market with its potential to lower costs by permitting printing in greater quantities. I would like hon. members to note, Mr. Speaker, that each of these measures is positive in nature and in no way restrictive. They reflect my confidence that the Canadian literary and scholarly community can compete with any in the world, once placed on a roughly equal financial footing.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am replying to the hon. member for Selkirk's question on behalf of the Minister without Portfolio responsible for Information Canada and Citizenship, who is unfortunately absent from the House this evening because of a previous departmental commitment. I listened to the hon. member's words with considerable interest and paid close attention to his concern which is shared by many.

The minister wishes me to inform the House that in the interest of both his major responsibilities for ensuring adequate access to information about federal government activities and for developing the proper resources for Canadian citizenship, he has been engaged along with other of his cabinet colleagues in discussions with periodical and book publishers in Canada. As this House knows, the problems of finding a balance of policies that will ensure the health of Canadian publishers of all kinds and ensure access for all Canadians to the literature of the world are many and complex. All avenues of activity of the federal government that can contribute solutions to these problems are being actively investigated. As the government's publishers, one of the largest publishers in Canada, Information Canada is heavily involved in these investigations.

We have also been exploring ways in which other countries with comparable problems are providing for their solutions. Because of the complexities involved, I anticipate no formal statement to the House relating to all of these activities at the present time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS — UNEMPLOYMENT — IMMEDIATE AMENDMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT IN VIEW OF INCREASE IN FUND—INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF WELFARE COSTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on February 2, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether the government was giving consideration to increasing the percentage of costs paid by the federal government to the provinces and municipalities for welfare, in view of the very sharply increased costs to the cities and provinces last year as a result of the government's policies to combat inflation, which have led to a marked increase in unemployment. The Prime Minister replied simply that the federal government shares the cost of welfare with the provinces and the cities by paying 50 per cent of all costs.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ignored the point I was trying to make. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) who I presume will be answering for the Prime Minister, because he is a member from metropolitan Toronto and because the issue which I raised has been so sharply delineated in the past few days in that area will not give me the kind of Paul Martin answer, which is no answer, that he gave to my colleague the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland). A very short investigation which I made last week brought forward some interesting statistics. In metropolitan Toronto the cost of welfare will rise from $50 million in 1970 to $75 million in 1971. The only good thing I can say about that, Mr. Speaker, is that some of the wealthier constituents represented by the parliamentary secretary may have to pay more taxes to help meet that bill. In my own city of Winnipeg, costs have gone up from $3,900,000 in 1969 to $5 million in 1970. Officials of the welfare department estimate that costs for 1971 will rise to $6 million. Hamilton, which is a prosperous city with a tremendous amount of basic industry and with well paid workers, is to pay an increasing amount. Welfare costs to the city will have risen from $1.5 million in 1969 to an estimated $2.5 million in 1971. In Windsor, the auto capital of Canada, welfare costs in 1969 were $1.6 million; in 1970 they were $2.27 million. In Calgary, the oil capital of western Canada, welfare costs went up from $200,000 in 1969 to $450,000 in 1970. It is estimated that in 1971 they will be $550,000.

I am not talking about the total cost of welfare in those cities; I am talking about the actual amount which has been paid and will be paid by the local taxpayers. I have not been talking about the 50 per cent of the welfare costs which are to be paid by the federal government, or of that percentage which varies from province to province and which is paid by the provincial governments; I am talking about the actual sums of money which are to be paid by the municipalities which I have mentioned, as well as by other cities in Canada—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Out of property taxes.

Mr. Orlikow: —out of property taxes. With living costs rising as rapidly as now—the increase for January was almost half of one per cent—this has become a very serious matter for the cities and for the taxpayers in those cities. I urge the government to reconsider its hard-headed and hard hearted decision not to increase the federal share of welfare costs beyond 50 per cent. After all, the large increase in welfare costs has been caused by the very serious increase in unemployment. At present our unemployment is higher than it has been at any time since the end of World War II. It is no accident that this unemployment exists, that 668,000 people were out of work in January, they were out of work as a result of policies devised by the federal government.

The Prime Minister would like us to forget what he said one year ago. When defending the anti-inflationary policies of his government, he said that the government was going to be tough, and that if people thought that the government would not be tough they ought to disabuse themselves of that idea. The Prime Minister, who of course has never been unemployed and has never experienced any difficulties, was prepared to tolerate a 6 per cent unemployment rate if that would help to overcome the threat of inflation in Canada.

The present rate of unemployment is not 6 per cent; the actual rate is 8 per cent as calculated by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Because of this large-scale unemployment, because many people have been out of work for more than six months, because many people have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and have been forced, through circumstances created by the federal government, to apply to the cities I have mentioned and to all other cities in Canada for welfare, costs in welfare have increased. These increased costs have resulted directly from federal government policies. I think, therefore, that the federal government ought to increase its share of those costs, if only on a temporary basis, if only in this emergency situation, beyond the present level of 50 per cent to 65 per cent.

I suggest this percentage to the parliamentary secretary. I hope he will bring it to the attention of the Prime Minister, who may not give me the kind of answer that he is alleged to have given to another member in the House today. I urge the government to give serious consideration to the suggestion I have made. It has also been made by other mayors in cities from one end of Canada to the other. Those mayors are not members of the New Democratic Party; some of them are known Liberals and known Conservatives. They are faced with tremendous increases in costs which they in turn have to pass on to local taxpayers. The local taxpayer is finding this burden increasingly difficult if not impossible to carry.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am "on live" this time. Yesterday I and some of my colleagues, including two from the hon. member's party, met with the municipal council of Toronto to discuss some of these problems. They arise from some of the difficulties we face with a rather inadequate tax base. I think it is unfair to the municipalities that the tax base is mainly on property tax. In my opinion, that is an unfair distribution, one that should be rectified.

It is true that we have a tax sharing arrangement with the provinces whereby the government pays 50 per cent. In the hon. member's province and mine, the province pays 30 per cent and the municipality picks up the tab for the other 20 per cent. It is interesting to note that some provinces do not pass along any of the costs to the muncipalities. They are not necessarily rich provinces. I refer to provinces such as Newfoundland and New Brunswick. Perhaps this is an area for a complete study of the tax base and structure within the province, which is an increasing problem.

The expenditures of other levels of government are increasing as is a percentage of our gross national product. The municipalities are being strangled. This is not only because of welfare payments but because of sewers, subways, parks and many other services which the municipalities have to provide. If the federal government became centralized and paid the complete cost, the provincial government could lose these powers. In some cases this is not even a possibility: sending money is not the answer. We have to look at the more fundamental causes of the difficulties, causes which we vividly saw when discussing this situation with the municipal council of Toronto yesterday.

As our cities grow and as a greater percentage of our population flows into the cities, a trend which we know will continue, we must reshape our whole tax structure within the muncipalities and provinces. Certainly we have to do it federally. We are far from perfect. We are trying to do something along this line. That is not the only answer. Relief of unemployment is of prime concern to the government as it is to all members. I think we have to do something to provide relief. The answer is not relief by way of handouts; it is in trying to stimulate jobs. In so far as the cities are concerned, the most promising factor is the new housing starts announced the other day by the minister responsible for housing. Sixty thousand new jobs will be produced directly. This is a direct infusion into the economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Danson: This has the greatest multiplying factor.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

AGRICULTURE—CONSOLIDATION OF FARMS—PRESERVATION OF FAMILY FARM

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on February 3, I directed the following question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson):

> In view of the continuing and real threat to the existence of small and medium-sized farm units, is the Minister of Agriculture prepared to tell the House whether his study to encourage the adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size has taken into consideration the importance of the preservation of the family farm?

As suggested by Your Honour, this question was very general in nature and it was considered to be a representation to the minister. I now refer this question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard).

The farmer has always been very self-reliant. Self-reliance is not a vague political slogan; it has meaning for every citizen, for every group and for the nation as a whole. A self-reliant individual is one who co-operates with others, one who is willing to help others and is willing to be helped by them; but one who does not depend on anyone else for food, clothing or shelter. He lives on what he earns, so he is truly a free person beholden to no one. This was once the position of the vast majority of our people and in particular it was the position of many thousands of farmers.

I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that today few farmers are in a position to be self-reliant. They are faced with a further increase in farm machinery prices. The government refuses to do anything about this even though the Barber commission recommended that an investigation be made under the Combines Investigation Act into collusion among farm machinery companies. Farmers are unable to buy the machinery they need and pay the high interest rates presently charged. When they try to re-purchase land which was taken from them by government agencies ten years ago, they find in many cases that the price has increased by 345 per cent, quite apart from interest charges. This makes it impossible for the small farmer to preserve his way of life. We realize there has to be social and economic planning but we believe there must be a strong rural community, and building a strong rural community means that social as well as economic structures must be taken into account.

In the proposals for a production and grain receipts policy there is one paragraph in particular which affects every individual in this country who is involved in the agricultural economy. It is to be found under the heading, "Encourage the adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size" and it states:

> The problem of farm consolidation is one which is not peculiar to the prairie region and which, perhaps, is less critical in this region than in other areas of Canada. It is therefore believed that it would be inappropriate to propose programs for the prairie region to deal with the consolidation issue in advance of the availability of programs to deal with this problem in Canadian agriculture generally. Such a general plan is in preparation.

I urge the parliamentary secretary to tell the House tonight, to tell those who are concerned about the agricultural economy and the preservation of the family farm, exactly what the government has in mind as far as the consolidation of farm units is concerned. It is our position in the NDP that one ought not to consider a stabilization plan without taking into consideration the special place which family farm units occupy in our national life. If we are really concerned about the preservation of the family farm and about social and economic conditions, we must take into consideration the probable effect of the paragraph I have just quoted upon the farming economy, its effect upon the producers.

In closing, I contend that since the agricultural industry is the most important industry in Canada it is high time we paid more attention to it and let the actual producer know what is going on in any plan which may affect him, especially as far as the family farm is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to thank the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) for the arguments he has just developed in the House and I can assure him that the future of family farms is certainly something of concern for all members of the House and particularly for the officers of the Department of Agriculture. Certainly no member can brush aside the subject of family farms but I simply wish to point out to the hon. member that there are several types of family farms and that their future depends chiefly on the families which operate them.

In any case, we do not have much time and I wish to assure the hon. member that the studies carried out so far by the Department of Agriculture on the question of low income farms and operations known as family farms, whatever their size, have always taken into account the expectations and objectives of the people concerned and it will continue to be so in the future.

In the preparation of programs, it has been clearly established that family farms consolidation will depend on the decision of those who have to bear the consequences of such an operation, namely the farmer and his family. I think this is the most satisfactory way to insure that the farm structure of the future will be acceptable to those who shall make a living from it.

I must also remind the hon. member that as late as yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) indicated that discussions are under way between all ministers of Agriculture and premiers with a view to establishing the adjustment policy to be introduced in the House eventually and I can assure him further that there will be a high degree of consultation so that hon. members, the government and the people concerned can work out a system which will take into account the farmers' interests and aspirations.

I wish to assure him sincerely that we are very much concerned by the present state of family farms.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—SITTING OF STANDING COMMITTEES WHILE GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, notice of which I have given to Your Honour. My question of privilege arises out of the point of order that I raised yesterday concerning the business of the House wherein I found myself being denied my right and, indeed, my obligation as a member of the House to examine every bill that is placed before the House by the government. I also find that what would appear to me to be a prima facie case of privilege in the denial of these rights is in direct conflict with the Standing Orders of the House. It is this aspect of my point of order on which I am basing my question of privilege.

The duties and responsibilities placed upon members under the Standing Orders of the House, and in particular the unnecessary conflict caused yesterday in those duties and responsibilities by the government calling an order that put the House into committee of the whole on a bill, resulted in my being deprived of my right and obligation to examine bills. Standing Order 5 reads:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the House, unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

Standing Order 65(8) reads:

> Standing committees shall be severally empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House and,—to sit while the House is sitting.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Further, Standing Order 65(10) provides as follows:

> In a standing or special committee, the Standing Orders of the House shall be observed so far as may be applicable, except the Standing Orders as to the seconding of motions, limiting the number of times of speaking and the length of speeches.

Still further, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 55(1) provides as follows:

> The Standing Orders of the House shall be observed in committees of the whole House so far as may be applicable, except the Standing Orders as to the seconding of motions limiting the number of times of speaking and the length of speeches.

It follows then, Sir, that every member of the House is under an obligation to attend the House in committee of the whole. If he is a member of a standing committee or of a select committee which is empowered to sit while the House is sitting, he is also under a duty to attend that committee meeting.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the day to day business of the House known as Government Orders should be so arranged as to reduce the incidence of such conflicts of duty which weigh upon a member, and that is the position in which I as a member of the House found myself yesterday. Obviously, when the House is in committee of the whole to consider a bill, no committee should meet. No standing committee of the House should meet while the House is in committee of the whole because the committee of the whole House, as the name implies, means just that, the committee of the whole House, and it would preclude and pre-empt any other meetings of standing committees notwithstanding any other orders made by the House.

My rights, Mr. Speaker, have been transgressed. I found myself in the position yesterday of having to be in three places at the same time to attend to my responsibilities with respect to the examination of three important bills, on two of which I had amendments. I look to you, Mr. Speaker, as the custodian of our rights and privileges to protect my rights as a member of the House notwithstanding what the rules may be. Accordingly, I would like to move a motion, with leave of the House, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

> That Standing Order 65 be amended by adding thereto next after sub-order 12 thereof the following:
> (13) A standing, special or joint committee shall not sit while the House is in committee of the whole to consider a bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East gave notice of the question of privilege which he proposed to raise today. The hon. member had indicated yesterday, when he brought the same problem to the attention of the House on a point of order, that he might in due course give thought to the possibility of submitting the problem to the House by way of a question of privilege. The notice was given within the required time but barely so in the sense that there was not all that much time for the Chair to consider all the implications of the important point raised by the hon. member. At the same time, because of the fact that he had brought up the situation yesterday I have been giving consideration to it. I have been wondering and discussing with my officials whether the point is well taken and whether we are in difficulty and contravening in some way not only the rules of the House but the privileges of our Parliament by allowing standing committees to sit at the same time as the committee of the whole House.

I suggested to hon. members yesterday, in commenting on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, that there was nothing new in the House sitting in committee of the whole at the same time as standing committees were sitting, and there were some muffled comments from some hon. members suggesting that perhaps I was wrong. I immediately thought that maybe I was and backtracked a little bit, saying that perhaps I was wrong, that I had nothing to back my suggestion up that for many years, for generations of parliamentarians, we have had special committees, standing committees, joint committees, many kinds of committees, sitting at the same time as the House was sitting either as the House or in committee of the whole.

I have since consulted authorities on the subject, hon. members and others who have been in this institution for many years and others who have experience of the history of our Parliament over a period of 100 years, and with great humility may I say that my suggestion of yesterday has been confirmed. It has been suggested to me that not one year has gone by since confederation when this kind of situation has not happened, that is to say, where we have had special committees or standing committees of the House sitting in competition, if I may use that word, with the committee of the whole.

I really find it difficult to conceive in my mind why it should be worse or more offensive to the concept of parliamentary privilege to have a committee sit while the House is in committee of the whole than it is for a committee to sit while the House is sitting as the House itself. I just cannot understand or conceive that the committee of the whole is more important than the House itself. This is the suggestion that is being made in the motion moved by the hon. member, that we should not have standing committees sitting while the committee of the whole sits. He is suggesting that although standing committees should and could sit while the House is meeting, they should not and could not sit while the House is sitting as a committee of the whole. This I find extremely difficult to accept.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Except for the votes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member makes the same protest as was made yesterday, but I would suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton West and to other hon. members who may want to protest that this has been a practice of the House for 100 years. It may well be that we have been wrong all along. I am not saying that we have not been in error in past years and that the practice should not be changed. What I do suggest to hon. members is that this practice has been established for a long time.

Should we change the rules if there is something wrong with our practice? It may well be that we should change the practice. But hon. members know that the new Standing Order 65(8) has been approved by the House. This change was recommended by a committee of which the Speaker was not a member. I might say that in those years I thought the Speaker should have been a member of the committee, but ever since then I have thanked the good Lord that I was never a member of that committee because every time points of order were raised I would have considered myself personally involved. I can now deny all responsibility for any of the decisions that were made. But not having been a member of the committee and, at the same time, distinguished members of all parties of the House having been members of the committee and having made recommendations to the House which were accepted by the House of Commons, I find it difficult to accept the contention that the rule should be changed simply by order or ruling on the part of the Chair. Certainly I do not want to give my judgment priority over the judgment of that committee. It was a very good committee which made what were, I thought, valid recommendations in some respects in any event, which recommendations were accepted by the House.

I say all of this in a general way. This is my natural reaction to the point that has been raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. I said yesterday that I thought there might be a very legitimate grievance in the sense that there should be an effort made by the different House Leaders to get together and make sure that we do not put ourselves in the position of having a very important bill before the House requiring members to be present because of the vote and other situations while at the same time there are three important committees sitting in competition with the sitting of the House.

I believe that there is something awkward, something wrong, with that position. Should it be changed by the type of motion that has now been proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East? I doubt it very much. I would think this might be the kind of situation that should be looked into by the Committee on Procedure and Organization rather than by another committee of the House. I would be prepared to look into the matter because of all of this and because of the very interesting point made by the hon. member. I am not prepared to make a ruling now but to look into the matter further, study the situation and make a ruling in due course.

In passing I might refer to the point made by the hon. member that Standing Order 5 requires that an hon. member shall attend the service of the House. I have always thought, and I still do, that the service of the House is discharged by an hon. member whether he attends the House as it is at present, the committee of the whole or a standing committee of the House. I believe this Standing Order requires that there be service of the House, and for many reasons I would think that hon. members do not hesitate to consider themselves as having attended the service of the House at the end of a month when they have been attending meetings of standing committees. I say this by way of passing comment. The point is very important and fundamental and requires the consideration of the Chair rather than merely passing or fleeting remarks such as those I am making now.

I am prepared to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John's East and the suggestions made during the short debate we had yesterday that this matter be considered. My thought was that I would attempt to have a meeting of House Leaders. I am prepared to have such a meeting either today or tomorrow to see whether we might as the House of Commons and parliamentarians together find a solution to the problem which will be acceptable and will satisfy hon. members that we can operate efficiently sometimes in spite of our rules.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief suggestion. When Your Honour is considering this matter I hope you will differentiate between the House when it is sitting with the Speaker in the Chair and when it is in committee of the whole so far as voting is concerned. When there is a vote in the House members are called to the chamber by the bell whether they are attending committees or wherever they may be. When the House is sitting in the committee of the whole and there is a vote it is a standing vote with no names recorded. This is a very important matter when we are dealing with bills clause by clause.

My other point concerns the roster system. In view of our rules I think this system should be examined because ministers are never present when urgent questions arise.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Calgary North, but I am not sure that the roster system should necessarily be considered in relation to the point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. The matter of voting is important. It was brought to the attention of the Chair a moment ago by way of an obiter dictum coming from the hon. member for Edmonton West. This very important aspect of the matter will be given consideration by the Chair in consultation with hon. members. The Chair has a responsibility but hon. members as members of this institution also have a responsibility, and I call upon them to share the responsibility with the Chair.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1971-72

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1972, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Main Estimates

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the estimates which have just been tabled contain $14,352 million in budgetary expenditures and $989 million in non-budgetary expenditures, the latter being for loan, investment and advance items for which authority has to be sought in appropriation acts. It will be understood that there are other non-budgetary expenditures which do not appear in the estimates and rely for their authority on other statutes, such as the loans to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation authorized under the National Housing Act.

These estimates are $1,004 million higher than the forecast expenditures for 1970-71 and $1,442 million higher than the main estimates for 1970-71. If one compares these estimates to forecast expenditures for 1970-71, it will be found that as usual more than half the increase, or about $560 million, is accounted for by increases in statutory items, those items whose magnitude is determined by provisions of some Act of Parliament now in force.

Most prominent among these increases in statutory items are those for the programs under which the government gives unconditional transfers to the provinces or shares in the costs of health, welfare, and post-secondary education with the provinces. In addition there are increases to be met in the cost of servicing the public debt, in student loans, in contributions to the unemployment insurance fund and in contributions to the government employees pension funds. There is also one instance of a large reduction in a statutory item, that for carrying costs of wheat reserves and advance payments—a reduction occasioned by increased shipments which have reduced quantity expected to be in storage and because of higher repayments of advances.

Again comparing 1971-72 main estimates to forecast expenditures for 1970-71, there are substantial changes being made in the expenditures in respect of which the federal government is able to exercise greater discretion in deciding on the pattern of resource allocation. These changes reflect new initiatives and new emphasis in areas most of which are generally accepted to be of the highest priority to Canadians, including: regional economic expansion, occupational training for adults, Indian and Eskimo affairs, bilingualism development, northern development, grants to industry by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, citizenship development.

These estimates also contain proposed expenditures for a department of the environment, consistent with proposals contained in the proposed Government Organization Act, 1970. In a similar vein, the estimates contain a proposed budgetary allocation to a ministry of state for urban affairs and housing which would be created under the authority of the proposed Government Organization Act.

The new department of the environment is to be made up from the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and from certain programs and activities drawn from the Department of Energy Mines and Resources, the Department of Transport, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Department of National Health and Welfare. In examining the year to year changes in estimates levels for these departments these transfers should be borne in mind. All of these responsibilities would be financed in the new department given Parliament's approval of the Organization Act and of these estimates.

Another large apparent increase in the estimates, that for external affairs, reflects a decision of the government to combine under the direction of external affairs the administrative support services for the overseas operations of several departments. It is hoped in this way to achieve greater efficiency in such support services. The increase in external affairs is offset by decreases in the other departments.

Last year when I tabled the main estimates I drew the attention of hon. members to the new form of the estimates which I said evidenced our attempts to "improve the process of resource allocation and to better inform Parliament and the people of Canada of the objectives, operations and costs of the departments and agencies of government".

Because of the importance this administration attaches to informing the people of Canada about the processes and decisions of government, we are going one step further at this time. The tabling of the estimates is being used as an occasion on which to provide a greater amount of information about the estimates to the people of Canada in the form of a special booklet which will be distributed to all members of the House today and which is being made available to the press. The booklet will be available through Information Canada across Canada upon request of members of the general public. It is entitled "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent"—a taxpayer's introduction to the spending plans of the government of Canada for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1971.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Drury: I cannot claim authorship. The booklet describes the process by which the government reaches its decisions in the allocation of resources to recommend to Parliament in the estimates. It describes as well the allocation recommended for the particular year 1971-72 in terms of the priorities of the nation and consequently of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, if it had not been indicated that the document that was handed to me a few minutes ago came from the President of the Treasury Board I would have thought that this was also one of the products of Information Canada because it seems to me that this document tends to dissimulate and to conceal from the Canadian public the size—here I refer not to the nature of the expenditures but to the totality—of the expenditures proposed by the government which of course must be raised by taxation from the Canadian public. Perhaps this may be seen as some justification for the insistence of the Minister of Finance that he was going to increase taxes by his legerdemain in connection with revisions of the income tax; perhaps this is one of the reasons.

We see that there is an increase of some $900 million in the budgetary expenditures for this year, and we are going to see how this is done. I have not had a chance to examine all the tables to see just where this money is going to go. One increase outside those to which the minister referred briefly—I do not know who had a look at it—is another $25 million for the four DDH destroyers in the Department of National Defence. The Minister of National Defence is now of the opinion that these ships are too specialized. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) was Minister of National Defence when the plans were being advocated and it was decided to build the ships. But we also know that in 1963 the plans for four new ships were scrapped by the Department of National Defence because the then minister thought the ships were not specialized enough. All I can say is that along with a lot of the expenditure and reorganization in the Department of National Defence which has cost a great deal we have had some six damn fool years with the net result that the armed forces are now in green uniforms. Were it not for the economic conditions in the country today and the fact that so many of the men are caught by their pensions, we would not have half the men that there are in the forces today. This is one of the contributions that went through a few years ago before the coming to this house of some of the clappers at the back of the ministry who now talk about the green uniform. If they had known the armed services of some years ago, they would recognize what a different force it then was.

Having said that, it is interesting to note that even though we are now considering Bill C-207 the government has gone ahead and organized the estimates book on the basis that this legislation is going to be passed. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has been suppressed. We are to have a department of the environment, and all the representations of my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces and from others from the Pacific coast with regard to maintaining the identification of fisheries are going to go for naught. Why? Because the coffin has been nailed down. The book of estimates, which no doubt was printed many weeks ago, was set up in this form. The government has no intention of acceding to any suggestions that might be made, and I do not suppose they would even accede to the representations of the present Minister of Fisheries and Forestry who would like to continue in that role and give some entitlement to the important fishery industry.

We will want to know, and we will study this, how much all the ministries that are now being proposed under Bill C-207 will cost. It will be a very interesting question to put forward. We know that these estimates will go before the committees, but notwithstanding the statements made by the President of the Treasury Board last year and again this year that the new format of the estimates will render them more readily intelligible so that they will convey greater information, I put it to you that it is the government and not Parliament that proposed the new rules of the House. I can point to the members and ministers who are responsible for the new rules. We were then steamrollered into passing them.

Frankly, I would say that this House and the public of Canada now know less about the spending programs of the government under the new rules because the estimates cannot be discussed when they are reported back to the House from the committees except in a very superficial way on opposition days. There is now less information and less control of these estimates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is due to a combination of a number of factors and I, who have been here for some years, regret that we are not in a position to at least consider some of the departments in the House because the President of the Privy Council will move a motion in a few moments to refer the consideration of the estimates to the various appropriate committees. I do not mean a nuts and bolts operation in the House, but I wish that the estimates could at least be considered in the House so that the House could have control over them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is another example of the so-called directed bureaucracy with which we are being saddled, and I think it is a crying shame that government in Canada should be taking that trend.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISING OF PROCEEDINGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I shall be brief. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

In view of the Prime Minister's method of communication yesterday, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization presently investigating the possibility of televising House of Commons proceedings, be given explicit instructions that if such televising of this House is agreed to by the committee, it should be shown only at late night and avoid the early family and children viewing hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement. The motion cannot be put.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1971-72

REFERENCE OF VOTES TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 59 having to do with the referral of the estimates to the various standing committees. I move, seconded by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury):

• (2:40 p.m.)

That the Estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1972 be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

The list is very long, Mr. Speaker. It may be possible to send you the motion and maybe the House would agree that we could dispense with reading this very long list.

Mr. McGrath: We want to hear it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Drury moves:

That the Estimates of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1972, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Adopted on division.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is without reflection on you, but with respect to the motion that was moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) perhaps it would have been better if Your Honour had read the list of estimates for referral and then we would have caught some of the mistakes that have slipped into the wording of the motion. I am not aware that Bill C-207 proposes to do this, but according to the second page of the motion we have two new departments, the Department of Customs and Excise, and the Department of Taxation. Those departments do not exist.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize that I was quite ready to read right through. I enjoy the sound of my voice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: —and I was willing to go through, but hon. members insisted that I dispense.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They did not insist. The government did.

Mr. Speaker: This is the only reason I did not proceed with the reading, but at the same time I do not think I have authority to go back and again put a motion that has been carried on division.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may refer to the point of order raised by the hon. member I myself noticed in the motion the reference to the particular departments mentioned by the hon. member, and I made inquiries. I did not have an opportunity to look at the book but it may be that the book does not contain those phrases. If it does not I will be happy tomorrow to move to correct the motion on my own account.

Mr. McGrath: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have examined the estimates and I notice there are votes there for the department of the environment. I suggest to the House that there is no such thing as the department of the environment, and the government is anticipating something the House may not do.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh!

Mr. McGrath: Oh, fuddly-dud, or whatever it was you said. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the government has no right to anticipate what the House may do. I submit to Your Honour that there is an amendment before the committee of the whole House which would change the name of the proposed department, and presumably the House may agree to that amendment. Where would that leave the estimates for a department that does not exist?

Mr. Speaker: The point of order is an interesting one, but I would think that at that point the estimates would have to be amended. We might be anticipating that stage of the proceedings. I realize the difficulty that has been pointed out by the hon. member and by the hon. member for Edmonton West, but again I say that if the House decided in its wisdom to accept the amendment now being considered in committee of the whole, and which I assume in due course would be approved by the House, then it is the estimates that would have to be changed.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PROPOSED FEDERAL BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 45—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date did the government indicate its intention to construct a federal building at Amherst, Nova Scotia?

2. Were properties purchased for this proposed site of the federal building and, if so (a) what was the total cost of securing the property in question (b) on what dates were the government properties secured (c) on what date was the preparation for the site completed?

3. Were designs prepared and made public of the proposed new federal building for Amherst and, if so (a) on what date were the designs completed (b) on what date were they released to the public (c) what was the total cost for the preparation of the designs in question?

4. (a) On what date was a decision reached to abandon the proposed design for the new federal building in Amherst and for what reason (b) were plans then initiated for the preparation of a new design and, if so (i) on what date did work start on the preparation of a new design for the federal building (ii) at what cost?

5. (a) On what date was a decision reached to abandon the construction of a new federal building at Amherst (b) for what reason (c) what was the total cost to the federal government associated with the preparation of the plans to start such a federal building?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. On February 14, 1966 when the 1966-67 Estimates were tabled.

2. Yes, (a) $71,404.25. (b) November 21, 1966; April 3, 1967; August 17, 1967. (c) December 31, 1967.

3. Designs were prepared but they were not made public. (a) October 1967, April 1968, April 1969. (b) The designs were not released to the public. (c) $22,100.

4. (a) February 17, 1970—due to a change in client requirements. (b) Plans were initiated for the design of a single-purpose new post office building. (i) August 4, 1970 for a new post office; (ii) The new post office is being designed by departmental staff at an estimated cost of $2,600.

5. (a) February 17, 1970. (b) A change in client requirements. (c) $22,100.

PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF POST OFFICE BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 46—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date did the government initiate plans to extend the federal building used as the post office at Amherst, Nova Scotia, and was property purchased to facilitate the proposed extension and, if so, on what date was property purchased and at what cost to the federal treasury?

2. On what date were the proposed plans to extend the post office abandoned and what was the total cost to the federal treasury of the planning and property purchases, including the obtaining of options from property owners in the area for the sale of their land?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Plans to extend the federal building were initiated on August 11, 1967. It was anticipated that an addition might be required at some future date so vacant land was purchased for this purpose on February 1, 1963, at a total cost of $17,202.56 for land, survey, and legal fees.

2. Plans for the extension were abandoned on January 28, 1969. The total cost was $21,202.56 including an estimated amount of $4,000. for the preparation of plans and specifications by the departmental staff.

DE HAVILLAND STOL AIRCRAFT PROJECTS—FUNDS PROVIDED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 115—Mr. Skoberg:

For each fiscal year 1967/68, 1968/69, 1969/70, 1970/71 (estimated), what financial amounts have been provided by the government to The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited regarding its STOL airplane projects?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, for the DIP Program the following amounts have been provided:

Years	Amount
1968/69	1,699,917
1970/71 (estimated)	1,819,480

In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, under the Defence Research Industrial Research Program, the following amounts have been provided to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada for STOL research:

1967/68	$125,960
1969/70	31,167
1970/71 (estimated)	100,000

PRIVATE CANADIAN CAPITAL INVESTMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA AND NAMIBIA

Question No. 176—Mr. Rowland:

1. What was the total value of private Canadian capital investment both loan and equity in (a) South Africa (b) Namibia for each year 1963 to 1969 inclusive?

2. What is the projected total for 1970 in each country?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is concerned: 1. The total book value of private Canadian direct investment in the Republic of South Africa and Namibia at each year end from 1963 to 1969 is shown below:

Years ended December 31, 1963-1969

29	30	32	36	47	55	70

Investment in Namibia historically has been included with totals for the Republic of South Africa. The Namibia share of the $70 million shown above for 1969 reached a total of almost $2 million at the end of the year. As investment in this territority prior to 1969 was concentrated in one company, the confidentiality provisions of the Statistics Act preclude giving separate data for 1968 and earlier years.

2. This information is not available.

PUBLICATIONS ISSUED ON DRUG QUALITY

Question No. 709—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many publications have been put out listing drug products with criteria of quality since the Drug Information Bulletin "Rx" commenced monthly publication?

2. To how many physicians, dentists, hospital pharmacies, etc., is the Drug Information Bulletin "Rx" sent?

3. What is the total cost of printing and publishing of the Drug Information Bulletin "Rx"?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. One, dealing with Parcost, the Ontario government drug plan.

2. 44,000 English; and 12,000 French.

3. 1970-71 Main Estimates of the Food and Drug Directorate provided $208,000 to cover cost of salaries and printing.

RADAR SURVEILLANCE SYSTEMS FOR MARINE TRAFFIC MOVEMENT

Question No. 738—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many radar surveillance systems are there in Canada for marine traffic movement, and how many additional systems are contemplated at the present time?

2. Where is each marine radar surveillance system located?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Four. (b) Two.

2. Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver. Contemplated: Chedabucto Bay, Quebec.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES AT INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE

Question No. 773—Mr. Southam:

1. (a) Who are Canada's representatives now sitting in at the Geneva conference dealing with proposals to review and renew the International Grains Arrangement (b) who are the Canadian advisors assisting Canada's representatives at this conference?

2. Will Canada have Cabinet representation at this conference similar to the conference held in Geneva in the spring of 1967 and, if not, for what reason?

3. Will the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board make Canada's position clear in connection with this Geneva conference and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. A number of officials from the Federal Government and from other organizations were named to the Canadian delegation for the International Wheat Conference. As the conference has continued for some weeks not all have been in attendance at the same time. The following made up the delegation designated for the conference:

Delegation leader: Mr. M. S. Schwarzmann, Assistant Deputy Minister, Trade and Industrial Policy, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Alternates: Dr. R. P. Poirier, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Agriculture; Mr. D. H. Treleavan, Commissioner, Canadian Wheat Board; Mr. R. M. Esdale, Marketing Advisor, Grains Group, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce; Mr. C. W. Gibbings, Commissioner, Canadian Wheat Board.

Advisors from Government: Mr. E. J. Bergbusch, Permanent Mission of Canada to the Office of the United Nations; Mr. G. E. Blackstock, First Secretary (Commercial), Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, London; Mr. A. F. Burger, Commercial Policy Division, Department of External Affairs; Mr. S. W. Garland, Marketing and Trade Division, Department of Agriculture; Mr. A. L. Halliday, Chief, Special Trade Activities Division, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce; Mr. P. A. Lapointe, Counsellor, Permanent Mission of Canada to the Office of the United Nations; Mr. W. Lavoie, Counsellor (Economic), Canadian Embassy, Paris; Mr. B. Macdonald, Multilateral Institutions Division, Canadian International Development Agency; Mr. W. J. O'Connor, Chief, Grains Division, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce; Dr. C. F. Wilson, Grains Group, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Advisors from other organizations: Mr. R. C. Atkinson, President, National Farmers Union; Mr. G. E. Franklin, President, Manitoba Farm Bureau; Mr. G. L. Harrold, President, Alberta Wheat Pool; Mr. Dobson Lea, President, Unifarm; Mr. A. M. Runciman, United Grain Growers; Mr. H. B. Sneath, Manitoba Pool Elevators; Mr. W. Snell, Canadian Wheat Board, London; Mr. J. I. Stevens, Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee; Mr. E. K. Turner, President, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

2. It is not contemplated that a minister of the Federal Government will attend the present wheat conference but the ministers concerned are in close and regular contact with the delegation. Indeed, ministerial attendance has not been registered by any government for the conference. With respect to ministerial attendance in 1967, this was during the conclusion of the Kennedy Round when ministers from a number of countries were in attendance.

3. Reports will be made to the House as appropriate during the course of the conference.

UNEMPLOYED IN RETRAINING COURSES, ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Question No. 828—Mr. Valade:

How many unemployed people in (a) Ontario (b) Quebec are taking retraining courses?

[Translation]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Statistics on the number of persons presently receiving training who are unemployed prior to the commencement of their training will be available following the end of the fiscal year.

COMMERCIAL VALUE OF STORED BUTTER

What was the commercial value of stored butter on (a) January 31, 1970 (b) January 31, 1971?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Information is available only with respect to butter stored to the account of the Canadian Dairy Commission. The cost to the commission of butter in storage to its account on January 31, 1970, was $43,523,480.39; on January 31, 1971, $43,323,067.14.

DAIRY PRODUCT PROCESSING PLANTS WHERE BUTTER STORED

Question No. 872—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What processing plants for dairy products store butter and receive storage fees?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The following dairy processing plants have stored butter for the account of the Canadian Dairy Commission in fiscal 1970-71: Cooperative Agricole de Abitibi East, Amos, Quebec; La Chaine Cooperative de Saguenay, St. Bruno, Quebec; O. Couture & Fils, La Durantaye, Quebec; Cooperative Agricole de Granby, Granby, Quebec; Cooperative Agricole de Lac Megantic, Lac Megantic, Quebec; Creamery Loranger, St. Eitienne des Gres, Quebec; Placements des Bois-France, Victoriaville, Quebec; Produits Cailette Incorporated, Maskinonge, Quebec; Shefford Dairy Limited, Lawrenceville, Quebec; Cooperative Agricole de Maniwaki, Maniwaki, Quebec; Cooperative Agricole du bas St. Laurent, Mont-Joli, Quebec; Vermette & Fils, St. Agapit, Quebec; Ault Milk Products, Winchester, Ontario; Free's Creamery, Sunderland, Ontario; Kingston Creamery, Kingston, Ontario; Villa Nova Milk Products, Villa Nova, Ontario; Medway Creamery, Ilderton, Ontario; New Dundee Cooperative Creamery, New Dundee, Ontario; Pembroke Creamery, Pembroke, Ontario; Stacey Brothers, Mitchell, Ontario; Teeswater Creamery, Teeswater, Ontario; United Dairy Products Cooperative, Toronto, Ontario; Dairy & Poultry Pool, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries, Regina, Saskatchewan; Manitoba Dairy & Poultry Pool, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Central Alberta Dairy Pool, Red Deer, Alberta; Northern Alberta Dairy Pool, Edmonton, Alberta; Crapaud Creamery, Crapaud, Prince Edward Island; Morell Creamery Cooperative Association, Morell, Prince Edward Island.

SALE OF SURPLUS ONTARIO AND QUEBEC BUTTER TO DEFICIENT PROVINCES

Question No. 899—Mr. Fairweather:

Will the Canadian Dairy Commission sell surplus butter from Ontario and Quebec to provinces which are deficient at the export price?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No.

EMPLOYMENT OF DR. GABRIEL SAAB BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 901—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Does the federal government employ Dr. Gabriel Saab and, if so (a) is he employed by the Department of Agriculture (b) what is his status (c) what is his annual salary?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Dr. Gabriel Saab is (a) under contract with the Economics Branch, Canada Department of Agriculture for the period October 8, 1970 to March 31, 1971, to (b) co-ordinate special projects in the Province of Quebec related to agricultural adjustment requirements, with a salary of (c) $2,000 per month—contract maximum, $12,000.

*LINKING OF SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS TO DEVELOPMENTAL FINANCE

Question No. 904—Mr. Fairweather:

Does the government share the view of the Committee on International Development, headed by the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, that the linking of Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) to development finance would be a useful new aid possibility and, if so, what steps has Canada taken to obtain acceptance of this idea by other governments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has not yet arrived at a final position on the feasibility and desirability of establishing a link between special drawing rights and development finance. We do, however, regard it as an important proposal requiring serious consideration.

[Mr. Olson.]

The question was considered both at the last annual meeting of the Commonwealth Ministers of Finance in Cyprus and the last annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in Copenhagen. It is also under current review in various international institutions such as the IMF and UNCTAD. We ourselves will be giving the matter further careful thought and will be participating in the various international discussions. We would hope in this way to obtain a clearer view of the complex and significant issues involved and to determine the extent to which there might be general international support for establishing a link.

1. Since the Temporary Wheat Reserve Act was introduced, what amount of money has been paid out by the government?

2. In the past 20 years, for (a) wheat (b) oats (c) barley (d) rye (e) flax (f) rapeseed (i) what was the total sales in terms of dollars (ii) what was the total stock on hand at commercial position at the end of each crop year (iii) what was the total domestic disappearance in each year (iv) what were the total exports in each year?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notices of Motions Nos. 9 and 183 are acceptable to the government.

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING INCORPORATION OF NCS FOUNDATION AND TRUST GÉNÉRAL DU CANADA

Motion No. 9—Mr. Saltsman:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the NCS Foundation and Trust Général du Canada regarding its incorporation under the Canada Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS PRESENTED BY CANADA AT CONFERENCE ON ENVIRONMENT

Motion No. 183—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all papers including the policy documents and position papers presented by representatives of Canada in Washington at the three-day Conference on the Environment sponsored by the Atlantic Council of the United States.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, Notices of Motions Nos. 175 and 195 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO INCORPORATION AS MUNICIPALITY OF INDIAN COMMUNITY, CAPE MUDGE RESERVE

Motion No. 175—Mr. Barnett:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of British Columbia on the subject-matter of the incorporation as a municipality of the Indian community on the Cape Mudge Indian Reserve.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO NATIONAL PARKS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Motion No. 195—Mr. Forrestall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, papers and memoranda since March 20, 1970, having to do with the development of National Parks in Nova Scotia including the existing National Parks and proposals for any additional National Parks.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, may I ask you to please call Notices of Motions Nos. 136, 166 and 192.

SURVEY OF PRIVATE MORTGAGE MARKET

Motion No. 136—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the survey of the private mortgage market undertaken by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in September, 1969 to determine whether adequate private funds for housing are available.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing advises that a series of interviews was held in September, 1969, to obtain an indication of the mortgage lending intentions of the approved lenders for 1970. It will be appreciated that, in order to maintain such a close liaison with the approved lenders, discussions of this nature must be considered to be in absolute confidence, and it would therefore not be in the public interest to have them disclosed. If the content of such informal surveys were disclosed, the approved lenders would not be prepared in the future—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary is making a speech and presenting an argument. Under the rules he is entitled to indicate briefly why this motion is not being acceded to by the government. I suggest that he is going beyond what has been accepted practice until now when he makes the kind of statement he is making to the House.

Mr. Jerome: I was just about to conclude by asking the hon. member whether, under those circumstances, he would withdraw his motion.

Mr. Gilbert: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ADVERSE EFFECTS OF CHANGE TO FLOATING DOLLAR

Motion No. 166—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence and other documents between the government and firms or interested parties concerning adverse affects of the change to a floating dollar announced by the Minister of Finance in June, 1970.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the government has reviewed the documents requested in this motion and has found that in most instances the correspondence related to private information about the writers' business operations. As this information is considered to be highly confidential may I ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the government was a lot more selective in its assurances than it led the House and the public to believe last June. I would ask that the question be put.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF POLICY STATEMENT ISSUE TO MANPOWER OFFICES JANUARY, 1968

Motion No. 192—Mr. Lundrigan:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the policy statement or directive issued to Manpower Offices by the Department of Manpower and Immigration in January, 1968 as referred to by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on Tuesday, January 27, 1971.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the directive requested in this motion is part of the department's operational instructions intended to provide guidance and direction to staff in carrying out their work. As such it is considered confidential and may not be tabled. Perhaps the hon. member might kindly withdraw his motion.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have no intention of so doing, Mr. Speaker. I did not expect to get the directive in any event.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Jerome: May I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—REPORTED SALE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he any comment to make on the report that the control of Home Oil has been sold? I ask this question knowing that the minister has been following this matter closely and therefore I assume he can give the House this information.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, Home Oil has not been sold. The parties involved, including potential buyers and the vendor, are in communication with me. I have no further report to make at this time. To the best of my knowledge and information, it has not been sold.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister indicate to the House, not in terms of a long statement, the nature of the measures he is taking to try to preserve control of this company in Canada?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, as these negotiations are extremely confidential with respect to the parties involved, I think it would not be useful if I were to say too much, except that my position has been that it is in the interests of Canada to maintain control and majority ownership in Home Oil in Canadian hands, if that can be done. I have been doing my best in meeting with the parties to persuade them of this position.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the minister making any recommendations to his colleagues that would put other Canadian companies in a position to compete with American companies in the acquisition and control of companies such as Home Oil?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think probably, under the constitutional practices to which we adhere, that my advice to my colleagues is not something that I ought to report in this House. I can certainly assure my hon. friend that I am doing everything possible within the law to maintain this as a Canadian company.

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—IMPORT OF LETTER OF INTENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I direct a supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. It relates to the answer he gave to the Leader of the Opposition in which he said that he had no knowledge of the sale. Does the minister have knowledge of a letter dated January 18? It is a letter of intent relating to the parties and in it his name is mentioned in connection with the sale in question. If the minister has knowledge of this letter, does he take that letter to mean that there is no sale or that there is a sale?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no such documentation of which I am aware; I am not sure of the specific letter to which my hon. friend refers. Any documentation of which I am aware was referable only to proposals or possible sales. I am not aware of any documentation which implemented an executed sale agreement.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the letter I am referring to is the letter filed with the securities commission of the United States and is dated January 18. I cannot pinpoint it more closely except to say that it is a letter of intent. I suggest that the minister has knowledge of the letter. I ask, therefore, if he has knowledge of it and whether he was part of the negotiations leading up to the sale?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I scarcely think that I could be a part of the negotiations. I have been kept aware of the proposals.

Mr. Woolliams: Is the minister aware of the letter?

Mr. Greene: I am aware that there was a written document—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greene: —which, to the best of my knowledge and as I stated, purported to be a proposal or a possible agreement of sale. But it certainly did not constitute a binding agreement of sale. It was only a proposal or a suggestion that might lead to sale.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROGRAMS FOR UNEMPLOYED UNDER 25 NOT ELIGIBLE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS OR MANPOWER TRAINING ALLOWANCES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the unemployment pattern for several months now has followed a consistent pattern in that over 40 per cent of those who are unemployed are under 25 years of age, and since the government has now had ample opportunity to be aware of this pattern and to prepare some programs to meet it, what does the government intend to do for single unemployed persons who are not eligible either for unemployment insurance or for manpower training allowances?

An hon. Member: Fuddle-duddle.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if we want to add anything to the measures we have already taken we will announce it in the House.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a civil question.

Mr. Benson: And the hon. member received a civil answer.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Am I to take it from his reply that the government does not intend to do anything about the 277,000 young people who are out of work, and that the government does not give a damn what happens to these young people?

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He does not give a damn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands knows that he cannot ask a question in those terms. Perhaps he would consider rephrasing the supplementary question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

An hon. Member: If it is in a parliamentary language.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister if he has made any representations or offers to the provincial governments that in the case of single unemployed persons who have not established residence the federal government will meet the full cost of providing welfare for those persons who in the main are being rejected by the municipal authorities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party knows, I think, under the Canada Assistance Plan we cost share 50 per cent of social allowances going to such single people as he has referred to. There is to be no disqualification on the ground of residency. If the hon. member knows of cases where this in fact is being done, since it is contrary to the Canada Assistance Plan I wish he would let me have the information.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT—ACTION TO KEEP PEOPLE ON FARMS INSTEAD OF MOVING TO INDUSTRIAL AREAS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who also has an interest in agriculture in the sense that he answers for the Wheat Board. Since the thrust of government policies is either designed to or has the effect of moving large numbers of people from the farming areas to areas of industrial unemployment, thus aggravating the unemployment situation, will the minister not review with his colleagues this very serious problem to see if there cannot be a change in government policies in order to keep people on the farms?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary question, of course, is in the form of a suggestion or representation to the minister.

PLANS FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Since at the end of April several hundred thousand students will be turned loose on the labour market without much prospect of employment, is he now in a position to outline to the House what plans are being made to employ students during the summer months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There is nothing we can announce today, Mr. Speaker, but we hope to make an announcement.

GROWTH IN LABOUR FORCE—RELATION TO UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that the Canadian labour force grew in 1970 at a much slower rate than the average during the last five years, despite the comment of the Prime Minister in Regina that the labour force had grown at an extremely rapid rate during the last three years, would the Prime Minister say whether the government's forecasts of reduced unemployment are based upon an assumption that the participation of the Canadian people in the work force will continue to be depressed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could point out that the rate has been slower in the last year than it had been in previous years and still be an extremely rapid rate.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister to answer my question. I asked whether the projected reduction in unemployment made by the government is based upon a continued depression of the rate of participation of Canadians in the work force?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has often said, the projections we put to the country we put to the House at the time of the budget. This will be done.

PROGRAM TO PROVIDE JOBS FOR UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of a recent survey by the University of Toronto which indicated a 30 per cent drop in job opportunities for graduates and the recommendation that they seek jobs in other countries, does the minister have any intention of bringing forth a program to provide more job opportunities for these graduates or to provide financial assistance while they seek employment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the over-all situation for graduates, particularly those with advanced degrees, will naturally respond very quickly to the upturn in the economy which is expected to take place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: There are now no specific programs designed for university graduates which are not of the usual sort available to everyone.

UNEMPLOYMENT—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON SETTING UP WORK CAMPS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have there been any discussions between the minister, or an other member of the government, and the provinces with regard to setting up summer camps or work camps in various parts of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been many discussions about a lot of subjects. I would hate to indicate that any particular subject had been excluded therefrom. With regard to the details of any programs which we are seriously considering, an announcement will be made in due course.

INCOME TAX

ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW ASSESSMENTS FOR 1968 AND 1969

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Revenue.

Since the Department of National Revenue has established new assessments, regarding returns which had already been accepted for 1968 and 1969, and in view of the fact that an official of that department has informed me, in a letter dated February 15, that claims would be sent right and left throughout Canada to approximately 9,000 people, could the minister tell us whether, through this method, he intends to recover enough money to make up for what he was unable to collect from the 700,000 unemployed, or whether this is merely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he seems to be launching out into a speech instead of asking a question. If he intends to put a question, I would ask him to do so as fast as possible.

Mr. Godin: Could the minister tell us whether by this procedure he intends to recover sufficient funds to compensate for his loss, due to the 700,000 unemployed Canadians or if he merely intends to show the incompetence of the department during the years 1968—

Mr. Speaker: The remainder of the question indicates that the hon. member was trying to advance an argument.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASE IN COST OF DESTROYER CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF MONEY TO SHIPYARDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Supply and Services or the President of the Treasury Board. It is in connection with the report that the completion cost of the DDH-280 program has now increased by $25 million. I ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether this amount of money has now been alloted to the Sorel Yard, whether it will be divided between the two yards, the Sorel yard and Davie yard, or will there be an additional claim against the treasury of Canada by one or the other yards for $25 million?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in the past several weeks the Minister of National Defence has given assurance to the House that he was undertaking a very complete review of the DDH program. He made that commitment shortly after taking over responsibility for the department. To the extent that my department is involved in the program, I have been working with him on that review. The minister will be appearing before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence tomorrow morning at which time he proposes to table the full report. It is a comprehensive report. In light of that, I do not think a partial or piecemeal answer would be appropriate at this time.

Mr. Forrestall: I accept the suggestion of the minister. The matter will, indeed, be thoroughly gone into tomorrow. In anticipation and to give us some idea of the situation, may I ask if the $25 million has been paid to the Sorel yard?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker. There has been no payment of that amount to the Sorel yard.

POST OFFICE

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND CNTU PRESIDENT—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INCORPORATED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Referring to a statement made at a press conference dy the President of the CNTU last Sunday in Montreal that a letter had been sent to the Prime Minister, soliciting an interview at the earliest possible date in order to obtain clarification of the federal government's policy concerning the CNTU, has the Prime Minister received such a letter and is he prepared to meet the President of the CNTU for such discussions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a letter, but a telegram concerning this matter and I have effectively replied, informing the President of the CNTU that I am prepared to see him. I suggested that the meeting take place on Friday, unless he prefers some day next week, and I have as yet had no reply from him.

Mr. La Salle: Are we to infer from the Prime Minister's agreement to meet the President of the CNTU that he is prepared to discuss or negotiate further the case of the Lapalme workers, in view of the circumstances?

Mr. Trudeau: Since the letter has been made public, the hon. member knows that the gist of the telegram was that the government is discriminating against the CNTU, an allegation which I refuted in my reply as it applies to the facts I mentioned. I invited the President of the CNTU to come and discuss that point and any others, if he so wishes.

Mr. George Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime minister.

Can he say whether he anticipates that specific offers will be made to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc. in order to give them some hope of finding work shortly?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when we made our second series of offers in December, we stated that they were final. Since then, there have been no further offers and I do not anticipate any. I would naturally be delighted to receive the suggestions of members of the official opposition as to what steps should be taken in the interest of the public.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the Prime Minister invited suggestions, could he ask his colleague the Minister of Labour, who seems to have positive suggestions to make, whether he is prepared to advise the House as to the suggestions he intends to make to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc.?

Mr. Trudeau: I can see, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member does not have any ideas.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Has he withdrawn the offer he had made to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc. on their last visit on Parliament Hill where he met with them?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SETTLING OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS PRIOR TO CONSTRUCTION OF PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPELINE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the government appears to be advocating the benefits of the Mackenzie Valley route as the route for the pipeline from the north to the United States, a view with which I agree, will the minister assure the House that before any decisions are made, the aboriginal rights of the native peoples of the territories will be settled in a way that justice will be done to their claims?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member read closely the statement I made on the subject last August, he will remember that we told the companies concerned that we would take the necessary steps to protect the interests of northern residents during the construction of the pipeline, and that we would give the matter priority.

[English]

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL TITLE OF OLD CROW TRIBE PRIOR TO CONSTRUCTION OF PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPELINE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister assure the House that the aboriginal title of the Old Crow Indian people, who have been in possession of their land for centuries, is going to be recognized by the government before any pipeline construction begins?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the Indians' rights was clearly defined when the Indian policy was submitted in June 1969. As regards the Indians of the Old Crow Tribe and the problems relevant to their fishing and trapping rights, I assured them on the occasion of my two visits there that we would do everything possible to protect their interests in any future negotiation.

STATUS OF WHITE PAPER ON POLICY

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arises from the last response he gave. Can he tell the House what has happened to the 1969 white paper on Indian policy? Have any of its recommendations yet been implemented, and does the government still consider this white paper to be the basis of its Indian policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we made certain proposals to the Indians in June 1969, which brought them to hold discussions with the government. I hope that in the next few weeks we will be able to establish a permanent committee made up of department officials and the main representatives of the Indians, so that once and for all fruitful discussions may be implemented between the Indians and the government. I must say that the Indians are satisfied with this development.

ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS BY NORTHWEST TERRITORIES COUNCIL—PROTEST BY NATIONAL INDIAN BROTHERHOOD

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has he yet given consideration to the communication he received from the National Indian Brotherhood protesting the announcement that funds allocated to his department to meet the needs of Indians in the Northwest Territories are to be administered by the Northwest Territories Council, and the fact that this decision was made in the absence of consultation with the Indian people concerned, or their approval?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development: Mr. Speaker, the matter was settled a long time ago when the House asked the government to give greater powers to the territorial council. As a matter of fact, the hon. member was one of the movers of the project. It had been understood that it would be in the interests of all residents of the North to be administered by their local government, and I may add that four natives of the north were elected to the Council of the Territories in the last election.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the statement the minister made a few moments ago that the government's policy is one of consultation with the Indians, does he not think that before making such a transfer of funds the Indians concerned, and their organizations, should have been consulted?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's supplementary is really in the form of an argument. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon in a moment. I have to invite the co-operation of hon. members because we shall be running short of time very soon and a number of members are anxious to ask questions.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Since, obviously, it is government policy to transfer authority to administer this fund to the Northwest Territories Council, when will an announcement be made that similar authority is to be transferred to the Yukon Council?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the question is fundamentally different because, in the Northwest Territories, the majority of the population is made up of Eskimos or Indians. On the other hand, in the Yukon, the Indians represent only a small proportion of the population and they continue to be governed according to the methods used in the past. Should this policy be changed, we shall inform the House in due course.

OIL

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON TRANSMISSION FROM NORTH TO MARKET

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of recent reports that United States oil import restrictions will be dictated only by transmission capacity, will the minister consider convening a conference to discuss oil pipeline requirements in the north to bring northern oil to the market?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Government policy has already been announced with respect to the future construction of a North South pipeline. We are looking forward to the building of such a pipeline but no tangible offers to this effect have yet been received from the industry involved. Whenever we do receive such offers, we intend to inform the companies interested as to the acceptability of the project from the point of view of both resources and populations living in the Northwest Territories.

[English]

Mr. Skoreyko: What I wanted to know from the minister was whether he is prepared to initiate these talks with regard to pipeline requirements.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration.

GRAIN

FAILURE OF INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE TO REACH AGREEMENT ON PRICES—STEPS TO ASSIST CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the minister reporting to the House on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board. I consider it to be a matter of urgency. Now that the International Grains Arrangement is in the last stages of collapse according to the minister's statement last Thursday, will the minister tell the House at the earliest moment possible what emergency steps are being taken by the government to assist the Canadian grain industry in view of this major setback?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I have said before, it is our hope that orderly marketing and a measure of orderly pricing in the international wheat market will remain. The minimum under the International Grains Arrangement which is still in effect has not been maintained in practice but a certain amount of order has been established, notwithstanding. This measure of co-operation is expected to continue so there has been no dramatic change as a result of the failure to reach a further agreement.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Are we to assume from the minister's answer that negotiations are going forward without any diminution of staff or any lessening of the possibility of reaching a full agreement?

Mr. Lang: I believe the statement I made to the House several days ago put the situation quite clearly. I said that some discussions are continuing toward a certain conclusion at this stage, that the question of a more firm agreement with firm pricing provisions would be watched carefully, so that when it seemed appropriate to enter upon fresh discussions they would be begun again.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED USE AS BUILDING INSULATION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Is the government considering an alternative use for wheat as suggested recently by the scientific community, that is, its use as a building material, as an insulator.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am not sure that this particular suggestion has been brought to our attention. I was a little surprised myself at the suggestion that a cubic foot of this insulating material could be produced for eight cents when a cubic foot of wheat is worth a good deal more than that. But I will be glad to look into the matter further.

INQUIRY AS TO REPEAL OF TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Having regard to the indication in the estimates this afternoon that the amount of money available under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act for the current year will be very much reduced, does this signify a firm intention on the part of the government to bring down legislation this session to repeal the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The proposal of the government to do just that had been made clear prior to the tabling of the estimates. The figure referred to by my colleague in the estimates was the figure which would have occurred under the existing law were no change made in it, except for the effect of interest rates and other factors.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REASON FOR SHIPS HAVING TO WAIT TO BE LOADED AT VANCOUVER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Can the minister now inform the House how many vessels were waiting to load in Vancouver on Monday, or as of today if he would prefer to give that information?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The last report I received from the Wheat Board indicated that nine vessels were loading and that none were waiting. If the situation has changed today, I would be glad to check. At different times there have been four or five vessels waiting for berths but they did not wait very long, and grain is continuing to move at nearly record levels.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LACK OF PROVISION IN ESTIMATES FOR DISABILITY PENSION AND ALLOWANCE INCREASES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that there seem to be no estimates in the book he tabled today providing for the 10 and 15 per cent increases in veterans disability pensions and allowances, can the minister tell us how these increases are to be put into effect?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the warning issued by the Secretary General of QFL concerning working conditions on the site of the international airport in Ste. Scholastique, and especially in view of the warning that certain unilingual English-speaking managers are treating their Francophone employees with utmost contempt, is the government inquiring or considering an inquiry on this matter?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised of the difficulties to which the hon. member has referred and have asked for an inquiry. Up to this afternoon, I have not received a report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CITIZENSHIP

HIRING OF ALEXIA ALEXANDROVICH BANDY BY BRANCH

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada. Would the minister please inform the House under whose recommendation Alexia Alexandrovich Bandy was hired for the Citizenship Branch under Information Canada in the Vancouver area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the question might be taken as notice.

Mr. Paproski: The minister knew the question was coming, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is familiar with the matter. I should like to direct the question to him, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order, but I am sure that the hon. member should be given the opportunity to ask his question at this time.

Mr. Paproski: Would the minister please state under whose recommendation Alexia Alexandrovich Bandy was hired for the Citizenship Branch of Information Canada in the Vancouver area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that that was the kind of question that might be put on the order paper, but will draw it to the attention of my colleague.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, if the minister is going to bring it to the attention of his colleague, then may I pose a supplementary. Is the minister stating that the qualifications of people hired by this government will now be that they be known Maoists and fifth columnists?

FINISHING OF WORK ON NADINA SPAWNING CHANNEL—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES RESPECTING FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Currently, the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission is trying to get the United States to provide some $200,000 needed to finish the work on the Nadina spawning channel in northern British Columbia. This work has been stopped because of the failure of the United States government to match the Canadian contribution to the Fraser River rehabilitation project. Since the spawning channel—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask the question.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Crouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I was just trying to lay the groundwork so the minister would understand the basis of my question. Since the spawning channel will return to both nations much more than the relatively small amount of money required to complete it, will the minister communicate with the United States authorities on this matter and report back to the House so that work can resume on this very worth-while project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PROHIBITION OF ISSUANCE OF NON-VOTING STOCK BY CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the lack of knowledge of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I should like to ask the minister whether he is giving any thought to changing the Companies Act to prohibit the issuing of non-voting stock by Canadian corporations? It is the voting stock of corporations that is being sold to foreigners who put up the money.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the premise on which the question is based is wrong, I cannot answer it.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who gave a legal opinion, whether any thought is being given to amending the Companies Act in this regard?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we amended the Canada Corporations Act last session and we are working on a second revision for introduction but it won't be for some time. We will, of course, look at the situation to which the hon. member, I take it, referred to see whether such a provision should be included in the second revision, but it will be a good time in the future.

INFORMATION CANADA

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PERSONNEL INCREASE IN DEPARTMENTAL AGENCIES

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wanted to ask the Minister without Portfolio reporting for Information Canada who was in his seat up to a moment or two ago. Perhaps Your honour would allow someone to take notice of my question.

Having in mind the return made yesterday by the President of the Privy Council indicating a very marked increase in the number of employees, and in the cost thereof, of the various government information departments since Information Canada came into being, I wonder whether the minister would consider making an early statement on motions indicating the cause of this curious situation?

Mr. Speaker: I gather the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary to a previous question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GEORGES BANK—OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION PERMITS—CANADIAN RESPONSE TO UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now in a position to respond to a question that he took as notice on Friday regarding Canada's latest response to the United States position on Georges Bank?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Canada's response to the position that was quoted by the hon. member was to the effect that the United States had already acquiesced in the issuance of the permits in question since in 1964 Canada began issuing oil and gas permits in the Georges Bank area on the basis of the median line principle established by the 1958 Geneva Continental Shelf Convention to which Canada and the U.S.A. are both parties. Canada notified the United States in writing of the issuance of these permits and received a written reply indicating United States acquiescence in this action. We were thus surprised when in late 1969 the United States indicated it did not acquiesce in, or recognize the validity of, such permits.

POLLUTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the hearings in Washington yesterday on the proposed Alaskan pipeline and the remarks of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich to the effect that the Canadian anti-submarine role in continental defence might be affected if the United States persisted in their proposed oil tanker route along the west coast without full consultation with Canada, may I ask the minister whether this statement reflects government policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker it is my understanding that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich spoke in his own right as a Member of Parliament. I do hope that other Members of Parliament will follow his example from time to time, particularly on questions of this kind. He made this statement without consultation with the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Harding: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the hon. member a supplementary, but I must advise the House that I did not grasp the full import of the question asked by the hon. member. He knows that he cannot ask whether a statement made by a member, as a member, outside the House represents government policy. That type of question should normally be asked in a direct manner. However, since the question has been asked the hon. member may put a supplementary.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not answer the question. Is the government prepared to take into account any of the bilateral agreements that we now have with the United States in an effort to persuade the United States government to hold full consultations with Canada regarding the danger that the oil tanker route from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point, Washington, poses to our entire west coast area?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to do so and I will be doing so. I think it is important, however, that the people in that area, whether they live in Canada or the United States, should speak out now on this issue which affects their futures more particularly than the futures of those in other parts of the two countries.

CHARTER SERVICES—POSITION OF WARDAIR FOLLOWING TRANSPORT COMMISSION RULING

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On a number of occasions I have addressed questions concerning the ruling of the CTC as it affected Wardair of Edmonton. I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to say if the situation has been resolved, or what action has yet to be taken in order to bring it to a head?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather difficult question for reasons which the hon. member will appreciate. In the first instance, an appeal has been lodged with me and has not been yet disposed of. Therefore, so far as the appeal itself is concerned I am not free to make any comment. In the interim, however, I understand that Wardair has filed with the commission certain evidence to support their ability to cover deposits and the like, and it is my understanding that they will be able to continue operations as usual beyond the extended period granted, which was till March 1.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When does the minister think he will be in a position to give a decision on the appeal?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I seem to remember that it was only two or three days ago that the formal appeal came in. The notice of appeal was filed two or three weeks ago. I will, of course, try to dispose of it before the expiration of the extension given by the CTC, but I take it that this will not make any difference to the carrying on of Wardair's operations.

FINANCE

ROLE OF PROVINCES IN FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION—COST-SHARING AGREEMENTS TO CREATE JOBS AND PAY WELFARE BUDGETS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is diverted to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Labour outlining government policy in his criticism of the role of the provinces in the fight against inflation? If so, is this the basis of the government's refusal to enter into any new cost-sharing agreements to create jobs or to pay welfare budgets?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first point, my I say this is not a matter of policy but a matter of opinion. With regard to the second point, this is not an assertion of fact. The facts are not as the hon. member has related them.

Mr. Ryan: In light of the statement of the Minister of Labour, is the government concerned that provincial deficits will be inflationary and, if so, is it reconsidering its refusal to provide any further assistance to them?

Mr. Trudeau: There has been no refusal. On the contrary, we have extended assistance to the provinces on an increasing scale as this booklet indicates, and as the various statements by ministers have indicated.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE LIFTING OF BAN ON CYCLAMATES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This is a matter of deep concern to many people who, for health reasons, have to use cyclamates. In view of the fact that cyclamates have been banned in diabetic foods and other foods but are allowed in diabetic medication and infant medication, and in view of the fact that cyclamates can be bought over the counter, will the minister make a statement on motions clarifying whether he proposes to lift this ban and whether the sale of cyclamates is legal or illegal?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, I will make a statement shortly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

PROVISIONS RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION, MINISTRIES OF STATE, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 16, consideration in committee of Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Honey in the chair.

On clause 2—Short title

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order which relates to the fact that in the bill now about to be considered by the committee of the whole, as in several other bills we have considered recently, there is a reference to the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. I wonder whether sometime soon we might have an indication as to when we shall see the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I hope before the end of this session, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. The House is again in committee of the whole on Bill C-207. When the committee rose last evening clause 2 of the bill, with the amendment by the hon. member for St. John's East was being considered.

Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I am glad to see the hon. member for Gaspé getting ready to participate in the debate. I welcome this participation and look forward to it. He is the first member of the Liberal party representing a fishing constituency to show any interest in this particular subject at this stage of our proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Hon. members opposite should restrain themselves because this matter is of some concern. My point of order relates to the tabling in the House today of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972. Those estimates contain a section dealing with the department of environment and, therefore, set out certain items for the current fiscal year in respect of a department which does not exist. That is the substance of my point of order.

In addition, this fact places members of the committee under a severe handicap because we are discussing at the present time an amendment which would have the effect, if it is approved by the committee, of changing the name of this department. This government has been so bold as to anticipate the approval of this measure and has brought estimates forward in the name of the new department. I submit to the Chair and to the committee that this is a contemptuous act on the part of the government. It shows contempt for this House and for this committee. This fact has circumscribed and, indeed, prevented members of the government party from making any useful contribution to the debate. Their hands have been tied by the government they support. The publication of these estimates explains why we have not had any participation by members on the government side of the House, particularly those representing fishing constituencies.

This matter was put to His Honour, Mr. Speaker, before the House went into the committee of the whole in the form of a point of order. It was arranged at that time that should the committee of the whole House see fit to accept my amendment, the government would have to amend the estimates. My point of order is based on that ruling by His Honour, and I want this ruling reiterated by you as the Chairman of this committee. The committee should in no way be circumscribed or circumvented by the government anticipating that members will give approval to this particular part of the bill setting up the department of the environment. In so doing, the government makes this committee a bit of a farce, to put it mildly. This action makes this committee merely a rubber stamp.

Before I pursue my remarks at this stage of the proceedings I should like you, Mr. Chairman, to make a ruling on the effect this act by the government will have on the deliberations of this committee. This committee is charged with the responsibility of studying this bill clause by clause, amending it where amendments are necessary. I should like a clear ruling from you, as the Chairman of the committee, as to the effect this will have. How will it affect our deliberations in light of the amendment now before the committee?

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East has placed a point of order before the committee. I will make a ruling or comment on his point now, unless other hon. members would like to deal with the matter.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, if I may very briefly, I should like to say that when one is considering what actions make a farce of this committee's proceedings, one should remember that it is the hon. member who just spoke who should be doing some soul searching rather than making accusations.

An hon. Member: That's a good way to start.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Muir: Why don't you try some fiddle-faddle, too.

Mr. Jerome: Hon. members should understand that if estimates are tabled when legislation is before the House proposing a change in the name of a department then, at one time or another, an amendment to the substantive legislation or to the estimates will be necessary. If, as the hon. member has proposed, we should take account of the situation at this stage, then the estimates would be tabled in the name of the present department and when the legislation is passed an amendment would have to be made to the estimates.

There is absolutely no difficulty involved in making a change to the legislation or a change in the estimates tabled by the government. The hon. member knows that in either case an amendment will have to be made. If the present amendment carries, then we must anticipate that no amendment will be made to the estimates. If the estimates were tabled under the present name of the department, then obviously we must anticipate some kind of an amendment to the estimates. When the legislation is passed, one way or another, there is a very great possibility a change in the form of the estimates will have to be made. This is simply a matter of attempting to accommodate both pieces of legislation before the House at the same time. There is nothing anticipatory or malicious about it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Would he point out for the enlightenment of the committee where in this book we may find the estimates for the Department of Fisheries and Forestry?

An hon. Member: Come on; get up.

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Until two o'clock today the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's East was simple and clearcut. There was no complication to it whatsoever. As a matter of fact, we had been anticipating a favourable response from the government benches which would indicate that there would be a department of fisheries and the environment. Today, by the omission of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry from the estimates, to all intents and purposes this department has been eliminated. Therefore, a complication is introduced. If the amendment were approved by the Parliament of Canada today, other strings would have to be pulled and other amendments made to existing publications and documents. Perhaps, therefore, the government will not be as eager to accept a most legitimate amendment. So, I cannot accept the position of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. I cannot accept the argument that we are not being jeopardized in this House of Commons by the introduction of these estimates.

The fact is there is a new complication. I submit this will make it much more difficult for the House to accept the amendment which, until now, was clearcut. I think the rights of members have been jeopardized and I think the position taken by the parliamentary secretary is a little on the arrogant side. Perhaps the House of Commons will not accept the bill. Members might decide to throw it in the wastepaper basket. I have looked over these estimates and I cannot isolate fisheries from the environment. I do not know now what are the estimates of the department of fisheries. We are fighting for a livelihood in five provinces which depend almost exclusively on fishing. I suggest there must be a clear indication that members of all parties can effectively vote for our amendment which is an effort to get some status for the fishing industry of Canada.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I was going to say a word or two on the remarks of the parliamentary secretary.

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member and, of course, am anxious for him to speak to the procedural point if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was going to speak to that. It seems to me when amendments are moved to bills by individual members they are moved with the feeling that they will improve legislation. I see absolutely no reason any amendment would be rejected merely for the reasons given by the parliamentary secretary. The amendment was before this House yesterday. We might well have voted on it yesterday or last evening before the estimates were tabled. I want to say that if this is the reason for turning down this amendment, it is one of the most silly reasons I have ever heard from the government side of the House. I wish to suggest that if there is a basic reason that the name should be changed, this Parliament should not hesitate to make that change, regardless of the estimates having been tabled today.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I rise briefly to speak on the point of order raised by my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East. It is quite evident now, after a cursory study of the estimates tabled today, that the department of fisheries has been swallowed up and is losing its identity. We who come from Atlantic Canada have presented our views during this debate on the government reorganization bill and have been critical of this aspect of it. We now realize that our worst fears have been confirmed. We now realize the government, by its action, has literally ignored Parliament because it has assumed, rightly or wrongly, that this bill would be passed without any amendment, even though there is an amendment before the Committee at the present time which would radically change it.

Mr. Davis: It would only change the name.

Mr. Crouse: As the minister of fisheries has stated, it would only change the name. I have paraphrased it correctly. When the minister says it would only change the name, this is an indication of how little importance he attaches to the name, fisheries and forestry of Canada. When one says it would only change the name, this implies that the fishing industry is only a secondary industry and of no importance. This is the very gut issue we have been debating in this House. This is the very thing we, as members from Atlantic Canada, have feared since we first saw the government reorganization bill. I really do not know what members opposite can do to bring some sense to the present government. We really are asking only that the name be changed to the department of fisheries and the environment in order to give recognition to this primary industry which has been recognized by the statutes of Canada since confederation. By abolishing the title department of fisheries, and by not giving the name recognition, I have said before and say again that we lose all the advertising value that would accrue to this industry if the department carried the name fisheries and environment.

Mr. Hogarth: What about forestry?

Mr. Crouse: All right. That is a very good point. I am glad to hear from one of the members sitting over there. Honestly, Mr. Chairman, I had thought that crowd had died. If the hon. member feels that way, he should move an amendment and we will support it. These members of the Liberal party—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: I have the floor, if you will allow me to finish.

The Chairman: Order. With respect I think the hon. member may be dealing with the substance of the argument more than with the point of order. Of course, I will recognize him again but I would hope that after we have dealt with the procedural point of order, the Chair could rule and then we could continue with the arguments.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was answering an interruption by the hon. member for New Westminster. That is one of the fishing constituencies of British Columbia. I really believe he should express his concern on this matter rather than interrupt hon. members who are honestly trying to bring reason and order out of the chaos which has been created by the wording of this bill. I appreciate his interruption and I am willing, as I am sure my party is, to endorse the amendment which he proposed, that we should include forestry in the title of the department.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Hogarth: What about forestry?

Mr. Crouse: The hon. member says, what about forestry. If he moved an amendment that the title of the department should be fisheries, environment and forestry, or environment, fisheries and forestry, we on this side would support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hogarth: What about the wildlife service?

An hon. Member: And what about renewable resources?

Mr. Crouse: We have had departments with lengthy titles before. We have the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and we have had departments set up in order to gratify the ambitions of one or more ministers of this government. If the hon. member wants to make it the department of environment, fisheries, forestry and renewable resources, I will say to him that we have tolerated everything else and we will tolerate that. So, I suggest to the hon. member that he go back to his own seat and move this type of amendment so that we can get on with the business of the House.

We are as concerned with this issue, Mr. Chairman, as are members of the government, but it would appear that progress on the government reorganization bill will be slow because the government started out by mixing apples and oranges, that is, mixing all types of government changes. They put a small amount of sugar on the cake when they named the department of the environment, and of course there are no members on this side who would not like to see our environment cleaned up. We are well aware of what has happened as a result of the pollution of our environment, and we in Atlantic Canada are perhaps suffering more than any other section of the country.

For these reasons, I am pleased to endorse the point of order of the hon. member for St. John's East, and I hope my comments will help you, Mr. Chairman, in reaching a decision on this very important matter.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if I can support the point of order that has been raised. However, I am sure it will be of some concern to you, Mr. Chairman, because it indicates how far away we have come from the previous procedures of the House.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has to take a lot of the blame.

Mr. Peters: Many of us have to take the blame.

Mr. McGrath: That is why he is so quiet.

Mr. Peters: But I am sure that, under normal circumstances, it would be ridiculous to table the estimates of a number of departments, the names of which we proposed to change, while we were still in the position of discussing what we were going to do with these departments. Normally, a government would be willing to make some kind of arrangement. A minister would be able to say that he would accept the idea of having, for example, a department of the environment, plus forestry, plus fisheries. But that is not the way it is done any more. The civil service in this country is so strong now that it is probable the decision to make this change in the estimates was made eight or nine months ago, and now the minister is in no position to make a decision for his colleagues as to whether or not he could accept this amendment.

The point I am making is that you, Mr. Chairman, have a responsibility which I do not envy because if we, as individual Members of Parliament, have any role to play, if there is any point in our discussing the organization bill, it should be to bring forth ideas from various parts of Canada which are affected and to put forth as strongly as possible the views of the people whom we represent. Sometimes, although not often, we were able to make our points strongly enough so that cabinet members saw some merit in them. Unfortunately, I am of the opinion that we have now reached the stage at which the cabinet members cannot make the decision, even if they agree with us. The decision is made some place else. There are 100 or 200 smart young boys who run around making these decisions to throw in pollution or environment, and the parliamentary process is no longer able to reverse them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: I am sure the minister does not have such contempt for Parliament that he would decide to stop the filibuster by bringing in the estimates which annihilate the whole argument because a decision has already been reached. It is surprising that we are now faced with a fait accompli. Nowadays, Parliament is continually being faced with a fait accompli. One of my colleagues said that these situations did not arise during the Diefenbaker years when his government had a majority. The reason is very simple. The right hon. member for Prince Albert understood Parliament and understood the parliamentary process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: He could make a decision. So could other former cabinet ministers, such as C. D. Howe who made a snap decision on a piece of legislation that was before the House. He made the decision during the recess between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m., so when the members reassembled he said "we do not intend to proceed with the bill". He recognized the validity of the point that was being made and decided that the government would not proceed with the bill.

Today no cabinet minister can make such a decision. Every member here is wondering whether or not there is any point in moving a motion to change anything in the reorganization bill when we can see that the decision is a fait accompli, when we know that some smart young fellow made the decision six months ago, as is shown by the estimates. I do not say that the decision was made by departmental heads, because I have known the mandarins of the civil service long enough to know that they do not make that kind of change. Once they are used to the forestry department, they keep that department. I am sure that all the people who are in that department now have a vested interest in it and wish to keep it that way. I am sure that is the case with the fisheries department. Obviously, this decision has been made by somebody else, and I suggest that this somebody else is disregarding parliamentary procedure. Most of us, and you in particular, Mr. Chairman, will have to be concerned with whether or not there is any point in continuing our discussion on the reorganization bill if, in fact, the decision on it has already been made and is irreversible.

Mr. McCleave: I have not had a chance to check the blue book on spending, so I do not know whether the astronomic observatories have shifted their spending program from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to the National Research Council. Perhaps one of my colleagues might look up that point while I am talking. In the meantime, I wish to make a point that has not been made so far this afternoon but which I think none the less is a germane point, namely, that Your Honour has to decide what is in a name and for what it stands. I have a very simple proposition, that it would be wrong for you to accept a program which called for spending by a department of environment and fisheries because the motion to establish that department has not been decided upon by this committee.

So, we start with the fundamental proposition that it would be wrong to attempt to change the name of the department in the manner suggested by the hon. member for St. John's East without having a decision of the committee and, later, a decision of the House. That is obvious. Therefore, I suggest it is equally wrong for any minister of the Crown by his will, or suggestion to present a change of name without anybody here having the opportunity to make a decision, first in the committee and then to approve it in the whole House. Of course, here, I am leaving out the aspect of the decisions made by people in the other House, and the final step, the signature by the representative of the Queen. So, I say in that respect alone, the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East is a perfectly legitimate one.

We all have our names and we all have our identifications. Until those are changed by some lawful act, and not just a statement of intention to change them, we are imprisoned within the names that we have. Sir, may I quote to you from page 58 of our rules Standing Order 58(14) dealing with the business of supply and ways and means. It reads:

> In every session the main estimates to cover the incoming fiscal year for every department of government shall be referred to standing committees on or before March 1 of the then expiring fiscal year. Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

Mr. Nielsen: That is for every existing department.

Mr. McCleave: That is it. The hon. member for Yukon, with that great and instant depth of knowledge that he possesses in the law, points out exactly what I am trying to say. The reference is "for every department of government." Here, we are being asked to take some whim of the man who gave us fuddle-duddle, or of the minister of fisheries. I do not know who brought this about, but we have not okayed it yet. Furthermore, we may not do so for some considerable period of time. This is a sort of Throne Speech debate without limitation. The bill has at least seven different objectives, and so we may spend some time on it. We may even go some time beyond the date of May 31, which is mentioned in the Standing Order. I suggest it is fundamental that we deal with things according to the names which they have, rather than according to the names people suggest. The hon. member for St. John's East has a perfectly valid point of order.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the point of order, I do not think there is a matter of any substance before the House. This House can place any name it wants on this department and the estimates, of course, would have to be reprinted to reflect that name. Several members opposite have raised a ghost that does not exist.

They intend to spend a lot of the time of the House debating whether they have the power to change the name of this department. Why not put it to a vote? They have already made one proposal and, as I say, the House has the power to put any name it wants on this new department.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister permit a question? He has the statutory responsibility at the present time of presiding over the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. Would the minister tell me, as a member of this House charged with that responsibility by the people of my constituency, where in the blue book which was tabled today I can find the estimates for his Department of Fisheries and Forestry?

Mr. Davis: Under the heading "Environment."

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, the minister is not asking the members of this committee to swallow the proposition that the government can place any name it wishes on a departmental estimate?

Mr. Jerome: He said this House.

Mr. Nielsen: This House can do so, but the Standing Order which was read by my colleague a moment ago applies to the existing Department of Fisheries and Forestry, whose estimates do not appear in the estimates that were tabled. The department of the environment is not yet in existence. Each statute establishing a department starts with the words, "There shall be a department of—" and then follows the name of the department.

So far as this committee and the House are concerned, there is no such animal as a department of the environment. Therefore, how can the minister come out now and say that the government or the House of Commons can name this department anything they please, considering the Standing Order read by my colleague? The fact is that the department of the environment is not yet in existence. The law, by virtue of our Standing Orders, requires that the estimates of each existing department be tabled. The estimates of the existing Department of Fisheries and Forestry have not been tabled, and since the department of the environment is not yet in existence the law is not being complied with. It is that simple.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a supplementary question concerning the referral of the estimates to a particular standing committee, something which is customary. Since the government has changed the title of this department in the estimates tabled today, does it also anticipate that the present Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will be changed to the standing committee on the environment. At the moment that standing committee is composed of ten members, whereas the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, which has been in existence long before I became a member of the House, is composed of 20 members?

Mr. Davis: The answer to that question is that it would be our intention to refer the estimates put forward in the blue book under the heading "Environment" to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Perhaps, in my own words, I could interpret what has happened. It takes some time to prepare all these items contained in the estimates, and it was expected that this government organization legislation would have been passed by now, or certainly would have been at a more advanced stage. So, all of the items which are presently administered under Fisheries and Forestry are under the heading "Environment" in the blue book.

Anyone who reads the second page of this bill will see references to fisheries, forestry, wildlife, water, meteorology, and so on, are presently under Fisheries and Forestry, but the branches, divisions and agencies of which will be transferred to the department of the Environment if that name, as presently printed, is retained in the bill. If the amendment now before the House is accepted and the department is called fisheries and the environment, these estimates would have to be reprinted under the heading "Fisheries and the Environment".

Mr. McGrath: But I do not have the right to anticipate that parliament will pass my amendment.

Mr. Davis: I would not bet on it.

Mr. Whicher: May I remind hon. members that although no department of environment exists as of today, it is equally true that these estimates will not take effect until April 1, 1971. They are for the period from April 1, 1971, until March 31, 1972. I know members of the opposition want to get on with the business of the House in a businesslike way, and surely they know it takes a long period of time to print a book such as the blue book. I suggest that the civil servants have been working on these estimates for almost a year and a half. Hon. members must give the government some consideration when criticizing it. In their opinion, on April 1, 1971, in other words, a little over one month from now, this new department will be called the department of the environment—

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: The government has no right to make that change.

Mr. Whicher: If the House wishes to change the name and to say to the government, "You are wrong," this is the time to say that to the government. I suggest that we had better do it in the next five minutes, because we shall never have a better chance in our lives. The government must take the responsibility for what happens, as must this Parliament which represents the people of Canada. The House can say to the government either, yes or no. So, I say to my hon. friends to my left, we have been considering this bill for about 13 days; let us get on with the business of the House. The hon. member for South Shore said earlier that the passage of this government reorganization bill will be very slow indeed. What he did not say, but what he meant I am sure, is, "If you do not bow to our wishes." In other words, Mr. Chairman, he is threatening not only Parliament but the people of Canada, who are asking us to get on with the business of running this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Let me say in conclusion that the people of Canada are not interested in the kind of nonsense that some hon. members are bringing forward this afternoon. Some hon. members have threatened—

An hon. Member: That is a reflection.

Mr. Whicher:—to talk for the next 30 or 40 days if we do not do as they wish. May I remind hon. members that there are many serious problems in Canada which need to be tackled. The government wants to tackle them and we backbenchers want to tackle them. We are a little sick of arguing whether a department should be named this, that or another thing. If hon. members do not like the name that is proposed, they may bring in an amendment as they have done. But let us not talk for one week; let us have the vote and get down to business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have not participated previously in this debate. With all respect may I say to the hon. member for Bruce, who may have imputed motives to hon. members, and may I say to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry as well as to the hon. member who sits muttering in his seat and who says more when sitting down than when standing up—

An hon. Member: What is the point of the hon. member's remarks?

Mr. Nowlan: I am coming to that. I say that the argument with respect to the point of order does not hinge on the name. It is not whether the name ought to be the department of fisheries, forestry and the environment, or the department of the environment, fisheries and forestry. That is merely the catalyst for the point of order. My hon. friend from Bruce says, "Let us go on with the business of the House; the people want Parliament to go on with the business of the country; let the committee get on with its business." I agree. Every Member of Parliament wants to carry on the business of the House and of the country, according to the laws of the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: The point of the matter is not the name that is being discussed; as I say, that was the catalyst for the point of order. If one were to follow the logic of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, as he is now called, and of the hon. member for Bruce, we might as well close shop. Since the government can anticipate the expenditure of X dollars with respect to all sorts of departments, it need not come back and ask for more money. The argument of the minister and of the hon. member for Bruce, if accepted, would tear to shreds something we know as supplementary estimates. I know, as does the hon. member for Bruce who sat in a provincial body before coming here, that the government cannot cross all the "t's" and dot all the "i's" with respect to any department's expenditures for one year. It cannot be that accurate before the production of the blue book. Provision must be made for contingencies; the department, or the government, must come before parliament or a committee of the House and file supplementary estimates.

After the supply bill becomes law, and further expenditures are incurred, the departments concerned must file supplementary estimates to take care of the new expenditures. Supplementary estimates will need to be filed to take care of the additional expenditures of the new department and for contingencies with respect to the old department that were not foreseen. No one suggests that the government should not shoulder its responsibilities and not try to plan ahead. The argument has been over the name of the department. I submit that the nonsense spoken by the hon. member for Bruce, and I will put it in the best light that I can—

Mr. McGrath: It is naïvety.

Mr. Nowlan: —displays a naïvety about our entire constitutional framework and the way the system is supposed to work. This type of bill creates confusion. Hon. members are trying to embark on a cogent debate on the various clauses of the bill, but it deals with so many subjects that the debate, as one hon. member has said, is as wide as the Speech from the Throne. Although we have been talking on the bill for 13 days, we are still dealing with one subject matter; and we must deal with many more subject matters.

May I say that confused logic has brought about this point of order. The reason for the point of order does not lie in the name change being sought. It is the logic behind some of the answers with respect to the catalyst that brought on the point of order that disturbs me very much. If we follow those arguments to their logical conclusion, we might as well close shop and call a spade a spade. Then, I suggest that the hon. member for Bruce and other backbenchers who come here will only find that their problems have been compounded and not solved.

Mr. McGrath: We might as well all go home.

Mr. Paproski: And the President of the Treasury had the nerve to call this a filibuster. Shame.

The Chairman: The hon. member for St. John's East raised the point of order at the beginning of the committee discussion. I want to thank him for bringing this very important matter before the committee and to thank all hon. members who have contributed and been of assistance to the Chair. The hon. member for St. John's East and other hon. members have asked me to make a clear ruling. I do not know whether I can do that, but I shall try. I will briefly refer to a few arguments that I think are important.

It was urged very strongly on the Chair by many hon. members who spoke that the tabling of the estimates this afternoon in the form in which they are will make the acceptance of the amendment now before the committee more difficult. In essence, the amendment will add the word "fisheries" to the name in that part of the bill now being considered as set out in clause 2. I understand the argument. I agree that it will make it more difficult.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I agree. From my knowledge gained in the years that I have been in this chamber, I think it will be more difficult to do that.

Mr. McGrath: But?

The Chairman: The hon. member says, "but". I was just going to say but it is not an argument that the Chair can take into consideration when ruling on the point of order. As hon. members know, my ruling must be made in accordance with the Standing Orders, practices, procedures and authorities that we must follow in the committee. I must assume, of course, that hon. members will exercise their undoubted right to speak and vote. One of my responsibilities as Chairman of the committee is to ensure that privilege to hon. members.

I think that the debate on the point of order has been a very useful one. I must assume that hon. members, if and when the amendment comes to a vote, will, as they will on all questions relating to this bill, exercise their rights as Members of Parliament. I cannot assume, of course, that they will do otherwise, because all hon. members are anxious to protect their rights and privileges.

There is another point I wish to make. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants referred to Standing Order 58(14). Again, a cogent and logical argument was presented. It is not one that the Chair can give effect to in making the ruling, because the referral was made by the House earlier this day on division.

Another point which was urged on the Chair by the minister and the hon. member for Bruce may very well be a good argument, but certainly not one the Chair can consider. The argument is, and I am paraphrasing, that the committee has spent a long period of time on this bill and should get on with its business. That may be a good argument from a substantive point of view. I do not want to pass judgment on that. My position as Chairman, is to ensure that within the Standing Orders and the practices of the committee, hon. members have every opportunity to which they are entitled to debate this amendment, clause or any other clause in this bill.

While the arguments made by members on both sides appeal to me, I have to make my ruling on what I consider to be the legal position. I have to rule that the tabling of the estimates today should not interrupt or in any way interfere with the debate on the amendment before the Committee. I have to make that ruling.

Mr. McGrath: I do not know what my position is under the new rules, but it seems that Your Honour's ruling has placed the committee in a difficult, if not impossible, position. We do not have estimates for the Department of Fisheries and Forestry in front of us notwithstanding the statute, which is the law of Canada. We are discussing an amendment to the government's organization bill. The government has been presumptuous, and shown contempt, by anticipating that the House will eliminate the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. I find that this committee is placed in a difficult, if not impossible, position. I cannot see how we can proceed.

Mr. Jerome: Sit down then.

Mr. Hogarth: Sit down if you don't want to proceed.

Mr. McGrath: Notwithstanding the interjections made by the hon. member from his seat, which is all he has been doing since this debate started, I feel we cannot proceed as a result of Your Honour's ruling.

The Chairman: As the hon. member for St. John's East is entitled to do, he has appealed the ruling of the Chair. My position is to state the appeal to Mr. Speaker. Will the committee now permit me to do that?

Mr. Paproski: I would like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Speaker is not in the Chair. At this point I have no authority.

Mr. Paproski: Will you settle for 4:25, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if hon. members opposite are prepared to stand this clause for a moment and go on with the next clause of the bill.

Mr. Peters: That does not follow.

Mr. Paproski: You are in a complete mess. Why should we wait?

The Chairman: Order, please. The committee has some difficulty. The hon. member has appealed the Chair's ruling to the Speaker, as he is entitled to do. The difficulty is that, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker is not in the building at this moment. He will be returning, but I have no information as to when. This is something the committee will have to decide. I express a preference when I mention the alternatives. One is that as Deputy Speaker, if the committee so wishes, I could take the Chair and rule on an appeal on my own ruling. I do not want to do that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has been done before.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says it has been done before. I understand that is the case. I would do that very reluctantly. Of course, I am at the service of the committee. The alternative is to stand the matter of the ruling on the appeal as well as the amendment, by unanimous consent of the committee, and proceed with another part of the bill now under consideration by the committee. I will be pleased to hear from hon. members as to which course they wish to pursue.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion seems eminently sensible. The committee agreed yesterday that, in the absence of the minister concerned, we would not proceed with those parts of the bill until such time as he was in the House. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has explained his absence this afternoon. I suggest that we proceed with Part III of the bill, which does not involve a minister who is absent, nor does it involve a department whose name is being changed for which an appropriation is being entered in the estimate book, which after all are only a set of proposals as is the bill.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I submit with respect to the suggestion made by Your Honour, that Your Honour has no jurisdiction to continue the sitting any longer. The point of order having arisen pursuant to the Standing Order, the ruling which has been appealed must be put to Mr. Speaker before we can continue. Beauchesne's citation 59(4) requires Your Honour to maintain order in the committee of the whole and decide all questions of order subject to an appeal from the House. I submit that the question of order must be put to Mr. Speaker forthwith. It is very unfortunate that His Honour is not here so that this can be done. I urge upon Your Honour that the jursidiction to do anything else simply is not here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, surely we do not have to spend any time on that point of order. The hon. member for Yukon is perfectly right. The rule has to be followed unless there is unanimous consent. Either there is or there is not unanimous consent.

The Chairman: That is the very point the Chair tried to make when I indicated that I was without jurisdiction and subsequently made suggestions. Of course, there must be unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: There is no unanimous consent. The committee is adjourned. I say, subject to correction, that I have no jurisdiction as chairman of this committee. As the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre have pointed out, I have lost jurisdiction unless the committee is unanimously prepared to give it to me.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No, it is not.

The Chairman: The Chair put the question and there was no unanimous consent. I think I have lost jurisdiction, and I do not feel I should try to assume it in the absence of unanimous consent.

Mr. Drury: On a point of order, I understand there has been an appeal from your ruling while the committee was discussing clause 2 of the bill. Subject to Mr. Speaker's ruling on that question we obviously cannot proceed on it. Do I understand, however, that because an appeal has been made on this particular point of order Your Honour has no jurisdiction to continue while the committee considers other parts of the bill which are unrelated to the point at issue? I do not think hon. members would want to say that you had no competence, or no jurisdiction to preside over this committee while it dealt with parts of the bill unrelated to the point of order or the appeal in question.

Mr. Nielsen: As to the point just raised by the President of the Treasury Board, I believe the ruling is clear. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out, in the absence of unanimous consent the committee cannot go on with any business—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Nielsen: I heard the word "No". I do not know where it came from.

An hon. Member: I do.

Mr. Nielsen: Unanimous consent was not forthcoming.

Mr. Jerome: What rule is that?

Mr. Nielsen: I have just shut the book and I have forgotten the number. I did quote it in my previous remarks. I do not think the committee can proceed with any business until the question has been dealt with.

Mr. Paproski: I do not wish it to be thought that it was I who said no to the question asked by Your Honour in the last few minutes. I heard one of the members opposite mention my name, but I cannot recall saying "No" at that time. I would just like to have that on the record.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, since Your Honour is still in the chair and talk is still going on, I wonder if I may say a word. I trust hon. members realize that if we follow the rule, if we do not give unanimous consent to vary the practice, then Your Honour, you, the same person, will take the chair. At that point we shall have the same debate over again and Your Honour will be called upon to rule again. It will be a ruling on your own decision, and from that ruling there would be no appeal.

It would seem to me that if I were appealing this ruling—and I did not do so—I would prefer to have someone else pass judgment on it than to ask you, Mr. Chairman, to pass judgment on a ruling you, yourself had made. I would think, therefore, that those who want an appeal would be serving their best interests if they were to give unanimous consent for the House to carry on with Part III or Part IV of the bill, then come back to this question when Mr. Speaker himself is back in the chamber to hear fresh argument as to whether Your Honour, as chairman of the committee of the whole, made the correct ruling. I have some thoughts about that ruling but I shall not express them now. I just hope we can carry on.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I did not refuse unanimous consent and I want the record to show that.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes.

Mr. McGrath: I am trying to facilitate the procedure of the committee and help Your Honour. There has been some difficulty in understanding the procedure. However, it has been well outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I feel that what he has said is very relevant and it is my impression that if the Chair were again to ask for unanimous consent it would be forthcoming.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Well, I will do that, but it will be on behalf of the committee. I have indicated my position. I think it is a correct one in accordance with our Standing Orders and practice. However, if the committee wishes me to do so, I will again ask if there is unanimous consent. In order that we may be clear on the point, I understand that if there is no dissent the committee will proceed to consideration of clause 12.

Is there unanimous consent?

On clause 12—National Research Council.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise only to ask whether the President of the Treasury Board, who has this institution under his jurisdiction, intends to make a statement as to the general work he proposes doing as a result of this alteration or extension of his powers. It seems to me the committee would be glad to hear him now if he has a general statement to make.

Mr. Drury: Since our examination of the bill has now been going on for some 12 days, I would hesitate to lengthen the proceedings by repeating what I had to say at the outset of the debate in relation to this particular function. I am sorry the hon. gentlemen was not here then.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I was.

Mr. Drury: In that case, the hon. gentleman will be able to recollect what I said and perhaps there is not much point in my further burdening the committee today.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee should now proceed to consider Part IV of the bill?

On Clause 14—Establishment of Ministries of State

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Part IV deals with ministries and ministers of state, and it seems to me we ought to follow the practice we have followed up to now. When we dealt with Part I, the minister-designate for the department of the environment was present. I understand that when we deal with part II the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be in attendance. Since Part IV deals with ministries and ministers of state, I think the Prime Minister should be here because it comes directly under his jurisdiction. He is the one who is to select these ministers of state. He is the person who will allocate various responsibilities to them from time to time. This is an entirely new procedure, establishing ministers of state, and it seems to me that only the Prime Minister is in a position to tell the committee why he is introducing this innovation, what are the reasons behind appointing ministers of state, why the number is to be five, and so on. There are a great many questions here which, it seems to me, with all deference to the President of the Treasury Board, do not come within his discretionary power. The Prime Minister ought to be here for this part of the debate. If he canonot be here at this time, let us move on to another part of the bill until the Prime Minister can attend the committee and take part in the discussion.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I trust I am correct in assuming that we are dealing with clause 14 in Part IV of the bill, which has to do with the appointment of ministries and ministers of state. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has just said, the person who is responsible for explaining this part of the bill is the Prime Minister. At the moment the proceedings in the committee remind me very much of a group of children playing house. The President of the Treasury Board has not got a clue what the Prime Minister has in the back of his mind with regard to these new appointments. If he has, then perhaps he will rise in his place and tell the committee who are the appointees that the Prime Minister has in mind. Again I say, with no disrespect to the President of the Treasury Board, that the minister does not have a clue who is going to fill these places.

More important still than the actual bodies that will fill these places is the question why there are going to be filled and what the responsibilities of the appointees will be. The minister probably does not know even that. I support the suggestion of the previous speaker that this is too broad a clause for the committee to discuss unless we have before us an expert witness who can explain—

An hon. Member: What about Lloyd?

Mr. McCutcheon: Well, even he cannot specify the matters in relation to which ministers must formulate and develop policies. So, with great respect, Mr. Chairman, I strongly recommend to the committee that we stand this clause and move on to another part of the bill about which we can get some factual information from some responsible person on the other side of the House. Once more may I say I mean no offence to my good friend the President of the Treasury Board.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the remarks of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) as well as those of the hon. member who spoke before him, and their arguments have seemed valid to me. When one reads Part IV of the bill under consideration, the first question which comes to mind is whether the increase in the number of Ministers of State, Ministries of State and parliamentary secretaries is justified.

That part of the bill tends to increase the number of ministries, and to appoint new Ministers of State, as well as parliamentary secretaries. Why? What will be the role of those ministries? For what purpose are they established? What will be the duties of the new Ministers of State and their salaries? Why appoint more Ministers of State? What justification is there for creating a chief executive officer's position?

Mr. Chairman, those are questions that we of the opposition are asking ourselves. If, to speed up our discussion, we attempt to refer to that same Part IV so as to find answers to questions which are essential ones—since they concern the expenditures of public funds—the only thing to do is to read section 21 entitled "Duties of Minister". The duties of those ministers will be the following and I quote:

> In addition to the powers, duties and functions specified in the proclamation establishing a Ministry of State, the powers, duties and functions of the Minister for that Ministry extend to and include such other matters as are assigned or transferred to the Minister or the Ministry by or pursuant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, that is extremely vague, it does not specify anything, does not justify anything.

Before ascribing intentions to the government, we would be grateful if it gave us, through the sponsor of this bill, a justification for Part IV, otherwise we will have to object at least to that part of the bill.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point just made by the leader of my party with regard to this particular section of the bill, in view of the fact that just before we reached this Part we had been making very rapid progress and actually passed a complete Part of the bill—

Mr. Drury: One clause.

Mr. Barnett: —the complete Part III of the bill—and in view of the fact that it does not appear the Prime Minister is in the chamber, I am wondering whether this might not be the appropriate point for the committee to revert to Part II of the bill and deal with the matter raised in connection with the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to interfere with the smooth operations of this committee. If there is an opportunity for a decision to be rendered, I would be quite pleased to continue the next thrilling episode of my remarks at a later stage; but until that is the situation I will proceed with the few remarks I have to make on clauses 14 and 15.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I still want to raise the question whether or not the Prime Minister is going to be here. We can discuss clause 14 and the hon. member can make his speech, but surely we ought to know from the President of the Treasury Board, who is piloting this section of the legislation through the committee of the whole, whether the Prime Minister will attend the committee at some stage when the committee is discussing both Part IV, which has to do with ministries and ministers of state, and Part V, which has to do parliamentary secretaries.

I do not want to repeat what I said before but these are matters coming strictly within the purview of the Prime Minister of Canada. There is a very little value in our simply talking to ourselves in this committee; we should be able to ask the man who is advancing these ideas, and who will be exercising the very extensive powers we are being asked to give him, what use he intends to make of them. If we are not to make a farce of this committee, if we are not to make it some little debating society held in the corner while the Prime Minister and other ministers go about their business, then surely the Prime Minister ought to be here.

I do not intend to urge that we do not proceed at all, but I am saying that none of the clauses in this Part IV should be passed until the Prime Minister is here either to make a statement or to answer questions and give the committee of the whole some information regarding the reasons for the very extensive and unusual powers he is asking Parliament to vest in him. For that reason, I hope before the hon. member for Peace River continues the President of the Treasury Board will indicate whether we will have the advantage of the Prime Minister's presence at some time while these two parts of the legislation are being discussed.

The Chairman: Order, please. If it meets with the approval of hon. members of the committee the Chair might now take the appeal to Mr. Speaker. Is that generally agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and the Chairman of the Committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, the question is an appeal of a decision of the Chairman of the committee of the whole under the provisions of Section (4) of Standing Order 55 as follows:

When clause 2 of Bill C-207, an Act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, was being considered in the committee of the whole at yesterday's sitting, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) proposed an amendment as follows:

"That clause 2 of Bill C-207 be amended by striking out the words 'Department of the Environment' where they first appear, immediately after clause 1 on page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the words 'Department of Fisheries and the Environment'.

When the committee resumed at this day's sitting, the hon. member for St. John's East raised a point of order as to the procedural position of the proposed amendment in view of the tabling this day of estimates covering the department of environment, which Part I of Bill C-207 would establish.

The Chairman ruled that the amendment had been proposed in accordance with the usages and practices of the House, and that in relation thereto the tabling of the estimates had no procedural effect on proceedings on the proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If it meets with the approval of the House, the Chair is prepared to hear argument from hon. members before making a determination or ruling in respect of the hon. member's appeal.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rose on the point of order which is the subject of the appeal to Your Honour because I felt then, as I do now, that hon. members of the whole House have been placed in a difficult if not impossible position by virtue of the fact that the government has proceeded to give effect to what was heretofore merely a proposal to set up the new department of environment.

In connection with the amendment to Bill C-207, I suggested that the proposed name, the department of environment, be changed to the department of fisheries and the environment. My amendment was moved before the estimates for the fiscal year 1971-72 were tabled in the House today. These estimates indicate that the government has anticipated how the committee would react to the proposals set out in Bill C-207. I maintain that the government has no right to anticipate Parliament in this manner, just as I have no right to anticipate that the House or the committee might accept my amendment.

I submit to you, Your Honour, that I might have assumed my amendment would be accepted by the committee and taken steps to put this into effect. I have the same rights and responsibilities in this House as the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), or any other member of the House whether he sits in the treasury benches or elsewhere.

The rights of this House are at stake, and my point of order is simply that the committee of the whole has been placed in an impossible position because of action taken by the government. Obviously, members who sit on the government side of the House will oppose my amendment because the estimates tabled today by the government constitute or represent a clear instruction to supporters of the government as to how they should vote in respect of my amendment.

For those reasons I raised this point of order when the House went into the committee of the whole today to resume consideration of Bill C-207. I might point out that the government could have proceeded in the normal manner by bringing in supplementary estimates if, in fact, the House gave authority to the government to set up the new department of environment. The government could then proceed with the consideration of supplementary estimates are supposed to be reported to the House in government.

The second point I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention is that we are now in the midst of a debate which will substantially change the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. Not only will that department be changed in name but also in substance. As a result of this measure, we will be creating a whole new department which will take in the old Department of Fisheries and Forestry. In this connection, I should like to raise another point for your consideration. I am placed in a difficult position, as are other hon. members of the House, by virtue of the fact that nowhere in the estimates tabled today can we find estimates in respect of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. After all, this is still a department of this government by the law of this land. These estimates are supposed to be reported to the House in accordance with orders of this House and the laws of this country.

For these reasons, I submit to you, as I submitted to the committee, that members of the committee have been placed in an impossible position in considering my amendment. This is the result of action the government has taken in tabling estimates and by anticipating that the House would support the government rather than my amendment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is another of those questions which is in part substance and in part procedure. It is always difficult to separate the two in respect of questions of this kind. This is a difficulty I face as well, but I shall try to relate the main portion of my remarks to the procedure rather than the substance.

On the point of the substance, may I express complete agreement with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, and with other members on this side of the House, regarding the way in which the government has, time and time again, presented Parliament with a fait accompli. This blue book tabled today contains many matters of policy which we now realize have been settled. Far too much of our time is spent in dealing with matters already determined before they reach us. I do not like this and I do not think it is good for Parliament. I think the government should lean over backwards to avoid this kind of thing.

I agree with my friend that it is particularly offensive that the estimates should have been tabled today during a debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) yesterday, because these estimates indicate that the matter has already been decided. There is going to be a department of environment and there is no chance that the amendment will carry. As I say, I find that offensive, and this is a practice which is indulged in far too often. I do not like it.

You have been called back into the Chair, however, not to listen to our grievances against the government, for you are well aware of them. You have been called back into the Chair to rule on a point of order. Specifically, you are asked to rule whether the Chairman of the committee of the whole was correct in the ruling he made an hour or so ago. I rise in that respect to urge you to confirm the ruling of the Chairman. What did he rule? He ruled, Mr. Speaker, that the tabling today of the book of estimates does not alter the position of the amendment moved yesterday by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He ruled that we may still debate that amendment and may have a free vote on it. That free vote may be meaningless on the government side but that is a point of argument which may be used in the debate. I confess, however, to some mystification concerning why my hon. friend from St. John's East appealed the ruling. The ruling was on his side. It was to the effect that the tabling of the blue book of estimates today with its reference to the department of the environment made no change.

I was a little surprised yesterday that there was not a procedural argument about the amendment. The Chairman gave the government side the opportunity to bring forward procedural argument if members on that side wished to do so. They did not. The Chairman ruled the amendment was in order and was properly before the House. The only kind of point of order that would upset things today would be a point of order against the propriety of the amendment before us. But the Chairman of the committee of the whole ruled today that the amendment he ruled in order yesterday is still in order, is still debatable, and that we still have the right to vote on it. It would seem to me that my friends to the right have not completely comprehended the situation when they appeal against a ruling which really is on their side.

While I am on my feet may I just express the hope that, since the spokesmen for the government side have already indicated there is still complete freedom to vote for the amendment, some of them over there will prove that freedom by voting for it when the vote comes.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we in the Ralliement créditiste are in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

First of all, we deeply regret—and we have said so many times—that the government goes ahead without taking into account the decisions of Parliament. We feel that in doing so it violates the rights and privileges long ago secured by Parliament.

On the other hand, the fact that we now have to call on your expertise is due to a number of things and mainly to the publication of a Blue Book which took place simultaneously with the presentation of an amendment aimed at changing the name of a department.

Now, the Blue Book just published by the government anticipates evidently on the vote of the House. The normal conclusion is that our present debate is an exercise in futility, not as it concerns the ability of Your Honour, but the substance of the argument.

I feel that the decision of the committee chairman was valid—we want him to know that we do not deny his ability—and, accordingly, we suggest that your good judgment and good offices should serve Parliament, protect the rights of the members and take into consideration the proceedings of the House.

This is one-sided legislation that anticipates on the decisions of Parliament, that scoffs at the views expressed by the opposition members and at their work, allegedly because whatever comes from the opposition is bad.

Mr. Speaker, you will no doubt forgive this remark issuing from a deep sense of frustration: "If this is Parliament, it is only a joke!" If Parliament is indeed the place where legislation is made, account should be taken of the Standing Orders which provide that all hon. members, whatever their political allegiances, must be allowed to contribute to the debates and legislation.

This is why, Mr. Chairman, we rely on your ability and hope that your ruling will be in favour of Parliament and not of the government.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it is not the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who is confused concerning the point of order he raised but obviously the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who did not fully comprehend the purpose of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, I did.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for St. John's East is not complaining about the fact that his amendment is accepted and is before us for debate. To clear up the mystification of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the appeal by the hon. member for St. John's East, what he is complaining about, and what he complained about before the Chairman of the committee of the whole, was not the fact that his amendment was accepted but rather the fact that the government, having already made the decision that the new department of the environment was to be created, in fact has denied this committee the opportunity to make a free decision concerning the name of that department.

The evidence that the government has made the decision lies in the tabling of the estimates today. During the debate on the point of order, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) referred to Standing Order (14) which reads as follows:

> In every session the main estimates to cover the incoming fiscal year for every department of government shall be referred to Standing Committees on or before March 1—

The rule continues. The important words are "the main estimates to cover the incoming fiscal year for every department of government". These words obviously refer to a department of government in existence. The government having made the decision to table its estimates in the form in which they have been tabled, designating the new department of the environment, leaves us with the situation that the department has in fact been named.

While the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says we are not precluded from debating the amendment moved by the hon. member we are, in fact, precluded as a committee from making a free decision on that amendment. The decision has been made and this shows the government's utter contempt for Parliament and parliamentary procedures. The government has made the decision, so any debate concerning the name or the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's East is an absolute exercise in futility. The fact is that the law as evidenced by the Standing Orders of this House requires the government to table estimates of the departments in existence. The government has done that and, in doing so, has changed the name. That is the essence of the complaint of my friend; that is, the function of this committee has been usurped by the government. That was the point of his appeal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, the Chair, under the rules and practice, has the power to call a halt to the advice which is being given to the Chair. I would think I have heard quite enough at this point to reach a decision and give a ruling but at the same time, since this is an important matter, I would not like hon. members to think they have been deprived of their rights to enlighten the Chair, which does require enlightenment from day to day. I notice there are a few hon. members who still wish to take part in the debate and I will hear them provided they do it as briefly and succinctly as possible.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I will just take a minute if that is possible. As I understand it, the hon. member who challenged the ruling suggested the government had gone over the head of Parliament by naming in the blue book the department of the environment instead of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. May I respectfully point out that everything in this blue book is an estimate or an anticipation. These figures in the blue book are not facts; they are simply estimates on which the government has instructed civil servants to work a year and a half ago and which it has brought here to Parliament. Now, parliament has the opportunity on every single estimate in that blue book to change those figures. We have the right to do it. May I respectfully point out that we also have the right at any time to change the name of a department, and if perchance Parliament decides that there should be no department of the environment, all we have to do this afternoon is to vote against it. We could vote against it at any other time that a responsible motion is brought forth to change the name of any department.

The hon. member suggested that the blue book was brought in here as a completely factual document. May I respectfully point out that the budget figures in the estimates are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972. This book, in reality, is dated April 1, 1971, and in anticipation of April 1, 1971, the government has named this department the department of the environment. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the opposition, that the government has in no way interfered with the power of Parliament. We have the right to do as we wish today, tomorrow or any day in the future.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I will be very brief in my comments. I just want to reiterate, in a slightly different way, what has already been suggested by other hon. members. What strikes me about the tabling of the estimates today in relation to the debate that is going on is that it makes the debate appear to be a complete hoax. It indicates that the government has made a decision on the result of the vote and there is no question in my mind that the tabling of the book with the change in name to the department of the environment will have a definite influence on how government members will vote on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I think, therefore, that the government should have either withheld the tabling of these estimates until the vote was carried out and the bill was passed, or they should withdraw them now and bring back the blue book containing the present name of the department.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): May I take advantage of your generous suggestion, Mr. Speaker, to make a brief contribution I am moved to do this by the eloquent remarks of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who had in mind the conditions which existed in earlier days. If Your Honour were to follow through what happens to these estimates in the standing committees and when they come back to the House, he would recognize that we are in fact inhibited in making any amendments. The only amending procedure would be by a substantive motion brought by a private member in the form of a public bill which, as Your Honour knows, has a great chance of being voted upon. Otherwise, I do not see how amendment would be possible. What has happened has been that blue book of estimates, brought in with a message from His Excellency, has merged the estimates with the existing statutes. There is, therefore, no chance or opportunity for a member of the House under the present practice to amend them. Under Standing Order 14, the estimates are peremptorily referred to the committees. If consideration is not completed by a certain date, they are assumed to be completed.

How can any member of the House, acting as a member of a particular committee which is dealing with this issue, move to change the name of the department? When the estimates come back to the House for final passage before May 31, how is it possible in the limited debate which is available to members of the House for any member to make a motion which would successfully bring before the House the opportunity to divide on this issue? At one time the rules of the House made this possible, but if the issue is that any member of this House is preempted from attempting in any way to put back the name of the department as has been suggested by the hon. member for St. John's East, then he has lost that opportunity. His amendment is overshadowed and merged because of the particular action on the part of the government at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member want His Honour to rule that the Chairman was wrong and that the committee of the whole cannot now proceed with the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's East?

Mr. Baldwin: I hesitate to do this. His Honour is well versed in this issue and I would hesitate to suggest to him what decision he should make. It would be wrong for me to do so.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): There is just one question which I would like to pose to Your Honour. Would the government have taken this action had there been a minority government?

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their contributions to this interesting debate. I might say at the outset that I will not attempt to reply to the question posed by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). It is certainly beyond the very limited responsibility of the Chair which is simply to rule on the procedural aspect of the matter before the House.

I have before me the report which came from the Chairman of the committee of the whole by way of an appeal under Standing Orders. I see that the Chairman ruled that the amendment had been proposed in accordance with the usages and practices of the House and in relation thereto. As has been suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the point is, from a procedural standpoint, that an amendment was proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East and there was some question as to whether or not it was in order. The Chairman of the committee of the whole ruled that the proposed amendment was in order.

From a procedural standpoint the question now is whether the tabling of the estimates today has the result of making the amendment no longer correct procedurally because, let us not forget, this is the only point on which the Speaker or the Chairman can rule. The point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, and by some of his colleagues in the House, may be very valid from a substantive point of view. There may be something morally wrong about tabling estimates which assume that an amendement proposed by an hon. member in the course of a debate is not going to be accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: At the same time, this relates much more to the aspect of tabling the estimates than to the procedural aspect of the amendment before us. The Chairman has ruled that the amendment is in order and that its procedural acceptability is not affected in any way by the tabling of the estimates, that Parliament as an institution is free to consider it objectively and to decide on it without relation to the tabling of the estimates or what may be in those estimates.

It seems to me that this ruling is a very fair one, and I would hesitate at this stage to say that the Chairman's decision should be overruled. I must come to the conclusion that I agree with the Chairman of the committee of the whole, and I am in full agreement also with the reasons he gave in support of his ruling.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now resume the committee of the whole.

And the House having resumed in committee:

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. When the committee's deliberations were interrupted we were on clause 14.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Are we reverting back now to Part I, clause 2, which is what we were on when the ruling of the previous Chairman was appealed?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it the committee's wish to revert to clause 2?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 2—Short title.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be accused of perpetrating or furthering a filibuster—

An hon. Member: You used the word.

Mr. Peddle: —but there are a few remarks I would like to make before this bill passes into eternity. First, I notice the list of the various ministers of the various departments. It is significant that it contains a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Drury: Order.

Mr. Peddle: I am speaking very much to the amendment, and I will link this up, as the lawyers say. There is also a Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and a Minister of Agriculture. Here are represented three of our great primary industries. What would be the reaction of hon. members who represent agricultural areas if the Department of Agriculture were to be renamed the department of the environment? The same question applies to members who represent great mining areas if that minister became minister of the environment.

I must support the amendment of my colleague from St. John's East, but I would like to go even further. It would create the department of environment and fisheries, but that would take away from another great segment of our economy, the forestry industry. Hon. members may ask what is in a name, and I think of Shakespeare, who said, a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. But that is poetic nonsense in relation to this situation. There is a lot in a name. People on Madison Avenue spend millions of dollars trying to come up with names that will be acceptable and appealing to the public.

When the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry becomes the minister of the environment he will be known to a lot of people in Canada as the minister of pollution, or the minister of pollution control. I am not trying to be funny, but I do not want to see our great fishing industry on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts linked directly with a department of pollution. I know that pollution control is essential to the survival of our fisheries, but I cannot agree to linking our fisheries with pollution. It has also been suggested that the name be the department of environment, fisheries and forestry, or in short EFF, and that would be the first three letters of effluent.

For the first time in many years, the department of fisheries has gained great respect not only in my province but in all provinces that have a fishing industry. I travel quite a bit in my province and I know that finally the people are beginning to have a respect for the department. But I point out that there are thousands of men engaged in the fishing industry, and I am not reflecting on them in any way, who do not even know the meaning of the word "environment". Unless the minister can come up with some solid, sensible reasons, supporting the proposed name dreamt up by somebody in a back office, I do not want to jeopardize our valuable fishing industry by having it directly linked with a department that has the responsibility for dealing with pollution.

To suggest that the same department of government which deals with air pollution in the cities of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver should have control over the fishery in Placentia Bay, or any other fishery on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts, does not make much sense. In my own riding I have mines, a little agriculture, and a good deal of the fishing industry. There is also some forestry. These basic, primary industries fully merit continuation of recognition in the name of the department that deals with them. I think, whether we like it or not, if the bill goes through as it is, it will dilute the effectiveness of this department and the reputation that it has gained. So, the minimum that I could possibly accept is my colleague's amendment asking for the name to be changed to the department of the environment and fisheries.

I am not overly concerned about the forestry part of it. Although that is a very great responsibility, I think that not too long ago the minister assumed responsibility for forestry matters. Before that, I think that the department was known simply as the department of fisheries. Now, in one fell swoop, the name is to be changed to the department of the environment. That name will be completely without meaning for thousands and thousands of Canadians who are engaged in the fishing industry. I do not see any necessity for it, Mr. Chairman. If there is to be a change in the name, the new name ought to reflect the department's concern with the fishing industry.

I am concerned about what will happen if we just adopt this blanket name, "the department of the environment". Let us consider what might happen if something similar were to be done with the department of agriculture. It might not be so important with respect to the department dealing with mines. We must remember that when we deal with fisheries and agriculture, we are dealing with food products. I do not think I need to remind hon. members how sensitive and how "finicky" people are in their choice of these products. I do not think I need to go into that matter at all. We accept the idea that one of the main functions of the department of the environment will be the controlling of pollution. I am very much afraid that the adoption of the new name, as contained in the bill, will in some way be reflected in our markets for this food product, fish. I will say this: I much prefer the present name of the department. I am not being too conservative when I say that there is no reason for not retaining the name "Department of Fisheries and Forestry". It is a good name and the department has a good reputation in Canada and internationally.

I understood that soon the minister is to go to Moscow and talk about conservation measures. He has made his appointment to go as the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. God knows what may happen to him in Moscow if he turns up as the minister of the environment; we don't know. However, that is just a small consideration. I see nothing to be ashamed of in the name of that department. It is a good, sincere and honest name that reflects the industries the department is supposed to promote and encourage. There is nothing wrong with it. I should hate to think that the minister personally regarded the words "fisheries" or "fish" as words with stigmas attached to them; I would not like to think that, although what is happening almost makes one think that such might be the case.

I remember when I was campaigning in my riding an old gentleman in the port of White Bay dragged out a copy of the local St. John's paper; he looked at a picture on the front page showing the Prime Minister with a big rose in his teeth and he said, "Old man, the smell of cod fish would very likely make him sick." That is a bit of a joke. I would not doubt that that is the case with the Prime Minister, but I should hate to think that the minister of fisheries, who has begun to gain a reputation in this field, feels this way. If he wants to be known as the minister of the environment, he will never have the support of my vote. The minimum that I shall accept is that the name of the department shall contain the word "fisheries", to reflect an industry that means so much to so many of us.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, if I take part in the debate on this amendment, it is certainly not because I intend to filibuster, as it has been done in committee of the whole in the past few days, but to correct certain statements made by my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan).

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate stated, as recorded at page 3463 of Hansard and I quote:

> When Bill C-207 becomes legislation—over the dead bodies of those who are concerned about the fishing industry in Canada, we will represent the only part of Canada which has no department of fisheries—Then we come to the province of Quebec where there is a minister of fisheries—

Mr. Chairman, for the information of the members of this committee, I wish to point out to them that the province of Quebec has no minister of fisheries and that the fishing industry, in Quebec, comes under the Minister of Industry and Commerce, the hon. Gérard-D. Lévesque.

Furthermore, it must be noted that Quebec is the only province of Eastern Canada that has full jurisdiction over its fisheries, except for inspection, and this, since 1922, and that it has no department of Fisheries.

The fishing industry, in Quebec, is as prosperous and flourishing as in the Atlantic provinces. The Gaspé fishermen draw a higher income per capita than the fishermen in Newfoundland.

The government of Canada, a few years ago, combined the Department of Fisheries and that of Forestry, and without a department of Fisheries, much more has been done for the fishing industry, in Canada, in recent years, under the clever management of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, the member for Capilano (Mr. Davis). You will agree with me that it would be too long to list now all of the legislation introduced in this chamber by the minister, over the past three years.

That the Act be entitled "Department of the Environment" or "Department of Fisheries and Environment", Canadian fishermen, particularly those from Gaspé, do not care at all.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that, should the fishermen from my district as well as from other areas in eastern Canada, who want to earn their living honestly and energetically, see what has been going on in the House in the last few days, they would be very disappointed with the position taken by some members of the opposition who claim to be concerned about the plight of Canada's fishermen, while, through their illogical—and even valueless—speeches, and through their childish behaviour, they delay the nation's business.

Mr. Chairman, there is not only Quebec—

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member who is now speaking is imputing motives to the members of this committee who participated in this debate. He is accusing us of holding up the business of the committee.

Mr. Béchard: That is what you are, in fact, doing.

Mr. McGrath: I point out to Your Honour, and for the edification of the hon. member who just took his seat, that we have spent less than four hours on this very important part of the bill. I also point out that this is an omnibus bill containing seven distinct bills. I submit that the hon. member should be glad we are at least spending a proportionate period of time on this very important aspect of the bill coming, as he does, from a fishing constituency.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member who just spoke said yesterday, in his closing remarks to the Chair, that he would speak on this bill until ice or snow would cover hell.

Some hon. Members: Oh oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That is exactly what he said, and that is a long time.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Even though it is snowing now, it has not done that.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, I can say that the fishermen of eastern Canada are not too much concerned with the titles of legislative measures. Action is more important to them and this is even truer with the minister and the cabinet we have had in Ottawa to govern the country over the past few years.

I furthermore wish to point out that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate states that British Columbia also has its department of Fisheries. Well, I hear that British Columbia has no such department but that the fisheries are the responsibility of the Department of Recreation and Conservation in that province.

I do not wish to delay unduly the business of the committee, but I feel like those who spoke in the House last night that the motion of the hon. member for Saint John's East is not valid under the circumstances, and I am therefore requesting the co-operation of all the members of this committee so that we may proceed with the vote immediately.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Before the next member is recognized, I wish to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Gaspé on his tremendous research. I would like to ask his co-operation when I am preparing the elaborate speech I will make at some time. The hon. member has done a lot of research and is to be congratulated.

Mr. McCleave: There is a very short answer to the interjection made a few moments ago by the hon. member for St. Boniface. It is a matter of how far we have to proceed in making the very important point that the ministry of fisheries should not be abolished in the interests of insensitive technocracy. That is the point we are trying to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: The fact that we made our point in four or five hours is an indication of the warmth that we have for the subject. It does not indicate that we are achieving the goal. The one who can indicate that is the minister of fisheries.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I made a mistake a few minutes ago. I would like to correct the situation—

[English]

I wish to quote the last sentence of the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East as reported at page 3458 of Hansard:

> I want the minister to know that we are prepared to hold up this part of the bill until hell freezes over.

I used the wrong word when I said "snow". I want to rectify that.

[The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard).]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has quoted correctly. We are in a position where we have to be very sure of the strange words that intrude into our debate. However, the hon. member did state the essence of what the hon. member of St. John's East had said. This is such an important point that we make no apology for raising it and for persisting in it. A member from the government side has now talked about the importance of fisheries. That is an important gain from our standpoint. We now have some recognition from a member opposite. He sees the point we have been trying to make.

Is the minister of fisheries rejecting the request of the hon. member for St. John's East that this new department be renamed the department of environment and fisheries? Is it as simple as that, or does the minister think there should be more argument? Possibly we could hear the minister's answer. After all, debate is supposed to be the essence of this place. It is so rare that we get into committee of the whole many of us lose our debating instincts. What bothers the minister about renaming the department the department of the environment and fisheries?

Mr. McGrath: It does not change the bill.

Mr. McCleave: It does not change the bill. Perhaps it will strengthen it when the minister is dealing with the spending part for fisheries. I think that is important.

What will make the department of the environment work is the fact that the government will appoint the member for Capilano as the minister. This man commands the respect of members of the opposition. He worked diligently as minister of fisheries and has very definite ideas about pollution. Because of this, the government is lumping together all these factors into this change. The danger is that one member on the government side is qualified to combine a war on pollution with the problem of administering the department of fisheries, and "the government is creating the department of environment which will take advantage of those talents. I am very serious in making this argument. I talked about this before when I referred to the schizophrenic aspects of what the minister is up against. I do not want to make a personal argument or an argument directed ad hominum at the legislation. I prefer not to be in that position. The reason that this organization bill has been introduced and the reason fisheries is being swallowed up in this new department of the environment is the minister. I cannot think of any other reason.

If we were starting this country over again and knew the subjects to be assigned, but did not know the qualifications of a group of men, we might think of renewable resources as befitting a minister. The farmers, fishermen and foresters—would come under that department because they deal with renewable resources. Mining, energy, steel and other inanimate forces would come under another department. However, this is not the way the reorganization is being carried out at this time. The minister may say that environment is one concept and fisheries is a slightly different concept. Perhaps they are so much so that one should really not be submerged in the other. I have not dealt with that aspect up until this time. This is the point in reorganization.

The minister is being told now to take his portfolio of fisheries to the new department. Because he happens to have a lot of experts in that department who have dealt somewhat with the war on pollution, this is the logical place to set up a department of the environment. There is no other department which has so much expertise in it as the department of fisheries to form a department of the environment. I say that, but one year from now, or two or three years from now, what sort of computer approach will be used to form government departments? For the life of me I cannot figure it out. When you have illogical processes at work special attention from the House of Commons is demanded. It is illogical, and other persons are agreeing with me that it is illogical, that on the one hand you should have a person who is interested in the exploitation of renewable natural resources, that is, fish, and on the other hand you have been saying that the water resources of this country should be treated in such and such a way or that there is a war going on against pollution. I say it is a tug of war within the mind of any one person to have to accept what, to me, are conflicting duties and responsibilities. That is why we are making no apologies for doing our best to at least get the "environment and fisheries" into this name, to recognize that there are in essence two departments involved here. Then, hopefully, in good time, we shall do something to carry that measure of achievement a lot further.

Mr. McGrath: Some of the concern we have expressed is apparently well-founded. I refer members of the committee to what are supposed to be the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry in the new blue book tabled today for 1971-72 under "environment". It appears to me that the downgrading process has already begun. We find it difficult at first glance to say exactly what the position of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry is with respect to government plans for the coming fiscal year.

The reason is that the primary responsibilities of the minister in his proposed new department of the environment will relate to pollution and related subjects—clean water, the management of the Canada Water Act, the setting up of water management boards and so on. All these activities will be the primary task of the minister who, if this legislation passes, will become the minister of the environment. This is what the present debate is all about. This is what my amendment is all about.

We are not asking the government to change the act in any way. On the contrary, we support what the government is doing. We support the creation of a department charged with protecting the environment. We repeat that the logical minister to be given this responsibility is the minister of fisheries because he already has the expertise within his department by virtue of the provisions of the Fisheries Act. All we want to do is ensure that our fears as to the downgrading of the fisheries responsibility will not be borne out as a result of the establishment of the new department. We are trying to take out insurance by putting the word "Fisheries" into the name of the new department. I fail to understand why the government cannot accept this amendment. It does not change anything, but it satisfies us that the government's intentions with regard to the department of fisheries are honourable. Among the many folksongs of Newfoundland there is one which is known as "I'se the boy that builds the boat." I am sure the minister is familiar with it. The first verse goes:

I'se the boy that builds the boat
I'se the boy that sails her
I'se the boy that catches the fish
And brings them home to Lisa

It is poor Lisa that I am concerned about. I am concerned lest there be no fish for Lisa and no fishermen to catch the fish. The minister knows we are concerned about conservation. This is a matter which has been earnestly and honestly dealt with by my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate on many occasions. We are concerned about the depletion of our fish stocks and the overexploitation of our fisheries resources. We have urgently called attention to the need to obtain a meaningful agreement with the countries which fish off our shores on a sustained yield basis. But we fear that when this new department of the environment is set up the fisherman fishing off St. Mary's, or the bill of Cape St. George, or off the west coast of Canada, will be lost in the shuffle. There will be no one to look after him or to take a special interest in the difficulties he faces notwithstanding the fact that the Parliament of Canada under our constitution has a special responsibility with respect to the administration of the fisheries. It is not a provincial authority. The authority which the federal government and Parliament has given to the provinces is a designated one. This field is really under the sole jurisdiction of the government and the Parliament of Canada and it is in the exercise of this responsibility that we have put forward our amendment.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCutcheon: May I ask the leader of the House what goodies will be served up to us tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: We shall remove the current menu. We shall interrupt the filibuster and give hon. members opposite a little rest. Tomorrow, we shall call the bill dealing with veterans affairs and the bill dealing with the Crop Insurance Act. Perhaps this will put everybody into a better frame of mind and we shall return to the present bill with greater readiness to get on and pass it.

An hon. Member: Just accept our amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now that we are all in a good frame of mind, will the minister also tell us what we shall be doing on Friday?

Mr. MacEachen: I cannot tell the hon. member right now. I am dependent upon what happens tomorrow and on the results of consultations with my colleagues and other House Leaders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank the minister for such an honest answer.

At 6.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 18, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SKOBERG—PUBLICATION OF BOOKLET "HOW YOUR TAX DOLLAR IS SPENT"

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege concerning the publication by Information Canada at public expense of a booklet called "How Your Tax Dollar Is Spent". If you find my question of privilege is well taken I will be prepared to introduce a motion.

In the introduction to this booklet the President of the Treasury Board makes it known that the tabling of the estimates is being used as an occasion upon which to provide a greater amount of information about the estimates. He also advises that the booklet will be available to members of the general public through Information Canada upon request. He states that the publication also describes the allocations recommended for the particular year 1971-72 in terms of the priorities of the nation, and, consequently, of the government.

I agree that the public is entitled to the maximum amount of public information, but we must be concerned lest such an instrument of information as Information Canada be converted into an instrument of propaganda. Over the past years we have attempted to obtain consultant reports in order that the people of Canada may know what is going on, but in most cases these have been denied to us. Now the public, by means of the booklet in question, and at large public expense, is being given a shot of strictly government propaganda through the publication of this booklet by Information Canada which we were told would never be used for this purpose. I would refer Your Honour to just a couple of paragraphs in an effort to make my point. On page 10 the following words appear:

> In these discussions ministers considered certain basic facts. One of the more basic was that while Canada as a whole enjoys one of the world's highest standards of living, many Canadians are finding it difficult to get by.

A little further down the page we read:

> The federal government has for some years been attempting to narrow this gap between rich and poor provinces and since 1968 has intensified these efforts.

On page 11 we find the following:

> Before it decides how to allocate your dollars, the government must determine how big its total spending program should be. It is no easy matter to arrive at a total such as the $14,352 million the government has proposed to Parliament for 1971-72. More than a year ahead, a forecast is made of the state of the economy.

This appears accompanied by a side heading "Decisions, Decisions".

If material such as this is allowed to continue to be published at public expense, and the opposition has no means of countering such propaganda, what is the purpose of this House? If the government is allowed to use public moneys to finance the publication of what they wish to put out for public consumption, to what length will the government go in the course of the so-called rationalization of government information?

In conclusion, I would say that Information Canada should not be used for the dissemination of political party propaganda. I sincerely urge you to recognize the dangers inherent in the absence of controls over the nature of the services to be provided. The only way in which this could be done would be by means of an all-party understanding, and for this to be reached it would be necessary for a committee of the House to explore the charges I have made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair notice of his intention to raise the matter to which he has just referred by way of a question of privilege. The Chair has had an opportunity to give the matter some thought. I have listened closely and with interest to the comments made by the hon. member. I have to advise the House that, although there may be a grievance in what the hon. member has said, there cannot be a question of privilege. In the circumstances I do not think that the motion to which the hon. member has alluded can be put at this time.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POLLUTION

POSSIBLE THREAT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity I propose to ask the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion. The justified anxiety of Canadians about the ever-increasing pollution of the Canadian heritage—our lands, our seas, our inland waters and the air we breathe—is reflected in the legislation that was enacted by this Parliament in the last session and in the several bills now under consideration by this House. A developing threat to our west coast seas and thereby to present and future residents of British Columbia, among whom are our coastal Indians, has become a clear and present danger with the TAPS hearing in Washington by the United States Department of the Interior. If the House would consent, I would therefore move:

That this House urges the government forthwith to express Canada's opposition to the TAPS proposal; and further urges the government to inform the government of the United States that both nations must participate in a joint task force to reach a solution to the problem that will best protect the environment of any route used.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE SALE OF McCLELLAND AND STEWART PUBLISHING FIRM TO FOREIGN INTERESTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the leave of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I can explain my reasons for so doing in one sentence. This morning McClelland and Stewart, the publishing firm, announced its intention to sell, and while it indicated that it would be reluctant to sell to foreign concerns it did not exclude that possibility. This is the third major Canadian publishing house to be placed in this position in the last six months. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House urges the government to consider specific measures to prevent the third major Canadian book publisher in six months, McClelland and Stewart, from being purchased by foreign interests, and immediate action, such as the provision of long-term, low-interest loans to Canadian book publishers and the creation of a Canadian book development corporation in order to prevent the imminent collapse of the Canadian publishing industry.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member under the provisions of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the statement made in the House of Commons yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) that Home Oil Company Limited of Calgary had not yet been sold and this morning's press reports that a sale is imminent, and hence the need for Parliament to debate this vitally important matter and to consider methods of preventing the last major Canadian-owned and controlled oil company from being sold to non-residents.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has given the notice required under this Standing Order 26. As hon. members know, this same matter was brought to the attention of the House about a week ago. At that time the Chair indicated that this was the kind of matter or type of situation contemplated by the provisions of Standing Order 26.

At that time I indicated that in view of the fact there were to be two days of debate on the budget that would be an ideal occasion for the House to consider this very important and urgent matter. Unfortunately that debate did not relate to this particular matter. There was a debate on unemployment and the subject matter raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was not touched upon. I am of the same opinion today in that I believe this is the type of situation contemplated by the Standing Order and that under such circumstances the Chair should be prepared to put the motion to the House.

I might say in passing that I have some objection to the form of the motion put by the hon. member, specifically the reference to the statement by the minister. This would perhaps give the impression that what the hon. member wishes the House to discuss is the statement of the minister. At that point we might perhaps get into the type of debate which I am sure the hon. member does not envisage at this time.

Having said all this and having given the matter very serious consideration, and taking into account the probability that the very important debate in the House this afternoon on veterans affairs legislation is likely to be completed before this evening, I would think that hon. members would want to have the opportunity to express their views on this subject. Therefore I propose to ask whether the hon. member has the leave of the House to put his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion will therefore stand for consideration at eight o'clock this evening.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE SALE OF McCLELLAND AND STEWART PUBLISHING FIRM TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the appropriate minister, who I believe is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he any information to give the House about the imminent sale of the firm of McClelland and Stewart? Has he had any contact with this firm in this regard and, if so, what steps does he propose to take?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no personal information, but immediately after the question period I will make inquiries. I understand Mr. McClelland is a prominent member of a committee which has as its prime purpose the maintaining of Canada for Canadians. I would be surprised if he intended to sell to foreigners. I have been informed by my valuable Parliamentary Assistant that Mr. McClelland has said in public he has not made that decision.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In light of this takeover of another Canadian publishing company, is the minister prepared to release the recommendations of the study he had undertaken by the officials of his department into the Canadian book publishing industry?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it was tabled in the House quite a number of weeks ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, would the minister be prepared to indicate to the House whether he is considering specific action, such as the institution of long-term, low-interest loans to Canadian book publishers and the creation of a Canadian book development corporation in order to prevent such action within the Canadian publishing industry in the future?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, at the time of a previous takeover, and I am not assuming we have another one now, an interdepartmental committee was set up for the purpose of looking into this situation. I will undertake to inquire where the study now stands.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he will discuss with his colleague the Minister of National Revenue, who is working on the government policy in respect of foreign ownership, the possibility of developing an interim policy to deal with this very immediate and urgent situation?

Mr. Pepin: I will bring this to my friend's attention.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a wire or communication in respect of the sale of Banff Oil, a Canadian company, to the Aquitaine Company of Canada which is a wholly foreign-owned French company, I understand?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt whether this is a supplementary question. My understanding is that the original question of the Leader of the Opposition dealt with a specific problem having to do with the question of foreign ownership. Perhaps we are getting away from that subject, and it may be that the hon. member will have an opportunity to raise his question in a minute or so. I will recognize him as soon as possible. In the meantime I believe the Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, from the answer given by the minister am I to understand that he has had no communication from this firm with regard to any difficulties which might lead to a sale, that he has had no indication to date of any difficulties which might bring about the sale of this company?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was very clear on that. I thought that by giving Mr. McClelland's credentials I would throw a little cold water on the subject, but I intend to get in touch with him as soon as I can.

OIL

INCREASE IN PRICE OF VENEZUELAN CRUDE—EXTENSION OF PIPELINE TO MONTREAL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the announcement in this morning's press that the Venezuelan oil producers have announced they are going to raise the price of crude oil by 25 per cent effective next month. In view of the fact that some 50 per cent of Canada's oil supplies come from Venezuela, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the government will take whatever steps are necessary to have the interprovincial pipe line extended into the Montreal area so as to give the people of that area some protection against this very large increase in the price of crude oil?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will refer the question to the minister responsible for energy, mines and resources. Of course, if Venezuela wants to act by next month I do not believe the action the hon. member suggests could be taken in time to alleviate that problem.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company is making an application to the National Energy Board during hearings which are to begin on March 16 in which it will ask for additional operations in the parts of Canada it now serves, would the Canadian government be prepared to intervene at the hearing to ask the National Energy Board to take whatever steps are necessary to get the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company to extend its pipeline, particularly in view of the fact that there is a conflict of interest in that it is owned by a company which is bringing Venezuelan oil into the Montreal market?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, this would seem to be hypothetical; if the company does feel it is an economic proposition and if it should make an application, then I am sure if these hypotheses are met the National Energy Board will hear them fairly.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the government's intention to leave this matter entirely to the discretion of the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company in view of the fact that it is owned by an American company which is bringing in oil from Venezuela and is therefore unwilling to have western Canadian oil brought to the Montreal area in competition with their own oil from Venezuela?

Mr. Trudeau: I am asked what the government's intention would be in a hypothetical situation. I do not think the government can answer that.

SUGGESTED FEASIBILITY STUDY OF ECONOMICS OF BUILDING PIPELINE FROM WEST TO SERVE EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is along the same lines. Two days ago I asked the Prime Minister whether the government would set up an economic study on the feasibility of building a pipeline to eastern markets. I drew to the Prime Minister's attention that other ministers had said they would leave it to free enterprise. In view of the fact that the same corporation that might transport crude petroleum to the east is also importing it into Canada, would the Prime Minister now consider establishing an independent economic study to look into the feasibility of building and extending the pipeline in question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will refer the matter to the minister responsible.

Mr. Woolliams: May I follow that through, Mr. Speaker. May I bring to the Prime Minister's attention, with the greatest respect, that two days ago he took this question as notice. I understood from that that he would give me an answer.

Mr. Trudeau: When I take a question as notice for other ministers it is referred to the ministers so they can answer the questions that should be asked of them.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not think this is a question of some national importance in which he might take some initiatives?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

AGRICULTURE

REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Can he tell us whether he is satisfied to see the government increasing its expenditures for fiscal year 1971-72 by $1,400 million while reducing by almost $30 million the budget of agriculture, that of the most underprivileged class of society?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is argumentative. He is asking a minister whether he is satisfied with a certain situation, thus inviting the minister to express an opinion. If the hon. member has no objection, I will say the question is out of order.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio who answers for Information Canada. It relates to the booklet referred to earlier by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. In view of the fact that this rhapsody in blue constitutes a blurb and puffery for the Liberal government, will the minister see that equal funds are made available out of the public purse for the opposition parties to deal with the same issue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDUSTRY

GUIDELINES RESPECTING SALE OF COMPANIES TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can indicate to the House whether the government now has guidelines under which industry can operate so they do not have to operate under the handicap of government intervention when sales are contemplated and particularly when negotiations are in progress?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not get the purport of the question.

Mr. Skoreyko: I will ask it again. Can the minister indicate to the House whether the government now has guidelines under which businesses in Canada can operate so that they do not have to operate under the handicap of government intervention when sales are contemplated, and particularly when they are being negotiated?

Mr. Sharp: I do not see why this question concerns in particular the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

GRAIN

LIFT PROGRAM REGULATIONS FOR CALCULATION OF SUMMERFALLOW—EQUITABLE PAYMENT OF FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the interpretation of certain regulations in the Lift program dealing with the calculation of summerfallow using 1968 crop figures, resulting in some farmers being paid and others in identical circumstances not being paid, and as the legal opinion was belatedly announced in December, 1970, is the minister looking into this matter so that payment will be made in an equitable manner to all?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): If the hon. member would give me the details of the problem to which he is referring, I would be glad to look into it.

REASON FOR SHIPS HAVING TO WAIT TO BE LOADED AT VANCOUVER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I have asked him a number of questions relating to the number of ships standing by in Vancouver harbour waiting to be loaded. Has he any comment to make on the fact that there appear to be 19 ships in Vancouver harbour, 12 of which are standing by because of lack of grain to load?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I had my office get in touch with Vancouver at noon today and I understand that at this very moment 11 ships are waiting, having passed inspection and seven are being loaded. As I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition several days ago, there is quite an accumulation of ships destined to arrive in February as a result of failure to arrive earlier. As I understand it, there may be as many as 17 or 18 more vessels due to arrive in the month of February. If they do all arrive we can expect to see some lengthy queues in the process of moving toward record loadings at the port of Vancouver.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he is assuring the House that the appropriate grades and quality of grain are there to be loaded on these ships that are waiting?

Mr. Lang: What I can assure the House is that the block system is working very well—

Mr. Stanfield: Answer the question.

Mr. Lang: —and that the programming of grain from Winnipeg by the Wheat Board, in co-operation with the railroads and elevator companies, is taking place with the nominated ships in mind so that an attempt is made to have the right grain there at the right time. It is because of the efficiency of this system that we may be approaching record loadings.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be too persistent, but would the minister be good enough to answer my question? Is there grain there at Vancouver to be put on these vessels that are waiting?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the facts—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —on the exact quantities of grain in store and the amount required by the number of ships, but what I would tell the Leader of the Opposition is that if you count the grain in the pipeline, that is the grain in the railway system on its way to Vancouver, a very efficient job is being done in attempting to see that the grain is there to meet record loadings in the month of February.

REQUESTED DELAY IN REPAYMENT OF CASH ADVANCES UNTIL SEEDING COMPLETED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the very tight cash situation of the Prairie grain farmer and in view of the request by the National Farmers Union at its recent meeting with the cabinet, will the minister give consideration to delaying the collection of cash advance payments at least until after seeding?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some further discussions with the National Farmers Union to see what they had in mind. Generally speaking, I think they agree with the proposition that cash advances should be repaid within the course of a year. I believe the reference was to some particular problems of small farmers or of farmers with particularly small quotas, and I would be glad to have further discussion with them on this matter.

SUGGESTED PRICE GUARANTEE TO FARMERS ON EXPORTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Having regard to the failure of the Geneva conference to reach a conclusive agreement, is any consideration being given by the government to establishing a realistic price guarantee for grains destined for export based on current production costs, which would serve to relieve the producers of some of the disastrous effects of the cut-throat selling policies of other exporting countries?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said a number of times that we should not be so pessimistic as to believe competition of that sort need follow. I might also say that I do not think we will ever be in a position to adopt a guaranteed income approach which covers full costs regardless of the price obtained for these products in the international markets.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, does the minister expect the producers of this country to shoulder all the vagaries of the international marketplace?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of news reports today that several countries, including Great Britain, intend to withdraw from any further participation in the joint wheat aid programs under the previous agreements, does the minister still adhere to the statement he made in the House the other day that there has been no dramatic change as the result of the failure to reach a further agreement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED FAILURE TO REACH INTERNATIONAL WHEAT PRICE AGREEMENT BECAUSE OF CHANGING OF CANADIAN GRADING SYSTEM

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of the Wheat Board whether, in view of reports emanating from the United States that an agreement was not concluded at Geneva because Canada was changing its grading system, he would care to comment on that aspect or make a statement in the House denying these allegations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, certainly any suggestion that that was the reason for failure I would label as completely erroneous. Certainly the question of protein grading in Canada, and therefore its impact on grades and the possible change of names for some of our leading grains, did enter into the discussions, but I would not agree that was the basis for failure.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CREATION OF SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS—PROGRAMS FOR UNEMPLOYED UNDER 25

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question on summer employment for students.

Since 45 per cent of the unemployed in Canada are under 25, is the Prime Minister considering a reassessment of employment programs for students, so as to bring substantial changes to his manpower policy and to let this mass of young unemployed participate efficiently in the economic life of our country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems that the question of the hon. member was asked yesterday during the oral question period. Unless there have been developments since, I do not feel that this question is acceptable.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT OF SECTION RESPECTING CONTEMPT OF COURT

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

In view of the position of the fighting wing of his party regarding contempt of court and the events which recently took place in the courts, will the minister consider amending shortly the provisions of the Criminal Code pertaining to contempt of court so that the accused may have a full defence, and that persons convicted for contempt of court may have a de plano right of appeal?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that his question may be somewhat thorny. He knows as well as I do about the limitations which must be taken into account when putting a question relating to a current trial.

If the hon. member chooses to ask the question in a general manner, without any reference to any specific situation, it could perhaps be in order and the minister might wish to answer it.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, my question will be brief and very simple.

Does the Minister of Justice intend to amend the Criminal Code in the near future with regard to contempt of Court?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question by saying that all provisions of the Criminal Code are under constant review by the Department of Justice.

PUBLIC WORKS

DELAY IN COMPLETION OF DOCKS FOR NEW DIGBY-SAINT JOHN FERRY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, before asking my question I would like to take this opportunity to welcome back the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka who has just walked into the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: My question is not to him but to the Minister of Public Works and I believe he has been advised of it. Can he state whether it is a fact that the Digby-Saint John ferry which, Mr. Speaker, is a matter you have not heard raised for a long time, will be operating by the end of March as stated, or whether there is truth to the rumours that there is a hold-up and, if so, why?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be asked in those terms. Perhaps we might overlook the second part of the question and assume the first part was asked directly and allow the minister to reply.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there has been a delay in this project which was originally expected to be completed in April, 1971.

Mr. Stanfield: A delay?

Mr. Laing: This is a major job. There was difficulty with the first protective pipe that was ordered and that caused a delay of some three or four months. My engineers now tell me that it may be August 1 before the docks are completed at each end. This is an embarrassment to us because we understand the ship is going to be commissioned very shortly.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question to the minister. In view of the fact that a private company, the CPR, has invested a tremendous amount of money in this vessel and as the heavy tourist season is very important to them, will the minister give the assurance that alternative sites will be considered and, if necessary, have full discussions with the company in this regard?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we are in communication with the company now and foresee the possibility of accelerating the work and accommodating the company at the earliest possible time. I want to remind my hon. friend that the people of Canada also have a tremendous investment in these two docks.

INDUSTRY

TIRES—CHANGES IN TARIFF STRUCTURE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Are changes being considered in the Canadian tariff structure with regard to tires? I refer to changes affecting tire manufacturers other than Michelin.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Saltsman: Could the minister indicate what those changes are? If he is not in a position to indicate this today, perhaps he can tell us when he will make a statement?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions I have referred to the general purpose of our project of rationalization of the tire industry in Canada. I have referred to the 160-odd types of tires that we produce constituting 6 per cent of the Canadian production. The need for rationalization is recognized by everybody. My hon. friend is familiar with our approach, that is, the allowance of imports of certain types of tires tariff free in return for concentration on certain types of tires for the domestic and for export markets. That is the same approach as the one taken by the Minister of Finance in the case of Michelin. Our department is working hard on that project.

HEALTH

INCLUDING OF NURSING AND CUSTODIAL CARE HOMES UNDER HOSPITALIZATION PLAN

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare,

Mr. Speaker. Some time ago I asked the minister what progress was being made in bringing nursing and custodial care homes under hospitalization, thus relieving the terrible distress and anxiety of older citizens who find themselves without money or a place to go when discharged from hospital. If the minister has not got a ready answer, perhaps he will make a statement on motions on Monday.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): That is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. The whole question of including such institutions under hospitalization, which would widen the legislative framework of that particular Act, is under review now with the health ministers. If we arrive at such a conclusion it would be subject to the approval of the government and we would have to come back to the House. In the meantime, I would remind the hon. member that those in need of custodial care can qualify for cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Rynard: I wonder if the minister is aware just how long it takes that operation to get going.

Mr. Munro: It is going right now.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ESKASONI RESERVE—PROVISION OF HOUSES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence and because of the urgency of the matter I should like to direct it to the first minister. In view of the information relayed in the House a few days ago by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in reference to the urgent requirement for housing on the Eskasoni reserve in Nova Scotia, the largest reserve in the Atlantic provinces, that 29 new houses will be constructed and in view of the information contained in the telegram from Chief Dan K. Stevens that 15 houses only have been approved in the budget whereas 47 houses are required for families who have no homes or housing whatsoever, would the Prime Minister not only take this question as notice but also urge that an investigation into this urgent matter be carried out immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will do the former, Mr. Speaker, and then I will decide if the latter is necessary.

SUGGESTED USE OF LIGHT ON HALIFAX MONUMENT AS SIGNAL FOR SHIPPING

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence and I have given corridor notice of it already. May I ask the minister to suggest to his colleague the Minister of Transport that he consider whether the monument to the merchant seamen of the world wars located at the southeast end of Halifax could become a signal for shipping so that this light will not have to go out? I ask this question because the private veterans organization that has been responsible for it is no longer able to meet the utility bills.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I thank the hon. member for enlightening me on this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on February 9 the Secretary of State for External Affairs took as notice a question I asked about negotiations with the United States regarding possible alterations to the Migratory Birds Convention Act which would give recognition to the aboriginal rights of the native people. I hope that the minister may have an answer for me today because, as he may have noticed from reading the press, this is becoming increasingly a matter of controversy and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked the question and perhaps he should give the minister the opportunity to reply.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were preliminary discussions with the United States at the official level two years ago. However, since that time there has been no substantive discussion. Last fall efforts were made by Canada to renew the subject but because of changes in the top personnel of the United States Department of the Interior which occurred at about the same time it has not been possible to make firm arrangements for a meeting. At the moment, therefore, we cannot indicate when consultations might be renewed.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Robert L. Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know no more about this than the minister said in the House in answer to a question a couple of days ago.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this is an important subject and one upon which a debate is to take place tonight. The minister indicated that he knew of the agreement. It has not been made public, and the report is circulating that the government requested that the parties involved keep silent about it. In view of the importance of this matter, would the Prime Minister or someone on behalf of the government clarify this issue? I also make this request because other investors were trading in these shares in the meantime.

LUMBERING—CLAIM THAT TAX STRUCTURE ENCOURAGES UNITED STATES TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN FIRMS—EFFECT OF UNPEGGING OF DOLLAR ON INDUSTRY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if he has received any other representations beyond those of the Canadian Lumbermens' Association or if he has seen the report of the meeting of the Canadian Lumbermens' Association claiming that Canada's tax structure, particularly estate taxes, is designed specifically to encourage United States takeovers of Canadian lumber firms?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this report.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Has the minister received any representations from the lumber operators of this country to the effect that the unpegging of the dollar has cost them about $50 million in revenue so far and has resulted in the industry operating at only about 60 per cent of capacity, thereby causing a great deal of unemployment?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the fact that the Canadian dollar is stronger has an effect on export sales.

PRESENT AND POTENTIAL PROBLEMS ON WEST COAST—INVITATION TO CANADA TO CO-OPERATE WITH UNITED STATES IN STUDY

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): In light of the commitment made on Monday by the United States Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Morton, to examine present and potential shipping problems on the west coast of the continent, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Canadian government has as yet been invited to co-operate in this study?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The United States government has not invited us to consult with them but I have invited the United States Secretary of State to consult with us.

THREAT POSED BY TANKER TRANSPORT OF OIL FROM VALDEZ, ALASKA, TO CHERRY POINT, WASHINGTON—DIRECT REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there have been repeated appeals by Canadians and Americans protesting the shipping of Alaskan oil from Valdez to Cherry Point. Why has the Canadian government not made any direct representations to the government of the United States regarding the pollution hazard that would be entailed by such shipments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reason is that there are hearings being held by the American authorities and I do not think it would be proper for the Canadian government to appear before a United States tribunal of this kind. On the other hand, I think it is most important that during the period while the hearings are being held Canadians and Americans should realize the potential risks involved and speak out and speak out clearly.

Is the Prime Minister going to accede to the request of the Chamber of Mines which has written to him, a copy of which I received in my mail today, that Bill C-187 be withdrawn from Parliament and that the Yukon Quartz Mining Act remain as the mining code for the Yukon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the order paper. The government has no intention of withdrawing it. Of course, during the debate on the bill we will be glad to give consideration to and discuss any arguments put forward.

INFORMATION CANADA

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PERSONNEL INCREASE IN DEPARTMENTAL AGENCIES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio who reports for Information Canada. Will he reply to the question I asked yesterday in his absence with regard to whether he would consider making an early statement on the situation with respect to the substantial increases in the staffs and expenses of the information sections of various government departments since the establishment of the co-ordinating agency, Information Canada?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): I thank the hon. member for again raising the question. I apologize for having to leave the chamber a few minutes before the question period expired yesterday. I think there will be an early opportunity to go into this whole matter when the estimates are before committees. In the meantime, I might explain that Information Canada does not have authority over the budgets of other departments. We hope to have a beneficial influence on them but, as indicated at the beginning of Information Canada's existence, it would probably take about a year after it was in full operation before these effects could be felt, particularly in view of the fact that the estimates of departments have to be formulated far in advance of the time at which the hiring is done.

Mr. Mather: Is the minister aware that the government task force on information which preceded the establishment of Information Canada criticized the size and expenses of some of these departmental information sections?

ACQUISITION OF BANFF OIL LIMITED BY AQUITAINE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): With Your Honour's permission I will now direct the question to the Prime Minister which I put as a supplementary with regard to foreign investment. Is the Prime Minister aware either through his office or any of the ministers' offices whether there has been communication with regard to Banff Oil Limited, a Canadian company, which is now being purchased by the Aquitaine Company of Canada which is owned by French interests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did make a quick check, Mr. Speaker. I have no knowledge of such representations having been made to my office as yet. If they do come, I will consider them.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the Prime Minister consider this in the same way that the American purchase of Home Oil is being considered? This is a purchase by another foreign company. Will the cabinet consider this in the same way that they considered the other matter this morning?

Mr. Trudeau: As the minister indicated, Mr. Speaker, we have been considering the matter of Home Oil. No doubt we will want to include this in our consideration. It would be helpful if we had a clear statement of what the opposition suggests should be done in these cases.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege. If the Prime Minister will grace this institution with his presence this evening, he will hear our position in that regard.

HOUSING

RECONCILIATION OF DECREASE IN CMHC BUDGET AND EXPECTED INCREASE IN STARTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. In view of the fact that the capital budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, tabled by the minister last week, indicates 16.1 per cent less federal spending on housing compared with the CMHC budget of last year, which took into account the innovative fund, and the minister expects a 15.8 per cent increase in housing starts, will he make a statement on motions indicating how he expects to increase housing starts by decreasing the capital budget for 1971?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is asked in the form of an argument. I doubt whether it is acceptable. At the same time he asked the minister whether he would make a statement on motions. If the minister can reply to this quickly, the question might be accepted in those terms.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I do not intend to make a statement on motions because I made a statement the other day when I tabled the capital budget in the House.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of housing. Does his reply to the question of the hon. member for Broadview indicate that in the low income levels the government is prepared to grant subsidies either by way of principal or interest to help these objectives to be realized?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make such a commitment at this stage.

URBAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CONVENING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MUNICIPAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing with regard to urban problems. In view of the fact the Prime Minister has indicated his reluctance, because of the constitution, to meet the mayors of this country, whose problems still continue and are becoming more aggravated, has the minister abandoned any interest in a tri-level conference or setting up an urban council?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Prime Minister's statement indicated a confirmation of what he has said in the House on two or three occasions. If the provinces are willing to have us meet with the mayors to consult on urban problems, we will be delighted to join in such a conference. That is the thrust of our position.

Mr. Alexander: That is the answer the minister responsible for housing gave the other day when I posed the same question on this problem. Is the minister now in a position to advise the House whether he has discussed this situation with his provincial counterparts? If so, what have their answers been?

Mr. Andras: I think I made that clear in the answer I gave the hon. member a few days ago. To repeat, I have been in communication with the Ministers of Municipal Affairs about tri-level consultation. I have not received formal replies from all of them. The replies I have received so far indicate that this is a good possibility.

HOUSING

SASKATCHEWAN—ACTION TO INCREASE STARTS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Last Friday I directed a question to the minister in charge of housing. He did not hear the question and Your Honour indicated that he might take note of the question and reply at some other time. The question related to the fact that in 1969 there were 4,425 housing starts in Saskatchewan and only 993 in 1970. Will the minister give serious consideration to this situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we are taking it under serious consideration. A few minutes ago I signed a letter with the details of the answer. It is now on the way to the hon. member's office.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, we know the business for this afternoon and Your Honour has fixed the business for tonight, but I wish to ask the Government House Leader what the business will be for tomorrow and the first few days of next week.

Mr. Downey: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that we are on a point of order. We can only have one point of order at a time. The hon. member for Peace River rose on a point of order. If it was not a point of order, the question could not be asked. The question period expired a moment ago. I assume that the question was raised on this basis and the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. MacEachen: As indicated, today we will deal with veterans legislation. This will be followed by the crop insurance bill and the income tax bill. The program will obviously be affected by the debate this evening. Tomorrow we will begin with the air quality bill, followed by the Canada-Jamaica taxation bill, the CNR financing bill and the statutory instruments bill. On Monday we will begin with the Canada Development Corporation. In the remaining days until Thursday, we will complete the Canada Development Corporation and any other uncompleted items mentioned for the previous days. On Thursday I would propose the business of supply. In connection with Bill C-207, respecting the organization of the government of Canada, I propose to have discussions with Opposition House Leaders to determine whether an agreement can be made as to the additional time required to complete consideration of this item of public business.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, I intend to present a motion on the report stage of the statutory instruments bill and I think this arrangement would preclude it from being discussed tomorrow. I call attention to this because apparently the President of the Privy Council has lost sight of the rules.

Mr. Downey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I find it has become increasingly difficult to be recognized during the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Downey: I notice, and have noticed for some time, that it is not a matter of what the question is; it is who asks it. It is becoming increasingly evident of late that questioners are selected on the basis of how much trouble they can cause the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the hon. member to resume his seat. He has no right to impugn the conduct of the Chair in this way. He can only do so in one manner, and that is by a substantive motion. I will not hear anything further on this point of order. Orders of the day.

PENSION ACT AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

PROVISION OF INCREASES IN BENEFITS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Pension Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-203, An Act to amend the Pension Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be amended by

(a) adding thereto immediately after clause 34 on page 41 the following clause:

"35. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Part:

PART XIII

PRISONERS OF WAR OF THE JAPANESE

76. In this Part, "prisoner of war of the Japanese" means

(a) a person described in paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of section 7, or

(b) a person described in section 17, who was during World War II a prisoner of war of the Japanese for a period of one year or more.

77. A pension in an amount equal to the pension payable for a disability assessed at fifty per cent shall, on application; be awarded in accordance with the rates set out in Schedule A to the Pension Act to or in respect of a person who was a prisoner of war of the Japanese and has any assessable disability.

78. A pension shall, on application, be awarded to any person to whom a pension could be awarded under Part III of the Pension Act, in respect of a person who was a prisoner of war of the Japanese and who died prior to the coming into force of this Part, in an amount equal to the amount that would be payable in respect of that person under Part III of the Pension Act if, at the time of his death, he had been in receipt of a pension for a disability assessed at fifty per cent." ; and

(b) renumbering clause 35 on page 41 as clause 36.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to extend to merchant seamen and to members of the Auxiliary Forces who were prisoners of war of the Japanese during World War II, the same special consideration as Hong Kong veterans are to receive under the relevant provisions of this bill.

In its present form, the bill provides that veterans who were prisoners of war of the Japanese for a year or more will be entitled to a 50 per cent disability pension if they have any assessable disability. This will also mean that at their death their widow will be entitled to a widow's pension. In addition, a widow's pension will be payable to widows of veterans who were prisoners of war of the Japanese.

The government considers that these important new benefits are entirely appropriate in view of the experiences suffered by the veterans of Hong Kong and of other far eastern operations. We are satisfied that those who spent up to four years as prisoners of the Japanese are in a unique category among veterans. The rigorous and debilitating conditions experienced by this group led to clearly identifiable disabilities not duplicated among other groups of Canadian veterans, and also led to obscure Asiatic ailments which medical experts have found almost impossible to assess.

In addition to these veterans there are a small number of persons who, as merchant seamen, or as members of the Auxiliary Forces, also became prisoners of war of the Japanese and suffered the same kind of hardship for periods of up to four years. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has suggested, and the government entirely agrees, that these persons should have the same pension benefits as the Hong Kong group. The amendment will give effect to this change.

I might add one technical point. The Standing Committee suggested that this amendment be included in the portion of the bill relating to the Pension Act. However, as the exiting legislation affecting the pension rights of these persons is embodied in the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the amendment applies to the portion of the present bill relating to that act rather than to the Pension Act. The practical result, of course, is exactly the same: the effect will be that all Canadians, whether technically classified as veterans or not, who were prisoners of war of the Japanese for a year or more will be entitled to the same special benefits.

These are the explanations I have to offer in connection with this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see you had the choice of two Knowles. Thank you for recognizing me. We on this side of the House welcome the speed with which the minister has brought in this bill for third and final reading. We intend to do everything we can to see that it receives a speedy passage. We are pleased to hear the amendment which the minister has proposed.

Before I resume my seat I intend to suggest two further possible amendments which I hope the minister will see fit to accept. Before doing that, however, I should like to say a sincere word of tribute to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) who has laboured so long in the cause of veterans rights and privileges here in the House of Commons, having served on that committee during his whole life in Parliament. I especially appreciate his efforts, because on occasions when I was unable to be present in the committee he carried the ball for the Official Opposition. I should also like to pay a word of tribute to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Legault) who presided with extreme fairness, good humour and a desire to get things done as speedily as possible.

The two amendments which I should like the hon. minister to find in his heart to make, concerns clause 59(3). Perhaps they could be best explained by reading part of a letter from the War Amputations of Canada signed by Mr. Chatterton. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put certain parts of that letter on the record.

Under the new legislation an Exceptional Incapacity Allowance may be paid to a small number of 100 per cent pensioners as compensation for special problems—including pain and suffering, and shortening of life expectancy.

Specifically, the offending proviso is contained in Clause 59(3) of the Bill, to the effect that this allowance may be decreased if pension authorities decide that the disability can be lessened by wearing a prosthesis. This could have the effect of reducing the allowance for severely-disabled veterans, should they attempt to overcome their disability by the use of artificial arms or legs.

This proviso is in direct conflict with a recommendation in the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs of June 22, 1970, which proposed that such allowances be paid as of right, and included the statement: "This right will not be affected by the pensioner's means or his degree of rehabilitation".

The committee report was concurred in by the House on June 23, 1970. Bill C-203 contains many improvements in veterans' pension legislation. It is regrettable that the bill should be marred by the inclusion of this seeming imperfection.

Then, moving on a couple of paragraphs:

We believe that, in the main, this proviso would affect some 200 double amputation cases, whose allowance could be reduced by an average $400 per annum (from $1,200 to $800). Thus, the additional cost of Bill C-203 if this proviso were deleted would be approximately $80,000 per annum. Our concern, however, is with the principle, and the amount of added benefit to the seriously-disabled pensioner is of secondary importance.

We recognize, of course, the medical principle that a good fitting prosthesis can be of considerable assistance to an amputee. We must, however, give priority to the rehabilitation aspect, and it is our experience that incentive is often needed to encourage a severely disabled person to make use of artificial limbs. Hence, our objection in this matter is based on the simple fact that it will represent an economic penalty for the disabled pensioner who attempts to overcome his handicap. It will place him in a disadvantageous position in relation to his fellow pensioner who does not make the effort to use a prosthesis. The latter group comprises a small percentage of war amputees; also it is emphasized that in some instances the reluctance of such amputees to wear the often crude appliances is quite legitimate.

Another factor giving concern is the departure from a long-accepted principle of our pension administration, which compensates all amputees for their anatomical loss, based on the location of the amputation.

I think perhaps that is enough to make the point, and I earnestly ask the minister to give very serious consideration to including this proposal among any other amendments that he may make.

The other portion of the legislation which I feel perhaps the minister may be interested in amending is about which relates to the entitlement of a widow to the pension of a veteran with a disability of less than 45 per cent. There are many, many cases of severe hardship experienced by widows of our war veterans who perhaps had 38 per cent or 44 per cent disability, just below the line, thus eliminating the entitlement of the widow to their pension. If only this right could be given to them it would certainly alleviate the hardship and suffering that many of their widows are now forced to experience.

Without taking the matter further may I simply ask the minister whether, as I said at the beginning, he will consider adding to the amendment that he has already made these two suggestions that we in the official opposition propose.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow my hon. friend from Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles). Despite our being in different parties, we seem to agree on almost all subjects. There is only one subject on which we have a strong disagreement, but that is not before us today.

We are at the report stage of this bill, and I suppose we have to face the fact that, technically speaking, all that is before the House at the moment is the amendment moved by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) which would extend the rights in the Hong Kong provision to merchant seamen and any others who were prisoners of war of the Japanese during the last four years of World War II.

We welcome the amendment that the minister has moved, and there is no question that it will receive the unanimous support of the House. As the minister pointed out, this was a recommendation that was made by the veterans affairs committee, on the motion of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae), to whom a just tribute has already been paid. We put it forward as a recommendation rather than as our own amendment to the bill because, since it involves the expenditure of money, we cannot put it in the form of an amendment. It requires the minister to assure us that the Governor General agrees, and since the minister has done so we are happy to support the amendment.

We understand, of course, that it will not affect very many people. There might be three, four or five merchant seamen or others who were not engaged in the actual services but were, nevertheless, prisoners of the Japanese during the years in question. However, even though the amendment affects 4, 5 or half a dozen people at the most, it is the right action to take and we are glad it is being taken.

Like my namesake, there are a number of other amendments that we wish the minister were making, but perhaps I will get to them when we reach third reading stage of the bill where there is a little wider latitude. I support the suggestions which have just been made by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand, but I should like to take a few seconds to underline in particular our disappointment that the minister has not accepted the other recommendation that our committee made. It was a unanimous recommendation and has to do with the maximum amount of exceptional incapacity allowance.

This recommendation is on all fours with the one now being accepted in that it was the subject of a recommendation of the committee. It was also supported by the committee unanimously, and we are quite disappointed that the minister has not yet seen fit to accept it. Whereas the one he has accepted will affect only four or five people, the other recommendation would affect a few hundred people and we think it too should be accepted.

However, rather than indulge in repetition, since I plan to say something about this at the third stage and to move an appropriate amendment at that time, I shall not continue to discuss the matter now. I rise simply to say that as far as the item actually before us is concerned we support wholeheartedly the proposition that merchant seamen and others who were prisoners of war of the Japanese should get the same pension arrangements that are provided for the service personnel who were prisoners in Hong Kong.

Motion (Mr. Dubé) agreed to.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-203, to amend the Pension Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dubé moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at this stage I should like to express my appreciation and gratitude to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, to its present chairman and its former chairman, for the speedy and excellent way in which they have carried out the review of this bill to amend the Pension Act. I was delighted but not surprised that the committee endorsed all of its main provisions. They have made a number of amendments to the bill itself, but none of these improvements change the principle of the bill and are quite acceptable to the government.

Pension Acts

I do not wish to speak again at length on this bill, but I do want to say it has been extremely well received by all concerned, including the House of Commons, the standing committee, veterans associations and the veterans themselves. On many occasions I have explained the subject matter, and it has been thoroughly examined and debated. The first step was the tabling of the government white paper, and this was followed by a thorough examination by the committee. There was a full discussion of the matter in this House during the second reading stage of the bill. Apart from these studies, the debates in this House and in the committee, this bill has been the focus of extensive and favourable discussion at many meetings of veterans and veterans organizations across the country. Therefore, it is not necessary for me to again explain the provisions of the bill.

I should like to underline very quickly five of the most important improvements contained in the bill. The first is, of course, the modernization and streamlining of the entire process of pension applications, and the establishment of an independent pension review board. The second is the establishment of a bureau of pensions advocates reporting directly to the minister. The third is a completely new allowance payable, as of right, to those who are exceptionally disabled and entitled to 100 per cent pensions. The fourth, which I should like to underline as being a very important improvement, is special pension provisions for Hong Kong veterans and others who were prisoners of war under the Japanese for at least one year. The fifth improvement to be brought about by the adoption of this bill, and perhaps the most important in the minds of many, is a new, broader and more generous definition of the "benefit of doubt" provision which applies to all provisions of the act.

In conclusion, I should like to state again that the veterans of Canada have hailed this measure as providing "the most extensive immprovements in half a century". I am confident that hon. members of this House will also wish to give it their warm and swift approval.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I was on my feet a few minutes ago, all that was before us procedurally at that point was an amendment which has now been passed and incorporated in the bill. I also indicated there were a number of things on which I wished to say a few words, and I avail myself of this third reading stage in order to do so.

I should like to join with the minister and the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), as well as others, in paying well deserved tribute to the two chairmen of the committee, the former and present, to the officials of the department who sat with us for many hours during many days, and particularly the representatives of the veterans organizations who were really a tremendous help to us in arriving at the final version of this bill.

[Mr. Dubé.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I must also pay tribute to the members of the committee. We in this institution, and I do not think we should, never completely forget our differences. We belong to different parties and we have differing ideas. That is why we are here; to try to resolve these differences. But this is one of the committees in which the differences fade into the background, because of our desire to do a job on behalf of the people of Canada for the veterans of this nation.

I agree that this bill we are now passing is an important milestone in the field of veterans legislation and that it makes many improvements which we in this party warmly welcome. I suggest at the same time this does not deny us the right to point out that it does have some very real shortcomings. We have not reached a Utopia. We have not seen the end of complaints, grievances or disappointments of veterans who will continue to write to their Members of Parliament as well as to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

As the minister has just pointed out, one of the major things to be done is a restructuring of the handling of disability pensions. We have been over the details in this regard many times and there is no point in my going over them at this stage.

There is also a major improvement in the recasting of the "benefit of the doubt" provision. As a matter of fact, in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs I suggested that one or two versions of that "benefit of the doubt" provision, which have been put in the bill, should appear in 24 point type. They are extremely important and they should underline every decision made in the cases of veterans, particularly those in doubtful areas.

In all fairness I think we should at the same time issue a word of warning. There has been so much said about this new "benefit of the doubt" clause I suspect there are many veterans in this country, particularly the older ones from World War I, who feel that now is their chance to reopen their cases under this new legislation and obtain favourable decisions, although they have not been able to obtain such decisions over the past 50 years. A warning must be issued. Some of them will obtain favourable decisions, but I am sure some will be disappointed.

This bill writes into the act a new clause 1A which I read into the record on a previous occasion and will not repeat. It calls for a liberal construction of this legislation in order that the recognized obligation of the people and the government of Canada to veterans will be implemented. Nevertheless, there are still clauses in this bill which will result in decisions in borderline cases being made against veterans.

I rise on this occasion to say that the committee in my view did make one improvement in this respect. At page 10 of the bill, as originally introduced, there was a clause which provided that the presumption of physical fitness at the time of enlistment might be rebutted by medical evidence that the disability must have existed prior to enlistment. We had a long discussion in the committee about that wording. Some of us felt that even though we might have been indulging in semantics, the phrase "something must have existed" was a dangerous one. Well, we did get that changed to a wording which now states that the presumption of physical fitness on enlistment cannot be rebutted quite that easily but can still be rebutted—and I now quote the bill as it presently reads—by medical evidence that establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that the disability or disabling condition existed prior to enlistment. I think that is a little better than the previous wording "must have existed". However, it still leaves an opening which in some cases may be resolved against the veteran. I hope this will not happen but I think we would be misleading the veterans of Canada if we gave all those who have been disappointed in the past the impression that their cases will now be resolved more favourably. Nevertheless, I hope it will turn out that by improving the benefit of doubt clause we have made the position better for our veterans.

Like the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand I feel we did not go far enough in the clause having to do with the exceptional incapacity allowance when we improved the wording about those who are provided with a prosthesis. I think the case that is still being made to us by the War Amputations of Canada, namely that such an allowance should not be affected by whether or not one is fitted with a prosthesis, is a good case. I am sorry that in the committee we were unable to go all the way. Again, it is one of the good things about committee treatment of a bill of this kind that we did get an improvement. I dare to hope that the sympathy and concern of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Canadian Pension Commission will be such that if it should turn out in a year or two that that clause needs to be amended and improved the government will bring in such a proposal.

I want to say again, as I have said on previous occasions, how much I regret the unwillingness of the government to go along with the committee's support for recommendation 106 in the Woods report. That recommendation had to do with the position of widows of veterans where the veteran at his death had a pension of less than 48 per cent. As the law stands, there is no pension as of right for such widows. The Woods committee recommended that in such cases there be a proportionate pension as a matter of right. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, when dealing with the Woods report and the white paper, recommended that the Woods report recommendation be implemented. Even so, the government did not include it in the bill. In the committee when we were studying this bill we tried again and were unable to get majority support at that time as we had previously, and so it is not in the bill. I believe this is unfortunate.

Speaking of widows, another improvement we made to the bill in the standing committee had to do with a group known as widowed mothers. They are part of the group known as dependant parents. We discovered that a provision had found its way into the bill—I had a word in my mind which I think perhaps I should not use—that would permit the dependant parents' pension to be taken away. As it now stands, once a widowed mother receives a dependant parent's pension she may keep it, no matter what other earnings she might have after she has gone on the pension. A provision found its way into the bill that would make it possible to cut off a parent's pension in such a case. Members of the committee will remember the very interesting time we had on that, but in the end we were able to get a unanimous decision that such a withdrawal of a right should not be there and so the bill was worded in such a way that the act would remain as it is.

So, Mr. Speaker, these are the various things with which we dealt in the committee. We had a few votes in which we actually divided. Generally, we reached either a kind of compromise or unanimity and, on the whole, I submit we have done fairly well. There is one item to which I referred earlier, and which I shall leave to the last because I intend to make it the subject of an amendment. Before I come to that, may I say I am becoming a little apprehensive about when and how we will deal with the companion operation to this, namely the 10 per cent increase in disability pensions and the 15 per cent increase in war veterans allowances. Even though the CBC does not know it, I know it is not part of this bill. I was awakened this morning with the news that today we were to debate a bill to provide for a 10 per cent increase in pensions and a 15 per cent increase in allowances on April 1. That is not in this bill. We are all aware of that. But I ask, when and how is that to be done. We were told it would be done by an estimate or estimates. The estimates for 1971-72 were tabled yesterday and I do not find any such provisions in those estimates.

When I asked the President of the Treasury Board about this he said he would have to take the question as notice. There are one or two items in the estimates in which there is reference to authority for the Treasury Board to increase or decrease certain grants, and when I see things like that I become a little anxious. My fear is we may be jockeyed out of our right to debate these increases or that they may be put off until we are so close to April we will be told if we debate them at all we will delay their coming into effect. We do not do that in respect of veterans matters. I believe we should have the right to discuss these things and, in particular, any changes the government is making by way of regulations in respect of war veterans allowances. Many veterans who receive these allowances are disturbed now because they have received from Mr. Donald Thompson, the new chairman of that board, a notice to the effect that they must apply for the guaranteed income supplement. First, they had a letter advising them it was in their interest to do so. Then, they had a second letter saying the matter had been reviewed and they were advised to accept it because if they did not they would be considered as having received it in any event.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If my friend is rising on a point of order, perhaps I might be allowed to finish, and save his time and mine. I realize that war veterans allowances are not before us in this bill, but I submit this is a related matter. My plea to the minister is simply that he look at the problem I questioned him about two days ago, and look into the matter of our having a discussion of war veterans allowances before changes are made in the regulations that would embarrass or humiliate our veterans. If the minister does not find a way for us to discuss this matter some of us will.

I believe that pretty well covers the things I want to say at this point, other than the matter which I am making the subject of an amendment. There is one other thing, however. I realize the force of what the minister said about the Hong Kong prisoners having suffered particular hardships and difficulties as a result of which they developed an identifiable condition which seemed to apply to all of them, thus making possible the special treatment they are now being accorded by this bill. It seems to me, however, that the National Prisoners of War Association and the Dieppe Prisoners of War Association have a case in asking for equal or at least comparable treatment. The situation of this group was discussed at great length in the committee both times, when we were on the white paper and again when we were on the bill. The government's position—by that I mean the position of the officials because there were Liberal members in the committee who took the same view we did, but they were not able to prevail—was repeatedly that there is an identifiable condition that attaches to those who were in Hong Kong. We contend that there are also identifiable conditions that apply to prisoners of war under other conditions. I am sorry that in this bill, which is so good and in which we are doing so much, we are not dealing with that group.

As I said, one hopes that now that we have had this very thorough review of veterans legislation it will not be a case of putting it aside for five, ten or 20 years. Let us come back to it in a year or two if, as a result of the workings of this new setup and of the application of the new principles, it becomes obvious to all of us that further improvements should be made. As I said, that is my submission but for one point. I think we have done a pretty good job; I think things will be better, but there are still a number of shortcomings, so many in fact that our mail from disappointed veterans and veterans' widows who feel that we have not yet carried out the obligation of the government of Canada as set out in the proposed new section 1-A of the bill will not be lessened.

I come to my last point which has to do with the maximum amount of the exceptional incapacity allowance. Those who have already spoken today have again indicated what this is, namely a provision to the effect that a 100 per cent pensioner, that is a veteran who is receiving a 100 per cent pension, may under certain conditions qualify for this exceptional incapacity allowance. There is much detail in it that I will not go into at this point, but I have one particular point in mind, namely, the maximum possible amount of that allowance. The Woods report recommended a formula that made possible certain combinations, the result of which could be a maximum allowance of $7,950 a year. Without getting into an argument as to whether or not that is too much—I do not think anything is too much in that area—that was the figure in the Woods report with which we started, namely, $7,950 a year.

When we received the government's white paper and took it to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, the proposed maximum was $1,200. You can realize that that struck us as an awful comedown from $7,950. The veterans organizations which appeared before us briefed us effectively through their representatives. They dealt with it in the working parties that were set up between their representives and the officials, and we came up with a compromise of $3,500. I emphasize the point that when that figure was arrived at, it was supported by the committee unanimously. Some of us thought we had gone too far down, but in the spirit of the committee we agreed to it, and so recommended to Parliament when the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), as chairman of that committee, filed our report.

I think that was good committee work, and we were happy about the results of those negotiations. But then we got Bill C-203, and the government offered $2,400 instead. The line taken by the minister was that the government had doubled its previous offer. That does not mean much. If the government had offered $1 in the first place and made it $2 later, that would be doubling the first offer. Two thousand four hundred dollars may be twice $1,200, but it is a lot less than the Woods recommendation of $7,950. I do not think it was fair to the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, who were unanimous on this point, to do this shortchanging and to put the amount at only $2,400.

An hon. Member: What good is the committee system?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, that is a good question, but it is still true that the committee did a lot of good work. On this point, the committee showed the value of the committee system because the committee which just reported the bill a couple of days ago again recommended by unanimous vote that the amount be $3,500, but the minister today showed no sign of accepting that recommendation. Every member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs voted twice for the maximum figure to be $3,500, and I think it is an insult to the members of that committee for the government, in the first place, to put $2,400 in the bill, and secondly, for the minister to say nothing in respect of our second recommendation on this point. I think all of us on that committee should ask the government to reconsider this matter. I could not move such an amendment at the report stage. I though of doing this even though I knew it was out of order, but I did not follow that course. It involves the expenditure of money so a private member cannot move it. However, I can move that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the standing committee for the purpose of reconsidering that clause, and that is what I shall move in a moment.

I do not want anyone to stand up and say that this is delaying the progress of the bill. It will take a matter of minutes, an hour at the most, if the government is willing to agree to it. If the government is not willing to agree, then of course that is the end of it. I hope that the members of the Veterans Affairs Committee from all parties will speak and vote as members of that committee, rather than as partisans, on this amendment. As a committee we have spoken twice. We have said that we want the maximum to be $3,500, not $2,400, and I think we should say so again. My motion does not have the figure in it. I am taking no risk of its being out of order. But I am also leaving no doubt as to what it means. My amendment asks for a reconsideration of the proposed section 59(1) on page 25 of the bill, and if you look at the proposed section 59(1) you will see the following words in line 26 "and not more than $2,400 per annum". That is what I want reconsidered because I believe that figure should be $3,500. That is what the vote on my amendment will be, a vote for or against $3,500.

For all the differences and the arguments, and all the times that we say there are still shortcomings, my total impression about the work of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on the white paper and on the bill is good. It has been enjoyable, and I think we have done a good job. Let us not leave this bit of unhappiness resulting from the fact our committee has been snubbed twice. Let the House of Commons say that we want that clause reconsidered. We want the government to say that it is now willing to put the figure at $3,500.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That Bill C-203 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed section 59 (1) on page 25 of the said bill.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is my only appearance in the debate on this bill, other than a brief intervention at the second reading stage with regard to a couple of points which I would now like to make again. The principal point that I wish to make does not require any amendment to the bill. It was unfortunate, and I complained privately to the then chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, that the committee failed to deal with a very important segment of veterans affairs, namely, the after care of prisoners of war. I am not talking about Hong Kong prisoners of war—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I interrupt the hon. member for just a moment. As he will have noted there is an amendment before the House at the present time. I appreciate that he, being an expert on the rules of the House, will take that into account. I was hoping that we would not get into a general discussion on third reading until we disposed of the amendment. I thought I should bring this aspect of our proceedings to the attention of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and of other hon. members who may want to take part in the debate. I think that for the time being we should, as much as possible, limit contributions to the amendment before the House. At the same time, I do not want to be difficult. This is a bill on which there seems to be general agreement in the House, and I do not want to complicate matters by being too technical. However, there is an amendment before the House and, as all hon. members know, the rule of relevancy requires that we discuss the amendment which is before the House, and not the clause or the bill which it seeks to amend.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I may have transgressed a bit, according to your way of thinking. I was going to deal with the particular point of the amendment and, in doing so, I was setting forth the priorities of the points that I wish to cover at third reading stage. Otherwise, I would only have to come back after we dispose of the amendment, try to get Your Honour's eye, and run the risk of being challenged that I was attempting to speak for a second time on third reading. It was with that in mind that I wished to outline my main points. If Your Honour says that we should limit our contributions to the amendment I will do that, but I hope I will get the floor again to continue my speech.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows as well as I do that there will be no difficulty about that. We have a debate now on the amendment. When it is completed, all hon. members who have not spoken up to this point in the debate can then speak on third reading, including the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right. It is a question of priorities, and this particular point that has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is one I would like to support. It seems to me that in disregarding this particular point the government has indicated it closes its mind to any amendments to legislation, once the legislation has been presented. I find that once a bill has been printed not even the forces of God will change some ministerial or administrative minds.

There is also the fact that provision has been made in the estimates, that the estimates book has been printed, and that is the end of it. It would be just too much trouble for the government to accept any amendment, besides which the government might have to come back with an amended recommendation. But it seems to me that this sort of administrative convenience should not stand in the way of accomplishing the end that is sought by hon. members. I am sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not say anything incorrect and that the committee, with a majority of government members on it, repeated its previous recommendation. But I am surprised that the minister did not take that recommendation back to his colleagues or, if he did, that they did not recognize the justice of the case.

There is no question but that at any point the figures are arbitrary. They are arbitrary at $1,200 per annum. They are arbitrary at $2,400, or $3,500. There has to be a degree of choice determined, but surely the minister and the administration must recognize that they are not omniscient in matters of this kind. They should realize that if members here are to do the kind of work that is expected of them, and they have done it not once but twice, then an explanation must be given. There should not be a mere dismissal, given with the back of the administration's hand. I have not heard any reason given why the figure should not be changed.

Perhaps I am a little subjective in this matter. I have not had responsibility as the chairman of our party committee with regard to veterans affairs, but I did have responsibility for a time as minister for the Department of Veterans Affairs, and perhaps as a veteran I appreciate the matter a little differently. It seems to me that having sensed the feeling of the House, and having twice been given the committee's recommendations, the government should have acceded to it at report stage.

Was the committee merely going through an exercise in futility? In the present situation it seems it was merely told, "Go play with your own marbles." I am disappointed. We have not been given the requisite explanation. I can only repeat the hope of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that members of the Veterans Affairs Committee will vote in this House the same way as they voted in the committee, and that hon. members generally will support the amendment, giving the government a third opportunity to correct a lapse in its thinking.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I say with all humility possible, as a veteran who had long experience in the last war, that while I appreciate what they said, nevertheless, for reasons I will attempt to give to the House, I feel the government has been fair in the figures it has used so far as the exceptional incapacity allowance is concerned.

When one refers to a subject such as this, Mr. Speaker, really one is putting his political neck out because he is, in effect, speaking against motherhood. When one thinks of the great sacrifices the people who will be eligible for this pension made for their king and country, and indeed for the citizens of the free world, then certainly an argument could be advanced that no amount is too much to give to these unfortunate people. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, may I say my experience during the war has led me to believe that many who lost their lives really did not give quite as much as some of the unfortunate people who today are totally incapacitated in our hospitals or in their private homes. When I say totally incapacitated, Mr. Speaker, I mean exactly that.

On the other hand, I appreciate very much what the Committee of Veterans Affairs has done over the past couple of years. I happen to be a member of that committee and have followed everything that happened there with a great deal of interest. Along with the other members who have spoken, I wish to give my very best and sincere thanks to the officers of the department, to various veterans associations that appeared before us, to the great work that was done by our chairman and, indeed, by all of the members of that committee.

But today, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am in rather a fortunate position. As a result of other commitments on other committees of which I am a member, I was unable to attend either of the Veterans Affairs Committee meetings which recommended finally that a figure of $3,500 be used instead of the $2,400 that is now in Bill C-203. I must say that, while I had every sympathy for these people and, for some time, I felt there was simply not enough money in Canada to reimburse them for what they have given for the freedom of this great nation, nevertheless I must say that had I been present at the committee the other day I would have voted against the amendment suggested by the committee that the figure be now changed to $3,500. I would do so for the following reasons.

I have already stated that I do not think we could pay too much but, on the other hand, I feel that they should get all that is required for a decent living in Canada. If they need housing, these veterans should get it. If they need attention, they should get it. Certainly, paraplegics, as an example, should be able to own an automobile so that they can go for a drive. They should have furniture that is appropriate for the way they want to live. They should be able to buy things like coloured television sets and be able to have some of the extras in life that mean so much to them. They are not able to enjoy many things in life as much as we do.

But how do we arrive at a fair figure, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has suggested that in turning down the figure of $3,500 the government has snubbed the Veterans Affairs Committee.

Mr. Gilbert: Right.

Mr. Whicher: Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say this? If we accept the hon. member's statement as he gave it and agree that the committee was actually snubbed, then I can only say that the government has complimented the committee at least 50 times by accepting the recommendations of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: They have complimented the committee in numerous ways and on numerous occasions. As a matter of fact, the government accepted practically all the recommendations that the committee worked so hard to form, except in one or two instances. In the case of the exception about which we are now talking, instead of using a top figure of $3,500 the government decided that $2,400 was the correct figure. However, under the committee system of the House of Commons, of which the Veterans Affairs Committee is a part, we, as committee members, recommend to the government. We do not tell the government anything, we simply recommend. The government must accept responsibility for raising the money from the taxpayers of Canada to pay these pensions. This responsibility includes collecting taxes from all of the other veterans of Canada, many of whom have given a great deal also for their country.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I thought the statement by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, if I heard him correctly, that he didn't care how high the figure went, was quite irresponsible. I, as the member for the riding of Bruce, care how high these figures go because I always remember that no matter how much we pay out in the form of benefits we must collect the same amount from taxpayers of this country. Consequently, what I am interested in is a fair and realistic figure for these unfortunate people who have given their all for their country.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out today by the two previous members, that the government's white paper indicated that the maximum amount of this new allowance might be $1,200 a year. This was the original figure given to the committee. I agree that the Woods report had suggested a much higher figure but the standing committee, following its review of the white paper, suggested that this maximum be raised to $3,500 a year. In response to the committee's recommendation, the government doubled the maximum figure published in the white paper and set it at $2,400 in the present bill.

This new allowance should be considered in its full financial context, rather than in isolation. As has been pointed out in evidence before the standing committee, after April 1, a married pensioner with no children, who receives the maximum allowance for incapacity and the maximum attendants allowance, will receive, first, a pension of $4,464 a year; second, an attendants allowance of $3,000 per year; third, an exceptional incapacity allowance of $2,400 per year, making a total of $9,864 a year apart from clothing allowance. Since all these payments are exempt from income tax, as they certainly should be, they are the equivalent of a gross income, if taxable, under the present income tax laws, of $13,600. These amounts will apply to all of the most severe cases. I should perhaps mention that while in theory the attendants allowance is paid in recognition of extra costs, in fact most veterans concerned are attended by members of their family, usually the wife, so that the allowance is really an added part of the family resources like the pension itself.

The pension, the attendants allowance and the exceptional incapacity allowance are all payable for life. There are also pension survivor benefits. Therefore, no provision need be made from them for superannuation or retirement income. Furthermore, apart from these various payments, if the veteran is over 65 years of age, he is entitled also to receive another $3,600 in benefits under the Old Age Security Act. Therefore, in some cases, some veterans would receive a possible maximum income that is the equivalent of over $16,600 a year. May I say perhaps that is not enough. However, neither is a million dollars enough. We have to draw the line somewhere. Some time we have to stop people from standing up in the House of Commons and in other legislatures in Canada and saying "give me, give me, give me" and in the next breath "cut taxes, cut taxes, cut taxes". It simply cannot be done.

Mr. Peters: That's not true. Talk to the minister responsible for housing. He says you can cut the amount of money and still give more.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Whicher: I have pointed out that no maximum figure can be pinpointed as being correct. The new maximum of $2,400 per year represents an important extra benefit to veterans. I have no doubt it will be warmly welcomed. As a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, an active member for years in the Royal Canadian Legion, vice president of one branch, a former zone commander of one of the great zones in the province of Ontario—

An hon. Member: Do you think you are the only one?

Mr. Whicher: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then, don't boast about it.

Mr. Whicher: I am not boasting about it. I give that as background information to explain why I have no hesitation in supporting the legislation as far as this point is concerned. I have no hesitation in voting against the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because I believe the government and the minister have been as fair as possible in very difficult circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The more I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speak, the more I realize what a great man he is. We call him "Mr. Parliament" and "Mr. Pension". Today, we saw him exercise prophetic powers. When the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) attempted to rise in his seat, he anticipated his question and, by his prophetic powers, he answered it. This indicates the strength, experience and compassion that the hon. member possesses.

Mr. Nowlan: Knowles for leader.

Mr. Gilbert: After listening to the remarks of the last speaker with regard to the amendment, I am more convinced that members from both sides of the House should support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have had experience in World War I, World War II and other theatres. When I think of the wide knowledge that they possess, the letters and requests they receive from veterans and the attention they give to them, I am fully convinced that they are experts in this field. I am a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I thought we possessed a certain specialized knowledge and nonpartisanship. After hearing the speeches that were made today, I am fully convinced that the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs far exceed the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, perhaps not from the standpoint of quality and calibre, but certainly in terms of experience and passion. This is one of the main elements that should permeate the thinking of the members.

I have had experience with the government's inattention and callousness with regard to the problems of pensioners. I recall, when we were dealing with the old age security legislation prior to Christmas, the generous attitude which the government displayed with regard to increasing the old age security pension from $79.58 to $80, a net increase of 42 cents. This is what scares me. This is why I am convinced that we should accept the recommendation of the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to increase the amount to $3,500, even though the Woods report stated the amount should be $7,950.

I am not persuaded by the argument made by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) that we have to look for the money. Surely, the money we allocate for the payment of pensions to war veterans should be a priority in government spending. I thought the hon. member for Bruce would have been persuaded by the unanimous decision of the members of the committee that the amount should be increased to $3,500. If the member was not present when the committee made this decision, it is unfortunate. I underline the fact that the members of the Liberal party voted unanimously in favour of the recommendation. I like to think that the other members acted out of compassion for the war veterans.

I have watched the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) since his appointment to the cabinet. I think he is very fair minded. Any letters I have sent to the minister on behalf of pensioners have received the kindest attention, and for that I thank him. However, I have noticed that the minister exercises a certain cautiousness and diffidence. I am sure the minister is capable of exercising courage and boldness. Since his appointment as Minister of Veterans Affairs, he has been aware of the problems of veterans. I ask him to exercise his experience, sympathy, knowledge, courage and boldness by accepting the recommendation of the committee that the amount be increased to $3,500.

I am not impressed by a government which slices things in half. If the need is $1,200, I am not interested in any suggestion to increase it to $2,400. That is not the issue. The issue is the actual needs of the veterans. The Woods Committee stated that $7,950 was necessary to take care of the needs of veterans. The committee reached a compromise and set the figure at $3,500. The government should not slice measures in half the way that it does. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in the chamber. He supported the legislation which increased the old age security payment by 42 cents. In view of all the letters he has received in this regard, I am sure if he had to do it over again he would be far more generous and compassionate.

In conclusion, I ask the minister, in whom I have confidence and respect, instead of showing cautiousness and diffidence, to show a spirit of courage and initiative by going over the top as some of these mighty men did during the war. Surely, he should join them and go over the top in this important matter.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join my colleagues, especially the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who moved a logical and clear amendment to the effect that all prisoners of war are not treated on an equal footing.

I am pleased to support this amendment on behalf of our veterans who suffered dreadful atrocities and who would enjoy life more if they were in better health. I feel the government should do something for those men who fought for our country. Their living conditions have been brought to the attention of the committee and Parliament and it has been thought advisable to treat these people at least on an equal footing with everyone else, or according to their merit.

I strongly support this amendment. Furthermore, I should like to see the pension increased to $3,500 instead of $2,400 as it is at present, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has rightly suggested.

The hon. member has given all possible details as far as these veterans are concerned, and especially the Hong Kong prisoners. As a matter of fact, this question has been discussed for a long time. Veterans find the time long. They feel the increases in their pensions are not quick in coming, because the cost of living goes up for them as for everyone else.

Later, other suggestions will be made concerning the Dieppe veterans. I have heard a great deal of comment. I am told that the Dieppe survivors should be treated the same way as those of Hong Kong. This is not the purpose of today's discussion, but I know that the Dieppe survivors have also been ill-treated in many ways. I know it was total war there as it was in Hong Kong. I therefore ask the minister to reconsider the problem and reexamine all the proposals made by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as regards Dieppe survivors.

Once again, I am pleased to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning veterans and hope that the latter will at least be granted what they are entitled to—a little more justice.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to comment on the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), remarks which have also been made on a number of occasions in committee. He always gives the impression that the country is not prepared to meet the kind of cost involved here. While I am aware in his part of the country that view is general, I do not think it is one which is accepted by Canadians as a whole.

I believe most members of this House have told someone, since their election, that we in Canada have one of the best veterans charters of any country in the world, particularly as it affects veterans of the first and second world wars. I, myself, believe this to be true, and I do not mind having to pay for this distinction. This feeling is shared, I would say, by almost everyone in the country. The one area of expenditure which the public is not reluctant to support is expenditure on veterans affairs.

In my opinion the question which was raised did not involve the $7,900, as recommended by the Woods Committee for 100 per cent disability, but was really three and a half times the total recommended in the Woods Committee Report. At that time, if I remember correctly, the hon. member for Bruce was using figures of $21,000 and intimating that the Canadian public could not possibly pay $21,000 to a veteran. We have certainly gone a long way, in the recommendations of the committee, from the recommendations contained in the Woods committee report which indicated we might pay a limited number of very badly disabled veterans an additional sum amounting to three an a half times the 100 per cent disability payment. We have gone a long way from that. The Woods committee report recommendation was calculated at $7,950. Then, there was the white paper recommendation of $1,200, and now the committee has unanimously agreed to $3,500.

I do not think anyone who has ever visited a veterans hospital would begrudge this sum. I am sure the hon. member for Bruce has visited hospitals and that he was as saddened as I and other members of the committee have been at the degree of disablement of some of the veterans there. Their loss is incalculable and there is no way in which the nation can compensate these people for the disabilities they have incurred. The Woods committee did not suggest we should provide them with luxury living. Indeed, luxury living is impossible for them. Money will not buy what they have lost. Of course, there is no way in which they can take back the contribution which they made and, this being so, we are under an obligation to them. I suggest there are very few people in this country who will disagree—I have in mind quadruple amputees and people in that category. I have seen them. I spent some time in the Christie Street Hospital during the last war. There was a young chap there who had been a victim of the first world war. Young? How could you tell? He was three feet long, he had no arms or legs and lived in a basket for many years. I cannot imagine the general public objecting to such men being given any kind of compensation which could be provided to them, as long as they could use it. Nobody has suggested we should establish a bank account for posterity. But we have maintained that all the assistance possible should be given in such cases, and I do not think anyone in the country would object to that.

I realize the minister has been faced with a difficult economic decision, not only in this instance but in many other instances. But I believe the committee gained a special insight into these questions during its examination of the witnesses appearing before it. Perhaps the minister ought to sit with these committees; maybe he should have to attend. I know the argument about ministers not becoming involved. I recall a difficulty which arose in another committee when a minister of the Crown sat as an adviser. But we were brought face to face with many problems about which the minister may have heard only indirectly. In view of the many problems that the committee found, it made a recommendation that $3,500 should be the sum to be paid to those severely handicapped, in addition to the other benefits. I hope that even at this late stage the minister will accept the amendment. The number of people affected is not very large.

I do not want the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) to leave the impression that he was talking for very many people in Canada when he used the argument of economy. Since he raised the economic argument, we must not forget that the number of people affected is going to diminish as the years pass. The pensions we are paying our veterans today may look in 20 years' time like the early $20 old age pension looks to the old age pensioners today who are trying to get along on $112. The pension must be increased, and it was for this reason, I think, that the Woods report applied the multiplier principle rather than setting a certain amount. On behalf of the veterans I know and the veterans organizations to which I belong, I do not want the impression left that the general public is unwilling to make a reasonable contribution to the after care of these veterans and the elimination of their financial worries on the ground that it costs too much. I do not believe that the people of this country think in that way. Certainly, the members of the committee do not and I am sure the minister does not.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak on this amendment because I felt that every member of the House would support it wholeheartedly. While I think it should be brought to a vote as soon as possible, the remarks made by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) leave me no alternative but to let the House know that the hon. member for Bruce certainly does not speak for me as a member of the veterans affairs committee.

The hon. member for Bruce would leave the House with the impression that he speaks for all Canadians; that he is protecting the interests of the taxpayers. Let me remind him that the Woods report originally recommended a maximum pension for these exceptionally incapacitated veterans of $7,950 per annum. When the Woods report first came before the committee it was pulled apart and discussed clause by clause. In the first report of the veterans affairs committee submitted in June of 1970 an upper limit of $3,500 was suggested, which was a compromise between the $7,950 recommended by the Woods report and the $1,200, or whatever it was, suggested by the white paper. The recommendation made in the report was an unanimous one.

The hon. member for Bruce told the House that he was not present when the committee drafted its last report. Perhaps he was not present when the report was drafted in June 1970, I do not know, though he did tell us that he attended the meetings of the committee very regularly. But may I point out to him that this recommendation of $3,500 was made by the standing committee not once but twice, and as I say the report was unanimous. The argument that has been raised that this proposal will cost a great deal of money and be a burden on the taxpayers is a lot of nonsense. We are talking here about a very few individuals, the completely incapacitated veterans. I do not know how many there are, some 10 or 20, but at any rate the number is very small. So, all the talk about the taxpayers being burdened is nonsense.

This proposal does not represent much in terms of money but it does represent the considered opinion of the committee on veterans affairs as well as the considered opinion of the Woods committee, which actually recommended a greater amount. It also represents the submissions of the national veterans organizations of Canada. Incidentally, I should like to emphasize that in the submission of this particular body to the veterans affairs committee a guesstimate was given—only a guesstimate, but it is close—that the additional cost of implementing the recommendation of the standing committee to increase the maximum from $2,400 to $3,500 would possibly be $500,000 a year. So, how can any member of this House stand in his place and make an impassioned plea for patriotism, as did the hon. member, and at the same time leave the inference that we are talking here of a cost of millions of dollars, when in reality the cost is about half a million dollars?

I say this amendment is a reasoned one. It supports the unanimous recommendation of a standing committee of this House, a recommendation made not once but twice. As far as I am concerned, members on both sides of the House have no alternative but to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the veterans affairs committee and as one who not only helped prepare the first report but also the second one, I did think for a couple of days or so that I had put myself into a box here. This proposal was, in fact, an unanimous recommendation of the veterans affairs committee. In going over the bill as amended and in considering the many amendments the minister was prepared to accept as the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has stated, it seemed to me that this was one instance when the minister was apprised of the position of the veterans affairs committee, namely that consideration should be given to raising the pension not to $2,400 but to $3,500.

Although committees make recommendations, somewhere along the line a final decision has to be made. In this case the minister has decided, in his wisdom, that we have tried to put a little too much icing on the cake. I think the veterans are entitled to the icing and this was why I voted in committee in favour of this particular recommendation. Subsequent to the vote in the committee, I did a little bit of research. I feel, as a result, that the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) is somewhat mistaken in his guesstimate. I believe that we are looking at an expenditure of something in the neighbourhood of an additional three-quarters of a million dollars if we bring the pension up to $3,500.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): It is still peanuts.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

Mr. Cullen: It is all right for members of the opposition to cry "peanuts". Of course, it is peanuts. As the minister said before the committee, not once but twice, there is no way on a quantitative basis that these men can be compensated, and I agree. But somewhere along the line the government has the responsibility of making a decision, and it decided to double the original offer. I feel that the committee did a great job in a non-partisan way when it made its recommendations to the minister; but the decision has been made that the recommendation is not acceptable.

This would be a completely new benefit paid to the veterans. I agree with hon. members opposite that there is no way to compensate these veterans. Although it may be peanuts to them, it is $750,000 to the taxpayers. I think the hon. member for Bruce put it correctly when he said it was difficult to speak in the fashion he did because it sounded as though he were against what the veterans were asking. I have had to do a lot of thinking on this particular question, and I take second place to no man on the veterans affairs committee. The only meetings of the committee I have ever missed were either as the result of sickness or because I was on some other committee. I have been a regular attender and went all through the discussion of the bill in the committee on more than one occasion. I have examined the recommendations made by the Woods committee, all 148 of them, many of which the government accepted. What I am afraid of is that we might lose the benefit of this wonderful piece of legislation simply because we are nit-picking over whether the amount should be $2,400 or $3,500. The $7,950 to me, as to the Canadian taxpayers, does not represent nit-picking. I have no hesitancy in voting against this amendment because this bill should come before the House for third reading in order that these benefits can be provided to the veterans as soon as possible.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would accept a question in view of the fact he has some time left? My question relates to the point he made of the fact that the minister accepted many of the recommendations of veterans and the Woods committee reports. While this statement is very true, I should like to point out the significance of the situation of the disabled we are referring to at the moment. During the committee meetings, everyone hung tight and tough on this matter. The Woods committee and the veterans organizations felt this offer was very good. Everybody had to give up something, and we are not quarreling with that, but the feeling of almost everyone was that we should give an extra amount to the totally disabled. Would the hon. member not agree with that suggestion?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think the situation was that we examined all the circumstances and decided something extra should be given. The minister was prepared to double the amount the government had originally offered. The veterans affairs organizations felt the amount should be $3,500 and a saw-off at $2,400 was agreed upon. I have no hesitancy in voting against this particular amendment because I feel the government has indicated clearly to the committee it has gone as far as it is prepared to go. I feel we have done our job. In the final analysis, a decision had to be made. That decision has been made, and I support the government on this splendid piece of legislation which veterans organizations have called the best piece of legislation to come forward in 50 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit one further question? Is it not a fact that it was after the minister had made the decision to set the amount at $2,400 by putting it in the bill that the committee made the second request, unanimously, that it be raised to $3,500?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I tried to make that clear when I referred to all the hearings, not just the first one, at which the recommendation was made. I believe I said that at the second meeting of the committee the minister suggested there was no way this recommendation could be accepted. The government offered to double its original offer. We did not go as far as we might have gone, and had we done so perhaps the government might have agreed to something higher than the $2,400. In any event, we were successful in getting the government to at least double the amount to which it originally agreed. If that is not good committee work, I do not know what it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion.

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise you that after some consultation with members opposite there does appear to be a disposition to extending unanimous consent to proceed with this measure until six o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is quite correct. In our desire to advance good legislation we are prepared to agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this was our proposal. We are glad it has been accepted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, to resume the remarks from which I had been gently turned aside by Your Honour in order that we might deal exclusively with the amendment, I was speaking about what I had regretfully thought was a lapse in the thinking of the committee. I will agree it does not appear as such in the bill, but I am referring to the request that has been made on a number of occasions by myself and some of my colleagues on this side of the House, and also by veterans' organizations representing prisoners of war in the European theatre or, should I say, those not included in the Hong Kong and Far East category. I think I share the views of the majority of those prisoners, since I was one of them, and their request is, not for the same consideration as was given to the Hong Kong prisoners, but for recognition of the fact that they should have been, and now all should be, medically examined by treatment services of the Canadian Pension Commission in order to establish their present state of health.

Some people will say there is nothing wrong with these former prisoners, and they are not going to do it. All I say to them is that they have their heads buried deep in the sand, and I say this also to the minister. They do not wish to appear concerned about the state of health of those men. I will admit that a number of them are pensionable, have appeared before the Pension Commission, and that there is a quite competent record as to their state of health. This is so, but I will tell the minister and the officials of the department that there are hundreds of prisoners of war whom I know who have not yet, and who cannot because they have no entitlement, appeared before the Pension Commission although they are not well.

After 25 years since release, I know some whose condition has markedly deteriorated in the past five years. There is something funny afoot if one can use that term. There is something rather funny because it is not. There is something disquieting with regard to the health of a great number of prisoners of war. Some prisoners of war were in good camps, some in bad camps. Some conditions were poor, some not as poor. I was in one where the conditions were among the best. Some of my mutual colleagues and relatives of prisoners of war who are in the same camp as I was are saying "he is a changed man". I appear at gatherings of my regimental association. I see a lot of these men. I can tell that.

Over the years we have missed a real opportunity from a medical point of view by not assessing these men after World War II and reassessing them later to see what, if any, changes were brought about. It was only by examining the Hong Kong prisoners of war that we have reached the stage we are at with them today. I remember members on both sides of the House making representations concerning them at least four years ago. When nothing was being done about the situation. We have reached this stage with regard to the Hong Kong veterans because an identifiable condition has been found. How do we know there is not an identifiable condition among all prisoners of war? It was not all "The Great Escape," "The Trojan Horse" or some of the other conditions shown in films that have glamorized prisoner of war life.

What if hon. members had to go on long marches with a diet of frozen sugar beets for weeks on end? What long-range effect does this have on the ultimate health of a man. What about ill-fitting boots, cold and persistent chilblains? After the age of 50 there may be an earlier onset of arthritis as a result of persistent chilblains suffered during winters spent in Germany, Poland or Italy. No one seems to care about this. But we must be reasonable. In addition to legislation, there must be administrative action and a decision now to start going through the records to find these men. There are not all that many Canadians who were in prisoner of war camps in World War II. I dare say there were more in the airforce than in the army and even less in the navy. The bulk of those in the army formed the Dieppe prisoner of war organization. They have made representations. There is an airforce prisoner of war association in Toronto. I dare say they have also made representations. However, there is a vast body of these people who have never seen or said anything to anyone. It is these men that we should go after.

If the fortunes of political warfare had been such that I had remained as the minister, it was my intention to do something about this. However, this was quite some time—

An hon. Member: Five years.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let's not hear five years. I had a very short period in office. Prior to that I was minding my business, learning the business of this House and occupying the Chair. I say to the hon. member who interrupted from the seat of his trousers that this would have been done. A great deal was done at that time. I can assure the hon. member that I know what the state of Veterans Affairs was in 1956 and when we took it over in 1957. Until 1957 and 1958 there was not even a Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to look after these matters. A good deal of progress has been made. The presentation of the present bill does not make a second coming of Christ. There was a great deal done to improve the situation with regard to veterans administration. That is because there was a degree of unanimity on both sides of the House. It did not matter who was responsible for the administration. The attitude was to move ahead. I encourage the government and the minister to move ahead and take the necessary action.

The prisoners of war will not come crawling on their hands and knees to ask for treatment. It is the members of this House who must encourage the minister to take this positive step. All the minister has to do is to get together with his deputy minister and the head of treatment services to get such a program organized. It would not take much. A lot of people would have to be traced. If there are overpayments of pensions and allowances, it certainly does not take long to trace the recipients. It would not take long to find the prisoners of war who are entitled to benefits. Let's make the effort. In two or three months it will be 26 years since I came out of a prisoner of war camp. I hope I have indicated the road the minister should follow. I want to be reasonable, but let's have some action.

My second point has already been referred to by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Widows of pensioners who had received 48 per cent or less pensions should receive a proportionate pension. What is the justification in a widow receiving a proportion of the 60 per cent pension her husband received before he died, yet if the pensioner received a 45 per cent pension, there is no entitlement whatsoever. I cannot see this arbitrary distinction. I have failed to see it for a long time.

We on this side have advocated for a long time that these changes be made. There is always a starting point for changes in the Pension Act. The fact that the need for certain changes was discovered within the last five years does not derogate from the validity of the proposals. Otherwise one could say that all the recommendations made by the Legion in its annual briefs were of less and less validity unless they started back in 1920. I know the cost involved here would have been somewhat less than $10 million a year; I have heard figures ranging anywhere from $5 million to $10 million a year. But it seems to me this would have been the right thing to have done and I am sorry it has not been done.

I suppose we can keep trying. But it takes a giant can-opener to open an act merely to insert one new provision. All I can say is that maybe the people affected will have to wait three or four years unless, happily, there is a change in the administration next year and then we can guarantee it within a couple of years. But failing that, I cannot see how this particular feature will come forward again.

I shall not talk about war veterans allowances because they are not dealt with in the bill. I note, though, that the government is keen about bringing in omnibus bills; there is one before us now to which the House is giving considerable attention. Had amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act been brought down at the same time as this bill—it is a related measure—we could have dealt with some of the problems raised by other hon. members in the opposition and, in particular, with one which has not been referred to so far today though I have drawn attention to it on previous occasions. I refer to the desirability of eliminating the requirement that one year's residence in Canada is needed to qualify for veterans allowance.

Again this past summer I saw a number of people in the United Kingdom who have lived there since World War I or World War II. They should be entitled to war veterans allowance, but there is no way in which they can return to Canada to put in a year's residence. This is nonsensical. The government will not agree to change this situation, for some undemonstrable reason except alleged difficulty with some veterans in the United States. The fact is that veterans in the United States, if they were qualified there, would get better treatment than they do here because their level of return would be higher. This is what I have been told by people in the know—Canadian veterans living abroad may be denied any claim to war veterans allowance.

We do look after, as we should, members of allied forces who are now in Canada. After all, they fought along with us. But to our veterans who happen to be living in France, Belgium, Holland or Britain we say: You have not come back here for a year and therefore you cannot qualify for war veterans allowance. I say, shame.

Mr. Dubé: I say you are not on the subject.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I fully realize I am reiterating what should have been done by bringing in a companion bill. Certainly this could have been done by bringing in amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Dubé: That is not the bill before us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I fully realize that, and I am not going to be as legalistic as you are about it. It is odd we should hear this type of objection put to us now, when in other circumstances we are asked to debate omnibus bills dealing with subjects which are not related in any way. I find this double standard difficult to accept. A lot of good has been done. I have been critical as to omissions so far, but a lot of good has been done by this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would be churlish if I did not acknowledge that there has been some progress, having participated in a limited way in the deliberations of the committee and noted the good will shown by committee members from both sides of the House. But there is always room from improvement and I have been suggesting directions in which improvements could be made. I hope that in due course the bill before us will receive the approval of Parliament.

Mr. Carl Legault (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate briefly in the debate which will make a reality this legislation which is the result of an extensive study into the question of proper recognition of our veterans, in particular those who have suffered injuries in various conflicts throughout the world. I say "extensive" because this study is one which goes back to the decision to appoint the Woods committee, to the receipt of a report from that committee and, following that, consideration of the report by the Veterans Affairs Committee and by the government. We have to realize that the processes of democracy are slow. Every member of the committee, as well as representatives of the numerous veterans organizations, was concerned about the time which elapsed before ensuring proper compensation to those who have for so many years endured the consequences of afflictions directly related to their participation in the defence of our country, of our convictions, of our freedom and of our democratic system.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe all hon. members intend to speed up the passing of the legislation so that it can be incorporated into the statutes and thus bring assistance to our veterans as soon as possible.

The committee made a thorough study of the Woods report, and of the white paper. All veterans' organizations that wanted to and asked to express their opinions had the opportunity to do so. Those viewpoints are certainly reflected in the bill before us. Although it is not perfect, most veterans feel that it gives them a better deal and improves their situation quite a bit.

At this point, I would like to congratulate the members of organizations who came and made representations for the sake of their fellow citizens.

I would like to congratulate also the members of the committee for their conscientious participation in the proceedings and for their concern about the way our war disabled are treated.

[English]

The bill before us represents the results of our assessment of this thorough study. I believe this is one example of a proper democratic way of doing things. I believe, too, that our committee system, organized as it is today, is revealing itself as being a vital instrument in our parliamentary procedure. The major question which was being asked following the presentation of the white paper was whether the government would abide by certain recommendations of the committee. The terms of the bill before us show that most of the opinions expressed by the committee have been accepted. The necessary amendments have now been brought down by the minister and I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate him for his well-disposed attitude and the co-operation he has given the committee. Once this legislation is passed I believe our country will have the best possible machinery for recognizing and satisfying the needs of veterans.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we compare Canada's treatment of its veterans with that of other countries, we can say that on the whole it is the best that can exist today. There is certainly room for improvement, and I think the committee is to pursue its efforts in order to correct some anomalies.

Officials and commissioners will be very busy in the next few months, for a multitude of applications will be brought to their attention. My fear is that individual cases may be examined in a hasty manner. Nevertheless, this problem should be corrected without undue delay.

The members of the committee were presented with a brief from the National Prisoners of War Association. I think this bill is going to protect these veterans in a very special way. The fact that prisoners of war of the Japanese are to receive compensation of not less than 50 per cent is a kind of protection and safeguard for other prisoners of war who suffered from extreme conditions.

The new interpretation and application of the act and the practice of granting the benefit of the doubt will remove many difficulties for these valiant men who suffer as a result of hardships endured during their incarceration.

[English]

I do not think that at this time it is appropriate to enumerate the statistics and examples given, which were well covered during the committee's deliberations. I know every member wants this legislation passed immediately.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have not entered the debate so far because I am anxious that this bill be passed today. However, we have a few moments left and I presume that when I finish my remarks that will be the end of the debate on the bill and the end of the business before six o'clock.

I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the previous speaker, the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee, the previous chairman and I have had a very happy relationship in the work we did on the bill, which is the culmination of 18 months' work. This was preceded by almost 3½ years' work on the part of the Woods committee and a study by the government, the translation and all the other steps that have been taken.

Although I am interested in all the provisions of the bill, there are two or three parts that interest me especially. One of them concerns the Hong Kong veterans. I have been deeply interested in this group ever since I saw them embark for Hong Kong. I saw them when they returned. Many of my own kinfolk were among them and I saw the condition in which they returned to this country. I also observed the conditions under which they have tried to make their way through civilian life since that time. If we have done nothing else for these men during the last few months, we have given them a better deal.

As has been said many times, there are many good features in this bill. However, we are disappointed at the omission of some provisions and we expressed this disapproval in the committee as part of the democratic process. But as I say, generally speaking the committee was a good one and gave us the opportunity to talk things over. I enjoyed my work because in committee you could let your hair down. I could not, but at least others could. Although, as I say, certain things are lacking, if the minister is open-minded and members are conscientious, the bill can be amended if we find further amendments are required. With that, I close by saying how happy I am to see this bill through the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, before we call it six o'clock may I raise a question of privilege? I made a remark earlier today with respect to the business of the House for tomorrow, but I did so under a misunderstanding of the rules of the House. Therefore, I should like to bare my breast and make my confession before the day is out.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-185 has had an exhaustive debate in this House as well as in committee. I understand that it is very uncontentious and could be passed through the report stage at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, those who wish to take part in the third reading debate are not in a position to do so just now. I think the understanding was that we gave up private members' hour for the purpose of completing Bill C-203. This having been done, in the same spirit I think we should agree that it is six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.45 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 26, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), moves:

That this house do now adjourn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I moved a motion under Standing Order 26 in respect of a matter that I thought was of specific importance and required urgent public consideration. It had to do with the report in the Globe and Mail of this morning to the effect that the ownership, interest and control of Home Oil Company Limited of Calgary will pass into United States' hands within the next few days. This statement was buttressed by the knowledge that a letter of intent between the Home Oil Company Limited of Calgary and Ashland Oil Incorporated of Kentucky has already been filed in the United States.

It is true that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) told the House yesterday that no deal had been completed. However, Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members will recognize the fact that there is little value in this House becoming alarmed about a situation after a deal has been completed. If we are going to concern ourselves with the takeover of one of the last remaining Canadian-owned oil companies it seems to me this House must concern itself now, before the deal is completed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I sometimes think that most Canadians are not fully aware of how vital and important the oil and gas industry is to the economy of Canada. It is estimated that over the next ten years the demand for oil in the world will increase by 50 per cent and that the demand for natural gas will increase by 100 per cent. The recent increase in the price of oil from the Middle East and the announcement this morning that Venezuela is raising the price of its oil by 25 per cent, effective next month, indicates there will be an increasing demand for Canadian oil.

Last year the Canadian Petroleum Association estimated that the potential for liquid petroleum in Canada is in the neighbourhood of 140 billion barrels. Carl Nickle, a former member of this House, now the editor of an oil magazine, estimates that the potential value of this oil and gas, if sold at present prices, is in the neighbourhood of $1,118 billion. The estimate for the 1970s is that the gross revenue from gas and oil will amount to $28 billion.

Many who are familiar with world oil geology are predicting that the Canadian Arctic will become another Middle East and that Canada over the next quarter of a century will become one of the major suppliers of oil and gas in the world. It seems to me that this House must be concerned about how we use this vast treasure house and dispose of this great reservoir of oil to the benefit of the people of Canada not only of this generation but of succeeding generations.

This is not a renewable resource; it is a resource which once disposed of will be gone for all time. We are merely the trustees of this vast accumulation of wealth which nature has placed under our soil.

The Canadian Parliament must decide whether or not in the development and sale of these vast quantities of oil and gas Canadians will get a piece of the action. They have not been getting a piece of the action. Approximately 85 per cent of the oil and gas well production in this country is in the hands of foreign corporations, and 99 per cent of the oil refining is in the hands of foreign corporations.

We will never get a piece of the action unless there are developed in Canada several major oil producing companies. We have a number of independent producers and small companies, but we have never been able to develop a major company. One of the few companies which has any hope of becoming a major producer of oil is the Home Oil Company of Calgary. That is why it is so important we consider this matter now. I am convinced that if the Home Oil Company of Calgary is sold to a foreign company we will lose virtually our last chance as Canadians to have a piece of the action in the development of the oil industry of Canada.

It has been known for some time that the Ashland Oil Company of Kentucky has been seeking to buy out Canadian companies. Last year it bought up Grid Oil and recently has been dickering with Mr. R. A. Brown, president of Home Oil. Mr. Brown owns over 50 per cent of the shares of Cygnus, which in turn owns over 10 per cent of the voting shares of Home Oil and also a part of the non-voting shares of Home Oil. Although he has only 10 per cent of the voting shares, Mr. Brown has effective control of the company.

Home Oil is important, not only because it is one of the few remaining Canadian-owned oil companies and is large enough that it could become a major producer but also because last year it bought $52 million of the equity stock of Richfield Oil, a United States company which has been doing exploration work on the north shore of Alaska. This was an attempt by a Canadian company to get into the northern oil picture.

Home Oil also owns 10 per cent, and a year ago owned 15½ per cent, of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. It sold half a million shares last year and now has over 800,000 shares, or 10 per cent of the equity of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, which makes it the second largest shareholder in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. Most people interested in the oil industry have known that these negotiations have been going on for some time, but it has been difficult to obtain definite information. A week or two ago I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he could tell the House whether a virtual agreement had been signed between Home Oil and Ashland Oil Incorporated.

The minister's reply what that there was no such thing as a virtual agreement, that there either was or was not an agreement. The minister may be technically correct. The fact is at that time a letter of intent had been signed dated January 18, 1971. I think the minister knew about that letter of intent. I believe it would have been better had he told the House frankly that there was to his knowledge a letter of intent. I see no reason, since the information was to become public anyway when filed in the United States, why he could not have taken the House into his confidence.

What is the effect of the letter of intent? The effect of the letter of intent is that while technically for a while the ownership of Home Oil will stay in Canadian hands, effective control of Home Oil will be transferred to Ashland Oil Incorporated of Kentucky. Mr. Brown will sell some of his shares in Cygnus for the sum of $10 million and the balance of his shares will be sold for not less than $8 per share or at a figure above that to be determined, the sale to take place within three months after his death or not later than within ten years. This means that by May 1, 1972, the control of Home Oil to all intents and purposes will have passed from Canadian hands into the hands of a United States company.

The purpose in asking for this debate is to urge the government to make a clearcut statement about what it proposes to do in face of this situation. It is not enough to give us some soothing syrup, to tell us the deal is not complete, that the minister desires to see this company remain under Canadian control and Canadian ownership, and that he has the best will in the world. I am not questioning the minister's desire or his intention. We want to know tonight what action the government proposes to take to ensure that one of the last remaining Canadian-owned and controlled oil companies will stay in the hands of Canadians, and that the one company that has some hope of becoming a major oil producer will remain Canadian so that Canadians will at least receive part of the benefit of the oil industry in their own country.

There are some things the government can do. First of all, the government can do what it did last May when it intervened to prevent Denison Mines being sold, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that Canadian ownership in the uranium industry should not fall below 40 per cent. We all supported him in that step. There is not much use arguing, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) the other day, that there is a difference between oil and uranium and that uranium has been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

The uranium industry is relatively small compared with the oil industry. Even if Denison Mines had been sold there would still have been uranium mines owned by Canadians and we would have had one of the largest uranium mines owned by the people of Canada through a Crown corporation, Eldorado Mining Company. We would not have been sold out completely. But here is a case in respect of the oil industry where we will be pushed entirely out of the picture if the government does not take action.

I say the situation is sufficiently serious that the government should take the same action it took last May and show some muscle and courage. It should say to Home Oil that this sale will not go through. It is significant that in the letter of intent, as reported in the press, there is a statement to the effect that this arrangement may not be completed because the government of Canada may intervene. The Home Oil Company and Ashland Oil Incorporated know the government can intervene. We on this side of the House know the government can intervene. We want to know now whether the government knows it can intervene and whether it proposes to do so.

The second thing the government can do is bankroll a consortium of small companies controlled by Canadians to buy the interest in Home Oil. I understand there are at least two companies, one based in Montreal and the other in Toronto, which have shown an interest. I believe there are other companies which have shown an interest. There are one or two independent petroleum producers with the technical know-how; they may lack the capital. If they had the capital it would be possible for them to buy out effective control of Home Oil in the same manner that Ashland is proposing to do. It would not require a large sum of money—$15 million within the next ten years.

We have in Canada the Industrial Development Bank. Surely this is what it was set up for. I was in the House when the Industrial Development Bank Act was passed in 1944. At that time we were told by the Minister of Finance that this was exactly the kind of thing the Industrial Development Bank would do, namely, help finance the development of Canadian industries. Here is an excellent opportunity to use the Industrial Development Bank to supply the necessary capital resources with which to buy Home Oil, if it wants to sell, and enable Canadian companies to take over this operation.

The third option open to the government is to have Panarctic Oils, in which the federal government has a 45 per cent equity, buy out Home Oil. It would work admirably with their operations, because while they are interested in the Arctic they also need to spread their risks and engage in oil exploration in various parts of this continent. This would be an excellent opportunity for Panarctic, if the government so decides. If the government does not want to do any of these things, it could set up a Crown corporation to buy out Home Oil and later turn it over to a public Canada Development Corporation, because that corporation will be in the oil business since it will be given the responsibility of handling Panarctic Oils. So the government can step into this picture if it wishes.

The government is not without alternatives. It can do any one of the four things I have suggested; I am not wedded to any one of these propositions. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has a better idea, we will be glad to hear it. The one thing we do not want to hear is a lot of excuses as to why the government is not going to do anything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We want the government to tell the people of Canada, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that the government is not only desirous of seeing the Home Oil Company of Calgary remain in Canadian hands but that they propose to take the steps necessary to ensure that it will remain in Canadian hands. That is what we want from the government. I hope the minister will not be satisfied merely to tell us that discussions are going on, that he has the best intentions in the world, that he has expressed his views to the parties concerned and that he has used all the powers of moral suasion that he has. The government has the responsibility to do much more than that. It has the responsibility to use the powers that it has to ensure that the vast reservoirs of oil under the surface of this country are developed for the benefit of the Canadian people.

The government has a responsibility to ensure that we do not become like the Middle East and Venezuela in which the whole oil industry is owned by foreign corporations and they merely sit by and watch the wealth being sucked out from under their feet. The government and this Parliament have a responsibility to see that the generations who will live here after we are gone have an opportunity to enjoy the benefits of the treasures which nature has placed in our soil, and that this birthright is not frittered away for a mess of pottage merely because the government is too gutless to act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the NDP has emphasized the importance of the petroleum and natural gas industry and its by-products not only to western Canada but to Canada generally, and has summarized what this wealth means not only to this generation but to future generations. I do not want to confine my remarks to Home Oil alone. Since 1963 we have had a Liberal government which has talked about foreign ownership since the days of Walter Gordon. The government has continued to talk about it in every election since then, but has done nothing about it and has not set up guidelines or priorities. This might be due to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) pragmatism to which reference was made during the last election.

In speaking to this motion I would point out that I come from Calgary where there has been a serious endeavour by the people of Alberta, as well as by the government of that province, to encourage the development of our resources. As a consequence, Alberta has been classified as one of the "have" provinces. In fact, before the wheat crisis brought on by the government—I still think it was brought on by the government, because Canada has dropped to sixth place as an exporting nation from first place which we held previously—Saskatchewan was one of the "have" provinces. It takes, of course, large pools of risk capital to develop any resource industry, particularly the petroleum industry. The development of these resources has been good for the country and good for the province.

Tonight our attention has been directed to the possible sale of the controlling interest in one of the last major Canadian oil companies. It seems to me that what we need is a new national development policy to make certain that the pools of capital that exist in Canada are available for resource development. The necessary climate should be established by a reasonable, responsible and energetic government, with initiative, to make certain that pools of capital which exist in Canada are made available for resource development.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

Mr. Brown and his directors are to be congratulated for their efforts in creating up to now such a viable corporate force in Canada. This is a company owned by Canadians, developing resources for Canadians, developing trade for Canadians and producing a product which adds to the growth of our gross national product and to the employment of thousands of Canadians, not only in Alberta but elsewhere, particularly in view of the industrial side-effects when you consider its by-products and the manufactured goods that are purchased from central Canada by the oil industry, which brings wealth to this part of the country.

This is a government of crisis. It moves only when something comes up that makes it move. That is why the Prime Minister has been getting so irritated lately and has been losing his cool: it is because he has crisis after crisis in his cabinet and in this House. When we ask questions seeking information, what does he do? I leave that question to you, Mr. Speaker.

Whatever answer is worked out to solve this problem, it must be a formula that is fair to the shareholders and fair to the company. But there have been no guidelines to date. What have we been doing since 1963 in this field? What has the Liberal government been doing since then? While it tergiversated, procrastinated and vacillated in this as in other fields, an uncertain atmosphere has been developing in the business community everywhere. I believe that Mr. Arnold Hart, the chairman and chief executive officer of the Bank of Montreal, put the matter in its proper light when he was dealing with this uncertainty. He said:

> One of the most unsettling aspects of the past year's discussion of the white paper on tax reform was the strong impression it created that officials in Ottawa are convinced that governments cannot perform their functions without taking an increasing share of the national output in taxes. This impression was not dispelled by a recent speech by the Minister of Finance in which he strongly implied that a reduction in taxes to promote economic growth could not be contemplated if it meant that existing government programs would have to be curtailed.
> Is it not fair to ask how changing needs and priorities can ever be accommodated if existing programs cannot be considered candidates for curtailment? And is it not especially important in present circumstances to have a hard look at these programs to see whether resources cannot be more effectively used to assist in the creation of employment opportunities in those regions of the country where slack economic growth is the source of much discontent and social friction?

My first point is that the white paper has scared away Canadian investors. It has frightened away those who were ready to invest in risk ventures. Mr. Bryce, the economic adviser to the Prime Minister, who never pays any attention to this place, said when I examined him in committee that of course the white paper on taxation would scare off investors but that Canadians were ready to pay. Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are paying tonight: they are paying through the nose because one of the last Canadian oil companies is being forced into the hands of foreign investors because of the fear being created by the white paper on taxation.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Canadian companies are placed at a disadvantage when competing with American and other foreign organizations in the exploration, development and indeed in the finding of crude petroleum and natural gas and all the by-products that go with them. The white paper on taxation has done nothing to correct this disadvantage. We should at this time create tax incentives and advantages for Canadians and Canadian corporations, not only to put them on an equal footing with American companies but to give them an advantage over foreign companies. This would encourage the Canadian investor to invest in these industries. The sins of the government are now coming home to roost. This is due to the fear created by the white paper on taxation.

The government should come out with a clear cut statement as to what taxes will be implemented, whether there will be special advantages in respect of depletion allowances, what the capital gains tax will be, if any, how it will affect the Canadian investor, and indeed how it will affect Canadian corporations developing resources here as well as abroad. Here was one of the problems. Home Oil went into Alaska to drill wells, and came up with dry holes. Supposing it spent a $6 million on drilling there, although I do not have the books of the company on my desk? If it is bought out by a foreign company, the foreign company can write off those losses, whereas if Canadian Pacific Investments or any other Canadian corporation were to buy Home Oil it would not have that privilege. Surely there must be provision for equal competition; but what has happened here is unequal competition which is working against all Canadians.

There are many other tax advantages which foreign corporations have when operating in Canada and Canadian corporations do not enjoy. This is particularly true in the resources field. If such a corporation buys shares in another company, the interest on the money it borrows to buy those shares is tax deductible. I could go on ad infinitum. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) talks about the assets of the white paper on tax alien and his puppets around him support the statements he makes not only in this House but in committee.

The Globe and Mail of today's date carries a story about the long negotiations concerning the purchase of controlling interest in Home Oil by Ashland. It states that according to sources in Calgary and Ottawa, last-ditch efforts to save the company from foreign control have failed. Why did they fail, Mr. Speaker? They failed, not through lack of capital in Canada but because of conditions imposed by the government which drove Mr. Brown, Home Oil president, into a foreign field to get the necessary capital. What were those conditions? Why have those conditions been kept secret from members of the opposition?

My leader, myself, other members of this party and, indeed, members of the NDP have been asking questions, seeking information, but we have not been getting it. All we get is evasive answers, dishonest statements, ending up with a fictitious fuddle-duddle. That is what the government is doing—fuddling and duddling around. I want to know those conditions. If the Canadian government—and this is my charge—has imposed conditions which in fact and in law have been more helpful to a foreign takeover than to a Canadian takeover, then its efforts have been negative and not positive.

What about this letter of intent? Yesterday, as recorded at page 3480 of Hansard, I asked this question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources:

> May I direct a supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. It relates to the answer he gave to the Leader of the Opposition in which he said that he had no knowledge of the sale. Does the minister have knowledge of a letter dated January 18?

I was the first to put my finger on that letter.

> It is a letter of intent relating to the parties and in it his name is mentioned in connection with the sale in question.

I repeat that the name Mr. Greene appears in that letter of intent, and in one of the paragraphs of the letter the impression was left that he had imposed certain conditions. Mr. Speaker, there are responsible businessmen on both sides of the matter. If the minister's name is in the letter, how could he stand in his place yesterday and say he did not know anything about the letter? Then I nailed him for the third time and asked:

> Is the minister aware of the letter?
> Mr. GREENE: I am aware that there was a written document—

This is evasion. You cannot get information from the government. There is a letter of intent and the minister knows there is a letter of intent. The minister knows a lot about this sale. I have come to the conclusion, after listening to the minister during question period and on television, hearing the wishy-washy answers he gives in this House, that he is like a ballet dancer dancing around and you do not where he is going to land next. He goes one moment to Denver and makes a great, strong nationalist speech to woo the young people across this nation, then comes back and repudiates everything he said. That is the kind of minister who is looking after resource development in Canada.

An hon. Member: Another Jimmy Gardiner.

Mr. Woolliams: Jimmy Gardiner couldn't hold a candle to these boys. First, the minister said he knew nothing about a letter of intent and he sidestepped like a ballet dancer. If a regulatory body in the United States has knowledge of this letter, and if this government felt they had to get their hands into the deal, why tell an untruth about it? Did the government tell Mr. Brown to keep the letter secret? Did the government tell Ashland that they had to keep the letter secret? They are like boys who paddle on a lake, become so involved in what they are doing that they fall in beyond their depth, and because they can't swim they drown. Mr. Speaker, this government is drowning. The government got themselves involved when they prevented Canadian investors matching foreign offers. That explains their silence and, indeed, their deceit.

• (8:40 p.m.)

It is suggested that it was the imposition of silence on Mr. Brown and Ashland that caused the trouble. Mr. Brown now says that he is in trouble with the securities commission of the United States as a result of the letter of intent, because the government and the minister got their hands ino the deal but refused to act. I hold in my hand the transcript of a great interview held on the program "Question Period" on February 8. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was interviewed by Peter Stursberg, Don Newman and Douglas Fisher. The host was Max Keeping. One of the interviewers asked this question:

> But in the case of Denison Mines a year ago you moved in to prohibit it and now you're backing it up with legislation. Why not with the oil industry?

I do not know where the minister stands on this question. Surely, if the industry is entitled to know anything it is entitled to know where the government stands on the constitutional question, in order that investor confidence may be maintained. As the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) so ably said, the government talks about uranium as coming under the Constitution because it is a public work for the good of Canada. If we can do this with respect to one industry, why cannot we do it with respect to oil? What is the government's position on the constitutional law in this respect? On this question I would have thought the government would have sought advice from the law officers of the Crown and that it would have been forewarned about its powers in this regard. The present uncertainty is killing investment. Canadians cannot obtain dollars for the purchasing of the controlling interest in Home Oil or any other company that is up for sale in this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In this interview the minister gave the following answer to a question:

> Q: Isn't the sale imminent though? Is not the sale of Home Oil imminent?
> A: Well, the discussions have been going on for some time and I think it's imminent but I am confident that the continuing good will of the parties, buyers and seller, that we can work out a method whereby this company will continue to be Canadian without having to resort to—

This is the question I should like to ask: Is this fair? For how long will American buyers continue to come up here and make offers if every time offers are made with respect to companies such as Home Oil we say, "We want a Canadian company to buy this company at that price." The Americans are pretty tough businessmen and they are not used to being treated as donkeys in this country. If they make an offer, they want to know that they have the right to have it accepted. I say that one must show good faith.

In this country there ought to be priorities and guidelines with respect to tax incentives. If we had such priorities and guidelines, Canadians would voluntarily move into the field. Canadians ought to be given encouragement to enter the field. Our chartered banks should loosen their policies and lend money to Canadians so that our people can develop our resources and our enterprises can participate in development equally with the Americans. After all, Americans borrow Canadian dollars; therefore, why cannot Canadians borrow Canadian dollars?

At least in the banking business the people concerned know where they stand. They know that so many shares must be held by Canadians and how many may be held by foreign investors. Unless we change our tax structure and taxation attitudes we shall kill investor confidence; we shall kill our investment business, kill our resources business and kill development. You will kill the possibility of Canadians owning their own corporations.

I could read more from the interview to which I referred. The minister finally said, "You know, we must create jobs for Canadians." We know we must create jobs. Yet the government's white paper on taxation has scared the development industry to such an extent that people are being laid off. That is what is happening.

Mr. Ricard: The government is creating unemployment.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister claims that present policies will benefit the little man. Are they good for the little man when he finds himself without work? I think he would rather pay taxes and keep his job. The effect of the white paper on tax reform has been to create unemployment. The white paper has taken away the little man's job and put him on the street. It has prevented our university graduates from obtaining jobs in the oil industry or other resource industries.

Look at the uneven contest that is going on. What is this uneven contest, Mr. Speaker? In such an uneven contest there is no way in which Canadians could compete in Gulf Oil ownership of British American Oil. Actually, they bought out British American Oil. In the case of the Shell Oil takeover of Canadian Oils, other factors were at work. Shell was a big company in oil production but it lacked a marketing facility in Canada. Canadian Oils had such a facility. It was possible, because of internal company requirements, for Shell Oil to offer $15 more a share for Canadian Oils' stock than Canadians could afford to pay for it.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: For over 20 years Canadians from Alberta have been lobbying Canada for equal tax treatment with the Americans. Several years ago, after all the available prospecting oil land in Alberta had long since been gobbled up, Ottawa made a grudging concession in connection with land acquisition costs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to inform him that under the Standing Order his time has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree unanimously?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimity.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Some hon. Members: Yes, continue.

Mr. Speaker: I shall ask the House again whether the hon. member has the consent of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The second round seems to be favourable to the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to finish my point. I thank hon. members and appreciate their generosity in allowing me to continue. I will try to be brief.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is it not a fact that Canadian Oils and British American Oil were both taken over when the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister of the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I will not go into that. I deliberately said that this has gone on for 20 years or more. I say that the taxation structure of this country is such—and we did not put those tax laws on the statute books—as to encourage foreign takeover.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member now answer the question?

Mr. Woolliams: In the case of Home Oil, the huge accumulation of tax losses in Alaska and elsewhere—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has the floor.

An hon. Member: He ought to answer the question.

Mr. Woolliams: —may make it attractive to American companies, which it cannot be to Canadians. The commercial preferences and taxation advantages at home provide the financial muscle for United States expansion abroad. My main point, therefore, is that Canadians must enjoy equality with foreigners in the field of incentive taxes. I make another point. Every time we ship a ton of minerals, a barrel of crude petroleum or anything else out of this country we are shipping Canadian jobs with it. We must launch a new national program in Canada. We must process our own raw materials, which we have in abundance, to make sure that more young men and women have jobs throughout the land. We can only do that if Canadians enjoy equality of tax opportunity with foreigners operating here.

I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), when he was a member of another party, espouse this position while speaking on the political platform. I think he agrees with what I have just said. The tax situation in this country and the uncertainty created by the white paper have, together, brought about the takeover of the majority of our resource industry. I am speaking of resource corporations which are active in the development of the north. It is my hope that this government will set up a task force that will be independent of corporations which send oil to eastern Canada. The task force ought to undertake an economic study to see if pipelines could be built from western Canada or from the Arctic to bring oil to eastern Canada, where it should go.

That question can only be determined after the economics of the situation have been studied and after it has been determined that such pipelines are feasible. If such pipelines are built, it will mean more jobs for throughout Canada. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for allowing me to speak for a few extra moments.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, this debate is taking place at a critical time for our economy. We are clearly getting less from our economy than we would like to get from it. While the evidence is that we are on the path toward a better economic performance, it is obvious to the victims of inflation to the victims of unemployment and to the victims, in international trade terms, of our very hard dollar, that we have a fair distance to go.

The Home Oil issue reflects the new dimension of the demands we are making on our economy a problem we have been sweeping under the rug for decades. I regret that the hon. member who just spoke did not acknowledge that the government which he supported swept the problem under the rug as much as Liberal governments in the past.

An hon. Member: And present.

Mr. Kaplan: Traditionally we have asked our economy to provide us with full employment, reasonable price stability, steady growth, a satisfactory balance of international payments and a fair distribution of the benefits of growth. However, a growing number of Canadians now recognize that even if we achieve all these things we may not have an economy which satisfies our aspirations. We might have a high standard of living and yet be a derivative economy, relying on another country for our direction. We might have industrial development but all geared to foreign input of technology, research and development.

We might have an economy whose activity is assembling parts and implementing ideas shipped to us from abroad, accepting styles of life and goods created elsewhere. All this can happen while our standard of living continues to rise. If that happens, Mr. Speaker, we should not be surprised if our brightest and most able people go to the source country to find jobs which are challenging, fun and offer opportunities to become creators of economic events. If these people leave us for these reasons, what will happen to the rest of Canada's life? How will this affect our culture and national identity?

Such an economy and such a destiny would be unacceptable to me and, I believe, to most Canadians. We can consider the remote example of the American revolution. A factor in that revolution was taxation without representation. Another, and perhaps more important, was the resistance of the American people to the shaping of their economy, by imperial policy, into colonial subservience to the mother economy. The revolutionary analogy breaks down, however, because in Canada we already have the political power. How shall it be used?

On the one hand, we want foreign capital if it will increase our standard of living and bring us, as well, know-how, innovation, technology and market access which will permit us to market better products more efficiently. On the other hand, we want to see in our economy the development of a unique identity, a dynamic autonomy, an internal generative power which can push us ahead of other nations in efficiency, creativity, technology and economic style-setting.

We like to refer to the natural resources of Canada as a stock of untold riches. They are riches, as are our vast resources of timber, fertile land and a strong, healthy and industrious people. However, these riches should not be confused with capital. Without capital, resources lie unused. Capital is not resources but command over resources, a means to exploit resources, power to bring them into the market place and the economy.

A national commitment is required to elaborate an economic strategy to achieve these goals. We are told that the development of the strategy is under way in cabinet. It is long overdue. I cannot attemp here to formulate the strategy myself, except to note that it will not be simple and will have to reflect a variety of interests. However, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of assessing the Home Oil question, I believe one obvious limitation exists which, I submit, should assist the government in dealing with the difficult question which must be resolved on an urgent basis.

The proposal I wish to make stems from the observation that Canadian capital will always be in shorter supply than we would like in order to achieve all possible economic goals. We are going to have to choose the areas which are to be protected from foreign investment. How should we decide which to protect? Operating from this premise, I submit that the natural resource industries are the last which should be protected from foreign encroachment. I make this observation recognizing that the general public view tends to be the opposite. The public seems to believe there is some special national interest which requires the exclusion of foreigners from resource development. This may be an elaboration of the territorial imperative but it is a public sentiment which I very much regret.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the products of the basic natural resource industry contribute very little, if anything, to the Canadian life-style. What is our life-style? In the material sense it is our books, food, clothing, educational and entertainment systems, homes, buildings, art and our transportation systems. These are the material things which will make Canadians unique in physical terms, if anything will. I believe a policy of Canadian identity should stress these areas. By contrast, the production of the natural resource industries are neutral international goods devoid of personality. Clearly, the national identity of the owner has a remote impact, if any, on the character of production.

There is a second, more compelling reason why foreign ownership of the natural resource industry represents no threat to Canadian identity. There is no industry in which government control can be so effective and complete, irrespective of ownership. A natural resource investment once made is captive, even hostage in a way that no other industry is, to national policy.

Contrast a mining operation on the one hand with an advanced electronic business, typically an international corporation, on the other. The development work of the mining company must be done here physically. For the electric company it can be done in thin air, in a foreign country or in mid-Atlantic. In typical international electronic companies, no single product is made wholly in one country. Even a simple electric razor, typewriter or radio is a multinational product. The offshore operation provides the only market and often the principal supplier of a Canadian branch.

Against such an operation, national priorities of any particular host government are marginal. The international corporation's bargaining position is excellent. It is true that the Canadian plant and equipment may be hostage, but such assets are useless without the rest of the international operation.

A basic natural resource industry, by contrast, is all here. The government priorities must be accepted. There is no bargaining position except future investment which, as it chooses, the government can welcome or not. The labour policies and standards such as the employment of native personnel, degrees of processing, pricing, including a two-price system, export permits which permit embargoes, are all within the power of the host government and, in fact, have all been imposed by federal and provincial governments of Canada in varying degrees. In fact, all these measures I have been describing have been imposed by federal and provincial governments in varying degrees in recent times.

I wish the minister well in his search for a Canadian customer for Home Oil. All Canadians wish him well. If it works, everyone will be happy. If he is unsuccessful, I urge the government to consider buying the company either for the Crown or to offer to the CDC when it is established. But I deeply hope no action will be taken which would lead international mining investors to steer around Canada. This country does not need, and cannot afford, such a policy.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the House is now studying the problem of the sale of Home Oil to American interests through the transfer of the shares held by Mr. Brown, the main shareholder, to an American.

This problem, Mr. Speaker, which the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas), brought up shows us the need for a Canadian economic policy. To get the picture, let us remember that Home Oil is the main Canadian oil producer. Indeed, it is the most important independent Canadian oil company. It has assets of over $240 million. Home Oil sells more than 350 million gallons of liquid oil annually, and holds about 10 per cent of the shares of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. It is now a proposal of sale to the American Ashland Oil Company for $10 million.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that Cygnus Corporation now owns 43.5 per cent of the shares of Home Oil, and that Mr. R. A. Brown holds in his own name 50.3 per cent of the share of Cygnus Corporation. The reason for the sale is that Mr. Brown, the president of Home Oil, has now short-term debts of $90 million and he must pay more than $200,000 in monthly interests on that loan. He apparently borrowed $24 million payable on demand from the Bank of Nova Scotia and over $1,431,000 from the Imperial Bank of Commerce of Canada. Finally, Mr. Brown controls Home Oil since 1952. That is to say that this truly Canadian oil company has been operating in Canada since 1952. I must say "operating", because according to available information which moreover is at variance with the position of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), it seems that this company is no longer Canadian.

The minister insists that he offered some kind of pious opposition to the American Securities Commission, because that transaction would not be acceptable to the Canadian government, but if we refer to his answers during the question period today, obviously, these sessions of "fancy skating" will last for quite a while yet.

If we put this particular problem in a Canadian context, we must realize that presently, more than 87 per cent of Canadian oil and gas producers are in the hands of foreign interests. Thus, 99 per cent of refineries are foreign-owned. What is Canadian in the oil industry? Capital? No. Management? Neither. In fact, the greatest part of the oil industry in Canada belongs to foreign interests. What we have, in Canada, are natural resources that we beg foreigners to come and develop for us, because we lack the capital needed to do it ourselves. We are always faced with the same basic problem, that of Canadian capital.

Mr. Speaker, for a long time in Quebec, we have been told that while we were learning how we had been defeated on the Plains of Abraham, in English Canada people were taught that 2 plus 2 makes 4, plus so much per cent interest. It was said to be a valid explanation of the reason why Quebec did not belong to Quebecers and American capital controlled the province.

The same thing applies to natural resources. As far as Quebec is concerned, it will be remembered that a premier by the name of Duplessis gave away the iron ore of the province to Americans for a mess of pottage, begging them to process it in secondary industries so that we may buy it back at high prices.

Today's policy is not new. For too long in Canada we have left to others the task of developing our own natural resources so that today, if we place the Home Oil problem in the overall picture, we realize that the situation has become very serious. Home Oil is a Canadian business in the process of becoming American. That is the tragedy, and it is not new. Slowly but surely, our leaders—if one can call them that since their leadership does not extend over much and since all our raw materials belong to foreigners—have let foreigners take over our basic industries.

This vast country, which at one time belonged to us, does not belong to us now. We have become tenants. A tenant should not be asked to boast of the values and qualities of a house that no longer belongs to him. That is why I am so surprised by the speech made by the hon. member who preceded me, who talked of the pride of being Canadians, who sang the praise of Canadian unity, or of this vast country that is described in picture books.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, that is a stupid policy, because the country no longer belongs to us. It did at one time, but today it belongs to foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder that Canadians take no pride whatsoever in being Canadians, because all they get in Canada is taxes. Their lot is to be hustled by the government which, wittingly and knowingly, sold Canada down the river to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I shall quote precise figures, and I must point out that since they were published in 1967, the situation has been getting worse.

In the soft drinks industry, 26 per cent of interests was in foreign hands and 14 per cent under foreign control.

The rubber industry was 88 per cent in foreign-owned and 99 per cent foreign-controlled.

"The minister with the smile", Jean-Luc Pepin, boasts about the fact that we have a Canadian textile industry but, Mr. Speaker, he was one of those who gave this industry away, for 24 per cent of shares are in foreign hands and 23 per cent under foreign control.

In the pulp and paper industry, 51 per cent of shares are in foreign hands and 46 per cent under foreign control.

In the farm machinery industry, 47 per cent of shares are in foreign hands and 54 per cent under foreign control.

In the automobile industry, 90 per cent of shares are in foreign hands and 97 per cent under foreign control.

In the transport equipment industry, 58 per cent of shares are in foreign hands and 71 per cent under foreign control.

The same applies to electrical appliances, iron and steel, oil and natural gas and the mining industry.

As for oil and natural gas, 87 of shares are in foreign hands.

I was aware, a few minutes ago, of a dispute between the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), who were giving each other tit for tat, asking which of them was responsible, through inertia, for the sale of Canadian interests to foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, the figures I have just cited are by no means heartening. I recall that during the 1957 and 1958 election campaigns, the right hon. member for Prince Albert travelled the country and stated dramatically and bombastically "Canada to Canadians", all for the evident purpose of getting votes.

From 1957 to 1961, with the Conservative administration, foreign ownership increased from 54 to 56 per cent, and foreign control jumped from 61 to 64 per cent.

The Liberals may think it funny because it suits their purpose, but they were in power themselves from 1935 to 1957. Were they more Canadian than the Conservatives? They may well say that they achieved unity, that they were the only ones to do so, but the fact still remains that they had some shady role in that. The Liberals were first responsible for the U.S. take-over of our economy. When I see them crying and apologizing today, it reminds me of crocodile tears. Their wailing sounds remind me of bleating sheep happy to be shorn by the Americans and going "baa... baa... baa..."

In 1935, 37 per cent of our economy as well as 45 per cent of our mining industry belonged to foreigners. After 20 years of Liberal administration, in the name of the famous economic liberalism, men like the hon. Walter Gordon, who advocated a nationalistic economic policy, were expulsed from the party because, as they were saying, that upsets our projects. Yet, this man was a Canadian. They preferred selling Canadians to the United States rather than keeping Canadian people in the Liberal party.

After 20 years of Liberal administration, foreigners controlled more than 56 per cent of our industries. Indeed, 80 per cent of the capital controlling us is American capital. That is saying a good deal.

We can almost hear already the pompous speeches that will be delivered by eloquent government members to say nothing. The situation will nevertheless be tolerated and the Home Oil Company will fall into American hands. Why? Because the Canadian government has no national economic policy, because it discourages the investment of Canadian capital, because it puts out white papers like the one on fiscal reform for instance, which prevents Canadians from investing their profits in the Canadian economy.

The government wants to tax and discourage the Canadian people. Home Oil will fall into American hands because this government is the Americans' pay instead of being at the service of the Canadian people. Home Oil will be taken over by the Americans because the Canadian government is controlled by high finance and not by the Canadian people.

That is why I am convinced that Home Oil will fall into American hands and that again the development of our natural resources will be left to others. And yet, it would be so easy to develop a Canadian economic policy, a development policy for our natural resources, a policy that would enable us to invite young Canadians, particularly the 45 per cent of the unemployed under 25, to bring in their contribution. They are quite willing to participate in the building of their country but if the government continues to boost unemployment with their phony fight against inflation while giving away our natural resources, we shall not have to wonder why young Canadians do not believe any more in Canada. Therefore, it should be understood that Canadians want a truly Canadian government. One would wonder whether this government is not an American government.

Mr. Speaker, this situation is hopeless. We have several solutions to offer. We could legislate to prevent Home Oil Company from being sold to American interests as has already been done in the case of the selling of Denison Mines to the Hudson Bay Oil & Gas Company last year.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is just smilling as does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the others sold to the Americans. The first one remains idle and contents himself with denying, and pretending he knows nothing. If a minister knows nothing, this is a serious situation.

Here is a solution. I do not suggest it is the best but if this government is truly Canadian they will quickly find a solution so that Home Oil Company will remain Canadian as has been done for Denison Mines.

I would like to offer another solution to the minister. The choice will be his. Since he does not seem to have any idea, then I will give him one. The government itself could buy Home Oil Company and later sell it to Polymer Corporation or to the Canada Development Corporation.

That is another solution but it is not pleasing because it is tinted with socialism. If the government takes over private enterprise, that does not please me. I say it again: That solution is tinted with socialism.

It would be better if that company became a crown corporation with a mixed economy, which would permit to buy back the shares of Home Oil, instead of seeing the company fall into American hands. That solution would be a poultice on a wooden leg, but at least a Canadian poultice.

Mr. Speaker, in one thing at least I am different from the leader of the New Democratic party; he does not make any distinction between crown corporations, because he dreams of socialism, while I hope at least that that corporation will have a mixed economy, so that it would be possible to invite Canadian investors to contribute, by their capital, to the management of that new corporation, which could be advised by the Polymer Corporation.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, a third solution could be considered. I do not deem it excellent in itself, but it is a possible solution that might allow the Canadian people to keep their own resources.

That third solution be the following: the government would vouch for the liabilities of the Home Oil Company. I believe that this would be the best answer.

Mr. Speaker, the main problem of Mr. Brown, president of Home Oil, is that considering the existing fiscal system, he had to borrow tremendous amounts of money and must pay in interest fees only over $200,000 per month. Such liabilities that he can no longer meet because he is now being stifled by high finance, the latter enjoying the Canadian government's protection, of course, compel him to sell Home Oil to Americans. All this is happening because the government does not control the Canadian economy. Why could it not guarantee the debts of the Home Oil Company? This would prevent it from selling itself to Americans.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government grants interest-free loans to foreign countries, for instance, India. Up to now, over $201 million have been loaned to India, interest-free, for a 60-year period. This means that the Canadian government is guaranteeing the development of that country.

Not long ago, our right hon. national traveller, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), at a cost of many millions of dollars, visited that country on behalf of the Canadian people, whereas we were still involving ourselves into new debts and were still being crushed under the weight of interest charges. For his part, he went around, strutting like a peacock and leaving behind here and there millions of dollars, interest free and refundable over a 60-year period, while the Canadian people were crushed under financial obligations. Such loans were granted for the development of those countries, to spare them the fate of the Middle East countries, as was stated by the leader of the New Democratic Party, where resources are almost wholly foreign-owned.

This government grants interest-free loans to some countries to help them develop and control their own resources while, at the same time, it crushes Canadians. It does absolutely nothing to save Canadian industry and provokes through inertia and lethargy the sell-out of Canadian enterprises to American hands.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste strongly advocate an economic policy that would give back Canadian industries to Canadians through the use of credit based on the real credit of the nation. Natural resources do not belong either to the ome Oil Company or to the Americans, but to all Canadians. Natural resources do not belong either to the Home Oil Company do not belong to a Canadian in particular, not anymore than to the present Prime Minister or to the right hon. member for Prince Albert—the two persons who sold us out—but to all Canadians. It is the government's duty to give these natural resources back to Canadians through a national economic policy and it should guarantee the Home Oil debts.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friends for their kindness. I was precisely in the process of rounding up my remarks.

We are asking the government to vouch for the Home Oil indebtedness in order that this company may from now on operate without being chained down by interest rates. Actually, they have to pay out $200,000 in monthly interest. If the government could vouch for this company's indebtedness, it would amount to handing it back to the Canadian people. When we know that approximately 99 per cent of the Canadian oil industry is in American hands, this is the least the government can do if it is truly Canadian. The government must act immediately and unambiguously. It must assume not just a short-term policy but also a long-term one aimed not at kicking the Americans out of Canada but rather at convincing them that Canada belongs to Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I hoped to follow the minister. Since this is a debate which has been called on the basis of urgency, I thought the minister would speak after the lead-off speakers of the three opposition parties had had their say, if only to indicate the government's position. This matter is of enormous concern to this country and it is important that we know the government's intention. I suggest there is more involved in this question than just the Home Oil Company. We must put this in the context of what is happening internationally in order to assess its importance and the importance of having in Canada a company which does not react to and depend upon the international oil situation.

For years the major oil companies of the world have been able to play the interests of one oil producing nation against another. There has been a long pattern of James Bond intrigue. By following this pattern these companies have been able to assure control of international oil markets. The only exception has been in respect of countries like Italy and others in Europe which got into the oil business on their own. The oil producing nations of the world decided to get together to counter this kind of international activity on the part of oil companies. We are now faced with a situation in this country, or will be shortly, that is faced by other countries which do not have oil, do not have conservation policies and do not control the oil industries which exist. We will soon find ourselves blackmailed as well, not only by our national oil companies but by the international companies.

This fact points out the importance of maintaining strong Canadian participation in our oil industry. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) suggested that the government could regulate this industry. We have observed a long history of this type of regulation by government in respect of the gas and oil industry. After looking at the record in this regard we can decide that the National Energy Board has been the patsy of the oil companies. The oil companies have won every round in this battle.

Mr. Greene: Shame.

Mr. Saltsman: Yes, shame on the National Energy Board and the government which evades its responsibility.

Mr. Greene: Shame.

Mr. Saltsman: There is a hearing now taking place before the National Energy Board.

Mr. Greene: You are attacking public servants.

Mr. Saltsman: I am not attacking public servants; I am attacking stupid politicians on that side of the House.

Mr. Greene: We are not members of the National Energy Board.

Mr. Saltsman: They are the ones who sit idly by while this country is sold out. I challenge the minister to rise tonight and tell us about his plan to do something about the oil industry in Canada. I had intended to point out what had taken place before the inception of the National Energy Board. After 1966, following a long debate in this House about a natural gas pipe line, the government decided to provide a route through the United States but attached some conditions. Now, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is not delivering the amount of gas required in Canada in spite of its promises at that time. There was a package deal arranged which allowed for an increase in the amount delivered on the basis of a higher price. This is what the companies want. That is not what was decided in 1966.

How does the government propose to untangle this mess? I suggest that the problem will be resolved in the usual way, with the oil companies getting what they want. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) referred to the oil industry in relation to the white paper on taxation. The white paper has not been implemented and has not been discussed for some time. Why has the oil industry in Canada been sold out to United States interests? It has been suggested that this has some connection with the tax structure. I suggest it has not happened because of taxes. The amount of tax paid by the oil industry in Canada has been decreasing. If we look at the documentation in Walter Gordon's book "Choice for Canada" we see how much in taxes the oil companies have contributed to Canada. So it is not a problem of taxes. Taxes on the oil industry will not change anything.

The truth of the matter is that a Canadian company, limited to its own resources, cannot compete economically in the international cartelization that goes in the world today. For years Home Oil has come to the Canadian people and the Canadian government and said, "Build a pipe line to Montreal. Give us a chance. If you do not, we will be stuck with the internationals who allocate where the oil goes and does not go". We have refused the pipeline to Montreal. Why? Is it because it is uneconomic? In the oil industry we do not talk about uneconomic things. The oil industry is political from start to finish. The international oil policy is political.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

The national oil policy was designed on the basis that whatever offshore crude the Canadian oil displaced in the United States, mid-west markets would be taken in at Montreal. For many years we asked in this House about a national oil policy. We asked if such a deal had been made and if this was part of the policy. No one was willing to say, until one day the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) blurted it out; then everyone was aware of it. I do not know whether he blurted it out or was a little more honest than others; I suspect he was a little more honest.

The point is that you cannot separate oil from politics. Talk about economics does not make sense. My leader made the mildest proposals tonight. He suggested that as an immediate course we should do something to make sure this oil company is not sold out to the Americans. We are not talking about public or private ownership. We need at least one company in Canada which has a sense of obligation to the Canadian public instead of to a great big club around the world known as the international oil cartel.

Home Oil, whatever its difficulties and attitudes may be—and we are not particularly lovers of the oil industry—has a voice that is Canadian. The appeal it made to this government was that it have a voice with the international oil companies. Why did they want the pipeline to Montreal? They commissioned a very extensive study for that purpose because they were the only ones with a big interest in having a pipeline to Montreal. The internationals did not care; it did not make any difference to them whether they sold oil from Venezuela, Arabia or Alberta. What was the sense of pushing Canadian oil if they could send Venezuelan crude here?

There have been a number of studies in respect of the peipeline. I know of three. The one the oil companies commissioned was a study by W. J. Levy Inc., entitled "Outlook for Canadian Crude Production and Markets". In examining the pipeline proposal to Montreal it suggested it was not a good idea. One reason is that the internationals would cut our price to make sure we could not sell oil at any price but theirs. They are quite capable of doing this because their profit margins are high enough. So whatever price we could deliver to Montreal would be cut.

P. S. Auf Der Maur conducted an extensive study in 1968. He pointed out the advantages of bringing western crude to Montreal. He said there is a pollution factor involved and Canadian crude is much purer in the sense that you do not have to refine it extensively in order to make it pollution free. He stated it is a better type of oil for that reason. But again price enters the picture. There was a study commissioned by the department of research and development of Canadian National Railways entitled, "Some Implications of Marketing Canadian Crude in Montreal". It showed that at that time the differential, even given the posted price of oil at Montreal, as against western crude brought in by a private pipe line to Montreal was 28 cents a barrel. That is not a great difference when one considers that with the increase that will inevitably take place in respect of international crude prices, the 28 cents a barrel would be wiped out.

It would seem to me, aside from the immediate problem, we should be ensuring that we are not put at the mercy of offshore oil and are not placed in the position of being blackmailed in this respect. Let us remember one thing. This does not mean that the price of Canadian oil or gasoline will be cheaper west of Montreal. At the moment it is supposed to be a little cheaper west of Ottawa. But I am quite convinced the Canadian oil producers will waste no time in raising their prices to match international prices at the moment.

When we are talking about a pipe line I should like to put on record the significant difference between a publicly-owned pipe line and a privately-owned pipe line. One of the greatest mistakes ever made in the history of our country was letting the Trans-Canada pipe line be built by private people rather than by the government. We have paid a terrible price ever since that dreadful decision. I should like to refer to the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development, for June 21, 1966.

Mr. McKinnon was before the committee and was asked whether he had studied the cost of moving western crude to Montreal. He was asked what it would cost to move a barrel of crude from the west to Montreal. He asked whether this would be done privately or publicly, because it would appear that if it were done privately the cost would probably be between 60 cents and 70 cents but if it were done publicly the cost would be 50 cents a very significant difference. This seemed to be a very compelling argument for a publicly-owned pipe line.

What, then, do we do tonight? If I know the minister, he loves to evade answers. Very often he makes great political speeches. He made one last year at the Liberal convention which did not do him much good but got him a lot of applause. I am sure he is lurking around somewhere with a pad and pencil and that instead of telling us what his government will do he will say the Conservatives want us to do one thing, the NDP want something else, the Créditistes something different and Mr. Saltsman wants something else. We are not in a position to make proposals. It should not be of very much concern to him that all of us have different ideas about what should be done.

One thing is obvious in this House tonight. Everyone on this side recognizes the vital importance of Home Oil Company remaining in Canadian hands in some way, whether by tax concessions or some other way. All of us are concerned that something be done, and we will not be pawned off by any sort of juvenile trick the minister may have up his sleeve. I would make a suggestion that I think has some merit, because in the long run simply selling Home Oil to another Canadian company would not solve the problem. It would give us some breathing space, which is important, and therefore I am in favour of it. It would give us the time we need to look at the situation. However, I do not think it would solve the problem because I do not believe a Canadian company, dependent on its own resources and financing, will ever be able to compete with the kind of dominance achieved by the international giants in the oil industry.

This is the kind of thing the Canadian Development Corporation could do. I think the Canadian government must ensure that if a Canadian buyer is not found, the government itself will become that buyer, because in the long run control of oil and politics are the same. The hon. member who spoke earlier felt that it was not very important whether or not we got into the natural resource industries. He could think of some things that were much better, and he tended to pooh-pooh the importance of the oil industry. Let me remind the hon. member that these natural resources vitally affect us in this country because today oil is the primary product in the textile industry. It is the base for the chemical world in which we live.

Oil, and who controls oil, determine to a very large extent what kind of measures will be taken regarding our environment in terms of pollution and things related to it. It vitally affects our life-style. It is true that governments have the power to regulate the industry but it is not true that there is any evidence that the Liberal party has ever used that power or is willing to use it. Their ideological hang-up, their commitment to the market is so strong that they can only react when faced with an immediate disaster.

The only time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) acted precipitously was with reference to Denison Mines. I hope he does so now, but time is short. Why do we have to wait until we are on the edge of the cliff, ready to fall off, before someone throws us a rope? Surely this matter could have been anticipated. Surely it was obvious what was happening in the industry and plans could have been made, instead of the fooling around that is going on at this time. Therefore, I would suggest that under no circumstances should Home Oil Company be permitted to fall into foreign hands. The government must come up with an answer that will ensure this company remains in Canadian hands, so we can have a base of some kind and a Canadian voice of some kind, or the government of Canada itself, on behalf of the people of Canada, should purchase Home Oil.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the one thing which this House recognizes tonight is the importance of the issue we are discussing. I do not think there is any question that the members of this House are speaking and reflecting on a matter of major concern to Canadians, and I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate this evening.

I think Canadians all across this country are asking themselves whether yet another Canadian corporation is to go the way that so many already have gone. We all know that over the last eight years hundreds of Canadian firms have been taken over in the absence of any national or provincial policies in this area, and perhaps many thinking Canadians are asking what chance there is for Canada to maintain its political independence if we stand idly by as one firm after another is taken over by foreign owners. Many of you may have seen in the last week or two figures presented from Colura. Those figures indicated that slightly over 42 per cent of all the corporate profits—that is 42 per cent of the profits of all incorporated firms in Canada—are earned by foreign-controlled firms. In many ways this seems to me to be a more significant figure than the percentage of our foreign-controlled industry.

This evening we are talking about the Home Oil Company in particular, although I think it raises issues far wider, as the previous speaker, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) indicated. As we know, Home Oil is the largest of the independent oil companies left in Canadian hands. Most of us applaud the minister for the sense of commitment he has shown in these negotiations and we wish him well in his efforts. We may question whether he has the power, but we wish him well.

A year ago the expectations of Canadians were raised significantly when the Canadian government stepped in and halted the sale of control to foreign owners of Denison Mines. During this period of a year Canadians have been waiting patiently for a statement of policy in this area. During this period we have seen two of the major remaining textbook publishing firms sold to U.S. owners. As a result of this sale, 95 per cent of all the books used in Canadian elementary and high schools are now published by firms which are controlled by non-Canadians. Only 5 per cent of the books used in Canadian schools today are published by Canadian-controlled firms.

I do not propose to deal with the cultural identity argument this evening although I acknowledge, as did the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) that the question of cultural identity is absolutely central to this issue. But it is not the only issue. Cultural sovereignty is one issue. I would argue that economic sovereignty is another and that they are twin pillars in building and developing an independent Canada. It seems to me that there is every likelihood that in the ensuing months other major or significant Canadian corporations will be faced with a similar situation as that now facing Home Oil Company.

Do we stand idly by agonizing on the sidelines? Do we say that we have not the federal power to deal with the situation? We can, as we did with regard to textbooks, indicate that this is primarily a provincial matter, and I think that is right. But are we to encourage those who would purchase Canadian industry? Are we to clap them on the back, as perhaps Stanley Randal might be prompted to do? His remarks recently have indicated that he would repudiate the position that might be taken by candidates of the Conservative party running for leadership in Ontario, with respect to the question of foreign ownership. I say that we have a major problem and that we cannot afford to sit idly by.

We cannot take decisions by default. There is no question in my mind and I think, as I have already said, that this is reflected in the views of those who have spoken this evening, that the Canadian people are concerned about this matter. Recent Gallup polls published in the newspapers would support this view. Equally, there have been Gallup polls supporting a positive and aggressive position for the Canada Development Corporation.

It might well be that Canadians would say, "Why do we not in some way get the Canada Development Corporation to deal with this situation? Isn't this the very situation that the Canada Development Corporation was designed to deal with?" I think the clear answer is no. The Canada Development Corporation is not designed to deal with this kind of situation. I think that this situation, better than anything else, points out the problems when we look at the pre-emptive purchase. Take the situation, for example, of Home Oil. It might be that Home Oil will be worth more to a foreign buyer than to a Canadian buyer because, integrated with other foreign firms, the value of that integration, or the synergetic effect will be worth a premium to a foreign owner. For these reasons, those who have read the Canada Development Corporation legislation will recognize that corporation is not well designed for this kind of situation.

As the hon. member for Waterloo said in his remarks, we are dealing with a subject which is far greater in extent than just the question of one takeover. While I would not agree with his views on what we need in the way of an industrial strategy, I would suggest that broadly speaking we should be considering an industrial strategy for Canada, and foreign ownership is part of such an industrial strategy.

I think the debate this evening has obscured some of the main issues. For instance, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in his loud and noisy bluster did not distinguish between investment on the one hand and foreign ownership on the other. I think it important, if we are going to deal with this issue, that we make that distinction. Nor, Mr. Speaker, can I agree with all the sentiments of the hon. member for Don Valley when he said he felt the natural resource industry is the last area we should be concerned with when we come to formulating foreign ownership policies. In my view it is one of the first areas we should concern ourselves with, partly because natural resource industries are the dominant industrial group in Canada and partly because they alone have the major opportunity for going multinational, and certainly because they are the industries on which we rely most heavily for our export sales. One might also add it is more likely that the natural resource industries will integrate, and integrate down in such a way that an even larger proportion of Canadian industry will be affected when there is a foreign takeover in a natural resource industry.

So I would say that in considering the issues raised in this debate we should place the need for an industrial policy close to the top, and we should recognize the importance of the multinational corporation in the seventies and beyond. We should see the multinational corporation, not in a defensive way, something to resist, but in the opportunity sense. It seems to me that for too long Canadians have reacted defensively against the multinational corporation. They have seen it not as an opportunity, as it should be, but as a threat.

It might help those who still feel this way to note that 70 per cent of the exports of Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. corporations are sold or exported to firms which are associated with those subsidiaries. In other words, the flow of trade is not the way it used to be in a commodity sense, but between the subsidiary and the associated companies within the group. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we need to distinguish the capacity of resource industry to go multinational, and I think in the Home Oil Company we have such an opportunity. It represents for Canada and Canadians an opportunity to build something larger around the last large, independent Canadian corporation.

Similarly, I think we need to distinguish two other aspects when we talk about foreign investment and foreign ownership policies. We need to distinguish on the one hand a general category of new plants, and on the other a different category of existing Canadian plants which may be taken over by foreign owners. Within the new plants category we need to distinguish between the branch plant which is producing a carbon copy of the same item that the parent is making. Surely this is less attractive in terms of long-term policy as an industrial strategy than satellite plants, which I would argue are different. A satellite plant would be a plant manufacturing a component to be exported to the foreign corporation, probably a component which no other corporation within the group is presently manufacturing. Without trouble, one could think of other distinctions. I leave one more with the House—that of autonomous plants which are not necessarily producing components but are producing a product which is viable on its own, which is distinctive and perhaps fits the product line in a complementary way but not necessarily in a complementary way.

Turning now to the category of the takeovers, let me say that I think we need a special policy with respect to takeovers which is distinctive and different from the policies I have been talking about in the areas of investment for new plant and resource industry. I think we need it just as much to protect existing Canadian entrepreneurship as we do to protect our capacity to develop Canadian entrepreneurship in the future. Every time a Canadian firm is taken over the capacity of Canadians to develop a distinctive Canadian enterprise is affected and sometimes eliminated.

In my remarks I have tried to indicate that this whole area is immensely complicated. I have no doubt this is the reason why it has taken so long to produce a foreign ownership policy for Canada. The more one gets into it, the more one realizes the interrelationship and the difficulties. This evening I would like to place before the House several recommendations which I think might help in developing such a policy. When this policy comes down it should contain provisions to protect the control and the ownership—and I think it is important that we distinguish between control and ownership—of existing and potential multinational firms. The Home Oil Company is such a firm. It meets that test: it is a potential multinational corporation within the Canadian scheme of things.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't stretch your imagination.

Mr. Gillespie: If you had imagination you would see it had potential. I think we need investment rules with respect to foreign investment and I suggest we should have a rule for future foreign investment of 50 per cent Canadian ownership. I would say to the private sector, make your own deals. Meet the 50 per cent requirement, but make your own deals and, if you cannot get sufficient Canadian partners to go along with you, talk to the Canada Development Corporation. That corporation, I would suggest, would be a very useful instrument in this field of meeting the Canadian content test. It should, of course, consider such a proposal only if it meet the test of profitability.

• (10:00 p.m.)

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I, for one, am impressed with the sense of commitment the minister has displayed in dealing with this very difficult problem. I wish that he did not have to rely on his powers of persuasion, which are considerable. I wish that legislation was in being which would enable him and the government to act with expedition. There is, however, no such legislation in this country at this time; nor have I heard any members of the opposition propose the kinds of items which ought to be included in such legislation.

An hon. Member: That is not correct.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We are talking about Home Oil, not about general legislation.

Mr. Gillespie: I think I have said more than once that we ought to distinguish between an over-all investment policy and a policy which deals with the takeover.

An hon. Member: We want Joe.

Mr. Gillespie: I argue that our No. 1 priority ought to be the development of a policy which will anticipate the problem that may be raised by the sale of other firms. I urge the government to bring in new policies which would establish takeover rules and, if possible, a mechanism or instrument to deal with takeovers. Other countries such as Australia, the United Kingdom, Japan and France have dealt with this problem. It is high time that we did so. If we do not deal with it now we are very likely to be embarrassed in one month, or two months. In my view, we cannot wait.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak this evening on this motion because I, too, am concerned about the amount of foreign ownership in Canada. I am concerned that the decisions with regard to our resources are not being made by Canadians. The power to make those decisions is being taken out of Canadian hands. These days we hear a great deal of discussion about the quality of life and the standard of living. What those two phrases really mean to me is that we must have some right, some ability, to make decisions that affect our own livelihood and personal well-being. Little by little, as the power to make these decisions slips into the hands of foreign corporations, so slips away the power that Canadians may enjoy in the years ahead to control the quality of their lives.

I think that we need a government inspired by a sense of national mission. Its mission must be to create hope and opportunity for Canadians, so that they may enjoy the highest quality of life possible. I say again that we must have the right to make decisions in the years ahead which will affect the quality of our lives. I do not think the government has shown any willingness to act in a way which will retain Home Oil under Canadian ownership. The previous speaker dealt at length with what the minister has been doing. He hoped the minister will be successful. During the last week or so questions during the oral question period have been directed to the minister on this subject; yet the minister has not explained in any way, shape or form just what is going on or what he hopes to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: We have sat patiently for two hours this evening watching the minister flit in and out of the House. I expect he will make a speech some time this evening. It would have been a much better debate if the minister had been the first or second participant. Then, we would have known what the government intended to do. But, no, the minister did not do that. I can only conclude that the minister's position is rather weak. He must be quite defenceless against these arguments. He does not want anybody to follow him in the debate. He wants to be the last speaker so he can truthfully say that, after he spoke, nobody made any constructive suggestions; that the opposition had nothing constructive to offer. That is not a good excuse.

The government possesses the facts. It knows who owns the shares, what shares are holding shares and which ones are not. It knows the details of the deal. It is in the best position to recommend some action and to lay before the House the facts of the case. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), "What would the opposition do?" He seemed to be devoid of ideas. That is how it often appears to me. To me, the government is not displaying leadership. This is a weak government, without imagination; it is not a government that can lead the Canadian people and offer them guidance.

What has been going on in the oil industry during the past number of years? It is plain to anyone who knows the oil industry in this country that that industry needed a large amount of investment capital. One cannot overemphasize the fact that investment in the oil industry involves high risk capital, as anybody who has read Carl Nickle's periodic oil report from Calgary will realize. That report keeps on saying that the oil industry faces uncertain times as the result of federal government tax policies relating to oil exports, and as a result of the federal government changing the rules and regulations applying in the north. I see the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) present in the House; he knows what is taking place in the north. He knows that the oil industry faces uncertainties.

Mr. Orange: There have been certain changes.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member can make his own speech. His voice is probably in better shape than mine. He knows that the oil industry is not particularly happy about the changes which have taken place. He knows that industry has lost a great deal of money; I expect he also knows that Mr. Brown of Home Oil lost substantial amounts of money in the far north as the result of oil exploration.

An hon. Member: In Alaska.

Mr. Horner: In Alaska, certainly. I ask, were they encouraged to go into the north? They were not encouraged. The whole industry is in a state of flux. I know the minister went to Denver and made his famous speech, and now the Americans are saying, "Fill your pipelines with Canadian oil. They are saying this because of the situation in the Middle East and because the Arabs want to dictate the price and quantity of oil moving to the western world. That is why the Americans want to fill their pipelines with Canadian oil. It is not because the minister went down there and made a speech in which he severely chastised them for their actions with regard to Canada.

• (10:10 p.m.)

There has been a great deal of talk about the supply of oil in Canada today. There is no doubt about what the white paper will do. I wish to quote from a recent speech of Mr. Robert Bryce which appears in "Canada Month":

> Why be upset? asks the former deputy-minister of taxation, Robert Bryce. As he explained in a speech to the civil service, private savings will not be dissipated by the White Paper; they will merely be replaced by public savings.

I suppose this is what the government expects when they start the new company, the Canada Development Corporation. However we must hearken back to what the minister said when he introduced that bill in the House. He said the Corporation will not be used to buy back Canada and it will not be a Corporation of last resort. One wonders how it would help in this particular case. Perhaps the minister will have some enlightening news. Perhaps he has encouraged Panarctic to buy Home Oil.

The whole question of providing leadership to encourage Canadians to own their own resources must be balanced with the question of available money and priorities. Politicians have been talking about priorities for many years. I quote from today's Ottawa Journal:

> It will cost the federal treasury about $31.5 million during fiscal 1971-72 to maintain the National Arts Centre, the National Film Board, the National Library, the National Museums and the Public Archives.

I am not saying that money should not be spent. However, here we have a resource, the last major Canadian oil company sliding out of our hands. What efforts are we making? The minister can say that money does not grow on trees. He can say we do not have $10 million because we must spend $31 million on other things. An article in the same paper is headed:

> Language Training To Cost $8.8 Million

It all boils down to what we really think is important. Do we think that Canada's resources should be exploited by companies to a greater extent than they already are or do we think that we can own Canada to any real extent and reap the benefits of these resources by allowing them to slowly slide away? We have to get into the question of regulations and other methods the government can adopt. I quote from an article in today's Globe and Mail:

> According to industry and federal sources, existing tax regulations squeezed Home Oil to the point where it cannot but accept a helping hand from the U.S. oil company.

It is a pretty sad situation if we are so madly in search of money that we have to force the last major Canadian oil company out of existence. The doubts about the white paper on taxation has been around for too long. The minister should have clarified the position a long time ago. When asked about certain aspects of the white paper, the minister said the committees were still studying it and he could not say what portions would, or would not remain. Both the committee of this House and the Senate committee have completed their examination of the white paper and made their recommendations to the minister. It would be very easy for the minister to say that certain portions of the white paper will not be implemented. He could have done that six months ago. He could clearly state what he is going to do with the capital gains tax. This also could have been stated six months ago when the committees brought in their recommendations.

The minister has allowed the country to remain in an atmosphere of uncertainty whereby Canadians are not encouraged to invest in Canadian primary industry. When in Saskatchewan last week, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) stated that perhaps we need more Crown corporations in order that enough jobs will be created. Maybe that is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) has in his hip pocket. If we wait long enough tonight, maybe we will hear about it. These things should have been said some time ago. I personally, do not believe the government cannot employ everyone in Canada. I think the people have to use their own initiative in this country as they have in the past. Last year the Department of Regional Economic Expansion spent $98 million to create a little more than 15,000 jobs. This gives some idea of how much the government can do in that regard. Compared to the 668,000 who are unemployed today, 15,000 or 16,000 jobs is a pretty small drop in the bucket.

The government is not doing enough to encourage Canadians to invest in this country. It is encouraging Canadians to withdraw their savings and put them somewhere else. They will invest in foreign corporations or spend their money on some other aspect of their daily lives. This is a deplorable situation. Canadian corporations have been encouraged to make less profit. In fact, the corporations have made less profit in the last year or so. This has created a situation where the money is not being ploughed back into the industry. They have only earned enough for operating cash.

In a young and growing country, a situation should be created whereby it is not a sin to make a profit. If that profit is ploughed back into raw materials and resources, it will create more jobs. It is interesting to note that in some of his rare moments, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has recognized the fact that profits are not a sin. When he introduced the Canada Development Corporation bill, he said it was for the purpose of investing in companies to make a profit. I understand that the Canada Development Corporation will not be subject to income tax.

We cannot allow companies to make a profit and then take away nearly all that profit through some severe sort of taxation. The companies will flounder and sell out to American firms which get a better tax break. Many Canadian companies are moving their head offices out of Canada because of our tax laws. One member who spoke earlier mentioned international and multinational companies; but it would be a tragedy if the head offices of all these companies were outside Canada. More than one company has moved out. They prefer to pay a 15 per cent tax rather than a 50 or 60 per cent tax.

I will itemize what this government has done wrong in so far as the oil and gas industry is concerned. It has tightened and discouraged the forming of large amounts of investment capital; created an uncertainty with regard to the depletion allowance, and changed the regulations in the north, thus causing great uncertainty. The minister's speech in Denver about the oil and gas industry caused such a kerfuffle that the minister had to go to Calgary to pacify the industry and tell them he was really not that bad a person.

Then again, included in the white paper is the suggestion that there should be a capital gains tax, something which would discourage investment in Canadian corporations. Also included in the white paper is a proposal for an evaluation tax on shares. In my opinion, this is an unworkable suggestion and one which will not be implemented, but the minister has not yet wiped the slate clean in this regard. So, the government has proposed a number of things which have resulted in takeovers of companies in every sector of our society and it is time they were put on the mat for their actions in this regard. Canada cannot become the great country it is capable of becoming unless we state a goal and lay down national rules under which the country can develop in an atmosphere of security for investors and of reward for effort. In these circumstances, Canadians would be encouraged to work to save so that they might be in a position to make a greater investment in Canada in the years ahead.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): My remarks this evening will be brief, but what I want to say will be in support of the thesis that in no circumstances should we permit the sale of Home Oil to foreign interests. The debate this evening comes at a most opportune time in that it permits the House to give some guidance to the government in a serious dilemma. The dilemma arises partly from the fact that the owners of Home Oil have done nothing wrong. They have broken no laws and there is no legislation to prevent them from selling their company to foreigners. There are no guidelines yet in place. So, the debate comes at an opportune time to enable us to express some views in this area where policy has not yet emerged. As most of us understand, I believe, it will be some months yet before the government is in a position to discuss or to publish guidelines with respect to foreign takeovers. It is incumbent upon us, therefore, to speak our minds on this particular issue and I, for one, find no difficulty in expressing my views.

I should like to allude to what I believe to be a major concern in the minds of people across Canada. This is the concern that in many areas of national life some things are running almost beyond control. I think this feeling is true with respect to pollution. The chemicals being put into the air and the water are so numerous and so complex that we may be going beyond the point of no return. A similar fear arises with respect to urbanization, and the same feeling affects people in connection with the technological revolution, that things are running beyond control and that Parliament is unable to cope with them. I believe we find this feeling, too, over the question of foreign ownership. There is a growing fear that by failing to take the necessary steps when they are clearly called for we are permitting the situation to develop past the point of no return. This becomes a more pressing question for all of us as we stand on the verge of a scientific and technological revolution, the consequences of which we do not clearly foresee.

What concerns people is the thought that we might look back in ten years time and realize that by failing to take steps when we had the opportunity we had gone so far in allowing control of our economy to slip away that we could not reverse the direction of events. This feeling finds its way into the debate on Home Oil, and it will find its way into debates on many other questions involving foreign takeovers since people will see in each particular instance the general spectre of events running out of control, with machinery not yet in place and with a Parliament which does not seem to have the will to take the necessary action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: We, in this House, are responding to that sort of feeling in the country, but this is not enough guidance in itself for a government which has to take responsibility. And simply to express feelings of this kind would not be a substitute for guidance in this particular case. There would have to be other solid reasons for doing what I suggest to the government that it ought to do.

First, whatever is done ought to be consistent with whatever long term policy is likely to emerge. I think the denial of the sale of Home Oil would be consistent with long term policy. We cannot, however, simply deny the sale, particularly when the major owner is understood to be in financial difficulty, as perhaps was done in the case of Denison, without being prepared to give him an alternative. If we cannot find an alternative Canadian buyer for Home Oil I suggest to the government it should make a fair and reasonable bid for Home Oil and be prepared to purchase it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under what statutory authority?

Mr. O'Connell: There are several instruments in the Crown corporation field which could take on Home Oil. However, I do not think it would be good policy for us to suggest that this is the sort of thing the CDC should be expected to do. Very likely the CDC would be in a position to make a bid for Home Oil. I hope it would be. But it is not for the government to purchase an oil company and then press it upon the CDC. This would only confirm the fears of many persons that the CDC would be a basket for the dumping of companies purchased under political pressures. If we are prepared to purchase Home Oil, as I think we ought to do, we should be prepared to manage it as a public company. We should also be prepared to sell it to private Canadian interests if a good deal can be made, or be prepared to offer it to the CDC without any pressures.

It would seem to me that Panarctic Oils is a natural vehicle. I hope the minister is already in touch with that company with a view to keeping it advised of the situation and offering it the facilities of the government, financial and otherwise, to make a decent bid for Home Oil. Majority control of Panarctic does not lie with the government, and if that company appears not to be interested, then Eldorado Mining Corporation is another natural company in this energy field. I hope the minister would use his influence to bring about the purchase by Eldorado of Home Oil.

There is no question that if the Canadian people come to own Home Oil they will have made an excellent purchase. It is a good company with good land and good oil reserves. It is not the company which is in difficulty but the owners. It has an international reputation and would be able to maintain itself in the international field where it has a demonstrated record of success. We would not be buying an enterprise as an act of last resort. We would be buying a viable, successful Canadian company which could become the building block or the cornerstone for a publicly-owned oil concern. We need a national or multi-national company in this field. We need to compete internationally in all spheres, not only in the resource field, though I think this would be a natural base for competition. I repeat that there are suitable vehicles available. But I do not believe in pressuring them into a purchase. If they are unable to bring themselves to a decision, then we should make it a separate government-owned Canadian company.

It seems to me that behind these proposals is a necessary decision on the part of the government. It is one thing to try to encourage Canadian companies to purchase Home Oil; but if the owner finds a better deal elsewhere, then in the normal course of commercial practice he will accept the deal. It is one thing to suggest that Eldorado, Panarctic, Polymer or some other company in which the government has a major interest should get in touch with Home. But behind such a suggestion ought to be a clear pronouncement on the part of the government—I am prepared to see the government make such an announcement; some hon. members of the opposition are not—that under no circumstances will the government permit the sale of that company to foreign interests. I think that is the foundation block on which all other negotiations have to take place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: What does the minister say.

Mr. O'Connell: My hon. friend will hear from the minister later on. From what one understands, the minister has been doing a remarkably sturdy job in trying to bring about a resolution of the matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Pure faith.

Mr. O'Connell: It is not pure faith at all. He has been trying to bring about a resolution of this dilemma in the voluntary way by finding Canadian buyers. This is the right way to go about it. It is true that we have a precedent in the Denison case, but that is a precedent which, I am sure we will all agree ought not to be repeated if it can be avoided. It is not good government policy to step in, in a retroactive sense, and deny the sale of a company. In some rare instances there is no time to wait for the policy that is coming forward, no time to wait for legislation, and in those circumstances I think the government has to weigh all the matters in balance. I think the government is doing this, and that the minister is doing the right thing in making every possible effort to resolve the issue.

What I am trying to say to the minister and to the government is that if those efforts fail, then I think the sense of the country is that we should take the next step and say that the company will not be sold abroad. Then, if we cannot find a consortium of Canadian companies to come forward, we will have to operate the company through the government's system.

Some hon. members had something to say about the north, but I do not want to get far into the question of the importance a company like Home Oil would have as a policy instrument in the matter of northern oil exploration and development. Canadians do want a vehicle of this kind; they want an opportunity to participate in resource development. They want this vehicle to reside in a successful company of which they can be proud.

It has been suggested that the regulations regarding development of the north should be changed because some uncertainty may have been created. There are billions of dollars going into northern exploration. Northern exploration has not ceased. The policies relating to exploration of the north were set in 1959, 1960, 1961 by a previous government. It makes no sense to have stayed with those regulations after Prudhoe Bay, and I agree it is time they were changed. I believe that a company like Home Oil would be very suitable as a company participating in leasing, and leasing competitively, in the Canadian north. I would go further and say that a crown owned company ought to have devolved upon it a certain percentage of all the Crown lands that revert when one leases. That is taking a major step, and I would go that far.

The effort made by some members of the opposition to discuss the white paper on taxation is a subterfuge to conceal their policy. We have to face this question of what to do about Home Oil, and face it now.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Then, face it.

Mr. O'Connell: I will, and I should like to hear your suggestions too, Sir. The point about the north—if I have a few moments left, Mr. Speaker—is this: Many members of the House realize that it is the normal practice, when a discovery is made on a permit area, that one-half the permit area reverts to the Crown. In the area south of the 60th parallel these leasehold Crown lots are sold at auction to the highest bidder, and current revenue goes to the provincial government in that sense. But this has not been the practice followed in the north. In the north, the practice has been to permit the discovering company to take on the rest of the land that has reverted to the Crown by paying higher royalties for it. That means, in effect, that we forgo current revenues in the interests of future revenues through the royalty system. It seems to me it is time that system was changed. If indeed we run the risk of forgoing current revenue for the sake of future revenue, then we also ought to cover such risk by having an equity position through a company like Home Oil or Panarctic in the action that is taking place.

For a number of reasons similar to this, I find it wise and proper for the government to make up its mind to prohibit the sale of Home Oil and to make its best effort to find a Canadian purchaser. Failing that, it should purchase the company itself; and if it is necessary to do that, then there should not be the presumption that the company will be forced into the CDC. In my view it should be offered for sale to private Canadian companies, or to the CDC if, in the end the CDC turns out to be interested in the company.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to relinquish the floor to the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) if he feels like participating in the debate. I think that the two speeches by members of our party so far have made our point very well, namely that this is an urgent matter. We even have some members on the government side of the House agreeing with us that this problem is urgent. I commend the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) for some of the points that he made. I think he spoke good, common sense and it is obvious that he is very concerned about the matter. I suggest, though, that the members the parliamentary secretary will have the most difficulty convincing are the members of his own party. He does not have to convince us, because we are already concerned.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

In the past, we have suffered from a deficiency in Canada of capital, expertise and technology in the handling of our own oil industry, but I do not think this is any longer true. The market in Canada for oil is increasing, the same as it is everywhere else. Other speakers earlier this evening placed on the record how oil consumption has increased and what demands in the future will be, so I will not go into that again. I would suggest that we have sufficient capital, expertise, technology and markets in Canada to handle Canadian oil. We should concern ourselves and gear ourselves to this end. As I read the Canadian political scene at this moment there appear to be three things more important than all others about which Canadians are concerned.

• (10:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Where are they published?

Mr. Thomson: Where are they published; they are published probably by a United States owned Canadian publishing company. This is foreign ownership. Secondly, and I do not list these necessarily in the order of importance, Canadians are concerned with unemployment and thirdly they are concerned with pollution control.

I think all parties in Canada should assist in suggesting means to accomplish or discover solutions to these problems. Hon. members in this House should not merely say what the government has done or has not done. We should contribute ideas which will help to control or help the situation.

I am very concerned about the issue being debated tonight. I feel a little bit like a pauper in the land of my birth. I wonder if I can call my soul my own.

Mr. Greene: Has he got one, Stan?

Mr. Thomson: I suggest that much of the control by foreigners in Canada has come about under the aegis of Liberal governments past and present. I do not think hon. members opposite can make any excuse for this fact. Certainly in the last few years, during which we have improved our technology and increased available capital in this nation, it seems to me that Canadian laws have made it easier for foreigners to own businesses in Canada than Canadians. It is high time we did something constructive about this situation.

Oil companies are being purchased by United States companies which want to make a profit here. Large companies are being purchased by United States interests. When are the ministers going to do something about this situation?

An hon. Member: When are they going to start?

Mr. Thomson: I can just envisage how Canadians will be in a few years.

An hon. Member: Soon we will have United States ministers performing funerals.

Mr. Thomson: Can't you see Canadians owning nothing else but a plot for his grave attending a funeral being performed by a United States firm?

That Canadian body will be carried to the undertaker's parlour in an automobile manufactured by a United States firm, using oil produced by a United States firm with the services being read from a book manufactured by a United States owned company.

An hon. Member: What about the pallbearers?

Mr. Thomson: A minister said yesterday that the Liberal government will take care of unemployment and will take care of this takeover by foreigners. Hopefully that poor Canadian will have six feet of Canadian soil which he can claim as his own, but the way things are going today he will likely have to be cremated because he won't even own that.

An hon. Member: What about the pallbearers?

Mr. Thomson: I suggest a Canadian owned firm should have Canadian interests at heart.

An hon. Member: I wonder how much further you are going to go.

Mr. Thomson: It may be that the Canadian owned firms are efficient, but I think it would be to our interest to have a strong and viable Canadian firm producing oil in Canada.

There is an advantage to Canadian owned companies. While some companies may have international co-operation with international companies, when they are owned by someone else they do not necessarily have Canadian interests at heart. It is in our interest to have at least one Canadian firm in the oil producing market, and I think it is high time we took some steps to see that this is the case.

The hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) made some comments.

An hon. Member: You mean the hon. member for coke.

Mr. Thomson: I had in mind the hon. member for Etobicoke, coke, or coal, but he listed promises in connection with the immediate situation. We do not need a list of these promises or problems which exist as we know them already. He made some minor suggestions in respect of solutions. He suggested we needed more legislation. I suggest he inform the minister that the government is responsible for providing legislation.

Does the hon. member for Etobicoke suggest that we as members should provide the government with ideas by means of private members bills? Does this government have no ideas of its own? I suggest that the government should accept some responsibility.

There are two oil fields in my riding and it may well be that I should have provided some ideas by means of private members bills in order to solve some of these problems. I plead guilty if that is the case. I will give some thought to this idea. There does not seem to be many ideas forthcoming from members on the government side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Thomson.]

Mr. Thomson: At the present time I am considering a private members bill in respect of another field. It involves a serious matter. Perhaps while I am considering it I should take a little bit more time and provide the government with suggestions in respect of solutions to this oil problem.

The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) suggested an immediate problem with which we must deal. One of the reasons it is an immediate problem is that the government has had no policy.

I scold the government for not developing a policy to deal with this problem which now exists.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Perrault).

Some hon. Members: We don't want Perrault, we want Joe.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the opposition will endeavour to develop the virtue of patience and understanding during this debate.

Mr. Alexander: You are confusing us, so carry on.

Mr. Perrault: No one underestimates the importance of this debate.

An hon. Member: Don't speak in your usual whisper.

Mr. Perrault: This matter is of major concern to government members as well as to the hon. members on the opposition side of the House. All of us are concerned with ownership of industry in Canada now and in years to come. Probably no other subject occupies the mind of the public more than the question of the degree of foreign ownership of Canadian resources and industries which may be desirable.

I am one who believes that every effort must be made to maintain as much Canadian ownership as possible. I endorse some of the constructive statements made by my colleagues in respect of proposed methods to be employed to maintain Canadian ownership.

An hon. Member: Hip, hip hooray!

Mr. Perrault: I have listened with amusement—yes, amazement—

Mr. Alexander: Here it comes now.

Mr. Perrault: —to some of the ideas advanced with ardent nationalistic enthusiasm and fervour by our friends opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: Especially the remarks of certain opposition members from Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: They are the only ones who have spoken.

Mr. Perrault: Some have stated with pride that they have oil wells in their constituencies. Almost none of them were brought in under the auspices of the CCF-

NDP when that government occupied the seat of power in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Louder, louder.

Mr. Perrault: Both official opposition members and members of the NDP have read to members of this House a stern lecture about the need to protect our resources.

The leader of the NDP said to the House "there can be no excuses . . . we want action. . . .it's not good enough to say we haven't the power". I recall his words when he said to us in a thrilling and stirring appeal to nationalism: "our national resources are important. We can't stand by and watch foreign investors suck all of our resources from us".

• (10:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Amen, amen!

An hon. Member: Hallelujah!

Mr. Perrault: Some hon. members have that prairie fervor tonight, Mr. Speaker. And we on this side want to bring them up the sawdust trail of conversion to our thinking. That is all. The big tent is out. When the Socialist party came to power in Saskatchewan, two major oil companies were engaged in developing oil resources in that province. They had high hopes of spending millions of dollars in order to develop the oil resources of that province.

Mr. Alexander: We want Joe.

Mr. Perrault: The CCF proceeded to try to force upon one company—Imperial Oil—a contract to which the company would not agree. The company quit the province and went to Alberta. That was the first step in the Socialist party's oil development policy in the province of Saskatchewan. One down and one to go.

The other major oil company in that province, Bata Petroleums, was a Saskatchewan company with 24,000 Saskatchewan shareholders. The company had drilled—and this evidence is on the record—more than 30 wells and its discoveries included natural gas, potash and salt. The Saskatchewan members—they were there. The company established a gas service in the town of Unity and started a salt plant. Then the government marched in, confiscated the books, locked the company's doors, laid a charge under the Securities Act and began an investigation. And it was two oil companies up and two down. The Bata Company was exonerated of all charges but when its books were returned it found that one million acres had been confiscated by the government and that the company was relegated to a position where it could not borrow and was virtually bankrupt. This was the first oil development policy of our Socialist friends in Saskatchewan. Then, in 1948, the Socialist party in Saskatchewan decided to get busy because oil was being found in Alberta and Saskatchewan did not want to be left behind.

In 1948 the government of Saskatchewan in the third phase of its "oil policy" released 36 million acres of Crown land for petroleum exploration. Then a great and good friend of the government appeared on the scene. I refer to a Montreal businessman named Mr. Rhubbra. He appeared with his securities company. He obtained by permit from the government 14 million acres of gas and oil reserves at a cost of one-tenth of a cent an acre. What a bonanza for the people of Saskatchewan. Then this private company demanded a 2½ per cent royalty on every dollar's worth of oil that was found anywhere on the company's 14 million acres. Some companies were forced to accept these terms. The 14 million acres controlled by this Montreal-based securities company in 1949 constituted nearly all the remaining acreage available for oil exploration in Saskatchewan. Companies genuinely interested in undertaking development work were forced to do business with this private securities company set up by the great and good friend of the CCF Socialist government of Saskatchewan.

According to information given to the Saskatchewan legislature, this private securities company paid to the provincial government a fee of only $9,000 on nine million acres. Is this the kind of policy that we want to inaugurate in Canada? Should this be the type of beginning of the new era of oil exploration in our nation? Do we want this Socialist formula applied coast to coast in Canada? I see some opposition Saskatchewan members nodding their heads. They still have not learned their lesson. After holding these nine million acres for two days, they were—the record shows—transferred to the U.S.-controlled Tidewater Company for a cash payment of $25,000 and an overriding royalty of 2 per cent on all gas and oil discovered in the area.

In addition, the securities company secured an overriding royalty on 1,550,000 acres held by U.S.-owned Sohio Oil Company and some other undisclosed consideration. So much for part of the record of the CCF-NDP in the matter of oil development. Yet, this is the party which has been chastising us this evening about our failure to protect the resources of the Canadian people. Yet the fact is they have a most shocking record of dereliction of duty when it comes to developing the oil lands under this control. The fact of the matter is that the oil companies in that province were stung by government bureaucracy, loaded with excessive taxation. They threw in the sponge. Until a change of government came about, exploration for gas and oil reserves in the province ground to a virtual halt. Regardless of the protestations of ardent economic nationalism we have heard from the NDP tonight, both the premier of Manitoba today and his national leader when he was premier of Saskatchewan haunt and haunted the canyons of Wall Street to borrow money for government enterprise in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They are and were on first-name terms with all major U.S. financial corporations. Look at the record of U.S. borrowings by Manitoba since the premier was elevated to that position. The NDP-CCF record was the same in Saskatchewan. We should not be playing politics in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

Mr. Perrault: We should not be invoking ghosts of the type which our friends on the other side have been invoking this evening. They have been saying the government in some way is going to allow the American bogey man to take over a major Canadian oil company. In actual fact, when they were entrusted with government they negotiated extensively with that same United States industrial power which they so freely criticize.

Mr. Alexander: I insist on hearing Joe.

Mr. Perrault: I will not prolong my remarks.

Mr. Alexander: Good.

Mr. Perrault: There is much more I could tell about the record, but time does not permit. This is an important debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was.

Mr. Perrault: As members of all parties we must act to ensure continuing Canadian ownership of this company. If this means government ownership of the company or government participation in the company—and there are no other alternatives—then I favour consideration being given to these measures and I believe many other members of the House support such action. But let us not cloud the basic issue with the type of spurious comments advanced by some on the other side who suggest that somehow the rumoured sale is linked with the white paper on tax reform or that it is a "sell-out" to United States "interests" and that there is a "plot afoot". Canadians from coast to coast are becoming increasingly concerned about the degree of outside involvement in and ownership of some of our basic industries. This is an important question before us. Let us not cloud it with other spurious considerations.

• (11:00 p.m.)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we would certainly have liked to have heard the minister, particularly since I am now informed he has already spoken on television about this problem. He has, in fact, acted in complete contempt of your opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orange: Nonsense.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would like to see the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) speak from his seat and bring some light on this subject, rather than stand behind the curtain and say "nonsense".

Standing Order 26 reads:

...for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration...

On examination of the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), Your Honour decided this matter to be important and urgent, and that it should be brought on for immediate consideration. Yes, members on all sides of the House have demonstrated so far that they would like to see a solution, but the man who has the most information on hand, the man who has all the knowledge of the dealings, who has been in contact and perhaps acting on behalf of the government, has chosen to remain silent. He can remain silent and sphinx like until six o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Green: Like Solomon.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, sphinx-like. Solomon spoke and acted. The minister decided to let this debate go forward. We have heard scholarly exercises in economic nationalism, try-outs for a debate next week on the CDC when some people will essay their wings of economic nationalism. A number of proposals have been put forward that the government should act and buy Home Oil. I would simply ask the hon. gentlemen who made that proposal, under what statutory authority would the government do so? What act would allow them to put forward the first dollar to purchase the company as a buyer of last resort? Even if they did suggest that some of the Crown corporations could buy Home Oil, have any of those Crown corporations the legal power to so act?

Second, if any of those Crown corporations have the personnel who know anything and who could act in a managerial capacity, is there authority for those companies to borrow money from the federal government if that were deemed to be the avenue of approach? These are just wild guesses. I would have thought that when the parliamentary secretaries were making this proposal they would have verified whether or not that course would be possible before bringing it forward for serious consideration. This is why perhaps the minister should have been the second person to speak tonight, when he could have given the information and we could have discussed the matter perhaps a little more intelligently than we are doing now.

I must confess that in many instances I am relying on newspaper reports, conjectures, and information that I can gather here and there. But the minister is the man who knows, and I place the full responsibility on him for this continuing debate which has gone far beyond the time that it should because he has refused to say anything. Yet, I am told that he has spilled his heart and waxed eloquent before the television cameras. Sure, he had to make the eleven o'clock news; that is why we had these disappearances from the House.

Now, I want to deal with a few of the proposals that have been put forward. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) spoke about purchase by the government. I ask, where, how, and by whom? Then, the CDC was mentioned. I presume that the hon. members who have referred to CDC tonight have not read the press release and the remarks in print and on television made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in which he said that in no way was this company to be a buyer of last resort. Are they going to tell the Minister of Finance that he was talking through his hat? The minister will surely tell them on Monday that CDC is not established to bail out any organizations that are in some difficulty or under pressure. These are purchases under duress.

As a matter of fact, there is a question as to whether there is a binding agreement in existence at present. Only the minister could tell us that. A veil of secrecy has descended to the point where, in fact, Mr. Brown had to commit a technical breach of the SEC regulations by withholding filing for insider trading in buying additional shares of Home Oil. According to the press, he tells us that he was under instructions of the government of Canada, not of the United States, not to make the disclosures and not to speak about his dealings and negotiations. That is something that we want to be cleared up.

Next, I should like to come to the questions which I wish to examine in this particular matter. First, we want to know whether there is a binding contract or a projected sale. If there is a binding contract, then the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) in which he deprecated the action of the government with regard to Denison Mines would have full application in this instance. If there were a binding agreement,—was it last week or a month ago that Mr. Brown entered into an option agreement to sell—then there would have been that degree of retroactivity which the parliamentary secretary deprecated and he would have to level the same criticism on the head of the government that he levelled against the Denison deal.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all members of the House. We have now gone through three hours and ten minutes of debate on this question during which everyone urged the minister to rise and speak. He has remained silent in the House. However, he went on national television and said that a deal is being made and that he is confident that within two weeks an announcement will be made that Home Oil will remain Canadian. He said that there is no fear and no need to worry. Why did he not say so in the House? By appearing on the national network and by ignoring the concern of members of his own party and of every member of the House which has been expressed during the three hours and ten minutes of debate, he has attempted to destroy Parliament. He has sat there like a sphinx, like a mummy. I could use a lot of other words in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) vocabulary, but I am not so well acquainted with them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: This is one more step in downgrading Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I welcome the intervention of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) because it points out precisely the complaint which I expressed at the beginning. The action of the minister is in contempt of the House and in contempt of you, Sir, because when the matter was put to you this afternoon you judged it to be a matter coming fully within Standing Order 26. Those words were not weighed lightly. Certainly, Your Honour never weighs them lightly. You consider them very carefully, as you should, and today you have done so. Yet, this minister has the ultimate gall to have this House debate the question while he appears on television and spills the beans, tells everyone but this House. Sir, I do not know if there is any purpose in continuing the debate here because of this type of behavior.

• (11:10 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Arrogant! Arrogant!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I cannot express in terms that are strong enough my contempt for the minister's action. What is the purpose of such a debate if we get this sort of treatment? I do not know how much the Minister has said. According to the hon. member for Crowfoot, and presumably he has an accurate report, the minister said that the deal is going to take another two weeks and that he is satisfied there is going to be a preservation of some sort of Canadianization, or Canadian quality, or what have you with respect to this company.

We want to know is it actual ownership that is going to be maintained in Canada, or is the operational control going to move to others? Is it the deal that there will be a new board for Cygnus, with four nominees for Mr. Brown and three for Ashland, but the three real operatives being Ashland nominees? Is there a secondary agreement between Mr. Brown and Ashland that he will guarantee delivery at some future time, or within a set period after his death, such shares of Home Oil as will give absolute ownership control to Ashland?

Can the minister tell us what are the obligations of Home Oil under TAPS, the syndicate that is to put a pipeline across Alaska, in which Home Oil has a participating interest? What further obligations has Home Oil got? What is its real interest in Atlantic Richfield? Are the shareholdings of Home Oil in Atlantic Richfield the pot at the end of the rainbow for which Ashland is reaching? What about the remaining 10 per cent that Home Oil has in Trans-Canada Pipe?

I quote from the brief Mr. Brown submitted last June to the Finance Committee examining the white paper, from appendix A-3 to volume 50 of the transcript of evidence, page 198, as follows:

> Home is one of the largest shareholders of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. Dividends are now received by Home from Trans-Canada tax free.

Home's investment in Trans-Canada Pipe dates back to 1957 when several large blocks of common shares were bought from non-residents bringing Home's interests to 15.7 per cent of the voting shares of Trans-Canada Pipe. One can readily see that Home's interest was that of a major shareholder. What happens to that interest in this deal? Is that protected in any way? What are the special circumstances surrounding the sale? I am not trying to delve into Mr. Brown's personal matters. It is the tax laws of this country which are at the root of most of the sales of Canadian enterprise to foreigners. We heard a litany of other oil companies apparently recited with glee by hon. members opposite who had forgotten the dates of their acquisition by American companies. But all hon. members know that North Star and Canada Oils were sold as the result of the incidence of estate tax and succession duty taxes.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is not in the chamber because I could tell him that the government of his province, through punitive succession duty laws, has driven Canadians to dispose of their companies before death or, in the event that they were caught unexpectedly, caused their executors to put up their shares at fire sale prices. The same applies to the level of succession duties in Ontario, and then there is the federal government taxation on top of that. One has only to recall North Star which was absorbed by Shell. The same thing happened to Canadian Oils. I suppose one could say to the provinces that they should not levy succession duties, but they do. They have that right. This is where we, as Canadians, have the wrong end of the stick. We think we can live like the prodigal son off the fat of our endeavours, but far beyond our capacity to produce. We want all sorts of frills, but the economic core of this country must do the producing, and we always seem to bleed that core. My hon. friends to my left would not even want it to live. They would kill it.

This economic core is what provides the money for all the things they ask. Of course, the NDP have a shelf full, a nest full, or a bag full of people who are expert in running all these industries that they want to take over. But we can point to certain examples in Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: What sort of government have you got in Ontario?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They do not have a great number of Crown corporations, but Crown corporations are not a good example when it comes to dealing with labour, or anything like that. I am not going to make myself an apologist for Crown corporations.

Just compare the high incidence of taxation on Canadian corporate earnings as compared with the situation in the United States, the high taxation on dividends in Canada as compared with the situation in the United States, and the unequal tax treatment given investment in resource development programs in Canada as compared with the United States. An American, not even engaged in the oil business, can invest money here in Canada and get full allowance for it, regardless of whether it is his major source of income. But to Canadians we say that it must be their principal business. The result is that Americans have run circles around us.

Let us look at what Mr. Brown had to say about the activities of Home Oil as recorded at page 50:58 of the committee hearings:

> During the past ten years we have raised $170 million. I submit this is a real achievement for a company the size of Home, and especially so when one realizes that at the same time it has been possible to retain over 90 per cent of our voting shares in Canada. It is also noteworthy to point out that only 19 per cent of these funds were obtained in Canada under relatively favourable tax rules.
> Our ability to raise capital in the future, particularly in Canada, will depend to a great extent on the tax incentives provided both to the industry and to individual investors. The white paper proposals would reduce these important tax incentives to the industry. The proposed investment incentives fail to encourage high risk investments by Canadians. Preference is given to investment in low risk, well established companies. Resource investments are further penalized by the proposed tax on capital gains, which will have a relatively greater effect on this form of investment. The high rates of tax proposed for the transitional period would drastically reduce investment in the industry at a most critical time. As you know, exploration in Canada is becoming more costly and more risky as we move to the more remote northern regions of Canada.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I know that my time is limited, Mr. Speaker. I hope the House will extend to me the courtesy it extended to other hon. members and allow me to finish. We can see the background to this transaction. I trust that after I sit down the minister will stand up and give us the details of what has happened. Since he was satisfied to go on television and say that he is hopeful about the situation, I trust he will tell the House what the situation is. Then we shall be able to judge whether it is possible, in this particular instance, to salvage a company of this nature. I will not cry about economic nationalism at this time. This is neither the time nor the place to do that. But we must have information if we are to embark upon an intelligent debate, and I think the information has been withheld from the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) has refused to take part in this debate, and since he has shown his contempt for what is going on here by making a statement outside the House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —I ask leave, on behalf of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), and as his seconder, to withdraw the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked for leave to withdraw the motion. I am not sure whether he can do that on behalf of the mover of the motion who is not in the House at present.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have his authority.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says that he has the authority and I do not doubt that. It is still somewhat irregular. At the same time, there must be unanimous consent to allow the motion to be witdrawn.

Mr. Greene: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I have taken the position on this motion, and if I have erred I apologize to the House, that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: The minister has been here long enough to know that he should not make a statement on television before making a statement to the House.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: We will not give the minister time to speak now.

An hon. Member: Why should we?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor on a point of order. Perhaps he should be given an opportunity to express himself.

Mr. Peters: Let him do it on television.

Mr. Greene: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, many speakers wished to speak in the debate. The list of speakers was posted. I thought I would show hon. members and the Chair courtesy by listening to those hon. members who wished to speak. This I have done. This evening's debate was most useful. I thought my purpose in the debate would be most usefully served if I replied to hon. members after they had all had a chance to speak.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister should not have spoken on television first. One does not speak on television before addressing the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If nobody seeks the floor, the Chair will assume that the motion has been carried.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I hoped to wait until all hon. members who wished to speak had spoken. I thought that would be the proper procedure. I think all hon. members of this House are equal. I believe that the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) in his speech referred to the first speaker as the most important speaker. I think all hon. members of this House are equal and I think they all have an equal right to speak.

I ought to explain, with respect to any television appearance I made which appears to concern hon. members, that I stated on television what I stated in this House and what I have stated publicly for some time, namely, that the government is concerned about the ownership of this company remaining Canadian and I am confident that the actions taken by the government and the negotiations taking place with respect to Home Oil will enable Home Oil to remain a Canadian company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

Mr. Greene: I am pleased to see that most if not all hon. members, if I understood their representations correctly, are in favour of the position of the government, namely, that this company should remain a Canadian company and that such action as is necessary should be taken in order to ensure the maintenance of this company as a Canadian company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greene: Since I was not in the House during the question period today, I understand from reading what is to appear in Hansard that the basis of this motion is a newspaper article which was specifically referred to by the mover of the motion and by many hon. members tonight. The facts in the newspaper article are based on three premises appearing in three different places. The first basis for the article is the wording in the first paragraph. It states, "according to sources in Calgary and Ottawa". That was the first basis. Secondly, it states that an officer of Home Oil, unnamed, was the source of this article. Farther down it states, "according to industry and federal sources." Those are the sources for this article.

It is on such a flimsy basis that this motion is moved. I think hon. members have the responsibility of giving to the Chair their authority; they ought to check their facts in respect of that authority. Frankly, I do not know how hon. members can ask the Chair, on the basis of a newspaper article which is based on three unknown sources, to take up the time of the House with a motion like this.

An hon. Member: Why did the minister not give us the facts?

Mr. Greene: The Chair, of course, takes the representations of hon. members as fact. The Chair considers, I suggest, that these facts have been checked. I do not intend to answer allegations contained in a newspaper article; that would constitute a most reprehensible precedent for this House. It would be most reprehensible if under Standing Order 26 a motion could be moved requiring government members to answer allegations contained in a newspaper article. I can say to my hon. friends that there are many inaccuracies in that article and it is unfortunate that they did not see fit to check with me before bringing a motion under Standing Order 26 and taking up important time of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greene: I will now try to answer some of the queries and questions posed by my hon. friends on both sides of the House. I wish to point out to hon. members that I cannot, and do not, intend at this time to make a full statement on everything that has gone on with respect to the negotiations concerning Home Oil. I have a very heavy responsibility in this respect, which I am carrying out to the very best of my ability. It is my responsibility to see that this company remains Canadian, which is what hon. members have been urging. I am confident that we shall achieve this result.

I have for some months been speaking to and negotiating with various parties, Canadian and non-Canadian, to try to achieve that result. Those negotiations have been confidential. I have treated them as such. I must say that every one of the private parties with whom I have dealt and spoken has dealt with me most honourably and candidly and has maintained, in confidence, the hope that the transaction would be satisfactorily settled. If I am to continue to play a useful part in bringing about the result that hon. members profess to desire, namely, that this company shall remain a Canadian company, the dealings I have had must be maintained on the basis of confidentiality.

I am certain that hon. members are sincerely desirous of achieving the hoped for end result and that they do not wish to play politics with this issue. If they are desirous of the end result, namely, that this company shall be retained as a Canadian company, they will understand the delicacy of my position. When success is achieved, as I hope and believe it will be, with the consent of the parties with whom I have negotiated in good faith and confidence, I shall be able to make to the House as full a statement as possible. But that can only be done with their consent. I hope hon. members will bear with me. I will disclose as much as I can as many facts pertaining to the negotiations as may be disclosed and put on the public record without a breach of confidence. I hope that will assure hon. members who have expressed a very valid concern about this company.

With respect to the questions asked, there are many which I do not think hon. members would want me to deal with at this time. Those on the white paper were forcibly and ably presented, as is always his way, by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). They would be better dealt with when the tax measures come before the House. If I have opportunity to take part in that debate vis-à-vis resources, I will be pleased to try and answer his questions on the white paper at that time.

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) made a powerful and cogent argument with respect to building a pipeline to Montreal. I can establish very effectively that such a pipeline would not be economical. It would either mean that we would impose higher product prices on the consumers in Montreal, which I do not think the hon. member or his colleagues would want or, alternatively, we would foist upon the people of Canada the cost of a pipeline that is not profitable. If it were profitable under our law, private interests would have made application to the National Energy Board for building such a pipeline. Either the consumers of the Montreal area or the Canadian people as a whole would bear the uneconomic cost of such a pipeline. I do not think it would be in the public interest. This may be a side issue. I am trying to answer some of the direct issues.

The leader of the New Democratic Party made a very strong argument. He has been very keenly interested in this issue from the start. I regret that I have not been able to keep him and others concerned posted on a day-to-day basis with regard to negotiations in respect of my dealings with the private parties who are concerned.

However, I think hon. members will understand that had I done so, my usefulness in bringing Canadian buyers into this picture and hopefully enabling an end result where the company would remain Canadian, would have been at an end. I say with candor and respect that this is not one of those cases where I could keep the House fully informed, though no one respects this House more than I do.

Mr. McKinley: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Having been in business for some length of time, I respect what the minister is saying. I agree with him. However, I do not agree that he should have stated over television prior to this time, that it is his intention to keep Home Oil in Canadian hands. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Greene: If I were in contempt of this House, I can assure hon. members that I would be the first to apologize. I repeated tonight what I stated a week ago Sunday during an interview program. There was nothing new to add. The reporters asked me, as is their way,—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The timing was cute.

Mr. Greene: I stated to them that I was confident this company could be maintained as a private company through private negotiations which were taking place—and to which, by the candor of the parties involved, I have been made privy. If I were in contempt of this House, I would be the first to apologize. As I had nothing new to add to the story, I did not deem it to be in contempt of this House. I know this is an extremely serious issue. Members from all sides of the House take it extremely seriously.

The leader of the New Democratic Party made three suggestions. They were carefully thought out. I think they are valid and should be answered. He referred to the possibility that legislation could be passed or action taken similar to that of the Denison transaction. I do not have the answer to the constitutional question to which hon. members referred. I am confident that the House does have power to prevent any transfer of property in Canada, constitution or no. It has been my view throughout, and I think hon. members agree, that this would be the last resort.

We operate under a private enterprise economy. There may be some who feel that this is not the best method. As long as we operate under that private enterprise economy, private citizens who are dealing with their own assets should be given the maximum liberty to deal with those assets under the law. I think the rights of property over the years are becoming less vis-à-vis the state. There are zoning by-laws which certainly restrict the ownership of property, there are anti-combines laws which restrict the rights of corporate owners. In the United States, there are anti-trust laws which do the same. Not too long ago, we saw a Canadian company, Labatts, if I recall rightly, being compelled, after they had paid over the money, as I understand it, to renounce the acquisition of a United States brewery they had bought. This was by virtue of the United States anti-trust laws. So in the United States, too, the ability of private corporations to move is restricted. We have these public rights in Canada, as well, under different laws, but I think hon. members would agree these should be used only as a last resort if the intention is to prevent a private transaction which is carried on in good faith and which is perfectly valid under existing legislation.

The leader of the NDP suggested the government should "bankroll" a consortium of small Canadian companies to buy up Home Oil. Well, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who is learned in the rules as well as in the practice, made a valid point when he commented that this would be difficult under our law. The leader of the NDP did not refer to any specific legislation under which we might do this. I am not personally aware of any legislation by means of which we could bankroll a consortium of small Canadian companies.

An hon. Member: How about the IDB?

Mr. Greene: A third suggestion made was that Panarctic should acquire this company. Well, only 45 per cent of the shares of Panarctic are government-owned. The other 55 per cent are in the hands of private shareholders. The company has a board of directors which operates independently of government. To the best of my knowledge, and I can say this without disclosing any confidences, the directors have not indicated any interest in Home Oil. I do not know why. I do not believe the government has the right to intimate to Panarctic—

An hon. Member: It has a 45 per cent right.

Mr. Greene: It must be permitted to operate with the knowledge of the directors in the best interests of Panarctic. Had they been interested in Home Oil this might have been a possible avenue. However, to date the proceedings have gone in such a direction that I have been confident. I hope my confidence is not misplaced. I do not believe it is. I could be naïve but I do not think so in this particular instance. I have been confident from the nature of the discussions I have had both with the vendor, Mr. Brown, with the Ashland Company and with potential Canadian buyers that we can work this out together in confidence, because that is the only way in which such transactions can be carried out, so as to maintain this as a Canadian company without any legislation being passed which has a retroactive aspect to it. That might be necessary if things go wrong, if I turn out to be wrong as an intermediary of the government and as an intermediary, as I understand it, now, for the will of Parliament, because it is quite clear tonight that this Parliament is determined that the company be maintained as a Canadian company. It is quite clear that members here tonight are very determined that this company be maintained as a Canadian company.

• (11:40 p.m.)

I have with me some of the matters which I can disclose. I do not know how helpful they will be to hon. members, but these are pretty well the limits of the areas I can disclose without breaching confidences which have been reposed in me during the course of these negotiations. I shall give the House some of the facts. Before I do so I think I should clear up the situation about the newspaper article which I think misled some hon. members, though it is difficult to check these things. I think they could have been forewarned by three references in the article to unnamed sources; that should have raised their suspicions. But let me clear up the point for Hansard. I think I have a duty to the House to do this and to put on the record my knowledge of any written agreement or otherwise.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) asked me about an agreement which referred to myself. I know of no such agreement. This agreement also referred to the government preventing the sale which this newspaper article alleges exists. At the time I stated that I knew of no such agreement, but I did know of a document. I am not sure of its legal context, but it was not to the best of my knowledge—I am convinced of this fact—an executed agreement of sale. It was the possibility of a sale, a general agreement that might later be followed by an agreement of sale. I knew of such document—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A letter of intent?

Mr. Greene: I do not think I would describe it as a letter of intent. I am not sure of the legal definition of a letter of intent. The document to which I was privy was one which stated terms that would form the general basis for an agreement if one were later entered into. It was, if you like, a preliminary agreement. But it certainly cannot have been the one referred to in the article and referred to in the question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North, because the document that I saw made no reference to myself and certainly made no reference to the Canadian government having a part in the matter at all. Incidentally, although I was told of the existence of such document as I have described, I did not see it until Friday of last week. I think I can safely disclose this to the House now that some of its terms have been made public. So much for the point with respect to the agreement and Hansard, which I think hon. members have a perfect right to have cleared up.

There are in fact discussions continuing between Mr. R. A. Brown, Jr., of Calgary and Rabsco Investments Limited, a company associated with Mr. Brown, for the sale of their combined holdings totalling in excess of 50 per cent of the class B voting shares of Cygnus Corporation Limited of Calgary. I should like to make clear to the House, within the limits of what I believe to be proper and as maintaining the confidences which have been placed in me, some of the facts of the situation. Firstly, Home Oil Company Limited was incorporated in 1929 under the laws of Canada. It is engaged in exploration for and production and transportation of petroleum, natural gas and associated substances, with assets of approximately $250 million and an annual gross income of approximately $28 million. It is a leading Canadian independent in the petroleum industry, as hon. members made so clear in their presentations tonight.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

In addition to an active exploration program in western Canada which has resulted in production of approximately 21,000 barrels of oil per day, Home Oil has been active in the United Kingdom, the North Sea, Malta and in Alaska. Home has a large investment in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, representing about 10 per cent of the outstanding shares of that company, and in Atlantic Richfield Company, which, though substantial in amount, do not represent a significant amount of the total shares issued by Atlantic Richfield.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but I must do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister may continue with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members for being so patient with me at this late hour. I think that a review of the operations of Home clearly indicate that the views of hon. members as expressed in this House have been very useful. They have been very useful to me and I am sure will be of interest to the government. They are well founded. This is an extremely important company to Canada, and this is an extremely important building block in the oil industry in Canada for the future.

Home Oil Company Limited has two classes of shares outstanding. The class A shares are non-voting under present circumstances. The class B shares are voting stock. There are 4,706,194 class A shares outstanding and 2,295,899 class B shares outstanding, after deducting 275,506 shares held by subsidiaries of Home Oil.

Cygnus Corporation Limited is a holding company incorporated under the laws of Canada in 1964. Simply put, Cygnus holds the controlling block of voting shares of Home, which constitutes one million class B shares of Home, or 43.6 per cent of the class B shares of Home. I am advised that, in the investment community, this is considered to represent effective control of Home. Cygnus Corporation Limited also has class A shares which are non-voting under present circumstances and class B shares which are voting shares. The oustanding class A shares total 1,370,289 and the class B shares total 2,694,374. I am advised that Mr. R. A. Brown, Jr. and his associated company, Rabsco Investments Limited, are the holders of approximately 50.4 per cent of the class B shares of Cygnus. Accordingly, I believe it will be clear to the House that the class B shares of Cygnus control the class B shares of Home Oil, which constitutes effective control of the affairs of Home Oil, and that Mr. R. A. Brown and his associated company, Rabsco Investments Limited, effectively control Cygnus.

All of this has been stated to the House because I want to make it clear at this point that my advice is that Mr. Brown and Rabsco, for reasons of their own—again to the best of my knowledge, and this is not because of any action of this government, because of any existing tax laws, but for motivations of their own which I do not think are my business, and I have not pried into them and they have not been drawn to my attention as some hon. members across the floor have alleged—have decided that it is in their interests to sell 49 per cent of their holdings of class B shares of Cygnus at this time. I believe this first sale will be made by Mr. Brown, personally.

The decision is to sell the balance of 51 per cent of their holdings at a later time on a formula, however, which would be agreed to at the time of the first sale. While the first stage of the sale might not transfer control from Mr. Brown's hands, thus from Canadian hands to a non-Canadian company, certainly at the time the second sale is effected, control of Cygnus and therefore of Home would pass to the purchaser.

I should like to tell the House that Mr. R. A. Brown, Jr. has had a distinguished business career in the oil industry in Canada and has been one of the leading Canadians active in that industry. Home Oil has had a dramatic growth during his term as head of this company. Mr. Brown has received several honours, including a position for several years on the board of directors of Canadian National Railways and the conferring upon him by the University of Calgary, in his home city, of an honorary doctorate.

In saying that, I say in all sincerity that my position has been to try to achieve the transfer to a Canadian company in accord with Mr. Brown's desires without if possible in any way impairing Mr. Brown's personal position. I think, surely, that was the right approach and the only possible approach. If the worst comes to the worst, then the national interest must be paramount; and if something must be done which impairs Mr. Brown's interest, then that must be, because the national interest must come first. But I had a responsibility, and tried to exercise it, of seeing whether we could make an effective transfer to a Canadian company without impairing Mr. Brown's private right to receive the optimum price for this transfer.

I want the House to know that on my instructions, my deputy minister began to discuss the question of control of Home Oil with Mr. Brown as early as June 21, 1970, and with Mr. Brown's co-operation the government has been kept apprised of Mr. Brown's intentions. There may be an impression in the minds of some hon. members that the men who head some of these giant corporations are somewhat lesser Canadians or are different from us, but I want to emphasize that in these negotiations I have not found such to be the case. Mr. Brown has been sensitive to the national interest to which members have referred today, and wishes to keep this company Canadian if he can possibly do so with justice to his own private interests which he has every right to try to protect.

From the beginning of Mr. Brown's negotiations in respect of the sale of his position in Cygnus he has been aware of the desire of the government that he make a sale to a Canadian purchaser where the terms of the purchase available to him were reasonably competitive with the offer which he might receive from a foreign buyer. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Brown has made and is continuing to make a real effort to find a Canadian buyer on such terms and that at all times he has had such co-operation as I could give him, or which my department could give him, in this pursuit.

I was advised by Mr. Brown that he had entered into a letter of understanding—which was the way it was described to me—with Ashland Oil Incorporated in mid-January which set out the general terms of an agreement which could be entered into with that company. That is the way it was put to me, and I have accepted what was told to me completely, because everything that had happened to that date had been told straight and completely to me by all parties concerned.

So this was given to me as an agreement which could be entered into with the Ashland company. The letter made it very clear that that was not an agreement. I did not see any written document until Friday of last week, when I attended at Vancouver for the purpose of trying to help ensure the continuity of this company as a Canadian company. The intention, if the agreement with Ashland was to be proceeded with, was that the parties would enter into what they called a definitive agreement some time later. While that letter has been described to me, as I say at no time had I been in possession of it or seen it. I had not seen it except that time in Vancouver, but I understand a copy of it was made available today to my deputy minister.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) referred to a letter of intent in which my name is mentioned. Again I checked this, and I think I cleared the Hansard record, and I am advised upon further checking that no letter of intent entered into by Mr. Brown or no communication mentioned my name at any time. This is just one of the many misrepresentations in that unfortunate article which may have misled hon. members.

As I advised the House earlier, I was not aware of any documentation which implemented and executed a sale agreement, and to the best of my information and belief there is no such documentation, nor has Mr. Brown and RABSCO entered into a firm and binding agreement of sale at this time.

I said earlier that these negotiations were extremely sensitive, extremely confidential. They involve private rights and very large amounts of money. I have received information from various parties which has been given to me on the understanding that I would not disclose their respective positions, and I feel obliged to honour that undertaking, not only by reason of this transaction but if I am to be useful to the government and to Parliament in my future dealings, it is surely paramount that private persons who deal with me on a confidential basis know that despite the pressures put on me even by Parliament at times to disclose the information, I will maintain the undertaking until I have the authority to release the information to the House.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

I can say at this time that Mr. Brown is actively dealing with more than one Canadian company to try to maintain Home Oil as a Canadian company. I advised the House earlier today, and previously, of my position that it is in the interests of Canada to maintain control and majority ownership of Home Oil. I think hon. members unanimously indicated tonight they wished that also. The measures I have taken have been to fully acquaint myself of the facts of Mr. Brown's circumstances and of the Cygnus and Home corporations, to make clear to Mr. Brown the desire of the government that a sale is made to a Canadian buyer, and to actively encourage discussions between Mr. Brown and Canadian buyers which he had indicated were acceptable to him, as well as to attempt to bring him together with such Canadian buyers, if I was able to do so by my own intervention or by the good offices of my department.

As I said, the question is a delicate one regarding the extent to which the government of Canada should interfere with the private affairs of a Canadian citizen because there is an urgent and overriding national interest. There are certainly circumstances in which this is done, such as the ones to which I referred earlier. Certainly, the rights of private property, be it corporate property or real estate or otherwise are not so absolute, as were the rights of private enterprise of yesteryears. That is as it should be in the kind of world in which we live. At the same time, it must be clear that the interests of the private subject have to be considered most carefully, and should not be interfered with lightly or unnecessarily, in justice to the individual concerned. At this point I have to state publicly—and I think I should do so in fairness to the parties with whom I have dealt—that I have received the full co-operation of the president of Ashland Oil Incorporated, Mr. Orin Atkins, with respect to this transaction. He also has kept me completely briefed, has honoured any undertaking that he has given to me, and I think I certainly do owe him the courtesy of acknowledging his candour, good will and honesty in his dealings with the Canadian government.

Incidentally, Ashland is an important refiner of Canadian oil in the United States and has an investment of over $100 million in Canadian production. Questions have been raised in the House about a tax advantage under the present rules to a U.S. buyer in the situation of the possible change of control of Home Oil. I want to address myself to that very briefly. It is true as some hon. members, particularly in the official opposition, have alleged, that U.S. companies in certain circumstances can write off their exploration expenditures in Canada from their general income, while Canadian companies are not permitted to write off from Canadian income exploration expenses incurred outside Canada.

• (Midnight)

There is no doubt in my mind that the oil industry in Canada needs vast sums of capital for its development. Members of the House should indeed pause to consider whether our needs to develop our oil industry are the same as those of the United States and other foreign countries, and whether we should encourage the transfer of capital out of Canada for exploration in other parts of the world. I look forward very much to the discussion on that important issue when the tax reform measures come before the House, because I look upon this matter as important in the future of the Canadian oil industry. I am not presuming to answer the question at this time, Mr. Speaker, because I think that would hardly be appropriate.

Finally, I must say to the House that the decision of the government, in the event that there is no Canadian buyer willing to make an offer of approximately the same benefits to Mr. Brown and Rabsco, cannot be communicated this evening. There is no decision yet on what we will do in the event that my confidence in the likely success of these negotiations proves to be misplaced. There may well be necessary action.

Again, I think this debate has been most useful to the government in that regard. It indicates to the government—which is the very function of Parliament—the will of this House and thereby the will of the country. I cannot think of any more useful debate than that which has taken place tonight. I repeat, and I believe, that the procedures have up to now been the right ones. I am confident that they will succeed. If they do not succeed, it may be that harder measures will be required. I hope this will not be the case and I do not believe it will be.

I have tried to disclose to the House, to the best of my ability, anything I thought I could without violating confidences. I apologize to hon. members if they think I should have done this earlier in the evening. I repeat that I thought I should let all hon. members speak and listen to them.

An hon. Member: You would have saved time.

Mr. Greene: If that is the case, then on another occasion I will speak early and listen later. But I can assure hon. members that it was not done in any spirit of contempt of the House. I thank hon. members for being so patient with me at this late hour.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with the indulgence of the House, may I be permitted to direct a question to the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Greene: If I can answer, I will.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the minister has taken a rather reasonable position tonight. The fuller explanation he has given might have saved our time if given earlier. In his remarks he indicated the dilemma facing us generally with regard to foreign ownership: it is simply that many Canadian companies are worth more to foreign organizations because of the nature of their operations and, in some cases, because of foreign tax laws. But the question I put to the minister is this: Is he not being somewhat unfair in trying to reconcile the private interests with the public interests?

No one wants to disadvantage a private owner, and I am quite sure Mr. Brown has been a good Canadian and is deserving of all the consideration we can give him. But is it not unfair to leave this state of affairs in limbo without any policy on foreign ownership? Nobody seems to know the rules of the game; this is the reason we are getting into this fix. Has the minister some views on this question? Can he say what he intends to do about it, so that we can avoid such head-on collisions at the last moment, whether with Mr. Brown in the oil field or with Mr. Roman in the uranium field?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very valid question and possibly it is a very valid criticism of the government's actions to date. These are not easy questions of policy. As the hon. member knows, one of my cabinet colleagues is presently undertaking a comprehensive survey and will come up with a policy for the government or for Parliament, I am not sure which. In the meantime, I think that my hon. friend will see the dilemma that I was faced with personally. There is not yet a clear, overt and manifest policy on this issue. When we debate this issue, when we try to arrive at a policy, hon. members will see that this is not an easy subject. We need foreign capital in this country; we all agree on that, I think. We must treat foreign capital fairly and justly, to enable it to obtain a fair return, otherwise it will not come here. How we do this and yet assure a greater and continually improving ownership position for Canadians in Canada will be the challenge we must meet. There is no over-all policy in this field yet; therefore, for the time being, these cases must be dealt with on an ad hoc basis as they come along. I have the responsibility, and if I have interpreted the speeches in the House tonight correctly I have fulfilled my responsibilities as the House would wish me to, of trying to maintain companies that are now Canadian as Canadian companies, pending any resolution of over-all policy with regard to foreign ownership.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, before the minister sits down I wonder whether he would permit a question. I wanted to say how happy I am that the negotiations to which he referred have come along so well. May I say to the minister that although he has hinted the answer on several occasions, he still has not given us any clearcut reply to one important question. It is the absence of this answer that has made the House uneasy about the future of Home Oil and which is the reason for this debate. The question we should like to have answered is this: can the minister guarantee to this House that, whether or not the negotiations on which he is now engaged succeed, Home Oil will remain a Canadian company, under Canadian ownership and Canadian control?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, as I tried to indicate at the conclusion of my remarks, in the event that these negotiations about which I am sanguine do not succeed, the government will decide what action should be taken at that time. I cannot guarantee that the negotiations will succeed, of course. Hopefully, we will succeed and I do not think that we ought to look ahead of the event. I have no authority to say to the House what the government will do in the event that the present procedures, about which I am hopeful, do not succeed.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a further question. Is he confident that there is enough Canadian financial interest to maintain this company as a Canadian company?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, my confidence is based on the fact that there are Canadian companies which are financially capable of handling this transaction which have manifested a very clear intention in this regard. It is my confident belief that they can be brought together with the vendor, and that the company will remain Canadian.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would permit one more question before he concludes his speech. Before I ask my question, may I be permitted to join with other hon. members in what has been said. We thank the minister for the information he has given to the House tonight. I think an earlier intervention on his part might have avoided some of the irrelevancies which were introduced by hon. members such as the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). My question is this. The minister indicated that the document that he has seen relating to Mr. Brown and the Ashland Oil Company is not, according to his interpretation, an agreement.

Since he also declined to accept the suggestion that it be termed a letter of intent, can he in fact define the nature of this document, or is it the case that he does not wish to do so at this stage because of the nature of the negotiations? If it has not been determined yet, will the minister undertake to determine how this document may be defined, and inform the House? Does the minister consider that this document in any way limits the action he can take to fulfil the objectives he has stated in keeping this company a Canadian company? Does it limit his power to do so within the scope of the powers now available to him?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I do not exactly know how to define in legal terms the agreement or document. I have not had it checked by lawyers or anything of this nature. I understand it is a document wherein the parties wrote down the general nature of the terms under which they would deal if an agreement could be subsequently entered into. Those are the terms which would be implemented. It was a preliminary agreement. Whether it limits our ability to act in law, I have no legal opinion.

My personal opinion is that it does not limit our ability to act because it is not an executed and binding agreement upon which Parliament could act. Even an executed and binding agreement could be abrogated by Parliament. I do not think this document goes that far. From my discussions to date, I do not think it limits our ability to ensure the end purpose of maintaining Home Oil, at the end of the negotiations, and the ultimate offspring of the negotiations, as a Canadian company.

Mr. Benjamin: Is the minister prepared—

Mr. Bell: I object.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising to take part in the debate?

Mr. Benjamin: I was wondering if I could address a question to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members realize that the minister has answered a number of questions. I wonder whether we are now exaggerating a little. The minister's time expired a long time ago and he can continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. We do not appear to have that unanimous consent. Procedurally, I think this is a time to suggest that no further questions may be asked.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if that is the position, perhaps in a 30-second intervention I might persuade the House to call it a night. I hope the minister will be able to persuade the government that the message he got from Parliament tonight is one that must be implemented. We want this company to remain Canadian.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 26(13), it appears, and I am so satisfied, that the debate has been concluded. I therefore declare the motion carried.

At 12.16 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—INCORRECT NEWS MEDIA REFERENCES TO BILL C-203 AS INCREASING VETERANS PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, having given Your Honour the required notice under Standing Order 17(2). My question of privilege relates to a continuing error which has been repeated in this morning's news concerning the contents of the bill which we passed yesterday afternoon.

I do not rise to protest misleading headlines—we are used to that sort of thing—but rather to protest the failure to report to the people of Canada what was in the bill that we passed yesterday. I raise my point of privilege because this error was broadcast on the CBC news this morning and it appears on page 1 of this mornings' Toronto Globe and Mail and on pages 27 and 29 of this morning's Montreal Gazette.

When Bill C-203 was first introduced, the news media immediately referred to it as a bill increasing veterans pensions and allowances. We have repeatedly pointed to the fact that it does not do that. Those increases were announced by the minister on December 2, but we do not yet have the legislation to bring them into effect.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the CBC news announces that yesterday we passed a bill dealing with veteran pension increases, when the Globe and Mail says the same thing on page 1, and when the Gazette repeats it on page 27, and even again on page 29 in reporting the incident, or alleged incident, concerning the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) being "obscene but not heard", I suggest this is a disservice to the Canadian people and will mislead the veterans of this country.

My point of privilege can be corrected quite easily, Mr. Speaker, if the government will now bring in legislation to increase veterans pensions and allowances as promised on December 2.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member will recognize that there is not a question of privilege in the point he has raised. As I have said from time to time, there may be a grievance, in this instance in the way the activities of the House of Commons have been reported, but I do not think that this is tantamount to a breach of parliamentary privilege.

WAGE OFFER TO HMC DOCKYARD EMPLOYEES, HALIFAX —REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), that in light of the government's bargaining with its employees in Department of National Defence establishments in Atlantic Canada, and specifically in light of the fact that the government is now offering the top wage in a majority conciliation report to its employees at HMC Dockyard, Esquimalt, B.C.—an increase of 42 cents an hour—and is offering the bottom wage in a minority conciliation report—an increase of 27 cents an hour—to its employees at HMC Dockyard, Halifax, the subject matter of bargaining over wage issues with prevailing rate employees be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ENTRENCHMENT OF LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN FIELDS OF PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister for the purpose of obtaining some clarification regarding the recent conference between the federal government and the provinces on the constitution and in particular the entrenchment of language rights. Would it be correct to say that in the communiqué there was no agreement indicated, without some reservation at least by the provinces, regarding the entrenchment of language rights in fields within provincial jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the measure of agreement was stated in the communiqué. I am doing my best to try to understand what the Leader of the Opposition is asking. As I say, it appears to be clear in the communiqué, but perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps I might be more specific in order to help the Prime Minister. Was there any agreement to entrench language rights, for instance, with respect to provincial courts in the country apart from federal courts?

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously not, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing in the communiqué about provincial courts. Even when we mention federal courts I would caution against using the word "agreement". He knows that this was indicated as a feasible approach, and I would not, on behalf of any of the provinces, want to say that they agreed in a firm way. It was considered to be a feasible approach to constitutional amendment.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I ask again for the purposes of clarification. Was there any agreement that any rights now entrenched in the British North America Act in respect of the use of language in the courts would be removed? I am referring now to entrenched rights which exist, for example, in the province of Quebec. Was there any agreement that these would be removed?

Mr. Trudeau: If there had been agreement on that, Mr. Speaker, it would have been stated in the communiqué, but it was not.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which arises from the Prime Minister's indication the other day that either the French version or the English version of the communiqué could be used as it suited one's case. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there was a consensus among the provinces that any province could move into a more or less unilingual position, une position unilingue, que ce soit l'anglais, que ce soit le français, with regard to courts or official documents and so forth and so on?

Mr. Trudeau: Monsieur le président, qu'on lise in English or in French la position est la même; le communiqué does not talk about ce qu'on disait en réponse to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is linguistic gear shifting. I am using the terms of the communiqué. Since the Prime Minister insisted the other day that they meant the same thing. I ask again whether there was agreement between the premiers of the provinces and the Prime Minister that any province could decide to move into a more unilingual position than now exists under the constitution and in practice, or is the interpretation that appeared in the public media yesterday and today one that has arisen as a result of the confusion caused by being able to use whichever version of the communiqué one wants to use?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Trudeau: Naturally, the subject was discussed, but if there had been agreement on anything of this nature it would have been put in the communiqué. There was nothing in the communiqué to this effect. As I told the Leader of the Opposition a moment ago, we did indicate in the communiqué that the federal government would be obliged under this proposed formula, if it were adopted, to entrench the two languages in the federal courts as we do now under the Official Languages Act. But there was no reference in there to what would happen to the provincial courts.

PROPOSED AMENDING FORMULA—EFFECT OF PART III

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, without shifting language gears, and looking at the English text of the communiqué issued after the conference, the statement of conclusions, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the third proposal under the amending formula setting out amendments of concern to Canada plus one or more but not all provinces is the type of feasible approach which could allow Quebec and the federal government to remove section 133 from the British North America Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, predict what would be done with section 133. As the communiqué says, all governments will want to see the implications, legal and otherwise, which flow from the adoption of such a formula. The question asked by the hon. member is one which I cannot answer. It is a matter of legal interpretation—what would happen if such an amending procedure were in the constitution. It would depend upon the form in which it was there and it would depend on what else was left in the constitution and what was withdrawn.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate part of the Prime Minister's answer in that this does involve an interpretation of a third feasible approach to the amending formula. But given the wording of the communiqué that the constitution could be amended by a resolution of consent at the federal level, plus the consent of the legislature of a province concerned, if there is any thought of amending the fundamental rights in the BNA Act for one province, what is the position of New Brunswick and its statute passed in 1968-69, an Act respecting official languages in New Brunswick and section 16 of that Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I say with respect that it seems to me we are becoming involved in a rather complex and complicated constitutional discussion. The hon. member perhaps might ask the question briefly and I suggest the Prime Minister should attempt to reply to it briefly.

Mr. Nowlan: I will ask it briefly, Mr. Speaker, and, with all deference, I think pretty directly. In view of the Prime Minister's longstanding interest in extending and amplifying a bilingual approach to the federal institutions of Canada, does he as the leader of the government and the Prime Minister of this land think you can have bilingualism from coast to coast and yet have retrograde steps within a province eliminating, reducing or restricting rights which have been there for several years and affecting rights which have been extended in some provinces like New Brunswick and goodness knows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That obviously is put in the form of an argument. The hon. member is asking whether the Prime Minister thinks so and so. He is, of course, inviting the Prime Minister to express an opinion, and I do not think that in those terms the question should be answered. The hon. member has made an argument rather than asking a question.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary. In view of reports in today's papers as a result of an interview with the Premier of Quebec last night, and in view of the private nature of the meetings of the constitutional conference last week or the week before, can the Prime Minister tell the House and Canada if the interpretation of the Premier of Quebec is correct with regard to section three of the amending formula in the communiqué and what might happen to section 133 of the BNA Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I would think the hon. member's question is hardly in order. I suggest at this point that we should go to another subject.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Peace River, but I caution hon. members that if we spend 10 or 15 minutes on the first question we could have rumblings at the end of the question period and, if so, I think the rumblings should be aimed in a direction other than the Chair. I will recognize the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Rumblings are what I am used to, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Prime Minister if the communiqué on page 4 indicates that the new proposals are an addition to what is presently in the British North America Act or are they to be considered as replacing the existing provisions of that Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the communiqué does not enlighten us on this subject.

Mr. Baldwin: That is why we ask you.

Mr. Trudeau: Contrary to what hon. members opposite can do, I cannot read the minds of the provinces on this subject.

Mr. McCleave: How about reading lips?

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—EXPEDITING OF TABLING OF STUDY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister on another subject. In view of the statement made last night or, to be more precise, early this morning by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the effect that the government does not yet have a clear, overt and manifest policy on the issue of foreign ownership, can the Prime Minister say whether the government is taking steps to expedite the tabling of the study on this subject being undertaken by the Minister of National Revenue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are taking such steps, and I think it is safe to gamble on the fact that we will overtake by far the New Democratic Party and the statement of its policy.

Mr. McCleave: You call that progress?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My second question is supplementary to my previous question. I shall not comment on the remark just made by the Prime Minister. In view of the further statement made early this morning by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources alluding to the debating of this matter in Parliament, can the Prime Minister say whether the debate will be on a white paper presented by the Minister of National Revenue or on a firm position taken by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: On one or the other, Mr. Speaker.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—INTRODUCTION OF IMMEDIATE INTERIM POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of difficulties that have arisen in a number of cases, including the one which was debated in the House last night, is the government now giving consideration to bringing in an immediate interim policy to deal with the problems of takeovers of Canadian firms because of the very obvious difficulties facing many companies, as was expressed in the House last night, in that they simply do not know the rules by which to operate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. We are not envisaging an interim policy, as the hon. member says. We regret that in some cases we had to act in an ad hoc fashion, and we want to avoid that as much as possible. We would like to have not an interim but a stated policy of the government. We do not have the facility of the New Democratic Party of being able to have several policies.

Mr. McCleave: Fuddle-duddle.

Mr. Baldwin: That requires a certain amount of intelligence.

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—MEASURES TO PREVENT SALE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In view of the reply of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last night to the effect that he had no authority to say to the House what the government will do in the event that the present procedures, about which he was hopeful, do not succeed, will the Prime Minister now give the House an assurance and a commitment that if the procedures now being followed do not succeed measures will be taken to prevent the sale or takeover of the Home Oil Company by the United States firm, Ashland Oil?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated the government's policy and its approach to this particular problem. I have nothing to add to that.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has he given the Minister of National Revenue a deadline by which time the white paper on foreign ownership must be produced, and can he give us some idea of when that deadline might be?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not so authoritarian that I would give a minister a deadline.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering that a National Defence spokesman has stated that the presence of the Armed Forces in Quebec following the invocation of the War Measures Act has given rise to additional expenses of $3 to $4 million, would the Prime Minister tell us today if his government has decided to absorb these additional expenses or if the province of Quebec will have to foot the bill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave when this question was asked previously, except to say that the figures published are wrong; the exact figures are those given by the minister to the committee yesterday when he stated that the total would be under $2 million.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Prime Minister.

May I ask him whether the negotiations are continuing with Quebec and whether he can assure us that he will be shortly in a position to tell us who will foot the bill?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has nothing to worry about; it will come one of these days.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF AIR SERVICES TRAINING SCHOOL AT CLINTON

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can he say whether or not his department and the Department of Transport have come to an agreement regarding the establishment of a joint air services training school and whether that school might be located at Clinton? We were promised an answer on this matter by February 1. Has he an answer today?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Not as yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKinley: Would the minister speed up the negotiations and, if this base is not going to be used for this purpose, make it available to somebody else who might use it?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ACCIDENT IN FRASER CANYON RESULTING IN LOSS OF LIVES

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in connection with the very regrettable recent accident on the Canadian National Railways line in Fraser Canyon in which three lives were lost. Is this accident being thoroughly investigated by his department, and will the minister impress upon the CNR the desirability of increasing its safety and warning measures so that such accidents will not occur again?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no way of knowing whether or not there is a relationship between the accident and the safety measures undertaken by the CNR. I can tell the hon. member that the usual thorough investigation is under way into this regrettable accident, and as soon as the report is available I will make it public.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. When he is investigating will be ascertain whether or not slide detectors were evident, and at the same time will he advise the commission looking into railway mishaps generally to include this accident on their agenda?

TRADE

POSSIBLE SALE OF POTASH TO CHINA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of recent press reports regarding a possible sale of Canadian potash to China, can the minister say whether or not he has had any discussions with Premier Thatcher of Saskatchewan regarding such a sale, and whether any negotiations are now under way with China?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that subject was raised at the time of the recent meeting between the two governments, and I am inquiring into it now. It is not only a question of need; it is also a question of desire to buy and capacity to pay.

YOUTH

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAM

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of citizenship, but in his absence will direct it to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that latest government estimates indicate that 1,350,000 students will be looking for jobs this summer, and that at least one university, the University of Manitoba, reports that only 15 per cent are guaranteed jobs whereas at this time last year 40 per cent were sure of finding work, when will the government be announcing the details of its youth program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peddle: Will the Prime Minister expedite the decision since already the delay has caused postponement of a national conference on youth problems scheduled for later this month but now put off until mid-March?

HIRING OF ALEXIA ALEXANDROVICH BANDY BY BRANCH—SECURITY CLEARANCE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to direct this question to the Secretary of State or to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada for the last two days but since both are not in the House today may I direct it to the Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware of the hiring of Alex Bandy by the citizenship branch of the Department of the Secretary of State. Has the Prime Minister requested the Solicitor General or the RCMP to make a security check on Alex Bandy and, if so, has he been given a security clearance by the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know the answer, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry the hon. member has not been able to catch your eye. Maybe he can catch the eye of television when he goes out of the chamber.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that on December 14, 1970, as reported in Hansard, the Prime Minister indicated that pursuant to the report of the Royal Commission on Security a policy regarding a security review board as recommended has been established but not implemented, can the Prime Minister indicate when this policy will be announced and at what time we will be able to debate the report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I confess that I did not hear everything that was contained in the question. There seemed to be a fair amount of noise opposite. I believe the question has to do with an announcement concerning a security review board. The question is under active consideration and I hope that we shall be able to make an announcement in the not too distant future.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

TYPE OF QUESTIONS ON FORM TO BE FILLED IN BY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the National Harbours Board at Vancouver is requiring its employees to fill in a federal government form which includes questions that, in my view, are contrary to the intent of the Criminal Records Act. They have to do with whether the employee has ever been convicted of an offence or dismissed, whether he has ever visited a communist zone country in the past 26 years and what is his nickname. Would the minister look into this situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question and for having supplied me with a copy of the questionnaire. I have asked the National Harbours Board for an explanation. I have also checked to determine whether the questions being asked are permissible or whether they should be changed. I will give the answer as soon as I obtain a reply from the National Harbours Board.

POSSIBLE SALE OF McCLELLAND AND STEWART PUBLISHING FIRM TO FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who has a special responsibility in this area, if he has anything to report to the House and the country regarding the announced sale of the publishing firm of McClelland and Stewart?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what specific responsibility that question refers. I have no announcement to make, although I understand that one of my colleagues has.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I address that same question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gather that the hon. member for St. John's East was about to redirect his question in the way that the hon. member for Selkirk has attempted to do by a supplementary question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was rising to his feet to respond to the question.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have done what I said I would do yesterday, and that is to obtain as much information as I could. First, my officials have been in touch with Mr. McClelland and he has confirmed that the company is for sale, that a sale to foreign interests is not contemplated and is unlikely, and that if it should ever be contemplated he would be in touch with me first. Secondly, the interdepartmental committee has met on a number of occasions and they have divided the work of investigation. The Secretary of State is preparing a policy on book publication which might very well include the establishment of a Canadian publishing development corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: An announcement to that effect will be made in due course in the proper way. In the meantime the Secretary of State is to meet on March 1 and March 2 with publishers. This was planned some time ago. I also intend to attend that meeting to demonstrate that it is both a cultural and an economic problem. Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, in my department officials are working to step up activities in the export field. We have commissioned Dr. W. H. Clarke, Vice-president of Clarke Irwin Limited, to provide us with some immediate short-term assistance in this field. We are increasing our participation in trade fairs abroad and we are considering the feasibility of establishing Canadian book centres abroad. Fourthly, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I perhaps can assume that the "fourthly" was also "lastly". I am sure the minister will be given an opportunity to give us the "fourthly" by way of a supplementary question that I gather the hon. member for St. John's East wishes to ask.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question, hopefully, will give the minister a chance to give us his "fourthly". Does the minister's answer refer to the interdepartmental study which he alluded to yesterday? If not, would he now undertake to bring us up to date on that subject, as he did in the House during his reply yesterday?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the study which I have already tabled is the basis of the assessment of the situation which has been going on. Decisions are developing from that basis. Fourthly, the Minister of National Revenue, with whom I have consulted, also assures me that this aspect of book publication is part of his study of foreign investment in Canada.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he is also studying the possibility of assisting Canadian publishers in establishing a book publishing firm in the United States to give them access to that market?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I contacted the Secretary of State in Chicoutimi this morning, and what I have said is the only thing I have been authorized to say.

PROVISION OF ADEQUATE TREATMENT FACILITIES IN CHURCHILL FOREST INDUSTRIES PROJECT— MEETING WITH MANITOBA MINISTER

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In answering a question on January 27 the minister indicated his concern about inadequate pollution facilities at the Churchill Forest Industries project at The Pas, Manitoba, and mentioned that he would be meeting with the appropriate Manitoba minister during the following week. Has the minister had that meeting with the Manitoba minister?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I have had a long telephone discussion with Hon. René Toupin and his advisers. There has also been some correspondence exchanged on this subject. We have advised him of the new standards which we are developing jointly with the provinces and which would apply to the new kraft mill in northern Manitoba.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of the very strong concern among many of the wildlife authorities in the province of Manitoba regarding what they consider to be poor liaison between the federal government and the Manitoba provincial government on this matter?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, discussions have been held between officials of my department and the officials of several departments in Manitoba concerning pollution in the northern part of the province.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REVIEW OF INCENTIVE GRANTS PROGRAM IN LIGHT OF CRITICISM

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the concerns which have been expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and others about regional development incentive grants, including such things as two grants being made to one operation where there is simply a fence running down the middle of the plant, grants being made to marginal operations and grants being made to operations which have already been started, as well as the concerns about the extent of grants to foreign concerns, is any review being made of this program with a view to taking into account these concerns?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are continuously, especially through the Treasury Board, attempting to assess the value of our various programs. If the hon. member has any particular details that he wants to communicate to the minister responsible, I am sure his information would be welcome.

PROPOSED GRANT FOR PULP MILL IN MEADOW LAKE AREA

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the visit by the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet to Saskatchewan last weekend, is the Prime Minister in a position to inform the House whether any progress has been made with regard to a grant for a pulp mill in the Meadow Lake area in view of statements made by the Premier of Saskatchewan to that effect yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was to be in Meadow Lake and that he discussed this matter with members of Mr. Thatcher's cabinet, but I am not in a position to say if and when an announcement will be made on his behalf.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MAINTENANCE OF ESSENTIAL DEFENCE CAPABILITIES IN THE EVENT OF BREAKDOWN IN LABOUR NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the very serious differences that have arisen in the last few days in negotiations between defence employees and the Crown—and pray God that the negotiations do not break down—could the minister indicate what plans he has to maintain essential defence capabilities, including the search and rescue capability, on the east coast, in the event of a serious breakdown in labour negotiations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question is hypothetical.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of National Defence give some assurance to the House and to Canadians generally that he will not permit a serious breakdown in labour negotiations that would affect our defence capabilities?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. member should know, these negotiations come under the responsibility of my colleague the President of the Treasury Board. I am following them with active interest, but of course the responsibility is that of my colleague.

FUTURE USE OF MEAFORD TANK RANGE

Mr. Percy V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Now that military operations at the Meaford tank range have been terminated, can the minister tell the House what plans he may have for the future use of this property or for its disposal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): As a result of the examination of the usefulness of properties in western Ontario for military purposes it is not entirely impossible that the Meaford Range, instead of being phased out, may continue to be used as a range. As the hon. member knows, we have a severe problem anyway because of the large quantity of unexploded ammunition on this site.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE NATIONALIZATION OF ALCAN PLANT BY GOVERNMENT OF GUYANA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I wish to direct my question to the taciturn Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns an important possible take-over. Is he in a position to advise the House and the country of any new developments with reference to the seemingly imminent nationalization by the government of Guyana of the important Alcan establishment there?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. We are following the discussions between the government of Guyana and the Canadian company very closely but I am not in the position to say anything on the subject today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WATER RESOURCES

ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS OF BENNETT DAM ON PEACE RIVER DELTA—EXTENT OF FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN INQUIRY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Recently the minister's office announced that the federal government would participate in an inquiry into the ecological consequences of the Bennett Dam on the Peace River Delta. Can the minister tell us whether this inquiry is the consequence of a federal initiative or whether the federal participation was in response to an invitation from the government of Alberta? Just what is the motivation of the federal participation and to what extent will it go?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The motivation is both federal and provincial. Both Saskatchewan and Alberta are concerned about this problem, as the hon. member knows. A task force has been established, the chairman has been appointed, and the force is now at work on the problem.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it within the terms of reference of the federal representatives to pursue inquiries to establish the human responsibility or the degree of human responsibility for the tragic situation affecting the Peace River Delta?

[Later:]

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry a few moments ago. Will the report of the task force to which he referred be made public, and when may the report be expected?

Mr. Davis: The report of the task force will be made public. Its terms of reference include a deadline which will be in the fall of 1971, in other words, late this year.

INDUSTRY

TIRES—CHANGES IN TARIFF STRUCTURE—EFFECTS ON COST OF PRODUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the question I asked him yesterday about the removal of tariffs on a portion of the production of tires in Canada. Has any study been undertaken of the effect the removal of the tariff will have on the cost of production and on the level of employment in the rubber industry? If such a study has been made, can the minister make the results available?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not know whether there is a thing called a study in 20 pages, bound, and that sort of thing, but I know my department is extremely well informed on this subject. I have confirmed to the hon. member and others on a number of occasions that discussions are going on between the department and the various companies in the tire industry in Canada with regard to a "tire plan". I am not in a position now to say what classes and levels of tire imports might be permitted free entry, and so on. It would be premature to do so at this stage.

Mr. Saltsman: In the absence of a formal study, will the minister assure the House he will carefully consider the effects of this proposed change in view of the high level of unemployment in Canada, and that he will not take any action which would tend to increase that level?

Mr. Pepin: That is the purpose of this exercise. The purpose is to rationalize the industry in order to strengthen it, to confirm the jobs that it provides and possibly, to increase their numbers.

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL PRESS COUNCIL

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since Quebec is apparently going ahead with its plan to establish a press council, and since there is still some affection left between the press of Canada and the Prime Minister, can the right hon. gentleman say whether it is intended adopt the Davey Report recommendation and establish a national press council soon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not heard of anything like that.

LOAN TO PESTALOZZI COLLEGE—TYPE OF CONTROL TO BE EXERCISED BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): May I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Is Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation supervising and controlling the situation with respect to Pestalozzi College in Ottawa better than it did in the case of Rochdale College in Toronto? I understand a $6 million loan is being made to this college.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I would hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ryan: Will the objects of Pestalozzi be different and will the management be different from the type of management at Rochdale?

PENITENTIARIES

SUICIDE RATE—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): May I address a question to the Solicitor General? Having regard to the extremely high suicide rate in Canada's federal penitentiaries, 23 cases since September and 80 attempts which failed, when does the minister expect to make a statement on this very important subject so that the present trend may be reversed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is not by making statements that we will solve this problem. This is an extremely complex matter, and one must consider, in our society, that the suicide rate is increasing more and more. This is obviously not an excuse that could justify the increase of the number of suicides in penitentiaries. Furthermore, statistics indicate that 50 per cent of the people who have committed suicide over the past 12 years have done so while undergoing psychiatric treatment, and during their first year of detention. In fact, we are conducting investigations on this. We do want an improvement, and the best way to achieve this would be to make more personnel available to the inmates—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the minister should be making a statement at the instigation of an hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Would the minister also examine the reasons for the high prison population in Canada—80 for every 100,000 persons compared with 60 in Sweden and 21 in Holland?

TRANSPORT

OPERATION OF NEW DIGBY-SAINT JOHN FERRY PRIOR TO COMPLETION OF DOCKS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I should like to ask whether the Minister of Transport has consulted with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with respect to the new Digby-Saint John ferry, and can he assure the House that the ferry will go into operation under temporary measures before the docks are completed in Saint John?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This was among the subjects I discussed in Saint John, New Brunswick, on Monday. Since my return I have consulted with my colleague the Minister of Public Works. It is the intention of both my colleague and myself to speed up the work and also to make some kind of temporary arrangement so that the schedule can begin on time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST BY SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER FOR INVESTIGATION OF FREIGHT RATES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question. Will the minister accede to the request made last week by the Premier of Saskatchewan for an investigation into the freight rates in that province by appointing a royal commission to investigate freight rate levels?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am not certain as to the supplementary nature of that question. Mr. Thatcher has asked for a lot of things but so far he has not asked for a ferry for Saskatchewan. On the basic subject, we did make considerable progress in discussions with regard to freight rates in western Canada. Whether the route of a royal commission is the most logical or not, I am not certain at this stage in the discussions. There appears to be general agreement that the most productive route at this time might be to examine the rates for individual commodities and isolate those which are generating the most difficulty. This is the route I expect we will follow.

DISCUSSION OF CLEAN AIR BILL WITH PROVINCES BEFORE INTRODUCTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Did the minister or anyone in his department discuss the contents of the clean air bill with all the provinces before it was introduced into the House. If not, which provinces were not consulted?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the proposed clean air legislation has been discussed in principle and now in terms of a published bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the minister. The hon. member must realize that this is the first order of business today, and perhaps that is the time to ask this kind of question. We should not anticipate the order.

DOCKYARD EMPLOYEES' WAGE DISPUTE—INTERVENTION OF LABOUR RELATIONS SPECIALIST

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Since negotiations have broken down at the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt and since the Treasury Board's offer actually increases the regional disparity from 85 cents to $1.15 an hour for the work involved, would the Minister of National Defence now intervene and ask for an industrial specialist to be immediately assigned?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have already pointed out that the negotiations are under the jurisdiction of my colleague the President of the Treasury Board. I follow them with great interest but am not directly participating.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Skoberg: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgency of the question and since there is a strike in Halifax at the moment, may I direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can do so with unanimous consent of the House. I might say that I stretched a point in allowing him to ask his question when the question period was ending. I must now ask whether the House gives unanimous consent.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member cannot ask his supplementary. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CLEAN AIR ACT

MEASURE RELATING TO AMBIENT AIR QUALITY AND CONTROL OF POLLUTION

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry) moved that Bill C-224, relating to ambient air quality and to the control of air pollution, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure today in introducing the second reading of Bill C-224, an act relating to ambient air quality and to the control of air pollution in Canada. The short title of the bill is the Clean Air Act. It deals with the quality of our Canadian atmosphere. It deals with the setting up of a number of monitoring stations across the country, research into air pollution, arrangements for the setting up of air pollution abatement projects, and the enforcement of air quality emission standards from coast to coast and from the international boundary line to the high Arctic.

There are frequent references in this new clean air bill to national air quality objectives, national air quality guidelines, and national air quality emission standards. The word "national" turns up again and again. This is deliberate. We want our clean air regulations to be truly national in scope. We must insist on their enforcement in every province in Canada as well as in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. These regulations dealing with air quality objectives, air quality guidelines and air quality emission standards will, therefore, be truly national in scope. They will not be regional; they will not be provincial; they will not be local. They will be Canada-wide in their extent; they will be Canada-wide in their application.

I stress this point because a number of members opposite have expressed some scepticism. They have accused the government of taking a fragmentary approach to pollution abatement in Canada. I have denied this. I have denied it repeatedly in this House. I can now point to numerous clauses in our new clean air bill to prove my point.

As I said last week during the debate on the government organization bill, this government is opposed to the creation of pollution havens in this country. We want industry—and particularly new industry—to meet truly national standards. We want these industries to design their plants and run their operations in such a way as to meet national norms. We want them to meet our national standards at all times. We want to prevent big industry from exploiting the economic weaknesses in some parts of the country. We want to stop pollution havens from being created in the less fortunate and less affluent parts of our nation.

I have already used several terms which require further definition. I mentioned national air quality objectives, national air quality emission guidelines and national air quality emission standards. I should like now to say what I mean when I use the words "objectives", "guidelines" and "standards", and to do so before I go on to discuss some of the major powers and institutions referred to in this bill.

Air quality objectives relate to the great outdoors. These objectives are standards writ large. They are—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the minister but I understand that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni wishes to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Some of us are really quite interested in what the minister is saying. I am wondering whether he could be given the courtesy of a less noisy background in this chamber.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I began by saying that air quality objectives relate to the great outdoors. These objectives are standards writ large. They are standards applied to large volumes of air over large areas of Canada. When we talk about objectives we are talking about ambient air. We are talking about large quantities of air. We are talking about the quality of air in general. We are talking about air in which there may be a number of pollutants. These may be widely dispersed. They will be dispersed as they are in the air we breathe, whether it be downtown in a major city like Toronto or out on a mountain peak in the Rockies.

Air quality objectives, then, relate to the big air and to the average air sample in a sizeable area, zone or region. Objectives, to repeat, relate to ambient air or air in general. They do not relate to particular points of emission—points of emission such as the top of a smokestack or the jet pipe of an aircraft taking off from Malton airport near Toronto.

Air quality emission standards do relate to points of emission. Standards, in other words, apply at the source of the pollution itself. They are measured at the outlet point. They are measured at the top of a smoke stack or at the tail end of a jet pipe of a DC-8. So standards are definite as to location. They nail down the quality of the effluent at its source. They are more precise. They are enforceable by regulation.

I have left the word "guidelines" to the end. Guidelines are standards of a sort. They also apply at the point of emission, at the top of a smoke stack or at the end of the jet pipe of a DC-8. But they are not enforceable. They are recommended standards. They are standards that we should like to see enforced. They are standards which may well be enforced in the future. They are a guide to future action. They are an indication that, sooner or later, we may be declaring these same guidelines to be standards and enforcing them at the source of the pollution itself.

• (12:00 noon)

I referred earlier to air monitoring. Bill C-224 enables the federal government, to quote the bill, "to establish, operate and maintain a system of air pollution monitoring stations throughout Canada". It will permit the federal government, in other words, to flesh out our present national air sampling network. Federal and provincial efforts in this direction will be further integrated and the data flowing from this improved network will give us a comprehensive picture of the incidence of air pollution, not only in urban centres, but also in the great Canadian outdoors. This data from the air monitoring network will be used not only for spot purposes in particular locations, but also to give us a better idea of long term trends. We will be able to forecast what is likely to happen over a period of time. We will be able to trace the effectiveness of special abatement programs aimed at improving the quality of the ambient air in our big and great outdoors.

Referring again to our proposed air quality objectives—the objectives which apply to the big air outdoors—I should like to say this: these objectives will apply to individual pollutants. Take sulphur dioxide, for example; we will have uniform ambient air quality objectives established for the entire country. These objectives will name the concentrations in terms of hard numbers, indicating what is desirable, what is acceptable and what is tolerable in this country. These objectives will be developed using all the scientific data we can gather from domestic sources and from other countries. We already have a considerable expertise of our own. By using all this data and all this expertise in respect of sulphur dioxide, for example, we will come up with a framework of air quality objectives regarding one pollutant after another.

The framework to which I refer is described in a position paper on air pollution which I will shortly be distributing to hon. members opposite, if I have not already done so. It will be made available in quantity to members of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Fisheries and Forestry which, I hope, will be reviewing Bill C-224 on a clause by clause basis. Our framework for national air quality objectives postulates three ranges; they are "desirable", "acceptable" and "tolerable". The desirable band of the range describes the lowest range of concentration of a pollutant which is desirable in this country. The next describes a middle range or less desirable range of concentration of a pollutant. This is the acceptable range. Finally, there is the tolerable range which reports the highest concentration tolerable in this country. To go beyond the tolerable range, by definition, gets us into the intolerable. Once a situation becomes intolerable, in so far as an individual pollutant in this country is concerned, all our resources national, provincial and local, must be brought to bear on the cause of the problem. These resources must be brought to bear to correct a situation which exists.

These three broad bands of ranges, in rising degrees of concentration in a community, will be worked out for each pollutant, and specific mixtures of various pollutants. They will deal with average concentrations of these pollutants in the big air outside. They will deal also with long and short-term considerations. The lower limit of the desirable range will correspond to the normal background concentration, or detectability of a pollutant. The upper limit of the tolerable range is the maximum tolerable concentration of the selected pollutant, and whenever and wherever it is experienced this would place an unacceptable or intolerable burden on the people of Canada.

Our long term national goal is to have ambient air in all parts of Canada falling within the desirable or lowest range. This will take many years to accomplish. It, therefore, represents a long term goal for many parts of Canada. It forms a sound basis for an anti-degradation policy for the unpolluted parts of Canada. It clearly indicates the long term target for our more heavily built up and industrialized areas of the country.

The use of these three ranges, in rising degrees of concentration from desirable through acceptable, and through acceptable to tolerable, fits in with our need to establish priorities in tackling the problem of air pollution. The areas which show the highest concentrations are the first to attract our attention and concern. The areas in which deterioration is continuing to take place must also be given high priority. Of course, we will be publishing much of this information on a day-to-day or a month-to-month basis so the Canadian public will also have an idea of what is going on in this regard.

Our surveillance programs will also be linked to these ranges. The extent and sophistication of our surveillance will increase as the pollution levels increase from the desirable through the acceptable and to the highest or tolerable range. In this range, the surveillance will be designed not only to identify time trends, but also to locate the major sources of pollution as well.

Control standards and methods of enforcement pose other problems. Strategies will have to be developed for each stage of production; that is to say, for the raw material stage, the actual processing stage and the waste dispersal stage for each industry. Control at the raw material or processing stages in industry is usually most effective. These controls are usually more effective because they are more easily and readily administered, and also go to the source of the pollutant. It is further envisaged that, in addition to setting formal control standards, that is to say standards at the chimney top or at the outlet of a jet pipe, all three levels of government will attempt to convince industry to follow the practice of using the best available technology approach. This will apply with particular force to new installations, new plants and new additions of machinery and equipment used by industry and by government in this country.

I have been talking so far as though the main polluters were industrial plants and government institutions. The Canadian public is also a major offender. Take our use of the automobile, for example. We will have to bear down on regulations in respect of engines that are installed and the fuel they use. We will have to get the lead out, so to speak. We will have to move in on the various kinds of fuel which we as individual Canadians burn. We can do this by controlling the quality of the fuel at its source. We will have to get the lead out of our gasolines, and we can do this by using the new sections of the new clean air act which focus on fuel of all kinds.

It is possible for us to decree at the federal level what kinds of fuel are manufactured in Canada as well as the design of fuel burners. We can control fuel and fuel-using engines at the manufacturing or factory level. We can also stipulate that imports of fuels and imports of machines meet our new Canadian standards. Again, we can deal with this big air pollution problem at a relatively few points of manufacture and points of entry.

The bill we have before us today will provide us with yet another weapon to add to our arsenal of Canadian laws dealing with pollution of all kinds, air, water and soil. We already have the Canada Water Act, which was passed during the last session of Parliament. We have amended the federal Fisheries Act and we have put more teeth into the Canada Shipping Act. Our main thrust so far, however, has been directed towards the quality of water in this country. Now, we are turning to air in the belief that air pollution also poses a serious threat to our environment. While it is not as obvious as water pollution, it may be more insidious in many ways. It may well be a greater threat to human health than water pollution. It may also be more pervasive and more embracing than many of us think.

Let me give you an example. Let me focus on oil pollution for example. I am told that the amount of oil dumped or lost in the seas and oceans in the world amounts to around two million tons a year. Fifty million tons a year evaporate and are otherwise discharged into the atmosphere. In other words, we are pumping 25 times as much oil into the world's air mantle as we are into salt water. Much of the oil which goes up also comes down. Much of it comes down into the oceans themselves. Our experts tell me that at least ten million tons comes down in the seas around us. In other words, air transported oil is five times as effective in polluting our oceans as are the oil tanker spills and other kinds of spillage. This is a very round figure. It may be out by an order of magnitude. But it proves that air pollution is a serious matter. It also indicates that air pollution is a major source of our environmental difficulties, not only locally in our cities, but also at the far ends of the earth.

What I have said about oil applies equally to heavy metals. It applies, also, to the chlorinated bi-phenyls such as DDT and PCB's. No wonder our scientists are finding DDT in the flesh of penguins caught in the Antarctic. No wonder fish are showing high concentrations of lead in the waters off southern California.

As hon. members know, we have proceeded first in our attack on pollution in water. Canadians generally have recognized that the pollution of our rivers, lakes and ocean fronts needed action. The froth, the scum, the closed beaches, the dead fish, were there for all to see. But now they are becoming increasingly concerned with air pollution. They are beginning to notice the smog. They are beginning to look on smoke, not as an indication of industry in progress, but of inefficiency, slothfulness and a wilful disregard for the quality of life around us.

Most provinces, today, have water authorities. They have provincial departments concerned with water management. They have water pollution control boards and they have water commissions. Now, they are beginning to ask their pollution control boards to look at air as well. They are also beginning to develop their own clean air acts. It is appropriate, therefore, that we take the lead at the federal level; that we provide a basic framework within which the provinces, and the municipalities, can develop their own laws and their own local standards.

Knowing of their interest in, and their concern about, air pollution, I have visited all our provincial capitals in recent days. Without exception our provincial authorities, who are concerned with air pollution, have welcomed our federal initiative in respect of clean air. They have welcomed the idea of national ambient air quality objectives. They like the idea of national guidelines. They are prepared to accept national air quality commission standards set at the point of emission. All they ask is that they be consulted, that they have some say in the development of these particular objectives, guidelines and standards. I have given them that assurance. And, having been given that assurance, they have encouraged us to do all we can, not only to eliminate the worst examples of air pollution in this country, but also to project our own Canadian thinking on air quality to other countries and into the international sphere as well.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we are placing considerable reliance on our federal concern about human health in the clean air bill. Air pollution can strike directly at the health of human beings. Man has no choice but to accept the air he breathes. He has to breathe it whether it is polluted or not. By contrast, man can avoid polluted water. He can drink other things. He can process polluted water and make clean water fairly easily. But, in respect of air pollution, man is in the same vulnerable position as a fish in a polluted lake. He has to live with the pollution. He has to live with it and adjust to it as best he can.

Again, air moves. It moves from place to place, from region to region and from nation to nation. It sweeps across continents and oceans as well. It carries many foreign substances along with it and some anti-life substances. It carries them over great distances. If, by any chance, some of these pollutants get into the upper atmosphere they may stay there for years. Eventually, they can fall out again. But when they fall out again they may well land on another continent or end up in the oceans themselves. They may go indeed to the ends of the earth.

Air pollution presents us with yet another problem. It is sometimes difficult to pinpoint the sources of pollution itself. Changes in weather and in the direction of air currents make it difficult to put the finger on specific points of emission. They can only be identified over time. They can only be identified as a result of a great deal of research and as a result of a great deal of effort particularly at the national and even at the international level, and this costs money.

We know that the economic burden of air pollution is very high indeed. Our economists tell us it costs Canadians somewhere between $1 billion and $2 billion annually. If you add up health costs, building maintenance costs, corrosion costs and cleaning costs, you end up with a very impressive figure indeed. It amounts to several per cent of our gross national product. It is worth eliminating, not only in terms of human health and comfort, but also in terms of economic efficiency as well.

In developing the bill before you now, the government has been guided by certain principles. We recognize that the provinces have a direct responsibility in respect of air pollution. Considerable emphasis must therefore be placed on co-operation between the federal government and the provinces. This can be best accomplished by the federal government entering into formal agreements with the provinces for the purpose of designating air quality problem areas, for the development of special air control measures, and for the development of air quality enforcement procedures. There is also recognition of the need for direct federal action in the event of the failure of other levels of government to take the necessary corrective measures to control air pollution where such pollution affects or is likely to affect health and indeed life. We also see the need for national air quality objectives to serve both as long term goals and to prevent further deterioration of existing air quality.

In drafting the legislation we have come to grips with the basic problems involved in trying to protect the quality of air. I will now try to briefly describe some of these problems. We need to know more about the causes and effects of air pollution and the bill will allow us to work closely with the groups within Canada and in other countries that are involved in this vital area. I should note the valuable work done by the Department of National Health and Welfare—which laid much of the groundwork for Bill C-224—by the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and others, was basic to the development of this legislation.

From these departments, and as a result of close co-operation with other segments of our scientific community in Canada, we have begun to close the gaps in our scientific knowledge about the effects of pollution on various receptors—man, vegetation, wildlife and so on. As our technology advances and as society continues to inject enormous quantities of waste into the air, soil and water environment we must be ever more alert to potential hazards. We must therefore, ensure that we are before the fact in respect of our research. We must anticipate. We must make sure we are heading off emergency situations and not dealing with them after they occur.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we believe that the public's concern, combined with industry's new awareness of its responsibilities, will lead to enthusiastic compliance with the major provisions in this bill. But we must have methods to ensure its compliance. Thus, there are inspection provisions and substantial fines incorporated in the text of Bill C-224 as well. If the bill stopped there, I think we could say that it was a good piece of legislation, but one essential element would be missing. I do not believe that this or any other government has the right to impose pollution controls on industry and the ordinary citizen unless it is prepared to live by the same rules. Bill C-224 makes clear this government's intention to put its own house in order, to make sure that federal establishments meet our national standards and exceed them by a considerable margin wherever possible.

This brief outline of the provisions of the bill will be expanded when the bill comes before the standing committee. I hope that at that time a number of our officials will be available, especially those who have not only helped to develop the text of this act but who have also had considerable experience working with our provinces, municipalities and industries over the years.

In my opening remarks on the new government organization bill recently, I stressed the interdependence of life forms on this planet. I said that there was little sense in shutting off air pollution emissions from a factory stack, only to find that they were being dumped into the river or plowed into the soil. Within our new department, whatever its name may be, we will be taking an over-all approach to pollution. We will have the technical expertise to deal with it in all its forms.

In summary, I believe that our main problem is to deal with man and his habits, essentially with man's greed for material gain. This is really at the root of our environmental problem. Psychologists tell us that man has a hierarchy of needs ranging upward from those associated with basic survival, through security needs and social needs, eventually to recreational needs. It is ironic that our interest in air pollution control begins at the top of the scale, essentially with a concern by the general public for aesthetics, people who can no longer enjoy the view of Mount Royal from Sherbrooke Street or Grouse Mountain from Hastings Street in Vancouver. But now our concern is related to our most basic needs.

This bill focusses more directly on human health and indeed survival. The bill will provide us with the framework and the mechanism to carry out this fight for our survival. It warrants the support of all Canadians, and it certainly warrants the support of members from all corners of the House. I hope we can clear second reading of the bill this afternoon and get on to the detailed committee stage of the bill in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry next week.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I welcome the speech which was delivered by the minister in the House, a copy of which was sent to us by the officials of the department. I want to say at the outset, so that I will be understood immediately, that members of this party accept the principles and objectives stated in the bill. I will have some questions to raise to which I hope we will receive answers, perhaps on second reading. Possibly we will be able to receive more answers in the committee. However, we do accept the broad principles, or at least the objectives, which the government is trying to achieve through the bill before us.

One thing that concerns me is that the bill was introduced in the House and given first reading on February 9. Today is February 19, so exactly 10 days have elapsed since the introduction of the bill. This means that the opposition members and the public have been given only a few days to examine the bill and to form an opinion on it. This is typical of this government which talks about participatory democracy and yet allows only 10 days to investigate such an important subject and to consult with the provinces and municipalities. Perhaps this government has had a chance to consult with the other levels of government. Certainly, they have had time to do this since 1967 when the necessity for a clean air act was first made obvious.

But so far as members of the opposition and of the general public are concerned, we have only had 10 days to look at the proposed legislation and to analyse it objectively. We do not know what the feelings of the city of Montreal are with regard to the bill. Only one editorial has appeared on this subject. I have looked through all the newspapers in the reading room and that is all I have been able to find. As I said, we have been waiting for this type of legislation for three years, and now we are only given 10 days to examine it. This only points to the fact that the government does not have a plan for the legislation they propose to put forward this year. This is an obvious deduction from the fact that three or four bills have been placed before the House only a week after their introduction. I object to that practice very strongly.

We should have been given much more time to study this measure. If the government had been really anxious to introduce a bill to cope with this problem, they could have introduced it last September because they have had three years during which to prepare this legislation. Today, it is urgent that a clean air bill be implemented. However, let me remind the House that we have been pressing for it for three years, and now we are given only one week in which to prepare our comments on it. It is a darn shame that the government has not planned its legislative program in a much better fashion, so that we could have been given the opportunity to criticize this or any other type of legislation objectively.

Another thing to which I object is that, according to the cover of Bill C-224, the minister who introduced the bill was the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis). Inside the bill, however, we find that "the minister" means the minister of the environment. There is no such man as the minister of the environment. I almost raised this as a point of order at the beginning of the debate, but I did not do so because I suspected that Mr. Speaker had a look at the bill and, therefore, I thought I might be wasting the time of the House. But I wish to point out, if only for my own satisfaction, that the minister of the environment has not yet been created. The government organization bill has not yet been passed. This points out the lack of planning of this government with respect to its legislative program.

There was a public relations announcement with respect to the establishment of the new department in which it was mentioned that the minister of the environment would be introducing the clean air bill. However, there is no such thing as the department of the environment at present. Perhaps the time to change the wording will be when the bill is before the committee, but I point this out merely to show that the minister takes everything for granted. The government takes it for granted that the government organization bill will be passed. The government and the Minister are so sure they are not going to accept any amendments that they are able to say, "Even though the department is not established as yet, we will mention it in this bill". At this moment the department of the environment is not established. If it is not, then the government has no right to tell us that it will not accept any amendments with respect to the government organization bill, and it has no right to include the name of the new department in this bill.

Mr. Pepin: Today you are against planning, another day you say, "They don't plan." You don't know where you are going.

Mr. Comeau: You are absolutely right, Mr. Minister, when you say you don't plan. A member only needs to look at the Order Paper to see what is there. There may be ten pieces of legislation that have to be introduced. This is one that has been coming for a long time. It just points out the arrogance of the government and the contempt it has for Parliament. Ministers don't give a darn about debate on the government organization bill. They say, "It is going to pass. If it passes next year that will be all right, but we are not going to accept any amendments."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Davis: May I ask the hon. member a question. Is he aware of the fact that if the government organization bill does not pass, or if it has not passed in time, it will be imperative to change the name to "Fisheries and Forestry"? This presumably would be done in the standing committee, and I assume the member would have an opportunity to attend that committee and discuss every clause in the bill.

Mr. Comeau: But that is what I was saying. We hope the members of the committee will have an opportunity to change the name. That is why I did not raise a point of order at the outset. But I know very well, as do other hon. members, that the government will not change it anyway.

Mr. Davis: But it will have to.

Mr. Comeau: That is the way it operates. But do we have any assurance that this bill will not be completed before the reorganization bill is passed? The way the organization bill is moving at the moment it does not look as though it will get an easy third reading.

However, Mr. Speaker, this bill incorporates seven main ideas. It proposes to establish, operate and maintain a system of air pollution monitoring stations throughout Canada. As I understand it, data obtained from these monitoring stations would be compiled and published on a regular basis. At present there are 25 monitoring stations across the country covering all provinces except Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. What will happen with respect to those two provinces? There is nothing in the bill which says that additional stations will be built in them.

The minister dealt at length with the question of national standards, and started off by saying that the word "national" appears in several places throughout the legislation. It is true that it does, but what does it say? The bill gives authority to set national air quality objectives, not standards, and to set national emission standards where there is significant danger to health, or where international agreements on air pollution control are involved. It also gives authority to set national guidelines. So, the word "national" appears many times but there seems to be confusion, and there certainly is confusion in my mind. Are there real national standards, or what is all this talk about guidelines and objectives?

As I understand the bill, national emission standards may be set if emissions constitute a significant danger to human health or violate international agreements into which Canada has entered. I shall deal with the problem of international agreements later. Not long ago an IJC report was filed dealing with this matter. These standards will specify the amount of any pollutant allowed from any stationary source or coming from any federal premises.

As I understand it the federal government may also publish national emission guidelines, and these will be different from standards because they will be enforced through persuasion rather than by law. As I understand it, guidelines will be used in those provinces which do not conclude special agreements with Ottawa. These are questions that the minister will have to answer in the committee. If Ottawa does not have special agreements with the provinces, then the standards will certainly not be national.

When we are discussing these things in the committee we can quote the very tough terms the Minister used within the past year or so, and even recently in this House as recorded at page 2830 of Hansard:

—why run the risk of losing everything when uniform national standards can provide us with all the protection we need?

He has talked in that way about air and water. But now, we find that according to this bill that attitude depends on agreements with the provinces.

Mr. Davis: That is not true.

Mr. Comeau: That might not be true, and if it is not then I can be corrected in committee. The parliamentary secretary can talk for himself. I am just raising these questions because there has not been enough time to examine the bill thoroughly. We have had only ten days.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Another of the seven main points deals with the right to set emission standards in the case of federal works. This is good. First of all, we must set an example before trying to impose on others things we are not willing to do ourselves. I mentioned at one point the matter of agreements between the provinces. I think the minister dealt with this when introducing the bill. We have read what he intends to do in that regard. The sixth point has to do with inspectors, analysts and so on. As I understand the bill, an inspector may enter premises emitting air pollutants and take samples. After that, I suspect he will make a report and see that the law is enforced. The other point I wish to deal with in general at this time is this. The public must be assured that their rights are protected.

Having alluded to all these points, may I now return to the question of national standards, or emission standards as they are called, or to the guidelines which are discussed throughout the bill. So far as I can see, nothing in this bill tells us what these guidelines or standards are. They have not yet been established and there is no information as to when they will be established. Therefore, this bill cannot be implemented until the guidelines or so-called national standards are set out. This omission is typical of the government. When dealing with the question of oil pollution under the Canada Shipping Act, it did the same sort of thing. This happened three of four months ago. The government said to shipowners that their ships could not enter Canadian waters until a federal pollution inspector had inspected the ship. However, the owners do not know what standards the ships must meet if they are to operate in Canada under the law.

The same sort of thinking applies to these so-called national standards and guidelines. The regulations have not yet been promulgated and this bill cannot be implemented until that has been done. I hope that when the minister first appears before the committee he will say to us, "Look here, these are the types of regulations that we shall be issuing." Unless those regulations are established, we are wasting our time here. Unless those regulations are established, the people will be able to say that the government is introducing this legislation for political show, to make people believe that it wants to clean up the air. Without regulations the legislation is meaningless. I ask, in the absence of regulations how is an inspector to know whether sources of potential pollution are meeting national standards? How is he to know what those standards are, when the criterion for those standards has not yet been established? How is an inspector to judge these matters until these regulations are promulgated?

The bill relies solely on agreements with the provinces. Before any positive action can be taken, there must be agreement. This part has been included in the bill in good faith, as I understand. It is hoped that there will be agreement with the provinces. I should be interested to see what initiatives the government will take to make sure that every province has comparable legislation or is willing to accept the provisions of the present legislation. That is why I say that more than one week is necessary for the study of this matter if we are to discover from the provinces whether they are able to accept what is in the bill or whether there is to be any comparable provincial legislation.

I return to the question of standards. Although the bill speaks of what the minister calls national standards, these standards in reality are a little bit of window dressing. Inasmuch as those standards can be applied to federal works undertaken by business, they can be called national standards, I suppose. But they can only be enforced in the provinces if the provinces agree. If the province concerned agrees to the standards, everything is fine. However, if the province does not agree to accept these so-called national standards, then there is absolutely nothing that the federal government can do to implement those standards in the province in question.

Mr. Davis: That is not correct.

Mr. Comeau: If that is not correct, I hope that the minister will explain these matters in committee; because that is how it appears to me.

Mr. Aiken: Challenge the minister.

Mr. Comeau: This is my interpretation. I challenge the minister to tell us where the Bill makes provision for this. I see the parliamentary secretary is making a note to tell us in his reply where the bill provides for the establishment of national air quality standards.

Mr. Aiken: It does not.

Mr. Comeau: Where in this bill is there language setting out national air quality standards?

Mr. Aiken: It is not in the bill.

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) says that it is not there. I have not seen it.

Mr. Aiken: And the minister said twice that it is in there.

Mr. Comeau: He has lots of explaining to do. He knows darn well that that language is not in the bill. The word "national" appears in lots of places; the bill is polluted with that.

Mr. Corbin: We will give the hon. member another ten days.

Mr. Comeau: It appears that everything is based on agreement with the provinces.

Mr. Davis: That is not correct.

Mr. Comeau: The minister says that is not correct. I repeat the challenge I gave to him when he was talking to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) and trying to obtain information. When he replies at the end of the second reading debate, I challenge him to point out where in this bill there is provision for the establishment of national air quality standards. I submit that that provision is not in the bill.

Mr. Davis: Does the hon. member want the page?

Mr. Comeau: The minister must look at the bill again. Perhaps he has not had the time to examine the bill, because we have spent very little time on this matter.

Mr. Davis: Perhaps the hon. member ought to read the bill.

Mr. Comeau: May I turn to another point? There will be difficulty in obtaining convictions, and the penalty on conviction is a fine only, so far as I can see. I wonder whether fines will mean very much to industries that have been convicted. Is it contemplated, for example, that jail sentences will be meted out in certain circumstances? Perhaps we ought to discuss that in committee. Also, the legislation makes no provision for citizens to sue air polluters or for individuals to sue the government or to sue inspectors who have failed to do their job. The Ottawa Citizen of February 1, 1971 reports an interview with the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Near the end, the article reads in part:

> Mr. Davis said the question of citizens' pollution rights was under consideration.
> 'We're hoping to come forward with a piece of legislation within 12 months which will deal with this respect to all kinds of pollution within federal jurisdiction,' he said.

Apparently, therefore, Bill C-224 is not the total legislation that we can expect with regard to air pollution. That is what the article means. If the government is not ready to proceed with legislation in this area, why does it not wait until it is ready? Before the establishment of these objectives or initial standards no public hearings are to be ordered, if I understand the bill correctly. All these things will have to be taken into consideration and I hope some answers will be forthcoming from the minister with respect to provincial agreements and the other points I have raised.

• (12:50 p.m.)

An interesting editorial appeared in the Montreal Gazette of February 15. The writer had been in a position to study the bill for four days. It reads:

> The federal government's clean air bill is a slight step forward. It promises, essentially, to set standards of air quality. Standards are fine. Standards are needed. But what do they accomplish by themselves?
> Montreal already has standards. They do not prevent hazardous situations of the kind which existed here several days ago—

Mr. Pepin: What do you suggest? Bring back the death penalty?

Mr. Comeau: I hope the minister will make a speech on this subject. He is affected by it and we should like to hear more of his interventions. As a rule he just comes out and smiles at us. Even when he is serious, he smiles. If the minister responsible for this bill is correct, and these standards are national standards, and it is desired to make them effective, how can we ensure that something will be done with respect to preventing air pollution?

Mr. Davis: Pass the bill.

An hon. Member: You are not used to that.

Mr. Comeau: Oh, the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) always makes his usual comment. He sits there in the back row and that is the sort of comment he makes. That is how effective he is. They even kicked him out of—well, I will leave it at that.

We can pass all the regulations and all the pollution measures the minister wants us to pass. We have been dealing with all kinds of pollution bills in the last couple of years. But you cannot enforce a lot of these damn things.

An hon. Member: That is a four-letter word.

Mr. Comeau: Not as bad as the ones used by the Prime Minister. I do not degrade myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Comeau: Anyway, money is needed in order to comply with these regulations. The government's attitude with respect to all these pollution programs has been "Kick industry around". I am not saying industry should not be kicked. Industry has to be kicked around. But we have to accept our responsibilities, too. Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal—these are not industries. They are municipalities, and they must have money if these regulations are to be enforced.

What happens around the Detroit-Windsor area? Large sums of money will be needed to clean up pollution there and it can only come from the federal government. Until the federal government is prepared to make a budget available for dealing with pollution problems, these regulations cannot be enforced.

The whole question of international agreements in this field is an interesting one. A few weeks ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) tabled a report in the House dealing with the pollution of the Great Lakes and other matters. The report stated that it would cost something like $66 million to clean up the air to the standard of Ontario's maximum permissible pollution levels and that most of the money would have to be spent in the heavily-industrialized Windsor-Detroit area. Obviously, money has to be provided, and, equally obviously, good international relations must be established with the United States.

These are only some of the difficulties the minister will have to face. I trust he will be prepared to accept amendments put forward from this side of the House in the course of the debate. We shall be prepared to explain our objections to the measure more fully in committee.

Mr. Harding: It is almost one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The hon. member for St. John's East has a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates to our proceedings at the present time. Prior to the adjournment at one o'clock the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) made the point that this bill was not properly before the House—at least, that was the thrust of his remarks—because the interpretative clause of the bill, clause 2, paragraph (h) defines the minister as the minister of the environment. There is no minister of the environment.

There is at the present time a bill before Parliament, Bill C-207, the government organization bill, and included in that bill is a section dealing with the proposed department of the environment. That bill is presently under debate before the committee of the whole House. I have an amendment to it, also currently being debated, which seeks to change the name of the proposed department of the environment to department of fisheries and the environment. Consequently, I submit to Your Honour that this bill is not properly before the House because it is consequential upon Parliament passing Bill C-207. Parliament has not given its consent to Bill C-207. Accordingly, I submit to Your Honour that the bill now before the House should be withdrawn until the House has disposed of Bill C-207.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Are there any other comments?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, you will recall arguments of the same kind made in the House during the last session when we had a number of bills of an interrelated nature dealing with the question of water pollution, and more specifically the Canada Water Act. At that time the Chair had the opportunity of considering similar points of order and rejected at that time those points. In response to the hon. gentleman I should like to suggest that the question has been considered by the Chair in the past, and I would invite the Chair to examine this precedent of last year. In the meantime may I suggest that until the Chair has had an opportunity to examine those precedents in detail we should proceed with the debate on second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Are there any further comments?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether Your Honour has had a chance to look at the remarks I made on this subject just before one o'clock, but on the basis of what the former President of the Privy Council has stated we could never introduce anything new in this House. All decisions would be based on previous rulings. The fact is that if this bill is passed it will make a mockery of the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) to Bill C-207. This bill again anticipates how the House of Commons will deal with the government organizational bill. The government will not accept any changes or amendments, specifically the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's East. I suggest that only Parliament can decide if an amendment to a bill is acceptable. I suggest that this bill is not properly drafted and that it should not be brought before the House at this time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two on this matter. As Your Honour may be aware I supported the proposed amendment to the organization bill. However, I suggest that if there is any question of the propriety of this bill being before the House, that question should have been raised before the minister was allowed to speak on the bill. Apart from any other consideration that might be given, the fact that no objection was raised on this point at the commencement of the discussion, with the House being allowed to carry on with the debate, would in fact indicate that the bill is in order.

Mr. McGrath: Oh, come off it, Tom; that's terrible.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the debate has been allowed to continue without prejudice to the disposition of the amendment to the other bill and, therefore, really it is not in accordance with the procedures of this House to raise this point of order at this stage of our proceedings.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I have two very brief points to make. Our remarks should not in any way be taken as belittling the importance of this legislation. The hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) indicated our feelings earlier today about this piece of legislation. My first point is in response to the suggestion of the hon. member of the NDP. The bill now before the House stands in the name of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis). This, in itself, is very confusing because when one reads the bill he finds the minister of environment mentioned all the way through. I was surprised to find this to be the situation. I am sure many other members were confused by the way this bill was presented. It creates a false impression. I do not blame anyone but in fact, on the cover of the bill, there is a reference to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Throughout the bill there is reference to the department of environment.

My second point relates to the remarks of the former House Leader, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). The Minister of National Defence referred to a precedent set by a ruling of Mr. Speaker some time ago. That ruling would indicate that legislation which is anticipatory could be passed by the House. I contend that in the present situation we have a unique set of circumstances which cannot be decided upon the basis of the precedent cited by the minister. There is before this House a proposed amendment to the effect that there shall be a department of fisheries and environment. That amendment is vitally important to all marine areas in Canada on the Atlantic and British Columbia coasts. The amendment proposes that there shall not be a department of environment but that there shall be a department of fisheries and environment.

If we accept the bill now under discussion as it is drafted, we will be anticipating the results of proposed legislation. We will be anticipating that the House will create a department of environment. The amendment before the House in respect of Bill C-207 suggests there shall be a department of fisheries and environment. This bill refers to the minister of envionment and, therefore, anticipates the establishment of a department which does not now exist.

If we agree to Bill C-224 we will be passing legislation that cannot be enforced because there is no such department and no such minister. If we vote for Bill C-224, then, in effect, we are voting against the amendment of the hon. member for St. John's East to Bill C-207. This is a reiteration of remarks made on February 17, but the situation now is more serious. If we pass this bill we are legislatively ruling out the possibility of accepting the hon. member's amendment to Bill C-207. If that happens, we might as well give up the ghost. I am not speaking as a Conservative Member of Parliament but as a Canadian legislator.

In respect of the remarks of the Minister of National Defence, I suggest the situation now before the House is not the same as the situation which resulted in the precedent to which he referred. The amendment before the House to Bill C-207 is completely different. While I support this legislation, I suggest it should be withdrawn until we conclude our discussion on Bill C-207.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would you permit me to make one further comment in relation to the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), as referred to by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan)? The front page of the bill now under discussion refers specifically to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and the body of the bill is anticipatory because it refers to the minister of environment. In this way, the government is anticipating a decision of the House of Commons. It anticipates that Bill C-207 will be passed without amendment and that clause 2 will be accepted. Clause 2 is now before the committee of the whole House and has not been voted upon. In this respect, I am surprised and somewhat disappointed that the custodian of the rules of the House of Commons, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has not taken part in this very interesting debate. I had expected he would have been in the forefront of this debate to protect the rights of Parliament.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, I should like also to refer Your Honour to my point of order which was raised on February 17 and which can be found at page 3489 of Hansard. This was a point of order I raised in the committee of the whole House. It had to do with the government anticipating the actions of the House by bringing in estimates for the department of the environment, which is in effect the proposed department of the environment. Again the government was anticipating something which it had no right to anticipate, namely, that Parliament would give consent to the government's proposal and as a consequence thereof that Parliament would reject my proposal which is now before the committee of the whole House. My proposal is an amendment to the bill to change the proposed name of the new department from the department of the environment to the department of fisheries and the environment.

I submit to Your Honour that the government has no right to anticipate the actions of Parliament in this regard and, consequently, that the Chair has an obligation to protect our rights by ordering the withdrawal of this bill which is not properly before the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the second time this week my good friend, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), has taunted me because I had not taken part in a debate on a procedural point. I may say to him that I believe it is very well known that when a point of order is raised by a member of the opposition and I stay in my seat, it is probably because I disagree with the point of order but that I am quite willing to let the government look after itself. This time, however, I am on my feet because I disagree with this point of order.

Mr. McGrath: You are not infallible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, but I do not raise phony points of order.

Mr. McGrath: I think you have been sucked in. Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have not been here as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Indeed, I have respect for him and look up to him as an authority on the rules of the House and if you like, with respect Your Honour, as one of the custodians of the rules. I suggest to you, Sir, it is not in keeping with the reputation the hon. member has in this House for him to suggest that my point of order is a phony point of order. It was raised in all sincerity and with honest intentions. I hope the hon. member will not impute these improper motives to me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In a spirit of goodwill, Sir, if what I have said carries an implication he does not like, I apologize to my hon. friend because what we have before us is a serious matter which I think should receive serious consideration. In any event, I hope he is satisfied that he got me to my feet in connection with this point of order. I have three things to say.

First, I believe the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) had a valid point when he spoke a moment ago. I do not believe he should have been attacked as he was by the hon. member for St. John's East. It is a fact that on January 26, when a point of order was raised in respect of the omnibus nature of the government organization bill, Your Honour ruled that the time to raise a point such as that was after the bill had been given first reading and had been printed. In other words, that is the time at which to consider whether a bill as a whole is properly before the House. It should be done before the second reading debate commences and not in the middle of it, as is the case now. I believe the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was quite right and I agree with Your Honour's ruling on that point, even though I was not happy that you did not find it possible to divide the omnibus bill.

The second thing I wish to say is that I invite my friends of the official opposition to take note that what they are raising is not a point of order against the bill as a whole but against one subclause of one clause of the bill.

Mr. Peddle: It is the right time to do it, too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not the right time to do it. The time to do it is when we are on that subclause which will be when the bill reaches the standing committee to which it is being referred. There are rules about what one can do at the second reading stage. At this stage we deal with a bill as a whole and not the clauses. Unless my hon. friends have a point to the effect that the bill in its entirety is improper, I suggest they do not have a point at all. I urge them to withhold this point of order until the bill reaches the committee and that clause is under consideration.

The third thing I wish to say is in respect of the remarks made by my good friend from Gander-Twillingate about our role as legislators, the passing of bills and so on. May I say to him that we are not passing this bill at this point. We are only debating a motion for second reading and the referral of the bill to committee. If we were at the third reading stage and were passing a bill that had within it a clause which was inconsistent with some other bill that had been passed, their point would be valid and I would be backing it. But that is not the case. We are not passing a bill. We are considering proposed legislation and the likelihood is that there are a number of details in it which members may not like or which they may find offensive. However, for the life of me, I cannot see any point of order in respect of the propriety of the bill as a whole, which is what the hon. member for St. John's East has asked Your Honour to find. I hope my friend is grateful to me for having yielded to his request to take the floor.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their contribution to the important point of order. Indeed, I consider the arguments which have been put forward so interesting, and the point itself of such interest to all hon. members, that I would suggest, if there is value in my suggestion, that we continue the debate which is going on at the present time. Within the next half hour or the next hour, I will have an opportunity, in the peace and quiet of the Speaker's Chambers, to look at the arguments which have been submitted to this House by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and the very important and relevant comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Then, perhaps I can give a ruling which will be a little more thoughtful than if I gave it at this time off the top of my head. I feel the matter is important enough that I should give it a few minutes serious consideration. But I do not think the progress of the discussion should be arrested and I suggest to hon. members that whoever had the floor at the time the point of order was raised might conclude his contribution to the bill in a substantive way.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we have started the debate on the second reading of Bill C-224, the clean air bill. I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister when he spoke before lunch and outlined the aims and objectives of this new legislation. I should like to thank the minister for his courtesy in sending me a copy of his speech so that we could follow his remarks. I regret I do not have a written copy of my speech in order to return the compliment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are one or two brief comments I would like to make on the minister's presentation this morning before I proceed to the main part of my talk which will deal generally with air pollution problems and then with several clauses of the bill in which I feel there is a general weakness. The minister indicated that the legislation which we currently have before the House was not a fragmentary approach to air pollution problems. Then, he indicated that he was very anxious to bring about the disappearance of pollution havens in this country, and said that the bill was heading in that direction. I would like to point out to members of the House that this legislation does represent a fragmentary approach to air pollution, and nothing could be farther from the truth than to kid the public of Canada that here we have a piece of legislation which is going to tackle air pollution from one end of Canada to the other.

Once you delve into the terms of the legislation you will realize exactly what I mean. It seems to me that this is just another example of the Canada Water Act which left the federal authorities almost powerless to act. We are going to get exactly the same type of treatment under the so-called clean air act as we did under the Water Act. I want to give one or two examples as I go along. What has the government done about automobiles? They are not covered by this bill and yet automobiles contribute 60 per cent of the total air pollution in this country. Yet, the minister and his department are trying to tell us that the proposed clean air act will tackle the problem of air pollution. I say to him that he may be able to deal with some of the fuels, but it will be the motor vehicle act under which emission standards for automobiles will be administered. There is nothing in here to deal with that. This legislation deals with nothing but pollutants from stationary sources. There is nothing here that deals with the emission standards for aircraft, one of the key problems facing the nation today because pollutants from aircrafts are doing immense damage to the biosphere.

Mr. Davis: May I ask the hon. member a question? Was the hon. member here last year when we passed the Motor Vehicle Safety Act which dealt with automobiles?

Mr. Harding: Certainly, I was. The very point I am making is that we have some standards, but there is no provision in this bill to co-ordinate the activities of these departments. We have been making this point for weeks. We are in the process of dealing with a government organization act, 1970, which sets up a new department of the environment with respect to which my friends here raised a point a moment ago. We spent a whole day trying to get the minister and his department to insert the phrase "national standards" in that legislation, but we were turned down. National standards are mentioned here, but when you investigate the powers of the act you find those standards do not carry the impact which the people of Canada would like to think they carried. I am very much afraid that, again, we have here only a partial approach to the over-all problem of air pollution in Canada.

I want to make it perfectly clear that this is a new bill in which we are trying to deal with air pollution the first time. It is a step forward but, as usual with most of the legislation we have been getting from this government, it does not go far enough nor does it encompass a sufficiently large area. The bill does not contain sufficiently clear definitions. We find that instead of this federal government department giving clear and straightforward leadership in the clean up of pollution problems, they are hiding behind the constitution, just as they did in the case of the Canada Water Act, by saying that they cannot move because provincial or municipal jurisdiction is involved. We all know the trouble we have had in trying to solve problems because of divided jurisdictions. As my friend here says, this is constitution pollution. But I want to say that, as a result of meeting people and organizations in Canada interested in cleaning up pollution, I have discovered that they all want guidance from the federal government. They are sick and tired of having the solution of pollution problems delayed because of mixed jurisdictions.

The people of Canada demand that some kind of national standard be set, and backed up by national enforcement. Such a program would focus our attack on pollution problems without fear or favour of industry, without fear or favour of governments and without fear or favour of individuals who do not mind polluting if it means an extra dollar in their pocket. We are not getting this type of leadership and we are not getting the type of legislation that would give this type of leadership to Canada. We are getting a little tired of this partial approach.

I referred to the initial remarks made by the minister, for whom I have great respect. Once we get the new legislation through, I can assure him he will have all the backing we can possibly give him in the matter of its enforcement, in the matter of beefing up standards and in the matter of drawing attention to problems in Canada to try to get stronger legislation on the books so we can solve the pollution problems from which we suffer.

Before I speak on certain clauses of the bill, I should like to say a few words about the very general approach to the problem of air pollution which I believe every nation in the world will eventually have to take. Earth is a space craft. We are whirling around in space with a thin envelope of air surrounding us. We have had trouble with water and with soil pollution. Now, we are having trouble with the air we breathe. This is why all over the world danger signals are being put up by eminent scientists, research groups and governments, warning that the very existence of mankind on earth is threatened by some of the activities in which we are presently engaged, activities to which we paid too little attention in the past. The situation reminds us of the extinction of the buffalo on the prairie or the denuding of our vast forest areas.

Air has always seemed to be a limitless resource. We thought we could go on pouring pollutants into it. It was only as we began to understand the extent of global air pollution that we recognized air is a commodity which depends on delicate recycling mechanisms, and which can be subject to destruction. Air pollution is not a new problem. Smoke from coal fires in the larger cities in England caused so much trouble in the fourteenth century that laws were passed providing the death penalty for those responsible. Even then, they knew that the health of city residents was being threatened. As we moved through the centuries down to the present time, we have banished a lot of particle pollutants from the air. No longer does dense smoke pour out of coal burning factories. But now we have the problem of noxious fumes getting into the atmosphere, sulphur dioxide from various types of factories, all of which cause problems for people who live in urban areas.

There are many problems associated with pollution. It is becoming abundantly clear that as the standard of living increases in Canada, the United States and other countries, our chance of polluting the atmosphere, and our water and soil, increases. That is why there is such urgent need for us to set strict controls if we are to solve the problem. I would like to make reference again to something I have raised on a number of occasions in this House. It is that one cannot tackle pollution by itself. There are several other factors that must come into our over-all attack on pollution. One is population. I am not thinking just in terms of holding the world population at a stable level, although I think something must be done quickly along that line, but there are other aspects of population growth that must be examined. This should be part of the over-all problem to be examined by the department of the environment.

What are we going to do about the urban areas? What are we going to do about existing industries? Are we going to disperse some of them to other parts of Canada? Are we going to allow industry to grow in cities? It has been estimated that within a very short period of time Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver will contain half the population of our country. Government departments must start over-all resource and population planning if we are to solve some of the key pollution problems facing us today. The same type of planning must take place in other nations. The planning must be international, but there is no sign of it appearing. One or two departments are examining urban problems, but there is no over-all planning taking place.

There is also the matter of resource development pollution and the recycling process. As I have said on numerous occasions, Mr. Speaker, we are one of the most wasteful nations in the world. We should be recycling many of the products that we use instead of throwing them away, causing pollution from one end of the country to the other. More research should be undertaken into recycling processes. I have already mentioned the automobile. According to statistics, 60 per cent of the total air pollution on the North American continent comes from the automobile. I do not know what the percentage is in Canada. It might be higher than that in some cities. We cannot have effective national standards unless all pollutants are covered.

I join the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) in criticizing the government for bringing this bill forward at this time. We have had copies of it for just about nine or ten days. I sent copies of it to some 20 or 30 individuals and organizations who would like to assist in getting better legislation for the people of Canada, and with one or two exceptions I have not yet had replies from them.

Mr. Davis: Why not become a member of the committee?

Mr. Harding: I did not hear the minister's comment, but if he referred to work in committee, yes we can do a lot of work in the committee. But there are many organizations which cannot afford to send representatives to Ottawa. There are many individuals with expertise in air pollution problems who must express their views through their Members of Parliament. This is called participatory democracy, and that is the reason I regret we did not have an extra four or five days in which to get some consensus from such people.

• (2:50 p.m.)

May I now talk about the bill itself, Mr. Speaker? I said, initially, that it is a step forward. Our party has every intention in the world of backing the legislation. When it comes before the committee we shall attempt to move amendments to those clauses that we feel are weak. We shall suggest amendments to the minister which we hope will strengthen the bill or insert provisions which we feel are missing. Of course, we hope that our amendments will be accepted. I believe that every Canadian has the right to breathe clean air, to drink water and to live in a clean environment. I believe that those rights should be specified in the constitution. Canadians should have the right to live in a clean environment. The clean environment ought to be guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. I think that the Bill of Rights will need to be amended one day, to provide for this additional right.

As I pointed out, this bill is aimed primarily at stationary sources of pollution. They are mentioned in the bill. In his talk the minister said that this part of the bill would be applied widely. This is what worries me most of all. Here, again, there is a lack of a single, uniform and united approach to air pollution problems and, as sure as fate, Mr. Speaker, we will run into the same sort of problems with this bill as we ran into with the bill dealing with water pollution in Canada. On our statute books there are dozens of statutes dealing with pollution. In this country there are regulations of all kinds on this subject. Scarcely any department of government is unaffected by laws or regulations aimed at stopping pollution.

I have said previously on the floor of the House and I will say again now that, although there are all kinds of statutes and regulations which are designed to deal with pollution, those laws have been ignored for years, and years. Our research on this matter covers a period of several years. Some departments have never laid a charge under their regulations. According to our research, in a period of more than seven years not one single charge has been laid under a number of such pieces of legislation. One or two departments have laid charges. The fisheries department has laid charges, as has the Department of Transport, with relation to shipping. Otherwise, only a minor number of charges have been laid. Most of such legislation on the statute books has never been enforced. In addition, legislation aimed at attacking pollution has never been co-ordinated. Apparently one department will not be responsible for the co-ordinated attack on air pollution problems. Consider legislation dealing with motor vehicle emissions, Mr. Speaker. Consider also legislation such as the Aeronautics Act, and legislation affecting shipping and emissions from steamers. Consider the Railway Act. Under all these acts, anti-pollution regulations have been passed. I could cite a number of additional acts. I am not disputing the validity of these acts, I am merely saying that the regulations, under these various acts, that deal with pollution ought certainly to be the responsibility of and under the control of the minister of the environment. Unless there is this over-all and co-ordinated attack on the problem, I am afraid we shall get into some real trouble.

There is another weakness in the bill, Mr. Speaker. There is no mention of funds. You know, if we are to solve the problem of air pollution, water pollution or any other form of pollution, we must make available tremendous amounts of credit to municipalities, provinces or to other organizations which are to attack the problem. I wish to make it clear that in this legislation, as in other similar types of legislation which have come before the House, there is lots of talk but we are not told where the money is to come from to do the job which must be done within the next two years. We cannot delay any longer.

My time is drifting along, Mr. Speaker. I wish to deal with several other clauses of the bill. In particular, I wish to deal with clause 7. I know that in the committee we shall deal with the bill clause by clause, yet may I draw to the attention of hon. members this particular clause? It purports to set up national emission standards. I am in favour of national emission standards; there is nothing wrong with them. I submit that if one studies the wording of the clause, one will find it somewhat revealing. It reads:

> 7. (1) Where the emission into the ambient air of an air contaminant in the quantities and concentrations in which it is consumed or produced in the operation of stationary sources of a particular class or classes specified by the Governor in Council would

And then follow certain conditions with respect to national emission standards.

> (a) constitute a significant danger to the health of persons, or
> (b) be likely to result in the violation of a term or terms of any international obligation . . .

So, unless I am mistaken, national emission standards under the legislation are to apply if the emission becomes a health hazard, or if it violates some international obligation. May I point out that there are other facets to the pollution problem to which emission standards should also apply. How about property damage? Does this clause cover property damage? The act refers vaguely to those emission standards and to how those emission standards are to be established. Apparently one of the criterions on which such standards are to be based is the wording, "...constitute a significant danger to the health of persons." The emission may cause a little bit of discomfort; it may cause a little bit of nausea but, as I read it, that emission will not be covered by the law. The emission might irritate the skin but, unless it constitutes a significant danger to the health of an individual, it will not be included. I hope I am wrong. I hope that the minister or whoever may speak on his behalf later will clarify that point.

I want to say this: the people of Canada are sick and tired of having their environment polluted by noxious fumes, by smog and other pollutants. You can damage individuals without greatly affecting their health, you know. I frankly admit that the damage to health is of primary importance. The clause says that the danger must be a significant danger. Who will determine at what point there is significant danger? There is no definition here which adequately covers the point, though an attempt has been made. One could drive a horse and carriage through this clause, yet I am talking about one of the key clauses of the bill, the one which deals with national emission standards. I am more than worried as I check this clause. I sincerely hope there will be serious consideration by the government of all these points before the debate is concluded.

I now turn to clause 8. There are to be national emission guidelines. The minister has made it clear that the guidelines which will be set may eventually become enforceable. If it is felt that higher objectives are needed, I cannot take exception to this approach. However, Rome was not built in a day, and air pollution will not be cleaned up in a day. But I want to make it crystal clear that these national emission guidelines are not enforceable and there is nothing here which will make them binding upon provincial governments or municipalities which are suffering pollution. I hope the municipalities will take cognizance of these standards and will eventually accept them.

Time is drifting along and there is another clause or two with which I should like to deal. One point was made clear by the minister in his speech. It has to do with fuels. Provision is made in the bill, and I think it is a good move, to place responsibility for the inspection of fuels with the new department. This will be an excellent way of preventing pollution before it starts. An indication has been given that standards will be set to make sure that oil does not contain too much sulphur, for example, or that the type of coal which may be used in a thermal plant does not have a sulphur content high enough to cause serious air pollution.

I was concerned about the arrangements made for the inspection of motor fuels. I understand, now, that gasoline is also subject to inspection by the new department. If this is the case, I am very pleased. This is one of the points which was not made clear. It is certainly a provision we need in the legislation. Motor vehicle fuels must come under the control of the department, to ensure that they do not contain too much harmful pollutant.

There is one clause of the bill which deals with fines. The newspapers have given tremendous play to the fines which could be levied under the act. A fine of $200,000 is possible: this has been the headline. Canadians have drawn the conclusion that Parliament is going all the way with this bill. Yet when we read the bill closely we find that not many institutions will be liable to a fine of $200,000, though a deterrent of this type is certainly one of which we can approve. I hope the department will be tough enough to levy such fines in cases where a plant or operation is neglecting to live up to the terms of the legislation.

In closing, I repeat that I do not think this bill really sets the national standards which we want. It lacks a co-ordinated approach to pollution—this is the most depressing part as far as I am concerned—and it leaves a number of fields uncovered. I am thinking in terms of the department of the environment. Mention was made of the department having authority to deal with soil pollution, noise pollution and so on. But there are other fields—radiation and microwave emissions, for example. So far this country has almost completely ignored them. It may be we do not yet possess the expertise necessary to lay down regulations. I do not know. I do not believe we have. But I feel we should at least begin research and get on with the work of cleaning up pollution wherever it is found in our environment.

Again let me say that while the bill does represent a step forward, it is a fragmented approach to the problem. I hope the minister will accept some major amendments to the legislation when they are put forward during the committee stage.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, because of the vital importance of this bill I did not intend to speak, but since we seem to be creating some air pollution in the House of Commons today in some of the speeches we have heard, I feel I should get up in defence.

An hon. Member: Don't add to it, then.

Mr. Pringle: I am not naturally critical; I am a rather good natured man but I have to express some criticism, possibly because sitting here in the rump of the House, a little of it rubs off on me. Air is something none of us can escape. We are not obliged to go near water resources. We are not obliged to go into areas where there are garbage dumps or outpourings of effluent. But we all breathe the air every day: we cannot escape it. I therefore consider this bill to be in the nature of a priority issue. I congratulate the minister upon introducing it and I hope it will move into committee immediately. I want to be very brief because it is important that the bill get into committee in the next few minutes.

There is a great deal of evidence that air pollution is increasing to a greater extent than many of us realize.

I belong to a group of people who have spent the last 15 to 20 years flying their aircraft across North America at low level and encountering a high concentration of air pollution. I recall going into areas like Los Angeles on a perfectly clear day, and although the tops of buildings were visible it was necessary to approach and land with the use of instruments. I have sat in a hotel room in the city where you could see a blue haze across the room and into the bathroom. It was so bad that one had to go to the beach or to some other area to escape it. I am not talking about industrial pollution but about pollution from automobiles—which, of course, are directly controlled by individuals.

I think we would do well to concentrate on pollution research. This bill contains a clause referring to the widening of our research facilities. I firmly believe that although we must kill pollution, we must at the same time maintain industry. This is a point that I feel is not sufficiently emphasized in our legislation. Our air is subject to pressure inversions, so that although pockets of pollution are able to escape and disperse at certain times, they cannot at other times. I recall when Vancouver had only a small area of pollution, but now pollution has crept up the valley as far as Abbotsford and it is getting worse each year. A temporary release as a result of a violent storm is as much as we can expect.

This bill is very important and I hope we will not be prevented by technicalities from proceeding with it. The members who have been screaming "national" on almost everything are the ones who continually stand up and want to protect the provinces. They ask why the government is not doing this for Newfoundland, or that for Nova Scotia; yet they talk "nationally" on a bill of this kind. They do not accept the fact that the provinces of this country still have rights and they will continue to have rights. Even though we are able to reform the Constitution of Canada, I do not believe that in our time or in my grandchildren's time we will ever eliminate the rights of the provinces. So let hon. members be objective. When they stand up and say a measure must be national in scope, they must realize that they are asking the government to impose itself upon provincial jurisdiction. I do not think such imposition would be accepted by the provinces.

Certain measures must be national in scope, of course, and the provinces agree they must be national. As a matter of fact, I think that in the very near future controlling air pollution will be international in scope. For example, when the wind blows from Chicago, to the south, this terrible air pollution from the industrial mills moves north far enough to reach Canada. The same things happens along the Great Lakes; when a south wind blows, Canada is no longer responsible for its own air pollution. Since we are going to monitor our air quality, if the tolerances are exceeded what will we do about it unless we reach international agreement? And if we have an international agreement, shall we impose our standards on the United States, for example? Will we work out mutual agreements with the provinces?

In view of these factors, I hope this House realizes that we have a vital bill in front of us; that we have 10 "countries" in this great nation of Canada, each of which must be considered. Either hon. members agree that this should be strictly a federal matter and they should stop yacking about the provinces all the time, which they are supposed to represent, or they admit they know full well that the provinces have rights and that the federal government cannot impose itself, unilaterally if you like, upon the provinces in environmental matters.

I know of no other bill that strikes at the lives, the livelihoods and the social welfare of the people of Canada as much as the bills we have before us, such as the organization bill and Bill C-224. So, Mr. Speaker, in closing—and, unlike the previous speaker, I intend to close only twice instead of four times—I hope that immediately we call the question and get the bill into committee where hon. members can provide a useful service. I admit their speeches in committee do not get back home as readily as they do from this chamber, but the importance of this bill is already back home. I think we should accept that, and I hope we will get this bill into committee as soon as possible.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have accepted the invitation of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) to close the debate immediately following his speech, but there are a few things I want to add to what has been said, though certainly I am not going to take very long. In the first place, I agree entirely with the objectives of this bill in controlling air pollution throughout Canada. The objectives are desirable and the problem is urgent. Therefore, I think that we should get the bill into committee as quickly as possible.

I should like to point out that in my opinion the bill winds its way through the jurisdictional jungle of the Canadian constitution in masterly fashion, but it fails to cut through the maze in a forthright manner or as a result of having made advance arrangements with the provinces. This was the case with, and also the weakness of, the Canada Water Act. There is one exception to this general weakness and that is the section of the bill that relates to fuels, with which I will deal later, which I think does deal with the problem forthrightly.

Without provincial concurrence and joint provincial legislation, I think this bill is a futile gesture, such as was the case with the Canada Water Act. A clean air bill has been promised for two years. I am not going to lay the blame for the delay on the present minister, because it was not he who made the promise. A clean air bill was promised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and it appeared to me that the delay in getting it before Parliament was caused by the government trying to make a co-operative effort with the provinces. So the situation confronting the government on this bill is not as difficult as it was when the government introduced the Canada Water Act. I had hoped that the provinces would be consulted so that this bill could avoid the jurisdictional problems experienced with the Canada Water Act. Unfortunately, as far as I can gather from the speech of the minister today, it was only three or four weeks ago, after the bill had been drafted and was ready for introduction, that the minister toured the provinces to acquaint them with its terms. It is not enough to have the provinces not objecting and it is not enough to have them invited or consulted because, as in respect of the Canada Water Act, we need concurrent legislation.

There is provision in this bill for the government to join with the provinces in making arrangements and contracts, but the provinces cannot carry out their part of such an agreement unless they have concurrent legislation. The provincial governments, like the government of Canada, cannot act on their own without the authority of their legislatures. In other words, merely because we have this legislation at the federal level does not mean that provincial governments will be able to enter into agreements on their own. We do not have concurrent legislation and we do not have any indication that it will be forthcoming. To the credit of the minister I should say he has in the past few weeks tried to save the day by consulting the provinces. He has obtained an agreement and co-operation, but as good as his intentions might be, it is really not co-operation we need—we need legislative authority. This is still lacking, and it is fundamental.

Let me now turn to the matter of policy on national standards of air quality. The minister stated today that this bill authorizes such national standards. It is my belief that it does not. I do not want to split hairs about it, but we have the same problem we had with the Canada Water Act. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) kept telling us in one breath that he could not involve himself with national water standards because he did not have the authority, and in the next breath he told us they existed. Neither of these statements was accurate, and the result is that we now have the Canada Water Act which is an ineffective piece of legislation. As far as getting national air quality standards is concerned, this bill takes four runs at the problem. It takes a run at it in clause 4, where it says that this provision will apply where air quality objectives—I stress the word "objectives"—are defined and authorized. That is fine. We have objectives, but that does not say we will ever reach them.

The bill takes another run at this in clause 7 where it refers to national emission standards and guidelines; I stress the word "emission" because this does not relate to the quality of air but to the quality of emission into the air in various places. This clause is limited to cases where emissions constitute a significant danger to health or which are likely to contravene our international obligations. Let me point out the word "significant". I imagine that is there to give the federal government, or Parliament, statutory authority. It refers to a significant danger to health as being the criterion rather than a danger to health. Any prosecutions under this statute will be very difficult. Here again, this could save the jurisdiction under the national authority, but it is so limited because of the use of the word "significant" that it does not cover the standard case.

The bill takes another run at national air standards policy in clause 8 where it refers to the establishment of guidelines. Guidelines can be related to objectives to be followed, but guidelines have never been very effective. They have been suggested in almost every area of this Parliament, but they have very seldom worked because they are unenforceable. The bill takes another run at national standards in clauses 9 and 14 where it refers to the establishment of emission standards for federal works. That is still only one area, and it is not national.

I am not trying to split hairs, but I do not think the measure authorizes the setting up of national air quality standards. I do not think the authority is there. I looked through the bill, and the first thing I attempted to find was this authority. I could not find it. Therefore, the bill cannot authorize the establishment of these standards.

Most provinces do not have legislation along these lines, and I am sure none of the provinces have concurrent legislation because this bill has not yet been passed. If the government has doubt about the constitutional authority to establish national air quality standards—and I think they certainly have grounds for doubt—I should like the minister to tell us about the efforts made over the last two or three years to get provincial assistance to adopt effective legislation. There was nothing in the minister's introductory remarks today to the effect that there has been provincial co-operation in bringing in any new legislation. In the latter part of the minister's remarks he mentioned provisions in respect of federal government works.

Much of the bill is devoted to the method of the federal government policing itself. The main part of this bill is directed toward the operators of federal works. This is certainly a desirable objective. I think it is a sad commentary of the government of Canada when it has to legislate against itself. That is exactly what we are doing by this bill. Who is going to pay the fines if they are levied against federal works? It seems to me that if anybody pays these fines it will be the people of Canada, because that is the source of money for public works. This seems to be a very unusual situation because the federal government is legislating against its own public works and is providing fines for breaches against this measure. I would like to think there are in existence no situations which would justify this type of action. I have no doubt that this legislation could be used against public works, but it seems sad that we are being asked to pass a bill directed against works of the federal government.

I said I wanted to speak about the general provision concerning fuels, their manufacture and importation. To me this is the most significant feature of the bill. In a simple and straightforward way the federal Parliament assumes its responsibility in clause 22 and provides for regulatory authority in succeeding clauses. The foundation is laid, in the clauses on fuels, for effective action in many areas. The definition is broad enough to include motor vehicle fuels, domestic fuels and industrial and commercial fuels, all of which are the principal causes of air pollution. So while I do not feel the remainder of the bill will be very effective, I believe the clauses on fuels, as in the case of the Canada Water Act in the section on phosphate detergents, may be the only part that is effective and enforceable.

In my belief, the clauses on fuels save this bill because there are no "ifs", "ands" or "buts" about it. Parliament is facing up to the situation and saying that we will accept responsibility for fuels. We know this is where most of our air pollution comes from. It remains to be seen whether the government will follow up these clauses with effective regulations and enforcement. If it does, then the clauses on fuels to my mind could represent the breakthrough.

I should like to say a word or two in respect of offences and penalties. When a great fuss is made about the amount of a penalty of $200,000 a day, or something in that order, this hits the newspapers and sounds good. We had the same "big deal" in respect of the Canada Water Act, but no one to my knowledge has been charged. Certainly no one ever received such a fine. I suppose if someone wanted to outdo this bill he could provide for a fine of $1 million for doing something. I do not think the amount of the fine levied is the true test of the bill. The true test is whether or not it stops air pollution.

I do not believe the size of the maximum fine will do the job at all. Here, as in the case of the Canada Water Act, people have the idea that almost everybody will be subject to this large fine for polluting. One has to look at the bill to see what it really says. The $200,000 fine applies only to a federal work of undertaking under clause 9 (1) (b), an emission which constitutes a significant danger to the health of persons under clause 7 (1) (a), or violation of the terms of any international agreement under clause 7 (1) (b). These are the only cases to which the fine applies. It is not a general fine in respect of anyone who pollutes the air. I believe this should be clearly understood.

The last point I wish to discuss is that of the federal commitment to expenditure. As in the case of the Canada Water Act, I have searched vainly through this bill to find any commitment by the federal government to involve itself financially in activities, works or pilot projects to reduce air pollution. I could find none, except perhaps one clause to which I will refer. Aside from maintaining monitoring stations and setting up standards of various types, there would seem to be no provision for expenditure except in clause 19 which authorizes the minister to enter into agreements with provincial governments for the implementation of pollution programs for the control and abatement of air pollution. It is possible that in the implementation of programs the government could very well involve itself in expenditure, but it is a very vague provision and one which certainly does not leave either us or the provincial governments with the belief that the federal government wishes to involve itself.

We might as well be honest about it. The provincial legislatures are interested in working with the federal government in such areas when money is to be provided. Provincial governments do not like to go out and spend money while the federal government sits back and says, "Go ahead with it, boys. We hope you do a good job because we have passed some laws which we hope will help the situation. You put up the money". This is where we ran into trouble in respect of the Canada Water Act, and I do not see any improvement in this bill. Money talks, and money is in short supply.

There is no indication that the federal government will involve itself in expenditure here, and the estimates which were recently tabled showed vast increases in spending but very little for the implementation of this legislation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not see the likelihood of immediate, concurrent provincial legislation or provincial co-operation unless the federal government is prepared to do something in the financial field. This has not been indicated in the bill or even in the minister's introductory remarks.

At the beginning I said that the objectives of the bill are worthy. A real effort has been made by the drafters to cover the ground within the obviously limited framework laid down by government policy which, once again, is woefully lacking in respect of real co-operation with the provincial authorities. There are many things which undoubtedly could have been done to improve the bill. As I say, the drafters of this bill have carefully wound their way through the constitutional problems without actually meeting them head-on.

I hope this bill will be effective. We want to see it referred to the committee so that we will have an opportunity to do what we can to improve it. But so far as the fundamental principle is concerned, it is not there. The provincial co-operation to fill-out the legislative authority as between the two jurisdictions has not been provided, the groundwork has not been laid and we are left once again with a federal bill which is limited in its jurisdiction and which has no really effective means of controlling air pollution throughout the country.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with a good deal of interest to the speeches of hon. members on this bill. In many ways I found most interesting the remarks of the minister in introducing the bill, not because his speech was necessarily better than that of the hon. gentleman who just spoke, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), but because, naturally, we look to a person who introduces a bill in this House to state its basic scope and purpose at second reading stage.

The minister, as he usually does when he gets on to subjects touching on pollution or on standards, waxed very eloquent. He stated his ideas with great determination. I suggest, however, that if one examines the realities of the situation, the contents of his speech are somewhat misleading. I like to hear the minister say that he believes in national standards, whether he is talking about air pollution, water pollution or any other form of pollution. I also believe in national standards. I think these are ideas which should be promoted throughout Canada. I think that in particular those of us who happen to be members of the federal Parliament of Canada have a responsibility to seek to do that. However, a problem arises when we have a minister introducing a bill and creating the impression that there are, in fact, provisions of the bill that are not really there. This is the danger I see developing in respect of the bill we are now considering and in respect of other bills that have been dealt with in recent months.

If the minister had said in his opening remarks today that this bill was a beginning in moving toward national standards with regard to emissions that go into the ambient air, then I think his statements would have been more in accordance with the contents of the bill. But if I heard the minister correctly, he said categorically that the bill creates standards which are national in scope, which are Canada wide and which are not provincial or municipal.

These are brave words, the kind of words we like to hear coming from a minister with some responsibility over the control of the quality of the environment, whether or not he has the title. But if one examines the contents of the bill it becomes apparent that it is treading lightly on the constitutional eggs, taking great pains not to put any stress or strain on the fragile shells of the elements of our constitution, on the fragile sensibilities of some of the provincial authorities.

This may or may not be necessary or desirable at this point, in face of the realities of political life in Canada, in face of attitudes that are made evident from time to time by some of the provincial Premiers of Canada. If I wanted to explore this question in detail, I could perhaps use the Premier of the province of British Columbia as a point of reference for some remarks. But the fact is that this bill does not create national standards. I do not think that we in this Parliament would be doing a service to the people of Canada if we tried to create the impression that in this bill we are providing a complete and final answer to the problems of the regulation and control of emissions that go into the ambient air, to use the phrase that is used in the bill.

What I think we should be doing in discussing a bill of this kind is to emphasize that we are dealing with what I would term the constitutional building-blocks of a new Canadian Constitution. We are dealing with things that are, in this era of our history, of most urgent concern to Canadians everywhere. Part of our responsibility in discussing a bill of this kind should be to attempt to make the people of Canada aware that we are having to work within a very difficult constitutional framework when we start discussing such problems as are dealt with in this bill. Let us not kid either ourselves or the people of Canada that we are in fact creating standards that will be uniform and complete all across Canada by what we are proposing to do today.

I think the minister is right when he puts the emphasis on his belief in national standards and expresses his desire for their establishment. I think the minister is right in the sense that he is echoing the kind of feelings about these things that more and more Canadians are having. In this sense, all of us in this chamber have the responsibility of seeking to share with the minister the job of providing leadership and understanding which may bring about an approach to these matters that is more in keeping with the realities of Canadian social and economic life.

The minister in his speech did touch upon the constitutional aspects of the bill. He made reference to the fact that we are using the powers of the British North America Act in respect of trade and commerce as a federal jurisdiction. Of course, in section 91(2) of the BNA Act there is a direct reference to the power of the Parliament of Canada to deal with the regulation of trade and commerce. But I think it is interesting to note that the minister also made reference to the fact that we are using the federal health powers in this act. One can search the BNA Act in vain in trying to find any reference to health as a stated function of the government. There is reference in sections 91 and 92 to the operation of marine hospitals by the federal government and other hospitals by the provincial governments, but this is about as close as the BNA Act comes to touching upon the question of health.

It has been quite evident, and constitutional practice has made it clear, that in fact there is federal jurisdiction in health and it is operative within certain limits. But it does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the minister might have made reference in his speech to the power of the Parliament of Canada to make laws respecting good government in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects "by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces." Perhaps this question of the federal power in the field of health may flow in some respects from that.

I can only speculate on these things, not being a constitutional lawyer or a person who could ever anticipate being made a member of the Supreme Court of Canada. But I emphasize this fact because in my view the minister who is responsible in this area as a member of the government should be putting more emphasis, in the speeches he makes in this House and elsewhere, on the question of the limitations that the constitutional framework imposes so far as coping adequately with problems of air and water pollution is concerned. I have looked through the bill. I would not say I have studied every clause in detail, but it is very observable that all through the bill, when it comes to the regulation of the kind of works or undertakings which come directly under its jurisdiction it is most carefully limited to those that lie in the federal field.

In the powers of inspection and enforcement provided in this bill there is a great contrast with the kind of authority conferred upon the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) by some of the amendments that were made to the Fisheries Act last year. Of course, the minister at once would say that this difference stems from the fact that sea coast and inland fisheries are clearly assigned to the federal field, and therefore the responsibility is clear and well defined in respect of the quality of water inhabited by fish, and its protection from pollution. But in his speech the minister said there is 25 times more pollution coming into Canadian waters from the air than is being put into those waters by spills from oil tankers and other sources.

One could develop an intriguing argument that if, under the Fisheries Act, the minister has the authority to ensure that certain standards of water quality are maintained, and if these waters are being polluted from the air, therefore the jurisdiction of the minister obviously extends to the maintenance of the quality of the air. I am not in a position to say that if this were being argued by lawyers before the Supreme Court, the minister and his spokesmen would be on the winning side; but I suggest this reveals very clearly how interrelated is the matter of total environmental control and how important it is that the Canadian people not only understand the need for the maintenance of quality but understand in more depth the constitutional and other problems that lie in the way of achieving this goal.

I think that once the people of Canada understand constitutional matters of this kind in a way that comes close to home, to the practical matters that affect their life and welfare, then they will be behind the efforts that may be made from time to time in the federal Parliament and there will be a body of opinion across Canada that any provincial government would ignore only at its peril. For this reason I felt I would approach discussion of the principle of the bill from this point of view, because it is a point of view that I feel the minister has failed to advance sufficiently. It may be as a result of a natural desire on his part to create an impression in the minds of the Canadian people that the government of which he is a member is establishing a creditable record of achievement. In saying this I am not trying to belittle the efforts that the government and the minister have been making in this field, but there is a responsibility on us to make the people of Canada understand the limitations of what we are doing as well as the excellence of certain features of the legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I notice that the minister is ready to rise, and it is just before four o'clock. I would remind hon. members that there is a point of order before the Chair, raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The Chair still has the point of order under advisement. It is now four o'clock. I should say to hon. members that next time this item of business is called, the Chair will be in a position to make a ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East.

It being four o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be the wish of the House to let the minister close the debate before the question is put. We would then have completed the debate and the question could be put, depending on the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I indicated earlier, the Chair is not ready to make a ruling on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. If hon. members wish, the minister might be allowed to close the debate. But the motion obviously cannot be put until a ruling is made by the Chair.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to give unanimous consent to the minister because of what Your Honour has just said with respect to the ruling which has yet to be made. However, if I did give consent it would be with the understanding that what the minister had to say would not in any way jeopardize the ruling subsequently to be made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just to make it clear, the minister, as I understand it, would be speaking on the substantive motion and not on the point of order. I reiterate that the motion will not be put until the Chair has made a ruling. On those conditions, if it is agreeable to hon. members the minister might be permitted to close the debate. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. First I must say that I appreciate the remarks made by hon. members from all corners of the House. I will be looking forward to the positive and helpful suggestions which they will be making to improve this legislation in the Fisheries and Forestry Committee, legislation which I think they all agree is important and which should be passed by Parliament in the best possible form.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I only want to comment on one aspect of this legislation which was referred to by nearly all hon. members speaking on the bill, and that is the constitutional or federal aspect of it. The government already has been engaged with the provinces in a discussion on constitutional powers, and particularly on powers in dealing with pollution and the quality of the environment of this country. The proposal made by the government to the provinces has been that of concurrent power, which should clear up a number of difficulties, particularly trans-border difficulties between provinces.

I think another important aspect of the bill is the requirement on federal agencies to clean up. I have certainly expressed the opinion to the provinces that federal institutions must conform to local bylaws and provincial regulations in every way. The provinces themselves, particularly last fall when the Premiers met with the Prime Minister and again recently, appeared to indicate that they thought the federal government should take leadership in this area.

I think that the doubts which have been expressed in various corners of the House about constitutional powers in respect of pollution will not be borne out. Indeed, I think that the provinces will co-operate in every way in the execution not only of the clean air act but of every type of legislation dealing with pollution in this country. I thank hon. members, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In accordance with the agreement reached previously, the debate on Bill C-224 having been concluded, the question will not be put until this item appears again on Orders of the Day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and ask the indulgence of the House. I do not intend to take up too much time with my point of order because there is little enough time for members to speak in private members' hour. What I must say could perhaps be decided upon in a couple of minutes. Item No. 36 on the Order Paper under private members' public bills is Bill C-69 which stands in my name. It is a bill respecting the presence of the national flag of Canada in both Houses of Parliament. Since I think there is a consensus on all sides of the House on this question, I wonder whether Your Honour would ask if there is unanimous consent for this item to be brought to the top of the list and to be given second and third reading.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Perhaps the bill could be disposed of completely, after which we could get on with other business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): There is not unanimous consent.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA LABOUR (SAFETY) CODE

MEASURE TO INCLUDE SHIP REPAIR WORKERS, LONGSHOREMEN AND PORT WORKERS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw) moved that Bill C-27, to amend the Canada Labour (Safety) Code (marine workers), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill if accepted would amend the Canada Labour (Safety) Code and that part of the code especially applying to marine workers. This part of the code would read:

(c) 'federal work, undertaking or business' means a work, undertaking or business to which, in respect of employment thereupon or in connection with the operation thereof, this act applies and includes ship repair workers, longshoremen and all port workers when working on domestic or foreign registered vessels and domestic and foreign government vessels while in Canadian ports.

The new provision contains the wording, "and includes ship repair workers". That was my concern in bringing forward this amendment to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. It appears that in the case of ship repair workers there is a legislative no man's land. I understand that this is the case in Nova Scotia. It appears that the Nova Scotia Industrial Safety Act might well cover the point but that there is reluctance on the part of the province in implementing the law because of uncertainty regarding jurisdiction. Since there is this doubt, Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be best to present an amendment along the lines of this bill. I hope it will be referred to the standing committee for further study.

As a member of the House of Commons I am greatly concerned about the safety of workers throughout this country. It appears that ship repair workers are either not covered by the law or that the law applying to them presents jurisdictional difficulty. Over the years, when protesting against inadequate safety regulations on board naval, domestic or foreign ships at the dockside I have not been able to get the federal or provincial departments of labour, especially those parts of the department concerned with safety, to assume the responsibility that ought to have been assumed in this field.

It appears that there will not be any real concern with respect to jurisdiction for as long as the authorities do not assume responsibility. I suggest that somewhere along the line someone will have to assume responsibility in this field. Either provincial departments or the federal department will need to develop some standards relating to safety in the area I have mentioned. I understand that provincial inspectors exercise jurisdictions in the shipyards. That jurisdiction is doubtful in respect of dry docks, graving or floating docks as well as ships at the wharfside. In those cases we must ask who is responsible for implementing and enforcing these regulations that are so necessary for safety. If hon. members thought it more advisable to amend the Canada Shipping Act and thereby provide for the safety of these workers, I would have no objection to this course of action being taken. As hon. members know, I am not an expert in this field and anything along those lines that they deem to be appropriate I would willingly accept.

The main thrust of this amendment to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code is to clear up any possible no man's land in the field of legislation relating to the safety of Canadian shipworkers. If there is a no man's land in this area, it ought to be defined and omissions ought to be rectified. That there is in this area a type of no man's land as between federal and provincial authorities is demonstrated by the type of conciliation board report with regard to the eastern and western ports of the country that has just been handed in. There should be no disparity between federal and provincial regulations of this type. Any disparities between regulations affecting the eastern and western ports of the country will be removed very shortly, I hope.

May I refer to the jurisdiction which is exercised at present? It is a rule of thumb that any work done in the area of the dock, which comes within the area swept by the boom when unloading a ship, is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and the Canada Shipping Act. Any work done beyond this area is governed by the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. It appears that there is no precise definition of jurisdiction relating to the ship repair worker. This amendment may be of assistance because, if passed, the federal Department of Labour could consult with the provinces with a view to settling problems in this no man's land. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this would strengthen the position of the federal department inasmuch as at present longshoremen and dock workers are recognized as coming under the jurisdiction of the federal government. They come under the provincial regulations for purposes of compensation, etc. So far as ship repair workers are concerned, there appears to be a legislative no man's land. If accepted, this amendment could assist in clarifying the problem of jurisdiction.

I am sure everyone in this House is concerned to see that the people engaged in this area of endeavour are covered by some type of legislation. It is not enough to say that we do, or may, have legislation either federal or provincial which looks after ship repair workers. If this bill could be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour and Manpower, the committee could call witnesses from both federal and provincial government departments, examine the proposed amendment, determine whether or not there is any basis in fact for the concern I have expressed today and then, if it were considered necessary, make changes which would greatly benefit those affected.

I urge the government not to prolong this debate but to refer the subject to the committee I have suggested, in order that the committee itself may determine whether or not amendments should be made to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code as far as marine workers are concerned.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, try as we may, it seems to me we cannot get away from the constitutional dilemma in which we so often find ourselves. It is refreshing to see an hon. member on the other side of the House recognizing that we do live under a federal form of government and that we do encounter difficulties of the kind to which he referred.

I believe the legislature of Nova Scotia is to be commended for taking what might be called the first timid steps in the area affecting the safety of these workers. I compliment the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg on bringing forward this legislation. Whether 50 people or 50,000 are affected by it is not important; it is a means of calling attention to the fact that a portion of our working population may not have the protection, under the safety code, to which they are entitled. It should again be emphasized, though, that we do have a constitutional problem in this area, as in many others.

The hon. member saw fit to relate his amendment to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code with the idea of determining which measure would be the more appropriate. I would call attention to a booklet called "Planning for Safety" which is put out by the accident prevention and compensation branch of the Department of Labour. One of the paragraphs in this excellent brochure reads as follows:

> The Canada Labour (Safety) Code is an employment safety act which, subject to any other act of the Parliament of Canada, applies to all works, undertakings and businesses under federal jurisdiction. Through its circular 1968-54 the treasury board issued "Occupational Safety Policy—Public Service of Canada", whereby the principles enunciated by this act, as well as any regulations issued under its authority, may apply also to the public service of Canada.

The hon. member is asking the federal government to assume jurisdiction in this instance by accepting the proposed amendment. I welcome the opportunity to take part in a debate of this kind because the emphasis is placed where it should be placed, that is, on the safety of workers in Canadian industries whether they are employed in mining, the production or chemicals, marine undertakings or some other field.

As one who lived in northern Ontario for some time when my father was working underground for International Nickel, I recall that the theme at that time seemed to be "production first and safety second". Then, due in large measure to the fact that a union came into full effect in the mining industry in Sudbury and northern Ontario, the company took a second look at its position. Those concerned found to their surprise that by making safety the No. 1 priority, production improved. So any move which emphasizes the importance of safety is something we should be happy to support, particularly having regard to the publicity received by debate on almost any subject in the House of Commons.

It would be folly to suggest that consideration has not already been given to this problem. In fact, my research on the subject, limited as it was by the facilities and personnel available to me, turned up a considerable amount of information and illustrated the concern which both industry and government have shown for the safety of workers in industry. Indeed, I was surprised to find that such a large measure of concern was shown not only by labour but by management.

The subject of industrial safety seems at last to be getting the recognition it deserves. I doubt whether one can visit any factory or workshop in Canada today and not see signs drawing attention to the number of days which have elapsed involving loss of time, or drawing attention to the fact that a certain crew had the best accident-free record during the month. There was a time not so long ago when we did not see this interest taken in many industries. That position has now changed, due to the legislation which has been enacted and due, also, to the interest shown by the kind of amendment which the hon. member is proposing today.

It may be of interest to note that during my research into the area covered by the hon. member's bill I received a copy of the INCO "Triangle" containing a reference to Creighton Mine, Ontario, where I was born, some 12 miles out of Sudbury.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: An article in the magazine is headed: "The boys at Creighton have done it again—one million safe man-hours from October, 1970, to January 10, 1971." This, in itself, is significant. Even more significant is the fact that this is the twenty-fifth time since 1946 that this kind of recognition has gone to what are called here the "Creighton boys". This indicates the kind of co-operation and recognition that labour is giving in this field. I was interested to read that the Ontario division general manager, Mr. Johnny McCreedy—hockey enthusiasts will recognize this as being a famous name in hockey circles—had stated, with regard to the safety efforts of employees:

> This certainly attests to a fine co-operative effort on the part of the entire work force in safety in conjunction with a high level of production.

So there is something to be gained not only by workers but by management. I hope that all companies, particularly those engaged in the marine industry which we are discussing today, will take note of the statement made by Mr. McCreedy. Some underground workers have the idea that they are not working in a particularly safe place. As one who had an opportunity to work underground, I can tell the House I felt much safer working there than I did working on many construction enterprises. I do not know whether marine workers feel that their work is as dangerous as that of workers underground. I hope that the standards of safety set out in the bill will move every industry covered by the code, particularly the marine industry with which we are dealing today, to emulate the fine record to which I referred a few minutes ago.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I hope hon. members will not applaud for too long because I would like this bill to get to a vote if possible. I think the Canada Labour (Safety) Code should be concerned with the safety and health of workers engaged in the maritime industry.

As I have said, I do not think the hon. member has made a mistake in bringing his amendment under the aegis of this bill. Perhaps he had good advice from a member of the legal branch of the Department of Justice or from one of the officers of the Department of Justice, but I feel he has brought his amendment within the right area, and it is surely a matter that is within the aegis of the federal government's responsibilities. On our coasts we are dealing with international traffic, which is surely an area wherein the government might show some initiative in bringing in the kind of amendment suggested by the hon. member.

As I have said, it is very difficult for Members of Parliament to do much in the way of research work, in view of our limited facilities. Those of us who preach that we should have larger offices, executive assistants and the like do so not so much to make a small empire for ourselves as to better perform the services we were elected to carry out, namely, to conduct research on bills, particularly the sort of bill we are dealing with today. In the research I did I was able to find a paper or treatise—I am not sure of its proper appellation—prepared by Mr. A. A. Evans. It has to do with the ILO and is headed "Technical and Social Changes in the World's Ports". In chapter 8 of this work he refers specifically to safety and welfare and he has this to say:

> One of the new trends affecting dockers is the increasing attention paid to their safety and welfare.
> Safety and welfare considerations are embodied in some of the over-all new settlements—

It is incumbent upon union representatives to see that this kind of protection is afforded. If it is not provided by legislation, certainly it should be provided under settlements or agreements. This chapter continues:

> —on the United States Pacific coast both parties to the agreement have accepted a special safety code to supplement the federal regulations.

I do not wish to usurp the position of the government, but it must be recognized that there may be particular areas of expertise where unions and workers would have the kind of ability, intelligence and knowledge to supplement what federal legislation must deal with more or less on a universal basis. Mr. Evans continues:

> —the employer may choose methods of work and there is a proviso that "longshoremen shall not be required to work when in good faith they believe that to do so is immediately to endanger health and safety". In order that advantage should not be taken of this clause merely to obstruct work, the memorandum of agreement—

That refers to an agreement in 1960.

> —provides that "only in cases of bona fide health and safety issues may a standby be justified. The union pledges itself in good faith that health and safety will not be used as a gimmick".

I think this is the kind of message that, unhappily, the unions have not been able to get across to the general public. We only hear about the kind of work that is done in marine safety when it is highlighted in a message like this. Most of the time we hear about striking longshoremen, damage done to cargo, shipping that is held up and money lost. But here the union is obligating itself to act in good faith and not to use this particular section as a gimmick. Mr. Evans continues:

> In the settlement covering the St. Lawrence ports it is stipulated that employers and employees shall comply with the longshoring safety code, which contains improved safety regulations and which has become a part of the whole agreement enforceable by law.

On page 186 of his treaties, Mr. Evans has this to say about safety:

> The inland transport committee, in agreeing that it was desirable to accept new types of mechanical equipment, specified that they should be safe.

How many of us can remember that the sort of thing that used to be said was that some new machinery would be brought in but very little was said, if anything, about how safe the particular piece of equipment was. Here it is suggested that consideration should be given to making it safe. He continues:

> This points to the importance of examining thoroughly, with the help of experts, what new risks may arise when new methods of work and new equipment are being introduced. This should be standard procedure.

Those of us who are not particularly concerned with east or west coast ports may not be interested in this, but Sarnia is midway along the Seaway and has a fairly large number of ships passing through from Japan, Great Britain and other countries which I will not list because it would take too long to do so. Therefore, I have some concern for the safety of marine workers.

One of the matters about which we have heard lately is containers. From the little reading I have done, I understand that Halifax has taken the lead in this area, recognizing that it has to compete with the Seaway. As I say, from what I have read Halifax seems to have done very well by adopting containerization. Mr. Evans' treatise suggests that the use of containers will reduce the number of accidents for any given tonnage of cargo handled, if for no other reason than that the number of man-hours of exposure to risk will have been substantially reduced. He goes on to say:

> It is almost certain that the accident rate measured against the actual man-hours of exposure will also decrease, because dockers' accident statistics show that a high proportion of accidents occur while cargo is moved by hand.

This is an important subject and other hon. members wish to speak. There is still over half an hour before the end of private members' hour and I feel I have left them adequate time. I felt I should put on the record the point the hon. member is trying to make, namely, that this is an area of federal jurisdiction that should be highlighted through addresses in this chamber.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the comments of the previous speaker even though I could not relate them to the amendment before the House. I thank him for his kind words about containerization. The points he makes about safety on the docks and about containerization are very true. But those matters are not before us now. The difficulty that has been recognized by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) who introduced this amendment to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code is one of jurisdiction and the application of jurisdiction. In other words, it is a problem first of recognition and then of acceptance of responsibility.

In and around the docks and ports of this country a continuing debate has been raging for a long time as to who has jurisdiction, in what situation and under what circumstances. It is to this that I think the amendment is directed, and in recognition of the problem here on the floor of the House perhaps some progress has been made toward its resolution. Certainly this amendment would go a long way to eliminating once and for all the type of question that comes up when accidents occur in and around our docks.

The difficulties involved in accidents result from provincial jurisdiction. Many of these ports do not come within the federal purview. An injured individual has no recourse, because it is not spelled out either under provincial or federal law whose responsibility it is for the safety of these workers. There are all sorts of safety conditions laid down and they are spelled out in working agreements. This forms part of the philosophy and administration of ports operated by the National Harbours Board, cities, corporations and other port agencies. I suggest there is some difficulty in respect of national defence operations. This problem will not be solved as a result of the adoption of this amendment. This problem has been recognized. The hon. member has attempted to deal with it, and I hope the House will allow this matter to be referred to the committee in order that it may make recommendations to the government to accept responsibility and jurisdiction in this type of accident.

The comment I should like to make about this bill is that I am still not satisfied with the Canada Labour (Safety) Code because it does not effectively deal with accidents occurring in connection with vessels at military bases. I refer to military vessels tied up at a dockyard, a shipyard or at a military-controlled dock, port, pier or wharf. People working on these ships work under safety standards. They adhere to these standards. In my view federal jurisdiction should extend to accidents occurring in these areas. Men who are injured while working on these ships find themselves without recourse or redress under either federal or provincial legislation.

In the hope that this matter will proceed to the next stage, I suggest that safety standards be set rather than talked about. These safety standards should cover port workers, dock workers, longshoremen, freight handlers and others involved in this type of activity. There is a deficiency in our legislation now, and I hope hon. members will be courteous enough to allow this question to be debated by the committee so that the problem may be solved. This has been a problem since confederation. Something should be done so that marine workers at least have some recourse when an accident occurs.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all indebted to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) for raising this important matter. He has perhaps exposed to public view what one might call the ragged edge of jurisdiction over labour in this country. I am sure that hon. member was speaking with personal knowledge of some of the unsatisfactory conditions we face regarding jurisdiction over labour in Canada.

As I understand the governing rule of law, federal jurisdiction over matters of labour is sharply circumscribed by the provision which limits jurisdiction to matters clearly within the federal realm. I suppose in the broad sense this includes railways, telegraph and telephone companies as well as shipping. I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw will appreciate that the courts have interpreted the jurisdiction of the federal government in respect of labour on a very narrow basis. Even though the great railway companies of this country are subject to federal jurisdiction in respect of their main operations, it has been held by the courts that their hotels are not subject to federal labour laws.

Similar decisions have been made in respect of other federal operations which the ordinary person would think appear to be part and parcel of the whole sphere of federal jurisdiction. If I interpret the hon. member's speech correctly, his concern is principally in respect of people who carry out repair work on ships. He also includes longshoremen and port workers. Perhaps, as lawyers say, he has done this out of an abundance of caution, not to miss anybody. He, like myself, comes from the great province of Saskatchewan and perhaps we do not speak with a perfect knowledge of maritime operations.

The fact is that at the present time longshoremen working at the major ports in Canada are subject to federal labour laws. The longshoremen's unions of Montreal, Vancouver and elsewhere are subject to the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. The safety act as it is now worded applies to longshoremen. This is made clear also by some of the references made by my hon. friend and colleague from Sarnia, who referred to certain reports emanating principally from the port of Montreal, such as the Picard report which dealt extensively with port problems in Montreal. He referred also, I believe, to an agreement between longshore employers and employees at the port of Montreal which in a comprehensive way covers safety of operations. The same situation, I am sure, jurisdictionally applied in every major port in Canada. There can be no question that longshoring is a matter which falls under federal jurisdiction and therefore falls now within the ambit of this legislation.

One might wonder why anyone would question whether the other type of worker, the person employed by a shipyard who is brought on board to do repair and maintenance work, might not be covered, but this is part of the great legal conundrum which exists in our courts and in the interpretations which they have given to labour legislation. I make the serious suggestion to the House that we might encounter catastrophic consequences if we adopted the language proposed in this bill. I hold the view, and I believe it is a proper one, that following the decisions of the courts to which I have referred, it could be held that ship repair workers fall outside the ambit of federal jurisdiction, and were this Parliament to attempt to include them specifically in the legislation we might be faced with the possibility of some court, in its wisdom, some day saying that all the legislation is bad.

In my judgment—and in this I share the views expressed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—this is an area of our life in Canada which merits serious and careful consideration. I refer to the area where federal and provincial labour legislation meet. I believe the hon. member for Moose Jaw, with his great experience in these matters, would be prepared to agree with me that questions of governmental jurisdiction and conflict between governments are sometimes exacerbated and exaggerated by the jurisdictional postures of different unions which may have been established under either federal or provincial aegis. In some circumstances where I have had experience in this field I have found that the situation is immensely complicated. In this type of situation it has always appeared to me there is a necessity for agreement among unions and among employers before one can go to governments for a solution.

In a way, what the hon. member for Moose Jaw is requesting here is not so much an amendment to an important statute but, rather, an attempt to have Parliament make a constitutional declaration concerning the type of workmen who are included within the ambit of federal and provincial labour legislation. I suggest this is an extremely dangerous course to follow. This interpretation of the hon. member's bill was impressed upon me when I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. It seemed to me he spoke very little about the bill or about the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. He was concerned about workmen's compensation, which of course is something not dealt with in this statute.

Whether or not a workman who is injured in the course of his work in a shipyard is covered by the federal or provincial workmen's compensation laws is something which is determined easily in this part of the world and, I should have hoped, elsewhere. But by making this type of entry in the safety code we make no contribution to the solution of that problem.

Mr. Skoberg: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Blair: Certainly.

Mr. Skoberg: I am wondering whether the hon. gentleman realizes that today neither the federal nor provincial authorities know which way they are going in respect of this area. In my remarks I suggested this bill be considered in committee so that the federal and provincial people could come to an understanding which would benefit the shipworkers to whom I referred and so things would be better all around.

I ask the hon. gentleman whether he would agree that workers in all fields of provincial and federal regulation are covered under the Canada Labour (Safety) Code except ship repair workers.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, in response to my hon. friend I think it is important for a determination to be made concerning whether, first of all, this important working group is covered by any safety legislation and, if so, whether it is that of the federal or provincial governments. I hate to expose myself to a wrong interpretation of what I am saying or thinking, but I do not think the proposal in this type of a measure is the best forum for the consideration of this rather complicated problem. I am not sure, from what my hon. friend said, whether or not the problem is uniform across the country. I have forgotten what little I did know about the ports at Vancouver and Montreal, but it was not my impression that that kind of legislative and administrative vacuum existed there. It may well turn out that this is a problem, as I believe my hon. friend suggested, peculiar to one province and one area, which province now has a new government which hopefully can resolve many of these complicated matters.

Having made these comments about the bill proposed by the hon. member, and having to the best of my ability explained why I think it is dangerous for us to proceed with it because I believe we are working toward a point where we might expose the whole legislation to the hazard of disallowance, I should like to say a word about safety legislation in general. This is new legislation that was first enacted in the session of 1966-67. It cut across a lot of existing legislation because, as hon. members are aware, all these federal activities be they in railways, shipping, aviation, telephones or telegraph have long been regulated by other statutes.

One of the problems that the safety legislation created was in respect of new rules and regulations which sometimes cut across or added to the responsibilities piled on these enterprises by the older legislation. There has been a difficult period of digestion in the working out of regulations under the new law and applying them to existing industries which were well regulated under the old laws. That is another reason why at this reasonably early stage in the history of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code it would be highly inadvisable to consider an addition which might have far reaching consequences in terms of the operation of the legislation.

But again I think we must feel indebted to the hon. member for Moose Jaw for raising this point. I would suggest to him, as he might well suggest to me, that perhaps one useful approach to this question of jurisdiction on the margin of labour operations in Canada might be considered by the important unions which are concerned with it. They are the people who live under whatever laws are prescribed, and I fail to see how new rules can be made unless they recognize the position of existing unions and the rights they have acquired under present legislation.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to commend the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) for his interest in the welfare of ship repair workers, longshoremen and all port workers. I come from one of the great port cities of Canada and although it may be difficult for some hon. members to believe, I am a former ship repair worker. I have spent a considerable time in the yards and have some scars to prove it. I want to assure hon. members that this is a high-hazard occupation. I have paid for many months of my education by working in the shipyard, and many of my chums were severely injured during the time I worked with them. I remember one young man, who was a brilliant student, working in the shipyards of North Vancouver. He was a fine concert violinist. I talked to him one morning and that afternoon he was unconscious and crippled for life. This happened to many of my chums.

I say in all sincerity that there is no doubt whatsoever that ship repair workers who are in a high-hazard occupation deserve all the protection which the law can accord them. We are not in disagreement on this point. The concern about these workers is shared by members on the government side. However, there are difficulties here which I am sure were not apparent to the hon. member when he brought this measure to the House in all sincerity, and I know he brought it in with a determination to help these workers. The intention of the hon. member's bill is to expand the present definition of "federal work, undertaking or business" under section 2(c) of the safety code to include "ship repair workers, longshoremen and all port workers when working on domestic or foreign registered vessels while in Canadian ports".

Regardless of the commendable motives of the bill, as was pointed out earlier by one of my colleagues on this side of the House, it contains an essential defect. The defect is of a constitutional nature. Shipbuilding and ship repairing, as opposed to shipping, are generally not within the legislative authority of Parliament. The amendment, therefore, appears to be clearly ultra vires of Parliament. And for those hon. members who suspect that this is an excuse being offered by government members because of their unwillingness to take what would be unconstitutional action, I quote from the ultimate authority, Laskin in "Canadian Constitutional Law", third edition, 1969, which fairly sets out Parliament's authority in the field of labour relations. I quote from page 434 as follows:

> In the field of employer-employee and labour management relations, the division of authority between parliament and provincial legislature is based on an initial conclusion that in so far as such relations have an independent constitutional value they are within provincial competence; and, secondly, in so far as they are merely a facet of particular industries or enterprises their regulation is within the legislative authority of that body which has power to regulate the particular industry or enterprise.

Then a number of precedents are cited. I think this is a particularly relevant quotation from Laskin. Further on it says:

> It followed from the Privy Council's position and from its view of the scope of the trade and commerce power that Parliament could not enact general regulatory labour relations measures even with respect to industries or enterprises having interprovincial ramifications. Regulatory control on a federal level could be exerted only in respect of activities which were within federal authority by specific enumerations, e.g., interprovincial railways, telegraph and telephone operations and shipping.

So the dilemma exists here that while the hon. member's proposal is good and sound, and undoubtedly action should be taken to determine the adequacy of present coverage for ship repair workers and no delay should be countenanced in arriving at this determination, the fact remains that Parliament has confined the application of its labour legislation to industries and enterprises which are clearly within its jurisdiction on the basis of such decisions as referred to by Laskin, the constitutional authority.

As far as the present proposal is concerned, shipbuilding and ship repairing only come under federal jurisdiction when companies which by way of their shipping activity are subject to the Canada Labour (Safety) Code utilize their own ships' crews and employees for repair and maintenance of their ships.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order.

I hope hon. members will have an enjoyable weekend and will be safety conscious, especially in crossing the streets of Ottawa and climbing the snowbanks.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—SITTING OF STANDING COMMITTEES WHILE GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. Speaker: On Tuesday, February 16 last, the hon. member for St. John's East raised a question concerning the regularity or the propriety of a Committee of the Whole sitting when a number of standing committees were scheduled to meet. The following day, Wednesday, February 17, the hon. member raised a similar question but that time as a point of privilege.

While not accepting the hon. member's proposition as a question of privilege, the Chair recognized that there was some difficulty and assured the House that further and continuing study would be given to the situation. In particular, it was proposed that the procedural difficulty be considered by the House Leaders. It is my hope that these hon. gentlemen will be available for such a meeting within the next few hours, perhaps, or at least the next few days.

In the comparatively brief period at my disposal I have endeavoured to review the practice of the House in respect of concurrent sittings of the House or Committees of the Whole with standing or special committees. Up to this moment I have been able to consider, in some detail, every regular session of our Parliament back to 1952, and there has been little difficulty in establishing that Committees of the Whole and standing committees have in fact sat concurrently throughout those years.

I do not suggest the House should presume that such conditions were unopposed. Senior members of the House will vouch for the fact that strong positions were taken and many hours were spent over the years in objecting to such meetings on the very same grounds as have been recently advanced particularly by the hon. member for St. John's East. It would seem that this practice, rightly or wrongly, has been confirmed by the recent revision of the Standing Orders of the House. I suggest that the condition has been accentuated by the unanimous order of the House referring the government reorganization bill to a Committee of the Whole House. While that bill is an omnibus bill the Standing Orders do not provide for the consideration of such a bill in Committee of the Whole except by order of the House.

While it is apparent that it may not have been appropriate to send that bill to a standing committee, it would not have been inappropriate to establish a special committee to which it could have been referred. It seems to me that sections 1 and 2 of Standing Order 74 contemplate such a procedure, and had that procedure been observed the present difficulty would not have arisen. It might be of interest if I were to refer to Standing Order 81 of the British House as printed at page 1084 of May's 17th edition. It reads as follows:

> All committees, other than committees of the whole House, shall have leave to sit at any time on any day on which the House sits, but may not otherwise sit during any adjournment of the House, without the leave of the House, and such leave shall not be moved for without notice.

That Standing Order of the British House indicates that our own long-standing practice is not unique and not at variance with the practice in other Parliaments, in particular at Westminster. It is of interest to note, however, that in the British House proceedings in standing committees are interrupted in order to allow members to participate in divisions in the Committee of the Whole.

This brings me to consider the objection voiced by the hon. members for Edmonton West and Calgary North to the effect that when a Committee of the Whole is sitting members in attendance at standing committees receive no warning of impending votes as is the case when the Speaker is in the chair. The difficulty is solved in the British House by the practice of interrupting proceedings in a standing committee so that members can proceed to the House to participate in a division called in Committee of the Whole. Our own revised rules provide for deferred votes at the report stage of a bill, presumably to eliminate the possibility of frequent interruptions of standing committees. It may well be that our rules should be further amended to establish a similar procedure for votes which might be called in Committee of the Whole or possibly to establish a practice similar to that which exists at Westminster.

With respect to the interruption of proceedings in standing committees, these are possibilities which should be considered by hon. members and in particular by the House Leaders on behalf of their respective parties. The difficulty might well be considered also by the Committee on Procedure and Organization. While, as I have stated on two or three occasions last week, there appears to be a difficulty when there is a prolonged consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole, it does seem to me that situation is not in conflict with our existing practice or with the provisions of our Standing Orders and that the difficulty is not one which can be considered under the heading of parliamentary privilege.

It is, I suggest respectfully to hon. members, the kind of difficulty or problem which might rather be considered by the representatives of the parties in the House who I am sure are anxious to find a common ground to ensure the orderly flow of the legislative process in the House. That is why I took the initiative in suggesting a meeting between the representatives of all parties. It is my hope this meeting can take place soon and that it will have some broad and helpful results.

HEALTH

STATEMENT ON REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DENTAL AUXILIARIES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to announce to the House that the report of the ad hoc committee on dental auxiliaries has now been received.

The ad hoc committee was established in June, 1968, by the previous Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, with the full co-operation of the Canadian Dental Association. Its terms of reference were to study all aspects of dental auxiliaries, with special emphasis on the possible contribution that auxiliaries could make in helping to achieve better dental health for the Canadian public. The chairman of the committee was the Hon. Dalton C. Wells, Chief Justice of the High Court of Ontario who is in the Speaker's gallery today, and I would like to acknowledge his presence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro: The report contains 43 recommendations. The first 21 cover such areas as the qualifications of dental assistants, hygienists and technicians, their training, education and experience, and a wide range of more responsible duties to enable them to contribute more effectively to the dental health care requirement.

The report also recommends that each province pass legislation regulating dental auxiliaries, and that provincial boards be established to administer these acts.

A national dental program for children is also recommended. Such a program would incorporate prevention, education and treatment beginning with younger children and annually encompassing new age groups up to school leaving age.

The committee also calls upon the federal and provincial governments to devise incentives for dentists to develop the team approach to dentistry with support from dental auxiliaries, and for the governments to provide funds for training, research and facilities, and recommends that dental care in its broadest sense be offered to all Canadians incorporating the same principles of quality control and financing as medical care.

The recommendations contained in this report will be studied most closely by my department. Implementation of the report is of considerable consequence to the dental health of all Canadians. Copies of this report are available from my office. Again, may I on behalf of the House indicate our appreciation to the Hon. Dalton Wells and his committee for an excellent report.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I understood that a report was to be tabled today and I thought it would be tabled under the appropriate Standing Order, 41 (2). I am not taking exception to the procedure adopted by the minister, but we will reserve any comment with regard to the value of this report until we have examined it. I simply call to the attention of the Chair that this is the kind of report which should be tabled without comment. It speaks for itself. If, on the other hand, a statement is to be made, then I think that opposition parties should receive a copy of the report beforehand so they can discuss it fairly and intelligently. The minister usually does this, but I point this out because, as I say, in the past there have been abuses under this Standing Order and I think the government should be very careful as to its procedure in this regard.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, the Minister of National Health and Welfare usually obliges us with copies of statements he is going to make on motions. Therefore I suppose we should not castigate him too severely today. But I do suggest he return to the normal practice. I have no objection to the report being tabled—the purpose of tabling is to make such documents public—but we think it would be well to advise the opposition parties in advance. Having listened to the brief statement the minister made, I want to underline in particular the recommendation that dental care for Canadians be put on at least the same basis as medical care. I hope that implementation of this recommendation will soon take place.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PATENT ACT—APPLICATIONS COVERING PATENTED DRUGS

Question No. 41—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What applications have been received under the revised Patent Act for licences from the Patent Commissioner to manufacture or import and sell patented drugs, up to October 1, 1970?

2. What applications have been approved or refused by the Patent Commissioner?

3. What reasons were given for those drug patent applications that have been rejected?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Up to October 1, 1970 the Commissioner of Patents has received 85 applications for licences under Section 41(4) of the revised Patent Act, of which five are applications to manufacture and sell, 52 are applications to import and sell, and 28 are applications to both manufacture and import and sell patented drugs. These applications are for licences under 120 patents covering 33 drugs.

2. The Commissioner has approved and issued licences on 44 applications, to the following companies: S & U Chemicals Limited, Toronto, Ontario, 21 licences; Novopharm Limited, Scarborough, Ontario, nine licences; Sterilab Corporation Limited, Rexdale, Ontario, four licences; Micro Chemicals Limited, Toronto, Ontario, two licences; Mowatt & Moore Ltd., Pointe Claire, Quebec, two licences; Neo Drug Company, Montreal, Quebec, two licences; Frank W. Horner Limited, Montreal, Quebec, one licence; Laboratoire Medic Ltée, Ville de Laval, Quebec, one licence; Compagnie, Pharmaceutique Vita Ltée, St. Romuald, Quebec, one licence; Trans-Canada Dermapeutics Ltd., Montreal, Quebec, one licence.

3. The Commissioner, on December 10, 1969, refused to grant to Sterilab Corporation Limited of Rexdale, Ontario, a licence to import and sell the drug Hydrocortisone Sodium Succinate under a patent owned by the Upjohn Company, for the reason that the application failed to meet the statutory requirements. Sterilab later filed a new, corrected application, which was accepted, and a licence was issued to them on April 24, 1970.

REGULATIONS COVERING STORAGE AND LABELLING OF FOOD

Question No. 565—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to the request of the Consumers' Association of Canada to establish bacteriological standards and to implement regulations regarding the storage of meat, fish, poultry and their products and to develop a system of labelling to provide consumers, at the point of purchase, information as to whether the product has been previously frozen?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: Regulations under the Food and Drugs Act have been enacted which govern the bacteriological quality of certain dairy, fish, meat and egg products. Steps now are being taken to extend these regulations to cover additional foods, including frozen foods. Yes. A labelling system which would advise consumers at the point of sale that thawed foods had been previously frozen is under consideration, but there are difficult technical problems to be overcome.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—FEMALE LETTER CARRIERS

Question No. 634—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How many female letter carriers are presently employed by the Post Office Department?

2. How many have applied for such positions?

3. Who is the highest ranking officer in the Post Office Department of the female sex?

4. By district, how many (a) males (b) females are currently employed in the Post Office Department?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): 1. Thirty-two.

2. In some instances applications are made direct to the local Canada Manpower Centre, others direct to the Post Office Department where the Canada Manpower Centre is unable to provide recruitment service. We do not maintain records on the sex of those applying in letter carrier competitions, therefore we are unable to provide complete and accurate data in order to answer this question.

3. Rosemarie Hanel, C.S. 2.

Questions

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITY OF ST-CAMILLE, BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 694—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each year since 1968, what departments or agencies have granted loans to the municipality of St-Camille in the constituency of Bellechasse (a) for what purpose were these loans granted (b) what was the amount of each (c) what was the rate of interest (d) what was the duration of the loan and what are the terms of reimbursement?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am advised as follows: 1. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in 1970, approved a loan to the municipality of St. Camille, Bellechasse County, (a) for a sewage treatment project, (b) in the amount of $90,000, (c) at an interest rate of 8¼ percent, (d) for a term of 40 years. Under Section 36G of the National Housing Act, 25 per cent of the principal amount of the loan, and 25 per cent of the interest on the loan accrued to the date of completion of the project will be forgiven.

FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE POLICY

Question No. 777—Mr. Southam:

1. Has the government made any determination yet on its Feed Freight Assistance Policy, i.e., whether it will be increased, decreased or left as is?

2. When will such policy decision be announced?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. As was announced last Spring the rates of freight assistance now in effect will continue through the end of this fiscal year. The program is now being reviewed and plans for the 1971-72 program are being prepared.

2. It is expected that the rates of freight subsidy for the 1971-72 fiscal year will be made known before April 1.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONSIDERATION OF UNIONS IN MILITARY FORCES

Question No. 780—Mr. McCleave:

1. Has the Department of National Defence made studies about the existence of military unions in (a) Norway (b) West Germany (c) Sweden (d) Austria (e) Denmark?

2. Is the government or the Department prepared to give recognition to similar unions if established in Canada and, if so, what of the following subjects would be considered a legitimate part of the collective bargaining process (a) pay, including its relationship to civilian pay (b) benefits paid upon severance of engagement (c) the right to strike (d) determination of disciplinary measures (e) rights of those below the officer level to advance to same (f) facilities for adult education (g) pensions (h) political activity and/or political candidacy at federal, provincial or municipal levels (i) the determination of the union to represent the military (j) uniform allowances (k) hirsute appearances and other cosmetic factors (l) options as to uniform?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. No consideration has been given to unions in the military forces.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. CLYDE SANGER

Question No. 788—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has Mr. Clyde Sanger been appointed as Communications Adviser to the Canadian International Development Agency and, if so, what are his duties, salary and expense allowances?

2. Is Mr. Cranford Pratt an adviser to CIDA and, if so, what are his duties, salary and expense allowances?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Mr. Clyde Sanger is a self-employed person engaged with the Canadian International Development Agency under the Government Contract Regulations as Special Adviser on Communications. His salary is $18,000 per annum. There have been no expenses to date. There is provision in the contract to pay travel expenses in accordance with the Treasury Board Travel Directive.

Hereunder is a statement of duties performed by Mr. Sanger: Under the direction of the President: To carry out research and prepare materials for presentations to Committees of the House of Commons and the Senate, as well as briefs and submissions to national and international bodies which are concerned with aspects of international development; to conduct research in connection with important policy statements and speeches for Ministers and senior officers which involve specialized research; to prepare material for seminars relating to international development which require senior level participation and ensuring that appropriate CIDA representation is provided with researched documentation; to provide advice and assistance to the President and senior management during the period of reorganizing and developing the Information Division of CIDA in respect of certain aspects of the Information role and supplement the existing capability of the Information Division; to assist senior management in the conduct and maintenance of relationships within and outside Government in the preparation and distribution of related materials for special public bodies, e.g., Members of the House of Commons, The Senate and various other Government Departments as well as for other organizations and agencies with a special interest in the development field; to advise and assist on special projects in relation to the field of communications.

NATIONAL REVENUE—TAX PAYABLE THROUGH PERSONAL INCOME TAX

Question No. 832—Mr. Simpson:

What was the total amount of revenue received through personal income tax from each of the ten provinces for each year 1960 to 1969 inclusive?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Tax collection figures by provinces are not available for 1969. The attached table, derived from the annual statistical analysis of the tax returns filed by individuals, indicates the total tax payable by individuals in each province for the years 1960 to 1968, as shown on federal tax returns. The tax payable includes federal income and old age security tax throughout, and for 1962 and subsequent years includes provincial income tax which is collected on behalf of all provinces except Quebec. The tax levied by Quebec province is excluded.

HISTORIC SITES—DESIGNATION OF PROVINCE HOUSE, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 866—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have requests been received for the designation of Province House, Charlottetown, P.E.I. as a national historic shrine and, if so, from what individuals or organizations were such requests or suggestions received, and what is the date of each?

2. What is the response of the Government of Canada to such requests?

3. In what other provinces has the building containing the meeting place of the provincial legislature been turned over to the Government of Canada?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, recently two written representations have been received, one from the Prince Edward Island Tourist Association dated December 10, 1970 and the other from the Cavendish Tourist Association dated December 17, 1970.

2. The Minister declared Province House to be of national historic significance on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada at its October 1966 meeting. The possibility of the Department taking an active part in the restoration and interpretation of Province House is under discussion with the Provincial Government of P.E.I.

3. None.

FISH SANCTUARIES

Question No. 870—Mr. Robinson:

How many fish sanctuaries are there in Canada (a) where is each located (b) what is the size of each (c) what species of fish are protected in each (d) how much is the cost to the federal government to maintain each sanctuary?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): None, but there are hundreds of areas throughout Canada where various species of fish are protected at one or all stages of their life history, usually to ensure adequate propagation to maintain the species. These areas are located on rivers, lakes and in the sea, and can be found listed in the Manual of Fisheries Acts and Regulations under the various Provinces' fishery regulations. Some areas protect fish only from commercial fishing, while others allow no fishing of any type. Species protected in these sanctuaries, or "closed areas" range from marine to anadromous to freshwater species and include halibut, herring, Atlantic salmon, Pacific salmon, whitefish, lake trout, etc. The size of these closed areas varies greatly and their boundaries are detailed in the manual mentioned previously.

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—DEMOLITION OF GREENHOUSE

Question No. 883—Mr. Sulatycky:

1. What was the cost of demolishing the greenhouses in Banff National Park?

2. Were tenders called for the dismantling and removal of these structures and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $927.84 including equipment usage.

2. Tenders were not called as there was no salvage value and it was more economical to have the Parks Staff do the actual demolition.

FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 889—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What was the total paid by the government in subsidies for the transportation of grain during the years 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970 in the Provinces of (a) Quebec (b) Ontario (c) New Brunswick (d) Nova Scotia (e) Prince Edward Island (f) Newfoundland?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Expenditures under the Feed Freight Assistance Program in these five years have been:

Fiscal year ended March 31st	1966	1967	1968	1969	1970
(a) Quebec	9,310,598	9,747,283	9,835,701	8,425,816	9,438,200

*REVIEW OF CHARTER OF UNITED NATIONS

Question No. 900—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Does the government support the concept that a review of the Charter of the United Nations is necessary?

2. Did Canada support the initiative taken by eight governments at the last session of the General Assembly directed toward that end?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reply to this question is rather lengthy and I wonder if the House would agree that it be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer follows:]

1. A basic premise of Canada's foreign policy, as noted in the recent review, is to continue to work actively to make the United Nations a more effective instrument for international cooperation, and to ensure, in this context, that it can meet its responsibilities. Some suggest that, to achieve this end, a review of the Charter is necessary on the grounds that the Charter is now 25 years old, that conditions have changed greatly since it was drawn up, and that there are serious indications that the United Nations has not adequately met its central purpose of maintaining international peace and security. Others maintain that there is little evidence that the Charter itself has limited the scope for co-operation among states, that in fact it has adapted rather well to changing conditions, and that there is opportunity for further change within the existing framework. This argument suggests that the United Nations can be made more dynamic without actually rewriting the Charter, and that the effectiveness of the UN depends not upon changing the basic structure of the Organization so much as upon the political resolve of the member states to fulfil the obligations and the responsibilities each has undertaken in agreeing to abide by the provisions of the 1945 Charter. In short, the effectiveness of the United Nations is directly dependent on the political will of its members.

The Canadian Government is quite prepared to give serious consideration to all specific constructive proposals for the revision of certain provisions of the Charter, if a majority of the membership considers this would be useful. However, for such a review to be successful, it is mandatory that the permanent members of the Security Council and particularly both the United States and the Soviet Union, support the idea. At present there is little evidence to suggest that such agreement exists for a review at this time. In the interim, we consider that changes can be made within the existing framework to render the UN more effective. To this end we have supported the establishment of the Special Committee of 31 to make recommendations on rationalizing procedures in the General Assembly. We have also supported the efforts to further develop and codify international legal principles such as those relating to friendly relations and cooperation among states, and we are working within the Peacekeeping Committee to achieve agreement on ways of enabling the United Nations to act more effectively in dealing with peacekeeping situations.

2. At the Twenty-fifth Session of the General Assembly Canada voted in favour of a resolution, co-sponsored by Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Haiti, Japan, Liberia, and the Philippines which decided to include an item on the agenda of the assembly session to be held in late 1972 entitled, "Need to consider suggestions regarding the review of the Charter of the United Nations".

REGIONAL DESKS IN THE PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 913—Mr. Peddle:

1. How many Regional Desks are associated with the Prime Ministers' Office?

2. What is the name of the individual who heads each desk and his salary?

3. What regions do such desks represent?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. Four.

2.	Salary Range
Gilles Dufault	$10,000-12,500
Jean Haché	$10,000-12,500
Colin Kenny	$10,000-12,500
David Thomson	$17,500-20,000

3. Quebec, Atlantic, Ontario and Western Canada.

CROP INSURANCE ACT—PAYMENTS FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY HAIL

Question No. 935—Mr. Laprise:

Under the Crop Insurance Act, what amount has been paid each year to each province for damages caused by hail since the Act was passed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Under the comprehensive coverage provided by agreements with the provinces made under authority of the Crop Insurance Act indemnities are paid on the basis of final crop yields which can be, and frequently are, affected by more than one cause of crop loss and it would be most difficult, if not impossible, to segregate the amounts paid in respect of any one cause of reduced yields.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—EDUCATION COSTS IN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 742—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. What was the total amount of money spent by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in federally operated schools and vocational training institutions for the education of residents of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories for the past five years and, what is the breakdown for each year?

2. What percentage of the total Northern Economic Development Branch budget do the above educational expenditures account represent?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE SALE OF HELICOPTERS BY GREAT BRITAIN TO SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns today's announcement by his British counterpart, Foreign Secretary Home, regarding the issuance of export licences for the sale to South Africa of seven Wasp helicopters. Considering the degree to which arms sales to South Africa have been discussed between the British and the Canadian governments bilaterally and at Singapore, can the minister advise if the Canadian government was notified of this British move and, if so, is it the government's view that such action is in accord with the Singapore communiqué?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government was not advised in advance of the statement made by Sir Alec Douglas-Home in the British House of Commons. My only comment is that the statement, as it has been reported, is in accordance with British policy which has never been changed. It has been our view, and it continues to be, that the supplying of arms to South Africa will not promote the strength and the unity of the Commonwealth and we hope that the British government, notwithstanding the statement made, will not proceed.

Mr. Macquarrie: Considering that Canada is a member of the arms committee formed at Singapore, and in light of our past protestations, can the minister advise if within that committee Canada will take some initiative in respect of further sales of helicopters inasmuch as Mr. Home believes they have a commitment with respect to the first seven?

Mr. Sharp: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there have been no sales of helicopters by Britain to South Africa. The statement made by Sir Alec Douglas-Home, as reported to me, is that Britain would allow the export of Wasp helicopters if the South African government placed orders for them, but no orders have yet been placed. As far as the committee is concerned, it is true that Canada is a member of a committee to discuss the security of the Indian Ocean, and we would hope to have an active and useful role in that committee. I should add, however, that the British government never did say it would withhold action on the sale of arms to South Africa because of the formation of the committee.

POLLUTION

THREAT POSED BY TANKER TRANSPORT OF OIL FROM VALDEZ, ALASKA, TO CHERRY POINT, WASHINGTON—POSSIBLE MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that this past weekend at Blaine Peace Arch a large number of Canadians and Americans voiced their concern over west coast oil pollution flowing from the proposed tanker route from Alaska to Cherry Point, Washington, is the government making official representations to Washington requesting full consultation before further plans are proceeded with?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House the other day, I have already invited the Secretary of State of the United States to consult with us on this question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I realize that as this is an international problem the minister's initiatives are somewhat limited, but is he prepared to go as far as his high office will allow to assert and reassert forcefully whatever initiatives are open to Canada in this very important matter?

Mr. Sharp: We have no dispute with the United States government at the present time. No decision has been made to authorize the building of the trans-Alaska pipeline system. As I have said in the House, and I repeat it, I hope that all those concerned about the dangers of pollution, as I am and as the Canadian government is, will raise their voices quite clearly so that the decision by the board that is now examining the question can be made in light of these environmental considerations. It would not be appropriate at the present time for me to do more than consult with the United States government about any problems that may arise in the future.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, in view of what the minister has just said, that we should make our representations known, is the government again making representations rather than inviting consultation? Are the minister and his department making representations in this regard?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said previously in the House, a United States government board is holding hearings now on the question of whether the trans-Alaska pipeline project should go ahead. It would not be appropriate for the Canadian government to appear before such a United States body. A member of this House has appeared in his private capacity and in my view has made a most useful intervention. But I do believe it is important that all of those concerned, particularly the people affected in the state of Washington and in the province of British Columbia, should make their views about this question known so that at least this decision is made in the full knowledge of the very serious dangers of pollution that exist. I have no hesitation in saying on behalf of the Canadian government that we believe there are serious dangers of pollution.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Having regard to the delay in proceeding with the trans-Alaska pipeline system, may I ask whether any pressure has been brought to bear upon the Canadian government by United States oil companies for the building of a pipeline down the Mackenzie River Valley?

Mr. Sharp: No, I do not know of any pressure from United States oil companies. As the hon. member is aware, there has been discussion between the Canadian and United States governments on the subject of an oil policy and at that time there was some talk about whether the pipeline should be continued on to supply Montreal.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to know whether the Secretary of State has received a reply to his letter of last Wednesday, I believe, to the United States Secretary of State on this question.

Mr. Sharp: We have not yet received a formal reply in writing but when my message was transmitted to the Secretary of State there were some informal soundings.

Mr. Harding: I have a further supplementary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When may we expect the results of the feasibility study being undertaken in connection with the projected Mackenzie Valley pipeline?

Mr. Sharp: I suggest that question should be directed to the minister directly concerned with these matters, namely, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who I expect will be here within the next day or so.

[Later:]

CANADIAN POSITION ON CONTINENTAL ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which really is supplementary to an earlier round of questions. Since it has been suggested by Robert Clark of the United States Bureau of Commercial Fisheries that our oil pollution problem could be solved by a United States-Canada energy policy, has the government yet made clear to the United States Canada's position on a continental energy policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on other occasions, we are not discussing a continental energy policy. However, I think the hon. gentleman will agree that in so far as we have our own policies we should try to co-ordinate them for the mutual benefit of both countries.

GRAIN

FAILURE OF INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE TO REACH PRICE AGREEMENT—GUARANTEED MINIMUM DOMESTIC AND EXPORT PRICES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Since the international wheat trade conference failed to agree upon a minimum price structure, thus establishing a free market and prolonging the uncertainty in the Canadian grain industry, can the minister tell us what initiatives the government is considering toward setting up an equitable guaranteed minimum scale of prices for Canadian grain, both for domestic and export consumption?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I have said a number of times in the House during the last ten days, nothing very much has changed as a result of what was done during this particular stage of the discussions. We shall be watching with interest the possibility of pricing talks being reconvened under the jurisdiction of the wheat council.

Mr. Mazankowski: Bearing in mind the desperately low incomes of western farmers, can the minister tell us whether consideration is being given at the present time to increasing the domestic price level of wheat to a figure in the order of $3 a bushel?

Mr. Lang: There are, of course, a number of issues before us as a government in the form of our proposals affecting grain. But I think the most immediately useful thing we could do would be to get the legislation into the House and proceed to implement the stabilization program and other things of that sort.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate to the House what the government intends to do to alleviate the hard-pressed position of Alberta's 65,000 farmers who in 1970 recorded an average net income of only $1,325?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

TIME OF PAYMENTS TO FARMERS UNDER STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement in answer to a question on a televised program yesterday that the government might well come forward with a payment of $100 million in respect of the stabilization program earlier than the end of the current crop year, can he inform the House as to the approximate time of such a payment? Will it be prior to seeding or June 1?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what was said earlier on this subject in the House. I would envisage that it would depend on the specific provisions of the legislation, which of course is not yet before the House. Therefore I doubt that there would be any possibility of this happening before seeding.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's dilemma, but in view of the statement by the minister on the same program about the possibility—

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask questions of ministers about statements made outside the House. He should ask his question directly if he seeks information from the minister at this time.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question. Will it be possible, earlier than the end of the current crop year, to make a payment on the basis of the plans set out in the cereal grains stabilization program, or are other methods being considered which will make earlier payment possible?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that whole question is being considered.

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF LIFT PROGRAM IN NEXT CROP YEAR

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. Is the minister planning the continuation of the Lift program in the next crop year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Lift program, which was designed as a one-year program specifically to avoid the difficulties associated with such a program extending for a number of years, succeeded fairly well in attacking part of the inventory problem in regard to wheat. There is no intention to continue it.

Mr. Moore: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see that a number of hon. members apparently wish to seek the floor to ask supplementary questions on this subject. May I caution hon. members that we ought to go to another subject soon. For the moment, however, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister what advice grain growers are to be given this year in regard to what they should or should not grow?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to refer the hon. member to the statement I made in the House on October 28 or 29 and to indicate to him that I have nothing further to add at this stage, although we may have some elaboration before long.

GRASSLAND INCENTIVE PROGRAM—ON-FARM INSPECTION PRIOR TO PAYMENTS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is in charge of the Wheat Board. In connection with the grassland incentive program announced by the minister today, will applications for payments be subject to on-the-farm inspections by PFAA?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the expected procedure is that half of the $10 payment will be made at the time of the completed application and the other half of the payment will be made one year later after there has been opportunity for inspection.

USE OF TREASURY FUNDS BY UNITED STATES TO MAKE WHEAT COMPETITIVE—CANADIAN ACTION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report from the Geneva International Wheat Conference that the United States will use its government treasury to ensure that United States wheat is competitive, can the Prime Minister say whether Canadian producers can expect the same consideration from the Canadian treasury in order to ensure that we obtain our share of the world market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is purely speculative. There is no indication that this will happen. So far as the Canadian treasury is concerned, it does support to a considerable extent the Canadian wheat grower.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Skoberg: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister suggested that the premise of the question was purely speculative. This is a report from the Geneva conference by one of the United States delegates.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

TRADE

ACTION TO INCREASE EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the sharp falling off in export sales so far this year, is the government planning a massive trade drive to increase exports, particularly of manufactured products which, as the Prime Minister knows, are labour intensive and very much needed to provide additional job opportunities at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the hon. member back from the Bugaboos if I were not afraid that the opposition might think it was an obscene word and ask what it is. With regard to the question that the hon. member asked, I point out to him that the record of performance of the Canadian economy in the last year has been double that of any previous year in our peacetime history. Therefore I think that the hon. member should be congratulating us on the management of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister is not aware that exports of manufactured products increased by only 4.2 per cent last year, which is a very low increase.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his supplementary?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to bring the Prime Minister into the picture. I ask the Prime Minister to look personally into the operations of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce so that he may learn first-hand that the departments strong desire to begin a massive trade drive has been frustrated by the government's refusal to finance such a trade drive.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: There is a $3 billion surplus.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REPLACEMENT OF PUBLIC ORDER (TEMPORARY MEASURES) ACT BY PERMANENT STATUTE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the firm statement made by the Premier of Quebec that a permanent law will replace the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act after the end of April, may I ask if the government has changed its position since January 11 when the Acting Prime Minister said that the matter would not be dealt with by legislation? Is the government now engaged in drafting such a bill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's position will be announced on this. What we have said, and the position on which I confirm the Acting Prime Minister as being right, is that we would bring the matter before the House before the expiration of the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. The form in which it will be brought in will be known to the House when it is introduced.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the Premier of Quebec said that discussions are now being carried on between the governments, may I ask if these discussions are limited to the government of Quebec and the government of Canada or are the governments of the other provinces taking part in the discussions? Also, was the matter discussed at the recent federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the matter was not discussed at the recent federal-provincial conference. If there are any discussions with the province of Quebec, they are only at a very informal level. I do not know of them as such. There has perhaps been some consultation between our Minister of Justice and the Minister of Justice of Quebec as to the way in which the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act has applied, but there has certainly been no formal exchange with the totality of the provinces.

WELFARE

MEETING WITH TORONTO OFFICIALS TO DISCUSS WORKS PROJECTS TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEM OF COSTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has he made any appointment with the chairman of the Metro Toronto Council and the mayor of Toronto to discuss the question of the sharply rising costs of welfare and possible public works projects which, with federal participation, might alleviate that problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not such a meeting envisaged at the present time. I am not sure whether I have been invited to participate in such a meeting.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRERETIREMENT PLAN—DISPOSITION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUNDS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Can the minister report to the House any progress on the recovery from Devco of Unemployment Insurance Commission funds taken from the people in respect of the preretired miners?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would refer his question directly to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who is responsible in the House for Devco.

Mr. McGrath: He cannot do anything; he does not know anything about it.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the Devco situation becomes more bewildering every day, more so to the government than to myself. If I have a question with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, there is only one minister to whom it can be directed and that is the minister who has that responsibility.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member has that right, but he is asking about Devco and Devco is not the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The Devco preretirement plan is a combination of UIC benefits and a supplementary sum of money advanced by Devco. I suggest to the hon. member that the question be referred to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to see whether the increase by 10 per cent in unemployment insurance benefits will be taken into consideration by Devco in adjusting or not adjusting their supplement to unemployment insurance.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. MacInnis: With Your Honour's permission, I will stay with the Minister of Labour. In that Devco has admitted publicly that they used coercion with respect to establishing this plan, will the minister make an effort to recover all the UIC funds which have been taken under duress?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that premise.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot go on asking supplementaries. I believe he has already had two supplementaries. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for one further supplementary and perhaps we might then move on to another subject.

Mr. MacInnis: Probably a point of order would be more appropriate. The minister said he could not accept my premise. I ask the minister to read the evidence given before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs at which time Devco admitted the use of coercion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FLOODS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO REPAIR DAMAGE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister indicate if the government has reached a decision regarding the request of Nova Scotia for flood relief? If so, what is the decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire. The government has not reached such a decision. I am not even sure if I have received a request as of this date for such relief.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING COMPANY AND EMPLOYEES—PROVISION OF MEDIATOR

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): My question is for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a request for a mediator, has a mediator been provided, and are there any developments in the dispute between the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company and the union, involving approximately 2,500 employees?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there has been no official request yet from either management or labour or management and labour together for a mediator in that dispute. I would hope that both management and labour would understand the terrible economic hardships that are being imposed on that particular town because of their lack of understanding of each other's position and their responsibility to the community. If and when such a request is received, we will act upon it promptly.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA POLICY RESPECTING MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House whether it is his view that the standpat policy of the Bank of Canada since the beginning of the year with regard to the money supply is consistent with the stated expansionary policy of the government? If the minister does not agree with the Bank of Canada, can he indicate what action he intends to take in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first part of the hon. member's question is very theoretical. The minister is being asked to express an opinion as to the policy or non-policy of the Bank of Canada. That part of the question is certainly not in order. With regard to the second part of the question, if we stretch things a bit it might be considered to be in order and the minister might want to reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Bank of Canada is a steadily expanding monetary supply, with which I agree.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the minister's agreement, may I ask whether his purpose in supporting that policy is to maintain higher levels of interest rates in Canada than in the United States?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker. This policy means lower interest rates in Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF MANPOWER OFFICERS TO DEAL WITH CLAIMS IN LOCATIONS WHERE COMMISSION STAFF WITHDRAWN

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I apologize for not having given prior notice. Has the minister given consideration to arranging for manpower officers to be given the responsibility for dealing with unemployment insurance claims in locations where they operate and where UIC staff have been withdrawn? I understand that many of these people would welcome duties of this nature as many of their specific responsibilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech. Perhaps the minister might reply to the first part of the address.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, even without advance notice I appreciate the question. What the hon. member really wants to know is what we can do to provide better service to the unemployed. Last week we opened four new claims service offices in the Vancouver area. After the question period I will be pleased to discuss the particular problems of the area the hon. member represents to see if we can improve the service there.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour not to make a speech. I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister agree to some such measure, even on a temporary basis, in order to help avoid the hardship caused by applicants having to travel great distances to UIC offices?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Minister of Labour find it very easy to co-operate. I am sure we will do everything that is reasonable after the conversation to which the Minister of Labour just referred.

CITIZENSHIP

HIRING OF ALEXIA ALEXANDROVICH BANDA BY BRANCH

Hon John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the Minister without Portfolio who responds for Information Canada to reply to a question directed to him on February 17 by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. In the absence of the Minister without Portfolio the hon. member asked "under whose recommendation Alexia Alexandrovich Banda was hired for the Citizenship Branch under Information Canada in the Vancouver area."

I have been asked by my colleague, who is in Toronto on government business, to tender his response to this question. The Citizenship Branch which, incidentally, has never been under Information Canada, never hired Alexia Alexandrovich Banda. On Friday the hon. member for Edmonton Centre referred to one Alex Bandy, whose full name I understand is Sandor Emerich Bandy. Alex Bandy, a Canadian citizen, was hired on a casual term basis by the Citizenship Branch on January 15, 1971, for a period ending March 31, 1971. He was hired by the Vancouver field officer for research and documentation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member for Spadina who, as always, has been very patient. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre has a supplementary.

Mr. Paproski: Was a security check made on this gentleman?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised by my colleague that no security clearance is required for casual term employees under these circumstances by the Citizenship Branch.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WELFARE

PROJECTIONS OF INCREASED COSTS BECAUSE OF GOVERNMENT MONETARY AND FISCAL POLICIES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Did the government develop projections of the increased welfare costs the cities and provinces would have to shoulder as a result of the restrictive monetary and fiscal policies the government followed to fight inflation? If so, will the government table these projections for this winter?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the precept—the premise of the hon. member's question, the government estimates what its share will be under the Canada Assistance Plan, which is 50 per cent of welfare costs. These figures are tabled in the estimates.

Mr. Ryan: I wish to make it clear that I am not in the habit of issuing precepts. Those come from the government, perhaps a little too frequently and too harshly. Is it the position of the government that this burden on the provinces and cities is of no concern to the federal government?

Mr. Benson: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. We pay 50 per cent of the costs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI-ARAB CONFLICT—CANADIAN POSITION ON EGYPTIAN PEACE PROPOSAL

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it relates to the continuing difficult situation in the Middle East. Can the minister inform the House whether or not the Canadian government has taken any position on the recent peace proposal of the Egyptian government, and can the minister indicate, either now or later in a statement on motions, what is the position of the Canadian government with respect to that proposal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that the Canadian government has not been asked for its views. Negotiations have been proceeding through Ambassador Jarring and we hope the outcome will be successful. I think we are all a little more encouraged today than we were yesterday by the developments that have taken place. As I say, we have not been consulted directly, and there is no particular reason why we should take a position as between Israel and the Arab countries. Our hope is that Ambassador Jarring will succeed.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since I think the minister would agree that the proposal presently under discussion is more than just a proposal that is representative of only one side of the question, will the government be taking any steps to initiate discussions, either bilaterally or multilaterally, on this important question, and perhaps more specifically with the government of Israel?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have entrusted Ambassador Jarring with this delicate task and I think he should be left to carry on. He is a very skilful negotiator and we wish him every success.

AGRICULTURE

EXPORT OF BROILER CHICKENS—EXTENSION OF TENDER CLOSING DATE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. To try to solve one side of the chicken and egg war, has the government agreed to buy up broilers in the last several weeks?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago—I do not recall the exact date—we called for tenders for the export of broilers from Canada.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that broilers are at least being considered for purchase under a government subsidization program, can the minister say whether or not the government is considering a similar proposal for surplus eggs from Manitoba?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, at the present time broilers are not under a support program. Eggs are under a continuing support program of 28.5 cents a dozen on the national weighted average. I should also advise the hon. member that only very recently there has been a rather large volume of eggs exported from Canada. There has been no export of broilers from Canada during the past few months.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the time for tendering for broilers was extended by one week, could the minister advise the House when the result of the tenders will be published and the successful tenderer named?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope later today. The tender period was extended because a number of firms complained that seven days was insufficient time to ascertain the information they would need to make a tender—that is today, to make arrangements with overseas buyers and so on. Therefore we extended the date for closing the tenders until noon today, February 22. I hope that within a very few hours we will be able to announce who the successful tenderer is.

PLANS FOR PROVISION OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS—GRANT TO SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL FOR CONFERENCE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister state whether a grant has been given to the Canadian Council of Social Development to stage a conference on student employment, as requested? While I am on my feet, may I ask the minister when we can expect a statement from him on student employment for the summer?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken on these matters. We do, of course, hope that before very long we may be able to announce our decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for South Western Nova has a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Comeau: No, Mr. Speaker, but the minister did not answer my question. I should like to ask him when we may expect a statement on this summer's student employment picture.

Mr. Lang: That is the question I answered, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

EXPORT OF BROILER CHICKENS—EXTENSION OF TENDER CLOSING DATE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you could possibly mistake me for the hon. member for South Western Nova, but I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask the minister whether the tendering time was extended for one week because the original tenders were too high?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. The reason for the extension was that a number of people involved in the trade indicated to us that seven days was insufficient time for them to contact overseas buyers, arrange for shipping, and then to put in a tender. Tenders were called on the basis of the difference between the price in Canada and the relationship of that factor to the cost of getting the broilers to the overseas market.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF TWO-PRICE SYSTEM

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the House whether the government has yet made a decision on the implementation of a two-price system for wheat, and can we expect a statement on this in the near future?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board answered a similar question a little earlier today.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DOCKYARD EMPLOYEES WAGE DISPUTE—INTERVENTION OF INDUSTRY SPECIALIST—AMENDMENT OF OFFER TO REMOVE DISPARITY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the offer made by Treasury Board to the east and west coast dockyard workers increases the disparity in wages between these two groups, and since the offer has been rejected by an almost 100 per cent vote of the workers, can the minister advise whether or not there has been any request for the assignment of an industry specialist in this area, or if the minister has been holding consultations with the President of the Treasury Board with a view to correcting the offer so that it will not increase the disparity in wages?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, past experience indicates to me that the President of the Treasury Board is quite capable of looking after collective bargaining in the Public Service and does not need advice from the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would advise the President of the Treasury Board that it is poor labour practice to offer the top wage suggested in a majority report to one group and the bottom wage suggested in a minority report to another group?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MANPOWER

RETRAINING PROGRAM—DISCUSSION OF INCREASE IN FACILITIES WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the heavy demands being made on manpower training facilities and the resultant inability of some people to find accommodation within the program, is the minister holding discussions with the provincial governments in order to increase facilities available for manpower training?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the facilities are not manpower facilities but rather facilities provided by or obtained within the provinces. There are continuing discussions taking place between manpower officials and the various departments of the provinces in connection with facilities that are available and future requirements, and these discussions continue steadily.

GRAIN

ALLEGED SLOWDOWN IN MOVEMENT TO VANCOUVER BECAUSE OF LABOUR PROBLEMS—ADVANCE NOTICE OF GRADES REQUIRED

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the observation made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration yesterday on the program "Question Period" to the effect that there was some slowdown in the movement of grain to Vancouver during the period when a couple of sporadic labour problems led to difficulties, can the minister inform the House where the slowdowns occurred and for how long the flow of grain was slowed down?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, not having had any advance notice of this question I can hardly answer it with any accuracy.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that grain movement to Vancouver was slowed down for only two days, can the minister inform the House how much advance notice is required to meet our commitments for specific grades of grain bound for export?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must have missed something at the beginning of the question and I would be glad to have the hon. member repeat it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST OFFICE

FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INCORPORATED—RESULTS OF MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF CNTU

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Last Friday he met the president of the CNTU, Mr. Marcel Pépin, with regard to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc.; I should like to ask him whether an agreement was reached as a result of this meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one can say an agreement was reached but not on the matter of rehiring the men. We agreed to consider any CNTU proposal that might be fair to all parties concerned, including the people the government assigned to posts turned down by the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc. Although no agreement was reached with regard to resuming negotiations, on either side, we did not however close the door to future representations, should there be need for any.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether Mr. Marcel Pépin intends to submit suggestions to the government with a view to settling this conflict which has been going on for several months?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot say, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Pépin had no specific suggestions to make on Friday. He should perhaps make suggestions to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc. and submit a specific proposal to the government. However, as I said before, no proposals were made on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege arises from the fact that the Minister of Labour indicated I had prefaced a question with a statement that was not in accordance with the facts. At that time I referred to the fact that Devco has used coercion on preretired miners. This statement was questioned by the minister, so I ask him to check what the vice-president of industrial relations of Devco said before a committee in answer to a direct question by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

> So in effect this would be the coercion to get him down there.

He was referring to the Unemployment Insurance Commission people. The answer given by Mr. McDade, the vice-president of industrial relations was: "Yes." I would simply ask the minister this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member now seeks to ask the minister a question. He has raised a matter of discussion as to the accuracy of either the statement made by the hon. member or the reply given by the minister. I suggest this is a matter of debate between the minister and the hon. member, and I am wondering whether the minister and the hon. member might not get together and look at the evidence before the committee in an attempt to straighten out the matter. I really do not think this can be resolved by a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order and I do so with great deference to you, Sir. Has it not been a rule of this House for a long time that no member can question a minister on anything outside his own area of responsibility? If that is the case, the Minister of Labour refused to answer a direct question involving Unemployment Insurance Commission benefits, by referring it to the Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion, and it has nothing to do with that minister.

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my suggestion that we will become involved in a debate between the minister and the hon. member. I think this may very well be the subject of an interesting debate, but it cannot be raised at this time on a question of privilege. I think this is the kind of situation which should be resolved in another way, perhaps by direct discussion between the minister and the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: I have a further point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege and the hon. member is seeking to pursue the matter further by way of a point of order. There is really not a valid point of order. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

On the Order:

January 25, 1971—Second reading in reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-219, an Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation—the Minister of Finance.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, on a point of order, I filed an oral caveat in respect of this bill in the expectation that there was a point which ought to be discussed in order to give the Chair an opportunity to examine the precedents and in order to give other hon. members, including the Government House Leader, the same opportunity. It deals very simply with the question of whether this is a hybrid bill, whether the procedure employed to introduce such bills is proper, whether we must change our procedure in future with regard to the carriage of these bills, and what will be the consequences if, in fact, this bill is declared by the House and Your Honour to be a hybrid bill.

The subject is a novel one. It has not had too much discussion in the House, but as I see the picture, we are now getting into a stage where this kind of bill may well be presented repeatedly in the future. It is about time we considered this possibility and laid down our practice. I am reinforced in this case by what Your Honour said on January 26 when dealing with a point of order raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East-Hants (Mr. McCleave) in connection with the government organization bill. Your Honour pointed out very properly something which we on this side of the House have always felt was so, but which the government people seem to have forgotten. Your Honour stated that a government bill is subject to the same rules, criteria and examination, and can be subject to the same difficulties as private bills. You also indicated that this matter should be raised before second reading.

The question of what is a hybrid bill is something which has engaged the attention of the United Kingdom House. As it may be a rather strange and foreign word the hon. members, I am going to briefly indicate what is a hybrid bill, why this bill should be considered as such, and if so what the consequence will be. In the United Kingdom, because of the fact there have been socialistic and capitalistic governments replacing each other over the years, especially since the 1920's, there have been many bills dealing with nationalization, renationalization and denationalization. In addition to that, the Parliament of the United Kingdom operates in a unitarian state and consequently questions relating to many matters and the operation of the rules dealing with hybrid bills are raised more frequently.

Because there have been a great many precedents going back over the years on this issue, the House of Commons at Westminster established a committee in 1948 which reported on February 14, 1949. This report was the subject of a very interesting debate in the House at that time. In order to set the foundation for this argument, I just want to take the time to read one or two extracts from that report. It was introduced by the Lord President of the Council, Mr. Morrison, later Lord Morrison, now deceased. He said:

> The Report which we are inviting the House to approve is really a piece of Parliamentary spring cleaning, and the dusty corner we want to start to sweep out is our procedure for handling hybrid Bills on the Committee stage—

He goes on to say:

> —that is, those Bills which are public Measures but which also affect private interests in such a way that we apply to them our Standing Orders and procedure relating to private business.
> We have had before us in the last few years quite a number of hybrid Bills, some important, some relatively unimportant; and I have no doubt that more will be needed in years to come.

That was a socialist philosophy and I am not saying that disparagingly. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was about to rise when I used those words.

Then the lord president of the council went on to state, after reciting a long list of bills which fall within the category of hybrid bills and in respect of which the special procedure was invited and in fact required:

> The hybrid Bill is somewhere half-way between the ordinary public Bill and the private Bill, and so it is not very surprising that the procedure we recommend the House to adopt lies somewhere half-way between the two forms of practice which I have just described.

Canada Development Corporation

I am going to leave it to my hon. learned colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who is intimately acquainted with all the details of this bill to deal with this further. In due course, I hope early, if Your Honour allows the point of order I am making, the hon. member will be speaking for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in respect of this bill. I will leave it to him to argue, in detail and I think with logic, that this bill does in fact have the qualities of a private and a public bill, and as such must be classified as a hybrid bill. I should like to call the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to confirm this statement. When Bill C-219 was introduced, the Minister of Finance, who probably had some doubts concerning the reception of the bill issued a press release. On Page 2 of that press release we find certain comments by the Minister of Finance which I suggest Your Honour can consider in the course of this argument. These are the comments:

> Able and experienced entrepreneurs will direct the corporation's operations to areas of critical importance in economic development—to high-technology industry, to resource utilization, to northern-oriented companies and to industries where Canada has a special competitive advantage.

And then further on the same page:

> It is a principal objective to have CDC shares widely held. Shares will be sold to the public in competition with all other investment vehicles, and the bill specifically directs CDC to invest for profit in the best interest of the shareholders. The CDC will act in the broad area in which the national interest and the profit motive are compatible. The CDC will seek to develop balance and diversity in its holdings.
> The capital structure is designed to give the corporation a high degree of flexibility in raising funds from the public.

I quote those words to support the argument which will be made in much more detail, and quite convincingly, by my hon. friend from Edmonton West that in addition to the public aspect of the bill, which is quite apparent from the second and third parts, the first part of the bill taken together with this statement is an indication beyond any shadow of a doubt that this bill has many of the aspects of a private bill.

In the belief that the arguments which will be advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and other hon. members, in support of this contention will result in a statement by the Chair that this is a hybrid bill, I propose for a very few minutes to indicate to Your Honour what are the likely consequences so far as this bill is concerned. I do so because there have been only one or two instances in our Parliament when this issue has, in fact, been raised. I think there are one or two precedents which can be cited. There is a reference in Bourinot's second edition, at pages 688 to 695, to a ruling in respect of an act to increase the harbour accommodation of the City of Toronto and to extend the esplanade. This ruling dates back to 1883 but it has not been altered since then.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote from Beauchesne in this regard. It has been recognized by this learned author on parliamentary practice—and I am referring to the fourth edition of Beauchesne at page 351, citations 482 and 483—that a situation can arise where a bill introduced by the government, apparently as a public bill, can have such substantial elements of a private bill that consideration must be given to that fact. One consideration is contained in citation 482, which deals with what the result is on second reading:

> The second reading of a private Bill corresponds with the same stage in other Bills, and in agreeing to it the House affirms the general principle, or expediency, of the measure. There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private Bill, which should not be overlooked. A public Bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private Bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the Bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee.

That is reinforced quite strongly, Mr. Speaker, in the debate which took place in the House of Commons, in Westminster when Mr. Morrison made it quite plain that in his view the report of the committee would mean that a bill, once held to be a private bill, would receive a different type of treatment so far as second reading was concerned. Even though we have altered our rules here, and to some extent have diluted the effect of the second reading, that has not affected the principle that a private bill is always subject to the facts alleged in it being confirmed at the committee stage.

I suggest to Your Honour that you should very seriously consider, if a bill is held to be a hybrid bill, that the question of the effect of second reading must differ from that of a public bill. I think that is of some consequence now because we are dealing with a very important measure. It may well be the first of a great many bills of this kind. I think Your Honour can take judicial notice of the debates in this House, and the regard given by you to a request by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) for a special debate under Standing Order 26 dealing with a matter which is probably closely related to this bill. There have been a great many other questions asked. The press is full of these statements. The question of economic nationalism is very much to the fore in this country. Having in mind the requests made and suggestions advanced in the press, by members of the public and by members of this House, I fully expect that this government or its successor will hear requests for a great many other bills along the lines of this legislation.

For that reason, I consider it extremely important that some precedent be now established and that we who are members of this House should have an opportunity to have Your Honour consider the effect of this argument so that you might be able to tell us, if this is a hybrid bill, what we will have to do when we give second reading to it. It is true enough that there is a public interest and a private interest. I do not believe I have any difficulty in arguing that the public interest will always suffer from undue interference with the private interest. It is for this reason that in respect of a hybrid bill there should be an opportunity for those members of the public at large, who are more particularly affected than the average person, to appear before the select, standing or joint committee to outline their views and indicate, if they have a special interest, what they object to in the bill. That is a right with regard to a hybrid bill which, in the United Kingdom at least, has now been settled as being beyond any doubt.

I suggest to Your Honour that this course has been incorporated in a standing order of the United Kingdom Parliament, namely, Standing Order 38. In addition to that, there is the question of notice and examination. The question of examination is made quite plain in the United Kingdom. There must be an examination, as in the case of a private bill, by the examiner of private bills in that jurisdiction. Are we to have the same result here? What about notice? There will be established by this legislation, if it is passed, a special group of private individuals who will be affected, namely, the shareholders. This limited group of the public will be invited to subscribe for shares. They will have rights over and above those of the ordinary public. True enough, the average person, the ordinary taxpayer, will be affected to the extent to which the government becomes a subscriber for shares, to the extent to which the government through its directors seeks to direct to some extent the policies of this corporation. But there will be established a particular and special group whose interests will be affected if this bill should pass.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Other hon. members will be intervening, and I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House. I would point out to Your Honour, in conclusion, that if what I say has any effect on your views, if you are inclined to hold that this is a hybrid bill, then I suggest that we should give that fact careful consideration. While it is true that we do not have a great many precedents and we do not have anything in our Standing Orders, I would refer Your Honour to our first Standing Order which provides that:

> In all cases not provided for hereafter or by sessional or other orders, the usages and customs of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as in force at the time shall be followed so far as they may be applicable to this House.

I submit that we are in a position where the government—and I do not say this disparagingly—while paying lip service to private enterprise and to the private profit motive, is steadily enlarging the area of socialist activities. I am not going to argue whether or not this is right. I am simply saying it is a matter of fact. All one has to do is to read the legislation. We are going to get an increasing number of these kinds of bills, and I think this House is entitled to know whether they should be brought in as government bills, or as private bills. If they have the characteristics of both, they should receive special treatment. I suggest to you, with due deference to the Minister of Finance, that to bring in a bill of this nature and to expect it to be processed by the ordinary standing orders, rules and precedents of this House of Commons is completely wrong. I ask Your Honour to give due effect to this argument and to what else may be said. If you hold it is a hybrid bill, I ask Your Honour to consider carefully what the consequences will be and what the future carriage of this bill will be in the light of the practices of this House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if in what I have to say I am to a considerable extent on the same side as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), let me assure the House at the outset that it is not because I see this bill as incipient socialism. As a matter of fact, if the bill were a little more socialistic it would be a lot better. In any case, we are into another of these procedural arguments which fill the galleries and bring the press people back so that it can be reported in full in tomorrow's newspapers. But despite that comment, call it what you will, this is a very important point of order and one that could become more important as time goes on.

May I say that to call a bill a hybrid bill is not to use a nasty word. We do not do that sort of thing in the House, anyway.

Mr. Baldwin: Question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I also say that it is correct that we do not have in our Standing Orders any rules that deal specifically with hybrid bills. Nevertheless, we do have a citation on this matter in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, and those citations make it clear that if there is before us what is recognized as a hybrid bill, it should get the treatment that is given to private bills.

Now, Sir, I looked again today at our Standing Orders and I find that there are 26 Standing Orders relating to private bills, Standing Orders 90 to 115, both inclusive. If I wanted to give a digest of those 26 Standing Orders, the House would certainly be empty before I got through it. Nevertheless, because one of the results of the point of order being raised could be, as I think it should be, a decision by Your Honour that this is a hybrid bill and should be treated as such, I think it is important to state as briefly as I can the rationale on the basis of which private bills are given treatment different from that given to public bills. The reason for such different treatment is this.

A private bill is a bill for a single person, a small group of persons or a company, any selected group of individuals who constitute less than the community as a whole. A private bill is one seeking to provide something special, a special privilege or concession for a group of the Canadian population which is less than the country as a whole. Therefore, we have accepted the principle over the years that when a private bill is presented there are two particular things that must be done that are different from what is done in the case of a public bill. In the first place, that private bill must go to a committee before which the promoters of the bill must appear and justify it. The second thing that must be done is that at the hearings of the committee to which the bill is referred the general public, or anybody who is affected by the private bill, must have the right to appear and state a defence against what is proposed. In other words, if a private company is seeking an incorporation to do business in the insurance field—going back to the days when we did that on the floor of the House instead of by letters patent under the Canada Corporations Act—the people seeking that right have to appear and justify their claim, but anybody else who felt that his rights were being interfered with also had the right to appear and offer his defence.

We still agree that that shall apply in the case of a private company, whether it is insurance, investment, banking, railway, pipe lines, or what have you. I think that rationale makes sense. It is perfectly all right, when there is a bill going through Parliament that is for the general good, that affects everybody, for Parliament to process it by itself, through its committees but without hearing witnesses. But when a special interest is sought, when legislation is desired to set up a special interest, then these two things must happen: the promoter must justify his request, and those who are affected by the possible implementation of that request must have the right to appear and state their defence.

We think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a hybrid bill in the sense that it is more of a private bill than a public bill. It sets up a special interest, a special group of people and it gives them certain special privileges, certain rights to make profits, to do this, that and the other thing in a way that is not available to the entire populace. Therefore, when this special group of people is to be given a special right, the bill takes on the character of a private bill and should be treated in that manner.

It would be difficult to spend much time trying to prove to Your Honour that this is a bill with heavily private connotations without getting into the substance of it, but may I, even under the limitations of a procedural debate, say a few words that border on substance. In the first place, as I understand it, the Board of Directors of the Canada Development Corporation is to constitute from 18 to 21 persons, only four of whom are to be appointed by the government; the rest are to be named at a general meeting of the shareholders.

In the second place, the bill is drawn in such a way to make it clear that in no sense does the Canada Development Corporation come under the control of Parliament. True, the bill could be amended; the objectives could be changed, but so far as the normal operations of the corporation are concerned, that corporation is farther away from us than many of things we have set up. Parliament is to set up this baby and give it free rein. We are to have no more control over it than we would have over Canadian Pacific Investments, or an insurance company, a mutual investment company, or what have you. It is a private corporation that we are establishing.

Third, the bill makes it clear that the corporation is not an agent of Her Majesty and is not a Crown corporation. There is no suggestion in the bill that it is a corporation for the general advantage of Canada. In other words on all counts, Sir, what we are establishing is a private corporation.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I do not want to come back too often to the little twitting that my hon. friend from Peace River did about this being a socialist proposition. I have to tell him that he had better read the bill again.

Mr. Baldwin: I said elements of socialism.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is less socialism in this than I have seen in any bill for a long time.

If I may go on with one more point in support of my contention that this bill sets up a private company, I draw attention to the extensive and complicated language of clause 27. This clause contains references to ways in which the Canada Corporations Act shall not apply. Then, this clause gets to the point where it says that in relation to this company the usual references to letters patent in the Canada Corporations Act shall refer to this bill. In other words, Sir, what we would be doing by the passing of this bill is that in effect we would be taking the place of the bureau that grants letters patent to private companies. We are providing the letters patent that would normally be provided to a private corporation. We are doing so by the passing of this bill, and we say so quite clearly in clause 27.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is what we did last year.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Private companies do not now need to come to Parliament as they did for many years. They go to the appropriate office and get letters patent, but we are giving this corporation a little special treatment. We are giving it the letters patent by the passing of this bill.

Therefore without developing that point any further, Your Honour, I assert that this bill is not a socialist document. It is not even a Walter Gordon document. It is a private outfit, and the passing of this bill establishes special privilege for a limited number of people.

May I also point out that if this bill is passed and this company is set up it will have certain powers that could be used to the disadvantage of other Canadians, indeed I would say to the disadvantage of all Canadians. We have now in existence in this country the Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, PanArctic Oils Limited, Northern Transportation Limited, and perhaps one or two other entities of that order, and these entities are either wholly owned by the public or largely owned by the public.

But under this bill the Canada Development Corporation would be given the right to buy these Crown companies, and bring them under what would be partly public and partly private ownership. At the moment they are under public ownership. They belong to us, to the people of Canada, but under this bill they would become largely privately owned.

Now, Sir, at the moment I am trying to stay away from the substance, although it will be obvious from what I have said that I do not approve of this. But I go back to the point I made earlier, about the rationale behind the treatment accorded to private bills, namely, that the people affected have the right to appear. I now make the point that the people of Canada can be adversely affected by what this company would be able to do, just as much as I could argue, and indeed just as much as we used to argue when we had American owned insurance companies coming here, that the people of Canada could be adversely affected by setting up those particular companies.

I say that because this Canada Development Corporation could carry on business in a way that would be inimical to the best interests of the people of Canada, and the people of Canada should have the right under our private bills orders to appear before a standing or special committee and state their objection to what is proposed in this bill. So I press the point, Mr. Speaker, and I press it upon the House, that although this may be another one of those dull procedural debates, something pretty important is involved here, and that we should not let this sort of thing get out of hand.

I am not suggesting that the government does not have the right to bring in this kind of bill. I am not suggesting that the Parliament of Canada does not have the right to deal with this kind of measure. It frequently deals with measures that I do not like, that I think are offensive to peace, order and good government, and so on, but at least if something like this is being done it should be done according to the well established rules.

Let me run the risk of repeating myself by saying if there are some of our rules that members think are a bit silly and unnecessarily complicated, I do not think that can be said about the special requirements of the rules that apply to private bills. When you have a private bill you are seeking a special or private interest. Therefore you have to do the two things I have identified—you have to hear from the promoter, and you have to give to the people the right to state their defence.

This bill aims to establish a private corporation. Others may develop this more fully, but I point out that in clause 6 of the bill it says that one of its purposes is the making of profit. If profit is to be made it will be at somebody else's expense. So, all told the bill has completely the characteristics of a private bill. As the hon. member for Peace River has pointed out it also has a couple of the characteristics of a public bill, mainly because it is being brought in by a public person, no less than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) himself. But although he may have done enough to bring it under the wire as a public bill I submit that because its effect is so largely that which is achieved by a private bill, it should be given the private bill treatment which is supposed to be given to hybrid bills.

I said earlier that though we have lots of Standing Orders concerning public bills and 26 of them concerning private bills we do not have any governing hybrid bills. But we do have Beauchesne. In citation 376 of the fourth edition we find this:

> Bills are of three kinds, public bills, private bills and bills of a mixed character styled hybrid bills which, though of a public character, affect private rights, and in their passage through Parliament these are subjected to a special procedure.

That is what we are asking for. We are not saying the government cannot go ahead with this bill if it wants to do so but we are saying that because it is a hybrid bill it should be treated in accordance with a special procedure.

The citation continues:

> If the House finds that private rights may be affected—

And they certainly would be by this bill.

> —an order is made referring the bill to the Examiners of Petitions for Private Bills who may report that Standing Orders relating to private bills are applicable.

We believe this is what should be done. This bill should be referred to the examiners of petitions for private bills. Let them reach a decision whether the Standing Orders relating to private bills should apply in this case. Beauchesne continues:

> The report should then be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Orders—

Since this volume was produced we have altered our rules. We no longer have a committee which deals exclusively with Standing Orders. However, we have kept this function alive, and Standing Order 65 which deals with the setting up of the Standing Committees lists:

> (o) miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders

In other words we have kept the Standing Orders Committee alive. I go on:

> The report should then be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Orders which is empowered to report to the House whether such standing orders ought or ought not to be dispensed with. These two reports must be received before the second reading of the bill can be proceeded with.

So the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was quite right to enter his caveat the other day and raise his point of order today before the motion for second reading was put. To continue the quotation:

> Should the Examiners report that none of the Standing Orders relating to private bills are applicable, the bill proceeds on his course as an ordinary public bill. Should the Committee on Standing Orders report that Standing Orders relative to private bills are applicable, have not been complied with, and ought not to be dispensed with, the order of the day for the second reading is read and discharged, after which the bill may be withdrawn.
> The proceedings in a committee on a hybrid bill are conducted in the same manner as in a committee on a private bill.

In other words, even though we do not have Standing Orders under a heading "Hybrid Bills" we do have a direction as to how to deal with hybrid bills, namely, they should be given private bill treatment.

It strikes me it is not for us to come to a conclusion about this question on the floor of the House. Indeed, it strikes me it is not even Your Honour's responsibility to make a decision as to whether or not this bill is a hybrid bill. But it does seem to me that in view of the serious doubt which exists as to whether it can be classed as a public bill Your Honour should rule that before it is proceeded with on second reading it should be referred to the examiners of petitions for private bills.

I say to you, Sir, that this is one course that could be followed. I believe Your Honour will agree with me that up to this point I have confined my comments to the procedural aspects. But in our view there is another course which might be taken. That would be for the government to withdraw this private corporation legislation and bring in a Canada development corporation bill which would really be public and which would really protect the public interest instead of the kind of legislation which is now before us.

So I have made two proposals. One is for Your Honour to decide and the other is for the government. I guess I have more faith in Your Honour than I have in the government. At any rate these are the courses which we believe to be open. One is for the government to withdraw this bill and bring in a proper one which would really protect the public interest. But if the government declines to do so, then I urge Your Honour to recognize the force of the argument we have advanced thus far in the debate on procedure and agree that the bill before us is a bill which is more private than public and that it should therefore receive the special treatment set out in the case of private bills. This would involve, first of all, a reference to the examiners of petitions for private bills. If they were to decide that this was a hybrid bill, it would then be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders. The next stage would depend upon what that committee reported. At any rate I do not think it is proper for the House to continue to discuss the order before us at all until this issue has been resolved, and I hope Your Honour will so rule.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard two masterly speeches on procedure and not being an expert in this field, I do not intend to try to influence your decision on the way Bill C-219 should be considered. Besides, I believe we will hear at least one more expert. For this reason, I shall not be long because I merely want to say that in my opinion the bill shows a strong socialist tendency.

No matter how the legislation is introduced, whether it is called a public bill, a private bill or a hybrid bill, the government will do all it can to have it adopted. As far as I am concerned, and I think it is the feeling of all my colleagues of the Ralliement créditiste, I shall rely entirely on your decision.

No matter how this bill is introduced, we shall object to it, because its purpose is to create a corporation to maintain Canadian ownership of our industries. We are convinced that there are other ways to protect our Canadian companies and to guide production in Canada.

This, I think, is not the role of the government. This is why we shall object to this bill, no matter how it is introduced.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with one particular aspect of the argument which should be placed before Your Honour in connection with the presentation of this bill. It is not my intention to comment, except incidentally, on the contents of the measure; I am concerned rather with the method used in presenting this legislation.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

As Your Honour is aware, I have on previous occasions objected to the manner in which legislation has been brought forward—the nature of the recommendations, for example. These are matters which need to be watched carefully because it is not beyond the capacity of the government to err with respect to them. I would suggest to Your Honour respectfully that the government has erred this afternoon, as it did the other day, in presenting this bill in such a manner. Not only the government, but the House itself, is faced with a problem. Some people may say, "All right, let us get on; the objectives here are good." I put it to Your Honour that the ends do not justify the means, and if there is a way of doing things correctly, they ought to be done correctly.

• (3:50 p.m.)

As was properly pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and, I believe, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), we are now charting a course on previously unchartered seas. It is conceivable that in the years to come legislation of a general pattern similar to this will be brought forward by whatever administration has power then, and it would be extremely wrong if we were to chart the course in a wrong direction. I, therefore, wish to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, in its composition, is very definitely a hybrid bill. Although our rules make no provision directly for dealing with hybrid bills, we still, under our Standing Order, have clause 1. That is in force just as is any other rule and, therefore, I would suggest to Your Honour the way that this perhaps should be considered.

Since the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has referred to some of the detail I wished to refer to Your Honour, I hope to be able to shorten my argument and not repeat what the hon. member said. There is no doubt that Bill C-219 has the criteria of a public bill. Part II of the bill is entitled, "Federal Government Participation". If we refer to clauses 35, 37, 39 and 40 we shall see that each of them entitles the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to do certain things; they empower the minister to lend public moneys to the corporation. Clause 39 provides that certain public companies that own public property may be sold by the government to that particular corporation. Another clause provides that the government may appoint a number of directors instead of exercising share voting rights. Clause 42 provides that the Minister of Finance may use public money from the consolidated revenue fund to buy shares of or make loans to the company. I would say that this is a sufficient indication of the public interest in the bill and the consequent measure of public policy involved.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the bill was introduced by a minister. It did not come in by way of a petition, and therefore it has that aspect of a public bill. There was a recommendation; but that, too, is one of the attributes of a public bill. I put it to Your Honour that the entire bill, other than two very temporary and transitory features affecting the government, is of a private nature. Part I of the bill is strictly a corporate incorporation bill, and the schedule thereto lays down some of what we could call the bylaws. It is also interesting to note what is Part I.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The bill is letters patent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says, it is, in effect, letters patent. Last year, when the Canada Corporations Act was amended, certain provisions were left in the act whereby certain types of companies would need to come to the House for incorporation. Certain types of operations still cannot obtain letters patent from the registrar of Canadian corporations.

The second part of the hybrid bill test is whether Bill C-219 affects private interests in such a way that, if it were a private bill, it would, under our Standing Orders relating to private business, require notice to be given or served inasmuch as private interests, as a class in small or great degree, may be benefited or adversely affected. I have said that if Part II were deleted from the bill, and this could happen in its progress through the House, the result would be the creation of a private corporation that could survive as an entity without further action. The only public interest would be the transitional one, the right of the government under clause 4 to appoint provisional directors only, and to designate, under clause 10, the original head office. Yet, it is interesting to note that there is no reference whatsoever to the government of Canada. What is all the more convincing, Mr. Speaker, is that clause 31 in Part II reads:

> The company is not an agent of Her Majesty or a Crown corporation within the meaning of the Financial Administration Act.

Therefore, this clause definitely removes the company from an area in which there would be a public interest. It is not a Crown corporation, and it is not an agency under the Financial Administration Act. Thus, the private business Standing Orders of this House are not precluded from applying to this corporation on any principle that this bill is for the incorporation of a Crown company. It is not a Crown company. Since the proposed company is not a public corporation, it must be a private corporation owned by private interests. There is provision, of course, that the public in the right of Canada and the public in the right of provinces can own shares; but this provision is neither mandatory nor exclusive. One has only to examine the bill to see that this is so. There is not one word in the bill to the effect that the Crown in the right of Canada must own at least one share—not one. It may have holdings in excess of 10 per cent. It "may," I said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It does not have to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I defy anybody on the government side to indicate one word which indicates that one share or more of the corporation must be owned by the Crown in the right of Canada. There is nothing that says so. Nor is there anything in the act which excludes private ownership in whole or in part, and therefore the public nature of the bill almost disappears.

Clause 6(1) provides that the objects of this private corporation shall be carried out in anticipation of profits and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole. I have indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that such shareholders may be exclusively private persons. It is interesting to note that, although this private corporation has powers sufficiently flexible under clause 6(1) to acquire, develop and operate local works wholly situated within a province, the bill contains no clause which specifically provides that such works are to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more provinces.

I would, however, refer Your Honour to clause 7, where the bill speaks of a charter. This is the charter that we are being asked to pass upon. I would further direct Your Honour's attention to that part of the bill dealing with the personal liability of directors. For the moment, I cannot find the clause number but there is personal liability for directors. Therefore, we are right into the area of company incorporation by private charter.

Just making these references, Mr. Speaker, outlines, part of what we consider to be the criteria of a private bill. As well as asking for the incorporation of a company for the benefit of a class of private citizens, because the public shareholders, if any, can only appear subsequent to the incorporation, the bill asks for preferred treatment under section 33 of the Income Tax Act, for preferred exemption, from certain provisions of the Corporations Act, and for preferred exemption from the insolvency and winding-up laws.

In addition, this corporation and the private shareholders of this corporation will enjoy a most special privilege not enjoyed by all those persons who will not be shareholders and not enjoyed by any other corporation, federal or provincial, Canadian or foreign. It will only be this corporation and its shareholders that will have the opportunity to buy Polymer Corporation Limited, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Northern Transportation Company Limited, possibly Northern Canada Power Commission as well as the public percentage of Panarctic Oils Ltd., and some others. These are to be sold by the government of Canada to the corporation and no other.

Conversely, this private corporation will, if the government exercises its discretionary power to sell, have a monopoly option to buy these publicly-owned corporations and properties. I emphasize the word "monopoly", Mr. Speaker, because words "fair and reasonable price", as used in clause 39, presumes in the everyday language of commerce and law, the existence of an alternative buyer in a free and open market. To reiterate, Mr. Speaker, a monopoly is a special interest which is the exclusive property of a specific entity, whether that entity is a class of persons or a corporation. On the basis of this, there is no doubt that this is a hybrid bill. I could perhaps advance further arguments, but I think this is sufficient.

To recap, and to refer to what the hon. member for Peace River indicated, this is the first time we have been faced with a bill of this kind. It becomes even more important that the appropriate procedure be followed. I do not know whether it is for Your Honour to decide if the bill should be hybrid and what steps should be taken, or whether it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders. This committee has been undistinguished by its activities over the past couple of years. I do not think that it has had to do very much. I suggest to Your Honour that this is one time when we can say halt. It is not that I object to the consideration of Bill C-219 on the basis of its substance. In good time, we will have some observations to make about it. At this point, I suggest the government should stand the second reading today, Your Honour should consider your decision and that we should move on to another item of business.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I think I can reduce the length of my remarks in light of the contribution made to this debate by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). In any event, it is with some trepidation that I rise to offer my advice to your Honour, as I have not been here very long and hitherto my interest in procedure has been largely academic. As the hon. member for Edmonton West indicated, this is the first time a bill of this nature has come before this House. In consequence, the means selected to process it will likely have a profound effect upon the kind of legislation which this House is likely to be dealing with in the future.

As others have said, the point upon which Your Honour must in fact decide is whether Bill C-219 is a hybrid bill, that is, is it one which incorporates the elements of both a public bill and a private bill. Having decided that, it will be necessary to determine the procedure which must be followed by this House in dealing with it. It is our contention that although this bill contains sufficient elements of a public nature to persuade the government it should be introduced by a cabinet minister, it is essentially a private bill establishing a private corporation which will combine some of the characteristics of a private mutual fund and those of Argus Corporation or Molson Enterprises and which will be not more subject to governmental control, or more accurately, only marginally more subject, than are those organizations. Therefore, we argue that there are two options open to this House.

The first is that the bill ultimately be treated as a private bill, thereby enabling those who feel they would be adversely affected by the establishment of the corporation to make representations to a committee of this House. In our opinion, such persons would include the public of Canada who may, under the provisions of the bill, lose their interests in the Crown corporations Polymer, Eldorado Mining, Northern Transportation and also in the Northern Light and Power Commission and Panarctic Oil. The second option, which we prefer, is that the bill be withdrawn and rewritten, so that the corporation unmistakably becomes an instrument of government or public policy.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the key to Your Honour's decision is whether this bill can be considered an instrument of public policy. In other to be so considered, the bill must obviously apply to the people of Canada equally and generally, rather than act for the special advantage of a few. In this regard, I wish to submit several points for Your Honour's consideration. In so doing, I may come dangerously close to making substantial arguments, but I hope Your Honour will agree that such an approach is genuinely unavoidable.

The first point I ask Your Honour to consider is that the corporation to be created by this bill has not even been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. The second point is, it is obvious from reading the bill and by virtue of unequivocal statements of its sponsor, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), that the corporation is purely and simply a profit making venture. Here, I refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West. Its objectives could be achieved equally well, perhaps better, by making the same funds available to an organization such as Argus Corporation. The minister can argue that shares will be offered to the Canadian public, but it is a demonstrable fact that only seven per cent of Canadians involved themselves in such speculation. Its provisions, therefore, do not de facto apply equally and generally.

Moreover, and this is my third point, the bill makes possible the sale to the corporation which it creates several crown corporations whose profits have hitherto gone into general revenues to be applied to the general advantage of all Canadians. This bill will permit those profits to be distributed exclusively among that small group of Canadians who are in a position to purchase shares of the proposed Canada Development Corporation.

Fourth, the bill cannot be considered to be an instrument of public policy because the public will have absolutely no control over the method of operation of the corporation once it is established except that any change in its objectives must be referred to Parliament. I suggest that the objectives set out in the bill are so general in nature as to authorize virtually anything so that a reference would hardly be necessary. I say that the public, through its elected representatives, will have no control because, as other hon. members have pointed out, first, the corporation is specifically stated not to be an agency of Her Majesty. Second, as a result of existing legislation, Parliament is specifically excluded from the surveillance of the corporation's activities. Third, not more than four of its directors can be appointed by the government of Canada, whether the board consists of 18 directors or 21. Thus, the government is in a distinct minority position. Even then the government can appoint its four directors if, and only if, it surrenders the right to exercise its voting shares in the election of officers. I refer here specifically to clause 40, subclause (1). My fourth point is that clause 42, subclause (3) of the bill would seem to indicate that the Crown's portion of the voting shares may be allowed to drop below 10 per cent of the total, thus even further weakening its ability to ensure that the corporation operates in the public interest.

Taken together, the four points that I have drawn to Your Honour's attention demonstrate that the corporation would be no more subject to public control than is Canadian Pacific Investments, and thus can hardly be considered to be any more an instrument of public policy than Canadian Pacific Investments. Moreover, I would argue that my earlier suggestions provide at least a strong indication that the corporation will not operate in a manner generally and equally applicable to the Canadian people. Indeed, it will operate in the interests of a special few, and hence cannot be considered, on this ground alone, to be an instrument of public policy.

Therefore, we suggest to Your Honour that it would be consistent with the facts to rule that this bill must be treated as a hybrid bill. If such is your ruling, we would further suggest to the government that it withdraw the bill and resubmit it in a form which would make it unmistakeably an instrument of public policy.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I realize that in the course of the commentaries on the procedural point there have been a number of policy observations made about the bill itself, whether it contained too little socialism or too much socialism. These are interesting points for debate at a later stage, but at the moment the point of order has been raised that this is a hybrid bill and, accordingly, ought to be dealt with in a different way from a normal public bill. Indeed, at one point I believe the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) argued that it was exclusively a private bill; and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) came dangerously close to taking that position.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was close but not dangerous.

Mr. MacEachen: I realize that, to some extent, we are dealing with a point of order that is not generally raised and for which there are not all that many precedents. I noticed that while hon. members opposite were addressing themselves to a bill to establish a corporation to help develop and maintain strong Canadian control over corporations in the private sector, none of them found it possible to put forward any Canadian precedent to support the arguments they were making.

There are one or two precedents that may be of some help in determining what the attitude of this House has been to this particular problem. I have no objection to the definition of a hybrid bill. Beauchesne deals with the matter initially in two citations, 376 and 377. In the first citation Beauchesne states:

> Bills are of three kinds, Public Bills, Private Bills and Bills of a mixed character styled "Hybrid Bills" which, though of a public character, affect private rights; and in their passage through Parliament are subjected to a special procedure.

I emphasize and draw particular attention to the phrase "private rights" because under Beauchesne's definition a bill which is of a mixed character must affect private rights. Accordingly, it seems to me that it is a pivotal question to ask: In what way does this bill affect present and previously existing private rights? I will return to that in a moment. I accept the definition and I move on to the procedure that has been outlined for examining hybrid or private bills. I accept the outline given of the procedure and the argument that, if a bill is private or hybrid, a different procedure is laid down. But I do ask the question, which has not been fully dealt with: Why is it that a special procedure has been laid down for examining a private bill; why has the House decided to establish a special procedure?

I suggest the reason is that the House wants to satisfy itself about the extent to which previously existing private rights, or indeed private rights to be established, are to be affected by the bill; that the House would have no other way of satisfying itself on that point except by permitting persons to come forward and explain to a committee what rights they sought for themselves. Not for the body politic or for the public at large, but rights they sought for themselves as persons or corporations.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. MacEachen: I will when I am finished. I think we can throw some light on the question by asking ourselves why there has been a special procedure laid down for the examination of private bills. My submission is it is because private rights and private interests are affected or sought, and because the House must have a way to examine them. I go on to say that this is really the key to the solution, or to opening the door to the solution, of the procedural issue that has been raised.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that the bill affects private individuals, and a special group of individuals—presumably the potential shareholders in the Canada Development Corporation. But surely this is no argument for suggesting that special rights are being affected in this bill any more than special rights were affected in the passage of the amendments to the Old Age Security Act before Christmas when a special benefit was conferred on one particular group in the community, namely those who had reached a certain age. Of course, a bill can affect individuals in the community at large. But the question is: What special rights are affected, and in what way?

Erskine May's seventeenth edition deals with the distinction between public and private bills on pages 871-873. It quotes Mr. Speaker Hylton-Foster's view as to what is a hybrid bill, as follows:

> I think that a hybrid bill can be defined as a public bill which affects a particular interest in a manner different from the private interests of other persons or bodies of the same category or class.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I argue from that that it must not only affect the private rights and particular interests of individuals, but particular interests of individuals differently from the interests of other individuals in the same category.

Erskine May goes on in his recital to examine cases in the British House. However, I should like to state that because this is a Canada development bill we should look also at precedents made in Canada that might assist us in establishing this point of order, rather than taking refuge in the procedures of other countries, however respectful we are of their traditions.

Beauchesne cites one case of a hybrid bill, the entry in the Journal of the House for March 12, 1875. I refer to a motion of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, seconded by Mr. Fournier. I will not read all the details except to say that the purpose of the motion was to bring in a bill to rearrange the capital of the Northern Railway of Canada, to change the gauge of its railway and to amalgamate with the Northern Extension Railways Company. For that reason, the point of order in this case was raised by the hon. Edward Blake, as reported in the House of Commons Debates of March 12, 1875, at page 662.

He argued that the essential elements in the bill were related to the reorganization of the company and affected the private rights of private shareholders including the city of Toronto and the county of Simcoe. In other words, he raised the point of order that this public bill had a direct affect on the shareholders of the company, rights which they had acquired and which would be changed. On that ground the Speaker ruled that, indeed, this had the aspects of a hybrid bill because previously existing private rights and particular interests were affected.

There is nothing in this bill which will affect private rights of individual interests of any person, corporation, or groups of persons. If the bill passes there will be an opportunity for Canadian citizens to acquire shares in the Canada Development Corporation at a later date.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) made a very interesting comment when he quoted citation 482 of Beauchesne's. I asked myself how we could place this argument or citation in context with the argument I am making. He did read from Beauchesne's citation 482 as follows:—

> There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private Bill, which should not be overlooked. A public Bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private Bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the House, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the Bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee.

Why is that so? I argue procedurally that that is the special examination provided to determine the nature of the special interests or the special rights; that is the special private rights as stated by Beauchesne, or the particular interests or private interests as mentioned by Mr. Speaker Hylton-Foster as quoted in Erskine May's. That is why there is that different treatment, under that special kind of situation.

I turn just for a moment to the Standing Orders which seem to support this view. When we are talking about private interests or private rights we are not talking about something general or vague, or something affecting the body politic as a whole. We are talking about concrete, definite and identifiable rights. That is why on page 103 of the Standing Orders in reference to application for private bills it is suggested:

> When the application is for the purpose of obtaining for any person or existing corporation any exclusive rights or privileges or the power to do any matter or thing which in its operation would affect the rights or property of others: in the particular locality or localities in which the business, rights or property of others may be specially affected by the proposed Act.

This would suggest that there is a link between what Beauchesne, Mr. Speaker Hylton-Foster and the Standing Orders say, that these are rights which must be identified and related one to another, and are private rights.

Because it has been stated that this is something new we are trying, I mention another case which raises a situation similar to the one we have today. Bill 19 of the Fifth Session of the Seventeenth Parliament probably presents the closest parallel, and certainly a useful precedent on this question. This bill, which became Chapter 43 of the Statutes of Canada for 1934, was based upon a resolution to be found in the House of Commons Journals, page 35, February 2, 1934. It goes on to quote the resolution preceding the measure to incorporate a central bank in Canada and to provide for the appointment and salaries of the officers and staff of the bank and the appointment and fees of the directors, and to make such further provisions in respect of the functions, powers and administration as recommended by the Royal Commission on Banking and Currency.

This Act established the Bank of Canada, not as we know it today as a government-owned institution, but as a privately held company. In fact, three amendments to provide for government ownership were ruled out of order. Nobody suggested at that time that this was a hybrid bill or that it, in fact, related to private rights, even though the Bank of Canada was to be privately held.

It is true the Act involved government participation in the operations of the bank at several levels, including the naming of interim directors and the sale and holding of shares. Indeed, as you read both you cannot establish an exact parallel but you can certainly find enough support to our view that we are on solid Canadian procedural ground in proposing the Canada Development Corporation bill in this form.

I will come to a conclusion very quickly, Mr. Speaker. I say that my submission is that the purpose of the special procedure on private bills is to ensure that the rights of persons or bodies are not unjustly made greater or smaller than the rights of persons or bodies in similar categories or circumstances. The special procedures for private bills was developed so that Parliament could assure that no existing individual or corporate rights would be unjustly abridged if a measure were proceeded with.

I would also argue that it would apply to a special right being sought by an individual or by a corporation. In this bill we are giving effect, not to a private group of individuals' wishes, but to government policy. This is an instrument of economic policy designed to bring greater opportunities to individuals to invest and participate in the future development of Canada. That is the broad objective. No particular interest is being affected. No private right is being taken away. It is up to Your Honour now to judge, but unless somebody can throw more light on the subject, in the face of my examination I cannot see how it could be concluded that there is a private aspect unless we were to change very greatly the procedures we have developed up to the present in the House of Commons.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I realize the precedents are skimpy, but there must be some special reason for having special procedures for private bills. I suggest the special reason for the special procedure is that previously existing or established special rights affecting special groups or special persons are involved, and the House must examine these in a particular way. That is why we have special procedures. If it should be decided that this is a hybrid bill, what would the Examiner of Petitions or the standing committee do with it? Who would appear? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said all the people of Canada in a special assembly. This is the reductio ad absurdum of the day. I think it explodes his argument because who would come to the committee to protect the public interest but the elected representatives, because this is a matter of public policy and affects the body politic as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) seeks the floor for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. At the end of his statement the minister made a valid observation which worried me originally, until I saw the light. Perhaps, I might ask the minister a question. The minister talks about what rights may be affected. In the light of the fact that the Standing Orders mainly deal with private bills introduced on behalf of companies to be incorporated under the provisions of these rules, and in the light of the fact that hundreds of corporations have been affected by the provisions of these orders,—corporations which had no previous rights or existence before that—how does the minister reconcile his remarks about no private rights being affected with the fact that private corporations have been incorporated under private bills for decades with certain rights affecting certain individuals. That is the point I make and it is a case the minister has not met. That is why I ask the question.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not know whether I can give a very adequate answer. But when a private corporation petitions the House of Commons, presumably the petition is to create future special rights and special advantages that would accrue to that corporation itself.

Mr. Baldwin: As this bill does.

Mr. MacEachen: Who is petitioning here? This is one of the points raised in Erskine May's. How could the Crown petition the Crown? His Excellency really is recommending to the House of Commons on behalf of the Crown this measure, not a measure to create a private interest for the benefit of individuals or a special group or special corporation but is recommending to the House of Commons a measure which in the expectation of the government would have the effect of increasing the strength of the Canadianism of our economy.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is wrong.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member may say we are not taking the right steps, as has been stated. But that is what the House is being asked to judge. It is not the creation of a special interest or privilege for anybody.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is precisely what it is doing.

Mr. MacEachen: It is not. I suggest to my hon. friend that anybody can buy shares and we pass laws all the time affecting such groups.

Mr. Baldwin: Who else has the right to buy these four government companies?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), and to hon. members, that we appear to be getting involved in the substance of the matter. I do not think this is what we should do at the stage of the proceedings. We should limit ourselves as much as possible to the procedural aspect of the matter. I believe the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has a contribution to make to this debate, and we will hear him with pleasure.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), it would seem to me that he has hinged his entire argument on the question of private rights. If his case is to stand at all, he must make a case that private rights are not affected. I think he asked a rhetorical question which in a way deals with the matter of private rights, to which I want to refer. He asked who would come before the committee. I should like to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the poor of Canada would come before the committee because the condition of all people is not alike.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not propose to interrupt the hon. member but I would bring to his attention that his argument comes very close to being a debate on the substance of the bill which is now before the House. I feel that the type of argument advanced by the hon. member, and perhaps to some extent on this particular point by the President of the Privy Council, is close to a substantive debate. I would invite the hon. member to limit his contribution as much as possible to the procedural aspect of the matter.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was coming to the procedural point. In order to say that no private rights are affected, I believe one would have to look at the Canadian population and assume that the same conditions exist for all. When you take property, which is now public property, and transfer it or indicate your intention to transfer it to a private corporation in which the general public can buy shares, that is well and good provided every member of the general public is in a position to buy shares in that corporation. This seems to be the assumption the President of the Privy Council is making; that is, that no private rights are being lost because everyone can invest in the Canada Development Corporation. This is a pretty difficult argument to sustain when we look at the disparity which exists in this country, and the figures which indicate that 20 per cent or 25 per cent of the population is below the poverty line. We must ask the question whether all people will be able to share equally in the new opportunity that is being created. All persons in Canada whether rich or poor at the moment participate in and benefit from the Crown corporations which exist because they are all shareholders in those Crown Corporations.

If those Crown corporations were transferred to what looks like a private corporation to which a person would have to pay $5 in order to be an investor, then the poor of Canada would be deprived of the opportunity to make an investment. They would constitute a special group whose rights were being taken away. The rights which they now possess by being able to participate in Crown corporations would be taken away from them if those Crown corporations were transferred to a private corporation. This is the only argument I want to make.

The example the minister gave about the Bank of Canada is hardly applicable in this particular case. I am trying to recall whether, previous to the introduction of the bill which provided for the establishment of the Bank of Canada there were different Crown corporations whose assets were transferred to a private corporation. Now, it strikes me that this was not the case. The bank was a completely new creation, and therefore the comparison between what we are talking about today and some of the things the minister dragged out is really not applicable.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further contributions to this most interesting and important debate, perhaps the House would allow the Chair to express some views about the matter.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated some time ago that he proposed to object to the bill from a procedural standpoint before second reading and in this way the House, the Speaker and all hon. members were put on notice that this very interesting point would be raised today. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) indicated, in an informal way, that he proposed to object to the form in which the bill was being submittd to the House for consideration. I make reference to this background to indicate that I have tried to do my homework, as hon. members would expect the Speaker to do, and to give serious thought to the difficulty, to study precedents, to look at our rules as closely as possible, and perhaps be more informed on this as well as on the arguments submitted by hon. members in the course of the debate.

There is no doubt whatsoever that this has been a most informative debate from a procedural standpoint, but the objections advanced by hon. members who have taken part in the debate—and I will refer to no one in particular because the contributions were all constructive, I think—are not ones to which the Chair at this time should give effect.

If hon. members will bear with me for just a few moments I will go over what I consider to be essential about the definitions of private bills and public bills and also so-called hybrid bills. As hon. members know, a public bill is one intended for the general or public benefit. It relates to matters of public policy and is introduced directly by members of the House. On the other hand, a private bill is one involving not general or public benefit but the particular and private rights or interests of a person or body of persons and where what is being sought cannot be obtained by means of a general law. Bourinot defines a private bill in this way as recorded at page 558:

> Private bills are distinguished from public bills in that they directly relate to the affairs of private persons or of corporate bodies, and not to matters of general public policy or to the community at large.

My understanding of the private bill procedure is that it was established to protect the public against the uncontrolled granting of special powers to private interests. I believe that there is no quarrel about this interpretation.

What has been described as a third category of bills, that is hybrid bills, does not, in fact, exist in our Canadian parliamentary practice. Citations 376, 377 and 460 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition refer to hybrid bills. It is suggested that these citations relate to British practice only. This is pointed out by the fact that the citations come from May's "Parliamentary Practice", and the British practice, as hon. members themselves have pointed out, relating to hybrid bills is spelled out in the standing orders of the British house, contrary to the citations in our own House where no provision whatsoever is made for the consideration of what in the British parliament is called a hybrid bill. In other words, we have, according to our Standing Orders and our long established practice, just two kinds of bills—private bills and public bills. In Britain, in accordance with their standing orders and practice, there are three kinds of bills.

What is being proposed by hon. members is that when we stumble upon a kind of bill which, by coincidence, might correspond with that which the British call a hybrid bill, we should apply the British practice to our House. In support of this imaginative suggestion, hon. members referred to Standing Order 1 of our House of Commons which suggests that when there is no existing practice in the Canadian parliamentary history to cover a certain situation, we should apply procedures followed by the British house.

I suggest this may well be so when there is no practice, but in Canada there is a practice which is that there are only two kinds of bills, private bills and public bills. Hon. members may want to call the bills different names. I have heard different names applied to different bills. They may want to call a bill a hybrid bill. But the fact that it may correspond to what is a hybrid bill in another house, particularly in the British house, does not mean it should be treated in that way in our own Parliament. I repeat that in the Canadian practice bills are divided into private bills and public bills, and until now in any event, there has been no instance where a bill has been clearly classified as a hybrid bill and given special consideration which would be akin or related in some way to the practice adopted in the British house in relation to such hybrid bills. The question, therefore is whether the proposed legislation should be classified as a private or a public bill and considered by the House according to the relevant procedures specified in the standing orders.

The hon. member for Peace River in the course of his argument referred to a citation in Bourinot's second edition which dates back to the year 1883, that is the Toronto Esplanade and Harbour bill. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a very strong precedent in support of his case. I looked quickly at the bill while the argument was waxing a moment ago, and my conclusion about this particular precedent is as follows. First, this was introduced as a public bill. It was considered by the House, given first and second reading as a public bill, and then referred to the railway committee. What happened in the railway committee is not clear because, as I am informed, the records in this respect are not complete. The bill was reported from the committee to the effect that the preamble was not proven, which is a procedure ordinarily adopted in relation to private bills. To some extent this is significant, and it is to that extent that the argument of the hon. member for Peace River is valid. But I suggest to him that the precedent is not entirely helpful, since our records are not complete.

The same edition of Bourinot's goes on at the following page to refer to a second precedent where a different course was adopted. This other precedent goes back even farther, that is to the year 1875 when the then prime minister moved for leave to introduce a public bill relating to the Northern Railway of Canada. Eventually, a ruling was made that the proposed legislation was both private and public in nature, and subsequently separate bills were passed by the House, one public and one private. This of course is a very interesting precedent. The explanation which I gathered from reading this precedent is that the essential reason why part of the bill was required by the Chair to be introduced as a private bill was that it purported to amend the original act, which itself was considered and passed as a private bill even before Confederation.

The suggestion was made by some hon. members that there are no precedents at all and that this is an entirely new situation. I agree with the suggestion to some extent, but to a limited extent only. There are a number of precedents where there has been an admixture of private bill and public bill considerations. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), has referred to one of these precedents, which is the Bank of Canada Act of 1934. In that instance, I am informed, the bill was a public bill preceded by a resolution. In that instance, the act provided for public offerings of its shares and at the same time included provision for the government to participate.

Another precedent, which to some extent comes close to the bill which is now before the House, is the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, found in the Statutes of Canada, 1937, chapter 43. The Journals indicate that the company was established by a public bill preceded by a resolution, and included even the designation by name of the incorporators, normally a feature of a private bill. Yet in the course of consideration by the House and later until its eventual adoption, the measure was considered and treated by the Canadian Parliament as a public bill.

It has been suggested to me that there may be also be an analogy with the Telesat Act of 1968-69. I am not sure about this precedent, and I do not think it should be pressed although this bill was introduced and treated as a public bill. In any event, I suggest to hon. members that in order that a bill be designated as private it should not and cannot include any feature of public policy because such characterization will transcend any private nature it may have.

There appear to be well established principles in determining that a private bill should not be allowed to proceed as such but should be introduced as a public bill. They are described as follows:

1. Where public policy is affected.

2. Where the bill proposes to amend or repeal public acts.

3. Because of the magnitude of the area and the multiplicity of the interests involved.

4. The fact that the bill, though partly of a private nature, has as its main object a public matter.

These principles are outlined at page 873 of May's seventeeth edition.

It may be that hon. members may suggest that none of these criteria apply in this particular case, but to discuss this aspect of the matter I suggest we would have to go into the consideration of the essence of the bill, and to some extent this is what we have been doing in considering the procedural aspects of the matter. But if one applies the principles to which I have referred to Bill C-219, particularly to clause 6 of the bill which sets out the objects of the proposed legislation, I think it is clear that whatever may be said of its private nature respecting incorporation of a company with public participation, this bill would appear to be a declaration of public policy, and would meet some of the other tests provided by the learned author. Again, I refer hon. members to clause 6 of the bill.

I was about to go into other clauses of the bill, but perhaps I should stay away from that, because, I might give the appearance of delving too closely into the details of the bill, and I think all hon. members have tried to stay away from discussing the details of the bill or going into its different clauses. I think I will limit my suggestion to this that clause 6, that is the objects clause, would indicate that in view of the principles set down by May, and which have been recognized over the years, the bill should be treated as a public bill. My conclusion, therefore, must be that procedurally speaking the bill is properly before the House in this form at the present time. I will, therefore, put the motion.

Canada Development Corporation

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. speaker, the concept of the Canada Development Corporation has created widespread public interest, as well as some interest in this House, where it appears that all of the opposition parties seem to be in favour of the Canada Development Corporation yet against it at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Fundamental issues such as the need for a Canada Development Corporation, its objectives, the role to be played by the government, and the nature of its ownership have been thoroughly discussed. The government has benefited from this public discussion and from the briefs it has received in preparing the bill now before the House.

This government believes that there is a role to be played by a new institution, backed by substantial sources of Canadian capital and managed by skilled, experienced Canadian entrepreneurs, to help make possible fuller Canadian participation in the growth and development of Canada. Such an institution will be able to work closely with the other members of the Canadian business and financial community and provide Canadian entrepreneurship with the access to more substantial concentrations of Canadian capital required to ensure a greater Canadian presence in the growth of our own economy.

The general environment into which the new corporation will fit is that of a rapidly developing and diversifying Canadian economy. It is an economy with an enormous resource base and a still greater potential, and a greatly expanded secondary manufacturing sector that must grow and prosper in a highly competitive international environment. Business and industry have entered a new period of internationalism which makes it desirable that there be a number of Canadian controlled corporations with headquarters in Canada and with the kind of institutional strength and management capabilities to compete successfully in Canadian and international markets.

To take advantage of the opportunities and to meet the challenges created by this environment demands a vigorous, inventive and skilled people, large scale organization and the mobilization of substantial blocks of capital and entrepreneurial talent. In a country at Canada's stage of development and, open as we are to foreign capital and international competition, it also requires appropriate government policies.

While Canadians have one of the highest saving rates in the world and provide the bulk of Canada's private investment needs, foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry have become very extensive. Canadians have enjoyed significant material benefits as a result of these investments. Nevertheless, Canadians today are asking why they cannot participate more fully in their own resource and industrial development and in the growth of strong Canadian based corporations with extensive international interests and operations.

It is against the background of all these factors that the federal government has determined to move ahead with the bill to establish a Canada Development Corporation. The purposes of the Canada Development Corporation—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Grain—Suggested amendment of repayment formula under Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Public Service—Review of Staff Relations Act—Consultation with employee associations—reference to committee; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—Suggested use of light on Halifax monument as signal for shipping.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HIGHWAYS

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring as rapidly as feasible a 90-10 formula of cost-sharing with the Atlantic Provinces, of the highways program formerly carried on with those provinces by the Atlantic Development Board, and of joining with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Fundy Trail project, and of joining with Nova Scotia in building a crossing across the Shubenacadie River.

He said: Mr. Speaker, about two years ago the transport committee of this House considered the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces and subsequently reported on June 17, 1969. One recommendation of particular interest in this connection is to be found at page 39 of the Transport Committee's proceedings No. 28. I quote:

It is further recommended that the government should consider the advisability of instituting a five-year program of federal assistance to highways in the Atlantic provinces, $30 million to be the maximum federal contribution in any one year. This program should be financed on a 90-10 basis. The provinces would be required to submit plans for a defined network of all-weather highways, chosen for their effect on competition among transportation modes in the Atlantic provinces, and for their contribution toward the economic development of the Atlantic provinces.

Before hon. members who raise points of order rush back in to scream "foul" because this suggests the spending of money by the government, I would point out that this recommendation was more or less in the form of a prayer attached to the end of the Transport Committee's report. We felt this was the only way of escaping the censure of those who remind us that a private member cannot bring in a resolution which involves the expenditure of money.

The fact is that the private members on that committee, and they were from all political parties, agreed unanimously that this was a most important matter, this 90-10 formula for Atlantic Canada highways. The Atlantic Development Board is deceased, but its ghost is well remembered for the work it did in connection with highway development in my part of Canada. Late in 1969, on December 1, I engaged in one of those late night fishing expeditions at ten o'clock, on that occasion with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. O'Connell). I asked him to find out in some general way what the new department of regional economic expansion proposed in the form of cost sharing arrangements in connection with future highway developments in Atlantic Canada. As reported at page 1473 of Hansard, I said:

> I am wondering whether the formula will cover such projects as the Shubenacadie River crossing or a second bridge from Halifax across the northwest arm, both being within the riding of Halifax-East Hants.

The parliamentary secretary replied:

> Let me say that the development programs which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is currently discussing with provinces in the Atlantic Region are expected to make provision for a certain amount of highway assistance integrated with comprehensive plans for regional development.

At the time of the federal election of the year before, for the first time, East Hants became part of my responsibility. The people there are very anxious, and have been over the years, to obtain some crossing of the Shubenacadie River which would cut off many tens of miles for people on the west bank of the river and greatly convenience those in the Colchester-Maitland-Hants County area. I hold up one of my files to indicate I have been somewhat fervent in my correspondence with members of the federal and provincial governments on this matter. I gave the people concerned the promise that I would work hard for this project and I am trying to do just that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: Since my time is limited, I will try to deal with some of the aspects that are on record. For example, in a letter to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) last year, I said:

> Here are several reasons which I suggest be considered in support of the building of the crossing.
> (1) Truck traffic into and out of the Annapolis Valley to the east is increasing, and because transport trucks are becoming larger and heavier, either bridges on existing routes will have to be improved or a crossing provided.
> (2) Annapolis agriculture would benefit by the shorter haul to the Truro area (and on to New Brunswick).
> (3) If a causeway were decided upon, a great inland fresh water lake would develop, thus providing a logical northern playland for Metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth, as well as an extension of the metropolitan growth centre.
> (4) In due season, Fundy tidal power will be developed. In the course of hundreds of millions of dollars of construction, no doubt important savings would be made by having a shorter link from Truro.
> (5) There are educational and health benefits for the people on the west side of the Shubenacadie River whose natural capital is Truro.
> (6) The crossing is a logical link in a Fundy trail.

As a matter of fact, it occurred to me only a few weeks ago when I took a fresh look at the plans for Fundy power development, that the crossing could well be on top of a dam. Fundy power development will need at least three dams to be effective and the crossing could be made on top of one of them, thus combining a vista of a man-made wonder of the world with transportation benefits. I know that in France where they have harnessed tidal power they have turned that project into a tourist attraction. This might be of benefit; it might be considered. Perhaps I should not even have mentioned it, because it might give people an opportunity to put off the building of the Shubenacadie River crossing for another 40 years.

I also wrote to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). The Minister of Transport provided a quick answer as one would expect. He did point out that this was not part of a highways program for last year. I gather that the highways program for that year was limited to the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway; it would certainly have been drawn up much earlier in the year than the date on which I sent him the letter. Be this as it may, it was not a submission by the provincial government to the federal government at that point. The answer I received from the President of the Privy Council, then the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was that he was actively pursuing the matter with his colleagues.

A major development came on August 27 at a meeting of the provincial cabinet in Halifax, when it was unanimously agreed that the Shubenacadie crossing bridge should be included in the five-year plan to be presented to Ottawa some time this fall. This information is contained in a letter from Mr. Gerald C. Ritcey, the provincial secretary for trade, written to Mr. Herbert McDuffie, president of the Shubenacadie River crossing committee. Then, came the provincial election, and I gather that at the moment the river crossing project is still very much a dream—a dream without any concrete reality.

Among the proponents of this project over the years is Mr. Herbert McDuffie, who is head of the committee with respect to it. He is an old man now, and I suppose in his evening years he hopes to see at least a start made on the crossing. The Maritime Provinces Chamber of Commerce has also been a proponent of the scheme. Mr. Ritcey was the man who most of all carried it forward in Nova Scotia. The present Premier of Nova Scotia is also in favour of the scheme, or was, during the provincial election of 1967. The Nova Scotia Federation of Home and School Associations has supported it, as have the municipalities of East Hants, West Hants, and Colchester, the towns of Truro and Stewiacke, the Tourist Council of Central Nova Scotia, and Annapolis Valley Affiliated Boards of Trade, the Truro Board of Trade, the Truro Area Industrial Committee, and the Fundy vacation trail committee of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. All those bodies are in favour of the Shubenacadie River crossing.

In order to allow other hon. members interested in transportation in the Maritimes an opportunity to speak, I shall shorten my speech. As you may have noticed, I have not dealt with the Fundy Trail fully; I will leave that to my seconder, the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas). May I read part of the article "the publisher's column", by J. M. Murphy, in the Truro Weekly News of January 28. Mr. Murphy has promoted the idea of the Shubenacadie River crossing as follows:

> The value of the 'intangibles' to them, which crossing would provide, would be the moving of provincial and federal government services emanating out of Truro, some 30 miles closer to them. These services include health, postal, RCMP, educational, Department of Agriculture, veterinary, Manpower, Unemployment Insurance, express and freight shipments by truck, and various commercial services among the many. The cost of transportation to and from Truro and the area would be lessened. The area would be opened up to the tourist trade, 85 per cent of which streams into the province through the Amherst border and North Hants would also be opened up as a new recreational and conceivably residential area, with a resulting increase in land value. Such places as Maitland and Noel might once again become important ocean shipping ports for such things as petroleum products, pulpwood, cement and the like.

It is interesting to note that the largest four masted vessel ever to be built in Canada was built in Maitland approximately 100 years ago.

I have placed on the record some of my thoughts. I have pursued this matter pretty zealously since East Hants became part of my responsibilities after the 1968 election. May I sum it up this way: the crossing can come into existence under either one of two federal programs. It can be done if the federal government adopts the 90-10 highway sharing formula suggested in the transport committee's report of July, 1969. The other way would be for the crossing to be included as part of an over-all regional development program under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion agreement with the province of Nova Scotia. I would not quarrel with either of these methods; I just want to see this done, and done soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. Guy Crossman (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for moving this private members' notice of motion because it deals with the improvement and further construction of highways in the Atlantic region. On December 16, 1968, a similar motion was moved by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), and dealt with in this House. I say it was a similar motion, for it also dealt with the Fundy Trail construction. That, in part, is what I wish to speak about today. I think that the Shubenacadie River crossing is a matter for the provincial authorities and the government of Canada.

So far as the Fundy Trail construction is concerned, on December 16, 1968, I endeavoured to point out, while keeping in mind the importance of this trail to the promotion of tourism in the area, that it was also essential that a long look be taken at the over-all situation before establishing priorities. I mentioned at that time that only the southwestern part of New Brunswick has highways completed to modern standards. One of these is the Trans-Canada Highway leading from the Quebec border, through Woodstock, Fredericton and Moncton to the Nova Scotia border and also to the P.E.I. ferry crossing at Cape Tormentine. Another is the highway leading from St. Stephen to Saint John and from Saint John to the Trans-Canada Highway. I am also pleased to say that considerable work was done to the highway from Woodstock to Houlton during the 1970 season; but the completion of this very important artery is still in the future. The highways just mentioned cover in part the requirements in the south and west areas.

One short look at the substandard condition of the No. 11 highway linking the northern part of New Brunswick to the rest of the province along the eastern seaboard would convince anyone that the priorities agreed on in the special areas and highways agreement for 1970-72 were well chosen. The hundreds of towns and villages depending on this highway are hampered by seasonal weight restrictions and by lack of an easy access to markets for their perishable products of the sea. This part of the road lies along the coast of the Northumberland Strait. It is with concern that we realize that many of the bridges on this highway were built before today's heavy traffic was envisaged. The collapse of one of these bridges would cause a serious traffic tie up for indefinite periods. One bridge I have in mind is the bridge entering Bathurst. The traffic of today is really overtaking this bridge. If that bridge were to be out of use it would seriously hamper a most industrious town. Another bridge I have in mind is the Cocagne Bridge bridging the Cocagne River. If there were a tie up in those cases, great hardship would be caused along many miles of the coast of the Northumberland Strait.

Mr. McCleave: That is quite right.

Mr. Crossman: I have pointed out only a few reasons for showing that if any concern is felt for the possible future economic development of this large region, the continuation and completion of the new No. 11 highway should remain the No. 1 priority.

I have in my hand a document entitled, "Canada/New Brunswick Special Areas and Highways Agreement 1970/72". Numerous items in schedule B relating to highway construction show that the government of the province of New Brunswick saw eye to eye with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion on what I consider to be a matter of top priority, the improvement of No. 11 highway. Numerous items in schedule B show that work was begun in different areas along the No. 11 highway. I hope that this very important project will be continued in the coming year.

Having said this, I wish to assure my hon. friend for Halifax-East Hants that nothing could please me more than if ways and means could be found to finance his proposed project. Nevertheless, I differ with him in the formula he has suggested. I listened to the hon. member today. This afternoon he suggested that the government should consider the advisability of declaring as rapidly as feasible a 90-10 cost-sharing formula for the highway program that was formerly embarked on by those provinces and the Atlantic Development Board. Perhaps the hon. member is not aware what a retrograde step this would be. The maximum cost sharing under the Atlantic Development Board program was of the order of 75-25.

The present agreements on special areas and highways provided for 100 per cent federal financing of construction costs and, unlike the ADB program, for loan financing for land acquisition in urban areas where acquisition costs are often high. The total assistance provided by the ADB to the Atlantic provinces, from the first agreement in 1964 to the fourth agreement in 1968, was $66.5 million, distributed as follows: $19.5 million to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and $8 million to Prince Edward Island. Under the DREE Special Areas and Highway Agreements signed this year, the amount committed toward highways in fiscal 1970-71 alone comes to $63.4 millions, composed of $55.4 million in grants and $8 million in loans. Over the short life of the agreement, from April 1, 1970 to June 30, 1972, the total expenditure under this agreement on highways in the Atlantic provinces will be approximately $88 million, consisting of $76 million in grants and $12 million in loans. These amounts are, of course, additional to the $7.5 million in federal funds committed for highways under the FRED Plan for P.E.I. In fiscal 1970-71 alone, almost as much money has been committed to highway development in the Atlantic provinces as was provided over four years in the old ADB Agreements.

With respect to the highways that are assisted, and specifically the Fundy Trail project and a crossing of the Shubenacadie river, it must be pointed out that highway programs are joint programs with the provinces. In all cases they must be highways that we and the provinces agree jointly are important contributors to the economic development of the province. We are aware of the merits of the roads that the member has suggested and their potential contribution to the development of the provinces, but the provinces concerned felt, and we agreed, that they would not contribute as importantly to the development of the region as a whole and the individual provinces as the highways that were chosen for priority construction.

I would like the hon. member to enlighten me on one point. The program for construction of the Shubenacadie crossing has not yet been advanced by the provincial authorities to the federal authorities. This is what I gather. I ask the hon. member whether this is a fact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that while I called the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith), it was the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Crossman) who spoke.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it was with considerable interest that I noticed my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), had placed this notice of motion on the Order Paper. It ties in very closely with my own notice of motion No. 20, which calls on the government to develop an over-all transportation policy for the Atlantic region. This is something that has been promised to the area for a good many years. It was specifically promised in 1967 when the National Transporation Act was passed. The necessity for an over-all policy was recognized by the government at that time when they instituted the freeze on railway rates. Over the past four years, the recognition has been more in the breach than in the observance. We all know what happened to the freeze on rail rates. We know what happened to rail rates in the past four years. Only those who live in the Atlantic provinces are aware of the fact that we are still no closer to an Atlantic transportation policy than in 1966.

I want to emphasize the need for an over-all transportation policy. I appreciate remarks made by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Crossman). I am very happy that he is with us. I feel only through the co-operation of all Atlantic members, regardless of political affiliation, will we eventually be able to arrive at a coherent and comprehensive policy for the area.

While I agree with the figures given by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, and appreciate the fact that many millions of dollars have been pumped into the area through the agreement he referred to, I maintain the position we have taken from the start that this is still not the comprehensive policy that has been called for by the old ADB, the Atlantic Provinces Premiers' Report and the Standing Committee on Transportation. DREE is basically an ad hoc policy. As far as we are concerned, the time has long passed when we should abandon this idea of ad hoc assistance for the area and come up with a long-range development policy to bring this area up to the level of the rest of Canada. This fact has been long recognized. The old ADB was established in 1963. I quote from their final report:

> From its inception, the Board recognized that shortcomings in transportation were responsible for much of the lagging economic growth of the Atlantic region. While it was apparent that these shortcomings embraced all modes of transport, the solutions were anything but obvious, involving as they did complex questions of national and regional policy objectives. What was clear and undisputed, however, was the need for a network of modern, all-weather trunk highways, to be constructed at the same time as an over-all transportation policy for the region was being developed.

That was in 1963, close to eight years ago. We are still waiting for a comprehensive transportation policy for the Atlantic area. It is all right for the government to say that millions of dollars have been dumped into that area. I agree that in the period 1964-67 $66.5 million were provided for highway construction in the area. These were crash programs to try to bring some of these areas up to some sort of standard. It was not a comprehensive policy. In case there is any confusion, I point out that the assistance varied from 50/50 in some cases to 75/25 in others, but not the 90/10 that was later developed to finish the Trans-Canada Highway in areas where the costs of construction were prohibitive.

Our problem in the Atlantic area is the fact that highway construction is very costly because of the small population and rugged terrain. Highway construction in that area has always fallen behind the rest of Canada. We have never had the good, all-weather highways that people in central Canada have been blessed with for many years.

The principles of the National Transportation Act, which are essentially based on the principle of competition to protect regional areas from discriminatory rates, have not worked in our area. There is no effective competition there. The National Transportation Act provides that rail rates must be compensatory. However, the catch is the clause which allows the railway or other carrier to charge whatever rate competition will permit. In an area where there is only limited competition, there is nothing to prevent the carrier in the region from charging what the traffic will bear. This is our problem. This is why ADB, and all the commissions which have studied the area, have identified the lack of suitable transportation as one of the root causes of our economic disparity.

The National Transportation Act as it applies today does little or nothing for our area. Even though we have had $66.5 million pumped into the area and other money put in by DREE, we still lack an all-weather arterial highway network. The Atlantic Premiers referred many times in their report to the fact that if secondary industries are to be developed in the Atlantic region, and other industries brought up to the potential of industries in the rest of Canada, an adequate highway network that will accommodate other modes of transportation, such as trucking, must be constructed in order to provide competition for the railways. Then we will truly have compensatory rates as envisaged under the National Transportation Act.

In the report referred to by my colleague for Halifax-East Hants, entitled "The Basic Elements of an Atlantic Provinces Transportation Policy" published in March, 1969, the Premiers expressed the view that the limited financial capabilities of the Atlantic provinces necessitate an increase in federal investment in the arterial highway program. They stated that a long-term program was essential to get maximum benefit from available funds—frequent reference is made to this throughout the report—and that the province of Newfoundland and Labrador has special highway requirements within the Atlantic region.

They went on to point out that as a result of these peculiar conditions to which I have referred in the Atlantic area and the high cost of building highways, the Atlantic region is entitled to special assistance such as our national transportation policy recognizes is required for other types of transportation. I need mention only briefly the assistance provided primary producers in the west under the Crow's Nest Pass rates, the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which was essentially created and subsidized by the government to enable shippers from western Canada to export and manufacturers in central Canada to import, and subsidizing the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway by the federal government, again a highway built to assist long-range transportation.

In practically all the reports and submissions that have been made it has been contended that the Atlantic provinces are entitled to extra assistance. This is why my colleague's motion asks for an allocation of funds to the extent of 90 per cent by the federal government and 10 per cent by the province concerned. In this connection I should like to put on record the submission of the Atlantic Premiers in regard to an over-all assistance program:

> The length of this program should be ten years with the first five years fixed and the balance renegotiated and reconsidered prior to the conclusion of the first five years. The federal share of total costs, including acquisition of right of way, should be 90 per cent for the first five years. Prior to the end of ten years, a further program should be negotiated, if needed.
> To avoid a two-year pause in construction while a detailed program is being developed and negotiated, it is recommended that the detailed one-year program contained in the Atlantic provinces submission to the Atlantic Development Board be extended to cover two years—

This is the basis of my submission. I appreciate that funds have been pumped into the Atlantic area, but I maintain and have always been of the opinion that short-range, ad hoc policies are not the answer to our problem. What we require is something along the line envisaged by this motion, namely, a long-range program—such as that suggested by the Atlantic Premiers—which would be the foundation or cornerstone of an Atlantic transportation policy of the sort for which I have been fighting and arguing since I have been a member of this House.

My colleague referred to the Fundy Trail, and I spoke about it two years ago. I am still strongly in favour of the construction of the Fundy Trail. In fact, I think this area is so badly in need of new highways that we should not become too sectional or regional in our approach. Indeed, we should lend our support to the Shubenacadie River crossing, or to route 9 or route 11, to which my hon. friend from Westmorland-Kent made reference. All of these could be embraced within one over-all program. Since I hope my hon. friend from Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) will have a chance to say something about the Fundy Trail, I will leave that subject to him.

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on the motion moved by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), I cannot but commend both of them for requesting additional financial assistance from the federal government for the transportation system mentioned in the motion. The motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring as rapidly as feasible a 90-10 formula of cost-sharing with the Atlantic provinces, of the highways program formerly carried on with those provinces by the Atlantic Development Board, and of joining with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Fundy Trail project, and of joining with Nova Scotia in building a crossing across the Shubenacadie River.

This is not the first time that this or a similar motion has been debated in the House. On December 16, 1968, on a motion moved by the hon. member for Moncton, there was considerable debate about the Fundy Trail. However, the present motion is somewhat wider, not only because it makes reference to the Shubenacadie River crossing but also because, by necessary implication, it brings up for discussion the whole question of federal aid to the provinces in regard to highway construction.

I do not think any member of the House, especially a member from the Atlantic region, would be wholly inclined to disagree with this motion. Part of the motion, the part on which I expected to hear most debate, refers to the Fundy Trail. This is essentially a route that would be a great tourist attraction. It would follow the shores of the Bay of Fundy both on the New Brunswick and the Nova Scotia side. It would undoubtedly be a most attractive tourist route, following through some of the most scenic parts of the two provinces. However, from what I have seen of the terrain, it is quite rugged and therefore construction costs would be quite high. Its length would be approximately 550 miles from St. Stephen, New Brunswick to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, about half of this distance being in each province.

The existing highway that follows the shore of the Bay of Fundy for the most part does not afford a view of the waters of the bay. It runs inland from the bay, sometimes up to a distance of 40 miles, and the fishing communities dotted along the shore of the bay are themselves serviced by small branch roads. The constructing of roads inland in earlier times may have been dictated by the fact that it was less rugged country and therefore construction costs were cheaper.

Like all hon. members who have spoken, I am a great believer in the fullest possible development of the tourist potential of the Atlantic provinces. I believe we have something exceptional to offer tourists, especially in areas such as the proposed Fundy Trail and along our east coasts. I feel that the provinces in attempting to attract industry to our chronically depressed Atlantic provinces sometimes tend to overlook our real tourist potential. Perhaps this is because we compete with each other. It is unfortunate that in the past most efforts have been directed toward the attraction of resource-based industry. Considerable sums in grants and other concessions have often been made to that type of industry to induce them to locate there. However, the result in many cases has simply been the carting away of our natural resources by foreign companies which sometimes leave the landscape in a most unattractive condition.

A more enlightened approach in recent years has been shown by some companies who are exploiting our renewable resources, particularly our forests, and have begun to show an interest in reforestation. The results of the exploitation of our non-renewable resources, such as minerals, are more serious since nothing can be done to replace our ore bodies in the ground. A further side-effect to the exploitation of our minerals is the damage which this operation does to one of our main tourist attractions, that is, the fish life to be found in our streams, lakes and rivers. Our pulp mills contribute as well, but to a lesser degree, to the destruction of this great natural resource.

I am keenly aware of this problem, living as I do on the banks of the Miramichi River, which is the greatest Atlantic salmon river in the world but where pollution is now reaching a dangerous stage. I am pleased to note that our Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) is taking a very serious view of this matter and is showing polluters and potential polluters of our waters that he means business.

Let me return to the question of the Fundy Trail. It should be pointed out that although money is being made available by the government of Canada to the provinces to meet our pressing transportation problem, including highways, the priorities for such construction are set out by the provinces concerned. In the pressing and even desperate need to service relatively large provinces containing relatively small populations, they have so far elected to spend the moneys available on roads that would serve the dual purpose of providing transportation between major population centres and also assist the tourist industry.

I am not certain of the priorities set out by the province of Nova Scotia but I know that in New Brunswick, at least under the former government of Hon. Louis J. Robichaud, the main priority was for an all-weather road from Moncton to Chatham and thence to Bathurst and Campbellton. I hope the present government of New Brunswick will uphold this priority, especially in view of the fact that construction of this road had already commenced under the previous government. I might add that this road as well as connecting main population centres would be a very scenic one: it would follow the east coast of New Brunswick, crossing the Miramichi River at Chatham over the newly-constructed Centennial Bridge located in the constitutency of Northumberland-Miramichi which I have the honour to represent in this House.

On the question of priorities, which I repeat—and I think the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants will agree—is a provincial matter, I should like to mention another project which has been discussed for almost as long as the Fundy Trail. It was started many years ago under the roads to resources program, and although passable with difficulty, it is far from being completed. I refer to the Renous-Plaster Rock highway, which would open up the whole central area of New Brunswick. Furthermore, it would tie in with the much discussed corridor road from New Brunswick to Montreal through the state of Maine. It would decrease the travel distance from eastern New Brunswick to Montreal by over 100 miles.

I mention the corridor road because it was referred to in a submission signed by the Premiers of the four Atlantic provinces and forwarded to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) in March, 1969. This submission, to which the hon. member for Moncton referred, relates to the corridor road in connection with spending money on roads in Atlantic Canada. It suggests that especially when we consider spending large amounts of money, an over-all view of present and future needs should be taken, including connecting roads between provinces and methods of ingress and egress to and from the whole area. I quote from page 17 of that report under the heading, "Transportation Modes—Highways".

An adequate highway network is essential to the economic development of the region. The limited financial capabilities of the Atlantic provinces necessitate an increase in the federal investment in the arterial highway program. A long-term program is essential to get maximum benefit from available funds. The province of Newfoundland and Labrador has special highway requirements within the Atlantic region.

The position of the Atlantic provinces on highways was outlined in detail in their submission to the Atlantc Development Board on April 1, 1968. At that time the submission to the ADB recognized that the subsequent findings contained in this report might necessitate some amendments to the original submission. The four provinces recommend the following modifications in the ADB brief:

(1) Greater emphasis on the need for urban arterials.

(2) Recognition in the long-term program of the differing needs and financial capabilities of the individual provinces.

I quote one more paragraph of the report:

Emphasis should be placed upon acceptance by the federal government of the principle of such a long-term program and upon acceptance of that principle the following course of action is proposed:

(1) Before implementing a long-term arterial highway program, a detailed assessment of the network needs of the individual provinces should be carried out. Such an assessment should include detailed analysis of the potential impact on the regional highway network of such major projects as the Northumberland Strait causeway and the corridor road.

I would point out to the hon. member who introduced the motion that nowhere in this report, or in any other submission or report I have seen, have recent governments of Nova Scotia headed by men of like political persuasion to his placed a high priority on the Fundy Trail. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants might be well advised to first convince his province of Nova Scotia of the high priority the Fund Trail deserves and which I agree it should have.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and the hon. member for Moncton suggest that this government consider the advisability of declaring as rapidly as feasible a 90-10 per cent cost-sharing formula in respect of the highways' program formerly carried on with the Atlantic provinces by the Atlantic Development Board. I suggest that the formula detailed by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Crossman) is more generous than the one requested.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much time. I will simply repeat what I believe was said by the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent, that in the fiscal year 1970-71 alone almost as much money has been committed to highway development in the Atlantic provinces as was provided over four years under the Atlantic Development Board agreements. With respect to highways that are assisted, specifically the Fundy Trail project and the crossing of the Shubenacadie River, it must be pointed out, as has been mentioned already, that they are joint programs with the provinces. In all cases they must be highways which Ottawa and the provinces jointly agree are important contributors to the economic development of the province.

I am aware of the merit of the roads the hon. member has referred to and their potential contribution to the development of these areas, but apparently the provinces concerned felt, and Ottawa agreed, that they would not contribute as importantly to the development of the region as a whole and the individual provinces as would the highways that were chosen for priority construction.

In conclusion, I repeat that I would support the hon. member's motion fully, with the single reservation that the priority in respect of it must be spelled out by the provincial governments concerned. And, of course—this is understood—this project must not be constructed at the expense of funds that would otherwise be used for projects which I have indicated, and which the two provinces have indicated, have higher priority.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, lest the record should seem to indicate that only members from the Atlantic provinces are interested in this motion, perhaps a voice from the west might have the floor for 30 seconds. I admit to an ancestral prejudice in favour of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick but I believe it is also true that in western Canada we think that what is good for the Atlantic provinces is good for Canada. I like the idea of an over-all highways' program for the Atlantic provinces, I support the Fundy Trail, and I believe Nova Scotia should have the Shubenacadie crossing. I commend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for presenting this motion this afternoon.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the advance billing of the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), I really had not intended to make extensive remarks. The parliamentary secretary has been making notes so I want to give him plenty of time to talk out the bill. There is, however, one thing I should like to say briefly in connection with the Fundy Trail. I have advocated this for years, along with many other members, and when I get up to speak about the Fundy Trail now everybody yells out "funny trail". But it is a great project and I, as one who helped in its early promotion, envisage a particular type of vacation trail the funds for which would not come from regular highway sources.

I regret that this has been misunderstood by members of this House and by many of the sincere promoters of this project. I do not feel we should take the highway moneys of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, regardless of the governments concerned, and allocate them to a tourist trail, because these moneys are scarce. I believe we should start by gradually developing the roads around the Bay of Fundy, as has been explained, and then look into the matter to see if there is a better way to do it. In this way we could find out how much should be spent on the project. I envisage money coming from Fundy Park and such projects, in the way the special highways at Banff and Jasper were built.

I commend those hon. members who have taken the opportunity to put forward very sensible remarks about the effect this transportation program would have and the need for it in the Maritimes.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do not wish to be misunderstood in the sense that I am opposed to federal involvement in the development of highways which previous speakers have advocated for the Atlantic provinces. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I wish to see an over-all highways policy involving not only the Atlantic provinces but all of Canada. In other parts of Canada there are highways which deserve federal attention because of their importance, the contribution they could make to transportation at the national level and the great impact they could have on the tourist industry, which as hon. members know is one of the major foreign exchange earners in this country.

Two such highways come to mind in this connection. The first is the Alaska Highway. Hon. members have advocated that the federal government become involved in the paving of this very important route. The number of tourists who use this route is increasing every year, but it is nowhere as large as we could expect if it were paved. Indeed, people who travel this route have to be most adventuresome. In addition to such people there are many others who would like to travel the northern part of this continent but are unable to do so because of the very poor condition of this road.

Another highway, on which I shall concentrate more, is the Yellowhead route. This highway is already built. It is really the second trans-Canada highway in the prairie provinces. It begins at Portage la Prairie in Manitoba and runs through such prairie centres as Yorkton, Saskatoon, North Battleford, Lloydminister, Edmonton, Edson, Hinton, then through the national park and community of Jasper to finally join the Trans-Canada Highway again at Kamloops.

As I said, this highway has been completed. Many parts of it are superior to the Trans-Canada Highway. The dimensions and structure of it exceed the requirements of the Trans-Canada Highway Act. All that is lacking is a national designation of this highway. Many people have been involved in the development of the highway and its promotion. To put it simply, they feel the federal government could, by adding its name to this highway, increase its stature and thereby bring more tourists to that part of the prairie provinces.

In addition, this highway saves dollars for transport companies who operate to Vancouver, because of low gas consumption on it. The grades along the highway are much smaller than those on the Trans-Canada Highway through Rogers Pass. The snowfall on this highway is also much less than it is in the Rogers Pass portion of the Trans-Canada Highway.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purposes of the CDC are essentially twofold; first, to help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations in the private sector of the economy and, second, to give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

The CDC would seek to achieve its first objective by investing in the equity of existing corporations, by helping in the expansion and establishment of significant new enterprises and by assisting the expansion of existing ones. In doing so it will normally invest in enterprises in which it expects to have a substantial holding of shares carrying voting rights and in which the total value of the shareholders' equity will be, or is likely to become, $1 million or more. It is expected that CDC's investment in a corporation would normally be large enough, either alone or in combination with other Canadian investors, to ensure Canadian control. It would generally not seek to exercise direct operating control of the corporations in which it invests, and accordingly it would not be necessary for them to be CDC subsidiaries. It would, of course, be in a position to exercise the degree of influence on the basic policies and direction of such corporations appropriate for a major shareholder.

The corporation will be expected to work very closely with other members of the Canadian business and financial community. Ideally, many of its actions and investments will be in response to proposals made to it by others. It should concentrate the exercise of its own direct entrepreneurial functions in those areas of particular promise and interest to the Canadian economy where there is not otherwise likely to be a sufficient degree of Canadian participation.

We anticipate that it will give special attention to industries considered to be of greatest potential and importance to Canada's future economic development. It should emphasize areas involving the development and application of new technology, those which involve the exploitation and utilization of Canadian natural resources, those which have special relevance to the development of the north and those in which Canada now has or can develop significant comparative advantages by international standards.

To take full advantage of future opportunities to develop our economy, some significant steps must be taken to rationalize and improve various sectors of Canadian industry. Some of these steps will involve mergers, amalgamations and other corporate arrangements designed to strengthen the competitiveness of Canadian industry. However, it is often in the process of making such desirable changes that Canadian control of a corporation involved becomes most vulnerable.

The CDC should be in a position to play an important catalytic and facilitating role in making such constructive changes possible and reducing the risks of an undesirable degree of foreign control of the industries concerned. Thus, it will work in close and creative co-operation with Canada's business and investing community, in helping to build the kind of Canadian institutions which will enlarge the opportunities for Canadians to use their management and technical skills and to develop greater markets for Canadian goods and services.

The primary role of the CDC will be to help shape and secure the future rather than to recover the past. Its approach must be a dynamic, positive and forward-looking one. Just as the forces at work in our economy are many and complex, the measures we must take to shape our economy in the 1970s must be varied and flexible. The CDC has been designed with broad investment powers to give its management the resources and the flexibility to achieve, in the most effective way, the objectives set out for it.

The corporation will operate within the private sector of the economy with the capabilities and constraints of a private corporation. It will be expected to carry out its objects, in the words of the bill, "in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole." Since the shares of the corporation will as soon as practicable be sold to the public in competition with all other investment vehicles, the management of the corporation will at all times be fully aware of the need to earn a competitive rate of return on invested capital fully commensurate with the risks involved.

The CDC cannot and must not be expected to make investments which do not meet its criteria for profitability. The national interest and the profit motive are not always compatible, but there is a broad area over which they are or can be in harmony. It is in this area that the corporation's activities and interest will be concentrated. This means that there are limits to what the corporation can be expected to accomplish. It should be regarded as only one of the measures to promote greater ownership and control of our economy by Canadians. But I am confident that the role it can play will make a very important contribution to our efforts to deal positively and constructively with these concerns.

The other major purpose set out in the bill is that the corporation should be owned by the Canadian public, with as wide a distribution of the shares as possible. The corporation will be uniquely Canadian with its voting shares held only by Canadian citizens and residents. Through it a new opportunity will be provided for every Canadian to invest in Canadian industry and to share in the profits of such an investment. It is intended that these shares will, when widely held, be listed on Canadian stock exchanges.

I have described the objectives and the kinds of activities set out for the CDC. The government believes these purposes and activities are overwhelmingly supported by Canadians. I am confident that the business community is also behind the CDC, subject to the very important reservation that the CDC must be free to make good business decisions. That prescription has been written into the bill. It is the CDC's mandate.

Comment on the CDC since the introduction of this legislation has, of course, included some strident voices of the political right and left. From the left, my friends of the New Democratic Party cry of a "sell-out to private enterprise" in a statement by their leader that appeared without so much as a cursory examination of the bill. Having now read the bill, the NDP may wish to recognize that the CDC will be widely held, that it will have a specific role to promote Canadian ownership and control and that it will pursue industrial development and greater processing of primary products in Canada. However, I see very little hope for the CDC because this afternoon, in doing something we on this side would have been condemned for, they issued a press release saying what their amendment to the second reading of the bill would be, in which they really propose that we should have a Canada Development Corporation which is designed to take over industry in Canada and have it owned by the government of Canada. That is what they believe in for the CDC.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister—

Mr. Benson: When I am finished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was to be on a question, but I will make it on a point of order. What did the minister mean when he said, "I now see very little hope for the CDC"?

Mr. Benson: Oh, no. I said I had no hope for the NDP.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't fuddle with Hansard. It was "CDC".

Mr. Benson: Well, if I said "CDC" I apologize. I really meant the NDP, and in that I am in concert with all Canadians.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Once in a while you happen to be right the first time.

Mr. Benson: But the CDC will also pursue profits, a word that apparently dismays the New Democrats, and the CDC will operate free of pressure by departments of the federal government. This government has no intention of tying the CDC to specific regional programs, as the NDP would suggest. We do not want another fiasco such as the one in Saskatchewan when the present leader of the NDP was Premier of that province. Nor does the government have any intention of distorting the competitive structure of our financial system by forcing all financial institutions to invest in the CDC, as the New Democrats would insist.

Comment from the right does not, of course, look upon the Canada Development Corporation as a sell-out to big business at all. On the contrary, it sees Socialism—and this was mentioned by hon. members opposite today. One columnist has called the CDC another manifestation of government policy to drive the entrepreneur out of the Canadian economy. Perhaps this kind of acute suspicion can only be resolved by the good performance of the corporation working co-operatively for stronger private corporations increasingly managed and owned by Canadians.

I will now outline some very important provisions of the bill relating to the operation of the corporation. The affairs of the corporation will be managed by a board of directors consisting of 18 to 21 members. The federal government will have the choice of appointing not more than four directors in lieu of voting the government's shares for election of the entire slate of directors. I think the members of the NDP were misleading this afternoon in stating the government would only elect four members of the board of directors. The government has the choice as the corporation develops. If its shares allow it to elect all members of the board of directors, it could, or it could choose the other option.

During any period when the government's voting shares exceed 50 per cent of the outstanding shares issued, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be appointed ex-officio, non-voting members of the board. These provisions are designed to provide the necessary degree of additional liaison between the corporation and the government during the initial period of its existence. The board of directors of the corporation which the government will initially appoint will be a representative body of suitably qualified Canadians with broad experience in Canadian business, finance and economic development. I am confident that men of this calibre will be available to serve on the board. In addition to the relevant requirements of the Corporations Act, careful procedures will be evolved to deal with situations of possible conflict of interest.

The high quality of the board and the chief executive officer will ensure the corporation of the degree of independence in its operations which it will require to carry out its objectives effectively. Initially the government will be the sole shareholder and it will always be the largest single shareholder. Because of the significant role the corporation has been given by its purposes and objects, the government will want to show a continuing interest in it, and it is expected that the government will always want to hold at least 10 per cent of the voting shares. Thus, it will always be in a position to exercise the degree of influence on the over-all policies of the corporation which would be appropriate to its shareholding at any particular time. However, to underscore the importance the government attaches to achieving the maximum degree of public ownership of the CDC by the Canadian public, the corporation is to be given the right to reduce the government's holding of voting shares down to 10 per cent.

The CDC will operate basically within the provisions of the Canada Corporations Act. It will not be a federal Crown corporation or agency, and this is explicitly set out in the bill. The capital structure of the corporation is designed to give it a high degree of flexibility in raising funds from the public. Its authorized capital will comprise 200 million common shares without nominal or par value, and $1 billion of preferred shares. The preferred shares may be issued with or without voting privileges. The initial offering to the public of common shares is expected to be at a price of about $5 per share to encourage a broad shareholding throughout the whole of Canada.

The source of the corporation's equity capital and the owners of the corporation will be Canadian investors. By Canadian investors we mean residents of Canada and individual Canadian citizens who may be resident abroad. Non-resident foreigners will not be able to hold voting shares though it would be possible for them to purchase non-voting preferred shares. Also, to ensure that the voting shares are widely held, the amount of voting shares that can be held by any one Canadian shareholder or group of associated shareholders is to be limited to 3 per cent. Special redemption features have been provided to enable the corporation to purchase for cancellation shares that are held illegally.

In addition to its right to redeem shares owned by the government to reduce the government's holdings to the minimum of 10 per cent, and to its right to redeem any shares held illegally, the corporation would have the power to use its surplus to reduce its outstanding capital by purchasing its common shares for cancellation without reducing its authorized capital. The provision, if implemented by the board, would improve the ultimate marketability of the corporation's shares. Such a provision is contained in the new Ontario Business Corporations Act and is being considered for the Canada Corporations Act. This power has been available to companies in the United States for some time. The CDC bill provides a number of safeguards to ensure that the exercise of this power will not be abused.

In order to enable the corporation to commence operations without delay upon approval of this bill, and to work effectively toward the achievement of its objects, the federal government will make $250 million available to the corporation by undertaking to purchase its shares either directly or as underwriter. The amount that the government will be required to subscribe under this arrangement is limited to $100 million in the first year and $75 million in each of the following two years. These funds will be set aside for the corporation to be drawn down as suitable investment opportunities arise. In addition, the bill also provides authority for the government to lend up to $100 million to the corporation. It is not intended that this authority to lend will be used during the period when the government is providing equity funds to the corporation.

The bill also gives the government authority to sell to the CDC at such fair and reasonable prices as may be agreed upon between the government and the corporation, the government's investments in certain Crown-owned corporations and businesses which are operating in the private sector on a profitable or potentially profitable basis. An independent evaluation of the government's investment in each of these enterprises will be carried out immediately with a view to effecting the transfer of ownership of those in respect of which agreement can be reached with the corporation. Some of these enterprises are in a position where their further growth and development could be facilitated by giving them the greater flexibility to operate and better access to capital markets which would come from CDC ownership of their shares. The scope of its operations will, of course, be national and it will undoubtedly establish offices in the major business and financial centres in Canada.

The establishment of the CDC is one of the important measures that the government proposes to take in order to widen the opportunities for Canadians to participate in their own development. Its purpose is a positive one. It is designed to look to the future and not to the past. The corporation will be unique in its objects, its ownership, its size and capability. No other corporation in Canada is required by its objects to take into account national interest as well as profitability. Only Canadian citizens or residents can hold its voting shares.

Its capitalization will allow it to become one of the largest Canadian corporations. It will represent a new and significant partnership between the public and private sectors in the dynamic development of our economy. It will create a new centres of entrepreneurship and capital to help build the kind of strong and enterprising Canadian corporations which can compete successfully in an increasingly competitive world. It will enable certain government-owned enterprises to grow and develop as full-fledged members of the business and industrial community, and it will help broaden the opportunities for both Canadian skills and Canadian capital to participate in our own development.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is one temptation which I hope will be resisted in the course of this debate. That would be to launch into a full discussion on the subject of economic nationalism and foreign ownership. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the bill before us is in no way related to this question. Not only is the cart before the horse tonight, but the cart has been completely detached from the horse. We have been asked to deal with a bill which has as its objective the creation of some form of government-sponsored investment corporation designed to maintain a strong degree of Canadian control as well as to develop the Canadian economy.

It would seem to me that before we can discuss this measure intelligently to determine whether or not it will do the job people expect of it and meet the objectives set for it, we should be told something about the foreign ownership policy and the industrial development policy of the government. In the absence of this information in crystal clear terms, how are we to evaluate the proposal before us? There is a policy vacuum. We can examine the proposal to set up this corporation, and depending upon where you want to put your money you can take your choice as to the advantages.

If you want to look at it from the viewpoint of national interest, this corporation can lose all the money it cares to in the pursuit of that objective. On the other hand, if we are to be guided by the minister's press release and by the words contained in the bill, which say in effect that the cardinal principle by which the directors must be guided is the rate of profitable return, the situation is seen in an entirely different light and national interests go hang. The idea will then be for the corporation to get into industries operating in higher return areas—parts of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta—where a really good return can be expected; and in other parts of the country too, because every region has its share of good industry. Anyway, the idea will be to invest in types of industry or economic development which will provide a quick return.

But if this is to be the underlying principle guiding the corporation, I say the cart has been presented long before the horse since we do not know what is to be the foreign ownership policy of the government. Is this to be the type of vehicle the government intends to use? The minister has told us the corporation will not be a buyer of last resort. First, he told us it will not be a buy-back corporation. He shows some intelligence there, because there is not enough money in Canada, government or otherwise, federal plus provincial, to undertake a realistic buy-back operation. Before you can buy back, the other person must be willing to sell. There will no real opportunity to buy back unless, of course, you are to play the prodigal and give anything that a potential vendor might want.

As I said, I do not think this should be a debate on the pros and cons of controls on foreign ownership or on related matters of economic nationalism; it ought to be a debate on this particular bill. We may as well consider that we have here a proposal which before long this bill will end up in committee and my colleagues and I will put forward many questions. We will, of course, raise very serious doubts about the efficacy of this proposed corporation. This bill will go before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for examination and public hearing in regard to it. We will then see just what the country thinks about the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us examine the objectives. It is important to inquire about the objectives of the proposed Canada Development Corporation. Since not too many details were given to us until this evening, and since those are somewhat sketchy, we can only infer to a certain degree what the proposal is. It has been intimated that the CDC is primarily to assist in the development of major projects in Canada and that it will seek to reduce foreign takeover of Canadian corporations.

Mr. Benjamin: Why should it not stop that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Of course, when one hears that ones heart goes pit-a-pat a little faster.

Mr. Benjamin: That is right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Those are great, laudable objectives. They are in the same category as objectives in favour of motherhood, although apparently some people these days are not in favour of motherhood.

Mr. Benjamin: Some mothers are not.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is another instance of somebody being against sin, although I understand that these days many people are not against sin.

Mr. Benjamin: Could the hon. member name one?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps the reference is a little out of date. In any event, the minister has expressed noble sentiments because, after all, who can disapprove of the development of major projects by Canadians and of the preservation of Canadian control of our industry? We can all say those words with the appropriate tremolo in our voices.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hallelujah!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Of course, the development corporation can develop projects or curtail the expansion of foreign ownership, but an analysis of the costs involved and an analysis of this type of initiative leads me to say that this legislation may be self-defeating. Any projects that are economically viable by their very nature can stand on their own feet without government assistance.

The intention of the government is to give constructive help, in co-operation with the private sector, when a decision has been taken. Some claim that there is a large institutional gap in our capital market; but what evidence is there for this assertion? One can think of all sorts of companies which have started from scratch in Canada. In my own province of Alberta small companies have been built on ability and the willingness to scratch. Some of them perhaps had the good fortune to work in an economic climate that was suitable and in a market that was suitable. The same may be said for Ontario. I am sure that all hon. members in the House at present can think of medium and large businesses in their constituencies that were started and developed by Canadians without too much government assistance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): So I ask, why is there this particular concern at this time? Why must there be this Canada Development Corporation? Let us see what has happened in Alberta. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) to cast his memory back to the little bill in 1965 that set up the Alberta Development Fund. That was set up under a Crown corporation with a board of directors. Its purpose was to help struggling Alberta companies. The public were invited to subscribe to debentures which were guaranteed as to 3 per cent, plus a share of the profits over and above that. The sad history is, Mr. Speaker, that the public response was almost nil. No moneys were advanced to any corporate entity. A few bonds were bought. I am informed that as of today the government is preparing to phase-out the Alberta development fund. This is a lesson in part as to what may happen to an organization of that kind.

Referring back to the conflicting objectives that I pointed out were set out in the press release by the minister, I ask, in what sector of the economy will the CDC be more effective? Will it invest in the already more economically successful regions, or will it work under the regional incentives program of the government? If the dominant shareholders are to be government-oriented, and if the profit motive is to be the principal motive for the corporation, will not this corporation work at cross-purposes with regard to the regional incentives program of the government; or will it be asked to complement the regional incentives program?

We know that the regional incentives program is not designed to work in the economically strong areas where a steady rate of return on economic development may be readily anticipated. So I ask right away: Which shall prevail; the principle underlying the CDC, or the programs of the government such as those that are being put into practice by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand)?

Let me ask another question, Mr. Speaker, about CDC involvement in the development of major resource projects. As the minister told us a little while ago, this is to be done without outside participation. Can the minister tell us where the outlets will be? The minister, the government and anybody else can talk about funnelling investment into industry and about putting up facilities to develop resources, but unless the products of that economic activity can be sold or utilized you might as well shut up shop right from the beginning, because it will have been a useless exercise.

Let me refer to a classic example. United States and Japanese steel companies usually prefer to own their own raw materials in order to be assured of adequate supplies and also to participate in the profits of their own purchases. Both are classical reasons for vertical integration. The parliamentary secretary is from Calgary. He knows what is happening to the development of coal in our province and in the neighbouring province of British Columbia. The aim is 40 million tons of coal to be shipped to Japan. There will be very little Canadian capital involved in that development. The project in British Columbia is financed by American capital. The one at Grande Cache is operated by a company controlled by Americans and extensively financed by the Japanese. The Japanese hope to put more money into this project in order to guarantee the quantity of coal that is required. The alternative would have been no development whatsoever. Thousands of jobs would have been lost. There would have been hundreds of millions of dollars a year less in our international trade. The alternative to foreign investment is to let the resource lay fallow. If Canada had denied these opportunities to foreign steel companies, they would have gone to other nations. There are competing sources of coal, iron ore, many other metals, oil, gas and other developments. Other nations would be more hospitable, and Canada would lose.

How is the Canada Development Corporation going to invest its funds? Even the Quebec general investment fund was not fully invested several years after it was established. That was a relatively small fund with apparently a great field for opportunity. It is only a fraction of the size of the CDC but already its record does not inspire confidence in this type of operation. A friend of mine, a highly placed executive in a major Canadian company, wrote to me the other day with regard to the CDC. I quote from his letter:

> "Mr Benson stressed that the CDC will be a source of large amounts of capital to create major new industries and to join with other companies in acquiring and rationalizing existing companies where competitiveness may be improved by merger, amalgamation and other corporate arrangements."
> I can't believe that the CDC board of directors is going to be any more able than the composite management of the present large companies to unearth these vast unexploited opportunities—

What sort of magic wand will the board of directors of the CDC be able to wave which will give it greater knowledge and understanding of investment opportunities in Canada than existing management? The only way this can be done is if they intend to rationalize existing companies. If rationalizing existing companies means mergers, amalgamations, etc., as indicated by the minister, there is something further the minister has not told us which is an absolute must. If he intends that to be a rational objective of the CDC, he has only gone half way. He has not told this House and the country that he and his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), are planning wide-sweeping changes to the Combines Investigation Act.

If there are to be mergers, amalgamations and rationalizations, what about the risks from a combines investigation? I see that the parliamentary secretary is taking notes. This is a real problem. I hope that the minister or the parliamentary secretary come up with a logical answer, because it is a very dangerous problem in Canada for anyone to undertake a major reorganization and merger and then run into the problems of a combines investigation and possibly an order from the court to dissolve the merger and amalgamation. The CDC would look rather silly if it entered into some sort of policy to provide the funds for a merger and the court declared it to be illegal.

I now wish to deal briefly with foreign ownership. The minister has indicated that this might be an answer or part of the answer to the encroachment of foreign ownership in Canada. It was designed to maintain a strong, continuing Canadian control of companies. I suggest that a development corporation is a poor remedy. The very movement of capital both across frontiers and domestically should not be hindered by any government-sponsored pool of capital. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is confident that competent management would not make unrealistic bids to counter offers from foreign sources. I just wonder about that.

I am going to stop at that point because the minister has indicated that this corporation will not be a buyer of last resort. If there were in existence today a Canadian Development Corporation, how realistic would it be to think that the directors of that corporation would resist political pressure both from the public and the government with regard to Ryerson Press, Home Oil or a similar type operation that catches the public imagination or eye? This is a climate of inspired nationalism. I have listened to people who have become self-appointed experts in the media on the nature of the Canadian economy. They spend their time beating their Canadian chests to some sort of tribal chant about how wrong it is to receive American money. At the same time, many of them derive their livelihood, without protest, from the same source of capital investment.

What would happen if there were unrealistic offers from abroad or promoted sales within Canada? Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in no time at all several members of this House could devise half a dozen to a dozen easy ways of puffing up a potential sale to foreign interests so we could then come crying to the public and asking to be saved. We would say to the CDC, "Be our saviour. Save our Canadian national identity for three, four or five greasy dollars". Because that is what they would be. After all, the puffery of the situation would only be accentuated by the emotional plea that may be made.

Frankly, I am amazed that people accept with an incomprehensible naïvety what a CDC could or might do and what it would be very hard for it to avoid doing. For a foreign company with competent management, worldwide outlets and unused facilities, the benefits of amalgamation could justify a far higher price than any CDC should pay. For instance, what would the CDC do with a national beer company? The advantages of a Canadian outlet to a United States company are evident. The closing down of duplicate facilities by combining production and sales forces, and I suppose reducing advertising budgets, are easily apparent advantages and we have seen this sort of thing happening.

Almost in Mr. Deputy Speaker's own riding, United States automobile manufacturers have an incentive to acquire automobile parts companies in Canada, as parts used by the manufacturers of new cars can be moved across the border duty free. That sort of thing has been done. Do we think that the CDC would be able, by merger or amalgamation and infusion of new capital, to meet the price that was offered by a foreign purchaser? It is difficult to see what a development corporation could do to check foreign ownership in most cases except by making an unrealistically high bid.

What I have said has been based on one underlying thesis, namely, the continuation of the present Canadian tax system or some modification of the white paper proposals, which as far as the Canadian is concerned is a deterioration of his position vis-à-vis foreign taxpayers, particularly the United States taxpayer. Let us admit that the big bogey man of foreign ownership is the United States. Nevertheless, the United States taxpayer is in a far better position, either from the corporation point of view or from the individual point of view, than his Canadian counterpart. We have only to look at the estate tax and succession duty situation to see what an invidious position the Canadian taxpayer is in. In this regard it is not only the government of Canada that has to bear the responsibility; I point the finger at the government of the province of Ontario as well as of the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

—and particularly at the province of Quebec in matters of succession duties. One would never believe that a provincial government would wish to stifle industry in its own province. It is not surprising that Quebec businessmen are willing to sell when they are offered a good price, and this on account of succession duties.

In fact, a very rough study of the situation reveals that parochialism has been perpetuated in that province for generations. Government authorities kill all initiatives to protect Quebec businesses.

[English]

One has only to watch what happens in the case of shares of Quebec corporations that are held by people in, say, the province of Alberta who have had no contact whatsoever with the province of Quebec. Although the corporation may be a national one with a registered office in the province of Quebec, the province of Alberta will insist upon its pound of flesh on the transfer of any shares. Of course, corporations soon found ways to get around that situation. All they have to do is to have a registered office listed with the transfer registry in Vancouver, Calgary or Winnipeg and transfer the head office. They will never learn, and that can be said of Canadians as a whole.

Last year we had the not so amusing spectacle of the Minister of Finance bringing in a brutal and savage increase in estate tax. This is now combined with a proposal for a capital gains tax. And we want to maintain Canada's ownership of our business enterprises. Let us not laugh, Mr. Speaker. The situation is so tragic that it makes one wonder just what sort of logic is at work in the Department of Finance to propose these companion measures, followed by this proposal to establish a Canada Development Corporation.

The government claims it will be able to entice the public to invest in the shares of CDC. I would ask, how? There are two reasons for an individual investing. First of all, if there is a growth stock which offers opportunity for capital appreciation. However, with a capital gains tax, followed by a highly aggravated estate tax, what would be the advantage of investing in a potential growth stock? So I would say that principle would be negated. Certainly there is no encouragement offered Canadian investors, unless it be a corporate investment, so far as estate tax is concerned.

The other thing is that there shall be a record of dividends. Where are the dividends going to come from? Are they to come from the developments, as the minister indicated? I am sorry I did not have time to take copious and sufficient notes, but there was something said about different operations which might not be able to attract capital but might have great potential, for instance, in the development of natural resources and the development of the north. All of these are long-term potential. I am not decrying the possibility of returns on the development of natural resources, the north, new frontiers and many inventive ideas of Canadians, but these ideas all come within the long pull and it is not with this long pull that one builds up a record of dividends. Where is the money to come from to pay these dividends? I suppose that is why Polymer, Eldorado and Northern Transportation are being pulled in and turned over to this Canadian Development Corporation.

Is the $13 million that Polymer made last year, which was paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, going to be used as the milk cow to provide the dividends for these corporations? If there is capital to be left over to these Crown corporations which are to be turned over to the Canada Development Corporation, where will the money come from? What are these corporations going to use for expansion and diversification such as Polymer has done, and as I suggest Eldorado and Northern Transportation may want to do? What about the financial requirements of Pan-Arctic, which is of a very different class? Pan-Arctic will not pay dividends for quite a long time. Who is going to provide that company with its cash source? Will the government provide this capital through some other procedure, or will Polymer have to come to the government for its expansion capital requirements?

It will not be the board of management of Polymer which will then control the affairs of that company. The owners will be the Canada Development Corporation and it may have a counter policy in many instances. Which authority is going to prevail? This is a question to which I would like an answer. This is indeed a strange business, bringing Polymer and Eldorado into the fold.

I have an article before me which was written in June, 1966. The author was a gentleman by the name of Edward Cape. I do not know whether at the time he was particularly privy to the ideas of the former Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), or that he had been particularly privy to that former misguided Minister of Finance who is no longer here. In any event, it is amazing to read some of the ideas that were presented at that time, just five years ago, in respect of the Canada Development Corporation. Apparently Polymer was still to be a source of money at that time and the old 3 per cent limitation on holdings, as we note now in the bill, was then a feature. But I would like to know what made the government change its mind in regard to this feature in the present bill. This article reads in part:

> The first and small board of directors of CDC would be appointed by the government from among the most unquestionably independent and successful industrialists and financiers it could get.

Oh, what a hope! I am referring to the first plan. The parliamentary secretary had better listen with greater interest than he apparently is now. The article goes on to state:

> After the initial issue of CDC shares had been sold, the shareholders themselves would elect a board of directors of eight, of which the government would elect only one. If and when the board grew to 15 or more, the government would have the right to elect two of these, but no more, and never the chief executive.

Now, five years later, we have a different version. The chief executive will be a government appointee from the government service, if we are to understand the rumour and believe what we read. Shares were going to be sold right from the outset and the shareholders would elect the board of directors. There has been a complete reversal. The minister tells us that they are not going to sell shares to the public right away. The government is going to exercise the option to name four directors in lieu of voting of their shares, and name all the other directors.

The government's holdings may be 10 per cent in order to give the government necessary leverage. Of course, the holdings initially will be 100 per cent. There is one thing that I see is missing from the bill but which seems to have been at the root of the other plan. I should have thought the minister might have found this attractive. There was to have been a provision in this bill to prohibit the government from selling its shares over a short period of time, in other words, unloading a lot of its shares. The article continues:

> Without such a provision, the CDC and the value of its shares would be under constant threat of being undermined, and the institution would not be fully protected against de facto government control.

I hope the minister has taken note of that, keeping in mind that if the corporation were to sell a lot of its shares it could thereby substantially decrease the value of public ownership. The de facto government control would exist as a result of the government suddenly unloading its shares. It could decrease the market value of those shares so as to hold the other shareholders at ransom.

I have many more questions and should like to devote more time to them. I should like to offer an alternative proposal, as my leader has done. Briefly, let me outline what I think might give greater hope to Canadians and to Canadian industry than will be given by the Canada Development Corporation. First of all, the government must obtain something like $250 million in cash. It will have to sell bonds. All the money it passes over to the Canada Development Corporation will come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund whether it be by loan or by purchase of shares in CDC. Governments get money by going to the market. They compete for individual holdings, go to institutional lenders or obtain moneys from chartered banks. The banks are able to buy these bonds and there is a question of what is the affect on inflation by the consequent increase in bank reserves. That is item No. 1.

Item No. 2 involves the question of competing with the individual investor. The net result is that if the investor puts his money into CDC shares as against putting it into other investments—equity investments in Canadian enterprise—there is no gain whatsoever for the country. I should like to see, first of all, an undertaking by the Minister of Finance that something very drastic will be done to lower our estate taxes. Secondly, I should like to see an undertaking by the Minister of Finance that he will arrange to meet with his counterparts in the provinces to do something about their share of estate and succession duties, because they too have a responsibility in this regard. Then let us look at the taxpayer himself to see, with regard to Canadian investment, whether there is nothing more that can be done for him.

The other night the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) gave us a clear look at the picture of Home Oil which showed that not only the Canadian individual taxpayer but the Canadian corporate taxpayer was in a position inferior to that of the United States taxpayer, whether corporate or individual, when it came to acquiring control of Home Oil or any other Canadian company, or when it came to carrying on activities of the kind carried on by Home Oil.

No wonder Canadian buyers are scarce when it comes to making a competitive offer. Canadians cannot even begin to match the United States offer because taxwise it is not possible for them to do so. Yet it is expected that Canadian investors, hobbled by an extra ball and chain on one ankle and possibly with an arm tied behind their back, will go into not a combat but a competition with United States investors for the development of Canadian resources and for Canadian companies. The struggle is totally unequal and we are now seeing the results of that inequality of position. Yet the government's idea for tax changes is likely to produce not one ball and chain but a ball and chain or the other leg and perhaps a rope around the second wrist to fetter the Canadian investor even more than he has been in the past.

We have been living in a fool's paradise based on what we thought was our economy and overloading it with a superstructure of government services which just could not be supported by the economy in that state of development, and we want to continue loading it on and pumping away faster than we can provide the water in the well. It is as though we were trying to pump out more water than is flowing into the well and, naturally, the level has been going down. Now because it is becoming perilously close to the bottom with regard to some industries, cries of alarm are going up. But we have been doing that to ourselves all these years, and the government comes along without, as I say, a policy as to foreign ownership, without an industrial development policy and we are asked to approve the plan of a Canada Development Corporation as it is before us.

Mr. Speaker, I have been very critical of this proposal, basically because of these things. I am not involved at all in the question of the degree of foreign ownership that should be allowed, nor the degree of economic nationalism that should be rampant today in Canada, because what I am doing is criticizing something that has come out of the blue and which so to speak has been placed here in a vacuum. We are asked to accept it as the instrument which will cure, what? We do not know, Mr. Speaker, because the policy has not been disclosed to us.

I suppose this bill will take some time in the House and will take much more time in committee. Perhaps by the time the public gets to hear of it and has an opportunity to read it, we will have the report being prepared by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) which will give us an inkling of the government's thinking in respect of foreign ownership. I would think now is the time for the Minister of Finance to recast his thinking with regard to the tax plans he is to divulge in late April or early May, so we would know what is to be the position of the Canadian investor and what kind of a taxpayer he is to be. On that basis, all I can say is that we will take our time with this bill because there are a great many questions to be asked and as many answers to be given to us before we can accept it.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, after waiting eight years for a Canada Development Corporation we finally have a bill before us. The big question, of course, is why the government bothered, since it really is not much of a bill and I will not have very much to say in its favour. This needs a note of explanation since the New Democratic Party has for many years been in favour of a Canada Development Corporation.

The bill before us, however, falls far short of what we think is required in such a corporation. We look at this bill and all we can see is a gesture for propaganda purposes. It seems to be designed to undercut the growing concern that has taken place in this country with regard to foreign ownership. It seems to be designed to lull the people of Canada to sleep. It is satisfying that the build-up in this country is to the effect that we are in a desperate situation and something is required. So the Liberal party has given the people something. But unfortunately that something winds up being nothing but a deceitful joke and little more than a mirage held before desperate public opinion.

We have been told, perhaps more than we have been told other things, of the things the bill will not do. We have been shown the negative aspect of things. There has been a great defensiveness on the part of the minister in reassuring everyone in Canada of the things the bill will not do. It is not going to buy back Canada. He makes an argument on that, but nobody has really asked to buy back Canada. What we are concerned about is the future, and certainly we cannot do very much about the future with the kind of bill the minister has introduced.

Prior to the formation of the CDC there must be a definite limit on foreign ownership in this country. One of the reasons Canadian industry has been sold out is that we do not have laws limiting foreign ownership. In the absence of those laws, the advantage is always with the foreign buyer for whom it makes more sense, and is more profitable, to buy a company and integrate it into an international corporation than for Canadians. Contrary to what the previous speaker said about our tax laws not encouraging a sell-out, tax laws have encouraged a sell out; but probably he would not admit to it.

It has probably been the absence of a capital gains tax in this country that has contributed to the selling out of Canadian businesses because there is an enormous advantage under our present tax laws, under which capital gains are not taxed, for a company to sell out, to take their money and not pay any tax on capital appreciation. Had we had a capital gains tax in the past, the problem we are facing today might not have been as severe. So I am suggesting that we need a framework and definite limits on foreign ownership in order to make any kind of system work, particularly laws regarding the level of foreign ownership in our country.

It strikes me as one of the strange things in our society that those most opposed to limiting foreign ownership in Canada are Canadian businessmen. One has only to look at the representations made by spokesmen for Canadian business when they come before our House of Commons committee to see how determined they are that legislation affecting foreign ownership shall not be passed. There are exceptions. Walter Gordon and some of the Toronto-Tory nationalists had other points of view on this. The reason is simply that if you limit foreign ownership, you cut down on the number of opportunities and the number of customers available for business to be sold to.

When we talk about the Canadian businessman being concerned about the national interest, we should not kid ourselves about it and perhaps we should not expect it either, because they are the ones who have felt that in the interests of the profit motive we should have the kind of economy we have today—that there should be no limit on foreign ownership or on the opportunity to pursue profit motives.

One of the other things that this bill specifically excludes is assistance to small companies. I do not know why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had to go to the great lengths he did in order to point out that it is not the intention of the CDC to lend money or to involve itself in corporations whose capitalization is less than $1 million. I am not entirely clear what that means. Does it mean the investment of the CDC plus the existing capitalization of a company, or does it mean that the company itself has to have capitalization of $1 million?

Large companies in Canada do not seem to have any trouble getting money, so why is the CDC concerned about helping corporations which already are in a position to obtain finances? Certainly they are in a much better position to get their financing than are smaller Canadian companies—and it is really the smaller company, the innovator company, whether it is a drug company or a scientific research company, that is having this difficulty. If we are thinking about the future, surely these are the companies about which we should be concerned. Yet they are the very companies that the minister is excluding from CDC assistance.

Let me illustrate this point with an example of how unfair the CDC will be to such companies. On February 2, 1970, a news story appeared in the Financial Times headed "Wanted: Industrial Sponsor for DRB's New Gas Laser". The research branch had developed a laser that had commercial application. Since they were not in a position to develop it themselves, they were looking for someone who would undertake to put it on the market. Canadian Patents and Developments Limited therefore called on companies to indicate that they are prepared to do this. Two small Canadian companies were selected for this purpose.

I called the department to see how they were getting along and what kind of progress was being made with this laser which had an enormous potential. My understanding is that the companies are working hard on it but are severely hampered by lack of capital. These companies do not have $1 million themselves; they fall far short of it. As a matter of fact, probably all they have is the ingenuity of their owners, their talent and brains. But because of the way the bill before us is written, these companies with enormous potential, the very companies we should be helping, will be excluded from any help at all. I find it difficult to believe that the government will be in a very strong position as long as it insists on keeping this particular clause in the bill.

The minister has gone to great pains to indicate that the CDC will not be a Crown corporation. Over and over again he said that it will not be responsible to government and will not be under the direction of government. Yet in some ways it will receive guidance from the government. In some ways it is supposed to act in the national interest. I have been trying to fathom out the chain of communication. Either the minister is misleading us, and I would hate to think he would do such a thing, or he intends to exercise very strong control over the policies ot the CDC. If that is not so, then I think it is pointless. What is the point of the whole thing? It is so pointless that the story is going around—some of the news stories that have been written and the analyses made indicate this—that it will be virtually impossible to obtain the kind of management that we should be getting for the CDC because any sensible businessman, faced with the kind of contradictory terms of the proposed corporation, would not undertake to carry out those terms.

If you tell a manager that the purpose of your corporation is to act under the direction of the government in policy matters as defined by the government, he knows what to do. If you tell him that all he is supposed to do is just make profit, again he knows what to do. But when you tell him that he is supposed to make profit but he is also supposed to act in the national interest, no such person will be found because I do not know how anyone can operate a company in this way. Therefore, this legislation is unfair and unworkable and the government will have to change its terms somewhere along the line if it is to have any purpose at all.

This afternoon when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was arguing the point of order before the House, he dug up two examples of Canadian corporations which started out as private companies. They are both very bad examples for the future of the CDC. In one case he mentioned the CNR when attempts were made to keep it in private hands. Eventually the government had to take it over, in the national interest.

In the other case they started off with the Bank of Canada—in some ways the history of the Bank of Canada is quite similar to the CDC—and they were going to offer shares to the public and bring in people from the banking industry to sit on the board. That became unworkable, in fact absolutely impossible because the purpose of the bank was to serve a national interest and the purpose of the people being put on the board was to make a profit. The two things could not be reconciled. This country has never looked back on that situation, and whether we like public ownership or not I think everyone agrees that the Bank of Canada should be as it is today. Over the years it has become increasingly clarified that the bank is an instrument of, or a response to government policy, and could not be otherwise.

The minister also says that the government will not try to control company policies and that the government is just going to be an investor. I would think that control is more important than just putting money into the corporation, because sometimes if you are concerned about national interest you need to have a say in the policies of the corporation. You do not necessarily need control, but you have to be in a position where if the board are not acting in the national interest, you have a say. The minister says he does not want to do this, that he does not want to interfere with the management of the company. But what assurance has he that the companies he will want to invest in will respond to the national interest? If the corporation is not going to do all these things, then what is it supposed to do? The one message that emerges most clearly is that it is supposed to make money. Over and over again we are told that the CDC is supposed to make a profit.

Let me make it clear that I think there are many areas where profitability is perhaps a reasonable approach, a reasonable objective, that there are a lot of things that the market system can do fairly effectively. But there is no evidence, and there never has been, that the profit motive and national interest are the same thing, except perhaps to hon. members opposite. After all, this country has been guided by the profit motive from its earliest times. How much did the profit motive do to prevent the sell-out of Canadian industry? We are faced with today's problems because of the profit motive. The minister cannot correct the deficiencies that have arisen by creating another corporation which has a profit motive: it cannot be done. Are we so short of mutual funds that we need this? Really that is all the minister is proposing, the establishment of a mutual fund in which an individual can invest $5. We have lots of mutual funds. There is no evidence that we are short of mutual funds in which Canadians may invest. That is not what we need. We need something else. We need something that will act as an instrument for Canadian government policy and secure Canadian objectives. You cannot do this with a corporation primarily oriented toward profit.

The minister hopes the pursuit of profit will accomplish his objectives. We find it difficult to go along with that. What we really need is a corporation that is prepared to take the kind of chances that other corporations have not or will not take. Let us leave the safe investments to others. That is not our problem. Let us take the chances. In a way, what has happened in Canada has been due to the failure of the entrepreneurial spirit. We have been too cautious. Now the minister proposes to set up another corporation to continue in this grand old tradition of caution. That is not what we need.

We need a corporation that takes into account the deficiencies of our market system. I for one, as I have said earlier, believe there are some things the market can do fairly effectively. We will leave those things to the market. There are other things the market cannot do, and this is the role for a Canada Development Corporation. If we do not do it through the Canada Development Corporation, then who will take care of the difficulties that will arise because of the market economy?

The second major point that the minister makes about the corporation is the need to rationalize industry. I would not disagree with the minister. This is a worthwhile objective. The Canadian economy is desperately in need of some instrument for putting companies together in new forms and combinations to improve their efficiency. But one of the difficulties is that it is probably too late to deal with major companies in the manufacturing field where the problem is greatest. The problem does not exist so much in the resource industries; it is mostly in the manufacturing industries. The reason it will be difficult to do this in the manufacturing field is that most of the companies are now U.S. owned. How does the minister propose to rationalize them in Canada when they are not rationalized anywhere else around the world? He will have to do a great deal more in the area of rationalization than just make the kind of references that are made in the CDC bill.

How can we undertake any kind of rationalization out of context with government policy? As a matter of fact, if we had the right kind of government policies we would not have to use the CDC for this purpose. Let us accept the idea that the CDC would be appropriate in some instances to accomplish rationalization, to prevent Canadian companies from being sold out, to put them together in new combinations—but it will be difficult in the absence of other government policies.

I said earlier that one of the reasons Canadian companies sell out is that it is more advantageous for foreign corporations to buy them than it is for other Canadian corporations to acquire them. What will happen if the minister does not have laws restricting the sale of Canadian companies to foreign corporations? Will the Canada Development Corporations keep bidding up and up to match the extra advantage possessed by non-Canadian companies? I do not think this is what the minister has in mind. I hope we will get a great deal more explanation of what he means and proposes with respect to rationalization.

To watch the government, Mr. Speaker, one would think we did not have any problems. To watch the government one would think its members had never read history or learned the lessons of history. We have a number of examples where attempts have been made to combine what is generally called the public interest with private profit. In Quebec the GIC started off on this line and has run into a great deal of trouble. In fact, the price of its shares has dropped substantially and there does not seem to be any further talk of putting more shares on the market. The GIC has done some good things in terms of public development, but it has not been able to combine public development and public interest with profitability to shareholders; and I do not think the federal government will have any more success in that direction.

We had another example in Telesat Canada. It was set up on a troika arrangement, with one third of the shares held by the government, one third by the common carriers and one third to be offered to the public. Shares have not yet been offered to the public and Telesat has not got off the ground. In fact, in a recent report the Telesat chairman said that the board was having difficulty because of the internal contradictions that exist in that kind of arrangement. Telesat could have fulfilled a purpose in national development, but it cannot do that when it has to take into consideration the interest of the private investors and of the other people associated with it.

In his opening remarks the minister made a brief attack on the NDP, saying we want to nationalize everything and take everything under our control. This is not what we are saying. We are quite prepared to see the CDC act in consort with others. We are quite prepared to see the CDC engaged in the development of private corporations, even with non-Canadian corporations. This must be clear. In these circumstances, I wish to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

Canada Development Corporation

• (9:40 p.m.)

That this bill be not now read the second time but that this House affirm that there ought to be established a Canada Development Corporation which should be a Crown corporation directly responsible to Parliament through a ministry, so that this said corporation might serve the Canadian people by increasing Canada's independence and by planning and developing regional and economic industrialization.

We believe the object of the CDC should be to mobilize funds and channel them into investments serving the interest of Canada as a whole, the money to be raised by selling bonds on the market and requiring all financial institutions to allocate part of the saving collected from the Canadian people to national development. When the Minister of Finance took exception to this position of ours, he forgot that the government already takes a similar position in the case of the chartered banks. Fifteen per cent of their deposits are already under the direction of government whether by way of farm improvement loans, government funds or student loans. In these circumstances, should not all financial institutions in this country be required to serve in some way the national purposes and priorities of the people of Canada? We believe that all the moneys now being paid out to industry under the various industrial incentives, defence, research and development programs should be allocated as capital to the CDC.

The government seems to show no hesitation in applying a little Socialism to private industry. Giving out money to industry does not bother the government; that is not Socialism! But when we talk about taking these funds and channelling them through the CDC it becomes Socialism because the people of Canada might benefit more directly. There are occasions when it makes sense to give money to industry either in the form of loans or even in the form of forgiveable loans.

The difficulty at this moment is that we have no choice as to the course we should take or, at least, we have not been allowed to make any choice. We cannot decide whether it would be better to establish a Crown corporation or not. All we can do is give away money and hope that by such a program we can exercise some influence on the pattern of industrialization. In my view, this process is much too uncertain and much too unfair to the taxpayers of Canada. Over the last five years more than $750 million has been given out in this way with, I might add, negligible results. Many of the provinces are moving in the direction we are suggesting the government should move. We are prepared to help industry but we also want something in return for our participation. In other words, we are not prepared to take all the risks without sharing the potential profit. We shall share the risks but we also want to share the profit, if there is one.

We believe the CDC should be used to expand the public sector of the economy where necessary for the growth of the economy, for national planning and for increasing Canada's independence. This will normally be done by the creation of Crown corporations. However, the CDC may also enter into consortium arrangements with private concerns where it has or can acquire effective control. The use of Crown corporations in Canada is not new. On many occasions we have used Crown corporations in the national interest. If we do not use Crown corporations now, as occasion arises, we should certainly be offered the possibility of setting one up should the private sector not provide the results we require.

The CDC should act always as an instrument of government policy and development policy and be directly responsible to Parliament through a minister. It is too easy for the government to slough off responsibility for the CDC and say, "This concerns private investors. We have nothing to do with it. We have set it up and the corporation is on its own". This is an evasion of government responsibility; it avoids the necessity for planning and explaining what the corporation is doing. We believe the CDC ought to be an instrument of national planning and that it should be responsible to the people of Canada through Parliament; its decisions should be subject to scrutiny by the House.

In our view, the CDC should be involved in regional development policies with provincial bodies and agencies in order to ensure that every part of Canada capable of supporting viable development is extensively involved in the industrial future of this country. We believe the CDC should finance and develop new initiatives in research and scientific and technological development which will increase the ability of Canadian industry to specialize and compete in world markets.

Report after report indicates that we have failed to make full use of the funds allocated to science in this country. The reasons, I suspect, are that first we have not understood what our priorities should be and, second, our efforts have been so diffused as to be ineffective. Establishment of the CDC brings us an opportunity to intensify scientific research in areas of prime importance to the nation. The CDC should be used to assist companies and individuals to fashion economic opportunity out of inventiveness and to ensure that Canada derives the benefit therefrom.

All this would, of course, make the CDC a giant of an organization. Even the government has realized that it must be of substantial size. The CDC we envisage will go beyond that contemplated by the government. We visualize the CDC being used more extensively for the development of national purposes in an era of international, giant corporations. The only way in which we in Canada can counter their intrusion into our economy and compete with them is to form a large one ourselves. Enormous advantages attach to this kind of corporation in a modern society. It carries out its own research, arranges its own financing and its own marketing. One of the most outstanding failures in the Canadian system is the absence of a large marketing organization. These facilities should be at our disposal and they should be used at the direction of the government.

It is best to leave the profit making to the private sector. Let the private sector do those things which are not of national urgency. Let it do some of the more frivolous things and provide the more frivolous goods. In the most important areas of development, the private sector has obviously failed. We would not be talking about setting up a CDC had the private sector succeeded in keeping the economy Canadian, had it preserved the national identity. We are engaged in this debate because of the failure of the entrepreneurial system in the private sector. The role of the CDC must therefore be to make up for that deficiency and to act where the private sector is not able or willing to do so.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), I realized how far I could be from state socialism. The hon. member moves an amendment because, according to him, the bill is not consistent enough with socialist principles. As for me, I would be almost ready, for that reason, to move an amendment because I believe the views of the hon. member for Waterloo on this bill greatly differ from mine.

Mr. Speaker, in such circumstances, one should remember the old saying: He who pays the piper calls the tune.

Bill C-219 provides for the establishment of a powerful corporation according to the hon. minister himself, and I thank him for having circulated the text of his speech before delivering it in the House. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said tonight, and I quote:

> The corporation will be expected to work very closely with other members of the Canadian business and financial community and to give Canadian firms access to greater capital concentrations—

It is quite obvious that in introducing such a measure, the government has in mind the establishment of a monopoly, not only to have greater control over capital and investments, but also to guide Canadian production. In fact, nearing the end of his speech, the minister said:

> Its capitalization will allow it to become one of the largest Canadian corporations.

That corporation will become the greatest monopoly in Canada. If such a law were applied by a liberal government, it might not be as bad as one would believe, but it will be, when applied by Fabian socialists. We have noted since this government came to power in 1968 how the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was prompt to assign important duties to clearly leftist men. With that kind of force, by putting the filler hard over to the left, this government has steered the Canadian administration on a precise course.

Even if bills like this could seem not too important, not of great consequence at first sight, we know how these men are going to implement it. We know what kind of control this bill will enable them to have on the economic activities of this country. This bill is introduced allegedly to check the flow of foreign capital, and mainly American capital, on the market. One fact remains: too many of our industries and businesses belong to foreigners. I have here an article published in La Presse on January 20, 1970 and entitled: "Foreign capital has taken over more than 1,000 firms in ten years". And I quote:

Canada Development Corporation

> Although the taking over of Canadian undertakings by foreigners—namely Americans—is causing in this country more and more opposition, the number of small businesses taken over by foreigners without causing as much furore as the famous cases of Denison and Ryerson Press is increasing day by day.
> Since 1960, over 1,000 Canadian undertakings have quite simply become foreign companies located in Canada.
> Lats year, the Americans alone spent over $222 million to purchase 104 Canadian firms which brought total American assets in Canada to $34.3 billion and the number of foreign-controlled Canadian companies in excess of 8,000.
>
> In 1967, last year for which statistics are available, 26 per cent of the total assets of the firms in Canada belonged to foreigners.
> Through concentration of property, foreigners were able to control 58 per cent of our manufacturing industry in 1966, 63 per cent of the mining and smelting industry and 71 per cent of the oil and natural gas industry.
> As early as 1964, foreigners controlled over 90 per cent of some specific industries: car and aircraft manufacturing, tobacco, rubber and petroleum products.
> How can this situation be explained?
> Mr. Max Goldhar, an investment counsellor in Toronto, is a man whose job is to find industrial concerns up for sale and to sell them to foreigners. Such a situation, he thinks, is not due to our businessmen, or manufacturers or tradesmen, but rather to our financial circles.
> The people who are really to blame, he says, are those who control funds, those who could provide our business men with the capital assistance they need, but will not do it.

I shall end here my quotation of this very interesting article, which definitely proves that far too many foreigners control our industries and trade. Anyway, will Bill C-219, entitled "An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation", prevent foreign manufacturers from investing in Canada and buying Canadian industries? I do not believe it will, and I am not the only one to think so.

On resuming my speech, I shall suggest to the government a solution based on factual data.

As I started my speech late tonight, may I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Finance if the government intends to continue with this piece of legislation tomorrow.

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF REPAYMENT FORMULA UNDER PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to raise tonight has to do with amending the repayment formula under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. I originally raised the question on Wednesday, February 10, as recorded at page 3248 of Hansard.

I place this question before the minister, for consideration, in all sincerity and all seriousness, hoping that my appeal will not fall on deaf ears. The critical shortage of cash in the west, as a result of depressed farm income, is strangling the economy of the rural prairies. It is destroying the spirit of those engaged in agriculture. It is creating uncertainty for spring planting operations. It is creating apprehension among the rural merchants upon whom most producers rely for credit, particularly since many have not been able to discharge last year's debts. The Farm Credit Corporation is badgering, foreclosing or threatening to foreclose. Banks are pressuring for payment. Some are renewing notes at exorbitant rates of interest and among the population the feeling of helplessness, anger and frustration is rapidly developing.

I recently mailed out a questionnaire seeking opinions and guidance on current farm policy. I wish to report to the House that the response indicates that the climate is not too healthy: all is not well. The majority of replies carry with them a message of downright apprehension, disgust, frustration and in some cases a note of militancy. With Your Honour's permission, I wish to record extracts from some of the letters I have received. The first is from a farmer in the Minburn, Alberta, district who writes as follows:

> I am a farmer in your constituency and up till the past year I have been able to keep my mortgage payments paid up to date but owing to the new quota system and the very low price for hogs I have been unable to pay my last year's mortgage payment and now they are foreclosing on me. Is there anything you or the government can do to stop things going on like this?

The next is from a farmer from Vermilion, Alberta:

> Through no fault of mine I have gotten into debt along with hundreds of other people.
> I have been paying on these debts every year all I could, as well as living expenses for my family.
> We are being showered with threatening letters. They have added 12 per cent interest.
>
> We do not want to be forced off our farm and into the ranks of the unemployed and homeless.
>
> The worst creditors are the banks and wealthy companies.
> Is there anything being done about some protection for debtors?

The next is from St. Michael, Alberta:

> If the government doesn't change its policies and stays in power for a couple years, all the smaller farmers will go broke. Up till now the quota for wheat is opened to 4 bushels. I can sell 308 bushels of wheat. My tax is $350. How can I make a living on a farm?

A reply to my questionnaire from Smoky Lake, Alberta, reads:

> I feel that the present Liberal government has blundered enough without recommending any more changes. Mr. Trudeau's government has done nothing but harm the rural people by its meaningless changes in legislature. One example is the cancellation of the quota system. That's where the small fellow gets hurt the most. In other words the present government has given the farm people nothing, nothing and more nothing—

This is an example of the feeling of the people in my constituency. Why has this situation developed? It has developed under the maladministration of this government and its lack of concern for rural Canada. We have achieved some new records under this administration.

I now wish to deal with net farm income. In 1967 the total net farm income in Canada was $1.65 billion. The prairie region recorded better than 50 per cent, $951 million. Today that figure has dropped to $444 million, the lowest in 15 years. When we take into consideration the value of inventory changes, we see a real net income in the prairie provinces of $174 million. That is less than $1,000 per farmer in the prairie region. When we consider the inflationary factor in relation to that which was given in 1955, 15 years ago, it is worse than the depression.

In the October issue of "Canadian Farm Economics" we find that for the first time in Canadian history, Canada recorded an agricultural trade deficit of $35 million. These are the kind of records the government has achieved. With regard to the implications for the future, it reads as follows:

> Will Canada be a net agricultural importer in 1970 and 1971? The answer is a tentative "no", but for the longer run, the outlook is less clear.

It further states—and this is the attitude of the government:

> There is nothing inherently wrong with a country's being a net importer of agricultural products. In fact, on the basis of an efficient allocation of the available domestic resources, many countries should accept this situation as an economic reality.

I submit this in shameful, disgusting and downright senseless. When we relate this dismal performance to the actual producer, who is the victim, we find that in Alberta, for example, which has fared a little better than the major western provinces, his annual income is $1,325. This is deplorable, worse than the depression. Out of this the producer must pay taxes, fuel bills, his fertilizer bills, his Farm Credit Corporation loan, his farm improvement loan, his bank note and his additional operating expenses.

For this reason I appeal to the minister to give consideration to an adjustment of the repayment of cash advances. Since my original submission, and after some research and study of the matter, I now have no choice other than to recommend that the minister propose a full moratorium on the repayment of cash advances until such time as conditions improve. Surely this is not asking too much. It would not be a hand-out but merely an accommodation. I submit that this extension would provide a temporary measure of relief, a stop-gap if you like. I know the minister will answer by saying we are going to adopt the grain stabilization proposal. I suggest this would only be adding insult to injury. It will take another 3 or 5 per cent off the gross receipts, which is more like 12 per cent of net receipts.

Mr. Horner: Fifteen.

Mr. Mazankowski: Maybe it is 15. Therefore, I plead with the minister to give this matter consideration.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a specific suggestion which would do very little good, perhaps, for some farmers; namely a moratorium on or postponement of repayment of cash advances made to farmers. However, at the same time it would act in ways which perhaps would not be particularly desirable from the point of view of the whole program. It would help some farmers who in fact might not need that particular form of assistance. With the very high quotas on barley and the free movement of rapeseed, there are different situations arising all across the Prairies. None the less, I would point out to the hon. member that such a proposal would require a change in the legislation. It may be that before long this legislation will be before the House, and then we can look at all aspects of the matter with some figures in our hands.

The hon. member referred to the apprehension and frustration of farmers in the prairie region, and there is a good deal of it there. A good deal of it was put there by opposition members who spent all their time, in very partisan fashion, attempting to gain every possible political advantage instead of trying to advance the knowledge of the farmer in regard to the programs that are afoot. The farmers in the prairie region who in fact are in the most difficult situation are those who listened to hon. members opposite, the Tory and NDP members, who instead of explaining to the farmers what the LIFT program was about last year, told them to ignore it—to their financial disadvantage.

This is the sort of misfortune that has befallen the farmers on the Prairies as a result of the partisan attitude of hon. members opposite. I have implored them before, and I implore them again, instead of this partisan campaigning to acquaint farmers with the very many programs the government has implemented, more than have ever been attempted in years gone by. Let them be understood and made effective throughout the prairie region for the good of all farmers, particularly for the small, family farmers for whom we feel so deeply.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REVIEW OF STAFF RELATIONS ACT—CONSULTATION WITH EMPLOYEE ASSOCIATIONS—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time in recent weeks that I have been prompted to speak about the smouldering resentment within the public service at the government's lethargy in coming to grips with the serious problems stemming in large part, I think, from the blatant inadequacies within the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I speak again tonight because there seem to be some contradictions in the replies I have received. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) said in the House on November 27:

> The government is now reviewing the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

That seemed a definite enough statement. But on December 9, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in a written reply to a similar query from the professional institute, said in part:

> When a decision is taken to initiate a review of this legislation, your organization ... will be given every opportunity to present its views on the matter.

• (10:10 p.m.)

At least we might be excused for being somewhat confused when a senior minister of the Crown states boldly that a review is being currently undertaken, when in contrast the first minister indicates that a decision might be reached to initiate such a review. While we cannot accuse these ministers of outright misrepresentation, at the very least I think this indicates another situation where the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing, to coin a phrase.

As a result of this non-premeditated confusion I asked for clarification on January 29, of the President of the Treasury Board, and lo and behold I find another minister is now in on the act, none other than the wheat farmer's friend, the affable Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang). It seems now he replies to the Commons for the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I was advised to consort with this minister for clarification—a consortation, I might add, that I did not find at first impulse particularly appealing. But while waiting my turn during the daily athletic, free enterprise session known in the House as the oral question period, a press release from his ministry appeared miraculously on my desk.

This press release, after a suitable and comfortable-type preamble, indeed confirmed that the Public Service Staff Relations Act is being reviewed. Will there be a public review? The answer is no. Will there be an opportunity for consultation with the affected sections within the service? Again the answer is no.

A three-man group, including some very reputable people, has been named, according to the minister's February 12 press release. This group is to examine written representations and to—get this—report directly and privately to the minister. It is interesting how this government works. If there is some political mileage to be made out of an issue, we have all kinds of very active and interesting operations of the government including a travelling circus, committees, white papers, task forces and so forth. On the other hand, if there is a possibility of real controversy or a possibility that the examination of some government furtive activity might prove embarrassing, the government comes up with a group or a committee to report directly or secretly to the minister.

What the people in the public service really want to know is as follows: What will flow from the group's report to the minister, and will the minister respond to it? At present there is no government commitment to do anything at all about the group's report. MPs want to know, and so does the public service, whether there will be amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Will these flow from the report? Will the report be examined publicly by the appropriate standing committee of this Parliament? Will the group recommend changes in, for instance, what is arbitrable and things like classifications, check-offs, time off for union activities, and so on? Will a thorough examination of the entrenched management rights contained in section 7 be revised in an enlightened and progressive manner in terms of shared decision-making?

Management holds all the marbles at the present time. The public service can go for Collective bargaining and gain a particular kind of contract, then the government can and does juggle the classifications so that the contract is useless. The whole thing is a farce. Are these things going to be examined and changed? These are the questions we ask and need answers to now.

How can you find these things out from a group that is to report solely to the minister? Will there be an independent appellate division set up to ensure that those who rule on an issue in the first place do not handle the appeal as well? This practice is currently taking place and that, among other things, is what is concerning the people of the public service.

Will the Public Service Staff Relations Board be given powers so that it can discipline both sides, including the government? We have seen instances where the board has ruled in favour of the employees and it has turned out that they could not do anything about management decisions. The example I give will be one in respect of the public service board ruling on retroactive pay which was not paid within the prescribed 90 days. They made a ruling favouring the employees but nothing could be done about it. What kind of discipline will the government accept as a result of this? In short, this is a very serious matter in the public service. We are sorry this had to be done privately and, as I said earlier, furtively.

The public service wants to know if the review by this particular study group is to play a real role in improvement. Will its recommendation result in changes in legislation? Will this legislation then be examined by the appropriate parliamentary committee, or is this just another in a monotonous series of delaying tactics and was the group appointed merely to give the government an excuse for another six months' delay?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member indicating that he understands the importance and, indeed, the delicacy of the many issues involved in a review of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We hope to have a thorough understanding of the viewpoints of the interested parties before taking any definite steps in answer to the many questions, some of which the hon. member raised in his remarks and some of which he left out, which come up in looking at this act and the operation of the public Service Staff Relations Board in its few years of history.

I have recently made this known to all interested parties and I hope to invite their co-operation in the review, receive their views and discuss them with the distinguished men who have agreed to work on the review. I do not wish to speculate at this time upon the result, but this much at least I can say—that is is likely that the review may result in legislation being proposed to the House. I say that without prejudging the issues but simply recognizing the many points made on all sides about the difficulty in relation to the act, the board, its operation and points for improvement.

Of course, at that time I would anticipate there would be the fullest opportunity to examine in every way the issues involved in and attitudes to changes which may be proposed. I therefore see this as a process of trying to obtain a thorough understanding of the viewpoints as we move from one step to another toward making improvements which may be required in this very important law governing the relationship of those in our public service with the government of Canada.

TRANSPORT—SUGGESTED USE OF LIGHT ON HALIFAX MONUMENT AS SIGNAL FOR SHIPPING

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I make these remarks with two thoughts in mind. First, I am pleased that the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) is here, because of his distinguished service as a merchant seaman during the Second World War. I am sure these remarks will have a special meaning for him. Second, I believe the reply will come from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Duquet), who has had some difficulties. We are pleased he has won this battle and is with us.

If you go to Halifax, go to the south end and look out from Point Pleasant Park to the stone faces on the other side of Halifax harbour, you look across the broad Atlantic. It was from there the great convoys of the Second World War sailed. Many brave men did not reach the other side, or did not come back again. A few years ago the Royal Canadian Naval Association had a monument erected to these men. It is a very impressive monument and one from which a light beacon shines. But unfortunately, those who built it were perhaps more ambitious than the funds allowed in keeping this memorial going perpetually.

Therefore I was forced to ask whether some means could be found to keep lighting this monument. The problem, I think, is that while the equipment is there, what is needed is $1,500 a year for its floodlighting. While one would expect that this request should be directed to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) and his department, I also had in mind that this monument does stare out at night onto the Atlantic Ocean and, therefore, might properly be regarded as a beacon that could be operated by the Department of Transport. Perhaps I could put it in as brief a wording as possible, to put the matter in true perspective, by quoting from a Canadian Press report which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Friday, February 12. It reads as follows:

The national war memorial for servicemen lost at sea, a beacon for ships entering Halifax harbour at night, will be blacked out after March 31 unless someone finds the $1,500 a year needed to pay for the floodlighting.

The Royal Canadian Naval Association raised the money to instal the lights but says it cannot afford the cost of electricity any longer.

The memorial was built by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. It stands on Point Pleasant in the park of the same name at the southern end of the Halifax peninsula.

The park commission, financed by the city treasury, says it hasn't any money to spare but will try to get the defence department to do something.

I raised this question with the Minister of National Defence and his answer was the reason for my coming here this evening. I will not dwell on either my question or his answer. I think it is rather important that this memorial be kept lighted, perhaps for the simple reason that most people do not realize what I think some would realize, that a memorial such as that for men and women who are lost at sea is their gravestone and should be treated with the utmost respect.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to thank the hon. member for his kind words on my coming back to the House today. I appreciate them very much.

So far as the matter raised by the hon. member is concerned, he directed his question in the first instance to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald). However, the main point in the question is one of direct interest to the Department of Transport in that it suggests the possible use of a floodlit monument in Halifax as a navigational aid. The monument in question is located in the southern end of the city in Point Pleasant Park. This site is a national historic park and is administered by the parks branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Department of Transport has had correspondence on this subject from the directors of the Point Pleasant Park as well as from the Royal Canadian Naval Association, and it would appear that there has been an understanding between these two bodies over the years for the payment of hydro costs which has been paid by the Point Pleasant Park.

The department officials undertook a full review of this very worthy suggestion. They found that the floodlit memorial did not constitute an aid to navigation, nor would it be feasible to use it as such. I am informed that the shoal water, which stretches for roughly one mile south of the park, is adequately marked by navigational buoys. These are well known to those who navigate that area. In addition, there are other short-based lights in the region which can also be used for positive positioning.

I fully appreciate the hon. member's sincere concern in this matter. He has raised some additional points and I will be only too pleased to address them to the department for consideration.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

PROPOSED MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND TORONTO OFFICIALS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity I propose to ask the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion under Standing Order 43. The increasing unemployment in the province of Ontario and elsewhere in Canada has precipitated a welfare crisis in the city of Toronto caused by the burden of its own unemployed supplemented by the burden of an escalating influx of unemployed employables. The city of Toronto turns down no welfare applicant. The city of Toronto proposes a shared-cost emergency employment program designed to provide immediate employment. The city proposes that the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member immediately. I have pointed out to the House on a number of occasions, particularly at some time in the past week when a rather heated debate arose in connection with the application of Standing Order 43, that hon. members can move motions under Standing Order 43 to bring to the attention of the House matters which they consider to be of urgent importance but that their contribution to the submission of the matter to the House should be limited to the urgency aspect of the matter and that there should be no debate over the substance of the matter raised by the hon. member who proposes such a motion.

Mr. Ryan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just coming to the conclusion of my remarks. I thought a few words of preamble were necessary. The city of Toronto has requested an emergency meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss this proposal. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That this House urges the Prime Minister to meet with the mayor and executive committee of the city of Toronto to discuss the proposed shared-cost emergency employment program and that the government give favourable consideration to sharing the cost of the program so that the plan can be put into effect without delay.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Spadina which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put.

LAY-OFF OF MASSEY-FERGUSON EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I should like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The matter concerns the announcement today by Massey-Ferguson Limited of the imminent lay-off of 2,750 employees, affecting two Canadian cities.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles):

That this House regrets that the government has failed to provide an economic and psychological climate conducive to economic growth in Canada, with the consequential result of mushrooming unemployment, and that immediate initiatives be taken to restore confidence in the economy required for growth and development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should mention that I have some doubt about the type of motion proposed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. It seems to me that the motion is couched in the language of a non-confidence motion, and I doubt whether Standing Order 43 is in our Standing Orders for the purpose of proposing this type of motion. In any event, hon. members have heard the motion suggested by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate which of course requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFF OF MASSEY-FERGUSON EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Massey-Ferguson Limited of Canada announced today that it is laying off 2,750 workers, what steps will the government take to correct the conditions which led to the lay-offs so that the affected men do not become part of the already swollen ranks of the unemployed in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Since Massey-Ferguson Limited has stated that these lay-offs result from slow sales of finished manufactured products, how does the government plan to correct the conditions in the economic climate of Canada which led to this unfortunate situation?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member realizes that his question is of such a general nature that it should not be asked at this time. If the hon. member could put the question in somewhat more specific terms, perhaps it might be in order, but his question cannot be asked at this time. The hon. member is inviting the government to make a statement of general policy, and this should not be done during the question period.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Very briefly, my question is: What specific steps will the government take to correct this situation in the city of Brantford?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the right time for me to answer a question which was raised yesterday by the Prince from Hastings.

Mr. Hees: On a question of privilege, the minister means Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Pepin: Yes. He mentioned the fact that exports of finished products had not increased last year as rapidly as previously. I grant him that so far as last year is concerned, but a good student of statistics—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Where are your manners?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the minister is replying in effect to a question which was posed yesterday and, not the one posed a moment ago by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT OF BARBER COMMISSION—ACTION ON REPORTS ALREADY SUBMITTED

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he now indicate when the final report of the Barber Commission will be available? Can he also indicate whether the government has taken policy decisions or any action with respect to the reports already submitted by the Barber Commission?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I would hope very soon, Mr. Speaker. We received the report some time ago. It is now being translated and printed and, as I said before, I do not think it will be very long. I would not like to repeat what I have said many times in the House about the action we have taken respecting earlier interim reports.

ENERGY

USE OF CANADIAN TERRITORY FOR OIL AND GAS PIPELINES FROM ALASKA TO UNITED STATES—FEASIBILITY STUDIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources may I direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who may be able to answer it. On February 12, in a speech at Vancouver, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources offered the Canadian northland as a land bridge for the transportation of oil and gas from Alaska through Canada to the United States. Has the minister's department made any feasibility studies of the placing of oil and gas pipelines down the Mackenzie River Valley? If so, have such feasibility studies been completed and will they be made available to the general public?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as everybody knows, studies are presently conducted in the North as to the possibility of constructing oil or gas pipelines on the permafrost. These studies are not completed yet. We believe it will be probably feasible, but we are not in a position to give a definite answer at this time.

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was expressing government policy when he suggested making Canadian territory available for oil and gas pipelines although the feasibility studies and investigation into the ecological consequences of such pipelines have not been completed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously the two subjects would have to be related. The minister is a member of the same government as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so the two decisions would be correlated.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Then do I take it that the offer of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to have the Canadian northland used as a bridge for the transportation of American oil and gas is conditional upon the feasibility studies being favourable?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we could describe it as an offer in any really legal sense. It was a proposal put forward as one worthy of consideration.

SOGEFOR LIMITED—DISCUSSION BETWEEN QUEBEC AND OTTAWA RESPECTING CLOSING OF PLANTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I shall put my question to the Prime Minister.

Everyone has heard of the coming closing of the Sogefor plants at Maniwaki and Mont-Laurier. Is the government now studying the matter and is it, in any way, in touch with the Quebec authorities with a view to preventing the closing down of those two plants?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in the final analysis, those plants came under the General Investment Corporation and, to my mind, it is up to the Quebec government to make decisions in this regard. If they wish to consult the federal government, we are always available.

TRADE

ACTION TO INCREASE EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURED GOODS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the direct relationship between the export of manufactured goods and the desperate need of employment opportunities in Canada, can the minister indicate if any crash programs or new incentives for Canadian sales were inaugurated on the occasion of the visit of our government representatives to the Singapore Conference and the surrounding countries which do have expanding markets, and can we expect a sharp increase in sales to this most lucrative area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I could easily say, Mr. Speaker, that most of our programs are based on that line of thinking. For example, when we assist exporters through the Export Development Corporation this is what we have in mind. When we negotiate agreements on science and technology applied to industrial development, this is also what we have in mind. Mr. Speaker, I tried to say a moment ago, and you realize you should have allowed me to make the answer, that the postulate of the question was wrong. The manufactured goods content of our exports has been growing tremendously in recent years. Let me give the figures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Down, down—watch your manners, Jean-Luc.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the minister is embarking on a statement of a general nature.

I should think that the minister might wish to make a reply which would be brief, succinct and to the point, but I believe he was doing a little more than that. He may have an opportunity to continue the matter if supplementary questions were put later in the question period.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question and make it simple so the minister can answer very briefly. In view of the fact that present sales are not good enough, was anything new initiated at that conference or in that area?

Mr. Hees: Yes or no.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have answered that. Almost everything we do has that particular purpose. For example, to mention something we are doing now, we are developing an export market strategy which is developing all kinds of things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Why not develop some export sales and leave strategy alone?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is an unfair question, and I suggest that when questions are based on a false assumption they should not be allowed.

SUGGESTED REPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR TO ASSIST EXPORTERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the great difficulties being experienced by exporters today caused by the wide fluctuation of the Canadian dollar, is the government giving consideration to repegging the dollar in the vicinity of, say, 97 cents United States in order to make it easier for our exporters to contract for future orders? They are finding it very difficult to do this today which means that it will be difficult for them to provide employment if they are not able to do so.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Obviously there are always difficulties in trading in the international market, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member does not seem to realize that we had the best trading year by far in our peacetime history last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is asking if we will consider pegging the dollar. Obviously he knows that this is the type of question on which we cannot announce our intention; it is something we either act on or do not act on. We do not broadcast our intention in advance in order that speculators may make a fast buck at the expense of the hon. member and other citizens of this country.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister obviously believes this is an unimportant matter I should like to ask him if he would be willing to meet in the very near future with a delegation from the Canadian Exporters Association to learn at first hand of these tremendous difficulties which the fluctuation of the Canadian dollar has caused them in taking orders for the future, and again this is reflected in the employment picture. Would—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the first part of his supplementary question was in order but it seems to me that he went on to present an argument. Perhaps we might overlook the latter part of his supplementary question if either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who seems to be very anxious to resume the floor, might reply.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I appeal for an answer from the Prime Minister? We get nothing from this minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): My comment on that is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Where has the hon. member been for the past year? That is the answer.

Mr. Speaker: At this point the Chair, subject to returning to the minister and the hon. member later during the question period, will recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pepin: He is going to tell us where he has been.

Mr. Hees: May I tell laughing boy I have been here watching him run a formerly good department into the ground.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair again recognizes the hon. member for Timiskaming.

ONTARIO TAX REBATES FOR PERSONNEL AT UPLANDS AIR BASE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence with reference to the Ontario law which requires tax rental rebates to be paid by the end of December. Will the minister use his good offices to ensure that these tax rebates are made to the armed forces personnel living at Uplands air base?

Hon. Donald S. MacDonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that question right away.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATIONALIZATION OF ALCAN PLANT BY GOVERNMENT OF GUYANA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the genial and loquacious Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to the question I asked on Friday in which I referred to the imminent nationalization of Alcan properties by the government of Guyana. Considering recent events in that country, is the minister now in a position to tell the House and the country of the present situation and, in particular, as to what activities or discussions this government has entered into with the government of Guyana?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, an announcement was made today to the effect that the Alcan subsidiary had been nationalized by the government of Guyana. We regret that negotiations between the company and the government of Guyana have not been successful. I understand that discussions respecting compensation will now take place. We are keeping in touch with the situation.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, am I to take it from the minister that the government of Canada and the government of Guyana did not partake of discussions or exchange views on this matter?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have said on a number of occasions that it is not a right of the government of Canada to dictate the conduct of the government of Guyana in these matters. We put the case that we expect Canadian companies not to be discriminated against in these matters. That is about the extent of what we can do in these matters. I think the House will agree that this was the proper approach.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, the minister obviously did not hear me. I talked not about dictation but about discussion. I take it there were no discussions.

[Later:]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on the question raised with respect to Guyana, I would not like to leave the impression that the Canadian government has not made proper representations to the government of Guyana. Conversations were held to that effect. The point I made a moment ago to the effect that we expect the Canadian companies to be properly treated was made in these bilateral conversations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REPRESENTATIONS BY AMHERST AND DISTRICT LABOUR COUNCIL

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister's attention been drawn to a letter to him from the Amherst and District Labour Council which states that practically 50 per cent of the unemployed live in Quebec and the Maritime provinces, takes objection and exception to the comments he makes when questioned on unemployment, and requests him to tackle today's problems with today's weapons? If so, what has been his reaction to their request?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking whether the Prime Minister has received a letter and what has been his reaction. I wonder whether a question simply in those terms is in order. Perhaps the hon. member might find some way to rephrase his question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could rephrase the question and ask the Prime Minister whether, in his attack on regional economic disparity as it pertains to the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, the battle will be won by spreading disparity throughout the whole nation? If not, what does the government intend to do about this matter?

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the minister in charge of the Post Office. Is it the intention of the Post Office to further reduce service to businesses in the Vancouver area by cutting out afternoon mail deliveries to business premises?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether this question is of immediate urgency. I certainly do not wish to be difficult, particularly so far as the hon. member is concerned, but this is the type of question which normally ought to be placed on the order paper. The question having been asked, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WARNING SYSTEM IN CASE OF NUCLEAR ATTACK

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence about the U.S. warning system getting out of order last Saturday.

Can the minister say whether Canada has a safe and efficient warning system which can rapidly give the alarm to the people of all Canadian cities, in case of nuclear attack?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have not exactly the same system in Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question.

I did not ask the minister whether we had the same system as the United States but whether we had in Canada a safe and efficient warning system in case of nuclear attack.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am quite ready to discuss this matter before the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence when consideration is given to my department's estimates.

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of National Defence, as a supplementary to that raised a short while ago by my colleague for Abitibi, regarding the existence or non-existence of an alert system in Canada.

The hon. minister replied that he would be prepared to discuss this matter during the consideration of the departmental votes, but since we might possibly be attacked before we ever get to that stage, would the minister be able to say whether we now have an alert system to warn the people of all Canadian cities?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is some sort of a system but I do not feel that we have time during the question period for a detailed discussion of its operation.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary question. I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence how the accidental false alert disturbed the usual calm that prevails in Canada on Saturdays.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, Canadians remain calm on all days of the week.

An hon. Member: All except the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing whatsoever to do with the question just asked. The question which was asked yesterday I answered yesterday.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Can the minister report today on who was the successful bidder on the tenders for a large quantity of broilers for export, which tenders were to have been opened yesterday?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The successful bidder was—I am trying to find the exact name.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: The successful tenderer was a group in the province of Quebec who put together the surplus broilers they had in storage and submitted one tender. If the hon. member will give me about two minutes I will find the exact name of the group.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): On a point of order, the noise from the other side of the chamber would indicate that members opposite thought I had arranged to ask this question. I did not, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I will assist the minister by stating as a preamble to my question that the successful tender was submitted by Quebec Poultry Processors Incorporated of Montreal. I wish to ask the minister whether he does not think it is ironic that the successful tenderer was the leading figure in creating the broiler surplus in the first place?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked is in order. It seems to be highly argumentative.

REVISION OF POLICY OUTLINED IN WHITE PAPER ON INCOME SECURITY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on Saturday that it is his intention to find a more equitable scheme for allotting family allowance than the one outlined in the white paper on income security, will the Prime Minister tell the House whether the minister was expressing a new government policy and whether the family allowance policy stated in the white paper is going to be revised?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marshall: Since unemployment is swelling welfare costs, will the Prime Minister direct that the date of the federal-provincial conference to be held in June be brought forward so that the present suffering of the poor can be alleviated?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not direct to bring dates forward. I consult with the provinces on such matters.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE ON CREAM CANS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Does the minister intend to allow the railways to increase their tariffs on March 1 on the shipment of cream cans from 44 cents per can to $2.75, an increase of 600 per cent?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): As I have stated repeatedly in the House, Mr. Speaker, I neither allow nor disallow railway freight rate increases or decreases, rare as they may be. If the hon. member will give me the details of this particular tariff item, I will convey his representations to the railways.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister, on his own behalf or through the dairy commission, lodge a protest on behalf of the farmers who will surely go out of business with an increase of that magnitude?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Transport is already aware of the protests of a number of the dairy farmers involved.

DISCUSSION OF WESTERN CANADA RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's report to the House earlier this year that negotiations were going on between him and his officials and the premiers of the provinces of western Canada with regard to high freight rates, is he now in a position to report to the House on what progress is being made in this very important area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I did that two or three days ago, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member was not present. I indicated that we had made quite a bit of progress in the talks, that we were trying to isolate individual commodities where the freight component of the cost appears to be particularly severe. The officials are examining this matter to see what relief can be achieved. It may be that we can add the commodity to which an hon. member referred to this group.

MERCURY—STRICTER CONTROL OF EMISSIONS, REMOVAL FROM BEDS OF STREAMS AND LAKES

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the expert testimony given publicly at the symposium on mercury which the Royal Society of Canada held last week, is the government considering stricter controls on emissions of mercury into air and water and a stepped-up program of research into means of removing existing deposits of mercury from the beds of streams and lakes in Canada which are already polluted?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): A program of that kind is already under way, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnett: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board who is responsible for the National Research Council. Are the resources of the National Research Council being mobilized in this difficult problem of the removal of mercury deposits from existing polluted stream and lake beds?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The resources of the National Research Council are being used for this purpose.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can the hon. gentleman say what action has been taken by his department to convene an international conference on the conservation of marine resources?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The fisheries of the North Atlantic come under the scrutiny of the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries which is meeting in Halifax in June.

SWORDFISH—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF POLLUTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is also for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Can the minister say whether a decision has been reached with regard to the problems created by the closure of the swordfishery and whether we shall hear about that decision on motions?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): There have been conversations with the industry and with the provincial government authorities in Nova Scotia. Several proposals have been put forward and we shall shortly be announcing those which are acceptable to both governments.

IMPENDING CLOSURE OF PROCESSING PLANT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has received any indication of the impending closure of a major fish processing plant in the province of Newfoundland and, if so, what action does he propose to take?

UNITED STATES OFFER OF CO-OPERATION IN BUILDING PIPELINE FROM ALASKA DOWN MACKENZIE RIVER VALLEY TO LOWER STATES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In the course of the discussions on energy policy between Canada and the United States in Montreal last September did the United States government make an offer to co-operate with Canada in building a multi-billion dollar trans-Canada pipeline from Alaska and the Canadian north to the lower states?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister concerned.

Mr. Harding: Since the government is apparently opposed to the transport of oil by sea from Alaska to the state of Washington, is Canada seriously considering acceptance of the United States offer with respect to a pipeline from Alaska and the Canadian north via the Mackenzie route?

Mr. Trudeau: I know of no such offer having been made.

HOUSING

METHOD OF ALLOCATING FUNDS FOR SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECTS

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): My question is addressed to the minister in charge of housing. Will the $87 million which has been designated to provide grants for sewage treatment projects be shared provincially on the basis of population or will it be assigned on a first-come, first-served basis regardless of the size or location of the municipalities concerned?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): It will be distributed on neither basis, really. The size of populations as between provinces is not a very good criterion though it is taken into consideration. We have to consider several factors, including the concentration of population which is more significant in causing waste disposal problems. We also take into account the state of planning and engineering for various projects as it is now, and a whole accumulation of requests which have been received in the past. Generally, we consult with the provinces and an inter governmental, interdepartmental committee studies these matters. Within the provinces we are guided to a large extent by the priorities and requests of the provincial governments. Rightly or wrongly, we do not think that distribution of these grants on the basis of population alone would be wise.

SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECTS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CITIES AND TOWNS ON RIVERS FLOWING INTO LAKE ERIE

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In view of the fact that cities and towns in the area through which rivers flow into Lake Erie will require an extra $30 million to provide the equipment necessary to enable them to meet the deadline set by the International Joint Commission, is the government giving consideration to making extra funds available to help such municipalities meet these commitments?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): No precise decision has been taken, but my colleague who will be heading the department of the environment has been discussing this matter with me and we hope that with the new facilities at his disposal and mine we shall be able to take a much more sophisticated look at problems of this kind in the future.

IMPENDING TAKEOVER OF MEMORIAL GARDENS CEMETERY ASSOCIATION BY TEXAS FIRM

In view of reports that the Memorial Gardens Association in Toronto which owns some 48 cemeteries in Canada is in the process of selling out to a United States firm based in Texas, will the minister have his department look into this matter in the hope that this transfer of Canadian soil can be prevented, so that Canadians, even if they cannot be protected by the government while they are alive, may be buried in Canadian soil?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Of course, ownership of the company has nothing to do with ownership of the soil or sovereignty over the soil. I will certainly look into the matter. I have not seen those reports. But I would remind the hon. member that there is nothing in the Combines Investigation Act, to which, I take it, he is asking me to refer, which would per se prevent the acquisition of a Canadian company by foreign owners.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister whether talk of an election this fall arises from the hope that there will still be a place to bury the government in Canada?

EAST COAST OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS RESERVES—TYPE OF DRILLING RIG, COMPANY THAT WILL PERFORM WORK

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, according to the roster, is supposed to be here today. In his absence I will direct it to the Acting Minister. In view of the statement by the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Nova Scotia that offshore mineral tests indicate there are sufficient oil reserves to last 30 years and double that amount of gas requirements, can the minister tell us whether the new drilling rig to be put in use off the east coast is similar to others already in existence? Can he also say which company will carry out this work?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to take the question as notice for the minister directly concerned who is away today on official business.

PROGRESS ON AGREEMENT WITH ATLANTIC PROVINCES ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): While questions are being taken as notice may I ask, in view of the prediction by the deputy minister yesterday that oil will be discovered off the east coast within two years, what progress has been made in consultation with the Atlantic provinces in negotiating an agreement concerning offshore resources? Perhaps the minister concerned will tell us when he reports to the House.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am sure the hon. member is aware of my reluctance to conduct collective bargaining on the floor of the House.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In order to clarify the situation concerning naval dockyard workers' income, will the minister make a statement on motions concerning Treasury Board's policy with respect to the wages of hourly-rated employees in various regions of the country?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I can only report, as I did a few days ago, that I have a communication ready for the new premier of Ontario inviting him to meet with me as soon as he wishes to do so following his installation—I presume that is the word. REJECTION OF UNION PROPOSALS ON SICK LEAVE AND JOB SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION BOARD

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that bids for improved sick leave arrangements by railway union officials negotiating with the CNR were refused on January 7 and 8 followed by the rejection on January 12 and 13 of proposals concerning job security, does the minister plan to seek the services of a federal conciliation board to resolve this dispute?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am sorry. Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat the question? I assumed it was addressed to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Paproski: Having regard to the fact that bids for improved sick leave arrangements by railway union officials negotiating with the CNR for wage increases and other benefits were refused on January 7 and 8, and since proposals concerning job security were similarly rejected on January 12 and 13, does the minister plan to seek the services of a federal conciliation board to resolve this dispute?

Mr. Jamieson: I do not know whether it is within my competence to do so but I will be glad to take the question as notice and give an answer as soon as I can.

GRASSLAND INCENTIVE PROGRAM—VOLUME OF BEEF IMPORTS FROM AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recently announced program to increase forage production in the Prairie region, which will give added incentive for beef production, will he tell the House whether the government is undertaking to discuss with New Zealand and Australia a mutual agreement in respect of the volume of future imports of beef from those countries into Canada on a quarterly or yearly basis?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion respecting the imposition or establishment of quotas. Last summer when we had a great deal of difficulty over this problem there were very satisfactory discussions leading to the supply to this market in Canada of the kind of beef these countries have to sell. I think the trading relations have been very satisfactory since.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to this same program announced yesterday. Will the minister give consideration to allotting this money to people who operate cow-calf operations because calves and feeders can be used quite readily in eastern Canada but otherwise with all these programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This seems to be an argument rather than a question.

GRASSLAND INCENTIVE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR SIMILAR GRANTS TO QUEBEC MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the hon. Minister of Agriculture. In view of the policy announced yesterday concerning the raising of livestock in the western provinces, I would like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to recommend the payment of similar grants in the province of Quebec to milk producers who are in serious difficulty. In my opinion, such a program would be an excellent way of enabling them to re-direct their production.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are programs in respect of forage production and other adjustments of agriculture that are appropriate to various regions. The hon. member is aware of several programs we have designed that are more particularly applicable to regions other than the grain growing part of the Prairies.

EXPORT OF BROILER CHICKENS—NUMBER OF TENDERS AND PRICE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could return to the subsidized export question directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us now who was the successful tenderer, how many tenders were submitted and what was the subsidized price or accepted price—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me at least some of this information should be obtained by way of a written question. Perhaps the first part of the question is in order, but it is my impression that the hon. member gave the reply himself a moment ago. In any event, perhaps the minister might be given the opportunity of replying.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the successful tenderer was the Poultry Processors Association of Quebec Incorporated, and there were nine tenders received. I can give the hon. member any additional information.

Mr. Horner: What was the volume?

Mr. Olson: The volume was three million pounds.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, since broilers do not come under the price stabilization board or the Agricultural Stabilization Act, will the minister tell us now under which particular government policy this program was prepared?

Mr. Olson: Yes, under the Agricultural Products Board Act.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As all of these broilers will come from Quebec will the minister give some consideration to obtaining some from Ontario in order to ease the surplus there?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the tenders were open to processors in all parts of Canada. Quite obviously the successful tenderer was the one who submitted the lowest price.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The House resumed from Monday, February 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 3648).

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) had the floor when we adjourned last evening. I gather now that the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the right hon. the Prime Minister is attempting to gain the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am just rising to take part in the debate when my time comes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has not yet come.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment last night, I was showing how far American businessmen have gone in gaining control over Canadian trade and industries. The bill before us seeking to create the Canadian Development Corporation seems to aim at stopping takeovers of Canadian businesses by American firms.

I was saying that it is not the kind of corporation that would prevent Americans from investing capital in Canada. We know how enterprising American businessmen are and we are aware of the necessity for them to invest their capital.

I am therefore convinced that they will keep on buying existing Canadian businesses or try to contribute, through their capital, to the establishment of others.

The minister has often stated that Canadians show little interest in investing their savings in Canadian companies or in organizing new ones. However, the problem is that Canadians have not much savings to invest. We know that the tax rate is eating away the Canadian workers' income.

Last Saturday, a miner showed me his cheque stub indicating seven different deductions. Now, when a miner earns his living in the bottom of a pit and must pay every fortnight $94 in income tax, it is inconceivable to ask him to invest his savings in the Canadian industry. He is unable to do so. It is the government that takes them away from him.

Northwestern Quebec is faced with the problem of exhausted mineral deposits, which forces certain mines to close down. Gold mines are no longer worth anything, in fact a gravel pit nowadays is worth more than a gold mine.

It seems that Noranda Mines Limited may build a copper refinery in the province of Quebec within the next few months. Indeed a group of businessmen from northwestern Quebec have associated with a view to inciting the government to support Noranda Mines Limited so that the latter's project may be implemented.

Canadians do not have the capital required to purchase shares and thus help certain companies, such as Noranda Mines Limited or others of that kind, to establish secondary industries in our country.

For its part, the government intends to set up the Canada Development Corporation—which will no doubt become state-owned—to force Canadians to invest in it, under the guise of taxes, because the capital that the government will invest in that Corporation will come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. That is what I call a socialistic measure.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the government, through grants or tax exemptions, should help Canadian companies start new industries to process locally the basic materials that we find here.

Very recently, the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) stated that our basic materials should be processed in this country before being exported. I agree entirely with this statement. Besides, the government of Ontario passed an act two or three years ago which compels companies to process basic materials as near as possible to their place of origin, before shipping.

If such a law existed at the federal level, it would benefit Canadian companies and Canadian workers.

The minister stated on January 20, 1971 and I quote:

> You will agree with me, I think, that in the years to come, Canada will need a policy designed to attract important foreign capital needed to explore our continental shelf and other mine and energy resources.

Now that statement is inconsistent with the proposed bill of his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who personally advocates the establishment of a corporation with the income taxes of individuals, want to interest those who still have savings to invest in that corporation, and that in view of checking the import of American capital.

On the other hand, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says that we should interest Americans to invest more in Canada. So, this is a contradiction. I wonder how we will get out of all this.

In the 11th report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, we can read the following on page 3357:

> Non-resident owned firms have received 50.5% of the $368 million in federal grants paid to industry under certain selected programs during the 1965/66-1968/69 fiscal years. Canadian-owned firms received $173 million (48.2%) while non-resident owned firms received $181 million. These grants were made under the following programs: Industrial Research and Development Assistance Program; Automotive Adjustment Assistance Program; Industrial Research for Defence Program; Industry Modernization for Defence Exports Program; Ship Construction Subsidy Program; Development of Industrial Technology Program; Defence Industry Productivity Program.

National defence gets the largest amount; but $181 million were granted foreign enterprise for setting up plants in our country. Not only does Canada invite foreigners to invest here, but it also subsidizes foreign industry that has invested in Canada.

We find, in Jean-Jacque Servan-Schreiber's work The American Challenge an extremely revealing and interesting passage on this subject. We see that what is happening in Canada is also going on in Europe. It seems impossible to escape that state of affairs, at least in our present system. Here is what Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber writes, at page 14 of the English edition:

> The least-known aspect of American investment in Europe is its means of finance. Financing investments is not a serious problem for American corporations.
> With their scope, capabilities, and techniques they have no trouble finding money on the local market to pay for their factories.
> During 1965 the Americans invested $4 billion in Europe. This is where the money came from:
> —loans from the European capital market . . . and direct credits from European countries—55 per cent;
> —subsidies from European governments and internal financing from local earnings—35 per cent;
> —direct dollar transfers from the United States—10 per cent.
> Thus, nine-tenths of American investment in Europe is financed from European sources. In other words, we pay them to buy us.

We have about the same situation here in Canada. In 1965, we gave them 55.5 per cent of our industrial grants.

On the one hand, a bill to establish a Canadian Development Corporation is introduced as a cure to this situation; on the other hand, everything is being undertaken to attract U.S. investors here because Canadian workers do not have the capital required to buy shares and stocks from companies working on developping our natural resources, our industries, our service companies and our businesses.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House, through the Minister of Finance, the problems involved in the tax reform. When people speak of reform in tax matters, they mainly speak of increases.

In the Finance Minister's White Paper, every means is provided for snuffing out, for destroying small enterprises as it was so aptly said last evening by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in his speech on the bill. And one Mr. M. I. H. Apser said on November 26, 1969 in a speech to the chartered Institute of Secretaries in Vancouver:

> Having all the evidence for it, we are deeply convinced of the value and the necessity of these private enterprises within the Canadian economy, not only as a factor which up to now has played an important part in our national welfare and progress, but also as a valuable potential for the post-war years. The surpluses they have accumulated will provide the means of development that the country needs essentially and they will contribute greatly to increase the number of jobs.
> A very high percentage of Canadian people depend directly or indirectly on the financial prosperity of private enterprises—

• (3:10 p.m.)

I fully agree with this statement. If one looks at the development of Canada or of any democratic country, one will find that personal initiative has contributed not only to ensure such development, but also to make Canada one of the most industrialized countries of the Western world.

And it is this private enterprise that we are trying to destroy by all kinds of means. On the one hand, there is the radical action of the labour unions. Sometimes, through inconsiderate action, they force industries to merge into combines, thus forcing small industries to close their doors. On the other hand, the government, through its taxation system, does everything to destroy the small industry, the family industry, that has been the strength of Canada over the years.

Nowadays, the family farm does not exist any longer. There is a tendency to vertical integration, to enlarging farms and turning them into companies in order to put an end to individual property and to change farmers into proletarians. And the same trend seems to prevail with regard to other small concerns.

Mr. Asper went on to say:

> At the very moment when we are concerned about the investment of foreign capital in Canada and about the foreign ownership of an important part of Canadian resources, the proposals of the white paper would make it still harder for the Canadian people to put money aside, which is the only way for them to make investments in the resources and industries of this country. The editorial writer of the Calgary Herald, on June 18, 1970, proclaimed his support to the declared policy of the Liberal party, which is "to encourage investments by Canadians". Then he added that the government "succeeds so well in emptying the pockets of the taxpayers, individuals and corporations, that a number of Canadians have no more money to invest—they have hardly enough, indeed, to meet their own daily needs". This editorial was entitled: It is necessary to buy Canada back . . . but with what?

With what should we buy Canada back? There is only one solution and people laugh when they hear it, but it is the theory of Social Credit. It is not the first time that we talk about it. We have been preaching it for 30 years. But some economists and politicians in the pay of high finance think it is funny. They will not spare a few moments to examine the situation and they do not want to compromise themselves, because the $2 billion the Canadian government will pay this year in interests on the national debt will not go to miners, loggers, workers or farmers, but to high finance that controls the world. Financiers are not interested in a change of the economic system. They want to keep on skinning the Canadian population.

I believe the remedy would be in the financing system of our public bodies as advocated by the Ralliement Créditiste. Today, every three months or so, the federal government borrows money on the bond market to finance its administration, to balance its budgetary deficit or to reimburse its bonds.

The provincial governments are in the same situation: they must borrow astronomical amounts of money each year to continue to administer as best they can. Municipalities and school boards are also in the same situation.

The Ralliement Créditiste is requesting the government to authorize the Bank of Canada to grant interest-free loans to these public bodies. If this proposal were accepted by the government, if the latter allowed municipalities, school boards and provincial governments to borrow from the Bank of Canada to cover their financial requirements, then such public bodies would not have to borrow on the private bond market. Being unable to lend their savings to these public bodies, private investors would then have to look to private enterprise and trade to invest their capital.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that those who have savings, be they insurance companies, or investment and security brokers, would not hide them under mattresses. That is not longer the fashion! So, they would have to look to private enterprise to put their savings to work. Gradually, Canadians would regain control over Canadian industries and businesses now in the hands of foreigners.

That is the solution that I wanted to propose to the House to replace Bill C-219 which, in my view, will not solve anything. This bill will in no way remedy the economic situation now prevailing in Canada.

We have cope with unprecedented unemployment conditions, with the destitution and even extreme poverty of many families which have to rely on welfare allowances. All unemployed who depend on very low pensions, welfare allowances or superannuation cannot suggest to the industry what and how to produce.

The interim report of the Economic Council of Canada tabled in July 1967 states the following, as reported on page 10:

> The greatest possible freedom of choice should be preserved for consumers—

How is it possible for social welfare recipients and unemployed to have that freedom of choice?

They have not a penny in their pockets to tell industry what to produce. I quote further:

> —so that each individual or household is free to choose the component parts of its way of life or standard of living, within the bounds of the law.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is in perfect agreement with the philosophy of Social Credit.

The report says further:

> —Consumer choice should be the ultimate arbiter of which goods and services are produced and continue to be produced.

Mr. Speaker, this is what Social Credit is all about, this is what members of the Ralliement créditiste are asking for: that the individual be given a right to tell industry what it should produce. But the system that the government is proposing, through this bill to create a Canada Development Corporation, as the minister said, is designed to guide Canadian industry and then somehow force consumers to buy again the production, if we allow that.

If the government wants to solve the problem we are facing in Canada, it should cease to take away from Canadian workers the greatest part of their income through the system of direct and indirect taxation. Then the individual would be able to control production, to invest into Canadian enterprises, into family undertakings which he would be proud to own and manage. Then we would see—as we have seen already—that there are still in Canada people who are able to run a business.

Let us give Canadians the opportunity to prove their ability. Canada will only be better for it, and the Canadian government will have done much to improve the standard of living of Canadians. That is what we would prefer to find in Bill C-219.

The House has under consideration an amendment to give this bill a still more socialist character, but we will object to it besides disagreeing with the measure being debated.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to follow the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) in this debate. I am not in favour of the policies suggested as a solution for our problems but we must give full "social credit" to him for putting them forward. The debate relating to this bill is one of the most significant, in many respects, to take place in this House in many years. It is the first time that we have really begun to come to grips with the ownership and control of our industry and our resources.

I use the word "begun" advisedly as I believe it to be the first substantial legislative step to help us "tip toe" through the intricacies of maintaining a substantial inflow of investment capital, still essential in the view of my party to the dynamic growth of our economy, and the imperative of assuming an increasing degree of control over the business and economic decisions which very much affect our sovereignty and our development as a more distinct Canadian social and political entity.

In this debate I wish to pay credit to the Hon. Walter Gordon whose passionate and persistent actions and concern have kept Canadians constantly aware of the abyss into which we are sinking. One may agree or disagree with Mr. Gordon's analysis or proffered solutions but one cannot fail to give him full credit for focusing our attention on this problem, this dilemma, to which we are finally beginning to give concrete attention. He has indeed already proven himself to be a very great and devoted Canadian and I doubt whether he is too concerned whether the solutions arrived at are along the precise lines he might choose as long as they are the result of the considered judgment of reasonable and concerned men and women.

This bill to establish the Canada Development Corporation is only the first step because it deals with only one aspect of the full range of considerations. However it does set up the machinery which might be expanded through the CDC or otherwise to deal with other important aspects. It is designed to establish a government position relating to the future oriented development of Canadian industry. This must be the first priority and the most positive aspect of the entire problem. The bill does not at this stage at least attempt to barge into some uncharted waters—areas which will be more clearly defined when the results of the studies of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) are completed. We can then deal more satisfactorily with the whole question of foreign takeovers of Canadian companies and assess the wisdom of actually repatriating the control of some key facets of our industrial social and economic life.

Like most members in this House and many individuals across the nation I wait with some degree of impatience for these studies to be completed. However we must all be aware that it is far more important that they be broad and deep so that judgments based upon them are more likely to be wise and valid. At the same time we must maintain an appropriate pace as we face ad hoc decisions to periodic crises with varying degrees of satisfaction and questionable fairness to those involved. We must have rational long range policies so that both domestic and foreign investors and entrepreneurs can act with a greater degree of certainty. I believe it was Conrad Hilton, a man whose hotel empire reaches into countries with a myriad of regulations who said that he doesn't care so much just what the ground rules are so long as they are clearly set out and they are not changed on him in mid-stream. Mr. Hilton in many ways personifies the entrepreneurial spirit which motivates so many enterprises.

Business will adapt to reasonable laws and economic climate as well as tax systems knowing that its competitors face the same sets of rules. It can then chart its own operations towards profitable objectives. I know that word profit is a dirty word to some in certain sections of his House—I do not see any NDP members here—but I suggest that they do not appreciate the role that profit plays in maintaining efficiency and producing the essential investment capital for job creating expansion not to mention the motivation. That is a question of particular interest to those who studied these matters in the Committee on Finance Trade and Economic Affairs. I suggest that studies in this area of motivation are overdue. There should also be differentiation between fair or justifiable profit as opposed to that which is clearly exploitive or the result of unfair monopolistic practices.

I was interested in speaking to leaders of governments in the many nations I was privileged to visit when accompanying the Prime Minister to the Commonwealth conference in Singapore. Virtually every country had quite clearcut regulations relating to foreign investment, yet each one clearly welcomed such investment. Its success was largely dependent on the market, which in most cases is substantial in terms of population but small in terms of per capita income, a reverse situation to that of Canada. At the same time it is recognized that, as the standards of living increase in an area where hundreds of millions of people live, the potential for growth is enormous. Wise business, and I hope we only have "wise" business as opposed to "smart alec", is going to gain whatever foothold it can in such markets in concert with local interests.

Another factor in addition to the domestic market is the richness of natural resources. In Indonesia, for instance, there are vast oil reserves to which access is relatively easy. They might not agree with that statement but it is true when you compare the situation in other nations. The quality of the oil is on a par with our Alberta oil, about which they knew everything. In Indonesia, they taught me a great deal about Canadian oil. The uncertainty of other sources of oil, plus the growing Pacific and Asian market, makes these resources sufficiently attractive that major international oil companies are quite prepared to invest their capital and "know-how" and turn over 65 per cent of their interests to Indonesian government corporations in return for nothing more than the 35 per cent they are allowed to retain plus a five year tax holiday. In addition, they are to repatriate or reinvest the profits on their 35 per cent as they see fit.

It is most interesting to see the development in Iran, a country where they manufacture their own automobiles, trucks and buses. It is a small country which we think is undeveloped, but the government is in complete control of the situation and business in that country competes on the export market with foreign licensors, something we should look at in our licence deals. In Iran, investment is welcomed when it participates equally with domestic investment capital. In that country return on investment exceeding 25 per cent is considered normal. I do not know if it is fully justifiable, but I am told that in their case it is normal.

In many cases our tax laws assure Canada of as much return as these nations enjoy as a result of their regulations on ownership. In other words, we do not have the same percentage of ownership but under our tax system we probably end up with as much in the federal coffers as they do as a result of their regulations on foreign ownership. What we must consider is the degree of control that is retained by the host country, and this is one of the prime considerations in this CDC bill.

This bill with which we are dealing, as I said previously, deals primarily with the key area of future development and the management of Canadian enterprises. Unless we are successful in this area and can prove ourselves competent, we will not be competent to deal successfully—by successfully I mean competitively and economically, and with the necessary managerial and entrepreneurial skills—with the question of takeovers. This cannot happen in the hothouse atmosphere of the bureaucracy, with all due respect to the very high standard of the bureaucracy in this country. I am delighted to see the transitional aspect of the CDC emphasized. This allows the CDC to operate with a maximum degree of freedom, largely as a catalyst to bring situations together and as a conduit to funnel the results back into the private sector.

I agree to a limited extent with the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), who participated earlier in the debate, that there are some areas where profitability is not possible or perhaps even desirable in serving the public interest. This could be the case with a pipeline from western Canada to eastern markets and was the case with our railroads. I think that cost-benefit analysis or economic studies in those days might not have shown much prospect of profitability. But such enterprises can serve as a vital lifeline, almost an umbilical cord, in the total rationale and cohesive development of our nation. I am sure that this question of a pipeline from western Canada to eastern markets will come up, and it has been suggested that if it is economically feasible private enterprise will construct it. There might be some validity to the suggestion that it is a worthwhile undertaking, although it is not yet economically feasible. Such a pipeline might be very important as an "ace in the hole" for Canada in international negotiations, even if no oil is presently flowing through it.

It is also suggested that with such a pipeline consumers in the eastern market would have to pay a cent or a half cent more per gallon for oil in order to support our western oil industry. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the people in western Canada for many years have been paying a cent per item or per gallon more than the price of the equivalent product elsewhere simply because they are part of Canada and are protecting eastern manufacturers. I do not think it is too much to expect that some time this situation should be reversed. It would do a lot to bind the country together to give us cohesion, and to give us greater development. However, at the moment this is not a consideration because our oil producers cannot produce enough oil to fill the pipelines we have—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is that?

Mr. Danson: I understand that at the present time, with the reserves available in western Canada and the opening of the American market, we need more pipelines to take the oil out. In fact, the producers in the west cannot start into the American markets that exist at the present time. I should add that this situation relates largely to the area of feeder lines, which is the paramount problem at the present time. My facts may be wrong on this, but this is what some oil people told me the other day. Perhaps they go to a different gas station.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The parliamentary secretary goes to gas stations to find that kind of tripe.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Waterloo rising for the purpose of asking a question? If so, is the parliamentary secretary prepared to receive a question?

Mr. Danson: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I wish that the hon. gentleman would save his question until I have finished. I hope I will have enough time at the end of my remarks, and I will be delighted to deal with it then. In fact, I hope he will stay for the rest of my speech.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the parliamentary secretary will want to correct the record regarding the oil pipeline which is running somewhat empty because the United States is not taking our oil.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should correct the hon. member's suggestion that this is a point of order. Perhaps it might be a debating point, and the hon. member may wish to raise it with the parliamentary secretary after he has completed his contribution.

Mr. Danson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for pouring oil on troubled waters.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Danson: To return—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the parliamentary secretary. The hon. member for Waterloo seeks the floor on a second point of order.

Mr. Saltsman: If it meets with your approval, Mr. Speaker, I would hope the parliamentary secretary would correct the impression he left about the NDP members in the House of Commons. We are both here to hear his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Danson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly nice to see the small rump of the NDP come back into the House when they heard I was speaking.

I should like to return to the question of entrepreneurial and managerial skills which in my opinion are critical to our future development. We Canadians are noted more for our diligence than for our imagination or daring. Perhaps this is due to the fact that we have been able to live and prosper safely and comfortably by leaning on the skills and capital of others. This applies to our economy. It also applies to defence matters as well, and we cannot afford to be too self-righteous about these things.

I am not certain how you develop entrepreneurship. It is largely the result of intuition, competitive experience and many other factors—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And the existence of the opportunity.

Mr. Danson: Taking advantage of the opportunity I guess is entrepreneurship, and seeking the opportunity. But I am confident that entrepreneurship can be encouraged by the CDC which can give Canadian initiative a fighting chance it did not previously enjoy in the face of the juggernaut of massive, multinational corporations, or simply of the branch plant or office having the massive resources of a home office which developed in a market of over 200 million people to the south of us.

Managerial skills, however are a very different matter and one which has received all too little attention in this country. We have some excellent schools of management and business administration but we need more and even better, better in the sense that we must move further into the field of graduate studies. This is particularly important at a time when we are graduating students from the liberal arts and humanities courses of our universities right into limbo. I spoke about this in an earlier debate about a week or two ago. These are well educated young men and women who have nowhere to go, no skills, no direction and no jobs. This is all being done at tremendous cost in human and material resources, and with the growing impatience of the taxpayers. But, Mr. Speaker, this impatience is nothing compared with the frustrations of the graduates themselves, frustrations which could prove explosive unless we come to grips with this problem.

Not long ago we were turning out people with skills, technocrats, but who were not really educated in the broad sense. Today, however, the reverse is true. We must achieve a balance, and a balance is something that is always sought by Liberals.

Mr. Paproski: Tell the Prime Minister that.

Mr. Danson: Our science graduates and those from our technical schools at least have direction and a degree of skill, sometimes a high degree of skill, with an opportunity for employment. But I think it is terribly important that we do some periodic re-assessment of our educational streams and see just what we are producing. I also think that guidance counsellorship in the high schools needs to be continually up-dated so that we can try and project what changes are taking place about us.

As an example, in this province just a year or two ago there was an immense shortage of teachers. I do not intend any reflection on the teachers but it seemed to many, and I am sure even to teachers as well, that if one could read, write and hopefully spell, one could get a job teaching. Now, it is difficult to get a teaching job even with a graduate degree. My friend, the Hon. Stanley Randall, the Minister of Trade and Development in the Ontario government and the greatest travelling salesman since Willy Loman of Broadway fame, justifies unrestricted foreign investment on, amongst other shaky premises, the fact that 60 per cent of the research and development done in Canada is done by foreign firms while only 26.8 per cent of our corporate assets are foreign owned. I could question those statistics but I will accept them as a further challenge to our own managerial skills, and also to our governments and to our industry to break out into far wider areas so that our inquisitiveness matches our diligence.

I expect that the final report of the Senate Committee on Science Policy will have very specific and constructive recommendations to make in this general area, and I am just as impatient to see this report as the one on foreign ownership. Hopefully, a minister of science will focus attention on this critical aspect of our national development. The report should also help us to more clearly articulate our national, social, economic and industrial objectives, a vital prerequisite to establishing national policies not only on foreign ownership and investment but on directing our own resources and energies in a manner most beneficial to ourselves in concert with our friends, neighbours and trading partners and, equally important, Mr. Speaker, our future trading partners around the world.

This is another area which I found to be particularly beneficial when I visited southeast Asia recently. Our interest there, of course, was the commonwealth and our aid programs, which I prefer to call development programs. We are developing credibility in those countries; certainly, we are in the commonwealth, in Africa and in Asia and in the Caribbean countries. What we are doing would make any Canadian very proud, indeed. It was a great experience travelling with our Prime Minister and seeing the regard in which Canada and all Canadians are held, as well as the respect and enthusiasm evinced for our Prime Minister. Our motives are not being questioned. We are there because we feel that is the place to be; after all, such a huge percentage of the world's population is there, and we are there as interested human beings. But there is a slight difference. Although we are their friends and although they are developing, those people represent, as I mentioned previously, an enormous potential trading market.

This is really interesting, I submit, because up until now we have depended for our trade upon the markets of our American friends, and I use that word in its full sense, and of the British. To a great extent, we traded with Britain. Now, the British may be slipping into the Eropean market, and we face the prospect of depending on two massive, major trading areas for our future trade. If we spread our wings around the world and establish our credibility, interest and friends, I think the result will be massive markets for us. At this time, as Britain is negotiating to enter the common market, there is an excellent opportunity for Canadians doing business in the United Kingdom today to begin negotiations on the basis of the conditions which will probably prevail and to determine whether or not they can continue dealing in that market. This must be decided.

If we find the formula for working with Britain after it has entered the common market, than I say the same formula will work within the common market itself. We could also use these same techniques for penetrating the common market. I think Canadian businessmen have been a little reticent about dealing with the common market. I have dealt there for 15 years and, certainly, there are problems. I do not think people would be in business if there were no problems for them to solve. There are language barriers and difficulties, but you find a response there that is interesting. Perhaps they have a different way of doing business. If you want to survive in this world, that is something you must get used to.

The third world about which I was speaking is of very great interest to our students. The subject happened to come up in a dinner table conversation the other night with my own children who are very much interested in the third world. My oldest son and daughter-in-law spent most of last year in East Africa, mostly in Tanzania. They want to go back there and devote some years of their life to that part of the world. I give them full credit for that. While talking about Canadian economic conditions, they were also talking about the increasing technology besetting us which will shorten the work week. Productivity, apparently, will not be all that important anymore. The great thing will be, how shall we spend our leisure time. It occurred to me that these same children who were speaking about helping people in the third world war—I beg your pardon; I hope that was not a freudian slip—in the third world perhaps enjoy too much leisure time and are not too productive. In many cases, they are not too happy. That is a value judgment, and perhaps I should not make it lightly.

If our children are as idealistic as I think they are, and if our technology will permit them to work a four day week or work for four years and take one year off, I hope that they will devote their energy to upgrading the lot of the less fortunate in the world rather than sitting back and enjoying themselves in the cocoon, which would soon be broken open and ripped apart if we neglected those people.

I spoke previously of my experience with American businessmen over a period of some 20 years. Much of that time I have spent in the American market. I have found American businessmen to be practical and imaginative people, shrewd and really quite open. They have the same love of country which we have, although they probably wear it on their shoulders a bit more than we do. But if we explain to them, as I have done, that in passing bills like the CDC bill and other measures we are really trying to fulfil our own destiny, to make this a greater country in which to live and a country which will contribute more to society and humanity, they understand. I know that they are willing to understand our concerns and this love of country which we speak about very quietly. They understand our desire to cultivate that which we cherish, because they cherish their own country. Indeed, in many cases, perhaps most cases American businessmen will co-operate with us if we articulate our objectives and provide them with ground rules under which they can function to our mutual profit and fulfilment.

I find this bill, Mr. Speaker, an exciting milestone even in the short period that I have been in Parliament. I am delighted to support this initiative on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as a major step forward in the enrichment of Canada and of Canadians.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Development Corporation could, if handled properly, perform a useful service in helping Canadians to own and control more of the development of this country. It could do this by providing a vehicle for channelling into the development field a large part of the more than $1 billion of savings which we Canadians invest each year, half in new savings accounts, and the other half in new Canada Savings Bonds. These funds are not now available for investment in new ventures because they are controlled by people who do not have confidence in the stock market because they are not familiar with how it operates and, lacking confidence in its operations, are unwilling to entrust their savings to it.

To make investment in the CDC sufficiently attractive to persuade Canadians that they should invest at least part of their savings in it, the government must make such an investment at least as secure and rewarding as the kind of investments which it would seek to replace. In other words, the government would have to guarantee that the security and return on investment are at least as good as the security and return made available by investment in savings accounts and Canada Savings Bonds. If such guarantees are not forthcoming, investment by the public in CDC shares will simply not take place.

If the government guarantees the security and return on investment, I believe that at least half a billion dollars a year could be added to the capital available for investment in new development enterprises, and would make it possible for Canadians to own and control a great deal more of their development. It would do this without impeding in any way the inflow of capital from outside the country which we need, and will continue to need for quite some time, to help us develop our economy at the pace which will maintain employment and our standard of living at the levels at which we have decided we want them to be.

Now, let us have a look at the pressure which the government will have brought to bear on it to buy up Canadian companies which are for sale and appear likely to be taken over by foreign interests. There is no doubt that keeping Canadian companies in Canadian hands is a very desirable objective. However, if in order to do so it is necessary to divert capital which would otherwise be used to promote new Canadian enterprises, we should give the matter careful consideration before deciding to employ our much needed capital in that way.

By using capital to buy a plant which would otherwise continue operation under foreign ownership, we would not provide one additional job, or one additional dollar of tax revenue for this country. The only justification for doing so would be if the operation of such a company under foreign ownership could clearly be demonstrated to be detrimental to the industry or sovereignty of this country. I think it is obvious that, in the overwhelming majority of cases, capital raised by CDC should be channelled into new enterprises.

Let us take a look at the pressure which will be brought to bear on the CDC to bail out companies which, through mismanagement, obsolescence of product, or for other causes are unable to carry on their operations and appear likely to fold up. As soon as the CDC bill passes the House, as the government's majority will ensure that it will, most, and probably all of the Liberal members of this House, will start to be pressured by companies in their ridings to obtain for them CDC financing to keep them operating.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will have a parade of Liberal members into his office, each telling him that if these requests are not catered to, the member in question will be defeated in the next election. A turn-down by the minister will lead to an appeal to the national director of the party, who will appeal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on behalf of the member. There is a great likelihood that many of these requests for CDC financing will be met, particularly in ridings that were won by a small majority in the last election.

The result will, of course, be that a great deal of the money which should go into new development will be diverted into bolstering up operations which have been allowed to run down due to obsolescence of product or plant, or for other reasons. If this is allowed to happen, the whole purpose of the CDC will have been destroyed.

Mr. Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member appears to have allowed a Progressive Conservative manual to slip into his notes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: As the hon. member knows, that is not a point of order. I was speaking from experience in this House. For 20 years I have seen the Liberal party work off the simple principle of the pork barrel. The member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) is very familiar indeed with that procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Hees: As I as saying before I was so rudely interrupted, Mr. Speaker, the success or failure of the CDC will depend on how the government operates it from the start. It is now up to the minister to tell this House three things: first, how the government intends to offer shares in the corporation so that the public will be persuaded to invest in it; second give a positive assurance that the CDC will not be used to buy back companies which appear to be likely to fall into foreign hands, except where it can be clearly demonstrated that such a company under foreign ownership would be detrimental to the industry or sovereignty of the country.

Mr. Francis: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question. This can only be done if the hon. member who has the floor at the present time will allow a question.

Mr. Hees: Agreed.

Mr. Francis: I would like to know if the speech from which the hon. member is reading is the same one printed in this morning's Globe and Mail as having been delivered in this House yesterday. It reads: "There is a great likelihood—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to learn of the great interest which all Liberal members have shown in the speech that was delivered to the press yesterday by myself and marked "To be held for delivery in the House of Commons" and which by some chance appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail. It is interesting to learn that the Liberal members all seem to have read this very excellent speech with a great deal of interest. It has been quoted to me today by innumerable Members of Parliament. I wish to advise them that neither I nor other members of the opposition bother reading the trash which is produced on the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: It is interesting to see that they are so interested in what we—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member who has the floor has been diverted for a moment from the main thrust of his speech. Perhaps we may now return to the bill before the House.

Mr. Coté (Longueuil): We already read it.

Mr. Laing: Throw it in the hopper.

An hon. Member: Why not table it?

Mr. Hees: I am very flattered to know that all hon. members are sitting up, looking up and listening intently. I hope that for once they are learning something about the economy of this country. I am very glad to be able to carry on this lesson which I am giving to them and which they seem to be receiving very well indeed.

Again, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted, the third thing that the Minister of Finance must do is advise the House of the criteria on which CDC financing will be decided. This is very important indeed. Until the answers to these questions are known, it will be impossible for members of this House to make a conscientious and sensible decision on the bill before us.

If the government is really sincere in its expressed wish to increase Canadian ownership and control of this country's development, it can take a very simple step to bring back to Canada and make available for promoting new ventures, a large proportion of the half billion dollars a year which we, as individuals and as corporations, invest each year in other countries. The government can do this if the Minister of Finance, when he introduces the capital gains tax which he has made clear he intends to introduce in the budget this spring, will announce that the tax on capital gains which are realized by investment in Canadian common stocks will be only 50 per cent of the tax on capital gains realized by investment in foreign securities.

I am convinced that such a move will be far more successful in persuading Canadians to invest in Canadian securities than has been the special treatment given to dividends from Canadian common stocks. The reason is that those who invest in common stocks are generally more interested in capital gains than they are in dividends, and the fact that the tax they will pay on capital gains realized from Canadian securities will be only 50 per cent of what they will pay on those realized from foreign securities will be very attractive indeed. If we are able to repatriate a considerable proportion of the capital we now invest in foreign securities, the benefits to Canadian development will be very important.

Now, I would like to deal with the approach of the New Democratic Party to this question as expressed yesterday on behalf of his party by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). The hon. member made it very clear that what the NDP envisages is a government corporation which would own and control business operations in much the same way as the provincial government in Saskatchewan did when the present leader of the New Democratic Party in this House was premier of that province.

Several years ago my right hon. friend from Prince Albert outlined to the House the history of the 13 companies which the provincial government of Saskatchewan took over and operated soon after the late CCF government took office. He stated in detail the number of months which each lasted before it folded up, and the losses incurred in each case. The story is one which must not be repeated on the federal scene and is ample warning against adopting the straight socialist proposal put forward by the NDP yesterday.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Finance to answer the three questions I have put to him, questions which the government must answer before we are able to judge this proposal in a constructive way. I also urge him to prepare to announce in his budget that the capital gains tax charged on Canadian securities will be only 50 per cent of that charged on investment in other countries, so that hundreds of millions of dollars which we invest each year in foreign securities may be returned to Canada to finance new development in this country.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to take part in the debate on the second reading of the Canada Development Corporation bill. I think my first words should be "at long last it is here".

This is a proposal of great promise, and one which a great Canadian who sat for a number of years in this House, Mr. Walter Gordon, first promoted in a major way. That was in 1963 and subsequent years. Many features in the measure now before us reflect features of the earlier bill which he promoted. This is particularly true with regard to the point made in the legislation now advanced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—that the corporation's operations are to be founded on sound financial principles, reconciled with the national interest, and that Canadian taxpayers will participate in the benefits of dividends received through the corporation.

I am particularly pleased, having been a supporter of Mr. Gordon in this respect for a number of years, to be able to stand in the House of Commons and express my full support for the Canada Development Corporation as proposed by the present Minister of Finance. It is appropriate that this corporation should concentrate in areas where Canadian ownership is not likely to come naturally. This gives the corporation very wide scope. The Canadian economy is already penetrated to such an extent by foreign ownership and control that it is extremely difficult, particularly in newer, technically-based industries, to expect Canadian business institutions to possess sufficient financial and research capabilities as would enable them to claim a full role. There is, therefore, a need for institutions based in the public sector to associate with privately-owned industries. There is every reason to require that where a public corporation expects to "go joint account" with business corporations in the private sector it should be governed by the profit motive. In doing so, of course, the profit motive must be reconciled with the national interest—this is laid down in the bill—and with the guidelines which Parliament, in debates of the kind we are conducting this afternoon, will be giving to the corporation.

I am particularly happy that the corporation is not to seek operational control except in cases where it initiates and carries out the entrepreneurial function itself. In the normal course of events, one would expect to find this corporation linking itself to the business enterprises of Canadian corporations and, indeed, of foreign corporations in joint ventures. In these circumstances it needs to exercise its influence to see that the national interest is in fact being observed in the pursuit of profit, even though it does not exert over-all management control. I am happy to note the observation of the Minister of Finance that the entrepreneurial function will be, for the most part, discharged by others but that it will, if necessary, be discharged by the corporation.

Another important role to be expected of this corporation is that which relates to the international field. I do not believe we can over-emphasize the importance of launching this development corporation into the world. One of the weaknesses in our economy is the fact that many of our companies confine their operations to the domestic market. Indeed, many of them come to Canada in the first place to surmount a tariff barrier or with the intention of producing solely for the domestic market. We need a corporation which is concerned with rationalizing Canadian units of production and forming them, when this is desirable, into larger corporate structures. More important still, such a corporation should be taking them out into the world economy, into the international market. It would be well to lay great stress on this aspect of the corporation's activities. The CDC could play an extremely important role in the international field by testing the Canadian orientation of some of the subsidiaries of United States companies which operate in Canada, making it clear whether they were operating solely as branch plants or as corporations with some degree of autonomy. If these subsidiaries of foreign parents operating in Canada really have a Canadian orientation at heart and if they have the autonomy to operate in world markets, then are they in fact operating in Brazil, Portugal, France, Europe and other countries of the world? Perhaps they really are here to operate only in Canada?

Are they subject to market sharing arrangements imposed by the parent company and then restricted to the Canadian market? We do not really know. Guidelines are not enough.

One of the functions of the Canada Development Corporation, as I see it, would be to test the Canadian performance and orientation of subsidiaries in our economy by offering to join with them to go out competitively into world markets. In this way, we could find out whether they will go. If they will not, then we do have a case and we will have to deal with that particular case. We will have an instrument to do so in the Canada Development Corporation. This will be appropriate to our national interests. I think that is a function we ought to be stressing in this debate when we consider the role of the Canada Development Corporation. Let me say as well that there is a gap I see in the economic policy of Canada that can be filled to some extent by the Canada Development Corporation in relation to other policies and programs. I have in mind a small business philosophy, small business programs and a set of small business policies which we require in Canada. I do not think we really have approached this need in a systematic way.

What we frequently have in Canada are many small businesses which, having reached a certain stage in their development, find that they need management, that they need better marketing techniques, that they need kinds of financing that are not available in Canada. Very frequently, particularly in new technological areas, we have companies that proliferate. They emerge on the basis of small pieces of new technology. They have highly skilled people and develop new products which they can get into the market on a limited basis. The soon reach a stage where there is a severe temptation to sell out. Selling out in Canada often means selling out to companies which are based outside this country. In the end, what we are really doing is obliging many Canadians to go abroad to find opportunities to make use of their advanced scientific and technical knowledge in suitable businesses. These people go abroad in order to find the kind of business institutions bared on sufficient technical skills and prospects to match their talents. Therefore, I think the Canada Development Corporation ought to have an orientation which includes support for small technically based businesses of promise.

This has often been referred to as a corporation which would be interested in large Canadian projects and in large enterprises, and I suspect that the emphasis on size is there to protect against being plagued with offers from limping businesses, or with pressures to buy businesses which are in trouble or difficulty. I think we have to grasp the potential for good effect on our economy of support for growing small technically based new companies. I say again, particularly with respect to the most advanced and technical fields, that many of these companies begin on a small scale, and build around some particular aspect of emerging technology. The Canada Development Corporation could at least hope to package up some of these corporations into larger management units, get them on a sound financial basis and oriented to markets larger than the Canadian market. This will frequently mean taking positions in small companies, helping them come together through mergers and combinations and encouraging them into external fields.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Naturally, the functions of the Canada Development Corporation will have to be related in this respect to the Combines Investigation Act or to competition policy in Canada. I trust that we will be able to so arrange our affairs in respect of combines and mergers that we will not be standing in the way of the coming together of many Canadian corporations so that bigger units may be formed in order to face the facts of economic life in the world economy. I want to stress my hope that the Canada Development Corporation will help us develop a small business program, particularly in the technical fields and related to opportunities in the world.

There is only one other point I might make at this time. We in Canada need an industrial or an economic policy of a kind that we have not yet put together. What we have are many pieces of a large picture. We have the PAIT program and we have a whole series of programs in the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce. We have our regional development programs and policies. We have our merger and competition policies, and now we have the Canada Development Corporation with some particular interest in developing Canadian enterprise. We have an emerging policy in respect of foreign take-overs and foreign investment. All of these are necessary elements of something more comprehensive.

What seems to be lacking, in this respect, and I agree with the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) who has expressed this a number of times in the House, is an over-all industrial policy into which these pieces will fit. Surely one of the main elements of that over-all policy would be something to help us select priority areas for the future. Should we be involved in electronics; perhaps we should. Should we focus on the communications industry; I think perhaps we should. Should we be involved in oceanology; we should, indeed, because we have coastlines and waterways with resources unmatched anywhere in the world. Should we be involved in the transportation field, the power field and in the nuclear field? I believe we should but we need a searching look at areas of probable competitive advantage to arrive at priorities.

What I mean by an industrial policy is the arrival at some kind of consensus that pulls together these kinds of fields we think hold the promise of life for future Canadian economic development. We would then concert the efforts of corporations like the Canada Development Corporation with combines policy and all other industrial policies. We will have to husband our resources very carefully and we will therefore have to adopt priorities and fit them into an over-all picture. We have to try to build again a kind of national economic policy of the stature of that which was created nearly one hundred years ago under Sir John A. Macdonald.

That policy known as the National Policy very simply set guidelines that helped to build up a Canadian nation.

It was based on railways, tariffs and immigration. There is of course a completely new set of circumstances today, but what I think we have to reach for is an overview leading to a new National Policy. I think the Canada Development Corporation will lead us closer to that particular policy.

This all comes at a time when we can no longer count on the inflows of foreign capital we have counted on in the past. The United States and the United States dollar have come to occupy a place in the world that was formerly occupied by Great Britain and the pound sterling. The United States is going to be obliged to adopt policies in the future with which we are not yet familiar, and in respect of which we now get exemptions because of our extremely close relationship. The U.S. economy can do severe damage to ours if the full force of some of the measures the U.S. may have to adopt in the future to protect the value of the U.S. dollar and to handle their trade balances in the world is applied to Canada.

Now that they have world responsibilities which are new to them, we can no longer afford to be so closely linked to the kind of world policy the United States will have to follow to discharge its world responsibilities. Indeed, these could be very harmful to us. We cannot count on continuing inflows of these dollars or on continued exemptions from general U.S. policies because of our special position. We must have new institutions to generate Canadian savings and put them into the most productive areas of our economy, ensuring also that we have profitable returns from very scarce capital resources. We must, therefore, proceed with haste. There is no time to be lost in launching this particular venture and I return to my opening remarks to state "at long last the CDC is here."

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill in respect of the Canada Development Corporation one can be sure he is speaking to a bill that has been under discussion for ten years. Still, it will create an enormous confrontation before it becomes law. Even if it does, it will be years before it is decided one way or the other what the value of the Corporation is or in what direction it will move.

Every so often Canadian governments decide it is a good idea to become involved in big business. This present entry into business means the government is faced with a dilemma. Will it make policy or will it manage? If the government is to be involved in big business by means of the Canada Development Corporation, will it then be embarking on a policy which will result in the affairs of the country being so arranged that the Canada Development Corporation will be placed in a preferred position?

Mr. Walter Gordon, former Minister of Finance, may take some credit for the fact that his brain child, first suggested in 1961, has now come forward as legislation. There are some who say that the CDC, as envisaged in this legislation, is different from that proposed by Mr. Gordon. A close examination, however, would show that in essence they are the same, with all the disadvantages. Mr. Gordon apparently had the idea that the CDC would sponsor and invest in large economic undertakings that would not pay returns for some years in many instances, but which presumably would benefit the country enormously. But the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has stated that his corporation will be profit-oriented, and that the company will have a capitalization of $2 billion which will be put up either directly or indirectly by the Canadian people. Also, it will have the option of acquiring ownership of some presently profitable Crown corporations.

Apparently, Mr. Gordon saw his CDC as acquiring a controlling or substantial interest in Canadian companies, especially those that might have been sold to foreigners or Canadian subsidiaries foreign companies. It is interesting to note that Mr. Gordon and Mr. Melvin Watkins, the arch prototype of the new Canadian neo-nationalism, are both from Toronto and both indicate that the Toronto business interests, with their Montreal and St. Lawrence Valley counterparts, look on their areas as being Canada. Neither one has ever bothered to appreciate the appendages added on by confederation on which they look as areas to be exploited for their benefit in the interests of Canada.

The Minister of Finance claims that his CDC will not aim at buying back companies that have been acquired by non-Canadians, nor will it become a buyer of last resort for companies that are for sale or may be taken over by non-residents. The minister has stated that the CDC will be entirely free of political interference. Yet, at the same time, he also says the government will always be the largest shareholder. One well may ask in all seriousness how can it be expected that there will be no political pressure exerted on the CDC?

Very recently in this very House there was an outcry against the sale of an old, established Canadian publishing company to U.S. interests. Had the CDC been in existence, would there not have been pressure on it to buy up this company to keep it Canadian, profitable or not? And if the CDC had resisted this pressure would it not have come under severe criticism? Its prime purpose, by its very nature, must be to pursue national policies; otherwise, it would have no relevance to the national scheme. It certainly will at all times be urged to invest in business that private enterprise cannot or will not support. How this can be reconciled with profit making must be answered.

Now, the great appeal of the nationalist thinkers, concerned with foreign ownership, is that the CDC, functioning as a buyer of last resort, would actually block the acquisition of control by outside capitalists. The CDC under the new proposal is to provide opportunities of investment for people of small means. It is hoped there will be a rush of people with their $5 bills to invest and to secure a return on their savings. But if the CDC were to buy at the highest price for a political purpose, it would be much more likely to lose money than make it and, as well, the taxpayers, being large shareholders through the government, would lose also.

So, one can see the dilemma of the Minister of Finance and his argument not to become a buyer of last resort and not to be a tool of government policy, but instead to be an instrument for the mobilizing of our savings. The CDC is to be a large-scale source of capital to create major new enterprises, or to strengthen old ones, by means of all sorts of devious ways and with superb management. It will use its funds in concert with other investors to acquire existing companies and to make them more profitable, more competitive and so on, and thus goodness will follow in a nationalistic sense.

But even the former minister, Walter Gordon, on October 7, 1965, said:

> The management of the Corporation must be guided in all its investment decisions by the criterion of long-term profitability. The over-riding objective of the CDC must be to satisfy the normal interests of its shareholders.

The bill, as drafted and presented, would seem to create an impression of change, that this company is not to be a Crown corporation and will not have to report to Parliament. I would presume the minister hopes that this subterfuge will make it less subject to political pressure. The idea that the investments shall be carried out by the CDC in the interests of profit making bears a little examination. Everything we do, whether private or public, is considered to be useful and to be profitable. Every investment we make we would hope would come out in the black. The former CCF government in Saskatchewan also hoped its blanket factories, its woodworking factories and its boot factories would be profitable, and no doubt was genuinely unhappy when they did not return a profit and had to be closed. Many times the government's judgment of profitability turns out to be merely hopeful, and many times just wishful thinking.

Because the government will be the largest investor it will certainly be under pressure whether it reports to Parliament or not. There is always constant exhortation at times to come to the aid of a private company, or sometimes even deter it. Just recently we had an example. Quebec has a development corporation. In 1966 it bought the Sogefor veneer plant at Maniwaki at a reported purchase price of $1.5 million. But the veneer plant has not been a success and has been losing money. Apparently, Quebec was ready to sell the firm for $500,000 to a U.S. firm. Local citizens have been up in arms urging Mr. Bourassa to intervene, and the same thing was asked of the minister in charge of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). Ottawa, at the present time, has no responsibility for the problems of Quebec but it would have if there were a CDC.

Then there is the problem of the External Affairs Committee. The committee suggests Canada establish a Canadian ownership and control bureau which would have the duty of safeguarding Canadian interests. Would not this control bureau exert on the CDC considerable pressure to have it intervene in areas that were dear to the hearts of the bureaucrats in the new agency that is still to be born?

Now what is the purpose of establishing a massive new investment company, distinguished from all the gigantic mutuals and so on, by massive government participation? We have the explanation that we are not generating enough savings and will be encouraged to do so by the existence of the CDC. In the beginning, at least, the government is to put up $250 million of equity capital which must come from the taxpayers. There could be much better ways in which investors could likely be induced to save, such as by tax cuts; but that avenue has not been favoured very much by the Minister of Finance. Even without the CDC, we find many opportunities for savings listed on all the business pages of every newspaper in the land. But we have consistently, in our new society, reduced the need for saving. After all, everyone who saves does so largely for a specific reason such as a bigger house, a car, the education of his family, for his old age, for sickness or for periods of incapacitation when he might be out of work. But our society has stated that all these things should be looked after as a matter of right. There is no point in saving for hospitalization which is paid for by the government through the taxpayer. The new white paper on unemployment is a form of guaranteed income, and by being made universal it guarantees that the individual, whether or not he makes himself available for work, will have benefits for many months.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Old age pensions and the guaranteed supplement are designed to help those in severe need. The Canada Pension Plan is designed along the same lines. Indeed, those on modest and low salaries could not hope to accumulate nearly the amount of money necessary to provide an income that these benefits provide. It seems doubtful that the many little people who make up the vast majority of our population will bother to bring their $5 forward so that the CDC will have its capital to carry on all the good things that it is supposed to do. People will not likely change their habits so that a great volume of savings can be accumulated if they are required to eat less, to give up new automobiles, new television sets, and so on. Indeed, if there were no new television sets, what would happen to the CBC? It seems unlikely that there would be any increase in the total volume of savings because the dollar cannot be stretched or invested in two places at one time any more than it could in the past.

In the matter of the CDC taking over the very profitable Polymer and the Northern Canada Power Corporation, there seems to be some inconsistency. Polymer has returned, after income tax, profits averaging almost $10 million a year for the past few years. According to the bill, the government will sell Polymer to the CDC at a fair and reasonable price to be agreed upon by the Governor in Council, that is the capital stock of Polymer. In a normal transaction, the seller seeks as high a price as possible, while the buyer seeks the lowest. In this case, the government has the duty to its taxpayers to secure the highest possible price for Polymer, but it is a case of the government negotiating with itself. Even if a private corporation were to bid for Polymer, apparently there is no means provided in the bill for a private interest to buy Polymer since that is to be the exclusive right of the CDC.

It is interesting to speculate on what would happen in the case of Home Oil, a subject which the House debated last week at some length. We were told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) that the U.S. owned Ashland made an attractive offer for Mr. Brown's holding and Cygnus. What would happen if the Canada Development Corporation entered a counterbid? By so doing, it would at least maintain the right of sale to the highest bidder. Or would it? Not if Mr. Brown were required to sell only to Canadian interests. In these circumstances, the CDC would only have to set its bid slightly higher than the highest Canadian bid. This would only be in part less satisfactory than being forced to sell to the Canadian bidder. Let us suppose, then, that CDC did offer the highest bid. Is CDC equipped to operate in such a high risk area as oil and gas, exploration and development?

Mr. Brown built up Home Oil by his willingness to take extreme risks. Perhaps he was also lucky. He played for high stakes with his own money and the money of others who knew what the odds were in that highly demanding business. Is CDC prepared to do this, at least in the beginning, with taxpayers' money? It is not likely that it would be prepared to do this. Home Oil, under CDC ownership is not likely to grow. Perhaps it could maintain itself for a while. Most oil companies must either continue to grow or must face slow death. What would this action have done for the Canadian economy? Very little, except to channel resources that could well have been used in more fruitful areas of the Canadian economy.

There seems to be little sense in having this bill clutter up the Order Paper at this time when we have a government reorganization bill that goes a long way toward revamping the whole government process. Furthermore, the superannuation changes in this bill will create a whole new concept in the civil service. There are many other aspects of Canadian life that are important and need attention, not the least of which is whether we have a centralized or a decentralized form of federalism. The CDC makes little sense. If it is aimed at appeasing the economic nationalists within the country, it will be only window dressing.

The CDC cannot hope to begin to cover those areas where activity in foreign takeover might be considered to be disadvantageous to Canada, unless it is aimed at taking over the whole economy. It would be much better if the government, in its handling of foreign capital, confined itself to making policy rather than attempting to manage individual businesses. Rules and regulations for foreign capital would be much more effective and give the government a better over-all perspective and judgment in the national interest. Crown corporations would deal in those areas where these rules and regulations would not apply. So far as economic nationalism is concerned, the CDC will not accomplish what the government hopes it will, even if it were possible to arrive at a consensus.

To those who see the CDC as a means of attracting many small investors, let me say that it seems doubtful that it will significantly increase their participation. The way to increase savings is to make a bigger pie. The CDC will do nothing to increase the size of the pie. As I stated previously, the government, through its proposed white paper on taxation and many other ways, has indicated that it does not regard personal savings as being particularly desirable. Instead of setting up the CDC, progressive tax changes would be much more effective in increasing the volume of savings that the Canadian people might generate.

Mr. Speaker, I regard the bill establishing the CDC to be not particularly desirable at this time.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled at the outset to say a few words which I hope will somewhat recast the rather distorted picture of the Saskatchewan economy, as it was under the CCF government, painted by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). Each of those hon. members, in remarking upon the technique of public ownership, trotted out the hoary old bogeyman of the Saskatchewan boot factory as proof positive that it does not work. That is about as logical an approach to discrediting public ownership as it would be for me to spend some time citing the numerous private bankruptcies that occur in this country daily and weekly in an attempt to discredit the private sector of the economy. Surely, the point is that taken in total public enterprises in Saskatchewan had provided by 1960 a profit of approximately $22 million to the Saskatchewan people. Surely, the point is that in the 20 years in which Saskatchewan was under the management of a democratic socialist government it changed in character from a "have-not" province, one of the least economically developed in the country, one with some of the greatest social and economic problems, to a province which in 1964 under a new tax sharing agreement was designated as a "have" province.

Let me now turn to the bill creating a Canada Development Corporation which, perhaps better than any other piece of legislation placed before the House in recent years, illustrates the fundamental and irreconcilable differences between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal government. Faced with three economic problems of almost overwhelming proportions, the government has chosen the totally inadequate device of creating yet another private mutual fund to meet them. The problems to which I refer are the rapid and now almost irreversible trend toward foreign ownership of our economy, vast disparities in wealth and economic development as between the various regions of this nation, and our seeming inability to create the jobs necessary to accommodate a rapidly growing labour force and the needs of people being forced out of work by automation.

This government has consistently relied, for purely ideological reasons, I suggest, upon the private sector to discover solutions to the problems, and hence has never advanced beyond indicative planning in its own efforts to solve them. The government has been consistently disappointed by the private sector in each of its efforts, but here again in this legislation it expresses its naïve and somewhat pathetic hope that its friends and allies in business will, for a change, deliver. I say naïve and pathetic because one need only look at the monumental disasters which are the DREE program and the voluntary restraints program of the Prices and Incomes Commission, in order to see that such an approach has never worked and is never likely to work.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is presenting us with a bill which will create a private corporation completely beyond the influence of the government, motivated solely by the desire to maximize profits, and through some mental sleight of hand which I am totally incapable of following, suggests to us that this corporation, no different in any essential characteristic from any other Canadian corporation, will somehow accomplish what they have been unable to do, that is to see that the future development of our economy will take place under Canadian auspices, that the economy will be rationalized, and that Canadians will be made full partners in the economic development of the nation and, further, that it will develop a powerful and highly effective entrepreneurship. I predict that the success of this corporation in each of those areas of endeavour will be only marginal because the major purpose of the corporation will be to maximize its profits. Whenever the goal of maximization of profits comes into conflict with another objective, such as ensuring that future development of the Canadian economy takes place under Canadian auspices, profit will win.

In contrast to the government's conception of the Canada Development Corporation as another pool of private capital which it hopes will be employed in the national interest, the New Democratic Party has embraced the concept of a Canada Development Corporation which would be the key element, the key mechanism for implementing the planned development of our economy.

In Bill C-204 my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), has set out the objectives which we consider to be proper for a Canada Development Corporation. Mr. Speaker, I think it might be useful if I read them into the record. In clause 4 of that bill it is stated:

> The objects of the corporation are:
> (a) to mobilize private funds and to channel them into investment serving the public interest of Canada as a whole;
> (b) to expand the public sector of the economy where necessary for the growth of the economy, for national planning and for increasing Canada's independence; the Corporation may also enter into consortium arrangements with private concerns where it has or can acquire effective control;
> (c) to act always as an instrument of government planning and development policy and be directly responsible to Parliament through the Minister;
> (d) to stimulate the rationalization and greater specialization of industry in Canada in order to create a more productive economy;
> (e) to be involved in regional development policies with provincial bodies and agencies in order to insure that every part of Canada capable of supporting viable development is extensively involved in the industrial future of this country;

> (f) to promote worker participation plans in enterprises established or assisted by the Corporation, as a model for such plans in industry generally;
> (g) to finance and develop new initiatives in research, scientific and technological developments which will increase the ability of Canadian industry to specialize and compete in world markets;
> (h) to assist companies and individuals to fashion economic opportunity out of inventions and to ensure that Canada derives the benefits therefrom.

In his speech last evening, the hon. member for Waterloo elaborated on each of these objectives and so there is no need for me to do so again here. Suffice it for me to summarize by saying that we conceive of a properly constituted Canada Development Corporation as being the major tool to be employed in correcting regional economic disparities, in repatriating our economy, and in bringing a halt to the export of jobs through the exporting of raw materials by developing secondary industries closely allied to our resource extraction industries. We see a properly constituted Canada Development Corporation as being a replacement for the ineffectual programs of grants in aid to private industry now being employed by the government through DREE and other programs in a fruitless attempt to overcome regional economic disparities.

We also see a properly constituted Canada Development Corporation as being the potential answer to many of the problems with which the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) must attempt to deal in his long-awaited white paper on foreign ownership. In short, we see a necessity to create a Canada Development Corporation which is financed by the public purse, controlled and directed by the elected representatives of the people of Canada in the interests of all the people of Canada. I have no hesitation in saying this because it is a basic premise of a democratic socialist party that the people of a nation possess the right and the power to agree on the use of their human and material resources through political decision. In this way they determine the nature and the purpose of their existence.

Our major national goals have remained unattained by governments traditionally allied to corporate interests. The major decisions affecting our lives are still being made on the basis of equating the profit of corporations with the good of humanity. Problems such as pollution and foreign ownership must by now have made it manifestly clear that we cannot rely on private enterprise alone to give us an economy designed for Canadian needs and to meet the normal human goals and aspirations which are part of each Canadian.

We say that in order to be worthwhile in any meaningful way, the CDC must be an instrument of public policy capable of responding to direction from the government of Canada. The CDC created in this bill manifestly is not, and I say so for the following reasons: First, the bill specifically states the corporation is not to be an agent of Her Majesty. Second, the bill specifically excludes the corporation from surveillance of Parliament. Third, in the creation of the board of directors the bill permits only a maximum of four directors to be appointed by the government of Canada, whether the board is composed of 18 or 21 members, and even then the government of Canada has the option to appoint four directors only in lieu of exercising its voting rights which come with the holding of voting shares in the corporation. Fourth, clause 42(3) would seem to indicate that the Crown's portion of the voting shares may be allowed to drop below the 10 per cent which the bill suggests to be desirable, thus even further weakening the potential control which the government might exercise over the decision making processes within the corporation. I suggest that taken together these four points demonstrate that the corporation will be no more subject to public control than is Canadian Pacific Investments or Argus Corporation.

In short, the first major objection of the New Democratic Party to this bill is that it does not represent a major step towards meeting our three major economic problems, foreign control of the economy, regional economic disparities, and the need for more jobs. We believe that a Canada Development Corporation as we conceive of it would go a long way towards solving those problems. Our second major objection to the bill as it now stands is equally illustrative of the differences in approach to government between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal government. Our second objection is an argument based upon considerations of equity.

The corporation as conceived by this bill will use as its nucleus tax revenue in the amount of a quarter of a billion dollars over three years, money which will come from all Canadians, including the poor and the economically marginal, who have no money to invest because all their money goes for essentials and for the payment of taxes. This money will be put at the disposal of those with enough surplus money to indulge in investment, so that the money collected from all income groups will be put at the service of a minority who are neither poor, unemployed nor underprivileged. It is difficult to discover any element of equity in such a proposal.

To approach the same point from a different angle it is obvious from a reading of the bill and from unequivocal statements made by its sponsor, the Minister of Finance, that the corporation is simply to be a profit making venture. If we need documentation of that I can refer to clause 6(1) of the bill in which it is stated:

> —and shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

And clause 6(2):

> —so far as it is practicable and profitable to do so—

And clause 6(2)(b) dealing with restriction of investments to corporations where shareholders' equity is likely to become greater than one million dollars.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Taking into account the emphasis which is placed upon profitability by this bill, I suggest that the objectives of the Canada Development Corporation could be achieved equally well, perhaps better, by making the same funds available to Argus Corporation. The minister can argue that shares will be offered to the public of Canada, but here it is a demonstrable fact that only 7 per cent of Canadians involve themselves in such speculation. Where is the equity?

Moreover, the bill makes it possible for the corporation to purchase several Crown corporations whose profits have hitherto gone into the general revenue to be applied to the general advantage of all Canadians. I am speaking of Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Mines and the Northern Transportation Corporation. In addition, of course, there is the potential for Panarctic Oils and the Northern Light and Power Commission to be purchased by the corporation. Hitherto any profits made by such ventures would have gone into the general revenues of the country and would have been employed for the benefit of all Canadians. This bill would permit those profits generated because of a collective effort on the part of the Canadian people to be distributed exclusively among that small group of Canadians in a position to purchase shares of the Canadian Development Corporation. Where is the equity in that kind of situation?

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have said enough to indicate my reasons for supporting the amendment presented by my colleague from Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), and to explain my fundamental opposition to the bill as it stands. I am sure that my colleagues who will follow me will go into other details of the reasons for our opposition.

May I, in conclusion, quote briefly from the transcript of the CBC viewpoint program of January 27, 1971 in which the speaker was Mr. Claude Henault:

> The faults of the Canada Development Corporation plan will become glaringly obvious the day the first corporation holding is sold to a U.S. corporation for profit reasons; the day Polymer, Eldorado and Panarctic, which (the money of the people of Canada developed) pay profits not to (all Canadians) but to a limited number of investors. On that day the Liberal Party will realize that in establishing the Canada Development Corporation it hung an albatross around its neck.

I couldn't improve upon that statement.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in his earlier remarks said in effect: "Thank God the Canada Development Corporation is finally here." He referred to the initial conception of Mr. Walter Gordon and implied to the House that Mr. Gordon probably shares in the delight of hon. members on the other side in this bill. I would suggest to the parliamentary secretary that this bill is but a pale, pale reflection of that which was prepared for introduction in this House in 1963 by Mr. Gordon. I would further suggest that Mr. Gordon is likely to deny paternity and in so doing I believe he would be entirely right.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation. As a taxpayer, the first question is whether or not the Canadian government should be getting involved in this sort of corporation? It is time we took a good, hard look at some of the existing Crown corporations and government projects and asked ourselves whether it is the function of government to get into fields which are better handled by the businessmen or even left alone altogether. For example, it is quite acceptable for the National Film Board to produce documentaries aimed at encouraging tourism in this country, but by what right does the government use public funds to produce nudie flicks and the film called "Neighbours"? It has no more right to do this than it has to start producing dresses for sale.

It should be apparent that, if a project is any good at all, the funds will be forthcoming from the private citizens. Whenever it is necessary to force funds into the project from taxation dollars, it invites the supposition that the project is not viable and is therefore undertaken for one of the following reasons: First, although uneconomic in itself, it is necessary for the over-all requirements of Canada; second, it is being undertaken as a give away by the government as a means of ingratiating itself with sectors of the voting public. The former is fully justified and should be in the form of a non-profit operation designed only to carry out the specific task and not to emerge as a full-blown business enterprise. The latter, under the present government, seems to be unavoidable but still remains unacceptable to the Canadians whose tax dollars are being misused in this way. In brief, the public's money should never be used to bolster competition against the taxpayer himself.

If this policy is not followed, we have the situation, already existing, where the Canadian taxpayer is being forced to supply the capital from his taxes for competing enterprises. It is not unknown for Crown corporations to fail. The unfortunate taxpayers are again required to dip into their pocket to bail them out, knowing full well that they could have made a better job of these enterprises themselves. Clause 2 reads:

> The purpose of this act is to establish a corporation that will help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector of the economy and will give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

The concept of the CDC is sound, provided that it does not compete with the business people of Canada.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: Not in the time I have left now, Mr. Speaker.

The Corporation must not be used as a dumping ground for existing government failures. There will be a tendency, during the clamour and glamour of creating this corporate Sir Galahad who will defend our shares against the invasions of tarnished, blood-sucking, identity-destroying, but badly needed, foreign capital, to slide a couple of the government's duds under the blotter and to hope that they will go unnoticed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: This must not be allowed to happen, and all the many rules and requirements demanded by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) regarding full disclosure by other corporations must apply in their entirety to the CDC. A full scale prospectus must be issued, not only for the purpose of inviting subscription for shares of the corporation but also to let the people of Canada know where the extra money is going to come from, if the capital subscribed is not sufficient to carry out its plans or if the corporation becomes solvent. Again, if government guarantees are contemplated the nature must be fully explained and a statement given as to what government guarantees will be available to other private corporations in similar circumstances.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Trade—Development of US markets for Atlantic provinces, products—transportation facilities; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Administration of Justice—federal intervention in action brought by teachers respecting British Columbia Order in Council; the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin)—Income Tax—new assessments for 1968 and 1969.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING MALTREATMENT OF CHILDREN

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain) moved that Bill C-28, to amend the Criminal Code (Battered Child) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise in my place this afternoon to support the principle outlined in my private members' bill, C-28. At this time, Mr. Speaker, may I take the opportunity of personally thanking the seconder, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), who is a physician and who fully appreciates the importance of this bill. In view of the importance of this bill, and for the sake of brevity, may I read the amendment and then refer to it at greater length. The bill reads as follows:

BILL C-28

An Act to amend the Criminal Code
(Battered Child)

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The Criminal Code is amended by inserting therein, immediately after section 189 thereof, the following:

'189A. Every one, being a person entitled to engage in the practice of medicine under the laws of a province, who fails to report, within seven clear days of the day he has knowledge of the facts, to the Attorney General of that province any bodily injury to a child which, in his opinion, may have ben caused by maltreatment, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to both fine and imprisonment.'

More and more Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are becoming deeply concerned about the increasing number of children who are being seriously abused and, in many cases, permanently maimed as a result of maltreatment by their parents or guardians. It is in order to rectify this situation to some degree that we should place a deterrent in the law. The bill seeks to amend the Criminal Code to require a member of the medical profession to report to his provincial Attorney General within a week any bodily injury to a child which, in his opinion, may have been caused by maltreatment. In the course of centuries, progress has been made in protecting the interests and well being of children. One can compare the situation today with earlier periods when parents used to wield absolute power over their offspring's life and death.

Despite considerable social and legal progress in the protection of children, the problem of their physical abuse continues to cause serious concern in present day Canadian society. The growing awareness of and the increasing interest in the phenomenon of child abuse on the part of physicians, educators, social workers and lawyers as well as the public at large, must lead to the enactment of legislation requiring medical personnel to report incidents of suspected physical abuse of children to appropriate authorities. Child abuse legislation is essential.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to outline briefly the purpose of this bill. The purpose of this bill is to require a member of the medical profession to report to his provincial Attorney General within a week any bodily injury to a child which, in his opinion, may have been caused by maltreatment. The provincial Attorney General would then be in a better position to protect children, to lay the appropriate charge and to ensure the future protection of the child and any other children in the custody of a person afflicted with a 'battered child' syndrome.

The objective of reporting legislation is to improve mechanisms for case finding and to assure protective services for the abused child, his siblings and his parents. A secondary purpose will be to obtain a better understanding of the extent and nature of the phenomenon than is possible when only a few selected cases come to the notice of health, education, welfare and law-enforcement authorities. In the United States, reporting is mandatory in all but six states, Alaska, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Texas and Washington. The swift passage of legislation in the 1960's has made it possible to obtain systematic information on the number of legally reported incidents of child abuse throughout the United States. In this way, a study of the causes, distribution and families involved can lead to solutions of this very serious problem.

This bill will become the first step to redress the conditions which still allow child battering to happen time and time again in this country. It is a very sad situation when a battered child re-appears successively three or four times to be treated in hospital without any steps being taken to stop these actions. This is done, not because doctors are not conscientious, but because parents or relatives or authorities who bring the children to a doctor for treatment are not required to return to that doctor they may send them to a new doctor. The lack of a registry of these cases renders checking up very difficult if not impossible.

Commenting on the problem, a Regina doctor had this to say: "People who maltreat children rarely bring the injured child back to the same doctor. The result is that a doctor believes he is dealing with a first instance every time. It is a pity there isn't some way in which information on injured children could be circulated among the medical profession." Clearcut legal procedures which demand that the doctor report the use of physical force is likely to produce the strongest possible reduction in the incidence and prevalence of physical abuse of children. Doctors and hospitals can play a vital role in promoting child safety. The Department of Health and Welfare should meet the provincial authorities so that hospitals can develop procedures for handling suspected cases of abuse. The physician needs and deserves support in this field. This bill affords him exemption from suits since he will be acting according to the law and will encourage reports of cases of abuse.

One may well ask, why do we need a federal bill? Some provinces have enacted legislation protecting persons reporting cases of child battering. This protection exists in Ontario, Alberta and Nova Scotia. But there is a clearcut need for a criminal code provision to provide both uniformity and better protection for both doctors who report and children who are battered. The existence of legislation on child battering can, in itself, be a deterrent. It will deter the cultural attitude permitting the use of physical force in child rearing.

The Canadian Medical Association, along with many other professional associations, has pressed for legislation on this problem. I propose then that the bill being debated today be sent to committee, where representations by experts will demonstrate how essential legislation is on this issue. I believe this to be a worthy and important amendment to the Criminal Code, and I commend this bill for the serious consideration of all hon. members.

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am most sympathetic about the problem raised by the hon. member, the problem that has become known as the battered child syndrome, as well as about some other problems that the bill attempts to solve. The problem of the physical abuse of children is very old. It dates back to the time when the father had the power of life and death over his child, to the time when parents used to sell their children into slavery and to the time when some fathers went so far as to mutilate children purposely so that they might evoke more pity from alms givers. That this problem is still with us despite everything we have done about it is made abundantly clear in an article in Newsweek magazine of June 3, 1968, which reads as follows:

> Now that many of the older childhood diseases have been brought under control, pediatricians are paying increasing attention to the battered child.
> 'More children under 5 die every year from injuries inflicted by a parent or guardian,' reports Dr. Ray E. Helfer of the University of Colorado school of Medicine, 'than from tuberculosis, whooping cough, polio, measles, diabetes, rheumatic fever and appendicitis combined.' Although complete figures aren't available, Helfer estimates that at least 60,000 children are wilfully beaten, burned, smothered and starved every year in the United States.

The difficulty really is this: this type of abuse usually is not deliberate, in the sense that it was deliberate in the old days when a father injured his child in order that its injuries might evoke sympathy from the alms giver. The syndrome, as it is known today, arises from parental inadequacy, immaturity and a lack of ability to cope with the problems of today. These parents are people with problems. They have personality defects. They are neurotic, emotionally disturbed and some are mentally ill. To give an example, I wish to refer to an article on this subject which appeared in the November 7, 1969 edition of Time magazine. I quote:

• (5:10 p.m.)

> In a study of 60 families with battered children, University of Colorado Psychiatrists Brandt F. Steele and Carl B. Pollock discovered one characteristic all these parents had in common. As children, they had been battered themselves, either physically or emotionally:

The article continues:

> The pattern repeats itself when such children grow up and have children of their own. Overdisciplined and deprived of parental love in their infancy, they look to their own children for what they missed.
> Such parents feel in effect that a baby who wets his diapers or hurls his Pablum at the ceiling is demonstrating that they are failures as parents. One young mother went into an all-day fit of hysterics because her young son refused to keep his coat on outdoors. Another told Colorado's investigators: "I have never felt really loved all my life. When the baby was born, I thought he would love me. When he cried, it meant he didn't love me. So I hit him."

This battering and deviant behaviour is an outer symptom of something wrong mentally or emotionally. Parents who abuse children are people who react violently to their own unmet needs. They need outside help. Who are these adults? Strangely enough, 50 per cent are male and 50 per cent are female. The average age of the mothers is 26 and the average age of the fathers is 30. They are labourers, farmers, blue-collar workers, white-collar workers and top professional people. Some are in poverty, some are relatively wealthy, but most are in between. They live in large metropolitan areas, small towns and rural communities. Education ranges from partial grade school to advanced post-graduate degrees. It is clear that age, race, sex, economic level and occupation are not in themselves signs of the child abuser.

[Mr. Southam.]

I wish to refer to a paper prepared by the Children's Division, The American Humane Association, in 1968. I quote:

> Early in this decade, the child victim of parental abuse was labeled "The Battered Child." Much has been written and said about the "Battered Child Syndrome", that constellation of symptoms which, viewed together, unerringly point to a medical diagnosis of a physically abused child. Thanks to the medical profession the multi-faceted problem of the battered child has been given national recognition as a community problem of high priority order.
> In medical conferences at state, regional and national levels and in the many state and local medical journals this has been a topic about which the profession as a whole has expressed great concern. The matter has been given even greater emphasis by pediatricians and roentgenologists in hospitals and clinic settings who are recognizing a responsibility toward the abused child—a responsibility which for too long has been ignored. Their concern stems from the fact that they frequently fail to properly diagnose the "Battered Child Syndrome" for what it is because they accept the glib stories of parents about the injuries resulting from accidental cause.
> Numerous articles in medical journals place responsibility on the medical profession for properly identifying and diagnosing these conditions and for alertness to the signs and symptoms which spell physical abuse of children. These articles also express frustration in that when such cases are found, the community is often ill-equipped to fully protect and safeguard the welfare of these children.

I have been speaking about the battering parent. The real object of our affection should naturally be the child. How can we protect a child against this abuse? Studies have indicated that throughout this country and the United States there is no single pattern, but a number of approaches. Children's Aid Societies and children protection services are found in various cities, states and provinces. We try to help the child in other ways, such as through the use of the juvenile courts. Finally, there is the role of the police and the prosecutor, the criminal law, to punish the abuser of children.

The Children's Division of the American Humane Association states that prosecution of parents is least likely to provide proper protection for the child. There are a number of reasons. First, in any prosecution in a criminal court, the Crown or the prosecutor must prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. In child abuse cases, this is often impossible, because the parent who is going to bat his child is not going to do it on Wellington Street on the Sparks Street Mall. The battering takes place in the privacy of the home. Therefore, obtaining proof which will result in a conviction is most difficult. In most cases where this procedure has been followed, no conviction has been registered. The parent trots out of the courtroom free.

As a result of this, the hazard to the child is increased. First, the child continues in the custody of the parent who has been acquitted on a charge of battering and is, therefore, available to be battered in the future. Second, there is a bitterness on the part of the parent which is likely to be expressed in brutality toward the child in the future. Third, the parent who has been acquitted of this behaviour sometimes looks upon his acquittal as a licence to continue this behaviour in the future. As a result of these prosecutions, in many cases the state of the child is worse than before the prosecution was instituted.

There is another problem with prosecution as opposed to treating outside the courts. If a parent who is inflicted with this illness, I will call it, knows that if he goes to a doctor, the doctor must report his behaviour to a police agency, it is highly unlikely that the parent will bring the child to a doctor or to any medical person. He knows that he might likely be charged if the child is presented to a doctor. Although the child may need medical treatment, that treatment is not forthcoming because of the fear of the parent.

Prosecution leads to another aspect. Prosecution brings with it punishment. Under our Criminal Code, parents who are guilty of battering or striking their children are subject to penalties, either fines or imprisonment. This type of punishment does not get to the root cause of the battered baby syndrome. The root cause is mental and emotional instability and we shall never get at this by prosecuting the parents. The bill before us would make it compulsory for a doctor, within seven days, to report to the Attorney General of the province any injury to a child which in his opinion might have been caused by maltreatment.

• (5:20 p.m.)

With respect, I cannot agree that a doctor should be required to report to the Attorney General. Implicit in this arrangement is the idea that the Attorney General will then take action against the parents; the Attorney General is a prosecutor, an enforcer of the law. To support my position, I should like to quote from a paper prepared by a Dr. Schlesinger, an assistant professor in the School of Social Work at the University of Toronto—or he was in 1964 when this paper was prepared. He states:

> Many authorities in human welfare, including doctors, lawyers, judges, social workers and other child care experts, have felt that we need to introduce strict laws to deal with "child cruelty".
> Doctors, probably more than any other group, are a prime source for "finding" abused children because children are brought to them for treatment. Doctors are also best qualified to determine whether injuries are the probable result of accident or physical abuse. Therefore, it is necessary that they be legally freed to take responsible action on behalf of abused children, and for reporting these cases to an appropriate agency. That agency will then accept responsibility on behalf of the community to fully protect the child.
> Such legislation must be directed to medical practitioners and hospital personnel coming in contact with children for the purpose of examination and treatment of injuries sustained allegedly from accidental or other causes.

He goes a step further, as I would. Not only doctors but hospital personnel should be required to report such cases.

> Our doctors and hospital personnel should have mandatory responsibility for reporting all cases of child injury where medical diagnosis and findings are incompatible with alleged history of how injuries were sustained and the syndrome leads to the inference of "inflicted injuries".
> Doctors and hospital staff members reporting cases of suspected inflicted injuries should be made immune to possible civil or criminal action for the disclosure of matters which might be considered confidential because of the doctor-patient relationship.

This is a key point, because in the absence of this immunity I doubt whether any doctor would report. Unfortunately, the federal Parliament cannot confer this immunity from civil prosecution; only the provincial parliaments can do that. The writer of this paper continues:

> All reports of cases of suspected inflicted injuries should be made to the public or voluntary Child Welfare service which carries the child protective function in the community.

In other words, Dr. Schlesinger says there should be a mandatory report and that the report should be to child welfare agencies who would then take responsibility for the child in question. And this is what we are trying to do, help the child. Supposedly, and hopefully, these agencies would also direct the parent to the proper medical authority for treatment.

Finally, the doctors or the hospital staff concerned would be protected from any civil or other proceedings which might result from their actions in making a report. I submit that the bill we are considering does not meet these standards. I maintain we should work together to bring pressure on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to get together with provincial ministers so that in every province there would be legislation making reporting mandatory in such cases, and providing for immunity from civil action. In this way, each province would afford to children the protection which is necessary and which only the province can provide.

As the hon. member stated, there is already some legislation in effect in Canada. In British Columbia there is the Protection of Children Act which requires every person having information of the abandonment, desertion, physical ill-treatment or need for protection of a child to report the information to a Children's Aid Society or to the Superintendent of Child Welfare or his duly appointed representative. This provision applies notwithstanding that the information may be confidential or privileged. The punishment for breaking a provincial statute is a fine not exceeding $500.

In Alberta, there is a child welfare act, section 39(1) of which states:

> Every person having information of the abandonment, desertion, physical ill-treatment or need for protection of a child shall report the information to the director or to any supervisor of the Department of Public Welfare or to a municipal welfare director or to a solicitor acting on behalf of the Department of the Attorney General.

In this province alternatives are provided. Further on, the section states that the above provision applies——notwithstanding that the information is confidential or privileged, and no action lies against the informant unless the giving of the information is done maliciously or without reasonable and probable cause.

So, the protection to which I have referred has been provided.

In Ontario, there is a section of the Child Welfare Act which provides that every person having information of the abandonment, desertion, physical ill-treatment and so on of a child shall report it to a children's aid society or to a Crown Attorney. Again, an alternative is provided; it is not mandatory to report to a Crown Attorney or to a law enforcement official. Recognition is given to the special role which the social agencies can play.

In Nova Scotia, the act of 1967 contains a similar provision and requires the report to be made to the Children's Aid Society or to a director of that society. Again, in that province, protection is given to the reporter unless the report is made out of malice or without reasonable or probable cause.

So, I am afraid that while I support the principle behind the hon. member's bill, while I support just about everything he said in his presentation, the measure he recommends does not fit the needs of the situation. As I said, we should work together to exert pressure in the proper places to persuade the provinces to take action, as has been done in the United States. The hon. member told us that all but six of the states had passed legislation giving this protection. My information, it may be later, is that 50 of the states plus the District of Columbia and the United States Virgin Islands have all made provision for this kind of mandatory reporting together with the involvement of the social agencies and the statutory immunity which is required.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I should like to commend this bill to the House. I hope it will be sent to the committee where evidence can be given by interested authorities and brought to bear upon this subject.

In recent years, hospitals, doctors and local authorities have been faced with a situation which appeared to be quite new and unusual. However, this probably has been around since time immemorial but only in recent years has it been catalogued and brought to the attention of society at large. For want of a better phrase it has been called the 'battered baby syndrome'. It is not strictly confined to babies; there are cases involving children up to four and five years of age. With the idea that parental love would take care of children, society has been loth to face up to the possibility that a baby's bruising or fractured bones could have been caused by injury by the parents. This is not an easy fact to accept, especially when one of the parents may well bring in the child for medical aid.

The first clearly identified cases in Great Britain were reported in 1963. The United States have been reporting them since 1946. For some reason, the firstborn in a family seems to set the pattern, and where the firstborn is battered, subsequent children are prone to be battered. In England, the records of the National Society for the prevention of Cruelty to Children indicated there was a 13 to 1 chance that a subsequent child would be injured by the parents. They also reported that parents in the age group of 20 to 30 appeared to have long-standing emotional problems. Many of the fathers had criminal records and were unemployed at the time of the incident. Perhaps unusual is the fact that the families are usually small. To some extent, the violence of the assaults and the infancy of the victims set these cases apart from the older children, although the boundaries cannot be clearly defined. Medical authorities are becoming more on the look-out for these children because, unfortunately, the case of the child who is battered once may well turn up again. The same report gives examples of physicians and hospitals failing to spot the cause of injury and unsatisfactory after-care arrangements being made by many hospitals despite the evidence of reported, unexplained injuries.

The problem of what to do when a physician finds himself in charge of a battered baby is not easy. First, it is difficult to know whether the bruise is the result of a battering or a fall and injury that overtakes small children from time to time. But it is generally considered that doctors have a duty to perform as citizens as well as being medical advisers. In England it is generally considered better to contact the children's department of the local authorities rather than the police.

An analysis of this problem would indicate that it is deep-seated and psychological. Whether or not society may best control this abuse of children through the Criminal Code is debatable. It would seem to be an area where the law, psychology, sociology and medical disciplines are involved. I would like to see this bill sent to committee for further study, and I think action could well be taken in respect of the final suggestion in the bill.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to in this bill, the battered child syndrome, is one of the most widespread social and medical problems in our society, as has been pointed out by my colleague the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy). Whenever we read stories of child abuse we are deeply touched and often prompted to anger and action.

In recent years there have been several recorded cases of extreme cruelty directed at children by their parents. We often find it difficult to understand how an adult can harm a small child. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie rightly pointed out that this is often due to parental inadequacy, emotional disturbance and mental illness. The important matter for us as legislators is the determination of what is the best way of dealing with the problem. The present bill is an attempt to do this. While I support some provisions of the bill, I have serious reservations about others. I have been greatly assisted on this subject by one of my constituents, Mrs. M. A. Smith who is a social worker at the Montreal Children's Hospital. She has provided me with some worth-while information and comments on this whole problem.

My first reservation in respect of the bill is the obligation to report a case of child abuse under the criminal law. I realize that this bill is merely a method by which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) can put forward his concern regarding the subject matter and the need for legislation. I submit, however, that what is required is comprehensive law, whether it be national or a series of provincial laws, which will accomplish two things: first, protection of children against abuse and, second, rehabilitation of a family, either the mother or the father or both, responsible for child abuse.

Such law should contain a compulsory reporting procedure. The reporting procedure should go further than that suggested in this bill. The reporting procedure should include nurses, social workers and teachers, in addition to doctors. I understand that some 50 states of the United States have such a reporting law and require nurses, teachers and social workers to report cases of child abuse or battered children, as well as doctors. This is necessary because if you merely require doctors to do the reporting, some parents will not bring their children to doctors. Other people may come to know about the problem, such as the teacher in school, nursery school, kindergarten, social worker or nurse in a clinic. It is necessary that these other categories of persons be obliged to report cases of battered children as well as doctors.

Secondly, such a law must protect a person who in good faith reports the case of a battered child, that is, protection against liability if the facts reported are found to be wrong. As you can well understand, if a nurse, teacher or social worker did not have this protection they might be very hesitant to report the case of a battered child. Thirdly, law on this subject should set out the agency to which the person must report and it must be someone other than the Attorney General. It might be that the Attorney General would delegate an authority. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, this could be the Children's Aid Society or, in the province of Quebec, the social welfare court or another group which deals with family problems.

The reason for this is twofold. First of all, the Attorney General is more concerned with punitive procedures than rehabilitation. What we need in a law like this is a method of treating the parents. If the parents are merely convicted or fined, the child may be returned to them and harmed again, or other children may be harmed. If this happens, we have not solved the problem. That is why I do not believe the criminal law is the right vehicle to deal with the problem of battered children.

Reporting of these cases should be to an agency which is able to carry out rehabilitative procedures in respect of the parents. One reason for reporting to other than the Attorney General is that most provincial Attorneys General are too far from localities in which cases of battered children occur. Another doubt I have about the reporting procedure as set out in the bill put forward by the hon. member is the requirement to report within seven days. I am not a doctor and I do not know whether a doctor, a teacher or anybody else who might be required to report can carry out a proper investigation within seven days of his knowledge of the injury. Seven days may be sufficient, but that is a question on which I should like more expertise.

In addition to the compulsory reporting procedure, a system of rehabilitation for the family should be set out in law. This is essential. As I said before, the best way to proceed is not through the use of the traditional criminal law. In the last few years such a rehabilitation program has been set up at the Montreal Children's Hospital. Its purpose is to deal with the parents so that the child eventually may be safely returned to the home. The program at the Montreal Children's Hospital is based on a similar program in the United States, at the Colorado medical centre, where much research has been done on this subject and where treatment is provided based on the medical, social, psychological and legal aspects of the problem.

Finally, I believe there is need for a great deal more research, information and statistics in this area. Last year very few cases of this nature were reported in Montreal. I have here the exact number of cases, and it is rather surprising. At the Montreal Children's Hospital only two cases of child abuse were reported each month, but the authorities know this is only the tip of the iceberg. In 1967, there were 6,000 reported cases of child abuse in the United States, and the potential was even higher. In the state of Wisconsin, with the implementation of compulsory reporting, it was found there was a 30 per cent increase in the number of identified cases in one year. Canada is very short of statistical information and research in respect of the battered child problem.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister and his parliamentary secretary, who is here today, to take note of this bill and the arguments put forward in the debate and to implement a comprehensive law to deal with the problem. If it can be done at the national level, I urge that a government bill be introduced in this House. If not, I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) to give leadership to the provinces so that law of this type may be introduced in the whole of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to hon. members' comments on Bill C-28, and particularly in regard to the social unrest which may develop when we have to deal with parents who do not shy away from physical or mental cruelty towards their own children.

Although I fully agree with these ideas and compassionate feelings with regard to these social ills, I wonder if this matter is being dealt with by the competent authorities and if moreover this bill really seeks to solve the problem.

The bill provides that a doctor must report within seven days on any physical harm inflicted upon a child.

First of all, I would like to point out to my hon. friends who have supported this bill that it is all very good to express compassionate feelings but still one must seek whatever is practical, and feasible.

If we make it an obligation for the doctor to report any physical harm inflicted upon children who have been brought to him for treatment, then we must advise as to whom his report is to be made. And once this report is filed, what will happen next?

It is a well-known fact that according to the Canada Evidence Act, in criminal cases, the doctor or any other person may not bear witness to acts of which they have no knowledge. What else but a mere diagnosis can a doctor report? This, unquestionably, under the Criminal Code does not constitute satisfactory evidence liable to bring about conviction of a person we would like to see charged with a criminal offence.

If we make it compulsory for a doctor in such sympathetic circumstances to report to the Provincial Attorney General a case that comes to his attention in his medical practice, why not put under a similar obligation any person who is aware or has been made aware of any criminal act? Why impose such an obligation on this group in particular? For instance, would a physician be more competent to give evidence about something he has not witnessed than nurses in a hospital, neighbours or other children or other persons who might have been aware of the fact that some parents were inflicting bodily harm upon their children?

Even if the bill were adopted, even if we gave this responsibility to the physician, the problem would not be solved, because the physician, under the Evidence Act, would find it hard in his deposition to incriminate the person who could eventually be charged. The physician will report the case, but, as our laws require that a charge be laid, one must ask who would lay this charge? It would surely not be the physician, because it would be hard for him to make a deposition. He would only give a diagnosis which would in no way be related to the criminal offense. Furthermore, he may make a mistake.

I have read somewhere that, if a physician takes it upon himself to report to a public institution, either the police or the welfare courts, as are to be found in the United States and in Quebec, his responsibility is at an end because he has, in good faith, and in the practice of his profession reported some actions that he suspects were carried out maliciously.

But if he is required by law to report what he believes to be a criminal offence, I think we are going too far and into a field where we shall find no solution.

I would rather believe that it is within the purview of a provincial law—the law on the medical profession since we are concerned with doctors—that perhaps we could legislate so as to make clearer still the lack of responsibility of a doctor reporting any action which would have come to his knowledge in the discharge of his profession.

Under the Canada Evidence Act, I repeat that it is impossible for a doctor or for any individual unaware of a fact to be a suitable witness. Therefore, if we were to add a section to the Criminal Code, this would obviously be meant to impose punishment on those likely to be found guilty, and this involves court action.

Conviction entails proof of offence. Now, a physician is not likely to give evidence leading to conviction. Here, his position is not made any better than that of any other citizen, not even that of the ambulance driver called upon to carry a child that was battered by his father or mother or, still, his older brother.

I do not believe that this bill, although introduced open-mindedly and designed to redress the occasional deplorable situation in our society, has its proper place in the Criminal Code, any more at least than other indictable offences under the Criminal Code.

If the Criminal Code called upon any individual to report to police the presumably indictable offences of which he was aware, why should we make a special distinction in this case?

Besides, the medical practitioner, as other members of the learned professions, discharges serious responsibilities towards the individual and, according to our law, his profession also enjoys privileges, including secrecy. The matter is extremely important.

Of course, a member of the medical profession, under the law, must, in certain instances, report the treatment he gave a patient. Now, as this privilege derives from civil rather than criminal law, a legislation in that respect under our constitution should logically be enacted by the provincial government concerned.

The doctor must be free from professional secrecy at all costs. A doctor may report certain things and I sincerely believe that in some cases, one would not take offence at seeing a doctor reveal external facts he is aware of, without being considered for all that as an investigator. If he has enough sense of ethics to do so or to ask investigators to enquire, what evidence can he give?

And even if the doctor were required to report directly to the police facts he could be aware of in the course of his practice, he still has the right under provincial legislation to appear before the court if summoned to do so, but to refuse to give evidence, alleging as reason medical ethics that bind him according to the very nature of his duties.

Unless he is really free from professional secrecy and summoned, under the law, not only to appear but also to give evidence on the treatment he would have given to such or such person in such circumstances, here again, and I repeat, it is by means of provincial legislation and not by an amendment to our Criminal Code that we shall be able to really put more teeth in the law, and call the attention of the people on such unfortunate cases that may happen whenever one has to report the battering of children in certain families, battering that may sometimes require emergency care.

While I must commend the sponsor of the bill for his good intentions, I have doubts about the practicality of such a measure. Indeed, if it were accepted and included in the Criminal Code it would be an exceptional provision by indicating that this is a crime completely apart from others and I submit that some provinces, as has been indicated, have proceeded in such cases under provincial legislation. However, such provincial legislation does not stress particularly the role of the doctor. It simply states that any person having information of the abandonment, desertion or physical ill-treatment of a child must report this fact. Then, if there is such an obligation for "any person" in any province, why should we place it chiefly upon the doctor in the Criminal Code?

And if in the past it has not been deemed necessary for individuals to report the commission of criminal offences by their neighbours or relatives, why should we use this principle in this case, namely in the case of doctors which come under provincial legislation and whose medical acts often have considerable legal consequences in civil law, and which can give rise to liability suits. Suppose that a doctor should report something which, in his mind, falls under the provision of this bill. If someone is indicted and later acquitted, this will inevitably give rise to a damage suit against the doctor who made the report. The doctor can only make such a report if the provincial laws concerning the practice of medicine cover such cases.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 3648).

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, before we rose for the dinner hour I said that the concept of the CDC is sound provided it does not compete with the people of Canada, and it must not be used as a dumping ground for government failures. I also said that the many rules and requirements regarding full disclosure by other corporations must apply in their entirety to the CDC.

I realize that the idea of assessing in advance what a plan will cost is brand new to the government. The normal procedure seems to be for it to barrel ahead with some half thought-out scheme, ignoring the cost completely, secure in the knowledge that Mr. Taxpayer is always sitting there waiting to contribute his hard-earned dollars at the drop of a hat. I imagine that one or two people have begun to wonder when they will have to stop paying more and more all the time, but probably most people would prefer to swallow the Minister of Finance's bitter pills rather than the substance which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) advised the truck drivers to eat.

There was a beautiful instance of the attitude of the government toward costs not long ago at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The committee was discussing Bill S-2, respecting Statistics Canada. This was at least the second day of discussion and the plan was being examined in great detail. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) asked:

> Has anyone any estimates on how much that kind of input work will cost? It seems to me to be pretty costly for the large number of taxpayers in Canada ... Have you any estimates of cost there?

The reply from the Dominion Statistician, Mr. W. E. Duffett, was:

> We have no estimates, but one would have to work the thing out in very considerable detail in order to determine what the cost would be.

Just look, Mr. Speaker, at what this sort of thing means. On the one side you have the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) doing a fine job of protecting the consumers' interests right down to quality, content, advertising and price fixing, and on the other side you have departments selling so-called services to the public but they will not even tell the public what the price is. This is my concern about the CDC. Aside from all the ballyhoo about shareholders' subscriptions, what will it cost the public of Canada now and later? If the government does not know how much is required and where it intends getting the money, this is gross incompetence and the government should get out of the CDC before it is even started.

If the government does know its cash requirements and proposed sources, and will not release this information, it is guilty of saying to the Canadian taxpayer, "What we do with your money is none of your business, and we'll make you pay anyway." I think that if we can get the CDC to disclose its plans to the Canadian taxpayer so that he can assess whether he wants to be saddled with it in the future, we will have made a great breakthrough so far as the government's attitude to the electorate is concerned.

I suppose it would be too much to hope that the Prime Minister would apply some of the maxims of the Minister of Consumer Affairs regarding disclosure to shareholders and to the public, and start reporting to his shareholders, the people of Canada. The Prime Minister has made no promises to the Canadian voters, but this does not give him a mandate to do everything and anything. The Canadian people did not give him permission to introduce a tinge of socialism into this country under the guise of a just society. In the unlikely event that the Canadian people ever grant this permission, they will still be entitled to ask what it will cost them so they may judge whether they want it and whether they can afford it.

If the Prime Minister's plans are produced piecemeal and on the spur of the moment, each of these plans must have its price tag so that people may decide if they want to buy it. It is hard to believe that a government would operate on the basis of hand-to-mouth planning, but the sloppiness in some government ventures so far seems to indicate that it does. If the wondrous plans which the government continually slaps on the counter for forced consumption by the public are in fact part of an over-all, long-range scheme, the Prime Minister must right now give an honest estimate of the expected cost to the taxpayer over the whole period covered by the scheme, so that the people in their wisdom may evaluate the costs and the benefits and, if they so decide, stop the expenditures before they are committed to expensive schemes which are not desired by the majority of Canadians.

In other words, the Prime Minister must take the trouble to find out what Canadians want and how much they are prepared to pay. But I suggest that this government does not concern itself with the taxpayer and its attitude is: What's another billion?

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to participate in the debate on the bill presently before us and which aims at establishing the Canada Development Corporation.

I should like to emphasize the importance of this corporation in Canada and bring out the economic situation of our country, in the light of this gigantic development program proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

I do not feel that the time has come to create such a development corporation in Canada, because many areas of industry do not operate efficiently. Some industries are only producing at half capacity because they cannot find buyers for their products. I do not think that the establishment of a large corporation, at the expense of other related industries, will settle the problem. I am sure that if we establish large Canadian industrial centres, we will close less important ones and see a great number of industries stop their production or merely go under because the leading industries and finance will drive them to bankruptcy.

We have in the province of Quebec the striking example of the General Investment Corporation. The Quebec government has made available to the province a broad manufacturing, industrial and financing organization.

At present, Quebec's General Investment Corporation has taken over several large industries and has modernized them by using all available techniques. This form of industrial financing did not increase greatly the number of jobs but it did cause the disappearance of several other industries that provided jobs. Those industries are now faced with overproduction which they cannot sell.

In many sectors, the General Investment Corporation has tremendous surpluses; warehouses are full to capacity. Some industries and some industrial complexes have to be closed because the overproduction cannot be disposed of.

I do not believe we will solve the problem by creating the gigantic financing company which the Minister of Finance wants to set up.

What amazes me the most with the establishment of this super industrial corporation, is the tendency of this government to try everything possible when it comes to financing overproduction while they turn down all the measures aimed at promoting consumption among the people whose purchasing power cannot buy the current production.

Current financing policies, as well as governmental assistance to economic expansion in designated areas, represent attempts at financing the overproduction of industries which cannot find a market for their products because people lack purchasing power.

When you finance new furniture factories in some areas, you only bring about the closing of other plants in neighbouring areas and shift the place of production. When you train new employees, you drive older, skilled and experienced workers into unemployment. The government is closing its eyes not to see that the trouble in our economy is not the lack of production, but the lack of purchasing power for the people to buy this production. The production stays on shelves, in stores, whereas the people who need it but lack money cannot buy it. The government is closing its eyes not to see that production is already sufficient, although 10 per cent of the population is unemployed, and although 60 per cent of the production is designed to meet the requirements of the consumers, who have no purchasing power to buy more goods and services.

Some refuse to see that in 1970, in spite of a production of $84 billion, the people consumed, exported and sold—by every means—only $50 billion, and that only $34 billion were left for future needs and the development of the country.

And above all else, there is this wish to set up a super governmental corporation of two billion dollars to increase national production when it already exceeds the purchasing power of Canadians.

Any production coming from this new Crown corporation will only serve to close down the small and average companies which do not have the advantage of self-financing, like the large concerns listed on the stock exchange, which benefit from the support of public capital never repayable and never subject to fixed interest rates, which are more and more exempt from federal taxes, with inconspicuous or secret reserves, exaggerated depreciations, disguised by all kinds of accounting devices, with the right to create new capital, under the more or less declared or stolen authorization of our government.

By means of granting similar privileges to private companies, the government itself has finally yielded to the temptation of establishing its own big Crown corporation under the sonorous title of the Canada Development Corporation, the CDC, listed on the stock exchange, with shares at fixed rates for the people and at accruing rates for its preferred shareholders, members of the family compact, of the establishment, untouchable and always respected at first, in the whole national economy.

There now, Mr. Speaker, we have our great government-controlled corporation, set on the same footing as the public exchanges in private enterprise, showing off for our benefit this mixture of unhealthy rivalry between the people's interests, those of private enterprise, competing against sovereign authority, drooping to its own level of economic activity, in order to enjoy the exclusive privileges granted private enterprise, but denied the people, the human being, the family and even the entire nation itself.

Prompted by the example of the larger companies that keep increasing their capitalizations from their yearly income, the government has decided to build up its own reserve of ever-lasting capital by means of taxation on pension funds, to create in the stock exchange its own means of action, in order to enjoy still at the people's expense the exclusive privileges granted to the larger companies in the private sector, at the million or billion dollar levels to be in a better position to compete with the small and the medium bracket enterprises, with the individual and family undertakings which are not burdened with administration costs nor with high salaries to be paid to university graduates.

What a queer parallel. Often did the government blame the larger companies for making extremely large profits, for building up excessively large reserves, for claiming exceedingly high depreciation rates, to disguise their way of creating capital on their published balance sheets.

The government has even been asking the banks lately to abandon one of their six practices, that is the concealment of their hidden reserves, while leaving the five other privileges untouched. They even have the right to create more credit since the new 1967 Bank Act was passed. But the same government is now playing the game of private companies. Instead of calling their privileges into question, of denouncing them and of suppressing them as it had started to do, in the light of the representations of people who have had enough of seeing the profits of big companies accumulate from year to year, while they are deprived of their right to live and are unable to use the production they made for themselves first, and not only for these companies or government instruments, the government does not react at all.

The Minister of Finance should backtrack before it is too late. A bill is only a bill. It may be studied, introduced, discussed, and even rejected without humiliation, but after it is passed thanks to a majority government, in spite of a disconcerting opposition and any previous policy, this majority government may very well dig up itself the grave in which the Canadian people will bury it in the next election.

Let us recall Mr. C. D. Howe's famous pipeline. The very strong government of the right hon. Louis Saint-Laurent was its victim. The opposition was against the government's stand in this matter. The majority government did not take that into account, but the people gave its merciless verdict. The Saint-Laurent government was defeated. The hon. C. D. Howe disappeared, and the government subsequently withdrew the $80 million it had invested in a private enterprise.

Today, through Bill C-219 to establish the Canada Development Corporation, in spite of its sonorous title, it is not $80 million that the government wants to invest in private enterprise, but $2 billion to start with.

It is laying it on. This will be the greatest amount of capital ever granted to a Canadian company at its creation.

It would be advisable for the Minister of Finance to think it over some more. His daring is exciting but is it measured and justified? How calculated is the risk he is taking? If the government tampers with the exclusive privileges granted companies with floating capital listed on the Stock Exchange, is it in playing that game that it will protect the interests of the people who are asking for a better distribution of the goods they produce through large companies?

In reading reports every year the Canadian people see that the gap widens constantly between the poor who become poorer and the companies which become increasingly richer, leaving a great proportion of the population destitute with no hope of improving its lot.

Hon. Minister of Finance, I am addressing you—he is not here but I am addressing him just the same—and the others will understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should perhaps address the Chair rather than the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I will continue my remarks, but I have said nearly all I had to say about the Minister of Finance.

We are facing an alternative which, from somersault to somersault, may lead to even greater unrest than what we are experiencing today.

• (8:30 p.m.)

It remains to be hoped that the army of the bold and the courageous will meet the challenges and commit itself to build a prosperous Canada.

In Quebec, together with fortunate Canadians, the canvas of the future that we will be able to describe shall have to be lived by all Canadians, be they federalists, nationalists or others. It must be hoped that they are all willing to work for the prosperity of Canadians, throughout the country.

I think that in future, education will not be used merely to prepare youth for the labour market. Education, I suggest, aims at giving our young people the required tools for thinking so as to allow them to understand the very complex world in which we live.

This is one of the objectives that the government should consider, instead of creating useless corporations such as the one it wants to establish now, because it is not a problem of production that we are bumping against, but indeed a problem of economic balance. Production must equal consumption. The more we shall build and go towards production, the more we shall aggravate the present large unbalance. As a matter of fact, we experience this unbalance in our economic system and we have figures to prove it. I gave some earlier. The surplus of production will reach 34 billion this year and if we do everything to produce more who will buy the products? Where will we be able to sell them and what kind of stability will we assure the Canadian people?

The government must deal with all kinds of problems. It is fine to say: We shall produce and then export. But we must import as much as we export so there will be no change because that is not where the problem lies. If we could produce to help logically the needy countries and if we could secure the required markets before launching those vast organizations or investing this tremendous capital by taking it away from some to give it to a state corporation, if it was possible to export without importing, it would perhaps be a solution.

We have no agreement enabling us to export without importing. Finally, we must balance our trade. When our trade balance with other countries is unfavourable, we know how the serious the consequences can be. If we had merely exported our surpluses in exchange for goods which are not manufactured in the country and which are required by Canadians, we would then be logical. However, it is illogical and hardly imaginable to have more exports than imports.

Therefore we must prepare young people for the world of tomorrow through education. It is necessary that everyone gets his part to play in society so that this society will guarantee everyone the right to live in a logical way, to have his share of the immense progress which science and technology have made possible. That is where the government has to intervene. We must work, we must have recourse to experts in order to find a way to balance our economy which is not balanced at present.

While we may be enjoying life at present we must prepare the future; we must invent it and work it out. When Canadians will know collectively what they want, they work to bring about what they will have planned.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Right now, we know neither what we want nor where we are going by creating such organizations from which we will surely not get the services we expect of them.

We are now witnessing the phenomenon whereby one industry is born causing the disappearance of ten similar industries in the vicinity. Is there really any advantage in encouraging such a situation? The only result is the unemployment of hundreds of trained employees. We must avoid such upsets, while seeking ways to promote production and scientific progress in the field of finance, and this to the advantage of present citizens as well as future generations.

The government sticks its nose where it has no business. But it fails to intervene where it would be necessary, namely in financial institutions, for instance by financing existing industries. The government should rather build highways so as to allow industries to move their products.

I live in an area crossed by an express with six toll stations, while those who travel between Montreal and Ottawa do not have to pay tolls when using expressways. As for ourselves, because we are living far from large centres, we are compelled to pay toll charges on expressways.

We have no highway going to New Brunswick while the government could build one and thus promote contacts with the Atlantic provinces. Instead of this, we will set up giant industries and cram the warehouses with products. Then there will be no outlet and we will have to lay off personnel and ask the government to finance the deficit of these corporations.

For instance, the C.N.R. and a number of other crown corporations are not self-financing and they are always asking for subsidies to balance their budget.

Since private industry is able to balance its budget, it should be allowed to sell its production and make a small and reasonable profit. It works. The government has no reason to poke its nose into its business.

The future of the community should not be conditioned by present difficulties or failures. We must conceive tomorrow's society on the basis of the actual and concrete possibilities of a nation full of talents, resources and of needs to be satisfied. The government should endeavour to meet the wishes of our people who want to live and know their business.

I ask the government to keep on acting as it did until now. I want it to go a little further and to concern itself more with politics but with nonpartisan politics. Once we have reached this objective we shall have done something for this country. We shall recognize the importance of each individual instead of recognizing the giant organizations which have no heart or soul and whose managers are not responsible.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The responsible ones are the human beings who have the right to live. Should an economic policy be suitable for great corporations, it could apply to every individual, to every family. It is the three-meals-per-day-formula, the expense-income, income-expense and profit formula. If a family has no income, it cannot have any expenses or profits. The government is forced to ear-mark 25 per cent of the budget for welfare. And the provinces do the same.

Such a decline cannot be entertained. Welfare benefits are not sufficient to get people out of poverty. They will not enable us to turn out men, to make a strong country, to make of Canadians happy people, people who want to live and have a right to live. We turn out people who are discouraged, rebellious. Such is the way the system operates now. There are causes to such unrest. As long as we do not try to find them, we will witness dreadful catastrophes. There have been some already. It will be worse than in the past if we do not adress ourselves to those causes.

The essential duty of a government consists in looking after the citizens, enabling them to live decently and not merely establishing institutions to compete with them and exploit them, by obliging them to depend on welfare benefits for their living. That is not the way for us to solve the problem.

On this matter, I would still have many things to say. I have here an article which was published in La Presse, on Saturday, January 23, 1971 and which reads as follows:

> At the economic level, the true power of a nation is not reflected by its potential production but by its consumption capacity: under such a criterion, the United States would include ten billion Chinese, for the gross national product, despite its name, amounts to the consumption expenses of the nation.
> Canada showed the truth of this assumption in 1970: anti-inflationary measures introduced by Ottawa led to a reduction of domestic consumption, without altering the production potential. The country grew poorer and unemployment followed.
> A reduction of the money supply, as decided by Ottawa, was an all-embracing measure that struck at the consumption centres: Montreal is the country's metropolis.
> With a higher population enjoying a higher per capita buying power than Quebec, Ontario recorded in 1970, contrarily to what might be expected, a higher percentage of unemployment increase than our own province: between November 1969 and November 1970 the number of unemployed increased from 143,000 to 168,000 in Quebec and from 82,000 to 126,000 in Ontario.
> Unemployment in Canada has its own particular features and factors which combined together in 1970 led to an inacceptable degree of severity.

The New Democratic Party has introduced an amendment to the effect that the government does not go far enough in its action and that it should become the sole owner of this industry. I find it difficult to support this amendment but we shall not support Bill C-219 either for we believe that the time has not come yet to set up such a corporation at the expense of the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have read a great many prospectuses—prospectuses dealing with substantial companies, with companies just in the process of being formed and with companies selling gold bricks and moose pasture. Among them were some fantastic presentations. But having read the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in introducing this bill for second reading, I must compliment him upon one of the finest presentations I have yet come across, a presentation which even the most experienced and sophisticated con artist could hardly have dreamed up.

I am not saying for a moment that it is in any way untrue; but it reads so beautifully, "—backed by substantial sources of Canadian capital and managed by skilled, experienced entrepreneurs, to help make possible fuller Canadian participation in the growth and development of Canada." If I were a buyer of shares I would rush out quickly to the nearest stock exchange to invest in this new corporation. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a long way to go between a speech and a successful performance.

I shall relate an incident in connection with the Canada Development Corporation which might exemplify what I am talking about. Some time in 1964, when the idea of such a corporation was being touted and considered in this House, I, being a fussy and particular young man decided I would make a search in the corporations branch here in Ottawa. Lo and behold, I found a company had been incorporated in 1962 under the name "Canadian Development Corporation". It was a public company, privately owned, and it had not begun any work. I did not want to buy any shares myself, but some of my friends were negotiating for the purchase of shares in the Canadian Development Corporation. Had they been less scrupulous than they are, they might have been in the market today selling shares in the Canadian Development Corporation just as this bill is going through the House. However, being good Canadians they agreed to my suggestion that should turn the company over to the hon. gentleman who was then Minister of National Revenue. He was surprised to learn of the existence of such a company. Fortunately, he was able to ensure that the owners gave up control of the company, and thus there is no longer the possibility of some sort of gain.

I have read carefully the speech which the minister made yesterday, and I have listened to debates on this subject for about six years. It seems to me that although the purposes are very fine, this enterprise will not necessarily be successful. If it is to be successful, a great deal of thought will be necessary and particular attention must be given to the quality of the administration. The bill itself appears to be a good one; it covers about every point. The potential is great. However, we should review the purposes as defined by the minister—to help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations in the private sector of the economy. Why should it be necessary to develop and maintain Canadian control?

I want to make a few observations on this point for the sake of hon. members opposite who are so infatuated with the idea of Canadian control. The basis of free enterprise is making a profit. From 20 years of experience I can say that a company exists primarily to make a profit. Control goes to the one most able to control, and it does not really matter who controls the corporation. There has been very popular talk lately about nationalistic control. The fact is that the control is not very important, although it has a bearing on our history. Control should go to the able. This emphasis on Canadian control has been overdone. It is important that our young people have an avenue through which they can express their abilities. It is important that companies exist in Canada so that young executives can obtain training. This is important, because the executive category cannot be trained at universities; they have to be trained almost by apprenticeship.

It is natural that if a foreign company has control it will send its own people to oversee the management of the company. To that extent it is important that we maintain a measure of control or impose guidelines laid down for Canadian companies. This emphasis on control does not bear up under careful scrutiny. What is really needed is policy, and I can see how a Canada Development Corporation can indirectly influence that policy.

Let me refer to an incident where Canadian control might have some bearing. For many years United States companies have acquired vast holdings in the mineral industry in New Brunswick. These involve good deposits with good potential. The same companies also own and operate mines elsewhere in the world. Naturally, they will not close up those mines in order to open up new developments, even though they may be more efficient. This will not be done until the capital investment in other areas is depreciated. For that reason it is advisable to have a policy in Canada under which resources are exploited in accordance with national policy. You do not have to restrict control.

A policy could be set up for the exploitation of minerals, and every other conceivable product, without necessarily adopting the idea of Canadian control—because this does not mean anything. Canadian control means nothing. What we are talking about is control by people with the know-how to make a profit. The object of a corporation is to make a profit. We should examine rather sceptically this constant repetition of "Canadian control". I know it is politically astute to do this now because the public is aware that something is wrong with our economy and the finger is being pointed at control as though that were the issue—but it is not. The real issue involves management and policy as defined in the second part of the purpose of the corporation. The minister has said that the purpose is to give Canadians greater opportunity to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

The presumption is that such opportunity does not exist. This is nonsense. Every year Canadians invest approximately $800 million in U.S. corporations. They have the same opportunity to invest in Canadian corporations. Why do they not make this choice? There is a reason: they can get much better protection and value for their longer term investment in the United States than they can in Canada.

[Mr. Otto.]

Before we move in a hodgepodge manner toward acceptance of the Canada Development Corporation, thinking it will be the panacea for all things, we must examine three structures. One of the reasons that Canadians prefer to invest in the United States rather than in Canada is our horrible tax structure. I use the word "horrible" quite advisedly. The tax structure in Canada does not protect the investor or even give him a fair shake. What we really have here is a group of people who con the Canadian into investing in corporations. Immediately they do so, they are at their own peril. We do not have the protection that is available in the United States.

The only purpose of our stock exchanges and the regulations under which they operate is to entice Canadians to invest money. Once they invest, there is no control and no one knows in what they are investing. The prospectus of a Canadian corporation very often reads like a fairy tale; there is no real examination of intercorporate transfers of shares or the speculation that takes place. In the mining business, for instance, about 11 cents of every dollar is invested in the mine and about 89 disappear in promotion and the games which stock promoters play. According to the manner in which we normally function, once a good enterprise becomes public—at some expense—there is no longer the need to produce; everybody gets on the wagon in order to make a buck. The speculators and the promotional experts share. Every time we have a good company and it goes public, people forget there is a purpose for the company and the shares fluctuate back and forth with no protection for the public.

Compare this with the United States system. Under the United States Federal Commission there is a procedure through which shares can be put out as public issue at a cost very, very much lower than in Canada. There are laws there which give the shareholders protective rights. They can question management and even the salaries of management. It is no wonder that United States corporations have shown a tendency to grow in strength over a long period of time. This does not happen in Canada. We do not have laws to protect our shareholders. Our laws are very simple—the majority of shareholders are protected, and the minority is not. There is no corporate law in Canada that protects the minority shareholder.

An hon. Member: Join the NDP.

Mr. Otto: That is a minority I would not like to join. It is a sort of perpetual minority which I do not think—

An hon. Member: It couldn't get worse.

Mr. Otto: I agree; it couldn't get worse. It is no wonder that Canadians invest in United States corporations. Before the minister goes all-out in putting this measure into force, he should look carefully at the stock jungle we have in Canada. It is no surprise that the sharpies in the business are not worried about this bill. They envisage the lamb and the beaver coming for shearing and they are sharpening their shears. They have had 50 years' experience in this business. With all respect to the minister, his officials and the people who will be appointed to this corporation, let me warn them that they may be at their mercy.

I am inclined to agree with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) who has already stated that one of the essential things in our corporate and security exchange structure is a complete reformation. If this structure is reformed, there is reason and purpose for the Canada Development Corporation and I hope it will succeed. Again, I think we must reassess our presumption that the reason Canadians have not invested in shares in Canada is because they do not have savings. This is untrue: Canadians are among the highest purchasers of life insurance in the world.

An hon. Member: And the life insurance companies buy the shares.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Otto: It may be that the life insurance companies buy the shares, but Canadians themselves buy life insurance. If they buy shares at all, they buy penny stocks which they can sell a few days later for a profit. They are advised to buy a couple of shares of salami, and they do so in the hope that they can sell them tomorrow at a profit.

Mr. Bell: Is salami going up?

Mr. Otto: In 1955, when Ford of Canada was owned mostly by Canadians, Ford of Canada had a great advantage. Ford International was owned by Ford of Canada, and Henry Ford made sure that Ford in the United States could not own any part of its shares—so Canadians had it made. The shares were selling for perhaps $50 each. In 1956 the Americans made an offer to all Canadian shareholders on the basis of $75 a share when Ford of Canada was making money and Ford in the United States was losing money. Everybody in Canada sold out and made $25 a share profit. But those shares could not be bought today for love nor money.

Investment does not come from savings; it comes from dividends. It is the money you make as a dividend that you re-invest; it is not the money you have carefully saved. The United States accumulation of capital originated with whaling ships, oil, the slave trade and the spice trade—that was the beginning. Everytime a person receives a dividend cheque he uses that cheque to buy further shares—but it is not his savings. This is really the issue. If we want Canadians to invest in Canadian corporations we must remove from their minds the apprehension they have—which is warranted—that they will be taken.

The role of the CDC is to guarantee to a Canadian investor that if he invests $1,000 in certain approved shares, the CDC will insure those shares so that he will not lose money on them. This is done every day in the commercial world, but only in respect of large sums. When the investor sees the stamp of the government of Canada he will buy shares and will eventually get into the habit of buying shares. This is a role for the CDC.

Mr. Speaker, I promised I would not be too long. I believe I have made my point. This is a good bill, but it all depends on how it is administered and who administers it. I believe that if it is properly administered, and if the minister takes into consideration the climate in which he will be dealing and the atmosphere in which he must deal, it could be successful. But if the minister thinks the climate now is ripe, and if he thinks he can be safe with the stock exchanges and the markets as they are today, I am afraid he and all of us will be very disappointed.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, in view of the winter storm there is some thought, at least on this side of the House, that we call it ten o'clock and adjourn an hour early. This would have the advantage of getting us ready for the prayer breakfast tomorrow. Also, some of us may get home early and find that our wives have not completely shovelled out our driveways. At least it would be a gesture to our staff, who so far as I know are the only public servants in Ottawa who have not had the day off.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There seems to be general approval of this proposition, and we join in that approval.

Mr. Francis: I presume this would also include the "late show", so that we would adjourn at this point.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it there is general agreement that this House adjourn until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 9 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

POST OFFICE

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT OFFER IN DECEMBER 1970, TO FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INCORPORATED

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a request made by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), I wish to table, in French and in English, the complete text of the offer made by the government last December to the former employees of G. Lapalme Inc.

GRAIN

TABLING OF REPORT ON INTERNATIONAL WHEAT CONFERENCE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to lay on the table copies in both official languages of a report on the outcome of the international wheat conference.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Today the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who speaks in this House for the Wheat Board, tabled a statement on events that have transpired, or a statement of policy, and did the same thing on Monday last. It has customarily been the practice in the House when such statements are short that ministers of the Crown deliver them orally, thus providing an opportunity for one spokesman for each of the opposition parties to comment on the particular proposals.

I do not know whether this new practice is going to be followed by the rest of the cabinet ministers, but I want to emphasize that, although the rules provide for the tabling of such statements, common usage has been that this is done only in the case of lengthy documents that cannot be incorporated in Hansard.

On both Monday and today the statements were short, and the minister's action did not provide an opportunity for other hon. members to comment. Furthermore, on Monday last following the question period the minister raced for the television cameras to set out one side of the particular question involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: It is not always the case that objections are taken to such statements by members of the opposition. In fact, the statement tabled on Monday was one that would have elicited some support. I have just now been handed the statement that the minister tabled today. I have not had an opportunity to study it. I would think that out of common courtesy members of the cabinet in future should have the decency to present statements in the normal fashion.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS BY MASSEY-FERGUSON AND CHEMCELL LIMITED —REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the announcement within recent days by Massey-Ferguson of projected closedowns of production facilities in Canada with a lay-off of 2,700 workers, and yesterday by Chemcell Limited of the closedown and sale of chemical production facilities in Cornwall, Ontario, and Two Hills, Alberta, and the shutdown of such facilities in Edmonton with a lay-off of 350 highly skilled workers, I move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That there be referred for examination and report to this House by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the question of the impact on Canadian industry and the level of employment therein of:

1. The continued unpegged state of the Canadian dollar;

2. The acceleration of the negotiated Kennedy Round tariff adjustments as a tool to fight inflation;

3. The restrictions on economic activity in Canada resulting from action taken under the monetary and fiscal policy adopted by the government to counter the wave of inflation that has bedevilled the Canadian economy in recent years;

4. The uncertainty in industry caused by the original proposals contained in the white paper on taxation.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Possible Takeover of Home Oil Company

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Therefore the motion proposed by the hon. member cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House under Standing Order 43 to refer the question of the proposed sale of Cygnus Corporation Limited and Home Oil Company Limited to Ashland Oil Company to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The purpose of the referral is to examine the circumstances surrounding the financial relationship between Mr. Robert A. Brown, Junior, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, with regard to both the interests of the shareholders of Cygnus Corporation Limited and Home Oil Company Limited, to ensure that Home Oil remains under Canadian ownership and control. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That the proposed sale of Cygnus Corporation Limited and Home Oil Company Limited to Ashland Oil Company be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Waterloo. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair will inquire whether there is unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimity the motion cannot be put.

HEALTH

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DENTAL AUXILIARIES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it was obvious from the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite the other day that they thought that I was going to table a document relating to the ad hoc committee on dental auxiliaries. I had sent the House Leaders copies of the report prior to my statement. I should like to table the document now. I wish to table the report of the ad hoc committee on dental auxiliaries in both official languages. This is the report to which I referred on Monday last.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Question answered orally are indicated by asterisk.)

PUBLIC WORKS—HEATING SYSTEM IMPROVEMENTS IN POST OFFICES

Question No. 411—Mr. Godin:

1. Since January 1969, has the government called for tenders for heating system improvement and air conditioning installation contracts in Canadian post offices and, if so, in each province, how many post offices benefitted from these programs and what was the cost?

2. Are similar improvements projected for 1971 and, if so, how many?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. The number of post offices that benefited from such installations since January 1969 and the costs in each province are as follows:

Province	Number of Post Offices	Cost
Newfoundland	Nil	$ —
Nova Scotia	12	29,729
Prince Edward Island	Nil	—
New Brunswick	2	3,500
Quebec	131	2,584,239
Ontario	58	397,962
Manitoba	9	20,265
Saskatchewan	2	600,333
Alberta	4	6,243
British Columbia	1	2,800
Yukon Territory	Nil	—
Northwest Territories	Nil	—

2. Yes, 216.

AIRPORT AND FACILITY STATISTICS

Question No. 579—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What is the percentage increase from 1965 to 1968 of the number of (a) aircraft registered in Canada (b) hours being flown by aircraft in Canada (c) passengers being carried (d) landings and take-offs utilizing DOT controlled airports in Canada (e) IFR flights being conducted in Canada (f) pilots in Canada?

2. What is the percentage increase from 1965 to 1968 of the amount spent by the government for improvements on (a) airports (b) navigational aids and facilities at DOT controlled airports?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The percentage increase from 1965 to 1968 is: (a) +32.23%; (b) +19.05%; (c) Canadian airlines only +40.15%; Canadian and Foreign Airlines +49.98%; (d) +50.59%; (e) +62.57%; (f) +46.08%.

2. The percentage increase from 1965 to 1968 is (a) +34.9%; (b) The following represents the actual capital expenditures on radio aids and associated facilities throughout the fiscal years 1962-63 to 1968-69: 1962-63, $8,168,774; 1963-64, $8,621,000; 1964-65, $14,913,512; 1965-66, $14,980,732; 1966-67, $12,548,282; 1967-68, $12,600,000; 1968-69, $15,512,000. While there was an over-all increase from 1965 to 1968, there was no percentage increase.

*VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—RESUMPTION OF TRAINING FLIGHTS

Question No. 667—Mr. Goode:

Has CPAir resumed Sunday training flights at Vancouver International Airport and, if so, is this in contravention of Department of Transport regulations?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, CPAir conducts training flights on a continuous basis any day of the week between the hours of 07:00 and 22:00 subject to their training program requirements. They are now conducting an accelerated training program which should continue to April 1971.

The training flights are not in contravention of the Department of Transport regulations.

POLLUTION—ACTION TAKEN BY STATE OF OHIO AGAINST DOW CHEMICALS OF CANADA

Question No. 690—Mr. Caouette:

1. Have the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State for External Affairs received representations concerning the legal action taken in the Supreme Court of the United States by the State of Ohio against Dow Chemicals of Canada which is being accused of polluting Lake Erie?

2. Is it known whether the Joint International Water Board is aware of this situation and, if so, what was its reaction?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Justice and by the Department of External Affairs as follows: 1. The Department of Justice has been consulted by the Department of External Affairs regarding the action taken in the Supreme Court of the United States by the State of Ohio against Dow Chemicals of Canada, but the Minister of Justice has not received outside representations regarding this action. On December 9, 1970 the Department of External Affairs received a formal inquiry from Mr. V. K. McEwan, Legal Counsel for Dow Chemical of Canada Limited, in the lawsuit before the United States Supreme Court, seeking information regarding what position and steps, if any, the Canadian Government proposed to take in this matter. On December 21, Mr. McEwan was advised by letter that the Government of Canada considers the lawsuit instigated by the State of Ohio to be a United States domestic matter. There is, therefore, no basis on which the Government of Canada can or should intervene in any way, be it by representations before the United States Supreme Court or by representations to the Government of the United States. The Government of Canada is, however, very concerned about pollution of the Great Lakes generally, and is working closely with the Government of the United States and the Government of Ontario towards finding solutions to these problems. The Federal Government remains interested in the developments in this case in the context of the general pollution problem and is following them closely.

2. The International Joint Commission is aware of the court case, but since this matter is before the Court it has expressed no restriction in relation to this lawsuit.

SKAGIT VALLEY

Question No. 695—Mrs. MacInnis: Supplementary answer

How many letters, telegrams, briefs, representations or other communications have been received concerning the Skagit Valley in the period from June 30 to December 31, 1970?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows: Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, 3,786; Department of External Affairs, 36; Department of Fisheries and Forestry, 357.

AUDITING OF PUBLIC AGENCIES

Question No. 733—Mr. Fortin:

1. During the past five years, what was the annual cost of auditing the following public agencies (a) CNR and Air Canada (b) Bank of Canada (c) Industrial Development Bank (d) CMHC (e) Canadian Wheat Board?

2. Are there any plans to appoint the Auditor General as co-auditor for these agencies and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Transport, the Department of Finance, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Treasury Board as follows: 1. (a) Pursuant to Order in Council P.C. 1967-563 the firm of Touche, Ross, Bailey and Smart, appointed independent auditors by Section 13 of the CNR Financing and Guarantee Act, 1965-66, was paid $137,500 plus certain disbursements for each of the years 1966 and 1967, apportioned $115,000 CNR and $22,500 Air Canada. Pursuant to Order in Council P.C. 1969-141 the same firm, appointed independent auditors by Section 13 of the CNR F. & G. Act 1967 and Section 15 of the CNR F. & G. Act 1968, was paid $152,000, plus certain disbursements, for each of the years 1968 and 1969, apportioned $125,000 railway and $27,000 airlines. Pursuant to the CNR F. & G.

Act 1969 the firm of Touche, Ross and Co. was appointed independent auditor for the year 1970. The amount to be paid that firm is under discussion.

(b) Bank of Canada

	Fees and Expenses
1966	$ 83,000
1967	$ 83,000
1968	$ 85,000
1969	$104,000
1970	$105,000

(c) Industrial Development Bank

	Fees and Expenses
1966	$18,000
1967	$18,000
1968	$18,000
1969	$20,000
1970	$20,000

(d) The costs of auditing the accounts of CMHC during the past five years are given in the table following:

Payments for the Year	Total
1965	$35,559.74
1966	$47,566.66
1967	$50,819.01
1968	$55,144.95
1969	$62,994.70

(e) For the crop years 1964-65 to 1968-69, inclusive, the annual costs of auditing the accounts of the Canadian Wheat Board were as follows: 1964/65, $47,200; 1965/66, $48,500; 1966/67, $50,000; 1967/68, $50,700; 1968/69, $50,000. The accounts for the 1969/70 crop year have not yet been audited.

2. No. On November 29, 1966, the Minister of Finance wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee in which he stated that he had considered, with his colleagues chiefly concerned, the position with respect to those Crown Corporations that are not audited by the Auditor General and had concluded that the decision, taken after careful deliberation of all the factors involved, that these bodies should be audited by public accountants and not by the Auditor General is the correct one and should not be changed. Please refer to Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Public Accounts Committee dated February 2, 1967, page 1397, Appendix 22 (b) for the full text of this letter. As indicated in the Auditor General of Canada Bill introduced and subsequently withdrawn, it was not proposed to alter the current legislative provision for audit of Crown corporations, as found in subsection 2 of section 77 of the Financial Administration Act.

WABUSH AIRPORT

Question No. 746—Mr. Peddle:

1. When will the new ILS equipment be installed at Wabush Airport?

2. What are the plans for construction of a new air terminal at Wabush to replace the present facilities?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. It is planned to instal new ILS equipment at Wabush Airport late in the 1971/72 fiscal year, subject to the availability of funds.

2. The Ministry of Transport has no plans for construction of a new air terminal at Wabush Airport.

POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 839—Mr. Southam:

1. (a) What was the total number of post offices and sub-post offices closed in Canada in 1970 (b) by province, what were the numbers closed in each case?

2. What was the total number of postmasters placed among the ranks of the unemployed due to such closings?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): 1. (a) and (b)

	Revenue Post Offices	Sub Post Offices
British Columbia	42	2
Alberta	70	6
Saskatchewan	155	5
Manitoba	80	10
Ontario	175	23
Quebec	131	26
New Brunswick	110	2
Nova Scotia	149	2
Prince Edward Island	2	1
Newfoundland	126	—
Total	1,040	77

2. Statistics or records are not maintained on postmasters that would be unemployed as a result of closing their office.

UNITED STATES DRAFT DODGERS AND DESERTERS

Question No. 845—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many American draft dodgers and/or deserters have come to Canada?

2. How many of them have been charged with offences under the Criminal Code and/or other statutes?

3. How many convictions have been lodged?

4. Have any of those convicted been deported or is it the intention of the government to have any of them deported?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Department of Justice as follows: 1. Because an individual's military or draft status has no bearing whatsoever in any matters under the Immigration Act or Regulations information on this subject is neither requested nor recorded in any way during immigration proceedings. Consequently the Department of Manpower and Immigration cannot compile any statistical breakdowns in this respect.

2. and 3. The Department of Justice does not maintain statistics that disclose whether or not a person charged or convicted in Canada is a draft dodger or deserter.

4. See 1.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): No repairs have been made to the Berthier wharf to date in 1971.

[English]

POST OFFICE—ASSURED MAIL PROMOTION

Question No. 860—Mr. Howe:

1. Was an advertising agency given a contract by the Post Office Department for the promotion that introduced the program "Assured Mail"?

2. Were tenders called for this promotion and, if so, what agencies entered this competition and what were the amounts of each tender?

3. What was the total cost of this program?

4. Did weekly newspapers have an opportunity to participate in this campaign and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): 1. No.

2. No.

3. $43,577.66.

4. No, with the exception of one Toronto Italian weekly. The Assured Mail launch concerned mail originating from Toronto City only.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT—APPOINTMENTS OTHER THAN UNDER SECTIONS 8 AND 9

Question No. 307—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In the period July 25, 1969 to September 30, 1970, how many women were appointed to a position or otherwise employed, other than under the provisions of sections 8 and 9 of the Public Service Employment Act, by the government under conditions or remuneration equitable to a salary of $10,000 or more per year?

2. What are their names?

3. By whom were they employed and what was the rank of their position?

4. How many men were appointed or otherwise employed under the same period of time?

Return tabled.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I do not like to have to rise every second week regarding starred question No. 12. There is not much sense in my repeating again what I have said previously about this question. But I must say that if questions placed on the order paper are not going to be answered, the procedure will become nothing more than a farce. As I pointed out previously, this question was on the order paper in the previous session and was placed on the order paper again early in the present session. If questions are not to be answered we, in effect, will be deprived of information that we and the taxpayers of the nation have a right to receive. I do not know what more to say except to bring to the attention of the House once again the fact that this question has not yet been answered, notwithstanding the many statements by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I will look at this question particularly and communicate with him personally on the subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would also look at starred question No. 730 which has been standing on the order paper for over a month.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I will do so.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise again to ask when I can expect an answer to question No. 79 which was also on the order paper in the previous session and has been outstanding for about a year. I wish to tell the parliamentary secretary that if I cannot get an answer considerable time will be taken up with the estimates on the appropriate occasion.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have received one report on the progress of the answer to the hon. member's question. I am not able to report on it today, but I have a report on my desk on the progress of that answer. We hope to be able to reply soon.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I cannot begin to approach the record of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, but I have had a question on the order paper since November 12. It is simple and straightforward. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will try to expedite the answer.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, since complaints are being made, may I say that question No. 540 has been on the order paper for over a year. It was also on the order paper in the previous session, and it would be nice to obtain an answer.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notices of Motions Nos. 181, 185 and 186 are acceptable to the government.

CBC PROGRAM "WHITE PAPER"

Motion No. 181—Mr. Diefenbaker:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the complete and unexpurgated program which was broadcast by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on January 7, 1971, entitled "White Paper".

Motion agreed to.

COPY OF INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO ADVISORY COMMITTEE ESTABLISHED WITH RESPECT TO OPERATION LIFT

Motion No. 185—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all instructions and terms of reference given to or developed by the Advisory Committee established with respect to the Operation Lift program in 1970.

[Mr. Coates.]

Motion agreed to.

AGREEMENT RELATING TO ESTABLISHMENT OF INDIAN-METIS TRAINING CENTRE, CUTBANK, SASKATCHEWAN

Motion No. 186—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan for the establishment and operation of an Indian-Metis training centre at Cutbank, Saskatchewan.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, Notices of Motions Nos. 145 and 184 are acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

STUDIES REGARDING CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL BUILDING IN VICTORIAVILLE

Motion No. 145—Mr. Fortin:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams between or studies by the Department of Public Works, the Post Office Department, the Municipal Council of Victoriaville, the Chamber of Commerce of Victoriaville, or any citizen of the constituency of Lotbinière regarding the construction of a federal building in Victoriaville, the acquisition of land for same and the expropriation for the period January 1, 1955 to October 30, 1970.

Motion agreed to.

EFFECTS OF BENNETT DAM ON ECOLOGY OF PEACE-ATHABASCA DELTA AND SLAVE RIVER

Motion No. 184—Mr. Baldwin:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the letter sent to the Province of Alberta inviting that Province to participate in a task force to investigate the effect of the Bennett Dam in British Columbia on the ecology of the Peace-Athabasca delta and Slave River systems.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notices of Motions Nos. 84, 90, 91, 170, 173, 177, 178 and 191.

CONSULTANT REPORT RELATING TO WATER RESOURCES AND WATER POLLUTION

Motion No. 84—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Gaston G. Chamaillard, undertaken for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, regarding a Canada-wide survey of public information, educational activities relating to water resources and water pollution, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the past Session.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources advises that this report was prepared for internal working purposes. It contains information obtained on a confidential basis and must, therefore, be treated as privileged. In the circumstances, I respectfully ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, any information dealing with water resources should be public and should be made available to the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CONSULTANT REPORT REGARDING QUANTITATIVE ASSESSMENT OF POLICY AND PLANNING BRANCH

Motion No. 90—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Operation Research Industries Limited undertaken for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding a quantitative assessment of the Policy and Planning Branch as mentioned in answer to Question Number 2,452 of the past Session.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources advises that the report is an internal working document which was prepared to assist unit management in determining what organizational changes might be required to increase efficiency of operations and its release is not considered to be in the public interest. Under these circumstances, it is requested that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I call for the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CONSULTANT REPORT REGARDING REVIEW OF WATER SURVEY OF CANADA DIVISION

Motion No. 91—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by James F. MacLaren Limited undertaken for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding a review of the Water Survey of Canada Division as mentioned in answer to Question Number 2,452 of the past Session.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources advises that this study, which was not completed beyond the preliminary stage, was prepared for internal working purposes only and its release is not considered in the public interest. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING PROPOSED SALE OF LAND AT REGINA AIRPORT

Motion No. 170—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence and other documents concerning the proposed sale of land owned by the City of Regina at the Regina Airport to the Department of Transport.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The minister met with members of the Regina City Council on February 13, 1971, and discussions continue. It is not considered in the best public interest, or in the interest of the Ministry of Transport, to release documents or correspondence concerning the negotiations for the purchase of the lands in question. In view of this, the hon. member may be willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, there have been many questions in the House on this matter, some of which have been answered by the minister. There have also been many press reports. I see no reason why this information cannot be supplied and I call for the question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House wish the Chair to put the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: I hear vague noises suggesting that perhaps there is a request that the motion should be transferred for debate. I suggest that if this is the request of the government, it should be made clear to the Chair. I do not think the Chair should be expected to act on vague suggestions.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, to expedite matters I make such a request.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to be difficult, but I suggest that if members of the government wish a motion transferred for debate this should be clearly stated. With the noise it is sometimes very difficult for the Chair to find out what is suggested either by the opposition or the government in relation to such motions. Transferred for debate.

Motions for Papers

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO CONSOLIDATION OF RESERVATION OFFICES OF AIR CANADA

Motion No. 173—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all papers including the Feasibility Study commissioned by Air Canada in respect to the consolidation of reservation offices of Air Canada in Canada, including estimates as to the savings to be made by the Company, the reduction in staff complement, etc.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the information in question relates directly to the internal operation of the company and is thus considered privileged. In these circumstances the hon. member may be willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Orlikow: In my opinion the information relates much more directly to the service the customers get and to what happens to the employees. I therefore think we ought to have this information. I should like the question to be put.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It arises out of the observation Your Honour made a few moments ago that a representative of the ministry should stand up and ask that a motion be transferred for debate or that it be disposed of in some other way as permitted by the rules. I would suggest that the same rule should apply in the case of Standing Order 43 and that whoever opposes a motion made under that Standing Order should stand up and so indicate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that my suggestion was not that a member of the government should rise. I just wanted to make sure that I would hear the request of the government. This is the only requirement I am suggesting under the terms of this Standing Order.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRESIDENT OF CNR AND MINISTER OF TRANSPORT CONCERNING CNR PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 177—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the correspondence, dated September 17, 1970, between the President of the CNR and the Minister of Transport outlining the company's position on the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications concerning the CNR Pension Plan.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The policy concerning communications relating to the internal affairs of Canadian National Railways, as upheld by Parliament, is that such material is confidential. In these circumstances the hon. member may be willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I believe the Canadian National pension fund should not be that confidential and that the correspondence should be made available. I call for the question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MINISTER OF TRANSPORT AND CNR CONCERNING CNR PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 178—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Transport and the CNR pertaining to recommendations of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications concerning the CNR Pension Plan.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The policy concerning communications relating to the internal affairs of Canadian National Railways, as upheld by Parliament, is that such material is confidential. In these circumstances the hon. member may be willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Skoberg: The same comment applies.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF TREASURY BOARD MINUTE NO. 697478

Motion No. 191—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of Treasury Board Minute No. 697478 dated May 28, 1970.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): As the Treasury Board is a committee of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, it is not the practice to make public the minutes of the meetings of the board, and in these circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Burton: Since there are other references to this Treasury Board minute in public documents I would ask that this motion be put.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Jerome: I ask that the remaining notices of motion be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: With respect to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, could the parliamentary secretary look into motion No. 168 which has been on the order paper in my name since December 14? Would he ensure that this motion is brought forward soon, especially since the estimates will be coming before committees shortly?

Mr. Jerome: I will look into it, Mr. Speaker.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

REDUCTION IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the announcement that the bank rate has been reduced from five and three-quarters per cent to five and one-quarter per cent following a reduction of one-quarter of one per cent ten days ago, I believe. Can the hon. gentleman tell us the reason this further reduction in the bank rate was considered to be appropriate today rather than ten days ago? What has happened to bring this further reduction about?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Of course, this is the result of a decision by the governor of the Bank of Canada. But it is an indication by the governor of the bank and by the government that they think that short-term interest rates should be lower.

Mr. Stanfield: Again I point out that this further reduction comes only ten days after the previous reduction. Does this indicate a growing concern on the part of the Bank of Canada with regard to the rate of growth of the economy, or does it mean that the Bank of Canada has concluded that short-term interest rates in Canada have been inappropriately high and have been causing upward pressure on the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Benson: I think it is a clear indication that the Bank of Canada believes that short-term interest rates are too high at the present time.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the difficulties the floating dollar has been causing, as a result of which an increasing number of plants are closing down, does the minister propose to take any additional measures at least to slow down the rate at which plants are going out of business, which seems to be accelerating?

Mr. Benson: We have moved very rapidly in the past year in reducing the bank rate and short-term interest rates in Canada. What is indicated by the Bank of Canada by this further reduction is that short-term rates have not moved in the near past as fast as the bank thought they should move.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): In the answer he gave a few moments ago the Minister of Finance said clearly, "we have reduced the interest rate". He has studiously stated on other occasions that there is no connection between the decisions of the bank and the government. Which is it? Does the bank take orders from the government or not?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, unlike the days when the previous government was in power and they had almost to force the governor of the Bank of Canada to leave the bank, which caused a great scandal in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: —the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: The Minister of Finance did not, of course, answer my question in any way. I now ask him, does the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —take its orders from this government?

Mr. Benson: I suggest to my hon. friend that he read the Bank of Canada Act which gives the ultimate responsibility to the Minister of Finance. We accept our responsibilities, unlike the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Then why do you always claim there is no connection with the Bank of Canada? Be honest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the minister and the hon. member have fought to a draw.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite has accused me of uttering an untruth. I do not think this is permitted in the House. If my hon. friend would look at the Bank of Canada Act, he would find that the ultimate responsibility resides with the Minister of Finance, and I have never said anything else. Unlike the situation under the previous government, I talk to the governor of the bank and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness to other hon. members I think I should point out to the minister and the hon. member that they have taken quite a bit of time. We have only 40 minutes and I think this debate might be continued at some other time.

REDUCTION IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—ACTION TO REDUCE LEVEL OF SECONDARY RESERVES REQUIRED OF BANKS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by the governor of the Bank of Canada that the objective of this interest reduction is economic stimulation, will the minister tell us whether he will now take action, along with the Governor, to reduce the rate of secondary reserves imposed on the banks as an anti-inflationary measure during the past several months?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this was not imposed as an anti-inflationary measure; it was imposed at a time when there was great pressure on the Canadian dollar. As with all other questions raised by the hon. member I shall take up the matter with the governor of the bank.

REDUCTION IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As a result of the confusion I did not quite understand the minister's original answer. Did he state that the decision to reduce the bank rate was that of the governor of the bank?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was the decision of the governor of the bank. If the government disagrees with it, the ultimate responsibility under the Bank of Canada Act, which I am sure my hon. friend has read, lies with the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Finance any explanation to offer the House as to why the additional reduction of one-half of one per cent was made within ten days of the previous reduction?

Mr. Benson: We react to situations as they occur, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Then why don't you do something about unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Lotbinière in a moment, but I believe the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order arises from the statement made by the Minister of Finance. He originally said, and confirmed it in answering a supplementary, that the decision to reduce the bank rate was that of the governor of the bank. Then the minister went on to say, in the course of his interjections and others, that the government had taken these actions during the last year. So he has definitely confused the issue and misled the House in respect of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the minister on a question of privilege, but obviously we are not making very constructive progress. I would suggest to the minister and to the hon. member who has raised the point of order that this is strictly a matter of debate between the minister, the hon. member and others. I would think we would be well advised to attempt to clarify a second problem, and I will give the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands the opportunity to take the floor.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member stated that I misled the House, which is just not the case.

Mr. MacInnis: That is not so. I never used that phrase at all.

Some hon. Members: Yes, you did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I apologize to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands; I understand the hon. member wishes to raise a further point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, it is more a point of personal privilege. The minister said that I made a certain statement which I did not make. Now he is misleading the House.

Mr. Hees: Apologize.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—ACTION TO MAINTAIN CANADIAN CONTROL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who I might point out has been absent two days in a row when he was supposed to be on the roster, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the House any information as to what success the government has had in ensuring that effective control of the Home Oil Company of Calgary will be retained in Canadian hands? Has the government anything to report on the negotiations, and can the Prime Minister give the House any assurance that they have succeeded in doing what the minister said, namely, keeping this company within effective Canadian control and ownership.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Thus far, Mr. Speaker, our success has been complete. I cannot speak for the future, of course, not being able to read into the future.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether any Canadian companies have indicated their willingness to acquire the Home Oil Company of Calgary rather than having it go to the Ashland Oil Company of Kentucky, and has the government indicated its willingness to help them acquire the necessary financial resources to do so, either through the Industrial Development Bank or by some other appropriate measure?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the most that I could appropriately say at this time is that there has been an indication of interest by Canadian companies along those lines.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN COMPANIES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT AND LEGISLATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the increasing number of takeovers and the fact that returns filed under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act indicate there is an acceleration in takeovers with the result that, according to the last report, over $50 billion of assets in this country are now owned by foreign corporations, is the Prime Minister doing anything to speed up the report on foreign ownership which the Minister of National Revenue is preparing for the government and does the government anticipate introducing legislation to deal with this matter at the present session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can be encouraging to the leader of the New Democratic Party. I think the period in which they have been divided against the government's policy will soon be replaced by a period in which they will be united against government policy.

ACQUISITION OF BANFF OIL BY AQUITAINE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to take any action to prevent Banff Oil Limited being taken over by Aquitaine Oil, a wholly owned French company, as of tomorrow?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of that transaction, Mr. Speaker.

PROJECTED TAKEOVER OF HOME OIL BY UNITED STATES COMPANY—ROLE OF BANKS—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the disturbing financing surrounding the proposed sale of Home Oil Company, would he ask the House to refer the circumstances surrounding this sale to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I do not think I would like to refer individual business transactions to any such committee. Business transactions are carried on by businessmen.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance is reluctant to refer this matter to the committee, would he examine the role being played by the chartered banks in this particular deal and in general the role being played by them in the takeovers of Canadian companies?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should involve myself in looking into transactions between banks and individual business corporations in this country. Otherwise some transaction could be brought up in the House every day and I might be even looking at their loans to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Waterloo on a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Saltsman: Since the government has outlined guidelines of proper behaviour for the banks in terms of ownership and the national interest, would the Prime Minister look into the situation to assure himself that these guidelines are being followed?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the guidelines were not indicated by the government but by Parliament through the passage of the Bank Act.

UNEMPLOYMENT—PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS IN PREPARATION OF POLICIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning solutions to the problem of unemployment.

Does the Canadian government intend to invite provincial governments to participate in the redefining of fiscal, tariff and monetary policies, as was suggested yesterday by the premier of Quebec at the opening of the Quebec National Assembly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is always considerable consultation with the provinces concerning programs or policies involving them. I do not know whether Premier Bourassa has a specific proposal to submit in the constitutional field, but speaking merely of discussions, I can assure the hon. member that they are frequent.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Does the Prime Minister intend to enter into discussions with the province of Quebec regarding the monetary, fiscal and tariff policies of the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: As I just replied to the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste, we do at periodic meetings of the Ministers of Finance, other meetings at the official level and, indeed, even at the Prime Ministerial meetings, discuss our general economic policies with the provinces, but I am not aware that there has been any suggestion that the federal jurisdiction over money and fiscal matters be shared in a constitutional sense with the provinces. I might add that we are and have been in the past two budgets at least trying to have fiscal and monetary policies which have regional application and regional impact.

DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING POLICY ON LANGUAGE RIGHTS OF ENGLISH SPEAKING MINORITY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell us whether during the past few hours he has been in touch with the premier of Quebec concerning the latter's policy with respect to the language rights of the English-speaking minority in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I contacted the premier of Quebec. We discussed several matters but I am afraid we dealt very little with this aspect of the problem. I do not want to say that we did not touch upon this topic but there certainly has not been any lengthy discussion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Charlevoix wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Asselin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Prime Minister of Canada agree with the Quebec premier concerning the language rights of the English minority in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I remember that we did speak about this matter, a couple of minutes maybe. I cannot answer the hon. member's question, because it is not specific enough. We briefly referred to the discussion held at the federal-provincial conference a few weeks ago. There has been no change to what was agreed on some time ago.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—PAYMENT BY QUEBEC FOR SERVICES OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Referring to a question that I put yesterday to the Prime Minister, as well as to his answer to the effect that he would have to discuss this with the premier of Quebec, and considering the statement that he has just made, namely, that this consultation has taken place concerning many subjects, may I ask him whether there was any talk of who will foot the bill for costs incurred while the armed forces were in Quebec, and whether he agrees with Mr. Bourassa's statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did refer briefly to that subject. I have read Mr. Bourassa's statement, which he made, I think, a day or two ago, and we have agreed, once more, that this matter was not one of urgent priority, that we would leave it on the agenda of a future meeting, that we would try to get into an agreement which would be practical at the administrative level and fair to the province, and, also,—which is important—within the framework of the duties that are ours under the National Defence Act.

UNEMPLOYMENT—PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES IN DETERMINATION OF ECONOMIC POLICIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by the Premier of Quebec yesterday at the opening of the National Assembly that Ottawa will be much to blame for Quebec's escalating unemployment if the provinces are not permitted to participate in redefining Canada's economic policies, is the government planning to hold a conference in the near future with the provinces to begin redefining this government's economic policies?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have very frequent meetings with the Ministers of Finance and treasurers of the provinces. As a matter of fact we have agreed to have four meetings a year, unlike the days when my hon. friend was in the government and they never looked at them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, but I will wait until the rabble quiets down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Are we to take it then that it is the opinion of the government that in making such a serious statement yesterday the Premier of Quebec was in fact just talking through his hat?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is argumentative. I think at this point I should put hon. members on notice that about half the question period has gone by and I am afraid many hon. members will be disappointed if we do not move a little faster.

HEALTH

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL DENTAL CARE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN—TRAINING OF DENTAL AUXILIARIES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based on the Dalton Wells report on dental auxiliaries which he tabled today and to which he referred on Monday. Even if the government is not yet prepared to implement a dental care program for the entire population, may I ask if the government will soon implement the recommendation that there be a national dental program for children in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I indicated on Monday, we are very much involved now in discussions with the provinces as to cost-sharing arrangements under both our cost-sharing health programs, medicare and hospitalization, which were discussed at the recent health ministers conference. The over-all objective is to permit us to meet in a financial way the priorities as the provinces see them in the health field and still protect portability and national standards.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister say what attention the government is giving to the recommendation that there be facilities for the training of dental auxiliaries to assist in coping with the problem of providing adequate dental care?

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of policy we are very much in favour of this development which will have a considerable impact in terms of reducing costs. There is considerable sympathy for this type of development within the provinces, and we will be meeting to discuss how best it can be accomplished.

GRAIN

WHEAT—RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING PLANTING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I direct my question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since the Soviet Union is emerging as a major exporter of wheat, is the government still advocating the planting of an estimated 20 million acres of wheat in western Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The 20 million acres to which the hon. member refers is presumably the figure in the document which was tabled in the House in late October. It was indicated at that time that, with this quantity of wheat, only a small decrease would likely occur in the inventory of wheat in Canada, that we would really have enough or more than enough, so that fewer acres than that would certainly do no harm and other crops such as barley could be planted. The fact of the Soviet Union being in the wheat business in a big way is really not anything new.

Mr. Murta: With a good portion of the acreage that was planted to wheat going into summerfallow, is there not a concern on the part of the government that with above average yields we might overproduce for our expected markets and end up with another large surplus?

WHEAT—BASIS OF INITIAL PRICE TO FARMERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. As the new international wheat agreement to which he referred today in his tabled statement contains no pricing provisions, can he assure the House that the initial price for wheat to the farmer will continue to be based on the levels in the present International Grains Arrangement in the coming crop year?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Any indication about initial prices will be made shortly. The International Grains Arrangement prices have not been effective matters in relation to pricing for some time. Of course the new agreement does contain provisions both for discussion among the participants in case of fluctuations of price in order to maintain stability and also a kind of watching brief in order to start discussions on price whenever that seems appropriate.

Mr. Gleave: Since the minister has just informed the House that the new agreement provides for examination of the price structure while at the same time no minimum price is set out, can he tell the House whether there is any provision for the enforcement of any kind of price structure under the new agreement? Are there any bench marks in the agreement about which farmers can feel confident?

Mr. Lang: There are no pricing provisions setting down firm prices in the agreement which has been signed. The agreement indicates a procedure for co-operation with regard to pricing, and indicates that the question of when to negotiate more firm price provisions will be kept under observation.

CITIZENSHIP

INVESTIGATION OF STATEMENTS BY SANDOR EMERICH BANDY, BRANCH EMPLOYEE

Mr. Robert Borrie (Prince George-Peace River): My question is directed to the minister responsible for citizenship. Could the minister advise the House of the results of his inquiry into the actions and some of the statements of Mr. Bandy who is employed by the citizenship branch in Vancouver?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Inquiries are being made of the people with whom Mr. Bandy has been working in gathering information on behalf of the Citizenship Branch. There are no results of that inquiry yet which would lead me to suggest that any action is warranted at this time.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast-Chilcotin): In view of the statement that Mr. Bandy made publicly that if the government had considered the suffering of the unemployed and poor in Quebec in 1969 there would have been no FLQ in 1970, was he authorized as he indicated in the radio broadcast, to speak as a representative of the federal government?

Mr. Stanbury: Of course not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

ACTION TO REDUCE TREASURY BILL RATE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the treasury bill rate is 1.2 per cent above the United States rate, what steps does the government plan to take to reduce this spread and thus lessen the upward pressure on the Canadian dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): As was indicated yesterday, and the opposition seemed to disagree, there was a lowering of the bank rate.

FISHERIES

DESTRUCTION OF FISHING GEAR BY FOREIGN DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Would the minister advise whether he has been made aware of the existence of foreign draggers off southwestern Newfoundland which are destroying fishing gear and, if so, what action is he taking to correct the situation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I am not aware of this. I will look into it immediately.

Mr. Marshall: I would advise the minister that there are some 60 foreign draggers off the coast destroying thousands of dollars worth of fishing gear. Would the minister take the necessary action to implement proper surveillance, as he did last year in western Canada, and could this be done immediately so that we will not have a recurrence of what has happened in the past?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMONWEALTH COMMISSION ON NAVAL DEFENCE IN INDIAN OCEAN—WITHDRAWAL OF NIGERIA—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the withdrawal of Nigeria and the likely withdrawal of other Commonwealth countries from the commission set up at Singapore to inquire into naval defence in the Indian Ocean arising out of the sale of helicopters by Britain to South Africa, does the Canadian government also propose to withdraw from the commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government does not intend to withdraw from the commission. As I said yesterday, we regret very much the decision of the British government to sell arms to South Africa. We also regret that the Nigerian government and others may consider it necessary to withdraw from this committee. After all, this will be an opportunity to discuss the very situation to which they and we object, and we think there can be a useful role for the committee.

SALE OF HELICOPTERS BY BRITAIN TO SOUTH AFRICA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Has the minister seen the British High Commissioner in the past couple of days to register a very strong protest on the part of the Canadian government to what might be described as a cynical abuse of the agreement made at Singapore?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not defending the actions of the British government, because they are not in accordance with our views, but I would remind the hon. member that the British government made it very plain when they agreed to the formation of this committee that they would not necessarily delay any decision by them on the sale of arms to South Africa. As to the specific question asked by the hon. member, may I point out that my statement made in the House of Commons the day before yesterday has been brought to the attention of all members of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): My supplementary question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the House whether he has any firm indication regarding the present intentions of other members of the commission with respect to withdrawal from it?

Mr. Sharp: Not yet, Mr. Speaker, but I will be meeting at five o'clock this afternoon with the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Mr. Arnold Smith, to discuss the situation. I am sure he is making a canvass of the views of the members of the committee.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INCENTIVE GRANT TO MICRO-MAX PRODUCTS TO ESTABLISH PLANT IN MAGOG, QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN DRUG INDUSTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It arises from the recent announcement by the government of an incentive grant of $3.8 million to Micro-Max Products Ltd. of Kalamazoo, Michigan, to assist in establishing a drug plant in Magog, Quebec. Can the minister assure the House that this grant complies with plans announced at the time of the passing of Bill C-102, that is, to strengthen financially the Canadian segment of the pharmaceutical industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the grant was offered in accordance with the act regulations it is my responsibility to administer.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Can the minister indicate how this grant of $3.8 million to Micro-Max Products Ltd. of Kalamazoo compares with assistance that has been given to the independent Canadian drug industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question can be asked or answered at this time.

CO-ORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES WITH RESPONSIBILITIES OF OTHER DEPARTMENTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. What steps is he taking to co-ordinate the activities of his department under the Regional Development Incentives Act with the responsibilities of other departments of government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, and much to my regret, I have no authority over other departments.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Ryan: I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Spadina who has the floor, but I understand the hon. member for St. John's East has a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister either did not hear my question or did not understand it. I asked the minister what efforts he was making to co-ordinate the activities of his department, with respect to incentives, with the responsibilities and regulations of other departments under statutes of Parliament?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the only way to effect co-ordination in a government structure such as ours is through the cabinet and its committees, and this is done regularly, and we try to reconcile our policies and to co-ordinate them.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

EXTENSION TO COVER PROVINCIAL CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the rehabilitation intentions of proposed and present criminal law, is the government considering extending the Canada Assistance Plan to cover provincial correctional schools as well as welfare institutions and, if so, when will action be taken?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no immediate consideration being given to this matter, but I would remind the hon. member that as a result of the White Paper the Canada Assistance Plan in its entirety is under review with the provinces.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

REVISION OF INCOME CUT-OFF LEVEL PROPOSED IN WHITE PAPER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a related question. Since the minister, if I understand correctly, has indicated that the family allowance cut-off at $10,000, being the combined income of husband and wife, creates certain injustices and inequities, has the minister now thrown out that suggestion contained in the White Paper and, if so, has he any other alternatives to offer to the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had read the White Paper he would understand that this was a proposal set forth. We acknowledge that there are certain injustices created when you settle on an arbitrary limit of this kind, and we invite proposals on how this situation can be corrected, if indeed it can be corrected. We even invite proposals from the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his comments, but all I was asking was whether the minister is now in a position to say whether he will disregard that particular proposal in the white paper, and has he an alternative at this time?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, we are considering many alternatives at the moment and we are waiting for more to come from various segments of the community.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement by the minister that he will try to remedy the obvious injustices in his proposal to cut off the family allowance to families with an annual income of $10,000 or more, will he advise the House when we can expect these proposals to be made?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, there has to be some cut-off figure and some tapering at some level. We are trying to devise various means whereby this can be done and at the same time not create hardships and immediate disparities for people within a very close income range. These proposals are under consideration now. Again we invite proposals from the hon. member and the opposition parties.

ENERGY

STATEMENT BY DEPUTY MINISTER ON FINDING OF OIL OFF EAST COAST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be in the House today. However, I would like to direct to the acting minister a question relating to the statement of the deputy minister that oil will be found off the east coast within two years. I ask the acting minister whether this means that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has taken charge of the drilling program and is now telling the oil companies where to drill for oil?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should think it might be obvious to the Leader of the Opposition that this was in the nature of speculation.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the Prime Minister has been modest enough to admit this afternoon that he does not have foresight, I ask the acting minister whether this knowledge was revealed to the minister in a dream or whether he is using an ouija board?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REPORTED UNITED STATES OFFER OF CO-OPERATION IN BUILDING PIPELINE ACROSS CANADA FROM ALASKA

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the United States government has made or repeated an offer to co-operate with this country in building a trans-Canada pipeline from Alaska to the southern 48 states, as reported in the lead story, datelined Washington, in Monday's Toronto Telegram?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If they have, Mr. Speaker, they have not made the offer to me.

Mr. Anderson: I would like to repeat a question I put to the minister two days ago. Has he received any reply to his letter of a week ago today to the United States Secretary of State offering to co-operate with the United States in a study of tanker route problems on the west coast of North America?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. When the letter was presented to the U.S. State Department they indicated they would like to talk with our officials about a possible place in which to have such consultations and the form consultation would take, but we have not yet received a formal reply.

[Mr. Munro.]

PROPOSAL BY HOME TOWN CONSTRUCTION LIMITED FOR EXTINGUISHING OF MINE DUMP FIRE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but because he is not here I direct it to the acting minister. Has the minister's department received a proposal for extinguishing the mine-dump fire at Springhill, Nova Scotia, from Home Town Construction Ltd. and, if so, what action is being taken by the department to act on this proposal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ascertain whether that request has been received and perhaps I can be in touch with the hon. member.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

PARTICIPATION BY HOUSEWIVES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it the intention of the government to recognize the great contribution by housewives to the production of goods and services in Canada, as set forth by the National Council of Women, and to afford them equality of status by allowing them to participate in the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, many of the observations of the royal commission and the representations made the other day by the group to which the hon. member refers are under consideration in the context of proposals we have for improvement of the Canada Pension Plan. They will be considered in that context.

Mrs. MacInnis: In view of the argument made against such participation by the Minister of Finance on the ground that imputed income is too difficult to calculate, would the government consider hiring fresh economists who are up to this task?

AUTHORITY FOR INTEGRATION WITH OTHER PENSION SCHEMES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. A number of questions arise from the question just asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. However, since this matter covers more than one department I put the question to the Prime Minister. If the only authority the government has in respect of Canada Pension Plan funds is to lend money from these funds to the provincial governments, under what authority is the government integrating the Canada Pension Plan with other pension schemes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question invites the Prime Minister, or another minister on behalf of the government, to express an opinion from a legal standpoint. I would not think that the question in those terms is in order.

Mr. MacInnis: I am very sorry to rise on another supplementary question, Sir. It arises from your decision. I cannot see how the question I have put to the Prime Minister is in any way asking for a legal opinion, if they know what they are doing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Simcoe North.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Simcoe North. I will recognize him in a moment. I believe the hon. member has a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been trying to secure from this government for the last three years answers in respect of matters which are firmly laid out in legislation. The government has failed to interpret its legislation in this regard. Answering a question by the hon. member for St. John's East, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion this afternoon made the statement that he has no authority—he could have used the word "responsibility"—over other departments. My point of order arises from the statement made on Monday by a member of the government who tried to refer a question relating to unemployment insurance to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. He claimed that the minister had authority to answer the question. There is, therefore, a contradiction between the answer the minister gave today and the statement made in the House on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There may be contradictions in statements made by ministers, but I suggest to the hon. member that this is not necessarily a matter to be raised by way of a procedural objection.

NATIONAL REVENUE

IMPOSITION OF FEDERAL SALES TAX ON SUCARYL AND CYCLAMATES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which deals with sucaryl and cyclamates. I realize that this matter comes under two other departments, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Finance. Nevertheless, cyclamates and sucaryl come under the Food and Drugs Directorate and therefore under the minister. Why has this medication all at once been made subject to federal sales tax, thus increasing the price for many people in chronic ill health, some of whom are having a hard time making ends meet?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that aspect of the question is not my responsibility and I refer it to my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. With respect to cyclamates in general, as the hon. member may be aware I undertook to make a statement on this question and I will do so shortly.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, this tax was imposed over a year ago. Have the three ministers concerned done nothing in this area? It has to do with food and drugs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR—PROVISION OF CMHC LOANS AND CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES FOR INSTALLATION OF ANTI-POLLUTION DEVICES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the government planning to extend the granting of CMHC loans to the installation of anti-pollution devices for emissions into the air?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question is in order. The minister might reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is the responsibility of the minister responsible for housing, who is not in the House today. I will bring it to his attention.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Is the government planning to extend capital cost allowances for the installation of anti-pollution devices for emissions into the air? This is a very important question dealing with pollution.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we looked at this matter in the budget of last year.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I repeat my question. Is the government planning to extend capital cost allowances for the installation of anti-pollution devices for emissions into the air?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we have already done it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Marshall: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

DESTRUCTION OF FISHING GEAR BY FOREIGN DRAGGERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to take up the time of the House, but I directed an urgent question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and I did not get a reply. In order to emphasize its urgency, I point out that the fishermen in question have threatened to take up arms against foreign draggers because they are destroying their livelihood. I wonder if I could obtain an answer to the question I asked the minister.

Mr. Speaker: No doubt the hon. member realizes that the question period expired more than five minutes ago. The Chair made a desperate effort to allow more hon. members to ask questions by voluntarily extending the question period for a few minutes. The hon. member has raised a very important matter. Perhaps, with unanimous consent, the minister might be allowed to reply.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, this is the first that I have heard of this incident. If it is as serious as the hon. member says, then of course we will act immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

CLEAN AIR ACT

MEASURE RELATING TO AMBIENT AIR QUALITY AND CONTROL OF POLLUTION

The House resumed, from Friday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Davis that Bill C-224, relating to ambient air quality and to the control of air pollution, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first order of business this afternoon is the motion for second reading and reference of Bill C-224, an act relating to ambient air quality and to the control of air pollution. If I may remind hon. members of the present state of affairs, the debate has been concluded on this motion but the putting of the question was deferred until a ruling had been made on a point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The Chair has heard representations from various hon. members and is now in a position to render a decision.

If I may state to the best of my ability the point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, it is that Bill C-224 should not be proceeded with at this time because a clause in the bill would prejudice an amendment also moved by the hon. member for St. John's East during consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada.

[Mr. Marshall.]

It seems to me that the ancient rule of Parliament is that the House should not be put in a position where contrary decisions are made in respect of two similar bills. It is, of course, a fact that a final decision has yet to be taken on Bill C-207. However, the House has given second reading to Bill C-207 and has referred it to Committee of the Whole. That decision is not in question at this time.

It is clear to me that at the moment no decision has been taken by the House in relation to any particular clause or section of the government organization bill. Similarly, no decision has been taken by the House in relation to any particular clause of Bill C-224. This point was made clear, for the guidance of the Chair and of all hon. members, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). There is, therefore, in my view nothing procedurally wrong in having before the House at the same time concurrent or related bills which might be in contradiction with one another either because of the terms of the proposed legislation itself or in relation to proposed amendments.

May I again refer to the contribution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the procedural argument. The hon. member's contribution is reported at page 3584 of last Friday's Hansard. I quote as follows:

—we are not passing this bill at this point.

The hon. member was referring, of course, to the bill now before us, Bill C-224.

We are only debating a motion for second reading and the referral of the bill to committee. If we were at the third reading stage and were passing a bill that had within it a clause which was inconsistent with some other bill that had been passed, their point would be valid and I would be backing it.

Of course, at this point the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was referring to the point made by the hon. member for St. John's East and, I believe, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau). The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to say:

But that is not the case. We are not passing a bill. We are considering proposed legislation and the likelihood is that there are a number of details in it which members may not like or which they may find offensive. However, for the life of me—

That refers to the hon. member's life and not to mine.

—I cannot see any point of order in respect of the propriety of the bill as a whole, which is what the hon. member for St. John's East has asked Your Honour to find.

The point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre appears to be well taken. I must conclude that the question on the motion for second reading and referral to the standing committee can now be put to the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for Mr. Benson) moved that Bill C-186, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1970, to the 30th day of June, 1971, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Benson) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I think there is general feeling that the bill might be disposed of at this stage. There is a certain undertaking with regard to a committee on which this hinges; it was discussed with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) in committee. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) may wish to outline to the House the particulars of that arrangement.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has taken the words out of my mouth. However, that does not deter me from repeating them, does it?

Mr. MacEachen: It never has in the past.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When this bill was under consideration by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) made three commitments. It was understood that if these commitments were confirmed, there would be no objection to the bill being passed at the third reading stage without further debate. The three commitments were a reference of the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways, a device under which the officials of the Canadian National Railways could be called before that committee and a device under which the officials of Air Canada could also be called before that committee. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that it would be nice to have these commitments on the record of Hansard.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has said substantially what I wanted to say. When the bill was before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications I did not have an opportunity to examine the minister. The minister gave the undertaking which I would have tried to extract from him if I had been there, that is, to call before that committee the senior officials of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. It is only with that understanding that I am prepared to allow the bill to be given third reading at this time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): In connection with the first point, Mr. Speaker, namely, reference of the capital structure of the CNR, I undertook to give that assurance to the House some time ago. I repeat it. There will be no difficulty on that point. With respect to the device to enable the officials of the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to appear before the committee, there will be no difficulty on that point; we will certainly undertake to make that possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And no doubt it will be supported in the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The motion has been put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-219 to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 3648).

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been a time in the history of Canada when the efforts of backbenchers have been as unrewarding as they are today both in terms of individual satisfaction and in terms of service to those voters who supported them.

The way in which backbenchers on the other side of the House leap up to speak in favour of every piece of legislation proposed by their leader makes me believe they would not dare do anything else. To judge from their behaviour one would suppose that every bill presented by the government is perfect in all respects, yet all of us here know there is not even a remote possibility that the government will ever put forward a bill which is perfect in all respects.

I am mystified by the manner in which every bill sponsored by the government is accepted by backbenchers across the way as if it had been passed into legislation even before it had been debated. There has never been a time in history when dissent has been more fashionable, yet never a word of dissent is spoken from the benches opposite against the steady erosion of the powers of Parliament by the government they support. At a time when dissent is virtually the order of the day, there is never a word of dissent forthcoming from members across the way as their government sets out on a path which brings wanton destruction to Canadian institutions and Canadian aspirations.

Bill C-219, the bill before us today, is no better and no worse than any other bill which the government has tabled during the time I have been in this House. I must say, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friends have said already, that this bill is just more of the same. As is the case with other bills which we have debated recently, we are expected to pay dearly for anything in this measure that is worth while. In exchange for an ounce of benefit to the community we are expected to give a pound of concessions.

My first reaction to the bill was one of pure amazement. I wondered whether it was the same bill the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was thinking about when he launched it with such fanfare. My impression was that the government was attempting to get out of the Crown corporation business simply by changing the name of the game. I can see the government getting into the business, commercial and industrial community on a scale which would make even the NDP blush with shame. The way the CDC is designed to operate leads me to foresee the day when the government will be stuck with every industrial concern in the country which cannot pay its own way or show a profit.

I believe the corporation is bound to be subjected to a great deal of political pressure. The bill starts out so innocently that one is lulled, at first, into believing that here is a government measure which has nothing to do with grabbing power from Parliament. It does not take much study of its provisions, though, to realize it is not a bill which will inject much-needed new blood into the free enterprise system and give the Canadian investor an incentive to gamble on the future of industry and resource development in this country.

I am disturbed by the way in which this legislation is written and by the attempts of its writers to disguise the true importance of its manifest dangers. To begin with, an attempt is made to convey the impression that the federal government's total involvement will be limited to $250 million out of a total of $2 billion. In succeeding clauses, however, we find that the Minister of Finance will be allowed to make loans to the corporation up to a total of $100 million, such sums to be secured on the basis of shares of stock in the corporation. This would bring federal government involvement to $350 million. Further, clause 39 gives the government power to divest itself of several Crown corporations by selling them to the CDC for cash or for additional shares of stock.

I do not know what value the government places on Polymer Corporation Limited, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Panarctic Oils Limited and Northern Transportation Company Limited. There is little doubt in my mind that these viable corporations will be valued in the hundreds of millions of dollars, so we find ourselves becoming involved to the tune of $600 million or $700 million in a corporation whose dubious purpose it is to encourage and stimulate investment in Canadian private business and industry.

[Mr. Murta.]

Further to this, there is no guarantee that the remainder of the $2 billion capitalization will ever be subscribed by the private sector. All moneys loaned by the corporation will be secured on the basis of shares in the businesses borrowing money from the CDC, Thus, the CDC will own at least a minority interest by way of a mortgage in every company which borrows from it. We can assume that in many cases the CDC will be vested with a majority interest in such companies.

There is an implication in this bill, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians who hesitate to invest in viable, healthy Canadian companies at the present time will be greatly encouraged to invest in the same or other companies since from now on their investments will be guaranteed against failure or loss. Nothing could be further from the truth. Clause 24 of the bill provides:

> Notwithstanding sections 21 to 23, and section 36, the company shall not redeem or purchase for cancellation any of its shares if the company is insolvent or if such redemption or purchase for cancellation would render the company insolvent.

End of quote and end of any illusion that Canadians are likely to rush to invest in the CDC. Clause 41 contains a provision whereby the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce automatically become ex-officio members of the board of directors of the CDC at such time as the shares in the CDC held by the government exceed 50 per cent of total outstanding shares. I will not say that the government anticipates acquiring more than 50 per cent of the shares of the CDC, but it is clear that the administration does recognize the possibility, perhaps even the probability of such an eventuality. In all conscience, I cannot see how the additional burden of federal government bureaucracy, with its attendant inefficiency and expense, can possibly make investment in the private sector of Canadian or any other industry more attractive than it is under our present free enterprise system.

I cannot help thinking that any industry which cannot succeed with proper management and private financing, assuming it is dealing with a saleable commodity, would be a poor risk or at best a marginal risk. There is a great danger that the Crown corporations which are presently self-supporting and which return a profit to the treasury may in future be used to shore-up losing propositions, and I cannot see how the CDC could possibly be other than a losing proposition from the start.

At the outset the CDC would give the appearance of being a viable corporation solely through its acquisition of the four Crown corporations. I fail to understand how it would benefit anyone, least of all the Canadian people, for the federal government to appropriate funds with which to purchase corporations from itself. In effect, it would be taking the Crown corporations out of one pocket and thrusting them into another pocket in the same pair of trousers. It is possible that this makes sense but it is not probable, and I should like to see some demonstration of the advantage of such an exercise before I would be agreeable to voting favourably on this bill.

Bill C-219 makes no attempt to answer the real question of why Canadians are less inclined than Americans to invest in Canadian industries. Indeed, there are no provisions in it for assistance in cases in which a United States takeover of a Canadian industry is imminent. Inclusion of such a provision might at least have been a saving grace. It might have been some indication that the government intended this measure as the vehicle for rescuing some if not all of the firms which might be in danger of takeover by foreign interests in the future. I seriously doubt whether anything as elaborate as the CDC would be required for such a purpose. Moreover, I would hope that should any measures be adopted to prevent takeovers, the viability of the firms concerned and their ability to provide jobs are preserved intact whatever the means employed. I can see such a possible role for the CDC, and its adoption would cause my attitude toward the usefulness of the corporation to change somewhat. But it would still not be sufficient reason for risking the dangers inherent in the CDC concept.

Speakers on this side of the House have pointed out repeatedly and with great clarity that the real stumbling block in the way of full confidence on the part of Canadians in the investment possibilities of their own country is to be found in the nature of the tax structure generally. The answer is to be found in the incentives and in the reduction of risk provided by other countries in their tax arrangements. Successive Canadian governments have been aware that United States and Japanese investors are encouraged to develop resources and industries in Canada on as large a scale as practicable.

Corporations in those countries are encouraged, not by infusions of federal capital but by tax write-offs on high-risk development capital and by other tax benefits. Canadian tax laws have always discriminated against Canadian investors and developers, and it always amazes me when I hear nineteenth century Socialists advocating the nationalization of foreign-owned interests in this country rather than urging that the privileges extended to foreign investors be extended to Canadians also. We can no longer overlook the paradox that many United States takeovers in this country were accomplished by means of funds subscribed, borrowed or earned in Canada.

There is one aspect of foreign ownership which works in our favour and account must be taken of this in any measures designed to restrict foreign investment. Subsidiaries of foreign concerns in Canada enjoy a favoured position in the markets of the parent country, which tends to ensure the viability of the Canadian firms thereby preserving the jobs of their employees and maintaining the buying power of the enterprises concerned. This is not nearly as bad for us as some people would have us believe. But it would still be desirable for the government to learn something from those countries which find Canada such a tempting investment prospect. There is surely something to be learned from companies and countries which for many years have reaped enormous returns from their investments. I think it would be more satisfying to be the owner rather than the owned.

There is one further observation I should like to make and it concerns an apparent inconsistency in the government's efforts to stimulate interest among Canadians in investment in their own country. On the one hand we have this bill, purporting to be the vehicle by which Canadians will be encouraged to invest their money in home-grown corporations and ventures with a benevolent federal government as partner. I have already pointed out that the bill contains no built-in guarantee that such investments will return a profit. There are no safeguards against the money being dissipated by bureaucratic inefficiency or poor management. The CDC is just another investment possibility, and bureaucrats are not known as being astute managers and innovators; they are certainly not trained or experienced in sound business practices. On the other hand there is the government's white paper on tax reform, a classic example of muddled thinking and restrictive monetary policies. The white paper is an economic straitjacket designed to discourage investment and to strangle the productive middle range of our economy.

The introduction of the white paper stirred the business community to near panic, yet the government is planning to impose its proposals on the country. If I were able to consider the Canada Development Corporation concept in isolation, then I would be able to make a fair assessment of its possibilities, though even then I doubt seriously I could accept it as the alternative most desirable for our purposes. We need incentives to invest in Canada. The capital is here and the Canadian people are more inclined to invest in their country than we are led to believe. But federal government intervention in the private sector is not the answer; neither are restrictive and oppressive tax measures.

I must look at Bill C-219 in concert with other government measures that have passed this House or that are in the process of passing. I say this because with an overwhelming majority the government can pass any bill it chooses to pass, whether or not it is good for the country. I have to consider the Telesat Corporation, the proposed farm products marketing bill, the omnibus bill and the white paper on tax reform. When I consider Bill C-219 in company with those other bills, I see a pattern that disturbs and alarms me. I see a government legislating not for the good of Canada or for Canadians but a government legislating for itself. I see a government reaching out for power in the agricultural sector, in the communications sector, in the financial sector, and now in the business and industrial sectors. I would feel a little better about it if I heard just one small voice on the government side raised against this erosion of the Canadian economy and the Canadian Parliament. But I am afraid that I am in for a very long wait.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate, and I welcome it for two particular reasons. Last week we had an emergency debate on a very important matter, namely, the sale or possible sale of Home Oil Company. I do not think that this debate answered all the questions raised with respect to the Canada Development Corporation, but it did indicate, perhaps better than hon. members opposite have done, what the role of the CDC should not be. Since it may not have indicated what the role of the CDC should be, it is to this point that I address myself this afternoon.

I should also like to emphasize that the Canada Development Corporation is only part of a larger concept. It is but part of an industrial strategy, one that will include the whole question of Canadian ownership. I think it is within this context that we must examine the role of the CDC. The CDC has become a very important subject. It is a very big corporation, a $2 billion corporation, and there is no question that both in the House and in committee the provisions of this bill will have to be very carefully examined, particularly since over the course of the eight or nine years that the CDC has been gestating the role of the CDC has changed.

Almost everyone has his own idea what the role of the CDC should be. I suppose it has become the answer to almost every nationalistic maiden's prayer. For some—I think for many members of the NDP—the CDC should be the vehicle for buying back Canada. However, these members conveniently forget that investments in Canadian industry run somewhere between $40 billion and $50 billion. Blithely they say, "Well, this is something we should be devoting our resources to", forgetting the future. They also forget the question of foreign exchange and the fact that in recent years we have been generating, during fortunate periods, a surplus balance on current account of a billion dollars.

Mr. Thomson: Forty-seven hundred million right now.

Mr. Gillespie: So briefly, for many it would be the vehicle for buying back Canada. For others it would be a preventive "buy first" vehicle. I think this question troubled the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who has just spoken. I think he was concerned—these are his words or something similar to them—that it might be stuck with every industrial failure in the country; that it would be subject to political pressures that it could not withstand. I think that the debate regarding Home Oil Company last week helped to illuminate this particular problem; not that there was any failure involved on the part of Home Oil Company, but a company like Home Oil is often worth more to a foreign purchaser than it is to a Canadian purchaser.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Why is that?

Mr. Gillespie: If the Canada Development Corporation were to get into the business of pre-emptive bidding, it would not then meet the test of profitability. The hon. member opposite asks me: Why is that? If he understood how business organizations worked, he would realize that there are certain values in integration, particularly of international integration. Let him consider for a moment that there might be economies of scale involved and of marketing arrangements where a fit was involved.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): What about tax advantages?

Mr. Gillespie: I do not think the hon. member should refer to tax advantages which really fit the Home Oil situation. That has nothing to do with the tax situation here. I think the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) argued that the Canada Development Corporation should be a giant corporation that would stimulate regional economic growth. I think that is what he said in his remarks on second reading several days ago. He would even have taken it further and set up the CDC as a centralized planning mechanism, a mechanism that would concern itself with allocating capital resources that would meet national needs, undefined, and would not concern itself with earning a profit.

Similarly, in the debate last night the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) made a strong and vigorous presentation. He has a most persuasive manner. However, I must confess that I did not understand all his arguments, though this may well have been the fault of the translation. Nevertheless, I do not want to be unfair either to him or to the translators. I think the hon. member interpreted the role of the CDC in very large and considerable terms.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) attacked the subject again but from a very different point of view. He felt that the Canada Development Corporation should concern itself with providing a guaranteed return for shareholders—I think that was his expression. I would say that if the CDC is going to concern itself with guaranteed returns, then why does it not just sell bonds? Certainly there would be no purpose in selling shares and having shareholders.

The point that I am trying to make is that over the years the CDC has blossomed into a hodgepodge of ideas. The CDC concept originated with Mr. Gordon back in 1962, a man I think we would all recognize of vision and energy, as well, perhaps, a man of some impatience. He saw the problem that many of his colleagues and many Canadians did not see and moved to correct it. Perhaps he moved too fast because the country was not then ready to understand the problem that he saw. He was a man, though, who spoke of this concern and warned his people. Again, with this process—the buy back of Canada, the pre-emptive purchase, the giant mutual fund, the national planning mechanism, the guaranteed return, the opportunity for the small investor to develop Canada in an unstructured, undirected way—here for the first time we have before us this bill in respect of the Canada Development Corporation. Surely it should set to rest many concerns which have been stated in this House.

First, it is emphasized that the corporation will be a private corporation concerned with the private sector. The hon. member for Waterloo has argued that it should have been created a Crown corporation. He has moved his amendment essentially on that ground. He seemed to me to be confused about how such a Crown corporation might operate. Some of his remarks seemed to suggest that the financial community should be forced to invest in such a corporation and to finance it. This is an attitude we quite frequently see on the part of the New Democratic Party, a party which calls itself democratic. In areas of economics and finance it frequently takes a hard line attitude; it frequently takes the attitude that a certain group should be forced to do something. I believe the whole spirit of our economy must be built on the idea of creating a favourable climate for growth, that no one should be forced but that opportunities should be provided for many.

Those Conservatives who have taken part in this debate and do not approve the legislation—there are those who approve it in principle—have decried the fact that this is a Socialist device. I emphasize that this is a private corporation, concerned with the private sector, which is to have a board of directors drawn from the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in my remarks, this is a big subject. I should now like to deal with some of the areas in which I hope we will be able to move, because I think there are one or two questions which need attention. The purposes of the bill are clear: they are stated in the bill itself. One purpose is to help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and Canadian-managed corporations. There is no question that the corporation will be an important one. Its powers are established and are clear. It is to have considerable resources. But I believe a question we might properly ask is this: Is the timing of this corporation suitable at the moment? In my introductory remarks I stated that I saw the Canada Development Corporation as part of a major industrial strategy. It would seem to me to be important that some of the other parts of this major industrial strategy, particularly the part dealing with foreign ownership, be before Parliament before we proceed too far. In clause 6(1)(c), on page 3, the bill provides:

> to invest in the shares or securities of any corporation owning property or carrying on business related to the economic interests of Canada—

Similarly in subclause (d):

> to invest in ventures or enterprises, including the acquisition of property, likely to benefit Canada—

I have the following problem in respect of these clauses. Who is to determine what is in the best interests of Canada and who is to determine what is likely to benefit Canada? Is it to be this Parliament, the government or the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation? I for one would not be happy if I felt this Parliament were delegating to a board of directors of a private corporation the responsibility for determining what is in the best interests of Canada until such time as Parliament had made very clear what it expects the corporation and its directors to regard as the best interests of Canada. The question then is, who is to determine what are the best interests and what are the criteria.

I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was most helpful in his remarks when presenting the bill for second reading. He set forth many of these elements. They might be described as some of the elements or objectives of an industrial strategy. For instance, he emphasized that the corporation will be concerned with the future rather than the past. He emphasized that the corporation should consider Canadian control as important. He emphasized that efficiency of Canadian industry is essential—I believe those were his words—that the rationalization of Canadian industry is an important element in providing for the efficiency of Canadian industry, and that this corporation might meet that test.

He set forth several other points which I think might be included in this area. He emphasized that Canadian industry must be able to compete with multinational corporations on an international scale. He emphasized the importance of building Canadian-based multinational corporations. He said he felt the corporation should give special attention to our resource industries, to those of high technology, to our northern industries and in industries in respect of which Canada has a comparative advantage.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to members of this House pages 3630 and 3638 of Hansard which reproduce these statements of the Minister of Finance. They represent an important part of an industrial strategy. While I do not pretend to have researched this subject in depth, I would argue these are the most reasonable and comprehensive statements made recently by a government spokesman in respect of an industrial strategy for Canada. So in that sense I accept the Canada Development Corporation as a fitting instrument to secure the objective of an over-all industrial strategy. However, as I have indicated there are several areas in respect of which need to articulate the policy in the industrial area. Perhaps very shortly these will be before us. They have to do with the competitive policy, science and technology and foreign ownership.

I suggest that it would assist enormously the House and the public if we could consider this bill alongside the governments' proposed policy on foreign ownership. The debate last week with respect to Home Oil emphasized to me the need to establish rules regarding the takeover of Canadian industry. In that connection it would seem to me that a takeover review board is an essential mechanism so that at least the national interest can be considered by persons given the specific responsibility of assessing the takeover. By that I do not mean the review board will not authorize some takeovers. I am sure there would be many industries and companies approved for foreign takeover by the review board, but there might be many more takeovers which would not be in the national interest.

In conclusion I would emphasize that in my view the Canada Development Corporation is an important instrument of industrial policy. I regret that we do not have at the present time a foreign ownership policy to consider alongside it. I urge the government to give priority to bringing in a foreign ownership policy. I have one other reservation with respect to this bill. I hope that it will be a long time before shares are sold to the public because it seems to me that if the CDC is to do the kind of things which need to be done, it will have to take a very long view.

The directors will have to look five years and more into the future. If they are looking for quick returns, they will not be doing the kind of things that need to be done. If they take the long view, the question of earning sufficient profits to pay dividends will be less important if they are not faced with having to pay dividends. If we are to sell shares to the public, surely we will have to be prepared to pay dividends within a short space of time, or we will have to show such an improving or stable earnings record that the future payment of dividends can be assured in order to establish the value of the shares and perhaps some opportunity for appreciation.

It seems to me there will be enough problems in developing and launching the CDC initially, without having to think about problems of this kind. I would argue with the hon. member for Lisgar on this point, that the more independent the CDC can be, the better it will be able to resist the kind of political pressures that he and I are concerned about. The important thing is that the CDC be designed to withstand the kind of political pressures about which we are concerned. It should be designed to meet the test of the marketplace. I urge the House to give the establishment of the CDC favourable consideration, notwithstanding the reservations I have stated this afternoon with respect to the timing of its introduction.

Mr. Rod Thompson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) as he listed, in his own inimitable way, the reservations that he has regarding the CDC. However, I expected something different from him because, as I understand it, the hon. member for Etobicoke is supposed to be in favour of Canadian-based multinational corporations and I thought that perhaps he could tell us how the CDC could help to establish just such firms which I understand he supports. I assume he has his own reasons for not doing so, but I had hoped he would do so and that he would contribute something new in the way of ideas to the debate.

As I understood the hon. member for Etobicoke and other government speakers, they are promoting the bill with the rather uncertain enthusiasm of a middle-aged man paying court to an 18-year old girl. In this case their suit might not be as effective as they would like it to be. We do not criticize the minister or the government for not riding off madly in all directions developing Canada seen or unseen, but we suggest they show a little more enthusiasm for what the CDC could be expected to do.

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) have listed some of our reservations about the bill, but I would like to suggest some things which I feel the CDC could or should be doing. Some of the suggestions which I have might not be ones which the CDC will automatically adopt, but they might consider them at least. If we are going to develop industry in Canada we should be concerned with producing goods and services which are needed and for which people are willing to pay. I do not see any point in producing something, either in goods or services, for which there is no market in or out of Canada. We want products that are both economic and reasonable.

A bill such as this should have a positive approach and I suggest that the CDC might look at new ideas. If it does not, then why bother? For example, the Polymer Corporation produces rubber. If it would be in the national interest for it to be under the CDC, I would not argue against that. But if all the CDC is to do is produce rubber or products that are already being manufactured, then why bother? In Manitoba the Atomic Energy Corporation is building a new type of transmission line. They seem to be doing a good job and I have no criticism of them, but if the CDC is to produce something that has already been produced, then why bother?

I will suggest some things which might be considered so that we can have new ideas which can be used. I assume that the CDC will have adequate research funds to look into any new ideas which they will promote, or at least that they will have access to adequate research facilities. They should have sufficient research facilities to prove the product before they attempt to produce it. I think, also, that they should have cost accounting officers among their officials who would be prepared and able to consider these matters in a truly businesslike way, to see whether a certain item might be profitably produced in Canada or for marketing abroad if necessary. Such a corporation must have adequate and efficient business management which will make sound business judgments. There should be a willingness to venture into new fields which I will mention in a moment.

There are certain problems in Canada which should be tackled. For example, in eastern Canada we have not had for a long time a winter as bad as this one. This has caused leaking roofs. Some way of removing ice from the roofs could be considered by the CDC. I do not see why the CDC should have to do it; the building construction people should be doing it. But apparently they are not. Perhaps the CDC should also consider establishing a company to manufacture glass that will not frost. This would be an advantage in Canada. A corporation or a government group in Ottawa has produced a frost foam. This is a new product which might well be produced and promoted in Canada. As a farmer, this is something which I suggest we might use and produce commercially and which might be sold in Canada as well as abroad.

The other day the hon. member for Waterloo mentioned the Laser. Again this is an item we have developed in our government corporations. It was a new thing, a useful thing, but the companies that took over the idea have financial difficulties and inadequate resources with which to do a proper job. This is another area which the Canada Development Corporation should consider. A few days ago we dealt with a textile bill in this House. The intent of the bill was to bring some rationalization to the textile industry. This may be a logical area for the Canada Development Corporation to move into, to help promote new textile products and then perhaps to sell out to the textile industry at a later date. I suggest there is a great deal of room for improvement in winterwear in Canada and in the kind of textiles we produce. These are matters which the corporation might logically be expected to consider.

Last fall the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce published a little pamphlet outlining a study it had conducted on the dairy industry in Europe. It discovered that the European dairy industry was quite successful, compared with ours. In Europe they had a whole list of new products and new methods of packaging items, as a result of which buyers were rushing to buy them. The net result was that the sale and consumption of dairy products in Europe had gone up. But apparently nobody in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is following through on that study. I might ask why, but that would be another argument. This, too, is an area at which the CDC might look to see if it could develop similar types of products in Canada and later, on a cost or cost plus profit basis, sell out to the Canadian dairy industry.

I would like to talk for a moment or two about atomic energy. It seems to me that this is a logical area for Canadians to be involved in because we have given leadership in this field. Recently the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) returned from Japan with great ideas about the possibility of building an enriched uranium plant in Canada. If this were feasible, it seems to me quite logical that it would be built by the Canada Development Corporation. There is the possibility of surplus power being available for such a project either in Manitoba or southern Saskatchewan. The CDC might co-operate with the government of Japan in building such a plant. I know that if I were the government of Japan, particularly after the recent shake-up in the international oil markets, I would be looking for alternative sources of energy and I would certainly be looking to a country with a stable government to help supply me with those sources of energy. We in Canada could produce enriched uranium. We could even sell them atomic energy plants if they wanted them. This is the kind of thing a CDC might be working at and promoting. It could coordinate the resources of the nation to build a project as large as this. I do not think private industry could undertake such a project; if it were to be done it would have to be done under the CDC.

I wish to emphasize something that I mentioned when I began my speech. If there is no great enthusiasm for an undertaking such as the Canada Development Corporation, and if not much pressure is put on it by a minister or by the government, then it will not achieve much; it will not have any great effect on the economic scene in Canada. Unless the government is prepared to administer it with a fair bit of enthusiasm and concern, we will not get many results from it. Many of us on this side of the House disagreed with the policies of a great industrial promoter in a previous Liberal government, the late Hon. C. D. Howe. But at least he had enthusiasm for industrial promotion in Canada. We agree that he contributed much, even if we did not agree with the methods he used. There does not seem to be that kind of enthusiasm in the present government. If we had the kind of enthusiasm that built Air Canada, we might take the CDC and really go somewhere with it.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate today, so my intervention will be brief. As I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he introduced the bill I could not help thinking of what I had been taught when I was a school student about different types of investment. I was always led to believe there were two different types of investment open to the individual or large corporation. One was to obtain the largest, consistent, periodic yield on a more or less guaranteed basis. This type of investment normally would not have much to do with the management nor the administration of the corporation into which the investment was being made.

Canadians have been great people for this type of investment, the sure, safe, blue chip type of thing. They have been more concerned with security, more concerned with guarantees than with risk capital. The proof of the pudding is the fact that Canadians by and large are the largest per capita owners of life insurance of any nation in the world. The other type of investment is normally the high-risk type of investment designed to bring about the largest growth factor, or an increase in equity. With these two different things in mind, I am concerned about how the Canada Development Corporation can ride two horses and how it can justify its existence from the standpoint of developing this country, which is what the name implies it will do.

In my opinion, if we are to develop this country money must be funnelled into investments that are pretty "scaly" or speculative. Some of those investments may bring no return whatsoever. On the other hand, this government proposes to take a facility and Crown corporation or two that belongs to me, to all Canadians, and give it to the corporation. We own these outfits at present, and I see no justification for my equity in a high-class corporation like Polymer being dissipated by the government. Why should it give such corporations to the Canada Development Corporation and then use some of the money on high-risk propositions that are essential?

High-risk ventures are absolutely essential if we are to develop this country. But, Mr. Speaker, you cannot take the money of an investment fund that guarantees you 5, 6, 7 or 8 per cent annually—this being the type of fund that widows and orphans need—and invest it in a speculative oil well or an unproved mine. Historically, people who invest in ventures like these lose on more occasions than they win. It is just like going to the race track. When you win, you win big. This is the secret of the race track. That is what we must keep in mind when considering the Canada Development Corporation.

Something disturbed me a great deal as I watched a CBC presentation a few weeks ago. Normally I am not the CBC's greatest fan, yet I felt that the short documentary they put on one evening had merit. The presentation was more or less an informal discussion period among a group of investment bankers and members of the Toronto Stock Exchange. I was interested in hearing some of the things said during that presentation. They asked, how is it that so much Canadian money being invested through that stock exchange is being invested in foreign securities? How come so many of our large financial institutions, insurance companies, trust companies, etc., are investing money on behalf of their clients outside of this country. I really think these people are doing the best they can for their customers and clients. They must therefore consider some of those things I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks. They must feel that those types of investments are safer. They must feel that investments like that, investments made in other jurisdictions, will be more profitable, considering the socialist tax measures proposed in the white paper. I think these factors must weigh heavily with them.

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member is quite right.

Mr. McCutcheon: Having said that, may I mention something which to me as a Canadian is more disturbing than the platitudinous, patriotic talk we hear all over Canada about buying Canada back.

An hon. Member: It is platitudinous talk.

Mr. McCutcheon: The Wall Street Journal points out clearly that one of the biggest industrialists on the North American continent who controls a very large corporation owns in this name only 7 percent of the stock of that corporation. His family owns the balance, which is in their names. Their total holdings amount to 20 per cent. But nobody in this chamber can tell me that Henry Ford does not control the Ford Motor Company. So when I hear platitudinous talk about Canadians owning 51 per cent of the stock of companies, and about ownership, I suggest that the people concerned ought to take a good, hard look at the facts of life and see how corporations are manipulated and controlled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: That's the stuff. Tell it to the people across the way.

Mr. McCutcheon: Having said that, I think I should tell this government about one more danger sign which to me has much more sinister implications and is much more dangerous than almost anything else. We are a developing country; our economy is not stagnant, as is the economy of developed nations like Britain. We are still developing. I am not as much concerned about foreign investment in this country as I am about something else happening in the world which, in my humble opinion, is very dangerous indeed. I refer to the amount of information which is being stored in various data computing centres outside this country. I am not disturbed about investment per se; I am disturbed about all the information on Canadians and Canadian businesses that is being stored with corporations and companies engaged in the data processing business. This monster is far more dangerous than a few American dollars invested in our industry.

Mr. Dinsdale: They have more information than Information Canada.

Mr. McCutcheon: Exactly.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): That is not much.

Mr. McCutcheon: This is an area to which the government should forthwith direct its attention.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we in this party have looked forward to a Canada Development Corporation for many years. We have suggested a development corporation in which the government could show an interest. We now find that the Liberal government, as it has often done in the past, have bastardized the words "Canada Development Corporation" and have introduced a bill which we cannot support. We should not be too surprised, because this has happened on other occasions. It has often been said that we in this party are Liberals in a hurry. If that is true, we can go a lot further on that trail before the Liberals catch up. That is certainly true in this case.

The minister has stated that no assistance will be provided to any company with less than $1 million capitalization. If the CDC is not going to assist small companies, the assistance will be no more than that provided in the past to companies which have no need for this type of legislation. If we are going to make tax concessions to a large corporation, and I consider a company with $1 million capitalization to be fairly large, we will not be doing anything for the type of industry that will be involved in a large portion of this nation in the next 20 years.

Many pious proposals have been advanced by this government to solve the problems of the underdeveloped and disadvantaged areas of this country. In most cases they were of the same type as the proposals outlined by the minister for the Canada Development Corporation. There has been an erosion of the Canadian economy because of the government's tax structure, the fact that we do not have a capital gains tax and that it is much easier for a branch plant of an American company to establish and operate effectively within an international market than a Canadian company. That erosion has extended to the point where it affects more than 90 per cent of the oil industry. Many hon. members say what a wonderful organization Home Oil is because it is a Canadian company. At the same time, the Canadian public will not invest $10 million in this company which has assets of over $200 million. I am aware of the liabilities of this company as well. The president of the company is probably the greatest liability.

The minister has stated that the corporation will not be able to participate in the type of rescue operation that is necessary for many of our industries. This bill will assist the large companies which do not need help, in the same way that they receive assistance in the way of area development loans and assistance because of regional disparity. In most cases it will help American branch plants out of difficulty. It will not be involved with those companies which have very large hope of success.

I would be prepared to invest a few dollars in Home Oil. Knowing the long-term debt which they have and the manner in which it is secured, if I had the money I would be prepared, along with a small number of people, to invest $10 million in Home Oil. This company controls a large distribution company in England and one in the United States which handles gas. It controls a large company which handles rail containers for butane and other gases. It controls approximately 360 producing wells, many of them capped, and has a large interest in 500 million acres in Alaska. If I were in charge of that company I would be able to control production and distribution of oil through leases held by the company. The government will not invest $10 million to take over some of the current liabilities of the company in order to provide the Canadian public with this kind of organization.

What did the government do with regard to books? This subject has been widely touted. The Conservatives in Ontario were in a position to do something, but what did they do? They all sat back in pride. I am sure that some members of the United Church even prayed that the United Church of Canada would be a responsible organization and retain the ownership of Ryerson Press in Canada. How much money did it involve? In the future, the majority of text books for Ontario students will be purchased from an American company. Canadian history will be written by Americans and published in the United States. Obviously they will rewrite the battle of Queenston Heights. If they are brave, they will rewrite the battle of the Plains of Abraham. I do not know on which side they will come down. The cost to the Canadian public will be fantastic through the loss of our major book-producing companies, the textbook industry in particular, and the important role it must play in Canadian education. The minister will say he could not get involved because it is a provincial matter. The government of Ontario will say they could not get involved because they were not sure they had jurisdiction. While the matter was being discussed, the transaction occurred. It is the type of thing that once we lose it, we can hardly rebuild it.

We need a Canadian development agency. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). He talked about establishing the kind of corporation that I suggest. He mentioned there was a great deal of difficulty sorting out capital that is being retained by insurance companies, banks through savings and the type of capital that is normally used to develop companies. The government should pay attention to what that hon. member said yesterday. He seems to know what he is talking about, which is more than most members of the government when it comes to finances. It is certainly more than I know, because my knowledge in this field is limited.

If all hon. members seriously consider this matter, they will be of the opinion that if the Canadian public are given the opportunity to invest in a bona fide Canada Development Corporation they will do so for several reasons. They will invest because they know that a company which is properly operated by the government can be a success. Even more important than the amount they may receive in return is the fact they will be launching many new businesses in this country which will remain in Canadian hands.

There is a small smelter in my area. It has had a sad history; I shall not go into all the details. I am sure, though, that if an agency like the CDC were operating now in the way in which I hope it will eventually operate, we would be lending money to establish a smelter in the Cobalt area to smelt silver and precious metal ores in northern Ontario. The smelter we already have is reported to be holding a large amount of silver against the international price of silver. Because the price is low, it is losing money and it may have to close down. Some people may say, "So what?" Well, if it closes down there will be nowhere in Canada to which silver mines can send their ore. This might not matter much, except that in the area of which I speak more than 25 per cent of the work force is unemployed. There are still 450 miners working in the lode silver industry in the area, some of them in mines which have been in continuous operation for 60 years.

As I say, the industry has had its ups and downs. They sent their ores originally to Montana, though they did some smelting in Cobalt. From time to time they renewed their relationship with the St. Helena, Montana, smelter. The United States smelting company is not very interested in handling the ore because the arsenic content of Cobalt ore is exceptionally high. So there has to be a smelter in the area. I am not suggesting we should buy the smelter which is already there, or nationalize it, or take it over. It all depends on whether or not it is an economic proposition—perhaps it is not, in which case the government is partly to blame because it along with a number of others decided to melt down its silver currency. Carloads of silver were coming in from the Canadian Mint, from the United States, from Mexico and from South American countries. To deal with this work, the company expanded its operations. Finally they possessed a smelter which was larger than was necessary for the smelting of the local ores.

I believe this is the kind of proposition in which the CDC could invest. It would be providing a service for the area, it would be doing so on a sound economic basis and it could do so profitably. In addition, the government would be serving its own interests, because we still need monetary silver. In addition, the smelter would be playing a much larger role in the economy of the whole silver industry. If something is not done along these lines, what is the alternative? We shall end up paying welfare benefits to all the people in the area because most of them have reached an age at which they cannot be retrained or relocated.

The entire municipality of Cobalt is dependent upon whether or not a smelter is in operation. I do not know whether free enterprise will invest in such an undertaking. I would think not. In any case, private enterprise would be concerned only with the smelter, and I am concerned with the future of the whole industry in this region. Those who will be administering the CDC, as I see it, will be interested in developments of this kind. I believe the government should put money into the CDC and I believe the people will be willing to do so.

When the CDC advances funds to a company it should receive equity stock. To my mind there has never been a more stupid operation than the system of regional development grants. We provided to Timmins an immense amount of money, $5 million or $6 million, to build a smelter which had to be built there anyway. We provided it, yet we allow Texas Gulf to benefit. Why shouldn't we own it? Why shouldn't we exercise enough control to ensure that all the ore mined in the area could be processed by that smelter?

Why cannot we acquire an equity of 25 per cent or 50 per cent, or whatever is needed to develop a precious metal smelter in the Cobalt area? Why cannot we build a smelter in Sudbury? Why should it be necessary to send ore to Montreal? The reason this is done now is the nature of the grant structure and the fact that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) favours Montreal. But I cannot imagine that any intelligent people in Montreal would want a smelter to be built there. In Sudbury the smokestack is almost high enough to be seen from Toronto, and they say that in favourable conditions smoke from it will blow over New York.

An hon. Member: Favourable?

Mr. Peters: If it is intended to develop a mid-Canada resource corridor, we shall need federal money and lots of it. I am not interested in Rohmer getting this grant. It is almost like giving it to Prince Charles to develop the Hudson Bay lands. I am not interested in Rohmer doing it. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he has shown a lot of initiative and the people associated with him have shown initiative in appreciating all the advantages of a mid-Canada corridor. He thinks it is a heck of a good idea and all he wants from the government is the right to exploit it—and he uses the word "exploit" freely. If he can see any advantage in it, surely there are people within the government service who can look at the proposition and determine what advantages exist for the Canadian people. It will pay handsomely.

It seems we are reluctant in this country to plant trees. I am reminded of a little story I read in the paper about a small community not far from the city of New York whose population decided years ago during a depression that they would plant trees on a large area of land which had come to them in lieu of taxes. They planted the trees and I understand that even today the money derived from the cutting of those trees on a controlled basis is enough to defray all their municipal costs. If this is true of the renewable resources belonging to this little town in New York, I am sure it is all the more true of the northern part of Canada and that if we seriously undertook the development of this region we could expect to be rewarded proportionately.

Recently Premier Bourassa of Quebec was in the Rouyn-Noranda area and was talking about employment and expansion of the base metal industry. There is talk about putting in a new smelter there to handle the resources in northern Quebec as well as some of the resources in northern Ontario. Why should this smelter be built in some other area? Obviously the refinery should be built where the resource is. If it is necessary for the nation to provide financial assistance to build this smelter in the best location, in terms of maximum employment, then we should be prepared to finance it. But companies that ask us for that kind of support must also provide the Canadian people with an equity for the investment they make, and the Canadian people should have some say in the operations. I do not know what guides the thinking of this government, but it always seems to me that it depends upon whose ox is being gored, when it comes to providing help. We are providing many people with a good deal of monetary assistance which is not absolutely necessary.

• (4:50 p.m.)
