Selected Literature.
The Renounced Inheritance.
"Magdalene Ross, are you in your right mind?"
"I think so, Aunt Harriet. I feel no premonitions of insanity."
Mrs. Harriet Hereford, of Hulseford Hall, leaned back in her velvet cushioned arm-chair, and applied her vinaigrette to her nose. It was more than she could comprehend—this unbecoming conduct in her niece. The fashionable woman could have no understanding of it.
"It is incredible, Magdalene! I always thought you were a girl of good sense."
"Thank you, Auntie. I claim to be."
"But you have no right to the claim! Such an absurd thing! You will not persist in doing it, will you, Maggie, dear?" coaxingly.
Magdalene lifted her handsome head with an air of quiet pride. Her cheeks glowed, her hazel eyes shone with a calm and steady light. There was determination like iron in the curve of her red lips.
"I shall do it. It is my duty. God helping me, I will never shrink from that! And I should be doubly a coward if I refused to walk in the path of justice, now that it lies so plainly and so clearly before me. Should I do otherwise than I propose to do, I should despise myself for ever!"
"How foolish! How ridiculous! The property is yours! No person in the world would doubt that fact for a moment. John Greenough was of sound mind, and in full possession of his faculties, when he made the will which gives you everything of which he died possessed."
"Granted. I do not dispute that. But when the will was made he was under the influence of an angry passion, and no man can be perfectly sane when his passion sways him utterly. You know the circumstances as well as I do. He had set his heart on his son's marriage with Miss Vance—a lady of wealth and social position—and that son refused to obey him, choosing rather to follow the dictates of his own inclinations. He married a poor farmer's daughter, and from that day to the day of his death his father never saw his face. He disowned him—may moon, he cursed him and his innocent children, and when Charles Greenough died his own father turned from the door the messenger who came to bring the melancholy tidings. You know how it has been since. The widow of his son has supported her two children by her own industry, and brought them up right; a son and a daughter. I have been told, that any mother might be proud of. The property of John Greenough belongs not to me but to these children."
"Magdalene, you are over conscientious. Mr. Greenough gave it to you of his own free will. You saved his life, and he loved you better than any other person."
"I was fortunate enough to render him a service."
"A service! You speak lightly.—The dog would certainly have killed him but for you!"
"Aunt Harriet, no credit is due to me. Hero knew me, and desisted from his attack upon the helpless old man because I called to him. There was no sacrifice on my part. But for this Mr. Greenough felt grateful, and during the time I taught school near his house I frequently went in to read to him, or tell him the news of the day. I never dreamed of being rewarded for it. He was a hard, stern old man, but I enjoyed his society, just as he had been happiest always while doing right."
"And you are resolved?"
"Yes, I am resolved, Aunt Harriet. A bitter smile wreathed the handsome, aristocratic face of Mrs. Hereford.
"Very well, Magdalene. I hope you will not repeat your decision. I have tried hard to do by you as I should during the few months that you have been with me. You know that I do not approve of voluntary poverty. I was greatly opposed to your mother's marriage with Arthur Ross. Not that I have anything to bring against your father's character—but he was poor. Well, he is dead, and so is Helen—I will let him rest. But I hoped to have made his child understand what was for her own good. I have failed, it seems. I hope you can have no expectations from me."
"I shall remember that you are my niece. But that of Ralph Howard? Have you thought of his wishes in this matter?"
Magdalene's eyes dropped—a soft flush stole up to her forehead.
"He will desire me to do what is right, I think. If not we shall be better apart."

"Well, you have chosen and you will see. Have you spoken to him about your absurd decision?"
"I have written him."
"Will you let me see the reply?"
"If you wish it. But, of course, a right minded man could have but one opinion in the matter."
"You think so? Well, as I said, we shall see." And gathering up the mass of her silken drapery from the contact with the costly carpet, Mrs. Hereford left the room.
From the conversation we have given, the reader will understand the character of Miss Hereford and her niece, and there is no need of further explanation.
"It is incredible, Magdalene! I always thought you were a girl of good sense."
"Thank you, Auntie. I claim to be."
"But you have no right to the claim! Such an absurd thing! You will not persist in doing it, will you, Maggie, dear?" coaxingly.

Magdalene's eyes dropped—a soft flush stole up to her forehead.
"He will desire me to do what is right, I think. If not we shall be better apart."

A sudden flush went over her face, he stooped over her and took her hand.
"Magdalene Ross?" he said; "I shall remember; take care of yourself—good-night."
After that Miss Ross and Mr. Allston met constantly. They walked and drove, and watched sunsets together, and perhaps before either was aware they had drifted into love—Magdalene realized how deeply her heart was stirred when he spoke of leaving Halsey Beach on the morrow. Something he saw in her face led him to speak.
"Magdalene, one word from you would keep me through all time—Will you say it?"
She looked at him, but dimly comprehending his meaning.
"I will make myself clearer. I love you—I want your love in return—What answer have you?"
She put her hands into his.
"I love you, Mr. Allston."
"And you are not afraid to trust me, utter stranger as I am, of whom you know nothing?"
"No, I am not afraid. I feel some assurance within me that I shall never repent my confidence in you."
"Maggie, put your face here on my shoulder close to mine; I have a confession to make to you. I am not Mr. Allston. My name is Edward Allston Greenough. No, I will not let you go. You must hear me through.—When you renounced your inheritance to my sister and myself, I appreciated so perfectly the noble spirit which prompted you that I made a vow to seek you out, and if possible, win your love. I loved you before I saw you. I followed you here from Deatur, where you have been teaching, and arrived just in season to save your life. I claim it now; shall I have it?"
She lifted her luminous eyes to his face, and he read his answer there.
"So Magdalene became the Mistress of the grand old house where John Greenough lived and died, and shared the inheritance she had once renounced."
The Monster Explosion at Hell Gate.
New York, Sept. 24.—To-day was celebrated by a New England cast-iron rain storm and all the discomforts thereof. Notwithstanding the fact that thousands of people took their routes toward Hallett's Point, Hell Gate, to be in season to witness the grand explosion promised by Gen. Newton. They were not disappointed.
CROWD OF PEOPLE.
Quite a large number of invited guests were present on Ward's Island which is to the northward and eastward of Hallett's reef. The high hills on the New York side of East River and streets and avenues were literally black with people, reminding military people present of the appearance of Gettysburg Heights just before the great battle.
THE GUARD.
The programme of Gen. Newton as to the guarding of the river was carried out to the letter. Steamboats under his orders were stationed at points within a radius of three quarters of a mile east and west of the reef to prevent any vessels approaching within the supposed danger lines.
STEAMERS LOADED WITH SPECTATORS.
The North River was crowded with people, loaded to their gunwales with people, which were within safe sight-seeing distance of the doomed reef, while the Government scow which has for so many months done duty as anchored between Ward's Island and the New York Shore with the family of Gen. Newton and several distinguished American and foreign engineers, Army and Navy officers and friends. Lining the shores were a large number of yachts and all kinds of craft imaginable filled with adventurous oarsmen and risk families of the traditional New Yorkers who would almost welcome eternally if accomplished in sensational sight-seeing. There was from the stand-point on Ward's Island from 100,000 to 250,000 people who awaited the touch of the electric spark.
THE FIRST AND SECOND WARNINGS.
At 2.25 p. m. the first warning gun was fired and the great crowds began to fully realize that the decree of a regular army officer of the United States was something to be depended on. The second gun resounded, and was previously announced, and it was accompanied by a fresh gust of east wind that came from the ocean overlooking Long Island with a down-fall of rain and mist that was uncomfortable in the extreme. The great crowds remained immovable, only watching more intently the bomb-proof and the coffer dam at Hallett's Point, lest there might be a premature explosion and they would not be prepared.
THE LAST WARNING AND THE SPECTATORS SUSPENSE.
At last the third gun resoundantly reechoed among the islands and suddenly lost itself against the easterly gale and woods of Long Island.—Watches were immediately produced and field and opera glasses were leveled toward Hallett's Point. The seconds were counted, 15 went by, and several hasty people exclaimed in an undertone, "It's too bad for Newton, the battery has failed him!"

THERE SHE GOES!—A RUSH TO THE WATER'S EDGE.
Five seconds more elapsed when there was a suppressed rumble, an exclamation of "there she goes!" fully for Newton, and the crowd of refined gentlemen on Ward's Island, headed by His Honor Mayor Wickham and Police Commissioners paying no heed to the officious policemen, rapidly walked toward the edge of the water.
The scene.
was no never to be forgotten. The elevation on Ward's Island, where the spectators were stationed, was perhaps some 20 feet above high water mark. The glass of the water had been vigorously kept upon the coffer-dam. When the rumble commenced there was seen first on the crest where the leading of the mine was located a beautiful white spray that lifted itself in the air 150 feet in a jet not unlike the spray thrown up by a Geyser Spring, supported on each immediate side by voluminous sprays of a hundred feet, these again marked by smaller sprays upshoots from 50 down to 10 feet in height. The body of water thrown up was very heavy, although not apparent at the moment, extending 850 feet from the shore.
THE RESULT AS PREDICTED BY GENERAL NEWTON.
The area of disturbance extended evidently over three to five acres of surface and that amount of water was lifted bodily into the air. The detonation was heard at a distance of 850 yards from which it was viewed by the writer, and resembled the sound of a park of artillery of six 6-pounders on a militia training day. It was when Gen. Newton said it would be, and the fears of many there who were not realized in the faintest degree as the effects were not thus discernible at Ward's Island any other island nor on New York Shore. A small dory with two adventurous fishermen who slipped the cord of Government steamers was hurled so much disturbed as by the swash of a tug boat.
THE REVERBERATION.
or rather two reverberations, for a slighter one from the extreme east. Those followed the first explosion, was felt and heard in this city even to the battery. The subdivisions of the waters after the explosion showed that the cofferdam and its immediate surroundings had been entirely destroyed. The wharf just above was torn away, the small work-houses in close juxtaposition were wrecked—there were two of them—and perhaps less than 50 feet of earth facing the water were broken away.
NO DAMAGE.
There are several little wooden houses within a 100 feet of the explosion where the windows were not broken, and a large jewelry factory less than one-sixteenth of a mile distant, with at least 500 panes of glass, had not one window pane cracked.
THE SPECTATORS VISIT THE SCENE OF THE EXPLOSION.
The fleet of steamers that with thousands of crowded humanity went immediately through the debris that floated on the tide was equalled only by the hundreds of row boats that sped their way to the scene in search of dead fish or drift wood. The numbers of fish found were ridiculous, a few, one of them being captured in a stunted condition by the police which weighed less than four pounds. The Government, Police, Charity, and Excursion steamers all made trips over the late reef and then returned home.
THE NAVIGATION OF HELL GATE SAFE.
The praise of Major-General Newton, the representative scientific engineer of this age, is upon everybody's lips and no man's community is held in higher esteem than his.
Everything was accomplished as he had planned, and the navigation of Hell Gate hereafter, thanks to his plan, will be probably as safe as the deepest portions of Long Island Sound.
"PROTECTING" THE RIVER FISHERIES.
—Says a Miramichi correspondent: "Never before were there such violations of the Fishery regulations as this season. The North West River is outrageously poached, and only a few weeks ago the Indians speared and took something like 200 salmon, and grise out of the Big Hole, North Esk. Above this, nets during the summer have been placed across the river to the fall length or breadth, and yet no arrests, and no person can be found to arrest the lawless. On the South West, the destructive fishery is being carried on by means of numerous nets and sweeping the whole River. This matter is causing great excitement.—The Fishery officers along these rivers seem like Rip Van Winkle—asleep."
The following additional is furnished for publication from Miramichi:—"On the main North West River it is notorious that more illegal fishing has taken place this summer than for years previous. Above a place called 'Deunis', on the main North West, a net was set on stakes clear across and a wall of stone built on the bed of the river. This was seen by sportsmen as a fishing trap, who examined it and found 75 stakes in the pond. Grise and Salmon were caught here, you may say under the very eye of the Fishery Warden, and the fish were actually sold and bought in Newcastle. No person can estimate the destruction that may have been occasioned by this one net; and yet no person can be found to prevent it. Do not throw down the river, to what is known as the 'Big Hole' Salmon pond, Indians were seen spearing, and from this place the Fishery Warden does not live a mile distant. It is stated that they speared out of this hole in two successive nights something like 200 Salmon and Grise. The Fishery Warden on the river, any way, cannot attend, but still this season is the worst. Why? They were catching salmon yesterday (Sept. 19), and if I am credibly informed (which I am, for a man was offering salmon here today for dinner) they are being sold in Newcastle to-day. On the South West the whole management has been outrageous, sweeping and drifting going on persistently.—Hatchman"

Home-Made Manure.

In searching for manures we believe it is a safe plan, in that, as in many other things, to follow the dictates of nature. Nature draws her supplies of fertilizing material from decomposing rocks and living plants...

A GOOD MOVE.—The proposition to reclaim about 5000 acres of land from the old Atlantic at Cole Harbour, and thus altering the map of Nova Scotia to that extent, is to be to that extent carried out. Mr. Watson, an eminent engineer from England, is now on his way in the Allan steamer, accompanied by a competent staff. The project will not be difficult, and there can be no doubt that before long great advantages will be reaped from it...

Creditable to Messrs. Pope and Brecken. Messrs. Pope and Brecken, who fought stoutly in the late Prince Edward Island election for Secularism Schools, under the guise of "payment for results," and were happily beaten, refuse to lend themselves to any purposes of the Separate School party. They have very properly declined to oppose the re-election of the new Attorney General and Provincial Secretary. They bow to the decision of the people on the school question like good citizens. That we will and will be remembered to their advantage by and by. They took a capacity for public business, and it is to be regretted that they took the wrong side of an important public question.
