She had all that the Barons valued most—good birth, a title, and an ancient lineage.

The delight of the family was a little damped, however, when Lady Avice Bardon appeared amongst them. She was of mature age—evidently over thirty-five—tall, thin, and angular, with square shoulders and long thin arms. Her face was not particularly attractive, and her complexion was "undecided"—sometimes clear, but more often brown, and easily reddened by wind or sun. She had piercing black eyes and a thick nose. But then she was an earl's daughter, and as good Mrs. Bardon said, "one cannot have everything," and they wanted "good connections." They were likely to have them with Lady Avice, for she was related to many of the noblest families in England.

Richard Bardon had kept his word. When his son married, he gave up Hyne Court to him, and went himself to live at Forest Castle, a magnificent estate on the other side of King's Forest. He was unwilling to forego all the advantages of his son's grand alliance, but he did not wish to obtrude his own or his family's presence upon the bride.

What Lady Avice lacked in beauty she made up for in splendor of dress. Few women in England dressed more magnificently than she did. Her laces were of priceless value, while her furs were worthy of a Russian empress. Her velvets, satins, and silks filled Mrs. Bardon with the keenest admiration and delight. This was indeed a daughter-in-law after her own heart. Not pretty? No, but what was beauty after all?

And was she not related to half the nobility in England; and did she not bear a grand old name of her own?

"Lady Iris will see now that some one could appreciate my son, if she could not," said the millionaire's wife. John Bardon had said nothing to his mother of his rejection by Lady Iris; but she knew it by instinct.

There had been some stir in the neighborhood when John Bardon brought his wife home. Whatever might be thought of him, there was no one in the county, so far as social position went, who was his wife's superior; so people decided that they must call upon her and pay her the respect due to the daughter and heiress of Lord Deane of Stonebury.

Few knew or guessed that Lady Avice Bardon was a disappointed and discontented woman. Her want of good looks had always been a sore trial to her; and she hated every beautiful woman she saw. In her girlhood she had hoped that her noble name would stand in the place of beauty; but she was mistaken. Perhaps a great deal of her disappointment was owing to her own discontent. She had every gift except that of personal beauty; and for want of that the others were useless. Men who were disposed to like her for her wit and power of repartee or who thought that a marriage with her would be advantageous, were repelled by her envy and discontent.

Sir Bertrand Lynn almost fell in love with her once; but he became so weary of her constant jealousy of every pretty girl to whom he spoke that he left her and sailed for Norway. After that came years of weariness and discontent. Many girls she knew who had neither title nor money quickly found husbands; but no lovers came to her. At thirty-four she gave up all hope of being married, and silently resolved, so far as lay in her power, to punish the male sex for their blindness and want of discernment.

At thirty-five, when she had abandoned all hope, a lover appeared upon the scene. At Vienna John Bardon was introduced to her as the son of a millionaire and the heir of Hyne Court—a man to whom money was as dress, and whose sole desire was to purchase with his wealth relationship with the nobility. She saw through him at once, for she was one of the shrewdest of women. She read him so truly that she knew, without a word from him, that he had had a "grand passion" in his life, a love that had had an unhappy termination. She knew that there was nothing in his heart but the ashes of a dead love. She never deceived herself for a moment as to his real feelings toward her. She wanted a husband, and he wanted a wife who would bring him into contact with the aristocracy.

He must have been disappointed in love, she decided, for the face of the fairest woman had no charm for him, he always spoke of beautiful women as cruel, cold and proud. She never forgot one incident. When they were in Vienna, he called one day to see her. She was, at the time, arranging some flowers, and amongst them was a spray of almond-blossom. She held it up to him with a smile.

"How pretty this is!" she said; but with a muttered curse, he snatched it from her hand and flung it away.

"I beg your pardon," he stammered; "but it reminded me of something I would gladly forget."

"I will forgive you," she told him; after a few moments' silence. "You have loved some beautiful woman, I suppose, and the almond-blossom reminds you of her. Pray do not marry me if your heart is elsewhere!"

"It is not elsewhere," he replied; "and I wish to marry you, Lady Avice—if you will have me!"

"It is not usual," she said calmly, "for the gentleman I am in the habit of associating with to mutter imprecations in the presence of ladies. I shall overlook your fault this time, but do not offend again."

As he left the hotel, he saw the spray of almond-blossom lying on the ground where he had flung it, and he went out of his way to crush it under his heel; there was an evil look on his face as he did so. John Bardon was by no means so good a man as when he had pleaded his suit under the almond-tree.

Three weeks after that he brought his aristocratic wife home to Hyne Court.

It was a proud moment for John Bardon when the carriage from Chandos stopped at the grand entrance of the court, and Lord Caledon and his daughter descended from it.

"A friend advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After using them for some time the pimples began to disappear, and when I had used three cakes of Soap and two boxes of Ointment I was healed." (Signed) Harry Feinstein, 36 Fecourt St., Hartford, Conn., May 12, 1921.

Lord Deane of Stonebury had once rendered Lord Caledon an important political service which had placed Lady Iris's father under a great obligation. When Lady Avice married, Lord Deane wrote to his old friend, telling him how pleased he was that his daughter would be near him, and asking the earl to visit her. Lord Caledon looked rather perplexed as he read the letter. Presently he handed it to his daughter, saying—

"This concerns you rather than me, Iris. What shall we do? It is very awkward."

"I do not see why it should be so, papa," she answered.

"But will it be pleasant, my dear, for you to know Lady Avice and to visit her after that unpleasant little affair with her husband?"

"I have forgotten all about it, papa; and no doubt he has forgotten it too. I will visit her with pleasure. Indeed I do not see how it can be helped."

"No—not after Lord Deane's letter. I suppose, Iris, you never heard a word from Mr. Bardon after he left Chandos in that very abrupt manner?"

"Not one word, papa; and, now that he had married a daughter of your old friend, we will let the dead past bury its dead, and think no more of it. I received Lady Avice's card yesterday, and, if you have no objection, we will drive over to Hyne Court this morning. It is not too warm, although it is August."

France And The World.

The aims of French policy, from the point of view of a highly qualified American observer, are discussed by Paul Scott Mowrer, the Paris correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, in Our World for October, issued to-day. Analyzing the position of France, Mr. Mowrer says:

"France to-day is a compact and relatively self-sufficient country of forty million hard-working, hardy, homogeneous people, conscious of a great tradition and exercising considerable moral and cultural influence beyond their own frontiers. These people rule over a colonial empire, in Africa and Asia, which, in extent, is second only to that of Britain, and which lifts the total of population living under the French flag to one hundred million. Although the French navy has greatly declined in recent years, and was reduced, even theoretically, to a third rank by the Washington treaties, the French army, by its skill, equipment and numbers, makes France beyond question the foremost military power of the continent. Because of Europe's importance in the world, and of France's importance in Europe, France must still be reckoned a first class power."

"What are the aims of this power? How do these forty million people look at the world in which they find themselves after the war? The basic aims of French policy are the strengthening of war-time friendships and progressive execution of the treaties."

"A catchword is current, that France to-day is animated by 'militarism' and 'imperialism.' If, by these words, it is meant that France aspires to play its part in the world as a first class power; that it will never bend to the formula of 'peace at any price'; that it is determined to keep its army large enough to enforce reasonable reparations demands and to defend Poland against a possible Russo-German attack; that it plans to increase its navy, ultimately, to a size consistent with its position as a maritime and colonial power, and is going to intensify the economic and social development of its colonies—then, yes, France is 'militarist' and 'imperialist.' If it is meant, however, that France is not sincerely desirous of peace, that it dreams of European hegemony, that it aims at the destruction or unjust oppression of any people, or that it would like to annex more territory in any part of the world, I may be wrong, but I do not hesitate to state my impression that the words are a slander, unjustified, at this date, by any concrete indication."

SCIENTISTS AND PHYSICIANS
FIND IMPROVED METHODS OF RESUSCITATION.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Voluntarily inhaling deadly gases to the point of asphyxiation, several prominent scientists and physicians have used each other as subjects in experiments resulting in the discovery of improved resuscitation methods which are expected to save hundreds of lives each year. It was announced by the American Gas Association.

The most effective treatment of gas poisoning, the experiments revealed, was the inhalation of oxygen combined with carbon dioxide. When supplemented with manual artificial respiration this treatment was found to be even more effective in reviving the asphyxiated person.

Doubt Value of Old Methods.

A startling result of the experiments was the conclusion of the doctors and scientists that many methods of resuscitation now practiced have a doubtful value, if any, according to their report.

Participating in the experiments, and alternately "gassed" to the point of unconsciousness in a tightly sealed chamber where they remained in the fumes for periods of 30 minutes, were: Dr. Howard W. Haggard and Dr. Yandell Henderson, both of Yale University; Dr. Boyd R. Sanders of the United States bureau of mines; Dr. Cecil K. Drinker, Dr. Walter B. Cannon, Dr. Davis L. Edsall of Yale, and a group of scientist members of the American Gas Association.

Understood Kemalist Proposals Accepted by Conference --- Forest Fires Devastating Ontario --- Big Blaze at Liverpool, N.S. Destroys Many Premises.

ALLIES AGREE ON TURKISH PROPOSALS.
CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 4. The Mudania Conference, it is understood this evening, will probably reach an agreement on all points of the Turkish proposals upon which M. Franklin-Bouillon secured Kemal Pasha's pledge to suspend military movements during the negotiations, with the exception of the provisions relating to the occupation of the Western line of the Maritsa River by Allied troops. The argument on this point is still proceeding. The Allies have agreed to turn over Thrace to the Turkish army in thirty days. The delegates agreed this afternoon to establish a definite line of demarcation between the Kemalist and Turkish forces in the Chanak zone. The space between the opposing forces will be sufficient to take them out of rifle shot thus lessening the danger of immediate conflict.

FOREST FIRES RAGING IN NORTHERN ONTARIO.
TORONTO, Oct. 4. Halleyburg, North Cobalt, and several places north of these points have been wiped out by forest fires which have reached great proportions. It is understood Haslet and Elk Lake, two small mining towns, are among the places destroyed. The trains due in Cobalt this evening from Englehart and Cochrane failed to arrive and grave fears are entertained for their safety.

The loss of life is considerable and is mounting. The towns of Halleyburg with a population of 3500; North Cobalt, 1100; Charlton, 500; and Healey, 250; are totally destroyed and the towns of Englehart partially destroyed. How Thanksgiving Originated.
The Feast of Tabernacles, which in Hebrew bears the title Succoth, meaning booths, will be observed in the synagogues Friday evening, October 6th and on Saturday, October 7th; also on October 14th, the latter day being known as the Feast of Conclusion or Sh'mini Atzereth. Religious services are held on the first and last days in Reform Congregations while Orthodox Congregations observe the first two days and the last two days as a holy convocation. The intervening days of the festive cycle are semi-religious and are so observed among the orthodox.
Succoth is of particular interest to the American people since it is one of those Old Testament festivals which have been bodily incorporated into our national life. Our Thanksgiving Day was appropriated from the institution of the Feast of Tabernacles.
In the light of its Biblical origin Succoth reflects the agricultural environment and atmosphere of the feast. It is known in Scripture as the Feast of Ingathering (Exodus 23:16) and refers to that era when the Israelish farmer gathered in the fruits of autumn and the children of Israel flocked to the central sanctuary in solemn procession, carrying palms and plants. Hence this is also called a Pilgrimage Feast.

In the Priestly Code drawn up after the Babylonian Exile the Feast of Ingathering was connected with the Exodus from Egypt, due to the fact that the town of Succoth, was made the rallying point of the fugitive Hebrews on their departure from Egypt, as some Biblical commentators claim, while others trace it to the many tents erected by the people of Israel in their wanderings through the wilderness.

After the disruption of the Commonwealth of Israel the festival retained the aspects of a harvest feast and so it is regarded in modern times. The observance of this day is retained in order that among all people there may be rejoicing for the blessings which the earth has yielded in full measure. A firm reliance on God's help enables men and women to banish from their hearts all anxiety for their sustenance in days to come.
In the liturgy of the Succoth service the worshipper is impressed with the exalted confidence that God has given His rich bounties unto the sons of men that all might partake of them in joy. This confidence upsets the gloomy dogma that the earth is merely a vale of tears, the dismal abode of sorrowing humanity. In the same connection the dignity of labor and human effort is set forth in all simplicity. But even as the tiniest seed grows and sprouts into a thousand-fold blessing, so it is willed by the same universal law, that none shall receive the gifts of the Author of life without effort. The bread which sustains man in life is rendered honorable and is doubly blessed by the toil and effort put forth by him who eats it. The fruitfulness of the soil and earth's bounties are the gifts of the great Giver who opens His hand and satisfieth the wants of every living creature.

During this period the synagogues are as a rule festooned with fruits and vegetables. Several congregations erect booths in the assembly room of the religious school to illustrate the ceremonial of ancient days and to express gratitude for benefits and blessings obtained from the Giver of all. In many religious schools harvest pageants are enacted. With growing appreciation of the nobility of labor and the essential value of farming as the primary pursuit of the human race the Feast of Succoth is obtaining a new lease of recognition and wider observance.

ANTHONY—CUTLER.
A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at George Street Methodist Church Tuesday morning, the contracting parties being Miss Bessie Anthony, one of the most efficient and popular young ladies of the Postal Telegraph Department, and Mr. Howard Cutler, mail officer of the S.S. Kyle. The bride looked charming, gowned in white satin with bridal veil, and carried a shower bouquet of white asters and maiden-hair fern, and was attended by her sister Miss Isabel Anthony, who looked very pretty in blue canton crepe, with black satin hat, and carrying a bunch of asters and maiden-hair fern. The groom was attended by Mr. Ford Manuel, also of the staff of the Postal Department. The groom's present to the bride was a handsome dressing case, to the bridesmaid a diamond ring, and to the best man gold cuff links. The wedding breakfast was served at the residence of Mr. William Goobie, Brazil Square, and after a very enjoyable morning, the bride and groom accompanied by their friends, motored to Waterford Bridge, where they entrained for Lewisporte, where the honeymoon will be spent at the residence of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Constable Cramm, after which they will proceed to Channel, their future home. The presents received were many and costly, including a dinner and tea set from the staff of Postal Telegraphs. We wish them many happy years of Life's Matrimonial Sea.—Com.

GERMAN FISH AFFECT N.F. SALES.
The following letter dated Sept. 12, has been received by the Board of Trade from Messrs. Lind and Couto, Fish Importers, Oporto:—"Demand is not very brisk, and although prices in currency are higher than before the recent break in the exchange, they do not compensate for the difference in the rate, and shippers are therefore now receiving much smaller returns in sterling. The continuous supplies of Danish, French, and German cures, especially the last, are affecting the demand for British. German fish is being sold at very low prices, large and medium of this quality, fetching the equivalent of 22/9 per cwt. c.i.f. About 12,000 cwt. of this cure have arrived here since August 27th, and further large quantities are expected. Of course the present article and suits the pockets of the majority of the Portuguese people at the present time. Altogether the outlook is not very bright, but we trust, that with the approach of the vintage, the demand for British fish will increase considerably. Exchange continues to decline and is to-day quoted at 2/23/32d. for cheque on London."

Pitiless Government of The Bees.

"In Bee-Civilization the State is everything, the individual nothing," writes Dallas Lore Sharp in August Harper's Magazine. "Each one exists for the whole, but the whole exists for no one. The individual is born to serve, and the moment he ceases to serve, that moment he dies—worker, or drone, or queen, even the unborn young in their cradle coils. For let young come knocking at the door, and more baby mouths to feed than there are stores to feed them from, and the tender young are torn into the outer-cold. Let the last virgin queen of the season be mated, and not only does that drone perish in the act, but all the drones in the hive no longer needed are bundled, bag and baggage, outside, to tumble for one pathetic moment before they die at their own door. Let the worker come home with frayed wing, falling ever so little of her full capacity production, and she is set upon; never to be seen again in the hive; let the queen-mother, in the height of the honey flow, come short in her prodigious task of keeping the colony at its maximum strength; let her fall off from laying her two thousand to three thousand eggs per day, and a new queen is deliberately prepared for the old mother, like any drone or worker, falling a victim to the pitiless policy of the State."

"I do not know how long the bees had stood on their ancient stands under the hickories, but on opening the hired door at the back of one clear hand. This colony swarmed May 3, 1862, and there within the glass wall, behind the wooden door, were the bees at work that June day, as they had been working for forty years and more since that entry was made! More than forty generations of bees, more than forty dynasties of queens, perhaps, had come and gone in those years, yet the bees and the queen were here! The Queen is dead, long live the Queen; and I sat thrilled at the thought of life—how steady, how immortal it is! And yet the living, how swift they pass! How their swarming multitudes fade away!

"That was nearly twenty years ago, and still the colony lived on, as for the forty years before it had lived on, as for the thousand years to come it will live, on and on! Ten thousand years ago Egypt was a great nation, and thousands of years before that, before the Egyptians had built their pyramids, beekeeping was known among them, their most ancient hieroglyphics showing that the 'king bee' was taken by them to represent the human king.

"And far back in those dim and distant times this colony in my garden, that swarmed with their old queen, 'May 3, 1862,' was at work among the flowers. Older, incomparably older than the oldest civilization we have record of, is this bee community in the hive. Bee civilization, queen and drone and worker—the theory and practice of the supremacy of the state—is the oldest civilization in the world."

Electricity Swerves Bullets From Course.

At a rifle meeting in Switzerland it was discovered that the steel-jacketed bullets of the marksmen were swerved from their course by the influence of telegraph and telephone wires running alongside the range. Experiments were then made at Thun by placing four steel cables parallel with the range and about 40 yards distant from it, sending a current of 8000 volts through them.
The effect, it is said, was to turn the bullets so far from their course that the deviation amounted to 24 yards on a range of 300 yards. The bullets on being taken from the targets were found to be magnetized. Next, on an artillery range of 3,000 yards, the electro-magnetic influence was generated 200 yards in front of the targets and 40 yards to one side. The projectiles were swerved 14 degrees from a straight line—Washington Star.

Hidden M...
BIBBY PAINT
AFTER
Under the direction of the Royal Commission on the Royal Navy, the Admiralty has issued a report on the results of a series of experiments conducted at the Royal Naval School of Artillery, Haslemere, Surrey, in 1921. The experiments were conducted with a view to determining the effect of the use of high explosive shells on the hulls of ships. The results of the experiments show that the use of high explosive shells is not recommended for the destruction of ships, as the shells are liable to explode on impact, and the explosion is liable to cause the ship to sink. The Admiralty has therefore decided to discontinue the use of high explosive shells for the destruction of ships.

Hidden Masterpiece.

ABBAY PAINTINGS REVEALED AFTER 200 YEARS.
Under the direction of Mr. Tristram, of the Royal Society of Arts, restoration work is being carried out at Westminster Abbey.

As a result of this work several "finds" of historic and artistic value have been made, and many beautiful pieces of stonework and frescoes have been cleaned of the grime that obscured them for centuries.

The stone shields that decorate the wall of the north and south choir aisles are now shining in their medieval splendor, after having been smoothed for 200 years in varnish. These shields, which are the oldest specimens of architectural heraldry in the world were placed there by Henry III. when the building was new. They include the coat-of-arms of Simon de Montfort, Louis IX, of France, and King Henry himself.

Examples of gorgeous Early English decorations have been discovered on the tomb of Edmund Crouchback and the two others on the north side of the High Altar.

Here it was that the first experiments were made on the dimming of varnish that had been used so lavishly, perhaps under the direction of St. Christopher Wren, with the mistaken idea of preserving the color. Instead of almost black surfaces that were seen only a year ago, these tombs now appear a mass of brilliant coloring that pays high tribute to the craftsmanship of the men who decorated them seven centuries ago.

Innumerable Uses of Electric Motor.

It is not generally realized to what extent the use of the electric motor as a small and handy source of power has been developed. There are, in fact, so many of these uses that it is difficult to enumerate them.

Laundry machinery is largely operated by electric motors, and especially is this true of the centrifugal dryers and mangles. As everybody knows, there are now offered family washing machines operated in much the same way but on a smaller scale.

In the great hotels and restaurants, power driven blowers, pumps, dumb-walkers, exhausters, knife-cleaners, and chopping and mixing machines are in evidence on every hand, while the number of electrically operated sewing machines in the homes of the country is increasing very rapidly, to say nothing of the electric vacuum cleaner.

Motor-driven polishers have been brought out for use in corridors, the second floors in large halls and public buildings; motor-driven sweepers, which are used in the big department stores for quickly sweeping the long aisles and wide open spaces, and also electrically operated carpet sweepers for domestic use.

The electric motor is also largely employed by the medical profession. Physicians find it of great value for operating atomizers, various special apparatus for massage purposes and in connection with the many forms of apparatus which have been devised for effecting special exercises of the human body.

Modern printing offices, bookbinderies and the allied trades, too, make extensive use of motors.

Many interesting, special and labor saving electrically operated tools may be found in manufacturing establishments in the western part of the United States and in Mexico the small electric motor is much used for operating pumps employed in distributing water for irrigating purposes in this section, where the rainfall is very scanty or entirely absent.

Mining engineers are adopting the motor-drive and electric distribution of power in much of the new development work now being undertaken and the substitution of electricity for compressed air is making considerable progress in the re-equipment of some of the mines already in production.—Washington Star.

Killing With Cruelty.

This is what the great packing houses of the country are doing. The slaughter-houses of cities like Chicago and Omaha are full of suffering and millions of helpless animals. If the public could see what goes on in these gigantic shambles it would not denounce them till they abolished the worst of their needless cruelties. They kill thousands of sheep. To kill humanely would reduce profits. To attack them in the courts is to attack men backed by hundreds of millions of dollars. For all that, they must learn sooner or later to do justly, if not to love mercy. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they were made to grind is cruelty. The Omaha slaughter-house was saw and described last year. Between these blood-beasted pens there tortured cattle, sheep and swine die by the tens of thousands every day, and the tables of gentle men and women, there is but the veil of the butcher shop. Yet that veil is thick enough to shut out from those who eat their flesh the groans and the howling sobs and the beating of the heart. These cries, let no man doubt, have entered into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth.—Our Dumb Animals.

Commercial Night School.

PREPARING FOR POSITIONS, 1923. "Be prepared" was the best of the opening address delivered on Monday evening at the Commercial Night School. If Newfoundland is to advance, its young people must be willing to prepare by training better and working better to accomplish more than at present, during their spare time. Then no power on earth can keep them back. Being great or little is all a matter of ambition and effort. The poor and the little in this city are those who have never really prepared to advance.

"Knowledge is power." You may have the material and the ability, but if you lack ambition and knowledge you can never advance. You are like a man sitting on a bench, surrounded by everything necessary for building a beautiful home, for example—lumber, cement, sand, brick, tools, etc.—but there is just one thing lacking and that is knowledge of how to build. Such a man is ignorant of preparing for his opportunity. The object of the Commercial Night School is to teach young people during their spare time, how to use materials within their reach, to build up a successful career; and all who can possibly take advantage of this excellent opportunity should lose no time in attending. Six good reasons were given for business preparations:

- (1) Because of the short time it takes by this up-to-date method to qualify for a well-paid office position.
- (2) There is a constant and active demand for well trained stenographers, book-keepers, and sales people; and larger salaries are being paid to-day to those prepared.
- (3) Time and money invested is repaid manifold—a safe and sure investment.
- (4) Practical training is necessary to start at a good salary.
- (5) It is a safe-guard against poverty or adversity for young men or women.
- (6) It is better than Latin or French during these trying times, enabling all to prepare to earn a good living, to become successful, and to enjoy the good things in life that belong to everybody who will prepare now while they have the opportunity.

A long list of successful students placed last year were read, and the loyalty of old students acknowledged, also their capacity, industry and enterprise in bringing in so many of their friends as students, testifying to the educational success of the institution. Their progress and loyalty were an encouragement, inspiration and reward, and an incentive to greater effort in this valuable service, that is thus being rendered to the country for educational advancement and the business interests of the city.

The Origin of Sherlock Holmes.

Dr. Joseph Bell, the Scottish surgeon, who died on October 5, 1911, enjoyed a fame extending far beyond medical circles, for he was the original of Conan Doyle's character "Sherlock Holmes." The gentle art of discovering a murderer by his cigar ash was evolved in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's mind as the result of a minute observation of the inductive methods of Dr. Bell. Sir Arthur in his medical student days at Edinburgh University acted as ward clerk to Dr. Bell, when the latter was a surgeon at the Royal Infirmary; noting down the particulars of the cases. He describes Dr. Bell as a man with sharp, piercing grey eyes, eagle nose, and striking features, who would "sit in his chair with fingers together—he was very dexterous with his hands—and just look at the man or woman before him. With a face like a Red Indian, he would diagnose the patients as they came in, tell them their symptoms, and give them details of their lives. He hardly ever made a mistake. "Gentlemen," he would say to the students, "I am not sure whether this man is a cork-cutter or a slater. I observe a slight hardening on one side of his forefinger and a little thickening on the outside of his thumb, and that is a sure sign that he is either one or the other." He would observe to another patient "You are a soldier, a non-commissioned officer, and you have served in Bermuda," and then turning to the students he would point out that the man came into the room without taking off his hat, as he would go into the orderly room, that his air showed he was a non-commissioned officer, and he had on his head a peculiar rash known only in Bermuda. "You are a cobbler, I see," the professor would begin on approaching another patient, directing the students' attention as he spoke, to the inside-knee of the man's trousers, which was worn where he had rested the lapstone. Dr. Bell, who was born in 1837, was a familiar figure as he drove through the streets of Edinburgh with his gleaming eyes intent on everything.

MARSHALL BROTHERS

Fannie Hurst, Famous Author.

It cannot be denied that Fannie Hurst is one of the popular writers of the day, and that she gained her prestige by hard work and persevering effort. Born in Hamilton, O., she spent her childhood in St. Louis. She is a graduate of Washington University, later doing post-graduate work at Columbia. The story of her success is a narrative of ten years of bitter disappointment and rejections by magazines. After her first story was printed acceptances of others poured in like a stream, such publications as the Saturday Evening Post, Hearst's Cosmopolitan and McClure's adding to her fame.

"Just Around the Corner" is based on a short story by Miss Hurst entitled "Superman." This story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post in 1916. Later it was included in Miss Hurst's first collection of short stories published by Harper & Bros., under the title of "Just Around the Corner." The story attracted wide attention and its publication helped to bring Miss Hurst into the forefront of short story writers in the book world.

FRANCES MARION, DIRECTOR AND SCENARIST.

No happier combination for a motion picture could have been conceived than that of Fannie Hurst, as author and Frances Marion, as scenario writer and director. Miss Marion, a ### Home Coming of old Time Newfoundlander.

Mr. Thomas A. Powers, of Los Angeles, California, who migrated from Newfoundland over sixty years ago, and has since made good in the U.S.A. as a passenger this morning by the S.S. Silvia on a short visit to the Homeland. Mr. Powers returns again by the Silvia to New York, en route to California. Mr. Powers is a son of the late Pierce Powers who kept a well known clothing house on Water Street some three score years ago, and comes from a family well known in Newfoundland History. We extend a hearty welcome to Mr. Powers, who, though near 80 years of age would pass for a man of sixty, and whose short, will be filled with many happy remembrances.

Mr. Powers fought with the Grand Army of the Republic in the Civil War in the U.S.A. 1861-65.

S.A. Young People's Entertainment.

The No. 3 Citadel, Adelaide Street, was well filled last evening when a concert was given by the young people of the corps. The chair was taken by C. Rodway, Esq., who performed his duties in a very creditable manner. The various performers drew loud applause from the audience. After a very enjoyable programme was gone through, ice-cream and candy was served by the ladies of the Home League and a good sum realized for the work of the corps.

Gambling Increasing

Roulette wheels in popular-priced models are being displayed more generally than ever before in New York stores. Not many months ago, roulette wheels were not easy to buy there. They were kept in stock at comparatively few places and were seldom displayed. To-day, however, a walk about any part of the town reveals in the windows of sporting goods shops and novelty shops wheels of all kinds conspicuously on view. There are crude wheels with lithographed numbered discs selling at low prices. There are small, beautifully finished and balanced wheels numbered according to the regular roulette numbering system and mounting in size and price until the standard also mahogany mounted wheel is reached. Storekeepers report an unusual demand for these devices. With each wheel is supplied, of course, a regular table cover layout, squared and numbered.

Possibilities of Gliding Machines.

Is the time coming when we shall be able to fly anywhere like the birds, without engines or similar power?

The wonderful flight performed in Germany recently with a glider shows that there may be a great future for this style of flying machine. Taking off from a hill-top, a German student in a motorless glider cruised about for three hours before he landed—at a spot 1,000ft. above the starting point!

The glider, an extraordinary little "air-yachting" machine, has fixed curved wings on either side of a light body. It has a rudder and control surfaces by which the pilot causes it to ascend or descend, and by which he balances it should it tilt forward.

Making Use of Wind.

The pilot has to learn to take advantage of the wind just as a bird does in "sailing." Once launched from the hill-top, the aviator, who must learn aerial balance as you learn balance on a cycle, starts a gliding descent.

Then he has to use his "air sense"—the acquisition of some of the instinctive skill of the bird. He must manoeuvre his machine into some powerful wind-wave which bears him up with it until he is high above the hill-top from which he started. He then profits by the height he has gained to dip the bow of his machine downwards, and at the end of his glide another big wind-wave carries him aloft again.

This new development may mean cheap aeroplanes for all. The handicap of taking the machine to the top of the hill may be easily overcome, as small-powered engines—like those fitted to motor-cycles—could be attached to the glider to lift it up. Once up in the air, power could be shut off, and the glide continued in whatever direction desired.

AUTOMOBILE TIRES.—We have a small shipment of Tires which will be sold at bargain prices. All new. Different sizes. Also 30 x 3 1/2 Tubes.—E. D. SPURRELL, 365 Water Street. sept. 15, oct. 11

MILLEY'S.

Classic Poisoners.

HENBANE, ACONITE, AND HEMLOCK.

In the current number of Conquest, Professor J. B. Cohen, D.Sc., explains who were the first exponents in the art of poisoning.

According to Greek mythology, Hecate, the witch daughter of Night and wife of King Etes of Colchis, was learned in poisonous herbs and their use for good or evil. Her wisdom descended to her daughters, Medea and Circe, and it was by Medea's agency in administering a narcotic to the dragon that guarded the Golden Fleece that Jason was able to achieve his purpose.

Phlometer.

Attalus Philometer, the last king of Pergamos, understood the uses of hemlock, aconite, and other plant poisons.

He died in 133 B.C., and a year after his death Mithridates, Eupator was born, who is supposed to have concocted the celebrated drug theriac, which was compounded of fifty-four different ingredients. He employed his poisonous mixtures not only for condemned criminals, but also for removing inconvenient persons whom he had reason to suspect of treachery, and is supposed to have poisoned his son Ariarathes and Alcaeus of Sardis. According to Pliny he made experiments on immunity, and by daily taking an antidote before his dose of poison rendered himself so immune that, after his defeat on the Euphrates in 83 B.C. by Pompey, when he wished to destroy himself by poison, the dose proved ineffectual, and he had to command one of his soldiers to slay him.

Nicander of Colophon, who lived in 200 B.C., wrote two books on poisons. He describes the properties of opium, henbane, poisonous fungi, meadow saffron, and hemlock, and divides them into those which operate quickly and those which act slowly, and describes a number of emetics which he recommends as antidotes. The Romans were also skilled in the use of poison.

According to one story, which is not, however, authenticated, 170 women were condemned in 332 B.C. in Rome for administering poison. In later years, during the time of the emperors, it was a common practice to dispose of persons by poison, a task usually assigned to women. Horace speaks of a certain Canidia, who prepared by night poisons and lovepotions and dealt in all kinds of sorcery. Rome, too, was the scene of the exploits of the notorious Locusta, who had an evil reputation as a poison mixer.

Snake Bite.

Poisoning by snake-bite has been known for many years. Cleopatra's death through the sting of a snake is the best known in early times.

When, after the naval battle of Actium, Cleopatra, the Egyptian queen, fearing to fall into the hands of the conqueror, Octavius, contemplated suicide. She experimented with this object on condemned criminals with different poisons, and found that death from the bite of a viper came without pain or convulsions, but produced a torpid condition and slow dissolution. She therefore, as Plutarch's story goes, had an asp smuggled in a basket of fruit brought by a shepherd, and allowed it to bite her arm.

And so she died.

Shakespeare, in "Anthony and Cleopatra," describes it thus:—"Come, then mortal wretch, with thy sharp teeth this knot intricate of life at once untie; poor venomous fool, Be angry and despatch."

An American Writer at the Sealfishery.

What George Allan England Wrote About Our Winter Industry.

To-day we begin the publication of an article entitled "The Greatest Hunt in the World," which George Allan England, an American journalist and novelist, described the Newfoundland Sealfishery for the readers of the Saturday Evening Post. This is a further article which is called "Vikings of the North," have been the subject of severe criticism in the local press, a criticism which a careful perusal of them will show to have been to a great extent, undeserved. The author writes of certain Newfoundlanders as he saw them, and while some of the things he says may not be altogether palatable, on the whole, his comment redounds to the credit of the men and the colony that produced them. This is how he concludes "Vikings of the North."

"GREAT MEN AND TRUE, IN MANY WAYS THE FINEST BREED IN THE WHOLE ROUND WORLD INDEED THEY ARE, THESE VIKINGS OF THE NORTH—GENTLEMEN UNAFRAID."

We shall, however, refrain from further comment and will leave our readers to judge for themselves how much of the criticism levelled at Mr. England is deserved and how much unjustified.

"Whitecoats!" yelled a hoarse voice from the cabin compartment. The instant confusion electrified everybody. Captain, bosun, carpenter, master-at-arms and all jumped up from the deck-covered table where they had been having our lobcouse, potatoes and jam. Such a shouting, such a running, such a buckling of sheath knives, grabbing of towlines and murderous-looking glances you never could imagine. To tumbled all hands and on the coal-blackened decks of the Terra Nova. One sealer early impaled me with his gaff point as I scrambled for binoculars and camera. Never mind! Whitecoats. Feet thudded the decks. Forward, arms of Newfoundlanders were curling from the to'gal'n house, the green-decks, the dunnage. Grimed faces appeared at the engine-room scuttle, the galleys. Babel broke loose. Sealers lined the broad rails, shouting out toward the illimitable plain of arctic ice that blazed, shining white, under the March sun. "Whitecoats! Hear 'em bawlin'!" Shouts, laughter, cheers. "Here 'em de white jackets, boys!" From a ship of anxious questing, she had become a ship of joyous finding. The thrill that comes but once a year was here. For now we were to have a rally at the whitecoats, a killing of young seals. The Terra Nova, first of all the St. John's fleet, struck the fat. "Overboard, my sons!" shouted Capt. Abram Kean, admiral of the fleet, from the bridge he had already reached. "You'll see somethin' like seal runnin', now we've got down the regular sheet ice and no more 'ole get into 'em!"

OVERBOARD AND AT 'EM.
But the men needed no urging. They dived for the kill as harts for spring streams. Even before the ship had backed into the edge of a vast, rising flow that broke crisply like licentious candy, they had escalated the rail, eager for a go at this white patch, the outskirts of the great Atlantic herd; they had slid down the ropes to the side sticks, or horizontal rope-hang timbers, and were all ready to spring. For in this deeper, same of hunched necks with bird feet, there at last was a chance to get to the bottom. After all these days of fishing, grinding, wallowing in the white wilderness, here was a gain-slaughter.

First of all actually to make the sea was Cyril, the cap'n's grandson, a mere boy. Sixteen, I think he was; he boys grow strong 'ardly in these hardy latitudes. He had the same game of hunched necks with bird feet, scrambling with gaitlike agility to solid ice, and first they heaved Eskimo stinky-woppers, the boots, ran like madmen across fantastic and tumbled-up confusion. At the rail, meantime, I watched; who by the grace of the ship owner, Bowring Bros., had been permitted to go to the ice. Watching, I got the whitecoats bawling, yapping out or lying prone on the floes that had like frosting on some Brobagnian cake.

SPEEDY CYRIL.
The old seals raised inquiring eyes, began to swing round, to get the way with their peculiarly shiny shinnies—it certainly would not allow in United States waters, does to their shame be it said, the first to make for the rifts and bing holes. The females linger, but not long. They had to go, one or another—into the sea or under the cutting knife. With a very general farewell wave of scutters, or flippers, the fond parents yanked. But the young, the coveted white, still remained. "Here'm de fat, sir!" a grizzled old avista, Boy man said to me. "Only the skin o' swifles, but dat 'in a min!"

ropes. Aboard, they were pulled in a jiffy. A comfortable pile of fat already filled the scuppers, steaming. "Come aboard, all hands!" Up they swarmed, hissing, grimacing of hand and boot. Up the ropes they hauled themselves, over the rail. More bawling. The decks smoked and guttered. The sweet, pure Arctic air, tingling with ozone, grew heavy with a hot, sickish smell. My camera was working overtime.

"Full speed ahead!" shouted Cap'n Kean. The brigadier jerked the engine room telegraph. A bell clanged far below. The archaic engines began to thump and thud again, like a tired heart. Away drew the Terra Nova from that place where now, save for some startled survivors surging up and down in open bays, all seal life had vanished. Away she ground, crushed, shuddered through the floes, as for so many days now. But a different spirit it was here. Tuned up, electrified, nerve-taut, her men were different men. For the first honors of the spring—as wireless assured us—were the Terra Nova's. She was then, as still then she remained, high liner of the fleet.

The first whitecoat out, or kill, had been made.

COMMERCIAL SEAL PRODUCTS.
With an eagerness no less acute than the men's I was all the time doing my own hunting, even though it's hard to operate camera and pencil with freezing fingers; but the task was worth while; for if life in the raw has power to stir the pulses, the seal hunt puts them high.

Before wading through any more slaughter, let's stop a moment to get some general idea about this hunt as a whole. The two commercially hunted Atlantic seals are the harps and the hood, constant to the Pacific fur seal, yet killed, not for their fur but for their hides and fat. Only the seal fur is not fast, save that only of the cat, or stillborn seal. The hides and fat, however, are immensely valuable. At St. John's the sculps are peeled, the skins salted and sent to England to be worked up into leather; the fat is ground, steam-cooked, refined, sun-dried in glass-rooted tanks till it's a pure white, tasteless and odorless oil, and that's a miracle, no less; for seal sculps and oil, originally, remind one of anything but the roses of Gulistan.

My lady dainty everywhere carries handbags and fine leather articles made of such skins; yes, often wears shoes made of them too. Her costliest perfumes and soaps often contain seal oil; and by chance her purest olive oil holds a good percentage that came from the frozen north. The finest of lubricating oil, too, is a seal product. Then, there are other uses; but enough of this. One likes to save one's conscience, re the killing of this extremely warm-blooded mammal, by reflecting how very necessary it is:

The hunt takes place every spring, in the tremendous ice field that drifts down from Greenland and the Labrador, finally to melt on the Banks. The vast herd summer far north. As autumn nips the seas to pack ice they migrate, some down Hudson Bay, and others across the Labrador and Green-land coasts. Part of the herd pass through the Straits of Belle Isle and down the Gulf of St. Lawrence; part keep to the open Atlantic. Why, no one knows; but the strings of hoods always swim to the seaward of the harps, either in the gulf or at sea. These two species always migrate in company, but never mix.

They winter on the banks—incidentally destroying millions of tons of food fish—and toward winter turn north again. As they meet the ice they take to the land, and about the last of February, they bear their young, called pups. In spite of the fact that each female has only one pup a year, and these infants are the chief object of the hunt, the herds seem increasing rather than diminishing.

DAUNTLESS SHIPS AND SHIPMEN.
In the old sailing-vessel days, when many thousands of men were out, serious inroads were made; but now, that only nine or ten steamers go to the ice, with perhaps fifteen hundred men, only one to two hundred thousand are taken, as against five to six hundred thousand in former times. This killing, however, remains the greatest hunt in the world, not only in number of mammals slaughtered, but also in point of perils from ice, storm, fire explosion, drowning—a whole catalogue of hardships that the Newfoundlanders alone—and of these only men of the northern bays—can possibly endure.

It reads easy, in an armchair; but my Lord, if you could only put in six weeks of it as I did! A few thousand seals are killed by men working offshore on the drift floe; but the vast bulk of the hunt is carried out by the regular St. John's fleet owned by three firms. Old-time wood on ships they all are, using both sail and steam and carrying heavy crews of as many as a hundred and sixty men. Built of green heart oak, in bonny Dundee, massively timbered, and with great iron-sheathed bows, these dauntless ships, in charge of ice masters incredibly bold and skilled, slog out through the ice pack. Two or three usually go to the Gulf, the rest to the front, where, roughly speaking, they operate in the drifting snow-binding and hurricane-swept world of ice, growlers and bergs between the Newfoundland and the Greenland coasts. "Roughly speaking" is right too!

Young seals and old alike are slaughtered, but preference goes to the whitecoats, because their fat—fat means skins as well—brings the higher price and is easier to handle. The young can be gaffed. In many cases the wary old ones have to be shot, and ammunition costs money. Seal shooting is dangerous work, too, as we shall presently see. The open season is from March fifteenth till May first, or until about a month after the young have rolled off their protective covering and dipped or plunged into the sea.

An enormous area is worked over. Day after day, week after week, the ships—sometimes close together, sometimes out of sight of each other—grind, crash, groan, and shudder thru the ice, blist their way through it with bombs, drift with it when tipped, free themselves and struggle against every possible object and hardship that Nature, in her most terrible moods, can find against them. And ever they are killing; ever letting down the precious pelts. The only limit to the kill is determined by luck and the capacity of the ships to carry fat below and on deck. Coal, living space, everything is sacrificed to the fat—sometimes even life itself, as Newfoundland well knows.

The Dominion's prosperity hangs largely on the annual struggle of the seal fishery. For these people still insist that seals are fish—feeds thousands of hungry mouths ashore. A bad one brings misery in its train. The price of fat fluctuates sharply. During the war I believe it was up to some twelve dollars a qt., a qt. being about one hundred pounds. This year it was only four dollars for whitecoats and three dollars for bedlamers, or older seals. Of this, one-third goes to each of three groups: Captain and officers, common hands, ship owners. All kinds of minor arrangements exist, bonuses, and so on; but the rough statement must do.

TRUMPS AND JOKES.
Luck and skill are trumps. Luck is the real joker. With it, the Wolf once brought in twenty-seven thousand in only eleven days. Without it, a ship may suffer weeks in misery and come home almost blanked. The high-line achievement of the fleet was made by Cap'n Kean in 1910, when he headed through the Notch at St. John's aboard the Florizal, with some more than forty-nine thousand sculps aboard. Cap'n Kean is known as a Jewler, which is the reverse of a flunker, a flunker being, in United States, a Jonah.

These are all the statistics I am going to load into the article, so pluck up heart again. We shall get back to the killing almost at once; also to some very satisfying perils and disasters. I want only to say, here, that every spring all Newfoundland thinks and talks little except seal; and that the men themselves toil night and day, through hardships quite incredible to an outsider, with a daring zeal that one must see to understand.

I lived, as a kind of unofficial general-utility man, for some five weeks on board the historic old Terra Nova—the very ship, you remember, which Scott and Shackleton used in much of their antarctic exploration. Later I transferred over the ice to the Eagle. Thus I had experience such as no other American writer has ever had, on two old-time sealers. Marvellous, thrilling and all that—but never again!

Day by day and night by night, except when we were burned down—stopped—in the ice, the rugged ship fought her way on, in all directions and seemingly in none. And ever sculps accumulated above; were tallied down, below. Time seemed lost. Sense of location vanished. It seemed only that we were somewhere in a limitless, frozen, dazzling, heaving, grinding wilderness of white.

Gales swept us, with a blistering cold that seemed to peel the very skin from my face. Fogs folded us. Snow wrapped up the whole world in a shroud. Black nights of ineffable, starry splendor bent over us. The northern lights' vivacious and amber curtains waved above us more gloriously than words can tell. Sun dogs gleamed, mock, suns glowed, the ice blink and loom shot the horizons far aloft in palisades of mytic white. Mirages lifted, floated. Bergs crushed, growling, through the floes. We justified them familiarly, neighboring death with an indifference born of hard experience. A wonderland such as southern folk never even dream of—a wonderland of sights, sounds, colors indescribable—wrapped us to the exclusion of all other life. Some day, by the way, an enterprising tourist agency will reap a fortune by outfitting a stout steamer to take American millionaires seal hunting. In common parlance an expedition of this kind would have every other possible hind faded. Yes, I could organize such a hunt. Trot out your millionaires!

Day by day, week by week—while I engaged in poetic evocations of peeling potatoes for the cooks, helping load ice, emptying ashes overseas as a member of the ash-cat gang, doing my bit at navigation, dragging in tows, standing long cold tricks at the wheel, counting seals' tails, cutting tally sticks, filling cartridges and Lord knows what else—all this time, I say, the ship battled on, on, eternally on through the white wilderness.

Household Notes.

To can apples, boil a half cup sugar with 2 cups water for 5 minutes. Add 2 cups apples, cut in eights, and boil until clear. Pour sauce into sterilized jars and seal.

Green peppers are excellent stuffed with minced cooked ham, mixed with an equal quantity of cooked rice, and seasoned with minced onions, pimento and white sauce.

To prepare baked apples in a truly regal style, fill the centres with chop-ped figs, raisins and nuts, sweeten with brown sugar, bake as usual and serve when cold with whipped cream.

It is worth while to keep three onions planted in flower pots in the kitchen throughout the winter. When onion flavoring is required for stews, soups or salads, cut off the young shoots.

Before dyeing material that is new, boil for 20 minutes in water and then rinse thoroughly. This removes sizing or any chemical left by the finishing process. Stir during the boiling.

A PROMINENT AMERICAN MILLIONAIRE SAYS:
"Early in my business career I made it a rigid rule to invest a third of my net yearly income in Life Insurance. Now, at age 56, and with an estate of a few million dollars, I can truthfully say that the third I invested each year in Life Insurance to-day constitutes the greater and best part of my estate."

YOU need more Life Insurance NOW. Let us "fit" you with the proper kind of Policy.
