Legislature of Ontario. BY

TORONTO, Nov. 17.

Toronto, Nov. 17.

The House concurred in the amendments made in Committee to the Bill for securing the Independence of the Legislative Assembly after the following amendment on motion of the Attorney General was passed. The seventh section provided that, if a member of the Administration resigned his office, and within one month after his resignation, accepted any other office in the Administration, he should not therefore vacate his seat in the Legislative Assembly. The following words were added: "unless in the meantime the Administration of which such person was a member shall have resigned, and a new Administration shall have occupied the said offices." A change was also made so that the new bill would take effect from and after the dissolution of the present Legislative Assembly.

Mr. McKellar moved an amendment referring the report back, and amending it so as to disqualify members of the Senate or House of Commons from sitting in the Local Legislature.

Attorney General Macdonald moved in amendment to Mr. McKellar's amendment. emanates from the French war office, and has no doubt received the care-ful supervision and sanction of the and Toronto rivals. Emperor. Clearly enough its aim is political, as may be seen by the explanation which is appended to the map. As we said it represents France as she was after Waterloo, then during the July Monarchy, and as she now is. In the first view we have France hemmed in by petty States which by the treaties of 1815 made it impossible for her to move. In the second picture she is no longer so "cribbed cabined and confined," for the revolution in Belgium had improved her position by the destruction of severa position by the destruction of several strongholds on the frontier, Besides, France had raised numerous defences of her own, and the changed position of the Germanic Confederation were also in her favour. Then we have the third picture, which represents the empire as it now is. France is once more as it should be. It is her Augustan age, for on the Italian frontier she has assumed her natural boundaries—thanks to her war for an idea, and freeing Italy from the Alps to the Adriatic. Holland is independent, and no longer embarassed by the Luxembourg—thanks to Bismarck. The German confederation is destroyed, but to reappear more compact under the second of the second o

And no longer embarassed by the Luxembourg—thanks to Bismarck. The German confederation is destroyed, but to reappear more compact under Prussia. It is gratifying to find that while "Prussia has been augmented, it has not been to the injury of France"—the latter being surrounded by independent nations, and including Algeria, counts 40,000 of people, while Prussia and even Southern Germany number but 35,000,000, consequently, France has nothing to fear from nobody.

Such is the pleasant picture Louis Napoleon draws for his people, but we mistake their temper very much if it pleases them. It sobject is but to throw dust in the eyes of the nation, which is not so foolish as to swallow this latest dish served up to its vanity. It is intended to mask an ulterior move, be assured. If Sadowa was a gain to France, and Prussian aggrandizement an advantage, why tell us all these things so late, after France has thrown away so many millions in increasing her armaments, repairing fortresses, adding to her navy, and doubling her effective force? It only adds another instance to the many blunders of the government—in having no definite object in view—in its helpless drifting towards a gaol which no one can at present clearly forces. The republican element is still strong in France, and the apparent extinct embers of the old revolutionary spirit only require to be fanned to make them again blaze up in all their fury. These republicans have been incited to new zeal and activity by the success of the revolution in Spain. What Spaniards were able to selve against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous, they hope to be strong enough to to accomplish against the Bourbous and the strong of the strong of the strong of t he now shows on so many occasions is anything but calculated to avert the

It admits that it has been inconsistent, but tries to offer an excuse for its conduct by charging Messrs Stirton and Gow with the same fault, 'in supporting the Coalition and Patent Combination after the violent speeches they made against those Governments at the general election,' The confession is good, but it is not made in the right spirit, and the excuse won't stand the test. The assertion is wholly untrue, for both these gentleman have been, and are, opponents of the Federal and Local Governments, in proof of which (as regards Mr. Gow) we have only to point to the vote in our columns to-day on the dual representation question, on which he voted directly against the Government. It would have been better if the Advertiser had made the simple confession, and not tried to smooth it over with an untruth which is so patent and palpable that no one can miss noticing it. for no sane man would make such a

The Braes of Yarrow

An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

Tushielaw was for a moment perplexed a the steady denial of the dwarf, but he speedily concluded that this was mere subterfuse, and, as if completely to break down the bold defence Hornie had kept up, a mosstrooper entered with the intelligence that Kaza had quitted the tower. Then holding out the resusted key of the secret chest, he said—
'Is this the key ye were seeking, master?'
Tushielaw snatched it from him eagerly.
'Where got you this?'
'By the kitchen fire.'
'That's where Hornie was sitting,' said Yesholm Will,' and he has drepped it there in case we should ripe him.'
Buch was the case, and Hornie saw that his last hope of secape was gone.
Tushielaw pounced upon him, and abouting to the others to bring lights, dragged bale dwarf down to the cavernous passage.
Whilst the two men stood behind holding alloof a couple of pine torches, and barring the way against the culprit should he attempt to move, the chief examined the iron box. Finding it empty, he gripped Hornie sawsgaly by the throat.

'Speak, where is the thief?' he yelled.
'Ye are choking me,' gasped the prisoner. 'Speak, where is the thief?' he yelled.

Have you corns that keep you in constant pain through the day, and deprive you of sleep at night? Use Briggs' Curative and they will soon disappear. Have you Bunions that are a constant source of annoyance, sending their increasing twinges forth with great fary, compelling you to cut your boot to make room for his lorship, Mr. Bunion? Use Briggs' Curative and your Bunion will take a walk for its health. Have you ingrowing Nails that spoil your peace and your repose, on which many a foot has trod not lightly, causing you to fear any large boot that comes near you; thus it is an annoyance to be afflicted with such unwelcome torments of human existence? Use Brigg's Curative, according to directions, and your toe will soon be restored to its natural and healthy condition, and you a happy being.

Guelph Markets MERCURY OFFICE, GUELPH. |
November 18, 1868. {
The changes which have occurred during the past week have not been in favour of the producer. The market has not been exactly steady but its movements have been within very circumscribed limits, and the tendency at no time strongly upwards. If the produce market were taken as a whole there might be said to be a sort of lock in it, and in the large marts there is a wide difference of opinion between buyers and sellers. The accumulation of stocks at the seaports is said to be unprecedentedly large, and still increasing; and in Chicago, which we may quote by way of example, there are stored at present about a million and a half bushels of wheat, whereas at this time last year there were not one hundred thousand. Heavy purchases were made when the markets were high, buyers held on when they began to decline, and at the present low ebb they are not likely to do otherwise if they can help it. To sell now would entail a loss of from twenty to thirty cents per bushel. But an impression is gaining ground that the lowest point of depression has been touched on the other side of the Atlantic, and that as soon as navigation closes on the Russian seas, through which large supplies have been passing, there will be an improvement in prices in America. Present appearances are rather against the supposition that wheat will touch last year's prices, for in almost all the wheat growing countries the yield has been large. The Oswego market is firm, and in it matters look pretty well for the seller; but barley is inactive, in consequence perhaps of the externely large quanties which have been shipped there, and for the best samples of the difference, and for the best samples of the suffery and figures are considerably higher than they were last week. In the Guelph market we have to note the define and in inactive, in consequence perhaps of the externel, but there is more activity in barley, and signer this as the ordinary, if not in best suffering a reduction. The Toronto market is wit
