THE SEMI-WEEKLY TELEGRAPH, ST. JOHN N. B., OCTOBER 18, 1932.

THE "KING OF NEW ONTARIO," AND HOW HE MADE A CANADIAN WILDERNESS BLOOM.

In Some Ways This Wonderful Man Out-Morgans Morgan
—His Victories Over Apparently Insuperable Difficulties—"The Jason of Algoma" and His Golden Fleece.

The young man who in these years of grace enters upon a business career with a soul full of honest hankering to emulate the greatest successes has grown cynical about certain things. He has been told to "take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves," he has tried it, and the dollars did demonstrate their ability to take care of themselves—to a most poignant degree. He has been told that he "must stick to the last," but he has seen people stick so firmly to their last that they seemed never to get away from them. He has been told, too, about the rolling stone which gathers no moss, but personally he does not want to gather any moss. Moreover, he remembers having in his youth rolled up some very large mounds, when the sun shone gleamingly upon the enterprise.

In short, the elderly truisms do not seem to suffice. The young man would like to believe that in the movements of those men who have gathered to themselves much power and great position in terms of dollars and cents there was some larger philosophy, some theories of action much deeper than are as yet known to any of the copybooks. Nor does he want to be told how they made their first money, for every one seems able to make a certain amount, but he does want to know how they began to make it fast? He would like to have just one example open to his study; a great financier's brownells left transparent, a money-bire with glass sides, as it were. Then he could observe the process and draw the inferences for himself. But the Rothschilds and Morgans and Rockefellers keep what is in the back of their heads well covered with gray matter, and their mouths are little given to explaining their grand coups.

Has Done Ten Men's Work.

Yet one example there is, and that offers itself, however unwillingly, in the person of Francis H. Clergue, the "Jason of Algoma," the "King of New Ontario," the "Wizard of the North"—and more besides. An American he is, and one who has remained curiously aloof to his own country. But during the last five years he has done more toward the development of the Dominion to the north than any other 10 men. From the raw material of a huge, unbroken wilderness he has built up companies that are capitalized at $17,000,000. He is the leader of the "American Invasion," and ranks in individual importance perhaps only second to the premier himself. And if this is not a study of the handling of five hundred or a thousand million dollars, it is a study of the actual creation of wealth, of resources in man working with resources in Nature.

Mr. Clergue was born in Bangor, Maine, 43 years ago. As a young man he taught school and labored law in the evening. He was an omnivorous reader, and because, too, he was "generally interested in things," it seemed to him that the world was a much larger place than could be wholly taken in through the binoculars of Ede and Blackstone. Therefore he delved his mind in mechanics and chemistry as side branches. Grown older, he still followed the average American way and went into business, and there, for a time, he has absorbed a good deal of commercial law and political economy he drifted into banking. At 35 he so far could count himself moderately wealthy.

He Had an Idea.

The large things began with an idea. He was at that time associated with a number of men of considerable means, and they were casting about for a method to make money. But with Mr. Clergue's advice, they did not consider the comparative advantages of New York and Chicago and Philadelphia, or of cotton or shoes or railroads. They went back to first principles, to the prime root and source of wealth. In the year 1886 Mr. Clergue started on a prospecting tour from Cape Breton to Port Arthur—2,000 miles or more—in search of "power," water power—some big, well placed falls or rapids, which if once penstocked and turblined would draw manufacturers from everywhere into its plunging whirl. At Holyoke, in Massachusetts, an industrial population of 100,000 had grown up about such "power."

Yet He Wasn't Bitten.

Then he set still for a time and indulged in some theorizing. But it was basic theorizing, such as all political economy had proven sound. "There was Lake Superior for a mill pond." But study there was a 5,000-horse-power canal on the Canadian side, a municipal enterprise and a wonderful failure. Clergue took it over, deepened and widened it so that it ran 15,000 more, used the stone blasted from it to build his power house, leased a few turbines to the town to furnish it with light and power and water, and awaited the manufacturers. They did not come.

He Discovers Iron.

If you have come to the end of your sun of credulity in this fairy tale of modern American enterprise (Mr. Clergue has owned that it is "an interesting instance of evolution in industry") you will be wise to read no further. For the greatest as well as the most interesting of the "golden fleece" was not to be found in the iron-ore fields of the north, but in the iron-ore fields of the south. It was not to be found in the iron-ore fields of the north, but in the iron-ore fields of the south. It was not to be found in the iron-ore fields of the north, but in the iron-ore fields of the south.

hemite averaging more than 60 per cent pure. There are 30,000,000 tons in sight. It is now being taken out at the rate of 2,000 tons a day, and that more easily than gravel can be hooped from a gravel pit. And back of The Heben were found The Josephine and The Jackfish, The Maggie and more besides. In fact, the northerly sweep of the great Michigan deposits had been located!

'I'll Make Dry Pulp.'

There were dragons in the way, however. In these United States there was a hard and fast combination of paper makers who decided that it would be a wise thing to abstain from buying Canadian pulp until they could get it at their own price. In Canada there was practically no market. And since this "mechanical" pulp, as it was then shipped from the mill, was half water, the doubled weight made freighting it to Europe not to be thought of. It looked very much like an "impasse."

Mr. Clergue decided that there was nothing for it but to make his pulp dry. This was an inspiration which aroused great hilarity among the paper machine men. If it had been mechanically possible, the invention would have been patented 10 years before. And when he submitted his ideas to them they only softened their hilarity to condescension and there were men who were unimpressed by them. Then he decided that he would have to make that dry pulp machine himself. He knew something about mechanics and there were men obtainable who knew a great deal more. But their undertaking proved to be a tremendous one. It called first for a foundry, and then for a machine shop and between them they cost $125,000. After that, too, there were months of daily disappointments. But that machine was built and perfected. And not only did it replace the wet pulp rollers in the first mill, but a second, no less huge, was immediately added to it; and altogether their daily output is now the greatest in the world. No big paper contract, even in Japan, is made without finding how prices will run at the "Soo."

How He Got Sulphur.

Mr. Clergue was already drawing the attention of his capital to the money possibilities in "chemical" pulp—the raw material as refined by treatment with sulphate of lime. In it such greater profits lay. But to make it they must have sulphur, which meant seeking prices of another combine; and that in Sicily. "Now," quoth Mr. Clergue of New Ontario, "we were very distant from the coast, and to bring sulphur from Sicily all the way to Sault Ste. Marie seemed almost impossible. In fact, it seemed unnecessary." So he began to look about nearer home for the yellow element. At the Sudbury nickel mines he found that sulphurous acid gas was being recued into the air to the value of about $2,000 a day, and blighting everything for acres around it. The sulphur was there, but it was in combination with the pyrites ore, and the nickel men informed him that there was no way of separating them that would save it.

The Boom.

Beck works and ore shops and ore docks have been built. Plans have been drawn for a 300-ton nickel smelter. The mill, now running night and day, are to be enlarged, and the plant is capable of doing every kind of plate and structural work. A fleet of 18 vessels, passenger and freight, is now kept more than busy, and the big 7,500-ton barge built for the company has just been launched. A 500 foot dry dock is ahead. Another 400 horse power capacity has been secured for the mill side. And the Indians who still "run" tourists down the St. Mary's Rapids—this quaint "health resort" of "white-water" and "hot springs" and "glorious gloomily at the huge power houses, and wonder how long it will be before their occupation is altogether gone.

He is protean. And behind his searchingly hypnotic eyes, his big bronze face, his solid, close-gripped jaws and bristled mustache, he is sphinx-like. You know not where to have him. He has the mien of a mining-camp gambler and the boldness of a Columbus. Yet he hates publicity, and has never allowed his picture to go upon paper. He labors tremendously, seeming to live as much upon work as upon food. Yet he jokes about it in the most frivolous manner. When taxed with never having married, he protested that for years he had been in love, but with two damsels, both equally fair and charming—and both amiable "rejoiced in the same name, the sweet and softly adubant name of 'Soo!'"

"A Piece of My Mind."

"I shall give her a piece of my mind some day." "Better not—unless it is too good a piece to keep for yourself."

The first speaker was Mrs. Sharpe, black-eyed and keen-visaged. She is a good woman, yet I am not fond of her. I know of nobody who is. Edna Wynne spoke of her once as a "patent adjuster of other people's affairs." Not that she is consciously unkind. She would not turn a beggar from her door. She would, however, catechise and lecture him while he ate the beautiful meal given him, until the bread would be sanded between his teeth and his coffee be mingled with curses. She would sit up at night after night with a sick child, tending her as if she were of her own kin and kin; and in the morning talk the rest of the family frantic with criticisms of the doctor and his particular school of medicine. Her friends' loose waists strap and loose forms of speech a hanging claspboard, or a theological phrase; a false note in singing, or a curdled mayonnaise—all come within her self-assigned jurisdiction, and are treated more or less severely.

I invited her to day to Naomi Blake, an old schoolfellow of hers and of mine. Naomi is one of the thousands who will, in the bright hereafter, walk in white array, the women who while here, verily and gloriously phrase, "shingle's blessedness."

While Mrs. Sharpe's scapels was busy among the foibles and faults of a fourth old acquaintance—fortunately for her, absent—Naomi leaned back in her low chair, her cheek, still pink a plump upon her hand, and looked at the fire. A little smile played about her mouth, but left her eyes pensive. A smile that prepared me for her quiet remark:

"Better not—unless it is too good a piece to keep for yourself."

Mrs. Sharpe's teaspoon stopped midway between cup and lip. Her stare was a demand. Naomi replied as if she had spoken: "We don't give away our leavings. At least, you don't, Fanny. Somebody else always got your biggest peash when we were little girls together, and the piece of cake that had most frosting on. If you give Sara Harney a piece of your mind, it will be something worth her having. Light and sweet, with plenty of plums in it, and cut off smoothly, not broken and crumbly. A piece that would be a fair sample of the mind that is in you."

I lagged outright. I know Fanny Sharpe so well, and the quality of the samples she divides generously among her friends, that the graceful turn of the talk, unexpected by her, appaled strongly to my sense of humor. As I have said, she is not a bad-tempered woman. I really believe that she tries to be just. So it was like her to color hotly for a second, then to join in the laugh, finally to look gravely reflective, her thoughts evidently introspective.

"That isn't what we generally mean," she said slowly. "The mind that is in you?"

The words put new significance into the expression.

"What else does it mean?" Naomi had not taken her pleasant gray eyes from the fire.

"To 'express my mind' is to utter what I think and feel, and am. That thinking and feeling and being go on to some one else—an outgoing that should be for good—never for evil. For the credit of human nature, I repeat the idea that to speak one's mind always signifies something disagreeable. Our souls are not such fountains of gall and bitterness as that would imply. For example, my favorite brother smokes more than I might think is good for him. Am I inattentive because I do not hint to him that he is a trial to me in this respect, and because, instead of offending him, I improve numerous occasions of expressing how much I esteem his noble qualities, and how deeply I love him?"

"Isn't that rather weak in you?" The patient adjuster was again working in order.

"Are you not a partaker in that man's sin when you do not warn him of the evil he is doing, the example he sets to his boys—the general nuisance he is making of himself? I consider smoking a vice!"

"Yes! But you see he does not."

"Then, he should be brought to see the error of his ways. He ought"—laughing in spite of herself—"to have that much of a piece of your mind."

"Suppose he offered, in exchange, that piece of his which thinks it is none of my business to meddle with the private affairs of a man older than I, and much wiser in my more respects. Fair exchange is no robbery, you know. You recollect—"

"I know"—Fanny brought out the syllables thoughtfully—"that people don't like to be told their faults."

"Naturally. Then, why volunteer to perform a needless and thankless office?"

"But somebody must do it!"

"I may quote Tallemand's retort to the lampoonist who pleaded that 'the most live somehow'—'Fe ne vois pas la necessite!'" should make my calling and election office of course very sure before stood the duties it involves.

"There are higher aims than that," my friends and to make ourselves popular, "Ah!" quietly. "What are they?"

"Naomi Blake! I had looked for something better from you. Would you ascend the truth to the mean ambition to stand well in other people's opinions?"

"Dear, I hope not. I hope, too, that I should have given you mine—were the painful of telling an unpleasant truth, for the sinner's own good, laid upon me—is preface it by talking of some of the sweet and gracious traits that made me love her so well as to risk saying what might hurt her—what certainly hurt me to the quick to utter. It may be my duty to set somebody right as to her opinions and practices. There is no doubt whatever that I am under a solemn obligation to make all about me comfortable and happy as far as I can, and in every possible way. This is the Law of Love."

"I believe you do not upon that principle. Isn't it a higher duty to make the world good than to make it comfortable?"

The voice made answer:

"The mind of the Master led him to feed the multitude before He blessed and sent them away; to heal before He exhorted to good works. He alone can fill—not you or I—how many would be less sinful if they were less miserable in mind, body and estate."

"I pray without ceasing, that my living may make me happy." [Marion Rand.]

Contemporaneously the race for election for the local house to fill the vacancy caused by the death of The Hon. W. S. Fildes, M. P., also hangs fire.

When Attorney-General Langley was here, three weeks ago, he expressed the opinion that the railway trouble would be fixed up by this time and that the election would be the next evening event. It was also understood that an election would be held in Yarmouth at the same time for the local house to fill a vacancy created by the proposed elevation of Mr. Stoneman to the legislative council.

More recent events, however, make it probable that the Yarmouth election will be deferred, whether that in this country (Cape Breton) is or not.

The principal recent event is the decease of Sir John Bourinot, the renowned abolitionist of T. B. Flint, M. P. for Yarmouth, to the house of commons clerkship as his successor. I saw Mr. Flint in Yarmouth yesterday and he would not deny that his appointment was expected. In this event a Liberal may be expected to be elected to succeed him.

Whether the election "in Lunenburg county to fill the house of assembly vacancy caused by the death of E. D. Davidson will take place with the Shelburne one, or whether all three events may yet take place together is another matter of surmise.

Hon. W. S. Fildes, minister of finance, is expected to visit his constituency here within a few days and may be able to give the people more definite information. As for the reopening of the railway, the company seem to be making advance and Clark Cooper, the superintendent, said to me yesterday that his people were ready to meet the provincial government on any fair proposition. They are now carrying the rails daily by engine and baggage car to this place, and although no tickets are sold this side of East Pubnico, an application to Mr. Cooper for permission to ride in the baggage car is now often granted to a bona fide passenger for the through trip. Excursions over the length of the road are likewise run on special occasions, and the Barrington end is being additionally ballasted and put in first class condition. Mr. Cooper suggests that perhaps the fact that his company can stand the strain of thinking, operating and of the road until a subsidy is paid, as long as the provincial government or anyone else can, tends to defer the opening of the line. It is, however, an opinion upon the matter in an election campaign if it is not settled previously.

An industry which has been going on since the opening of the Yarmouth railway, and which is spreading it to dry, is the work of the Yarmouth street car. The work is close beside the railway track of the coast road, near the Tusket station, and machinery has been sent for to manufacture the pebbles by pressing into cubes similar to those produced near Lindsay, Ontario. The Tusket plant is now being started, and is to be run, giving a hot fire, and leaving no ash. It is said to be possible to prepare and market the pebbles at a profit. An application has been made to the government for admission of the machinery duty free as it is impossible to obtain it in Canada and the industry will be a wholly new one. The road, it is stated, is superior to the Ontario article, which is of a brown color and less heat-producing. A company including Lovick, Kaye, F. H. Wyman and others, of Yarmouth, has been organized to work the deposit.

Miner Was Offended, and Fired. Shamokin, Pa., Oct. 16.—While Charles Smith, a non-unionist, was walking home from the Scott shaft this afternoon he was called an unfair name by George Gansel, who he later shot with a revolver in the shoulder, hand and arm. A mob chased Smith into his house, which he defended until the police captured him. He was later released on bail, being charged by Gansel with attempting to kill him.

Go Right on Working. Ah, yes, the task is hard, 'tis true. But what's the task of slaying? They're nooses with their duties through. Who bravely keep on trying. There's no advantage to be found in surveying or musing. They with success are soonest crowned. Who just go right on working.

Strive patiently and with a will. Keep singing at your task until. Keep singing at your task until. Nor let the clouds of doubt draw near. Your sky's glad sunshine marks. Be brave, and all your heart with cheer. And just go right on working. —Nixon Waterman, in August Success.

Centerville, Oct. 13.—John, in Maroon, who lives at East Centreville, met with a very serious accident Sunday evening. He was starting after the cows that were pasturing some distance away. Rather than walk he decided to ride a young horse. The horse had a loose blanket upon it and this was the means of precipitating Mr. Marston to the ground. His hand became entangled in the reins which backed the horse on him and the animal tramped on his side and chest. Three ribs were broken. It is not known how badly he is hurt as he is lying today in a semi-conscious state.

DISTINGUISHED CAREER OF SIR JOHN G. BOURINOT.

Resume of the Brilliant Career of the Late Clerk of the House of Commons.

A Tireless Worker—Enthusiastic Literary Man—His Newspaper Life—The Interest He Created in the Dominion of Canada—His Parliamentary Career.

Sir John G. Bourinot, whose death was chronicled in yesterday's Ottawa despatches to The Telegraph was one of the foremost Canadians of his time. He was a leading authority on parliamentary procedure in his own country. He had been well known in Europe, being frequently quoted and reprinted in England. His distinguished services won him knighthood in 1880. He was twice married. His widow is a sister of Mrs. Joseph Howe, wife of the late Major Joseph Howe, of the Northwest Mounted Police, who was formerly of this city.

John G. Bourinot, K. C. M. G., LL. D., D. C. L., was honorary secretary of the Royal Society of Canada, Fellow of the Statistical Society of London, honorary corresponding secretary of the Royal Colonial Institute, Clerk of the House of Commons, Canada, and author of several important works and essays. He was born at Sydney (N. S.), on the 24th of October, 1830. He was a son of the late Henry J. Bourinot, senator of the Dominion, and grandson of Judge Marshall of Nova Scotia. His mother was a daughter of the late Judge Marshall, well known as an advocate, lawyer, and for his work on religious and social topics. His father's family came originally from Scotland, were Huguenots and settled in the United States.

The Marshalls were Irish originally. The father of Judge Marshall was a captain of the British army, and a Loyalist. In his early days Sir John received his intellectual training under the Rev. W. J. Porter, at Sydney. The precursor saw much promise in the lad and often spoke highly of his quickness and perception, and of the strength of his intellectual grasp. When this period of tutelage was over his father conceived the idea of sending him to the University of Trinity College, Toronto. At college young Bourinot distinguished himself and he was always prominent in his classes. He became an honorary member of the Phi Kappa Chapter, and he frequently called for admittance, and of the strength of his intellectual grasp.

ST JOHN, N.B., OCTOBER 18, 1902.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE DISSENTS.

At the opening of the Circuit Court at St. Andrews his honor the chief justice, in his remarks on the Higgins murder trial, took issue with Judge Hanington who said recently that crime was rampant in this province...

Continuing, the chief justice declares that St. John is well governed and law-abiding; and law-abiding it certainly is. His opinion is that religion should be taught in the churches and in Sunday schools and at the academies...

THE BOER DELEGATES ARE SENSIBLE.
The tone of the Boer delegates, who reached St. John yesterday, is a healthy one, and marks them out as sensible men. They realize that the war is over, which is more than can be said of the Boer generals who have been touring Europe...

IT PROMOTES BUSINESS.
St. John has the rowing fever, according to the despatches sent to the Halifax newspapers by the men who reported the Carnival races. If we have rowing fever it is somewhat unusual, especially, but none the less healthful.

A JOKE ON HILL.
Just as the New York Democrats began to boom their plank arguing the national confederation of coal mines, President Roosevelt succeeded in bringing the operators and miners together...

POLITICS IN THE STRIKE.
The recent attack of some of the New York newspapers upon Governor Odell and the Republican senators who attempted to force the hands of the coal operators has cleared the air somewhat...

troubles would militate against the success of McKinley, and the operators, persuaded by him, conceded to the strikers nearly everything they demanded. It is now asserted that the leaders of the miners, in starting the present strike, believed similar political influences would prove effective with the operators...

And it seems clear that only England's watchful attitude and the certainty that she would have to be reckoned with, keeps the Boer's paw off Turkey. What makes the question of interest at the moment is that astonishing anecdote, a Russian battleship anchored off Constantinople, which must have given the Sultan a cold chill.

THE COAL SITUATION.
In issuing a call for a convention Monday next of delegates from the branches of the United Mine Workers to act on the proposition submitted by the President of the United States, President Mitchell notifies the miners that the executive board have agreed unanimously to recommend to that convention that all mine workers now on strike return to their former positions...

It is possible that Mr. Hazen, as the Sun intimates, did not display any great initiative over the Telegraph's discussion of the non-binding, but Mr. Hazen should remember that it was the Sun which first described his heroic conduct in Mr. Tweedie's 'dem.' If an amplification of the Sun's heroes made the Tory leader ridiculous it is not our fault.

A CANDIDATE MUST SAY SOMETHING.
Mr. W. Frank Hatheway, in discussing the fast line, says: "The C. P. R. tender has been published for two weeks. Inspired by the government, Halifax is the only winter port mentioned in that tender."

THE MIRROR ADVANCE SAYS:—"Mr. S. D. Scott, of the St. John Sun, who did not speak for Mr. McDade, as it was said the programme called for, appears to have a poor conception of what a really good and enthusiastic Chatham meeting is. He telegraphed to his paper that the meeting was one of the greatest political demonstrations ever seen in Northumberland."

AN INTERESTING GAME—RUSSIA'S.
What would England do if Russia seized the Sultan by the throat? is a question which is exciting some discussion now that the Czar is again crowding the Turk. Britain, handicapped by the necessity of supporting an army in South Africa, is very different from Britain with her hands untied, watching India and the far East.

And the strike was that of Goldwin Smith, who set aside national consideration but said the time had come when the president should have power to use the federal authority in preventing any such condition as that in the state of Pennsylvania before the deadlock was broken. This view of the matter has met with much commendation.

As it stands, HER has added himself and the Democrats with another democratic doctrine which furnishes ammunition of an excellent quality for the enemy. Hill is not broad enough or sufficiently free from suspicion to become the Democratic Moses. He was unstable when the best men of the party were trying to stifle Bryanism and his record makes him impossible.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.
The attention of the Attorney-General having been called by Dr. Rudick, M. P., to the proposed closing down of the Hampton and St. Martins railway, he at once communicated with the manager of the road, urging that the company should continue to operate it, and informing him that unless the company did so the crown would take such action as the law provides against it.

NOTE AND COMMENT.
And still the fact remains that the main body has not been discovered. Mr. Anderson's Tory friends are not treating him fairly in leaving him so long in frosty isolation. He needs a running mate.

Plainsfield, N. J., which has many men of great wealth among its citizens, is discussing the advisability of using its shale deposits for fuel. St. John would be in dire straits indeed before it would display such a poverty of public spirit.

It appears that there are not likely to be any opposition candidates in Northumberland. The Newcastle Advocate (independent) says present indications are that "the government members will be returned by acclamation when the elections are called on."

THE BRIDE IS ONE OF MONCTON'S MOST CHARMING YOUNG LADIES. She was for two years teacher in piano at Sackville, and is the recipient of a great many beautiful presents. The groom's present was a handsome loop of sapphire and diamonds.

They will reside at Sackville.

P. of East Grey, who attacked the Hon. W. S. Fielding, is referred to by a contemporary as "a very nice old gentleman who has a fund of funny stories with which to entertain his audience and also relieve the tedium of his version of Canadian history from pre confederation days until the present."

MEETING OF THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THE NEW BRUNSWICK PETROLEUM COMPANY.
Moncton, Oct. 14.—(Special)—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the New Brunswick Petroleum Company was held in the office of the secretary here today.

REPORTS WERE SUBMITTED BY THE PRESIDENT, SECRETARY-TREASURER AND L. J. HURST, CONSULTING ENGINEER OF THE COMPANY.
Engineer Hurst reported on the local oil fields, and gave the result of his recent visit to the Pennsylvania and California oil wells.

FROM HIS INVESTIGATIONS HE EXPRESSED THE OPINION THAT THE QUANTITY OF THE OIL IN THE LOCAL FIELDS IS UNLIMITED, WHILE THE QUALITY IS SUPERIOR TO CALIFORNIA OIL, AND IT IS POSSIBLY NOT SURPASSED BY SOME PENNSYLVANIA OIL.

THE BRAMA AND STOCK OF MR. MANCHESTER'S FARM DEEPLY INTERESTED THE DELEGATES, AS DID ALSO CUSHING'S PULP AND SAW MILLS, AND THE "REVERSIBLE" FALLS. Every opportunity was afforded the visitors for a thorough inspection of the different industries and they took immediate advantage of such by questioning the proprietors and comprehending immediately what was explained.

THE RETURN WAS MADE ABOUT 6.30 O'CLOCK AND THE EVENING WAS SPENT AT THE OPERA HOUSE.
P. A. Peters, when seen at the Royal, said the delegates were deeply appreciative of the courteous manner in which they had been received at Sussex and St. John.

THEY WERE DELIGHTED WITH SUSSEX AS AN AGRICULTURAL COMMUNITY," SAID MR. PETERS, "AND OF COURSE THE TWO FARMS WERE THOROUGHLY INSPECTED. We visited Col. Campbell's place, and also J. T. Prescott's, where we saw his herd of 44 Ayrshire milking. The delegates couldn't resist having seen a better herd in New Brunswick. We were also shown through the Sussex creameries and dairy."

IT WAS WITH SOME TREPIDATION THAT I, J. Lane, one of the Boer delegates, was approached by the Telegraph representative ever since his advent on Canadian soil, besides under the circumstances of last evening he had just returned from a long drive and had not had his supper. However, he waived all personal considerations and talked willingly and frankly. Strictly speaking, Mr. Lane is not a Boer, for he says he was born in the North of Ireland. For 30 years, though, he has lived in the Transvaal and if he is not a Boer he is about as close to it as it is possible to be.

WELL, THE BOER DELEGATES ARE HERE. They came to town yesterday afternoon and represent a past nationality which for nearly three years engaged the combined military power of Britain and her colonies in a contest of bitterness and ultimate a struggle colossal in scope and with casualties enough to almost depopulate St. John, but a conflict which could never have been but for the virile and lasting determination of the foe.

MEETS LANE AND JOSETE WERE EARLY IN THE FIELD, THEY WERE IN THE WESTERN AMY UNDER GENERAL CRONJE, AND HELPED DRIVE BACK THE KHAKI TROOPS UP BOLSON'S HEIGHTS, AND HELPED LINE THOSE FATAL TRENCHES AT MAGERAFONTAIN WHEN THE HIGHLAND BRIGADE DEPLETED, SHATTERED—REELLED BACK FROM THE MORTAL MAN COULD NOT CONFRONT AND LIVE.

BOER DELEGATES, IN TOWN, TELL THEIR IMPRESSIONS; ALL SMELLED POWDER.

Say This is a Grand Country—People in South Africa Will Settle Down and Go to Work With a Will—P. E. I. is Canada's Garden Spot, They Think.

"MANIAC BELLS."

By Annie Ashmore.

"O sweet carillon of bells! Ring out the old year, ring in the new!" How the glad peal broke upon the midnight silence, and set the heart of one happy girl thrilling with a joy almost too keen for mortal to believe in—the joy of required love! Ring out the long years of patient waiting and meek submission; ring in the coming days of living for the noblest man on earth!

Carmine Haughton was to be married to-day—this very New Year's Day—to the lover who had been rejected by her parents seven years ago. The Haughtons were wealthy then, and she was the eldest, the flower, the loveliest, of the four beautiful girls who went by the names of Carrie, Ju. Vi, and Essie Haughton, Leslie Keatling was one of the richest physicians in Wharfedale now, and Carmine was neither beautiful nor wealthy any more. A wasting illness had robbed her forever of her voice, and her father's sudden death had reduced the family to comparative poverty.

"The beautiful Haughtons! all grown up one by one and married wealth, all but Carmine; she still hangs upon the parental, while her worldly-wise mother boasts of her brilliant acquisitions, and shows scant sympathy for this blighted blossom. And yet Carmine Haughton was the most beloved girl in the pretty town of Elmford. She was so sincere, so unselfish, so sympathetic, that everybody ran to her with their troubles, and confided to her their joys. She had all the attributes of an indefatigable old maid," her mother said, sending many a secret sigh after the discarded daughter.

Then, quite suddenly, Leslie Keatling had written to his old love, telling her that he had a home worthy of her at last; that he had never forgotten her, and believed she had been as true to him; and that he would come and claim her whenever she bade him. What a day of joy and terror that bade him! Would he care for her now who was poor—and plain? For the first she feared not; but the last! Ah! the image in his constant heart was not that poor, anorectic face.

She wrote him the truth, inclosed her photograph, and waited patiently. But his letters only breathed the tenderest constancy. He urged her to be ready for a New Year's Day wedding, so that he might take her with him to Europe for a winter sojourn before returning to face off Wharfedale and her mother and sisters glibly pushed on the preparations.

They had not met until last evening, the very day before the wedding, and when she beheld the tall, handsome gentleman who had come to claim her, her courage failed her, and she hid her raised face in her hands, weeping over its disfigurement. But he raised it with tenderest reverence, and gazing into the tearful eyes, whispered:

"My Carmine's soul is lovelier than ever!—And who could have doubted after that! Plenty of willing hands had decked the church with flowers in honor of her wedding-day—the quaint old church whose pealing bells had wakened her to the new year and the new life. His beautiful lover was not a stone's throw from the bride's chamber window, and his chair was familiar to her as the voice of her friends. It struck the quarter before eleven—a bar of sixteenth-century madrigal—as the bride went up the aisle in her simple white draperies. A great bell of odorous yellow lilies hung over the chancel steps where she must stand, and a tame white dove was perched upon its beam, preening its smooth feathers and flicking eyes at each other as though parting discomfited. The parry brother-in-law, who stood beside the bride to give her away, looked lustily at his big gold watch.

Five minutes of eleven—Everyone in the thronging building was either pale or crimson and a palpable hush had fallen upon them as though a death might startle the dreaming bride. She alone stood calm and undisturbed, still sleeping in a holy trance. Eleven o'clock—The great bell tolled its toll, filling the shuddering walls with sound, and breaking the electric spell.

I Will Cure You Of Rheumatism. Else No Money is Wanted. After 2000 experiments, I have learned how to cure Rheumatism. Not to burn joints into fish again; that is impossible. But I can cure the disease and give you no money, simply write me a postal and I will send you an order on my nearest bank for six bottles of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I have cured tens of thousands of cases in this way, and my success has been so complete that I have learned that people in general are honest with a physician who prescribes them. That is all I ask. If I fail, I will expect a penny from you. Simply write me a postal card or letter. I will send you my book about Rheumatism, and order for the medicine. Take it for a month, as it will not harm you anyway. If it fails, it is free, and I leave the decision with you. Address Dr. Williams, 200 North Third Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured by one or two bottles. All other ailments. The colonial office announces that owing to the abolition of martial law in Ceylon passengers proceeding to any of the ports or places in that colony.
