Monks in England enjoy a remarkable immunity from cancer, tuberculosis, and influenza. In the opinion of the Ministry of Health, which will make an investigation, it is because they eat no meat in the monasteries, but consume a great deal of fresh vegetables and fruits.

MOSA FARM HOUSE BURNED

Newbury, April 29.—Last evening, as the mail train was slowing down for Newbury station, a burning house was noticed by several passengers on the west side of the train. At that time the fire had scarcely got well under way and apparently the occupants of the house were unaware of the danger. When the train pulled in here the fire was reported and a rush ensued in search of the fire, which was found to be the home of James Winslip, a farmer living a mile and a half east of here.

The origin of the fire is a mystery. Apparently it started in the garret of the main building. Little insurance was carried, and although most of the articles downstairs were saved Mr. Winslip's loss will be heavy.

HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Patricia Smith, four years old, daughter of W. A. Smith, Victoria street south, was severely cut about the head and body and painfully bruised Sunday afternoon when she was thrown through the windshield of her father's car, on the provincial highway near Lambeth. The accident occurred when Mr. Smith's car collided with another machine in crowded traffic. The little girl was taken to Victoria Hospital, London, and is making a good recovery.

HARRIGAN—WALLACE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Wallace, of Seaford, was the scene of a happy event on Saturday, April 19, at high noon, when their daughter, Olga Jean, was united in marriage to Charles A. Harrigan, son of the late M. D. and Mrs. Harrigan, of Glencoe. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fulton Irwin in the presence of thirty guests. Mr. and Mrs. Harrigan will reside in Wallaceburg.

BURNS' CHURCH, MOSA

Kilmartin, April 30.—The congregation of Burns' church will celebrate their eightieth anniversary on Sunday, May 4th. The building has been redecorated for the occasion, under the direction of the Ladies' Aid Society. The services morning and evening will be conducted by Rev. A. L. Carr, of West Lorne. A supper and sacred concert will be held on Monday evening, to which the public are invited. Rev. I. Macdonald, of Kintore, and Rev. Frazer Smith, of Glenheim, who ministered to the congregation for a number of years, expect to be present, as well as other ministers who have gone out from the congregation.

In 1832 a few families from Argyle-shire, Scotland, landed in Mosa, Ekfrid, Metcalfe and Brooke, and in 1844 the congregation was organized by the Presbytery of Hamilton, with six communicants on the roll. The first building was built of logs and at present is doing the duty of a drive-shed on the farm of Duncan L. Walker, Metcalfe, a short distance from Walkers.

The second building was a brick one and was built just across the road from the old building, on the Mosa side. This served the congregation until 1891, when the present building was erected. It is a fine brick building, seating about five hundred, and is such a building as is seldom seen in the country.

Gaelic and English services were held every Sabbath until a few years ago, when the Gaelic was given up on account of the very few left who could speak the language.

At present there are only a few of the old-timers left who remember the church in its infancy. Mrs. M. C. Munro, the oldest member, now in her eighty-ninth year; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. McAlpine, the oldest couple; Mrs. Dugald McPhail, Mrs. John McCallum, Mrs. Duncan Campbell, Mrs. Alex. McAlpine Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McAlpine and Mrs. Duncan Gillies. Most of these are fourscore years and still love the Gaelic. The first session was composed of the following: Hugh Leitch, John McTavish and Donald Ferguson.

During these eighty years' experience nine different ministers have ministered to the congregation, most of whom have gone to their reward. Rev. W. R. Sutherland, first minister; Rev. Archibald Stewart, Rev. A. S. Stewart, Rev. Neil McKinnon and Rev. Alexander Miller. Those still living are Rev. A. Fraser, in Scotland; Rev. I. Macdonald, of Kintore; Rev. Frazer Smith, of Glenheim; and Rev. D. Robertson, the present minister, who was inducted in December, 1917.

There are at present two hundred and seven members on the roll; seven elders, and nine on the board of management. There is a good Sunday School, a Young People's Society, a Mission Band, a Women's Missionary Society and a Ladies' Aid Society. Last year the congregation raised for all purposes about five thousand dollars.

The congregation is entirely rural, many of the members coming four and five miles to the services. Loyalty to the Old Kirk is still a marked feature of the congregation, and may it long continue to be.

The pioneers sleep in a little cemetery across the road, a place noted for its beauty and the care bestowed upon it. The district around is experiencing what most country places are at the present time; the allurements of the city is attracting the young people. Detroit has become the mecca to which their eyes have turned. In the meantime the few who are left will endeavor to stand by the Old Kirk and her traditions.

SOME CENSUS FIGURES

A Wardsville subscriber asks for a statement of the population of the townships of Aldborough, Ekfrid, Metcalfe and Mosa at the various census periods during the past fifty years. The figures are as follows: with the exception of 1891, records of which are out of print. (1) Aldborough, (2) Ekfrid, (3) Metcalfe, (4) Mosa.

GASOLINE RAILWAY CAR

Superintendent H. W. Mathews, of the C.N.R. and Wabash railway, announces that an order has been placed for the construction of another gasoline car for service in Canada. He intimates that it might be run between Glencoe and Alvinston, as the operation of a gasoline car on that branch has been under contemplation for some time.

PAVING THE LONGWOODS ROAD

A Windsor contractor, with London associates, has secured the contract for eight miles of concrete paving on the Longwoods Road between Lambeth and Delaware. With the London-Lambeth section, this will make 13 miles of permanent pavement out of London on the road to Windsor.

A "NO MAN'S LAND"

Whilst making surveys a few days ago in connection with what has been termed the "Outrage" Drain, it was discovered that some eight acres of land bordering on the division line between the township of Ekfrid and the village of Glencoe has for many years escaped assessment either for township or village purposes. An error appears to have been made at one time by the assessor in describing certain holdings, and may have occurred many years ago, probably dating back to the original assessment. The acreage in question, which, prior to incorporation of the village, formed a part of the south half of lot 24 in the first concession of land bordering on the division line several times and is now the property of A. B. McDonald. Mr. Hagerty, the assessor for this year, now has it assessed.

CHEERIO NOTES

The regular meeting of the Cheerio Club was held at the home of Wm. Brown on Tuesday, April 22nd. An excellent program was given, consisting of the following numbers:—Instrumental, Helen McCutcheon; violin selection, Wilson McLean; solos, Walter Walker, Sidney Harty and Jessie Mitchell; humorous reading, Helen McCutcheon; "Live Wire," Florence McEachern. The prizes for the season's euchre contest were awarded to Vera Henderson and William Gardiner. After the program progressive euchre was played, followed by a dainty lunch. On the following Friday evening the Cheerio Club entertained the Swastika Club at the Glencoe Memorial Hall. A splendid program was given and games and contests were enjoyed, after which lunch was served.

SETTLE FOR SMALL THINGS

There are a great many people who telephone in small advertisements and then overlook calling to settle for them when they are in town. The amounts in most cases are so small as to make preparation and mailing of accounts seem out of proportion. Therefore, these small items should be cashed anyway. If you are doing any advertising in this manner we will thank you to attend to the payment promptly.

OUR INDOOR TOILET.

The most annoying feature for women who live in the country, is the evil-smelling, unsanitary (and that means disease-breeding) out-door toilet. Where there are small children, it is especially inconvenient in winter. And it is horrible and unhealthy, for many reasons, winter and summer.

We have overcome this annoyance by installing a standard flush toilet without the prohibitive cost of a water system. We expect to have the latter soon but we have had the use of the toilet for three years, while waiting for the more expensive equipment, which can be added without the loss of the equipment already in place.

Money was very scarce with us when we made the venture but we achieved the apparently impossible by following this plan:

Our small income was budgeted and after carefully considering the various expenses, we found that by extra economy in some items, for a period of three months, we could save one-half of the cost of the toilet. We determined to make our little garden yield a surplus which we could sell and thus raise the remaining half.

Here is a record of actual produce raised and sold from our kitchen garden. We planted a seed of the vegetables demanded in our locality and matured everything very early, getting the top prices.

3 bushels string beans	$7.50
2 bushels very early harvest apples	4.00
10 bushels plums	8.50
Cucumber pickles	5.00
5 bushels tomatoes	5.00
12 doz. ears Golden Bantam corn	8.00

$33.00

For three months we put every penny saved in any way from our income together with the garden money in a special box and then had enough for installation of toilet and building of septic tank.

We flush the toilet in the usual manner, filling the box by pails of water from the well. We keep two extra pails filled with water in the toilet recess. There is no odor and perfect satisfaction.

A concrete septic tank outside the house disposes of all sewage. Let every woman insist upon the abolition of the disease-breeding out-door toilet. It can be done.—Mrs. B. B. G.

LAMPS THAT WON'T SMOKE.

Every farm housewife knows how hard it is to keep kerosene lamps from smoking. An ounce of prevention saves much work.

When the lamp smokes it is wasting fuel. Therefore, the first secret of a well-burning kerosene lamp is to have clean oil in the lamp. It should never be mixed with other oils or have dirt in it. Fill the bowl each day as the lamp is used to within half an inch of the top of the bowl. A full bowl also makes for a safe lamp. Have the chimney fit the holder. Keep the wick well trimmed and even. In addition, see that it entirely fills the opening through the burner.

This prevents the fire from burning back down the burner and igniting the oil in the bowl. Keep the charred part of the wick brushed off even with the top of the slit in the burner. A burnt match is useful for this purpose.—Hazel Blair.

WASHING A SWEATER.

In washing a sweater, put it in a small pillow slip, squeeze it in a lather of good soap, rinse in three waters, each time squeezing the water out. Never wring; shake well and hang on the line in the bag until dry, just giving it a good shake.

"When Hearts Command"

By ELIZABETH YORK MILLER

"When hearts command,
From minds the sagest counsellings depart."

Alice, not being entirely a fool, caught glimpses of what lay behind the tattered curtain which had been drawn for her deception. Here and there she saw a fragment of something which was very ugly. The horror of it made her weak with fear and shame.

Hugo—that had been her father's name, but her father was supposed to have died how long ago? As many years or thereabouts as Uncle John had possessed his old hat. His rambling talk of the early morning began to have some meaning for her. Was this strange old man her father? And if so, where had he been this long time? In that place? Had he been in prison by any chance?

And it seemed to her that Philip knew perhaps even more than she herself feared to guess.

Her mother, she could see, was half wild with apprehension.

Oh, yes, a very good idea to lunch quietly—yes, a very good idea indeed, the distressed little woman kept repeating. "Then afterwards we could go on to look at this place I've found. It's called the Villa Charmil. Isn't that a pretty name?"

Mr. Gaunt says he will get me a servant. Wouldn't it be jolly if we could move there very day, Alice? Do you think we could? What do you think, Philip?"

"I should advise it—by all means," Ardeyne replied.

There was a professional note in his voice that made Alice wince, but Jean was too upset to notice anything.

An hour later, lunch being over, they went to inspect the Villa Charmil, and found Hector Gaunt there house-cleaning with the aid of his faithful Maria and an Italian girl he had discovered somewhere. The latter's name, he informed Jean, was Louise, and she was a good cook and laundress.

Gaunt, with shirt sleeves rolled to the elbows, and his grey flannel shirt tucked negligently into belted trousers, had started to wash the windows.

His mule was tethered in the tiny strip of terraced garden, and in the glass-covered corridor he had unloaded a choice supply of provisions—a couple of chickens, vegetables, flowers, butter, eggs, a flask of olive oil, and a small cask of wine—all the produce of his own farm. He had taken it for granted that Jean would settle at once into the Villa Charmil, and had made all the necessary arrangements for her.

She, poor woman, almost wept in her gratitude. It was such a novelty to have things done for her that she scarcely believed in this good fortune.

Maria had built fires and was very busy airing the beds and linen. Gaunt had already said to her, "I have considered necessary in the way of groceries and other things and had despatched his boy, Carlo, into the village for them."

It suddenly occurred to Mrs. Carnay that for fifteen years she had never enjoyed what might be called a home of her own. True, the Villa Charmil was only a rented home, sparsely filled with the rat-trap sticks of furniture deemed sufficient by a parsimonious landlord, but in her eyes it was beautiful. And she could see how, with a touch here and there, with flowers and cushions and furniture covers, it could be made a very haven of joy.

Gaunt had come out to the gate to greet them and explain his own presence on the premises, and it was thus that Hugo Smarke and he met for the first time since Jean's curious marriage. The last occasion has been in this very town in the old Villa Tatina, something more than a good stone's throw distant.

Poor Hugo looked an awestricken, shriveled little creature surrendering to the hand of the great power of Hector Augustus Gaunt. It seemed as though the sheer bulk of Gaunt gave him moral ascendancy over Jean's husband. There were no protests from Hugo that he did not want to be cut off from the pleasures of hotel life and immured behind the pink walls of this little tucked-away house.

Gaunt, behaving rather as though it were his own place, showed them around. The long windows of the salon opened upon the balconies overlooking the sea, but directly overhanging the railway line, although these were invisible by reason of the thick growth of palms and olives which covered the steeply terraced slopes. The Villa Charmil seemed somehow to hang mysteriously between sky and sea upheld only by the feathery tops of the palms.

Hugo, promised his meals in the arbor, took heart of grace and recovered from his fit of overawed dependency. Almost immediately he attached himself to Hector Gaunt and begged to be allowed to wash windows. The favor being granted he was left to wash them alone—which wasn't quite what he wanted—while Gaunt discussed the various household arrangements with Jean. Alice and Ardeyne went back to the hotel to pack up the Carnays' and Hugo's clothes, and also give this rather sudden notice that the suite would no longer be required.

Hector Gaunt and Jean sat in the arbor with the stone table between them; Jean, with her bag-tumbling, and Gaunt, with a mass of soiled (faint) notes, and a stub of pencil jabbing memoranda on the various expenditures.

There was the month's rent, for which Gaunt had settled in advance, and the money he had given Carlo for the groceries, and what Jean felt he ought to give Maria for her share in the labor and—oh, any amount of other items. Their voices rose in altercation and reached Hugo.

In imitation of Gaunt, Hugo had stripped off his own coat which rolled up his sleeves, but he still stuck to his new hat. He peered out furtively, pretending to be wringing the water from the grey strip of towelling he had been washing the windows with, and then bobbed back again when he thought himself in danger of being discovered.

"Tell Maria to bring us some beer," Hugo disappeared like a Jack-in-the-box and a few minutes later came back with a tray.

"I brought it myself," he said. He set it down, looked at them a little wistfully, and was edging off again, when Gaunt—still quarrelling with Jean about money—interrupted himself to invite Hugo to join them.

"But fetch another glass for yourself," he said. "You've only brought two."

Hugo bounded off like a happy puppy, and the extra glass was duly procured. Gaunt poured out the beer, foaming, light stuff, deliciously cold, and Hugo settled himself as near as he could get to the big man. There was something pathetic in the pale, near-sighted eyes that dwelt upon the careless Gaunt. One understood then, how in his day of great adventures—and very likely still—Hector Augustus Gaunt had been a master of men, a leader whose lightest desire was a law to his adoring followers. Hugo Smarke had once followed this big fellow through the trackless waste of uncharted seas; that pale, persistent gaze went back to the day when there had been no Jean Carnay, no tame Italian Riviera on their maps; a time when life's course was marked by the hand of destiny, and when the fall of the people have had little enough cause for light-heartedness; and yet, as Miss E. Somerville points out in her memoirs, there are still in Ireland some to make jokes and others to laugh at them.

And then will the small meadow-brown butterflies disport around these spots from morn to eve. We call them gatekeepers, because they haunt the gateways with wink of eye and wings and airy dancing. They keep a stile as gleefully.

Friendly Stiles of England.

The stiles begin to exercise their old charm when the time for country wandering arrives. They appeal to you now. They are irresistibly friendly. They would not try to make it easy for you to pass to the other side of the hedge did you need to go further, like a trespasser, looking this way and that, writes P. W. D. I. in "The London Daily Mail."

Wherever there are stiles they are friendly. They differ much in form, from the rude steps on the fern and foxglove walls of Cornwall to the torn ship's timbers taken from the shore and fashioned into stepping ways amid the briars and brambles of Norfolk hedges.

They mark the short cuts to rest as well as work. They are crossed for pleasure no less than for duty. It is the potter's reason that is starting now. The lure of the field paths is strong. There will be wanderers alone and wanderers in threes and fours; but perhaps as often as all others there will be wanderers in twos, tramping from stile to stile till they find one more friendly than the rest—a lovers' seat.

Summer comes, with billows of leaves and surge of flowers, with unceasing drone of insects in the sunny air. The quiet woodside that the little path hugs is grown bosky; the beck in the hollow tinkles over its pebbles beneath the plank bridge and then is lost in a forest of willow herb; the corn is grown so high that children crossing the fields are seen only as they top the stiles; and every stile is deeper set, so have the lusty brambles pread their hedge-plant given themselves to abandon. The lovers must sit close.

And then will the small meadow-brown butterflies disport around these spots from morn to eve. We call them gatekeepers, because they haunt the gateways with wink of eye and wings and airy dancing. They keep a stile as gleefully.

Many good things have come from Ireland, not the least of which are its characteristically mischievous jokes and anecdotes. Of recent years, alas! the people have had little enough cause for light-heartedness; and yet, as Miss E. Somerville points out in her memoirs, there are still in Ireland some to make jokes and others to laugh at them.

Nature's Night-Lights.

What is the most efficient light in the world?

Some people might vote at once for the "last word" of science in artificial illumination, but they would be wrong. The most efficient light known to us was known in the days of pine torches and rushlights. It is that with which Nature has endowed the glow-worm and the firefly.

Science has so far failed to solve the problem of the production of light without heat—a problem which seems to have given Dame Nature no difficulty. In all artificial light production an enormous amount of energy is lost in the form of heat rays and chemical rays.

Thus a four-watt carbon lamp has a luminous efficiency of less than a half per cent, and the most perfect artificial illuminant has an efficiency of only four per cent.

Science here compares badly with Nature, for the luminous efficiency of the firefly is no less than 99.5 per cent, whilst the glow-worm's light is eighty times more efficient than a tungsten lamp.

Love is the only fire that is enough to melt the iron obstinacy of a creature's will.

Always a Favorite.

Nearly everyone admires water lilies yet few seem to know that they can have them growing in their own gardens. It is a small garden that cannot make room for a lily pond, for it may be anything from a discarded washtub to a pool of highly ornamental cement work.

If you choose a wooden washtub coat the outside of it with tar before you set it into the ground. A section of terra-cotta drain pipe about three feet in diameter also makes a good "pond," and an imperfect piece can sometimes be bought of a contractor at a low price. If you use the drain pipe, place in the centre of it a small piece of inch or half-inch pipe long enough to extend down into the ground a short distance and to rise perhaps four inches and after you have sunk the drainpipe into the ground cover the bottom of the hole with a three-inch layer of cement. The small pipe will serve as a drain pipe when the pond is emptied for the winter, and when the pond is full it can be kept plugged.

If you are ambitious enough to desire to make a reservoir of cement, you can give full play to your fancy. The only limit will be space, expense or your own industry.

Unless there is a real pond near enough so that you can get from it the black mud that is so dear to pond lilies you can use old stable manure and rich soil. The water lily needs a layer of a foot deep in the bottom of your container. The plants you can get from a pond or from a seedman, who will supply not only the white kind but colored varieties and will furnish all the necessary information in regard to planting. Keep the pond filled to within a few inches of the top.

If you are afraid that the lily pond will offer a breeding place for mosquitoes, put a few goldfish into it. They will dispose of the larvae. During the hot summer weather the water should be changed every day by gently overflowing, but as the weather becomes cooler it need not be changed so often.

Aside from your pleasure in such a lily pond you will be doing missionary work for the birds. They will come to your little drinking pool and bathing beach to refresh themselves. But have no clumps of shrubs or plants near it in which a cat could hide, and surround it with chicken wire.

When you drain the pond for the winter cover the lily plants with a mulch of leaves six or eight inches deep and lay boards across the top of the basin to prevent the leaves from blowing away.

Water Birds Keep Glossy With Oil from Gland.

You must often have watched a duck preening herself and have noticed how every few moments she bows with her broad flat beak among the feathers of her tail. It is curious how few people know the reason of this manoeuvre. The truth is that the duck possesses an open oil gland just above the tail. The contents she uses or dresses her feathers, and precisely as if it were an artificial fluid such as we at times rub into our own scalps, says "The London Mail."

All water birds seem to possess this useful oil gland—useful because it is essential to all the swimming and diving birds to keep their feathers glossy and waterproof. Otherwise the plumage would become soaked and dragged and drag its owner down instead of helping to float it. If a sparrow falls into deep water and gets its feathers soaked it simply drowns.

There are some land birds which are similarly equipped. The hoopoe, specimens of which are occasionally seen in England, has its own supply of brilliant. Some of the hornbills are equally fortunate. In the case of the great hornbill the oily secretion in the gland is highly colored. The bright yellow of the bird's neck and wings is due to the frequent applications of this natural feather dye.

With every wild creature cleanliness is essential. Even the despised rat spends a large proportion of its time in cleaning itself. All the cats, from the lovely lion down to the meanest alley cat, are fastidious about washing and combing their fur. The rough tongue acts as a kind of sponge, and you will notice how a cat licks her paws and uses them to clean such parts of her body as are beyond the reach of her tongue.

As a substitute for the powder so popular with feminine humanity, birds find dust invaluable. The domestic fowl loves nothing better than a dust bath. Partridges, sparrows and larks roll and flutter in the dust until their feathers are full of it.

Mighty is the force of motherhood! It transforms all things by its vital heat; it turns timidity into fierce courage, and dreads defiance into tremulous submission; it turns thoughtless ness into foresight, and yet stills all anxiety into calm content; it makes selfishness become self-denial, and gives even to hard vanity the glance of admiring love.—George Eliot.

We must have faith in the power which lies in each one of us individually, if we are to bring anything we desire to pass in our limited world. This halting, stumbling, fearing, half-hearted way of attempting anything, in itself brings the elements of defeat. Through faith in ourselves and in our own ability to reach certain accomplishments, and with confidence in the truth that there is a divine nature within that will guide us to the right place, the right work, and the right enjoyment, we shall be able to lead successful lives.—Emily S. Bouten.

IRISH BOUNDARY ISSUE THREATENS PROSPECT OF UNITED COUNTRY

A despatch from Dublin says:—Though expected, the breakdown of the Boundary Conference has created no little shock in the Free State, and it has set everybody anticipating the gravest possibility, not even excluding a recourse to arms. There has been absolutely no moral or material change in the positions taken up by the preliminaries at Belfast and Dublin toward the question, and no change of heart which matters more than the giving up of boundaries. And the position has been aggravated in the eyes of the Free Staters by the manner in which, it is alleged, the Belfast Government has so gerrymandered the electoral areas in the disputed counties that one Unionist may outvote two Free Staters; and this again has so enraged the latter that they abstained in the Northern local elections, leaving the field clear for their opponents' supposed return. Thus border passions are deeply stirred and the bitterest feelings have been recreated. Relying on the act of 1920, the Northern Unionists say that they will not yield an inch of territory, and though they did recognize the other articles they will not recognize Article 12 of the treaty, which Cosgrave's Government must insist upon or else quit.

The Irish Times looks at the present situation in the gloomiest possible light, though it admits that the terms of the treaty are perfectly clear. If a commission of two members of the British Government and a Northern representative on the Commission, the latter cannot operate, it will present every enemy of the Free State with the appallingly dangerous argument that by British action the Anglo-Irish Treaty has become null and void. It involves the three Governments and will ruin the slowly reviving prosperity of both Irish States and will give free scope to all the elements of lawlessness and make Irish unity impossible for a hundred years.

BRUTAL MURDER NEAR FORT FRANCES, ONT.

Farmer and Wife Horribly Mutilated by Assassin and Robber.

A despatch from Fort Frances says:—John Sward, 60 years old, and his wife were the victims of a brutal murder, believed to have been perpetrated with an axe, according to reports received from Stratton, Ont., in which district the Swards had lived for many years. News of the crime was transmitted by Joseph Viciaw, a neighbor of the slain couple, and the Provincial Police, accompanied by the Coroner, have left for the scene of the crime.

Viciaw spent Wednesday evening with the Swards. When he returned the next morning to assist with some chores he stumbled across the body of the farmer lying beneath a horse blanket about thirty feet from the dwelling. Hurrying into the house, Viciaw found the mutilated body of Mrs. Sward lying on the bed. The bodies of both victims were horribly bruised and slashed, indicating that an axe or similar weapon had been used.

Robbery has been advanced as the only theory for the crime.

Canada Establishes Cache for Round-World Aviator

A despatch from Victoria, B.C., says:—The Canadian steamer Thielval, with stores for Stuart MacLaren, British round-the-world aviator, has arrived at the island of Attu, in the Aleutian group, where a fuel deposit will be made for the British aeroplane. The Thielval reached Attu last Sunday, according to word received here.

ALBERTA WELL ONE OF BIGGEST "GASSERS" ON AMERICAN CONTINENT

A despatch from Calgary, Alta., says:—Coming in with a flow estimated by W. S. Applegate, field superintendent of the Imperial Oil Limited, as 25,000,000 cubic feet a day, the Rogers-Imperial well in the Canadian Sweetgrass field, about seventy miles south-east of Lethbridge, is reported to be one of the biggest if not the biggest "gasser" on the continent. The first burst of gas came Tuesday morning when the bit reached a depth of 2,223 feet. Then on Thursday when the drillers attempted to sink the tool further into the sands, they only penetrated another foot when warning came that the pressure was increasing tremendously. They immediately tried to get the bit out of the hole, but when half way up the pressure again increased with the result that the tool, weighing a ton and a half, was thrown clear of the hole and to within ten feet of the derrick towering eighty-two feet above the mouth of the well. The falling bit smashed the derrick and also everything with which it came in contact. The collar casing of the well was broken. These mishaps will hold up operations for at least twenty-four hours and meanwhile capping the well is impossible. The important feature of the gas flow is that there is evidence of oil in the gas. Applegate climbed a ladder adjacent to the derrick structure and stuck his handkerchief in the flow. Half an hour afterward it smelled as if it had been dipped in gasoline. There is also a spray about the flow. The amount and value of impregnation cannot be determined until tests are made.

The Rogers-Imperial well is one of the test wells sunk in the Canadian Sweetgrass field and the result obtained from it will have a big bearing on further developments. The Imperial Oil Limited is one of the partners in the well, which is located five miles north of the international boundary.

A Personal Letter to the People of Ontario

Glencoe, Ont. April 25th, 1924.

The Blue Water Highway Association are not only doing wrong and trying to impose on the people of Ontario, but are making a fatal mistake as far as their own interests, the American tourist and the people of Ontario are concerned in asking for approximately forty-six miles of expensive Provincial Highway between Sarnia and Grand Bend for Sarnia's interests only, where only a scenic drive is necessary.

Only thirteen miles of additional Provincial Highway are necessary to directly connect Sarnia and Grand Bend by the present improved Provincial Highway running north through Arkona, which forms part of the proposed Central Cross-country Highway, the business and trucking road that serves all Ontario.

The road between Sarnia and Grand Bend passing through the Pinery and along the south shore of Lake Huron is Ontario's most beautiful drive, but is only useful a few months in the summer as a pleasure drive. This road through the Pinery, extending through the Indian Reserve, including the Upperwash beach and Kettle Point, should be Government Park drive and all its natural windings and beauty retained.

Lambton's greed in trying to detour Ontario's highways is straightening the Pinery road, destroying all its scenic value, and depriving the American tourist and the people of Ontario of one of our greatest national attractions—a winding drive through miles of forest.

The waste sand land south of Grand Bend can be made a Government revenue producer by making it a Government park, forest and game preserve and include Lake Smith as a bird sanctuary.

This waste land is Ontario's greatest natural park, owing to its central location a few hours motor trip from any part of Western Ontario and its many natural attractions, such as Lake Smith, a beautiful inland lake on the proposed Central Highway, as a bird haven; the drainage canal and Aux Sables river, twenty-five miles of inland water at lake level, connected with Lake Huron at Port Franks and Grand Bend and Lake Huron, for summer homes, boating and fishing; the sand hills, moun-ains high, for their scenic value, forest preserve and haunt for deer; the winding Pinery road through miles of forest, the proposed Central Highway and the Klondyke or River road as scenic drives.

The proposed Central Highway links all South-western Ontario with this natural park.

I wish to thank the many prominent men in public life, members of Parliament, wardens, ex-wardens, Reeves and ex-Reeves, for their press letter favouring the proposed Central Cross-country Highway, published in the Press several months ago.

The Central Cross-country Highway consists of the road between concessions A and B in Rosanquet Township, ten miles of improved Provincial Highway through Arkona and the twenty-fourth sideroad in Warwick and Brooke townships in Lambton county, the Moss-Ekfrid townline through Glencoe in Middlesex county and the Aldborough-Dunwich townline in Elgin county.

The Central Highway is the one and only direct road between Grand Bend and the Talbot Highway, the one road that serves Middlesex and Elgin as well as the counties west, the shortest, cheapest and best provincial highway link, ten miles of which is now improved provincial highway intersecting the three present provincial highways running east and west and linking all South-western Ontario with this natural park and the counties of Huron, Grey and Bruce.

The mileage between Windsor and Grand Bend would be approximately nineteen miles less by the proposed Central Highway and present improved Longwoods Provincial Highway than by the proposed Blue Water Highway.

This letter is written in the interests of the present and future generations of Ontario, and I implore the people of Ontario to take an interest in this cause—save if possible the original winding Pinery road for its scenic value. This road is not a necessary linking road, does not need straightening and should be kept as an improved Provincial park drive for its scenic value.

To Sell Farmer's Wives

If the roads are bad, many a prosperous farmer's wife postpones buying something she actually wants for herself or family, until she can get to town.

Later, the teams will be busy. She won't be able to get to town.

Experience shows she will buy now, if you give her the chance. Call her by Long Distance. She will feel complimented. Know your stock, so you can answer her questions readily.

A little experience will soon show you how it works. Don't judge by one or two attempts. Try a dozen, intelligently. Others do it successfully. Why not you?

The postoffice department has made arrangements and issued instructions to postmasters of savings bank offices to permit of direct withdrawals by savings bank depositors from the postoffice of any sum up to but not exceeding $25 in one day without having to make application to the department at Ottawa, as has been the practice since the postoffice savings bank was established in 1868.

Miss Agnes McPhail, Progressive M. P., does not hold a very high opinion of rural education in Ontario. Speaking at the opening session of the Trustees' and Ratepayers' Association in Toronto Monday, she expressed the opinion that rural education in Ontario has stood still for years and was out of touch with life as it is lived today. "Education to-day," she said, "seems to be learning to get as much as possible with the least possible work. Education does not try to dignify labor and if followed to its logical conclusion would lead right away from labor. Labor seems only to be dignified when the other fellow does it." She criticized school boards because their only consideration of qualification seemed to be to have the children pass examinations. The present rural educational system, she said, could not be wiped out in a day and another substituted, but people could be roused to demand better than they were getting. The idea that success was in grabbing what one could for himself must be squelched, said Miss McPhail. She also criticized Normal Schools because they trained teachers only for graded schools and not for rural schools. Character tests, she said, should be part of an examination as well as routine studies. People, she continued, must get a new idea of patriotism. Wars did not make all history. Wars blotted history, and the place to prepare for peace was in the schools.

When a man is through with his day's work and is sitting down resting in his home, he cannot read the handbills and circulars that were left on the doorstep during the day and which have blown away or been destroyed. He calls for the paper and there finds the merchant's announcement, and with nothing to bother his mind he reads it carefully and calls his wife's attention to it, and they decide to go to the merchant's store and examine what he is advertising.

The indications of worms are restlessness, grinding of teeth, picking of the nose, extreme peevishness, often convulsions. Under these conditions one of the best remedies that can be got is Miller's Worm Powders. They will attack the worms as soon as administered and they pass away in the evacuations. The little sufferer will be immediately eased and in return of the attack will not be likely.

An automobile driver, who ran into and smashed a rig driven by a farmer, claimed that he was blinded by the glare of an approaching headlight. He was probably telling the truth. The headlights continue to glare and the wonder is that there are not more accidents from the same cause. At the same time if the farmer's rig had been carrying a light the farmer would probably have been safer.

Strangled with Asthma is the only expression that seems to convey what is endured from an attack of this trouble. The relief from Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy is beyond measure. Where all was suffering there comes comfort and rest. Breathing becomes normal and the bronchial tubes completely cleared. This unequalled remedy is worth many times its price to all who use it.

A JOURNEY TO THE HOME OF INDOLENCE.

Lemuel Sprowl still owned a small interest in a farm on the road that branched off the main pike in the direction of the poorhouse. For some years he had been unable to pay in full the interest on the mortgage. Neighbors ventured the assertion that it would be only a question of time when Mr. Sprowl would be compelled to relinquish the place, and become guests of the county.

Happening by on a hot summer day, we left the flivver to cool under a wide-spreading oak at the roadside and went in to have a look at the property. Mr. Sprowl was on the porch, taking his ease in a broken-down, upholstered chair that had seen better days and which, its present occupant found occasion to inform us, had been picked up at an auction some three or four years previous "for the price of a two-bit piece."

"I set this here chair on the porch when I brought it home," he drawled, as he saw us taking note of it, "and somehow I haven't ever got around to carry it into the house. I dunno as it makes much difference. Sort of need something out here every summer. What can I do for you, stranger?"

We made known our desire to look over the farm.

"Nothin' easier," he replied. "There isn't any place around here that offers greater opportunities. It's a little too big for me to keep everything just shipshape. But a younger man like you—"

He eyed me critically. "Yes, you might get along on it pretty well. He led us out to the barn, where we entered the milking stable over a broken plank that held abundant possibilities for broken bones and twisted ankles.

"I keep thinkin' I'll fix that place," he said, "but somehow I don't get to it. I dunno, though, as it's any killin' matter, so long as you know right where to step."

Hearing voices beyond the stable, we inquired if he kept a hired man.

"Not regularly," was the reply. "I dump the manure from the stable out in the yard, and twice a year I get some one to haul it to the fields. Saves a lot of fussin' to do it that way. I'm late, though, with it this summer. That waste've been lyin' there some of a year. It should have been seen to last spring."

"You'll hays to straighten that silo, won't you, before you can fill it again?" we questioned, as we noticed the Leaning Tower of Pisa which reared itself in the barn lot next to a feeding shed.

POULTRY.

One hundred baby chicks when hatched will usually weigh between seven and eight pounds. When the chicks have reached an age of two to three weeks they should weigh between one hundred and seventy-five and two hundred pounds. For sake of comparison we will take a calf at birth with a weight of eighty pounds. Should the calf make the same rate of gain as the chick, it would at twelve weeks of age weigh a ton. This will help one to understand why broods of chicks vary so much, and will also assist the feeder to appreciate the opportunity at hand to display his skill, so says Prof. W. R. Graham of the O.A.C. Poultry Dept.

The use of the incubator and brooder has forced the poultry keeper to study the methods of growing chicks. A mother hen and her brood, when allowed to range, can be fed many feeds, and the chicks do well simply because the hen and the chicks balance the ration by catching insects and selecting tender green feed and, it may be, several other things that we have never observed.

There is a great variation in different broods of chicks reared by the artificial method, and many broods have a high mortality and a very unthrifty appearance. The chicks can be reared easily with reasonable care and attention. The use of a little common sense is essential.

One should remember that, given a brooder, a colony house, and say three hundred baby chicks, it is the duty of the operator to keep the chicks comfortable, and that every need of the body must be taken to those chicks. There is no clucking hen to pick up bits of gravel or to catch insects. The feed must be taken to the chick.

At present the Dept. of Poultry Husbandry at the O.A.C. is conducting a series of experiments, the object being to find a simple, inexpensive method of growing to normal chicken. It may take years to get the answer, but each season we add a little to our knowledge.

Celery Culture.

Any good rich garden soil will grow good celery. It is a gross feeder and must have an abundance of fertility to draw upon if tender, well-developed stalks are to be obtained. If the soil becomes dried out even with an abundance of plant food present, succulent stalks are not likely to develop. These two things, plant food and

"I quit usin' silage two or three years back," Mr. Sprowl advised with an air of wisdom. "The fellow who put up that silo was a stock-feder and he put it pretty near in the middle of the lot. Handlin' dairy cows I had to lug the feed clear across to the milkin' stable. I couldn't see any sense in makin' a slave of myself for the sake of a parcel of cows, so I quit fillin' it. Yes, I've been noticin' quite a while that she's gettin' a slant in her. It seems I could never get time to tighten them hoops when they should have been looked after. When it develops should have an open centre, so as to let in the sunshine. For this reason, when a branch is cut off, the cut should be made a half inch or so above the bud, on the outside. Pruning should not be done until the buds are commencing to swell. One may be assured that he is leaving uninjured wood. It is not necessary to wait until the buds near the ground are bursting, because those higher up open first and, if a fairly long stem is left, the lower buds do not break at all. By cutting off the stems fairly low, the lower buds are forced into growth. Experience will soon teach what is the best method of pruning for the particular conditions desired. In pruning, the strongest healthiest stems are left and the weak ones cut off close to the ground or bush or larger limb.

As a safeguard against mildew and black spot it is well to burn all the pruned wood and to spray the bushes with a fairly strong solution of Bordeaux mixture or other suitable fungicide. Instructions for making and applying fungicides as well as insecticides for rose plants are given in Bulletin No. 85 of the Experimental Farms, "Hardy Roses," available at the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. This bulletin also names and describes the best varieties to grow.

Pruning for Fine Roses.

The rose grower has it in his power at this season of the year to prepare his plants for a heavy crop of moderate quality or a smaller crop of superior blooms. It must be observed, however, that the amount of pruning that should be done to a rose bush depends somewhat upon the variety of the rose. Roses of modern varieties bloom on wood of the current year's growth. That is to say, the buds that start from the old branches this spring will produce the flowers this year. Rose growers will have observed that the strongest new wood and the finest bloom comes from the buds that are close to the ground. It, therefore, pays to shorten back the wood to within a foot or so of the root. This applies more especially to young plants. Older plants of the strong growing varieties such as J. B. Clark and Frau Karl Druschki, should not be pruned so severely. It is always desirable that the bush when it develops should have an open centre, so as to let in the sunshine. For this reason, when a branch is cut off, the cut should be made a half inch or so above the bud, on the outside. Pruning should not be done until the buds are commencing to swell. One may be assured that he is leaving uninjured wood. It is not necessary to wait until the buds near the ground are bursting, because those higher up open first and, if a fairly long stem is left, the lower buds do not break at all. Control of Grasshoppers.

Locusts or grasshoppers lay their eggs in the late summer and autumn of one year and the young appear about May in the following year. Every kind of field crop suffers from their presence. A leaflet issued by the Dominion Entomological Branch states that in Eastern Canada the following mixture broadcasted over infested fields has proved effective in control: Bran 20 pounds, paris green or white arsenic half a pound, mixed as 2 quarts, juice of oranges or lemon, 3 fruits with peel chopped fine, to 2½ gallons of water. The bran and paris green or white arsenic should be mixed while dry. Another bait that has answered well is: sawdust 20 pounds, paris green ½ pound, salt 1 pound, water 3 gallons. Twenty pounds of either of these baits is sufficient to treat five acres of growing crops. The morning is the best time for broadcasting.

In the Prairie Provinces what is known as the Criddle mixture has proved effective. This is made by adding 1 pound of paris green, or white arsenic, and 1 pound of salt, to 15 gallons, by measure, of fresh horse droppings, sufficient water only to make the mixture moist being added.

Cultivation of Strawberries.

Strawberries require a moist, rich rather light and loamy soil to produce the best results. The land should be in good condition and free from weeds. A heavy application of manure should be worked into the soil at the time of planting, using well rotted manure, at the rate of thirty to forty tons per acre, according to the Dominion Horticulturist, who further advises, if impossible to obtain barnyard manure, the turning under of a crop of clover and the use of a fertilizer composed of 200 to 300 pounds of muriate of potash (or 25 to 45 bushels of wood ashes), 200 to 300 pounds of either ground bone or acid phosphate, and about 75 to 100 pounds of nitrate of soda, to be applied at time of planting. Planting is done preferably on a cloudy day, and the young plants should not be allowed to become dry at any time. After planting the plantation should be covered with a fine-tooth cultivator and this cultivation should be continued at intervals of two weeks through the season, and after each heavy rain. The blossoms should be picked off the first season and the ground kept free from weeds. A few trips through the patch to place the runners properly should also be made. In selecting runners for propagation select good-sized healthy plants.

Better Prices for Lambs.

The sheep raiser has it in his own hands to decide whether he will take the top price for his male lambs next fall, or sell them at a discount of two dollars or more per head. The decree has gone forth that a cut of $2 per hundredweight will be made on all buck lambs purchased after the middle of July. It may not be generally understood that wether lambs make thicker and better carcasses than do rams, and that the meat is of finer flavor. The operation of emasculation is not only as necessary with lambs as with calves and pigs, but it is just as simple and subject to as little loss. A pamphlet entitled "The Great Neglect in Sheep Husbandry," describes the operation and shows how to take off the tails as well. Unless a sheep owner can afford to take low price for his lamb crop he had better make sure of the highest return by trimming his lambs this spring.

Making Liars of Our Children

"I'll teach you to lie," said an angry father, who was thrashing his twelve-year-old boy with a big stick; "I'll teach you to lie!"

How little did this man realize that he was, indeed, teaching his boy to lie, by making him afraid of him and thus afraid to tell the truth!

Childhood is timid. Children have not yet developed their moral faculties to any great extent and they will usually take the safest, easiest way. They, naturally, are always trying to protect themselves.

A well-known woman writer once undertook to classify lies. She listed lies of vanity; lies of flattery; lies of convenience; lies of interest; lies of fear; lies of malignity; lies of malevolence, and lies of wantonness. Mark Twain in taking account of stock counted eight hundred and sixty-nine varieties of lies!

There is no question that there are all sorts of lies, and that truthfulness as a principle and as a policy is unknown to multitudes of people. Often the reason for this is lack of proper training in childhood. A great many men and women have grown up to believe in the lie as a policy. They believe that it pays to deceive. The reputation of always, everywhere, under all circumstances telling the truth—the exact truth—is worth a thousand times more to one than any temporary gain from deceit.

One of the most dangerous of all characters, in business or in social life, is the man or woman who is indifferently honest, or who will tamper with the truth.

There are multitudes of people who began to lie in childhood from fear of punishment and the desire to ward it off. It is not always so much the actual suffering of the whipping as the anticipation of it that is so dreadful to the youthful mind. There is something inside the boy and girl that protests against such an insult, as they regard any attack upon their person.

It is the worst policy in the world to make children afraid of you by telling them to tell the truth or take the consequences of severe physical punishment. I know of no quicker way to make a real liar of a child than making him afraid of you by giving him a beating every time you find him telling an untruth.

Don't delude yourself that beatings and other severe treatment will make your child truthful. In almost every case they have just the opposite effect. Timid children are proverbial liars, because they are the little victims of fear, and when in terror of punishment they will do almost anything to avoid it.

The lie doesn't seem so bad to a child as it does to you, and yet my adult friend, are you sure you are always truthful? I know many a parent who punishes his child for lying who does the same in his business and social life, but in a more polite way, perhaps. A man will lie in his advertisements, in his misrepresentations of the merchandise he is handling, in cheating customers in different ways, by covering up defects, in selling "foreign" silks made at home, and all sorts of "imported" articles made in this country.

I know a boy whose father had been abroad and had brought home with him precious works of art, and he was one day showing a friend about his house. The boy heard him say, "This picture is the work of Rembrandt," (or some other great artist.) "I paid $10,000 for it." A little later the father called the boy before him to punish him for lying, and the lad said, "Father, how much did you tell Mr. Blank the other day that you paid for that picture?" "Ten thousand dollars," was the reply. "But you know, daddy, that you didn't pay but $4,000." "Yes, but it was worth $10,000; I bought it cheap."

Now what sort of an example in truthfulness is that father setting his boy?

"Veritas" (The Truth) is engraved upon the buildings and gates of one of our great universities, and above a principal entrance to the college yard we read this legend from a great Hebrew poet:

"Open ye the gates that the righteous nation which keepeth truth may enter in." No self-respecting gate upon the globe will open willingly to those who do not keep the truth—"truth in the inward parts," as Hebrew sages used to say,—truth in conscience and life.

Train your child in the way of truth.

Teach him that the world listens when truth speaks.—O. S. M., in Success.

Suringtime Gardening—By Sophie Kitchener

"See, what a wonderful garden is here. Planted and trimmed for my Little-Oh-Dea! Posies so gaudy and grass of such brown—Searched ye the country and hunt ye the town. And never ye'll meet with a garden so queer As this one I've made for my Little-Oh-Dea!"

Training that associates itself naturally with the season of the year is particularly apt to make its impression on a child. The child is sensitive to the natural changes in the world about him and there is value in any "lesson" that can be correlated with the lively interest he takes in the weather, the sky, the trees, and the plants.

In the spring, for instance, the child loves to play in the little rivulets that form from the melting snows and the rains. He bridges them; the dashing torrents he dams to turn his little waterwheels; on the quiet navigable ones he floats his paper boats. He is conscious of the special tang he feels in playing in this mud and water. He is unable to know it is the "liveness" of waking nature appealing to him, but he senses the message and responds.

The mother, too, if she be a lover of nature, thrills to the same message brought by other couriers. How much more the child's half-conscious love will mean to him if she realizes that he shares her own appreciation and if she takes care to foster it until it becomes actual knowledge of nature.

One mother of my acquaintance realized the value of such timely training. She purchased for her little daughter, a book that told the story of the bean. It told of its development from an insignificant pebble-like thing into a lovely tall vine with flowers which, in turn, produced the bean that people use for food.

The lima bean was pictured as a baby that grew and grew. The child was interested, so the mother got some lima beans, quite a while before it was time to plant them outdoors, and put them between a roll of good blotting paper, inserted in a drinking glass, and the wall of the glass. A small amount of water was poured into the glass which was then put on the window sill in the sun.

As the days went by the child could observe the tiny shoots coming from the seeds. First came the root, then the leaf shoot which unfolded and grew until little leaves began to show. These grew larger and larger and the shoot grew stronger and stronger until it overtopped the glass.

It was then time to put it in the ground. The mother showed the little girl how to plant it and together they planted other beans to grow as the first had done.

All the while these seeds were developing underground the child knew what was happening and eagerly waited for the first tiny leaves to appear above the surface. She cared for the garden herself, watering it faithfully. Later in the summer she was rewarded with a very small crop of beans, for this was but a small garden in a yard at the back of a city house. But how much she had learned, and what a joy it had been!

Feeding Poor Hay.

While the general farmer finds economy in feeding his lower grades of roughage, so the fact should not be overlooked that such feeds do not have the full nutritive value that number one roughages have. Otherwise, there would be no difference in the market price of these different grades of feeds. The value of the various farm feeds can be roughly gauged by the condition of the animals to which they are fed. Watching closely his stock, the feeder can know quite accurately whether he is treating the animals to the quantity of roughage they should have.

Keep the Sheep Dry.

A practical sheep man advises that farmers owning flocks pay especial attention to the ewes in the period preceding the lambing season. Dry beds are important. The wind and rain should be kept out of the quarters in which the ewes are housed. Another essential is exercise. To provide for this, the ewes should be allowed access to the barnyard or field. Oak and bran, equal parts, make an excellent feed for the ewes at this season, while legume hays, particularly alfalfa, make first grade roughage feed.

A FLASH OF CRIMSON.

Grandad loved to fish. Back of the maple bush at The Elms was a sparkling river with a nice deep pool where speckled trout gathered in its cool depths. Here many a morning came Grandad and Benny, the former to fish, and the latter to wander around, making friends with every wild creature in the district.

Suddenly in the grove near-by sounded a strange bird call. "Chip chur! Chip chur! Chip chur!" "What is it?" whispered Benny. "I seem to know it well, but can't just place it," said Grandad.

"Chip chur! Chip chur!" sounded again from different parts, as if half a dozen were calling to each other. Then they suddenly heard it again, right above them in the big willow, and when Benny looked up, a flash of beautiful crimson darted through the branches, and there Benny saw a magnificent bird swooping above him, with wings and tail jet black and the rest of his body flaming scarlet or crimson.

"What a beauty!" exclaimed the boy. "Oh, he is the prettiest one that has come this year!"

"Yes," said Grandad. "He is a beauty."

"Tell me about him," insisted Benny.

"The Tanager, for that is his name, is the most striking example of the cleverness of mother nature. The gay little daddy-bird is given that brilliant color that he may draw to himself a ray of sunshine before his little mate, and draw attention only to himself. And, to protect her lest she be too conspicuous sitting on the nest and thus court danger to herself and the dear little ones, her coat is a modest green, harmonizing perfectly with the green leaves which conceal herself and her nest."

"Where do they build their nest?" asked Benny.

"Usually in the outer branches of a tree where the limbs are so thin a squirrel would have difficulty in reaching the nest, which is made of leaves, strips of bark, and lined with down from dandelions or thistles."

"What do they eat?" asked Benny, for he had already learned that is a very important factor, because if a bird is destructive he is not nearly so welcome at The Elms.

"Oh, he is a very welcome fellow on that score," said Grandad. "His food is chiefly insects and wild fruit. I believe. They do say he eats a bit of tame fruit, but I have never seen him bother our orchard very much, and certainly I've noticed him picking up insects of which I was very glad to be relieved. Oh, yes, he is a beauty, has a nice cheery call, and as far as I can see, no bad habits."

"Then let's hope he nests here," said Benny.

"Of course he will," promised Grandad, "for there are no red squirrels or chipmunks in my bush. I see to that, which is the reason why I have so many bird friends, and such fine fruit in my orchard."

Benny was so enthusiastic over his now friend that he insisted on Grandad going to see if they could find the nest, so for that morning fishing was put off, and after quite a bit of scouting they discovered Mr. and Mrs. Tanager flying with grasses to a young maple on the edge of the bush. It looked like an ideal nesting place and no doubt that is why the clever little birds chose it.

Land Plaster and Lime.

The practice of sprinkling freshly cut seed potatoes with plaster or lime has been tested last by the Field Husbandry Dept. of the O.A.C. with the following results: For twelve years untreated seed gave an average of 181.1, lime coated seed 199.3, and plaster coated seed 200.8 bushels per acre per annum. Potatoes which were cut and planted the same day produced on an average over eight years 7.8 bushels per acre more than where the seed was cut and planted delayed for four or five days. For best results cut, dust and plant on the same day.

STORIES OF WELL-KNOWN PEOPLE

Too Much for Balfour.

Mr. (now Lord) Balfour was one day strolling near his Scottish home at Whittinghame when he was accosted by an old man hailing from a neighboring village. On being presented with a shilling, the man whispered to Mr. Balfour: "Men, dae ye ken what I'm gaun to tell ye?" "No," replied the statesman. "Well," was the rejoinder, "It's gaun to rain seventy-two days." Mr. Balfour, thinking to have a little fun with him, remarked: "That cannot be, for the world was entirely flooded in forty days." "But," returned the old fellow, "the world wisnae sae weel drained then it is noo."

Field-Marshal's "Crimes."

Field-Marshal Sir William Robertson, in conversation recently regarding his early days in the Army—he joined up as a private when seventeen years old—he confessed that his first "crime" was letting a prisoner go, his second letting a horse go, and then at Brighton, at a Volunteer review, a man who was under his charge refrained himself too freely and his horse ran away with him.

The Colonel then said to young Robertson: "I am getting sick of you; first you let a man go, then you let a horse go, now you let a man and horse go."

A Threat That Had Effect.

General Sir Archibald Macdonnell has found himself on occasion in as ticklish situations as that recently precipitated by his irrepressible cadets, and has emerged by dint of no less masterly generalship.

As commissioner of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police it was once his duty to try an Indian for murder. The prisoner had been haled out of the far north together with a woman, the only witness of the crime. But to the dismay of the prosecution the squaw, who had given a straightforward account of the occurrence at two preliminary investigations, now stubbornly refused to say a word. She had told them twice, that was enough. There she stood, dirty and unkempt, and defied all the threats and coaxings of that imposing assembly.

"Look here, Teshigoo," said the commissioner, not unkindly, "it was once his duty to try an Indian for murder. The prisoner had been haled out of the far north together with a woman, the only witness of the crime. But to the dismay of the prosecution the squaw, who had given a straightforward account of the occurrence at two preliminary investigations, now stubbornly refused to say a word. She had told them twice, that was enough. There she stood, dirty and unkempt, and defied all the threats and coaxings of that imposing assembly."

"But you know what they'll do to you there. They'll cut your hair off short like a man's."

That staggered her. They might as well scalp her and be done with it. But she answered faintly, "I no tell."

"And do you see this piece of paper? I'll write on it and tell them every Saturday to give you a bath. Scrub you all over with soap!"

"No, no," she wailed. "I tell. I tell you everything!"

Collecting Wild Flower Names.

A holiday-maker on a walking tour in England asked the country people the common names of the wild plants of the vicinity. He found that both the children and the adults were well acquainted with the wild flowers, but that the names they gave him were often different from any that he could find in books. Many of them were poetic or quaintly descriptive, and some had historical associations.

After returning home the man continued to take walking tours and to follow the practice of collecting the every day names of plants and flowers. Our Canadian wild flowers, like those of England, are connected with the national life, as is seen in the names that the common people give to the plants of our roadsides, fields and woods. The number and the significance of the names have been only partly studied, and there are probably more of them that have never been recorded than are set down in books.

In collecting the names it is not safe to accept every answer to an inquiry as being useful to your purpose, because some of the names may be only the expression of personal fancies. "I don't know just what the right name is," but I call it so-and-so. If others conversant with plants in the same neighborhood recognize the name when they hear it you can know that you have a folk name.

In the record enter the scientific name, the popular name, the neighborhood where it bears that name and the reason why it bears it—if you can discover the reason.

Have a botanist identify your specimens if you do not know them. Communicate your discoveries from time to time to your local natural history club or to a plant journal, as a contribution to the knowledge of our national folklore.

He that listeth for what people may say of him will never have peace.

LIVINGSTONE WAS NEGRO'S RESCUER

NOW A GARDENER ON KENT ESTATE

Aged African Recalls How Noted Explorer Saved Him from Slave Traders.

An aged African Negro, who as a young boy was rescued from a Portuguese slave-trading party by David Livingstone, has been discovered in the little village of Chieharst, in Kent. He is known as Arab Makeppo, and he is not certain of his age. He only knows that it was very many years ago and that he was a very small black boy when the party which had raided his native village, and to which he was sold by an older brother, was attacked by red-coated British soldiers attached to the Livingstone party and he and his fellow slaves, both men and women, were rescued.

The captured blacks were brought before Livingstone and the great explorer took a fancy to the small Arab Makeppo and kept him for his "boy." The English party kept most of the men of the party with them, sending the women back to their native villages and then after learning the native language sent them throughout the country to announce to the native tribes that the Englishmen were friends of the Africans and were bringing good-will with them. Thus was the way prepared for un molested exploration in the farthest depths of the then little known continent.

Worships Memory of Explorer.

Makeppo remained in the Livingstone party as the body-servant to its leader until the great adventurer died, and was then sent to England to school. Shortly after his arrival here he was christened George Watto by the English family which engaged him as a cook. He is a devout Christian and looks forward to again joining his famous "Governor" when he dies.

He remembers well the grim procession of himself and his native relations and friends as captives of the Portuguese. He says that the men were tied two by two to wooden collars, which they wore even in their sleep; the women were chained at wrists and ankles, the girls roped like horses while the little ones, himself among them, were allowed to run free, but were kept in the centre of the party.

"We were frightened all the same," he said, "when the Redcoats began to fire on our captors."

He worships the memory of the great explorer who was his benefactor, and says that when, as a small boy, his legs would get tired, Livingstone would carry him on his back until he was rested.

Makeppo has been gardener in the same family in Kent for more than thirty years. In spite of the many years he has lived in England he wears four coats in winter weather.

Death Cupt Put on Cattle by Angry Irish Fairies.

Every now and then a story of something other than mutinies and uprisings comes from that "most distressful country" of Ireland. The latest concerns the man who crossed the fairies.

In a recent prosecution before a local peace commissioner quite a lot of fairy lore came up because a certain farm building had been built on a "pass." It seems the little folk always travel in a direct line and resent any construction placed across their path. When they find an obsewa built up by a house or farm then woe, betide the person living there.

Near the village of Maam Cross, some miles east of Clifden, a returned Irish-American not long ago bought a large farm, and as there was neither cowhouse nor stable began to erect these things, despite warnings of the neighbors. When the buildings were roofed and cattle installed therein the animals refused to eat, pined away and died. Not until three-fourths of his stock was killed (struck by "elt stones," said the peasantry), was he convinced and he removed the buildings to another place. After that his luck changed and he lost no more cattle.

PAINFUL SCIATICA AND NEURALGIA

Caused by Starved Nerves Due to Weak, Watery Blood.

People think of neuralgia as a pain in the head or face, but neuralgia may affect any nerve of the body. Different names are given to it when it affects certain nerves. Thus neuralgia of the sciatic nerve is called sciatica, but the character of the pain and the nature of the disease is the same, and the remedy to be effective, must be the same. The pain, whether it takes the form of sciatica or whether it affects the face and head, is caused by starved nerves. The blood, which normally carries nourishment to the nerves, for some reason no longer does so and the excruciating pain you feel is the cry of the starved nerves for food. The reason why the blood fails to properly nourish the nerves is usually because the blood itself is weak and thin.

When you build up the impoverished blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, you are attacking sciatica, neuralgia and kindred diseases at the root. As proof of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind we give the statement of Mrs. Marion Bell, Port Elgin, Ont., who says: "Some years ago I was attacked with sciatica in my leg and hip. The pain was excruciating and finally I was forced to go to bed. Apparently all the doctor could do was to give me drugs to dull the pain, as otherwise I found no relief. I had been in bed with the trouble for eight weeks when a lady who came to see me said that she had had a similar attack, and had only found relief through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided at once to try this medicine, and before I had taken more than three boxes I found relief. I continued the use of the pills and until the treatment the pain left me. I was able to walk again, and have not since had the least return of the trouble. I feel that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been of such great benefit to me that I strongly urge similar sufferers to give them a fair trial."

Surnames and Their Origin

Variations—Heyward, Haward, Howard.

Racial Origin—English.

Source—An office or title.

It is a surprising thing how many family names of to-day have come down to us from words denoting occupation or titles of office which long since have become obsolete.

Few people in this country bearing the name would have any idea of what a "hayward" or a "hayward" was in England of the twelfth, thirteenth or fourteenth centuries, nor of the nature of his duties.

Even the explanation that the medieval word "hay" meant "hedge," and is not our modern word "hay," would hardly serve to give you the right clue.

The "hedge warden" was not the keeper of hedges in the sense that he was a gardener. His duties consisted in service toward the villagers, the farmers of the day.

Fences and walls were little used in those days to mark the divisions of land. For this purpose hedges, either the real thing or more indications of them, were used. Naturally, cattle had a tendency to stray from man's land to another. It was the "hayward's" duty to prevent this. Originally his duties were limited to this. He was a servant of the entire community rather than the employee of a single person. But in the course of time his authority and his duties were extended until he became a sort of general trespass officer, and an official of considerable importance in each village or community.

Former Playmate of Czar's Children Now Saleswoman.

Little colonies of Russian aristocrats, penniless refugees, are forming in Canadian cities. Honors, wealth, titles have all been swept away by eight years of revolution.

These exiles are content to begin life in a new home just as other immigrants would. Positions as domestics, as saleswomen or as ordinary laborers are accepted. As a rule, aristocratic arrivals are absolutely without friends or any one to whom they can appeal for assistance. Proving rivals from Russia, drawn from the proletariat, are generally hostile.

If you enter a leading jewelry store in Toronto you may be waited on by a tall young woman in a blue sweater coat with wavy blond hair knotted loosely as striking face, in which expression and youth seem curiously blended, who will try to learn your wants in broken English. She is the Baroness Lublich de Lozina-Lozinsky.

The baroness was a daughter of Baron Ivan Tehteglovitova, who was minister of justice in Russia from 1905 to 1915. To him fell the task of prosecuting and punishing offenders in the revolution of 1905. No doubt he attracted his share of fear and hate.

Immediately on the outbreak of the revolution in Russia in 1917 the baron was thrown into prison, where he remained during the regime of Kerensky. Then, in 1918, when some one shot at him in relation to the baron and other prisoners were taken from a dungeon below the Kremlin and put to death.

How the English Make Toffee.

Mix four cups of brown sugar and half a cup of corn syrup with half a cup of water, and put on the fire, stirring carefully until all the sugar is dissolved. Let this come to a boil and then take off the fire and add four tablespoons of butter. Stir the mixture back on the stove once more and boil until the butter has penetrated throughout the candy. Pour out on a greased enameled ware tray of any kind and, as the candy cools, mark it into squares. When it has hardened break these apart and wrap each piece separately in wax paper. Incidentally, you will find that the labor of "cleaning up" is a great deal less if you have used an enameled ware saucepan for the cooking, since even the stickiest mixtures do not adhere long to its porcelain-like surface.

Tip from the Chaplain.

The rector of a fashionable London church was induced to preach at a well-known prison. When in the vestry he said to the prison chaplain: "Now I have come, I don't know what to say to your convicts." The chaplain replied, "Preach to them exactly as you do to your own congregation; and remember only one thing: my people have been found out and yours have not—yet."

At the Crossroads.

A recruit wearing fourteen in boots was enlisted in the Irish Free State army. One night he was included in a round-up party, and when the roll was called afterward he was absent.

"Has anyone seen Jewell?" asked the sergeant.

"Str," said a voice, "he's gone up to the cross-roads to turn round!"

Value of Insurance.

Mike and Pat are sleeping and are awakened by fire songs. Pat shouts to Mike, "Mike, run for your life, the house is on fire and the roof is falling in!" Mike replies, "I'll not move an inch. I'll stay right where I am. Sure 'tis meself that's insured against accidents!"

Keep Minard's Liniment in the house.

"Hayward" is not the regular source of the family name of Howard, though sometimes the latter is simply a corrupted spelling of the former.

DANIELS.

Variations—Daniel, Dann, Tancock. Racial Origin—Anglo-Saxon. Source—A Biblical given name.

Daniels is another of those family names which comes down to us from the days of the old Anglo-Saxons, though, like other family names, it did not become such until a period after the Anglo-Saxons and Norman-French had become fused into the English race of medieval and modern times.

The final s on Daniels indicates that it has been shortened from Danielson. The variation Tancock is the result of a misspelling that crept into the name at some period, either before or after it became a family name, and the habit of the Anglo-Saxons of shortening names to one syllable and then adding a diminutive ending. One of these endings was "cock" or "coch," meaning "little." Tancock, then, translated literally into modern speech, means "little Daniel," or, if we should use the modern diminutive, "Danny."

It is impossible to state at just what period "Daniel's son" ceased to be merely descriptive of an individual and was adopted through several generations, thus becoming a family name. A general development of custom took place along this line throughout northern Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth centuries. The frequency with which Daniel appears as a given name in the old days indicates many unrelated families adopted it simultaneously.

SAVED BABY'S LIFE

Mrs. Alfred Tranchementagne, St. Michel des Saints, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent medicine. They saved my baby's life and I can highly recommend them to all mothers." Mrs. Tranchementagne's experience is that of thousands of other mothers who have tested the worth of Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are a sure and safe medicine for little ones and never fail to regulate the bowels and stomach, thus relieving all the minor ills from which children suffer. The Call.

Come with me where the soft winds blow.
Come out where the wild flowers grow.
Among the yellow daffodils,
Come where the fairies play at dusk o' day,
When the golden sun is slipping away
Down beyond the hills.

Come with me ere the day grows late,
Come when the thrush is calling his mate
In the morning hours.
Oh, come with me to the meadows wide and free,
And thy heart shall sing the bird's sweet melody.
Among the flowers.

Garden Labels.

Most garden labels are unsatisfactory because the names become obliterated so quickly. There is a method, however, by which labels can be prepared at home so that they will remain legible for ten years or more. It is only necessary to buy a sheet of zinc and to cut it into labels of whatever size you may desire. A hole, or better still two holes, can be punched in one end of the wires, which should be of copper. Strips already cut and punched can be bought for a few cents if the gardener desires to avoid the labor of preparing them.

Zinc labels have been marked with a prepared ink, but that is not necessary. If the labels are exposed to the elements for a few weeks until they become oxidized the writing can be done with an ordinary lead pencil. Oxidization can also be produced by immersing the labels in a bath of salt water for a few days.

Also the results by this method are generally satisfactory, still better ones can be obtained by painting the zinc with a good gray paint after they have been oxidized. The paint should be thick and can be put on with a cloth, and the writing should be done when the paint is only partly dry.

Running Wild.

"What has become of the tin locomotive and train of cars I gave you on your birthday?"

"All smashed up," replied the little boy. "We've been playing Government ownership."

An Oil of Merit.—Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil is not a jumble of medicinal substances thrown together and pushed by advertising, but the result of the careful investigation of the healing qualities of certain oils as applied to the human body. It is a rare combination and it won and kept public favor from the first. A trial of it will carry conviction to any who doubt its power to repair and heal.

THE WORD OF A GENTLEMAN

One day an old Southerner walked into a banker's office. The Southerner was a typical gentleman of the old school—naïve, courteous to the point of punctiliousness and honorable to a degree of martyrdom.

"Who can I do for you?" asked the banker.

"Well," replied the Southerner, somewhat more than thirty-five years ago I lent a man down South some money—not a very big sum. I told him that whenever I should need it I would let him know and he could pay me the money. I need some money now, so shall let him know, and I should like to have you transact the business for me."

"My good friend," replied the banker, "you have no claim on that money. You can't hold that man to that loan. You say it has been thirty-five years since you lent it to him? The statute of limitation has run against that loan years and years ago."

"Sir," replied the Southerner, "the man to whom I lent that money is a gentleman. The statute of limitations never runs against a gentleman."

So the banker sent for the money, and within a reasonable time there after the money came. There was a courtly gentleman at the other end of the transaction also.—Bpworth Herald.

The Car That Tackles Every Job

When a man needs a car for many jobs he turns instinctively to the Ford touring car.

Primarily, the Ford touring is a family car and as such has established a splendid reputation for service and dependability.

But its usefulness does not end there. You will find the Ford touring doing every job that cars have ever been used for—making the quick run to town on urgent errands—taking produce to market and supplies back home—doing everything, in fact, that a utility car is called upon to do.

And it does them all quickly, economically and satisfactorily. A real car for work and recreation.

No matter where you live or drive your car, the nearest service station is always a Ford service station.

F. O. B. Ford, Ontario $445. Taxes extra. Electric starting and lighting equipment $85 extra.
