RESIGNATION OF MR. BEDFORD- JONES.

By the resignation of Rev. H. H. Bedford-Jones, M.A., from the position of Fellow and Lecturer in Theology, Trinity loses an able and efficient teacher.

Since he entered Trinity Mr. Bedford-Jones has taken a deep interest in all departments of College life. He will be specially missed from the cricket and football field, where his prowess has added considerably to our success during the past few years in the field of sport. THE REVIEW wishes him every success in his new parochial duties in Brockville. An able successor to Mr. Bedford-Jones has been appointed in the person of the Rev. G. F. Davidson, M.A., who graduated in '95 with first-class Honours in Theology. Mr. Davidson, who enters upon his duties as Lecturer in October, is already known as a preacher and lecturer of more than ordinary ability. Mr. Davidson was curate of St. Anne's Church, Toronto, from '95 to '98, and during the past year has acted as Travelling Secretary to Trinity University.

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

This is an announcement one very often sees and in a great variety of connections, sometimes it is a paper, sometimes a place of business, or amusement, sometimes an educational establishment. And one sees it with very varied feelings; under some circumstances with great rejoicing, under others with genuine regret, under all with a good deal of curiosity as to what the new order of things will be like. It is with mingled regret and curiosity that we reflect that three of the four Church schools, situated within the Diocese of Toronto, will after the long vacation be "under new management"—regret because of the severance from the schools of those whose names will ever be associated with them, and curiosity mingled with hopefulness to see who will carry on the work and what they will be able to build upon the magnificent foundation which has been laid. It was announced some time ago that Dr. Bethune was resigning the head mastership of Trinity College School, Port Hope, and it has more recently become known that Miss Grier was about to sever her connection with the Bishop Strachan School, and that the Rev. T. L. Aborn was leaving the Toronto Church School for boys. In all three cases general regret is felt at the necessity for this step. Dr. Bethune and Miss Grier have practically "made" their schools, while Mr. Aborn has done a thoroughly good work and leaves everything in excellent condition. He is returning to parochial work and will be succeeded by the Rev. W. J. Moody, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, who has had considerable educational experience in the West Indies and elsewhere. It is difficult to imagine the Bishop Strachan School without Miss Grier, and although in Miss Acres she will have a successor whose ability is so well known that nobody can doubt for one instant that the successful record of the School will be maintained, yet it will undoubtedly seem a different place without the wonderfully capable lady who is so greatly beloved by those who know her well, although so well able to assume an alarming sternness if any rash youth should venture to attempt to woo her maidens. The departure of Dr. Bethune from Port Hope is equally hard to realize. His magnificent work there will never be forgotten, and it is to be hoped that under whatever "new management" the school may be, it will always live up to its great traditions. We believe that no appointment has yet been made, notwithstanding a great variety of rumours and suggestions, but there is every reason to hope that a suitable man will soon be found.

By the death of the Rev. H. P. Lowe, '89, which occurred very suddenly at Calgary on Sunday, June 4th, Trinity has lost a brilliant and devoted son. He was born in England in 1862 and received his early education at Liverpool College. A great deal of his boyhood and youth, however, was spent on an island in Muskoka Lake, where his brothers had taken up land. He entered Trinity in 1886 and, after a brilliant career, graduated with first-class honours in Theology in 1889, being bracketed with the Rev. J. G. Waller. While at Trinity he took a very great interest in the literary life of the College, often participating in the debates of the Institute and was a frequent contributor to "Rouge et Noir," afterwards to THE REVIEW.

He also took a very prominent part in the work of the Theological and Missionary Association and, both as a student and afterwards as one of the city Clergy, rendered valuable services to that organization.

During the first two years of his College life he was almost constantly engaged in Sunday duty, but in his final year he was organist of the College Chapel.

His brief but busy career as a clergyman was spent as follows: From the time of his ordination (January 12th, 1890) till February, 1895, he was in charge of the large and scattered Mission of Aspdin, in the diocese of Algoma. For the next three years he was curate of St. George's, Toronto, and since February, 1898, he has been Rector of the Cathedral Church of the Redeemer, at Calgary. In all of these positions he has laboured most faithfully and won the affection and respect of all with whom he came in contact.

In February, 1898, before leaving for Calgary, he was married to a daughter of John Carter, Esq., of Toronto.

His death, which was caused by heart failure, following a severe attack of pneumonia, is a very severe blow to all his relatives and friends and he will be sincerely mourned by all who knew him. But the whole Church is the loser as well, for he was a man who possessed quite exceptional gifts and used them well in his Master's cause. His ability as a preacher was remarkable and though only in his thirty-seventh year, he was generally considered one of the most powerful preachers of the Church of England in Canada.

His work at Calgary was meeting with marked success, especially among the young men who abound up there. He was, in fact, just the type of priest to win men, for his own Christianity was of a strong manly type, marked by complete fearlessness and utter sincerity. He never hesitated to say or do what he felt to be right, and he had a horror of all unreality and sham. He could not bear to be thought other than what he was, and his character was able to stand the test of being read and known of all men. One of his contemporaries at college, a man quick to discern faults, and who never went behind anybody's back to speak of them, once remarked to another man, "Lowe is white." And those who knew him will admit the truth of the remark. Not that he was perfect; he himself would have been the first to rebuke anybody who suggested such a thing, but he was a man with very high ideals and he honestly tried to realize them, and by the help of Him who strengthens man's weak efforts, he met with a large measure of success.

Another College year has drawn to a close, and with it the partial severing of friendships made in Trinity. As every year comes round and we see the list of men who are leaving, there is always more or less a feeling that good men are going whose places will be hard to fill. This is true of course, but we can rest assured that no man ever leaves the College without leaving just as good a man to fill his place if he will only bestir himself to fill it. This year quite a number of men are leaving who have held prominent positions in every branch of College life, so let those who are left behind work all the harder, and we can rest assured that Trinity will hold the same proud position that she has always held in the past.

Book Reviews.

THE FOWLER. By Beatrice Harraden. Toronto: Copp, Clark Co., 1899.

Miss Beatrice Harraden made her first success with, "Ships that Pass in the Night." If there was something of morbidity in that book, the present story is in some ways an atonement, though Theodore Bevan's attempts at "mental seduction" are abnormal enough. He is the Fowler, and lays his snare for Nora Penhurst, who before meeting him is a type of radiant health and buoyancy. Bevan has extraordinary powers of mental influence, and he gradually undoes Nora's ideals, and detaches her from all her friends and former occupations. Meanwhile her father, a fine old musician, her lover, Bryan Uppingham, and her friend, "Nurse" Isabel, stand by helpless, watching the little viper at his hellish work. Will he succeed? The interest of the plot centres here. The book is relieved by the charming study of Nurse Isabel, and also by the humour of Mr. Parrington's courtship of Mrs. Mary Shaw. It is only necessary to add that the bird escapes out of the snare of the Fowler. If Miss Harraden will only abjure the abnormal altogether, she has it in her power to charm thousands of readers. Brilliant as this book is, it leaves a bad taste. But it is undeniably interesting.

AN ENEMY TO THE KING. By R. N. Stephens. Toronto: Musson Book Co., 1899.

This is a capital story of the type of Stanley Weyman's "Gentleman of France." It has already reached its seventeenth edition, a sufficient proof of merit in a story of this kind. The scene is laid in France during the days of the Catholic League. M. de la Tournoire falls in with many very interesting persons at the Court of Henri III., among them Catherine de Medicis and her flying squadron of pretty women. His first love affair lands him in difficulties, and he has to fly from Paris with the help of the wife of Henry of Navarre. His tremendous ride to the Huguenot Camp is full of interesting adventures. La Tournoire now takes service under the future king, and is sent by him to help the Huguenots of the Province of Berry to escape the vigilance of M. de le Chatre, the Governour of the Province. From this point on the story increases in interest, and ends breathlessly at Clochoune, the stronghold of the Governour. Taken altogether, this is one of the best stories of its kind we have seen for some time.

ANGLO-SAXON SUPERIORITY. By Edmund Demolius. Toronto: Church of England Publishing Co., 1899.

The remarkable thing about this book is that it is the work of a Frenchman. M. Demolius is a student of the school of Le Play, whose principles of social science lie behind the work before us. The English translation is from the tenth French edition. Such a success means that this is a book to be read. All the leading journals of France, both in Paris and in the provinces, have taken it seriously, and this in spite of the fact that the main assumption of the book is that the Anglo-Saxon social formation is superior to that of any other, the aim of the author being to examine into the causes of this superiority by a vigorous scientific analysis. Briefly stated, the conclusions of our author seem to be these: The Celts belong to the "Communitistic clan formation," and the Normans to the "Communitistic state formation," while the Anglo-Saxons belong to the "Particularist formation." What do these technical terms mean? Societies of a Communitistic formation are characterized by a tendency to rely, not on self, but on the community, on the group, family, tribe, clan, public powers, etc. Societies of a particularist formation are characterized by a tendency to rely, not on the community, not on the group, but on self. Amongst them the private man ("le particulier") triumphs over the public man. Anglo-Saxon populations are the most striking representatives of this type, the French represent the Communitistic formation. The analysis of the comparative merits of these two contrasted social formations is carried out by comparing the Frenchman and the Anglo-Saxon at school, in private life and in public life. In each case the genius of the social formation tells. Independence, self-reliance, ability to fight his own way in the world—these are the notes in the Anglo-Saxon character; dependence, reliance on parents or the State, inability to contend strongly in the "struggle for existence"—these are the notes in the French character. No more need be said. The book abounds in interesting reflections. Socialism is strong in France and in Germany, where the centralizing of political power, etc., is producing a "Communitistic formation" in a Teutonic people, but weak in England, and in England it is among the Celtic and Norman elements alone that the socialistic doctrines have found an echo. Interesting light is thrown upon the fact, well-known, that political power in the United States is in Irish, i.e., Celtic hands. The much-vaunted modern doctrine of Altruism is startlingly characterized as selfish! Why? Because the Altruists are actuated by an attempt to persuade all men, i.e., the State, to mother the individual. It is among the peoples of a "Communitistic formation" that this ism arose. It is Communism dressed up in Christian clothes! In England, Altruism will not be called in to stop or modify the struggle for existence, to check the operation of a natural law, to interfere with progress; but only as a sister of mercy to bind up the maimed and wounded in the battle of the strong. It has often been noticed that France and Germany talk Socialism, and in England the lot of the workingman is steadily bettered. We ask why? Because on the Continent the children of a "Communitistic formation" weakly look to the State to better their lot. The English workingman, strong in his self-reliance, fights and wins. Again, which social state is the happiest—that in which circumstances make life easy? No! The Mongolian and the Tartar and the Southerner stagnate. Nor are those happiest who, living in a "Communitistic formation," strive to escape from the struggle of life. Those are the most happy who find the breath of life in triumphing over difficulties.

The book is full of suggestiveness. It is proud reading for the Anglo-Saxon. The Lord of life has, according to this Frenchman, planted in Saxon blood the germ of social triumph.

THE SPAN O' LIFE. By W. McLennan and J. N. McIlwraith. Toronto: Copp Clark Co. New York: Harpers. Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.50.

The scene of this pretty tale is mainly laid at Louisbourg and Quebec, during the last century when France and England were battling for supremacy in the New World. The joint authorship produces no sense of dislocation in a most excellently worked-out plot, nor is there any unevenness in the writing of this book which is a welcome addition to Canadian literature. The illustrations, by Mr. F. de Myrbach, are a distinct addition to the volume. It is not easy to forget the scene on deck with Margaret Nairn and Montcalm in the foreground as she says, "There is little I would not do to please le père Jean." Le père Jean, the missionary, has more connection with the history of the chief characters than at first appears, but what is so skillfully hidden by the authors had better not be divulged.

The story begins in London where Hugh Maxwell is hiding in disguise after the defeat of Culloden, when he falls in love with Margaret Nairn. Just as they are beginning to understand one another, but before he has spoken, his wife, whom he had long believed to be dead, turns up. He leaves to join the French army in America. Presently Margaret comes in for her fortune, and, thinking that his poverty had prevented his speaking, she follows her lover, accompanied by Maxwell's wife as her maid. Here are fine opportunities for the god who loves to tangle the threads of affection.

The book has been compared to "The Seats of the Mighty," not happily, we think. This book is strong where Gilbert Parker's is weakest and weak where his is strong. The plot of The Span O' Life leaves little to be desired, but there is nothing in this book to compare with the fine character-sketching and dramatically executed scenes which fill the pages of Mr. Parker's romance. If only these authors can supply their lack of fire in the delineation of scenes, in themselves dramatic, then we think we can promise them ten readers where now they will have one. The Span O' Life is a capital story but it is not so exhilarating as it ought to be.

TO THE CROW.

Outscreacher of the common garden cat;
More doleful than the dog whose tale of woe
Floats to the moon; worse than a squalling brat;
I have a crow to pick with thee, O crow!

Thou who didst waken from their summer dreams
The sleepers in the corridor below
With the shrill sounds of thy discordant screams,
Heedless of their polite requests to go;

Thou wouldst not budge, though one should rise from bed
And much vituperation should bestow,
Until at last at thy devoted head
An empty bottle he should swiftly throw.

I do not ask why thy melodious voice
Wakes the unwilling echoes every morn,
If 'tis success in love makes thee rejoice,
Or whether thou requitest scorn for scorn.

I do not ask if 'tis thy morning prayer;
If so, I warrant thee a pious bird,
Singing thy matins ever with due care
Before the porter from his bed has stirred.

No, no! I do not ask to hear the cause,
Those caws again I never wish to hear,
Only in time I would beseech thee—pause!
Lest it should chance, upon some morning drear,

While thou art busy pouring forth thy love,
Or thy complaint,—whichever it may be,—
A well directed missile from above
Should strike thee dead from thy familiar tree.

EXTRACTS.

NOT DR. FOWLER'S.

I.

My first recollections of Molly are inseparably connected with the old schoolroom.

I didn't care much about her at first. She came from a more up-to-date school than Clandeboye Academy and her ideas savoured of rank liberalism. There was no reverence in her; that was easily seen. She looked rather contemptuously at the sprawling, old-fashioned pattern of the wall paper; the two long, heavy benches, and the little rickety short one filled her with a sort of pity, and the many names carved deep into the ancient table raised in her not the slightest admiration. Had she been questioned on the subject she would probably have maintained that arithmetic and algebra were necessary parts of education, and that French and music—our idea of the fine arts—were secondary considerations. Then, too, she had such a horribly practical way of asking questions and making rude remarks.

For instance, one day I tried to instill into her a little proper respect by posting her in the annals of the school. I told her that one of the pupils had written a book, that Madame Clandeboye had once entertained Lord Somerset at dinner, and that our French master was descended from a Count.

She wanted to know if the book was a good one, said that her father had often told her how bad the hotels were in those days, and hoped the French Count hadn't done anything disreputable that his descendant was reduced to such straits, which last remark struck me as being especially profane, for in Clandeboye Academy Monsieur Bordier was a person of no small distinction. It was vaguely understood among us that he had had a "past"—nowadays we prefer men with "futures"—and in our minds we surrounded him with the halo of romantic interest which belongs to that magic word. We all came up to the French exams.—at which he presided—with fluttering hearts and longed for the day when we should pass into his class as a place where

"The lazy ceased from working
And the indisposed had rest."

By degrees, however, I learned to appreciate her. If there was no reverence in her there was no fear either, and Madame Clandeboye, as she made her imposing entrance for the purpose of instructing us in physical geography, struck no sort of qualm to her heart. She had a true sense of humour and when she first saw Madame Clandeboye taking the mark-book from the "stupid girl" as if she had been a worm and the book a scorned but necessary evil, I heard her mutter that it was good to be reminded from time to time that you were only dirt. I snickered at this; then she snickered, then we both laughed outright and drew down upon our audacious heads an oration, made up largely of epithets rather more abusive than flattering, and an imposition many pages long.

Our friendship thus begun grew quickly. Molly was an invaluable partner in a scrape. She had a deep sense of honour: never lied to clear herself or anybody else, and saw a thing through from beginning to end and many were the dull hours when the rain went drizzling by the window, the schoolroom was oppressive and life waxed dull and very weary, that she cheered by her bright smile and ready wit.

"NORA."

II.

When I first saw Nora, I cannot say I thought much of her. She was sitting in the gloomy old schoolroom with a book open on the table before her, making strange grimaces, now peering earnestly into the book, now leaning back, screwing up her eyes and muttering, while she drummed her fingers on the table. Her appearance was not prepossessing, in fact she looked absolutely fierce. I afterwards found out the cause, and became quite accustomed to the performance—she was learning her spelling.

I found Clandeboye Academy rather dull at first, after the excitement of a large school. The girls were inclined to be patronizing, and although I didn't mind it from the older girls, I could not stand it from Nora, and I am afraid that I did not duly admire the household gods, nor become sufficiently enthusiastic over the school legends. It was not until after we had been in many a scrape together that I really grew fond of her. She had an unfailing source of audacity and imagination, and was always ready with some mischievous proposal, and always ready to join in any scheme not liable to meet with the governesses' approval.

For instance, one day we were both kept in after school, because we had lost all our conduct marks—glorious achievement! A governess was told off to see that we behaved ourselves, as she informed us. Nora thought her remark too domineering, so she climbed up to the window-sill and dangled her feet outside. I was struck dumb with admiration. The governess protested loudly, ordered her to come in and sit down quietly and properly, threatened to tell Madame Clandeboye, implored her with tears in her eyes to come in, but all of no avail.

"What did you say you were here for?" asked Nora, "To keep us in order? Why don't you do it then? We're here to have some fun, not to keep ourselves in order, that's for you to do. We wouldn't take your duty away from you for a farm, would we, Molly. I say, stick your feet out of that other window."

I wasn't quite used to this kind of thing, but I proceeded to do as I was commanded, when I saw by the entrance of a maid that it was unnecessary, she had come from Madame Clandeboye to tell us we might go home. If we had not known the purport of the message intuitively, we would never have guessed it from the maid. She gasped and then ran from the room. She evidently thought Nora was mad, because immediately on catching sight of her, Nora jumped from the sill to a desk, and began a war dance, which was apparently one of her most practised accomplishments. Then she ran across the room, making faces at the governess, and calling to me to get her hat. When we got safely outside on the street, she called back, "I say! why didn't you keep us in order, Miss Moon?"

MOLLY.

THE SOLDIER'S GRAVE.

A CANADIAN IDYLL.

Naught but the ridged turf, heaped above his breast,
With matted grass and trailing vines o'erspread,
And briar, that sentry-like doth guard his rest,
To memory fond disclose his lowly bed.

Yet sepulchre like this may well suffice
To soothe the martial dust that moulders here,
Since History's page his epitaph supplies,
Nor o'er him falls less oft the mindful tear.

For, born to hardships linked with scanty gains,
Of wealth the soldier's lot small share affords,—
For others' weal he toils—nor much remains
To deck his tomb, from e'en his thrifty hoards.

So, like his comrades whom the Crimean hills
Enwrap in nameless graves their fields beside,
Let him, too, slumber till the last trump thrills
Alike the artless mound and vaults of Pride.

Yet oft within my soul his form shall rise,—
The mien erect, the grave yet kindly eye—
The features high, that spoke of bold emprise,
And strength the will to do and fear deny ;

Nor less the ingenuous soul that sought not gain
In paths where oft ambition stoops to go,
Or where the narrowing path doth each constrain
To hurl his rival to the depths below.

Such did I know him, when in manhood's prime
He sought Canadian wilds a home to make,
For wife and little ones, while scarce had time,
Or war's distress availed his strength to shake.

And as 'gainst Nature now, not man, he waged
The toilsome war, and forest giants slew,
With hope renewed he still the foe engaged,
And victory still his effort crowned anew.

And mindful oft the whilst of by-gone years,
He crooned a lay that far off memories brought,
Or, 'round the evening fire amid his peers,
He told of venturous deeds and battles fought.

At times the thunder's roll or Huron's roar
Would wake the chords, long-stilled within his soul,
By war's loud music vibrant made of yore,
Till stern resolve o'er all his features stole,

And soaring high above his wonted mood
Again he felt the thrill of battle born,
As thro' the Vale of Death again he rode,
Or braved the slope on Inkerman's fierce morn.

Such fancies mingling with more homely joys
Beguiled the passing years, while round him grew,
Like wildflowers sweet, fair girls and glad some boys,
And axe-won fields still broadened to his view.

But deep the mystery of our being here,
Which fraught with use oft seems, yet quickly flies !
And what to Omniscience needful may appear
Seems cruel chance to our bedimmed eyes.

He passed ; who oft had 'scaped the shafts of Fate,
When thick on either hand his comrades lay,
On Duty's path—but why the tale relate ?—
Again the conqueror met—and owned his sway.

'Twas June ; the hawthorn bloomed beside the spring,
The wild-rose nodded on the cottage wall,
The birds in woods and meads rejoiced to sing,
The river o'er its stones did babbling fall.

Within, o'er all a lonely stillness lay,
The grief-wrung wife moved silent to and fro.
Her half-fledged brood forbore their wonted play
Awe-struck, tho' all their loss they scarce could know.

'Tis o'er !—The measured tread—the music slow—
The volleyed peals from out the rifle throats—
Have quavered forth the strains of public woe,
Which use hath set to these accordant notes.

And past for her whose hope lies buried there
The sense of joy and calm his presence brought ;
Her orphan'd brood—sweet solace fraught with care ;—
To rear and guide must task each power and thought.

Thus as I mused the grass-grown knolls among,
Toward which my pilgrim feet had bent their way,
While memory's scenes successive seemed to throng
From out their windowed chambers toward the day,

Came, science-whispered, to my questioning soul
The thought—that, as the echo seems to pass,
Yet lives, diffused in air to either pole,
So each survives amid the conscious mass

That throbs with borrowed impulses since the prime,
(As mind from mind the infection fine hath caught)
And souls, or near or far in place or time,
In gain or loss shall feel each deed and thought ;

So nature, trustless of Fame's erring pen,
Doth of each human life the record keep,
On mystic scroll, the living souls of men,
By thought's sharp, vibrant point imprinted deep ;

And somewhat of the Past he there may trace
Who scans its lines with philosophic ken—
The fire Promethean smouldering in our race
When flaming found has needs been fann'd by men

Hail then, ye valiant ones that lead the van
In thought or deed, to truth or duty true !
While Nature's scroll shall hold her vital plan
Oblivion ne'er shall hide ye from the view.

And thou, whose modest worth have e'en inspired
My artless pen these mutterings to essay
Of fancies dim, in mistier phrase attired,
Which yet some useful meaning may convey !

As erst for Britain's weal and Britain's power—
Best pledge o'er all the earth of Freedom's reign !
Thou firmly stood'st, while all around did lower
Death-dealing clouds of war, and want, and pain ;

Nor—martyr zeal and loyalty sublime !—
Refused'st obedience to that false command,
Lest Britain's shield, untarnished from its prime,
The stain might take that rust-like doth expand :

And so, thro' constancy and valorous deeds,
Didst aid the triumph of her cause to bring,
And good, far-seen, from these blood-steeped seeds,
To her and all the world which e'er shall spring :

Even so thro' future years with quickened glow
Shall burn in British hearts the world around
The hero-fire—still lit by sparks that flow
From iron wills 'mid hard conditions bound—

For deeds of thine ; and youths by Severn's wave,
And lone Assiniboine, and Tasman's shore,
With those whom Afric's suns shall urge to lave
Where broad Leeambye calls with plaintive roar,

Shall own the impulse which thy valor gave
To patriot zeal, when Duty's stern behest
Shall call each loyal son his land to save,
From foreign foe, or Faction's fierce unrest ;

And in an age when Pleasure's vot'ries bend
From Truth and Right, some sensuous good to gain,
The story of thy Spartan band may lend
Its aid to hearts which fain would these maintain.

TRINITY VS. R. M. C.

On May 19th the cricket team went down to Kingston, arriving there at 8 p.m. They put up at the British American, and the following morning at 10 a.m. left in a van for the R. M. C. grounds. Rain had been pouring down most of the night, but had stopped about 8 o'clock.

R. M. C. won the toss and went to bat. Owing to the soft state of the grounds, our bowlers could get no work on the ball, and consequently by 3 p.m. R. M. C. had piled up the considerable score of 144. Of this Major Straubenzie made 66 in beautiful form, and Col. Kitson 23. Of the cadets, Bucke did the best scoring, making 17. Trinity then went to bat, and were all disposed of for 68 runs, Mockridge, Strathy and W. H. White making double figures. This necessitated our following on, and this time we did considerably better, obtaining 100 runs for the loss of 6 wickets before time was called. Of this Broughall made 40 in good style.

At seven o'clock we had an excellent dinner with the cadets, and at 9 p.m. we left again for the town, after giving three cheers for our hosts, who had entertained us so well.

We left Kingston at 1.30 a.m., and arrived at College at 8 a.m. Sunday morning, having had a very pleasant trip in spite of our defeat.

Lunch was then partaken of, and U. C. C. went in to bat at 2.45 p.m.

For U. C. C. Beemer and Ellis did the best scoring, the former making a very pretty leg hit for 6.

The innings ended with 67 to their credit. The match was not continued, owing to rain.

TRINITY VS. TORONTO-ROSEDALE C.C.

Trinity met Toronto-Rosedale in the annual match on the campus on May 24th. It was an ideal day and a large number of people came out to see the match and enjoy the impromptu dance held in Convocation after the match.

Trinity won the toss and went to bat on a splendid wicket. Strathy and Cooper faced the bowling and Cooper's wicket fell for eight runs. Mr. White and Strathy brought the score up to 24, and when wickets were drawn for lunch the score read eight wickets for 122 runs, of which Mockridge and Mr. White contributed 26 and 17 respectively, and Broughall 29. After lunch Griffith and Parmenter made a long stand, and when Griffith's wicket fell, Trinity had 172 runs to their credit, of which Griffith ran up 35 in rather short order. The whole innings netted 173, Parmenter carrying his bat for a well earned 13.

Toronto went to bat and the first few wickets fell rather rapidly, but owing to a long stand of Forrester and Lownsbrough, Toronto brought their score up to 63 for five wickets. Their total amounted to 99, of which Forrester made 39 without a chance, batting nearly the whole innings. The only other men to reach double figures were Petman 15, and Lyon 14.

After a short stop for refreshments, Toronto followed on and made 58 runs for four wickets, Lyon knocking up 45 very quickly. Stumps were then drawn, leaving Trinity winner by 74 runs. In bowling Cooper took six wickets for 37.

TRINITY VS. B.R.C.

The Boys from Bishop Ridley College came over and played a game with Trinity on the campus on Saturday, May 27. They went to bat first, Baldwin making 24 and Charles 10. Martin made a most difficult drive catch off Hoyles' bat. Mockridge and Cooper had exactly the same average in bowling, 1 wicket for 4.33 runs. Trinity went to bat and 5 wickets were soon down for 42 runs, but Mr. Bedford-Jones and Campbell made a stand at 96. Lunch was served in Hall. Parmenter 10, Mr. White 14, Martin 18, Campbell 24, and Mr. Bedford-Jones 60, played good cricket for their scores, Mr. Bedford-Jones giving only one chance. Ridley then took their second innings, though there was a slight rain. The first wicket fell for 29, Baldwin contributing 24 in first-class style. Hoyles' 14 and Harcourt's 8 were gotten by good cricket. Mackenzie had the splendid bowling analysis of 8.8 overs, 7 maidens, 2 runs for two wickets.

TRINITY VS. TORONTO UNIVERSITY.

On Saturday June 3rd, Trinity played their annual match with 'Varsity on the Trinity campus.

Trinity won the toss and went to bat. The wickets fell very quickly, 5 being down for 13 runs. The whole team were out for 46, to which Mr. Simpson contributed 12 and Duggan 10.

'Varsity then went to bat and it could soon be seen that the game was theirs. Their first wicket fell for 23 runs, and they managed to pile up 89 runs altogether, of which Cameron and Brown made 16 each, and Mullin and Mackenzie 13 each.

Trinity again went to bat, but could not do much better than in the first innings, making 49, of which Strathy made 17.

This left 'Varsity 6 runs to make to win. They did this without the loss of a wicket, thus winning by 10 wickets. Trinity had the disadvantage of being without the captain Griffith, who was unable to play owing to a sore foot.

The score was as follows:—
