CIVIC REFORM.

Several of our contemporaries have been suggesting reforms in our city corporation. It is considered by them advisable to reduce the number of aldermen from ten to five members, and those five to be elected by the citizens generally as in the case of the Mayor, and thus represent the interests of the whole city. Instead of the present Ward elections there appears to be considerable force in the suggestion of electing those aldermen in a small community like this than in a large one. As well try to remove the rock of Gibraltar as to disturb several of the aldermen in their respective wards, who appear to have a patent right to the situation. Those persons are supported because they serve their ward so well in the expenditure of money, while other wards with tanner aldermen suffer in an inverse ratio, however needy their claims for a fair share of the general expenditures. Reference to cases might be cited were it necessary. Up town appears to be much better looked after than down town, nor do we stop to draw the line. Now all this is very natural under the system for men will serve their ward constituents, and thus improve their chances of re-election, with more ardour than will the general interests of the public. True, all matters are brought up before a committee can be expanded in this or that ward but an influential advocate for this section generally manages to gain his point. Now, if five good men and true could be elected by the people at large, all wards would fare alike, or according to their necessities. And then we would carry the reform one step farther, viz: by taking the Mayor from the Board of Aldermen, and give him a term of two years, and then be obliged to retire for the third year so as to make room for the next worthy alderman. With this reward before the board, the office of alderman would be regarded as one of prominence and promotion, and so our best citizens would be induced to come forward to serve the city. When we say "Best citizens" it is not meant in a class sense, but good business men in whatever walk in life, trade or occupation, and these are to be had in Fredericton without going out of the way to find them. We would add another section to this "Reform bill," but we hardly think the mention of it will go with the kickers, viz: that to render a person eligible to become an alderman, his taxes shall not be less than $100 a year. Why? Because men who pay high taxes are more apt to be cautious in expending the public money than those whose taxes are nominal, or quite small. But, after all, how do our contemporaries propose to bring this reform about? Will the council itself petition the legislature for the change? We trow not—because it is proverbial that "Corporations have neither bodies to be kicked or souls to be damned," and we are afraid that Fredericton is in no way disposed to furnish a contradiction to the action although at the same time we readily admit that there are some good men and true at the present Council Board, but like their confreres are not disposed to take stock in a new venture which is calculated to gullitimize the majority of them, and so pass the remainder of their days in private, peaceful retirement.

PILING IT ON.

The St. John Law Society held a meeting on Wednesday to consider the loss the Bench and Bar have sustained by the death of Chief Justice Ritchie. The resolutions arrived at are unique in their way and it is to be hoped that the writer thereof will be remembered to his latest days and far beyond. And we would suggest to the Bar of St. John that he be sent up to our Fredericton exhibition which is to be held next week, as a specimen brick of representative of Thackeray's yellow plush papers. For genuine flimkeyism our St. John here may be counted as one of the characters. For example: The chief justice was "the greatest legal luminary that has during the history of this Dominion occupied the highest judicial seat of the country." "The lamented death of this great jurist, who would have added lustre to the bar of any country in the world." But here is a whole paragraph of lustre:

"And whereas the late lamented chief justice as a man, a legislator, a barrister and as a Judge was always conspicuous for his learning, integrity, ability (amount to genius) and fearless boldness in the discharge of his duty. * * * His great intellectual powers, and whereby he made himself an example to the young men of this country and the bar of this province amounting to almost an ideal character as a model and prototype." Again "His loss is irreparable, his memory will be cherished by the bar of this country as a reminder of his greatness and usefulness, and as a rich legacy to the future as showing what great talents and deep learning allied with honesty can accomplish in this country." But here is the crowning piece of all in expressing sorrow for the family of the deceased: "The Society tender their hope that amid their tears they may be able to see the sunlight of the great character that has passed away, leaving to them one of the brightest memories that can come to the sorrowing in the dark days of their distress."

Seeing sunlight through their tears—sublimely eloquent; but suppose it happens to be a cloudy day? Now, there can be no question that the late Chief Justice was a very able man; but when the lawyers of St. John pronounce him a nouse, all intelligent men cannot agree—for Judge Ritchie, like other men, has made mistakes which the historian will readily recall, so that talents and push are not always allied to wisdom. The late Chief Justice himself would be amused to read the slobbering laudation made over his grave by the geniuses who wrote out the resolutions, could his spirit revisit the earth. The Bar of St. John had better call another meeting and eliminate from their resolutions the nauseous stuff to which one of their number has committed them.

THE LEGISLATURE.

It is no uncommon thing among our contemporaries whenever they refer to a probable dissolution of the House of Commons, or the House of Assembly of this province to say "Parliament" is about to be dissolved, or by a more local reference to say "the Legislature" is about to be dissolved. Now in either case the word has no meaning; for "Parliament" or "the Legislature" cannot be dissolved, so long as it is a constitutional fixture; as for instance Parliament is composed of three branches, only one of which is within the direct control of the people. Of course our contemporaries understand these facts as well as we do, but they have got in the way of taking hold of the knife by the blade instead of the handle and are bound to stick to it out or no cut. By chance, however, it may be that they are correct in the pending case—for with the dissolution of the present house the legislature goes with it since the days of the old Legislative Council are to terminate, as soon as the present house is dissolved. But regardless of this fact our contemporaries would rather or not, persist in calling it a dissolution of the Legislature, as they will keep on calling it "dissolution of parliament," whether Dominion or Imperial, it is rather singular that one of the youngest of the New Brunswick Press should feel itself called upon to correct its big brothers in a matter so simple, and it is well for the Province that the people have such a journal as the FREDERICTON GLOBE. If for nothing else than to keep things straight.

York County Rifle Matches.

The annual matches of the York County Rifle Association took place Thursday 29th inst. and was highly successful; a strong gale from the right all day made high scoring an impossibility. Veteran shots went to pieces early in the first match. The first match ranges 2, 5, and 600 yards, 7 shots, consisted of P. R. A. medal and $48 added by the association. The 1st prize medal and $90 was carried off by Pte. F. H. Risteen, R. M., with a score of 86 points, Q. M. Sgt. Walker coming next with 79 points, the 2nd prize, $10 being taken with a score of 47 points. The second match was for the York County cup and $35 added by the association beside choice of prizes in kind contributed by D. A. O. officers of the 71st Batt. and merchants of the city. The ranges were 4 and 500 yards, 5 shots at each. Lieut. Perkins, 71st Batt., was first place in this match with 41 points, Sgt. Long, C. R. I., 2nd, with 40 points. The grand aggregate prize contributed by 14 officers of the 71st Batt. were five in number and were won by the following: Pte. F. H. Risteen, R. M., 115 pts; Q. M. Walker, C. R. I., 111 pts; J. Burns, C. R. I., 109 pts; Sgt. A. Long, C. R. I., 104 pts; Pte. J. McManus, R. M., 104 pts. In the 2nd match 3 teams of 3 men each, 71st Batt., C. R. I., and Reserve Militia, competed, the first prize was won by the 71st Batt. team, the 2nd prize was won by the Reserve team. After the competition Major Legge presented the prizes in a neat speech. A pool target was run at each range during the day.

R. T. of T. Entertainment.

The Star Council R. T. of T. will entertain the Normal School students in their hall on York street Monday evening next. A good programme has been arranged. Refreshments will be served during the evening.

Johnston, of Minneapolis, at Independence, Iowa, Thursday, lowered the bicycle record by making a mile from a flying start, in the wonderful time of 1.56 3/5. The horse is no longer "No. 1."

FEARFUL EXPLOSION

BY WHICH EIGHT MEN LOST THEIR LIVES.

A Terrible Disaster in the Little Village of St. Charles, P. E. I., on Tuesday Evening, September 27th. Trunks and Shells crushed Twenty Men Here on the Seaside. Runners on the Case.

A terrible boiler explosion took place last week in Force & Dickenson's saw mill at St. Charles a small village on the Lunenburg and St. Charles railway, four miles from Comber, Ont. by which seven men were killed outright, one fatally injured and about 20 more or less scalped. The particulars are as follows:

About 6.30 a. m. the night watchman gave way to the regular day engineer. At that time 25 pounds of steam was in the boiler which exploded. The fire was increased and it is supposed that there were 80 pounds pressure on the boiler at the time of the explosion. Fortunately a great number of the hands were absent owing to the raininess of the hour so likely the fatalities would have been greater. The same is horrible in the extreme. The arms and limbs were literally torn from the bodies, while the skulls of the victims were crushed and the bodies dashed out. Doctors Abbott and Anderson, of Comber, were summoned and did all in their power to relieve the wounded. Those dead are: John Keating, Michael Dupuis, Joseph Piquois, Isiah Chavira, Jerome Chavira, the last two brothers; W. Peter Dusat, Meise Outlette, J. L. Mass, fatally scalped.

The air is full of rumors regarding the condition of the boiler. Some contend it was old and not fit for use, while an employee of the mill says that the boiler was in good running condition, but that he believes that scales had formed on the plate and interrupted some of the valves. The boiler was carried fully 200 feet, passing in its flight between two residences. Bricks and other debris were carried in all directions, but the houses in the neighborhood escaped with a few broken windows. The two Chaviras and Dusat were single men. The others were all married with families depending on them for support.

LABELLE A FREE MAN.

The Charge Against Him of Murdering His Wife Not Sustained.

Leonce Labelle, son of the late Capt. Labelle, M. P. for Richelieu county, who has been lying in jail at Ottawa for several months on the charge of wife murder, is a free man. The trial took place last week, and after hearing the testimony, Chief Justice Armour declined to let the case go to the jury.

The prisoner as he stood upon the dock, on the invitation of the court to challenge any of the jury he might desire before they were sworn, did not present the appearance of a man who had spent nearly nine months in jail, charged with the murder of his wife. He was faultlessly attired in a black suit, with a black necktie, and a snow white folding down collar. The prisoner had a clean shave before entering the dock, and partook of a tolerably good breakfast.

Mr. J. K. Kerr, Q. C., appeared for the defence, and Mr. W. J. de Beaulieu, for the private prosecutors, and Donald McMaster, Q. C. Montreal, and Mr. Belcourt, of Belcourt, MacCraen & Henderson, H. E. St. Pierre, Q. C. Montreal, for the prisoner.

The members of the Flannigan family who were witnesses, were excluded from the room at the request of counsel for the defence.

REVIEW OF THE CASE.

Mr. Kerr, for the crown, addressed the jury reviewing the whole circumstances connected with the case. It was merely a recapitulation of what was brought to light before the coroner and afterwards at the Police Court.

After hearing the evidence his lordship addressed the jury, pointing out to them how the case stood.

His lordship in discharging the prisoner said that he knew whether or not he had killed his wife. He hoped he had received a lesson, and that he would forgo the immunities which he had lived upon for so long, so as not to bring the memory of a respected father into disgrace. Above all things he trusted he would refrain from drink, which was the cause of his present position, and that he would never touch that which made him lose his understanding.

"Pardon me," he said, "I discharge you."

The prisoner was received by his mother with tears in her eyes, and his other friends were ready with their congratulations.

For the Championship Games.

The annual championship meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, to be held at Manhattan Field to-day promises to be the greatest meeting of its kind ever held in the world. The entries are pouring in from all parts of the United States. Secretary William of the Michigan A. C. has entered Thomas Jackson, of his club, the champion runner of the West, in the half mile run. W. Sanger, the Western bicycle champion, has entered in the two-mile bicycle race, and the Western cranks are strongly of the opinion that he will give Zimmerman, Winkle and Taylor a good race. At a meeting of the local Games Committee, the following members were present: J. C. Wilson, Jr., J. F. C. Blackburn, E. Chubb, Hugh S. Hart and James E. Sullivan.

THE FLOWER GIRLS —OF— Marseilles!

Marius, in spite of himself, had approached the group formed by the young girls and the abbe. The street, silent and solitary, lay white beneath the glowing sun of noon; slight tufts of grass surrounded the shining paving stones, and a single lean dog slunk along in the narrow shadows of shade which skirted the houses.

When the young men heard the Abbe Chastanier's words, he advanced with a sudden movement and grasped his hands effusively.

"Ah! father," said he, in a trembling voice, "you restore me hope and faith. Since yesterday, I have doubted God. How shall I thank you, how prove to you my gratitude? Now I feel invincible courage and an certain of saving my brother!"

Blanche, at the sight of Marius, bowed her head. A burning flush mounted to her cheeks. She stood, confused and embarrassed, suffering horribly from the presence of Philippe's brother, who knew her to be a perjurer and whom her uncle and she had plunged in despair. The young man, when his joy had grown somewhat calm, regretted that he had approached the doleful attitude of Mlle. de Casalis filled him with pity.

"My brother has been shamefully guilty, said he, at last. 'But pardon him as I pardon you'.

He would find only those words. He would have liked to speak to her of her child, question her as to the lot in reserve for that poor little being, claim it of her in Philippe's name. But he dare not torture her further.

Without doubt, Fine had comprehended his thoughts. While he walked a few steps with the Abbe Chastanier, she said to Marius:

"Bear in mind that I have offered to be a mother to your child. Now, I love you, I see that you have a stout heart. Make a sign, and I will fly to your aid. Besides, I will watch; I do not wish the poor little creature to suffer from the folly of its parents."

Blanche silently grasped the flower-girl's hand. That was her sole response. Her eyes shone with her tears.

Mlle. de Casalis and the Abbe Chastanier set out immediately for Marseilles. They forgot Reveret's that they had four months in which to prepare for the escape, and the jailer swore to them that he would keep his word, no matter on what day or at what hour they should summon him to do so.

Before quitting Aix, the two young people wished to see Philippe, in order to tell him of what had taken place and bid him hope. That night, at eleven o'clock, Reveret again took them to the cell. Philippe, who was accustomed to prison life, did not seem to them very greatly dejected.

"Provided that you save me from the ignominy of the public exposure, said he to them, 'I will consent to everything. I would rather break my head against a wall than be fastened to the infamous pillory!'

Finally, the next day, the diligence bore Marius and Fine back to Marseilles. They were about to continue the struggle on a larger scale. They were about to search the depths of human conscience and see exposed the views of a great city, given up to all the disorders of modern industry.

CHAPTER XX.

POLITICS AND JUSTICE.

Meanwhile, political complications had arisen in Marseilles. The liberals had not received numerous accessions and felt their power. They were thoroughly dissatisfied with the course of M. de Casalis as a deputy, and his pride and arrogant conduct as an individual utterly disgusted them. Besides, his merciless persecution of Philippe Cayol, whom they recognized as one of their chiefs, filled them with rage, especially as they knew that in disgracing him the deputy was striking the party and taking revenge for having been compelled in the past to pay court to the republicans.

Another election was approaching, and the opposition loudly declared that M. de Casalis, who was again a candidate, should not be re-elected deputy. The canvass promised to be unusually bitter and exciting; the adherents of Philippe Cayol were everywhere firing the populace and urging that an overwhelming demonstration against M. de Casalis be made by the masses. In fact, the injustice done to Philippe gave signs of being an important issue in the campaign.

Such was the commotion that the government, becoming alarmed, had summoned M. de Casalis to Paris to confer with him respecting the threatening state of affairs.

Marius and Fine returned to Marseilles when the excitement was at its height. The young man was everywhere received by the liberals with enthusiasm which showed plainly that he had suddenly become a person of importance. The masses cheered him in the streets, and wherever he went crowds of girls of the people waved their handkerchiefs in his honor.

Fine was proud of Marius' vast popularity; she neglected no opportunity of adding fuel to the flames by telling the women what a noble fellow he was, and how he had 'unselfishly' devoted himself to the cause of his brother, the victim of aristocratic tyranny.

Marius had not yet decided what steps to take for furthering the object nearest his heart—the rising of the fifteen thousand francs to secure Philippe's liberation—when, early morning, there was a sharp knock at the door of his apartment in the Rue Sainte.

The young man opened the door; he was filled with amazement to find that his visitor was M. de Gironasse.

"You are astonished to see me here, are you not?" said the comte, in his usual abrupt fashion. "Well, you will be still more astonished when you learn my errand!"

M. de Gironasse entered the room and took the chair Marius offered him. His eyes sparkled strangely as he resumed: "It is in your power to do a little towards bringing the proud and stolid nobles to their senses; at the same time you can save your brother?"

Marius stared at him in stupefaction. "Do you not know that to-day you are the most popular man in all Marseilles, as M. de Casalis is the most unpopular? Have you not noticed that the liberals are in the ascendant, that they will surely carry the approaching election? There is your opportunity!"

"I do not understand you," stammered the young man.

"I have you blind?" cried the comte, rising and impatiently pacing the apartment. "The liberals are organized and powerful; they have able leaders; all they need is a suitable and popular candidate. You are that man."

M. de Gironasse stopped in front of Marius and looked him straight in the face.

The young man was astounded. The idea of taking advantage of the political commotion and his personal popularity to oust the deputy from power had never entered his brain.

"But I am no politician," said he; "I am unknown to the leaders of the republicans. Besides, I have not the money to cope with M. de Casalis in the campaign."

"You are mistaken," said M. de Gironasse; "not a bit of it! You are known to all of us; the admirability of your nomination is even at this moment being discussed. As to money, I will aid you to any extent you may wish."

Marius put his hands to his head in bewilderment. He thought he was dreaming. But a short time before he had been powerless, and M. de Casalis had been above him like a giant; now, he was informed that he could humble the arrogant deputy, and that he might possibly have sufficient influence to save Philippe. The comte interrupted his reverie by saying:

"Will you accept the nomination I have spoken of?"

"To help my brother—yes!" replied Marius, with determination.

M. de Gironasse then departed, first giving the young man his address in Marseilles, and exacting from him a promise to come to him at once should anything having a political significance occur.

To comte had hardly spoken when Fine's eyes flashed. Vengeance was in his mind, within his grasp, if nothing more. "M. de Gironasse was here just before my eyes," said she; "he informed me that my nomination was probable; he also urged me to accept, offered me money to carry on the canvass, and said that his election meant Philippe's rescue!"

Fine clasped her hands joyously. "You will accept?" said she.

"At length, the election took place, and Marius was triumphantly elected deputy. M. de Casalis, sustaining an overwhelming defeat.

The first use of the new deputy made of his power was to cause Philippe's case to be reopened by the Court of Cassation at Aix. Blanche again appeared as a witness. She had escaped from her uncle's control, and for some time past had remained in concealment at the house of the Abbe Chastanier's infirm sister in Marseilles, Fine being constantly with her and ministering to all her needs like a sister. The poor child stood up in the court room, pale and trembling, supported on one side by the old priest and on the other by the faithful flower-girl. In an almost inaudible voice she told the story of her flight with Philippe, declaring that she had voluntarily followed the young man because she loved him; that she had married him and had always considered herself his wife, and that her statement at the former trial had been dictated to her by her iron-willed uncle, whom she had not had the strength of mind to resist.

The vast audience present received her testimony with murmurs of applause which were promptly suppressed by the court officials.

Philippe sat in his place, his countenance radiant with joy and hope. On hearing Blanche's evidence he felt that he loved the young girl more than ever. The Lambestic in-keeper repeated that while at his house Mlle. de Casalis had called Philippe her husband, and Marguerite, the milkmaid, deposed that she now perfectly remembered having carried letters from Mlle. Blanche to her lover.

Marius detailed all that had occurred during his interview with his brother and the young girl at the house of the gardener Ayasse at Saint-Barnabe; he spoke in a low, steady voice which carried conviction with it.

The result was the acquittal of Philippe Cayol, and the arrest of M. de Casalis on the charge of conspiracy with the young man. The gardener Ayasse was released from prison by order of the President.

In due course, Philippe was set at liberty. Marius was waiting to receive him, in company with Fine and the Abbe Chastanier. As the jailer Reveret delivered his prisoner to them, Marius slipped a packet into his hand. "Take it," said he; "it contains the fifteen thousand francs promised you. I am happy to give you the sum with the knowledge that you have earned it solely by your kindness and that it is not the price of a criminal act."

It should be stated here that, immediately after Marius' election, the banker Barbeau, becoming frightened, had come to him the fifty thousand francs left by his mother.

Reveret took the money and silently walked away, but a suspicious mistake in his eyes told that his heart was touched.

Philippe grasped his brother's hand effusively. "How can I thank you?" he said.

"By making reference to the young girl you have wronged!" answered Marius, sternly.

"But will she accept me as her husband after all my baseness?" asked Philippe, great grief.

Fine came forward and Philippe, with a sudden return of his old inclinations, moved as if to kiss her cheek.

"No!" said she, repulsing him with an air of sorrow and regret. "In the sight of God, you are the husband of another, you are a married man; you will not accept me! I reply that she will!"

The Abbe Chastanier interposed. "M. de Casalis said he, 'I just quoted Mlle. de Casalis. Had she said she will do everything required of her by the laws of God and human justice, Philippe looked joyously around him. "And I, too, will do everything required of me by the laws of God and human justice," said he, firmly. "But will M. de Casalis prove and testify as to my innocence and the church?"

"What can it be?" cried Fine, throwing back her head with a remnant of her old contentment.

"And shall I tell you something, too?" said she, with a mischievous smile. "I wish to ask you to be Madame Marius Cayol!"

Fine dropped her bouquets, and said with a hollow laugh: "Oh! no! That would never do! The honor is too great! A fine figure, indeed, I would cut as a deputy's wife! Besides, my heart is dead!"

"I know you loved Philippe," rejoined Marius; "but as it is impossible for him to marry two wives, why cannot you make his ugly brother happy? You are as worthy to be a deputy's wife as I am to be a deputy!"

"But you never told me you loved me before tonight!"

"I have loved you for a long while, nevertheless; in fact, ever since, while striving to aid Philippe, you showed me what a great heart you have."

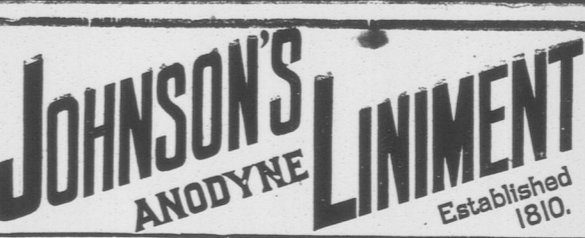

Fine looked serious.

"Whichever you like!" answered Fine. "By the way, said Marius, as a thought suddenly came to him, 'why were you so rejected when I came in?'"

"Because I fancied that you would not care for me now you had become a deputy!"

"By the way, every formality having been complied with, there was a double civil marriage at the mayor's office in Marseilles. The contracting parties being Philippe and Blanche, the newly-chosen deputy and Josephine, his cousin, no larger Fine, the flower girl. The next day at the Saint-Victor church, the Abbe Chastanier celebrated the nuptials of the two couples according to the rite of God. M. de Casalis was tried and convicted, but through the intervention of Marius Cayol, he was sentenced to only a single month's imprisonment.
