IT FAILED TO WORK.

Mr. Nelthorpe's Theory About

error is a well established rule, and there are in the world a certain number of men, each of whom considers himself the exception that we all know is necessary to prove a rule of this kind.

Charlie Nelthorpe was one of the number. He was a prig of the first water. He looked at all things and discussed all things from a supremely priggish point of view, but no subject displayed his priggishness to such advantage—or shall I say disadvantage—as the subject of women. On that subject he held himself an indisputable authority. There was no reason why he should for he was young as yet and had really had no very special experience of the opposite sex; but your full blown typical prig generally rises superior to such a secondary consideration as reason. Charlie rose superior to it, and would extion that we all know is necessary to prove

Charlie rose superior to it, and would excharle rose superior to t, and would ex-pound his views and theories at as great a length and with as much assurance as if he had devoted a long life and highly-cultured intellect to the study of that par-ticular hieroglyphic which is called wo-ticular hieroglyphic which is called woman.

He was a great believer in what he called "systematic training." That is to say, he considered that women ought to be treated according to a certain system that he had evolved from his inner consciousness. The beauty of the system in his eyes was the fact that it required no modifications, but might with safety be rigorously enforced in every case. It could not fall.

Charlie was the lucky possessor of an unencumbered estate with a very considerable rent roll, and he intended to find a woman who loved him for what he was, without a thought for what he was, without a thought for what he was, without a thought for what he would share his fine old palace in Yorkshire. When he had found her he meant to train her on his infallible system. That was his programme, and it never occurred to thim to distrust his powers of carrying it out. His belief in himself was absolute, and the infallibility of his reasoning and judgment a thing that to his mind did not admit of the slightest shadow of a doubt. When he became engaged, his male friends were quite excited in their anxiety to see the woman whom he had deirned to friends were quite excited in their auxiety to see the woman whom he had deigned to honor with his approval, and when they had seen her there was but one opinion among the lot of them. among the lot of them.

"An uncommon nice girl, and any amount too good for that prig Nelthorps. Well, well, fools for luck!" That was the unanimous verdict.

Lord Dolly Dashwood, one of Charlie's

Lord Dolly Dashwood, one of Charlie's closest friends—by that I mean one of a certain select circle frequently borrowed fivers of him, which they forgot to repay—waxed eloquent upon the subject.

"Sensible little girl, don't you know. Knows how to talk to a fellow, don't you know. Knows how to listen to a fellow, too. Thrown away on a chap like Nelthorpe. Beastly conceited cad, without two ideas. Any sort of woman good enough for him, don't you know."

The favored few who were privileged to listen to this flight of eloquence received it with the reverence that it deserved. No one spoke. No one could speak. Astonishment heid them all silent. His lordship was not as a rule, a brilliant orator, and the fact that he was capable of such a sustained and remarkable effort as the one recorded above came upon his audience.

Eva Carrington, the bride-elect, was a Eva Carrington, the bride-elect, was a beanty.

A softly-tinted skin, satin smooth and veined like the petal of a rose; fair, fluffy hair that shone colden bright in the sunlight; clear, smiling eyes of heaven's own blue, and innocent, rosy lips that looked just made for the first kiss of love, were all blended together in a dainty and most fascinating whole. Her manner was childishly fresh and simple, and men found her altog-ther delightful. Women had their doubts of her—doubts that were principally due to the childlike manner aforessid, and to a certain pretty trick of looking up quickly and then down with those great innocent eyes of hers—but women, of course, are invariably spiteful and unfair towards their own sex. Men, as we all know, have the monopoly of just and generous judgment.

know, have the monopoly of just and generous judgment.

"Well, Eva's soft blue eyes and bright little ways wrought dire destruction in the ranks of the stronger sex, but she appeared quite unconscious of her power, or indifferent to it. To all intents and purposes, she was completely wrapped up in the man she had promised to marry. His will was her law, and to please him the chief object of her life.

sne was completely wrapped up in the man she had promised to marry. His will was her law, and to please him the chief object of her life.

Her total submission delighted him, and he took every advantage of it. It was not in him to show generosity to a woman, or, indeed, to anything that he thought weaker than himself. He was the sort of man who is brutal to his dogs and horses, and overbearing to his servants, who, in short, tyrannizes whenever he can do so without fear of retaliation. His hature asserted itself in his dealings with the woman he loved, and he took the keenest possible pleasure in trading on her forbearance, taxing her endurance to the utmost and showing off her pliant will and obedient temper to the world at large. It was all a part of the system that could not fail.

Ninety-nine women out of a hundred would have torn the system to shreds and scattered it to the four winds of heaven. Eva Carrington was the hundredth woman. She submitted to everything with the most remarkable patience, and no word or complaint or reproach ever passed, her lips.

But after a time she grew quieter, and her bright spirits seemed to flag. Her merry, girlish laughter was not nearly so ready as it had been six months ago, and the corners of her pretty mouth began to droop with a wistful expression that was pathetic enough to touch the hardest of masculine hearts.

Charlie's friends all noticed the change and commented upon it among themselves, and applied to film a varied selection of opprobrious epitheths. Lord Dolly Dashwood displayed a surprising amount of fluency on the subject, "Bassily cad. No idea how to treat a woman. Ought to be horsewhipped, don't you know. Shall have to cut him, by Jove! Wouldn't take a fiver from him now if he offered it. Can't stand this sort of thing, you know. Beyond a joke."

Thus his lordship, and a good deal more that would not look well on paner.

Thus his lordship, and a good deal more that would not look well on paper.
Charley went on giving his pretty arrogance full play, until, as was only to be reasonably expected, things came to a crisis. The wonder was they had not done so long before.
On the occasion of Lady Brown-Jones' ball he went the length of forbidding his fiances to dance round dances with anyone but himself, and, though she received his sommands without a murmur, her soul rose in passionate revolt against his tyranny. The last test that he had devised seemed to her the worst of all. As a matny. The last test that he had devised seemed to her the worst of all. As a matter of fact, she had submitted patiently to far harder ones; but we all know the feminime capacity for swallowing a camel and straining at a gant, and Eva was no less inconsequent than the rest of her six.

When the ball was half over Lord Dolly put in an appearance, and at that moment Eva happened to be sitting quite alone. Charlie had left her for a minute or two to speak to a friend, and she was looking wistfully at the mass of couples that revolved before her. Lord Dolly made straight for her. volved before her. Lord Dolly made straight for her.

'Not dancing, Miss Carrington! Luck for me, by Jove! Ripping waits, this. Have a turn?'

He stuck out his elbow invitingly, but Eva turned away, biting her lip.

'No, thank you!' she answered, in a low tone, ''I can't dance with you, Lord Dolly.'

'Can't?' echoed his lordship. 'How's that? What's up? Not ill, are you? Not cross with me—ch?'

Eya shook her head.

'No. I am not ill or cross, but—but I have promised Charlie only to waltz with him. He doesn't like to see me walzing im. He doesn't like to see me waizing with other men."

Lord Dolly cheked down a forcible, but inelegant remark, cleared his throat violently, and ran his fingers through his "And he dances so awfully badly," Eva ent on, with a queer little catch in her reath. "He can't waltz a bit—not a little wee bit. He—he holds you all

Her voice quivered and broke on the last word, and she looked up at the man by her side with great tearful eyes, like forget-me-nots drowned in dew.

That look finished it. Lord Dolly was That look finished it. Lord bony was only a man.
"Beastly shame!" he said, hurriedly.
"Come with me. Nice and quiet out on the veranda. A fellow can talk there, don't you know? Come slong!"
And Eva went, for trial in London.

Charlie Neithorpe was bristling with outraged pride and wounded self-esteem when he went to pay his customary visit to Eva on the day following Lady Brown-Jones' hall. The fact that Eva could forget herself and the respect that was due to him so far as to sit on the veranda with Lord Dolly for half an hour had been a severe blow to him, and he had not yet resovered from the shock. He had refrained from commenting upon her conduct at the time, but now he meant to take it out of her, and reduce her to the state of abject penitence that he considered befitting the occasion.

She was reading when we went into the room, but she laid her book aside at once.

once,
"Oh! Charlie, is that you?"
Charlie frowned.
"How often have I told you, my dear
Eva, that a self-evident fact requires no tone.

She shrugged her shoulders.

"How often? Oh! I don't know. A hundred times, I dare say. You look cross, Charlie."

"I am not cross, Eva, but I am grieved—grieved beyond measure. Your conduct last night caused me acute pain, the more so as you expressed no regret for it. But I hope you are in a better frame of mind today, and ready to say you are sorry for what you did. Until you have done so, I really don't feel that I can kiss you."

Charlie fully expected that this stupenreally don't feel that I can kiss you."

Charlie fully expected that this stupendons threat would reduce Eva to the lowest depths of despair, and bring her, figuratively s; eaking, to her knees; but for once he was out in his calculations. She drew up her slender figure and pursed up her rosy lips with an air that made him feel vaguely uneasy. Was it possible, he wondered, that she intended to defy him? Yes. Her next words proved that it was so.

"I am not sorry." she said, "not a bit.
I am glad. I would do it again."
Charlie gasped. The situation was so unlooked for that he could not rise to it all at once.

"As for kissing me," Eva went on, with a little disdainful mone, "well, you will never have the chance of doinz that again, so you need not excite yourself."

Charlie found his voice then.

"You are talking at random now, Eva," he said, severely, "a bad habit against which I have always warned you. Will you be kind enough to explain yourself?"

Eva tilted her small nose in the air, and a horrible doubt suddenly assailed him. Was there—could there be a hitch in the infallible system, after all? The thought nfallible system, after all? The thought appalled him.

'Oh, certainly,' Eva answered, 'I can do it in a very few words. Lord Dolly proposed to me last night and I accepted him.'

Charlie gasped again.
"But you are engaged to me," he ejacuated. "You must be mad. You can't recorded shove came upon his audience seriously contemplate throwing me over for Dolly Dishwood. The thing's impos-

Her face grew grave.

"I should be so sorry to do that," she said, more gently, "I—I don't want to be dishonorable, or to treat you badly, Charlie. But F am only human, and no one but myself knows what I have gone through in the last few months. You have

She paused and looked critically at her rejected lover, who now presented a truly pitiable appearance, with all the starch taken out of him, and a general air of limp depression pervading his being.

'That is all," she went on presently. But before you go there is one thing that I should like to impress upon you for fufuture guidance: It is always worth a man's while to be just and fair—even to a woman." even to such an altogether inferior crea

She paused again and contemplated him with her big blue eyes, but he said nothing. It seemed to him that all the laws of creation were reversed, and the whole scheme of the universe turned upside down.

There was a hitch in the system some where,
It had failed.—London Truth,

Plowing Old Pastures.
Dr. E. H. Jenkins, in a lecture before the students of the agricultural college at Burlington, urged very strongly against the practice of plowing old pastures. He would not destroy the turf of old pasture because if contains a variety of grasses which have proved themselves best able to stand close grazing. The fittest has survived. New seeding will not equal the turf which nature has formed by a long struggle between the good and the bad. If there is a reasonably good number of grass roots, then the position is well taken, and it would seem better to broadcast fertilizers ather than to plow. But if the pasture is largely covered with moss or weeds we should prefer to try plowing. AFTER SCHOOL

LIGHTLY'S SUCCESS.

"Dick," she said, "wh ere have you been dining?"

No, it is not that," I protested; "I dined at the clo", and Lightly told me himself, and b showed me the magazar, and asked b e to be his beat man, and we only had one bottle between us."

"We", this is a scrape!" she exclaimed, restr dy; "I suppose I will have to keep my promise and marry him,"

"And weed about your promise to me?" I asked, sarcasticnily.

That was indefinite," she answered, thoughtfully; "there was never any time His Wonderful Combination of Hypnotism and Literature.

When I went into the club the other night, I found Lightly turning over the pages of the Christmas number of All the World. His face would have afforded a fine study for a picture of contentment, and my first thought was that he must have an article or story in the magazine, For Lightly is something of a writer, and whenever he gate anything published—which is not very often—he bores us all for weeks afterward, talling how it happened. That was indefinite," she answered, thoughtfully; "there was never any time set for that. So I shall have to marry him now, and if he should die, or anything happen, I could marry you afterward."
"Thanks," I replied dryly; "but that programme does not suit me. Now let me plan a little. You have been a willful creature, never ready to name the day, and see the trouble you have got into. I suppose Lightly will be here bright and early to-morrow to marry you. Now, I propose to marry you myself to-morrow, at noon."

At this her eves onened in wide protest As soon as he caught sight of me, he bedoned me to his table, and I thought that I was in for at least a half-hour's punishment. But it turned out for once that I was interested in his talk.

"Have you seen it?" he asked, tapping the cover of the magazine, and giving a this eager lasgn as he spoke, which contract my impression that he must be in mot.

propose to marry you myself to-morrow, at noon."

At this her eyes opened in wide protest. "Yes." I continued, "I shall send a note to Lightly, telling him of your change of planr, and asking him to be my best man."

"But, Diek, this is so sudden. What shall we live on?"

"Love, you practical girl." I cried, estching her in my arms; "besides, the publishers of All the World to-day offered me the editorship of the magazine, vice aldeson, resigned. I suppose his going out has some sonnection with this business of Lightly's. I am sorry for him, but I might as well have the place as another."

"Then you can print anything of your own that you want to, can't you, dear? I am so gidd that you won's have to be rejected any more."

"Not even by you, sweetheart?"

"Not even by me—any more." "No," I answered; "have you anything in it?"

"Anything?" he almost shouted. "Why, man, I wrote the whole number."

At this I bagan to wonder if his brainmever too strong—had not suddenly given way. As you well know, All the World is one of the most conservative periodicals—as I will admit that I have found to my corrow in the past—and it was preposterous that it should make up a whole number, and a Christman number at that, from the work of one man. And if was clear to my mind that Lighty would not have been that one man, in any event.

While trying to think of something quisting to say, I took a magazine and glanced over the table of contents. It was one of Lightly's fancles—which did him no good in a literary way—lo have a dozen or more pet names. He used these indistriminately, as the humor moved him, and it happaned that I know most of them. So you may judge of my surprise when I tell you that every poem, story, article and emay in the entire magazine was signed by some one of the many names that I knew he used. The first was a Christmas story, signed T. S. Weaver (this, he had one axplained to me, stood for The Story Weaver). Then an article on "Jerusalem—Ninetsen Hundred Years Ago:" "Christmas—Past and Present," and the usual run of such material as editors have fallen into the liabit of serving up for the holiday insue. None of the topics were new, nor, as far as I could discover in a hasty glame, were they treated with much brilliancy. The signatures were all composed upon the same purrile plan as the one I have given.

Do you want the finis?

We were married on the morrow, and Lettic was as pretty a bride as ever was seen—as pretty as though she had been given mouths inatead of hours for making ready. But, on second though! I am not sure that sho had not been making ready all the tim-that I had been vainly asking her to name the day. I confess that I do not understand the sex.

There was lut one thing to cloud our happiness. Lightly refused to be the best man, or even to come to the wedding. And he has never offered any further contributions to All the World.

Perhaps this is because I am not, like Aldeson, "of a less robust physique" than himself.—James Knapp Reeve, in San Francisco Argonant.

The signatures were all composed upon the same puerile plan as the one I have given.

Poor as much of the stuff probably was, I still could not believe that Lightly had written it all, much less secured its publication in a single number of All the World. I turned to him for an explanation.

"Draw up a chair," he said, with what I thought an air of condescension. "I can afford to fly high to-night, so let us have bird and a bottle quietly in this corner, while I tell you all about h.

"Of course," he said, as soon as we were fairly settled, "this is all on the quiet. I should not tell even you, if you were not one of my best friends, and if I did not mean presently to ask a great favor of you. You know, "he continued, "how people have been talking about the science of hypnotism for months past?"

T nodded my assent, and he went on with an uninterrupped flow of words:

"Well," he said, "I chanced some time ago to be thrown in contact with an adopt in this art, or science, or whatever you are minded to call it. I recognized at once the value that a knowledge of it might be to me in making fletion, and I asked the fellow to give me some insight into it. This he did, for a consideration, and to such good purpose that I was soon able to practice the science to some extent. I presently found that it was not difficult for me to gain a hypnotic influence over any man of clear robust physique than myself, but I arety attempted to use the power.

"When I maily did, it was wholly without premeditation, and it happened in this way. A few weeks ago—in fact, just as they were making up the Christman number—I happened into the office of All the World, and while there officed Aldean this poem." Lightly put his finger on the printed page as he spoke, but went on with Are lighted throughout by electricity

"Go shead," I answered, not very graciously, considering that I was dining with him; "I might as well hear it all now."

I taked him to send his assistant away as I wanted to speak to him privately. When we were aloue I at once began the effort to make him subject to my will. In less time than I am telling you I had him completely under my influence, and he had secepted the poem and promised it the initial place in the number.

"Then the thought came to me to try my power a little further. Calling a measenger I sent to my rooms for a bundle of manuscript and sorted out from it everything that would do for a Christmas number. You know," he added, parenthetically, "that I always keep a stock of material ou hand ready for all needs and seasons." I took these Christmas things up one by one and brought them to his attention, and he accepted each one and made a place for it in this holiday number. Then he called his assistant in and gave instructions for making up the copy, and I took him away with me and gave him a royal good time for a week. When he got back to the office it was too late to make any changes, and so you see the number has come out with nothing but my work. And a very good number it is, too," he concluded complacently.

"But what do you expect to gain by it?" I asked; "the story will surely come out, and it will do you no good, but quite the reverse."

"You are all wrong," replied Lightly," ALL TRAINS ARE RUN BY EASTERN STANDARD TIME.

"That dear girl," said Lightly, "has promised to marry me as soon as I have won a place in literature—in fact, as soon as I have an established standing with any of the leading magnetice. This settles that point." To emphasize his meaning, he tapped All the Ward triumphantly. To emplosize his meaning, he tapped All the West triumphantly.

"But, surely," I said, "you would not consider this fair? You would not be willing that she should know—"

"All's fair in love, my boy. And I want you to be my best man."

I managed to get off with some half promise, and then, pleading an engagement, I got out of the club as quickly as possible and into a sab, and gave the driver the number of Lettie Underwood's house. C. HICKEY, - - PROP.

THAT CARD GAME.

"As I said to you at the time of our last conversation on these matters, we do not much care to have club affairs made public property. The spirit of reserve and exclusiveness which has characterized the club since its inception is all against any public parade, even in regard to such incidents as this-which can only redound to its credit. You will give the report verbatim, will you? You will promise not "'Yes, it is true that we have a card-room at the club. I believe gentlemen stinct of gaming is in their blood, and they will take chances on any matter that concerns this world or the next. Young Montgomery—Rawdon Montgortary—was such a one. He always wanted to play for higher stakes than the club limit. He wanted money enough up to make the game ed money enough up to make the game 'interesting.' So one night we determined to oblige him.

"I must go back a little and tell you enough about Montgomery, so that you may clearly understand what follows. He had been left some money—enough so that he had never been compelled to go regulated to the state of the state larly into business in order to get a living. He affected the society of artists a good deal, and had the merit of knowing a good picture when he saw it. Knowledge of this sort is just as valuable as a knwledge of precious stones or of any other fine commodity, if a man knows how to use it, and has the commercial instinct. Mont-gomery possessed these qualifications and used them so that many a fairish picture passed through his hands on the way from the studio to the walls of the final pur-chaser, and it was said that the larger part of the price stuck to Montgomery's fingers. Not that he was ever accused of dishonesty, or anything underhanded in his transactions. If he traded sometimes on the necessities of improvident painters, that was his own concern and theirs. If there had even been hint of more than this, he could not have remained in the

"You know the club has quite an artistic contingent. Clifford, the landscapist, is one of our best known art members, and being a particular friend of mine I spoke to him about accommodating Montgomery with this game 'for keeps,' as he expressed it. Clifford could afford to lose a little Repairing and Painting

it. Clifford could afford to lose a little money if it became necessary, and I knew he had plenty of courage to stay in as long as any. He gave an ugly little smile when I had explained the matter to him, showing his teeth in a way that made me think he might have some score of his own to the property of the

"I do not think you will care to follow all the course of our play. For some time Clifford and Pettingill lost steadily, I making some winnings, but most of the money going to Montgomery. From the start we had played in a sort of ferocious silence, as if more than the mere money stakes was dependent on the issue. For but as the hours went by it grew on me that an 'event' was drawing toward its sulmination my life I could not tell why I thought so, enlmination.

with each hand, and once or twice I felt inclined to protest against such plunging. But Pettingill, who seemed to see ahead ore clearly than I did, gave me a look that held me silent.

"Montgomery was well supplied with money, and for a long time paid his losses in each. But finally he took out his bank-book, wrote a check and passed it to Clif-ford in settlement, and asked him if that was satisfactory. Clifford placed it in his pocket without looking at it, merely nod-ding to the other, and went on with the game. This was repeated two or three times, and after that Pettingill nodded to me that we had best draw out of the game, and let them fight it to a finish alone. "Montgomery had grown nervous, and was playing recklessly. Clifford was calm, a little paler than usual, and playing with a deliberate calculation that meant ruin to his adversary, if he could compase it. Presently Montgomery paused, and made a hasty calculation in his bankbook; he hesitated a moment after this, and then said quietly to Clif-

"I have no more money. I would like to have another chance, if you will let me. My private collection of paintings is worth five thousand dollars." "He looked at Clifford inquiringly, not putting his question in words. 'All right,' said the other briefly, and the game went

"I began to get nervous, not knowing where it would end, and looked at my watch. It was twenty minutes past three. I went to the window, and could see a faint streak of gray light in the east. I was thankful for that, for I believed the garish daylight, which would soon be upon us, would bring the men to their senses, and stop the play. I thought Mont-

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

Stomach Liver Cure The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar. It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the general public. This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. It will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten or fifteen years to the lives of many of those who will use a half dozen bottles of the remedy each year.

IT IS A GREAT REMEDY FOR THE CURE OF Nervousness, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Female Weakness. Nervous Chills, Paralysis, Nervous Paroxysms and Nervous Choking, Hot Flashes, Palpitation of the Heart, Mental Despondency. St. Vitus' Dance Nervousness of Females

All these and many other complaints cured by this wonderful Nervine Tonic.

NERVOUS DISEASES. As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous de-

Tangement,

To the Great South American Medicine Co.

Dean Gerra:—I desire to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the s. omach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of, but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervots system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do you would not be able to supply the demand.
