Mother Hunt and Mother Saville had been to school together when they were girls, and only last week Mother Saville had brought her two children, Nanette and Louis, to spend a whole month with Mother Hunt. Fred and Elsie Hunt were very glad, indeed, to have the two new playmates, for they lived on a large country estate, and had few child neighbors.

The two mothers had been invited to spend the day with another school friend in a neighboring town, and the four children felt very proud at being trusted to stay alone with only Lizzie and Hannah, the two maids.

"Oh, are you?" cried Nanette. 'Then I will put on the muslin. We won't go outdoors.'

A few minutes later two very much grown-up little maids, holding up their trailing skirts daintily, started downstairs to the parlor, where they found Fred and Louis.

The girls shouted with laughter when they saw the boys. Louis had on a grey striped smoking jacket and broad-brimed straw hat. Fred's overcoat trailed on the ground and his father's new silk hat almost served as hat and ear-muffs, too.

"Allow me to help you into the carriage, Mrs. Hunt," said Louis, politely.

The carriage was made of rows of chairs with a tipped-over chair in front for the horse. When they were all seated Fred gave a great "click" and they started on their drive. Before they had gone far there came

The children giggled audibly. "Now, look here, miss, you can't fool me! Run and call your ma. I have some very pretty dress goods to show her." "A peddler!" whispered Fred. "If you do not care to show your goods to me you may go away at once," said Elsie, determinedly. "I quickly; "she is Mr. Saville's wife," and she pointed to Louis. "Now while you are showing these gentlemen your goods I will get you something to eat."

"I ain't a-goin' to unpack my goods just for you," said the peddler when Elsie had disappeared. "I passed what looked like a circus procession as I came along. Don't you youngsters want to run down the road a bit to see if it is comin'?"

Without a moment's hesitation the boys started. They forgot, in their eagerness to see the circus, all about little Nanette, who was left alone in the room with the peddler.

Some of the simpler tricks with which an elephant entertains his audience are entirely rudimentary and come as natural to him as the lap- Monday morning she was ready to go, door behind him at one of the counping of milk comes to a cat, says a writer in Appleton's Magazine. For instance, the blowing of a mouth har-instance, the blow instance is a constant white the blow in the blow in the blow in the monica. With childlike curiosity the big beast is forever groping and investigating with the tip of his trunk, and by means of the blunt, fingerlike projection on the end of it he picks up the harmonica just as he would pick up a pin or a penny or any other thing his monstrously elongated nose encounters. The natural inhaling and exhaling of the breath through the trunk starts the "music" and this so pleases this beast with the mind of a child, that the difficulty is not to make him play when told, but to make him stop at word of command. Exactly the same with the dinner bell, which any elephant will grasp in the tip of his trunk and swing in wide ares, delighting himself with the tintinnabulation. And when once, by means of sugar and petting and caressing, the big fellow has been made to understand when to start and when to stop the racket, it is an easy matter to substitute a fan for the bell and say the animal is fanning himself.

Not until the trainer begins to teach his pupil acrobatic tricks do his real troubles begin. The man may have an entire herd of eight raw elephants to break in, and each of these must be broken separately, day for day, and one after another. To accomplish this, the training is conducted in the same logical manner as that of a schoolboy learning arithmetic. Just as the schoolboy learns ad-

A Sound Stomach Means a Clear Head.-The high pressure of a nervous life which business men of the present day are constrained to live make draughts upon their vitality highly detrimental to their health. It is only by the most careful treatment that they are able to keep themselves alert and active in their callings, many of them know the value of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in regulating the stomach and consequently keeping the head clear.

WHERE JIM'S MONEY WENT.

Jim's father was dead, there were only he and his mother to earn for the little ones.

Mrs. Knowles helped at the day nursery and Jim tended the babies at Jim did other things too; he sold papers along the street where he lived, he took up ashes and carried coal upstairs for several neighbors, he ran lawn mowers in summer and shoveled snow in winter; he did everything that came to hand, either keeping his brother and sisters with him or putting them in charge of the eldest girl.

Jim was really a remarkable boy, and none knew it better than good Mrs. Knowles herself. So when he asked hesitatingly for the share of his earnings that his mother had said must go for new clothes for himself his request was granted.

"He's old enough to buy his own things," his mother said. But when the new suit did not appear she wondered, especially as dollars were scarcer than usual, and crimping was in order.

"Could he be spending foolishly?" she thought. One September night Jim asked his mother: "Do you know what day it

SUCCESSFUL ONES FROM THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

"I was so discouraged with letters and application blanks written by that I decided to try the parochial schools. I went first to the priest in charge of St. Joseph's parochial school, at Sixth avenue and Waverly place, Father Spellman by name. I thought I would like to get boys from that parish because it is so close to the business section. Father Spellman was courteous, but he could not oblige me. Every one of last June's graduates had been placed in store or office, and every graduate in the class of June, 1907, had been spoken for by some business man in the Wall street or wholesale district. There was the stable of Bethlehem, and God's hand is not shortened. I HAVE hopes. I have GREAT hopes that this latest Mission, opened by the Bishop of Northampton, will, in due course, become a great Mission.

But outside help is, evidently, necessary. Will it be forthcoming?

I have noticed how willingly the CLIENTS of ST. ANTHONY OF PADUA readily come to the assistance of poor, struggling Priests. May I not hope that they will, too, cast a sympathetic and pitying eye upon me in my struggle to establish an outpost of the Catholic Faith in this-so far as the Catholic Faith is concerned -barren region? May I not hope, good reader, that you, in your zeal for the progress of that Faith, perhaps you do not think that in a to you with all earnestness to come to my checker or wrapper or a beginner be- assistance. Mortgages, unpaid notes, and other liabilities, which a man in the prime of life may incur, ate up nearly all their father's life insurance. Mark had intended to begin the study of law; he was clever, serious, strong-the greatest vaulter of his college, and the pride, of intercollegiate athletic meets. The three came to Washington. They knew a Senator, who had been their father's friend. Here was "influence." meant a place in the departments for Mark and Madeleine, and Grace's chance to have her voice cultivated. The family and the good nuns had a firm belief in Grace's voice. The Senator was ill at the Arlington Hotel; too ill to see anybody. At the end of three weeks he passed away. Mark's twinges of rheumatism developed into a kind of paralysis of the legs. He could not walk. The great Herr Teufelsfisch, to whom Grace went, with a letter from Sister Hyacinthe, said that she had a "sweet, colorato drawing-room voice" but that it would not pay to cultivate it for the concert stage. mathematics. "My dear," the Senator's widow had kindly said to her, "you must pass the civil service examination and then we shall see. Of course, you can typewrite, and, if you're a stenographer too, the matter is settled!" Madeleine discovered that French and geometry would not enable her to pass the civil service examination; typewriting and stenography were sealed pages to her. Madeleine made no reply. "I wouldn't bother about it," said Mark; "these people who run charity things will give you no peace. Don't

"I'm delighted," said Grace. And she appeared to be. Grace was small with brown hair and blue eyes-wellopened eyes that had none of the soft, violet tints of her sister's. She sat down on the old footstool they had brought from home. "What's the matter?

hear a well-made dress!" Mark laughed, and then sighed. The room of the blind in the Congressional Library was half-fiiled with the blind people and some visitors, who had strolled in to hear the music. In a seat at the back was a well-dressed old gentleman, who rested his chin on his gold-headed stick rather an absent-minded way. Grace's turn came, and Madeleine, the perfection of good style in her severely plain frock, began the prelude to 'Good-by, Sweet Day." Grace looked very sweet and simple and gracious, "as if," Sister Celestine had often said, "she were a good terms with her guardian angel and the rest of the world!" There was something in Grace's voice that appealed to people who had suffered; one could not explain it. The voice was true and young and well placed, but many voices have these qualities. Grace finished "Good-by, Sweet Day" and sang a little song called "Absent." The blind folk frankly expressed their interest. And the old gentleman at the back of the room leaned forward, and looked very much in earnest. At the end of the concert he asked the very kindly 100,000 of population. In Russia mistre s of ceremonies to present him to Grace.

"Miss North," he said, very gravely, "would you come for an hour a day or so, and sing for my little grandchild; she's a cripple, and she likes music-singing-soft and low, and," he smiled, "sympathetic and rare, like yours. The poor little thing is a hopeless cripple.

"Like my brother!" Madeleine spoke, impulsively. Her mind was full of Mark; she could think of nobody else.

"I'm Senator Warburton," the old gentleman said, looking at Grace with new interest, "and my wife will call on you, if you will give me your address. But my little grandchild is really a hopeless invalid," he added, "even her father, who is a great spethe Senator bowed. Madeleine!" cried Grace, when they were seated in the Pennsylvania avenue car, "why did you say that?"

"I don't know," answered Madeleine, only restraining her tears because there was an inquisitive-looking stout man on the opposite seat. "I'm so hopeless, I just break down." "I will not break down," said Grace firmly. "We've done all we could, and

Mrs. Warburton took the hint. She did not attempt to pay Grace, but she overpaid the Norths in a hundred ways to which they could not object. She lent them a little lodge in Cleveland Park until Mark had quite recovered, and got Madeleine to act as her social secretary, a place which she soon learned to fill so well that, when Dr. Warburton insisted on marrying her one day in St. Patrick's, his mother said that she consented because "Madeleine was indispen-

The Reason Why

many men remain uninsured is because they do not give to the important matter of life insurance any serious thought. If they would calmly consider the pros. and cons. of the question they would at once become convinced of the necessity of providing for their families in the event of their death, and that the only absolutely certain way of doing this is by a policy of life insurance in a strong and reliable company such as the
