Mr. BLAKE. What are the main headings of this enormous expenditure?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman the items before Concurrence.

75. Miscellaneous works, not otherwise provid-ed for $6,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the usual vote.

Mr. WELDON. I desire to enquire whether the arrangement with the Pullman Palace Car Company is being continued?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As the hon. gentleman is aware, that arrangement has not been very satisfactory, and it is of great importance to the Intercolonial Railway to have a Pullman service from Halifax and St. John direct to Montreal without change. The contract between the Pullman Company and the Grand Trunk Railway expires in August. 1885, and we have proposed to continue the con-tract with the Pullman Company until the same date. In ho meantime, they are to supply additional first-class and Pullman cars with all modern improvements; and as they are to allow the Department to put the existing cars in the s'o is and have them fitted up with the modern improve n ents, at the cost of the Company, I trust the service will be much better rerformed.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of the contract with the Company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They put the cars on the road for the fares collected. The Company keep the cars in repair unless an accident occurs in consequence of the management of the railway. They pay for all ordinary repairs.

CANALS.

75. Lachine Canal $170,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. 1 notice that of the general canal vote, out of a total vote of $3,200,500, no less than $2,243,100 is for a revote. I think it would be convenient if the hon. gentleman would state the policy of the Government with respect to these works. Are they going on with them? These votes do not look as if it was the intention to have them prosecuted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is true. On the Lachine Canal great difficulty has been experienced in closing some of these contracts and the work has been comparatively slow Of the total vote of $470,000, $370,000 is a revote. The amount asked will be for the final completion of the whole work at an early day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman arranged about the use of machinery on that canal, as to which there was a difficulty for a good many years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that has been satisfactorily arranged.

77. Cornwall Canal...... $174,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All this amount is a revote. The revote is intended to cover several expenditures for final estimates on section No. 1, $25,000, and for the works at the upper entrance, $146,000. This makes $174,000 required to complete the work at the upper entrance, in addition to that of 1884 85, $173,000.

Sir RICHARD CARI'WRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman Mr. BLAKE.

ment have finally concluded to do with reference to the general policy of these canals? Is there any intention to deepen the St. Lawrence navigation for a considerable time to come?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only so far as provided for last Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth will this give in the Cornwall Canal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There have been large expenditures there, as the hon. gentleman knows, but we cannot obtain a much greater depth until the completion of the whole of the canals, when they will have the same depth as in the others-from 12 to 15 feet, according to the plans on which these canals have been designed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And you do not attain any considerable depth in the Cornwall Canal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not throughout. With this expenditure, the work which is being done is being done by the enlargement of these canals throughout.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have the locks been enlarged?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under the Administration of which the hon. gentleman was a member, there was a contract involving an expenditure of some $600,000 for a portion of the Cornwall Canal, for putting it in the same posi-tion with the canals which were deepened throughout -the same depth as the Welland Canal. The probable cost of enlarging the Cornwall Canal for a draught of 14 feet is $3,400,000. For the present scheme of enlargement for deepening to 13 feet, the amount is $500,000; and the estimated cost of the present scheme is $2,900,000. The expenditure up to 30th June, 1882, was $545,309; for the year 1882-83, $21,728; and from 1st July to 31st December, 1883, $6,300. The total expenditures up to the 31st Decem-ber, being $573,338. The probable expenditure for December, 1883, to 30th June, $49,700, making the total expendituro $623,038, required to complete; from the 1st July, 1884, $2,286,520, by which the Cornwall Canal will be completed throughout, on the scheme upon which the present work is being conducted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, the hon. gentle man does not propose to go on with ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; that is all until the whole question with regard to the deepening of the St. Lawrence is taken up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many locks have been made at Cornwall?

Mr. BERGIN. Two

Mr. BLAKE. Is it exceptional that we find that nearly all these votes are revotes, or will the bulk be really spent?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These canal estimates are furnished by the Department; but we find that the work on the canals is very much smaller than was anticipated. Difficulties arise which prevent the work from being pushed in the same way as railway work. I am inclined to think that these estimates are all very large.

Mr. BLAKE. What I mean is, that, finding that last year three times as much money was asked as has been spent-

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are over $2,000,000 of revotes on these canals.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; it looks as if there had been an over estimate all through. I suppose that in preparing the Estimates for next year, the hon. gentleman will call the attenin a position to give us information as to what the Govern- tion of his officers to the desirability of estimating with a greater degree of accuracy, what the requirements will be In estimating what our financial engagements are for the year, a million or two is not an unimportant item after all.

78. Williamsburgh-for the construction of an en-trance and lock at the head of Rapide Plat Canal $100,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the nature of this work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is for the construction of The estimated cost of the work is $200,000. Some locks. $75,000 will be required, in addition to the vote for 1884-85, to complete the works.

73. Williamsburg-towards the enlargement of the upper entrance, Galops Canal $80,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These works not being under contract, there will probably be little or no expenditure during the current fiscal year. A difficulty arose in connection with the contract, and new tenders were invited, and the work is just now being put under contract. There-fore, the total vote is a revote. The total estimated cost of the work is $260,000; $180,000 will be required in addition to this vote.

80. St. Lawrence River and Canals...... $110,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a revote to cover the expenditure required in improving the channel in the Galops Rapids.

81. Murray Canal. $300,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a revote to be expended towards the construction of the Murray Canal, now under contract to Mr. J. E. Wilcox. The length to be 61 miles, width 80 feet and depth 11 feet. A total of $765,000 will be required to complete that work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the total cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $1,065,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is 11 feet the total depth?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, at low water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would hardly meet the wants of a great many crafts that are beginning to navigate Lake Ontario. The majority of grain vessels draw more than 11 feet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would involve very great expense to make any material increase, not from the nature of the bottom but from the position of the approaches to the canal.

Mr. PLATT. The hon. Minister stated last year the total cost was to be $1,165,000. What is the reason of the decrease?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total amount is $1,265,-000. The vote taken for this year, and what will be required to do the work, will be $1,065,000.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the meaning of the phrase, low water.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I believe that in a certain condition of the wind, the depth is greater than at other times. In the most adverse condition, the canal will have a depth of 11 feet.

Mr. BLAKE. It is well known that there is a very great variation in the depth of Lake Ontario, irrespective of the questions of wind; at zero point, Toronto, we have a series of observations from which a very curious calculation is shown, entirely irrespective of the wind. Will this 11 feet be obtained, irrespective of the wind, when the wind is adverse, and when the water is at its lowest stage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will never be less than 11 feet of water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When will it be completod?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The date of the completion of the contract is July 1st, 1885. I do not expect, from the progress the contractors have made up to the present, it will be found to be very close to that date.

Mr. PLATT. What does the wall consist of?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot give much information about the wall, but I presume every precaution will by taken to have it properly built.

82. Welland Canal..... $500,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a revote of $270,000 and a new vote of $130,000. Both amounts are to be ex-pended as follows:-Towards the completion of Section 27, H. J. Beemer, contractor, $200,000; Section 42, Mr. Dunbar, contractor, $37,500; facing banks, $106,000; contingencies, $66,500. An additional sum of $188,000 will be required to complete the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is the supp'y of water in the canal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER Very good ; there is no difficulty about the water.

83. Welland--Construction of a raceway between the feeder and Chippews River...... $17,400 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is work provided for last year, and this amount is required to complete it. There is no change in the total cost from last year.

84 Trent River Navigation-For construction of Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The revote is $185,000 to be expended on the Fenelon Falls, Buckhorn and Burley works, and in the construction of a dam at Young's Point bridge and Lakefield. $105,000 will be required to complete the work. The work at Fenelon Falls was estimated to cost $120,254; at Buckhorn, $79,030; at Burleigh, $176,720, that is $376,007 in all. The works at Lakefield, New Dam, Young's Point, &c., $67,993, making a total estimated cost for these works of $444,000 in all. The exponditure up to July, 1883, was $41,328; from July 1st to December 31st, $62,200, making a total of $103,528, to the end of the year. The estimated expenditure to June is $30,600, making $134,138 required to complete from January 1st, 1884, $309,000.

Mr. MILLS. What I want to know is whether the hon. gentleman has not an estimate of the cost of the Trent Valley Canal, of which this, of course, will be but a very small portion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am happy to be able to state to the House that the survey and examination of that work, which has been going forward for the last two or three years, has been brought to a close, so far as the survey is concerned, and Mr. Rubridge, the engineer, who has been in charge of that work, is engaged in making up his report, which I hope to be able to lay upon the Table of the House before Parliament rises I pressed him very strongly to lose no time in giving me the final report and estimate. As soon as I have it I will lay it before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many miles are covered by these works, from Lakefield to Balsam Lake?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They open up a very large extent of navigation through that section of country.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). There is about 100 miles from Cobokonk to Lakefield, which will be all made navigable as soon as these works are completed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The completion will give a stretch of navigation between Lakefield, 91 miles from Peterboro' and Balsam Lake, opening up about 150 miles of direct and lateral navigation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What might be the distance as the crow flies?

Sir CHAREES TUPPER. I should say the direct navigation would be about 100 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In all these cases there is a considerable curvature, and you go in and out a good deal from one lake to another. I should think the distance from Lakefield to Balsam Lake could not be, in a straight line, as much as 100 miles.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). It is about 100 miles by the course of navigation. It is a devious route, following the waters.

Mr. BLAKE. May we hope that before Concurrence the hon. gentleman will be able to get Mr. Rabridge's report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope so.

Mr. BLAKE. Because I was sorry to hear a statement that the cost would be about $6,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it will be over that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is not taking any vote for that this year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the depth of water over it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, The depth on the sill is 5 feet. Dimensions of locks, 134 feet; breadth, 33 feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be about the dimensions of the present Rideau canal navigation, I think?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose so.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is not intended to utilize the canal then, for communication between Lakes Huron and Ontario for lake-going vessels, ultimately?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Simply for internal communication?

85. Ste. Anne Canal $241,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that cover the wholo?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a revote, and completes the work of enlarging the Ste. Anne's Canal and improvement of the approaches.

852. Carillon Canal, Dam and approaches $191,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. About this dam, a good deal has happened since last Session. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us something about that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Carillon Canal, dam and slide, a revote of $191,000. This is required to complete the dam and settle with the contractors for the canal, dam and slide; also the improvement of the channel leading to the canal: no additional vote is required. It is not expected that anything will be required beyond the vote taken for this purpose last year. The hon, gentle-man no doubt refers to an accident which occurred in connection with this work during the past season, in which considerable damage was done through the carrying away of certain works, and I am glad to be able to state that there was no defect in the plan. Mr. Page, the that there was some defect in certain connections; that has satisfied himself that the plan was perfectly correct, and it was in the execution of the work, in consequence of there being a failure to fasten a portion of this work at the bottom, in the way designed in the plan, that there was this loss of a portion of the work.

Mr. BLAKE. Who pays?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I am afraid that we will have to pay.

Mr. BLAKE. How much do we pay?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will not be so large as was supposed; the original estimate will not be very much exceeded in the completion of the work.

Mr. BLAKE. One would like to know what contractors it was that worked so defectively. The engineer says the plan was all right and the execution was wrong, and some work that was required to be done was not done. What contractors was it who made this failure? Are they contractors in the employment of the Government now, in this work or in any other work? Who was the officer who should have supervised this, and under whose supervision the work was so defective? What will be the cost to the country, consequent upon the defective execution of the work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The late Mr. Merrill was in direct charge and overseer of this work, and, I am afraid, was responsible for the failure at this particular point. It was extremely difficult work, I suppose one of the most difficult works that was ever undertaken in this part of the country, or in almost any other. It was the construction of a work which had baffled the efforts of engineers, to a very large extent. It was dealing with the stoppage of a great volume of water at a place where there was a very rapid current, and it was extremely difficult work to do. I believe there is no fault chargeable upon the contractors. They carried out the work as they were directed; but there was unfortunately an oversight on the part of the person who was immediately in charge of the execution of this work, and who was a man of great ability and experience. He had been engaged originally in designing this work, and there was no doubt on the part of the Department of his vigilance in carrying it forward. Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Page satisfied themselves there was an oversight at this particular spot. As I say, they were dealing with a bottom that was supposed to be solid rock; but I believe at this particular part there was some debris that had been overlooked.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot say that the hon. gentleman's explanation satisfies my mind. He says it was a very difficult work; that no plan was altered; that no system was altered, though he says that his engineer reports that the altered system was all right. Now, in dealing with an exceptionally difficult work of this kind, under an altered system, presumably, the detailed mode of construction would be stated in the contract, the specification or arrange-There must have been, necessarily, some plan laid ment. down. The hon. gentleman says there was no fault in the engineer who made the plan, no fault on the part of the contractors, but a default on the part of the dead manpretty hard on the dead man. We would like to ascertain how it is that the contractors could not have been at fault. If the contractors were not at fault it must have been in the terms of the contract, because I should think the preparation of the contract would have included the necessary elements for the successful prosecution of the work-would have indicated what the contractors had to do; and the engineer in charge ought to have seen that the contractors carried out the contract. The hon. gentleman stated, in the first place, as I understood him, Chief Engineer, having gone exhaustively into this question, probably a connection had not been made between parts of the work as contracted for. Just now he says that the difficulty was that some portion that had been supposed to be solid rock was really débris. Now, it was known that there was great inequality in the bottom of the river, and one of the main difficulties of the original contractors was in making a somewhat level bottom on which to build. That was known before 1878. There were disputes and trouble about that. The working in of the timbers to make a level was a subject of great difficulty, and change, and trouble. That was thoroughly known before this alteration of the plan took place. Now, if the plan was all right, if the contract was all right, if the specifications were all right, what was the defect in the execution which has created this difficulty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I will have to ask my hon. friend to be good enough to visit my office, or any gentleman in the House who takes an interest in the question, and Mr. Trudeau or Mr. Page will show the plan and point out exactly the given place, and all the particulars as to what led to this very unexpected and untoward accident, which was not so serious, I am happy to say, as it was at first supposed to have been, but which led to the carrying away of a portion of the work. It is nothing very new in the construction of difficult public works of this kind to meet with these accidents. There is nothing extraordinary about it. I am glad to know that the impression which went abroad at the time was exaggerated, and after the fullest examination on the part of Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Page, and an investigation of the whole question, they have stated to me in the most explicit terms, that there was nothing defective in the plan, that it was not to an alteration in the plan that the accident was due, but to the manner in which the work was done. I hope my hon. friend does not insinuate that I would attempt to take refuge from the consequences behind other officers of the Department. But he pressed me very much to know who was primarily responsible, and the only answer I could give him is the answer I got from the Deputy Minister, who is immediately in charge, along with the Chief Engineer.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, the hon. gentleman is not in a position to answer me to-night, and I do not think it would be satisfactory to adopt his method of reaching a solution. We are here to obtain information, in Parliament, for the country. But instead of going to the office I would ask the hon. gentleman to furnish us, at a later stage, with full information with regard to the plan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of that. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just say, in respect to all these items, that we desire to have the right of discussing them tolerably fully on Concurrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly.

Mr. BLAKE. In so far as the information is defective, I understand the hon. gentleman will supplement it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I will bring in a special report on the case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total estimated cost is $240,000. There is a re-vote of $44,000, and an additional sum of $96,000 will be required to complete the work.

88. St. Peter's Canal $14,500 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This work is for the protection of the north entrance on the east side—the construction of a pier 330 feet in length, its top to be 6 feet above the level of the Bras d'Or Lake.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS-OHARGEABLE TO INCOME. CANALS-

 Mr. BLAKE. This is a revote. How is it that the work has not been done?

Mr. BERGIN. I can state the reason to the hon. gentleman. Mr. Page explained to me that brick of a particular shape was required, and that it could not be obtained at Cornwall, unless arrangements were made the previous year, as the clay required to be turned out the year before, and if such bricks were obtained from Montreal or elsewhere the estimate would be very largely exceeded. He had placed himself in communication with brick manufacturers at Cornwall, for the purpose of having such bricks made, in order that the work might be done within the estimate.

93. Miscellaneous. $30,000 00

Mr. THOMPSON. Is any portion of this money devoted to increasing the depth of water in the Burlington Bay Canal? I understand a deputation has waited on the Government in respect to this matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject is not dealt with in this vote.

Resolutions to be reported; Committee to sit again.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and at (1:05 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 24th March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ADJOURNMENT-ANNUNCIATION DAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns to day, it stand adjourned until three p.m. Wecnesday next.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron), in introducing Bill (No. 127) to further amend the Criminal Law, said: The object of the Bill is to prevent the publication of immoral newspapers and other immoral public prints. I cannot do more than have it printed and distributed to parties who have interest in matters of that kind with the view to legislation next Session.

Bill read the first time.

POSTMASTER AT DUART.

Mr. CASEY enquired, Whether the Postmaster General has received a petition from residents of Duart and vicinity complaining of the appointment of Ephraim Britton as postmaster of Duart, for reasons therein set forth, and asking that his appointment be cancelled and T. C. Macdonald be appointed in his stead; and whether the Government have taken, or intend to take, any action in consequence of said petition?

Mr. CARLING. I think the hor. gentleman is aware that we have received a petition, as it has been acknowledged to him from the Department. It is not the present intention to cancel Mr. Britton's appointment, and appoint Mr. Macdonald instead. Mr. CASEY. As to the last part of the question?

Mr. CARLING. I stated that it is not the intention to cancel Mr. Britton's appointment and appoint Mr. Macdonald,

Mr. BLAKE The last part of the question is not answered.

Mr. CARLING. It is not the intention to take any action.

WHARF AT LOFBINIÉRE.

Mr. RINFRET enquired, Whether a petition addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, signed by a large number of citizens of the parish of Lotbinière and the adjoining parishes, respecting the construction of a wharf in the said parish of Lotbinière, has received the attention of the Government? If so, what do the Government propose to do in relation to the prayer of the said Petition?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). I must inform the hon. member that the petitions to which he refers have only reached me this morning, consequently it has been impossible as yet to take the matter into consideration, but I shall see to it.

Mr. RINFRET. Will the answer be given by Wednesday next?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). I cannot promise that to the hon. member. When the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, he will see if there is an amount appropriated for that purpose. That is all I can tell him for the present, as the matter has not yet come before me.

POLICE FOR THE SOUTH-WESTERN FRONTIER OF ONTARIO.

Mr. HAGGART, in the absence of Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a police force on our south-western frontier, upon the Detroit River, either in conjunction with the Provincial Government or with the municipalities directly interested, or with both, for the protection of the lives and property of Her Majesty's subjects on that frontier?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the duty of the Provincial Government to afford protection to the lives and property of Her Majesty's subjects on the frontier, and the Government here have had no communication from the Provincial Government, asking for any assistance in regard to that matter.

TAXATION OF OFFICIAL INCOMES.

Mr. WELDON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps to obtain such alteration or amendment in the law so as to permit Dominion official incomes to become subject to municipal taxation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention this Session.

LANDS AND TIMBER LIMITS ON HUNTER'S ISLAND.

Mr. BAIN, in the absence of Mr. COCKBURN, enquired, Whether there have been any applications, or negotiations, or arrangements or understandings, or promises, in reference to the sale or licensing of lands or timber limits, or otherwise, on Hunter's Island, and how far the matter has proceeded, and what are the names of the applicants?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This question in fact calls for a rather voluminous return. If the hon, gentleman will move for a return, the papers will be brought down. Mr. CARLING.

MORPETH HARBOUR.

Mr. CASEY, in the absence of Mr. McCRANEY, enquired. Has the Government, during the last six months, entered into a contract for the construction of works at Morpeth harbour? If so, who is the contractor? Where does he live? What is the contract price? The details and nature of said works? Who is superintending their construction? Where does the superintendent reside?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A contract has been awarded, but, I am sorry to say I have mislaid the notes I had about this, but this evening, or on Thursday, the item of Morpeth harbour will come up in the Estimates, and I will be glad to give the information to the hon. gentleman.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PIERS.

Mr. DAVIES enquired, Whether the Government have determined to take over any and which of the piers of Prince Edward Island? Whether they have agreed to pay the Province of Prince Edward Island any sum of money for these piers or the repairs laid out upon them by the Province; and if so, what amount have they agreed to pay?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter has been considered by the Government, and, most likely, the Supplementary Estimates, when they come down, will give all the information the hon. gentleman desires to have now.

PROMISE OF APPOINTMENT TO JOHN A. WIL-KINSON.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Was any promise or assurance given by any member of the Government to John A. Wilkinson that he would be recommended for, or might have the registrarship at Calgary? If so, by whom and when? Was any promise or assurance given by any member of the Government to John A. Wilkinson that he would be recommended for, or might have the registrarship at Edmonton? If so, by whom and when? Will the Government lay on the Table forthwith any correspondence or papers on the subject of either office? Is any such promise or assurance still in force? If not, at what date and by whom was it cancelled or withdrawn?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No promise or assurance was given by any member of the Government to John A. Wilkinson that he would be recommended for or might have the registrarship of Calgary. More than a year age, a promise was given to Mr. John A. Wilkinson that, when the registrarship at Edmonton would be established, he would be recommended for the appointment. It was, in the first place, by myself that the promise was made, and it was repeated by my successor. There is no correspondence or papers on the subject of either office, except a letter of Mr. Macpherson which has appeared in the papers, of which he has no copy. "Is any such promise or assurance still in force?" That, I think, it would be improper to answer under the present circumstances. No such promise has been cancelled or withdrawn.

PAYMENT TO THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAIL-WAY ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR FLOATING DEBT.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any sum has been paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under the Act of this Session in respect of their floating debt? If so, when and how much? Were detailed statements, vouchers and evidence furnished and reports made to the Government on the subject? Will these be laid on the Table forthwith?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $7,500,000 was paid on the 12th March, 1884. Vouchers and evidence were submitted by the Company. These papers will be laid upon the Table as soon as the hon. gentleman will move for them, and 1 have no doubt the House will allow the hon. gentleman to do so without notice, as I am very anxious to bring the papers down.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY SUBSIDY ACCOUNT.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any sum has been paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on construction contract account, since the payments already communicated to the House? If so, when? And how much separately in respect to the loan recently authorized and in respect of the subsidy? Has any land been awarded on subsidy account? On what part, and how many miles, and at what rate per mile for each section were such payments and awards made? Will the vouchers, estimates and reports on which they were made be laid on the Table forthwith ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say to the hon. gentleman that $3,298,627 were paid from the 18th to the 24th of March, 1884; $1,222,627 on account of subsidy, and $2,076,000 on account of loan. No land was awarded on subsidy account. Payments are made in proportion to the work done, and are no longer made on the mileage basis. The reports, estimates and vouchers will be laid on the Table as soon as the hon. gentleman will move for them.

MAILS IN THE COUNTY OF LOTBINIÈRE.

Mr. RINFRET enquired, Whether the Government have considered the petitions or claims of whatsoever nature, respecting the transport of the mails and the granting of daily mails for the parishes of St. Agathe, St. Giles, St. Patrick and St. Sylvestre, in the county of Lotbinière? If so, whether it is their intention to accede to the said requests?

Mr. CARLING. The matter is under the consideration of the Government.

EXCHANGE BANK NOTES.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether any of the station masters or officers on the Intercolonial Railway were at any time, and if so when, instructed not to take Exchange Bank notes when offered in payment of fares or freights? Will the Government lay on the Table a copy of any communi-cation on the subject?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The station masters were instructed on the 17th of September last not to accept Exchange Bank notes in payment of fares and freights. have no correspondence here, but I presume communications were sent from the superintendent's office here to the office at Moncton. If it is desired I will ascertain.

PAYMENTS MADE TO J. A. WILKINSON.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, What sums of money; at what dates; and for what services; were received by J. A. Wilkinson in respect of the Census?

Mr. McLELAN. On May 2nd, 1882, for services, $50; July 5th, same year, for services, $75; July 5th, same year, for services, $75, a total of $200. The services rendered in May were for the investigation of industrial establishments.

REPORT.

The following Report was laid on the Table :---

Report of the Minister of Agriculturefor the year ending June 30th, 1883. - (Mr. McLelan.)

PAYMENTS MADE TO THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. BLAKE moved for all Orders in Council containing statements, vouchers, evidence, reports, estimates, and other papers in connection with the payments or advances made to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on any account whatever, not including statements already brought down, with detailed statements of the dates and amounts of such payments and advances.

Motion agreed to.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House receive itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution :-

That it is expedient to amend " The General Inspection Act, 1874,"

That it is expedient to amend "The General Inspection Act, 1874," by providing :— 1. That inspectors who have obtained certificates in other districts, may be appointed for districts in which there are no qualified applicants for the office; Inspectors so appointed to have power to appoint deputies after examination by them; 2. That a deputy inspector having an interest in an article inspected by him shall incur a penalty; 3. That fishermen may be appointed deputy inspectors of fish and fish-oils under certain restrictions; 4. That no barrel or package for the reception of fish shall be sold without inspection under a penalty for each package so sold; 5. That the several qualities of mackerel or herrings shall be more precisely defined; 6. That masters of vessels entering or clearing at a Custom House, shall report all packages of pickled or smoked fish unin-spected, on board such vessels; 7. That the fee for the inspection of each barrel of herring shall be 7 cents, and for each half barrel 4 cents.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee)

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object of the amendments of this Bill is in the first place to change the old Act in regard to the appointment of inspectors; and, secondly, to make the inspection more efficient. We provide that the inspectors shall be appointed as usual. An inspector holding a certificate of qualification may himself examine candidates for the post of deputy inspectors, the latter to hold their appointments subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. As regards the second clause "that a deputy inspector having an interest in an article inspected by him shall incur a penalty,"—that is a change in the present law which does not provide a penalty. With respect to clause 3 "that fishermen may be appointed deputy inspectors of fish and fish oils, under certain restrictions"—I find, after consulting members on both sides of the House, acquainted with the working of the present law, that this proposal is not desirable; and I therefore propose to strike it out. Clause 4 " that no barrel or package for the reception of fish shall be sold without inspection under a penalty for each package so sold," I also propose to strike out. In clause 5, I propose to make a slight change with respect to the classification of herring.

Mr. GILLMOR. What is the reason for debarring fishermen, except under certain restrictions, from being appointed inspectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. One of the strongest objections urged against the admission of Newfoundland herring is that they are inspected by fishermen; and having condemned the Newfoundland system, I do not think it is proper to introduce it here.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is very difficult to find persons qualified to inspect fish unless they have a practical knowledge of the business. Almost the only qualified inspectors are fishermen.

On motion to strike out clause 3,

Mr. DAVIES. What class of men does the hon, gentleman intend to appoint, if he excludes fishermen from being inspectors? It is absolutely ossential that the inspector should have some practical knowledge of the business. If you appoint a trader, or a shop-keeper, or a farmer, to inspect fish; unless he has a practical knowledge of fishing and fish-curing, the whole thing will be a farce.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is labouring under a mistake as to the effect of striking out this clause. have a board of examiners to examine candidates for these officers, and we must suppose that they will appoint competent men. I do not think that the fact of a man being a fisherman excludes him from being appointed an inspector though there is a clause in the present Act which forbids him examining his own fish, or any that he is interested in.

Mr. BLAKE. Presumably when the hon. gentleman first introduced this clause, finding it necessary to appoint fishermen as inspectors, it would indicate that that was not the law at the present time, or else the clause would not be necessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend says he finds it unnecossary.

Mr. BLAKE. No, but having regard to the objection made as to the results of fishermen being inspectors in Newfoundland, he has thought it bad policy to allow them to be inspectors here, and therefore he asks the House not to assent to the law to that effect. Now that may be a good reason, but certainly when the hon, gentleman deliberately proposed that fishermen might be appointed he must have thought it required a law that they might be appointed, or that it was expedient to appoint them; and hon. gentlemen around me say, when he proposes to strike out this clause, that they are a class of persons who should be appointed.

Mr. FORTIN. The proper persons to inspect fish and oil are fishermen-that is, men who pack, split, and salt fish and know better than any others how to cure fish well. But the understanding is that a fisherman who is actually fish-ing and engaged in the trade should not be an inspector because he should be perfectly independent. We objected to the inspection system as carried on in Newfoundland, because the Government of that Island allowed the fishermen themselves to inspect their own fish, or the fish of their neighbours, or fish in which they were interested, and thus to commit a fraud by marking number two, or three, or four, not fit to be eaten, number one, in order to deceive the merchants of this country. The law should say that none but fishermen or other competent people should be appointed inspectors, or deputy inspectors, but that they should not be appointed unless they were out of the trade and perfectly independent of the fishermen whose fish came under their inspection.

Mr. WELDON. It seems to me that the effect of striking this out, will be that fishermen, the only really competent men, will be excluded.

Mr. KIRK. I think the practice has been to appoint fishermen inspectors, but they are not allowed to inspect their own fish, and I do not see why that law should not continue with the exception.

Mr. FORTIN. They certainly should not be allowed to inspect their own fish, or the fish of their neighbours, or of traders with whom they do business. They should be por-fectly independent or clee they will not do their duty. Unless they are independent how can you believe the inspector will grade the fish in the proper manner?

would simply have the effect of requiring fishermen in the than it is in this country. Mr. GILLMOR.

outlying districts to send their fish to the cities to be inspected, which would cost much more than if they were inspected at home. If you prevent those who are engaged in fishing from being inspectors in the small districts, you will have no inspector at all, because there would not be a sufficient amount of work for an inspector to make it pay without some other business, and fishing is the only business to be done in such case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand that the General Inspection Act of 1871 does not exclude fishermen at all from being inspectors or deputy inspectors. This clause, then, is not required for the purpose of founding a Bill, and my hon. friend desires that it be streck out. When his Bill comes up, unless it alters the law of 1874, the fisher-men would still have the right to inspect; and if there be such an exclusion in the Bill, then would be the time to discuss the point. I quite agree with what has been said, generally, at all events, that men accustomed to the curing of fish-perhaps not to the manual labour-but men engaged in fishing, would be the best class of men to appoint as inspectors.

Mr. KIRK. I do not pretend to be familiar with the law, I was only speaking of the practice.

Mr. GILLMOR. I do not think there would be any difficulty in finding plenty of men who are fishermen and yet who are not engaged in the business-men who from their age or circumstances do not fish themselves, but who are practically acquainted with the work. There will be no difficulty in getting competent men.

Mr. FORTIN. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right, and I will give an instance. I refer to a case in Montreal, where a man, who has been a fisherman for thirty years, and is the son of a fisherman, retired from the business and has been appointed Deputy Inspector for Montreal, Every one who has fish inspected by him must be satisfied by his inspection, because he has no interest to do anything wrong

Mr. DAVIES, Does the hon, Minister believe he has power to appoint fishermen inspectors without the permissive clause?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think so. In that respect I do not propose to interfere with the law of 1874 which simply provides that no inspector shall have any interest by himself, or by any one else in the matter inspected by him.

Clauses 3, 4, 6 and 7 struck out.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times, and concurred in.

Mr. COSTIGAN introduced Bill (No. 128) further to amend the General Inspection Act, 1874.

Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION OF GAS ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 108) to amend the Acts respecting the inspection of Gas and Gas Mcters.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some brief explanations, as nothing has yet been said about this Bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The changes in the Bill are principally with the view, in the first place, of providing greater security than the law at present provides for the purity of gas, and in the next place, to establish a standard for gas. It is proposed to make the standard of gas sixteen candle light. In Nova Scotia the standard of gas goes as high as 22. Mr. KIRK. To carry out the views of the hon, gentleman In the United States and in England, the standard is higher

Mr. BLAKE. What is the United States standard? Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is 22 or 24.

An hon. MEMBER. 24.68.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the English standard?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is 18. I may say that notice has been given of these amendments for some time, and I have received communications from different parts of the country-from gas companies and from some consumers -giving their opinions and making suggestions; and lately I met a large deputation, representing the leading com-panies of the Dominion, and they were satisfied with the amendments, with some slight modifications, which they proposed to me.

Mr. BLAKE. The companies were satisfied?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I don't think they were quite satisfied with the standard of 16; they would rather have it placed at 14. But there are two interests to serve. The companies have an interest, and the consumers have an interest. and I think the amendments are in the interests of both We should have a law providing for pure gas, and we should impose a penalty for the presence of impurities in gas, ex-cept by accident. We propose to make some modifications as to the percentage of sulphuretted hydrogen that may be found in gas, owing to the kind of coal that is used in its manufacture, as well as the quantity of water. I am informed that the Nova Scotia coal enables the companies in that Province to produce a higher standard of gas than the companies in the western part of the Dominion. We also propose that the companies shall have their gas regularly tested by the inspector, and shall post up his certificate in their chief offices, and that they shall keep a list of their consumers in a book, which shall be open to the inspector during office hours. We provide certain penalties for the infraction of these rules.

Mr. WELDON. I would call the hon.gentleman's attention to the eighth section, which would enable a consumer to resist the payment of his gas bill unless the gas is of full standard quality. That would involve the companies in a great deal of litigation. The president of a gas company, writing to me says that it would be impossible sometimes to prevent air getting into the pipes, the illuminating power thus being reduced by circumstances beyond the control of companies. I would suggest that the average be made 16 to 18. Ile says :

"You and all of us know that a small portion of air will destroy the strength of the gas This may take place seldom, but even occe or twice or a few times in the year would give consumers the power to dis-pute paying their bills for the quarter. Consumers ought not to have the privilege of disputing our bills because the powers of the gas may have been less than 16 on one or two occasions, but it should read that the av rage power should not be less than 16 candle during the time it was being supplied."

If any time during a portion of the quarter, it became less than 16, owing to circumstances over which they had no control, the consumer may dispute the bill, and the effect of that section will be to give consumers cause for litigation. With regard to the other section relating to traces of sulphuretted hydrogen, those comparies who use the Cape Broton coal, which they are obliged to use in the Lower Provinces on account of the duties, say it is impossible to prevent traces of sulphuretted hydrogen getting into the gas.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Our information is that there is no necessity for sulphurotted hydrogen being present at all, if any reasonable care be taken in the manufacture of gas. This point has not been contested in any of the communica-tions I have received, nor by any of the gentlemen who formed part of that delegation. But they did call my atten-tion to this fact, that by an accident, the breakage of a pipe the delegation is the general desire of the navigation there to or some other accidental cause, this sulphuretted hydrogen | have those schooners exempt.

might appear, and the Act was amended so that they would not be liable to a penalty in such cases.

Mr. WELDON. But in the case of Cape Breton coal, they say it is impossible to prevent traces of sulphuretted hydrogon appearing.

Bill read the second time.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 109) to amend and consolidate, as amended, the several Acts relating to the adulteration of food and drugs, be discharged.

Motion agreed to, order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

MASTERS' AND MATES' CERTIFICATES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLELAN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No.116) to amend the Act respecting Certificates to Masters and Mates of Ships, and the Seamen's Act of 1873, said: As I stated when the Resolutions were moved, this Bill is to modify an existing anomaly in the law. In the Act of 1870, the minimum limit of ships requiring certificated masters and mates was fixed at 150 tons, and in the Act of 1883, coasting vessels of over 100 tons were required to have certificated masters and mates. A ship of between 100 and 150 tons may go to the West Indies without a certificated master and mate, and this is to remedy that by making all vessels over 100 tons, whether coasting or foreign going, subject to the law requiring certificated masters and mates. I also propose in the second clause to provide a penalty for masters and mates who shall use their certificates to get a clearance of the vessel, and after getting a clearance do not proceed on the voyage in the vessel. Cases arise in which the captain procures a mate to go before the shipping master, uses his certificate, enters him on the articles, gets cleared at the Custom house, and then the mate does not go to sea. This clause imposes a penalty on the master or mate who is guilty of this action. In a more careful examination of the Acts of 1870 and 1883, it would be well to have it more clearly defined that the masters and mates at present serving on the vessels between 100 and 150 tons should receive certificates of service, and I propose in the Committee to insert a clause to make that clear. I will read it:

a clause to make that clear. I will read it: "The Act first cited in the tille of this Act is further smended by inserting the following as sub-section 3 of the 5th section thereof:---"Every person who, before the 1st day of January, 1881. served as master in a seagoing ship registered in Canada, and being over 100 tons and not over 150 tons registered to mage, and employed in trading elsewhere than between ports or places in Uanada, or between Canada and ports and places in the United States of America or Newfoundland. and who has produced satisfactory evidence of his sobriety, experience, ability and general good conduct, and has passed the colour test, shall be entitled to a certificate as a master or mate (as the case may be) for seagoing ships registered in Canada and being over 100 tons and not over 150 tons registered tonnage, on payment of a fee of $5 for a certifi-cate as master, or $3 for a certificate as mate."

Mr. VAIL. If a mate happened to be taken ill after the vessel cleared, there is no provision for it in regard to the penalty.

Mr. McLELAN. That is a contingency that may possibly arise, and, upon the evidence being produced, the difficulty would be easily got rid of.

Mr. AMYOT. Is it the intention of the Government to exempt from the operation of this law schooners of only one mast navigating between Quebec and Montreal, or the Upper St. Lawrence? We have never seen any accident in connection with these schooners. It is very hard for

MARCH 24,

Mr. McLELAN. That is a matter which has not been fully considered or decided upon by the Department yet, but that comes more properly under an amendment of the Act of 1882. It is possible that a clause might be inserted in this Bill, however, in Committee, if we so find it necessary. I will consult the hon. gentleman as to how far it affects the vessels he refers to.

Bill read the second time.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLELAN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 121) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1882, by reducing the fees payable on renewal of engineers' licenses, said: Having considered this matter of the fees to be paid by second class engineers, I propose to make an amendment to the Bill. The annual fee is now reduced from $5 to $2. I propose to move an amendment to reduce it to $1, as I find the difficulty of getting from the second class to the first class is very great and many will be kept in the second class for a long time.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 1,

Mr. STAIRS. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether, in view of what he said just now, that a considerable number of the second class engineers reach that position and stay there, it would not be wiser to amend this Act so as to provide that there shall be no certificate required every year for engineers of the second and third class, but that, when they go up for examination to rise to a higher grade, they should pay the ordinary fee of $5. I throw out this as a suggestion. I think the amendment proposed is a very wise one, as the fee to be charged to these second and third class engineers for a renewal of their certificates was much too high at $5. I think there are a large number of second and third class engineers who take their certificate in those classes, and never intend to, and never can, get any higher, and I do not see why, as long as they conduct themselves properly and are sober men, they should have to pay for the renewal when the frst class engineers have nothing of the kind to pay. Of course, when they want to get higher, it would be reasonable to charge a fee.

Mr. McLELAN. The fee has been made as low as possible to work the machinery of examinations. I did not say it was impossible for them to get to the first class, but that there are a good many difficulties in the way, and I think, with this small fee, they will be constantly on the watch to get out of the second and third class into the first, and the tee is so small that it cannot be a serious objection. I move that the first clause be amended by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "one."

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported; considered as amended, and read the third time and passed.

SALE AND DELIVERY OF COAL-

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 110) respecting the sale of coal.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain whether under the existing law this Bill will make any provision with reference to the weight of coal as to the long ton or the short ton?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No. This Bill does not pretend to define that point. The Weights and Measures Act, I predefine that point. The Weights and Measures Act, I pro-sume, defines what that weight shall be, whether it shall wheat, for instance, shall be sold at so many pounds per le the long ton or the short ton.

Mr. AMYOT.

Mr. BLAKE. When we are making a change we ought to secure uniformity as far as possible. We ought not to leave the short ton in one part of the country and with respect to cortain articles, and the long ton in another part of the country with respect to another class of transactions. I hope before the Bill finally passes the House the hon. gentleman will consider this point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that the next Bill proposes to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. WELDON. There might be some difficulty in reference to steamers taking in coal. It would be very inconvenient in some of the small mines of New Brunswick where they have not the facilities for weighing coal. The Act is more intended, I think, for the sale of coal by retail than for its purchase in the mines.

Mr. STAIRS. As I have had some little experience in coal the last few years, I would like to have an explanation from the the bon. Minister. I think the custom has been that in the sale of coal by retail the short ton is used, whereas the long ton is used in weighing coal at the mines. Is it not possible to provide that the same ton should be used in both classes of transactions? I think there is great need that some check should be put upon the sale of coal in the mines as regards weight. It is the general opinion among all who purchase coal that the coal purchased in the mines will overrun its weight, but my experience is just contrary to that. I have seen figures, it is true, which show that for the last four or five years coal pur-chased in the mines in Nova Scotia has largely overrun, but I think this is chiefly due to the system in the Lower Provinces of measuring coal for retail instead of weighing it. I think if you provide that coal should be sold by weight for retail you will soon have a check upon the mines that you will oblige them to give, at least, fair weight in their sales. I think it would be almost impossible to oblige the owners of mines to weigh all the coal. I understand at present when we buy coal from the mines in Cape Breton or Pictou County, we buy by the ton of 2,240 pounds. But I know that in a great many cases coal is sold by the bulk or carload which is supposed to contain a certain weight, and in such case it is easy indeed to allow these cars to go under weight. I do not say that this under weight is general, but it occurs sometimes.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that in so far as this measure regulates contracts between private individuals it is trespassing upon the domain of Provincial Legislatures. What have we to do with saying what the contracts between private parties shall be? We can fix what kind of weights and measures shall be used in the country, but it is well known that at the time the Federal system was adopted the inspection of weights and measures, and every thing relating to contract, were under municipal supervision; and it does seem to me that this Act is beyond our jurisdiction, and is one falling within the purview of our Local Legis-latures. We have, of course, the right to fix the kinds of weights and measures that shall be used, but we have no right to deal with the contracts that may be entered into between private parties. If they choose to contract to sell by measure instead of by weight, I think it is their business. It is a civil right, and is not a regulation of trade but an interference with the law of contract.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not see anything inconsistent in this Bill with the British North America Act, in declaring that coal shall be sold by weight. I do not think it is interfering at all with any Provincial rights. We declare under bushel, that oats shall be at so many pounds per bushel, and

I do not think that a contract for the delivery of 100 bushels amendments are not very important, and make no change of oats at twenty pounds per bushel, would be a legal contract.

Mr. MILLS. That is a question for the courts.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WELDON. A very nice constitutional question is involved in this Bill. Assuming that the Dominion Government have power to regulate weights and measures, the present Bill is not to regulate weights and measures, but to regulate the contract. It is to make a contract illegal unless entered into in a certain way. It has been decided by the Privy Council that laws relating to contracts come within the powers of the Local Legislatures. We are, therefore, in this Bill trenching on the rights of the Provincial Legislatures, and it strikes me that the Privy Council, in the Parsons case, ruled that contracts were within the powers of Local Legislatures.

Mr. MILLS. In the Parson's case, the learned Lord who gave judgment, Sir Barnes Smith, said the law of contract is within the power of the Local Legislatures. A provision of this Bill deals with the subject of contracts, not with that of weights and measures. We may just as well, under the provisions of the law regulating weights and measures, undertake the control of the whole subject of the transfer of real estate. We have the right to say what shall constitute an acre, but we have not the right to deal with real estate, and say on what terms it shall be transferred. In the present case we may state what number of pounds shall con-stitute a bushel, but we cannot go on and say what the contract shall be in regard to any particular article. That is a matter wholly relating to the provision of the constitution with respect to civil rights.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This constitutional question had better not be taken up in Committee, but the clause may be perhaps allowed to pass without reference to the constitutional question at the present time.

Bill amended and reported.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 120) to amend the Weights and Measures Act, 1979.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first change made by the proposed Bill is in the fourth line of section 24, where instead of a $25 fine, the fine is made not less than $10. In the eighth line the following words are inserted : "shall be forfeited and forthwith seized as being so forfeited." By the second section of the Bill the words " not exceeding " are to be struck out of the fourth line, section 23. I may say that the Bill is composed of a number of small amondments mostly with a view to better enabling the collection of penalties under the present Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This appears to me to be an exceedingly inconvenient mode of amending an Act. The first section of the new Act should repeal the various sections to be reconstructed, and the reconstructed clauses should then appear as they would appear in the Statute. This plan has been followed on several occasions, as for example, the amendment to the Banking Act. I think it would be the best plan in this case, as it is almost impossible to ascertain from the hon. gentleman's explanations what the proposed amendments are.

the mode suggested by the hon. gentleman but as the now in litigation.

in the principle of the Act, perhaps it may be allowed to pass in the present form, as it is gotting well on in the Session.

Mr. WELDON. It seems to me that the suggestion is a very good one, as even the legal members of the House have very great difficulty in construing these amendments so as to understand them. This case is worse, because the penalties provided for by this section are to be recovered before a magistrate or justice of the peace. The justice of the peace may not be able to construe the Act, and he may impose a fine or forfeiture, and afterwards discover that under the amended Act he has had no power to do so. It seems to me that Acts which are likely to come before persons who have not a legal education should be made plain, by repealing the old sections and inserting the new sections in the repealing Act, so as to show what the new law is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree that the more convenient mode of repealing is by means of an amended Act; that is to say, when we can do so, the clause should be repealed and the amended clause substituted. I think my hon friend will take that view of the case. The principle of the Bill will be adopted by the second reading, and as objection is only taken to the form of the clauses, my hon. friend will be able to remodel them according to the suggestion of the hon, member for East Vork before he moves the Committee of the Whole.

Bill read the second time.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOWELL, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 123) to amend the Customs Act, 1883, said: The plan adopted in this Bill is the one suggested by the hon. mem. ber for East York, and approved by the leader of the Government; that is, the clauses which are amended are repealed, and others are substituted in lieu thereof. The first clause repeals section 188 of the Customs Act, and the only change it makes is to add the words "or Court of Vice-Admiralty." When I introduced the Bill, I explained that when the Customs Act of last year was before the House, the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal had decided that the Vice-Admiralty Court had no jurisdiction in cases affecting the Customs. The Supreme Court, however, roversed that do-cision; and as the Vice-Admiralty Court has jurisdiction in matters affecting the inland revenue it has been thought proper to insert these words in this Bill, in order that that court may try offences against the Customs Act. The second clause amends section 153 of the Customs Act by adding these words:

"And such conviction may be had in a summary manner before any two justices of the peace, or before any judge or magistrate having the powers of two justices of the peace."

This merely gives the power under this clause that is given under other clauses, in cases of violation of the Customs Act. The offences provided for are smuggling goods, using false invoices, &c. The 86th clause of the Act is repealed, because in any suit that may be brought for the violation of the Act or for under-valuation, it provides that no evidence shall he adduced to show that an invoice is incorrect or fraudulent. The old law had these words added: "except by the Crown," which prevented a merchant from adducing any evidence to show that his invoice was correct. When this question was under discussion last year, it was suggested that the importer and the Government should be placed on an equal tooting, and those words were struck out. But it has been found that the effect was to prevent the introduction of any evidence into court at all; and the repeal of the clause altogether will leave the importer and the Crown Mr. COSTIGAN. I may say that I myself would prefer The 4th clause simply applies this Act to suits which are

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 2,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it competent-I am asking for information-for an importer who objects to a decision of the Customs Department to take a matter into court and have it adjudicated upon?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, it must be under limitations and provisions in some way.

Mr. BOWELL. I think not; there are so many cases that arise that perhaps the hon. gentleman would give me more particular information.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not pleasant to do.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not mean to individualize any person; he can give me a hypothetical case if he likes.

Mr. PATERSON. I know of a case in which the importer was, I consider, very harshly dealt with. The representations he made to the Department received no attention, so far as he could judge; he was not made aware of the decision of the Department in time, so that when a communication reached him, if I remember aright, it was merely a statement that the matter having been finally closed could not be reopened. I am told further that he asked permission to enter the matter in court or sue the Government, in other words, but he could not get permission to do so, although he felt positive that if he could get the matter into the courts there was no jary in the world but what would declare that the action of the Customs Department was wrong and that he was right. He was debarred, however, from taking action, and it would be well for the information of the general public that the Minister should state clearly what is the general course adopted by the Department in such cases. He will have no objection, I am sure, to say what rights and remedies importers who have their goods seized have in the way of taking their cases into court. The seizure is made by the Customs officer, the matter is referred to the Customs Department, the importers are confident of their innocence and of their well meaning intentions, they are fortified by proofs from the parties from whom they purchased that the prices are right, and to make an affidavit other than the one they did make would be to make an affidavit not correct. When the matter is referred to the Department, they naturally conclude, their case being just, that the decision of the seizing officer will be reversed, but they do not hear of the decision of the Department-at least that was so in this case, if I am correctly informeduntil perhaps some weeks have elapsed, and all the satis-faction they get from the Department is that they hear finally from it that the matter having been disposed of and finally closed, it cannot be reopened, and thus very great hardship and wrong is done to the individual. The impression is they are not at liberty to take the matter into court unless they get permission from the Government to do so. I would like to understand this matter clearly. I would like the hon. Minister to explain how it is that when some parties desired to bring an action into the courts, they were not able to get the sanction of the Department to that end.

Mr. BOWELL. No doubt what the hon. gentleman states is quite correct, as far as his information goes; but the Customs Law provides and has over since there has been a law, so far as I am aware, that the importor whose goods are seized, has one month after the day of seizure, after notification of the scizure, upon which to put in a defence. If no defence is put in within that month, the would not, under those circumstances, deprive him of that have been but one or two within my recollection, in which there was an acknowledgment of the commission of the offence, and a decision given at once-is a decision given until after the expiration of the thirty days. The importer has, under the law, thirty days on which to put in his defence; if he neglects doing to within that time, then the Commissioner makes his report and submits it to the Minister for approval.

Mr. PATERSON. That is the defence to the Department, not the defence to the court.

Mr. BOWELL. If he does not object or declare his intention to reject the decision of the Department, then it is considered final, and he is debarred from going into court. A case occurred in Montreal in which that was the defence of the Government. Notification having been given of the decision and the seizure, the importer was called upon for his defence; no defence was made or objection taken to the seizure, and after the expiration of the thirty days, the importer entered an action. The defence of the collector in Montreal was that a defence had not been put in in time, and of course the court ruled out the action.

Mr. PATERSON. As I understand the hon. Minister, there are thirty days allowed for putting in a defence to the Department. The person puts in his defence to the Department; in the case I have in mind, and I am speaking subject to correction, the defence was put into the Department all right enough within the time, and the person relied upon a decision in his favour. But the time expired before the decision of the Department was communicated to him.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. PATERSON. Suppose a case of that kind, in which the thirty days have elapsed before the decision of the Department which the importer anticipates will be in his favour, is communicated to him, and, when communicated, he dnds it is adverse. Has he a remedy?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly within the time specifielly the law.

Mr. PATERSON. Thirty days after the decision of the Minister is given.

Mr. BOWELL. The decision of the Minister is not given until thirty days after the importer has been notified of the seizure, and he is asked to put in his defence, at the time of the notification; if he fails to put in any defence within that thirty days, he is debarred from going to the courts.

Mr. PATERSON. Thirty days after the decision of the Minister is communicated to him.

Mr. BOWELL. The seizure is made, the Department in Ottawa is notified of that seizure, the party whose goods have been seized is at once notified, a blank form is sent to him notifying him that he has thirty days in which to put in his defence or make any statement he pleases; if he fails to to that, he is debarred from going into court; if he puts in that defence he has a right to go into court.

Mr. WELDON That must be within a certain time after seizure. He must take his action within three months.

Mr. BOWELL. That is another point.

Mr. WELDON. Suppose the decision of the Minister was not communicated until the three months had expired, suppose the party anticipating that the decision would be in * his favour did not receive a communication from the Depart. ment until the three months had elapsed, he would then be debarred from going into court.

Mr. BOWELL. I am quite satisfied the Government decision of the Department is given, and in no case-there 'right. In one or two instances where I thought the delay had been unnecessarily long, I waived the right of the De-partment and told the parties to go into court. If a case of that kind was brought under the notice of the Government, the Government would waive their right and allow the case to go into court.

Mr. PATERSON. Would the hon. gentleman give me an assurance that he will allow the party I have in my mind to bring the matter into court? I think that in this case the fault was with the Department, that the parties were not notified in time. But however that may be, the decision of the Department was adverse, and the parties consider themselves very unfairly treated; would the hon. gentleman allow the Department to waive its right and allow these parties to take the matter into court?

Mr. BOWELL. No doubt the importer, when the decision is against him, always thinks he is badly used. I am not prepared to say what I will do under the circumstances, but if the hon. gentleman will give me the case, and if the facts connected with it are as he stated, I will have no objection to grant what he asks, but I should be very sorry to pledge myself to say that he should have a right until I know what the facts of the case are.

Mr. PATERSON. I had better do that privately?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will do that privately or in writing, I will give him an answer.

Bill reported.

MAINTENANCE OF FORTIFICATIONS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 121) respecting fortifications and military buildings and their maintenance and ropairs.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the reasons for this Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I explained the Bill on moving the first reading. It is purely and simply to transfer to the Department of Militia the control, management and repair of all military buildings, forts and fortifications in Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I know the hon. gentleman explained the provisions of the Bill; I said the reasons for the Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reasons are that it is considered that these works would be attended to perhaps more economically, or perhaps more scientifically if they were under the Department of Militia, and therefore, as far as I am concerned, I have not the least objection that they should be transferred to my hon. friend the Minister of it would be better that this system should be adopted. Militia.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is in fact a confession that the Minister of Public Works is unable to discharge the duties of his office, as they have been understood up to this time.

Sir HE JOR LANGEVIN. I am sure that my hon. friend will not suppose that I could not attend to those duties. But I think, under this Bill, the duties will be perhaps performed with more science than they could be by my own officers. They are not military officers, they are not military engineers, and perhaps, when we have to deal with fortifications and those works, it will be better that those officers, with the benefit of their science and knowledge, should have the performance of those duties. Therefore, we thought it would be better that this portion of the duties of my office should be transferred to my colleague, the hon. the Minister of Militia. I need not assure my hon. predecessor that I still have quite work enough to occupy my time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is an attempt practically to Mr. BLAKE. Of course the Bill is to go through; but create a new department under the Militia Minister, for it at the same time, I do not think sufficient reasons have been will bloom out into a Royal Engineer Department. It is quite sure to be the case. The Government is expanding in all directions, and, while another Minister has not enough work to do at home, but must go to England to perform a portion of it, the Minister of Public Works is quite competent, and his Department is quite competent to do all the work; and it is out of the question that, because the gallant Minister of Militia is a military man and competent to take charge of an army, he should be also competent to take charge of an architect's office. There is nothing of a scien-tific nature to be done at present. When fortifications have to be crected and great camps are laid out, something will occur which is not in existence at present, and, until something arises which necessitates such a division of labour, 1 think it better that all public works should be attended to in the Department of Public Works. If I am not mistaken, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has given up the attempt which was made some years ago to carry on large works under an officer of that Department. The engineer who was in that Department at that time is not there now, and only trifling works are now constructed by that Department, large lighthouses falling under the Public Works Department, as they ought to do. But now we have a departure in another Department in another direction, in a wrong direction, and I enter my protest against it as totally uncalled for.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to my hon. friend, I may say that he is mistaken about the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That Department has the building of its own lighthouses, and the maintenance and care of those works. They are not under the care of my Department. That existed during the Administration of my hon. friend, and since, under the Administration of the First Minister here. Of course, in the erection of piers and so on, these large works are under the control of my Department, but, when these piers and wharves are built, they are under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisherics; otherwise the business of my Department would be such that I could not perform the duties. In this case, these works will be repaired and maintained by my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, and, if large works are to be undertaken, of course the Department of Public Works will have to undertake them, as in the past, but the maintenance of these is considered to be better in the hands of the Department of Militia than the Department of Public Works. For example, at Kingston and Quebec, they have a number of men who could be usefully employed in keep-ing up these walls, as it is done under the Imperial Government in their fortified towns. I think that altogether

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice that this Bill is not printed in French. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works took exception the other night to proceeding with a Bill because, not the Bill, but an amendment to the Bill, was not printed in French. Perhaps he will show the same regard now for his follow-countrymen who speak French as he did then.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, if the hon. gentleman insists, we will have to postpone the Bill, but I am very much pleased to see that he has gone to study French, and that henceforth the Bills will have to be printed in French as well as English. However, I have no doubt he will not insist on this now, but will allow the Bill to go through.

Mr. CHARLTON. I only speak in the interest of the hon. gentleman's French friends. It shows the differ on (e between meum and tuum.

Mr. AMYOT. We generally protect ourselves.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course the Bill is to go through; but given for departing from the policy hitherto adopted in this matter. It was, as the hon. Minister of Public Works has stated, the policy of the late Government, and I think it was the policy when the hon. gentleman occupied the position of Minister of Public Works before-that is, practically since Confederation. Whatever has been done in the way of maintenance and repair of these military buildings has been done by the Department of Public Works. I am not going to charge or to insinuate anything against the expenditure of the Militia Department, but I will say that I do not expect that money will be saved by this plan. I believe that more money will be expended. We see it at once. There was a proposal in the Estimates for an architect. That was struck out, but we were shown that it was merely temporary, because Col. Hewitt who had hardly time to give his services, as he and his officers were already too hard-worked, would undertake the duties. But there were also two additions to the vote which passed through Committee the other evening on account of this matter. Now I do not think it can be reasonably contended that the public interest would be served by splitting up the business of the repairs and maintenance of this particular class of buildings. The Public Works Department is charged with the repairs and maintenance of all other public buildings; any specialty there may be in the repairs and maintenance of fortifications-in so far as it is a special thing in construction-is sufficiently indicated by the original construction, and to keep them good one looks at what has been done. But if there is to be any specialty, even in the repairs, it will be as easy for the Department of Public Works to obtain that scientific information from Col. Hewitt, or from whatever person who may be looked upon as the adviser of the Government in that regard, as it is for the Militia Department to obtain that information; but that special scientific information being obtained the practical carrying out of it by the draughtsmen, by the framing of the con-tract, or by the supervision of the work, will not only be done as well but will probably be done better by that large staff employed in the business of maintaining and repairing public works, than it would be done as an extra or incident of the Department of Militia and Defence. It is a vicious division of labour, not a real division, as it is when work of the same class is performed by the same persons, and this is work of the same class which is not to be performed by the same persons, namely, by persons of the Department of Public Works, but is to be taken away from them and given to a separate staff connected with the Department of Militia and Defence. You will find persons who have the same work to do in the construction of buildings of this particuwho have lar class, persons who have only to do with contracts in respect to these particular contracts, persons who have only to do with the supervision of works, in respect to these particular works, and these works will be better attended to if they were attended to by persons whose business was of this class, that is, persons who are officers of the Department of Public Works. We find already a swelling of the items of Militia and Defence due to this change, and I do not observe that it is proposed in consequence of this charge to reduce the estimates of the Department of Public Works. We will find the expenditure of that Department increased rather than diminished in consequence of the change in the mode in which it is proposed to carry on this work.

Mr. CARON. I cannot agree with the views just expressed by the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the reports of the Department of Militia and Defence for the last seven years he will see that the general officers commanding the Militia force, as well as other officers belonging to the force, have made representations to the Department expressing their opinion that works of a vision of a military engineer who would be in a better position and undertake to keep up the repairs of these very important and very valuable defensive works, which would otherwise have to be done by the Department of Public Works. The hon. gentleman knows that along the seacoast and in several other portions of the Dominion we have batteries of the class of defensive works which are very important. Now I will not go beyond what my hon. f. iend from East York has looked upon as my duty; I will not go beyond the duty of commanding armies, to express an opinion about works which he, as the late Minister of Public Works, may possibly suppose that he knows more about than I do myself, but I will do as he has probably done invariably in his own Department—I will express the views of practical men upon practical questions. I have the opinions of military officers not only belonging to the Militia force of Canada, but also belonging to the Imperial service, who have sent in reports to the Department complaining of the manner in which these defensive works have been repaired. For instance, there is one battery near Halifax the earthworks of which was removed by the employes of the Public Works Department and, though I do not myself attach any blame to them for it, on account of their being unacquainted with the particular nature of those works they removed a portion which was really the most essential part of that battery. Under those circumstances the hon, gentleman must admit that in view of these reports the Government are justified in making the experiment. I need not say so far as the Minister of Public Works is concerned that we all know how very efficiently he presides over that important Department; and that hon. gentleman coincides altogether in the views which are entertained by the Government upon that question, and in the reports which have been sent in regarding it. I believe I am safe in saying that he is also convinced that the change that is now proposed will be in the public interest. When the Estimates come down I am certain the hon. gentleman will give me credit for the very small increase which is added to the expenditure of the Department of Militia under that head, and I think the change is one that will give satisfac-tion to the public as well as to the Department of Militia and Department of Public Works.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where was the Battery the hon, gentleman referred to ?

Mr. CARON. The Battery was near Halifax, but I cannot now recall the name. I can hand the reports to the hon. gentleman, in which he can obtain the information.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no recollection of any earth battery being undertaken by the Department of Public Works at all.

Mr. CARON. I did not say it was during the time the hon. gentleman presided over the Department; I said the repairs had been carried out by the Public Works Department, and I think it is since the hon. gentleman gave up the control of that Department.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that this is an unwise departure from the former system prevailing in this country. There is no doubt whatever that the moment a new branch in any Department is made, it will undertake to justify its existence by endeavouring to point out how very important it is in the public interest. If we were involved in war with any country and important military works were required, I can understand how it would be necessary to separate works of that kind from the Department of Public Works. But, Sir, under existing circumstances I can see no propriety in this provision. We know that military men have not the same notions of economy in connection with public works that we civilians have, and that if this branch is transferred to the Department of Militia, a military gentlemilitary character should be performed under the super- man will be appointed to take charge of it, a military Mr. BLAKE.

engineer, and that he will undertake to justify the Department in creating this particular branch by showing how very necessary it is in the public service, and a large expenditure will be incurred which, in my opinion, is wholly unnecessary, because I believe that at the present time, at all events, the best defence is no defence at all.

Bill read the second time, and considered in Committee and reported.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENF.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 87) further to amend the Indian Act, 1880, said: The amendments made are of more or less importance; and with the assent of the House we will take the second reading and go into Committee on Wednesday. No doubt the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who has paid much attention to the Indian question, will consider the proposals in the meantime and express his views in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is proposing to give us only one opportunity of expressing our views on this Bill. He now proposes to take the second reading in silence, and the two next stages can be taken on one day. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have found they can get along very well with the Indians, if the Indians are let alone; but we have had on several occasions much trouble in consequence of the acts of whiskey dealers, smugglers and other parties, and in this Bill the first clause makes such porsons liable to be punished. The second clause refers to the selling of ammunition to Indians. Formerly there was no difficulty in this regard, because the Mounted Police were able to prevent its introduction; but with the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway facilities, there is practically no check on it, and this clauso provides a punishment. The third clause provides that celebrating the "Potlach" is a mislemeanour. This Indian festival is a debauchery of the worst kind, and the departmental officers and all clergymen unite in affirming that it is absolutely necessary to put this practice down. Last year the late Governor General issued a proclamation on the advice of his Ministers warning Indians against celebrating this festival. At these gatherings they give away their guns and all their property in a species of rivalry, and go so far as to give away their wives; in fact, as I have said, it is a great debauch. Under this Act to celebrate the Potlach is to be guilty of a misdemeanour. There is an amendment for the purpose of enlarging the powers of Indians to devise their property by will. The whole question of the enfranchisement of Indians is dealt with in the 15th section, section 99 of the present Act being repealed. These, in brief, are the main objects of the Bill; of course we shall consider them more fully in Committee of the Whole. With these remarks, I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will allow the Bill to be read the second time and put down for Committee of the Whole on Wednesday, when full opportunity will be given for discussion at that and subsequent stages.

Mr. MILLS. I have not had an opportunity of reading the Bill, but I desire to enquire whether it contains any provision to enable unenfranchised Indians to dispose of their products, but there is no authority to sell or dispose of them, and at the present time when they do sell, purchasers take a risk and the Indians obtain less for the products of their industry than other persons in the community. Some provision should be made with respect to this matter, whether the hon, gentleman has it in his Bill or not. I simply mention the matter, because it is one of very considerable consequence to the Indians, as it places a serious impediment to their industry to find they cannot freely dispose of the fruits of their toil, and have not the same liberty to sell as other persons in the community.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no clause in the Bill to that effect, the Bill having special reference to the North-West. The present law is quite sufficient for the purpose. The Indians have the right to sell under the consent of the local agents. It is of very great importance that that power should still remain in the Local Agents, subject to the higher officers of the Indian Department. We are just getting the Indians to remain on the Reserves; and we can scarcely, for some years, expect them to raise more than enough to feed their own families. If there were a surplus, and the Indians had power of unrestricted sale, they would dispose of their products to the first trader or whiskey dealer who came along, and the consequence would be that the Indians would be pensioners on the Government during the next winter, and Parliament would have to vote, as it has in the past, a considerable sum of money. However, this question can be discussed in Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. The understanding is that the third reading will be taken at a subsequent stage to the Committee of the Whole, and on these terms I have no objection to the second reading.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly. I want to get a good Bill.

Bill read the second time.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY-IMMIGRATION.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Speaker, before this motion is adopted, I desire to offer a few observations to the House on a very important subject upon which I shall ask hon. gentlemen to express an opinion. The subject that I more particularly desire to bring to your attention is that of im-migration into, and emigration from, the Dominion of Canada. I would have preferred, as you can readily under-stand, that in speaking on this subject, the Minister of Agriculture, to whose Department it particularly refers, had been present. Circumstances are such, however, that he is not with us, and all will agree that in the discharge of public duty we cannot allow a circumstance like that to prevent its being attended to, and no doubt one or more of his colleagues will be able to explain some matters which I think require explanation at the hands of the Government, and defend, if they find a defence to be necessary, the actions of the Government, or rather, of that Department of the Gov-ernment. Sir, I may just say at the outset, that the question looked at from a financial point of view, is a very serious question indeed. For some years past we have gone on appropriating a large and still larger yearly amount of money for this branch of the public service. It will be within the recollection of some members of this House who were members of the last Parliament, that we were told by the Government in very plain torms indeed, that by reason of the contract that we were entering into at that time with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the great burden that had rested on our shoulders in times past, with reference to the question of expenditure in connection with immigration, would be lifted from us and trans-ferred to the shoulders of that Company. I desire in my opening remarks to point out how utterly and grievously the Ministry have failed in fulfilling those promises, and shall ask them, as I think I have the right to some explanation as to how their plans have miscarried, or at any rate how their promises have failed. There may possibly be some members of the present House who were not members of the last Parliament and who are not aware how clear and distinct were the promises which were made to us in reference to this matter; and in order that those gentlemen may understand it, I desire to read a few sentences which were uttered by the Ministers and their supporters, when urging the adoption of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract by the House. I may say, Sir, that there was a great deal of hesitancy manifested by the House in signifying their acceptance of that bargain at that time, that a great many arguments had to be made use of before the House was convinced that it was in the interests of the country that that contract should be entered into; and one of the strong arguments relied upon by the Ministers and those of their supporters who were bold enough to speak out on that occasion, was, that by virtue of entering into that agreement we would be saved, as I said before, a large amount, by way of expenditures in the promotion of immigration. In the Speech from the Throne, which was delivered on December 9th, 1880, the Advisers of his Excellency put these words in his mouth:

" The contract and papers connected therewith will be submitted to "The contract and papers connected therewith will be submitted to you without delay, and I invoke for them your early and earnest con-sideration. With this view, I have summoned you before the usual period, as no action can be taken by the contractors to prosecute the work, and no permanent arrangements for the organization of a sys-tematic emigration from Europe to the North-West Territories can be satisfactorily made until the policy of Parliament, with respect to the railway, has been decided."

Mr. Beaty, then as now, representing West Toronto, who was honored with the duty of moving the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, made some remarks on the same subject; and it is well known that words uttered on such an occasion are, I might say, inspired, or semi-inspired, by the Ministry:

"There is another feature of a very important character in connection with this matter, and that is the one of immigration."

After speaking of our own young men going into the new country, he says:

"But there is still left the great fact that this policy will do most to make those lands valuable and productive—will do most for the develop-ment of our resources, that the hope of gain from them in connection with the railway will induce the Company to bring in settlers who will people our great North-West Territory. If that is done the Government will relieve themselves and the country from a very important task which hitherto has been only moderately successful—that of bringing interthis country or prismation for the older scone the Government into this country emigrants from the older countries of Europe.'

I shall also quote what was said by Sir John A. Macdonald, the leader of the Government, on December 10th, 1880, in reply to Mr. Mackenzic, who, in the course of his remarks, said :

"I will be glad to give way to him (Sir John) now to tell us whether it is his deliberate purpose to give this House but ten days in which to agree to a measure, upon pain of being punished by not having a holiday."

The hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) said, in reply :

"I will tell the hon. gontleman that with the assistance of the majority of this House, such is the intention of the Government. For the reason given in the Speech it is important, if this policy is to be carried reason given in the speech it is important, it in sponcy is to be carried out, it should be carried out at once. Inmigration very much depends on it. The Company cannot organize nor take any steps to bring out emigrants before the contract is ratified. They have only got January, February and March to prepare the work in. Emigrants will be here in May, and it is of very great importance, if Parliament is going to adopt the arrangement, that it should do so with all convenient speed. We upper the table of the two steps of the two should be the Harmat consider it of so much importance that we shall ask the House to take it into early and earnest consideration and to remain here with as short a Christmas interval as possible until it is passed."

Then, Sir, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) who favoured the bargain, made these remarks, with reference to it, in enforcing his views upon that subject. After speaking of the advantages the country would derive from the Canadian Pacific Contract, he said :

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"But over and above all this is the fact that the arrangement pro-posed would render the Government the very greatest possible assist-ance in the way of attracting immigrants to this country. If you consider the average cost per capita of inducing immigrants to settle in the older Provinces of the Dominion, and the great additional cost of inducing them to settle in the North-West, and then estimate the number l.kely to settle there, you will obtain some idea of the several millions of dollars which will be saved to this country in the expense of immigration clone" of immigration alone."

Now, Sir, at a later stage I propose to show you, not the several millions of dollars that have been saved to this country in the matter of immigration, but something in the direction of the millions extra that have been expended, over and above our ordinary yearly expenditure in previous years, before this contract was let. But before doing so I desire to bring before the House the evidence furnished by the Government as to the manner in which these grand promises were fulfilled that were made to us at that time. Some time ago I moved for a return of the correspondence which had passed between the Government and the Syndicate on the subject of immigration, and also a statement from the Syndicate showing the moneys they had spent in promoting immigration, and the numbers they had been instrumental in bringing into the North-West. The House ordered that return, and the other day it was brought down. As it occupies only three sheets of foolscap, as it is not likely to be printed by the Printing Committee, and as I think the country ought to have it, I shall take this opportunity of reading it :

⁶⁷ Return to an Address of the House of Commons, dated 31st January, 1834, for copies of all correspondence and agreements between the Gov-ernment and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on the subject of immigration to Manitoba and the North-West, together with a state-ment showing the amount expended by the Company in promoting such immigration, giving amounts paid, with dates, to whom paid, and nature of service rendered; also, estimate of the Company of number of pareous form forming mounties who have extually availed there in each persons from foreign countries who have actually settled there in each year since date of charter.

"GRANT POWELL, Esq., "Under Secretary of State, Ottawa."

Now, Sir, there is the answer to the Order of the House, in which the Government tells us that they have not even had any correspondence with the Company in reference to this matter; that the Company, during the years that it has been in existence, has not furnished the Government with one single statement, has not favoured them with one single letter, has not given a record of one single dollar expended by it in promoting immigration, although that consideration was urged upon this House asone of the strong reasons why this bargain should be entered into. More than that, I call the attention of the Government and of the House to the fact that the Government themselves have not caused one letter to be written to the Company, soliciting information in regard to this matter; and Sir, if their negligence in this respect was inexcusable in the past, it is more inexcusable now, because though this return was ordered on the 31st of January, it did not come down until the 8th of March, and the Government do not seem to have availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by that interval of time to write to the Company asking for a particle of information on this subject. Sir, I hold that this is a serious matter. I am not dealing in surmises or indulging in probabilities; but I read the official report of the Department made to this House, and I claim that it exhibits a state of affairs demanding explanation from the Government, although satisfactory explanation cannot be expected in the face of the documents I have read. But the Government failing in making that explanation, I think the House will sgree with me that in this respect at least the Ministry have sadly neglected their duty. Now let us see what this immigration is costing the country, so that the House may see how negligent the Company have been in bearing share of the work. In 1880 we expended for immigration $183,204; in 1881 we expended $250,812, or an increase of $67,608; in 1832, $253,061, or an increase of $69,857; in 1883, $437,734, or an increase of $254,430; for the current year, we were asked to vote $520,221, or an increase of $337,017; and in the Estimates for 1884 85, we are asked to vote $526,375, or an increase of $343,171. So that, Sir, instead of the several millions of dollars that were to be saved to this country by the adoption of that contract, as the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe told us, I find that from 1879-80 to 1883-84 we have expended $1,072,183 more in the aggregate than we expended before we made the contract with the Company. The total amount expended in promoting immigration during those years is $1,645,032, to which, if we add the $526,375 which we are asked to vote for 1884-85, you will have a sum of over $2,000,000, that has been expended since the contract was entered into. Now, Sir, if we had anything to show for the expenditure of that money, if we had found that the Syndicate were contributing a like amount, then there might be a little relief to the dark picture. But we find that they have done nothing of the kind. And again, if we had succeeded in keeping in the country the people we professed to have brought here as residents, to help us to pay the debt we were heaping up and to help us to bear the burden of our expenditure, there would have been some satisfaction. But it is my duty to place before you some figures-figures that I wish did not exist, because it would please me much better if I could adduce figures to show that we were not only maintaining our ground, but going on rapidly increasing in population; but I can only give you the figures as I find them; and I submit them to the House in order that the House may weigh well the question whether the moneys expended by the Government in promoting immigration in the past have not been misapplied, and whether they have brought to the country the benefits we had a right to expect from that expenditure. Now, Sir, I propose to deal with some figures that are taken from our Census returns. In dealing with them, I am free to confess that I have great doubts as to the accuracy of the figures; and if I would speak the honest sentiments of my mind, I must say that I believe the Department of Agriculture, in the matter of the Census, has also most grievously failed. The delay in the issue of Vol. No. 2 is, I think, proof of that; the many discrepancies and anomalies that brought into this country have either left this country or, if are to be found in Vols. 1 and 3 are also evidence of it, but we have to deal with the figures as we find them. I have a comparative statement here, taken from those, figures with reference to our population, which I desire to bring before this House, and to point out what they show; and I have to regret, as every hon. member in this House will regret, that the figures are not such as we would desire them to be, but are figures that are rather discouraging. I find that, in 1871, the Dominion of Canada, then comprising the four Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, had a population of 3,485,761. Ten years later, in 1881, those four Provinces had a population of 4,044,060; or we had an increase in the four Provinces of 558,299 during the ten years-about 16 per cent. Now let us take each of those Provinces, and I may say here that the natural increaseand I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me in this, taking a very low estimate indeed, an estimate lower, I think, than is ever taken in this matter-the natural increase in a country such as ours, of births over deaths, should average annually 2 per cent., which would be 20 per cent. in ten years. But the total shows that instead of this natural increase, at the low figure of 2 per cent., we have failed to come up to it by some 4 per cent. In Nova Scotia there was, in 1881, a population of 440,072, and in 1871, 387, 00; an increase 52,772, or 1.35 per cent. per annum, being 65 per cent. below what ought to be the natural increase, without a soul being brought into the country from abroad, taking the low estimate of 2 per cent. In New Brunswick, in 1881, there was a population of 321,333, and in 1871, 285,591; an increase of 25 620 er 1.95 per cent nor appung instead of 2 per cent 35,639, or 1 25 per cent. per annum, instead of 2 per cent. per annum which, as I sail before, should be the lowest figure which we should take for natural increase. Quebec, in 1881, had a population of 1,359,027, and in 1871 1,191,516; an increase of 167,511, or 1.40 per cent. of an increase per annum instead of 2 per cent., the lowest natural increase. In 1881, Ontario had a population of 1,923,228, and in 1871, 1,620,851; an increase of 302,377, or 1.85 per cent. per annum, instead of the natural increase of 2 per cent. Taking this natural increase of 2 per cent. per annum which, as I said before, is below the mark, and we will find that Nova Scotia should have had 77,560 of an increase instead of her actual increase of 52,722; or Nova Scotia had 24,788 less of a population in 1881 than she would have had if she had had but the natural increase at 2 per cent. per annum, without a soul being brought in from foreign countries at all. We find that New Brunswick, instead of her actual increase of 35,639, should have had an increase of 57,119; or she should have had 21,480 more, if she had had the regular natural increase of 2 per cent, per annum, than she actually hed in 1881. We find that Quebec should have had an increase of 238,303, instead of her actual increase of 167,511; or she should have had 70,792 more souls in 1881 than she actually had, provided she had but kept her own people there at the natural increase based on 2 per cent. per annum. Ontario should have had 324,170, instead of 302,377; or she should have had 21,793 more 1881 than she actually had, if not a single soul had been brought in from a foreign country at all, but had retained within her own bounds, her own natural increase. Summing up the four Provinces-and in 1871 there were but these four-instead of there being an addition of 558,299, there should have been an addition of 697,152; or there should have been 138,853 more than there actually was, if we had but our natural increase alone, and if not a soul had been brought to us from a country. The figures may well make us We have expended $2,000,000 since 1879-80, country. foreign nause. including the Estimates of 1874-75, and what do we find? We find that in the four older Provinces-I have compared only those four, as there was only those in Confederation in 1871-we find that all the immigrants that have been found here, are found at the expense, and by the displacement of those who were our own citizens, and that we are still 138,153 people less than we ought to be. The hon. Finance Minister and other hon, members of the Government told us during the regime of the hon. member for East York that they knew this state of things existed, that they knew that citizens of this country were leaving it and they declared it-well I give them credit for having honestly declared it-and they came forward and said they had a remedy whereby they would stop this state of things, and Parliament was asked to sanction the remedy and it was put into force. I ask now has it had the promised effect? I wish I could honestly say that we had, at any rate, kept our own people at home; but the figures I have given prove that we have not succeeded even in doing this. But I may be told by the hon. Finance Minister or other hon. gentlemen that the Census of 1881 show but the operation of two years of the new Tariff, show but two years' operation of the plans they devised, the machinery they made use of, in order to keep our own people. But I would remind the hon. gentleman that they claimed that we had a vast access to our population under their new system. I want to examine into this pretension. There are other figures given, from which we may form some conclusion as to the operation of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite in this respect. I am driven to look at figures that I have to find from American sources, and figures that I will compare with figures furnished by our own Department of Agriculture. I am free to confess that I think that the system of statistics in the United States and the results shown by them are not, I would fain believe, strictly accurate, and may not be strictly relied upon ; but I will say this, that, while that is the case, I have equal doubts as to the reliability of the statistics that are gathered by our own Department. I think I may say that, without endeavouring to censure hon. gentlemen opposite too much. I suppose it is a difficult matter to get anything like accurate statistics in reference to this subject, but there are certain things, when taken together, and figures compared, one with another, that do lead up to this result, that the American figures, when taken in connection with the facts revealed by our own Census and with the facts revealed by statistics obtained from other sources altogether, are not as far from being accurate as I, from my heart, would desire they were. Now, in order to ascertain this point, let me call your attention to this fact. I find, from the American statistics, that from the year 1873 to the year 1883, those two years inclusive, the American statistics show that they received as immi-grants from our Dominion 585,893 souls, and the figures of the Department of Agriculture for the Dominion show that, in the same ten years, we received a total immigration from foreign countries of 571,773 souls, or in the ten years we absolutely lost the whole 571,773 souls that, by a vast expenditure of money, we brought to this country, and 14,125 people besides. Well, Sir, for purposes of com-parison, and in order to enable us to determine as to whether we had found the remedy for this, that everyone will admit is a matter to be deplored, I have divided it into two periods of five years each, in order that we might ascertain whether, under the working of the Tariff which was to produce such beneficial changes, we have stemmed the current and improved matters. And what do I find? Take from the year 1874 to the year 1878 inclusive, the years in which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was leading this Government, when the cries and the wails of hon. gentlemen opposite were oft repeated as to the terrible fact that our country was being depleted, when the American statistics, those which I use now, were used in this House as figures to be relied upon authoritatively. When gentlemen remember that they relied, in making their charges against | I regret that I have not been able to ascertain the figures of the Mackenzie Administration, upon the figures given by the attendance of children in the Province of Quebec, but I Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

the American statistics, they are estopped from objecting to these same statistics when they are applied in their case. I might mention that when a person was being examined at a certain place, the other day, whose testimony has been brought in on a previous debate on the floor of the House. in reference to this matter, when it was thought a point was made against the late Mackenzie Administration, the testimony of that individual was, that, with reference to that one port of Port Huron, about which there was a doubt as to the accuracy of the figures, the officer there declared that from 1874 to 1878 the figures were systematically added to, that they were systematically increased at that port, but that from the year 1879, in which he was dismissed, when, through Mr. Lowe making enquiries at that point, Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of Statistics, came to Port Huron, and a new order of things was instituted, the figures were -he had no means of positively knowing, but he does know that an attempt was made that they should be-gathered more accurately, and the impression--I believe I am giving him right---was that the figures from 1879 down to the present time might be accepted as more reliable than the figures made use of from 1874 to 1878 by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, the American statistics show that they received in the United States from Canada during the five years that my hon. friend from East York was in power, 125,619 souls, and the statistics furnished by our own Department of Agriculture show that we had brought into this country from foreign countries during the same five years, 149,277, or we did gain in population in those five years 23,658 souls-we brought in that many and kept that many more than went out. But take from the year 1879 to 1883, the period that is covered by the reign of hon. gentlemen opposite, the period that is covered by the operations of that which was designed as a means of stopping this exodus of our own people and giving employment to them within our own land, and what are the figures, and how do they compare? In those five years, American statistics showed that they received from Canada 422,720 souls, and during the same period our Department of Agriculture shows that we brought into the country, if I may take 133,000 as the figures for 1883-I take that from the speech of the hon. gentleman who moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, who, I suppose, had information with reference to it; the Report of the Minister not having been laid on the Table till to-day, I have not had an opportunity of examining it-taking that 133,000, which are extraordinarily large figures, in the five years we had brought in 372,446 souls; or, in the five years covered by the reign of hon. gentlemen opposite, during which their remedial measure was in full operation, the loss in population is 50,274. That is, that all the immigrants that have been brought into this country from every other country have either disappeared them-selves to the United States, or have displaced an equal number of our own people, and 50,271 more. I say these figures call for serious consideration on our part. It is time that this whole subject of immigration and the expenditure that is going on in reference to it should have our most serious consideration. But I have some other statistics here, and I am sorry to say again that they bear out the inference that we have to draw from the figures 1 have already given, and I am the more sorry because they are taken from an altogether different source, compiled for an altogether different purpose, prepared by an altogether different Government—the Local Governments of two of-our own Provinces. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), in his speech in reply to the hon. the Finance Minister's speech on the Budget, gave to us the figures of the school attendance in the Province of Ontario. I will not trouble the House with going over those again.

have obtained the figures of pupils in attendance at the public schools in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and I ask the attention of the House to the results that they show. In Nova Scotia, in the year 1879, I find there were 99,094 children registered as attending the public schools of that Province. In the year 1876, three years before that, during the reign of my hon. friend from East York, there were only 94,162 children attending those schools, or in the three years there was an increase in the attendance of pupils in the schools of Nova Scotia of 4,932. I suppose one child would represent about five inhabitants If so, it would show an increase of about 25,000 of population in the Province of Nova Scotia, between 1876 and 1879, inclusive.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. What does the hon. gentleman mean? That I estimate too many?

Mr. CAMERON. Rather fast.

Mr. PATERSON. I said one in five, did I not? I think that the figures that are given by the Minister of Education puts it at one in every five inhabitants attending school, as near as may be; and if I am not mistaken, I think New Brunswick is much the same —but I speak subject to correction. But if we take one child as representing four of a population, it gives something like 20,000 of an increase, and I think these figures will not be considered extravagant. A child going to school would be likely to have a father and a mother and a brother and a sister living, and if he had not he would be likely to have a father and a mother and one brother living, at any rate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Besides his cousins and his aunts.

Mr. PATERSON. But, as I desire to be strictly accurate, we will not take them in this, as that would be like some of our Census returns-a compounding of figures. Taking again the pivot year of 1879, when the Tariff was introduced, you had 99,094 pupils attending the public schools of Nova Scotia. In 1882, which are the last figures I can get, what do we find? That there were 95,912 children attending public school, or a decrease in three years of pupils attending the Nova Scotia schools of 3,182, during the three years that the hon. gentleman's policy was in operation; while for the three years prior to their policy going into effect, there was an increase of 4,932. Now, Sir, these figures are taken from the Report of the Minister of Education of that Province, and he certainly has no object whatever to serve in exaggerating them. I may say that these are, perhaps, the most accurate figures it is possible for us to get, for they profess to be the actual register of the number of pupils of all kinds attending school there. Now, then, we come to the Province of New Brunswick, and what do we find? Taking the same pivot year, 1879, we find that there were attending the public schools of New Brunswick 70,889 children; taking the year 1875, there were 59,625 children attending schools, so that in the four years, from 1875 to 1879, there was an increased attendance of pupils in the New Brunswick schools of 11,264. Take the year 1879 again, as the pivot year, and there were 70,889 attending school; taking the four years from that down to 1883, under the operation of the hon. gentleman's policy -as I have the returns for 1883 in New Brunswick-and what do I find? There were but 84,581 children attending in 1883, or 6,308 less.

Mr. PAINT. They are employed now, instead of going to school.

Mr. PATERSON. They are employed now, instead of are going to school! I am sorry to see any member of a the Canadian Parliament rise and plead as an excuse that boys are and girls who ought to be at school, through the effects of or that protective policy, have been driven into factories to earn their daily bread. But, Sir, these figures show that while there was an increase during the four years prior to this policy coming into operation, of 11,264, during the four succeeding years, while that policy was in operation, the attendance fell off 6,308. Multiply that, as I have asked you to do, on the basis of the scholars representing one in five or, if the gentleman from Nova Scotia prefers, one in four-and they will tell a tale that, I am sorry to say, accurately bears out the conclusion forced upon us by a comparison of the American statistics of emigrants received from us, with our own statistics of immigrants that we have brought into our country. Now, then, I think I have said enough, perhaps, to warrant me in saying that I do think a case is made out with reference to the Emigration Department that calls for the most serious consideration of this House. I now propose to enter upon another branch of my subject, in order to lead up to a proposition that I desire to submit to this House, and upon which I desire them to express their opinion. Sir, if the figures I have given to you be correct-and I have shown the sources from whence they are derived, and hon. gentlemen can examine them for themselves-if the facts be as these figures declare them to be, I would ask if it is not time that the public moneys of the people of Canada should not be used for the purpose of bringing immigrants from other countries into our country, only to pass from our shores on to the shores of another country; or, if they do not do that, to displace an equal number of citizens who, without any disparagement to those who come here from abroad, I say it is more desirable for us to retain in our midst those who come to us from abroad to take their places. Now, Sir, I say, and I say it unhesitatingly, from personal knowledge, though we have been here now nearly three months, and I am free to confess that a business man shut up in the city of Ottawa, attending to his duties, having but limited correspondence with those who are left to manage his own affairs, is hardly in a position to tell exactly the actual state of affairs that exists in the country. I was impressed with this fact before I left my home to attend to my parliamentary duties, that we had, after a period of prosperity, much sooner than I could desire, much sooner, indeed, than I expected, that we had met with reverses in trade, that we had reached that stage of protection, if I might use that expression, which would come sooner or later, that we had reached it much sooner than I anticipated. As a result, I do know, though my own city is one of the busiest little cities I believe in this country, and we felt it perhaps less than other places, I could not shut my eyes to the fact that while there had been difficulty at some times during a pressure of business in some of the factories, of securing men, that that period had passed and that we were actually in a position-I myself, and others with whom I conferred, manufacturers in my own city-that we were forced to say that we regretted very much to find that we had applicants for labour to such an extent that it was painful almost to say, no, no; as we were forced to do in justice to the men that we had in our employ. And, Sir, that impression was strengthened by the fact that the newspapers told us that which had become a matter very palpable oven then, that many of the manufacturing industries throughout the country, notably our cotton and woollen mills, had reached the stage in which they had over-produced, in which there was an enforced necessity for them to shut down production, and to discharge their operatives; and, Sir, from then till now, as I have been able to follow the course of events, I find this state of things, instead of becoming better, is becoming worse. I find that the wages of our workingmen are being reduced, I find in the newspapers that the men in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway Company are in consultation whether it is possible for them, whether they will consent to a reduction of the wages that they are receiving at present. The manufacturers have been forced to reduce their wages. I know also that others have reluctantly been forced into that position, for it is with reluctance that a man-if he possesses the feeling that I believe the vast majority of that class possess-I say it is with reluctance that manufacturers will discharge their employees, especially during the dull winter months. But it was forced upon them. And we have the testimony of men who have written letters to their employers and signed them-letters in which they stated that they would almost sooner starve than strike, but in which they asked their employers to take into consideration their circumstances, to consider for a moment the amount of wages they were receiving and to ask themselves how it was possible that on those wages they could support and educate their families, and keep the sheriff away from the door. This was the state of things when Parliament assembled; but limited as my ability is accurately, from actual contact with the outside business public, to ascertain what is transpiring in that direction, I am forced unwillingly to the conclusion that, instead of the position improving, it is rather worse; and though I am not one of those who take a too gloomy view of the affairs of this country, for I believe the people of Canada are a people full of energy, yet from my knowledge of the stocks of many manufactured articles in this country, I am able, as a business man, to say that there is a period before us during which we may not expect to have that prosperity which was upon us for two or three years past. I think my view is borne out by this fact, that the prosperity we enjoyed during the two or three previous years was a prosperity not natu-ral to the years in which we enjoyed it, but that during those two or three years, in addition to the prosperity that was on the country, a natural prosperity, resulting from many varying causes, notably among which was the increase of wealth brought into the country from the sale of lumber, animals and their products, and agricultural produce-there was a prosperity, if by great trading prosperity may be defined, in a measure due to the fact that we discounted a year or two that were to follow; in other words, the goods which should have been manufactured in 1884 and 1885, and perhaps some of the goods which ought to have been manufactured in 1886, were, by the stimulus of the highly protective Tariff, manufactured during the three years of prosperity. It thus seems inevitable that for a year or two, at all events-I trust it may not be longer-we cannot expect to have anything like the prosperity we enjoyed during those two or three years; I hope my forecast may not be perfectly correct, and that it may turn out that we have not really discounted the prosperity which should occur during this and future years in the last three years which have gone by. But I have to bring before the House the views of the wage-earners of this country, as represented by their Trade and Labour Council in Toronto. Not many days ago petitions were presented to this House -petitions yards in length, and covered with the signatures of the men who, with bared arms, work for their daily bread in the different trades and industries-in which they set forth that there is no longer in this country room for any more labourers than we have in it, and that there are mechanics and artizans at the present time unable to obtain employment, and that assisted passages for mechanics and ordinary labourers should altogether cease from this time forth. I have before me a Report of their Legislative Committee on 7th March, from which I desire to read an extract to the House. And the House will agree with me that if it was a right and proper thing that the manufacturing industries of this country, if the interests having read these extracts, having spoken of matters which, of comparatively few men engaged in manufacturing were of sufficient importance to warrant the Finance Minister in bringing their case before Parliament and asking for special in Canada, at the present time, room for any more mechan-Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

legislation, in order that they might be favoured and encouraged, then I hold that hon. members will admit it is a right and proper thing that I should bring before the House the claims of a class who outnumber the other class perhaps a hundred to one, when they ask this House not to give them any special favour, not to enact legislation directly for their benefit, but that from this time forward, under the present depressed circumstances, the Government will not take the wages paid by way of taxes into the Dominion Treasury, contributed by those wage-earners, for the purpose of paying the passages of men from foreign countries to come here and compete with them, and cut down the price of their labour. The Legislative Committee of the Trades and Labour Council said :

"Your Committee are pleased to find that the discussions in both the Dominion Pariament and the Provincial Legislature, on the immigration question, its abuses, and its evils, consequent upon the persistent efforts of your body in keeping the subject before the public, have, in a pointed manner, drawn attention to the very unreliable manner in which immi-gration statistics are secured by the Dominion Government. To this same looseness in enforcing the printed instructions and regulations of the Government on the part of agents abroad, is due in a great measure the fact that the classes required, if required at all, do not find their the fact that the classes required, if required at all, do not find their way to Canada In support of this contention it is only necessary to call attention to the fact that, during the month of February just passed, there arrived in Toronto 148 immigrants, of whom fifty-four were mechanics and thirty-six were clerks, leaving only fifty-eight under the head of "farm labourers." The system which encourages and abets immi-gration to Canada in midwinter, of the two first-mentioned classes, and under the present depressing outlook, is simply infamous. "Your Committee feel that it cannot be too often repeated that there are more mechanics and labourers in Canada at the present time than can find employment, altogether irrespective of what wage they may be willing to work for and a seconsequence regret that the Dominion willing to work for, and as a consequence, regret that the Dominion Government still, and in face of this undeniable fact, evinces a disposi-tion to further flood our labour market, as shown by the increased sum asked to be voted by Parliament for immigration purposes during the now opening season."

That is the report of the Legislative Committee of the Trades and Labour Council of Toronto, which, I take it, fairly represents the sentiments of the wage-earners. may add that the petitions presented were not petitions from that body alone, but from other cities of the Dominion. At a meeting held on the 22nd March, the Legislative Committee made another report, with which I will trouble the House. The report says:

"Your Committee are glad to notice, through the press, that the Dominion Government has drawn the attention of the Tuke Immigration

"Your Committee are glad to notice, through the press, that the Dominion Government has drawn the attention of the Tuke Immigration Committee to the undesirableness of many of those sent to Canada under or by direction of said Committee, and would express the hope that the is but the first of a series of steps towards meeting the views so often and so forcibly, as well as truthfully, brought under the notice of the Government by your body, regarding immigration by assisted pas-sage, and as paupers. "Your Committee are buoyed in this hope, the more particularly as the reports published during the past two weeks of the numbers of poor people fed and provided with clothing, fuel, &c., by the various charit-able and benevolent organizations, are of themselves the very best evidence that the ground long since taken by your body in asserting that our labour market is more than over stocked with surplus labourers, was strictly correct. Your attention, as well as that of the public, is, in a particular manner, called to the following, credited in the city press to Mr Pell, one of the relieving officers of the St George's Society. He stated, 'that among the applicants were many newly-arrived immigrants, who came out on 'assisted passages' from the Dominion Government, and were entirely without capital. Most of the new arrivals are ordin-ary labourers, mechanics and clerks. None seem to have been brought up to agricultural pursuits.' Mr Pell concludes by hoping that he 'may never again have to witness so much distress in the city.' And with the same end in view, your Committee have been keeping the matter so persistently before the Government, your body, and the public generally.'' I cannot read all the extracts. I hope it will all be allowed

I cannot read all the extracts. I hope it will all be allowed to be printed-but they say that they feel buoyed up in their hope, by the fact that one of the active agents of a reliable society, whom the press generally agrees in saying is Mr. Pell, hopes he may never be called upon again to witness such an amount of distress as existed in that city at the present time, among newly arrived immigrants. Now, I suppose, are more or less within the knowledge of gentlemen present, I have no hesitancy in saying that there is not ics, or for labourers engaged in towns and cities ; and I do agree with this report that it is wrong-I will not go the length that the report goes, for they call it simply infamous-but I do say it is wrong and improper under present circumstances that the wages contributed by way of taxation by these people should be taken for the purpose of bringing more from older countries into this country, already glutted. I say it must have one of two results: it must have the result not only of putting down the wages of men who are employed here, but a matter worse than that is, as the Committee points out, that it can only have the result of making either those we bring into the country leave this for another country, or drive from us an equal number of those whom we claim as our citizens and are proud to recognize as such. Now, Sir, I find a short extract in Saturday's Globe, in the form of a telegram from London, England, dated March 21st, in which it is stated :

"Lord Lorne delivered a lecture on Emigration to-night in the district of Whitechapel. As usual, he lauded Uanada, and pointed out the great advantages of emigration to the Dominion, where employment was offered to all who were willing to work. He assured his hearers that the coming summer would be one of increased prosperity in Canada and the demand for labour greater than ever before. The Baroness Burdette-Coutts will at once send fifty poor families to Canada, where arrange-ments have been made for their suitab e location."

Now, in common with all other members of this House, I rejoice in the fact that our Governors General, during their stay in this country, become so favourably impressed with it that it seems to them that they regard it not only as their duty, but that they actually take pleasure in speaking well of the Dominion over which their Sovereign calls upon them to preside for some years. I am glad that Canada is able to produce such sentiments, and has produced them, in the breasts of the illustrious gentlemen who have presided as Governors General over this Dominion. Not only is that true with reference to Lord Lorne, but with reference to his illustrious predecessor, Earl Dufferin, and I trust it may be our good fortune-and I speak confidently, when I expect that it will be our good fortune-so to impress the mind of the distinguished gentleman who now occupies that position, that he, too, when he returns to his native land, will find it an easy and a pleasant task to speak in terms of admiration of this Dominion of which we are all so proud. But while I say this-and I have read this extract for this purpose-I consider that if Lord Lorne is correctly reported in these remarks, it is desirable that communication should be had with him, in which he should be informed that there is a change in the circumstances of Canada. He is now speaking from an experience that might possibly warrant him in using this language, with reference to all kinds of labour, when he sailed from our shores, amid the regrets of us all. But as I said before, there was a sharp turn in our affairs, and I cannot, speaking truthfully, state that the language, if uttered by Lord Lorne, is such as he would feel warranted in using, if he were fully aware of the circumstances in which we are to-day. I believe, and I would desire that if any communication, any words of this Parliament, any utterances to which he attaches any weight. should reach his ear, he should be told that in the outspoken and friendly way in which he is advocating our interests in the Old Country, he should tell the people of Great Britain, that in the Dominion of Cansda there is room for men with small capital who desire to go on the land to till it, that there is room for that class of people in the almost boundless prairies of the North-West; that on the fertile soil of Manitoba there is room for all who desire to come, and we will hail as a benefactor the man who lends his energies in the direction of leading them there. I think he would be warranted in saying this, in addressing any audience comprised of men who have been labourers in agricultural pursuits, whether under tonant farmers or others, that he should say to them there is room, are thrown out of employment, a cry goes up in the coun-and I believe there is, in Ontario and I suppose, in the other Provinces, for people of that kind, and that labour will be found for them. And if he should be favoured with any of the fair sex in his audiences, he should say to them, in all confidence, that if there are any respectable females in that land, who are willing to engage in household ser-VICO

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman seems to doubt that he would meet with respectable women in the places he goes to.

Mr. PATERSON. I trust the hon. gentleman is not trying-

Mr. MACKENZIE. To joke.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Brant is joking, and a bad joke it is.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; I was speaking in earnest, and I think the hon, gentleman will agree with me in saying that it is not very parliamentary to interrupt.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If he will point out an expression which I have used that is improper, I can only say that I did not desire to use it; and though I cannot now remember the words I did use to convey the idea I wi-hed to convey, I repeat here that if there are those of respectable connections-females that desire to come to this country, and who have characters that are such that it is well to introduce into our families, there is employment, I believe, for that class of female help in the households of Canada. That I have said, that I desire to say, and that, I believe, is what I did say.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON, Well, I am glad the hon. gentleman approves of it Now, Sir, these are the classes that we should bring in-female servants, such as are willing to work in the household, and agricultural labourers who have been taught to work on the farm, and have worked around the farm in the Old Country. There is room for them in the older Provinces, I believe; and, as I said before, farmers even with limited means, but who desire to take homesteads and become holders of real estate, will be able to get land in the North-West. I would not ask that he should say to them that there is everything here they desire, made ready to their hand, for I do not think anything is to be gained, nor do i believe that he or any other gentleman conversant with the actual state of affairs would desire to promote immigration by that means. But I believe that those who are honest and respectable, and are willing to work and willing to till the soil, will find homes in that country, and will be welcomed by everybody in the country. But with the other class, I maintain that the figures I have given show that we have not room for them, under the present circumstances. I can enforce that statement by referring to what the Finance Minister himself said in his Budget speech. When alluding to the depression in the cotton industry-though he attempted to make light of it in a way that, I think, the circumstances did not warrantadmitted that there was a depression, that the mills had closed down, and that several hundred operatives, as he put it, had been thrown out of employment. But he said : The saw mills have restricted their productions, and there is no outcry about that; but as soon as a few hundred operatives try with reference to them. I have shown that is a serious matter even for a few hundred-although, if the hon. gentleman's figures were correct, I think the number would be more like a few thousand-to be out of employment for a month or two months in the year, when I pointed out the average wages paid to these employees, estimated from the Census returns made by hon. gentlemen opposite. No one will assert that there is room for more operatives in our cotton mills. Moreover, the proposed reduction in the number of employees on the Grand Trunk Railway, at the present time, as well as the reductions that have taken place in many industrial establishments throughout the country, all point to the fact that there are at present a large number, and there must necessarily be a greatly augmented number in the near future, of men willing and anxious to work, for whom the country is not able to furnish employment; and there will be more than the few hundred cotton operatives out of work, which the hon. gentleman says caused such a great outcry. But let me read a little further what the Finance Minister said in regard to this matter, in order to point out where he failed altogether in discharging his duty to the wage-earning class, according to the principle announced by himself:

"It may be said that within the last three or four months the wages of employees of manufacturers in the Dominion have in some cases been reduced: that we have not so many men employed just now as we had three or four months ago. I am free to admit that Canadian manufacturers have to-day an unusual strain put on them. And from what cause is this strain? Every hon, member knows that manufacturers in Great Britain, where the policy of Free Trade prevails, and manufacturers in the United States, where Protection prevails, have surplus stock on hand, that they are reducing the number of their employees, that they are diminishing their wages, that they are compelled to cell their surplus stocks, and the stocks they are even now producing from day to day at a lower rate than usual. Those reductions have in many cases taken place, though resisted by the operatives in both England and the United States. What is the result? Our American neighbours an i British manufacturers, owing to their profits being reduced, and the wages paid to their operatives being now lower than before, come in here, and are sharply competing to-day with the Canadian manufacturers. A year or two ago, as I know, and other hon members know perfectly well, as the prices paid for labour in the United States must regulate the price of labour in Canada, because if the wages are not about equal the operatives will soon pass across the line. Our manufacturers found it necessary to increase the wages here when an advance took place in the United States, in order to keep their men; but now that there is a reduction in the United states, owing to reduced prices, our manufacturers, in order to successfully compete, have also to reduce the prices of their products, and in some cases the wages of their operatives."

Now, Sir, I have read the whole passage, in order that the Finance Minister might have justice done to him. But I call his attention and the attention of the House to the statement he there puts forth. He admits that there are employees out of work; he admits that wages have been reduced; and he assigns as a reason for it the fact that wages were reduced in Great Britain and the United States, that there was a surplus of stocks in Britain and a surplus in the States, and that the manufacturers sent these surplus stocks into Canada and sharply competed with our manufacturers-in other words, he admitted that they were coming in here to slaughter their goods; and that consequently, our manufacturers were forced to reduce the wages of their operatives in order to produce their goods at a less cost and have the same profit, or a fair profit, left to themselves. While the Finance Minister recognizes these facts, where he altogether failed in his duty, from his standpoint, towards the wage-earning class, where he failed to do what he recognized in time past to be fair and right, was that he allowed the wages of these operatives to be cut down and some of them to lose their places, from the fact that the glutted markets of the United States and Great Britain were sending their surpluses here and causing a reducction in wages. Why, Sir, if he had been fair, if he had been honourable-I do not mean to use that term, I take it back -if he had carried out what I understand to be the principles he himself has laid down with reference to this matter, he would not have been offering an ex- the Resolution I intend submitting to this House. I find that Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

cuse on the floor of Parliament for the reduction of wages of these operatives, but he would have done this : he would have said : I find the wages of operatives are reduced, and because American and English manufacturers are slaughtering their goods in this country, my action shall be on the line on which I went before. I will increase the duties, I will raise my Tariff higher, I will exclude those British American goods, I will prevent their competition with our manufacturers here; and then, if his reasoning be true, the wages of employees would not have come down, and the men would not have been cast out of work. He told us, when he introduced the Tariff, that he had the means of keeping up the wages of the men; yet, knowing that the men are suffering, he hesitates to implement the pledges he has given them, pledges relied upon by them, and which secured for him and the party he represents, the votes of many of those men, when he appealed to them on that occa-sion. I hold he has not done right with these men. If there is any class that has a right to find fault with the Government, it is that class in whose interest it was said a high Tariff was made, with the view of keeping up their wages by increasing the profits of those who give employment. Yet, the labour market is full. If I needed more proof, I could find it in the statement of the bon. Minister of Railways and those of other hon. gentlemen opposite, who spoke here on the subject-I will be pardoned, for one moment, in referring to a past debate-of the advance to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and one reason strongly urged why this loan should be made to the Canadian Pacific Railway was that, unless we let them have this money, dire results would follow. One of the worst results predicted from such refusal would be that some 10,000 or 12,000 men who were employed by that Company on the north shore of Luke Superior would have to be discharged in the winter time, and would flood the already crowded cities. The matter was so serious that it was urged, as one of the strong reasons why this House should do that which, I venture to say, one short year ago it was never expected we would be called on to do, and it was one of the reasons that influenced many hon. gentlemen to cast their votes in favour of that measure. The evil is but removed, if evil it was, for three years; we are told that within three years we will have that road complete .. Then these men will have to be discharged, and if they do not go out of our own country, and if the times will not have improved, he will have the same results following the discharge of those men then that we would have, as depicted by the hon. Minister of Railways and others, had this advance not been granted. Evidence from all quarters point out that for mechanics, artizans and ordinary labourers finding employment in the cities, and clerks engaged in mercantile pursuits, there is not room in Canada in the present depressed state of affairs. I think, therefore, is only proper and right that this House should express the opinion that, under these circumstances, it is an unfair thing to take the public money of this country, contributed largely by the wage-earning class of this country, and expend it for the purpose of bringing the same class of operatives from foreign lands to compete with them, and thus bring about the result, not only of putting down the price of labour in this country, but the far worse result of actually displacing an equal number of our population. Sir, this question of our people leaving us is a question that, I am sorry to say, is proved too often and in too many ways, and while that be the case, I ask why we should go on spending money bringing in a class that will inevitably produce the results of which I have spoken. I will read but one extract, taken from a source which 1 am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will not discredit-their own organ in this city-and I will read it because it may have some influence on hon. gentlemen opposite, who seem to have almost made up their minds, if I can judge by their cheerful demeanour, to support when the hon. member for Pontiac introduced to the hon. Minister of Public Works, on Saturday last, I think it was, the Rev. Father Paradis and a deputation which accompanied him, consisting of a number of leading gentlemen of Ottawa, in order to impress on the hon. Minister the desirability of improving the Upper Ottawa District, among the arguments made use of by the hon. member for Pontiac on that occasion was this:

"If father Paradis' scheme was adopted it would prove very attractive to intending settlers and keep thousands of our industrious habitants, who are now seeking homes elsewhere, on our own soil."

Mr. IVES. Keep them from going to the North West.

Mr. PATERSON. That is our own soil. I do not understand our own soil is confined to the Province of Quebec. It is the North-West, Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba-all the Dominion is our own soil, and the fact that Father Paradis was accompanied by Ontario gentlemen, shows that it was not keeping them on Quebec soil that was meant. That was not the point; they did not urge their project for any small, selfish reason like that, for from the broad ground that we should keep our own people in our own Dominion. I need not pross on this point, for in the speech of the hon. Minister of Public Works himself, delivered some time ago, he showed that he is cognizant of the fact that many of our best citizens from that Province have found homes elsewhere, and I dare say, judging from this and other expressions I have heard, instead of their returning to us, there is still a large exotus of people from that Province. Under these circumstances, if we are unable to find employment for our own people, it is undesirable that public money should be expended in bringing this class here. I do not desire to enlarge on the question, I do not desire to bring other questions into it, but I say that with such a magnificent country as this, with such possibilities for development as this contains, I find figures demonstrating the existence of this deplorable state of affairs. When I show that we have a territory containing millions and tens of millions of acres on which there are no settlers, yet still our people, instead of staying here, are flocking to another country, the conviction is borne upon me that there is, and that there must have been, legislation enacted in this country which is hostile to its best interests, which has produced the bitter fruit we now see; and if that conviction be borne upon the hon. Ministers who conduct the affairs of this House, it is desirable that they should give it their serious consideration. It is well for them that they give it serious consideration, and if errors in legislation have been made, that those errors be remedicd; and, if there can be any scheme devised whereby a better state of things may be brought about, that they bend all their energies to bring that state of things into existence; but, until they have done that, Sir, and until there is more room for people of the classes I have men-tioned than I have shown there is at the present time, I, for one, am prepared to express the sentiment, that it is not at present a desirable thing to expend the public money of Canada in assisting to this country immigrants of mechanical or labouring classes, such as work in our towns and cities. I, therefore, beg to place in your hands the following Resolution, to leave out all the words after "That" aud insert the following:-

The whole question of immigration into Canada and emigration from Canada requires the serious consideration of this House; and that, in the opinion of this House, under present circumstances, no public money should be expended towards defraying the travelling expenses of mechanics, arusens, clerks or labourers, excepting agricultural labourers, emigrating to Conada.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a fortunate thing, Mr. Speaker, that other speeches than speeches such as the one we have heard, can be pronounced in this House and be read outside, in this country and abroad. Should all the speeches on the affairs of this country be similar to that which we have just heard, there is no doubt that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat would be perfectly right in saying that the immigration to this country would cease in a very short time. I am sorry to see that the hon. gentleman, whenever he gets up, has nothing else to say about the country but to disparage it, and try to show that this is a country that is oppressed, and that there is only depression all through the land, from Victoria to Halifax. The hon. gentleman even goes as far as this-he alludes to the speeches of the Governors of this country, those who have left us as well as those who govern us, and he is sorry to see that they have so many good things to say of Canada. He tries to minimize the good that can come from their speeches. He tries to show that they must be under a delusion, or that since they left the country things have changed to such an extent that their speeches are not in accordance with the facts. Well, with all due deference to the hon. gentleman, I have no doubt that, in this country as well as abroad, the speeches of Lord Dufferin, the speeches of Lord Lorne, without speaking of the respected Governor we have now, will be read through the three Kingdoms, will be read through the United States, through Canada and everywhere where the English language is spoken and read ; that they will be read with interest, that great weight will be attached to them, and that they will produce a great deal of good and will be a great benefit to this country. I must say that, in so far as Lord Lorne is concerned, he has already done a great service to this country, and we should be most thankful to him for the great interest he takes in Canadian affairs, the great interest he takes in the prosperity of this country; and I am sure that not one of us would say that there is, in this country, a better Canadian than Lord Lorne himself. One of those speeches will do more good to this country than two hundred speeches such as the one pronounced by the hon. gentleman. Those speeches pronounced by the hon. gentleman, or similar speeches, are only calculated to destroy the credit of this country, prevent immigration, and show to the outside world what is not the fact, that this country is a poor country, badly administered, and this country is a poor country, badly administered, and that we are suffering from all quarters. The hon. gentleman has gone into figures to try to prove his argument that this country is going down in-stead of prospering; that this country is not prospering; that, on the contrary the people are leaving the country for the United States, and that our schools, for example, are not encouraged; that the number of children has diminished in those schools, and he gave for example the schools in Nova Scotia. I will not onter into those details; he has had plenty of time to prepare and look over the statistics, but on the spur of the moment I will remind him that at the period he speaks of there were school difficulties, educational difficulties, in New Brunswick, between the two leading portions of the population there-the Roman Catholics, and the Protestants, as a whole-and at that time the fight was such that the Roman Catholics, or a large number of them, kept their children at home and did not send them to the schools; and that lasted to the period when an arrangement was come to, by which the two sections of the country could send their children to the schools. The statistics, if he takes them from that period, will show that the children who go to school have largely increased, year by year. The same thing will occur if the hon. gentleman refers to the school statistics all through the country. Surely, he would not point to his own Province, that great and prosperous Province of Ontario, to show that the number of children has diminished.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes; they have.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He would show, on the contrary, that the number of children has continued to increase.

Mr. BLAKE. No. Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I want to show that in proportion to the number of people who remain in the country and have not gone to the North-West, where so many of them are now settled and are so prosperous, they have their wives and children with them, and it is not surprising that a large number of the latter, instead of being in the schools of Ontario, are now in the schools of Manitoba and elsewhere; and, therefore, the statement of the hon. gentleman does not prove his argument at all. It proves, on the contrary, that the schools are frequented as they were. Take the Province of Quebec, and you will find that the same increase continues there that we have had for the last twenty years. I have not looked at the statistics this year, but I know it was so last year, and I have no doubt it is the same now. Though I admit that a large number of people have been emigrating to find work in the factories of the United States, a great number of them have come back, and others have gone to Manitoba and the North-West; and now they can reach those prairies more easily, you will find them going there in much larger numbers to settle upon that immense domain, which belongs not to one nationality but to all the nationalities in this country. I hope that those of my French Canadian countrymen who wish to leave their Province and emigrate, will go to Manitoba and the North-West; then they will remain on Canadian soil, they will remain under British institutions, under which they were born, those institutions we all cherish and under which we shall prosper. The hon. gentleman has gone into figures concerning emigration. Now, the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that figures may be grouped in such a way as to make them say yes or no, black or white, though I do not say he has done so. But if he refers to the statistics that are found in the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, and which are now before the House, he will find some very striking facts. First, the emigration by the St. Lawrence for the last seven years has been as follows: In 1877, 7,700—I give only round numbers; in 1878, 10,200; in 1879, 17,200; 1880, 21,000; 1881, 30,000; 1882, 44,000; 1883, 45,000. Now, take those that have come by the Suspension Bridge: 1877, 13,000; 1878, 15,000; 1879, 30,000; 1880, 47,000; 1851, 61,00J; 1882, 90,000; 1883, 102,000. And if you take those that have come by the Maritime Provinces, including Portland. Halifax, Boston and St. John, direct, you will find: 1877, 2,700; 1878, 2,400; 1879, 3,900; 1880, 3,300; 1881, 3,800; 1882, 13,400; 1883, 13,700. By British Columbia you have: 1881, 5,000; 1882, 13,900; 1883, 9,000. These figures show that the immigration into this country, the passenger immigration as well as settler's immigration, has been increasing from year to year, and especially during the last two or three years. Now, if you take the totals you will have: 1877, 23,000; 1878, 28,000; 1879, 51,000; 18^{20} , 75,030; 1881, 101,000; 1882, 162,000; 1883, 171,000. Then, if you take those entered at Custom Honese mith estimate the second Houses with settlers' goods, you find for the same years respectively: 11,000; 11,000; 9,000; 10,000; 15,000; 30,000; 34,000. And if you put all these together, you will see what has been the immigration into this country for the last seven years: In 1877, 35,000; 1878, 40,000. After that, the policy of this Government began to take effect in 1879, and has continued during the last four years. In 1879 the immigration was 61,000; 1880, 85,000; 1881, 117,000; 1882, 193,000; 1883, 206,000. This shows, at all events, contrary to the statement of the hon. gentleman who preceeded me, that the immigration to this country, far from diminishing. has increased from year to year, and more especially during the last four or five years. Of course, it will be said that a large number of these were merely passengers, and that a French Canadian of Montreal who had been settled at Bray, large number of them were destined for the United States, but near Dublin, for the last eight years, and when he they do not form the largest portion. No doubt a good returned the other day he could speak the French Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

many of them did not remain in this country; they came by the steamers as passengers, and went through to the United States. But, on the other hand, you find that the immigration of settlers into Canada, of those who have settled in this country, has been as follows: In 1874, 39,000; 1875, 27,000; 1876, 25,000; 1877, 27,000; 1878, 29,000; 1879, 40,000; 1880, 38,000; 1881, 47 000; 1882, 112,000; 1883, 133,000. Therefore, far from diminishing, the emigrants coming from all quarters, by the Maritime Pro-vinces as well as by the St. Lawrence and the Suspension Bridge, have largely increased from year to year, especially during the last three years. The hon. gentleman has been speaking of the cost. That is one of the greatest hobbies of hon. gentlemen opposite. They pretend that we have been uselessly expending and squandering the money of the people on immigration; but what do we find? We find that in 1877 the cost of bringing settlers into Canada, including those that are reported by the Customs as settlers coming here to live, was $6.73 per head; in 1878, $6.23; in 1879 the cost had fallen to $4.35. in 1880 it was $4.71; 1881, $4.30; 1882, $3.08; 1883, $3.15; so that the cost of immigrants was reduced to the smallest sum possible, under the circumstances, in 1883. If you compare the cost of each immigrant in 1883 with the cost in 1877, you find that in 1877 each immigrant cost $6.78, whilst in 1883 the cost was only $3.15. If you take the five years —1874-75-76-77 and 1878, the number of immigrants was 92,700, while during the last five years, 1879 to 1883, inclusive, no less than 271,389 immigrants settled in the country; that is, three times as many during the latter five years as during the former. If you take the period from 1875 to 1878, you find that 109,000 people came into the country at a cost to the public Treasury of $1,052,298, or $9.50 per head; whilst from 1880 to 1883, the last four years, no less than 332,000 persons came here, at a cost cf $1,555,000 or $3.30 per head. These figures are taken from the Blue Books laid before Parliament; and yet, the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) has endeavoured to show the House and the country that this is an extravagant Government, that we throw the public money into the streets for the purpose of securing a few immigrants, while the contrary is the fact, and the results show that the cost of immigrants has been reduced, so that instead of the cost being $9.50 per head, as it was during the four years, from 1875 to 1878, it was only $3.30 per head, during the last four years. The hon. member has also endeavoured to show, that during the last decade there has been a large emigration to the United States. The hon. gentleman well knows, that if we have lost population on the one hand, we have gained a great deal, on the other, and that the people who have left the old Provinces have not left the Dominion for good, because a large por-tion have gone to Manitoba and the North-West, while another portion of the population, counted as emigrants, return after the season and bring back their earnings and live in Canada. These people go to the United States to obtain that special work which they are unable to find in their own country. A similar state of things pre-vails in the United States. Why are the eastern States not so populous as they were, and why does the population not remain there ? It is because the people are attracted to go west. They go and settle on new lands: they wish to improve their position. And what is true in the United States is true here also. From my own knowledge of the French Canadians of Quebec, I say that history shows that for all time French Canadians have been desirous of travelling and going west You find them all over Canada, from Victoria to Halifax; you find them in the United States and in Mexico; and the other day I found a wealthy only with difficulty, and then with an Irish accent. The hon. member for Brant has, by statistics, endeavored to prove to the House and the country that the population of the Dominion has not increased, but even decreased. He should have compared the Census of 1871 with that of 1881, and he would have found that every Province has increased, and increased largely. The increase in Prince Elward Island, which is isolated, and does not receive much immigration, showed an increase of 15_{10}^{40} per cent.; Nova Scotia, 13_{10}^{40} ; New Brunswick, 12_{10}^{44} ; Quebec, 14_{10}^{46} ; Ontario, 18_{10}^{46} ; or an average of 16 per cent. The increase altogether has been over half a million (573,000).

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is what I said. The increase is for ten years.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. But the conclusion which the hon. gentleman drew was that our population is not increasing; that the country is not prosperous and contented; that it is a poor country, and I am sorry to say the hon. gentleman sought to disparage the country. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has taken this course, because his speech will be read. The public will say that a leading member of the Opposition has thus spoken, and they will quote his speech. It will also be quoted, doubtless, on the other side of the lines, and published in pamphlet form, and circulated throughout the country as an immigration pamphlet, which will be very useful to the United States. But I should have thought the hon. gentleman, for once during this Session, or during this Parliament, would have found something good to say of Canada. Let us take any of the speeches of the hon. gentleman, let us put them all together, let us take from them what he says of Canada, and we will not find in them one word favourable to Canada. He is always despondent and discouraged, and wants to discourage others. Well, if the hon. gentleman loses courage in that way, he should not, at all events, try to communicate that want of moral courage to others. He must see that, at all events, there are some thousands of people in this country-last year there were 133,000 of them-who think otherwise, who have come into this country and settled here and are remaining here. The hon. gentleman must see that his despondency is not shared by the people of this country. He says that the people are borne down by taxes, and that we are taking away the hard earnings of labourers and mechanics, which should remain with them, otherwise they must go to the United States. The hon. gentleman must see that there is no such feeling in the country; that the people are perfectly satisfied with their present position. There will be, at times, as you will find at the most prosperous times, people who are not prosperous, who are not wisepeople who will import too largely and will fail. There will be others who are not careful about their credits, who give away their goods and scatter them through the country, and when the time comes to get their payments they are unable to get them and have to close their doors and go down. But that is not the general rule. It is true that at this moment the revenues of the country are not so large as they were two or three years ago; but I do not think we should complain bitterly, when we know that one of the strongest reasons is, that the people have learned by the past that they should be more careful, that they should not import so much, that they should curtail their expenses, that they should be more prudent; that all years are not similar, that after a certain number of years of great prosperity, you always have a few years of adversity or reaction, but that, after that reaction, the good years will come again. We read in the Sacred Book, that in that country where now the British army is fighting hard battles, after seven years of great prosperity, there were seven years of great distress, and that the people were taught-

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They had no Tilley there. 135

Mr. MILLS. And no National Policy.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There may not have been a National Policy, but there was a good policy, and that was to save for the bad years, and the people are doing this now-they are saving for the bad years. And what have we done? We have saved those large surpluses to pay the debts of the country. True, we have been paying a large portion of the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway out of those surpluses; we have paid for those great works which were required for the country in that way, and thus if the people have given us a revenue it has gone back to them in these works, and the money has been expended in the country. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman wishes to take the part of the operatives and the mechanics. He is a father to all these operatives. He does not wish them to suffer; we are their oppressors-he is their benefactor and protector ! But, Mr. Speaker, where are the petitions from the operatives and the mechanics? Have they complained to the House that we have been crushing them by taxes to such an extent that they could not live and must leave the country?

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to my hon. friend, and there is the best proof of that in the bye-elections which have been held lately; the people have returned men to support this Government. See what they have done since the last general election. Has the Government gone down in their favour? Have they found their strength smaller in this country than at that period? Have we lost caste with them? Have they found fault with us? Did they show it at the polls? No; they have supported our candidates and returned them to the House; and the Government is in the proud position of being able to say, with all their great measures, and, as hon. gentlemen opposite will say, difficult measures to pass, nevertheless these measures have been sanctioned by the people, and they have sanctioned them by sending other representatives here to support us. I will not detain the House longer, but I wished to show, in answer to the hon. gentleman, that there are two sides to this question. The bright side of the question is the one which we have shown. It is the true side of the question; it is the side which the people say and know to be perfectly true and correct. They know that this Government represents their views; that with the support of Parliament, it has given them the years of prosperity which they have had—the great era of prosperity which has followed the era of adversity.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no doubt about it; the hon. gentleman may cry, hear, hear, but he knows very well that instead of the deficits of a number of years we have had large surpluses. That is an undeniable fact; it is a matter of history. The figures are there, and the money came into the public Treasury, and if it were not the case, how is it that hon. gentlemen have been saying, and are now saying, that we are grinding the people, and keeping them down with taxes? It is because they see the money has come into the public Treasury, and that after these deficits we have had surpluses; but the people have paid them with cheerfulness, because they knew it was for the good of the country; they know that the country is prosperous, and they have come forward and paid a shilling a head more than they used to pay, when they know that they are earning one dollar more than before. I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman one question. He has laid a good deal of stress upon the fact that the money is spent in the country. What is the reason for building vessels in Lockeport, New York, instead of in this country? I would be glad to have a reply to that, as it has never yet been answered.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reason why two or three dredges have been built at Lockeport is, that these vessels could not be built in this country. There were no establishments to build them here, and so true is this, that those companies who have had to obtain dredges for the purpose of works in this country, have been obliged to go to the United States to have them built. We required them, they had to be built, Parliament gave us the money, and therefore we had to go where they were built. When the time comes to give the explanations fully, I will give figures and facts which will show the hon. gentleman that I am sustained in what I say.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it is, perhaps, rashness on my part to rise from my seat and address this House after the hon. Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin). I should not have dared to do it had he made to day, as he has made in other circumstances, one of his practical speeches, teeming with facts and arguments, and I should have left to others, holding a higher position than mine in the Liberal party, the task of refuting his arguments. The House must have seen with surprise that the hon. Minister of Public Works, while speaking in answer to my hon. friend, the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), intrenched himself behind general remarks, which have been repeatedly refuted in this House. In fact, it is not the first time that the Liberal party is charged with want of patriotism. Not very long ago the hon. mem-ber for Cardwell (Mr. White) flung this accusation at the face of the Liberal party, because we refused to expend $30,000,000 in the North-West, in order to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. Minister of Public Works has once more flung this accusation at us to-night, and why? Because we refuse to expend enormous sums of money to attract European immigrants to our shores, and because we want to aid our poor countrymen who are obliged to leave Canada go to the United States. It must be admitted that these two circumstances are very far from making us liable to a charge of want of patriotism. I have been fairly astonished to see the hon. Minister of Public Works refuting in such a peculiar manner the statistics furnished by the hon. meinber from Brant. In fact, what answer did he give to these statistics, so carefully prepared by my hon. friend? He has purely and simply denied the truth of his assertions, but he has not given one solitary figure nor one solitary argument to contradict them successfully. True, he has given, himself, a few statistics in an opposite sense He has endeavoured to show that a great many foreigners are coming to us; but of the emigration of our countrymen who are leaving us to go to a foreign country he has not said a word. He has not given one solitary figure, which proves that he has not for a moment taken that matter under his consideration, and he has only taken into account the foreigners who come to Canada. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is high time that the Government should adopt a policy of some kind or other to solve at last this political and social problem of the emigration of Canadians to the United States, in connection with European immigration. I think it is high time that we should make some efforts to know which are the causes of the emigration of our people to the United States, and that we should try to remedy the evil, if such a thing is possible. My hon. friend, the member for Brant, has given a certain number of statistics, which, according to the hon. Minister, are not accurate; but that hon. gentleman has not given, himself, any statistics on emigration, to contradict the figures of my hon. friend, as I have just stated to the House. We have a right to blame the Government for not preparing statistics on this subject themselves. Whose fault is it, in fact, if we have not any, and if we are obliged Mr. MACKENZIE.

to give certain calculations which are, in a measure, based on suppositions? The fault lies with the Government, who have not taken the trouble to prepare those statistics, and to furnish to the House sufficient data on which to base our calculations while dealing with this important subject. But there is a curious argument put forward by the hon. Minister of Public Works. He has pretended that if a great number of our people emigrate to the United States, on the other hand, a still greater number of immigrants come to us from Europe. That seems to be his way of balancing these two states of things. There is a fact which has been proved by modern science, and that is, that the physical strength of a State does not depend only on the number of its population, but of what physical and moral strength it possesses. There are in a country people who are useful and people who are not. Some people may be rather an encumbrance than anything else. That has been our experience as regards a large number of immigrants who have come to us from European cities. Several newspapers, even among those which are Conservative in politics, are forced to admit that we are daily receiving immigrants who are not at all useful to us. By the way, I think I ought to remark to the Government that those who are really useful are immigrants belonging to the farming class, coming from the country parts of Europe, because these people will con-tribute, like ourselves, to the increase of the wealth of the country, by taking lands either in the North West, or in the Province of Quebec, or in the Province of Ontario. Most of the immigrants who come to us, and who belong to the industrial or labouring class, cannot be of any advantage to the country. In fact, they are only taking the place of our own fellow-citizens, who are obliged to go abroad, and they can only make a much-to-be-regretted competition to the labourers we have here. Why do our labourers leave Canada to go to the United States ? Evidently, because wages are higher in the United States than they are here. And why are wages higher in the United States? Because there is greater scarcity of labour in proportion. And the more labourers will come here from Europe the greater the disproportion in wages will be, and the greater will be the number of our countrymen emigrating to the United States. Mr. Speaker, I think that if we should take into account the number of immigrants who come here, and who are not useful to us, if we should compare them as to their real value with those who are leaving us, we would arrive at the conclusion that the country gains nothing whatever by the exchange, and that it even loses to a great extent. In fact, who are those that are leaving us? A few men belonging to the liberal professions. Thus we find a great number of French Canadian doctors living in the United States; there are also lawyers, but that is due to the over-crowding of the liberal professions. Then a certain number of labourers out of the great mass of those who emigrate are certainly farmers, and I think this fact has already been stated in this House by the hon, member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont). The hon. member from Bagot has stated in a speech that a very large emigration from Canada takes place. I will take the liberty of reading here an extract of this speech, because I think it contains statistics which are the most accurate; they are in direct contradiction with those which were given by the hon. Minister of Public Works. Here is what that hon. member said, on the 13th of February last:

that hon. member said, on the 13th of February last: "Thus we learn by the last Census that the population of the county of Iberville has decreased by an amount of 954 souls; that of the county of Verchères by 328; of the county of Laprairie by 400; Napierville, 1,100; Chateaugua, 2,000; Huntingdon, 900; and there are various other counties in the Province of Quebec where the population has not increased. However, Mr. Speaker, the county which I have the honour to represent, and whose popula ion increases but slowly, because all the land is cleared, has, nevertheles, each year a large excess of population; the excess of births on deaths is from 5000 to 800, which, during a decade, for a county having a population of 21,000 inhabitants, as the county of Bagot, would give a surplus of from 5,000 to 8,000 inhabitants, and by applying the same proportion to all the counties in the Province, we would have a surplus of 350,000 inhabitants per decade, taking only into account the farming population. Still, the population of the Province of Quebec has not increased by 200,000 inhabitants during the last deor Quebec has not increased by 200,000 innabitants during the last de-cade; and why? It is because the population goes off towards the western plains of the United States, where there are now important groups of populations, important localities formed by Canadians, who have emigrated from the Province of Quebec. There are also, in the New England States, cities which are completely under the control of people who have emigrate i from our Province, and American statistics show that the French population emigrated from the Province of Que-bec to the United States amounts to 800,000 or 700,000 souls. What an advantage it would be for the Province of Ouebec, and for the Dominion advantage it would be for the Province of Quebec, and for the Dominion revenue, if our Province had 700,000 or 800,000 more inhabitants than it has to-day."

It will be seen by this extract from the speech of the hon. member for Bagot, that the emigration from the Province of Quebec, is far greater than the hon. Minister of Public Works would have us believe. The emigration of men belonging to the liberal professions can not be stopped, for it is due to the overcrowding of these professions. The same thing may be said of the labourers who emigrate to the United States: they emigrate because they find better wages, and I have already taken occasion to say that it is not within the power of a Government to increase or diminish wages by a special policy, so this kind of emigration can only be controlled in its connection with European immigration; it will be greater or smaller, according to the number of foreign immigrants who will come to Canada. But there is one thing which I think I will be able to prove here—at least I shall try to prove it—and it is, that the emigration of farmers might be controlled in a measure, by the adoption of a policy more favourable to agriculture in the Dominion of Canada. I regret to say that the present policy of the Government, is not at all beneficial to the farming community. I will venture to speak here more especially of the Province of Quebec, to which I belong, because I have had more occasion to find out by myself what takes places in that Province than in any other. Our Province suffers doubly under the present circumstances. Indeed, in the difficult position in which our Local Government finds itself, with annual deficits accumulating, the Government of Quebec can do very little for colonization. This fact has already been established by the member for Bagot, (Mr. Dupont). Well, it is perfectly clear that the money which would be spent for colonization would be an antidote for the social evil resulting from the emigration of our people to the United States. I may remark that we are in a rather peculiar position towards the Federal Government with respect to our revenues. While the Province of Quebec, like all other Provinces, for that matter, is obliged to pay large amounts to the Federal Government, which go to form the annual surpluses which have amounted to $7,000,000 or $3,000,000, it is painful to find, that in the meanwhile we have in our own Province deficits as large in proportion. Well, where are those surpluses going, to which we have con-tributed for the last few years? I think the facts will bear me out, when I say that they have all been expended in the North-West for the construction of the Pacific Railway, for the settlement of new Provinces, and for the purpose of bringing European immigrants to our shores. The old Provinces of Canada have hardly received anything to compensate them for the heavy sacrifices they have imposed upon themselves to form these large surpluses of the Federal Treasury. I do not wish to say that we should do nothing for the North-West. I understand that in the future the North-West will be a very important country, but what I desire to remark is, that it is curious to see our Province making such heavy sacrifices to settle the North-West when it has not the means to settle its own territory. I think it is high time that we should spend a little less in the new Provinces and do a little more for the old Provinces, if we do not wish to see their prestige completely annihilated and to diminish their importance in the Dominion of Canada. I think it is my duty to suggest to the Government that it would be better to spend less money in the North-West, and If all the grievances of the North-West, the monopolies to

to adopt, in place of the present policy, a policy more calculated to promote the interests of colonization. With a proper policy the immigrants would go of their own accord to these territories, and there would be no need for us to pay so much money to bring them here. That is what I shall try to prove. A celebrated economist, Montesquieu, has said in "Esprit des Lois, "that countries are cultivated not by reason of their fertility, but by reason of their liberty." Contrarily to what the hon. Minister of Public Works just said, we have not depreciated the North-West until now. and I have no intention of depreciating it to-day. I am happy to say that our North-West is one of the finest and most fertile countries in the world. Besides that, in many places the climate is splendid, and in spite of certain inconveniencies which may occur anywhere, it is one of the countries in the world which offers the greatest advantages to colonization. Well, Mr. Speaker, in spite of all these advantages, what is the reason immigrants do not go there of their own accord? It is because there are in the North-West a great many causes for complaints. There is a state of things of which immigrants are suffering to day, and of which they complain bitterly: it is the want of liberty; want of political freedom; the policy of the Government concerning the granting of charters by the Government of Manitoba for the construction of local railways has prevented the growth and increase of that country. There are. besides that, Mr. Speaker, monopolies which have been created by the Pacific Railway Company and monopelies created by the National Policy. The want of commercial liberty, from which the North-West is suffering through the heavy taxes that are paid, in consequence of the high tariff paid on railway freights, are reasons which prevent the immigrants from going to settle in that country. Here is a letter which I received some time ago from the Hon. Mr. Joly, who visited the North-West last summer, which letter contains a few things concerning the complaints made by the immigrants of that country on the subject of taxes imposed on agricultural implements. Here is an extract of that letter:

"I was reading, the other day, in the papers, a summary of com-plaints made by the people of Manitoba. They are generally well-found-ed. There is one especially, of which I can speak with a knowledge of the facts: it has reference to the Customs duties on agricultural implements.

ments. "If there is a place in the world where agriculture is obliged to call machinery to its aid, it is certainly the North-West. The fields are im-mense, labour is scarce, the soil is prepared beforehand by nature to be cultivated exclusively by machinery. Distances are so great, freight is so high, that an encouraging profit can only be expected by raising large quantities of products. Consequently, everything indicates that the only way for the farmers of the North-West to work their immense farms with profit, is to use agricultural implements of the most improved style. "Everywhere in our North-West, bitter complaints are made, as to the inferiority of the agricultural implements made in Oanada, and in spite of the high Customs duties that protect them, a great number of per-

If you wish to have a proof of this, take the largest farm, not only of our North-West, but of all America, Bell's Farm, in the valley of Qu'Appelle, having an area of 60 square arpents; enquire of them as to the result of their experience while using Oanadian and American implements; they will tell you when they they the the states of the second states of t

It is perhaps the most easy to solve of any of the difficulties now agitating the North-West—and bear in mind, it is one of the most serious. If you wish to make of the North-West, the granary of Europe, if you wish to draw into it thousands of farmers, foster agriculture by giving it the advantage of the best implements, at the lowest price, and admit to the North-West, agricultural implements free of duty. which I have referred, the taxes imposed by the so-called National Policy, were removed, I do not hesitate in saying that it would be the country chosen, not only by foreign immigrants, but also by the sons of old Canada, as the finest, the richest, and the most advantageous country. We could attract immigration here without having to spend money, but simply through the popularity which the North-West would acquire by these political changes. Another cause for the emigration of the agricultural class to the United States is the heavy taxes imposed on the farmers. shall take the liberty of submitting to the House a statement of the expenditure and revenue of the country during the last four years, during which period the emigration has been greater than ever in Canada: thus, in 1880 81, the expenditure of the country has amounted to $25,502,554; in 1881-82, to $27,067,103; in 1882-83, to $28,805,229; in 1883-84, to $31,200,000, according to the estimate of the hon. Minister of Finance. The revenue of the country has amounted, in 1830-81, to $29,635,297; in 1881-82, to $33,383,455; 1882-83, to $35,883,334; in 1883-84, to (estimates) $32,200,000-making a total for expenditure of $112,574,886, and for revenue of $131,107,086. In 1878, when the Liberal party left power, the annual expenditure amounted to $23,500,000; but it must be admitted that since then there has been an increase in the population, and that it is perfectly natural that there should be an increase in the expenditure. I think it would be fair to estimate the average of the expenditure of these last four years at $25,500,000; to-day, in 1884, we would be justifiable to expend a little more than that amount, but I think that $25,500,000 is a fair average for the expenditure of the last four years. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of Canada has expended $10,500,000 over and above what they ought reasonably to have expended for the good administration of the country. If we add to that the large surpluses which we have had for the last few years, and which amount to $13,500,000, we come to the conclusion that the people of Canada have paid in taxes $29,000,000 more than was necessary for the good administration of the country. It must be admitted that this amount of $29,000,000 is an enormous amount, as it only represents unnecessary taxes paid by the people, independently from those which have been paid for the administration of the Local Government, of the Federal Government, and of all municipal and school taxes. We must add to that an amount probably still larger, which has been paid by taxes on articles which have been sold in the country, and which have been sold dearer on account of a higher rate of Customs duty levied on articles coming from abroad. If we add together all these amounts, we arrive at the conclusion that the people of Canada have paid far greater amounts than they should have had to pay, or than they should have paid if we had continued the fiscal policy, the revenue Tariff of the Mackenzie Administration. A compensation was promised to the farmers in exchange for this increase of taxes. It was said to them; You shall pay taxes, but on the other hand, you will sell your produce dearer. We said at that time, and we now repeat, that it is perfectly impossible, by any legislation, to increase the price of farm produce, because our markets are regulated by the European markets. The hon. Minister of Finance then said that we should have a national market and that we should have no need of the European markets as an outlet for our produce. It is proved to day as clearly as possi-ble that we have no home market. In fact the exportation of our farm produce must still continue for years to come. The Government has been altogether unable to carry out the promises they have made to the farmers of Canada. It turns out that farm products, instead of being sold dearer than heretofore, have, on the contrary, been sold cheaper, from 1879 until now, than they were during the period which elapsed who are only waiting for that system to come back to Mr. RINFRET.

between 1874 and 1878. A few figures will prove my statement; these figures are taken from the Monetary Times, and I have taken the average of the wholesale prices for each three months during the year. While, from 1874 to 1878, wheat was sold at \$1.121 per bushel, from 1879 to 1883, it was sold for \$1.26. It is the only article which has been sold dearer since the adoption of the National Policy than under the old Tariff. Oats, which from 1874 to 1878 sold at $40\frac{1}{2}$ cents, only brought 37 cents from 1879 to 1883; barley, which was selling at 76 cents, sold afterward at 70 cents; peas, which were selling at $91\frac{1}{2}$ cents, sold at 88 cents; butter, which sold at $20\frac{1}{2}$ cents, only sold at 18 cents afterwards; the price of cheese has not varied—it has been 11 cents; live hogs, which sold at \$6.75, came down to \$6.00; beef, which was selling at \$5.00, sold at \$4.80; and wool, which had been sold at 30 cents, only brought 221 cents. It will thus be seen that notwithstanding the improvement of business in the whole world, farm products have been sold cheaper, on an average, since the adoption of the National Policy than they sold under the old Tariff. Before 1879, prices were regularly higher in Canada than in the United States. We have just the contrary to-day. That is to say, prices have been regularly lower in Canada then in the United States are the adaption of the Canada than in the United States since the adoption of the Tariff. These facts show that there has been an increase of taxes and a decrease of the profits realized on the sale of agricultural products. And we should not be surprised if we have had, as a consequence, such a large number of our fellow citizens emigrating to the United States. A few years ago, when the hon. members opposite were on this side of the House, they were loud in their denunciations of the Mackenzie Government, whom they charged with doing nothing for the repatriation of our countrymen who emigrated to the United States; and during the elections of 1878, charges of that nature were the favourite topics of Conservative speakers on the hustings. This charge was hurled at the face of the Liberal candidates who ran for election in 1878. Since then until now, there has been regularly said in this House a few words on the repatriation of Canadians who have emigrated to the United States. It is the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé) who took upon himself the task of making speeches on this question, and very recently the hon. Minister of Public Works, in a speech which he made in Montreal, on the 18th of October, 1883, a speech which was published in La Minerve, said:

"But, gentlemen, only half our mission would be accomplished, if we

"But, gentlemen, only half our mission would be accomplished, if we should forget that we have on the other side of the 45th line a great number of our countrymen who desire, above all, to come back to this country and live under the splendid institutions we have in Canada. "Therefore, it is useless for me to say that it is with the greatest of pleasure and with the greatest satisfaction that I will inform you to-night that the Government has the intention of taking energetic measures to call back within the limits of our territory all of our compations who are exiled from their country and who wish to come back and live with are exited from their country and who wish to could been each are the us. (Applause.) "You will understand, gentleman, that in a banquet such as this, I must be excused from giving you a full statement of all the Ministerial measures which we are preparing for next Session; but, at any rate, it is proper that you should know that our countrymen, whether French-Oanadians or belonging to other origins, will not be forgotten, and that we will heartily do all in our power to bring them back to this country. (Appleause)" (Applause.)

Well, Mr. Speaker, I perfectly understand that the hon. Minister of Public Works, could not give out the Ministerial secrets at the public dinner given on the 18th of October, in Montreal; but to-day I do not see at all what prevents him from stating what are the measures which the Government intends to adopt with regard to repatriation. When I saw the hon. Minister of Public Works rising a while ago, I was expecting every moment to hear him expound some definite policy or system with regard to repatriation. Well, this system which has been announced not only on the hustings, but in this House and everywhere, this system does not come. We are waiting for it, with the Canadians living in the United States, Canada. I have no need to say that on this question, as on many others the people of Canada have been deceived. Here is an extract of Le Monde, on the subject of repatriation, dated 18th of March, 1884:

"Nearly every year, Mr. Tassé courageously raises his voice in favour "Nearly every year, Mr. Tasse courageously raises his voice in rayour of repatriation, either in the Province of Quebec or in the North-Wes', of the French Canadians who have emigrated to the United States. He does it with a vigour of argument and a conviction which wins for him the respect of both sides of the House, and the approbation of the repre-sentatives of other Provinces; but his success is immediately neutralized by the ill-will of the chief, who is charged with the questions of emigra-tion. Essentially selfish, Mr. Pope hears the remarks of our friends without listening to them: Amening of the price at which he will sell the Intertion. Essentially seinsn, Mr. Pope hears the remarks of our rinends without listening to them; dreaming of the price at which he will sell the Inter-national to the Pacific Railway, wondering what price the charter of the 'Atlantic and Western may bring him,' and to what he shall do with the $158,000 of subsidies, already well pocketed, of which he has pre-vailed upon the Government to make him a gift, last year, for a railway which was already built. Do not disturb him from these grave occupa-tions, which ought to be sufficient for the country. It is impossible for a "Data do country in the set of the country." man to do everything at once, and as Mr. Pope excels in thinking about himself, has he not a right to forget his duties as a Minister? "The French members of the House of Commons will not always be

"The French members of the House of Commons will not always be willing to tolerate the help given to our enemies who are trying to crush us. They can remedy the evil if they have the courage to wish it, for they hold the balance of power in the present state of parties. Therefore, we have a right to hope that they will strongly press our claims for our share in the expenses of immigration, both for French settlers and for the repatriation of the Canadians who have emigrated to the United States."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one to find that nothing is done in favour of emigration. Here is a Conservative newspaper, one of the most important papers in the Province of Quebec, which finds the same thing.

Mr. DESJARDINS. What paper is that?

Mr. RINFRET. Le Monde. Mr. Speaker, I shall not prolong these remarks any further. As I was saying a moment ago, I think that if we wish to diminish the emigration of our countrymen to the United States and aid the repatriation of those who are already there, we ought to adopt a wise policy of economy, so as to reduce the enormous burden of taxation which the country has to bear; besides, we must abolish all the monopolies now existing in the North-West. We should also have free interchange of agricultural produce with the United States by the adoption of a Treaty of Recriprocity. If we wish to see our fellow-citizens who have left their country coming back to us, if we wish to prevent emigration, what is needed is a policy frankly and sincerely favourable to agriculture. It is by agriculture that we shall make of Canada a rich and a prosperous country. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. First Minister was in the Opposition, he thought he heard from all parts of the United States, complains of Canadians asking for aid. I shall take the liberty of asking him if he does not sometimes hear an interior voice crying for aid in favour of our countrymen who are leaving us in such large numbers to go to the United States, and could live here if the Government would only expend in the old Provinces what he so gladly expends for the new ones? Does not he hear an interior voice asking him for aid in favour of all the Canadians who are now in exile and who only wait, to come back to the country, the adoption of an honest policy, of a policy of economy—who are waiting for the North-West to become a free country, whose inhabitants may enjoy all the rights and privileges enjoyed by the other British citizens.

Mr. CURRAN. I have no intention to detain the House more than a few minutes; but I noticed a few days ago, in one of the Montreal papers that an association there, for whose energy and perseverance and patriotism I entertain a very high respect, had passed several resolutions which it was their intention to forward to me to have presented to this honourable House. I re-gret very much that I have not as yet received those resolutions, and that therefore I am unable, in the resolutions, and that therefore I am unable, in the course of this debate, which would have been the appropriate time to do so, to lay them before the House. How, ever, I have no hesitation in saying that I look upon the amendment offered by the hon. gentleman who was speaking when I came in, as purely ad captandum. The fact of the matter is, he is endeavouring to criticise a policy and is building up an argument upon a purely fictitious basis. It never has been, it is not now, and I do not think it is likely to be the policy of this Government, to induce mechanics, or persons such as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, to immigrate to this country. On the contrary, if we refer to the statistics that I have under my hand, we shall find that the policy of the Government has been productive of the results which he desires so ardently, if we are to believe his utterances on this occasion. If we take, for instance, the year 1877, we find that during that year the number of immigrants who came in vid the St. Lawrence, was 7,100, of whom 1,100 were mechanics; while in 1883, there came in vid the St. Lawrence 46,000 immigrants, of whom 1,800 only were mechanics. Now, Sir, as regards a branch of this subject in which I am more particularly interested, that is, the emigration from Ireland to this country, for my part, I sincerely hope that every man who can live in Ireland and make a good living there will stay there for the benefit of Ireland. But, as I know, there will always be adventurous spirits-good, hearty, able-bodied young men and women-who will seek their fortunes abroad, I desire to say, from my place in this House, that there is no place under the sun so good as the Dominion of Canada for an Irishman to emigrate to. Now, Sir, we have had some remarks made here this evening, to which I desire to refer; and in doing so, I wish to allude particularly to the report of Mr. John Hoolahan, an Irish travelling immigration agent, who was appointed last year by the hon. Minister of Agriculture to meet the emigrants of the Tuke Committee, at Point Lévis, and to accompany them to any part of the Dominion between Point Lévis and Toronto, wherever their destination might be; and I may say that, in mentioning this gentleman's name, I am speaking of a man of high character, of first-class education, who speaks not only the English and French languages, but who has the advantage of speaking the Irish language, who is in every way qualified for his post, and who enjoys the con-fidence and esteem of the whole Irish population of the city of Montreal, where he is well known, at least to 90 per cent. of them. With reference to his labours, I would just read a short extract from his report, which, with the permission of this House, I will hand in, so that the whole of it may be incorporated with the notes of the stenographer. It is as follows :---

" MONTRBAL, 21st December, 1883.

"HONOURABLE SIE,--I have the honour to submit my report for your information, for the period commencing the 1st May and ending "HONOURABLE SES.--I have the honour to submit my report for your information, for the period commencing the 1st May and ending the 30th November, 1883. "i received an official letter from the Department of Agriculture, dated Ottawa, 13th April, 1883, appointing me an Agent of your Depart-ment. My instructions were: to take charge of the Irish immigrants arriving at Quebec and travel with them to Montreal, and even to Toronto, as circumstances might require; to give them the best possible advice, and to communicate with the several Agents of the Department, with respect to finding work for them, &c. "In compliance with my instructions, I proceeded to Quebec, where I arrived on the 4th May, 1883. "That I have made twenty-nine trips from Point Lévis to Montreal and Toronto during the season of St. Lawrence navigation, viz., from the 1st May to the 30th November, 1883, as will more fully appear on reference being had to the tabular statement which is annexed hereto. "During the season, I met the immigrants of the stamships named in the accumpanying table, at Point Lévis, and accompanied them by Grand Trunk railway to Montreal and frequently to Toronto. "The large majority of the immigrants of whom I had special charge, werefarmers, farm labourers and female domestic servants, and were, as a rule, easily placed in situations. Those arriving in the early part of the summer, viz., May, June and July, were eagerly sought after and at once employed. But parties coming later in the season, found much more difficulty in obtaining work. "The large majority of the season is a small percentare majority of the province of Ouebec.

the best possible advice as to how to proceed to their destination, and concarrival there, how to act in this their adopted country.
 "A .certain number of those people were at a disadvantage here, bwing to the fact of being able to speak the Irish language only. Of course dt is a difficult matter for such persons to make much progress in this taken when the link is class to the link in the link is a set of the link is a difficult matter for such persons to make much progress

Agent at Quebec, having all official documents in connection with those people, will furnish all the necessary information concerning them. "It is to be repretted that a large number of those people could not be induced to go into the country districts, preferring to remain in the cities, more particularly at Toronto, where some of those, failing to obtain employment, have suffered in consequence. "Permit me to add that Miss M. Phelan, who had charge of the formals immigrants, rendered me every assistance in the discharge of my duties

"I have the honour to be, Sir, "Your obedient servant, " JOHN HOOLAHAN, "Travelling Immigration Agent."

Now, Sir, we perceive by this report, which I trust will 'have its effect, that there are favourable seasons and unfavourable seasons for the immigration of these peoplethat those who come during the months of May, June and July, especially of the class indicated -- who, it appears, were in the large majority-get employment without any trouble. I am personally aware, from the statement of Mr. 'Hesperance, the Immigration Agent in Montreal for the Quebec Government, that these people, in a great many "instances, cannot be induced to remain in the Province of 'Quebec; whereas, if they would do so, and would go into The Eastern Townships, where they would find a large pepulation, where they would obtain employment from the farmers, and where they would learn the farming "habits of this country, they could, in a very short "time, "accumulate enough money, if they did not wish to remain there, to go westward and procure farms for themselves. I think it is hardly necessary for me, after the very able and exhaustive speech of the hon. Minister of Public Works, to say one word in reply to the hon. gentleman who proposed this amendment. I certainly congratulate the hon. gentleman who last spoke, because he did say some patriotic things; but it would be drawing too much upon the imagination, for one moment to suppose that he added a word to the speech of the hon. Minister who went before him. With regard to those employees of the Grand -Trunk Railway Company to whom the hon, gentleman refer red as being about to lose their employment, or to have their wages curtailed, I think this honourable House and the coun-"try also will agree with me that it is a good thing that through the policy of this Government, there is more than one railway company in this country to give men employment. With regard to the disbanding of 9,000 men employed in carrying on the work of Pacific Railway construction north of Lake Superior, I think the argument used by the hon. gentleman was entirely unfair. It was never suggested for one moment that it would be a great disaster to this country to have these men disbanded and scattered Why, such a fraction ver. These men could broadcast throughout the land. would make no difference whatever. "obtain other employment; but the argument that was used was, that it would be a difficult matter to obtain men organized for that work, and in a position to carry it on, if these men were once disbanded. 'I contend that this amendment is purely ad captandum. It has never been the policy of the Government to induce those people, mechanics and others, to come to this country unless they intended devoting themselves to agricultural pursuits; and I think that the document I have read, signed by a gentleman so responsible as Mr. Hoolahan, will have its effect in the proper quarter, and that those who come here from Europe, the immigrants who come from the poorer districts of Ireland, who desire to make their home here, will abandon all idea of settling down in the large cities where they get employment in the summer on apublicoworks, but where, unless they save money and make | will analyze the figures as to the immigration to the North-Mr, CURRAN.

provision for the winter, they will have to undergo great hardships. They will understand that they will have a rigourous winter to encounter, and that it is better for them not to come here at all than to come here and settle down in the cities; but that if they do come and take the advice of those who know what is best in their interests, they will go into the country districts, engage on farms, learn the habits of the country, and prosper as others before them have prospere i, and I trust that all those who will come in the future will come in the proper season and follow the advice I have just given, and prosperity will be sure to attend them.

Mr. BLAKE. When the hon. Minister of Public Works rose to reply to the hon, member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), I felt satisfied that he would take advantage of an oppor-tunity for which I considered he had been watching since the commencement of the Session, to develop that great policy with reference to immigration, by which he informed us, in the speech from which my hon, friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret) quoted, this Government was about to immortalize itself once more this Session. I expected, when the hon. gentleman rose on behalf of the Administration, to deal with a motion which brings up such considerations as the immigration to, and the emigration from, Canada, and the policy of the Government at large upon it, a motion which was supported by such an array of facts as those brought forward by my hon. friend from Brant, that it would have been dealt with by the hon. Minister who made the public declaration to which I have referred, and from which my hon. friend from Lotbinière quoted, not only in the spirit of defence which he used, but also in that spirit of expesition of the policy of the Government upon this subject, which he had fore-shadowed in Montreal in such a way that he lad us to hope for better things than we had experienced in the past. He alluded to several arguments generally alluded to in this quotation, and among them to the fallacious argument based on the per capita expenditure. We all know there are certain fixed charges with reference to the expenditure on emigration, as well as on most other subjects, and that to apply the question of the per capita cost of immigrants as the real test of the economy of an Administration, when the numbers conflict, is a wholly fallacious and illusory test. It would be trifling with the patience of the House to enlarge on that position. The hon. gentleman then adverted to the great increase in the imported numbers of immigrant settlers in Canada recently; but one of the great difficulties we have to deal with in this connection is that while we have not been able, from any bases of information which are given us, from all the information, we can mather on all hands to check the accuracy of statements, as to the number of immigrants settled in Canada recently, there do not appear to be any places in which the immigrant population, to which the hon. gentleman referred as remaining in the country, are. We cannot find them, and it seems to me entirely out of the question that these figures can be accurately stated. The hon, gentleman alluded, with reference to those telling statistics of my find. friend as to the school population, to the difficulty arising out of the alteration in the New Brunswick school law. But that argument told wholly against himself, because the very period in which that trouble arose, and in which, owing to it, there would be a diminution in the attendance, was a period which con-trasted favourably with the later period when the difficulty was all over. So that, while that circumstance was to be taken into consideration, it was to be taken into question as one intensifying the force of my hon. friend's comparison of the earlier with the later years. There was, of course, no such suggestion with regard to Nova Scotia. But as to Ontario, if my hon. friend

West from Ontario, and look at the character of that immigration and at the school figures of Onterio, he will find that his theory, that the immigration to the North-West accounts for the actual school diminution in Ontario, is one that will not hold water at all. He said these figures did a great deal of harm-that they were injurious to the country. Well, I don't know that they are injurious to the country if they represent the facts of the case. What is important is, that we should know whether there are difficulties, leaks, mistakes and errors, that we should know what our real, substantial progress has been in those two important elements of nationality, retaining our people and obtaining fresh additions to our population from abroad; and if the facts be not such as would gratify hon. gentiemen opposite or ourselves, we want to consider what the cause of the difficulty is; we ought to ascertain what the reason of our comparative failure is in this regard, with the view to discovering and applying a remedy. With reference to the hon. gentleman's own Province, he has acknowledged, in the speech to which I have alluded, the existence of that difficulty. It has been alluded to by one of his own supporters, my hon. friend from Bagot (Mr. Dupont), not long ago in this House, and it has been alluded to repeatedly during the period of both Governments, for many years-the diffi-culty of the emigration from Quebec. If the circumstances are so serious in Quebec as they are, if they are such as I shall point them out to have been in Ontario and throughout the whole Dominion, it is important that we should first ascertain what the facts are, and secondly, if those facts are not such as gratify us, we should address ourselves to procuring a remedy, by ascertaining what is wrong, by ascertaining what that is which produces results we do not like to see, and which do not remedy by concealing them from ourselves. The preaching of hon. gentlemen opposite agrees not with their practice. If I recollect right, during the period when my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in office, there was no such restraint on their tongues as they would propose to put on ours. I recollect when a much smaller emigration from the country than has ever taken place since, was harped upon by all of them, from the First Minister down, as a difficulty and calamity of a most intolerable character, and which called imperatively for some remedy at the hands of the Government. Now, Sir, we did not complain that these speeches of the hon. gentleman were unpatriotic, we did not complain that it was wrong for him to state facts if they were factsnot at all-nor do we intend to be deterred from stating facts to-day, simply because hon. gentlemen opposite think they are facts which it is disagreeable to their ears to hear. Now, I have looked a little into the general question as developed in the Census returns, as compared with the Census returns and the growth of population in some other countries, and it seems to me they have not been fairly put before the country, either in the official reports or otherwise. When we discuss the progress of the older Provinces of Canada by themselves, we are met, more or less fairly, with the suggestion: "Oh, but you must compare that with the progress of the older States in the United States; you must take the whole country together; you find a slow progress in some of the older States, but why is it? It is because the inhabitants go to the other parts of the United States, and therefore you ought to take the whole of the United States together and the whole of Canada together, and make your comparison in that way." In that proposition, as I have said, there is a very considerable element of truth; but we have our own less peopled and more peopled territories, our own older and our own newer territories, and if we take the whole of Ganada, and consider what the results are, as developed by the Census for the whole of Canada, we may fairly compare these results with those that have been developed for the whole of the United States. Now, in comparing the results of the Census of 1881 with those of the Census of 1871, it is not to be forgotten that, according to the view of a great many persons who have watched the practical mode in which the Census of 1881 was taken, there was an over-estimate of the population of the country by it. To a certain extent, that is got rid by the circumstance that the portion of the population of Ontario, for ex-ample, who had gone to the North West, was counted, perhaps, in Ontario, when it ought to have been counted in the North West; and, in counting the whole of the population of the Dominion, that, perhaps, becomes a matter of indifference; but in reference to those who have gone beyond our borders altogether, it is a material consideration. I put it aside, however, and assume the figures both of the Census of 1871 and of the Census of 1881 to be substantially accurate. To make a comparison between the two, it is necessary to get at the increase on the area of 1881, to make allowance for the population of the North-West Territories, because the population of the whole of Canada, as given by the Census of 1871, included nothing whatever for those who were in the North-West Territories, while they are all included in the Census of 1831; and you must therefore begin by assuming, in order to make a fair comparison. a certain population as the population existent in the North-West Territories in 1871. Add that to the Census population of 1871, and then make your comparison with the Census population of 1881. The population of the Territories, in 1881, is counted as 56,400, and of those 49.500 were Indians, and of the total, there were born in the Territories, 51,800. What, on those figures, shall be allotted for the population of the Ferritories in 1871. Having regard to the fact that the added territory of Manitoba contains about 6,400, which belonged to that, and of which a great proportion were also in in 1871, I think I make a fair allowance when I estimate the population of the Territories and the added portion of Manitoba, in 1871, at 50,000, and I add that 50,000 to the Census population of Canada for 1871. This gives you a Canadian population of 1871, by the Census, of 3,635,000, and for the Territories and added part of Manitoba, 50,000, making a total of 3,685,000, as against a Census population of 1881, of 4,324,800, giving you an increase of 639,800. The rate, therefore, of increase would be 17.33 per cent., instead of 18.98, which is the rate stated in the Census report, arrived at, as I have pointed out, by omitting altogether to consider the number of persons in the added part of Manitoba and the North-West Territories in 1871. Now, during this decade, in which our rate of increase in the whole of Canada was, as nearly as may be, 17.38 per cent., the immigrant settlement in Canada was, according to the Reports of the Department of Agriculture, as follows: 40,500; 1880, 38,500; or a total of 333,700. Therefore, you see, that apart altogether from the question of natural increment on the immigration, the increase of 639,800 would be divided between immigration and the natural increment on the home population as follows: total increase, 639,800: immigration, 333,700; leaving for natural increment, 306,100. This would produce these results: immigration, in proportion to the initial population, 9.05 per cent.; natural increment in proportion to initial population, apart from immigration, 8:33 per cent., or a total of 17:38 per cent. I wish to compare those results with the results which were obtained in the whole region of the United States, during practically the same period—the period from 1870 to 1880. In 1870, the population was given as 38,588,400, and in 1880, as 50,152,900, making an increase of 11,591,500. There was in the same period an immigra-tion of 2,812,200, which leaves for the natural increment, 8,782,300. There you find that the immigration, in proportion to the initial population, was 7.29 per cent., and the 22.78 per cent, or a total increase of 30.07 per cent. It will be seen thus that on this hypothesis, on the hypothesis that we have received during the decade that immigration which the reports of the Department say we did receive, our comparative failure-because I have shown you that our total increase was but 17:38 per cent., as against an increase in the United States of 30.07 per cent.— was not due to a deficient immigration, because the immigration in the States was 7.29, while ours was 9.05 per cent. on the initial population, making an excess in proportion to the initial population on our side of very considerable proportions. But, while you look at these figures and ascertain that the immigration was more favourable than the immigration for the States, if the figures be true, you find on the other side, that the proportions as to natural increment are nothing less than appalling, because our rate is 8.33 per cent., and the United States rate 22.79 per cent., or nearly three times as large as ours. A more exact enquiry, however, requires the division of the natural increment, and the assignment of a share of the natural increment to the increment on the immigration, because not merely did there subsist at the end of the decade an excess of those who were in the country, but an excess, due to the excess of births over deaths, on the part of those who immigrated. For example, in the United States, assuming the immigration to be equally distributed over the ten years, the rate of increment for such immigration would be about 10 per cent. for the decade, and the result would be: immi gration, 2812,200; natural increment thereon, 281,200; total increase due to immigration, 3,093,400; leaving the natural increment on the old population, 8,501,100, or a rate of a trifle over 22 per cent. of natural increment, and, as near as the data in the United States will permit, I make that out to be the annual increment of their population, as their statistics show, for the last decade, 22 per cent. Now, if you apply to Canada these rates of the United States you will find it as follows : immigration given by the returns of the Department, 333,700; natural increment. 33,400; due to immigration, 367,100, leaving a balance due to natural increase of 272,700, or a rate of only 7.4 per cent. instead of the United States rate of 22 per cent., or about one-third of the United States rate. Had we realized the United States rate, the result would have been this: immigration and increment on immigration, 367,000; increment on the old population, 810,700; total increase, 1,177,700. The actual increase is 639,000, showing a comparative loss of 538,000 souls. Now, the natural increase in England and Wales is, of course, very different from the natural increase in the United States. The conditions are entirely different, and one must not expect to find a natural increment at all so great. I find that, by the last returns, the rate of increment during the last decade was 15.08 per cent, instead of 22 per cent. in the United States; and if you apply even that rate of England and Wales to Canada, the results will be these: immigration, 333,700; increase thereon at 7 per cent., 22,400, a total due to immigration of 356,100, leaving due to increment on the old population, 283,800, or a rate of 7.7, about one-half the British rate, which is so far below the rate we ought to have. Had we realized that rate, the result would have been this: immigration and increment thereon, 356,000; increment on the old population, at 15:08 per cent., 555,700, a total increase of 911,700, as against an actual increase of 639.800, showing a comparative loss of 271,900 by that calculation. Then if you take the mean rate-which I do not believe we ought to take, for I believe that the natural increment on the population is at least as great as the natural increment on the population of the United States — the mean rate between the United States rate and the English rate is $18\frac{1}{2}$, the mean between 15.08 and 22—the immigration would be 333,700; increment thereon, natural increment, in proportion to the initial population 23,400, or a total of 362,100, leaving due to increase on the old population, 277,700, or a rate of 7.42 per cent. instead of 185-about two fifths. If we realized the mean rate, the immigration would be 362,000; increase on the old populalation, at 18.5, 681,600, giving a total increase of 1,043,600, as against 639,800, showing a comparative loss of 403,800 souls. Now, I do say that the mean rate is too low to take for Canada. We know the boasted fertility of the French Canadian population, and I do not believe that it is reasonable to put the rate of natural increment in that Province at the rate of the United States, in the eastern parts of which we know families are and have been for a long time very small indeed; and there are large families-although they will not compete with those of my hon. friends from Quebec-in the other Provinces of this Dominion; and I see myself no reason why the rate of increment of the United States should not be the rate of increment for Canada. Well now, these results indicate, Sir, conclusively, that there is a leakage some where or other: either that those who are reported as having settled in Canada during the last ten years did not stay here, or that the home population of the country has left it, or both. It is utterly impossible to reconcile the figures I have given, even the least favourable figures, even applying to this new, and young, and vigorous country the rate of increase of England and Wales-it is utterly impossible to reconcile these figures with the facts, as they are, except by adopting one or both of these theories, either that the immigrant population did not stay with us, or that the home population has left us, or both. It would seem that there is a good deal in the view that a large portion of the Canadian population has left us and gone to the United States. By the Census of 1870, the native-born Canadians there were about 490,000, and in 1880, 712,000, out of 6,680,000 foreigners, being over one-tenth of the whole. The increase thereof between 1870 and 1880, was 222,000. But to ascertain how many left us during the decade, you must, of course make allowances for much more than 222,000, because there did not only enough leave us to increase the numbers at the end of the decade by 222,000, but also to fill up all the gaps created by death in the initial population of 490,000, and in the immigration in the course of ten years. You must find thereon what addition should be made for the decrement by death during that period. Now, the rate of decrement by death in England and Wales during the last decade was 21.27 per cent. A calculation which I have made at a less rate than that, at 2 per cent. a year, would produce results indicating that the decrement of the Canadian born population in the United States, making proper allowances in each year for the immigration, would amount to 123,000 souls in the decade, and thereon you must add that number to the number that I have given as being in the United States in excess of the number there at the commencement of the decade, making a total shown by these figures of about 340,000 souls as the emigration to the United States from Canada during the decade. That there has been a very large depletion of our population, and that it has gone very largely to the United States, is shown also by the contrasted numbers shown by the Census in the United States, of which I will give the round figures of some of the more important:

Massachusetts gives an increase of 49,000, Michigan of 56,000. We are able to ascertain—I have not analyzed the result in other Provinces-with a good deal of clearness where the bulk of the leakage takes place in Ontario, by another mode of enquiry. In Ontario, I maintain the bulk of the leakage has occurred in the reported immigrationnot all of it, by any means, but the bulk of it—that is to say, that the reported immigration for the decade has not at all answered our expectations of its being bona fide immigration. In Ontario, in 1871, the immigration was as follows:

Home born Foreign	1,131,300
Total	1,620,800	1,923,200

Thus, you will see that the home born population increased by 304,300, or about $18\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the population of 1871, though it was really a little less, because that took no account of the natural increment on the immigration during the ten years. But the immigration, having regard to the fact to which I have referred, merely su, plied the decrement by death on the foreign-born population. That decrement was, perhaps, 100,000 or 110,000—say 105,000. So, all we have accomplished in regard to immigration into Ontario during the ten years was not quite sufficient to fill the gap caused by death during that period. That decrement would be, say, 105,000, while the supposed immigration into Ontario, as stated by the Departmental Reports, was 255,000, so that 150,000 of the 255,000 had vanished altogether and were not to be found. It is impossible, on the figures I have given, to show they remained in the country, or at all events were there at the end of the decade. Supposing those figures were discarded to the extent to which I have just referred, and you come to assume that the immigration population which entered Ontario as reported must be there, you would reach some very extraordinary results; and, perhaps, that may be the assumption which hon. gentlemen opposite will make, and if they do not make it, I maintain we are bound to consider what our immigration system amounts to. I have shown the House by the Census that it is utterly impossible that more than two-fifths of those reported as having come into Ontario and settled there, remained there during the decade, and if that be so, we want to ascertain what the system is which produces such miserable results, and what the system of statistics and publishing information is, which produces such illusory and fallacious results. But if you discard those figures and assume that 255,000 people were brought into the Province and stayed there, what is the result? The population of Ontario, in 1871, 1,620,800; 1881, 1,923,200, increase 302,600, or at a rate of 18.66 per cent. Immigration was 255,100, apart from the natural increment on immigration. The increase would therefore be divided between immigration and natural increment, thus: Total increase, 302,400; immigration 255,100, leaving for natural increment, 47,300. Immigration in proportion to initial popu-lation 15.74 per cent.; natural increment, 2.92 per cent. But if the natural increment due to institute the set But, if the natural increment due to immigration be ascertained at United States rate, say 10 per cent. for the decade, the result is this: Immigration, 255,100; natural increment thereon, 25,500; total due to immigration, 280,600, deducting which from 302,400, leaves 21,800, or only 1.35 per cent. for natural increase. Apply to Ontario the United States rates, and the results would be this: Immigration, 255,100; increment thereon, 25,500; total 280,600.

population, at 22 per cent., 356,600. The proper increase would be 637,200, but the actual increase is $02,400; showing a loss of 334,800. Apply the English rates, and we have the following: Immigration, 255,100; increment thereon, at 7 per cent., 17,900; due to immigration, 273,000; the natural increase on the initial population at 15.08 per cent., 244,400; giving 517,400 as the proper increase. The actual increase was 303,400, showing a loss of 215,000. Apply the mean rate, say 18.5 per cent., and the result is as follows: Immigration, 255,100; natural increment, at 8 per cent., 20,400; due to immigration, 275,500; natural increment on initial population, 299,800; pro ment, 575,300; actual, 302,400; loss, 272,900. proper incre-The fact remains that a large portion of the native population has been lost. Notwithstanding all these facts, it is alleged there is no exodus. But assuming the immigration to be genuine, there has been a very large exodus. It will be said, and indeed has been said, that this exodus took place during what hon. gentlemen opposite are pleased to call the "hard times," when hon. gentlemen opposite said to the people that when we get into power we will prevent the people from leaving the country. We have machinery to ascertain what the exodus is, so far as regards Ontario. As the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) has pointed out, we have the school and municipal statistics of the Province, from which you can ascertain, with reasonable accuracy, how we move. It is true that the figures are smaller, but they are on the same scale all the time. The municipal census is taken on a different principle; it is a census of ratepayers, but there it is and for comparative purposes it is good and accurate. And I may say that the general result of the municipal census is on the initial population a larger rate of increase during the whole decade, than is given by the Dominion Census for the same period. Now, I take eight years, with reference to the municipal consus, and I take them in two periods, the first of which is 1876-77-78-73, and the second, 1880-81-82-83. The first of those periods was the one which hon. periol of hard gentlemen вау was the times. country was losing its population, when when the there was a dreadful exodus, when it was neces ary to make an alteration in policy to keep the people in the country. The second is the period of good time, as they say, when their policy was in successful operation, and its results in keeping the people in the country and increasing its population were apparent. It will be noticed that I have taken in the bad period not only the year 1878, but the whole of the year 1879 as well, so as to give full opportunity for Now. the complete fruition of the hon. gentleman's plans. then, what are the results, by the municipal census? Take the whole period of eight years, from 1876 to 1883, and the results are these: that there was an increase in the rural population of 40,700, and an increase in the urban population of 120,700, making a total increase of 161,400, which, as I have said, on the smaller initial population of the municipal census, was a greater rate of increase than is given by the Dominion Census, on the large initial population. So, we get an increase, a small one in the rural parts, and a larger one in the urban parts, and during this period, in which there was a total increase of 161,400, the immigrant settlers in the country were: in 1875, 21,800; in 1876, 19,100; in 1877, 17,900; in 1878, 17,900; in 1879, 28,800; in 1880, 24,700; in 1801, 25,200; in 1882, 34,200; making a total increase of 189,600 immigrants, or 28,200 more than the total increase by the municipal census. Of course, all the immigrants do not come at once in the municipal census, and, therefore, that calculation is to be made with a certain allowance, and this is the result, irrespective of natural increment at all. Mark, that irrespective of the natural increment at all, the immigration into Ontario, in these eight years, more than balanced the whole increase by the municipal Natural increment on initial census; and, if you take into account the natural increment, and add that to the immigration, and compare that with the increase, you find a tremendous drain-a loss, probably, of from 250,000 to 300,000. And then, as I said, hon gentlemen may say that this drain was in the first period and not in the last; things have been mended in the last period; we are better off now. It is true there was a great leak in the first of these four years, but in the second the picture is ontirely reversed. Now let us compare the periods. In the first of these four year periods there was a rural increase by the municipal census of 55,500. In the second of these periods, there was a rural decrease of 14,800, which being deducted from the rural increase of the first of the periods, produces the result of a total increase over the eight years of 40,700, which I gave before. That does not seem to indicate a very great improvement in the condition of the population of Ontario, so far as the rural parts are concerned, over those four evil years, as hon. gentlemen described them, as compared with the four years in which they have acted as our Providence. With regard to the urban increase, they may say that they devoted particular attention to this; that it was the cities, towns and villages that they had in their tender regard; that it was the manufacturers they proposed to advance; that they proposed to get a large manufacturing population, and that they pointed out that the young people would not stay on the farms but went elsewhere to find manufacturing industries, and that it is not fair to take the rural population. I tell them now, as I told them before, that the rural population is the backbone of the Province of Ontario, and the Dominion of Canada; and without the country, the towns will make little show, and the manufacturers a very poor show. But how is it with reference to the urban increase? In the first of these periods of four years, the urban increase, according to the municipal census, was 71,400; while in the second it was 49,300, showing a smaller urban increase in the great era of manufacturing prosperity than in the four evil years, when manufactures were dying, and the towns, cities and villages were going to pieces. This makes a total urban increase of 120,700 for the eight years accord-ing to the municipal census. Thus we get, during the first period, the total increase, urban and rural, of 126,900; and in the second period, a total increase of 34,500 only, which gives you again an increase for the whole period of 161,400. Therefore, I say, the municipal census which, for comparative purposes, is an admirable guide to the progress of the country, which is improving and becoming more fuller and more accurate year by year, and therefore, telling so far against the arguments as to the comparison of earlier and later years, gives incontrovertible proof of the melancholy fact we have been pressing on the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite, that their policy has not been a success in increasing or even in retaining population in the Province of Ontario. Well, then, these are calgive the gross culations which merely results. We have not taken into account what the natural increment of the population would be, and what the result of it would be; we have not even taken into account the immigration for the two periods. Now, I propose to take the immigration for those two periods. In the first period the gross increase was 126,900, and the increase by immigration during that period was 76,700, giving a net increase from the natural increment of 50,200. In the second p riod the gross increase was 34,400; the immigration was no less than 112,900, giving a net decrease of 78,500. So, taking into account the fact that there was a larger immigration in the second four years than in the first, the figures are still blacker for the second period, as compared with the first, than they would have been without taking the immigration into account. Now, then, if you ascertain these results still more closely, you might initial population; so that when we find these results, it is the result is, for the whole period of eight years, an increase of 151,300, divided into, for the first period, 119,000, and for the second period, 32,300. And, taking the immigration of 189,600, we have a total decrease of 38,300, which is divided as follows: In the first period there is an increase of 119,000, and an immigration of 76,700, making a net de-crease of 42,300; in the second period the increase was 32,300, and the immigration 113,000, making the net increase 80,700, thus wiping out all the increase of the first period, and leaving a loss on the eight years of 38,100. But so far, I have not enquired into what the results would be if we had retained thenatural increment of our population. Even if you omit altogether the natural increment in the immigration, the figures become less favourable in the view I am putting forward. In that case, the results would be these: According to the English rate, during the whole period, the immigration was 189,600, and the natural increment, 204,800, making the proper increase 394,400; the actual increase was 151,300; showing a loss of 243,100. This is divided into the two periods, each of four years. In the first period, the immigration was 76,700, and the natural increment 100,100, making the proper increase 176,800; the actual increase was 119,000; showing a loss of 57,800. In the second period the immigration was 113,000, and the natural increment 104,700, making the proper increase 217,700; the actual increase was 32,300; showing a loss of 185,400. If you take the United States rate for the same period, you find that the immigration was 189,600, and the natural increment 296,700, making the proper increase 486,300; the actual increase was 151,300; showing a loss of 335,000. Divide this into the two periods, as before, and in the first period you find that the immigration was 76,700, and the natural increment 145,100, making the proper increase 221,800; the actual increase was 119,000; showing a loss of 102,800. In the second period, the immigration was 113,000, and the natural increment 151,700, making the proper increase 264,700; the actual increase was 32,300; showing a loss of 232,400. If you take the mean rate, you find that the immigration was 189,600, and the natural increment 250,700, making the proper increase 440,300; the actual increase was 151,300; making a loss of 289,000. Divide this into the two periods, and you find that in the first period the immigration was 76,700, and the natural increment 122,600, making a proper increase of 199,300; the actual increase was 119,000; showing a loss of 80,300. In the second period, the immigration was 113,000, and the natural increment, 128,100, making the proper increase, 241,100; the actual increase was 32,300; showing a loss of 208,800. Now, Sir, these would be the figures of the loss, assuming that we had all the immigration which we say we got in. I maintain that we did not get it, but that, in fact, we have lost it, and very large numbers of our people besides. The same results are shown by the returns of the school population. In 1877, the total school population was 494,900; in 1878, 492,400; in 1879, 494,400; in 1880, 489,900; in 1881, 484,200; and in 1882, 483,800. While the salaries have increased, and the number of schools opened is also somewhat larger, you find in the number of pupils attending the schools a decided diminution. Well, if you find the attend-ance in the schools falling off by 15,000, if you find the school population very considerably less, that indicates a very large loss of population. Now, as I have said, when you find a loss of population in the country, you know this: you know, first of all, that the country has lost a number equal to all those that have come into it during the decade; secondly, you know that it has lost the natural increment; and, thirdly, you know that it has suffered a loss beyond these, for it has lost a part of the apply to the Dominion Census the figures of the municipal quite impossible, so far as I can see, to reconcile them with census as showing the ratio of increase for each year, dan the figures of the hon. gentleman. Now, I have not entered into any analysis of the statements of the Minister of Agriculture, which were laid on the Table to-night. I find it difficult to reconcile his returns in many respects with the returns which we get from England. I see that the British returns for 1883 give an immigration to Canada of 44,100 English, Scotch and Irish, and 9,400 foreigners, or a total of 53,500; while our returns give 133,000. am unable to see, although I have looked hurriedly at the hon. gentleman's statement, where the other 80,000 come from. I see something in it, however, which perhaps indicates the character of these figures. I see that there has been an increase during the year, according to these figures, by immigration from the States to Algoma of 6,010, and to Port Arthur of 4,000, odds. I presume that the bulk of these people are navvies who were brought in to work on the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they represent those 9,000 good Canadians whose sufferings from the loss of work were to be so serious; but that there has been a real settlement at Algoma of 6,000, and at Port Arthur of 4,000 people from the United States alone, I fancy no one will believe. But this circumstance indicates the transitory character of that population which I am sorry to see is set down as a satisfactory and valuable increase to our population in those sections. Now, if you turn to the Province of Quebec, you find that the population of 1871, was 1,191,500; that of 1881, 1,359,000; and that the increase, according to the Census, during the decade, was 167,511 or 14.06 per cent. If you apply to that Province the natural increment, at United States rates, it would be 262, 182, showing that there has been a loss of 94 671. besides all the immigration which came into the country during the decade. In other words, the Province of Quebec has lost its immigration, and 94,671 souls besides. Now, it should be observed that one-fifth of that whole increase is in the city of Montreal, for the rate in the country is much lower. Where did all these people go to? They went, the hon. gentleman said, a great many to the Eastern States, some of them to Manitoba and a few of them to Ontario. But when one compares the population of 1871 with that of 1881, the increase in the French population of Ontario is not so great as I had supposed at first it was. The immigration of French Canadians to the eastern States has, no doubt, assumed alarming pro-portions, in two respects-first, in the extent of the departure, and secondly in the character of the exodus. It is proved by the very thorough examination that took place in the year 1882, under the instruction of the Legislature of Massachusetts into the question, that it has only been within the last ten or fifteen years that this immigration has assumed such large proportions in that part of the country. It was only within a much shorter period, five or six years before 1882, that it began to assume the character of a permanent settlement in the country to which these people went. One of the resolutions which was passed by a gathering of the French Canadians of Lowell, recites as follows :-

"Whereas, since the French Canadians have come to this section they have reached a population of 400,000 in New England, and whereas a large number have become proprietors, paying large taxes, and whereas for the most part the young men propose to make their home

"Besolved, that we protest against the portion of the report which says that we 'are a horde of industrial invaders.'

"Whereas, we have to live five years in this country before we can become citizens of this glorious Republic, and the French Canadians have been here in large numbers but five or six years, there are over 200 voters of this class in Lowell alone—" majority of places, the thing was a total failure, so much so that the subsidy which was given has been withdrawn. "So that the work of repatriation has ceased? "It is the desire of the Government that they should return, but it has ceased to pay; though it encourages immigration to all parts of Canada, it has ceased to subsidize these agencies."

Further on he is asked :

"But have the French been in a transition state, during the past five years, as the result of the establishment of and failure of the repatriation "A. I should consider that especially for the last five years this has

4. I Fridde consider that expectatly for the fast into years this is been partially so. I look upon it now as a permanent population. "Q. And that permanency has just begun to take a positive form ? "A. You mean, take it from ten years back? "Mr. Gagnon. From the establishment of our churches?

"Mr Wright. From the establishment of the French Canadian churches in America, the permanency of the French population began? "A. The permanency of the French population was secured."

There is Mr. Lalime, who says:

"I wish to tell you what I know personally about this immigration matter. I have been appointed Agent by the Federal Government in Oanada since 1875, and I am still the Federal Government's Agent for the New England States; that is, what you might call the repatriation Agent. I wish to state this that, as stated a few minutes ago by the Rev. Father Millet, this repatriation is almost a failure, if it is not a total failure. Why? Because we have work in the New England States; because everybody finds occupation and our Canadians will not go west, or a very few of them. For the last four years, gentle-men, for the last three years, we certainly have not sent from New not go west, or a very lew of them. For the last four years, gentle-men, for the last three years, we certainly have not sent from New England more than, I should say, thirty families-I mean sent to Canada or any one of the Provinces of Canada, or to Manitoba. Quite a number from the other side have gone to settle in Minnesota and Dakota."

Mr. Gagnon says:

"I was the Agent of the Government at that time. We sent about 600 families to Canada and about 300 only stayed there; the other 300 did not settle, but came back to this country, or if they did not come to this country, did not settle on the laud given for the purpose by the Government of Quebec."

Mr. Dubuque says:

"The most overwhelming fact that we can bring to bear on this question is, that for the last ten years, in every place where the French have settled, it is a known fact that they have doubled, if not trebled, in population. Now, if they were coming here and earning money, and going back to Canada, how could it be possible that the population would double and treble in such a short time? It must be that there is a new influx from Canada right along, and that those who are here stay here continuously. Now, we are prepared to show, by various witnesses, that it is the minority, the very small number, that go back."

R. Gagnon says, again:

"Mr. WRIGHT. Briefly, our idea is, that the tendency to permanency has gained strength?

Mr. GAGNON. Many come with the idea of earning money to pay off their mortgages. With the sid of a confrère in Worcester, I have writ-ten some papers for them, and I am quite sure that others could testify as I do, that many of them come with this idea; but we write more papers to those who are in Canada, buying from those who are here, and holding property there, than for those who want to return. They come with this idea of going back, but their ideas change, and they cell their property to land owners in Canada."

Mr. Bourvier, ticket agent, gives the following evidence;-

"Now, Mr. Bouwier, I believe in your business your are also ticket agent; sell tickets from Woonsocket to Oanada? "A. Yes, sir. "Q. Can you tell us what is the disposition of the French people, about going back to Canada to live? "A We do not have many that go back, and those that do go, we

"A. We do not have many that go back, and those that do go, we most always see them back here again. "Q. Whether the French population of Woonsocket has decreased during the last ten years?

"A. It has increased very largely; it is now between 6,500 and 7,000."

Dr. Fontaine, of Spencer, Mass., says :

voters of this class in Lowell alone—"
Then amongst the witnesses examined was Mr. Millet, and he is asked this question:
"Mr. Warger. If I understand you, the attempt was made by the Canadian Government to repatriate French Canadians from the United Stetes?
"Father Miller. Yes, Sir; not only that but great inducements were offered if they would return; and some of them did return, but of those who did go, a certain proportion returned to the States again and, in a

Mr. Lalime says :

"We can go to Montreal for $4, and three or four weeks we could go for $2. There we have left friends, we have left many of our relatives, and there is nothing strange if we go there once in a while to meet them. Of course you will hear everywhere, in all places, Frenchmen saving they will return to Canada. But you must not forget that experience shows us that only a few will go there to stay. Every one of our fathers and mothers who came here from Canada always came here to stay two or three years. The children take the customs of New England of the United States, and after three or four years residence when the father says: we will go home, the children say we will not. Gentlemen, I could give you lots and lots of examples where the father and mother have gone back to Oanada, but the children are here. They have settled, they are American citizens, and they will never go back to Canada. Immigration has good deal to do with the railway business. Let mestate to you that the monthly railway receipts of ticket sales from here to Canada for one line, and that is the one I represent, the Vermout Central, are about $9,000. These are the sales to the French population from New England to Canada. That amount may seem to be quite large, but let me tell you that our sales to return average at least $18,000 to $20,000 a month. That is from Canada to New England States. The reason also, gentlemen, why the sales are so high, when I speak of $9,000 from here to Canada, is that through two months the railway men always make excursion rates. We can go to the Canada for almost nothing—as I was saying, we have been to Canada. You take the French Canadian centres, Salem, for instance—the population to Salem ? I should say that two men in Salem have done all the business. They came here and settled, and every month they sent for five, six, ten, fifteen families, and we see them coming. Some will go back, but three-fourths of them will remain here, stad it is just the same in other places. A gentleman comes and settles in a cert

Mr. L'Herault (Fall River) said :

"It needs no argument to prove what our friend from Worcester has said, because we can all look back ten or fifteen years. Did we then have any French in Boston or vicinity? Very, very few. No real estate owners. To-day we can count the French Canadians in New England by thousands, and many of them real estate owners."

Mr. L'Herault stated further :

"That the French Canadians in New England are getting naturalized rapidly. Messrs. Gagnon, Gauthier and Gillets' statistics are brought together in a table which shows the total population of thirty-two cities and towns to be 417,877, of which the Canadians are 88,653; of those 2,516 are real estate owners; 13,406 are school children; there are forty Canadian schools, and 4,480 naturalized Canadians. The Canadians holding public offices number 53; Canadian merchants and professional men, 549; Canadian tradesmen, 2,014. Cohoes, Troy and Lowell are also given, indicating, perhaps, still more remarkable results, of which the Canadian population is 109,645, and the Canadian school children, 16,219."

Therefore, Sir, I say that it is clear that this emigration from the Province of Quebec has taken place to a very large extent within a measurably short period, since Confederation; that it has taken place more largely of later years; that it has assumed within a very few years this regrettable character of permaner ce to which I referred-permanence, I mean, in the settlement abroad of the bulk of those who emigrate—and the situation with reference to that Province is, no doubt, as I have pointed out it is with reference to the Province of Ontario, a very serious one. If this is the state of things, there is no use in concealing it from ourselves, there is no use in shutting our eyes to it. Surely if these are the facts, these facts do deserve the serious consideration of this House on the two pointsfirst, what is the result of our immigration policy? how many do we keep in this country of those we get here at this great cost? Secondly, what is the result of the emigration from Canada during the last few years-what is the condition of things as to that? These two points do deserve our most serious consideration, and it is also extremely plain, speaking with reference both to the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario, at any rate, that there ought not to be any further importation of those classes of immigrants, aided by the public moneys, to which my hon. friend's Resolution specifically attracts attention; and nobody who lives in a the cities and towns of these Provinces this winter, but must be quite satisfied, from painful personal experience, that of those classes, there is here at present an ample supply, and that to assist by public money the immigration of more of those classes is simply to add to the difficulties and to diminish the wages, by increasing the supply of labour, of those who are already plunged into very considerable difficulties and very considerable distress.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not propose, at this hour of the night, to enter into a discussion of the subject which has been brought under the notice of the House by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I am sure those of us who have listened to those two hon. gentlemen will have only one regret, and that is, that such a marvellous amount of industry, research and calculation, had not been devoted to a better object than to proving that this country is not progressing, and that the statistics which are furnished by the enemies of Canada are correct. It does seem to me that we might have looked somewhere else than to the Parliament of Canada for the laboured calculations which have been presented here to night, to prove that Mr. Nimmo is right in the statements he has made as to emigration from Canada, and that the statements of the officers of the Government of Canada, sustained as they are by the reasonable condition of things and by facts as they are known to exist to everybody, are entirely incorrect. But I desire simply to call attention to one class of statistics to which the hon. gentlemen have referred, and which were referred to before by another hon. gentleman in a former debate, namely, the school statistics. Now, the figures as given, at first sight do appear to be very extraordinary, and yet what do I find? I have here the Report of the Minister of Education for the Province of Ontario, for 1883, and I find that, according to that Report, the school population of the Province of Ontario in the year 1873, was 504,869, and in 1880, 4 9,924. We may therefore assume that during the decade the school population of the Province of Ontario decreased 14,945. Multiplying that number by five, according to the mode pursued by the hon. member for South Brant, to get at the actual population, we find that there should, according to these figures, have been a decrease of actual population during the last decade of about 75,000 people, and yet we have the admission of hon. gentleman, as well as the official Census returns of the Province, to prove that the actual increase was over 300,000. I think, with that one fact, we may fairly assume that there is not much reliance to be placed upon the figures which were given, as an evidence, at any rate, that this country has been decreasing in population. But I find more in this Report of the Department of Education of the Province of Ontario. I find in the report of one of the inspectors some reference to these statistics. Mr. Arthur Brown, who is the Inspector of the county of Dundas, makes this statement:

"It is to be noticed that the Trustees' returns make the number of pupils resident, December, 1882, 423 less than at the same date the prenous year. Considering that the number of children enrolled in 1881 was 591 less than the number returned as resident, and that for 1682 the number enrolled approaches within 182 of those resident, I cannot but think that the Consus has been defective, and that there are more than 5,397 children resident in the county. I consider the number, 1,499, returned as not attending school 110 days, tolerably correct, so far as those pupils whose names are enrolled are concerned; but there must be quite a large number, 7 to 12 years of age, who have not attended school at all, whose names have not been enrolled, and who have conrequently escaped Trustees' notice altogether."

Then he goes on :

of Ontario, at any rate, that there ought not to be any further importation of those classes of immigrants, aided by the public moneys, to which my hon. friend's Resolution specifically attracts attention; and nobody who lives in a city or town, and who has watched what has taken place in clanzes would be carried out, until it is made the special duty of some officer less local than a school section Trustee. If it were made the duty of the township or village clerk, in some such way as is the registration of births and deaths, the carrying out of the requirements, so far as desirable, might be counted upon."

Now, that is the opinion of one of the Inspectors of schools in the Province of Ontario, showing that his own experience, his own contact with the school officials and with the population of his district, lead him to the opinion that the statistics which we have had here cited to us as evidence that this country is not progressing, are wholly, or at any rate largely, unreliable. I have only one word more to say in relation to the general question which has been brought before us. We hear from the hon. gentlemen that the immigration into Canada during the last ten years, and especially during the last five years, has not been nearly so large as represented, and that the emigration from Canada has been very much larger than the officials of the Government of Canada choose to admit; and they tell us that some serious thought must be given to this, and some serious remedy provided for it; and what is the remedy? What do they propose? That some 1,800 mechanics who came to this country, assuming for a moment that they had assisted passages, shall not be assisted in the future. After the long speeches we have heard, after all the statements as to the condition of this country and as to its retrograde character, the solution of the whole question is to be found simply in stopping the payment of assisted passages to mechanics coming to Canada. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) referred to what he was pleased to say was the policy of the Conservative party when they were in opposition-that they were not at all reluctant to point out that emigration was taking place from this country, that they were not at all reluctant to point out that people were leaving Canada for want of employment within the country itself. But the hon, gentleman should remember that when those statements were made they were made in connection with the advocacy of a policy which proposed to give employment to people in the country itself. They were part of the general argument in favour of that policy. Whether it was successful or not has nothing to do with the argument at that time. Is that the policy of hon, gentlemen opposite to-day? Do they propose to add to the population of Canada by closing the factories of Canada? Do they propose to add to the population of Canada by stopping immigration into this country? Is that the policy which they propose for our acceptance in this country in the future? Because, in the past persons have gone from Canada, and others who came here and remained only a short time and left us, or were counted as coming and never came at all-is that the policy which hon. gentlemen have to offer us as a solution of the difficulty with which we are face to face, according to their statement at this moment? No. The hon. gentlemen offer us no such argument in the speeches they have delivered here to-night, no such conclusion. The only conclusion which they offer in the Resolution which is in your hands, is simply that we shall not hereafter assist a certain class of persons to come to Canada. Why, Mr. Speaker, one would imagine that nobody else had ever assisted such people in coming to Canada. This policy of assisted immigration is not a new policy. If I mistake not, it was the policy of the Conservative party when they were in power previous to 1873. If I am not mistaken, an arrangement was made with the steamship companies for assisted passages by the present Minister of Agriculture when he was formerly Minister of Agriculture. That same policy was continued by the hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side. They gave assisted passages; and I find that during the five years they were in office, from 1874 to 1878, inclusive, no less than 6,256 mechanics were brought into this country under that "Mr. Hodgkin, accompanied by Father Nugent, on behalf of Mr. policy of assisted passages; while during the five years Tuke's Committee, also visited Danada with the same object in view, of the Conservative Government only 5,446 have been brought into this country. No one will pretend to tell me that the employment of mechanics was greater-aye, was anything like as great during those five years as during the last five years. It is quite true that in the present year there is a certain congestion in the labour market; it is true there are some persons who cannot find employment in their particular handicraft just now in Canada, but every one knows that it is a result begotton of the last three, or four, or at most, six or eight months. It was previous to that time that mechanics were induced to come here; when the incentives to their coming here were presented to them on the other side of the water, there was abundant employment for everyone who choose to come to this country, as, I believe, there will be for every one who chooses to come to this country within a very short time hence. But, Sir, what do we find further? We find that although at that time it was the policy to assist mechanics as well as agricultural labourers, at the present time it is not the policy to do so. I find by the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, laid on the Table this evening, the statement that assisted passages were granted during the year at the rate of $\pounds 4$ for labourers, $\pounds 2$ 10s. for female domestic servants and the families of agricultural labourers; and for labourers without families there was a special rate of £3 sterling. I believe it is a fact that latterly there have been no assisted passages granted to mechanics coming to this country, but that those who have come, have come of their own free will; and I have yet to learn that it is in the interests of the people of Canada to shut the doors of this country against those who, of their own tree will, may choose to come here and make homes for thomselves in this Dominion. Out of the large emigration that is coming to Canada, some 1,800, according to the statistics of last year, were of the class that we are told are not to be induced to come here in the future. Sir, I entirely concur in the policy which the Government has pursued and the policy which the Minister of Agriculture has announced on the floor of Parliament, namely, that mechanics will not receive assisted passages; that assisted passages are to be confined to agricultural labourers, to female servants and to that class of persons who always find employment in Canada, and for whose employment there is abundant opening in all parts of the country. Sir, I believe that this Resolution which has just been introduced and which, as every one can see who knows what is going on outside, is intended simply for the purpose of creating an impression that the Opposition are singular in their policy of preventing assisted emigrants from coming to Canada, while during the five years they were in office, when there was scant employment for the people of the country itself, they were giving those assisted passages-I say I believe this Resolution will have little influence in this country, and that the motives of the hon. gentlemen presenting it will be readily understood by the people. An hon. gentleman beside me has just called my attention to the policy of the Local Government of the Province of Ontario. In the Report of the Department of Immigration of that Province, for the year 1883, this passage occurs :

"The assisted rates of passage for emigrants during the year have been as follows: Farm labourers and domestic servants, \pounds 3; children under twelve years, \pounds 2; infants under a year, 103.; other classes ot emigrants, \pounds 4. The regular (unassisted) rate has been \pounds 4 4a."

That is the statement of the Department of Agriculture of the Province of Ontario. We know that in Toronto there has been some difficulty in consequence of some immigrants not being able to get employment. They have been chiefly Irish immigrants who came to this country, and I find, in reference to them, this statement in the report of the Minister of Agriculture.

These two went to Manitoba, where they made arrangements with the Catholic authorities for the settlement of a certain number of families in that Province. All these gentlemen also visied Toronto, and reported that they had made arrangements with the Ontario Government, assisted by the Catholic authorities, for the distribution and settlement of a number of Irish families within the Province of Ontario."

So that, while the friends of these hon. gentlemen in Ontario are inviting those immigrants to come here from the other side, and offering all kinds of inducements, all kinds of promises, for the purpose of securing immigration to this country of this class of persons, hon. gentlemen on the floor of Parliament, when they find a temporary glut in the labour market, when they think some little capital is to be made out of a Resolution of this kind, propose the Resolution which is now in your hands, and have supported it with speeches of which, I venture to say, no Parliament in the world ever heard the like from members of it against their own country.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr White) expresses regret at the leader of the Opposition spending so much time in endeavouring to prove that the returns made by Mr. Nimmo, of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, were correct. Sir, the hon. leader of the Opposition never mentioned the name of Mr. Nimmo; he never referred to the returns of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, but he did present to the House an unanswerable argument, and showed most conclusively that the natural increase of Canada has been absorbed, to a large extent, by emigration from this country, and that not only had we lost a portion of the natural increase of our population, but had also lost a number equal to the entire emigration to this country for the last decade. The figures laid before this House, I repeat, by the leader of the Opposition, proved this beyond per-adventure. They showed that the natural increase of this country would be at least 20 per cent., and that on the basis of that of the United States, it should be 22 per cent. They showed that we do not maintain that natural increase, that the population of this country was less at the last decade, with ordinary natural increase added, than the population of the decade before, and that, consequently, we have lost many thousands of the natural increase. Sir, whatever may be said with regard to the number of immigrants brought to this country-I think my hon friend, the Minister of Public Works, said the number was something like 750,000 in the last decade-the higher the number that is stated by this gentleman as coming to this country the more conclusively do they prove that the emigration statistics of the United States, with reference to emigration from Canada, are correct and are not overdrawn. I have no doubt that the statements made by the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) with respect to immigration into Canada, are overdiawn. He claims that in 1882 the number was 112,000, while the British trade returns gives as the immigration from the British Isles to Canada. 40 441. The hon. gentleman claims that in 1883, 133,000 persons settled in Canada, while, as the leader of the Opposition has shown, the British trade returns show that the number of those leaving the British Isles for the Dominion was only 44,130. It may be true, and it is true, no doubt, that there has been an increase in the school population in Canada. It may be true that there has been an increase in the popu. lation of Canada; but that increase, as shown by the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) amounted, in the last decade, to only 17 per cent., and it has been shown by the leader of the Opposition, that the natural increase, without reference to immigration, should have exceeded 20 per cent. There has been a disagreement as to the statistics, with respect to immigration between Canada and the United States, as between the Canadian and American authorities. There has been, so far as I am aware, no interchange of views between the authorities of the two Mr, WHITE (Cardwell).

countries, no correspondence by the Department of Agriculture with the Bureau of Statistics in Washington, no attempt to reconcile the discrepancies between the statistics collected by the respective parties. It is true, an American ex-official of rather shady reputation was summoned here the other day, a gentleman, if I may characterize him as a gentleman, who has been discharged from his situation in an American Custom house, since which time he has been filling the high position of brakeman on a railway, and that gentleman did give evidence which militated to some extent against the figures of the American immigration statisticians, but I think proof has been furnished to night, in the speech of the leader of the Opposition, that the statements made by the American authorities. with respect to the number of immigrants entering the United States from Canada during the last ten years, has not been overdrawn. I do not believe we can account for the disappearance of the population, that is, our natural increase, in any other way. It is not plain that the immigration to Manitoba and the North-West has been, all told, more than 230,000. The Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) claimed, in his speech not long since, that prior to 1880, it was 64,000, and subsequently, 169,000 had gone in there. Adding those numbers together, they do not equal the number who have emigrated to the United States, and the total does not make up the difference which would appear to exist in the population of Canada, if we admit the natural increase at 20 per cent., and add the immigration which it is claimed came into this country. With respect to the question of emigration to the United States, the leader of the Opposition alluded very briefly to some statistics, as to the number of Canadians shown to be in that country, by the Census of 18:0-30, to the death rate which would diminish that Canadian population, and he drew from those figures and statements the inference that the statements of the American authorities, with respect to immigration, were not overdrawn. I will deal with this question a little more fully, showing how the results are arrived at. The following table will make this clear :--

Immigration, 1st June, 1870, to 30th June, 1880, as per American returns...... 852, 816 Any person who visits that section of country or travels through the country, cannot but be struck with the great emigration which is constantly going on from this country. A person who visits Michigan, or Minnesota, or Dakota, or other portions of the Western States, will be struck with the great number of Canadians to be found there-in fact, some districts of these States seem to be peopled almost exclusively by Canadians; and I have no doubt at the present moment, following up these calculations, on the basis I have shown, that there are between 900,000 and 1,000,000 nativeborn Canadians in the United States. Now, the hour is late and the House is impatient, and I will not detain them much longer. I believe, with reference to this question of immigration, that the proper policy for this Government to adopt is that which has been followed by the United States Government for many years past. The policy of the United States is to lay before the leading people of Europe the claims that America presents as a home for the immigrant, and to circulate information to the utmost extent possible, to place people in possession of all the facts which would induce them to immigrate, and then to allow them to come or remain on their own free will. The United States has never directly assisted immigrants; it has induced them to come by giving information concerning the country, and the result is that immigrants have swarmed there by millions. If a man does well in this country he naturally assists his friends to come out, and in this way passages are assisted, not by the Government, but by the friends of people at home who are thus induced to come to the United States. Millions and millions of dollars have been sent from the United States by Irishmen to assist their fellow-countrymen to come to that country-

Mr. CURRAN. And to this country, too.

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps so; but at any rate it is a proper system, and in such a state of things as exists now with the labour market over-stocked, I hold that the Government can make a better use of their money than in bringing people to this country, to compete with those who are here and unable to obtain employment. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) says we only assisted 1,800 mechanics to come to this country last year, but we brought 16,000 labourers, who came here as competitors with the labour of this country, to carry mortar and brick, and to engage in various occupations, aside from working on the farm, so that he will have an increase of very considerably above 1,800, if he sums up those who come to the country to compete with those who are out of employment, and are vainly seeking for employment. I believe the amendment is one which is based on correct principles. It may be possible that in times past it may have been necessary and proper to pursue such a policy as the present, but 1 believe the time for that has past. I believe in placing before the people of Europe the claims and advantages which Canada possesses as a home for the immigrant, and letting them come or remain as they may themselves decide. The surplus population of Europe is seeking homes, and it will come to this continent, and the question is that we should offer them inducements which they cannot prudently overlook ; but I do not believe we should induce people to come here to strive for the employment which cannot be obtained by those who are now in the country by assisting their passages here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do with this vote for Archives?

Mr. McLELAN. Much the same as last year—that is, to continue the researches in London and Paris, and the copying of documents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; but there are various classes of documents, and we would like to know if there are any special objects in view.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. MoLELAN. They are all bearing on the Dominion of Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, but generally speaking, there are some particular classes in view. For instance we had the Haldimand papers last year. Is it proposed to do anything with regard to the New England Archives ?

Mr. McLELAN. Researches are going on both in London and in Paris.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there anything to be done with regard to the New England Archives?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no doubt that in New England they are going more and more into researches connected with their early history, which is more or less connected with our own. I have received a number of communications on this subject, and I would like to know if the attention of the Department has been directed to the desirability of making researches in the United States as well as in Paris and London. My own impression is that probably we would be able to get more for our money there than in Paris or London, with the exception of a few documents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Especially with reference to the colonial period, the anti-revolutionary period, there is no necessity for our doing that. Their records are well preserved; there is no danger of their Archives being destroyed, and they have a series of literary mon who have devoted themselves to those periods, and the publications of their Archives are perfectly accessible to us, so we can well postpone our researches there. Meanwhile the old period in France is getting less and less interesting to Frenchmen every day, and it were well that researches there should be pursued vigorously, and I understand they are being pursued vigorously. So with regard to the English Archives; so that I think we should devote ourselves more to those Archives for some time to come, leaving it to the Americans themselves to deal with the American Archives.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course a number of persons are engaged in the various depositories in which such papers and documents are preserved, in copying manuscript documents, which would be available to historians and others who are interested in the early history of our country; but I believe that during the last year we have had instances of the in-convenience which is being caused by the not unnatural zeal of the persons who are devoted to this work. I maintain that, apart from these things, all other literature upon the subject, that is to say, printed books with reference to the early history of Canada, ought to be in our Library, accessible along with the vast quantity of more modern information which is there. Now, I remember that last year, when a larger vote than usual was granted for the Library, it was done on the understanding that it should in part be devoted, on the suggestion of the Library Committee, to the replenishing of our stock of printed books, referring to the early history of the country. I believe I am not incorrect in saying that more than one effort on the part of the late Librarian to secure this very class of books, which he was directed by the Library Committee and by Parliament to obtain for the Library, were frustrated by the superior zeal of that other officer of the Government, the Archivist, who was before him buying them for this repository, which I never entered, but which, I believe, contains printed books as well as written manuscripts. I think it is ridiculous that two officers under the Government should be competing against each other for the possession of the same volumes. It all arises from our not having determined the limits of the Archivist's work. If we agree that the printed volumes should be in the Library, and that volumes specially valuable should be kept under lock and key there, a person engaged in researches, and wishing to consult a rare volume, could see it on applying to the Librarian. But if you are going to have these works kept in the Department of Agriculture in connection with the Archives, this will just cause confusion and render the whole collection less valuable than it would be if we had it entire in the Library. I, therefore, ask for more definite information in regard to this vote. Is it intended that any of the money shall be expended in the purchase of books which Parliament declares ought to be in our Library, and for the purchase of which we are granting special votes in order to complete the collection? There seems to be no sense in that; it is quite unreasonable; and for my part, there is no doubt as to the preferable one of the two places. The manuscripts I am not objecting to be kept by the Archivist, but the printed books should be in the Library, and should not be duplicated elsewhere.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think, as a general rule, printed books should be kept in the Library; but there are some books which, though printed, are so completely of the nature of Archives, from their scarcity and their antiquity, that perhaps there might be a line drawn. I must say that the books in our Library are not very safe; that there is a very considerable percentage of losses in the Library. Books at all valuable as Archives—scarce books, old books—would be safer in manuscript than in print. But with the single exception I have mentioned, I think historical books should be kept in the library.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it would never do, and the Committee recognized that it would never do, to keep these books on the ordinary shelves. The Librarian was directed to have a special department for them, kept under lock and key, out of which they would only be taken when they were specially wanted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the line taken by the hon, gentleman, and I will take an opportunity of discussing this matter with the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. DAVIES. In the Library Committee this question came up and the Librarian, in making his report, stated that he had frequently failed to obtain rare books in reference to Canada, because another Department of the Government had forestalled him in every market into which he went. It was therefore thought proper to bring this question up in the House, because it was felt to be unseemly that the agent of one Department of the Government, when he went to buy a rare book, should find another agent of another Department of the Government bidding over his head.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; that is very absurd-

Mr. DAVIES. In the case of a sale of rare books in Toronto, I understand that the Librarian sent an officer there, but the Department of Agriculture had got ahead of him by telegraphing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But the books were got, and there was really no competing and no loss.

Mr. DAVIES. The Department of Agriculture paid more for the books than they might, because the two were bidding against each other. This rivalry ought to be stopped altogether.

Mr. MILLS. This fact, I think, is sufficient to show the propriety of the suggestion I brought under the notice of the First Minister, a few days ago, that is, to have the Archives placed in connection with the Library. The principle on which Mr. Brymner is acting is, to seek to make the Department of which he is in charge a complete historical department for the Dominion of Canada. With that view, he is endeavouring to collect there every historical work relating to the Dominion, whether in manuscript or not, so that any one wishing to look up any matter connected with the early history of any of the Provinces, might find everything he desired in that Department. If there was some part of the Library set apart for the Archives, and placed under the charge of Mr. Brymner, these books might be classified and the difficulties of which my hon. friend has spoken could not arise. There would be no competition, for whatever was done for the one would, in fact, be done for the other.

Patent Record $9,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How comes the increase in the vote for the Patent Record?

Mr. McLELAN. It is to provide for the increased work. There is an expenditure in connection with every patent issued for engravings, &c. The revenue is increasing in a greater proportion. Since 1878 the number of patents issued has doubled and the revenue has increased from $33,663, in 1878, to $73,023, last year.

Criminal Statistics $4,000 00

Mr. MILLS. I have in my hand a volume of these Criminal Statistics, and I am certain that if any member of the Adminis ration would look at it, he would see that it has really no value whatever, that the information is altogether unreliable and the classification very imperfect. In Essex I find 685 persons charged with crime. The number acquitted is 85, leaving 600 convicted, but the list shows only 575 convicted, so that there are 25 unaccounted for. Take the classification of sentences; the number of persons doos not correspond with either of these numbers. One of the purposes of a classification is to ascertain the character of crimes committed, whether very serious or comparatively triffing offences. Yet you find, in many instances, a large number of persons said to be convicted and not reported as having been sentenced at all. In Frontenac, out of 770 charged with crime during the year, 242 were acquitted, which would leave 528 convicted. Yet there are only 520 convicted, and less than 300 reported as having been sentenced. In Huron, the number of persons charged with assault is 168, of which seven were acquitted, leaving 161 convicted, yet the number reported as convicted is only 158, and the number sentenced is eight, leaving 153 unaccounted for. With regard to larceny, sixty were charged and twenty-four reported acquitted, leaving thirty-six as convicted; yet only twenty-nine were reported convicted, and thirteen sentenced, leaving twenty-three unsentenced. In the case of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, ninetyone were charged with the offence, and none acquitted, yet we have twenty-six reported sentenced, leaving sixty-three not accounted for. For infraction of by laws, 148 were charged and two acquitted, leaving 146 convicted; but 143 are reported as convicted and sixty-four sentenced; thus, eighty-two are not reported at all. So that the classifica-tion of these is wholly worthless. Then, in the county of York, I find 375 charged with common assault, 136 acquitted, and 239 convicted, but the number reported convicted is only 224, and the number reported sentenced 135; thus, eighty-four are unaccounted for. Murder-six charged and three acquitted, leaving three Three are reported convicted, but none convicted. are reported sentenced, and the punishment in no case is stated. The number charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct in that county reaches 3,373, of which 1,487 are acquitted, leaving 1,786 convicted but only 1,737 are reported sentenced or forty-nine altogether unaccounted for. Misdemeanours-seventy-nine charged and twelve acquitted; sixty seven convicted, yet only fifty-three are reported as convicted and twenty-nine as sentenced, leaving twentyeight unaccounted for. I might go through the whole of this volume, and in scarcely a county will you find a report at all reliable. The classification, such as it is, is altogether worthless. There have been several thousand dollars paid for a collection of statistics which are not of the slighest use to anyone. If the officer had the slightest idea of his duties he would, if he received imperfect returns from any county, send the papers back with orders to fill up the blanks correctly. It is impossible that this book ever passed through the hands of any hon. Minister, for if he had looked at the book at all, he would have seen its defects at once. This vote is one that ought not to be taken till the Government are prepared to see that the classification of statistics is made in such a way that it will be of some value. I bring this matter before the House to show how little attention is paid to this important production by the Minister who is responsible for this work.

Mr. McLELAN. The returns are made by the clerks of the courts, and on those returns the report is made. 1 am sorry the hon. leader of the Opposition is not here to have the benefit of the hon. gentleman's criticisms of this Bill. The Statute is directly followed out.

Mr. MILLS. There is no defect in the Statute. It is in the returns made up here. Let the hon. gentleman turn to page 30. Take the case of a single county, the number of misdemeanours reported is thirty-one, the number of persons acquitted is two, leaving twenty-nine as convicted. The number reported convicted is thirty. Would the Statute assist in correcting a mistake of that kind? In the case of sentences, there are only five reported as sentenced, and the classification is all blank.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt there is carelessness and incompetence, but it does not rest with the Department here. The officers who make these returns are not officers of the Dominion Government. They are not under the control of the Dominion Government. They make such returns as they please, or as the great Mr. Hardy or Mr. Pardee will allow them to do, and the officers of the Department of Agriculture have got to take these returns and make the best of them, and publish them as they receive them. He says they may send them back and say they will not have them, but what means have you to compel these gentlemen to make these returns, unless the hon. gentleman has influence elsewhere, to have it made an offence punishable by the Ontario Government. There is no other way to make these men do their duty. The Minister can only publish the returns he gets.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But we pay considerable sums of money to a variety of people for such services, and, upon my word, I do not think we ought to pay money to these people for incorrect returns. I see about a score of people, more or less, all of whom, in 1883, received payments for services. I see that $2,248 was paid to three persons—Mr. Wcods, Mr. Kingston, and Mr. Watts—for services in compiling statistics. Are these clerks in the Department?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; they compile them when they are sent in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think they ought to have called the attention of the Minister to the inaccuracies which my hon. friend has pointed out. I do not see the good of paying these other parties, whom I presume to be parties serving the municipal authorities and the Ontario Government, these sums of $200, $188, $100 and $75, for returns, if the returns are so utterly worthless.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is a great deal of truth in that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think they should be paid if they do not choose to furnish correct returns. If you have no other means of compelling them, you can stop the supplies, as I wish we could in many cases.

Mr. MILLS,

Mr. CASEY. If you cannot get the information, why vote the money? I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in supposing the error is at all in the reports furnished, because the report shows, on the face of it, that the figures which have been given, whatever they were, are utterly muddled. No matter what sort of imperfect returns have been got, they have been so muddled in putting them into this report, that they are not consistent with themselves, and the columns do not add up correctly. Those are faults in the classification by the clerks of the Department, and do not arise from any imperfections in the returns.

Mr. McLELAN. As far as the Statute is concerned, it is all right. Instructions are given for these returns, but the errors are the fault of the Clerks of the Peace in the respective counties, and I speak more especially with reference to the Province of Ontario. It must be with them, and with them only, that these mistakes can possibly be. It is not a mistake in addition, but in the returns. So many persons are charged with certain crimes, and, if they are found guilty, it is only for them to say they are found guilty, and to give the sentences as recorded by the Judges. Of course, there are certain instances where criminals are found guilty, and, on account of their age, are let go, with a view of being sentenced whenever called upon, and that would make a difference in the numbers. The only thing I regret in connection with the matter is, that a larger amount is not expended, if necessary, to make returns of the respective crimes with which criminals are charged throughout the country, and the circumstances under which they are charged, with the view of assimilating the sentences as far as possible. Now there are in this country burglaries committed in certain parts under exactly similar circumstances, where the criminal in one part of the country gets three years in the penitentiary, and in another part gets seven or eight years in the penitentiary. If these returns were made properly, and the circumstances given, as far as they possibly could be, we might have an assimilation of sentences.

Mr. LISTER. Are these returns got from the Government office in Toronto?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no; they could not be got there.

Mr. LISTER. Direct from the Clerks of the Crown ?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. So far as these returns are concerned, I do not at all see the use of this Government publishing the report for which this money is charged. Each of the Provincial Governments publishes a return, and I have never heard any complaints of the accuracy of the returns published by those Governments. This report is a waste of money. The administration of justice is in the hands of the Local Government, and they have proper means of collecting returns and statistics. I have no doubt that, if the returns made by the officers throughout the Province of Ontario are examined, it will be found that the mistakes have taken place in the office of the Department here, that the bungling has been here. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to speak of Mr. Hardy and Mr. Pardee, but if this Government was as economical and as honest as that is, it would be good for the Dominion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that the hon. gentleman is the best judge of that. We will not take his opinion on that. However, that is not the question. The hon. gentleman complains of our having any criminal statistics at all, but he had better ask his leader why we have an Act on the Statute Book, as the hon. gentleman passed the law under which we are compelled to have criminal statistics.

Mr. BLAKE. I was responsible for passing the law, but I am not responsible for the hon. gentleman's neglect in collecting the statistics.

Mr. DAVIES. The law is very good, but the question is whether, as it is carried out, it is worth $4,000 a year. If the statements made by my hon. friend to my left are correct, the statistics are worse than useless, they are mislead ing. They are only valuable when they are correct, and enable the law-makers to draw deductions with a view to improve the law. I am inclined to think there are defaults in the Department. I turn to my own Province, and I find returns given from the counties there. We have no municipal officers for the county, so the returns come from the different magistrates, and therefore they have to be added up and subtracted in the Department here, and I find egregious blunders, unpardonable blunders, in the addition of these figures. We have no municipal officers, so the mistakes which appear in this book of returns, quoad the Province which is within my own knowledge, must be made by the departmental officers, who are alone responsible for them, and I presume the other blunders can be committed regarding the city and county of St. John. My accounted for in the same way.

Mr. McLELAN. I suppose in the hon, gentleman's Province it is the same as in other Provinces. I do not think the magistrates in the localities give the names of each of the parties separately and the crime and the sentence. They say there are so many guilty of assault and they add that up, and the same with regard to the other charges. In the Province of Ontario, I know that the Clerk of the Peace makes returns of so many persons charged with burglary, and he adds them up; so many charged with robbery, and he adds them up; so many charged with other crimes; and, instead of the calculation being made in the Department here, it is made in the office of the Clerk of the Peace in the Province of Ontario. So that he is the person who is responsible for the mistakes, if there are any.

Mr. DAVIES. We have no such persons in the counties of the Province which I come from, as Clerks of the Peace, who make one general return for the county. You have returns made up by the stipendiary magistrate and by the Clerk of the Crown of the cases tried in the Supreme Court, and you have returns from the magistrates of the cases tried by them. They are not added up before they leave Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MILLS. It is quite obvious, looking at these returns, that some of the officers make full returns and others leave blanks, and that whoever makes up the returns in the Department here makes up these statistics and puts them down as they are received here, where there are said to be a certain number of offenders charged with crime and a certain number convicted, and we find that the number convicted do not correspond with the difference.

Mr. McLELAN. That is because a certain number may be charged in a year and not all tried within the year, and their convictions will come in next year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sorry the Minister who is specially charged with the Department is not here; that, of course, cannot be avoided. There is a great feeling of dissatisfaction in the way the Census has been done; the third volume does appear to me to be very in. accurately put together. If it be correct, we have some rather extraordinary results brought out as to industrial establishments. For instance, I find that ten years ago apparently $78,000,000 were invested as the total capital; that 187,000 hands were employed, who produced impugn the veracity of these statements, we would be told $221,000,000 worth of products. We find now that we that we were declaring the statistics unreliable, and an-$221,000,000 worth of products. We find now that we that we were declaring the statistics unreliable, and an-employ $135,000,000 of capital and 255,000 hands, but that nouncing this fact to the world. As to which horn of the we only produce $309,000,000 worth of products. I do not suppose that the productive value of capital has decreased in that ratio, but I just call the Minister's attention to that, as a very strong illustration of the doubtful character of the statistics, either in one Census or the other. It may be possible that the Census of 1871 is unreliable, or that that of 1881 is unreliable.

Mr. BLAKE. When may we hope to have the final volume of the Census?

Mr. McLELAN. It is in the hands of the printer, and has been for some time. We hope to have it before the close of the Session, and that will be about fifteen months earlier than the third volume of the last Census was issued. The first volume of the last Census was issued in 1873, the second in 1874, the third in June, 1875. This volume will be issued in March, 1884, about fifteen months earlier than the corresponding volume of the last Census, and at a less cost by $47,785.

Mr. WELDON. Very gross blunders seem to have been attention was called to it, in regard to book-binding. lŋ that Province we have returned, of capital invested, $221,000, with 911 hands employed, and $971,000 as the total value of the products. Yet there is not a single one put down for the whole Province, though in the city and county of St. John there are several, and two of great importance, of which one has been established since 1882.

Mr. PATERSON. I would like on this subject to say something myself. I have looked a little into the matter, and I did it somewhat pleasantly, and I did it for this reason, that while the Census show many figures that somewhat strengthen the economic position I take, I think there are so many inaccuracies, especially in the third volume, that though the figures look rather gloomy to my hon. friends opposite, I confess they are very cheering to myself, and there is a little consolation in the thought that perhaps the whole thing is unreliable. There are some glaring discrepancies, though perhaps some of them may be capable of explanation. For instance, the vessels registered in the Province of Quebec are actually 285 less in 1881 than they were in 1871. In New Brunswick, the number is just one more, while in Ontario there are 105 more, and in Nova Scotia 443 more. I suppose there might be an explanation given, because there is an increased tonnage, but I should judge from the figures that there must be something wrong. Another point is that mentioned by the hon. member for South Huron, and which I alluded to myself in the debate on the Budget. If the Census are to be accepted as correct, they show that $2 of capital invested in our manufacturing industries now are only producing what $1 did in 1871. If that is correct, it will have a deterrent effect upon capital being invested in manufacturing industries. The impression that this volume is unreliable is strengthened by the withholding of another volume which is confessedly inaccurate. We can hardly imagine the extent of the evil results that flows from publishing such information that is not authentic, and from which calculations must be made and deductions must be drawn. We are not responsible for it, and are not to blame for it; but it seems to me that censure must fall on some one, whether on the inside or on the outside staff, I shall not say. I know that the populations are in many cases incorrect. I believe that in my own city a great mistake was made, for judging by the returns annually made, there is a discrepancy of a thousand or more, and it is quite probable the same occurred at other places. If this is so, it may account for some of the population we have been speaking of earlier in the evening; but if we were to impugn the veracity of these statements, we would be told dilemma to take, I do not know. Taking either one, we are forced to a conclusion to which no one is disposed to arrive.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister in charge has informed the Committee that the last volume is in the printer's hands. We received that information some weeks ago. I understand that all the Census staff is still rotained in the Department; what are they engaged in doing? I noticed a statement in the Mail, by Mr. Kingsmill, in which he says the work of the Census branch was completed six months ago. The House is entitled to some explanation in regard to this particular matter. It is well that we should look into the manner in which this work has been performed. The volumes are wholly unreliable. Taking sea-going vessels, I find the following statement :--

When we look at public improvements in agricultural districts, we find the same discrepancies exist. The number of houses and buildings in some of the counties was less than in 1871. In Waterloo, South, there were 3,308 barns reported in 1871; there were 3,194 in 1881. In Wellington there were 5,132 in 1871, and 4,731 in 1881. And so we might go over the list, showing that, instead of the number of buildings increasing with the increase of population, the number diminished as the population increased. The same discrepancies are observable in every department of these statistics.

Mr. WELDON. What has been done in regard to the city or county of St. John, respecting which it was admitted that a mistake had been made.

Mr. BLAKE. We have been told by the Minister and by the acting Minister that the final volume is expected to be distributed before the close of the present Session—that is 14th April. Why then do we require to vote the large sum asked for.

Mr. McLELAN. After the three volumes were issued, in 1875, another was published, compiled from the three. It is intended to pursue the same course with respect to this Census, and I am informed that a considerable number of the staff have been retained for that work, while others are employed in different services.

Mr. BLAKE. How many are still employed?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the number.

Mr. MILLS. How many have been dismissed?

Mr. McLELAN. Quite a number of them have been dismissed and some of them have been employed in other services. There were also quite a number kept for the purpose of compiling the other volume.

Mr. BLAKE. In regard to the return made for the city and county of St. John, we were told that we must not rely on the statements—that they are wrong and would be corrected. I presume further enquiry has been made and that is not accurately—and this enormous sum of money has been the acting Minister will be able to say what the errors are. Did he find that they arose from culpable negligence on the part of the local officers? I am afraid the returns are equally defective in a number of other cases.

Mr. McLELAN. I did not know that it was admitted.

Mr. WELDON. Yes; it was admitted, and a statement appeared in one of the volumes.

Mr. McLELAN. I am informed that the correction desired by the hon. gentleman will appear in the special volume.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the enumeration, I desire to ask, has the Minister the means of giving us any information as to the number of persons in the several Provinces who were put down as not being at that moment residents?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, I say this Census is not worth the paper on which it is written. We have a number of people who are residents in other countries and who may or may not return to us, and I think some sort of record should have been kept whereby they could be checked.

Mr. McLELAN. It was only those who were temporarily absent.

Mr. DAVIES. I know, with regard to Prince Edward Island, that the person who took the Census informed me that his instructions were to ask the head of the house whether any of his family were absent, and whether he believed they would return again at any time, and if he believed they would return, he was to put them down as residents.

Mr. BLAKE. I may say that only a few weeks ago I was speaking to a man who is prominent in Manitoba politics, and he said that the Census of that Province was not to be relied upon, because a number of Ontario people who had gone to that Province were counted as being residents of Ontario, and therefore the population of Manitoba was less than it should have been.

Mr. MILLS. I know, with regard to one item, that is the manufacture of staves, there is one establishment in Wallaceburg which turns out more than are here given to the county of Kent, and I believe there are several more in that county which turn out more work than is credited to the whole Province.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid it is as clear as daylight that this Census has been compiled with such horrible inaccuracy that none of us can venture to make any calculations which are based upon its figures. Now if there is one thing more than another which should be carefully and accurately taken, it is this Census—this decennial stock-taking of the nation. Here we have been asked for $400,000, in different estimates, to get an authoritative statement of the population and other statistics of the Canadian people, and yet, after such gross mistakes as hon. gentlemen have pointed out, it is shown that this money has been wasted, and worse than wasted, and information of the most valuable character that we could have had, information which would have been of the greatest use to us in the future, has been left out of these volumes. For example, in the Census which is taken in England and Ireland, the classes of the houses are given-houses which are of one, two, or three, or more than three rooms are classified. I remember calling the attention of the Department to the desirability of having this information, but no attention was paid to the suggestion, though all sorts of insignificant information is given-or attempted to be given, for I fear it spont, and we have not even got an accurate enumeration of industries of Prince Edward Island, is totally, disgracefully the number of people in Canada when the Census was taken.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think there is any disposition to make this a party question; but it is a matter much to be regretted, that this decennial stock taking of the nation, as it has been called, is not reliable. There is no doubt, if we are to compile information of a reliable character, one of the first steps to be taken by the Department of Agriculture is, to lay plans now for the rectification of these mistakes. The Minister of Agriculture takes credit for the fact, that the last volume of the Census is to be issued three years after the Census has been taken, but I really do not think that much credit would be taken in any other country, for celerity of that description. In 1880, the Compendium of the United States Census, the tabular statement of the information compressed, was issued the following year-I think within less than twelve months of the time the Census was taken, and I think within two years all the tables were issued.

Mr. McLELAN. You did not get any of them this last year.

Mr. CHARLTON. But the Compendium containing all this information in abstract form was issued promptly, and it detracts very much from the value of the Census return to wait for two or three years before getting it; and even in this case, when you do get it, it is found to be utterly unreliable, which, I should say, is something to be sorry for, at all events. I do not speak in any party sense, but it is in the interests of all parties that these returns should be full, complete, and reliable, and I hope that the Department will so arrange their staff that that evil will be remedied in future.

Mr. WELDON. I find that it is not only the statistics of the city of St. John which are at fault. Taking the edge tool factories, I find that on page 444, these factories turned out 48,160 of such tools, while on page 568, we find that edge tools have disappeared altogether, and they are not to be found in New Brunswick at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it is only proper to ask that if there be blame in the office staff, with regard to this work, which is admittedly so incorrect-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not admitted at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not think it is denied. I think the hon. gentleman himself would hardly venture to contend that they are correct. I fancy that the deductions from these figures would tell more against the position taken by the Government on a number of questions, than they would tell in their favour, in many instances. I would like to know if there is any reason to suppose that we may expect a better compilation in future. Has the same staff been retained, or might a change be made by which the work could be checked, and a better result secured?

Mr. DAVIES. I had not intended to speak, as I thought it was generally admitted that this Census was incorrect by both sides of the House; but as the hon. gentleman seems to deny that proposition, I will call his attention to the figures on nearly every page of the Census with regard to my own Province. I take the column headed potteries, and I find that for my own county no potteries are montionel; but I know, as a matter of fact, there is a respectable pottery there, in which I have myself some capital, and which has turned out a large amount of ware.

Mr. COURSOL. Since when?

Mr. DAVIES. A good many years ago. I find the same omission with regard to book-binding. There is a good book-'indery in connection with the Summerside Journal; but a great part of this vote to the transport of products, so as there is nothing here of that industry at all. The whole to give the exhibition a Dominion character. A very great thing, so far as I have examined it, with reference to the part of last year's vote was used for the transport of pro-inaccurate.

Mr. DAVIES. Before that vote is passed, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman in charge of it what he intends to do with reference to a memorial which I understand has been addressed to him by the people of Prince Edward Island, asking that the exhibition should be held next year in that Province. During the past three or four years Prince Edward Island has sent a very large and very creditable display of horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and farm produce of all kinds to the exhibitions held in Montreal, Halifax and St. John, and I believe in these articles, carried away a good many of the prizes. A strong effort has been made by the local authorities to induce the Government to have the exhibition held there next year. Very respectable sums have been subscribed by the municipalities and promised by the Local Government. I think it has been urged as an objection, that the Island being distant from the mainland, it would not be possible for the exhibition, if held there, to be a Dominion Exhibition, owing to the difficulty of transporting machinery and other heavy goods thither. But that objection is lessened in force by the fact that though you call it a Dominion Exhibition, it is not in reality a Dominion Exhibition. When held in the Maritime Provinces it is purely a Maritime Province Exhibition, so far as agricultural products are concerned; and wherever it is held, it is found that the distance from the remote parts of the Dominion are so great that the exhibition is practically, to a large extent, a Provincial one. Unless there are insuperable difficulties in the way, I think the next exhibition ought to be held in Prince Edward Island, where very strong efforts will be made in every respect to render it a great success. Of course, it would be no more than a Maritime Province Exhibition, but a Maritime Provincial Exhibition could be held as well in Prince Edward Island as anywhere else. I think the memorial sets forth the reasons very fully in favour of the exhibition being held in that Province.

Mr. McLELAN. The memorial has been received, but nc decision has been arrived at.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been customary, when this vote has been taken, for the Government to announce where the exhibition, for which it is made, is to be held. That information has never been refused until now. I observe that this vote is retained at the figure to which, if I remember rightly, it was raised last year. I think the original vote was $5,000; but it was raised last year to $10,000, because the exhibition at St. John was a Centennial as well as a Dominion Exhibition, and it is now kept at the increased amount. I mentioned, early in the history of this vote, that I was of opinion that it would not be a successful vote; but I thought that once it was commenced, it was reasonable that it should be continued until one round of the Provinces was made; and I do not therefore propose to object until the exhibition visits the different Provinces in turn. But if it be the case, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has said, that the exhibitions, as a matter of fact, are Provincial and not Dominion Exhibitions, so far, at any rate, as animals and agricultural products are concerned, we are practically only making a grant in aid of a Provincial exhibition every year. I would like to know if this increased vote is going to be kept up; and we ought to know, if not to-night, at any rate upon Concurrence, the decision of the Government as to the locality at which the exbibition is to be held.

Mr. McLELAN. The policy of the Minister is to devote a great part of this vote to the transport of products, so as ducts from Manitoba, and a considerable portion of the balance for the transport of articles from the more distant parts of the Dominion to the city of St. John, and I presume that the intention of the Minister is to use a considerable portion of this sum in the same way.

Mr. BAKER. I think that Prince Edward Island has no cause of complaint if the exhibition is not held there. I think by right of priority British Columbia can claim it. That Province is a little further off, but I think we are as much entitled to the exhibition as Prince Edward Island.

Mr. WATSON. British Columbia is too far west and Prince Edward Island is too far east. I think Manitoba is entitled to have this exhibition. The Prairie Province could produce a very good exhibition, and I think that it would be in the interest of the country to hold it in Winnipeg. The claim of Manitoba should certainly be considered by the Department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose it will hardly be possible to make the Dominion Exhibition quite as good as we would like it, because the live stock display is a very important part of it, and it cannot be expected that people will trust their live stock to a long journey. But I think that if the Minister spends the money in the way of transporting goods, the object of the vote will be as fully accomplished as possible. In bringing men together from long distances to attend these exhibitions, we are perhaps recompensed for the money expended.

Mr. HESSON. It seems to me that the time is come when we should do away with this vote altogether. Our western fairs and exhibitions at London, Guelph and Toronto are greater successes than our Dominion Exhibitions, and dispense with any necessity for the latter.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not desirable to do away with this exhibition, because, confining it altogether to the matter of animals and productions, very great advantages have been derived from these exhibitions. When the exhibition was held at Montreal, the Island went to great expense in transporting stock to Montreal, and our farmers found a good many imported breeds there which they had not on the Island. All those exhibitions have the result of bringing about an interchange of stock, and lead to the introduction of new breeds into outlying places.

Mr. BLAKE. Why continue the double vote of last year, which was made double for reasons connected with the St. John Exhibition?

Mr. MoLELAN. It was found that this sum was required, in order to give this exhibition a Dominion character.

To meet expenses in connection with Health Statistics..... $15,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. $20,000 were voted last year, and but a small portion was expended. It is proposed to revote $15,000 for the coming year. Arrangements have been made with the health officers in the different parts of the Dominion to make returns connected with the public health of the cities, and all the principal cities will have officers. The salary in Montreal is $451, in Toronto, $315, Quebec, $256, Halifax, $190, St. John, $165, Charlottetown, $123, Winnipeg, $119, Victoria, $114. The returns, printing, stationery and other expenses connected with this work, will require a considerable amount, and it is proposed to obtain returns from second-class towns. In any case, the amount will not exceed $15,000. The object is to obtain the classes of disease, the sex and age, and whether single or married, of those who have succumbed.

Mr. WILSON. By what method will you collect these statistics?

Mr. McLelan.

Mr. McLELAN. There is a different system in almost every city, and the officers will do the best they can to get information.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it the intention to collect statistics of the causes of disease?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. They will be mortuary, not health statistics?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. I am satisfied that the statistics are not copied from the Ontario report. Those are very carofully prepared.

Mr. ORTON. I think, in connection with this matter, something might be said. The money has been expended so far in collecting mortuary statistics. Now, with regard to the public health, these statistics are comparatively of little value, but it is important that the Government of this country should attend more thoroughly than they have in the past to the public health of the people. We find to day, in some of our cities, epidemics existing to an alarming extent. In the city of Winnipeg, typhoid fever and dip theria, and other diseases, have prevailed that can and ought to be stamped out. When diseases occur among animals-foot disease or pleuro-pneumonia-we find the Government at once on the alert and prepared to stamp out such diseases which occur among cattle, but we find our fellow-countrymen, some of the very best of our citizens, cut down daily by diseases that can be very easily provented. The importance of this matter has been suggested by the medical men of the Dominion frequently to the Government, and it has been urged, during this Session, upon the Government, that it would be proper and wise to appoint medical officers throughout the Dominion, to report at least once a month to the Central Bureau, with regard to this class of diseases, so that the Government might be in possession of the actual facts in connection with the prevalence of disease throughout the Dominion. It is very true that the municipalities are under the control of the Local Legislatures and that they alone can put into operation any laws that are required for the preservation of the public health, but there is one fact in connection with this, that if health officers were appointed throughout the country by the Dominion Government, their reports would have very great weight. Not long ago some actions were brought against the corporation of Winnipeg for gross negligence in regard to public health, and damages were recovered from the municipality for sickness which could have been easily prevented. If these reports were made regularly to the Government by properly appointed medical officers, the municipalities would be on the alert, as they would find themselves subject to damage if they neglected the public health, as they have in the past. If a hole occurs in the streets, or a grating is broken, or injury occurs to a horse, or any individual is injured, they are liable to damages, and they ought to be also liable for neglect of the ordinary means of preventing epidemic dis-eases, such as typhoid fever, diphtheria, and other diseases which are easily preventible. I hope the Government will consider favourably the suggestions made by the medical men of the Dominion. I do not believe that more would be required than the sum which is in the Estimates this year, to carry out effectually a system of supervision of the public health by the Dominion Government. If medical officers were appointed, even in every constituency, to make a report once a month to the Central Bureau in Ottawa, the Government would be in possession of the condition of the health of the whole people, and it could be done at a trifling expense. I believe medical men could be found who would willingly give a thorough and complete report once a month for a small sum. It was estimated by the medical men that twelve reports in the year could be easily furnished at a cost of $24 for each medical officer.

Mr: BLAKE. How many officers, do you think?

Mr. ORTON. In that case, I suppose as many officers as there are members in the House of Commons. That was one suggestion. There are small villages and towns in almost every constituency, and there might be some little alteration in regard to the basis, but on that basis the cost would not exceed $20,000 a year. There is a sanitary journal printed in Ottawa, which the Government subsidized to some extent last year, and I believe the Department is taking into their consideration the propriety of again subsidizing that journal, and also one to be printed in French, in regard to this important matter of public health.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I wish to correct an error into which the acting Minister of Agriculture has unwittingly tumbled. Nothing was done in regard to the collection of mortuary statistics, in Victoria, last year, although the city of Victoria was mentioned in the list of names given by him. Although our mortality is very small, we are desirous that the rest of the Dominion should know the health and the state of our climate, and we think an officer should be appointed for that purpose, as in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. McLELAN. In the margin, it is stated that the position was not filled.

Mr. MILLS. Who is at the head of this Mortuary Branch now?

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquiries and let you know.

For collecting and compiling agricultural, indus-trial, and other statisticts in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and also for acquiring and compiling such statistics elsewhere.......$20,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. This was a subject we discussed a little, last time, and I presume, as this is a revote, the Minister has not done anything. It is a very important vote, and met with cheerful acceptance from this side of the House last Session. 1 am sorry that nothing has been done, and I should like to know, as I suppose some plan has been adopted, what the plan is for expending this money.

Mr. McLELAN. The statistics are proposed to be gathered through the officers of the Government of Manitobs, and through the officers of the Department of Agriculture, resident in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and to be returned monthly.

Mr. BLAKE. If that is all, why was it not done? We gave the vote a year ago.

Mr. CARON. It has been done.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it has been done without any expenditure, and you do not want any more money.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been an expenditure of $2,840 during the past season?

Mr. BLAKE. With what result?

Mr. McLELAN. The returns were laid upon the Table of the House some time ago.

Mr. BLAKE. If $2,849 has produced the result, what does the Minister want $20,000 for?

Mr. McLELAN. To enlarge the system, and get more frequent and more correct information, if possible.

Mr. BLAKE. I stated when this vote was taken last time that I thought the Minister who had brought down a Mr. VAIL. The hon. Minister has not yet stated proposal which was going to involve a present charge and whether the arms were found to be in good order. No the creation of a new branch of his office, should lay before Parliament a plan or system upon which he intended to expend that money; that it was his business to have matured that plan and brought it before us, so that we might understand whether his proposals were workable and could meet with our commendation. The hon, gentleman who is Minister of the Department declined to bring forward any plan at all. It appeared to be wholly experimental, though he has had a year, and in one case two years, to work upon. Now we get no more information on that subject at all. We do not understand intelligently what the matured plan is. Amongst the things I would like to know in regard to the item agricultural, industrial and other statistics in Manitoba and the North-West, is it intended to expend any portion of this money in procuring any statement with reference to emigration into that country, or the population in Manitoba and the North-West Territories?

Mr. McLELAN. Not under this vote. I will explain to the hon. gentleman that all the Provincial officors were employed in making these returns, and that a certain number of the officers of the Department had also been employed in making monthly returns. These have been laid on the Table in manuscript. It is proposed that some system will be devised during the next year, and that the present returns and those of the succeeding year will require the whole of the sums asked for for their publication.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item under the asterisk, "for registration of births, marriages and deaths, Quebec" which is said in the margin not to be shown in last year's Estimates?

Mr. McLELAN. There is a Statute existing under which this sum is paid and under which these returns are procured from the Auditor-General. They have always been paid for and not shown for in this form; they are shown in the Appropriation Accounts.

MILITIA,

Mr. CASEY. What supervision is exercised over the location of the armouries? Is there any inspection to see whether they are fireproof or not?

Mr. CARON. The greatest possible supervision is exer-cised over them. In the small towns, the armouries are generally connected with the drill shed. In Montreal, Quebec and other large cities, they are under the care of our armourers.

Mr. VAIL. Are the arms in a better condition than they formerly were. The General in command reported that, particularly in Quebec, the arms were in a very bad state. When I was in the Department we engaged two or three armourers to do some work on them. I should like to know whether there is any report on the state of the arms in the rural districts.

Mr. CARON. Since the hon. gentleman has ceased to be Minister of Militia, there has been a wonderful improvement. If he will refer to the Report laid on the Table he will find that the armouries have been looked after very carefully, and by competent men.

Mr. CASEY. Are the arms insured?

Mr. CARON. No; the Government are their own insurers.

Mr. CASEV. The Government, I think, would find it to their advantage to insure them, as many of the drill sheds are old wooden buildings.

doubt the hon. gentleman was very glad to be able to make that statement, because it gave him an opportunity for possible, and if their clothing is worn out, they do not take spending money, and of which the Committee has not yet the same trouble to keep themselves in an efficient state as received a satisfactory account.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman well knows that inspections are made twice a year by the Brigade-Majors, reports are sent in, and I am able to say that those reports are satisfactory.

59. Allowance for drill instruction...... $40,000 00 Mr. CASEY. This is practically the allowance for

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I have no hesitation in saying that as a general rule this allowance is a farce. There is no drill given in the rural battalions except those which are called upon to go to camp, from year to year, and in that case instruction is given while they are in camp, and the officers are paid to do it at one time. I confess that it was largely owing to the absurdity of having to sign receipts for cheques received for instruction, when no drill instruction was given, when no drill instruction was expected, that I was induced to resign my position on the force. This money is simply an allowance to captains, which is intended to be used and which it is known will be used, for some other purpose. In my case it was handed over for the purposes covered by the previous vote, and it went to the sergeant who looked after the rooms. Some captains gave it towards the band fund, and in some cases it was given for purposes altogether different from the drill fund. If it is intended as an assistance to the officers, in meeting the expenses which they are called upon to incur, I think it should be so stated; but to give the money nominally for drill instruction, when it is known that no drill instruction is given, is so absurd that I think it should be discontinued. I do not say that the money should not be given, but I say that it should not be given under this head. If the hon, gentleman gave it ostensibly as an allowance for officers, or for the care of rooms, or to the band fund, instead of its nominal object, I should not object to it.

Mr. CARON. Under the regulations which have already been followed, I think it would be a great injustice to deprive the rural battalions of the drill instruction required. The hon. gentleman knows that companies going into camp receive $40, while those not going into camp receive $20. I think this is money well invested, because they require the instruction.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that the money is used for a certain purpose. I do not propose that the money should be taken away, but I say it is not used for drill instruction, because no drill instruction is given.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). The hon. member for Elgin and myself reside in adjoining constituencies, and in the rural constituency for which I speak, they are drilled regularly, and they are in such a condition that they are able to fire without killing a cow. I am also happy to state that, from time to time, they select men from their company to go and compete with adjoining companies, and that they are in an excellent state at the present moment. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, that even in the battalion to which he belonged, the efficiency is much better than when he belonged to it. I think it is desirable that the money should be expended, and expended in this way. A good deal of pains is taken with the men, and the men take a great deal of care in rendering themselves as efficient as possible. I say, however, that I do not think the men have been as well clothed latterly as they should have been. say that, taking the amount voted into consideration, the Department should have furnished better clothing. The and I do so again now. There is a great deal of unfairness volunteers, as we know, take great pride in being as neat as if they were better clothed. Taking into account the amount expended, however, there is no doubt that it produces as good results as any money spent in the Department.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman speaks with great positiveness as to the Militia in the rural districts. The hon. gentleman lives in London, and I do not know that he has any special facilities for knowing the condition of the volunteers in the rural districts.

Mr. MACMILLAN. Except that I take the trouble and you don't.

Mr. CASEY. Except that none of the rural companies have drilled, except at the regular annual drill.

Mr. MACMILLAN. Take the case of Dorchester, and a number of other places.

Mr. CASEY. Well, I cannot say as to that. I only know the peculiar circumstance that that information never reached me, although I live near those points. In fact, in my constituency, there is not, and never has been, regular company drill, and I have never heard that any other rural districts have it, so that the county of Middlesex must be a perfect oasis of drill amidst a wild desert of inefficiency. The hon. gentleman has been pleased again to resurrect the celebrated cow. I have allowed it to be resurrected several times this Session without saying anything about it That cow has been dead now three or four years, and I am afraid that she is really not in a very odoriferous condition to be resurrected. But, in all seriousness, this money does not really secure drill instruction, which is secured in the camps, and in those almost alone, so far as the rural districts are concerned, and this money is actually paid for a different purpose from that for which it is put down.

Mr. CARON. It is paid on the certificate of the Brigade-Major.

Mr. CASEY. Well, that goes as a matter of course. I know the Brigade-Major to have certified when there has been no company drill; and he looked upon the rule with reference to it as a legal fiction, which everybody understood, and it is so looked upon by the officers of the battalion. It should be put under its proper heading.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I have no desire to oppose this vote. While there might be a good deal of exception taken to it, I do not think it is the most objectionable vote taken in the Militia estimates. I rise to give my explanation of the case of the Middlesex battalion referred to by the hon. member for East Middlesex. From my personal knowledge, in the ten years in which I have had some acquaintance with the battalion in question, I have never known a single company to turn out, except in the years when they were called out for battalion drill. I have had the honour to hold a commission in that battalion for about ten years, and I think I would have known the fact had a company turned out for drill at any time during that period. But it is known that the money expended is not supposed to represent the actual amount of drill which is undergone; it is supposed to represent the amount of exertion the captain puts forth to keep his company in order, and the purpose mentioned for which this sum is voted is only the ostensible purpose, and not the real purpose. The companies never turn out for drill, other than at the times when they are mustered to drill in battalion, and it is well that the Committee should know it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Last year, I took occasion to question very seriously the manner in which this money is paid, about it; it is given irrespective altogether of whether the officer commanding a company earns it or not. The man who does his duty is placed on the same footing as the man who does not. This evil could be remedied by adopting a regulation that when a battalion goes to camp, as every battalion ought to do every year, a short examination should be made by some staff officer, appointed for the purpose, to ascertain whether the officers of companies had attended to drill during the year, according to a certain proportion previously fixed upon, and whether he had brought his men to the camp in a proper degree of efficiency. This could be done without any loss of time, and without any trouble or expense. There ought to be payment according to results, not only with regard to the officer commanding a company, but with regard to the men enrolled in it, and those men who have attained a certain standard of efficiency should not be placed on the same footing as those who are recruits. The great evil of our force is its want of stability. What we want is not to bring a certain number to the camp, but that the men will remain in the force for the term for which they are enrolled. If that were done, the force would attain both greater efficiency and greater stability. No officer should be entitled to this grant for drill instruction, who has not done anything to earn it during the year. There are captains of companies who never see their men, and know nothing about them from one year's end to the other, but who are placed on the same footing as those who keep their men together, and see that they have a certain amount of drill during the year. The Minister of Militia could regulate this matter by a Departmental Order, to the effect that no money shall be paid to any officer who goes to the camp without having performed a certain standard, be it high or low, which he lays down. In that way, a distinction will be drawn between the officer who does his duty and the one who does not.

Mr. VAIL. I am not disposed to find much fault with this vote. As the hon. member for West Elgin points out, it is really not pay for drill instruction. It is considered rather as a sort of perquisite for the captain of a company, who is subject to some expense and is intended to be an encouragement to him to keep his company up. I think we might fairly allow this vote to pass, because it is money spent in the interest of the force, and is of some value.

Mr. FISHER. Although the returns may be quite correct as to the number of men who come up for drill instruction, injustice has been done, in some instances, to certain individuals, in regard to the payment of this sum. The hon. Minister of Militia, a few minutes ago, said that the companies' corps in the rural districts were drilled. In the district from which I come, it is not known that the rural companies are drilled, except on such occasions as they go to camp. In the instance of a battalion in my own county, which went to camp last summer, this pay has been with held from three captains of companies of that battalion, in consequence, I believe, of the recommendation of the Major-General in command, Major General Luard, which is contained on page four:

"36. (11th) Pay.—The sad weakness of many of the companies attending the camps, in spite of orders issued, establishes the necessity for doing something to induce men to act up to their promises at errollment and attend camp when ordered. To give more pay is one method. As this has already been done as regards officers and noncommissioned officers, I hope it may also be done for the men. When it is remembered that a dollar a day is by no means a high wage for a labouring man, and that the rural militiaman who comes to camp has frequently to pay a substitute on his farm, an increase to the present pay of the Militia appears reasonable. Another method might be to stop drill pay from Captains whose companies do not come to camp in fair numbers, should also be given as to the date of the camp, so that the men may make arrangements for their labour at home to be done by others during their absence."

I find that, as I said, the pay of three captains of the battalion was stopped, I believe, in consequence of the fact that they came to camp with small companies. I understand from the hon. Minister of Militia that that is the case. I think that is an injustice to those officers. In the case of two of them, with whose work I am personally familiar, I know that they spent from a week to ten days before the drill commenced at St. John's camp in doing their utmost to get the men to come to camp, but at the time the men were earning $1.50 per day with board at home and could not be induced to go to camp for 50 cents per day. Some men who had enlisted for the service and were bound to go, ran away and could n t be found simply because they could get better wages at home than they could in camp. It is, consequently, an injustice, because the Department will not pay the men sufficiently to attend camp, that these officers should be made to suffer. The work they performed was really heavier than if they had drilled their own companies at home. If this is the only reason for stopping this pay, and it is the only reason I can see by the report, such injustice should be remedied and those officers should have their pay given to them, as it was not their fault that the companies were short at camp.

Mr. CASEY. I think this money should be paid under the heading for which it is actually used. It should be given as a gratuity to the captains of the companies and be stated as a perquisite, so that the House should know what this money is paid for.

Mr. FISHER Has the Department adopted the r commendation of General Luard as a General Order.

Mr. CARON. The very case to which the hon. gentleman referred proves the view I have taken is the correct one. He said that three captains who did not turn out full companies did not receive the money which is guaranteed by the Government in that case. This shows that we make a difference between companies that are drilled up to a proper standard and those that are not. I think that is quite right.

Mr. FISHER. The other companies in that same battalion had not gone through any drill whatever till they came into the camp.

Mr. CARON. We have the certificates.

Mr. FISHER. That may be, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that in my county no company belonging to that battalion has done any drill whatever except in the camp.

Mr. CARON. I will look into it.

Mr. FISHER. Moreover, this is a gratuity in regard to the captains, and if it is to be given to one it ought to be given to all these corpanies that were short of a few men; it was not that their dril was bad or that their captains did not know their, drill; nothing of the kind; they simply found it impossible in consequence of the small pay given, to get the full complement of men.

Mr. CASEY. This shows the evil of which I was speaking, of having a legal fiction of this kind, which has deceived even the Minister. He has been actually under the impression that drill instruction was given. On this occasion there was a special report of the Major-General, and in consequence of that report, this drill instruction money was docked. But there is nothing to show that other companies have been equally deficient and still this drill money was given.

Mr. PAINT. I have been fifteen years an officer in the Militia, and a captain who cannot keep his company together does not deserve to have a company or to receive this drill money. I never had any trouble in keeping my company together with full numbers.

Mr. VAIL. I observe that the Minister of Militia did not expend the whole $40,000 last year, but only $37,000. If the statement made by my hon. friend behind me is correct, that some companies have been paid that did not perform any more service than those referred to, and the Minister has some the money in hand, he should enquire into these cases, and if they are entitled to it, pay them.

Mr. FISHER. I can assure the hon. gentleman who spoke just now that, if those officers to whom I have alluded were wealthy men, they would have been glad to keep up their companies and supplement the miserable pay the Government of the country is giving to the Militia; but being, unfortunately for themselves and the service, not rich men, but men who work and earn their living from day to day on the farms on which they live, they are not in a position to do so, they are not in the position that city volunteer officers so often are. The consequence of such action as the Government has taken on this occasion is, and will be, that these officers will resign, their companies will be disbanded, and probably the whole regiment.

Mr. CASEY. The member for North Lanark (Mr. Haggart) brought up an instance of a company which appeared on parade at the Cobourg camp. He said: "He finds that some companies—"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is not in order, as he is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. CASEY. The fact has been brought to the notice of this House and the hon. Minister, that a company appeared at the Cobourg camp with one man and the full complement of officers, and that this man was utterly incompetent in the way of drill, for he was unable to perform the first operation in the way of forming fours, and this company——

Mr. DALY. 1 rise to a point of order. I do not think the hon. member for East Elgin is talking to the question before the Committee.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. member for East Elgin was not speaking.

Mr. CASEY. I have called the attention of the Minister to this fact, that the company appeared, being a unit. I want to enquire of the Minister of Militia if the captain of this unique company was docked of his drill pay in consequence of the peculiar appearance put in.

59. Drill pay, and other incidental expenses connected with the drill and training of the Militia......$250,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What disposition does the Minister of Militia propose to make with respect to the troops that he will call out this year under this sum, and how many does he propose to employ?

Mr. CARON. This vote is required for the payment of annual drill of city corps and brigades of garrison artillery, with pay or rank without rations. About 9,000 men and 505 horses, twelve days drill at headquarters, $$2,380; brigade camps, &c., pay of rank and rations, forage and transport, 1,222 horses, 10,000 officers and men, at an average of $1,10 each, $11,000 per day, $132,000; transport, at an average of $3 each man, $30,000; contingencies, such as rents of camp grounds, erection of rifle butts, &c., about $5,620; making for 17,000 officers and men and 1,727 horses, for twelve days' drill, $250,000.

Mr. VAIL. You do not drill half the force.

Mr. CARON. A little more than half.

Mr. VAIL. You have 45,000 men.

Mr. CARON. No; 37,000.

Mr. LISTER. Have any steps been taken to ascertain the number of men who drill this summer who drilled two years ago? As I understand the men are enlisted for three years, and are drilled biennially. It would be important to ascertain how many men appear a second time for drill.

Mr. CARON. We have done so to a certain extent, and men to remain in the service and become proficient. we have had some reports sent in, stating the number of Another point I wish to mention is, that the arms the men Mr. VAIL.

recruits, and the men who have been drilling for two successive camps.

Mr. LISTER. Can the Minister state what is the proportion?

Mr. CARON. I cannot now. It was not general, but we did get reports, and I mean to have it ascertained to a greater extent.

Mr. LISTER. I think it is understood that very few who go out once go out a second time. The way the volunteer force is at present, as far as the Active Militia is concerned, not taking into consideration the infantry companies and the batteries, it is a perfect waste of money. We have had evidence this evening that through the country the compaanies are not drilled at all. The only drill the militiamen receive is such drill as they get at the battalions, and, owing to the small pay the volunteers receive, it is in many cases impossible for the officers to fill up their companies, and if they do succeed, a very large proportion of the companies are filled up by young, inexperienced men, who have never drilled before, and probably never will again, and the whole money spent on these annual drills is actually thrown away. This is growing to be a very large charge upon the country. From about $500,000 a few years ago, it has grown to be something over $1,000,000. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that, under the management of the Minister of Militia, we are not only having an Active Militia force, but the nucleus of a small army, adding very considerably to the cost to the country. I say it is a perfect waste of money. If the Militia were called upon to-morrow it would be impossible to get sufficient men to make an effectual defence of the country, and this will continue as long as the present system con-tinues. I can only repeat what I said last Session, that, previous to 1818, gentlemen opposite told the militiamen and volunteers throughout the country that, if they retarned to power, the pay the men were receiving would be increased. I do not now know how many men voted for them on that account, but that was the promise. We know that many of these men are clerks in stores, receiving all of them greater pay than this. It is no inducement whatever for these men to turn out to camp, and if they can evade the service at all, they will evade it, and new men are put in to fill up the companies. Those men never go out the second time. The twelve or thirteen days' drill given to them is not sufficient at all to give them any information as to their dutics as soldiers, and they have no drill at home, and the consequence is that our volunteer force to-day is a body of raw recruits who actually know nothing at all. My hon. friend from Brome (Mr. Fisher) called attention to the fact that the pay the men were receiving now was quite inadequate. I might say the staff officers have had their pay increased, and every other officer in the Militia service, except the volunteers themselves. Now, Sir, I recognize the fact that in order to increase the pay of the Militia as we now have it, would necessitate a considerably larger vote than we are making, but I think it would be much better to double the pay the men are now receiving, and reduce the force to 15,000 or 18,000 men, and in that way we would offer sufficient inducement to young men to join the Militia force, and get them to go out, at all events, during these drills. I think, also, that men ought to be drilled every year; that biennia! drill is not sufficient; that by the time they have been called out the second time, the chances are that they have forgotten the instruction they received the first drill. I could not support any movement towards increasing this Militia expenditure, but I believe it would be well for the Minister to consider the propriety of reducing the force and increasing the pay, and to offer other inducements to men to remain in the service and become proficient.

now have are ten or fifteen years behind the age. They are of no use, compared with the modern arm with which soldiers of other countries are armed. Another point is in relation to the medicine furnished to the troops. At the camp at London last season all the medicine could be bought up for $5. I know, as a matter of fact, that men who are receiving only 50 cents a day had to go to the city and pay more than $1.50 to buy medicine for themselves. The officers did not have it, and it was not there for them. The officers have spoken to me on the subject, and I think I have only to mention the matter to the Minister to have that fault remedied. When men are taken away, as these volunteers are, to London and other places, the change in living, the season of the year, and many other things, combine to bring on sickness of a tem-porary character. They have to be attended to, but unless the medicine chest is ample and well supplied, these men have to pay for what is required out of their own pockets, or the offices have to pay it for them. I have been spoken to on this matter both by officers and by men, and I feel sure that I have only to bring it to the notice of the Minister to have it attended to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This is the most important item of the Militia vote. I agree with a great deal that has been said by the last speaker. We know there is no member of this House more thoroughly alive to the needs of the men and the force than the Minister himself. I am certain that if he had it in his power he would lose no time in taking measures that the whole force, or a great majority of it, should be drilled every year, and until that is done it must be admitted that a great deal of our money is wasted. With regard to the pay of the men, I may remark that it is impossible to pay men who join the active force the same ratio of wages that is paid to those in civil pursuits, nor do I think it is necessary for us to do so, because I believe there are many men who are willing to enter the force and remain in it for much less pay than they would get in civil pursuits. But the great evil of the present system is this, that the recruit and the drilled man are placed upon the same footing. What we can do without incurring a much greater expense is to place the drilled man upon a better footing than the recruit. As I said on a former occasion, with regard to the allowances given to captains of companies, we ought to give payment according to resultsthat all the men who go to camp and who have attained a certain degree of efficiency should get increased pay as compared with those who have not attained that efficiency. The same examination would test whether the captain had, during the year, qualified himself to receive an allowance, and would also test the number of men in his own company who were entitled to receive pay as efficient. That is done in the old country, where every man in the volunteer force is placed on the same footing, and after he has attained a certain qualification he is entitled to a cortain capitation grant. That might be done in our force. Every man who goes to camp, and who can show by examination before staff officers that he is in a certain position as regards annual drill, should be placed in a better position than the man who has just come to-day and may go to-morrow. We want more stability in our force, we want to give it more reality, and in order to induce the men to remain in the force, we must put the man who has attended last year, and who is willing to attend this year, and who intends to attend next year, in a better position than the man who mercly joins to-day because it happens to suit him and will be away next drill day. The force can be made more affinition of the mercet by writing approximation. be made more efficient in this respect by putting every corps, when it comes to camp, through a certain course of examination, testing not only the officers but the men, and labour, can understand at what time the camp will be held, if a certain proportion have attained a certain degree of and that every man belonging to the camp will be expected efficiency, the captain should get a better allowance, because to attend.

it will be evident that he has done something to earn it, and the men who have attained that degree of efficiency ought to get additional pay as compared with those who have not. That will also give an extra inducement to men to join the force. The cause of weakness is not so much the amount of pay as the unfair way in which it is distributed. Then we ought to arrive at that position in which the whole force will be drilled every year. There is undoubtedly a great waste of money at present. I would like to call the atten-tion of the Minister to the consideration, that while the old Provinces at present are naturally expected to bear the chief burden of defence of this country, we are forming great Provinces in the west where the maintenance of a certain force will become not only desirable but necessary. We cannot therefore expect the force of this country always to remain in the same proportion to the population that it is at present. Therefore, if we are further to incur a greater expenditure upon Militia, we must apportion it according to population, and if we extend our force, as we must do in the North West, we must also look for a certain diminution of it in the old Provinces, all of which tends to a rearrange. ment of our forces in regard to the amount of money to be expended. Until we arrive at the conclusion to make such an expenditure as will drill the whole force, our system must be considered very incomplete. One of the greatest troubles of the officers commanding regiments is, that they never know when their regiments will be called out for service. Upon that point there ought to be no doubt. Every officer commanding a battalion ought to know that upon a certain day in a certain month his regiment will go to camp. If that is understood, when employers of labour make contracts, they will know beforehand that such a man belongs to the force and that at such a period he will have to loose so many days in camp. But now, when a man makes a contract at so many dollars per month, and when the man comes to him and says that he must go to camp for a certain number of days, the employer very likely will object to losing his services and may think that he has been unfairly dealt with. But, the man is under orders to go, and he has to go or else he is responsible for the penalties. But, if it was known beforehand that he was going, then no such misunderstanding could arise; both could be aware of the fact and make their contract accordingly. I have been asked by several persons connected with my regiment: "Are we going to camp this year?" I can give them no answer on this point. But there cught to be no uncertainty. It ought to be known absolutely that a certain corps is going to drill at a certain period. I desire also to call the Minister's attention to the fact that a large amount of money might be saved by a reorganiza-tion of the military districts. The second military district in which I am, extends from the north shore of Georgian Bay to Lake Erie. Men are called on to spend an unnecessary amount of time in going to and from camp; it is contrary to all strategetical considerations, and great inconvenience as well as loss of time arises. Another consideration is this: Under the present system, the rural and city battalions are separated from each other, not only as regards drill, but in other respects, so as to place them on an entirely different footing. Country battalions never see suburban battalions, and vice versa. This should not be, and camps should be so arranged, and might be so arranged, that when a district is called to go to camp, the rural battalions should be called on to take part in the movements. In that way a certain sympathy would be called forth between them. The great thing, however, to be arrived at is, absolute certainty as to the time and duration of the drill, so that both em. ployers and employees, when they make a contract for labour, can understand at what time the camp will be held,

COMMONS DEBATES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suggest that the item be passed, and the remaining discussion be postponed until Concurrence, and with that understanding no more items will be proceeded with this evening.

Resolutions to be reported; Committee to sit again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 26th March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RECEPTION OF REPORTS ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, as the time for the reception of reports f om Committees on Private Bills will expire to-morrow, the same be extended until Tuesday, the 1st April next, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals, and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr.WHITE(Cardwell), in moving the adoption of the Third Report (page 1,022) of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the present Session, said: This report simply recommends the payment to Mr. Mathewson, who is one of the type-writers in the reporting office, of the sum of $130 for the Session for the work of taking care of the caligraphs. He is a man of very great experience, of some mechanical genius, and he has been employed in that work, and I believe has saved much more than this amount. The report also recommends the obtainment of another caligraph, in case of any accident to any of them, as there is now the exact number which is required for the amanuan es.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what is the prime cost of a caligraph?

Mr. WHITE. I really cannot state. I think it is something over $100.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought it was something like $70 or $80, and, if so, it appears to me that we are paying for repairs the price of two caligraphs every year.

Mr. WHITE. $100, I am told, is the price of the caligraphs; but they are a very delicate machine and liable to get out of order, and, consequently, somebody is needed on the spot who is able to repair them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Might I ask the chairman of the Committee if 1 read the report aright, which recommends that a new arrangement be entered into with our reporting staff?

Mr. WHITE. That is another report. Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. COURSOL. Do I understand that the translators are included in this report?

Mr. WHITE. This is not the report to which the hon. gentleman refers. I am going to move the second report in a moment.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Scriver, that the Fourth Report (page 1,022) of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Report of the Debates of the House for the present Session, be adopted. This report is of a somewhat more serious character. It recommends that the reporters be created permanent officers of the House, and that they get an annual salary of $2,000. Now, I am well aware that when we commenced the Hansard we obtained the services of the reporters at $1,000 a year-or, rather, for the Session-the understanding at that time being that the reporters would find employment during the recess of Parliament by which they would be enabled to supplement the $1,000. It is due, however, to say that the leading members of the staff, those who were really the most valuable members of the staff, always protested from the first that that salary was not sufficient, and they accepted the position in order to establish on a permanent basis this system of official reporting, and to illustrate by their work that such a system could be made a success. Subsequently it was found that the services of those gentlemen could not at all be retained at that salary, even with the aid of such outside work as they could get during the recess, and the Committee recommended an arrangement by which a progressive scale would be adopted, that is to say, they were to receive $100 extra, each Session, until the sum reached the maximum of $1,500 a Session, the payment being for the Session. That arrangement was found, however, to be practically inoperative; because, for instance, when we obtained the services last year of Mr. Richardson, one of the reporters, a gentleman who has had a very large experience and whose skill as a stenographer, as well as his general information-which is really almost as important as mere stenographic skill-made him a very desirable reporter, in order to secure his services we had to give him the larger sum. I may say the work of reporting the debates here is really very much more difficult than the ordinary work of reporting for newspapers. A mere mechanical stenographer has very little chance of success; and I believe I am right in stating that even the $1,500 has failed to secure applications from those who have had the largest experience as newspaper reporters and who would be most valuable at the table. Now I think the House will admit that if we are to have a system of official reporting at all, it is very desirable that the gentlemen who are engaged in that work should be of such skill, of such general intelligence, and of such general information and education, besides being good shorthand writers, as would enable us to have, at any rate, a reasonably correct report as the first report submitted to the House. Members of the House know that in the past, it has sometimes been a very serious matter with them, to find that, not the whole of the report, but certain takes-which is a technical term-were so confused and incorrect that really members were not represented as saying at all what they intended to say, and sometimes unfortunately an impression might be derived from the reports which was the opposite from what they intended to convey. Under these circumstances it becomes of the greatest consequence that the gentlemen who are engaged at these tables should be men of undoubted skill, and that we should pay them such a sum as would enable us always to secure the highest skill in the stenographic art. In the first place it was thought when a smaller salary was paid that these gentlemen would be able to obtain employment during recess; practical experience, however, has shown that there is very little of that kind cf work to be obtained. A system of law reporting by official stenographers has now been established in the courts both of Ontario and Quebec, and I suppose in the Lower Provinces, but I do not know how that is-and a good deal of the work which the official reporters at this table might formerly have done they are now precluded from doing. Then it has been complained by the regular newspaper reporters-and I think that complaint is not altogether foundationless-that the official reporters who are engaged in this House during the Session were in the habit during the recess of taking work at really a mere nominal cost, greatly to the prejudice of the regular newspaper reporters and greatly to their injury; and I think that that complaint has very good ground to rest upon. I am quite well aware that this means a considerable increase to the cost of official reporting, but if we are to have official reporting at all it is quite clear we must secure the best possible talent, and I have no hesitation in saying—and I say it as having some practical knowledge of matters of this kindthat I do not believe that there is to be found a staff anywhere in the world, in any legislative body, who have done their work better than the staff we have at the table at this time. It must be remembered that mistakes will sometimes occur, but it must also be remembered that many members do not speak very distinctly or loudly, and that sometimes they speak in the midst of noises in the House, which render it very difficult for the reporter to catch precisely what they are saying; but speaking of the reports as a whole I believe they will compare favourably with similar work done anywhere.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE. I think we cannot do better, if we are to have these official reports, than to adopt this report. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the question as to whether we should have official reports or not is, of course, an entirely different quest on; but we have to remember that unless we have official reports, sitting, as we do, in the city of Ottawa, we must make up our minds to have no full reports of the proceedings of Parliament at all. Certain hon. gentlemen, leading members of the House. might be able to get their speeches published in full in the party newspapers on either side, and tolerably full reports of the proceedings on particular occasions might be made; but so far as the House at large is concerned, we would practically shut ourselves off from having reports of any kind whatever-whether that would be an unmixed evil or not is, of course, another ques-tion. But it does seem to me that, building up as we are the history of this country, our discussions in Parliament from year to year, forming the record of our doings, it is worth t) the people of the country the sum of money in-volved to keep up these reports. In the report which was presented a statement made by the stenographers themselves was embodied, as that contained in fact the whole argument upon the subject. It will be seen that the amount now proposed to be given is rather less than the salaries prevailing in most of the States of the American Union. The House of Representatives have seven official stenographers, each of whom receives $5,000 a year; and in the United States, as everyone knows, the House of Representatives does not sit at night as a general rule, and the practice prevails there of gentlemen handing in their speeches, which does not obtain here, thus relieving very much the actual labour of the stenographers. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. COURSOL moved in amendment:

That the report be not now adopted, but be referred back to the Committee with instructions to amend it so as to ensure to the translators of the Hunsard, salaries more in accordance with the work they have to perform.

He said : In proposing this amendment to refer the report back to the Committee, my intention is not to advocate a repeal of the suggestion contained in the report respecting the stenographers salaries-far from it-and it is also not my intention that anything should be said or deduced from my language or motion that might be considered as unfavourable to the present staff of reporters. Everyone knows the admirable manner in which the reporters have done their duty. They are all men of intelligence and education, they are perfect gentlemen, and well up to their duty, and the work they have given to the House and the country is a credit to themselves and those who employ them. So far as regards the augmentation of their salaries, I have full confidence in the judgment of the members of the Committee selected to deal with this question, and I am willing to support them. I am always prepared to pay whatever amount is fairly earned; and my object is not, as I have said, to oppose any recommendation regarding the reporters, but to secure justice to other employees in the performance of their duties on the Hansard-1 mean the French translators. On the 17th of this month, while presenting this report, the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), chairman of the Committee, made this remark :

"I am quite satisfied that some other method will have to be adopted, because the present method is going to be expensive. I think the Uommittee will probably see whether something cannot be done before the close of the Session, and to recommend some other method to the House.

This is the first year in which the staff of translators have been regular officers. Let us see what the staff will cost: one chief translator at $1,000; four translators at $800, $3,200; two translators, appointed intery, who are to receive $800; proof reader, $400; in all eight employees receiving $5,400. This means an increase of $,400 if we look at it from the standpoint of the amount paid in 1881. Since that year it has been found that by the contract system the work was not properly performed, that the Debates were not regularly issued, and it was therefore decided, and I believe judiciously so, to have the work done by an official staff. If it was proper to have the work done by an official staff. If it was proper to have the work done by contract we might as well say at once that nearly all Government work might be so performed; for there are very few offices in the Civil Service, the work of which might not be done by contract. Why was that not done ? Because though money might be saved the service was inefficient. In 1875 the reporting of the Debates was given out by contract at a cost of $4,500. An official staff was afterward appointed and that system of reporting the Debates of the House has given satisfaction and no one probably is willing to ask for its repcal. But the expenses of that staff have been increasing, and they amount, as I will show presently, to $13,130. As regards the translation the increase is only $1,40°, and yet it is considered enormous by those who would be prepared to give up the system. This year the cost of the reporting will be as follows: Chief reporter, $1,500; six reporters, $1,300 each ; one at $1,100, eight amanuenses at $150 each ; proof-reader, $800, making a total of $12,400. The proposal before the House is to have eight reporters at $2,000 each; eight amanuenses, at $150 each; one proof reader, at $800, one machine repairer, $130, making a total expenditure of about $18,130, being an increase of $5,730 or $330 more than the whole cost of the translation. If you deduct from the $20,000 which is voted for the expense of the Hansard, $18,130 to be paid to the reporters, very little will be left for the translation work. The petition presented by the reporters in their legitimate desire to have an augmentation of salaries, contains the following statement :-

"It is perhaps hard y necessary to point out that our work is of a character commonly described as 'skilled' or 'expert,' and bears no comparison whatever with ordinary clerical or departmental work.

Yet we find that such officers as Olerks of Committees, Translators, Olerks of Votes and Proceedings, Journal Clerks, &c., are paid salaries from $1,500 to $1,800 per Session. It is unnecessary to enter into a comparison between the ardnous and exacting nature of our work and the merely routine character of theirs."

I hope the translation of the Hansard is not comprised in that routine work. Everyone knows that the translation from English into French is work of a most difficult nature. In order to have the English language translated properly this work must be done by men of education, by masters of the language, who are able to give the genius of the language. The translator has to deal with questions of science, art, political economy, civil engineering, and other questions. If he is not well trained and is not a man of education, he cannot possibly make a good translation; and I believe it is a matter of as much interest to the French people of this country to have the Hansard well translated, as it is to the English population to have the English edition efficiently prepared. It is just that the English speakers should be well translated, and their remarks placed before the country in language which will do honour to the country and themselves. We have selected a translating staff, and why? Because it is composed of men of education, nearly all of whom are journalists and men of literature, and we know that, as in the case of the hon. member for Cardwell, journalists are always ornaments in this House, men who distinguish themselves by their talents and acquirments; and no doubt many of the young men of the translating staff, if they had seats on the floor of the House, would do honour to themselves. I think it is but fair that the translators should not be left in that position. I think that these men who were brought here a year ago should not be set adrift and left out in the cold because it is necessary to supplement the salaries of the reporting staff. I admit with. out hesitation that the Hansard reporters ought to be well paid. I am aware of the labour they perform, for we are day by day witnesses of the great work devolving upon them. The translators are kept closed up in their rooms, they have a great deal of important work to do which cannot be done by the help of machinery, which is not done by sound, or in a mechanical way, but by their own labour, and they have to continue that work for months after the Session is over. It is impossible for seven men to do all that work, which is done by the eight men who are on the reporting staff, aided by their amanuenses and by mechanical appliances. Now, Sir, I hope, and I have no doubt the House will see to it, that the French translators shall be properly dealt with, and not left in a position which will compel them to abandon their duties - duties which they like, and which they expected, like the reporters, would make a career for them, so as to render it an object to them to make themselves perfectly masters of their work, so as to make a living upon which they could depend. As to the contract system, I object to it as applied to the French reporters, while the English reporters are appointed on an official system. I would ask that equal justice be done to all, and I have no doubt that the House will see that it is done.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the motion he has made as an amendment to the report, because the question of the translation of the Debates is, at this moment, engaging the attention of the Committee, and they hope soon to present a report expressly upon the subject, when the motion will be more applicable to the report itself. The hon. gentleman seems to draw a distinction between the French reporters with the English reporters. There are two French reporters standing exactly in the same position with the English reporters, and they are to receive the same salary.

Mr. COURSOL. I do not mean the reporters, I mean the translators.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). So far as the translation is concerned that is rather a different subject from the reporting, and I think it would be better to discuss it on a report relating to that matter. There are on the Committee three French gentlemen who are thoroughly familiar with what is required with regard to the French translation, and as they are present I think I may say that it has always been the desire of the Committee to meet their views both as to the appointment of the translators, the remuneration they are to receive, and all matters connected with their work. I think the hon. gentleman may fairly leave it to the Committee to consider the whole question and to make a report upon it, because it is quite clear from the experience we have had with the present system, with the present number of translators-we may have to increase the number though we may continue the system --the present number will not enable us to do what is the earnest desire of the Committee should be done, that is, to give to the French members of the House their corrected, translated report at as early a date as possible. One of the misfortunes of the system was the want of a sufficient number of translators, and I believe the French copy is now considerably behind. I am sure that cannot be the desire of anyone,-it certainly is not the desire of the Committee. The Committee desires that the French copy should be in the hands of the French members at the earliest possible moment, and I am sure the House can trust the Committee, constituted as it is, to take up the whole question in such a way as to do fair justice to the translators, and what is perhaps more important in some respects, to the French members of the House. 1 hope the hon, gentleman will consent to withdraw his motion as an amendment to the report and allow the report to go. We will have a meeting in the beginning of the week when the whole question of the translating will come up, and we will then be able to discuss it.

Mr. COURSOL. After the explanations of the chairman of the Committee I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. DESJARDINS As one member of the Debates Committee, I may be allowed to bear testimony to the correctness of what has been said by the chairman of the Committee, the hon. member for Cardwell We have always been met with a full and earnest desire to do justice to the French part of the system by those connected with the Committee. As has been said, the question of having a permanent staff was discussed years ago, and this year that system is on its trial. It has been found that the four translators who were appointed at the beginning of the Session were insufficient, and two others were added, and besides the assistance of the French reporters has been secured in the work of translation. Now, we have already recommended $2,000 more towards the expense of the French translation than the same work could be done under the contract system. We expected that by adding to the cost and changing the system we would obtain more effective work, and that the French members would receive more satisfaction by the more prompt and regular issue of the French translation. That, however, has not been done yet. The last report the House adopted was to meet that requirement, but we are only trying an experiment, and if it is found that six or soven members of this staff are not sufficient I am sure the Committee will be disposed to meet the exigencies of the question.

Mr. AMYOT. I would have much preferred if the whole question of Hansard had been brought forward at once. I do not see why any difference should be made between the reporters and the translators. The translators require to be as capable men in their occupation as the stenographers themselves, and I find from the figures that the French translators are not treated in the same way as the official reporters at all. I find that the French proof-reader gets only $400, while the English corrector gets $800. I do not see why there should be that difference.

Mr. COURSOL.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will allow me to explain. The English corrector of proof is a very different officer; the French corrector has simply to correct the proofs, but the English corrector has to get up the index of Hansard, has to prepare copies for members, and all that kind of work, which is entirely different.

Mr. AMYOT. There seems to be a certain way of showing why we are treated as inferiors. I do not see why our translators, who are here all the Session, who are the most capable men on the press, should only get $800, and the only remedy which is proposed to that is to increase the numbers. I think the number is sufficient at seven, because they are translating every day as the sheets go before them. but the salary does not seem to me to be sufficient. I concur entirely in the recommendation that $2,000 be paid the stonographers. All capable men should be well paid, and I say that the translators require to be capable men and they should be well paid. I admit that the Committee is very active, but they seem to be afraid to make any suggestions favourable to the French translators, when the question comes up here or before the Committee. I would have preferred that they should have asked the decision of the flouse on the whole matter, and not come here at one time with one class of men, and another time with another class. But after the assurance has been given that these tran lators will be treated well, I have no objection to the withdrawal of the motion. We must understand that in our Province the French Hansard forms part of our history, too, and when we speak here we want to be able to see our sentences not badly or erroneously translated, but so translated that it will not require to be compared with the English version to find out what we may say. We want the Hansard service well performed. I think Canada is rich enough and respects itself enough to have a fair, correct, and good translation of the Debates here. Now we must remember that if we rise to speak in English, it is out of deference to the House, even though we run the risk of annoying members by making mistakes, and getting laughed at and snubbed a little sometimes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. no.

Mr. AMYOT. But we risk speaking in English so that we may be understood by all our fellow members.

Sir IIECTOR LANGEVIN. I will risk myself in speaking English, but I do not think I will be snubbed. I agree with the hon. member for Cardwell that the stenographers, the shorthand reporters, as we call them, should be well paid, because their work is of a very arduous nature, and they must not only be able men, but men acquainted with the matters brought before the House. A man may be a good shorthand reporter; but unless he knows the history of the country, unless he is familiar with current events, and with the measures brought before the House, he will not report correctly. Therefore, these gentlemen require to be well educated; they must be good scholars; and they should be well paid, especially when we see during what long hours they must be at work in the House, and in their office, in order to give us the reports of the Debates on the following day. But, on the other hand, I must say that the translators require also to be good scholars. A good translator must know history, geography and all that takes place; he must have the education of a gentleman, and therefore he must have studied many years before he is competent to come here Not that I wish to institute comparisons. I think it and trans'ate well. Therefore, the translators cannot be is a pity that we should lug in a discussion on this put on a lower level, so far as capacity is concerned, than other topic. It has nothing to do with the present that which the shorthand reporters should occupy. Under report. The present report has to do, not merely with these circumstances, I think their case should be looked English officials, but with French officials also. It has to into and examined; and I think it would be more satisfac- do with the whole stenographic staff, English and French.

tory to all, if, instead of moving the adoption of the report now, my hon. friend from Cardwell would withdraw his motion, leaving the report before the House. Then let the Committee in another report bring the whole matter before the House, so that we may consider the two reports together. I think that would be more satisfactory to all; and I think my hon. friend will see that we should do that. Otherwise, there will be a feeling that the French translators have not been looked after as well as the stenographers. I think the cases of both classes of officers should be considered and dealt with by the House at the same time.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think, in justice to the Committee, it ought to be understood that no complaint has come from the translators of their being insufficiently remunerated, and that the present translators are receiving a greater remuneration than some of them received under the contract system. I am not disposed to institute any comparison as to the amount of work performed, the difficulty of the work, or the qualifications required by either class of officers; but cortainly, so far as the mere labour is concerned, that of the translators is not so severe and exacting as that of the reporters. We learn from the gentleman in charge of the translators, that they are occupied eight or nine hours a day, and that they do their work during the regular hours of the day, whereas the reporters are at work until a late hour of the night or an early hour of the morning.

Mr. BLAKE. After the statement made by the hon, gen tleman who has just sat down, that no representation has been made to the Committee by the translators that their remuneration is inadequate, I think the Minister of Public Works will see that there is no reason for postponing the consideration of this report. It has nothing to do with the question of the remuneration of the translators. A representation has been made to the Committee by one portion of the official staff; the Committee have considered it; and they make a report upon it. Their recommendation is either right or wrong; we should either grant it or refuse it; but it in no way depends on the question whether there ought to be an increase of the empluments of the staff of another branch of the service, who, as it appears from the statement of my hon. friend from Hantingdon, have up to this moment made no suggestion that they ought to get more money. Now, so far as I am aware, public servants are not inapt to point out their rights. If they think they ought to have more remuneration, we are pretty sure to hear it; and as the Committee have not yet heard from the translating staff, I think they are not in the least to be blamed for not having dealt with that matter. I agree with the hon. member for Cardwell and with other hon. members who have spoken as to the high qualifications which are essential to the proper discharge of the duties involved in that branch of the service with which we are now dealing, as well as in that branch to which allusion has been made, the translation. There is no doubt that high powers are required in respect of each. The character of the labour, the extent of it, whether it is day or night work, whether one is so severe as the other or not, the character of the special training required, and other considerations. may arise in deciding what the proper side of remuneration is. For instance, if I were dealing with this ques-tion I would like to enquire what the relative amount of work performed by the translators is to that performed by the ordinary translators of the House, who I think are worked almost the whole year round.

and in a manner in which the Committee has thought just. The case of another portion of the official staff is stated by the hon. member for Montreal East, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse. Well, the Committee say that they are quite prepared to consider that case and to deal with the whole subject. Let them deal with it; but let us, I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Public Works, dispose of the case which is now before us.

Mr. BECHARD. My hon, friend from Bellechasse, if I understood him correctly, said that the members of the Committee seemed to be afraid when the question of the French translators came before the Committee. I think my hon. friend is mistaken : we are not afraid to take up that question. What should we be afraid of? The English members of the Committee have always been most courteous to the French members. But last year we adopted the present system of translating the Debates, because we thought that under it the work would be more efficiently done than before, and this year we are making an experiment of that system. For my part, I think it is a great improvement upon the system we had last year. We have a better translation. It is not a question as to whether we shall have the Debates translated or not. I believe that is a settled question; it is admitted that the Debates must be translated for the benefit of a large portion of the people of Canada, and that being the case, care should be taken to have the work done by the best men. To do the work of translation properly, the service of literary men of the highest order are required. Whenyou read a book translated from English into French, you must notice that it has been translated, not by the first comer, but by a man of ability and great literary power; and the same observation holds good with reference to works translated from French into English. In choosing, last year, the translators of the Debates, we selected men who are in the habit of writing often their own language, who write in the newspapers, and who, therefore, could be relied on as mon most capable of performing this work with the greatest efficiency. To be an editor of, or a writer on a newspaper requires great ability and a thorough good education; and I repeat, therefore, that the translators of the Debates must be men of great ability and learning, and, possessing such qualifications, they ought to be well paid. This question has not come before the Committee. We are making the experiment of a new sys-tem, and when we find out the precise number of translators necessary to do the work efficiently, I am sure the Committee will be united in the opinion that the full number necessary should be appointed, and I am also confident there will be no great division of sentiment in the Committee as to the rewarding in a worthy manner those gentlemen who are appointed to translate the work. It is true that no petition has been received from the French translators for an increase, but should the application be made I am sure the Committee will give such application the greatest consideration.

Mr. CARON. I do not see that any attempt has been made to criticise or blame the action of the Committee. The Committee may have been very judicious in acting as they did, in increasing the pay of the stenographers; no doubt at all the class of men employed reporting the Debates certainly deserve very good remuneration. I think a'so the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Public I think Works that the report be laid on the Table until the other matter can be considered at the same time. It may be that no representations or complaints have been made by the French translators officially in the Committee, but I know that representations have been made by the tran-lators that the remuneration they are getting is below what it should be. My hon. friend has referred to the requirements of the translators in order to fill their position as it should be filled. I must say that the French translators are perfectly qualified for the work; and it seems to me that when the question of increasing the remuneration of the other branches of that service is considered, the claims of the French translators should also be considered. I have no doubt, by allowing the report to stand over, their claim, when the matter is brought under the consideration of the Committee, will be considered and justice done.

Mr. BERGIN. I was very sorry to hear the remarks of the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). In those remarks, he did great injustice to the members of the Debates Committee. The whole Committee without exception have been anxious, from the beginning, that every justice should be done to the French translators and the French stenographers, and to such an extent have we been governed by this feeling, that upon almost every occasion we have left the selection of the French stenographers and translators to the French members of the Committee, knowing full well that they were the best judges of the qualifications of the e gentlemen. The hon. member for Bellechusse seemed to think that no other interest should be consulted in the translation of these Debates than the French interest. Does he forget that most important speeches are made here in English, and that the gentlemen who make them are interested in seeing that the reports of their speeches go correctly translated to the people of Quebec that our French brethren should understand perfectly what we do here, that no weak or incorrect translation of what we say should be presented to them, for we are anxious to stand well in the eyes of the people of Quebec and not to be misrepresented through any paltry cheese paring on the part of the Debates Committee. We have acted throughout with the determination to do full justice both to the English and the French members, and if we have erred at all, it has been perhaps in going beyond what we were absolutely required to do in the interests of the French population. I do not regret, but on the contrary, am most pleased that we did so act, and I think we deserve credit instead of being charged, as we have been by the hon. member for Bellechasse, with being actuated by any other spirit.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). After the statements of the hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Militia, I presume that the sease of the House is that this report should lie on the Table to be dealt with when we bring up another report. 1 rather regret that decision; I think the two subjects are entirely distinct; there is no connection between the two in any shape, but, as the mouthpicce of the Committee, I would like to know if I am correct in assuming that it is the sense of the House, in adopting this suggestion, that the French translators should be paid a higher salary than they are now paid, because that is rather an important question for us to understand. At this moment we have, I believe, applications from three or four gentlemen, each of whom, I think, is quite or about as well qualified for the work as the present translators; that is to say, all have had the same press training, all have been in the habit of writing constantly their own language. These gentlemen are applicants at this moment for employment on the translating staff, and the Committee have never heard from the translators any suggestion that they are dissatisfied with the remuneration they are receiving. The translator before the last who was appointed, Mr. Remi Tremblay, who is an oxceedingly valuable translator, who translates with great fluency both from French into English and from English into French, was a Sessional translator when he was appointed to this position, and as a Sessional translator his remuneration would have been a little over half what he gets for the work he is now engaged on. At the same time, if it is the sense of the House that the French translators should be paid a higher salary than that which has been already recommended to the House and adopted by the House, it is important that the Committee should know that when they come to consider this question. I believe it will require, at the very lowest estimate, eight translators to give the reports as quickly as they ought to be given. The statement made to us the last time we discussed this question was that the translation of three pages was about a good day's work, and in our long sittings we have about thirty pages of Hansard. To get those thirty pages translated would require ten translators, to do the work immediately, but that is not the average, that is of course an exceptional night. When we are in Supply, when we are not engaged in formal debates and lengthy speeches, the Hansard does not extend to thirty pages, and probably seven or eight translators would do the work. The two gentlemen employed as French stenographers are to receive the same salary as the English stenographers, but that is because of the peculiar skill they have, which is a very rare skill, I am sorry to say, even with French journalists, that of being good stenographers, and entitles them to the same remuneration as the English reporters. As a matter of fact, they do much less work at the table, but that is an incident of our condition here. I believe last Session there were only about sixty pages of French speeches in the whole of the Hansard ; that is, sixty pages of speeches delivered in French and reported by the French stenographers; but, as the weakest link is the measure of the strength of a chain, so it requires that there should be more than one reporter, because we may have a night when the debate would be generally in French, and one reporter could not do the work. However, if the sense of the House is that this report should lie upon the Table, and that we should bring in another report increasing the salaries of the French translators, the Committee will probably consider that as an instruction, and will bring in a report in accordance with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It seems to me that the Minister of Public Works made the suggestion he did under a misapprehension of the facts. He took it for granted that the Committee had not considered some question which had been submitted to them for their consideration; but it appears, from the explanations which have been given, that the thing was one not requiring consideration at all, that this report was complete in itself, and, unless the Minister of Public Works still persists in his view, I would object to the withdrawal of the motion; and I would object to the Committee taking an expression of opinion from two or three members as one that absolutely necessitates the raising of the remuneration of these men. The question is one that ought to be considered on its merits, after due consideration, and not forced on the Committee by the expression of opinion of some hon, members. Unless the Minister insists, I personally object to the withdrawal of the motion.

Mr. ROYAL. It is quite likely that what the chairman of the Hansard Committee said a few days ago about the French portion of the Hansard staff, connected with what I deem to be a very unfortunate paragraph in the report of the stenographers, led to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Montreal East (Mr. Coursol) and seconded by the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). What I under-stood the chairman of the Committee to say was that that portion of our business was under consideration, that nothing definite had been decided upon yet with respect to the conditions under which we were to place the staff of French translators. Now, what I think to be a very unfortunate portion of that report is the third paragraph, in which the stenographers state that :

"It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to point out that our work is of a character commonly described as 'skilled' or 'expert,' and bears no comparison whatever with ordinary clerical or departmental work. Yet we find that such officers as Clerks of Committees, Translators, Clerks of Votes and Proceedings, Journal Clerks, &c., are paid salaries varying Team from $1,500 to $1,800 per Session. It is unnecessary to enter into a comparison between the arduous and exacting nature of our work and the merely routine character of theirs."

No doubt, comparisons are odious, and in this case the shorthand reporters might just as well have left out that paragraph of their report. However, I look upon this paragraph, and some few words the chairman of the Committee said the other day as having led to this discussion. For my part, I believe that the work of translation requires a great deal of special training, not only that special training which is necessary to stenographersand I agree with all the hon. members who have preceded me in passing high culogies upon the staff of our reporters, but I believe that they may stand upon their own merits, and I believe the French translators may as well stand upon their own merits. As to the French translators we have just now, I believe that none could be superior to them, but of course you must remember that this is the first year that the new system has been tried, that it is an experiment, that in fact nothing has been decided yet as to whether the system that we have pursued from the beginning of the Session is to go on or not. Therefore, while we state that this matter is under the consideration of the Committee, no member of this House must think that any member of the Committee is ready to share in any injustice being done to any portion of the staff of reporters or translators, and we have the statement of the chairman of the Committee, and the assurance of other members of the Committee, that justice will be done to the shorthand reporters as well as to the French translators. It is unnecessary for me to add anything to what has been said as to the merit of the translation which must go to the country. Being in fact the political history of this country, it is essential that the speeches that are delivered in this House should go to the country correctly and justly and fairly translated, and for that purpose it requires on the part of the translators a good education, it requires them to be scholars in fact, as the hon. the Minister of Public Works has stated. Now, with regard to the suggestion thrown out by the Minister of Public Works, although I look upon this report as being entirely different from the other, yet, if it is the sense of the House that the report should stand until a supplementary report settling that question of the French translation of the Hansard should be brought up, of course I have nothing to say; but I state that most unfortunately it is this third paragraph of the petition of the stenographers, that has led to this debate, and to the motion of the hon. member for Montreal East, which was afterwards withdrawn.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps I may be allowed to say, with reference to the remarks which fell from the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), that I think it is utterly im-possible for him or the Committee to assume that this House has expressed an opinion one way or the other, whether this report lies on the Table or goes through, on the subject of whether the salaries of the translators should remain where they are or should be increased. Certainly, some hon. members have said they ought to be increased, but I am quite sure that the mass of the members of this House have not the information which would enable them to arrive at a proper conclusion on the subject; and the statement the hon. member made that he had before him three or four applications from persons equally competent toperform the work at the same salary, is calculated to throw doubts, at any rate, at the statement which has been made that the salary is inadequate. I hold myself entirely unpledged on the question, and shall deal with the report in regard to the French translators on its merits whenever it is proposed. But, whether this report goes through or lies on the Table, I protest against its being understood that we have indirectly or informally given an instruction to the Committee that it is our opinion that the salaries should be raised. We leave it to the Committee to initiate that, to consider the whole subject, and to bring forward those facts which are necessary upon which to form a decision; and I dare say that we shall be able, as we have hitherto been, to adopt their views. But certainly we do not intend to usurp their functions in a perfunctory manner like this, and to chalk out their work for them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When I spoke first I did not mention the third paragraph of the petition of the reporters, because I thought I should not do so at that moment; but as my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Royal) has just mentioned it, I may say that I regret very much that that paragraph was there, because it made a comparison which would necessarily lead to a discussion which had better, perhaps, have been avoided; therefore, after having said these few words on that paragraph I need say no more in reference to that point. I observe that the Committee recommend an increase in the salaries of the official reporting staff to $2,000 per annum, but to take effect next year only. That makes a difference, certainly, and a very important one, because there is plenty of time before the end of the Session to bring up the subject of the translators, and to do justice to them if they are not properly remunerated.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Therefore as this increase is only to take effect next year, I do not see the same objections to adopting this report now. I may say, however, that I would be glad to have from the Committee a comprehensive statement of the position of the whole translating staff, showing us exactly how we stand in reference to that staff, and then we would be in a better position to come to a decision. I do not say whether their salaries should be increased or not, but representations have been made to me, as well as to other members, that the staff is hardly paid enough. Some time ago I called the attention of the chairman of the Committee to the fact that these French translators were obliged to remain here a couple of months after the Session, and that we should consider that fact when we came to fix their salaries. I now understand from mcmbers of the Committee that the number of translators has not yet been determined, and that probably they will have to increase the staff by one or two members in order to meet the requirements of the translation into French. I think it is very important that the Committee should consider that matter before this Sossion ends, and that they should bring in a report informing us how the whole case stands. Besides that the members of the Committee, one and all, have expressed their desire and their determination that justice should be rendered to the staff, and in particular to the French translators. I think with that assurance on all sides we should not insist any longer on delaying the report, but allow it to be adopted.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I wish the position of the Committee to be well understood by this House. We have almost been accused of treating the French translators differently from the reporters. Well, I must say this, that the House must remember that when we first gave the contract for translation we had to pay $2.50 per page to the contractors. Then one or two years ago we applied for tenders, and one of the tenderers offered to do the work for $1.75 per page, and the expenses were brought down to the sum of $3,500 upon that basis. The contractor went to work, he had his own staff and did the work in his own way, and the result was that we had a good translation. When we came to consider the question of securing the permanency of the officers of the staff, we took the contract sum we had been paying as the basis of expenditure we would have to incur in making that staff permanent, and contracted to do it at $1.5 a page, and we distributed between four translators the amount the translator between four translators the amount the translator had cost the year before, so that if the salary now looks to be a low one it is not the fault of the Committee, but the fault of those who offered to do the work for the price mentioned in order to secure the contract. The Session has not closed yet, and we have still under consideration the best means by which the translation can be done as regularly and as punctually as possible. We have added two translators to the staff, and now we are confronted with a motion saying in effect that we have dealt unjustly with that branch of the Hansard. Well, I think that we ought to know what the sense of the House is on the question of the salaries to the translators. For my own part I have no objection to increasing the salaries. I fully acknowledge that the translators are not men of ordinary attainments; they require to be men of great efficiency, and of considerable literary ability, and if the House is ready to acknowledge that fact, and is ready to vote an additional amount, I am ready for my part to recommend that to the Committee. But it would be useless, now that the matter has been brought before the House, to go to the Committee and make a report recommending an additional amount to be paid to the staff, and then to be met by a rebuke from the House.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I regret that the hon. Minister of Public Works has been so easily convinced that he was wrong in his first expression of opinion as to the propriety of allowing this report to lie on the Table for some little time. I would myself very much prefer that it should do so. Some hon, gentlemen have argued that each branch of the subject should be considered on its own merits. Woll, Sir, I cannot agree with that view. It seems to me that whatever pertains to this matter cannot suffer in being left a little longer to the consideration of the Committee, particularly as they say they have another branch of the same matter under consideration. This subject does not require immediate action; if the report were adopted it only comes into effect next year. There is no hurry about it; it is not to remedy any existing evil, and no harm can be done by a little delay. Therefore, I think, this subject ought not to be dealt with by piccemeal, more particularly when a comparison of the one with the other might enable the members of this House to arrive at a just conclusion. It is desirable that employees should be judged on their merits; yet we judge the value of labour relatively. We take a certain class of labour, and because it is skilled labour, and is paid so much by somebody else, we are thereby able to decide how much we should pay for it. The chairman of the Committee intimated that it was the opinion of the Committee that the cost of publishing the Hansard was too great; and though he made that statement the other day, he now asks that the salaries of a certain number of those employed in the work should be increased—and if a decrease is to take place, in what direction is it to be made, except in that of the French translators? If the first expression of opinion was correct, if the Committee considered it desirable to reduce the expense, it is strange that the present proposition to increase salaries should be submitted. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to the increase of the salaries of the reporters. I agree with other hon. members in expressing my high appreciation of their labours and the manner in which they discharge their duty; but when there was an expres-sion of opinion the other day that the expenses should be curtailed, and yet a few days afterwards it is proposed to increase the expenses, the matter becomes a difficult one to deal with ; and under the circumstances, I think it is only fair that the reports respecting the stenographers and the translators should be made together, in order that we may be able to judge whose salary should be reduced and whose increased. I look upon translating as a work which requires that of the stenographer-I was going to say more skill, but perhaps hon. members will not approve that sentiment. My reason for holding that opinion is, that if a person would apply himself to the task of learning shorthand writing he would become as readily a competent stenographer as another man would become a competent official translator. It is not alone that a translator must be able to speak and understand both languages: a great deal more is required-he must be a writer. The same thing is true with regard to the stenographer but not to the same extent, because he gives a verbatim report, following the speech as it is given; and although the stenographers may do us sometimes the favour -not sometimes, but very often-of correcting our sentences and making them look a little better in print than they were actually delivered, yet they follow as far as possible the sentiments of the speakers. A literal translation from one language into another would hardly be readable. The translator must possess a thorough knowledge of both languages, as I have said, and must be a literary man; and thus it is that, judging the translators on this ground, those officers should be paid more than they are to day. I do not commit myself one way or the other to the doctrine I have laid down; but when it is proposed one day to curtail the expenses and the next day to increase them, the best course is to have the whole subject brought up at one time. I regret the hon. Minister has taken the course he has done, and I would ask the Chairman of the Committee to allow the matter to stand over, but if he declines, the matters will have to be dealt with separately.

Mr. HESSON. I do not rise to object to the report, and I have no doubt that fair play will be given by the Committee to the French translators. It must be remembered that when the Hansard system was first introduced it was proposed that something like $30,000 should cover the entire expenditure. The present estimate requires $20,000, and from the course taken it is clear that this amount must be increased. It is quite possible that if the Hansard were abolished, very much of the eloquence with which hon. members favour the House would go unrecorded; still that fact might be compensated in some degree by the saving effected to the country, and it must be romembered that the press fully report everything of sufficient importance to be worth reporting. It must also be considered that the very fact of having an official system of reporting involves delay in public business, because some members talk to be reported. If these points are taken into consideration, you come to the serious question, whether the whole system ought not to be reconsidered by the House. I repeat again that I am satisfied the Committee will not do the slightest injustice to the French employees, and that the Committee will take steps to have a faithful report of the Debates; but I hold this view, that we could very well dispense with the whole system of Hansard.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I think there are excellent reasons why we should adopt the first suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Public Works, to leave this report on the Table for the moment, and to postpone its adoption until another report is made, with a view to give justice to the French translators. I think that this suggestion should have been followed to the end. In the first place, it is very important, while voting an increase of salary in favour of one class of employces of the Hunsard, that we should knew exactly what amount will be necessary for the maintenance of that office. In fact, it is possible, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman who preceded me, that this House may find the amount so large that we may arrive at the conclusion that it would be better to dispense with the system altogether. I must say that the chairman of the Debates Committee has done an act worthy of credit, when he has complied with the desire expressed by a great many members that justice be done to the French translators as well as to the stenographers. I certainly felt disposed to express my gratitude towards him for having shown such regard for the French members who have stood up in defence of these translators. As to the value of their services, I do not think it has been over-rated by those who have spoken on that question. Bosides, I believe that the present system is infinitely superior to that which was followed previously. I refer to the contract system. The translation of the Hansard, as it was done previously, did not certainly do justice to the English speakers who addressed the House; very often their thoughts were misunderstood and were put in such uncouth French that it was impossible for people accustomed to read classical French to read these speeches, however interesting they might be in themselves. Now, Mr. Speaker, there has been given two reasons why the salaries of the French translators should not be increased. In the first place, it is protended that they have never asked for an increase. Well, I believe they have not asked for itincrease. according to what information I have on the subjectbecause it had been intimated to them, in about as explicit a manner as possible, that it was useless for them to make such a demand, as it would not be granto t. Then again, I suppose that it is perhaps through modesty; it is well known that modesty is one of the characteristics of our race.

Mr. GIROUARD. Through bashfulness.

Mr. OUIMET. I will not say through bashfulness, as the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) suggests. I do not think that is our weak point, but I say that we French Canadians are not in the habit of putting on our services the value which the English people give to theirs, and perhaps that is the most apparent feature of our inferiority in the estimation of the various races of men who inhabit Canada. It seems that for us the question of salary is always a socondary question. It is only when we see our English neighbours living in prosperity, while we are, compara-tively speaking, living in poverty—which is about the position of the French translators as compared to that of the stenographers-that we begin to think that, after all, modesty does not pay, and that it is just as well to do like others and ask for the full value of our services. I think that the French translators were perfectly right in taking this opportunity to estimate their services at their real value. And, as I said a moment ago, although the hon. Minister of Public Works has seemed to give his consent that this report be now adopted, I would suggest that the report beleft on the Table, so that we may have a statement of the full amount of the cost of the H msard, both for reporting and for translation, and also that we may be certain-I say that we may be certain-Mr. Speaker, that justice will be done to the French translators. Now, another reason has been given to show that this increase of salary is unnecessary. It has been said : Why should we increase the salaries of our translators when other persons are making application to be appointed translators, and are willing to give their services for the same salary as that which is already given to the present staff of translators? Well, Mr. Speaker, if that argument is worth anything it ought to be applied to the stenographers; and I am sure that if we should let the public know that for the sum of $1,500 we are ready to take five, or six, or a dozen, or perhaps a couple of dozen stenographers, I am certain that we should receive applications so numerous, that the Committee would have great difficulty in making a choice. I say this argument is not worth anything, and should be set aside. The value of the services of the French translators must be rated according to the ability of the persons employed, and I say that in order to have competent translators we must pay them well. Besides, I am convinced that the present members of the staff of translators are worth infinitely more than the sum of $800, which is paid to them, and there is an enormous disproportion between that sum and that of $2,000, which is to be paid to the stenographers. If I wished to make comparisons of this nature, I would say that the value of those who are reporting the speeches is far superior to that of those who make the speeches; inasmuch as the members of Parliament-and we have a great number, and we might have a still greater number if we made application to get more – are only receiving $2,000. Well, I think this would be rather over-rating the relative value of those who report speeches and of those who make them. Well, Mr. Speaker, on the whole, I shall once more suggest, and I shall ask as a special favour from the Government, and from the Chairman of the Committee of the Hansard, that the adoption of the report of the Committee be postponed till to-morrow or the day after, so that the House may have before them all that which is necessary to judge both as to the cost of the Hansard and of the equitable remuneration which ought to be granted to the different members of the Hansard staff.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The chairman of the Committee must be pleased that the report has been unanimously endorsed by all the members who have spoken. merely rise to ask a question on one point, and it is this : If 1 understand the report aright, it says that this increase shall take effect from next Session. I had thought that the advance had been given because of the efficiency that had been manifested by the staff, more particularly this year, though also no doubt in past years. If the work of the staff during the present Session has warranted the Committee in making this recommendation, I cannot understand why its operation should not go into effect this year. Perhaps the Committee have some reason which those outside of its number are not aware, and as to this point, members would like some explanation.

Mr. COURSOL. After the explanations given by the chairman of the Committee and the different views elicited from hon. members, I feel that the motion I made has had its effect-that whenever this matter comes before the Committee again, the question of the French translation will be treated with that fairness which we all expect should be applied. I would not have made the motion, except for the remarks which fell from the chairman of the Committee, that another method would have to be adopted before the close of the Session in regard to that work, meaning thereby that the Committee would in the future have the work done either by contract or by some other system of which I am ignorant. It was in order to secure to the translators permanent appointments that I rose, and I hope this salaries and those of the other Sessional messengers? discussion will have the effect of leading the Committee to decide not to abandon this experiment, which has only been in operation a year, but to give it a thorough trial in the future, so that we will be able to decide whether the translation is well done, and whether the cost is excessive. As it is now, it is only an experiment which costs the country $1,400 more than was asked under the contract system, while the reporting has increased from $12,000 or $13,000 to $18,000. Under these circumstances I feel it my duty to withdraw the motion, but I hope the Commit ee will as early as possible bring in a report on the question.

Amondment withdrawn, and Report concurred in.

RESIGNATION OF F. X.O. MÉTHOT, ESQ.

Mr. METHOT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to inform you that my intention is to resign my seat as a member of this House; consequently, I now resign Mr. OUIMET,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the House will allow me to express the regret felt by the Government, and felt also, I am sure, by the House, at the idea that the hon. member for Nicolet is going to leave us. He has always shown himself very attentive to his duty, and I do hope that his successor will be as valuable a member as he was himself.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved the adoption of the Fifth Report of the Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament. He said: I may say that this report is one which refers to the method of carrying on the printing of Parliament. It recommends no positive action, it simply submits certain papers which came into the possession of the Committee and reserves the matter for consideration. It does recommend, however, the extension of the present contract for one year, in order to give time to consider the whole question, which I suppose, the Government intend to consider, according to one of their reports, and a statement made on the floor of Parliament. Tho contracts would terminate on the 31st of December, this year, and in order that there may be time to consider the whole question and either continue the contract system or adopt the system of a Government Printing Office, the Committee recommend the extension of the contracts for paper and printing for one year from the 31st December next.

Mr. MACKENZIE, They are separate contracts?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Report concurred in.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved the adoption of the Sixth Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament. He said: This report simply recommends the printing of a number of papers, and an addition of $200 to the salary of young Mr. Botterel, which was unanimously adopted. He is now getting $600, and is said to be of great use in the distribution office. It also recommends an addition of $50 per Session to the salary of the Sessional messengers in the distribution office, making them the same as the salaries paid in the Senate. They were paid the increased amount by special vote last year, and it is now proposed to make the addition permanent to these two Sessional messengers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is there any difference between their

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As I understand the salary of the ordinary messengers is $200, and this increase makes the salary of these two men $250 as they are considered to be more constantly employed. They go up and down like buckets between the printing office and the House, continuously.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I hope the hon, member will allow the motion to stand as it will involve some discussion as to the payment of these salaries ?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Of course if a Minister says it should stand that is sufficient. Still this is what they received last year, by a special vote, and it is the sum which is paid in the Senate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid that this will involve consequences elsewhere. If we are to increase the salaries of these messengers why should we not increase the salaries of all the other messengers who are here permanently, and who are asking and sending communications my seat as member for Nicolet, in the House of Commons. for such increases? I would ask the hon. gentleman not to ask Concurrence in this increase now, so as to give the Commission time to look into the matter, and to see whether it will not affect other salaries as well.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think it is not a matter which the Commission can take into consideration, as the officers are not under the Commission.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I know that, but still the consequence might be as I have said. These messengers are in a certain branch of the Department, and if we begin to increase them the same thing will occur as to others. The question as to the others came before the Commission, and the arguments used were exactly those used by the hon. gentleman that in another House an increase had taken place. We thought that under the circumstances we should be guided by what we know of the work in this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman in the avalanche of enquiries and petitions which would come down on them. The experiment might be made of reducing one or two, and let us see if they will all ask for a reduction.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The argument used by the hongentleman applies only, however, to the Sessional messengers; it does not apply to the officer in the distribution office, Mr. Botterel, who is now receiving $600, and to whom $300 is recommended to be paid. I therefore suggest that we adopt the report—because it is clear we must adopt it in some form—as it recommends the printing of a lot of documents, and we might strike out so much of it as applies to the Sessional messengers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am afraid you have done the mischief, anyway.

Mr. WHITE. I would move that the report be adopted except the last paragraph.

Mr. SPEAKER. I doubt if you can do that. It is unusual to propose to adopt a report in part. It is generally referred back in such cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE. An amendment could be moved. Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. OFLAKER. 168.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I move in amendment that the report be adopted, except the last paragraph.

Amendment agreed to.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT LANDS IN THE COUNTY OF RICHELIEU.

Mr. A MYOT enquired, Whether the Government has, by sale, grant, location or otherwise, disposed of the lands belonging to it in the County of Richelieu? If so, what are the lands; what is the extent of each lot; to whom was it disposed of; what are the conditions of each such grant, location or sale; what are the prices paid in each case, and when and how were the amounts paid?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I regret to be unable to give the information asked for by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) in the question he has just pu⁴. It would be considerable work, and I think it would be far better for him to put a notice on the paper among the notices of motion. We shall give him the information he asks.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if the House has no objection, I shall change my question into a motion, and I shall present it when notices of motions are called.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) There is no objection.

POSTAL THEFTS.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether, early in 1883, J. R. Vantassel, then postmaster of Parry Sound, stole a post letter No decision has been arrived at yet.

containing $1,000, or thereabouts, of Government funds? Whether he also misappropriated any, and if so, what sums of post office order money and of revenue cash? Whether any, and if so, what steps have been taken to bring him to justice? Whether, since these transactions, an Indian lettercarrier between Little Current and Parry Sound, who robbed the mail, has been prosecuted, convicted and sentenced?

Mr. CARLING. Information was received that a letter had been stolen. Enquiries were instituted, but it was not until the postmaster was told that any statement he should make would not be used against him, that the inspector learned that it was he himself that had taken the letter. In consequence of this, and as there was no other evidence against him, no criminal prosecution has been instituted; but the Department of Justice has been directed to take civil proceedings against the postmaster and surcties. So far as it is known, he did not misappropriate any other sums of post office order money, or of revenue cash. An Indian letter-carrier was arrested and sent to Barrie for trial for robbing the mails. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to five years in the Kingston Penitentiary.

THE POSTMASTER OF STAYNER, ONT.

Mr. WILSON enquired, Whether J. H. McKeggie is now postmaster of Stayner, Ontario? If not, when was he removed and why? Has another been appointed to the place? If so, what is his name and what is the reason for the change?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. J. H. McKeggie is not now postmaster at Stayner. He was removed on the 1st March, 1834, because he had ceased to reside at Stayner, and was earrying on business at Barrie. Mr. W. B. Saunders was appointed to succeed him for the reason stated on the 1 t March, 1884.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE HUGHES.

Mr. WILSON enquired, Whether the Government have taken any steps to enquire into the charges preferred against the official conduct of D. J. Hughes, Judge of the County Court of Elgin; and if not, whether it is their intention to do so, and when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am advised that the petition that was sent in in this case was not signed, and it was sent back to the Committee from whom it was supposed to come, with a proper notice. But a copy of it was kept, and was sent to Judge Hughes for his information. That is the position in which the case now stands.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. Minister did not answer the latter part of the question—whether the Government intend to take any steps to enquire into the charges.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We cannot have any intention to do anything, because we have nothing before us.

AN EXAMINER FOR BRANDON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk) enquired, Whether the Government have received a petition from the residents of Brandon, Manitoba, and vicinity, asking for the appointment of an "Examiner" at Brandon, under the regulations of the Dominion Lands Act? If so, do they intend to grant the prayer of the petition, and when ?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A petition has been received from the residents of Brandon asking that Mr. J. Clementi Smith, Dominion Lands' agent at that place, be appointed Examiner under the regulations of the Dominion Lands Act of 1833. That is with the view of compelling witnesses in certain land cases to appear before him to give evidence. No decision has been arrived at yet.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS FOR BRANDON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk) enquired, Whether the Government have received a petition from the residents of Brandon, Manitoba, respecting the erection of a building suitable for Post Office, Customs Office and Dominion Lands Office combined? If so, what action has been taken, and whether it is the intention of the Government to place anything in the Supplementary Estimates this Session, towards the construction of such a building?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A petition was received from a number of the residents of Brandon on the 26th of February last year, in favour of the ercetion of a building. Telegrams were also received to the same effect. The matter has been considered, but I am not in a position to say what the Government will do about it.

PROTEST AGAINST MR. TEMPLE.

Mr. BLAKE enquired whether the Government was aware of the following telegram :---

OTTAWA, 17th March, 1281. "C. W. BLCKWITH, Esq., Fredericton.

"No use of delegation coming while protest standing. I want to help Rilway, and was doing all I could to get subsidy. Since Satur-day's news of protest, it is impossible to impress Government, and while President of Railway is fighting me in this way.

"THOMAS TEMPLE."

Whether the decision of the Government as to the Railway subsidy referred to in the telegram, is to be in any way dependent on the withdrawal of the protest against the election of Mr. Temple for York, N.B.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government had no knowledge of the telegram read by the hon. gentleman having been sent, and the decision of the Government as to the Railway subsidy referred to, will be in no way dependent upon the withdrawal of the protest against Mr. Temple.

Motion agreed to.

SUPERANNUATION OF JAMES HEARN.

Mr. KIRK in moving for copies of all correspondence, papers and telegrams between the Government or any member thereof, and any person or persons relating to the superannuation of James Hearn, late Preventive Officer at Arichat, N. S, and also all correspondence and telegrams relating to the appointment of his successor and the continuance of the latter in office, said : The principle that provision should be made for the superannuation of Civil Service office. Mr. Hearn was superannuated, I am told, with an employees who are incapacitated through old age or otherwise from properly discharging their duties, is one in which all parties, apparently, are agreed, but that the present system, as applied to Civil Service employees, is not thoroughly or justly worked out, is, I think, in too many cases, evident. The Government have large discretionary powers in applying the system-powers which may be used to the advantage of employees or otherwise, powers which may be used to their injury, and which may be used to unnecessarily burden the Treasury, and consequently the people. When this system was introduced, it was generally supposed that the allowance which was to be received from the salaries of employees would form a sufficient fund to pay any calls or demands required to meet the superannuation allowances under the Act. This has been found not to be the case. The I am told that the Minister of Customs, knowing the fact, amount received from this source, does not anything like pay the amount of the superannuations. We find that the resign his offices or he would have to resign the office of average annual increase of expenditure on account of this service amounts to considerably over $12,000 per annum. We do not receive half the expenditure from the fund of which I have just spoken, and we are asked this year to appropriate $200,000 to pay the superannuation allowances for the current year, that is $10,000 more than was voted last year, or than was required last year. I neither; that he still holds the office, and holds it in defi-Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

think that the system has been very unfairly and unjustly applied, and, consequently, has worked hardship upon the Civil Service employees in the case of many of those who had been superannuated. Officers, sometimes, I fear, have been superannuated who are quite capable of performing their duties, and we have reason to believe that they were superannuated for the purpose of creating positions for friends of the Government who had given them their support in the elections or on other occasions. This is, I believe, the case especially in the matter relating to which I have made this motion. The appointment of Mr. Hearn of Arichat, as Preventive Officer took place at the time of Confederation, in 1867. He was about that time appointed at a salary of $150 per annum. We have reason to believe he was a good and efficient officer, and as about two years ago, the present Minister of Customs increased his salary to $300, it is evident he was a gool officer, or his salary would not have been increased. However, in August last he was superannuated with an allowance of $150, and another was appointed in his place. Mr. Hearn was superannuated, ostensibly for the reason that he was too old to perform the duties properly. I am told-I have not the pleasure of his acquaintance--that he is about 60 years of age, and for a man of that age, is exceedingly active, and that he was at the time he was superannuated quite an efficient officer, and is equally as capable to perform the duties to-day. I am told he is an active member of the Arichat Cricket Club, and I should suppose a man who was an active member of a Cricket Club could not fairly be said to be not fitted, so far as his physical qualities are concerned, at any rate, to perform the duties of Preventive Officer. In the North Sydney Herald, which every hon. member here from Nova Scotia knows to be a paper that warmly supports the present Government, and a paper that is a warm supporter of the hon. Minister of Customs, and I find a paragraph in that paper in its Arichat correspondence which says, on date August 15th, 1884:

"James Hearn, Esq., who was recently superannuated from the office of Preventive Officer, is an active member of the Arichat Cricket Club." I notice that the same paper reports that the Arichat club played a match game about that time with the Sydney cricket club. Therefore, I take it, that it could not be for the reason that he would not be able to perform his duties on account of old age that he was superannuated, and I take it, furthermore, that he was superannuated in order to make place for some other man-for the one who received the allowance of $150, and another man is appointed in his place with a salary, I presume, of $300. Probably it has been increased; I have no means of knowing that; but certainly his salary is not less than that of the late Preventive Officer. We are told, too, that this officer has been appointed and holds the office contrary to a well-known rule of the Department. I believe it is a rule of the Department that a Preventive Officer or Customs Officer shall not be permitted to hold or retain a municipal office of any kind. I am told that the successor of Mr. Hearn is a Municipal Councillor; I am told that he is more than that, that he is the Warden of the Municipality as well as a Municipal Councillor, and that he holds these two offices in direct violation of the rules of the Customs Department. asked him, through the Collector of Customs at Arichat, to Preventive Officer. I do not know if this is the fact or not, but I am told it is so; I am told that the Minister of Customs was informed of the fact that the successor of Mr. Hearn held these municipal offices, and that he was asked through the Customs Collector to resign his position in the Council or the office of Preventive Officer, and that he has dono

ance of the Minister of Customs and the regulations reforred to. It appears to me that if there is such a regulation as this, it is scarcely fair to allow a man to violate this regulation in the face of the known facts. It seems to be a custom with the Government here to superannuate men all ozer the Dominion, and especially down in Nova Scotia, before they become incapacitated from old age. That is the case in my own county. The Lighthouse Keeper of Cranberry Island has been superannoated upon quite a large allowance. His salary as Lighthouse Keeper was $759 a year, and he has been superannuated on, I suppose-I do not know the figures, but I have been told-from $400 to $500 per annum. Mr. Hanlon, the lato Lighthouse Keeper, was an efficient officer; he was quite capable of performing his duties, and if nothing unusual happened, would be for many years, but he has been superannuated and another has been appointed. I am not finding fault so much with the superannuation of Mr. Hanlon as Lighthouse Keeper as with the man appointed in his place. A Lighthouse Keeper, especially on an island, ought to be capable of managing a boat. I have been told, and I believe it is true, that, before a Light-house Keeper is appointed, he is required to pass an examination and to give ovidence that he is capable of managing a boat, and not only performing the duties of managing the lighthouse, but making himself use ful in saving lives and property if any wrecks should occur on the shore. I am told that the man appointed in place of Mr. Hanlon cannot r w a boat, cannot manage a boat st all, and would be lost if he were alone in a boat at sea; and he is there on the island without an assistant or any one to manage a boat. It is well known in Nova Scotia that Cranberry Island is an exposed place, and that Mr. Hanlon and his assistants have been called upon to save property and sometimes to save life, and have most efficiently performed that office; but the present incumbent of that position, I am told, cannot do it; he cannot row a boat at all, and there-fore he is incapable of performing the duties of the office to which he is appointed. I do not know, but I have reason to b-lieve, that both these officers have been superannuated, not because they were not efficient officers, but to make places for their successors, and the country is burdened with additional taxation in order that friends of the Government may be remunerated for services performed at elections. In making the appointment to fill the place of Mr. Hanlon, I think the Minister might have found many in the county of Guysboro' to fill that position. The people there, on the shore especially, are all capable of managing boats, and very many of them would have made good and efficient Lighthouse Keepers; but it does not seem that a man from the county of Guysboro' could be found to fill the position and satisfy the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but he sent a man from his own county, the county of Colchester, a man who knows nothing at all about the sea or about boats, and who is consequently thoroughly incapable of performing the duties to which he has been appointed. I do not intend to say anything more with regard to this matter, but I hope the papers I have asked for will be brought down.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to offer a a few remarks to the House on the question now before it. I had the pleasure last year of presenting a statement to the House in connection with superannuations, and at that time I drew the attention of the House to the fact that the country was called upon annually to pay a very large amount under the head of superannuations, also that the amount was largely increasing from year to year. I think that the question connected with superannuations deserves the serious consideration of the Government. I must say I fully expected this year that some measure would have been introduced for the purpose of freeing the country from the increased burden the country is called upon to submit to by the operation of this Act. I find that, during the past year, no less than fifty-seven have been superannuated. I find that these fifty seven are drawing the gross sum of $22,224.88 annually. That is equal to $511.70 each. Now, it is very well known that those in the Civil Service are called upon to pay into the Dominion Treasury a certain percentage from the salaries they receive. Those percentages that are paid in are far from being anything equal to, or more than a very small percentage of, the amount they recieve after they are superannuated. I find that the sum per capata paid annually to those on the superannuation list is increasing. I find that, of those on the list for 1882, the average amount they received last year for superannuations was $468. I find that this year the average amount paid is $511.70. In the list of those that have been retired during the year under the Act, I find that eight have been granted a gratuity. It is, of course, necessary, when a man is retired, that he must have served ten years before he can be superannuated, according to the terms of the Act. In previous years when those that had served less than ten years were superannu-ated, a number of years were added to their time, in order to bring them within the operations of the Act, and I find the Government have not adopted that system this year; time has been added, however, to the number of years served by some of those who have been superannuated within the year. But I find the Government have retired cight in all under the Act, and to those eight they have granted a gratuity of $3,147.66, or about $400 each. These men have only served, on an average, eight years, but I see the sum paid into the fund by them, as I have just said, is only $542.96, which is the sum those eight persons have contributed to the superannuation fund during the whole time they were in the Service. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the amount that is paid by them and the amount they have received in the way of gratuity, we find they have actually drawn $6 for every $1 dollar they have paid in. I am quite satisfied that the Government should deal fairly and honestly with the Civil Servants; I am quite prepared to say that they should be treated somewhat liberally and not niggardly, but when you come to consider the fact they have not only received a corresponding amount with what they have paid, in and interest thereon, but they have received actually $6 for every $1 they have paid in, I say that the Government is acting generously at the expense of the country. When we consider the operations of this Act from beginning to end, and consider the fact that these Civil Servants are not only granted a very respectable salary annuity, but are placed upon the superannuated list when they retire from the Service, and that those who are retired under the Act who have served less than ton years get a gratuity, it must be evident that they are very generously dealt with. I said a few moments ago that time has been added to some of those who have been superannuated this last year. I find the Government have added in all thirty-five years to the time of the fifty seven that have been superannuated within the year. That may be looked upon as a very small number of years to be added, but when we consider how the expenditure under this item is increasing, I think the Government should be exceedingly careful in the manner in which they administer that law; because even that small number of years added has increased the annual expenditure $1,412.50. Now, I say there is no necessity for this prac-tice. I hold that those men are well paid, liberally paid, for the services they perform, and I say that when they are retired and granted allowances in this way, that is all they are entitled to. I can see no reasonable ground whatever why the Act should be interpreted so as to increase the sum that is annually paid out under the operations of this system. Now, I would draw the attention of the House to this fact, that since the passing of the Act 664 persons have been retired, while 421 are now on the list for this year, drawing a retiring allowance of $215,465.55, or $511.70 each. Now, this is a very large amount. I notice the amount last year was considerably less than this, and it appears to be increasing every year. The amount is growing very rapidly, and when we find on the Statute Book an Act that is so increasing the expenditure of this country, and adding to the burden of taxation upon the people, I think it is wise, I think it is right and proper, that this House should consider whether it is really in the interests of the people of this country that this system should be perpetuated. I really think it is not. I cannot see upon what grounds it can be claimed that it is necessary. The entire sum paid into the fund by those on the retired list, up to January 30th, 1882, was $99 each. I find that 454 have died in the Service, and the gross amount paid in by them was $41,345.39, or $91.07 each. The average age of nineteen of thoso superannuated in 1883, was forty-eight years. Now, when we come to consider that fact, I think hon. gentlemen must admit that this Act is not being properly administered. I notice that in the return that has been laid before the House, it is said that this is done on the grounds of efficiency and economy. Well, I do not know anything about the efficiency, but I cannot see where the economy comes in. The Government possibly may decide, in some cases of servants in the employment of the country, that it would be as well if they had never been employed; and I dare say that in many cases they come to the conclusion that it is better to do without their services, and let somebody else take their places. A servant incapable of discharging his daties has, perhaps, been placed upon the Civil Service list through some influences outside of the Government, and before leaving has caused a good deal of trouble and annoyance to his associates in the Department in which he has been acting. Ho is nevertheless superannuated and a sum of money is placed to his credit that he can draw annually and thus live at the country's expense and do nothing. Now, I say that is wrong. Here we have this year no less than nineteen men out of fifty-seven superannuated at an avorage age of forly-eight years, and these nineteen are drawing an annuity of $9,724.01, and to these nineteen men that sum will continue to be paid every year as long as they live. Now it has also been stated that some years ago a Commission was appointed for the purpose of examining into and reporting upon this Act. That Commission, after holding very long sittings, and making extended investigations, reported to the House that the operations of that Act were in the interests of the country, that in place of losing money the country was actually making money. Well, Mr. Speaker, 1 took the opportunity last year of closely investigating and criticising the statements of that report, and I must say that atter a careful investigation I come to the conclusion that it was based on the most fallacious arguments, or pretentions, that could possibly be thought of. On that occasion I sabmitted to the House two or three names as an evidence that the report was not based upon a correct calculation, and that it is not in the interests of the country that the system should be perpetuated. Now, in order to view this question from a financial standpoint, I will just go over the operations of the Act of 1883. We find, as I have already stated, that fifty seven have been superannuated, and that to those fifty-seven, $29,221.83 will have to be paid every yearso long as they live. We find that to those who have been retired on gratuities, in all, $3,147.66 was paid for that year. We find that to thirty-seven of those appointed to fill the places of those who have been superannuated, the country will have to pay $25,080 by way of salary. Then retiring allowance as long as he lives of $560. Next is Jas. there were eighteen vacancies on 1st January which had not A. Green, also of the Customs Department, who paid in been filled. Taking the salaries paid to those who occupied $534.10, and draws annually $1,260 as long as he lives. Next those positions before 1st January, we find that $13,490 was is James Austin, of the same Department, who paid in Mr. McMullen.

paid for the services of those men and will have to be paid when the appointments are all made. It is no doubt the intention of the Government to fill those vacancies, because in the report submitted to House the fact is stated whenever it is the intention of the Government not to fill a vacancy. I notice that three of the sixty-three appointments have been abolished, but the rest will be filled as soon as the Government can find suitable men to fill them, and they will, no doubt, receive the salaries paid to their predecessors. The gross sum is $70,950.54, that is retiring allowances to the fiftyseven officers, gratuities to eight officers, the salaries now paid to those occupying the positions of the retired officers, and the salaries to be paid to the eighteen who have yet to be appointed. The salaries of those who were superannuated and retired on gratuities amounted to $55,538; deduct that from the sum I have already named, and there will remain $15,414.54 as the actual loss to the country under the operations of the Act for the last year. Deducting from that sum $3,147.66 you have as a net loss which will continue so long as those people live of $12,267 per annum. Since January, 1879, 264 Civil Servants have been superannuated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and thirty-two have received gratuities, which gives an increased annual expenditure under this head of $77,705.04. Deducting from this amount the receipts from the percentages paid in by those on the retired list, $4,412.82, and there is a net loss to the country over the amount for 1878-79 of no less than $68,292.21. That is the net loss to this country annually over the amount paid out unfor this head by the previous Government. The entire amount paid into the fund by those fifty seven officers superannuated in 1883 was $12,463.53. The gross amount paid to those officers so long as they live is, as I have alrealy stated, $29,324.88. So that the entire sum paid in is not aqual to six months' annuity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not understand why hon. gentlemen should say hear, hear. It appears most absurd to me that those Civil Servants should be permitted to draw such large sums annually from the revenues of the country, and should have contributed such small sums, not equal to a-half year's allowance. The Act was brought into force in 1871. In that year the number on the list eligible for superannuation was 2,307; in 1872, 2,522; 1873, 2,742; 1874, 2,951; 1875, 3,691; 1876, 3,142; 1877, 3,160; 1878, 3,259; 1879, 3,330; 1880, 3,516; 1831, 3,582; 1882, 3,777. The increase in the last year was 195. I have here the names with the respective amounts paid in by all those who were superannuated last year; but I do not intend at this late period of the Session to occupy the time of the House in reading the list. I have already stated that scarcely in a single case has an officer paid in a sum sufficient to meet half of the yearly allowance which he is permitted to draw. But in order to give the House an opportunity of judging in respect of this matter, I will give hon. members a few names. The first name is that of F. G. Gardner, Finance Department, who was superannuated last year. The entire amount paid in by him to the fund was $361.16; he receives an annuity of $980. The next name is that of Hon. Joseph Pope, also in the Finance Department; he contributed to the fund only $75, and now draws an annuity of $1,260. The next name is that of Thos. Hector, Auditor General's Department; he paid in $468.89, and draws for the balance of his life $1,155 annually. The next is F. Hunter, in the same Department; he paid in $433.26, and draws annually $900. The next is E. C. Barber, who is also in the Auditor-General's Office; he paid in $47431, and he draws annually $1,224.66. I find next the name of John Birrs, in the Customs Department, who paid in $286.99, and who has a

$313.70, and draws annually $1,050. I find next the name of J. W. Dunscomb, who paid in $1,046, and draws annually $2,478. The next is A. Brunel, of the Inland Revenue Department, who paid in $1,048, and draws annually $2,400. It will be seen by these figures that the amount which is contributed by these Civil Servants is not at all proportionate to the amount they are granted when they retire from the Service. Now, I hold it is not in the interests of the country to continue a system which bears on its face the most positive evidence that the country is losing annually by the operation of this Act, and that these annual amounts are continually increasing. Where is this thing going to stop? The amounts have been increasing yearly from the inception of the system down to the present time. As stated by the hon. gentleman who preceded me, it has increased $12,000 a year. If it goes on at this rate, the amount will become an exceedingly serious one, and I think it is full time, before it reaches that point, that we should consider the whole question and cut this system short. I find, as I have already stated, that the superannuations this year will cost $215,465.55 for the Civil Service, and $61,106.12 for our Judges, the sum total this year being $276,671.67. Now, I have noticed that hon. gentlemen opposite have taken particular delight in comparing figures with the late Government on many questions that I have heard discussed since it has been my privilege and pleasure to sit in this House. They take particular delight in trying to show that the preceding Government have spent a sum equal to, if not in excess of, the sum they spend. Now, I think it would do no harm to examine the operations of the Act in this respect. I find that in the same period, a period of five years, hon. gentlemen opposite have superannuated no less than sixty-three more than the preceding Government superannuated within the same time; and by that increased superannuation they have increased the annual cost to the country by $32,237.10 over what was paid by the previous Administration. I think it is time, in the interests of the country, that we should seriously consider this whole question. When we consider how our debt is increasing, that every item in the public expenditure is increasing-grants to railways, grants for the construction of short lines, and for other public improvements-we find that the debt of the country is running up to a large amount very rapidly. Now, I say we are here for the purpose of legislating in the best interests of the people, and it is our duty to see that the burdens placed on the shoulders of the taxpayers are as low as they possibly can be in the face of the country's interests. It is our doty in every item to economize as far as possible. We have been too much in the habit, year after year, and Parliament after Parliament, of adding to the responsibilities of the people, and it is becoming a serious question in the interests of the people if this thing is going on. I say it is time that we should call a halt. It is time to consider the question of curtailing even in minor sums. If it is necessary to give grants to railways, to improve our canal system, to encourage the it did not appear to be quite desirable that it should be pressed construction of small branches of railway-for which I felt sorry that grants were made last year-let us at least lay hold of the items which can well be dispensed with; let us cut off the small expenditures, at any rate, and show at least some evidence of a desire to curtail the expenditure as much as we can. I say this item of superannuation is one which demands the serious consideration of every one here, and I hope when the time comes to return to our constituencies, let that time come when it may, every man will be solemnly pledged when he return here that he shall support no Government which will perpetuate this system. I say that when the people of the country are properly educated as to tory liquor law. That Act has been on the Statute Book since the operation of this Act they will pledge every man who 1878; there has been no material amendment of it; a number represents them to vote against its continuance. It is of counties in the Maritime Provinces and one or two counties nothing but right that they should do so, and I trust they will, in the Province of Ontario have adopted it; and I believe

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed Resolution (page 656) of Mr. Foster, respecting the enactment of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating Liquors for beverage purposes, being read,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have no desire, Sir, to detain the House more than a few minutes, in presenting an amendment which I propose to move to the Resolutions submitted by the hon. member for King's, N.B. I am sure that the House generally will concur with him in the opinion that the evils of intemperance are very greatly to be deplored, and will agree to any reasonable suggestion which may be made for the removal of those evils and the mitigation of the results which follow from them. Those who have watched the progress of this discussion, so far as Parliament is concerned, will, I think, be some-what surprised that a motion of this kind should have come before Parliament at this particular time We all remember that before 1873 or 1874 there was a very great agitation in the country, from one end to the other, in favour of a prohibitory liquor law, and that a large number of petitions were presented to Parliament, especially during the Sessions of 1873 and 1874, in favour of such legislation as would entirely prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors. In the Session of 1874, if I mistake not, there were from the Province of Ontario alone, petitions signed by no less than some 340,000 per-sons, asking for such a law. At that time we had in Parliament a gentleman, whose place as a temperance advocate, I think, I may say, my hon. friend from King's is taking in this House-I mean Mr. George W. Ross-who was looked upon as the leading advocate of this particular measure. In 1875 the question was undoubtedly one of some little embarrassment. So large a representation of public opinion as was to be found in the petitions presented to Parliament caused people to feel that something would have to be done; and, if I am not mistaken, a caucus of members of Parliament was held at which some seventy five hon. members were present. I am told, however, that of those seventy-five there were only about eight or ten at most who were themselves total abstainers. Although they were deeply impressed with the importance of prevent-ing everyone else using intexicating liquors, they did not entirely concur in the desirability of prohibition, so far as their own personal habits were concerned. The result of that caucus was that a convention was held in the city of Montreal-a convention thoroughly representative in its character-at which were to be found gentlemen from all parts of the Dominion, who discussed this question of temperance legislation, and finally came to the conclusion that while it was very desirable that prohibition should be adopted, yet upon the attention of Parliament at that moment. However, Sir, as the result of all that agitation, we had in 1878 the passage of the Scott Act-an Act similar to what was known as the Dunkin Act, which preceded it, passed by the old Parlia. ment of Canada-by which every county or city municipal division in the Dominion was given the power to prohibit within its own boundaries the retailing of intoxicating liquors. Now, Mr. Speaker, that Act was regarded, at that time and until this resolution is introduced now, so far as one could see, as a complete and sufficient answer to the petitions which had been presented to Parliament asking for a prohibi-tory liquor law. That Act has been on the Statute Book since by laws are shortly to be submitted in a large number of the constituencies in Ontario. I think we may fairly assume, inasmuch as the Act has not been generally adopted, so far as the Dominion at large is concerned, that the people themselves have not shown any such intense desire for a prohibitory liquor law as would justify Parliament at this time in passing the Resolution which has been submitted by my hon. friend from King's, and which, if it passed this House as it stands, would, as a logical conclusion, have to be followed by the legislation necessary to give it effect. I do not understand, Sir, that the business of Parliament is simply to adopt abstract propositions of this kind, and then leave them without any practical result. Our duty is, if we adopt any such proposition, to follow it up by actual legislation. Indeed, as far back as 1854, I believe, some thirty years ago, a Bill was introduced into the Parliament of Old Canada by the late Hon. Malcolm Cameron, providing for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors. If I mistake not, that Bill passed through all its stages until it came to the final motion, that the bill do pass and be entitled as in the motion, when the point of order was raised that the Bill ought to have been introduced by resolution, and it was thrown out upon that technicality. That was the only attempt made in the Parliament of Canada to pass a prohibitory liquor law, and there has been no Bill introduced since for that purpose. If we agree with the proposition laid down that the evils of intemperance are very great and cannot be done away with without prohibition, I think we ought to do as Mr. Ross did when in Parliament--move simply to declare that so soon as public sentiment is ripe for such a law, Parliament will be prepared to deal with it. We must all admit, I think, that an Act of this kind cannot be effective unless public sentiment is at the back of it. We are here, 21! members of this House. I have nothing to do with the private habits of the members of this House; I think we have never had a Parliament so distinguished for sobriety and decorum as this Parliament is; I think I can say that, after having watched the proceedings of Parliament for thirty-two years, either from the press gallery, or as a humble member. But if every member of this House who is prepared to vote for this proposition would really adopt it in his own person-would say, as for me and my house, we will prohibit intoxicating liquors-I venture to say that the moral influence such a step would have on the community at large, in one sense, would do relatively as much good as the passing of a prohibitory liquor law. We may look at the question as we please, but judged by the drinking usages of the country, it is simply folly to say that there is such a public sentiment outside this House, or such an opinion or sentiment inside this House, in relation to this question, as w uld justify the passage of a Resolution which ought to be followed by actual legislation. The Resolution, therefore, which I propose to move, is to the following effect; that these words be added to the Resolution already, Sir, in your hands:

"And this House is prepared, so soon as public opinion will sufficiently sustain stringent measures, to promote such legislation, so far as the same is within the competency of the Parliament of Canada."

These are the exact words of the Resolution introduced by Mr. Ross in Parliament, in 1875, and I do not think we can be accused of going very far wrong from temperance standpoint, at any rate, when we propose to adopt the words which that hon. gentleman, when a member of this House, thought quite sufficient, according to his intense temperance views. The words at the end may be open to some question, "so far as the same is within the competency of the Parliament of Canada," but I think it is desirable that those words should be put there, for the simple reason that the recent—as appears to me contradictory decisions of the Privy Council on the subject of the liquor traffic—leave it an open question as to where jurisdiction—I do not mean exclusive jurisdiction but as to where jurisdiction exists in this matter. There.

fore, I think it desirable, if we have the right at all, that we should wait for a final decision on the question which will be submitted, under the Temperance Act of last year, to the highest courts of this country or the Empire before taking action, and I beg therefore to move that the following words be added to the Resolution :

"And this House is prepared, so soon as public opinion will sufficiently sustain stringent measures, to promote such legislation, so far as the same is within the competency of the Parliament of Canada."

Amendment agreed to

On the main motion being put,

Mr. BEATY. With reference to the main motion presented by the hon. member for King's, I would like to say a few words in connection with the principle stated in this Resolution. I am not sure that that principle, as a practical question, can be adopted in Canada at present, but I have the idea that there is a principle of prohibition that might practically be adopted, and the country would not suffer in any respect. There is now what is called local prohibition, prohibition in counties or municipalities, which is fre-quently adopted in both. That is termed local prohibition. The principle which is stated in the Resolution moved by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster), is what may be termed total prohibition, for it certainly goes as far as to prohibit the use of every class of liquor of an intoxicating character that is imported and produced in the countrynamely: "respecting the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes." I have an idea, and it has been a matter of conviction with me for a number of years, that if we give practical legislation which shall tend in the direction of what I may term, for the want of a better name, "partial prohibition," that is the prohibition of spirits, the prohibition of brandy, rum, gin, whiskey, particularly those classes under which these different kinds of spirits are named, it would be useful. So far as the effect would be felt in some aspects of the question, it would make little difference whether there was a total or partial prohibition. The revenue, for instance, derived from spirits is very large, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, while the revenue from malt liquors only amounts to about $400,000, so that the difference, in respect to revenue, between total and partial prohibition, would be of little importance. As a question of practical prohibition, however, as a question of obtaining public assent to legislation of this character, I think partial prohibition would be received by the country at large very favourably, and would be received by the country at large very favourably, and would be endorsed by nine-tenths of our people. Speaking for my own neighbourhood, the city of Toronto and the country surrounding it, with which I claim to be somewhat familiar, I am satisfied that at least four-fifths of the population of the whole country would endorse the pro-position, for the purpose of promoting what is thus termed "partial prohibition"—the prohibition of spirits and I may say that I believe it would be adopted by a large class of the liquor dealers throughout the country. As a matter of fact, I was invited, last fall, to a meeting of the liquor dealers, representative men, for the purpose of stating my views in reference to this question; and, after hearing the statement that I then made, they were prepared to adopt it, and ask the legislative power of Canada to make it the law of the land. That shows there is a tendency in that direction. From the forcible and eloquent observations which were made by the hon. member for King's, in reference to the disastrous and serious results which follow the drinking customs and usages of the country, and when we consider the great poverty and misery which result from the excessive use of liquor, we cannot but conclude that some measure should be adopted for the purpose of relieving the country from these ruinous results, and enabling the people at large to be protected against them. I will not, at present, go these results, because every hon. member is unfortunately too familiar with them. Our observations in every direction prove, beyond a doubt, that the result of these drinking usages, whatever may be the cause, whether inherent in human nature or in the article itself-whatever may be the immediate cause, the result is very injurious to the community at large. In sentiment, I am prepared to go as far as the Resolution goes, but, as a matter of practical legislation, I am not prepared to go that far at present. There are various difficulties, to my mind, in connection with legislation even to the extent to which I allude-the prohibition of spirits. The first objection we have to meet is the compensation to those who are engaged in the manufacture of this article in the country. I think it is only fair and reasonable, that if legislation should take away from the distillers their occupation and business, they should be, to a reasonable extent, compensated for the damages done to them by such legislation. That is the first principle in connection with these matters. I never felt very enthusiastic about the Dunkin or Scott Act, chiefly because there was no compensation provided for those who were especially engaged in legitimate trade, or, at all events, in legalized trade. I think they ought to be reasonably compensated for such loss as they might suffer at the hands of this Parliament. Now, that is the first obstacle we have to meet-compensation-and yet that would not be a very great matter, because in Canada, at the present day, there are only seven distilleries. Five of those do not amount to much as to value or production. Two of them—the distillery at Toronto and the distillery at Windsor-are very large concorns, and would represent, at least, I should imagine, twothirds of the whole value of the seven distilleries. It was represented to me a year or two ago that the Toronto distil-lery represented half the value of the whole then existing distilleries, there then being in the country not less than twelve. Since that time-from what cause I do not pretend to say directly or particularly, but I presume it is from the growing capacity of these two large distilleriesthe other distilleries are giving up, and now, instead of twelve, there are only seven in existence, and the probabilities are that, in two or three years at most, these seven will be reduced to three or four, if they are still allowed to go on. The whole value of the property included in this question of distillation would, then, as was represented by one of the Inland Revenue officers, only represent about $5,000,000, and the Toronto distillery would represent about a half of the whole. So the question of compensation would not be so serious a question, involving only-the interest account being taken as the only practical questionan expenditure to the country of about $100,000 or $200,000 a year, as the case might be. There is also the question of revenue, which is probably the most important one, from our standpoint, as legislators, how we are going to meet that diminution of revenue which would actually arise, at the start, at all events, from legislation of this character, the prohibition of the production of spirits. I will give a few figures—not going lengthily into the question of figures—for the purnose of showing what this revenue is and whence it is derived. Taking the year ending the 30th June, 1882, there was brandy imported into this country, 265,608 gallons; entered for consumption, 265,608; the duty paid on that was $385,115.66. Under the name " cordials, 3,280 gallons were imported; entered for consumption the same amount; duty collected, $6,233.04. Gin imported, 359,874 gallons; the same amount entered for consumption, and the duty on that, $476,831.11. Rum, 118,620 gallons imported; the same entered for consumption, on which a duty was collected of $137,263.95. Whiskey imported, 143,281 gallons; and made in Canada, 3,552,817 gal-lons; representing a total of 3,696,098 gallons; on which a duty was collected of $3,745,343.03. Of other spirits, 1,635 gallons were imported and entered for consumption, the duty being $2,644.52. The total Session, were it not that there is confusion enough now in

of imported gallons of spirits was 892,298, and made in Canada 3,552,817, making a total entered for consumption of 4,445,115 gallons, on which there was a revenue collected of $4,773,431.31. In 1883, there were of spirits imported under the same heads, 1,044,083 gallons; made in Canada, 3,848,787; total entered for consumption 4,892,870, representing a revenue of $5,273,854.29. Of malt liquors, there were, in 1882, imported 248,391 gallons; made in Canada 11,850,425 gallons; total entered for consumption, 12,098,-816, from which the revenue collected was $432,175.14. In 1883, there were imported 346,697 gallons; made in the country 12,587,727 gallons; a total of 12,934,424 gallons, on which there was a revenue collected of $463,876.51. The imported wines in 1882 were 544,967 gallons, from which a revenue was collected of $405,505.10; and in 1883, 607,113 gallons, with a revenue of $137,911.37. So it will be seen, by comparison of these figures, that the revenue from malt liquors and wines is so small that it bears very little comparison with the large amount collected from spirits. But there is another feature-the strength of the liquors which are drunk. Brandy is represented in this country to possess from 85 to 90 per cent. of alcoholic strength; rum the same; gin, 80 to 85; whiskey, 75; beer, 8 to 12; sherry, port and Madeira, 18 to 25, if pure, and 25 to 40, as usually imported; Canadian wines, about the same; French wines, light, 15 to 20 per cent. So we see, by a comparison of the brandy, rum, gin, and whiskey, with beer and wines, that the large amount of alcoholic strength is in the whiskey, brandy and rum, as compared with the beer and the wine. Now, the idea is that this country might go so far as to prohibit the liquors possessing this great alcoholic strongth and allow good beer and wine to be sold, as it is now sold, by licensed taverns, in the way in which it is done at present, the adulteration of those beers and wines to be prevented, and the people who may drink them to be protected, so that they shall not be adulterated either by the addition of any alcohol beyond the proper strength, or of any other deleterious drug whatever. In reference to this matter, I have a statement taken from the Week, a paper published in Toronto, and I think it is the production of Mr. Goldwin Smith; at all events, I know that he entertains the same view in reference to this question. He says :

"The root of the evil in this country is the production of whiskey. Whiskey is the real poi-on, and if produced will infallibly find its way, by one channel or another, to the lips of the consumer; so that the only consequence of harassing the respectable retail trade will be here, as everybody says it has been in Maine, the multiplication of disreputa-ble and clandestine taverns. If we want to kill the monster and to do a noble thing at the same time, let us sacrifice the Excise, and having paid due compensation to the distillers, whose trade has been not only recognized but made a source of revenue by the State, shut up the distilleries."

That expresses the idea which I entertain in reference to this matter exactly, and that is the view we should take. if the question comes to practical legislation. I do think that the motion made by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), certainly expresses the condition of things existing at the present day; but there is another view to be entertained in this matter, as we know it is the great alcoholic strength of the liquors I have named which is the cause which produces the vagrancy and violence and the poverty and misery which are so sadly seen over the whole land, and especially in cities. We find this to be the result in most cases of men having ready access to these strong drinks. The way would be, therefore, to prevent their reaching these drinks, and, if we did this by a prohibition of spirits, we think that, at all events, it would be action in the right direction; and, whatever might be the ultimate result, it would enable us to understand more par-connection with this matter. A dispute is going on be tween the Federal Government and the Local Governments in reference to this matter, and until that is settled, I think it would not be judicious, it would not be wise, to introduce another element of discord into the country in connection with this trade. We know that whatever its inflaence may be, this trade has its ramifications all over the country. It affects almost every class of trade in the country, and therefore it must be dealt with in a prudent manner, so as not to create that discord and that disturbance in general trade which would be injurious to the financial and social standing of the country. While I am prepared to support the general principle, the general sentiment, expressed in the Resolution, and while I am prepared to stand by it, at the present moment I think it is not the demand of the country that prohibition, pure and simple, total prohibition, should be enacted as the law of the country ; that something less than that might be adopted by this Parliament, and if so adopted, it would prove, at all events, whether the idea is practicable in its application to this country and in its enforcement. Certainly I think there can be no doubt that the principle of partial prohibition would have a much stronger support throughout the country than the principle of total prohibition, because it would secure the support of many men who drink their beer and their wine, it may be, but who would forgo the use of the stronger drinks if they thought it would produce a beneficial result to the country. I have felt it my duty to throw out these hints in connection with this Resolution, in order that the country may consider them hereafter when the question comes up again, as I suppose it may, of adopting some practical legislation, when it becomes a question of practical politics as to whether we shall have prohibition or not, and to what extent.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). The amendment of my hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. White), if I understood it rightly, recognizes the principle of total prohibition, while it postpones the period when we are to enact a law in that direction, until public opinion has unmistakably shown that it requires it. Now, I cannot allow an amendment of that kind to pass without entering my protest against the doctrine of total prohibition. When the Scott Act was before this House, in the year 1878, having a seat in the House then, I ventured, almost alone, to enter a protest against the passing of such legislation. When the Bill got into Committee, I was followed by a high authority, a gentleman who occupied the Chair which you now occupy, and who, on the floor of the House, used very strong and very forcible words upon this subject, and which expressed much more aptly and eloquently than I can, the objections which I have against the doctrine of total prohibition. The then Speaker (Mr. Anglin) used this language:

"I feel it my duty, as one of the representatives of the people, to say a few words on this Bill. I protest most solemnly against legislation of this kind. I regard it as 'he most pervicious and injurious character that can possibly be conceived, and also of the most tyrannical character. It is a declaration that it is the right of the majority of the population of this Dominion to dictate to the minority of the people what they shall eat and what they shall drink, and what opinions they shall profess, or even what they shall wear. Tyranny more gross than this it is impossible for man to conceive; and, therefore, do I most solemnly protest against this Bill and against the principle upon which it is based."

I will not go on to read the rest of the brief but eloquent speech he delivered upon that subject, but he pointed out that where total prohibition had been introduced into the Province of New Brunswick, from which he came, after a trial of a year or two it was found to be such a complete failure that the Legislature was specially convened for the purpose of repealing it, and it has stood repealed there ever since. My, hon, friend who moved this Resolution is, of course, an enthusiast in favour of total prohibition; it is, if I may venture to use the term, his hobby. But, I do not think it would be right to allow a motion of this kind to pass without entering my protest against it. The addition which my hon. friend from Cardwell has made to the Resolution makes it so innoxious that I think nobody will be hurt by its passing. Therefore I do not think it necessary to say much on the question; but I do feel that it is the duty of any one who entertains as strong and decided opinions as I do, against the constitutionality, against the propriety of the doctrine of total prohibition by legislation, not to allow, even this Resolution, so modified, to pass, without expressing that pro-test, as I do now. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Beaty), that if we are to have any kind of prohibition, a prohibition of the production and sale of spirituous liquors would, possibly, do some good, in the way of producing temperance and preventing intemperance, and that the public interest would be served by an increase in the production and use of malt and malt liquors, and a diminution in that of spirituous liquors. I find that in the State of New York, with a population of about equal to that of the Dominion, the revenue derived from the production of malt and malt liquors is over $6,000,000; while our revenue from malt and malt liquors, according to the Inland Revenue returns, has amounted, on the average, in the last four years, to only $411,173. Now, that shows that malt and malt liquors are more generally consumed in the State of New York, with its population of 4,000,000, than they are in the Dominion of Canada. The revenue returns from the United States also show that the use of malt liquors has increased in the eastern States while the use of spirituous liquors has diminishel; I think, therefore, that it would be for the interests of Canada to have such legislation as would tend to foster the use of malt rather than spirituous liquors. But there is another point of view from which it is important, in the interests of Canada, that this result should be obtained. Malt is the product of Canada, malt is made from barley, that is largely produced, especi-ally in the Province of Ontario. Spirits are made from corn, which is produced in the western States, and imported into Canada. If we can diminish the use of spirits and the use of corn imported from the States for that purpose, we will increase the use of malt, inasmuch as the American market for the manufacture of malt has been, to a great extent, cut off by the recent alteration of the duties in the United States. It is all the more important in the interests of the farming community of Ontario, at all events, that the use of malt and malt liquors in Canada should be increased; and by any legislation which will have that result, we are directly fostering and benefiting the interests of the farmers, at any rate, of the Province from which I come. Then, with reference to the passing of the Scott Act, which my hon. friend from Toronto has reference to. I am informed on very good authority, and I think the returns and reports in the possession of the Department of Inland Revenue will confirm the statement, that in the county of Halton, which has come within the operations of the Scott Act, the use of spirits has immensely increased, while the use of malt liquors has proportionately diminished. That naturally results from the fact that malt liquors are bulky and cannot be carried or handled with the same ease as spirituous liquors. I believe, too, that the Scott Act is greatly abused there; that the practice which naturally prevails of allowing the use of spirits on medical certificates, is abused to such a gross extent that members would be almost horrified at reading the report which is in the hands of the Minister of Inland Revenue, from the officers of his Department, showing that the use of spirituous liquors and the sale of spirits by druggists under the guise of medical certificates now actually exceeds the sale of spirits formerly made by the ordinary licensed tavern keepers. If that be the result of the Scott Act, what is the use of desiring its extension? Are the advocates of temperance furthering their cause before the country by press-been to increase the use of spirits, the most dangerous kind of intoxicating liquor, and to diminish the use of beer and ale, which is the least dangerous kind? Are they not doing an injury to the cause of temperance instead of a benefit, by forcing this kind of legislation on the public? I do not propose, at this period of the Session and of the evening, to occupy more time in discussing this subject; but I felt it would not be right, entertaining the opinion I do, to record a silent vote either in favour of the Resolution, if it passes without voting, or against it, and that it was my duty, at all events, as one entertaining a deliberate conviction, that this kind of legislation was improper and could not pass, not to allow the present occasion to pass without entering that protest formally, by giving utterance to the opinion I have expressed.

Mr. JAMIESON. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House at any length in discussing this question. I think the advocates of prohibition can very well rest their case on the able speeches delivered by the mover and seconder of the Resolution. However, since the discussion is likely to become somewhat general, I desire to detain the House for a few moments while I attempt to discuss this question. So far as the question of prohibition is concerned, I may say, at the outset, that I am a prohibitionist pure and simple. It seems to me this question will force itself on the House ere long. It may be true that the country is not just prepared for the measure at the present time; that may be true or it may not be true. There are. no doubt, differences of opinion in regard to that matter. I think we can judge the sentiments of the country largely from the votes lately cost when the Scott Act was submitted in several of the counties and municipalities throughout the Dominion. There are many who support general prohibition who are not in favour of this partial prohibition. which seems to commend itself to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty.) For my part, I have not such strong faith in partial prohibition as some hon, members who advocate the Soott Act have. I think, owing to the very great evils of the liquor traffic, widespread as they are throughout the whole Dominion, the only proper remedy to apply will be that of general prohibition. I grant that this question is surrounded by very many difficulties. I suppose the Finance Minister, if prohibition were enacted at the present time, would find difficulty in the meantime in procuring sufficient revenue with which to carry on the affairs of the country. However, there can be no doubt that the difficulty arising from that source would be only a temporary one. I think the volume of capital now engaged, and the labour employed in connection with the traffic in intoxicating liquors, if turned into other channels, would very shortly bring about a state of things which would ensure to the Finance Minister sufficient revenue, even though he were wholly deprived of the revenue from that traffic. We are not discussing the provisions of a prohibitory liquor law here to night; if we were, I should feel it my duty to state my views at some length in regard to the provisions which such an Act should contain. The hon.member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) says the great difficulty he has had to meet in examining this question is that of compensation. Although I do not admit the principle for a moment, that parties engaged in the traffic are entitled to compensation, still I would be prepared, speaking for myself, to admit the principle of compensation were a prohibitory liquor law framed and submitted to the country, in order to put an end to contention and agitation which might arise if compensation were not concerted. So far as distillers are concerned, it might be conceded to give them compensation, and also in a few other cases. But to apply the general principle of compensation in a prohibitory liquor never, could ascertain why the Government of that day there are hon. members in this House who will recollect when an army of draymen furnished water for the supply of Ottawa. At present it is supplied by the Corporation through the city waterworks. All those men have been deprived of their employment, and if the principle of compensation were admitted, the Corporation of Ottawa ought to have compensated all those men whose employment was taken away from them by the construction of those works which are of such great importance to the city. But, as I have said, I will be quite prepared to concede the principle of compensation if we are able to get rid of the great evils in connection with the traffic in intoxicating liquors. It has not been contended by any hon. member who has yet spoken, nor do I apprehend it will be contended by any hon, gentleman who may follow me, that the question of the evils of the liquor traffic is debatable. Every person throughout the land concedes at once the great evile flo ving from the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and it seems an astounding fact that while we can legislate for the suppression of crime and of almost every imaginable offence, we cannot apply a remedy to this great evil, which is destroying some of the best and noblest in our land, and which is bringing about the destruction of such a vast amount of property. How are we to arrive at the sense of the country on this question. The hon, member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has paid a very excellent compliment to this House by saying this is the most temperate Parliament ever assembled at the capital. I think we ought to be fattered by the opinion which the hon. gentleman holds of us, and I believe I can add my testimony to that of the hon. gentleman, because before I came here I was told that if I occupied a seat in Parliament I would come in contract with a great deal of drunkenness. Now, Sir, I am prepared to say that in a body of 211 men chosen indiscriminately from the different constituencies of the Dominion, we have, on the whole, a body of men here who are noted for their sobriety.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. JAMIESON. Now, Sir, I do not often occupy the time of this House, and I am sure I will have a candid hearing on this occasion. I think we are discussing a very important and a very serious question. I refer to the speech of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), who paid a compliment to this House, and I say that his amendment was not in accord with the sentiments which he uttered. I hold, that the character of the representatives sont by the different constituents of this Dominion may fairly and reasonably be taken to be a reflex of the public sentiment upon the temperance question throughout the Dominion; and if it be, Sir, the truth that the constituencies have sent to this House a body of men who are deserving of the high compliment which the hon. gentleman has paid them, then, I believe the country is prepared for prohibition. The next question which will arise, in the event of the Resolution carrying as amended by the hon. member Cardwell, is, how are we to ascertain the sentiments of the people of this Dominion on the question. The hon. gentleman referred to the Montreal convention, a body of men representing the temperance sentiment, the prohibition sentiment, of this Dominion, in 1874. I happened to be a member of that convention, and the question was very fully discussed there as to the proper means of taking the sense of the people upon that question. In my judgment, a very proper mode was arrived at, when the convention, by resolution, gave it as their deliverance that the sentiment of the country should be ascertained by a plebiscite. Now, if we ever arrive at the sentiments of the country on this question, I think that is the proper mode in which to arrive at it. I law could not be allowed for a moment. I apprehend did not accept the proposition of that convention. I was informed afterwards by a report of the gentleman to whom the resolution was entrusted to carry to the Government, that the answer of the First Minister of that day was, that it would be unconstitutional to attempt to take the sense of the people of this Dominion in any such manner. I never could understand why it was unconstitutional. I know that in other countries, such as France, the public sentiment of the country on a given question has often been ascertained by a plebiscite, and I think this question is of sufficient importance to warrant the Government of this Dominion in ascertaining the sentiment of the public on the question in that way. Now, Sir, we will, no doubt, be told that prohibitory legislation has been a fail-ure in nearly every case in which it has been tried; and we often hear of the Maine liquor law; we often hear that it has not restrained the traffic in intoxicating liquors, but I would ask you, and through you the members of this House, whether any effort to repeal that law has ever been successful. On the contrary, from time to time, the people of the State of Maine, instead of taking a retrograde step on that question, have taken an advance step, by making the law more perfect and stringent. We have had a great deal of legislation in this country for the purpose of regulating the traffic in intoxicating liquors; but, it seems to me that that traffic refuses to be regulated. I am credibly informed that on the British Statute Book there are over 200 enactments which have been passed with a view of regulating the traffic in intoxicating liquors. But, Sir, it has been found there, as it has been here, that it refuses to be regulated, and when we find a traffic refusing to be regulated, a traffic above and beyond the restrictions which the law attempts to throw round about it, it is time that traffic should be prohibited. I know, Sir, that perhaps my sentiments will not meet with the appropriation of all my constituents, but I am speaking my honest convictions upon this question. I am prepared to do justice to those engaged in the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and I trust before this Parliament is at an end, or at least before many years pass by, we will have legislation upon this question, which will put an end at once and forever to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and in order to do so, for my part, I am prepared to allow any reasonable degree of compensation to those engaged in the traffic—not because I believe they are entitled to it, but just for the purpose of putting an end to the traffic. We may educate our children to the best of our ability, but the ovils of the traffic are so great that when they got away from us they may be ruined by the evil influences which flow from it. I will not detain the House longer on this question. I have expressed my opinions upon it, and though they may be perhaps distasteful to a number of those who occupy seats in this House, or if not distasteful, at least in opposition to their views, I believe it is the duty of the people's representatives, of men occupying such positions as we occupy, when such an important question comes before the House, to honestly and candidly state their views upon it, in order that the country and Parliament may know where we stand with regard to it.

Mr. McCRANEY. I had no intention of saying a word upon this occasion; nor should I have risen but for the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), in reference to the operation of the Scott Act in the county of Halton, which I represent. However, I may refer somewhat to the remarks made by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty). Speaking with reference especially to the revenue obtained from the traffic, he laid a great deal of stress on the fact that we have obtained a large amount of revenue from it; and he went on to show that we were collectingabout $5,000,000 per annum Revenue officer, sent in to the Department in the last week from this traffic. The hon. gentleman did not take into ac- or ten days. Those reports, I have no doubt, will confirm count the loss which the people of this country sustain my statement that the consumption of spirits in the county from the use and abuse of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. I have repeatedly taken the trouble to go over this matter carefully, and I have satisfied myself that there is no comparison whatever between the revenue this country obtains from the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and the loss sustained by it, through the use and abuse of this traffic. I am satisfied in my own mind, that if you take into account the amount of liquor that is imported and the amount that is manufactured and sold at retail prices, the land used for growing grain, hops and other products used in the manufacture of liquors, the capital and labour employed in the wholesale and retail liquor business, the loss of labour which might be employed in other industries, the destruction of property by land and by water, the theft, bad debts, failures, pauperism, destitution, sickness, insanity and death produced through the traffic, you have a sum of money that will outweigh five times-yea, more-all the amount of revenue obtained from this traffic. And even supposing, Sir, that we do receive a large amount of revenue from it, will any amount of revenue compensate us for, or will it justify, a moral wrong or a social suicide to the peo-ple of this country? Will any amount of revenue justify the fact that many of the people of this country are des troying themselves by the use of intoxicating liquors? I have no hesitation in saying, Sir, that the amount of loss to this country-absolute loss-worse than loss-resulting from this traffic, amounts to $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 per annum. Why, Sir, there would be no difficulty in providing for our public works if this traffic were abolished in the country. I am satisfied that there is not a single in-dividual in this House who does not recognize the fact that enough money is lost by the use and abuse of this traffic in the ways I have indicated, to complete all the public works of this country in a very few years. Now, Sir, I come to a statement made by the hon. member for Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Cameron). I am perfectly astonished at the statement made by that hon. gentleman. Where he has obtained his information I certainly cannot tell; but I have no hesitation in saying that he could not have obtained it from those engaged in the traffic in the county of Halton. I state most emphatically that the statement is incorrect-that the hon. gentleman has been misinformed. I state most unhesitatingly-and I am satisfied I can prove what I say on the tostimony of the hotel-keepers themselves-that there is not one-tenth, or one-fifth at most, of the amount of liquor sold in the county of Halton to-day that there was before the adoption of the Scott Act. The Scott Act is as well administered in that county as any other Act in force there. We all know that in a small county like Halton there are difficulties in the way of enforcing it strictly; we know that individuals are able, to some extent, to obtain liquor. But, Sir, the statement that there is as much liquor sold as before the passage of the Act is entirely incorrect; and if the hon. gentleman obtained his information from the Inland Revenue officer, it is something new to me. I asked in this House, last Session, for a return, showing the number of certificates that had been given by physicians in the county of Halton to enable persons to obtain liquor, and very few were returned.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I did not state-I wish to correct my hon, friend-that I obtained the information myself from the Department of Inland Revenue; but my information was communicated to me by a party who had himself seen and heard the reports of the officer of Inland Revenue, in the possession of that Department, and I am perfectly willing that the correctness of my statement should be decided by reference to the reports of the Inland of Halton has not diminished under the operation of the Scott Act, but that more liquor is sold on medical certificates than was previously sold by the licensed victuallers.

Mr. McCRANEY. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would refer him to a meeting of the Dominion Alliance that has just taken place in Toronto, where a gentleman from the county of Halton spoke as follows :--

"Rev. J. M. Cameron said that drinking in Halton had greatly dim-inished since the Act had come in force. It required a peculiar knock and a special introduction to get a drink. It was a rare thing to see a drunken man in the streets of Milton. The honest farmers got home earlier after selling their grain, while formerly they used to spend their money in treating, which was a prolific source of drunkeness. If the Scott Act was ever voted on again in that county, its opponents would get such a Waterloo that they would never make another at empt to upset it. There was a great improvement in the feeling in favour of the Act. He hoped that it would be carried [in the adjoing county of Peel. Their base was as fea as it was on the shores of the pure waters of the Act. He hoped that it would be carried in the aujourney cours. Peel. Their base was safe as it was on the shores of the pure waters of Lake Ontario. (Applause.)"

The statement made by this gentleman I can myself verify. Only a few days ago I met a gentleman who has perhaps the largest interests in the county of Halton, and who was recently a License Commissioner. He is not a temperance man, and I put the question to him: "What do you thinkis the Scott Act working well in Halton ? Has it diminished the use of intoxicating liquors ?" He stated that it had. asked him, "to what extent do you think it has ?" He said: "I am satisfied that there is not one fifth of the quantity of liquor sold in the county of Halton to day that there was under license." I asked him how much he thought had been sold before the Scott Act came into force. He said he thought in the neighbourhood of $100,000 worth of liquor had been sold per annum, as there were a large number of hotels-some forty-two; but that his candid opinion was that $20,000 would safely cover all that was now sold under the Scott Act. As for liquor being sold by the hotel keepers, I have no hesita tion in saying that there is very little sold. In fact, so well is the Act respected at the present time, that the hotelkeepers, I am informed, within the last few days, have put up over their hotel doors notices that positively no liquors could be obtained there. I have also the opinion of a gentleman who came from the county of Halton to day. He stated that the Act was working well, and that when the time came for the re-passage or repeal of the Act, he had no doubt whatever that the Act would be re-passed, as the people were becoming more satisfied with it, and it was working much better than at the commencement. Our people are law-abiding citizens, and I have no doubt whatever that if a prohibitory law were passed by this Parliament and one or two years given those engaged in the traffic to get out of the business, the law would be respected and properly carried out. I will not occupy the time of the House further on this question, but will conclude by saying that I have always been in favour of total prohibition, and am prepared to support any measure which has for its object the prohibition of the liquor traffic; and I would like very much to see a division of the House taken on the question, so that we might see how we stand with regard to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall not take up the the time of the House any longer than I can possibly help, but, at the same time, I must make the same remark that I made a fortnight or three weeks ago in speaking on this subject, namely, that I shall not consider it my duty to shorten my remarks too much. I shall try to do the very best I can in this respect, but I do not consider it consistent with the duty I owe this cause and its friends to omit anything I may consider it desirable to urge in supporting the Resolution. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) has stated that he could not allow this to pass without making a protest against the principle to which it would pledge the House. He stated that he took occasion to protost against this principle in personal knowledge, to protest against the restrictive parts of the Dominion License Act of 1883, All I have to say with reference to that is, that if the hon. gentleman's protest is no more efficacious with regard to this Resolution than it was with regard to the Canada Temperance Act and the Dominion License Act of 1883, we have a fair chance of carrying this Resolution in the House. The hon. gentleman read an extract from Hansard, from a speech delivered in 1878, I think, by a former Speaker of Parliament, and he gave, as I understand, his adherence to certain statements that were made by that gentleman. Amongst others was this: that the principle of a prohibitory law was most tyrannical, and that it allowed the majority to dictate as to what people are to think, eat and wear. I must deny most emphatically that a prohibitory law makes any such provision; it does not state what a man shall think or what he shall not think, what he shall eat or shall not eat, what he shall wear or shall not wear. A prohibitory law has simply to do with the production and sale of intoxicating liquor, and, as such, is as far removed from that kind of law as we can possibly conceive. I have also to set the hon, gentleman right with reference to the New Brunswick law. He stated, as an an argument why prohibition was a failure, that New Brunswick passed a prohibitory law in 1855, and, after it had been on the Statute Books two or three years, it was repealed. As a matter of fact, it came into force in January, 1855, and was repealed in June, the same year, so that it practically never went into force, and there can be no argument made with reference to its effects. He protested also against the constitutionality of prohibition, and was kind enough to refer to me as an enthusiast in this matter, and the rider of a hobby. Now, it somewhat amused me to hear a legal gentleman, in one breath accuse me of being an enthusiast and a rider of a hobby, and then stating in an assembly composed largely of legal men, that he has a very strong opinion against the constitutionality of prohibition. What does he mean by that? That surely can only be determined by a legal tribu-nal; and is it not within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman here that the constitutionality of prohibition has been affirmed, over and over again, by all the legal tribunals, great and small, in all Anglo-Saxon countries ? And when an hon. gentleman, a lawyer, gets up in this House and protests against prohibition as being unconstitutional, he bas to protest against the legal decisions of every court, from the Privy Council of Great Britain down to the smaller courts of the British colonies and in the States of the United States. He stated also that it would be a bad thing for the barley growers, if the brewing interest was destroyed. Well, I can tell the hon, gentleman and other hon members of this House, that wherever the Scott Act has been introduced and voted, that in the forty counties in this Dominion in which it has been introduced and voted upon, its main support has come from the rural districts, from the farmers themselves. It is not in the rural districts that such a law is unpopular, but it is rather in the cities, towns and villages, in the populated centres, that the vote goes against it. Take, for example, the vote recently given in Oxford county; it was in Woodstock town, where the vote was largely against it; but every rural district in that county gave its adherence, in large majorities, to the principle of prohibition, as therein embodied. The hon. gentleman has spoken with reference to the failure of the Scott Act in the county of Halton; but that statement has been very well refuted and met by the counter testimony given by the representative of the county of Halton, from his place in Parliament. I will, however, just call the attention of Parliament to the grounds the hon. gentleman has taken to prove that the Scott Act has been a failure in the county of Halton. How does he attempt to prove it? He states that in the Inland Revenue 1878, when the Canada Temperance Act was before the House Report there is proof that will convince any person and that he also took occasion, as I know he did from that more liquor is now sold in that county, under medical certificates, by the druggists, than was formerly sold by the licensed victuallers. Has the hon. gentleman read the pages of the Inland Revenue Report? Can he find out from the pages of any report the amount of intoxicating liquors sold in any county of any Province in this Dominion? It is impossible that such figures can occur or be found in the report in the possession of any Department of this Govern ment. What is the whole ground upon which he bases the failure of the Scott Act? Because medical certificates have been abused, is that the fault of the Scott Act? Not at all; it is the fault of some medical practitioners who, I am sorry to say, have not that feeling of honour which generally characterizes the medical profession, and who are willing to abuse the privileges of their profession for a small considera-tion or for no consideration. The proper way to cure this abuse is not by getting rid of the Act, but by getting rid of the practices which are done in defiance of the spirit of the Act. I are not at all opposed to either the remarks or the spirit of the remarks which were made by the hon. gentleman from Cardwell. I agree in the main with what he has stated in the Resolution. I did not object to it, and would not have voted against that which was added to the Resolution. So much, Sir, with reference to what has been stated; and now, if the House will allow me just a few moments, I will make a few remarks with reference to the right, the necessity, and the efficiency of prohibition, and then leave the matter for this House to decide upon. While I had the honour of addressing some remarks to this House in the beginning of this debate, touching especially the great importance of this subject, touching the scientific aspect of it, and touching the economic aspects of this question, I believe there were very tew gentlemen on either side of this House who were dis-posed to question what I then stated. The whole practical question comes down to a point of difference between gentlemen who are present, when we come to choose the method for getting rid of the great evils which admittedly flow from this traffic. The question is for us to decide as to whether probition is necessary, whether it is right, and whether it has been or can be proved to be effective. This, I say, is the great question. Now, then, I think the necessity of prohibition is very well proved from two or three considerations, which I will give in very brief space. The first is this, Sir: that all preceding legislation has failed to diminish the scope of the evils which result from the traffic, and has failed to minimize those evils, as they should have been minimized. And we must take another thing into consideration when we come to discuss that part of the question; we must take into consideration this fact, that not only has law been doing its work for the last fifty or the last twenty-five years quite effectively, but alongside of law there has been also a very strong and increasing force of education and of the spread of information. It will be patent to the observation and known to all members present that the last twenty-five years especially, in Great Britain, in the United States, and in the Dominion of Canada, have seen a very great and a very increasing revival in the means for bringing this question before the people in mass, for educating them with reference to the effect of intoxicating liquors, for putting temperence instruction into the books, the paper, the literature, and the schools of the country; and the law that has been on the Statute Book in these countries for the last twenty-five years has been most efficiently aided by these moral means amongst the people, which have been working in connection with the law. Take that into consideration, and yet come to the test by results, and what do we find? In Great Britain, we find that, in 1860, the liquor bill was £84,000,000; in 1882, it had risen to they know is an enemy to the best interests, material, £128,000,000. We find that the cases summarily proceeded against for drunkenness in England and Wales in 1860 were, 78,000, and the cases proceeded against in like manner in 1879, were 178,000. We find that, in 1:31, the line of a complete and total prohibition of the traffic Mr. Foster. people, which have been working in connection with liquor bill per capita of the people of Great Britain was £2 15s.; in 1875, it had risen to £3 5s. In 1831, the absolute consumption of alchohol was sixteen pints per head; in 1879, it had risen to seventeen pints per head. What do these results show? They show that, along with all the restrictive license legislation which has been growing in strictness for the last twenty five years, aided by all the methods of information and teaching that philantropy and religious fervour could bring about, there has been an abso-lute increase in the consumption, the cost and the evil results which flow from intoxicating liquors. When we come to ask the reason why, the answer is apparent, when we find that, in Great Britain to-day, there are 190,000 persons who sell intoxicating liquors from January until December, keeping open places where facilities for drinking and where inducements and temptations are openly put before the people ; and, as long as this takes place, just so long will the law and the moral suasion itself be insufficient to bring about the good results that all good citizens ask for. The very same thing might be stated with reference to the United States of America, and I think the same thing can very well be stated of this Dominion of Canada, that, taking into consideration all this revival of temperance interest and all this diffusion of education and of moral effort, we find that, in the Dominion of Canada, the consumption of spirits keeps about the same, that the consumption of beer is increasing, and that the criminality which comes from the tracffi in intoxication liquors, is not decreasing to any appreciable degree, and forms a subject which is challenging attention, and is one of the most important factors in producing the deep and wide agitation which at present is going on in this country for relief from those evils. S), I say the necessity for a prohibitory law is shown by the ailure of preceding attempts at legislation to minimize the evils which result from this traffic or to diminish the scope of that traffic sufficiently to meet the wants and the wishes of the people. But, Sir, we can show that prohibition is necessary, as a result from experience in the trial of law. I wish simply to call the attention of this House to one fact, that is, that the principle of prohibition has already been admitted, has already been embodied, has already been acted upon. Take up any license law you have upon the Statute Book of any country, and what do you find the chief and saving element in that license law? It is the amount of prohibition that you have infused into the law. You say by your license laws, that liquors shall not be sold on Sundays; that is an application of the principle of prohibition. You say it shall not be sold after seven o'clock on a Saturday night; that, too, is an application of the principle of prohibition. You say it shall not be sold to minors; that is another application of the principle of prohibition. So, when you come to find out the grip and grasp of your license law, is in the amount of prohibition you have infused into it, it is in direct proportion to the extent to which you have applied that principle. Now, the people of this broad country have came to the conclusion that these laws are effective, only as they contain this appliication of the principle of prohibition, and that they have hitherto not done what the country desires to have done. The country's will is, that this shall be made stricter and stricter; that is, that more of the prohibitive elment should be imported into the laws, and I make bold to stand up and declare from my place in Parliament, that this free people in point out just a simple fact, which shows how this tendency is making itself felt. Why, I remember when, not long ago, a county by the name of Lennox, not very far from this city of Ottawa, made a turn round with reference to its political complexion, and by a slight majority elected a gentleman who at present sits in this House, that one half of the press of the country heralded it forth that a great change was taking place in the political aspect of the country, and that the change was indicated by this reversal of the vote. I remember, also, when the county of York, in my native Province, by a very significant vote, turned round on its former party allegiance, so to speak, and elected my hon. friend who now represents it here, by a large majority, it was heralded throughout the country by the other half of the press of the country, as in-dicating a very significant change. Let me call the to other attention of hon. gentlemen of both parties indications of a very significant change. Since the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, has been before the country, it has been submitted in forty counties and cities of this Dominion, and it has been carried in thirty-three of them. It has been lost by a majority in six, while in St. John, the commercial metropolis of my own Province, the voto resulted in a tie and the Act was lost. When I count up the votes upon that Act I find that there were cast in favour of it 45,080, and against it there were 23,606 voter, or as nearly as possible a vote of two to one in favour of the principle of prohibition. Will the hon, gentleman say that that does not sufficiently indicate the temper of the people of this country, that it does not afford a good ground for us from our place in Parliament to say that the principle of prohibition has a strong and entrenched hold in the hearts of the people, and that we are not going beyond what the indications have already given us a right to go. So much with reference to the necessity of prohibition. A word now with reference to the right of prohibition, as that has been called in question. As I said a moment ago, the legal right to enact and carry out a prohibitory law has been confirmed by the highest judicial authorities and courts in all Anglo Saxon countries. I think, Sir, it is right, and I think so from one or two considerations. Some have stated that it is a sumptuary law, which enacts that you shall not say so and so, that you shall not eat such and such, that you shall not wear such and such clothing. Sir, the principle of prohibition, as applied to the liquor traffic, does no such thing. It simply deals with the public act of the manufacture, importation and sale, an act which is done for the good or to the detriment of the country, and if the country feels that it is done to its detriment, by all the sacred interests which that country guards, and by all the indefeasible rights which inure to every civilized Government, it is not only the right, but it is the duty of that country to have that taken away which is against its best interest. There is the whole question. Is it better for the country it should not exist? then keep it. Is it better for the country it should not exist? then do not put public patronage and public sanction beneath it, to uphold it by the sacred force of public law. Now others say this is class legislation. My opinion is that every kind of legislation you make is, to a certain extent, class legislation. The only thing we have to consider is to what class the legislation applies. If it is for the good of the greatest number, then the interests, financial or social, of the smaller number have to go down before it. That is the question we have to look at. Sir, let us look at the present state of legislation. We legislate to keep the distillery, to keep up the brewery, to acep up the liquor shops in our country, who employ altogether some 11,000 or 12,000 persons. Now, there is another class in this country, and that is the 4,400,000 and over, who do not make and utterly annihilate the evil against which it is aimed. sell liquor. The legislation we have at present is in We have laws upon the Statue Book, but we have violations 141 n intoxicating liquors. More than that, Sir; I wish to favour of the 11,000, but it is against the best interests of the 4,400,000. By the legislation I propose, the good of the greater number is sought, and if it is admitted that the good of the greatest number ought to prevail, then the interests of the smaller number must go down. The supreme object of law and the end for which law ought to exist, it seems to me, is simply that the greatest good ought to be secured to the greatest number. Sir, it is said that it is in violation of personal liberty. I, myself, am just as strong an upholder of the principles of personal liberty as any man can well be, but I know that it is apt sometimes to take the form of license, and what we denominate by the sacred name of liberty may become an infringement upon the rights of others who wish to exorcise their personal liberty. There is a sphere in which personal liberty is sacred and ought to be kept inviolable. When it travels out of that sphere and infringes in speech or action apon the rights, the happinoss, the pursuits, the prosperity of others, then it has to be hedged around, restrained, and circumscribed by what is for the good of others as well. So personal liberty has its sphere thus restricted, and within that sphere it ought to be kept inviolable. Sir, do we not infringe upon what some people call personal liberty in our other legislation. There is, for instance, a law upon our Statute Book which states that I shall not purchase a revolver, fill it with cartridges, and carry it about the street on my person; if I do so I am liable to punishment. Now, why is that? Because it is feared that in a moment of provocation or quick excitement I, having that deadly arm in my possession, might use it to the detriment of a fellow creature. The temptation may occur and I may yiell to it, and harm would result. But there the law comes down, and public sentiment upholds it, and says that in the general interest I should be deprived of what I might consider my personal right. So it is with reference to quarantine; so it is with reference to a thousand other things that I might mention. Wherever they infringe upon public rights and interests, the public cries a halt and asks that they should be exercised, only in so fir as they are not detrimental to the greatest good of the greatest number. Well, Sir, I think, then, without speaking further on this point, that it is competent to a country, by virtue of that preventive power which it posses es, to thield itself from enemies, within or without, by virtue of that protective power which every people has to look after and develop its best interests. We should carefully take away that which hin-ders their development. From all these considerations, it seems to me perfectly within the right of a people to prohibit a public act which a majority of them consider to be detrimental; therefore, on those grounds the people may prohibit the sale, or the manufacture, of strong drink which produces an infinity of mischief, counterbalanced by an infinitional portion of good. I think hon. gentlemen are sometimos very unreasonable in applying canons to test a prohibitory law which they would not droim of applying to any other law upon the Statute Book. A prohibitory law is but the creation of the people's voice, fallible as all other laws are. Now, Sir, do we expect a law to be carried out unless it has a fair chance for its enforcement? Do we expest, in the first place, that law should do more than to minimize the evil against which it is directed? Men eite prohibitory countries and say that notwithstanding the law, people can drink and people can sell, and they quote that as indubitable proof that the law has been a failure. Sir, that is not a fair test for a law. No law proposes to do more than to minimize the evils against which it is directed, and if we are reasonable, as I trust we are, we shall not ask that a prohibitory law shall utterly annihilate the evil against which it is directed, any more than we should ask that any other law should utterly annihilate the evil against which it is aimed.

of those laws in every community. The test to be applied is, does the law minimize the evil and keep it down? If so it is useful and ought to be maintained. So much, then, with respect to the test of law. Recol-Recollect that it is not to entirely annihilate the evil but to minimize it, to bring it within the smallest possible compass, that we maintain such laws as advisable; and if you find such laws minimize the evil, they are a success and not a failure. I hope that the same reasonable and fair test may be given to prohibitory laws as is granted by common consent to every other law we place on the Statue Book. With respect to the effectiveness of prohibitory laws, I do not propose to enter at any length into that argument. I merely wish to state that in Great Britain prohibitory laws have existed a considerable length of time, and that the testimony to their good and advantage is unvarying and unimpeachable. There are to day in the ecclesiastical Province of Canterbury 1,500 parishes, in which there is no dram shop, bar room or tavern where intoxicating liquors are sold, and a population of more than 250,0000 is living in those parishes. The Committee of the House of Convocation made a very careful investigation into those parishes, and reported that the results were such as temperance people were led to expect. There are in the British Isles more than 100 estates, covering large areas of country, in which, by the will of the landlords themselves, no intoxicating liquor is sold, and the testimony is unvarying as to the good effect which comes from that restriction and prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors. Sir, the principle of prohibition has been admitted by the British Parliament on several occasions. In 1854 the principle of prohibition was applied to the Kingdom of Scotland for one seventh of the time, and kept in force since then. In 1878 it was applied to the Kingdom of Ireland; and I notice a very significant fact which has occurred within the last few weeks, that whereas, when that law for Sunday closing in Ireland was introduced and pass cd the first time, it was as a private measure and excluded five of the principal cities and towns in Ireland. Within the last four weeks the British Government have introduced that measure as their own, and extended its provisions to the five formally exempted cities and towns. I ask no better proof than that practical test which has been given in Ireland, and the practical results which have followed, that the British Governme t, after carefully investigating the matter, are so informed and so sure as to the good effects of it, that they have, of their own motion, made the law their own and extended its provisions to the five exempted towns. I will not call the attention of the House to the prohibitory laws which have been passed and are in force in the United States, and with great success. I will not call the attention of the House at any length to the prohibitory laws passed in this Dominion, which have also had their success. I wish merely to refer to one law, and to quote an authority not unknown to this House with respect to its beneficial effect. In 1875 the Parliament of this country passed a prohibitory law, prohibiting the importation, manufacture and possession of intoxicating liquors in the North-West Territory. That has been kept on the Statute Bock ever since, and only this year a very eminent authority, one whom this House will be glad to recognize, Sir Charles Tupper, made the following statement from his place in Parliament:

"It will hardly be necessary for me to allude to the fact that, under an Act which 1 had the bonour of submitting to Parliament when Minis-ter of Customs, in 1873, the Inland Revenue has not much to do, I am happy to ray, in the North-West Territories, because, under that Act, we established what is called a Maine Liquor Law throughout the North-West Territories, which prevents the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in any part of those Territories. The result of that enactment has abundantly just fied it. It was with no small degree of satisfaction that 1 found, when it was proposed to take a section of the North-West Territory within the bounds of old Manitoba, that the people arose on masse against it, and protested against being carried into the Province of Manitoba on any other terms than that they could maintain the exclu-Mr. FOSTER.

sion of intoxicating liquors, which they then enjoyed in the North-West, and retain that provision when they became part of the Province of Manitoba."

That is the testimony of the Minister of Railways and Canals; a conclusion at which he arrived, after an intimate knowledge of the operation of the Act in the North-West Territory, for seven or eight years. I offer no further remarks, to-night, Mr. Speaker, I leave the Resolutions, and the principle which is contained therein, to the arbitrament of this House, feeling satisfied that if it will pass these Resolutions in the shape in which they are, it will not only have given an expression of opinion, which will have its effect on a traffic always aggressive and always destructive, but it will also hold out a silver token of hope and inspiration to thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who are earnestly and honestly working in this country to suppress a traffic which has brought about a multitude of evils, with no compensating advantages.

Mr. KIRK. I did not intend to say a word on this question, nor do I intend to say much now. We always listen with admiration to the bon. member for King's (Mr. Foster). On this occasion I have listened to him with a good deal of pain and with a good deal of surprise. I could not understand why he wasted so much eloquence in arguing the question of prohibition when he eliminated, or allowed to be eliminated from his prohibitory Resolutions, anything which was prohibitory in them. I regret that when the amendment moved by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) was before the House, and was carried by the unanimous vote of the House, I did not object to it. I was looking to the hon. member for King's to rise and divide the House on it. I regret he did not do so. When he accepted that amendment, he spoiled his Resolutions-there is nothing now left. The Resolutions as now drawn are simply the Resolutions passed by this House in 1875. Has not prohibition sentiment advanced in this country? I think it has. In 1878 this fact was proved, for the Scott Act, which is a prohibitory measure, was passed. It was thought by the temperance people, and I thought so, that it was the intention of the temperance men in this House to press in Parliament this Session the square issue of prohibition; but from these Resolutions prohibition is altogether eliminated, The Resolutions before Parliament to day are simply milk and water Resolutions, with very little milk in them. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that the people call him onthusiastic. Well, I am not surprised at that, when they hear him talk; but when the point comes when action is required, he seems to have very little backbone. I regret this very much, from the fact that I, as a temperance man, looked upon him as my leader. I am sorry I did not as a temperance man, and as a prohibitionist, object and domand the views of this House when the amendment was introduced. So far as the Resolution is now concerned, I, for one, caro very little about it. We are no further advanced in regard to it than we were in 1875, and I think the temperanco people of the country will feel in the same way with regard to it that I do. Now, I have nothing more to say with regard to this question, except to repeat that I regret very very much that our leader on the temperance question in this House has though proper to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Cardwell.

On the main motion, as amended, being put,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I desire, Sir, to have the at-tention of the House just for a few minutes. Never since I have entered public life have I voted, nor do I intend to vote, against the principle of prohibition. As early as 1855, I introduced into the Legis'a ure of my own Province one of the most stringent prohibitory Bills that was ever pro-posed in any Legislature or Parliament in the world. Previous to the introduction of that Bill, we had, as we thought, educated the people of New Brunswick to the point that such a law, if enacted, would be supported and sustained by the people. Reference was made by the hon. mover of this Resolution to the number of petitions presented to the House of Commons in 1877; and it my memory serves me, in the Province of New Branswick, as far back as 1855, we had more signatures to potitions presented to the Legislature of that Province in favour of prohibition than were signed to the petitions presented to this House from the whole Dominion in 1877. They were brought into the House in the size of rolls of carpet by the hon. members who presented them. We thought that we had educated the people of that Province up to such a point that if a prohibitory law was passed it would be enforced. We had three-fourths of the people of that Province sign-ing petitions in favour of prohibition. That law was passed by the Lower House, by something like two-thirds major-ity, and it passed the Upper House by nearly the same majority; and it was passed because of the strong arguments and facts presented, and because of the statistics we had collected as to the effect of the traffic in New Brunswick from 1852 to 1855, and which were so convincing that men who differed from us in opinion gave us their support, and enabled us to carry the measure by the majority stated. That law went in force on the 1st of January, 1856. I was contrasting the position I occupied at that time with the position occupied by the mover and seconder of this Resolution. Before that law went in force, I was burned in effigy in many parts of the Province of New Brunswick. On the night of the day on which it came into force, I had the doors of my house broken down by a battering ram, and I did not know but that my life would be taken. I had threatening letters, with death's heads and cross bones, sent to me; but we carried that law in New Brunswick, and I am satisfied that if such a law was in force to-day, it would be a great blessing to that Province. For six weeks that law was enforced. The saloons and dram shops of that Province were almost entirely closed. Many gentlemen had laid in their stocks beforehand, and had as much liquor as they required; but the drinking saloons and to say that when the time comes when it will be desirwere closed, and the result was apparent to every person, even to those who were most prejudiced against the principle of prohibition. But what took place? Some few individuals had the temerity to violate the law. They were taken before the magistrates for trial. The magistrates, though well informed men, were not legal gentlemen and were not very well up in legal proceedings. They tried the cases, and gave their verdicts according to the evidence. Appeals were taken, however, until I might say hundreds of cases were before the Judges on appeal; and through some informality in the proceedings of the magistrates, the cases were dismissed and the magistrates were mulcted in costs amounting in many cases to from $200 to $500. These magistrates were honest men, who were discharging their duties to the best of their abilities, and in some cases have assisted to pay the expenses to which they were sub-This went on until the magistrates became so iected. alarmed that they objected to undertaking them. The result was that the Lieutenant-Governor-who was hostile to the Bill-brought the subject to the attention of the Governmont, and suggested the desirability of having a new election, in order to test public opinion, with reference to this law, which had been in operation only about four months, the Council objected to this course. This question, though it was not the sole issue of the elections of 1854, was discussed on nearly every hustings, and many members were elected upon it. At this time some of the friends of the measure were themselves disheartened on account of the expenses incurred in the courts, and because of the increasing number of the violators of the law, who, there was reason to fear, would not be brought to trial. The Governor insisted upon a dissolution of Parliament. The Government resigned because they would not accept the responsibility of this Act. They demanded that the law should have a twelve months' trial, at all events; and declared that if then it was found to be a failure, we would be prepared either to amend the law or to ask for its repeal. We were thrown into an election, and very many of those who had signed the petition went back on us; they voted against this law, and a majority were returned to vote in favour of its repeal. Under these circumstances, and believing as I do now, that if public sentiment is not sufficiently educated to sustain a prohibition law the passage would do harm instead of good, instead of abandoning anything by accepting the original resolution even as amended, I hold that if this motion be carried the cause of prohibition will have made a great step in advance.

Mr. KIRK. We had the same thing in 1875.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. 1 am not quite sure but that some hon, gentlemen who voted against this proposition today did not then vote for the proposition moved by Mr. Ross. That, however, does not matter at present. I believe in prohibition; I believe it will yet come in Canada; but I believe it would be the greatest injury to the permanent success of prohibition were there such a law enacted to-day, because I know, from the experience of the past, that it could not be successfully carried out. I have the courage of my convictions and am pre-pared to vote for the principle of prohibition, but I have also the courage of my convictions when I say that the country is not yet sufficiently educated to enable that principle to be successfully carried into operation. What did we find in New Brunswick? We found that men who signed the petition for prohibition and advocated it publicly, when it came to the vote, voted for its repeal; and until a majority of the people of the Dominion are practically tecto-tallers, we will have the appetite of the people, as well as the interest of the men engaged in the liquor traffic, working and conspiring to destroy it. It is because I believe in prohibition that I am prepared to vote for the principle, able to have it put into operation, I will be prepared to support a prohibitory measure, not deterred by any question of its effect on the revenue. Of course, the ex-Finance Minister and myself would naturally look to the matter of revenue, but that, in my judgment, is but a feather in the scale when compared to the beneficial effects that would follow the practical working of prohibition. I would vote for it most cheerfully and, as Finance Minister, prepare ways and means to make up any deficiency that would arise if we were in a position to say that if such a law were enacted it would be sustained. I can understand the delicacy of an hon. gentleman voting against the last amendment, as a temperance man and a prohibitionist, because, as such, he would seem inconsistent, and I notice 1 cheers when my name was called as voting against the immediate adoption of prohibition; but I did so, because I believe it is in the interest of temperance that we should not enact a law that will not be enforced. I speak with the experience I had thirty years ago, and have had ever since 1856. When the convention was held in Montreal, I was written to by one of the leading friends of temperance asking my opinion. I was unable to be present, but I wrote a letter in reply, which letter Mr. Ross read at a convention held in Ottawa. What was the opinion I then expressed? stated that if they decided to submit the proposal to the popular vote they should not suggest less than a threefifths vote, because, if carried by a bare majority and with out public sentiment behind it, the law would fail and the cause of temperance would be damaged instead of benefited. That has been my conviction since 1855. I do not hesitate to say that the success of the principle of prohibition depends very much on the judicious enforcement of the Scott Act; that is, the judicious selection of the places where the law is to be brought into force. Take my own Province as an illustration, a county where the Act has been in force for some time, but where it has not been enforced; in that county the cause of temperance has been damaged rather than benefited. If we would select the counties of the Dominion in which public sentiment is really strong enough to sustain the law and enforce it, I am positive the result would be such that it would extend widely throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion the advantages of the prohibitory principle, and by thus educating the country, section by section, a Dominion prohibitory law might be put in force and carried to a successful conclusion. Take any county in which the law is in force, but not executed, and you will find that the effect is injurious; but, on the contrary, in any county where the law is practically carried out, the effect is strongly in favour of extending generally the principle of prohibition. I say that I will be prepared to record my vote on any occasion in favour of prohibition, when we can say honestly that the public sentiment of Canada is so strong that we will be in a position to enforce it. But from my experience of what has taken place in the past, I cannot help being convinced that we are not to-day in that position. If a prohibitory law were enacted to morrow, I am satisfied it could not be enforced, and nothing could do more damage to the cause of prohibition than the enactment of a law, followed by its nonenforcement and ultimate repeal. It would then take us a century to get back to our starting point. We must carry prohibition step by step, and that can only be done by the judicious enactment and successful carrying out of the Scott Act, through a careful selection of the counties in which public sentiment is strongly in favour of such a law. In such a way, our people will be educated, step by step, and the day will then not be far distant when Parliament will be able to say, wisely and judiciously, that the time has arrived when the Act can be successfully enforced throughout the whole Dominion. Having a strong feeling on this question, I wish to explain distinctly that my reason for giving this vote is that, at present the public sentiment of the country is not in such a position that we could enfore the law if enacted. I may say I believe that if a vote were taken, a majority of the people would vote for prohibition, but with the social customs as at present, I do not believe that a prohibitory law could be enforced, and I therefore give my vote in what I believe to be the true interest of prohibition and the cause of temperance.

Mr. IRVING. If the statements made by the last speaker be correct, I cannot see the propriety of introducing the Resolution at all. Now, Sir, what are the reasons given by the last speaker why the country is not ready for it? Simply, that a law was passed some thirty five years ago and repealed immediately without giving it a trial at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. IRVINE. I will stand here until I get a hearing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. IRVINE. I will be heard, or I will stand here until tc-morrow morning. I will not go on as long as there is this noise.

Mr. BAKER (Missisquoi). If we are going to make a night of it, permit me to ask what motion is before the Chair?

Mr. SPEAKER. The main motion as amondod. Shall it be adopted ?

Mr. IRVING. Five minutes will do me if I get a hearing. The reason the hon. gontleman has given why the country is not ripe for a prohibitory law is that a law was enacted in New Brunswick thirty-five years ago and repealed immediately. The hon. gentleman is very well aware that, when the people of New Brunswick wore appealed to enter the Union, which has not been found to be very beneficial to New Brunswick, they declined the proposals then made, but a year or two afterwards they willingly accepted the proposition made to them. However, I will refer to a State where there is a prohibitory law enactedthat is Maine. Maine enacted a prohibitory law in 1851, the law remained on the Statute Book until 1855, and the people of Maine had the law repealed, the law was again enacted in 1858, and it has remained on the Statute Book from then till now, for a period of twenty eight years. The people of Maine changed their minds and re-enacted the law which was first repealed, and I do not think there is a party in Maine now bold enough to stand up and ask the Maine Legislature to repeal the law which is the law of Maine.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. VAIL. We will have to retaliate on this side.

Mr. MILLS. It means a longer Session, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If you want to adjourn at Easter.

Mr. IRVINE. I stated that no portion of the people of Maine can be found to stand up and ask the Legislature to repeal that law, and for the Finance Minister to state that the fact that the people enacted a law thirty-five years ago and found it unpopular, shows they still enjoy the same view in relation to a prohibitory law, is absurd. I will say now what I have said heretofore, that the sentiment in reference to prohibition in this Chamber is not very strong. I do not think it is quite the reflex of the sentiment of the country. It is very true that, a few years ago, when this country was ruled by another Government, the people of this country were very clamorous for a prohibitory law and they did not appeal in vain to the Government of that day, led by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. He gave them what is known as—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Coughlin,

Curran,

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon: gentlemen try to keep quiet for a few moments, until we get to a division on the matter.

Mr. IRVINE. He gave them what is known as a local option law, that is, a permissive law, prohibitory in its character when enacted, but left to the people, of course, to accept or reject it. We found last year that that law could be amonded, and the Alliance which met in this city a year ago, proposed some amendments to that law, and it is very well known that a Committee was appointed to have those amendments embodied in an amendment to be sent to this Parliament, and we know very well that they never were presented, for the reason, exactly, that the Govern-ment of the day, of which the hon. the Finance Minister is a shining light, could not undertake the responsibility of introducing the law in this House to carry it through Parliament-that is, the amendments embodied in the Resolution. So we have abundant proof that the present Government, the gentlemen who sit on the Treasury Benches, are not very favourable to what we call advanced temperance legislation, and I think all that the temperance people of this country ask now is, that we have what we call a fair show : that is, that we have a fair sight, to enforce the Scott Act. But we believe-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question; question.

Mr. IRVINE. We have a fair exhibition of the temperance sentiment of the House to night. We know on what side advanced temperance principles are. I said in the outset that I believed the temperance people of this country wanted nothing better than the Scott Act, if it received that treatment which it should receive at the hands of the Government, but we are satisfied from what we know, we have reason to believe, that the present Government are willing to see that law frustrated and wiped off the Statute Book. We know that, notwithstanding that the Finance Minister votes one way and speaks another, the sentiment of the party on the Treasury Benches is decidedly hostile to the temperance movement and to temperance legislation. We know that the temperance question has been the hobby upon which he rode into power, upon which he sits in power now, the hobby which he has always sat upon, in order to advance his own interests.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

Motions for the following Returns were severally agreed to:

Copies of advertisement calling for tenders for carrying mails from Kamloops to Spencer's Bridge, B.C., dated June, 13th, 1883; also, copies of tenders received for such sorvice; also, copy of contract based on such tenders, and the hours of arrival and departure of mails from both places.-(Mr. Mackenzie.)

Copies of all documents, statements, &c., of a nature to afford the information asked for by the following questions: Whether the Government has, by sale, grant, location or otherwise, disposed of the lands belonging to it in the County of Richelieu? If so, what are the lands; what is the extent of each lot; to whom was it disposed; what are the conditions of each such grant, location or sale; what are the prices paid in each case, and when and how were the amounts paid? Also, of all documents relating to the subject matter of the said questions, and of those evidencing the said transactions.-(Mr. Amyot.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As it is likely we shall have a very late sitting to-morrow night, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:35 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 27th March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

VACANCY IN THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF NICOLET.

Mr. SPEAKER. A vacancy having occurred in the representation, by the resignation of François Xavier Ovide Methot, Member for the Electoral District of Nicolet, in conformity with the Act 41 Victoria, Chap. 5, Section 12, I have issued my warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new Writ of Election for the said Electoral District.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution :---

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the treatment and relief of sick and distressed mariners, so as to extend the benefit thereof to vessels employed in fishing on certain conditions.

He said: It has been found in practice that a great many fishing vessels, both Canadian and foreign vessels, visiting our coast do not pay any sick mariners' fees until they have a seaman or fisherman sick on board. Consequently, there was a charge upon the mariners' fund in this way without there being any corresponding income. I now propose to allow Canadian registered vessels to participate in the benefits of that fund, on condition that before starting on a voyage they pay the sick mariners' dues.

Resolution considered in Committee and reported.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 129) to amond the Act respecting the treatment and relief of sick and distressed mariners.

Bill read the first time.

RETURNS RESPECTING MILITIA MATTERS.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to enquire when the return ordered in respect of the purchase of tents in connection with the Militia Department will be brought down. I fail to understand why the preparation of these returns should be delayed so long. Furthermore, in this connection, I am informed that the three tents which were stated to have been purchased by the Militia Department, in answer to a question which I put on the paper some time ago, were not such tents as were required for militia purposes, but were tents loaned out to friends of the Minister of Militia. If such is the fact, I should like to be informed in regard to the matter. I am also informed, on what I believe to be reliable authority, that it is the practice of the Militia Department, to loan not only tents but other property belonging to the Government. I have been in-formed that a gentleman who formerly held a soat in this House has now in his garden at Sherbrooke, an ornamental war gun which is the property of this Government, and which is used for the purpose of ornamenting his garden, I am further informed that supporters of the Government, have the privilege of borrowing from the Minister of Militia or from his Department, tents, when they wish to go out camping in the summer season, or on shooting expeditions. If that be so, the House should be informed with respect to these three particular tents, which I have been informed were purchased, not for the use of the Militia Department, but for the use of friends of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman has given us a wonderful amount of information, and as far as quantity goes it is certainly very considerable. The only trouble is, that the quality is not equal to the quantity. The hon. gentleman placed upon the paper a question asking me, as Minister of Militia, to furnish him information in regard to some tents. The question was answered, and I think the hon. gentleman must consider that, in the position which a public man occupies as the head of a Department, the answer which he gave was an answer given on his responsibility; and the hon. gentleman must be satisfied with that answer. The hon, gentleman says he has "been informed." The question would be an interesting one as to the person or persons from whom the hon. gentleman gets his information. If I wanted to do what the hon. gentleman has done to-day, I might say I had been informed that the hon. gen-tleman was getting information from a source from which he could not expect it to be reliable. However, I do not consider it necessary to enquire into the sources from which the hon. gentleman chooses to get his information; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that the three tents, which have been purchased by the Department of Militia and Defence, are not ornamental tents. They may be ornamental from the view which the hon. gentleman takes of what an ornamental tent is; but it is a matter of perfect indifference to me what the hon. gentleman considers to be an ornamental tent. The three tents, in respect of which the hon. gentleman placed the question on the paper, are tents which have been ordered upon the recommendation of the officers of the Department as sample tents. They are to be placed in the stores of the Militia Department, and whether the hon, gentleman considers them ornamontal or not, they have been ordered for the purpose of getting exactly a sample of what was considered to be the best tents to be introduced into the service; and in consulting the officers of the Department, I thought I was doing what was right and proper to do, and I am sorry to see, from the course which the hon. gentleman has taken, that my ideas have not coincided with the views entertained by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman has placed seven motions on the paper for the purpose of obtaining information from the Militia Department. The work of preparing the returns which the Government consented to bring down, was placed in hand as soon as possible, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that the return respecting the tents, about which ho wanted information, was laid on the Table seven days ago, but so little importance did he attach to the information which he wanted, apparently, to get for a purpose, that the hon. gentleman has not taken the trouble to make himself aware that this information has been brought down. Other information is being sought for, and the returns will be brought down in due course. Hon. gentlemen will understand that when several roturns are asked for at one and the same time, more especially with regard to the Militia Department, where the staff is limited, some time must elapse before they can be made ready; but two additional returns will be ready by to-morrow, I hope.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. (Brant). The Minister of Militia is mistaken.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I perhaps acted irregularly in allowing the hon. gentleman to proceed beyond asking a question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I wish to make a personal explanation.

Mr. CARON. Mr. Speaker, you allowed the hon. gentleman to go outside-

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I am not going outside the question, but I wish to say that the Minister of Militia is mistaken in supposing that I did not see the return, because I have seen the return which was made to a motion put on the paper, and I say it is only a partial return. I am not so ignorant of the matter as the hon. gentleman imagines, as I have taken some time to look into it, and I know what I am speaking about.

Mr. CARON. I say the hon. gentleman is completely mistaken, and that he has no right to say that the return which was brought down is a partial return. The return is the only one which the Department of Militia could bring down; and I repeat that the hon. gentleman has no right to stand up and state that a return which has been brought down upon the responsibility of the head of the Department is a partial return. Does the hon. gentleman imagine for a moment that I could consent to bring down anything but what is a full report obtained from the information which we possess in the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Militia ought to complain-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking to the point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was about to say, Sir, that the Minister of Militia just now laid down a position which I do not think is a correct one. He thinks a member has no right to complain if a return is a partial one, but I say that partial returns are constantly being brought down by Ministers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am in order, I say. If I am not in order I shall resume my seat, but as I am in order I shall proceed. The hon. gentleman complains because we say that some of his returns are partial, but I say we certainly have a right to make that complaint when the returns are partial, as they frequently are.

RETURNS.

Mr. BLAKE. From what' the Minister of Militia has said, we would imagine that we were upon the tented field, instead of a House of Parliament. I propose, however, to make some further enquiries, which, I hope, will not be received in the same aggressive spirit. I would like to ask about a return with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which we were told would be brought down on a Friday about a fortnight ago. Then I wish particularly to ask of the acting Minister of Agriculture for a return, moved for by myself early in the Session, upon the subject of emigration. I moved for the papers showing the data upon which the emigration for the year was based, and par-ticularly for the railway returns of the passages into and the journeys out from the Province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman knows that gentlemen on this side have challenged the satisfactoriness of those figures, and it is extremely important before we continue the debate with reference to the immigration vote that we should have the return which was moved for at the earliest moment it could be moved this Session, and has frequently been asked for since.

Mr. McLELAN. I called the attention of Mr. Lowe to the matter, and urged him to have it brought down as carly as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. I too have something to say about partial returns. I moved the other day for the correspondence between the late Premier, Mr. Mackenzie, and Sir John Rose, in regard to the course pursued by the Government on a certain occasion. The returns brought down are only partial returns.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELU. I hope the Ministry will take no offence at what I say. As they do not seem to know where to find the missing links, I can tell them. I think the late Premier could furnish them with additional correspondence which is of an important character, and which I wish to be part of the records of this House. I would like to ask the Ministry if they can obtain from the late Premier this additional correspondence which is necessary to complete the return.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I would say that I should be happy to receive any supplementary return from my hon. predecessor, and any information he furnishes me with, which is not in the Department, I would be glad to bring down, if it is not of a confidential character.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I may say that I had a letter from the Deputy Minister of Finance, asking me if there was any information of the character asked for. I wrote him a letter to say that there was some correspondence with the financial agents of the Dominion, in London, through Sir Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

John Rose, but it was conducted by myself as Premier. It was not a Departmental matter at all, and a'l I could say was that if there was ary possibility of getting it I would not object to furnish copies if they were asked for. I received no application from any quarter, and therefore I did not send them,

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume we will get it now.

Mr. DAVIES. I asked the other day for a return which I moved for some time ago, with reference to wages and salaries on the Intercolonial, and which the Minister of Pablic Works promised to make a note of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware of course that these enquiries had to be made by communication with the Department at Moneton and other places. I asked that the information should be obtained as soon as the return was granted, and I hopp to be able to submit it at an early day. With reference to the first question put by the leader of the Opposition I.presume he refers to a telegram which I read from the Secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in response to his application. I said I brought down all the information I had, but that I had a telegram stating that they expected by the following Friday to furnish the other information.

Mr. BLAKE. Having failed in other ways to get the information, I put a question on the paper as to four simple points, relating to the cost of four large sections of the line. In answer to the question the hon, gentleman did not read a telegram—though I have no doubt he received one, because he said he had received information from the Company to the effect that they could not comply with all of the return, but this particular information and some other information would be given. The hon, gentleman said he expected to lay it on the Table on the Friday —this was Friday about a fortnight ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will ask again for it.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman will make his officer refer back to the notice papers, as to these four points, I think he will agree with me that there should not be twenty-four hours delay in getting the information.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to ask with reference to a return which I moved for at an early day in the Session regarding timber licenses - the number pranted, the area granted, the applicants, and whether applications were made by tender or otherwise. Though this return was moved for very early, in the hope we might receive the information at an early period of the Session, it has not come down yet. We only received, the other day, a return of the land which was moved for last year, and it also was imperfect. I venture to ask if we may hope for it this Session, as it is important that we should have this information in discussing the North-West Policy of the Government. I think it is very singular that returns of this kind, asked for early in the Session, cannot be brought down.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will make enquiries and let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. CHARLTON. And what about the imperfect return which was moved for last year? It was imperfect as to whether the limits were let by public tender, and also as to the location of those which were let.

Mr. McMULLEN. An order was granted for a return showing the quantity of coal moved over the Intercolonial Railway. I would ask the Minister of Railways when we may expect it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will enquire and inform the hon. gentleman.

The following Bills were severally read the third time and passed :-

Bill (No. 123) to amend The Customs Act, 1883.-(Mr. Bowell.)

Bill (No. 124) respecting fortifications and military buildings and their maintenance and repair.—(Sir Hector Langevin.) On a division.

INSPECTION OF GAS AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider Bill (No. 108) to amend the Acts respecting the Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MACKENZIE. Having received some communications from parties interested in this Bill, I asked the hon. gentleman, privately, if there was any change made in it since the time that some arrangement was made with the gas companies, and I understood him to say that no material change was made since that time. I simply ask the question now, publicly, in order that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thought the hon. gentleman understood me to say that I had received letters and telegrams from parties interested in the gas companies, and that I supposed the complaint was the same in the letters addressed to him. The complaint, I now find, is as to clause 10, in the Bill; and I thought I explained to the hon. gentleman that that clause should not be in the Bill, that it was there by mistake, and that I intended to have it struck out. I know that is the only objection urged outside against the Bill. I think it should not be in the Bill, because it was not discussed with the persons who came to discuss the provisions of the Bill.

On section 2,

Mr. BLAKE. This clause relates to the quality of gas, and the hon. gentleman stated that endeavours had been made to render the standard such as would be reasonable, having regard to the quality of coal available in different parts of the Dominion. The hon. gontleman, however, made no observation with reference to other raw material from which gas is manufactured, at any rate, in some cities. I rather fancy that the gas in the city of Toronto is not made from coal at all, or the great bulk of it, and I do not know how far the hon. gentleman has considered what modifications are required in the law to make provision for that kind of gas. I do not know whether it is water gas or petroleum gas; but there can be no doubt that there are great defects resulting from that manufacture. There is no doubt that the gas has not as great an illuminating power as gas produced in other places where coal is procured, and there is no doubt also that a great difficulty arises from the apparent formation of some viscid substance in the pipes, which diminishes the supply and gives great inconvenience to the consumer. These are difficulties which we have painful experience of in Toronto; and while this Bill for regulating this particular trade, and making provision for the protection of the public, is being considered, I should like to know whether the attention of the hon. gentleman and that of his officers has been given to the difficulties that grow out of this kind of gas, and whether some precautions might not be taken to protect the public against the evils to which I have referred.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As I stated before, one of the objects was to secure the public against poisonous gas, or gas containing substances injurious to health. For the presence of these substances, except through accident or through inevitable circumstances, a penalty is provided. With regard to the power of gas, we propose to fix the standard at 16-candle light. The different kinds of gas we dealt with in this way: By an Order in Council a certain amount of ammonia and a certain amount of sulphur were allowed in gas; but it has been found that some of the gas manufactured in the eastern section of the country contained a larger percentage of sulphur and of ammonia than was permitted under the Order in Council. This was represented by the gentlemen who came to discuss the provisions of this Bill, and I conferred upon the subject with the chief officer in that branch of the Department. The object of the Bill is to secure greater purity of gas and to fix the standard of illuminating power at 16-candle light; and, on the other hand, to relax a little the restriction of the previous Order in Council, as to the presence of sulphur and ammonia, so as to allow a larger percentage of these sub-stances in the gas produced in the eastern section of the country. The other gases to which my hon, friend referred, I do not think are liable to the presence of these poisonous substances.

Mr. BLAKE. What I was inviting the attention of the hon. gentleman to was the question whether, as in the former Act, the intention of the Government and the Legislature is confined to gas manufactured from coal, or whether they have considered the fact that gas is not now manufactured only from coal, but also from other substances, pro-ducing different results, and requiring, possibly, different precautions for the protection of the public. I do not know whether precautions would be required as to poisonous ingredients or not, although it is alleged they are, but certainly they are required in reference to other points dealt with by this clause. By this clause the following proviso in the old Act is repealed: "On account of the difficulty of procuring coal of a particular quality, twelve sperm candles shall be substituted for fourteen." I am not objecting to the repeal of that proviso, but simply say that this Act deals with the question as if it were simply a question of illuminating gas produced from coal. While the attention of Parliament is directed, rightly or wrongly, to the obtaining of pure and satisfactory gas, it is important we should know whether they have considered this other process of manufacturing from other ingredients. What I stated to the hon. gentlemen was that there was very considerable dissatisfaction amongst the consumers—certainly on the part of one consumer, the humble individal who is now addressing you -with reference to the character of the supply in Toronto. I presume it is now too late in the Session to make legislative provisions dealing with this subject, but the hon. gentleman may, during recess, see if it is not possible to make his law so extensive as to provide the necessary protection for consumers who have to submit to being supplied with these other descriptions of gas.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman raises a question of very great importance, and I do not think I can acquire such information this Session as will enable us to legislate on the subject in such a way that the legislation might be permanent. I think it preferable to allow that to stand over till next year, and during recess I will give this matter every attention, and obtain all the information possible, in order that we may devise means of protecting the interests of consumers.

On section 8,

Mr. COSTIGAN. I propose to substitute the following for section 8: --

[&]quot;Every Gas Company shall keep the public informed of the illuminating power of the gas supplied by them, and of its purity as affected by the absence or presence of sulphuretted hydrogen, by procuring a certificate from the Laspe tor and posting it up in the chief office of the company, from time to time as tollows :--

"1. Companies having more than four thousand consumers shall pro-ence such certificate once in each week; those having less than four and more than two thousand consumers, once in each month; those having less than two thousand and more than five hundred consumers, once in each interval of three months; and those having less than five hundred consumers once in each interval of chieve months.

once in each interval of three months; and those having less than ive hundred consumers, once in each interval of six months; "2. Such certificate shall show the average result of the various tests taken by the Inspector under departmental regulations, during the period intervening between the date of any certificate and that of the preceding one, and shall remain so posted up until replaced by the next succeeding one as hereinbefore required; "3. Every gas company in cities in which the requisite apparatus is furnished by the Department shall obtain during the first weeks of January, April, July and October in each year, a certificate indicating the average quantity of ammonia and sulphur, in other forms than sul-pluretted hydrogen, ascertained by official analysis during the precedthe average quantity of ammonia and sulphur, in other forms than sul-phuretted hydrogen, ascertained by official analysis during the preced-ing three months to have been contained in the gas; "4. Each certificate of tests shall be posted as above required within twenty-four hours of its delivery by the Inspector and shall remain so posted up until the issue of the next following certificate; and any com-pany failing to comply with the foregoing requirements of this section shall, for each day during which such failure continues, incur a penalty of ten dollars; "5. Every company shall pay to the Inspector, on the receipt of each such certificate, such fees as may be prescribed by Order in Council, and such fees shall be applied as prescribed by the 35th section of the Act first above cited."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister where he proposes the tests of the illuminating quality to be made-at the headquarters of the company, or at certain consumers' at different points throughout the city, or town, or village, as the case may be?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose the test will be made at the headquarters. The check upon that is the inspection afterwards at different places.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, Because practically an enormous quantity of the gas supplied is so diluted with air in many cases that the test made at the headquarters affords no criterion whatever of the illuminating quality. Persons residing at a distance from the central office know very well, as the hon. gentleman may find if he makes enquiry, that the gas supplied is very far indeed from possessing the illuminating quality which is required, and, if he could devise a means of checking that evil, he would confer an enormous benefit upon the public.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the average illuminating quality in the Dominion is above the requirements of this Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may be at the head-quarters, but not at a certain distance. Everybody who resides at a certain distance from the headquarters can corroborate my opinion, that at certain seasons of the year, and certain periods of the evening, the gas varies enormonsly in illuminating quality. Sometimes it it almost meeless.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see any practical difficulty in enlarging the Bill so as to authorize departmental regulations to be made under which the inspectors shall test not marely at the gasometer, but also at certain consumers, at certain distances, as departmental regulations might require. found that the difficulties were great, he need not enforce it. I do not say that the quality of the gas is different at the houses from what it is at the gasometer, because I do not know, but there can be no doubt that the quality of the ges varies very much at the houses from one day to another, and in many places from one period to another, as far as the supply goes, and if that is produced by the circum-stances of distance to which my hon. friend has alluded, then the consumer's interest is to have tested not what the strength of the gas is at the gasometer, but what it is as it gets into his own house and is lighted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman thinks the pre-. sent Act does not cover that ground, it might be well to provide for it.

Mr. Costigan.

Mr. BLAKE. But these tests are to be made under this Act.

Mr. STAIRS. I would ask the hon. member for South Huron whether he does not think the difficulties to which he alludes may not be entirely due to a deficiency in the pressure rather than to the quality of the gas. In Halifax, I have heard it stated that the quality of the gas is quite as good long distances from the works as it is near them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be the cause. I do not know sufficiently well to speak of that, but I refer to what is an unfortunate fact within the knowledge of most hon. members. I have taken the trouble myself at times to test the consumption as registered by the meter, and to my surprise, the worse the light, the larger the quantity the meter marked.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, under the provisions of the clause as amended, I understand it is not intended that there shall be a departmental regulation to control the number of tests and the times at which tests shall be made by the inspectors. I do not think it would he very satisfactory if, in a large city, tests are made very frequently in the week at pre-scribed or specified times. If they are not made daily, for the purpose of obtaining a weekly average, the fewer tests ought to be distributed over the week, or we will have the experience which everyone knows to exist in regard to public institutions, that arrangements will be made to have it different when the public officer comes round from what it is on an ordinary day.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that it be struck out.

Mr. BLAKE. Why?

Mr. COSTIGAN. For the reasons I already stated.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought they applied to section 11?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, to section 10.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it because the gas companies have not expressed their views on it?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; the subject was discussed with the officers of our Department, and it was found that there is great difficulty in fixing the amount of pressure. It has not been done heretofore, and it was thought wise not to take that subject up this Session, or until we got more information from our own officers throughout the country. Information was received from one of the large cities in a manner which seemed to indicate that the subject was thoroughly understood, but that was after we had agreed to make certain modifications in the whole Bill. I thought it would not be fair to make a radical change in it in the absence of those who had come so far to discuss the matter. I do not abandon it, but I do not propose it now because I think it is too late in the Session to deal with it satisfac. torily.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman's explanation is very reasonable, and it confirms the view I stated awhile ago with reference to this character of legislation. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether any attempt has been made by legislation in other countries to deal with this question of pressure, or whether this is the first attempt; and if it is dealt with in other countries, is this proposal, which is now to be struck out-by unanimous consent, I presume-based upon the experience of other countries, or is it a proposal brought forward by the scientific men in his own Department?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This question has been dealt with in England, where there is a law providing for a certain amount of pressure.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 11,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that 35 grains of sulphur to 100 cubic feet is a very large proportion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have already explained that this extension of sulphur in the manufacture of gas was found necessary, on long experience, and at the same time it will not be injurious to the public health.

In answer to Mr. STAIRS,

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only evidence I have of the necessity of shortening the time is the evidence that comes chiefly from our own office. It is based principally upon the experience of the whole country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the departmental regulations for enabling a purchaser to be sure that he gets the quality of light mentioned in the second section ? Under the prevailing regulations can any consumer send for the gas inspector and get him to test the quality of gas used by him ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot say at present. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman if he wishes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be desirable. Is there any scale of fees fixed for the inspector?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

CERTIFICATES OF MASTERS AND MATES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 116) to amend An Act respecting certificates of Masters and Mates of Ships, and The Seamen's Act, 1878.

Motion agreed to; and Bill considered in Committee, amended and reported.

EASTERN EXTENSION-INTERCOLONIAL RAIL-WAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 125) for giving an effect to an agreement M therein mentioned between the Government of the Dominion it. and that of Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to, and Bill considered in Committee and reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is it not intended to make the agreement a schedule to this Bill?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Bill refers to an agreement, and an agreement is mentioned in the Bill. In such cases the usual course is to attach the agreement as a schedule.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no agreement—there was nothing more than an exchange of letters.

Mr. BLAKE. In order to be quite sure, I desire to ask the Minister of Railways whether I quite apprehended his view as to what the practical results to the Dominion would be by the passage of this Bill. As I gathered from him, and endeavoured to repeat after him, the hon. gentleman was of opinion that the Pictou Branch is a remunerative branch by itself, and that the practical result of the running of the railways, the Pictou Branch which we retain by this agreement, and the extension which we are gaining by this agreement, will be to leave us where we stand; that is to say, that the working expenses and the receipts would about balance themselves.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, that is substantially the case. What I mean to say is this: that the loss which was sustained by losing the Pictou Branch would of course leave our financial position in regard to the Intercolonial minus a certain sum of money, and I anticipate the result of this arrangement will be to leave us in as good a position as we would occupy if we lost the Pictou Branch, because we recover the interest on the money provided by this Bill by the revenue we will receive. So that financially the position of the Government will be about the same as it would be if this Bill did not pass.

Mr. BLAKE. And the Pictou branch was lost to us. In a word, taking the Pictou Branch and the extension together, does the hon. gentleman think the receipts will cover the working expenditure; or does he anticipate they will cover more than the working expenses of the two lines?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; the amount will meet the interest. I consider that the financial position will be quite as good as it would be if this proposal were net carried, because if we lose the Picton Branch we lose net profits which are considerable. The cost of acquiring both lines and of operating them will leave us with a net revenue about sufficient to meet the interest on the money expended under this Bill.

Bill read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 120) to amend. The Weights and Measures Act of 1879.

Motion agreed to; and Bill considered in Committee, and progress reported.

ENQUIRIES INTO SHIPWRECKS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend The Act respecting enquiries into shipwreaks and other matters, as to the power of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in certain cases reported to him under it.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to introduce an amendment of the kind suggested in the former" suggestion, to the effect that the owner or master, or other party affected, should have some notice.

Mr. McLELAN I propose to make a change in Committee.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. McLELAN moved that after the word "thereon," in the eleventh line, the following words be inserted: "after due notice to the person or persons interested."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. WELDON. How are the parties interested to know the result of the investigation in case they happen to be absent. At present the decision is promulgated in open court, and there is an appeal to the Minister. Under this Bill, however, the whole matter might be settled without the knowledge of the parties.

Mr. McLELAN. I provide by the amendment that due notice is to be given.

many diseases of flour.

Mr. BLAKE. But the difficulty is that up to this time, as I understand, the investigation is made, and then the subsequent decision of the court is promulgated and both parties are made aware of what the decision is, and after-wards there may be an appeal to the Minister. What my hon. friend suggests is that there should be some information to the parties so that they would be able to give reasons to the Minister for reversing the decision. It seems to me that there should be some communication to the parties interested as to what the decision of the court is, in order that they may be prepared either to move against it, or that it may be sustained by the Minister, as the case may be.

Mr. McLELAN. We might add that the parties should be furnished with a copy of the opinion.

Bill, as amended, reported.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No 114) for the prevention of the adulteration of Food and Drugs.

Mr. LESAGE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the importance of the measure now submitted to the consideration of the House is so very great and deserves, to such a high degree, to call our attention and to awaken our solicitude, that certain remarks given at some length may not be considered as a digression under the present circumstances, and may aid a certain number of persons in judging of the evil which the hon. Minister wishes to remedy, by presenting this Bill and by taking it under his protection. In fact, it is by aiding ourselves by the light of chemistry and microscopy, these two branches of human knowledge which have been the cause of our making such rapid progress in all modern discoveries, that we are able to trace out, and that without any possible error, all the adulterations which are daily made by men in the different articles which are used both for our daily consumption and to cure or relieve us from the numerous elements of sickness which are surrounding us, like a second atmosphere. Ever struggling on all kinds of grounds to satisfy our daily wants, too often do we scorn to throw a searching look on these principles of death, from which we recoil, nevertheless, whenever we think we recognize them, and which, however, we eat with delight and drink with rapture, on all our tables and in all our banquets. Still, we are better off than these poor young ones who drink death while betraying their sufferings by their cries and by their tears, and finally, in the midst of the weeping family who are trying to find means to alleviate the pain of the young sufferer, die in the arms of the one who, since their early days, has fed them with adulterated, sophisticated and poisoned milk and numerous drugs which, by their dangerous composition, accelerate and help to bring on the catastrophe. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to run over, for a moment, the list of adulterations which are the most frequent, both as regards food and drugs, and I do not hesitate in saying that all my hon. friends will admit that the picture is not overdrawn, and that there lies real danger, that these adulterations contain numerous morbifical principles, and for thousand who have, alas, disappeared in the spring of life, they have sometimes been the cause of a slow poisoning, and very often they explain these numerous sudden deaths whose immediate cause is not indicated. I shall begin with one of these substances which we use the most frequently, and which everybody, besides, uses in great quantity. I refer to flour. Everybody knows, to a certain extent, what is the physical composition of flour generally; but what is not known by everybody is that flour may be adulterated in a great many ways. All flour, in general, is a mixture of starch, of dextrine, of gluten, of sugar, of grease and of grey mineral matters. In flour of first quality, the bran is nearly eliminated; it ought to be odourless, and it has no acrid taste. There are a great caused by diseases, is clandestinely offered for sale on our Mr. McLelan.

by the aid of the microscope. They are to be found especially in cheap flour, which is not the least important as it is the poor man's flour; it is the kind of flour which cost the least. Then we have the ergot, which is found in flour made out of spurred rye. It is easily detected on grain as it goes in to the grist mill, but it is difficult to detect it in flour. It is to be regretted that we have no easy and accurate chemical process by which we could detect the presence of this eminently venemous substance, which gives rise to such serious accidents. Whole communities are fed with spurred rye. A protracted use of it produces intoxication similar to that felt by the drunkard. One of the most remarkable phenomena is the sphacelus or gangrene of the feet and hands, which may spreed over all the limbs. There is a species of convulsions which are called "cereal convulsions," which have been attributed to it, and a number of other diseases and accidents, especially with females. Besides, flour is adulterated with starch made out of barley, oats, rye and rice, and with the fecula of potatoes, beans, peas, and sometimes even by venomous plante, such as tares. All these kinds of starch may be detected with the magnifying glass. Flax seed, Indian corn, and buckwheat also enter sometimes in the composition of bad flour. The mineral matters which are added to wheat are alum, plaster, chalk, and powder of silica. Here, chemistry by reagents may detect the fraud and protect the community against these adulterated flours. It would be too tedious to enter into the minutize of the disease and adulterations of flour. I mention the most important, in the order to show how the germs of death are scattered all around us while we do not seem to realize the importance of this subject. From the water which we are drinking, and which contains so many organic, parasitical and mineral impurities, even to the bread we eat and which we often find covered with fungi, every thing conspires to the insidious destruction of man; we swallow poison slowly-and the more surely for that reason-without employing the means which the Almighty has put at our disposal to struggle effectually against these dangerous and subtile poisons. We have our flour Inspectors, but I do not think their process of investigation is sufficient to protect the public; and I do not think they are qualified, from a scientific point of view, to practically fulfil their duty. When they are called upon to decide on the quality of flour, they examine a sample, and they declare that such flour is of first, second or third quality, without having recourse to the means offered by chemistry and microscopy to determine effectively the value of flour. The microscope by itself, in certain cases, and chemistry with its reagents, in other cases, are the only means by which satisfaction may be given and confidence may be inspired in the public, especially as regards the lower grades of flour, which, owing to its cheap price, is the food of the poor, who thus cheaply poison themselves, when such flour should have been taken out of the market altogether, as an injurious and unhealthy food. These samples of flour should always be tested by analysis in order to find out the character of the deterioration. I shall now speak about meat. Considered as a nourishment, meat offers such great advantages and is of such universal use that we cannot give it too much attention. Great is the number of poisonings caused by the consumption of unwholesome meat in these times, in which meat taken from cattle suffering from diseases, of cattle whose death has been vegetable parasites. We have the acarus farince, the vibrious of the larva of certain insects. This can be seen through the microscope, and it is an indication of the alteration of the flour. Among the vegetable parasites, we have the various kinds of fungi, which are said to develop symtoms of gastro-intestinal irritation in persons who eat bread made out of that flour; and I say that we can only judge of them markets. This practice is so calculated to sow death and sick. ness among our people, that oftentimes, immediately after a merry repast, people may consider themselves lucky that only one victim dies when the whole family might have been poisoned. The danger here lies mostly in the cities, where all these doliterious products are soll under cover of the incognito. In my opinion, two things are required to have meat of good quality, and it is in the public abattoirs that these qualities might be entirely realized. In the first place, cattle ought to be examined before slaughtering. This ought to take place twenty-four hours before slaughtering, and in warm weather a few hours before that. The weight and certain physical characters which ought to form part of the physical examination of the animal ought to be considered, in order to find out whether or not the animal is fit to be slaughtered. I am aware that this condition cannot exist unless we have a public inspector of the abattoirs, who should not only examine the meat in the stalls but also examine the animals to be slaughtered. There are a great number of animals which are not at all fit for slaughtering; so that in this case, as in many others, there is a matter for consideration. And I am sorry to see that the public abattoirs which Montreal had established within its limits have not met with as much success as might have been desired, for I consider these establishments as being the only means to ensure the consumption of first class meats, especially when there are connected with them duly qualified Inspectors, in possession of the scientific data which are necessary to determine the quality and value of the meat offered on the market, particularly as regards animals which have been slaughtered before importation, as in the case of pork. Moreover, I consider that at the present time, in our large cities the Inspectors have not the qualifications which are required to ensure the necessary protection. Besides, we have the meat which is dealt out by the butcher himself, and here is an extract of a work which deals with this matter and which has been quoted in 1875, before the French House of Representatives by Mr. Mauchère, in reference to the quality of meat. He says:

"The colour of the flesh must be vivid and ruddy. "The simple touch must give a sensation of firmness and also a light flexibility. The pressure must denote a certain amount of density, a certain resistance of traction. There should be no oozing out of the muscular juice, nor should the hand feel a sensation of cold, of damp, or of oiliness. The palpation of the covering must be sonorous; that of the most art into cuprters should be rough or of oiliness. The palpation of the covering must be sonrous; that of the meat cut into quarters should be rough. "The fluidity and glairy aspect of the fat are of a nature which ought to determine the rejection of the meat."

And is it not a fact that cattle are liable to suffer from a great many diseases ? There is pleuro-pneumonia, cattle plague, anthrax, malignant pustule, diseases of the respiratory organs, sheep's rot, and all the parasitical diseases. Among the most important I shall mention the taenia and cysticercus of cattle and swine, the hydatides of the brain, which are often found among sheep; that special kind of phthisis pro-duced by the strangylus filaria, and lastly, trichina, which produces, especially among people who eat raw meat, that terrible disease called trichinose. Trichina spreads over the whole muscular system of the patients and the parasites become millions with such rapidity that death ensues, accompanied with great suffering. It has often been pretended that the prolongated coction at a high temperature will destroy the vitality of the parasites, and that the meat which contains them may be eaten with safety. I think it is preferable to leave that practice to the Germans who have recommended it. When it is remembered that 60 degrees of heat do not always kill trichina, it is a matter of material importance that cattle suffering from parasitical diseases should be prevented from finding their way into our markets. We have even now on the market certain preparations which are considered very good as articles of diet for the sick, and which I think ought to disappear, for they owe their appreciate chemically, but which reveals itself by the effects popularity to the misuse of the oredit of a great name, which was the means of starting this industry. I refer to extracts of meat which have been prepared to utilize the meat which is lost in such great quantities during transportation. These extracts are offered to the public as valuable food, as a good substitute for meat, but they are only concentrated broth, devoid of gelatine or fat and, according to Mr. Provost, physician of the Lariboisière Hospital, at Paris, the extract of Leibig, taken in great quantities, constitutes a poison. He has come to that conclusion after experiments made on dogs, which, when fed on it, died more rapidly than if they had been deprived of food altogether, owing, probably, to chloride of potassium and other salts of potassium contained in that extract. If it has less effect on men, Mr. Speaker, it is because we use it in smaller proportion, or not so often, and if we are sick we are attended to by a good physician. All these facts, and a great many others too numerous to mention here, require the care and vigilance of our legislators, who should avail themselves of all possible means of preventing the numerous cases of diseases and the frequent cases of death which are due to the sale of meat, a source of danger the greater as the u-e of meat is so general, and as too often the price is looked at more than the quality. Again, I say that the compulsory establishment of abattoirs, with competent Inspectors connected with them, and obliged to visit the markets, are two means by which we can remedy the many dangers which beset our path. Confiscation, fine, imprisonment, as in cases of misdemeanour, ought to be applied, according to the degree of guilt proved. Now I shall speak of another substance which forms a very important part of our alimentation. I shall say a few words on the adulteration of milk, this substance which is so very nutritious, this nourishment which is so very complete, whose digestion is so easy, whose use is so very universal for the rearing up of vory young children. The physical characteristics of good milk are too well known to make it necessary for me to enumerate them. Here, however, as in everything connected with trade, the dealer has found means to falsify considerably. Milk is still pure in the country places; we cannot complain on that score; but in cities there are certainly good grounds for bitter complaints. Perhaps the cause of the numerous cases of poisoning and deaths of children lies here. If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you, in a very few words, what are the different adulterations and falsifications of milk which occur in cities among milk dealers. The analysis of milk is easily made, but it is important that it should be made rapidly, and very often a complete analysis requires a good deal of time. It will be sufficient to take its density by means of Quevenne's densimeter, which gives just the quantity of water added on an average, the more so if it is skimmed milk. The different falsifications of milk are mostly: first, the addition of water, easily detected by means of the densimeter to which I have referred; sometimes its blueish colour might indicate the presence of water, but good care is taken to whiten it with bicarbonate of sola, starch and other substances. But by taking the density there can be no mistake. Then there is the skimming. This is a very common practice, and it is double profit, for the whey is sold and the butter is kept in kind. Sometimes horse brains are pounded and added to milk, to imitate the appearance of the cream of which it has been robbed. To discover the substitution of other substances for cream, Marchand's lactobutyrometer is used, and to dectect the addition of pounded brains, all that is required is to let this cream raise, and to keep it for a few hours. It soon putrefies and gives a characteristic smell, altogether different from the acid smell of altered cream. Then there is the addition of sugar, gam, caramel, gelatine, &c., which are deetected by the density. The condition of the animals has on milk an influence which it is difficult to produced on consumers. Purulent milk coming from an inflamed gland, may give children aphtons and stomatite diseases. Animals suffering from epizootic eczema may by their milk transmit a great number of diseases whose remote causes are not always known, and which must have their source in the use of such milk. In the last Medical Cyclopædia, I find that in England milk had been the vehicle of germs of typhoid fever, of scarlet fever, and other contagious diseases. The milk had been adulterated with water contaminated by typhoid dejections; the milk had also been contaminated by persons who were recovering from scarlatina and who were employed in the dairy during the period of disquamation. Cheese belongs to this class and is used in great quantity. Occasionally cheese has been found which wes mixed with fecula and bread crum to develop mouldiness in it. Cheese of that stamp is so eagerly sought after. Sometimes it is washed in arsenical water or in a solution of sulphate of copper, in order to save it from the attack of worms, but all of these guilty practices are easily found out, for iodine water will easily point out these two first alterations, and the methods employed to discover copper and arsenic are such that the presence of these two bodies is easily detected. Besides, the yellow covered cloths which are used to wrap up cheese, contain a poisonous substance; they are chromates with basis of lead or potassa. Such is, however, one of the means employed to preserve substances which are daily coming into the domain of consumption. This is particularly common as regards hams. With reference to these two articles, milk especially, I do not know that there is in the country any means of investigation employed to detect adulteration, so as to severely punish these great frauds committed to the detriment of the health of our children especially. From time to time a correspondence accompanied with painful statistical facts awakens the attention on this question, but little by little every one goes back to the beaten path which is sunk deeper and deeper, to be filled up with the corpses of the little ones we love so dearly, of whom we had such great care and whom a slow and murdering poison has snatched away from our tenderness. The verdict is always the same-dentition, children's cholera, anemy, the rickets, when it would be so easy to write down, poisoning or star-vation. Why should not the chemist of the Government, without previous notice, take here and there, from time to time, samples of milk sold, and analyze the same, so as to find out their purity by means of densimeters, lacto bu-tyrometers and chemical re-agents? The cancellation of the license, heavy fines, imprisonment for grave offences, the uncertainty of the moment when such tests are to be made, would be the means of diminishing the evil in a great measure, and of aiding private initiative, which, by itself, can do nothing, and is not competent to make such analysis. It is a serious danger which I have not at all overrated, and which calls upon our immediate attention. I hope the hon. Minister of the Revenue of the Interior will give it all his attention, and will find means to remedy the evil. Now, I will say a few words about alcohol, comprising under this generic name all fermented liquors. This is a matter which has been dealt with very lengthily in this House, but from a standpoint different from that which I take. I do not propose to make a speech on temperance, nor do I intend to advocate prohibition. Besides, those who have spoken on that question have made such exhaustive speeches that I would stand in fear of not throwing any more light on the subject. Confining myself to a more limited field, I simply wish to prevent my friends from using spirits. I know, Mr. Speaker, that doctors are strongly blamed for the immoderate use of alcohol in their treatment of diseases. Without wishing to exonerate us, I say that we are the only judges—it may be that there is on my part a little sympathy for my colleagues of the profession, but at any rate while employing it as a remedy, I hold that attention should at that in France all natural wine containing over four gram-Mr. LESAGE, least be called to it on grounds of public health. In fact it is easy enough to judge of the real damage caused by alcohol on the constitution, which damage is more or less active according to the temperament. But, Mr. Speaker, how is it that our ancestors, who took alcohol the same as we do, have been able to withstand this usage which, though not immoderate, still was such that at certain times in the year, spirits were imbibed in considerable quantities. All the difference between that time and to-day is that in times of yore people drank their glasses brimful of alcohol, and now we drink our glasses brimful of poison. There is all the difference, and what I should wish would be to see the old usage revived, if not to drink alcohol by the glassful, at least so that we should not absorb poison by the glassful. Speaking of alcohol, we stand face to face with a substance very universally used, and whose constant and repeated use always produces baleful effects, the consequences of which are the more striking as the adulterations are more noxious, more dangerous to health, and less ascertained than in ordinary alimenation, especially when the nervous centres have lost that equilibrium, which is necessary to the exercise and perception of the senses, and to the working and intelligent exercise of the judgment. It is a precious element in many cases, especially in cases of sickness; although there are abuses on that score. But to what extent is not this counterbalanced by its injurious effects, by the disasters of all kinds, and by the numerous cases of death that it causes everywhere, in all classes of society. For the benefit of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who has proposed the temperance Resolutions the other day, I will quote the remarks of the celebrated Leibig:

"He who drinks them draws a bill, so to speak, on his health. This bill must always be renewed, because he cannot, for want of means, take it up. He consumes his capital instead of his interests, and the result is bankruptcy of his body."

This sums up all that I might say on the subject of the effects of alcohol, but as it is an evil which can not be eradicated, we must endeavour to diminish its bad effects, by following on his own ground the falsifier who, by the addition of substances which are often venemous, always scalding, and corrosive poison in many cases, can make more alcohol by adding water to it. Out of many of the samples exam-ined in Canada by Professor Croit, of Toronto, it is found that 7 have given from 31 to 36 per cent. of alcohol, and from 0.2 to 1.7 of solid matter, comprising tannin, sulphuric acid, grape sugar; 10 samples have given from 25 to 49 per cent. of alcohol and 0.4 to 3 per cent. of solid matter, comprising sulphuric acid, tannin, salt, sugar, and all the remainder was water. Eight samples of gin have given from 23 to 42 per cent, of alcohol, and from T to 7 per cent. of solid matter; the remainder was water. Four samples of wine gave from 14 to 18 per cent. of alcohol and from 75 to 12 per cent. of solid matter, comprising tannin, iron, grape sugar and acids; the remainder was water. These quotations are sufficient to show the enormous adulterations that are made in alcoholie liquors. Brandy and gin are manufactured outright in grocers' cellars and at some hotels, the basis being inferior alcohol, with addition of fragrant matters to modify its effects. These are essential oils, such as in kirsh. It is these oils which are particularly poisonous. Wines especially are apt to be sophisticated in that way. There is the dilution, or the mixing together of wines of different grades. It is obvious that such a mixture, however great the skill of those who make it, never make good wine, except when it is a mixture of pure wines, but they are frauds when they are imitations of natural wine, such as Bordeaux and Burgundies. The second process is vinegar or the addition of a certain quantity of alcohol to wine, not in the tank, but long after it has been drawn.

mes of sulphate of potassium per litre is considered as debased, and on this account is set aside as unfit for alimentation. The sophistications of wine are too numerous to be considered here. Some of them, such as the addition of water, are inoffensive. Others, on the contrary, are hurtful and deserve general attention. I shall mention especially the addition of alum, and salts of copper and of lead, which are discovered by chemical process. To colour it, to conceal the addition of water, and to give it the appearance of wine from another Province, many organic substances are employed, such as logwood, fruits and red leaves, which are not dangerous nor unhealthy. It is not so with fuscine, a substance lately employed, and which seems to exert a deleterious influence on the economy of the human body. New, as regards beer, there are good grounds for complaints and good reasons for inspection. When exposed to air, beer may undergo fermentation, and in such cases it ought to be rejected; the quantity of extract may be superior to the quantity of alcohol, while in good beer they are about evenly divided. Beer is falsified with nux vomica salicine. coculus indicus, boxwood, gentian, picric acid, and all kinds of substances, besides two of the most poisonous, strichine and coculus indicus especially. Here again the law may give an offective protection which is greatly required. These remarks may indicate the great alterations made in spirits. It was observed the other day that so many thoustands of bushels of grain were absorbed in the manufacture of spirits without any direct benefit for alimentation, I venture to say that in a great many cases there is not enough consumed in the manufacture of spirits. In fact, spirits are made with acids, poisons, water, and the trick is played : it is alcohol. That is what is done in a great many cases, which tends to diminish the consumption of grain employed in the manufacture of spirits, to the detriment of the consumer. Now, let us say a few words about tea. Here is another product largely consumed, and whose consumption reaches a fabulous figure, especially among certain people, and which holds out grave dangers, as no doubt hon. gentlemen have long been aware of the fact. In the first place, there is the out and out falsification with different kinds of leaves which have never been near the tea tree, but which, by some process or other, are shaped in the required form, and are then drawn through a bath of Prussian blue. Then there is the trade of old tea leaves, which, after having been used in large hotels, are sold again to certain specialists, who dry them, and by means of furnaces roll them up in the primitive form, its native shape. Then they are drawn through a bath of sulphate of copper to give them the colour, and the trick is played. More than that; owing to its fresh colour, this tea is put on the market as Hyson of the first quality, and every one drinks with delight this subtile poison. In that respect, black tea is more free from fraud, and more natural. The same thing occurs as regards ground coffee, which contains so many mixtures of all sorts, which may all be detected with the microscope. In a great many cases ground coffee is nothing but succory mixed with saw dust; it is a great deal better to buy it in the kernel, and to grind it for domestic use. Now, Mr. Speaker, next to tee and coffee are certain substances which, though not being nutritious aliment, have, however, similar functions to per-form in the economy by the local excitation they produce. They are pepper, nutmegs, aromatic condiments generally, fat condimente, such as lard, oil, and the maigre food condiments. These substances are more easily sophisticated than many others; unless special care is taken, they give rise to a serious danger to health, for it is particularly here that falsifications take place to a larger extent. It is a chase after new inventions, after heterogeneous mixtures of all kinds. It is mostly in that line that our Inspectors will have a fine part to play by carrying out the law in all its stringency. It is among them that we find butter manufactured not compel the inventor to give the composition of his entirely with oleomargarine oils and poisonous colouring matters. I shall now say a word about a question which is none the less important, especially for the sick or convalescent. It is that which refers to the purity of medicines, patent medicines and drugs of all kinds offered for sale by every one, from the barber and grocer to the druggist. It is mostly with reference to these that the popular artlessness and credulousness are taken advantage of by means of advertisements, pamphlets and puffs of all kinds. To begin with pharmaceutic remedies: To how many adulterations of all kinds and sorts are they not subject, especially with regard to preparations which are the most valuable, both as regards the effect which they are expected to produce and the price at which they are sold? Their cost price is the main cause of the adulteration. When an inoffensive substance is used as a substitute the evil is not so great, but, unfortunately, this is not always the case. Another thing which must be taken into account is the delay which is so prejudicial in certain cases of disease whose progress is rapid, when the physician waits with anxiety the result of a medicine whose known physiological effect ought to put a stop to alarming symptoms, and when, however, none of the expected effects are manifested, in consequence of adulteration, of frauds, of substitutions, and the Lord knows what else. The valuable time which is thus lost is sometimes irretrievable. Here, again, the law can not be too strict, and I am glad to see that the penalties imposed will be in proportion to the offences. What shall I say of the patent medicines of all colours, of all shapes, always presented to the public as the universal panacea, with thousands of certificates coming from all parts of the world, and recommending themselves especially by their high price? This is another secret. We have vials coloured red, green, yellow, lilac, and even blue. We have pills containing anything you can wish for, except what might be useful to you, or even useful in any way whatever-things that nobody would buy if they knew what they wore. Still, every one buys them. And why? Because a circular says that it cures all sores, ailments and diseases and, very naturally, the pain from which a person may be suffering is always mentioned in the circular. At last, when the poor, sick person is fairly worn out, after having been imposed upon by these quacks, then we are called upon to give our professional services, but very often it is too late. For my part, I have seen a great many of these dupes in my extensive practice, and whose fault is it? The fault is with the law which protects these charlatans and does not protect the public at all. If all these patent medicines, for instance, were submitted to a serious analysis, do you think they would stand for a minute before the amount of ridicule which would be heaped upon them, when their composition and their mixtures would come to be determined, and when the buyer could compare the Inspector's certificate, which would be pasted on the bottle, with the certificates in which the bottle is wrapped? Besides, how many millions would be saved from our credulity? How many painful accidents and deaths would be averted? These remarks are not a puff in favour of doctors. This protection—he has it by law; more than anyone else, he is interested in taking and accepting from all parts, all medicines, preparations made according to prescriptions, patent medicines from anybody and from anywhere, provided it is proved to him that they have an intrinsic value And if his mission is to lay out a line of conduct for his patient, and to administer to him the medicines which are, according to the long experience acquired by his predecessors, the only real and truly useful remedies. he should also have authority to give the alarm of danger. and to ask for protection in favour of the public, when there is danger, abuse or fraud. As for me, I wish to know all about the remedy which is brought to me, and the individual who offers it for sale. And, besides, why should we panacea to the Government chemist who, by an analysis, would find out the real nature of the medicine, would com pare the result of his own examination with the formula furnished to him, and might then give his certificate, with a duty represented by a stamp on each vial, which would be a source of revenue to the Government and would be a protection for us, as the chemist would have authority to examine new samples at any time or place, and to find out whether the preparations which are sold are identical to that which had been originally submitted to him, that he might give his first certificate; and in case of falsification, he should carry out the law in all its stringency. It is, perhaps, somewhat late now to insert this clause, but like all human things, this Bill is liable to be modified, and I hope that we will supply this want next year Before concluding these remarks, which are already too long, I must congratulate the Minister on his work, which is already very large and very complete, and I hope and trust that this measure will meet the hearty approval of all the hon. members of this House, and that from year to year we will improve it by supplying the wants and fil-ling the voids which it may contain, the whole in the interest of public honesty, in the interest of the protection to health, in the interest of the life of our children. It is high time that the solicitude of the Government and of the legislators should be extended for a moment on this immense wound which requires a radical treatment, and that by putting all together our shoulder to the wheel we may one day deserve the name of benefactors, protectors, and even saviours of our countrymen. I cannot conclude, however, without saying a word of a certain newspaper, which is to be started in Montreal, and which is to be called Le Journal d'Hygiène. The Hygienic Society of the Province of Quebec publishes a programme or circular from which I cannot resist the desire of reading you an extract, although my speech has been very long, which extract is of great importance with reference to the question I have just dealt with. As the hon. leader of the Opposition has enquired lately about the mode of application of the $20,000 subsidy which we have voted towards the establishment of a Board of Vital and Mortuary Statistics, I think I may say that with respect to that there is yet much to be done; this Board will be established to gather not only mortuary statistics, but also vital statistics and to start a hygienic newspaper. It is in dealing with this question that the Hygienic Society has published the following circular-programme : -

" FALSIFICATION OF ARTICLES OF FOOD.

"Modern industry, that Briarean, with the hundred hands, has deeply "Modern industry, that Briarean, with the hundred hands, has deeply modified the conditions of our existence; not only have the articles of the first necessity, but articles of commodity, even luxuries, have been multiplied while prices have been constantly decreased and comfort has come down little by little till it has reached the home of the labourer and the peasant. But along side of this radical transformation which economical production, scientifically carried on, has produced, a growing evil has been developed. The manufacturer who sold cheanly wished to sell cheaper still while realizing the same profit. This was not pos-sible unless false labels were put on inferior articles. Deception as to quality was practised. Hygiene has nothing to do with this state of things, which is essentially human; the evil is not there. The vil lies in the which is essentially human; the evil is not there. The evil lies in the following facts. The manufacturer has not only put on the market in-ferior or falsified products, bat very often, in a multitude of circumstances, these falsifications have been obtained directly or indirectly by the aid these faistications have been obtained directly of indirectly by the aid of unwholesome and even poisonous matters. "We do not propose to cry shame on the manufacturer; it is not always his fault; he has to struggle unceasingly against competition; he has to imitate his opponents in the business; he must adopt their processes and try to beat them in the context for low prices, for the buyer goes in for cheap articles. The manufacturer and trader, in quite a number of cases, will poison you openly and with good faith, so that they will submit without difficulty to a control which would be the general rule. rule.

" THOSE WHO SUFFER

people, who imagine they eat sardines put up in olive oil, while crunching small herrings preserved in cotton seed oil They pepper with queer sorts of dust the meat they cook in ressels which have been tinned with lead. with glucose and flavoured with nitro-benzine. Their vinegar only owes its strength and preservation to the sulphuric acid which it contains, and this sulphuric acid invariably contains arsenical acid. The white bread which they think they are getting cheap, has been made out of damaged flour, to which alum has given back tone and body. "We might indefinitely multiply the instances, but such is not our pur-pose. We only wish to call attention to the sad features of the state of things to which we refer. It is precisely the working men, those who are absorbed all day long in their labours, who suffer mostly. They buy from day to day and have neither the time nor the necessary means of verifying the value of the articles of food. verifying the value of the articles of food.

"ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS.

"With this question of the falsification of alimentary substances, that of alcoholic liquors is closely connected. If there is a thing worthy of remark it is the development of alcoholism; its rapid and baleful effects are not at all to be compared to what existed formerly. In olden times intemperance only had recourse to liquors which were very natural and which were obtained by new simple recourse. The sime one simpli interaces in times obtained by very simple processes. To give one single instance, in times of yore rum was distilled from the molasses of sugar cane, while now it is fabricated outright with badly rectified alcohols which consequently contain certain substances which have very sad effects on the economy. These alcohols are coloured, flavoured, and the taste of rum is given to them by means of (we beg the reader's pardon for using these barbarous expres-sions) formiate of ethole. The same thing may be said of all alcoholic liquors, withou' exception; they are all artificially obtained, because they cost less. The most common are naturally the most poisonous, and we should not be astonished when we see the most sturdy men fast sinking and the influence of the said of the pairs of the said of the said under the influence of drink, when they engulf not alcohol but poison ous liquids. We might say very queer things about sherry, ports, white and red wines, common champagne, ales and beers.

"POISONS IN INDUSTRY.

"But articles of food and drink are only a branch in the immense field of industrial falsification and poison trade. We may even add that the most condemnable of things are not found in that branch, for the human most condemnable of things are not found in that branch, for the human stomach, however badly used, at last rebels when the thing is carried too far: unless he becomes dyspeptic, the consumer of alum bread at last begins to think that it is not as good as that of his neighbour, and the consumer of sardines put up in cotton seed oil, finding them indi-gestible, does not eat any more of them. . There is no criterion for a man who poisons himself slowly, in a room whose walls are covered with tinted paper badly pasted, or simply painted in distemper without varnish. The venomous colouring dust loosens itself little by little, accumulates on the carpet and every morning the broom raises it conscientiously. The smoker absorbs lead with the yellow wick with which he lights his pipe or cigar. The yellow cloth which covers Chicago and Cincinnatti hams largely furnishes the same substance. chromate of lead. The tinning of copper plates and dishes does not protect us in any way whatever, for the tin used in trade is falsified with lead which weigns more and costs less. Our socks, undershirts with lead which weighs more and costs less. Our socks, undershirts and drawers, so brilliantly colored, cause us to absorb, whenever we perspire in the least, the colours with annihine base, all venomous, and so true is this that acute cases of poisonings are reported as being due so true is this that acute cases of poisonings are reported as being due to this cau-e. Even the very bands of leather which are inside of our new hats, the silk and satin lining of our caps are steeped in these colouring matters derived from anniline, with which they are cheaply and handsomely dyed. We must not omit perfumery, which, under the guise of scents, tinctorial lotions, cosmetics and various pomades, hold out to us a choice of chemical products which are most always dangerous.

"ABSORPTION OF POISONS.

"Try and find out the cause of your headaches, sudden dizziness, obstinate neuralgias, rheumatic pains, slowly developed palsies, which came in little by little; find out the cause of accemas, dropwhich cans in note by little, and out the case of addinas, dimas, distantias, as yourselves from whence come these sudden saturine cholics. We will be greatly astonished if you think of your headdress, shoes, or underclothing, of your tinned plates and dishes, or of the walls of your room Of course, we do not pretend to ascribe to these causes all the ailments that human flesh is heir to, but it is likely that they play an important part in their genesis.

" COMPLEX TASK OF THE SOCIETY.

"This struggle which our society proposes to undertake against the In struggie which our society proposes to indertake against the invasion of poison is evidently only one task among many others. We shall briefly enumerate the principal questions with which the Hygienic Society of the Province of Quebec intends to deal in their meetings, on which we desire to call the attention of the public and of the legisla-tors and to which we intend to give the greatest publicity."

I beg your pardon for having detained the House so long on this question, which is somewhat dry, but which is of Lind owner, the peasant; in a word the people are the victims of this state of things. It is they who consume, instead of tea, plum-tree leaves colored with Prussian blue; it is they who drink, instead of coffee, succory, which has itself been made out of saw dust. It is they who think they are drinking chocolate while absorbing British gum. Poor deluded solidate and to increase all former provisions on this subject.

On the motion being put,

Mr. BLAKE. Surely the hon. gentleman will not ask that a Bill of this importance be read the second time without giving us some explanations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am quite satisfied that this House will require no further explanations after the eloquent speech on this measure which has just been delivered by my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Lesage).

Mr. BLAKE. He is not the Minister.

Mr. COSTIGAN. But the hon. gentleman has discussed the question so exhaustively that there is no necessity for my entering into its merits.

Mr. BLAKE. He spoke in French; repeat what he said in English.

Mr. DESJARDINS. You do not require that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I would hardly undertake to do that; I may make a few remarks, however, on the Bill. There is no one in this House who will deny the importance of a measure of this kind, and I am sure any measure in the direction of preventing the adulteration of food and drugs will receive the support of every hon. member. This question was raised in the other House last Session, and the importance was there recognized of further legislation without delay, and it is because I believe the country expects further legislation on this subject that I introduce this measure. The subject is one that has attracted very great attention in all countries. In the United States, scientific men have given much time to its study and very liberal sums of public money have been devoted to this subject in the several States of the Union. In New York, a large amount of money was expended to carry out a law something similar to what is proposed in this Bill, and some years ago the New York Board of Health offered a certain premium for the best Bill on the subject. Two were submitted, one prepared by an English gentleman and the other by Mr. Winter, who is well known as an analyst; and in this measure we have introduced some of the clauses taken from the New York law which we considered applicable to this country, the first section states that this Act may be cited as "The Adulteration of Food Act, 1881;" and then proceeds to give the interpretation as follows :----

"In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires : "The expression 'Food' includes every article used for food or drink by man;

"The expression 'Drug' includes all medicines for internal or external use; "'The expression 'Officer' means any officer of Inland Revenue, or "'The expression 'Deficer ' means any officer of Inland Revenue, or any person authorized under this Act to procure samples of articles of food or drugs and to submit them for analysis. "An article is deemed to be 'adulterated' within the meaning of this Act,---"In the case of Drugs :

"If it contains any added poisonous ingredient, or any ingredient which may render such an article injurious to the health of a person consuming it-----'

Mr. BLAKE. This sounds very like the Bill itself.

Mr. COSTIGAN. These are the principle features of the Bill and involve all the changes. The other sections are those necessary for carrying it out. I read those to give a general idea of the Bill, and I do not think it is necessary to take up longer the time of the House with further explanations.

Mr. BLAKE. I really hoped it was an explanation we were going to get, and did not expect the hon. gentleman would confine himself to exercising his very remarkable elocutionary powers in reading the Bill to us.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think the hon. gentleman can complain that I have often taken up the time of the House with my elocutionary powers. There is nothing very remarkable about my elocutionary powers, but I cannot say the same thing of the hon. gentleman, for I believe he possesses elocutionary powers that I can have no pretention to possess.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall this Bill be read the second time?

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is only partly read.

Mr. MILLS. This Bill is beyond our power. It looks very like a Police Bill, and should properly come under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. It is an interference with their rights.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think my hon. friend from Both-well is very unreasonable. He ought to know that it is the business of this House to interfere with the Local Legislatures, and we must have a certain portion of such interference every day. There is nothing new about that, and I am surprised the hon, gentleman should take objection to it.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope if the hon. gentleman intends to have the Bill discussed in Committee to-morrow, an interval of one day will be allowed to take place between the consideration in Committee and the third reading. We have had no information on the subject from the hon. Minister; it will be an entirely new discussion, and we should have time to consider any explanations he may make before proceeding to the third reading.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 126) respecting the Vancouver Island Railway, the Esquimalt Graving Dock, and certain Railway Lands of the Province of British Columbia, granted to the Dominion.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to ask the Committee to allow me to amend the Bill by adding the following Resolution :--

"Until the boundary line between British Columbia and the North-West Territories is finally settled and located, and such settlement and location is published in the Canada Gazette, the Courts of law and equity of the said Province shall have civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over all the territories described and laid down in the map of the said Province issued and published by the hon. Joseph Trutch in the year 18, as being within such Province, and all offences committed in any part of the said territory may be stated, in any warrant, indictment, or other legal instrument or proceedings, to have been committed in British Columbia."

I may state that the object of this is to meet a difficulty which has presented itself in regard to the legal boundary of British Columbia on the eastern side, a portion of the boundary, the only part that is at all in question; and, a doubt having arisen as to what is really the legal boundary of British Columbia, and minerals having been discovered, and a good deal of influx of population being anticipated in this portion that is, perhaps, in question, until it is finally decided, it will be found extremely inconvenient to have a section of country there in which ques-tions might arise as to the legality of proceedings taken in relation to any offence committed in that section of the territory. The question is now being investigated with a view to its final settlement, but, until that settlement takes place, it is suggested that it is desirable to have this provision made.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the hon, gentleman should not have been able to introduce this clause into the Bill originally. I have no information as to what the proposed conventional boundary for the purposes of the administra-tion of justice may be. The hon. gentleman refers to a map, but he gives us no information as to what boundary is assigned to British Columbia by that map. I should like to have some general information as to where the difficulty exists.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The map defines the boundary. It was issued by Mr. Trutch, I think when he was Commissioner of Crown Lands of British Columbia. I do not remember the year at this moment, but it was some considerable time ago. In his map he had marked the boundary, taking the height of land, which I believe is recognized very generally as the boundary. Starting from the boundary line between the United States and Canada at the height of land of the Rocky Mountains, it follows that height of land until, as my hon. friend is aware, it is intersected by a particular meridian which is described in the Imperial Act. The definition in the Imperial Act is not clear as to whether it is on the height of land or not, but Mr. Trutch's map marks it on the height of land, on the watershed of the Rocky Mountains, from the 49th parallel, where it commences, until it intersects this meridian. After that, of course, there is no difficulty and no doubt. That meridian intersects the height of land somewhere, I should think, in the neighbourhood of Tête Jaune Cache, but it is clearly marked on the map, and this will make a perfect conventional boundary until the question is finally settled. The question has been raised by the Government of British Columbia as to what the true boundary is, and, upon reference to the Imperial Act, there is a good deal of obscurity. The question is being investigated, and, if legislation is required, it will have, of course, to be brought here as well as in the Legislature of British Columbia.

Mr. BLAKE. If I recollect aright an earlier piece of legislation provided something with reference to the main chain of the Rocky Mountains and later legislation fixed the height of land at the Rocky Mountains. I think it will be found there is some practical difficulty in saying where the height of land is. I believe there are certain portions of that territory in which there are series of detached mountains, and in one series you can go from mountain to mountain with ranges on each side so that you cannot tell where the height of land is. One can easily see on Fletcher's map that it is difficult to find what is the height of land, because, I believe, that is the real difficulty in the case. Of course, there is some one point which is the height of land, but it is not, as I understand, a visible and easily ascertained object, nor, as I have said, with these detached hills in which there are different ranges, roughly speaking parallel to one another, is it easy to be known which is the main chain of the Rocky Mountains that is to be held to be the boundary, some maps give the easternmost chain of the of the Session that the Government would have taken some Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Rocky Mountains, and others the western. Then I doubt whether the hon. gentleman can, by the force and strength of this legislation alone, grant to the courts of any Province jurisdiction beyond the bounds of that Province. They are Provincial Courts, to all intents and purposes, and if it happens that the territory which the hon. gentleman's clause covers is in reality beyond the powers of the Province, it is a very strong proposition, I think, to say that the Parliament of Canada can confer upon Provincial Courts jurisdiction outside the Province. You are turning them into Dominion Courts and that is the only way you achieve your object. I do not intend to oppose the passage of the clause which, no doubt, the hon, gentleman, under the circumstances, will not ask to be read the third time to-day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no objection to let the third reading stand over till to-morrow. With reference to the maps, that of Captain Palliser is percisely the same. The line of mountain was taken by Mr. Trutch from Captain Palliser's map.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is a different scale, is it not?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. HOMER. I did not know this Bill.was coming up. I understood it was not ready.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is distributed and has been marked printed in English.

Mr. HOMER. I called for it two days ago and it was not printed. I see it is not marked yet as printed in French.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The third reading is not proposed to be taken to day, so the hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity, with the Bill in his hands, of moving any amendments he pleases.

Mr. BLAKE. Every member of this House has a right to understand that no Bill shall be taken until it is marked on the orders as proper to be taken. We dispense with that frequently, and I have not raised any objection this even-ing, but it is important we should remember that hon. members have a right to believe that until "E.F." is markod against a Bill it cannot be taken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt the hon. gentleman is quite right, and it is only by courtesy that we can proceed with a Bill under these circumstances. I may say that the reason for proceeding with this Bill at so early a period, arose from the fact that the season is opened, and as the time allowed for the construction of this work is limited, it is desirable that parties should understand whether the Bill is to pass or not.

Bill, as amended, reported.

Mr. HOMER. I ask to have the amendments read.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The only amendment provides that until the eastern boundary of British Columbia is finally determined and settled, for the purpose of criminal jurisdiction, we should adopt the boundary as laid down on Mr. Trutch's map, following the height of land until it strikes the meridian or intersects that.

SUPPLY-NORTH-WEST DISCONTENT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CAMERON (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, it is known to many members of the House—or at all events to those who take an interest in public affairs-that discontent prevails to a large extent in the Province of Manitoba and in the North-West Territories, and that a good deal of uneasiness exists in the public mind as to what may be the upshot of this discontent. I fully expected before this period steps to consider of the discontent that prevails in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and that the Government would initiate such legislation as might be necessary for the purpose of allaying that discontent. I find that the attention of the Government has been directed to this important question in the other branch of the Legislature during the present Session, and from the reply that was made by the Minister of the Interior to the statement of an hon. Senator, I had reason to believe, and did believe, that the Government would during this Session ask the sanction of Parliament to such a scheme as they might consider necessary for the purpose of removing that discontent. Sir, on more than one occasion during this Session of Parliament I drew the attention of the Government to several causes of discontent in the North-West Territories myself, and from observations which were made by the hon. First Minister I think I had some reason to believe that some steps would be taken by the Government to remove any just cause of complaint by the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. I waited until now, after the hon. First Minister had declared more than once that Parliament would prorogue before Easter—and I trust it will—in the hopes that the Government would submit some scheme to Parliament that would have the effect of removing any just cause of discontent in either Manitoba or the North-West Territories. But so far my hopes have been disap-pointed. Nothing has been done; the Government have not indicated so far as I am aware that they propose dealing with the question of discontent in either Manitoba or the North-West; and now when delays in my judgment are dangerous, I venture once more to direct the attention of the Government to this very important question. It is known to members of the House that for a number of years, notably for the last two years, the Province of Manitoba has been persistently protesting against the policy of the Government in respect of the public affairs of Manitoba and the N orth-West Territory. They complained at one time, and that very recently, of the unconstitutional and unreasonable interference with their local legislation. They complained of the vast monopolies that were created in both Manitoba and the North West Territories. But relying to some extent, I suppose, on the statement of the Minister of Rulways, that now the Government were in a position to reconsider their policy with respect to interference by them, with local legislation, those questions have in the Province of Manitoba, at all events to some extent, passed out of consideration. There are, however, other questions equally important, other questions of great importance, that have presented themselves, and the people in Manitoba through their Government and in other ways, have pressed on the attention of the Government here the fair consideration of what they call their just demands. The demands to which I have referred, made by Manitoba and the North-West Council, are of a not unimportant character. They involve very grave considerations. Hon. members acquainted with the country will admit that they affect the growth and prosperity of the whole of our western possessions. Their admission will to a large extent inspire hope and confidence in the minds of the settlers who have gone to make homes in the North-West, and the refusal of those demands-reasonable domands at any ratewill, in my judgment, imperil the very existence of the Province and of the Territory ; and I claim also that the resusal will at least check the growth and prosperity of the Territory, and to some extent, I believe, will weaken the ties which bind Manitoba and the Territories to the Dominion of Canada. I do not say that all the demands made by the Province or by the Territories are fair and reasonable demands. I do not pretend to say that the claims ment made by the North-West Territories, deserve at the very least, at the hands of the Government, a fair consideration. If those claims are fair and reasonable they should be met promptly, they should be discussed promptly, they should be considered promptly, and if fair and honest claims, they should be considered by the Government promptly. We know that up to last year the claims made by Manitoba—and I speak now especially of the claims of that Province—were of the fol-lowing character: First, they claimed that the Dominion Government should transfer to the Local Government the public and school lands in the Province. Second, they claimed a re-arrangement of the financial basis on which Manitoba was erected into one of the Provinces of the Dominion. Any person who has taken the trouble to enquire into the matter, and who has read the correspondence which has passed between the Manitoba and Dominion Governments, and the State papers sent by the Manitoba Government to the Government here, will know that the claims of Manitoba are advanced in very clear, distinct and forcible language-that is as regard the control of public lands and the financial re-arrangement. As to the control of the public lands, the Dominion Government two years ago refused to accede to what the people of Manitoba thought their true rights, that is, the control of the public and school lands of the Province; and I find on the 22nd March, 1882, the following communication passed between the two Governments. The Government at Ottawa writing to the Government of Manitoba said:

"With respect to the second item, public lands, I have to inform you that His Excellency in Council is not prepared to allow any change in respect to Dominion lands lying in Manitoba, the analogy which the delegates see between the public lands in other Provinces and those of Manitoba, does not seem to His Excellency in Council to be well drawn, inasmuch as the other Provinces owned their lands before Confederation, and brought them into the Union with them as their own property, whereas the whole of Manitoba was acquired by the Dominion, by purchase from the Hudson's Bay Co., and thus became the property of the Dominion, and stands really, as it seems to His Excellency in Council, as lands in the territories of the United States, which are not given to the New States as these new States are created, but remain the property of the United States."

That was the answer made to the first proposition—the acquisition of the public and school lands. I do not propose discussing the merits of Manitoba's demand. I propose submitting to the House, and calling the attention of the Government to the fact that the demands have been made over and over again, and that the Government should but has not considered them in a generous and liberal spirit. As regards the claim for the lands, the Dominion Government have refused the request of the Province of Manitoba. As regards the rearrangement of the financial basis, the Government did, to some extent, grudgingly and sparingly, yield to the claims made by Manitoba. What have we now? The same demands made? No; but we have extended demands. We have the Province of Manitoba sending here its Premier, who spent a month in interviewing, or attempting to interview, the Government, in order to have further demands conceded; and in the very able and admirable State paper which the Premier of Manitoba sent to the Dominion Government, the following demands are made :—

"EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES.

"I.-That the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba be extended northward so as to include Por. Churchill, on Hudson Bay, and westward to the one hundred and second meridian.

" PUBLIC LANDS.

"II.—The Province of Manitoba will agree to refund all expenses incurred by Canada in surveys of lands within the Province that remain vested in the Crown, in consideration of said surveyed lands and other lands yet unsurveyed being handed over to the Province, and the revenues arising from the sale or lease thereof accruing to the Province for provincial purposes; and further,— mittee the above propositions, urging a settlement on the basis proposed, as one that would be very acceptable and satisfactory to the people of the Prevince. The Hon. Mr. Sutherland also submitted his views on the different questions, supporting the statements made by the under-signed, and arging a concurrence therein. After hearing the arguments advanced, the Committee said that they would submit the matter to their colleagues and communicate to the undersigned the decision arrived at by them.

"J. NORQUAY."

These appear to be the demands made by the Province of Manitoba upon the Dominion Government. Now, Sir, no attention appears to be given to these demands. Mr. Norquay was here representing the Government of the Province of Manitoba; he remained here pressing his claims on this Government, seeking interviews with them and endeavouring, as he says, to get the views of the Government, but all of his endeavours failed. His demands were not entertained, and according to a statement made by Mr. Norqvay, they were not even considered. It is known to almost everybody that Mr. Norquay left the Capital discontented, dissatisfied and disgusted with the treatment he was alleged to have received from the Government. He did not conceal his dissatisfaction and disgust. On his way home from Ottawa to Manitoba, he was interviewed at St. Paul by one of the reporters of the St. Paul's Pioneer Press, and as that interview throws light on the way Mr. Norquay's demands were received here by the Government, I will read it. The action of the Privy Council is first referred to :

" THE PRIVY COUNCIL'S ACTION.

"There was some discussion as to the financial question, and note "There was some discussion as to the inancial question, and note was taken by them, of the other matters referred to, and the Committee promised to submit the same to their colleagues and communicate to me their decision." "Did you arrive at any definite understanding in these matters before leaving Ottawa"" "No, I did not, although I asked the Chairman, Mr. Macpherson, both me official communication and accountly to fourish me with by official communication and personally, to furnish me with an answer, that I might report it to the Legislature of Manitoba soon after my return.

"Had you any intimation before leaving Ottawa, as to the probability

"Head you any intimation before leaving Ottawa, as to the probability of a favourable consideration of those suggestions, or otherwise?" "I had no intimation, although I received a message when in Toronto, on my way home, asking me to return to Ottawa. Before consenting to de so, I requested an assurance that Manitoba matters should be taken up immediately; and, not receiving a reply to assure me that such would be the case, and having already spent over a month in Ottawa as a representative and leader of the Manitoba Government, ready and anxious at any time to discuss these matters, I did not feel that either the interests of the Province or the dignity of its Government would be surged by my returning to renew negotiations without the slightest asturance of any early solution." "Attais, then, is all the report you will have to make to the Legislature on your return?" "That is all, unless a reply is received from the Dominion Govern-ment before the meeting of the Local House." "About the middle of March." "the subs no conclusion is arrived at before your Legislature meets, what course will your Government pursue in order to press these claims of the Province upon the Dominion ?"

" THE PREMIER'S INTENTIONS.

"Of course I am speaking without consultation with my colleagues, but the probability is that the Government will not withdraw its demand for what it believes to be justice to the people of Manitoba, and should no satisfactory arrangement be arrived at, the Legislature will probably be asked to support the Government by resolutions appealing to the Imperial Parliament, for aid in securing the rights of Manitoba at the hande of the Domision Government." "What are the prosmets of the Hudgen Bay Bailway asked "What are the prospects of the Hudson Bay Railway scheme?"

(Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"There is a Parliamentary Committee taking evidence now at Ottawa and the evidence so far elicited, goes far to justify the belief which the people of Winnipeg hold, as to the practicability of Hudson's Bay navigation, for commercial purposes." "Will the proposed railway receive any aid from the Dominion Government?

"No; if we get a satisfactory settlement with the Dominion Government, as the basis I have stated to you, we will aid the railway by a grant of land and by a guarantee for construction." "What is the state of feeling in Manitoba upon the subject of the claims you have been pressing upon the Dominion Government?

"The people are a unit in support of the representations made to the Dominion by my Government, and are very determined upon having them carried out. While there is no danger of this very strong feeling making a violent outbreak, the people are prepared and determined to use every constitutional means to secure justice to the Province."

Here we find that Mr. Norquay, the Premier of the Province, made a statement of his claims, in which he set forth the demands of the Province and the grievances they complain of. In this interview he states to a reporter of this St. Paul newspaper, that he could get no solution of any kind to the demands he made against the Dominion Government. Sir, the Local Parliament met shortly after he went home. It met on the 13th of March, and in the Address from the Throne the following paragraph occurs :--

"The claims which this Province has always preferred as a right, have again been urged upon the Privy Council. My Government have taken the view that the time has arrived when such provisions should be made for the Government of this Province as will obviate the necessity of future delegations to the Capital. With this object in view, the Privy Council have been urged to concede to the Province the control of the public and school lands for local revenue and the support of education respectively, and also a re-adjustment of the credit allowed Manitoba on her entering Confederation, the same to be based on the population as ascertained decennially. ascertained decennially.

"In pursuance of the policy already sanctioned by the House, repre-sentations have been made by my Government urging upon the Privy Council the expediency of extending the boundaries of this Province as far north as the sixtieth parallel, and westward to the one hundried and second meridian. The importance of this extension, in view of the con-templated construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, cannot be over-estimated.

¹⁽¹) regret to inform you that as yet no answer to the memorial sub-mitted by my Government has been received. You will be asked to give your careful consideration to such means as will be suggested by them to secure the objects asked for in the said memorial."

Here is what the people of Manitoba complain of, and the complaint is so strong that the Premier of that Province finds it necessary to make reference to it in the Speech from the Throne. He draws attention to the fact that although these claims were presented to the Dominion Government months and months ago, up to the time the Speech from Throne was delievered no reply was received by the Government or the Premier to the claims he had made. But that was not all; a few days after the Local House met the Premier of Manitoba tabled certain resolutions, and proposed moving in the direction indicated in the Speech from the Throne. The resolutions, after reciting the demands made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion Government, and the refusal of the Dominion Government so far to concede, or even to consider them, goes on :

"And whereas no answer satisfactory to the Legislature of the Pro-vince has been received in reply to the demands as above mentioned, and in the opinion of this House the rights of the people of the Prowince to obtain redress in all matters of a local nature which are extended to the people of the other Provinces of Canada, are denied to the people of Manitoba, and the resources derivable from the sale of land in Manitoba are appropriated by the Dominion, which, in other Provinces of the Union are administered by their several Legislatures, and the revenues arising therefrom inure to the several Provinces respectively;

And whereas this Legislature views with alarm the alienation from the Orown of the public domain without provision being made for the future necessities of Government in this Province, which will, in the near future, be obliged to resort to direct taxation to support its insti-tutions, and prosecute improvements necessary to the building up thereof, which state of affairs in the other Provinces was obviated largely by the revenues arising from the Crown lands, and by liberal provisions made for them on entering the union: Be it therefore resolved, that an humble address be passed by this House praying His Excellency the Governor General to cause such enquiry to be made into the relations of this Province with the Domin-ion, and such action to be taken in reference thereto, as will place this province the set of the s Province in as favourable a position, as regards her future necessities, as are the four Provinces confederated under the British North America Act

Act; And be it further resolved that a memorandum of the case be pre-pared and transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with an humble request that the Manitoba Act may be so amended as to place this Province of Manitoba on the same status in the Dominion as the older Provinces of the Union "

Here are the proceedings of the Government of the Province of Manitoba. Here is the Speech from the Throne, the State papers to which I have referred, and the notice of certain resolutions which the Premier proposed sub-mitting to the Local Parliament. But the Premier goes a step further. He not only complains of the fact that no satisfactory answer has been made to his appication respecting the transfer of the public and school lands to the Province of Manitoba, that no arrangement has been made respecting an additional money grant which they claimed as of right, but he further insists that the financial and fiscal policy of the Government is rainous to the best interests of Manitoba. A few days ago he tabled notice of certain other resolutions, and I draw the attention of the Government and the House to an extract taken from the Emerson International upon this subject. It says:

"The speech to a Provincial Legislature is supposed to indicate legis-lation only on such matters as are within the jurisdiction of that Legis-lature, and everybody knows that the Tariff is the creation of the Domi-nion Parliament and entirely outside the jurisdiction of cur Local Solons. But Hon. Mr. Norquay meant that expression of sympathy with the farmers on the Tariff grievance, and he took the first opportunity to prove it by giving notice at the first sitting of the Local Legislature, after the formal opening, that he would, on the following Wednesday, introduce a resolution setting forth that the duty on agricultural imple-ments, lumber, and canned goods was believed to be an undue and un-necessary burden on the people of this c untry, and asking the appoint necessary burden on the people of this c untry, and asking the appoint-ment of a Select Committee to enquire into the matter, with a view of obtaining evidence that would sustain a memorial to the Dominion Government, asking them to remove the burdens complained of.

These, Sir, are the proceedings which were taken by the Premier of Manitoba, the political friend and ally of hon. gentlemen opposite, with the view of inducing his Governernment to redress the grievances complained of by that Province. Sir, the Premier of Manitoba, I am sorry to say, utters by no means a hopeful tone as to the future of that great Province. He speaks of the crisis as grave and serious. He made these demands upon the Government of the Dominion, and they have not so far been redressed. He appealed to the Privy Council of Canada, and according to his statement, the ears of the Privy Council were closed to his appeal; and now he proposes to appeal to the Imperial Parliament. I say all this indicates a most unsatisfactory condition of affairs in our new Province in the great North-West. The Premier of Manitoba goes a step further, and warns the Government here of the danger of the critical condition of public affairs in that Province. At a public meeting, Premier Norquay said :

"At present we are on the verge of a crisis from which we must emerge in a better or worse condition. Not, however, until the masses were made aware of the situation, would they stand up and maintain their rights The time had arrived when Manitoba must be placed on a level with other Provinces of the Dominion. Not one new arrival had been in the Province three months before he, who before was loud in its denunciations, was equally loud in demanding its rights. The eyes of the farmers had been opened, and they were slarmed at the prospect. These matters would shortly engross the attention, not only of the Provincial, but of the Dominion tarliament."

From all these circumstances, Sir, it is perfectly evident that the political sky in the Province of Manitoba is dark and lowering. No one can tell the moment when we may go just a step too far in our injustice to Manitoba to retrace The Government should remember our steps with safety. that justice deferred always enhances the price of it. Let us deal fairly and honestly with Manitoba, and let us fairly and honestly consider its claims. I say, and I say it with regret, that the present situation there is fraught with difficulty and danger; and is a fit subject for Parliamentary enquiry. When we acquired that vast territory, it was supposed that who were instructed to proceed to Ottawa and press the it would be a magnificent field for a large immigration; and claims of the Province of Manitoba upon the attention of

we know that enormous sums have been expended year after year in the effort to turn the tide of immigration from the United States to the free homesteads in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Sir, unless we can gratify the reasonable demands of the settlers in that country, we cannot hope for that prosperity for it, which is the carneet desire of every true Canadian. The existence of a spirit of dissatisfaction and distrust in the minds of the settlers may produce very serious consequences to the peace and prosperity of this country. Now, Sir, I find that the large body of the farmers of the Province of Manitoba are at one with the Government of that Province on this question. In the month of December last, a meeting of delegates from the farmors, representing every section of the Province, was held in the city of Winnipeg. From the names of those delegates, one may see that they were representative men, many of them hailing from the Province of Ontario. At that meeting they set forth their bill of rights, containing the demands and claims that they insisted upon being conceded to them by the Dominion Government That bill of rights I am going to trouble the House by reading :

"And whereas, in convention they proceeded to form the association . now known as the 'Manitobs and North-West Farmers' Union'; "And whereas, they thereafter formulated a 'Declaration of Rights' in behalf of the citizens and Province (f Manitoba, in which declaration they stated the grievances of the people as follows: "Whereas, in view of the present depression in agriculture and com-mercial industries in the Province of Manitoba, the farmers of the Pro-vince have assembled for the purpose of expressing their views upon the causes of the said depression and the means of removing the same ; causes of the said depression and the means of removing the same; "And whereas, the present and the future prosperity of this Province depends both commercially and otherwise upon the successful prosecution of agriculture; "And whereas, numerous and embarrassing restrictions are placed upon the efforts made by the settlers to extend their operations and improve their condition; "And whereas, some of the said restrictions consist of the oppressive duty upon agricultural implements, the monopoly of the the carrying trade now enjoyed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the improper and vexatious methods employed in the administration of the public lands of Manitoba; "And whereas, the inhabitants of Manitoba are British subjects, and have made their homes here, upon the representation that they would be allowed all the privileges which, as such subjects they would elsewhere iu Canada be entitled to, and it appears that by the terms of the admis-sion of Manitoba into Confederation they should be allowed such rights and privileges; "And whereas, they are denied such rights, and they find that the representative system of the Province is such that they are, practically the province of the province is such that they are practically denied the privilege of securing the redress of their grievances through their representatives in the Provincial or Dominion Parliaments : "And whereas this Uonvention approves that statement of grievances.

"And whereas the convention of the 19th December, 1883, further stated and resolved as follows :

"And whereas a large proportion of the business of the Dominion Government is wholly connected with Manitoba and the North-West, especially the important Departments of the Minister of Railways, Public Works, Immigration and Agriculture, which should be controlled by our Provincial Legislature; "And whereas it is the right of every British subject to call the st-tention of the constituted authorities to the existence of abuses and wrongs

"And whereas this Convention approves of those statements;

"And whereas this Convention approves of those statements; "And whereas, in consequence of facts recited, the convention of the 19th December, 1883, claimed for the citizens and Province of Banitoba the following rights:--"1. The right of the Local Government to charter rai!ways anywhere in Manitoba free from interference, and "2. The absolute control of her public hands (including school lands) by the Legislature of the Province, and compensation for lands sold and used for Federal purposes. "3. That the duty on agricultural implements and building materials be removed, and the Customs tariff on articles entering into daily con-sumption be greatly modified in the interests of the people of this rrovince and the Northwest. "4. The right of representation in the Dominion Cabinet."

"4. The right of representation in the Dominion Cabinet."

Now. Sir, that was the declaration of rights of the convention of farmers which met in Winnipeg on the 19th of December last. That convention selected certain delegates, the Government of Canada, in the hope that that Government would initiate such legislation as would, to a large extent, remove the well-founded grievances they were complaining of. The delerates arrived in Ottawa; I believe they interviewed the Government; they returned to Manitoba without any satisfactory answer to the demands they made. A second convention was called, to meet in Winnipeg on the 5th of March, for the purpose of hearing the report of the delegates; and at that convention the following resotions were passed :

"That whereas the interests of this Province immediately require that the privileges conferred by the British North America Act (the char-ter of Confederation) and enjoyed by the other Provinces-shall be granted to it; "And that the Local Legislature of Manitoba shall be supreme in "And that the Local Legislature of Manitoba shall be supreme in the subjects and area prescribed by the said Act, in the 92nd clause thereof for exclusive legislation by the Pr vinces of the Federal Union; "And whereas the Government at Ottawa continues to withhold these privileges: "And whereas all constitutional means have been adopted to secure those, both by the delegates of the Farmer's Union and by the Premier (Hon. Mr. Norquay), from the Dominion Government—and have failed; "And whereas the said Government at Ottawa continues to treat this Premier and the premier and the premier and an engagement.

Province as if it was a purchased or conquered country and an appanage Province as if it was a purchased or conquered country and an appanage of the Eastern Provinces—using the assets of the Province not for the benefit of Manitoba, but for Dominion purposes, on the pretence of hav-ing purchased the title thereto from the Hudson Bay Company; "And whereas the highest legal authorities, and the Canadian Com-missioners, refused to acknowledge the claims of the Hudson Bay Company as valid or tenable, and that the amount so paid to the said company was paid as a matter of compromise and expediency, and could not secure more than the same company lega ly possessed;

"And whereas Manitoba was no consenting party to the said compro-mise, nor to the public lands being retained by the Dominion Govern-ment and used for the purposes of the Dominion; "And whereas the best interests of this Province have greatly suffered, and continue to suffer, and the development and progress of the country and continue to suffer, and the development and progress of the country are seriou-ly retarded; "Therefore, be it resolved: That this Convention hereby petition the Premier (Hon. Mr. Norquay) at once to declare, by resolution of the House of Assembly, that this Province shall no longer coat nue a member of the Federal Union, unless accorded equal privileges with the other partners of the Conf-deration—and a modification of those duties which pressed beguing on the action interests.

partners of the Confideration—and a moundation of those duries which press so heavily on the agricultural interests. "And further, that an appeal be made to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and to Her Privy Council, to so amend the Britiss Nor h America Act as to allow of Manitoba withdrawing from Confederation, and graciously as to allow of Maintoba withdrawing from Contervation, and graciosity to allow of this country being a colony of Great Britain, with a separate Constitution, separate laws, and with a Government of its own; "And this Convention further pledges itself to suscain the Premier in this course of action by any means in its power; and feels sure that the people of this Province will support them in securing that independence and freedom so dear to every British subject."

Now, Sir, that convention was a representative convention composed of men from every section of the Province of Manitoba; it was attended, not only by farmers, but by the Winnipeg Board of Trade, another representative body and composed very largely of supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. I am told that three-four ths of the members of the Winnipeg Board of Trade are the prononced friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Those resolutions-at all events, most of them-had also the hearty sympathy and support of the Local Government of Manitoba. At this convention, Mr. Ashdown, who is one of the leading men of Winnipeg, a large and wealthy merchant, a pronounced Conservative and a distinguished friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, made use of the following language:

Mr. J. H. Ashdown congratulated the chairman on the representative character of the meeting, and congratula ed the Province on the able manner in which the proceedings had been conducted throughout Every portion of the Province, he understood, was represented, and the tenor of the speeches showed plainly that politics were not mixed up with tenor of the speeches showed plainly that politics were not mixed up with their proceedings. It was a gathering to provice for the necessities of the Province. That being the case, the Board of Trade felt it a duty to take part. Mr. Ashdown proceeded to notice why the Board of Trade felt it incumbent on them to join this movement. They did so because, equally with the members of the Union, they desired an extension of the Provincial bounds, as proposed by the Government. They desired to get control of the public lands of Manitoba. They desired to be placed on an equal footing with the other Provincial subsidy such as would set maters right in this respect. And there should be such as re-arrangement of the Tariff as would relieve Manitoba of some of her present burdens -such as the duty on agricultural implements and Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

canned goods. In the case of these oppressive duties, Mr. Ashdown pointed He pointed out that the settlers in Manitoba gave into the Dominion Exchequer at least three times as much as the next best revenue producing Province of the Dominion, outside of British Columbia. On account In province of the Dominion, outside of British Columbia. On account of her ports of Quebec and Montreal, the Province of Quebec was the next largest revenue producing Province. He went on to show how every settler in Manitoba contributed at least three times as much as any settler in Quebec, and very nearly five times as much as any settler in the belowed Province of Ontario. With regard to the Oanadian Paci-fic Railway, he looked on that as a great national work—a national necessity. We happened to be situated in the heart of the continent, and training output at the heart of the continent. necessity. We happened to be situated in the heart of the continent, and, to some extent, got the benefit of the construction of that road. But we were hardly in the calculation at all when the construction was first undertaken The object was to bind the two ends of the Dominion together, and it was not, as the Eastern people seen to think, a work undertaken specially for our benefit. Having expressed pleasure at the constitutional course taken by the Union, he hoped that course would be successful. Should it not be so, it was open to them to go to the foot of the Throne, and there we would get our rights.''

Another gentleman, also a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, Captain Carruthers, made use of the following language:

"Captain Carruthers said he was glad to see so large and thoroughly representative a gathering of the men who had been well styled the back-bone of the country. Their interests as farmers were indissolubly bound up with every branch of trade and commerce in the Province, and therefore anything bearing adversely on the interests of the farming community affected the whole Province. Having noticed the nonpolitical character of the movement, Captain Carruthers sketched the vast extent and resources of this Province and the North-West Terri-tories, which would be materially affected by this movement. He went over in detail the objects aimed at by those who had combined to form the Union-showed that the Province had not been justly dealt withand hoped they would concentrate their energies on the main issues. An enlargement of the provincial boundaries—a re-adjustment of the subsidy—a re-modelling of the Tariff. These things were matters of prime necessity."

I have shown you what some of the speakers, the pronounced friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, said on that occasion. The President of the Board of Trade was there, and he also made a speech. His speech was in the following language, short and to the point:-

"Mr. McKenzie, President of the Board of Trade, being called on to give statistics as to the operation of the duty complained of, came for-ward and said : The canned goods industry is perhaps one of the least of the manufacturing industries of the eastern Provinces, and I refer to it quite as much to show how ready the Government is to listen and to it quite as much to show how ready the Government is to listen and to assist any demands made upon it by the eastern people-quite a contrast to its treatment of the demands of Manitoba—as to show how enormous the protection afforded on canned fruits is, and how peculisrly hard it presses on this country, owing to the fact that all fruits, green or canned, have to be brought here. The duty on canned vegetables up to a year ago was 20 per cent. ad valorem; on canned fruits 2 cents per pound. This was not considered enough, and the manufacturers went to the Government and had the duty arranged, so that it was calculated to make other manufacturers sick with envy. There is no allowance for quality, poor paying a higher rate than good. Here is the Tariff:

Canned	apples, 3c. per lb	58	per cent.
"	gooseberries, 3c. per lb	60	·
"	pears. 3c. per lb	624	"
" "	strawberries, 3c. per lb	84	"
"	peaches, 3c. per lb74	to 1	05"
	CANNED VEGETABLES.

Tomatoes, 2c. per lb
Peas, 2c. per lb	87 "

and the weight of the cans to be always included; jams, 5c. per lb., equal to 60 per cent. "It is not, lot me add, the first time the truit business has led to trouble; but whether there was a woman in the case this time I do not knew.'

Here, I say, are the resolutions of the Farmers' Convention, and the speeches of some of the leading gentlemen who took part in that convention. They are the views of leading men of Manitoba, who are supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite; and I may say that, to night, in the remarks which I propose making, I do not propose to quote extracts from the speeches of any gentlemen except those who are friende of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do so for this reason, that if they complain, hon gentlemen opposite have good ground for believing that there is something wrong in the Administration of public affairs in the great North-West. These claims are very clearly set forth, some of which appear to me to be very reasonable; at all events, they are of that character which ought to entitle them to receive consideration at the hands of this Government and Parliament; yet up to this hour, according to the statement of the Prime Minister of that Province-another friend of hon. gentle men opposite-no answer, satisfactory or otherwise, has been made. I maintain that, with the full knowledge we have of the discontent which exists up there, and the impending crisis, the whole question is a fit subject for parliamentary enquiry. I have spoken to you of the Province of Manitoba and the farmers of that Province, but we must recollect that there is another representative body in the North-West, a body of equal, perhaps of greater importance—a body that rules over an area of 400,000 square miles, with a population estimated at from 100,000 to 150,000 people, a body which has sovereign power within the limits given to it by the Constitution under which it has its existence. I refer to the North-West Council. They, too, in solemn Council as-senbled, drew up a list of the grievances of which the North West Territories complained. These grievances were sixteen in number-sixteen different grounds of complaint-and all these grounds of complaint have an importance and a significance well worth the consideration of those who are now at the head of the affairs in this country. I do not propose dealing with those grievances at any considerable length; I propose only reterring to one or two of them; but in dealing with any of these grievances we ought to bear in mind that the importance to be attached to a protest of misgovernment, of bad policy, depends very largely on the source whence the protest comes. The first question that naturally arises is: Do the people who complain know whercof they speak? Are they conversant with the position and the circumstances of the country? Do they appreciate thoroughly the trials and the difficulties connected with pioneer settlement? And can they fully appreciate the errors of judgment or policy committed by the Administration in the great North-West? Are they free to give an honest and an unbiassed judgment on the questions on which they undertook to pronounce? If they are the friends of the Government, they surely cannot desire to embarrass the Government, and one cannot help coming to the conclusion that there must be some foundation for their complaints. We all know perfectly well that at least four fifths of the North-West Council are the friends of the Government. Now, let us see what those friends of the Government in the North-West complain of. I know that at this late period of the Session the House will find it tedious that I should enter into this matter, but I cannot help it. I am bound to submit these facts for the consideration of the Government, in the expectation and the hope that the Government arc, even at this late period, prepared to consider some, at all events, of what I believe to be the reasonable claims of the people of the North-West. The minute of Council transmitted by the Council of the North-West Territories to the Government here, is in the following words :-

" To His Excellency the Governor-General in Council :

8th. That power be given to the North West Council to incorporate companies having territorial objects and to enforce ordinances by imprisonment.

"9th. That sub-section 2 of section 91 of "The North-West Territories Act of 1880 " be amended so as to vest all trails and highways in the Councils of the North-West Territories.

" 10th. That the duties on agricultural implements and lumber should be reduced, it having her tofore been the policy of Your Excellency's Government to foster the industries of the country.

"We feel that the heavy duties imposed on lumber and implements used in agricultural pursuits, together with the heavy rates of freights which must be paid, is calculated to so increase the cost of building and of farming that the effect must be injurious to sottlement. "11th. That largely increased sums should be voted for expenditure on the Saskatchewan River, to improve the nav gation of that stream, it being the only means of outlet for a very large section of the North-West, and the Canadian Pacific Railway in the south being at such a great distance, making it, as a means of cheap outlet, almost impracticable.

"12th. That mining laws and regulations should be assimilated to those of British Columbia and Montana Territory. "13th. That the right of pre-emption should not be abolished. "Your memorialists also pray, in view of the very large increase of the population in the Territories, and the consequent increased demand for various improvements, that a sum per capita, based on the assumed population of one hundred thousand now in the North-West Territories, be given for expenditure by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, as best calculated to suit the requirements of the people, than at present followed.

"15th. That the system of granting immense tracts of the choicest lands in the Territories to colonization companies is inimical to the best interests of the country. Your memorialists therefore pray that no more such grants be made; that the companies now holding the same be com-pelled to fulfil the conditions imposed upon them, it letter and in spirit, and that the agents of the companies be not allowed to act as the Agents of the Government in any respect; that granting lands already thickly settled, as in the case of the Edmunton and Saskatchewin Land Com-pany, is contrary to the intection of the Land Act; that the company profits to an undue extent by the energy and forethought of the pioneers of the cruniry, who are prevented from reaping the advantage of their own labour, in that the odd-numbered sections are locked up for speculative p rposse which would otherwise be open for settlement or held for sale by the Government on reasonable terms: Your memorialists there-fore pray that Your Ercelleccy's Government will enquire into the matter and redress the above grievances.

"16th. Your memorialists believe that the success of the North-West "ith. Your memoriality believe that the side is of the worth west Territories is of such importance to the whole Dominion that the time has arrived when representation for the Territories should be had in Parliament. At the present time the people of the North-West Territories are without representation of any kind, and have to depend solely on participation and memorials to make their want known" petitions and memorials to make their wants known Now, these, shortly, are the grievances complained of by the of the country. "2nd. Your memorialists also pray that immediate measures be adopted to determine titles to land that have been over three years in grievances, since that document was drawn up, have been remedied. The Government have seen fit to thrown open for actual settlement the vast and fertile tracts of land south of the Osnadian Pacific Railway. The Government in that respect acted wisely and well. The great mistake committed was that it ought never to have been withdrawn from actual settlement, but should always have been left open for homesteading and pre-emption. As I said before, I do not propose to discuss the merits of these different complaints, but I propose to draw the attention of the House and the attention of the Government to these complaints. I propose fortifying the position of the North-West Council where I can fortify it, by the utterances of the supporters of hon. gentlemen, and by the utterances of the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite. Hon. gentlemen will find that one of the grounds of complaint is the locking up of the Mile Belt. I say it was a terrible mistake to have left a reserve of two miles in width through that country, from Brandon to the summit of the Rocky Moun-tains. It was a mistake that ought never to have been made. I say that those who went there, the early pioneers of the country, were entitled to every advantage that would result from a favourable location. I have not objected—I never did object-to the Government availing themselves of the location of town sites, and securing all the financial benefits that can be secured from the location of those sites. I think the Government were perfectly justified in so doing, in respect of town sites, and securing the proceeds of the sale of town lots; but when a reserve of 2 miles in width, extending through the whole of that territory, is made, I say it was an unwise and an injudicious reservation, and the quicker it was opened up the better. I know that many settlers went there-bona fide settlers went there-before they were aware of this reservation, and it is said-I believe it is capable of proof, 1 am sorry to say-that some of these settlers who went there, ignorant of those regula-tions and of this reserve, either lost their lunds, lost the improvements they had made upon them, or were compelled to pay a very high price, in order to secure the lands they settled upon in good faith, and made improvements upon in good faith. I say it is an unsatisfactory condition of affairs, that the whole administration of the law in the North-West for the last two years has been of the most unsati-factory character. I copied a letter from a paper published in the Old Country, a communication written from Canada and addressed to a Scottish newspaper, drawing the attention of the people of the Mother Country to the mode in which they were treated there. The letter is important in this sense, that it is a parently the expression of the opinions of a disinterested party, a settler from Scotland, who proposed making his home in the North-West, and does not appear to have been treated there with that con-sideration he ought to have been treated. It is addressed to the Alloa Advertiser, written to a friend, apparently :

"Sig.—I briefly drop you a few lines to warn your readers or their friends against being taken over-much with the Manitoba fever. This country has been much over-estimated and bepraised, and when we con-sider the mauner in which emigrants are treated on the way, and left to find out how much they have been deceived when struggling amidst the mud of the North-West, they had better bethink themselves in time and stay at home the mud of the North-West, they had better bethink themselves in time and stay at home. "The climate and seasons of Manitoba are enough to contend against in farming there, and if to this we add the stones, bogs and endless swamps—the beautiful lakelets of some of our penny-a-liner writers—it will be found a country not quite a farmer's paradise. Then again, to crown all, the contemposible treatment of settlers by the Government, I was one of a party of five who went west as far as the Fort Ellice Trail, over the Pipestone Creek, and though we saw nothing to induce one to be in love with the country, 'ook up a section of land as squatters, so as to have an undisputed claim, when the land office should open, to enter it. On going to the front again, however, for the rest of our goods —over a hundred mit s listant—we learned for the first time, that in our absence among the mud, snow, brush and swamps of this mighty coun-try, far from civilization or any chance of getting news, official or other absorbe among the hald, show, brush and swamps of this mighty conn-try, far from civilization or any chance of getting news, official or other-wise, an order had been issued from Ottawa to give squatters no mercy if found within a mile or a mile and a-half of any existing or projected railway."

Mr. CAMBRON (Hanon),

Now, Sir, that is a letter sent from the Dominion of Canada to a Scottish newspaper. Of course, it would have the tendency, published in a Scottish newspaper, seriously to affect the very class of people that we wish to secure in the country.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Name. What name?

Mr. CAMERON. I do not agree with all the statements made by the correspondent. I think some of them are overdrawn, but I think some of them, on the other hand, especially with reference to the policy that has been pursued last year, are absolutely correct. Now, Sir, such a letter as that-

Mr. FERGUSON. Give us the name of the writer.

Mr. CAMERON. Is calculated to do very serious damage to the country. I will read you still further what is said by a Rev. Mr. Hay.

Mr. FERGUSON. I ask the hon. gentleman to give the name of the writer of that letter in the Scottish newspaper.

Mr. CAMERON. The Rev. Mr. Hay is a Presbyterian clergyman, who has been in the North-West, and I will also read you a statement made by the Rev. Mr. Wright, I believe a Methodist Minister. I do not know either of them, but they give their impressions of the effect of the policy of making this reserve two miles from the boundaries of Manitoba to the summit of the Rocky Mountains. The Rev. Mr. Hay says:

"Even abundance amid solitude is unendurable. Mr. Hay reports, in the district of which we are speaking, about ten settlers, that is ten families, to the township, as the average number. Very often it is much less than this, and in not a few instances settlers are separated many miles from their nearest neighbours. The intervening land, though it would be quickly and gladly taken up if only the Government that not forbidden it, is lying waste and vacant, either held by the Government or by speculators who have, in a very few instances, purchased it at the auctions where it has been offered for sale. No improvement can be looked for under such circumstances."

Then Mr. Wright says :

Then Mr. Wright says: "Next morning at ten o'clock we left for the west. We passed Bran-don, Broadview and Regina, intending to viait them, if possible, on our return, and early next morning arrived at Moose Jaw. The country through which we passed is, for the most part fertile, and nearly all more or less fit for agricultural purposes. The Mile Belt reserve and other restrictions on settlement tend to make the line of travel somewhat dreary, and one fails to get a true idea of the progress the country is making. Only here and there you see a settler's cabin in the distance, with a patch of grain in its vicinity, or a few acres of newly-turned sod. I conversed freely with men of all political stripes, but not one had a word to say in favour of the land regulations of the Government They believe the land policy is seriously retarding the settlement of the country, and with singular unanimity they condem it as unrighteous and unpatriotic. With regard to Manitoba especially, the sentiment is fast ripening, indo conviction that the Province must be allowed to manage its own hands in the same way as Ontario and Quebec. And why should they ast? Histing become a Province, why should provin-rial, rights be denied them? They believe they have ability and honesty enough to manage their own affairs, and that having attained their manhood, they should no longer be treated as children."

Now, Sir, this all goes to show the very injurious conse-quences of the policy pursued by the hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to this reservation. I recollect the First Minister stated in the House here that not a single man ever lost his squatter's rights by reason of his having settled upon one of these reserves. Here is a person, by the name of Mr. Livingston, who writes this letter in the Winnipeg Sun :

"'I see in your issue of to-day that Sir John Macdonald, in the debate on the Address, denies that any boad fide settler has ever been dispos-sessed. This I am in a position to contradict, for after residing on and cultivating my homestead for nearly mine years, and having improve-ments to the amount of $20,000, my land was sold by the Government, and I have been dispossessed." Hundreds of others can tell the same story."

I do not doubt the truth of that statement. Mr. Livingston states, over his own name, that after settling upon a farm and cultivating and improving it, he was dispossessed and the land was taken from him. Well, Sir, these statements may not be true, but I believe, to a large extent, they are true, and if so, they are fit subjects for parliamentary enqiry. Sir, up to this day, although the Mile Belt is open up to the fourth meridian, the reserve at Moocs Jaw is still kept, so that settlers cannot get either homestead or preemption there. I drew the attention of the First Minister to the fact, that a large number from my own county went up there before the line was located. They had no idea the Government proposed to make Moose Jaw the town site. They went there in good faith, and some of them have been there two years and a half. They have made valuable improvements, but up to this hour they can not get any satisfaction from the Government, as to whether their claims will be recognized or not. When I went up there myself and heard them proposing to leave the country, I begged them to remain-men with more that 50 acres broken upon a quarter section, with valuable buildings and farm implements. They proposed leaving the country because they could not tell whether their claims would be recognized or not. I advised them to remain there, and I trust the Government will see their way to give satisfaction to these people before the spring opens, because hon. gentlemen must know that unless the claims of these people are recognized they will leave the country. The spring is now coming on, and the farmer requires to do his work, and the result will be that these people will become dissatisfied and disgusted, and leave the country. Now, Sir, to show the effect in Moose Jaw, I will read the proceedings that took place at a public meeting held there, largely attended by settlers:

"A largely attended meeting of the settlers located in Townships 16 and 17, in Ranges 26 and 27, west, was held at Mr. McLennan's, at Moose Jaw Creek, on Saturday, the 12th inst., to hear explanations from one Mr. Steers, who professed to have authority, as a Government Agent, to examine into the claims of settlers in this neighbourhood.

"Mr. Steers' statements did not prove satisfactory to the meeting, when a second meeting was immediately held, John McKay being appointed Charman, and Mr. Parke, Secretary. "The strongest expressions of indignation were manifested by all the speakers, at this unwarrantable interference with their rights as homesteaders, and resolutions were unanimously passed, condeming the policy of the Government in its dealings with the settlers, and warning all jumpers that they will be dealt with summarily, as the assembled judgment of the squatters may determine."

Another meeting was held of Conservatives, a meeting of friends of the Government, and at that meeting the following resolutions were passed :-

"A meeting of the Conservatives of Moose Jaw was held on Tuesday evening, the lith ult., at which resolutions were passed condemning the action of the Dominion Government regarding the land policy. It was also resolved that the Government be memorialized by the Conservatives of that place, asking the Government to grant an immediate solu-tion of land problem."

Now, it was thought by the settlers who complain that representations would have more influence with the Government if made at a meeting of Conservative settlers of Moose Jaw, for the purpose of protesting against the land policy of the Government. Now, Sir, I will read an extract from the Winnipeg Times as to the land policy of the Government. I think, when hon. gentlemen hear that, they will be satisged there is something wrong with the administration of public affairs in the North-West. The Winnipeg Times is the organ of the Government, and is edited by a political friend of the Government, who went up from Ottawa for the purpose of editing that paper. On the 17th of May, 1883, the following article appeared in the editorial columns of the Times :-

within the Mile Belt, the Government will find it a difficult matter to inspect the farms sold and appraize the improvements. South of the Belt, this will be utterly impossible. Then all, looking at its pecuaiary results, is a failure. To reserve a vastquantity of land in the market at a time when money is exceedingly tight and the richest speculators poor, was madness. It is reasonably safe to say that Commissioner Walsh did not advise the step. It was no doubt taken in pursuance of that incom-prehensible policy which the Department has adopted at the suggestion of ignorant or interested friends. But the failure of the sale, in a pecu-niary sense, is a small matter compared with the evils it is bringing to of ignorant or interested friends. But the failure of the sale, in a pecu-niary sense, is a small matter compared with the evils it is, bringing to the country. A squatter who has gone in upon land, now being sold, and ploughed and sown it, will think himself justified in holding it against all comers, and his neighbours will think so too. "Mr. Metcalf, of Kingston, has an easy task in selling the land, pocketing the commission, but the Department will find, when it comes to evict the squatter, that human nature in the North-West is much the same as in Ireland. If we cannot prevail against the Government and the speculator, the squatter can, at least, leave the country with a curse." curse.

That is the evidence of the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite. If the policy of the Government is not changed on this subject, the squatter can do-what? He can at least leave the country and leave it with a curse. They complain that the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is oppressive, is incomprehensible; that it is based on ignorance of the country's requirements, that it is bringing evil on the country, and that the squatters are liable to pursue the same course as they pursued in Ireland, and at least leave the country with a curse. With these facts, if they are facts, and they come from the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, staring us in the face, we cannot close our eyes to the position taken by the North-West Council, that there are difficulties and dangers, and breakers ahead. It will not do for us, in view of all these facts, to say you have no ground of complaint—to adopt the line followed by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), and toll these men they are children and must be nursed; that they are infants and want to be spoon-fed. We must deal with the people of the North-West fairly and honestly, and must not close our eyes to the facts staring us in the face, or turn a deaf ear to the warnings of the North-West Council and the entreaties of the people whom we have induced to settle there. The whole position is fraught with difficulty and danger. That is not the only thing they complain of. The North-West Council complain of the Tariff, in the tenth para-graph of this Bill of Rights. They, voicing the opinion of the settlers of the North-West, pronounce this Tariff an unreasonable one, especially the duties on agricultural implements, lumber and canned fruits. The people have advanced in calm, moderate and deliberate terms, their complaint and grievances. They deserve every consideration at the hands of the Government. Here in the North-West we havewhat? The advanced guard of an army of settlers whom we expect to take possession of the country, men who have gone there and struggled against the initial difficulties of settlement in a new country. We intensify those difficulties by unreasonable and oppressible taxation on the prime necessaries of life, and the, necessaries of settlement in a new country. I say, in the first place, it was unfair to impose that Tariff, and having done that unfair act, we should at least consider what the people have to say when they ask us to retrace our steps. Is it not better for us to pause and consider our position and see whether we cannot do something to alleviate the condition of the people of the North-West? If our object be to settle that vast territory, as I suppose it is, we should take care that our policy has not the effect of creating dissatisfaction among the people whom we send there. We know that among the people whom we send there. one settler leaving the country under a sense of injury sustained and wrong committed, does more harm to the country "On the lands sold south of the railway belt there are scores of squat-ters who, at this moment, are planting their crops in blissful ignorance of this fact, that some speculator will soon own their farms and the labour spent on them. It is true the Department professed some time ago that compensation for disturbances would be given to those squat-ters who had made improvements, the compensation to be determined by a Generument valuator, that as a matter of fact, the buyers at the sale buy not only the land but the improvements; and even within Idd.

large circulation in that country, published this letter, and it has been circulated all over Canada. The letter is dated from Stockport, England, and no doubt it was published there and reached the very class of immigrants whom the Minister of Agriculture desires to settle in the North-West, namely, the tenant farmers. Mr. Sykes wrote as follows, to the Regina Leader :-

" To the Editor of the Regina Leader:

"SIR,—I am discouraged on account of the high duties which the Dominion Government are charging on agricultural machinery, and I really cannot see any possibility of the country prospering. I calculate that what with the protection duties and the charges of the Ganadian Pacific Railway, a capitalist is at a disadvantage of 50 per cent. as com-pared with Iowa, Minnesota and eastern Dakota. Again, labour is much higher in the Ganadian North-West, and produce is much lower. The Ganadian North-West is an agricultural country and labours at many disadvantages, as compared with the United States. It would have been a wise policy to have admitted all agricultural machinery and stock duty disadvantages, as compared with the United States. It would have been a wise policy to have admitted all agricultural machinery and stock duty free. If any class of persons in Canada require protection it is the farmer in the new North-West, as he has to compete with heavy railload carriage, and he gets very little return from his land for a couple of years. If the present Tariff is to be maintained, a bonus of 50 per cent. should be granted by the Governmert on each $1,000 expended in the North-West. This bonus would not even suffice to place the farmer on an equality with his brother farmer on the south side of the international line. "I am a loyal subject of Her Majesty and a staunch Conservative, but I cannot support the policy of the Dominion Government, and should be a Liberal in Canada. "I P SVETS

"Stockport, England, Sept. 8."

"R. SYKES.

The Leader goes on to say :

"Mr. Sykes is a large English capitalist and the owner of 20,000 acres of lands (purchased from the C. P. R.) in the vicinity of Troy. He has imported one of John Fowler & Sons' steam ploughs, at an enormous imported one of John Fowler & Sons' steam ploughs, at an enormous expense, on which he was charged 35 per cent. ad valorem duty by the Dominion Government, and enormous excess freights (over enormous schedule rates) by the Canadian Pacific Railway. He has had a large gang of men at work on his lands since April, thereby necessitating large monthly expenditure, the greater portion of such expenditure being for supplies, which consisted largely (of course) of canned goods and coal (for running the plough engines). Imagine the idiocy of asking a man in this country to pay 50 cents per ton duty on coal. "Mr. Sykes' letter speaks for itself and any intelligent man can judge whether the asinine policy of the present Government is calculated to recommend the Canadian North-West as a field for investment to English (or any other) capitalists."

I do not know whether these statements are true; I do not give them to the House as my statements, but as the statements of the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, and of their organs. Do hon. gentlemen wonder that, with such letters scattered by their own friends and organs broadcast, not only over Canada, but over England, that the immigration into the country was of the scantiest character last year? The organ of the Government in Winnipeg wrote on the same subject. It is equally pronounced and strong; and can hon. gentlemen wonder, when their own friends, their leading friends, their own organs, their leading organs, take high and strong ground against the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, that these rumours and reports circulated broadcast over the world, seriously impede the tide of immigration rolling in, that ought to roll in to our North-West country. I now quote from the Winnipeg Times, another pronounced organ of the Government, edited by a strong friend of the Government, and equally pronounced on the question of the impolicy, or want of policy, pursued by the Government during the last two years, especially in dealing with the North-West. The Times says, in an article dated 27th April, 1883:

"The North-West settler, be it repeated once more, pays four times a fair share of the Federal taxes. The tariff increases the price of every necessary of life. His pork is taxed to benefit the eastern farmers and necessary of life. His pork is taxed to benefit the eastern farmers and packers; his canned meats are taxed to benefit the same persons; his lumber is taxed that the eastern lumbermen may control the market; his coal is taxed to build up Nova Scotia, at least such is the theory; and his agricultural implements are taxed to encourage Ontario in ius-tries. But what does the Tariff do for him? He raises and lives by raising wheat, barley and of 10 cents on oats, but seeing that these products fetch in St. Paul's much more than in Winnipeg, that protection is worthless. In short, the Tariff, so far as the North-West settlers is con-serned, is non-reciprocal spoliation. Manitoba and the North-West are Mr. CAMEBON (Huron).

not, as the east maintains, unreasonable. If they were, they would not continue to stagger under these burdens and inequalities, waiting and hoping, in the face of scorn and contumely, not for favour but for fair play."

There you see what the organ of the Government, voicing the opinion of Manitoba and the North-West, said. That organ told hon. gentlemen opposite, and the Finance Minister, that the Tariff increases the price of every necessary of life; that the settler's pork is taxed; that his canned meats are taxed; that his lumber is taxed; that his coal is taxed to build up Nova Scotia; that his agricultural implements are taxed; that in fact the Tariff, so far as the North-West is concerned, is a non-reciprocal spoliation. Are these statements correct? If they are, and the Government organ says they are, and the people of the North-West say they are, then in the interests of the North-West, they should be remedied at once. If they are not correct, the Government should call their organs to account. They are not only the statements of the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, but the statements of leading men supporting the hon. gentlemen in the North-West. The Times publishes another article on the same subject, pointing out perhaps still more distinctly the impolity, the bad polity, of hon. gentlemen opposite It says, on the 19th May, 1883:

"The fundamental blunder which underlies the policy of the political parties at Ottawa, is that the North-West settler is a pampered individual, and that he ought to submit to little inconveniences like heavy ual, and that he ought to submit to little inconveniences like heavy taxation, notable land regulations and disregard of his rights as a squat-tar. The fact that large sums have been spent on the railroad here is held up to us as proof of the beneficent treatment we are receiving at he hands of the older Provinces. That we pay three times as much er capita into the Dominion Treasury, as the eastern tax payer, that the National Policy increases the price of everything we buy without add-ing a mill to the price of wheat, oats, or barl-y, that even with a free homestead, the settler's life is for some years a hard and unprofitable one. These and such like considerations are quietly ignored. To make one. These and such like considerations are quietly ignored. To make matters worse, the people of Ottawa forg-t that not many miles from here, a foreign flag offers the settler nearly all the advantages he can nere, a foreign flag offers the settler nearly all the advantages he can obtain here, with others, good railway facilities, peculiar to every set-tled region. He gets nothing here which he could not get elsewhere, and it should be the policy of the Government to treat him not as though he were beholden to it for special favours, but in terms of equality and in a spirit of fairplay. A few more blunders, a little more stamping on his corns, may provoke him, until he becomes 'unreasonable' in earnest."

Here the organ of the Government, the Winnipeg Times, complains of heavy taxation; of unstable land regulations; of a disregard of the squatters' rights. It complains that the National Policy increases the price of everything they buy; that the National Policy does not add a mill to the price of wheat, oats and barley, and that a few more blunders, and a little more stamping on his corns, will drive him to leave the country, as the Times says, with a curse. Now, is that the truth? If it is the truth, then it is a fit subject for Parliamentary enquiry. The demand made by the North-West Council in their Bill of Rights is representation in this Parliament. I discussed this question a few days ago, and I will not discuss it on this occasion. I believe the people of the North-West are entitled to representation in this Parliament, and I am amazed that the Government have not seen the necessity of introducing a Bill to give them that representation. I say it is a fair and just thing, and that they should get it and that at once. Now, Sir, all these facts must convince you beyond peradventure that there is a feeling of discontent, a feeling of dissatisfaction, a feeling of unrest, in both Manitoba and the North-West Territories. And further, that, so far as we know, at all events, the first step has not been taken by this Government to redress these wrongs and remove these grievances. Sir, the statements made both in Manitoba by the Farmers Convention, and by the North-West Council, are eminently temperate, moderate and reasonable; they are made in a moderate tone and manner, and being so, they should be met in a fair and reasonable spirit, and where they are fair and reasonable, they should be conceded. Sir, we ought not to forget that England lost one empire by the disregard of just such claims as these. Let us take care lest by ignoring these claims and trifling with these demands we do not jeopardize the existence of our new empire in the great North-West. I move in amendment, that all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following inserted :-

This Honse do resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, to con-sider of the condition, complaints and demands of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, with a view to devise means for remedying any well-founded grievances and complying with any reasonable demands.

Sir CHARLES IUPPER. I think if the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, had been sincerely desirous of promoting the interests of the people who are now inhabiting Manitoba and the North West Territories, he would have adopted a different course from that which he has adopted to-night. I do not think, Sir, that he would have proposed that this House should resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, when he knew his motion must be treated as a want of confidence motion by the Government. If the hon. gentleman had been so desirous of giving fair and full consideration to the important questions to which he has alluded, I think, Sir, he would, at an earlier period of the Session, have given notice of the motion which he has submitted for the consideration of the House; he would have taken an opportunity of making that motion when it would have been in the power of the Government to entertain the proposal he has made. But, Sir, I think there is another reason which has induced the hon. gentleman to adopt the course which he has adopted, of submitting this motion as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and of moving it at a time, when he knew there was no option on the part of the Government, but to meet his motion by a direct negative. After listening to the hon. gentle-man, 1 am not at all surprised that he should have taken the cour e he has taken. Why, Sir, what will the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territory think when they find that their great champion in this House, the hon, gentleman who has placed his motion in a position to compel the Administration and its friends to vote it down by a direct negative, has occupied the attention of the House for the length of time the hon. gentleman has occupied it, without venturing to endorse one single ground of complaint made by the parties who have complained. The hon, gentleman says, and says rightly, that it would be criminal to adopt any course which would be calculated to excite discontent in that country, and yet I ask what has the hon. gentleman been doing himself for the last hour. I ask if he has not adopted to the utmost extent of his power, all the means he possesses of inciting that very discontent which he deplores; and yet I am proud to know that in his review of the action and policy of this Government he has not ventured to put his finger on one single charge or ground of complaint, one single demand for redress, that he says himself that he is prepared endorse. The only points to which he committed himself in the slightest degree, or uttered a single word which would enable the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories to hold him to the opinions he advanced, were as to the reservations of the lands in southern Manitoba and in the Mile Belt; and he, himself, admitted that the Government had acted wisely and well in having removed these restrictions. So, the only point on which the hon. gentleman has ventured to join in the complaints which have been made, and endorse those complaints, the only point on which he has not guarded himself, and taken care to guard himself effectually, against being held or committed to sanc-tion or approve of these complaints, he himself admits the Government have already swept away all cause of complaint. And yet, Sir, the hon. gentleman would stand and pose here as the champion and advocate of the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Why, Sir, 1 do not wonder that the hon. gentleman took the course he did. I do not wonder, when he came to refer to the demands of the people | could have been completed if they had given 25 cents an of that country in the terms that he did, that he was compelled to adopt the extraordinary course of refusing, directly and in the most pointed manner, half a dozen times over, to be himself held committed to approving of or sanctioning these complaints. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman knew that if he endorsed these complaints, instead of attacking the present Administration he would have been attacking the previous Administration, of which he was a supporter. The hon, gentleman knows that all the grounds of complaint he referred to, could be held to be infinitely stronger as applied to his own friends, when they were charged with the duty of administering the public affairs of this country, than they could as against the pre-sent Administration. The hon. gentleman knows that the policy of this Government has been a policy of steady, unvarying advocacy and support of everything that it was believed would develop and promote the interests of the people of the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman knows, Sir, as every member of this House knows, that it would be impossible for the most paternal Government to conserve and preserve and promote the interests of the people of any country to a greater extent, to make them the subject of greater care and consideration, than this Government have made the interests of the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Why, Sir, the hon. gen-tleman knows that no sooner had the North-West Territories been brought within the confines of Canada, no sooner had we been charged with the administration of that large and valuable territory than we came down to Parliamentto do what? Why, Sir, to propose a measure which it was believed would do more to promote the prosperity and development of that country than all the measures that could be conceived for that purpose—that was the construc-tion of a Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman knows how we were met. He knows that instead of receiving the aid and co-operation and support of himself and his friends on that side of the House-he knows that from the first hour the measure was propounded down, I may say, to the present hour, all our efforts were systematically antagonized. All our efforts in initiating that great work, upon which the future of that vast country was entirely and completely dependent, were met and opposed at every stage and step by these hon. gentlemen. The hon. gentleman knows right well that the Government of this country staked its position and lost it in the effort to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then, Sir, what more? We went out of power; and when we came back, what was the position of affairs in Manitoba and the North-West? From the day these hon. gentlemen were charged with the administration of public affairs-from the first hour they came into power down to the hour they left it, what was the progress made by Manitoba and the North-West? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows that on the day they went out of power, by their own testimony, out of the mouth of their own Finance Minister on the floor of this Parliament, they delared that the lands in North-West were not worth $\overline{25}$ cents an acre.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Nonsense.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and the hon. gentleman himself has admitted it on the floor of Parliament during the present Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Distinctly, no.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say the hon. gentleman has been again and again charged by myself on the floor of the House with having refused to secure the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch under Mr. Foster's contract, by grant. ing him 20,000 acres of land per mile, as they were pledged by the contract to give him, and giving 25 cents an acre instead. The hon. gentleman declared that the contract acre in cash for the land, instead of the land. But, Sir, they refused, and the hon. gentleman has declared on the floor of Parliament, during the present Session, the reason why they refused. He said that the whole condition of things had changed. The hon. gentleman knows that the leader of the late Administration, who sits beside him, also declared, subsequently to their going out of power, that it would have been impossible to build the Canadian Pacific Railway with the lands of the North West, when we asked for 100,000,000 acres for that purpose, because, he said, you will have to pay to carry the people into the country, and give them the lands after you get them there, in order to induce them to stay in the country. Now, Sir, that was the condition of the people of Manitoba and the people of the North-West. The people of the North-West! There were no people of the North-West. The country was an unpeopled desert from end to end, and the hon. gentleman knows it. And yet, Sir, with all that has been achieved— achieved, I say, by the most magnanimous, the most generous efforts that a Government or a Parliament ever put forward in any country-in the face of all that, the hon. gentleman ventures, in this year of Grace, to bring forward a resolution of censure upon this Government for not dealing justly and equitably and fairly with the people of Manitoba and the North-West. Why, Sir, let me draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the position of the railway under the Government of his own friends. It is true, a section was put under contract between Thunder Bay and a point some 112 miles west, and another portion running east from Winnipeg had been put under contract; but, Sir, the day they went out of power, they had not decided that they would put in the intervening link at all, by which alone the line they had constructed could be made useful

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is stating what he must remember to be incorrect. He knows that the very day he came into power he found tenders lying in his office for the construction of that line for the whole distance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. To the only tenders the hon. gentleman had asked for, he had not received the response of a single man, and we had therefore to take them up.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why, Sir, the very sections which were built, sections A and B, were built by us.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to remind him that so far from that being the case, although the surveys were in progress, he himself stated, when he brought down the proposal for the construction of that portion of the line, that although tenders had been asked, he had not decided —

Mr. MACKENZIE. Were the tenders not in the office ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, Sir, and the hon. gentle man will find that that is the case. He will also find, and I will show him the statement in the Hansard, that subsequent to the change of Government, he himself stated that the Government had not decided to construct that portion of the line.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Did the hon, gentleman ask for tenders for that section ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only tell the hon.

Mr. MACKENZEE. Answer my question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say, yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then, I say no one has ever heard of it, but the hon: gentleman himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I will undertake to meeting at Moose Jaw. How did that happen? Why I was show my hon, friend his own statement in the Hansard, at Moose Jaw two years ago, and there was not a house to Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

subsequent to the change of Government, that although tenders had been asked for, for the purpose of obtaining information and ascertaining on what terms the road could be constructed, the Government had not decided upon accepting the tenders or upon the immediate construction of that portion of the line. But what did we do? Why, the very first moment this Government came into power, we took immediate steps to secure the prompt construction of that without which all that had been done would have been entirely useless. The hon. gentleman is aware that when we came into power in 1878, there was not a mile of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or of the branch to Winnipeg, under operation, and that this Government took the most prompt and effective measures to establish railway communication at the earliest possible moment. But what more? Why, the hon. gentleman had decided that if he did construct the Canadian Pacific Railway, there was not a mile of it, not a mile of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, that should run within 20 miles of Winnipeg; the hon. gentleman knows that he had located that road to run away across to the Narrows of Lake Manitoba, and that he would leave the whole of that great, magnificent district of country lying south of Lake Manitoba thoroughly unprovided for, without any railway communication whatever.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What was the result? The result was that when the change of Government took place, there was not only no North-West population, but there was comparatively no Manitoba population. The hon. gentleman knows that Winnipeg was in a state of complete des-pondency and depression; he knows that had the line not been changed by this Government, there would have been no such development of that great, magnificent and fertile region lying south of Lake Manitoba, and from that to the boundary, as that which has taken place under the policy of the Government and the administration of the affairs of that country by this Government. From the first hour that this Government came into power, the interests of the people of Winnipeg, the interests of the Province of Manitoba, the interests of the great North-West, have been cared for-cared for with an energy and a zeal such as no Government in the old world could have shown in a greater degree for the promotion of any section of territory in the world; and the hon. gentleman knows it. He knows the magnificent results that followed; he knows that, not step by step merely, but by one giant bound, Winnipeg, from its dormant condition, from its condition of despondency, in which there was no life, no vitality, no progress, no prosperity, sprang, as if by magic, into a condition of affairs that would compare favourably with anything that has ever been witnessed, even on the Continent of America, in the way of development; and he knows that from the hour this Government came into power down to the present day, the progress of Manitoba and the North-West, will compare favourably with the progress that has been witnessed even in the great country to the south of us, in regard to its development. My hon, friend next refers to the Portage. What was the conditions of Portage la Prairie? Portage la Prairie was 100 miles away from the line where the hon. gentleman intended to construct his road, and what was the result? The result was, when we found the importance of touching the river at that point, and when we ran theline of the Canadian Pacific Railway down to it, Portage la Prairie sprang out of his condition of despondency in the same way, and from a comparatively insignificant village became a prosperous town, as if by magic. So along the whole settlement of the country. Why, 1 was amused when I heard the hon. gentleman talking about a great public meeting at Moose Jaw. How did that happen? Why I was be seen within the whole range of vision from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the horizon. Who created the great public meeting? How did it happen? How is it that in that great wild and unpeopled portion of the desert, lying 400 or 500 miles away to the west of Winnipeg, unvisited by any but the wild animal or the Indian from one years end to the other-how is it that that, as if by magic, is transformed into a place in which a great public meeting can be held? Why, it is the policy of this Government, who, in the face of all the opposition that hon. gentlemen opposite could give them, carried through triumphantly and successfully that contract for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; it is their policy that has pushed the iron horse so rapidly across that country, and has carried civilization and development, and the creation of villages and of towns, from one end of this North-West to the other. Yet the hon. gentleman ventures, in the face of these facts, which are a matter of history, which have been attracting the admiration of the worldyes, I say, that the course this Government has taken in connection with the rapid construction of this great transcontinental line of railway, has fixed the eyes of the civilized world on that country, and that men looking for the means of exchanging from the older and more densely populated countries of Europe to a home where they might succeed in attaining, not only the comforts of life, which they are unable to obtain in these older and more densely populated places, but where they may also rapidly achieve fortunes that may be handed down to their children after them-these men have been centering their eyes on this great North-West, which, by magic, as it were, under the influence of the policy of this Government, has been developed before the eyes of the civilized world. Yet we are to day to be upbraided-by whom? By gentlemen whose policy would have left that country an unpeopled desert, if it had been carried out, and who know that, so far from being in a position to challenge the action of this Administration, there is no one thing in which they stand at such a terrible disadvantage as in the contrast between their dealings with Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and the action that this Government and the great party that sustain us have taken in relation to this country. I have stated the result. The lands that the ex-leader of the Government (Mr. Mackenzie) said must be given away, and the people carried there and put on them; the lands that he said must be given the people as a free gift, in order to induce them to stay on them; the lands that the ex-Finance Minister declared and admitted, by the action of his Government, were not worth 25 cents an acre, have been — millions of acres that have been sold have commanded, under the operation of this rapid construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a net result of something like $1.36 per acre. Hundreds of thousands of people have free homes provided for them on the most productive lands and on the most advantageous terms And that they can find in any portion of the world. millions of dollars of capital have been brought in by men, who, under their policy, never would have seen the country, but under our policy have not only brought their industry and their intelligence, but their millions of capital into that country, to develop it and to make Canada a great and growing, a prosperous and happy country. What is the only charge the hon. gentleman has to make against us? Why, he has only one charge, and only one ground of complaint, and he came very near stating it two or three times; he just came to the verge of the statement, and drew back. He is not prepared to endorse one of the complaints. He is not prepared to endorse a single complaint that has not already been remedied, and he admitted that the Government were entitled to the fullest consideration for having they were entitled to have the answer "Yes," and the objection that the hon. gentleman has, and it is just where the shoe pinches, is because they did not get the answer "No"; it is because the Government on points on which he himself refused to commit himself to an affirmative answer, did not give the only answer the hon. gentleman conceived they could have, and thus carry out and develop and accomplish that to which hon. gentlemen opposite and the press supporting them have devoted so much of their time-the unholy, the unworthy, object of stirring up discontent, fraught with danger, as the hon. gentloman says it was, to the integrity of the country. Franght with danger! Danger has not been averted, Sir. At this moment, capital that was prepared to come in, capital that at this moment would have been flowing into that country for its development, capital that alone is required to sweep away every trace of grievance, is being stopped and arrested by the too successful efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite to stir up and fement and develop discontent in that country. Why, it is beyond the bounds of common sense, it is beyond the bounds of reason, that any body of men could be brought together to pass so fatal a resolution in regard to themselves as that immigration into their country ought to be stopped. Is there a gentleman on the other side of the House that does not know that the greatest misfortune that could happen to the Province of Manitoba or the North-West Territories would be to stop the flow of immigration into the country, to stop the flow of industry and the flow of capital into the country; and, when I speak of capital, I speak of it as altogether inferior to that greater and more valuable and essential capital, the industry which is calculated to create wealth, and by the easiest process, out of the fertile territory of that magnificent country. Yet, with the fact before us that no man, no intelligent man in this country will say that a greater misfortune could fall upon the country than to stop immigration into it, these men-wrere mad enough to do this, goaded on, induced by the pernicious advice and instruction of people who, when it comes to the test, refuse to back their complaints; people who, when face to face in this Parliament, in the discussion of this question, are not prepared to back their complaints, but are ready to adopt any and overy means that will foment and stir up that dissatisfaction, and inspire the action on the part of those people that they know will be more fatal to the development of the country than any other course that could be pursued. So perfectly obvious was the madness, the criminal folly of such a course, that the words were hardly out of their mouths, they had hardly tabled the resolution, when the whole community rose to the danger they had to meet, and were anxious to efface it and sweep, it out of existence. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Norquay, the Prime Minister, has made demands. He took care not to endorse any of his demands. He says he is a very able man, and so he is. He is so able a man that, in the Legislature of the country, when that Legislature was meeting under all the excitement of this public gathering which had been called together for the purpose of controlling and influencing it, he was able and statesman-like enough to vote down the attempt to stir up this discontent by the sound and practical solution of asking for a Commission to enquire into the condition of the country and recommend such measures as might be necessary in the promotion of its interests. It would be well for hon. gentlemen opposite, it would be well for the country, if the press supporting them would take a suggestion from the leader of the Manitoba Government in that regard, who, while pressing as he is bound to press, all these questions that he considers necessary on the consideration of this country, stopped at that point where the pressure and the policy which is proposed to be pursued would be, he knows, entirely fatal to remedied and swept away these defects, but his complaint the progress and prosperity of the country where he admin-is that we did not give an answer. Mark; he did not say, isters public affairs. But the hom, gentleman would intimate that nothing had been done. 1 have spoken construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. 1 have spoken of the Let me refer to what we have done in the promotion of immigration into that country — the very life and soul of progress and prosperity in the North West. And what are hon. gentlemen opposite doing? Why, the very gentlemen, the very party that are confronting us, the very party that are declaring that we are not doing enough for the North West, spoke by the hour the other night to strike down the Estimates of the Government and endeavour to stop the means of promoting immigration into that country. So it would appear that, not only is discontent to be fomented on the one side, but the means of promoting and extending that discontent is to be carried on at the same time. Then it appears that we have never paid attention to the claims. Why, the Government before us dealt with this question of the claims of Manitoba. I am not surprised that the hon, gentleman did not venture to endorse these demands on the part of the North-West, because, if he had, he would have been inflicting the most severe censure which it was in his power to inflict upon the Government which he had supported for five long years in this House. He knew that that Government had had all these questions before them. He knew they had this question of enlarging the boundaries of Manitoba before them; he knew they had the question of the public lands before them, and yet they entered upon their term of office and they closed their five years' term of office without giving them the control of an acre of land or having enlarged the small, restricted boundaries of the Province of Manitoba. But what have we done? The Government which is arraigned here to night with this vote of non-con fidence, which is assailed because we have not answered these proposals from Manitoba, instead of having refused, instead of having turned a deaf ear to their claims, have given these 150,000 people, or a much smaller number than that, boundaries which extended their Province over a larger area than the great Province of Ontario; and yet we are to be charged with being negligent of our duties, because we do not at once yield to these demands. No; the hop. gentleman did not venture to ask us to yield to the demands. All he wanted-and I followed him very closely on this point, from beginning to end-was, not that we should yield to the demands, but that we should give such a negative as to stimulate that discontent, which, while it may promote—and I believe it will fail in that object while it may promote the poor, paltry, insignificant interests of party, tramples the best interests of the country under their feet, in order that they may ride into power over the ruins of their country. I say the hon. gentlemen know, and that is the difficulty with hon. gentlemen opposite, that the intelligent people of this country, from end to end, recognize the fact of the enormous contrast between the policy of the late, and the policy of the present Government. They know right well that the intelligent people of this country regard the five years during which the hon. gentlemen opposite controlled the public affairs, and ruled Manitoba and the North-West, as five years lost to Canada. They know that from the very hour a change of Administration took place, this country not only rose from a condition of depression, but it has attained a height of power and influence and wealth in the brief period between 1878 and the present hour, that will challenge a comparison with the prodest era of prosperity ever witnessed in any country in the world. But, Sir, finding that progress, finding that hundreds of thousands of people were pouring into this country with their capital, finding the enormous develop-ment that was given to the North-West, finding the pros-perity that was evidenced on every hand, these hon. gentle-ment up of their capital is to the only means by which men turned their attention to the only means by which that progress and prosperity could be arrested, and cannot lightly part with. It must be husbanded and must hat is by stirring up and inflaming the public mind and, be guarded in such a way as to provide, for all time to come, SIT CHARLES TUPPER.

instead of sending abroad such truthful information as the facts will warrant in regard to the position of affairs in the North-West, they send through every channel they can devise, false information, false statements, that are calculated to discredit the country, to arrest that flood of emigration that was building up that country with such wonderful rapidity. The hon, gentleman read a few letters from persons who are discontented. I do not mean to say that you can pour tens of thousands of people out of the old world into a country like Manitoba and the North-West Territories without having some discontent. It is not only the industrious, the frugal and the prudent who go there, but in all such cases where attention is attracted to a new country, thousands of people come to the conclusion that without any qualifications for settling in a new country like that, they have only to transfer their home from a European or British city to the North-West in order to become millionaires, and no wonder some of these people are discontented. The idle and dissolute go there along with the industrious and prudent, and naturally these are discontented. But the dissatisfaction is on the part of those who thought they had only to go to Manitoba to be provided with happy and comfortable homes without any effort on their part. An unfavourable crop, a little frost, a little difficulty, will excite dissatisfaction at such a time, and cause it to become widespread. Nothing is so easy as to excite dissatisfaction on the part of persons who have no opportunity of being accurately informed with respect to public affairs. That facility for exciting discontent has been taken hold of, and many of the industrious, many of the most valuable citizens of Manitoba and the North West Territories have been drawn into the fatal position of lending their countenance, to a certain extent, to these cries of discontent that have been so industriously spread over the country. But there has been a very sudden awakening. The intelligent people of the country, the moment they have come to look at their own acts, have recoiled from the position they had taken, and the Legislature of Manitoba, by a vote of twenty-two to seven, have shown that they understand too well the interests of Manitoba and the North-West to be led into the position of lending themselves to these delusive crics, which are calculated to destroy and ruin the country. But, Sir, Did we not lend an attentive ear to the what more? claims of Manitoba when Mr. Norquay came down here and presented them? Yes; the moment it was shown to be necessary in the interests of that country that they should have their subsidy revised, and their position reconsidered, it was reconsidered, and measures were proposed that were satisfactory and were accepted as such by the leader of the Provincial Government-not as a final and per-manent settlement that is to last forever-we did not expect that; but, we thought it would answer the purpose, in the meantime, and we gave such a response to their application as showed that we were now, as we always have been, fully alive to the importance of dealing in such a way as to promote the best interests of that country to the utmost extent. The hon. gentleman says we have turned a deaf ear, that we have refused to consider the claims of Mr. Norquay. Does the hon. gentleman not know that it is a matter of public notoriety that, so far from that being the case, the Government have considered with the utmost care and attention, the demands that have been made? It must not be forgotten that the question of the school lands stands in a peculiar position. These school lands were deliberately consecrated by this Parliament to the important and almost sacred object of providing for the education of the peo-ple of that country; and so far as the Government have been able to consider it, they have regarded it as a sacred trust they the inestimable boon of free education to the people who shall settle in that country. With regard to the public lands, that is an open question. The hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power, did not take the position they do now; they did not decide, as one would suppose from listen ing to the hon. mover of these Resolutions, that these public lands must all be handed over to the Province. They held on to every acre; they resisted every attempt and every demand on the part of the Government of Manitoba to have an acre of those lands.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was no demand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, Sir, it was a wise and statesmanlike policy, and I think my hon. friend will find that he is mistaken. I may say, that so far, we have consid-ered that an open question. It is known that in the United States, when they create State out of a Territory, the Federal Government does not hand over the public lands, and if any man in the Province of Manitoba who is dissatisfied with the policy of this Government in retaining the public lands, crosses the boundary, he will find himself in a country in which the avowed policy is not to hand over the lands. An hon. friend reminds me that we gave them $45,000 per annum in lieu of the public lands, and yet we are denounced here for not giving any answer on that question. I have already stated that so far as the boundaries of the country are concerned, the hon. gentleman took care not to demand that the boundaries should be made greater than the great Province from which he comes, and from which a great portion of hon. gentlemen opposite come-that Manitoba should be made very much larger than the Province of Ontario. The hon, gentleman took good care not to com-mit himself to that proposition, because I am inclined to think it would not meet with a great deal of favour from many hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You stole the property of Ontario and gave it to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will not now attempt to settle the boundary between the two Provinces; but the hon, gentleman has just reminded me that we have been so generous to them that we have not only extended their boundary to the west, giving them a great slice of the most valuable portion of the North-West Territory, but we have actually committed larceny-and not a petty larceny either -in stealing a large section of the Province of Ontario to hand it over to them; and I am quite sure that hon. gentlemen will not endorse the Resolution that has been proposed, and which will lead to the inference that he is disposed to hand over a much larger territory to the Province of Manitoba. Then, Sir, with reference to the other point that was claimed as of importance-that is, of ascertaining the amount of population oftener than once in ten years, and readjusting the subsidy per capita under the Terms of Union, the Government have already stated that they are prepared to consider favourably that question, and to provide for a frequent estimate of the population of Manitoba, with a view to the readjustment of the subsidy that is paid in proportion to the population. I need not refer to the fact, which I mentioned in another place, and which is also well known, that having provided for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government are prepared and intend to bring down to the House a proposition to make a munificent grant of public lands in the North-West Territory and in the Province of Manitoba for the purpose of promoting and securing the construction of a railway to Hudson Bay, and also intend to ask this Parliament to provide means for promptly ascertaining the condition of Hudson Bay itself, by sending a vessel into that region, for the purpose of having a thorough and accurate survey made. There is hardly a question or demand of the slightest importance to which the the hon. gentleman referred, that the Government have not already anticipated, that the Government have not already given most careful attention to, and respecting which they are prepared to go as far as possible in the interests of the people to meet any just claims that may be brought forward from that portion of the Dominion. I do not think it is necessary for me to occupy the time of the House very long while I discuss the other grievance -- the duty on agricultural implements. A great deal has been made of that. but it is fortunate that the subject has been ventilated so thoroughly, because it has led to the establishment of the fact beyond controversy that, instead of the cost of agricultural implements having been increased a single cent by the additional duty imposed, agricultural implements are cheaper now than they were before the duty was levied, cheaper than they would have been if the duty had not been imposed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then put on more duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sometimes that accomplishes the object, as the hon. gentleman knows. Sometimes the imposition of such a duty as to make it an entirely prohibitory one has had the effect of producing such rivalry and competition in the manufacture of the article, as to cause it to be furnished at lower cost. I will not go into the question of duties on canned goods; the whole complaint dwindled down into a question of canned fruits. So far as the duty on pork is concerned, of which the hon. gentleman complained, I could hardly suppose that a country which can raise more potatoes to the abre, and more corn to the acre, than any country to be found in the world, should complain of having pork shut out by duties. I should suppose that nothing was more in the interests of the people of the North-West than to maintain fair and legitimate prices for the products of the farm, and the fertile area is so enormous as to render it a matter of profound indifference whether the products of the farm have prohibitory duties placed on them or not, as the country is in a position to raise them to the very best possible advantage. I need not, therefore, follow the hon gentleman, especially as he guarded himself against giving his adherence to any single one of the demands made by the people of Manitoba and the North-West that remained unsatisfied, and the hon. gentleman, in the speech which he seemed to make by the clock, appeared to speak with the determination of saying as little as possible, I ask the people of Manitoba and the North-West to peruse the speech of the hon. gentleman, and they will find this striking and important fact: that their champion in this House, the hon. gentleman who puts himself forward to bring into public notoriety the grievances of which they complain, refused to give his support to a single demand they had made, with the exception of those demands which he said had been already disposed of. I call the attention of the intelligent people of that country to the further fact, that while the hon. gentleman guarded himself against committing himself to a single proposition they had propounded, he took the opportunity of making this motion at a time when it could only be viewed as a vote of want of confidence and had to be voted down-a course of action which must necessarily, if he desired to have Parliament enquire into the subject, completely defeat and prevent this being done. I cannot resume my seat without drawing the attention of the House for a single moment to an astounding statement made by the hon. gentleman in his unparallelled speech, because a more inconsethat the hon. gentleman closed his remarkable speech with a statement that was most remarkable: that the English lost America by refusing to consider just such claims as those made by the North-West. Where did the hon. gentleman find the analogy between the claims put forward by the old British colonists of the present United States of America and these claims? I am afraid the hon. gentleman found no analogy; but it was lying on his mind that, while he himself refused to give support and countenance to any of the demands which he claims are unredressed to day, that hon, gentleman wanted to suggest to those parties that all they have to do is to menace this country with danger and disaster, to create the impression that the North-West is not that great fertile country which it has been supposed to be, and that great country which is to supply homes for the homeless in every part of the world, but he wants to let the loyal and law-abiding citizens of other countries know not only that the people there are down-trodden and oppressed, but also that if they go there they are removing to a country which is going to be shattered by discontent and by disunion, and where there is no prosperity to be found, but where they are exchanging adversity which surrounds them for a still worse condition. I say that a greater disaster to Canada could not occur than the course taken by the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite, than the policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite, in fomenting that discontent which is calculated to prevent the hundreds of thousands of people who to-day are looking to the great fertile territories of the North-West, as that country which, above all others, presents the most inviting and the most adventer providing to only hency homes advantageous prospect of providing, not only happy homes, but the opportunity of obtaining that competence which men desire to provide for those coming after them as well as for themselves. What the hon. gentleman read here-I will not say for what purpose-will be used by the enemies of Canada and by the land companies endeavouring to draw people to other countries - these statements will be quoted as antagonistic to Canada, statements which the hon. gentleman knows can be met with testimony a thousand times greater and a thousand fold stronger, of hundreds and thousands who have gone into Manitoba and the North-West Territory and who, to day, testify that it would be impossible for any industrious, enterprising, energetic man to find in the wide world a country which would offer him greater pros-perity than the North-West. Professor Tanner, a disinterested authority, the Government Professor of Agriculture at South Kensington, London, knowing the attention given to this subject of Manitoba and the North-West, and finding the conflicting statements made as to the character of the country as a field for immigration, left his home and came to this country. He went to the North-West and travelled over 5,000 miles, and having travelled from house to house, having taken every opportunity of interviewing the people, and learning from them what their own feelings were as to the success that attended the exchange of the one country for the other, he returned with the declaration that it would be impossible for any person to have met with more complete and trium. phant answers to these libels on the country, which are scattered broadcast and sent to the various papers in England and elsewhere, in order to decry and depress the country. I give that high and disinterested testimony as an answer to these individual complaints, for they are nothing else. The hon. gentleman read from a Scotch newspaper-from some person of whom we know nothing. Did he not see that Lady Cathcart's Factor, a man of education, intelligence and information, visited the country thoroughly, that he was sent out by Lady Cathcart, who contributed £100 per family, and sent out a number of fa-milies from Scotland to that North-West country, and that that gentleman, on his return, having visited the country and visited the people at their own homes, gave the most of things, and not in calling the attention of the people to Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

unqualified testimony, not only to the magnificent character of the country itself, its great fertility and the enormous advantages of settling in it, but to the happy contentment which he found pervading the minds of all the people who were able to exchange Scotland for that country. Knowing this, as the hon. gentleman must have known it, knowing that testimony abounds on every side, of the highest and most disinterested character, as to the success which has attended the immigrants who have gone into that country, he yet stands here by the hour and retails these miserable statements, from perhaps some disappointed speculators who were perhaps unable to realize sudden fortunes, for the purpose of inciding discontent and doing that which he knows, and which every man knows, is calculated to strike the most fatal blow that cau be struck at the development of that great country which is so rapidly making Canada a country of which every Canadian may be proud.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is satisfactory to find that the hon. gentleman has recovered something of his old, pristine vigour, and I may add, more than his old recklessness of assertion. Perhaps, now that he has found his voice, he may go one step further and support his arguments by his vote. If he does it will be the first time since the House has met that we will have seen the vote on record of the hon. gentleman who is not the member for Cumberland.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I call the hon. gentleman to order for his statement that I am not the momber for Cumberland.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a Bill to make him so.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not in order to make any such statement. The hon. gentleman has a seat here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, Then, Sir, I will alter the phrase, and I will say, the hon. gentleman who now sits for Cumberland, and to secure whose seat a Bill is before this House. Sir, the hon. gentleman asks why my hon. friend did not move earlier. Why, Sir, how could he move earlier? How could he move until those negotiations which were going on had closed, until we knew whether or not the hon, gentleman was going to grant the demands of Mr. Norquay and his friends? What time have we had? Why, Sir, almost from the moment this House met, from the moment the hon. gentleman opposite made his Budget Speech, we were occupied in testing the accuracy of his former statement, by granting a further gift, for it amounted to that, of $30,000,000 to the Company of which the hon. gentleman boasts so much, and which he told us was never going to cost the country a dollar after the enormous grant originally given. The hon. gentleman talks, as his friends have talked on every occasion, when their misdeeds have been brought to light by hon. gentlemen on this side, of our want of patriotism and of our exciting discontent. Why, Sir, cannot they vary that old refrain, even for a single moment? It is the same old answer which has been made to every complaint made from this side of the House. When we point out the abominable extravagance of this Government, when we show, as I showed not long ago, that while entering on our career as a nation, we did so under conditions which gave us enormous advantages over the people of the United States, we have been, or the Government have been, so false to their trust, that Canada to-day is labouring under an expenditure nearly double per head of that in the United States; and when these facts, which should be known to every ratepayer in the country, are brought out, what is the answer? Can they prove the statement incorrect? No, Sir; but they say it is unpatriotic to state the fact. Sir, the unpatriotic conduct is in bringing about such a state

those who brought about that state of things. When we call attention to the enormous loss of people which is going on from the great Province of Ontario, when we know that 60,000 or 80,000 people a year are lost to that Province by the misgovernment of these gentlemen, they tell us it is unpatriotic, but it is not unpatriotic to cause this exodus of our people. When we condemned the gross and flagrant corruption which they have displayed in dealing with so many things in this North-West country, it is unpatriotic, because it reflects on the honour of these hon. gentlemen; but it is not unpatriotic to take tens of thousands of acres of land and sell them for one-quarter of their value to Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces. It is very un-patriotic for my hon. friend to point out these facts, but it is not unpatriotic for these gentlemen to misgovern the North-West, as my hon. friend has shown they have misgoverned it. Sir, the hon. gentleman says we will not endorse the complaints of the people of the North-West. What have we been doing night after night but calling attention to the consequence of the Tariff which these hon. gentlemen imposed, under which we all suffer, but under which the people of the North-West suffer most and worst of all. Have we not called attention again and again to the dishonest exercise of the veto power made by these hon, gentlemen. Have we not called attention again and again to the reservations which have taken place all over the North-West, and yet this same hon. gentleman claims credit for his sacrifices for the benefit of the people of the North-West. He tells us that he and his colleagues staked office and lost it to build a railway to the North-West. Why, Sir, they staked office, and they lost it in the attempt to debauch the electorate of Canada. That is how and why they left office, and I say there is no viler page in the history of the country than that which records the mode and manner in which they left office in 1873. And these are the men who talk to us about our conduct in exciting discontent, about our designing to come into the Government of this country over the ruins of the country. Sir, if these hon. gentlemen unhappily retain office much longer, I am afraid there will not even be the ruins. They talk about stopping immigration into Manitoba, and they are the men under whose policy Ontario alone has lost 234,000 of the best of her people within the last four years. I say that 234,000 people, nearly one-fourth of a million of the people of Ontario, have been to all intents and purposes driven out of it by the misconduct and misgovernment of these hon. gentlemen. And they talk about baving a vote struck down in the Estimates to bring in im-migration. Why, Sir, the vote which was taken the that Manitoba and the North-West, if wisely and well admigration. Why, Sir, the vote which was taken the other night expressly declared that we were perfectly willing to bring in all persons except mechanics and artizans, and if the Minister knows anything about what is going on in Canada, he knows too well that under this policy, which was to remove all distress, there are thousands of people to-day in the different cities of Canada who are unable to obtain employment. Sir, he talks of danger; he talks of the unholy objects of these people. Well, Sir, I would like to know from the hon. gentleman what he would have us do. When we find that for Manitoba, I say that, they have grossly neglected their the country is being misgoverned, does the hon. gentleman | opportunities. I say that with common prudence, common suppose that we are going to supplicate interviews with him and his colleagues, and confide to them, with whispered humbleness, our views as to the dangers which await this country? Here, on the floor of this House, is the place where we have to tell the hon. gentlemen what we think of their policy; and it is in the discharge of a public duty that my hon. friend has spoken to night, as he ought | drift lasts. Every man who goes from Canada to the United to speak, calmly and temperately, asking the con-sideration of this Government to what the people of Manitoba demand—not desiring to prejudice the controversy, but asking simply that their demands should from the statistics of our own Provinces, points in the same be considered and adjudicated on by the Government. direction; it all shows that the impolicy of the Government 145

Now, Sir, it is quite idle to ignore these complaints. It is quite idle for the hon. gentleman to blind himself to this discontent which he knows to exist, of which so many evidences and proofs have been accumulated by my hon. friend, which are known to exist by everybody who pays the slightest attention to the affairs of the North-Westsay it is quite idle for the hon. gentleman to suppose that there is any use in shutting our eyes to the plain and patent fact that the great proportion of the settlers of Manitoba and the North-West are at this moment very seriously dissatisfied with the policy of that hon, gentleman and his colleagues. Sir, the hon. gentleman said one thing that is true. He said that these complaints would go far. I am very sorry to say that they will-that mischief will be done by them. But I say that is the very strongest proof of the substantial justice of these complaints. Who are the men who have been making them ? Why, Sir, they are the very men whose interests are most of all bound up-far more than the hon. gentleman's-in everything that can possibly promote the prosperity of that country; and if you find these men, who know that so well, indulging in these complaints to their own detriment, you may be sure that the oppression has been grievous indeed which has induced them to speak as they have done. I regret, Sir, myself, that they should have gone so far as to declare that Manitoba desired no immigrants. For once I agree with the hon. gentleman that that is to be regretted. But we know on better authority than his that there is an oppression which drives men mad; and very much that kind of oppression has been perpetrated by himself and his colleagues on the great mass of the settlers of Manitoba. Now, Sir, let us examine the position for a few minutes, and ask ourselves a few plain questions: What makes Manitoba and the North-West of such great value to the people of old Canada? What makes it worth our while to expend enormous sums of money in that country? The hon. gentleman knows that if to the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or to the sum we are obliged to pay for it, you add the sum already expended in that country in one way or other, you will find that about a hundred millions of our money will in all probability be spent in that enter-prise. He knows, too, that in the expenditure in other directions, such as on Indians, Mounted Police, and the immigration service, which is chiefly for that country, enormous annual charges amounting to no less than $2,000,000 ministered, would provide homes for all that enormous mass of people who for many years back have been daily and hourly quitting Canada and finding homes elsewhere. Mу chiefest charge, Sir, against these hon. gentlemen is thisthat their policy has been such that the people of Canada who ought to have found homes in their own country have been driven into the United States to find homes there. Sir, so far from thinking that the hon. gentlemen are entitled to any credit for what they have done energy and common care, four or five times the number of people now in that country might have been brought there : and, what is more, they would have been our own fellow. citizens, who, as I said, have been driven to seek homes in the United States. More, Sir; once you have established a drift away of our people, it is to be remembered that that States is apt to bring many others in his train. That we have seen, that we know; and every scrap of evidence laid before us-from the Census of the United States, as well as has driven enormous numbers of our people from our own territory to seek homes in a foreign country. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman asks why the people of Manitoba should be dissatisfied. Well, Sir, I say this-that the people of Manitoba are dissatisfied, and justly dissatisfied, because, in the first place, the common rights of freemen have been taken from them and trampled upon. The hon, gentleman knows perfectly well that no such gross or unfair interference as that perpetrated by the present Government, by the exercise of their veto power, has been put in force against any Province in this Dominion, save the Province of Manitoba alone. Moreover, that was a distinct breach of promise. The Canadian Pacific Railway contract was passed through this House on the distinct pledge, made by the hon. gentleman and by his leader, that Manitoba could not and should not, and that Ontario could not and should not, be interfered with; and you have only to look at the speeches delivered during that debate to see that many gentlemen who supported and defended the monopoly then enacted, did so on the ground that it would still be in the power of the Province of Manitoba to construct its own lines of railway wherever it pleased, within its own limits. Sir, the hon. gentleman laughs at the increased duty levied on agricultural implements: and he has the supreme audacity to tell intelligent men in this House that agricultural implements are none the dearer for a duty of 35 per cent. Well, Sir, to such arguments no answer is pos-sible, I admit. The men who believe them, or pretend to believe them, are below or beyond all argument by any intelligent being. Sir, I will take the case of southern Manitoba. Scttlement began there in 1878, and no thanks to the hon. gentleman. It began the moment the line of the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway had approached that country. Thousands of the very best settlers in the world were borne in there. They made but one request from this Government-they asked leave at their own cost to build their own line of railway there, and the hon. gentleman knows that they were refused. The Government that refused that simple right to these men took upon themselves the bounden duty of causing them to be supplied, at the earliest moment, with railway facilities. What have that Government done? Five or six years have elapsed since that time, and the hon. gentleman knows that up to this moment, those people, to whom he refused that simple right, are deprived of all railway facilities whatever. He knows that the Government have not taken any steps to give them those facilities. They have promised to do this and to do that; but all they did was to foster an intrigue, by which the Canada Pacific Railway Company got possession of a rival line; and these people are left to-day, and will perhaps be left for years longer, without the slightest railway facility, in spite of all the Government had promised them. What do we find? We find that the very moment that they attempted to approach this territory over the Canadian Pacific Railway line itself, just so soon as a few hundred of families had got in, the Government, by the quintessence of stupid folly withdrew those lands from settlement; and during the eighteen months in which those families were going through those lands to Dakota, those lands were locked up by a tele-gram from Ottawa. For all those men who have been lost to Canada-and their number is to be estimated by thousands, if not by tens of thousands-the present Government. by its deliberate misconduct, is directly responsible. The hon. gentleman took upon himself to draw a comparison between the policy of my hon. friend from East York and his own. I say that my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie), in one year, did far more good work than the hon. gentleman has done in his whole five years of office. What did the hon. gentleman do in the two years before that road came into the possession of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He laid down about a paltry hundred miles of road, so badly engineered and laid out that the first very undesirable, indeed, that the people of Manitoba should Sim Dependent of Manitoba, and in censuring the people of Manitoba, and in censuring the people of Manitoba, or those of them who have dared to assert their rights as freemen, in remonstrating against the acts of the Govern-ment, Manitoba, on the whole, has been very patient under unjust and unmerited injury; and although I admit it is Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

thing the Canadian Pacific Railway engineers did was to tear up the rails and throw all his work to the wind. When he talks of the condition of the city of Winnipeg and of its being deprived of roads, I tell him this, that the moment the road was constructed from Port Arthur to the Red River, had the city then been allowed to use its own resources in the construction of roads to the south-west and to the west, as was provided in the plan laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell, the city of Winnipeg would have made a solid, substantial and far greater growth, great as its growth has been, than it has made; its progress would now been more solid and substantial. If the hon. gentleman knew as much about the city of Winnipeg to-day as he says he did two or three years ago, he would know that its position is now far worse than it would have been if the people of Manitoba had been allowed to construct the road out of their own resources, after the 400 miles between Winnipeg and Lake Superior had been bridged over by the road constructed by the Government. My hon, friend (Mr. Mackenzie) did make a connection with a road to the American frontier, and, until a very few months ago, that road was the only mode of access to Manitoba, and he knows well that no exertion that man could make was spared by my hon. friend from East York, in endeavouring to open up Manitoba. Of course, until railway communication was had with the United States, it was atterly impossible to bring in immigrants in any number; and when the hon. gentleman has recourse to that most unworthy subterfuge of asserting that I deelared the lands in Manitoba were not worth 25 cents an acre, he knows that what I said was that the land there had no value until railway communication was given to that country, and that therefore I could not recommend my colleagues to take back the land Mr. Foster was to receive, at any price. I simply stated the fact that you could not put any value on the land until the railway was built; and it was for the purpose of giving value to these lands that my hon. friend from East York spent the millions he did, contrary to the advice of hon. gentlemen opposite, in the attempt to open, at the earliest possible date, communication between the Red River and Prince Arthur's Landing, and thus give value to those lands. It is no doubt true that the Canadian Pacific Railway have displayed vigour in pushing on the construction of that road, and no wonder that they should, considering the amount of subsidy they have received recently; but a very few years, perhaps few months, will show the country that no mon were more thoroughly justified than the present Opposition in denouncing the monstrous imbecility which has marked the whole action of the present Government in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If any hon. gentleman wants a proof of that, he will find it, no doubt, in the Resolutions which will be presently brought down, and which were promised the followers of the Government as an inducement to support the last measure which the Government put before this House for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not going, particularly as the hon. First Minister is not in the House, to take up the time of the House in discussing the administration of the lands in Manitoba, but will simply say that there is no instance on record in which the patrimony of the people has been so squandered, has been administered with so little regard to the interests of the people and so much for the purpose of making political capital and of rewarding political partizans, as during the last few years, by the late and present Minister of the Interior. I say that, so far from the hon. gentleman being justified in declaiming, as he has declaimed, about all that his Government have done for the benefit of Manitoba, and in consuring the people of Manitoba, be pushed too far, and although I should regret as much and perhaps a great deal more than the hon. gentleman and his friends, to see the prospects of this country blighted by any injury done to Manitoba or by any severance between Manitoba and ourselves, still I warn the hon. gentleman that he and his colleagues are trying the temper of that people too much. I call the attention of the House to this fact, that our position, as a confederate system, has always two serious physical obstacles to contend with. On the east, between ourselves and our brethren of the Maritime Provinces, there extends a great tract of scantily peopled country, traversed only by the single line of the Inter-colonial; and, as he well knows, on the west these is a similar expanse, which it would be very difficult to people and colonize at an early date. Under these circumstances, we ought, in common prudence, if for no higher motive, to be very careful indeed how we give just cause for dissatisfaction to the people of Manitoba. I do not think that our policy, either our Tariff or our land policy, or our railway policy, has been such as to give fair play to the people of Manitoba, or is calculated to make them at all pleased or contented with the condition of affairs under the administration of the present Government. Sir, the hon. gentlemen have been pursuing, in my mind, a policy of alienation for some time. They have shown, both one and the other of them, very little regard for the interests of Manitoba. They have not hesitated to impose special taxes, specially obnoxious to an agricultural people. The Minister of Ruilways has not hesitated to proclaim on the floor of this House that, if the interests of Canada and Manitoba clash, Manitoba must go to the wall. That was a very foolish statement, a very unstatesman-like statement, a statement which I think he must have regretted, a statement which I think he ought to retract at the earliest possible moment. The interest of Canada is to assist Manitoba. The interests of Canada and Manitoba cannot be dissevered. The hon. gentleman should know that we have staked so much on developing the North-West that we cannot afford to allow the people of Manitoba to become discontented with our rule; and the hon. gentleman might perhaps remember this, that if there is such a general content, if there is such a feeling of well-being in Manitoba, it is a most extraordinary thing that, the moment you go into Dakota and the States adjoining, you find hundreds and thousands of Canadians, who had been in Manitoba, who liked Manitoba, who thought it a better country than Dakota, but, who, by reason of bad Government and bad regulations, were obliged, contrary to their own inclinations, to forsake their own flag and seek an asylum elsewhere. Perhaps is was as well in one respect that they did so, because, knowing what I do of the temper of my follow-coun-trymen, it might have been dangerous for the hon. gentleman and his Government if these men had staid there. Knowing the conduct of those hon. gentlemen, one is almost driven to suspect that they are afraid that the North-West will grow too fast; that they are afraid that the people of the North-West will rise up and become something like another Ontario too soon to suit their purpose, and that they are conspiring together to check its growth. They could not do it better than by the policy they have been recently adopting, and, if that is their object, then the hon. gentleman is justified in congratulating himself on having achieved a brilliant success. But, if that is not his object, if he does desire, as I would fain hope he does, to develop Manitoba and the North-West and fill it with a prosperous population, then never were any men so infatuated in endeavouring to carry out such an end as the hon. gentleman and his friends.

Mr. WATSON. As seconder of this amendment, I shall occupy the attention of the House for a very short time. We have heard some very good speeches on this question, and I think the members of the House have been enlightened on a good many points of interest. I was a little surprised to hear some statements from the Minister of Railways. We, in Manitoba, appreciate the railway, but we should appreciate it a great deal better without monopoly. As I do not intend to occupy the attention of this House long, I will come to a few points I have marked down here. The hon. gentleman has lauded the Premier of the Province of Manitoba as being a great statesman, able to cope with all the elements that have taken place there, and he referred to the farmers, the people who were formulating those grievances to the Government, as a class of disappointed speculators. Now, I might call his attention to the fact that this hon. Premier he speaks of is probably one of the disappointed speculators, Speaking as Premier of the Province, in his manifesto to the Government, he stated :

"These facts ere now have been laid before the Government at Ottawa, but either through inappreciation of them, or a disbelief in their existence, only such relief has been given as would tide over the difficulty for the time being, and no adequate provision made for the exigencies of Government that have arisen under the state of affairs just cited. The provision allowed by our requirements being now so inadequate, the contemplation of our position when a great influx of population multiply the expense of Government, is a far from pleasant prospect, but a fact that must be faced. Indeed, a large addition to the population of the Province would be nothing short of an evil in disguise; rapid settlement of the territory would prove anything but a blessing; to meet increasing requirements under present circumstances would be an impossibility, our revenue being out of all proportion to our necessary expenditure."

Now, I hope, as the hon. the Minister of Railways has spoken of the deputation appointed by the Local Legislature to investigate these matters, that the grievances complained of by the Local Legislature will be attended to. I might state, also, that I was a little surprised to hear the hon. gentleman state, as he has stated before in this House, about the town of Portage la Prairie, that I live in, what would it be without a railway. We in the Portage never felt we had the Minister of Railways to thank for the Railway running there.

Mr. BOWEIL. Whom did you thank?

Mr. WATSON. A deputation of that town was appointed to wait on the Minister when he visited Winnipeg, for the purpose of having him state that the railway would run through Portage la Prairie. He stated to the deputationand one of them was the hon. gentleman who represented Marquette at that time—that it was impossible for the rail-way to run in there, but that it would go six or seven miles north of that. But he changed his mind after, at the dictation of two of the gentlemen who formed the Syndicate and wanted to get the contract. It was at some point outside of Winnipeg on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was dictated to by these gentlemen, for the purpose, probably, of getting the support of the member for Marquette to that contract, that the road had to run into Portage la Prairie. He obeyed them at that time, has obeyed them since, and will obey them again. I shall not detain the House longer. I endorse heartly this Resolution, and endorse the statements that have been made by the hon. mover.

Mr. MILLS. I just wish to make an observation before the question is put, and shall not detain the House for five minutes. I was surprised to hear the Minister of Railways say that this motion was moved at a time when it must be considered a motion of want of confidence in the Government. I deny that this is a motion of want of confidence in the Administration. The hon. gentleman must know the constitutional practice ;—in England it is a well recognized rule, that the redress of grievances must precede Supply, and it is never considered a vote of want of confidence to ask for the redress of a national grievance upon going into Committee of Supply. In fact, the whole theory of parliamentary government, the growth of the power of the House of Commons, originated in the principle that supplies are withheld until the grievances of the nation are redressed. The hon. gentlemen themselves have recognized this principle here. Let me take the case of M. Letellier. The hon. gentleman who leads the House at this time, the Prime Minister, moved, upon going into Supply, a motion condemn. ing the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec. When hon. gentlemen came into power, there was a question of the disputed boundary of Ontario that was about to be raised in the House. It was a matter of arrangement between the two sides of the House that this motion should be moved from this side of the House upon going into Committee of Supply; but a friend of the hon. gentleman anticipated the action of this side of the House, and moved a resolution in reference to the boundaries of Ontario, on going into Committee of Supply. Did the Government vote against it; did they say "this is a motion moved at a time when we have no opportunity of accepting it or of expressing a proper opinion of it?" Not at all. They voted for the motion, which was moved upon going into Committee of Supply; and there is nothing improper in the course taken by my hon. friend. We know that practically there was no other opportunity, no other way of bringing this matter, under the circumstances, before the House, except by doing what the mover of this motion has done. It is a grievance of a large section of the people of this country, a serious grievance, and the proper and constitutional period for bringing that grievance before Parliament is when the Government of the day are asking for a subsidy-when they are asking for Supply. I did not think it was right to allow this question to be put until I had called the attention of the House to the statement that the hon. Minister had made, in replying to my hon. friend who made this motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but it is a parliamentary rule that no motion in amendment can be made to the amendment made on the motion to go into Committee of Supply. The object of that rule is to secure a vote upon the specific grievance that is brought up; otherwise it would be easy for a parliamentarian to avoid an expression of opinion on any subject whatever. This is the only occasion upon which an amendment can be moved which would secure an expression of opinion upon a distinct question. But the hon. gentleman opposite who leads the House to night, is too intolerant of any expression of opinion at all, and he seeks by sheer abuse to put down every person who ventures in the least degree to differ from him. I rose simply, not only to say that much before going into Committee of Supply, but also to ask the Minister to bring down-and he will do it, I presume, without any notice-a copy of his advertisement calling for tenders, in the fall of 1878, for the section from English River to Keewatin, 185 miles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What I said was that the hon. gentleman had asked for tenders, but had subsequently stated that it was for the purpose of accurately informing himself as to what the expense would be, and that he did not decide to let either the portion that he had advertised for in British Columbia or that between lake Superior and the Red River, until he had learned from the result of the tenders what the expense would be. I said that the hon. gentleman had stated that tenders were all in waiting to be alloted when the change of Government took place. I have refreshed my memory by looking at the Debates, and I find I was strictly accurate in the statement I made. Specifications were prepared after I became Minister of Rail-ways, on which these tenders were received, and not on the specifications of the hon. gentleman. I will bring down the advertisements ordered by myself, based on those the hon. gentleman had given for the work. I will also remind the hon. gentleman that he not only stated that he had not made up his mind, before a change of Government, to let that work at all, but I will show the hon. gentleman that what he said and adopted the line through Lake Manitoba, as being the was that he had advertised for tenders for the whole work, shortest and best route to the Pacific, as being the route Mr. MILLS.

with a view to ascertain upon what terms he could let the entire line, from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, and that not a single tender was sent in.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes; there was one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was an informal one.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was formal, but not admissable. But, I asked the hon. gentleman specifically, did he say that these contracts were based upon tenders that he asked for, and he told me they were. Well, I was astounded at his statements, and I went out to get authorities. The hon. gentleman may not have meant to say it, but he did say it. The hon. gentleman proceeded to say, in the most extraordinary manner, that nothing had been done during my five years of office, and I was proceeding to show, by the question I put, that every part of that road that he alluded to was put under contract upon tenders that I had invited. I invited tenders for the entire work across the continent. based upon the well-known intention not to work the line ourselves, but to include in the contract so given the amount of work we had done as cash; and also anticipating the possibility of not getting a tender for the entire line, I asked tenders for the part of the work in British Columbia, the initial parts of the work, and that 181 miles between Keewatin and English River. I intended to proceed in the same way with the construction of the initial part. I always intended that, and I could not have said I had no intention of proceeding with that. Now, the hon.gentleman ventured to say that when he came into office not one mile of the road was constructed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I said in operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then they were in operation. The road was built and completed, and all the payments made from the boundary to Selkirk.

An hon. MEMBER, It was not ballasted.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was a large portion of it ballasted, and also trains were running and arrangements made for working the road, and I was accused by a colleague of the hon. gentleman of doing something very wrong in building that road at all-I was denounced by Mr. Macpherson for building the line at all. Now, Sir, besides that we had under contract from Selkirk eastward to Keewatin, 108 or 110 miles, and westward from Port William, 118 miles of it remained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. One hundred and twelve.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Well, I am very near it, at any rate. That distance is mostly completed, as the papers will show. Now the hon. gentleman said that my five years of office was a blank, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway was concorned. But I say that more work was done every year than during the two years of incumbency of the hon. gentleman, when he ventured to lay down an air line and ultimately settled down a colonization road; after spending two years groping in the dark, he made up his mind to build a road that could not be called a trans-continental railway, but merely a colonization road. To use his own words, the hon. gentleman did nothing for two years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to remind him that he himself said that he had not decided to build any road on the prairie of any kind, not even a colonization road.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I had not decided in what way it should be built; but we decided it should be built on the prairie, and we brought down a Bill, as a mere speculative matter, for discussion. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman seems to think it was a crime in me not to build the road towards Winnipeg. I accepted the reports of the engineers, that traversed the best country, and as being the route, in a change of Government had taken place, and it was not every respect, the most suitable for a trans-continental railway. Upon that line there was no grade in excess of 50 feet to the mile, and very little of that, and there was less curvature than in any other line that had been surveyed, and all the advantages were wholly in its favour. I also gave up the Bate Iulet route, and determined to go by the Fraser. The hou. gentleman, in the very start of his Admin-istration, had that order repealed, and he was obliged to go back, afterwards, to the course I had originally adopted. The hon. gentleman, Sir, is not only ungenerous, but most unjust in his attempt to belittle the but most unjust in his attempt to belittle the efforts that were made by his predecessors. The Government of the hon. gentleman opposite had contracted with British Columbia to have the surveys completed, and the work of construction commenced in two years, and this bargain had been in existence two years and a-half when we accepted office, and not a single mile was surveyed or located across the entire continent, after two years and s-half of labour. The entire work was begun afresh by us, and when we left office we had the country opened up. Settlers were going into the country, the prairies were occupied, and everything was put in order for the resumption of work. The hon. gentleman will find that I simply determined to consult Parliament about the various plans. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I am unable, on account of a defect in my voice, to give that attention to the hon. gentleman that I would like to give, and to his scandalous misstatements respecting my own Administration. I can only hope that some day we will meet at Philippi, where I shall endeavour to give him what he deserves.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say that no person in this House regrets more than I do, the condition of his health, which does not allow him to deal with questions with all his pristine vigour. The hon, gentleman will allow me to say that no person would be more gratified than myself to find the hon. gentleman able in the future, as in the past, to deal with the most formidable antagonist able to confront him; but he must permit me to say that his memory has failed him on this occasion, as well as on the other.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It did not fail me on the other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman stated that those tenders were in the office when the change of Government took place, and were ready to be awarded. said that was not the case; and that the hon. gentleman had himself stated subsequently that he had asked for the tenders without having made up his mind when to proceed with the construction of the work. The hon. gentleman will permit me to remind him that he asked for tenders for 125 miles of the section in British Columbia, from Kamloops to Yale.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I stated that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to call his attention to what took place, that he asked also for tenders covering the entire line from Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, including the work that was done. As I said, not only were the tenders not in, but although advertisements had been inserted that the contracts would be let, the letting was twice postponed, no offers being sent in-and such were not sent in until after the change of Government had taken place, because the surveys were not sufficiently advanced to enable speci-fications to be prepared. As the hon. gentleman is aware, no tenders can be sent in unless specifications are prepared, and these were prepared in the Department under my own direction. The hon. gentleman is, therefore, mis-taken on that point. The hon. gentleman is also mistaken in supposing that he had constructed and put in operation the line from Winnipeg to the boundary. This work was completed by the Department under my instructions, after until the change of Government that any of the line was in operation. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not better able to deal with the question in controversy. I did not intend to be unjust and ungenerous, but the hon gentleman must not forget that I was not the assailant; that I was defending this Government against a gross and unjustifiable attack from the other side of the House, as to the manner in which this Government had fulfilled its duty to Manitoba and the North-West; and in dealing with that matter I did, although reluctantly, contrast the action of the present and past Administrations.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman was most unfortunate in his choice and style of language. One would have thought that, instead of this motion being one respecting grievances in the North-West, some motion had been proposed in regard to the management of the railway system. If the latter had been the case, the hon. gentleman's remarks would have been in place. Nothing, however, would justify the gross extravagance of the hon. gentleman's language in depreciating what his predecessors had done, and glorifying himself for his past actions, when he well knew that he had accomplished nothing-that his Government spent two years without doing anything.

Mr. HESSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman who calls out "hear, hear," tell me what they did during those two years?

Mr. HESSON. We had to get a new plan altogether.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That hon. gentleman had better get a new plan too. No one in the House needs it more, I could not even, disabled as 1 am for the moment-

Mr. HESSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. member is performing his usual office of claqueur to the Ministry, and I must submit to be interrupted, as other members are.

Mr. HESSON. He interrupted the Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No doubt the Minister and myself can settle our difficulties. I will say this of the Minister of Railways, that he never objected to any interruption of that sort in debate; I would be the last man to object to it, for I rather like interruption, and no man with a good cause will ever object to interruption. I wish to point out the gross extravagance of the claim made by the Minister, when the fact was that during the eight years from the time the road was commenced until we left office, all that was accomplished was accomplished by us, and nothing by hon. gentlemen opposite, though two and a-half years in the first place and nearly two years in the second were spent, and the only thing done was to lay down an ill-constructed road which had to be taken up.

The House then again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.) MILITIA.

60. Contingencies and general service, not otherwise provided for, including grants to Artillery and Rifle Associations, and bands of efficient corps.$38,000 00

Mr. CARON. This is the usual vote for Government grant to Provincial Rifle Associations and other matters.

Mr. LISTER. I notice that the vote includes a grant to bands. I would like to know how much money is paid, and how the grant is given.

Mr. CARON. It is about $70 to each band, and we estimate for 100 bands.

Mr. LISTER. Does the Minister intend making any arrangement by which bandmasters shall form part of the service and have the right to rank?

Mr. CARON. It is very difficult indeed to make any such arrangement. In many instances the one man is in control of several bands in different corps, and to make the arrangement which is suggested, the expenditure would have to be much larger than at present.

Mr. LISTER. Of course the hon. gentleman knows that the difficulty in London was partly owing to the fact that a bandsman was there without uniform, and of course he had a right to be there. I think there is a general feeling in the service that the bandmaster should have rank in the service and that their pay should be increased.

Mr. CARON. We could not do it on this vote.

Mr. LISTER. No; of course not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This vote includes grants to the Battalion Rifle Associations. On what principle are they distributed?

Mr. CARON. There are eighty associations, and we estimate at the rate of $75 each. The grants are paid on the report of the Brigade-Major, or the Deputy Adjutant- the subject, I appointed a Commission, composed of officers Mr. MACKENZIE.

General, where there is one in the district, as to the efficiency of the Rifle Association.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And it is handed over to the president and devoted to the purchase of ammunition.

Mr. CARON. To the purchase of ammunition. It is distributed by the president in the shape of prizes to the competitors and in keeping up the organization.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I suggested before, I think it would be a great boon to these associations if they could get their rifle ammunition at a moderate price. The tax on these young men to enable them to practice and make themselves good shots, is a considerable sum, to say nothing of the time, and I think it would be money well spent if the hon. gentleman could make a reduction in the price of the ammunition issued, of course, under proper restrictions, to these associations, as I think it is very desirable to encourage them.

Mr. CARON. These small amounts are really what keep up the associations, but I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that this is a matter affecting the whole Militia force of Canada, and that the Department cannot do too much in helping these associations in every possible way. As I stated the other night, we are trying to reduce the price of the ammunition to the lowest possible point, and I hope when our factory is complete that it will be possible for us to reduce it far below the present figure, merely of course, for these associations for rifle practice.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think it would be well if the Department would issue an order defining the status of the bandmasters. In the Imperial service the regulations have been altered and the bandmaster is now an enlisted man in some shape. I think there is too much laxity in the conduct of our bands, and that no grant should be given unless the bandmasters are enlisted men. It often happens that the money goes to keep up the bands for drill and then we hear nothing more of them. With regard to the grants to Rifle Associations I think a great deal of the money now goes to officers who should be above taking part in the competition, or at least above taking the money. I know it is a constant thing for non-commissioned officers, such as sergeants, paymaster and quarter-masters, to enter into competition with the men. The fairest competition I had was in the annual camp, where every man was allowed to compete, but no officer. There was no expense, and the whole proceeds went into the funds of the band. I would, therefore, urge upon the Minister that where there is a grant given to bands, it should only be given to bands in regiments, and that non-commissioned officers should not be allowed to compete for prizes for which that grant is given.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the Minister of Militia to intimate that he desired to supply the ammunition made at the factory at cost price to the service. Might I ask the hon. Minister where the small-arm ammunition is at present obtained ?

Mr. CARON. At our cartridge factory in Quebec.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there any reports from the factory?

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman refers to my Annual Report, he will find there a very exhaustive report about the cartridge factory. At first, some of our riflemen considered that the cartridges manufactured in Canada were not up to the standard of the English manufactured cartridges. Of course, I need not tell the hon. gentleman that it was my anxious desire, as we had established this cartridge factory in Quebec, to make it as perfect as possible. Not being in a position myself to express any opinion upon it, as a practical marksman would, or one who made a special study of the subject, I appointed a Commission, composed of officers who are known marksmen, and who have taken the greatest possible interest in the Dominion Rifle Association, and other rifle associations. These gentlemen spent three or four days in Quebec, inspecting the cartridge factory, examining the different component parts of the cartridges, seeing how they were put together, testing the powder, and trying the cartridges by having some of the men belonging to "A" Battery for one or two days to fire them off, for the purpose of testing them thoroughly. The report of that Board is as follows :--

"The Board are of unanimous opinion— "Ist. That the process of manufacture of the Dominion cartridges is perfectly satisfactory, the greatest care being taken in overlooking and testing the component parts of each cartridge, by which the slightest defact or blemish must be discovered; that the powder used is the R. F.G., Waltham Abbey, such as is used at Woolwich in the manufacture of Snider ball cartridges.

"2nd. That the tests from the Whitworth fixed rests, of the Dominion ammunition, were quite satisfactory, the result, as shown on the annexed diagrams, being that the variation was much within the limit of the diagrams, being that the variation was much within the limit of the Woolwich test. "3rd. The Dominion ammunition gave a better result than the English No. 9 of the years 1877 and 1882, from a fixed rest at 500 yards — as shown on the accompanying diagrams. "4th. The result of the individual shooting on the Lévis range, at 200 500 and 600 yards, by a squad of sixteen men fron " "A " Battery C A., and the 8th Royal Rifles, satisfied the Board of the uniform strength and quality of the Dominion Ammunition. Therefore, the Board have no hesitation in recommending the Dominion ammunition for issue and "cancerd use in Ganada.

Mr. MULOCK. Might I ask the hon. Minister if that report was submitted to the Major-General commanding.

Mr. CARON. It came to me through the usual channel. It was sent by the Deputy Adjutant-General to the Adjutant-General, and referred by him to the Major General, and sent to me.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the report here—the one that was submitted to him?

Mr. CARON. There is no other way of submitting it.

Mr. MULOCK. Does he concur in the report of the board?

Mr. CARON. I think so.

Mr. MULOCK. It is said not. Perhaps the hon. Minister can submit his remarks on the report at a later day.

Mr. CARON. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that the report of the board was submitted to the Major-General commanding the forces, and that he made certain remarks upon it which did not sustain it; that in fact there was a conflict of opinion, and that the Major-General pointed out some defect in the system pursued in the cartridge factory in Quebec. How-ever, that may not be correct. The remarks on the report will be in the Department, and the discussion may be deferred until they are produced.

Mr. CARON. There is no report from the Major-General which does not appear in my report.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not say that. What I say is, that the report from which you have quoted was, I understand, submitted to the Major-General commanding, and he made certain remarks thereen, not in the form of a report, but simply comments.

Mr. CARON. It is quite possible. In any case, I will bring down the remarks.

61. Government Grant to the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association $8,000 00

Mr. CARON. It is intended this year to supplement this vote by an amount of $2,000, to be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the Wimbledon Team. It is found the amount of $8,000 was insufficient to keep up the association. This Rifle Association is really the foundation of our system of rifle associations all over the Dominion; marksmen come from the various Provinces here for the purpose of competing. We were never in debt, but last year and the year before, through the efforts made by His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne, certain contributions were received from bankers and other sources which helped to make up the list of prizes. This year it is found that this source of revenue was not only not large but in some instances had failed, and it is very important that we should not make any change in the programme as carried out for the last few years. Without the supplementary vote, it would be necessary to give up Wimbledon or reduce so considerably the list of prizes as to destroy the association. On this account, I ask this supplementary vote of $2,000. I intend dropping the vote of $2,000 for Government aid towards sending a team of Canadian Militia artille ymen to Shoeburyness, England, or for artillery competition in Canada, as it is not intended this year to send a team to Shoeburyness.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is alleged that the team sent under the present regulations does not, by any means, represent, owing to the mode of its selection, the very best marksmen in Canada. Of course, there is something to be said on both sides; but I think it is desirable that if we incur the expense of sending a team across, our very best marksmen should go, particularly, as I understand, the men with whom they have to compete are not subject to the same restrictions as those to which I believe our men are subject. This puts our Canadian marksmen at a great disadvantage, considering we have to choose from 4,000,000. whereas in England the choice can be made from about 40,000,000.

Mr. CARON. There are many opinions on this subject. Some very high authorities hold exactly what the hon. gentleman has stated, that from the fact that some of our crack shots are sent repeatedly to England, the association has not taken the best mode of choosing competitors. No doubt, the men sent are the very best marksmen we have, but the opinion is expressed that those marksmen who have, on more than one occasion, represented Canada at Wimbledon, should not be allowed to go back on the team, but that they should be replaced by others. The great difficulty is what the hon. gentleman has pointed out, that we have only a population of 4,500,000 out of which to select competitors, who must compete with the picked men of 40,000,000. The hon, gentleman will see the difficulty with us is to secure a number of men to devote that time to rifle practice, so as to enable us to make a good selection. I think, on the whole, Canada has reason to be proud of the efforts of our marksmen in England, and this practice has had the effect of promoting a feeling favourable to rifle practice in Canada. It is productive of what I believe to be the best possible results, and I am of opinion that this $8,000, supplemented by $2,000, is really money invested in the best possible way, so far as Canada is concerned.

Mr.VAIL. I have always strongly advocated the granting of a sufficient sum to enable the association to send a team home, but I must say I am sorry to see this increase; $8,000 is as much as the Department should grant, considering the small amount granted for drilling the Militia. If we make this vote now $10,000, we will have to do the same the next and following years.

Mr. CARON. Under the late Administration, the late Government granted to the Dominion Rifle Association, on more than one occasion, $10,000; the figure of $3,000 has stood for a number of years, so that there is no danger at all of our having to increase it any more than I have just stated.

Mr. VAIL. If you increase that $2,000, it will stand for the future.

Mr. CARON. No; it will not.

Mr. VAIL. In my time, they were quite satisfied to receive their $8,000.

Mr. CARON. At that time, I was sitting on the other side of the House, and I know that several deputations called upon the then Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie, for the purpose of getting this increased, and complained most bitterly that the association was unable, from want of funds, to carry out its objects. For one year it was dropped, and the year after it was taken up again.

Mr. LISTER. The team is composed of Canadian militiamon of the active force?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask the Minister whether our men are armed with the most modern rifle?

Mr. CARON. The arm which is distributed to the Militia force of Canada is the Snider. In the case of the Dominion Rifle Association, in the practice previous to the time of going to Wimbledon, the practice is carried on with the Martini-Henry. The hon. gentleman stated the other night that the arms which were in the has de of the Canadian Militia were perfectly useless. I beg to differ completely with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LISTER. Not perfectly useless.

Mr. CARON. The Snider is not the latest pattern or the most improved rifle, and the Martini-Henry is the last model which has been adopted by the British Service, but my hon. friund, knows, if he has taken any interest in the matter and looked into it, that experiments are going on every day in England now, and the Martini Henry is not looked upon, among the highest authorities, as the rifle which will remain the rifle of the English service. The difficulty with us is that we have a large number of the Suider rifles. I hope that gradually-but I do not believe the time has come for that-when military authorities have determined what will be the best rifle to place in the hands of the service-we may dispose of the Snider rifles-at a loss no doubt, but not a very large loss-and replace them by an improved arm; but I do not believe that at present it would be judicious, in the face of the experiments which are being carried on in England, to change the Canadian Snider rifle completely, until we know exactly what will be adopted as the arm of the British service.

Mr. LISTER. The Snider rifle is used by the whole force now?

Mr. CARON. Yes. We have a certain supply of the Martini Henry. The Dominion Rifle Association and most of the local associations use the Martini-Henry.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am one of those who have always advocated that the pay of the rank and file should be better than it is, and I look upon this vote for the Wimbledon Team as so much money thrown away; that it should be devoted to the benefit of the men who form the rank and file of the force, and I would like to move, though, I suppose it would be useless in this Committee, that that eral services in connection therewith, $4,500. The addi-item be struck out, as not being of any use to the force. I, tional $2,000 is required for pay of a military engineer, to would call the attention of the Minister, before I sit down, to the great waste of ammunition which takes place annually. at the camps of instruction. My own experience has been, that four-fifths of the ammunition fired away at Niagara, went into the lake instead of the target. Men who never had a rifle in their hands before were there, and their whole aim and object appeared to be, to get rid of as much ammunition in as short a space of time as possible. I hope the Minister. will consider this matter, as I believe he has the interests of the force at heart, though I would like to see it manifested in a little more favourable way towards the men.

Mr. CARON. Carried.

Mr. THOMPSON. What will you do?

Mr. CARON. I will.

62. Drill Sheds and Rifle Ranges $10,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What disposition does the hon. gentleman propose to make of that $10,000?

Mr. CARON. This vote is for the pay of caretakers, $2,000; rents of rifle ranges, $2,000; for general repairs, fuel, light and maintenance of drill sheds and rifle ranges, $6,000; making $10,000 altogether.

Mr. LASTER. How much was spent last year?

Mr. CARON. The whole of that vote was spent. It is just as small as it is possible to make it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is not strictly correct, as I see that last year he spent $7,968. However, the margin is not so very great.

Mr. CARON. The difference is upon the repairs. We estimate for general repairs of drill sheds and rifle ranges about $5,000. It is a very small margin. Some years the repairs may be a little below, and other years they are more considerable and require the whole amount. I was under the impression that the whole vote had been expended, but I see that there was a small amount over.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does the hon. Minister know what is the state of the armouries and the state of the drill sheds? Has he had any reports as to their condition and repair?

Mr. CARON. I have, and I must say they are not in as good a condition as I would like to see them, but it is from the fact, as my hon. friend knows well, that a good many of these drill sheds were built much larger than they should have been, and in a manner quite unfitted for the purpose for which they were intended, and I am sorry to say, in a good many cases, they are not in as good a condition as I would like to see them. But I may say that, ever since I have been in the Department, 1 have been endeavouring to gradually put them in such a state of repair that I believe in a few years we will have them-some are too large and must be pulled down, and others have been repaired - without increasing too considerably the vote appropriated by Parliament, in better order than at present. Of course, as my hon. friend knows, we get reports from the Brigade-Majors upon these various points, and I believe, that as a rule, as far as I am able to ascertain, without looking into every individual report, the armouries are in a pretty good state.

63. Maintenance and care of military properties trans-ferred from the Ordnance and Imperial; Govern-

Mr. VAIL. There is an addition of $2,000 here.

Mr. CARON. The vote, apart from the addition, is made up thus: $3,300, pay of caretakers; $1,800, rents of mili-tary properties; $100, removal of snow at Montreal and Quebec; care and maintenance of properties, including gen-be placed in charge of fortifications and military buildings of the Dominion of Canada. Last year some very valuable military property was transferred to us by the Imperial Government, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This property, with the other property we had already received, sums up to some $14,000,000, taking the whole value, as estimated in our Department, of the military properties transferred to Canada by the Imperial Government.

Mr. WELDON. What property was transferred last year?

Mr. CARON. All the balance of the military property, except that now used in Halifax for the Imperial troops, has been transferred over to Canada.

Mr. VAIL. There has been no property transferred in Nova Scotia that would require a caretaker.

Mr. CARON. I beg to differ with the hon gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman stated that the value of the total properties transferred was $14,000,000. They may possibly have cost the British Government that amount, but I do not suppose he means that they are of that value to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CARON. They might not bring that amount, but that is the estimated value. It includes the Citadel in Quebec. During last summer, certain Imperial lands, held for military purposes in the Province of Nova Scotia, were transferred to the Dominion Government, and are now classified with the other Militia properties. Most of those lands are under lease to parties in the several localities. In Nova Scotia, £25,000 sterling is the estimated value of that property; and in New Brunswick, the estimated value is $240,000. These values are given approximately, as near as can be ascertained at present.

Mr. VAIL. I am well aware that a certain quantity of land belonging to the Imperial Government was transferred to the Militia Department last year, but there is no land in Nova Scotia that requires an expenditure of any portion of this $2,000 for a caretaker. The only land transferred in Nova Scotia is under lease to parties who are in occupation, and therefore it does not require looking after by an agent of the Government.

Mr. CARON. My hon. friend will consider that in taking the value of this property the Department had to exercise its own discretion, and considered that it was necessary to have a person who would look after the maintenance of the various properties—a military engineer to look after the various properties which had been transferred to us.

Mr. WELDON. Are not these lands so transferred occupied by other parties now?

Mr. CARON. Some are. I am ready to give the hon. gentleman all the information I have, but I think that the most satisfactory information I could convey to him is contained in the list of properties which I considered too long to bring down here, and which I would be happy to hand over to the hon gentleman on Concurrence, or before.

Mr. WELDON. Who do you propose to put in charge? Will he come from the Military College?

Mr. CABON. He will have to be possessed of military knowledge, and will be under the immediate control or supervision of Col. Hewitt. The draughtsman and the third class clerk who are to be employed in the Department, will be selected from military cadets. As to this officer, no decision has been arrived at yet. He will be merely put upon the military staff, and it may be that he will not be made a permanent officer.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand this $2,000 is entirely in consequence of the additional property taken over?

Mr. CARON. It is partially in consequence of the property taken over, which requires an additional officer in the Department to look after it, and partially from the changes which have taken place under the Bill transferring the military works and fortifications to the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this officer to be a military man or a civilian? And what are his duties going to be?

Mr. CARON. I shall select the most suitable officer possible. We require a person possessing a military knowledge of a particular character. The salary will be $2,000. We have no one in view, and I will be very glad to take the hon. gentleman's recommendation, if he knows of any officer possessing the requisite abilities.

Mr. MULOCK. What I do not understand is, how a salary can be fixed when the hon. Minister has not prescribed his duties.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the plan which, of course, is not yet fully matured, is an excellent one. We require an engineering officer, who, in addition to looking after the military fortifications and other works, will take charge of the engineering corps. He might also, in addition, fill the office of Quartermaster-General, and in his leisure time prepare a plan for the general defence of the country. In this way services of the cadets of the college might be made available.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It seems to me that this item should have come under the head of Civil Government.

Mr. CARON. I will explain how that occurred. It is not intended to make this officer a permanent appointment and place him on the civil list. We have borrowed from England officers who have remained with us a number of years. It is intended to secure a military engineer who will come over and fill the position in question at a salary of $2,000. We have now in England several cadets in the Royal Engineers, who, within a very few years, will be quite available for positions of this kind. It is only right that we should endeavour to make use of our own cadets, who have been greatly distinguishing themselves in various branches of the Imperial Service.

Mr. MULOCK. The increase is for a specific purpose. Unless the appointment is made, the sum will not be required; and the appointment may not be permanent. The proper course to pursue is to specify that the $2,000 is for the salary of an officer to perform certain duties.

Mr. CARON. This amount is to pay a military engineer, as I have already explained. We could not make the appointment until Parliament had voted the money,

Mr. MILLS. This amount is included in a vote for a wholly different purpose. The specific purpose for which the money is to be used should be stated, so that it could not be used for other purposes.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister asks the Committee in this item to vote $12,000 for the maintenance and care of military properties, &c. Why should not this amount of $2,000 for salary be so stated in the Estimates ? At present it may be obtained for one purpose and possibly used for another.

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not customary to mix up salaries and other items of expenditure. And as a matter of business, I think it would be well if the Minister should state the salary of the officer specifically in a separate vote.

Mr. CARON. I have no objection to do so, by adding the words "including the salary of a military engineer."

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to ask whether the military properties in Toronto have been transferred to the Dominion?

Mr. CARON. Yes; long ago.

Mr. THOMPSON. At what value?

Mr. CARON. The estimated value of those at Kingston, Niagara, and Toronto, is $875,000.

63]. Construction and repairs of military properties $47,410 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This, I suppose, is in pursuance of that Act passed the other day. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us what he proposes to do with it, and especially the largest item of $35,700.

Mr. CARON. There are repairs at Kingston fortifications, $1,310; Quebec, $8,900; Champ de Mars, Montreal, $1,500; military works and buildings, repairs and improve-ments, $35,700. This last amount has been voted regularly for years to the Department of Public Works, for the purpose of keeping up barracks and fortifications and other military properties which we have to look after. I will give the items: No. 1, London, $712; No. 2, Toronto, $5,264.67; Kingston, $10,568.61; Ottawa, $1,642; Montreal, $2,338.36; Quebec, $6,337; St. John's, $793.11; Halifax, $7,403.17; Winnipeg, $835; Victoria, B.C., $2,135; Charlotte-town, $671; Quebec fortifications and repairs, $8,999; Montreal, $1,500; Kingston fortifications, $1,310, making altogether $47,410.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know how many barracks we have, and how many the hon. Minister proposes to keep in order. I think a very large amount of the property he spoke of just now consists of large barracks. Does our agreement with the British Government require us to keep these barracks in order? If so, it must be a pretty heavy expense. It seems to me that we might arrange with the British Government that we should to it. keep the barracks up at three or four different points.

Mr. CARON. This sum is quite sufficient to keep up all the barracks that have been transferred to us. We have the barracks in question, which, the hon. gentleman knows, are now the headquarters of "A" Battery and the School of Cavalry; the barracks on St. Helen's Island, at Montreal, where we keep our stores; the barracks at St. John's, Quebec, which are now the headquarters of a School of Infantry; the barracks at Fredericton, which are required for "A" School of Infantry; the Toronto barracks, which are used for "C" School of Infantry; and the military works at Kingston, which the hon. gentleman knows of. These are the principal works which require to be perma-nently looked after. The greatest portion of the works at Point Lévis have been transferred to the Department of Agriculture, and are now used for a quarantine; and the expenditure required for keeping them up is included in the estimates of my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are you going to do with the other barracks?

Mr. CARON. Some have been rented, and a good many have been sold. When any of this property is considered unnecessary for military purposes, it is transferred to the Department of the Interior, and it is then disposed of by that Department by sale or lease.

Mr. WELDON. Are the Fredericton barracks included in this vote?

Mr. CARON. No. When the infantry schools were established, we had to provide for them, and the Minister of Public Works provided for the Fredericton barracks in his estimates. In the Supplementary Estimates will appear with this college. When it was instituted, promises were the sum required after the first of July, to complete the made by the late Government, which ought to have been Mr. CARON.

Fredericton barracks and the other barracks which have been utilized for the new schools of infantry.

Mr. BEATY. I wish to ask the hon. Minister whether, in speaking of the way in which this money was to be expended, he included the cost of a new armoury or drill shed for Toronto, or whether any policy has been adopted for the sale of the old drill shed property, for the purpose of building a new one, better adapted for the drilling of the large regiments there, which the present drill shed is utterly unsuited for.

Mr. CARON. This subject has already attracted my attention. It is a very large question, and cannot be decided without reference to gentlemen who live in Toronto, and who can express an opinion as to the value of this military property. A suggestion was made to me by my hon, friend from East Toronto (Mr. Small), which I think is a very valuable one. It was that a Commission should be appointed in Toronto, composed of the commanding officers of the various battalions, and possibly the Commandant of the School of Infantry and some other gentlemen, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the military property which we have been utilizing for drill shed purposes; and if we can dispose of it at anything like a reasonable price, we may purchase a lot for a drill shed in a more convenient place. But my information is not sufficient at present to enable me to arrive at a definite conclusion.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I desire to ask what pro-portion of the buildings represented by this vote has been removed from the control of the Public Works Department. From a hasty estimate I have made, I see that the Public Works Department, in 1882-83, expended $73,000 on the repair of military buildings. Now, if it is proposed that all these should be taken in hand by the Department of Militia and Defence, I think we shall all be inclined to support this vote, because it is so much less. But if this vote is an addition to the $73,000, there is a very decided objection

The $47,000 I am now asking was Mr. CARON. estimated last year for the same purpose for which I am now asking it. The balance was appropriated for buildings. There are some other buildings remaining under the control of the Minister of Public Works, but the $47,000 now asked for was estimated last year exactly as it is to-day, and is merely transferred from the Department of Public Works to my Department.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is rumoured that the Militia Department has some plan in view for disposing of a portion, if not all, of the Niagara camp ground. I trust such is not the case, and I wish to know if there is any truth in the rumour.

Mr. CARON. The Government has no intention whatever to dispose of any portion of this property. I would be very sorry to see it transferred for any other purpose than that for which it is now used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman propose to keep the Dufferin Terrace in repair out of this?

Mr. CARON. The stone wall of the terrace is part of the fortifications and will have to be kept in repair, but it is so substantially built that very little repairs will be required. The terrace itself is kept in repair by the city of Quebec.

64. Royal Military College...... $59,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the special attention of the Minister and the Government to what I conceive is an unfortunate circumstance connected binding on their successors, that a certain number of appointments in the Civil Service would be bestowed on the most deserving of these cadets. Very little has been done in that way. We obtain from the Imperial Government the gift of four commissions to be distributed amongst the cadets. In the hon. gentleman's own report, one of the officers of the school recommends that four posts be given in the Civil Service and four others in the military offices, at the disposal of the Government, to these cadets, to be distributed amongst the best of them. No doubt the hon. Minister himself would be disposed to carry that out, but very little use seems to have been made, so far, of these men, who are educated largely at the expense of the people.

Mr. CARON. I am anxious to do all I possibly can for the Royal Military College. In England the qualifications of our cadets are considered equal to those of the best cadets of military colleges there and those who have been sent over to England have distinguished themselves, whether on the field or as engineers; and in competitive examinations they have held their own against the English cadets. In my Department I have already appointed eight cadets since I have been in charge, and I think the new arrangement under the new Bill will afford me an opportunity of taking in a couple more. All those who know the value of the Royal Military College, under the command of such a distinguished officer as Col. Hewitt, will appreciate the efforts of those interested in providing cadets with positions their high training entitles them to. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries intends to appoint a Royal Military College cadet to accompany Boulton on a survey of the lakes, which he has come out from England for the purpose of undertaking.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the Militia force ought to receive a little more benefit than it does from these military cadets. The college ought to be more in harmony with the Militia Force, and there are two ways in which the Militia force could be benefited by this College. There ought to be a special class in the college for the benefit of young men who have passed in the military schools, and desire to attain a higher standing in the Mititia force; and every cadet who attains a certain standing in the college should be attached to some one regiment or other, according to his choice, and when it goes to its annual drill he should be required to accompany it.

Mr. CARON. In several of the camps I visited I have seen cadets who were taking part in the manœuvres.

Mr. MILLS. Are there any in the Mounted Police force?

Mr. CARON. Yes; Lieut. Perry is one of the chief officers in the Mounted Police, and is doing very well. He met with an accident, but is now recovering.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I was glad to hear from the Minister of Militia that the Government intend considering the case of the cadets, for there is a general impression that they have not had the justice to which they are entitled at the hands of the Government. I remember when a gentleman, then in the college, Major Ridout, resigned his position, two cadets of the school, the first appointees of the Government, were placed in the position he had vacated. Their appointment, if I recollect rightly, was made on the ground that there was no particular necessity for an officer of Major Ridout's standing; that there was no necessity for an Adjutant to the school at that time; that these two young gentlemen, who were cadets or graduates of the school, could really perform the duty, although not taking the rank, of Adjutant of the school. I have since been given to understand that a gentleman has been appointed Adjutant of the school, who is not a graduate of the school, and, that, although he had held a commission in the regular service, he had to be sent to England to get the training necessary to qualify himself for the adjutancy of the college. If that is so, it does not bear out to the full the statement of the Minister, and I should like to have some explanation in reference to it.

Mr. CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it was quite experimental. The two young cadets were appointed, not only for the purpose of doing the duty of Adjutant, but also for instructional purposes. As instructors, they have been great successes. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is no advantage to have the position of an Adjutant in the hands of one of the cadets, for the reason that the cadets of to day are all contemporaneous, and, for an officer like the Adjutant, whose duty is to enforce discipline, it requires an officer a good deal older, and who is not selected from the cadets. We tried it for a winter. Col. Hewitt considered it indispensable that an Adjutant should be appointed, and he was appointed at a very reduced salary.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I take an entirely different ground from the Minister of Militia on that particular point. We know that that school has been established for a number of years. It certainly ought to have turned out men in that time who were capable of taking the adjutancy of the college. If it has not done so, it has not done the duty the country expected of it. If it has, the college cadets ought to have had the preference in an appointment of the kind. We know that in other departments of life, in the schools of the country, for instance, the student of to day is the teacher of to morrow in many cases, and it is often impossible to find parties to take these positions, unless we recognize some capacity in those who have been sometime students. And surely the college has existed long enough now to allow of sufficient proficiency on the part of some of those who have been graduates. I should like to have had some explanation as to the particular appointment made, as it is one of the objections which I have urged that, although at one time the party appointed held a commission in the regular army, he was obliged to go home to the old country to qualify for the position he assumed at the College.

Mr. CARON. That is quite right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the Minister to say that he has now made up his mind to recommend to his colleagues, and, if his colleagues are willing to accept the recommendation, that he will give, say half-adozen, posts among the most deserving of the cadets? I think it ought to be made definite and understood. A great many of these young men are exceedingly discouraged at finding they have no certainty, no matter how they may distinguish themselves, of obtaining a post under Government. I do not propose at all that he should employ the whole class of graduates; but, as the British Government employs four, I think the least the Canadian Government can do is to give posts, either in the Militia or in the Civil Service, to some half-dozen of the most deserving. It ought to be given, I think, to those who have shown themselves best qualified, and who have obtained the highest proficiency in their studies.

Mr. CARON. From what I told the hon. gentleman of what I have done, I think he can rely upon my doing what I can.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the commissions in the batteries, how are they filled?

Mr. CARON. I can explain that when we come to that item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very few commissions indeed have been given. I do not complain of the Minister of Militia, but I think it is intensely discreditable to the Government of Canada that, after five or six years, only one single, solitary officer in the Monnted Police-which ought to have, I suppose, fifteen or twenty officers—is a Military College cadet. It shows, in my opinion, that they have entirely neglected the promises made by their predecessors, and have entirely disregarded their duty in giving to the most deserving of the cadets a number of the appointments. I exonerate the Minister of Militia. I do not think he was responsible; but I think the Government of Canada, as a whole, have neglected their duty in that matter. When we come to the questions below, the hon. the Minister can explain his policy as to that; but, in the case of the Mounted Police, I think a great injustice has been done, in not appointing more than one to that position.

Mr. PAINT. We know that many of the young men who go to that college go to receive a first-class education, and do not intend, many of them, to enter the Militia service or the service of the country; and that is why more have not been engaged in the Departments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The reason is, they have not been offered posts in the Canadian service, and I speak with perfect knowledge, with knowledge of what these young men are saying, and of the feeling among I come constantly in contact with them, and I know them. that nothing discourages them more, and tends more to prevent this college from being a useful institution, than the knowledge that, unless a young man has extraordinary influence, he has no chance whatever, no matter how great his proficiency may be, of getting a post under the present Government.

Mr. PAINT. I must say that there is too much patriotism in every member of the Government for that to be true.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the hon. gentleman shows that he is a very young member of this House.

Mr. CARON. The amount asked for "A" Battery is $62,850; for "B" Battery, $62,850. We have estimated "C" Battery, which is a smaller battery as far as numbers are concerned, at $47,000, but of that I have deducted this year $27,000, which I do not consider will be required. may say that the formation of "C" Battery has been creating a good deal of trouble, in so far as regards getting the men. Of course, when the railway is completed, there will be no difficulty in getting the number of men. At present, it would have been easy for us to have got the men required in the older Provinces, but we could not send them over the American railways, armed with guns and all that, and it was considered that the expense of sending them over would be so very great that I have so far not undertaken the formation of that battery for the present. The Com-mandant, Lieut. Col. Holmes, is acting not only as Cem-mandant, but also as Deputy Adjutant-General of the district, and I am glad to say he is doing very good work in organizing the force in British Columbia, and preparing for the formation of this School of Artillery. As to the site, we are now negotiating with the Department of the right hon. The leader of the Government for a lot which now belongs to the Indian reserve, and upon which we intend building barracks, which will be very cheap and quite sufficient to meet the requirements of the force.

Mr. VAIL. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the very large amount paid for fuel, $9,000. Could not an economy be effected by the use of coal? The last year I was in charge of the Department I was intending to experiment with coal, to see if a reduction could be made in that amount.

make a great reduction; but it so happens that large wood stoves are used, and it is not possible to replace them by an apparatus for burning coal.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to commissions in the batteries, how many vacancies were filled in "C" Battery from the Military College?

Mr. CARON. Two vacancies were filled by Royal Military College cadets, one by Mr. Benson and the otherby Mr. Riepert. The Commandant, also, is a Royal Military College man.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). How many vacancies are there in all the Schools; or have all the appointments been made?

Mr. CARON. All except in the Cavalry School. We have appointed so far only two officers to "C" Battery. Mr. Benson is now attached to "B" Battery, and Major Holmes is in charge of the district. Besides, there will be three more officers. A Major will be required, and there will be two Lieutenants and one Surgeon.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Is it the intention to send a number of men over to British Columbia from that battery.

Mr. CARON. Yes; it is necessary that we should send out trained men for the purposes of starting the school. Col. Holmes and myself have been corresponding about the matter, and we have already sent one man over. It is the intention to send four or five, possibly a dozen, trained men, who will be instructors for the new school.

Mr. BAKER. At the present moment, so far as I am aware, there is simply a Lieut Col. who is acting Deputy Adjutant, and a Sergeant Major as Drill Instructor. I am not aware that there are any others of "C" Battery at the present moment. I think there is a difficulty existing in getting men for the amount of money that will be paid, according to the eastern scale. I am sorry to say that I do not know any men who will undertake to become per-manent soldiers in "C" Battery, for the same amount of remuneration that Chinamen and Indians are geting out there.

Mr. CARON. We will not take Chinamen.

Mr. BAKER. I hope not, and if it was the intention of the Department to take Indians, I think the school would prove a failure. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister the advisability of slightly increasing the amount of remuneration that will be given to those men in "C" Battery, until the trans continental railway shall have reached British Columbia, so that it will allow those who are already in the force an opportunity of deciding whether they would like to join the permanent force or not.

Mr. LISTER. There is no need of a battery out there at all. There are only 15,000 people in the whole Province.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. CARON. As a strategetical point, there is no place in Canada as important as British Columbia, or where there is more need of an artillery force.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I think it does not become any hon. member of this House to try to belittle any Province in this Dominion, by stating there are only a certain number of people in that Province. I wish to inform that hon. gentieman there is more than double the number he has mentioned in British Columbia-there is more than 30,000.

Mr. LASTER. I am glad, indeed, to hear the hon. gentle-man's statement, because it corrects my impression that the white population of British Columbia does not exceed 15,000. So far as the battery is concerned, I fail to see any need of Mr. CARON. 11 is a very large sum, but it is impossible it in British Columbia. It seems to me that British Colum-to Telever it If it were pessible to burn coal, we might Blans want a great deal of money out of the Treasury of this country to serve as soldiers. Perhaps it would be well to postpone this until the Pacific Railway is built, and then we can send a battery there.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. That has been the policy all through, to defer the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it appears to be the policy at the present time. I am happy to say, however, that the party the hon. gentleman supports is not in power to carry out that idea.

Mr. BAKER. I would like to say to the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) that it is not only necessary to have soldiers, and a battery, and schools of gunnery to protect individuals, but there is very valuable property to be defended, and you have also to take into consideration the millions that are yet to roll into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McCRANEY. There is an item in the Public Accounts here which I would like to have explained, and it is this:

I. Taylor, agent for Mrs. Faragina, Russian Leather permeator, $160 00

Mr. CARON. So far, as I know, it is used for the purpose of keeping leather of harness and boots in a soft and pliable condition. It was recommended by the Commandants of the batteries; a certain quantity was obtained and is still used.

65. Osvalry and Infantry Schools-payments and equipment...... $171,000.00

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). How many of the recent appointments as officers of the Military Schools are graduates of the Military College.

Mr. CARON. Four; these do not include two I have mentioned as joining "A" Battery.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I rather think that other considerations beside those connected with the Militia service influence appointments. I asked the hon. Minister a question with regard to an appointment to one of these Schools, that of Major Henry Smith, and in reply he said :

"He was appointed Adjutant of the 40th Battalion and attached to a regular regiment at Halifax for three months prior to his appointment as Captain in the In antry School Corps at Toronto, with pay at $3 per day and allowance for rations and lodging."

He was appointed 27th December, and consequently, was attached during three months prior to that time, to one of the regiments at Halifax, at $3 perday. During part of that time, the same gentleman was in the West Riding of Middlesex, where a very interesting political contest was going on, and the result of his appearance was that he was obliged to present himself before the magistrate in that neighbourhood, and in an affidavit he made a statement to this effect:

"My home is at Cobourg, but I attend the Military School at Toronto. I was, at the time of the election, Secretary of the West Northumberland Conservative Association. "For what purpose were you in West Middlesex? "To assist Mr. Johnston and Dr. Roomein the election."

That evidence was given in London, on 26th January, 1884, and referred to an incident which occurred between 10th and 14th December, showing that Major Henry Smith, who at the time was under the pay of the Department, and supposed to be attached to a regular regiment at Halifax, for the purpose of receiving military instruction, was really interesting himself actively in a political campaign. Of all the Departments of the Government from which it is essential to keep free from political motives, the military department is the most important. While this gentleman was attached to the Volunteer force he had full right to exercise the franchise, and to act as Secretary of the West North-umberland Conservative Association, but while in West Middlesex he was in the regular pay of the Government, and was practically a pupil preparing himself can speak with assurance of the great and intimate ac-to take a commission in one of the echools. I regret quaitance which these men showed with military matters, that the position was not offered to some graduate of the Military College. Out of the eleven or twelve appointments, only four were given to graduates of the College. I certainly think the Military Schools should be kept free of any taint; otherwise, they will come to be assumed as established for only a section of the community, and the impression may get abroad that they are used as political engines, in which event they will no longer be useful.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This officer was appointed from the active Militia. If there are any men in the country who were deserving of appointments in those Schools, they are officers who have taken part in the active force. These have even stronger claims than graduates of the Military College. It is very desirable that they should go to Halifax and be attached to a regiment for a time, because many things in the conduct of the school can be better learned in the regular course of regimental duties. With respect to political considerations in the active Militia, they should not be tolerated, but that a man in the active force should lose all his political rights would be to carry the doctrine too far.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not understand the case. This gentleman, Major Smith, during the time he was reported as undergoing instructions at Halifax, was actually taking part in a political contest. Surely, the hon. member for Muskoka does not think that right.

Mr. O'BRIEN. No.

Mr. CARON. I agree with the observations of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). However anxious I may be to provide for the Royal Military College cadets, it would be wrong, on the part of a Minister of Militia, to overlook the claims of the old Militia force of Canada. They have done service whenever required, and certainly we should not throw them aside completely and give every position to the military cadets. I am anxious to do all that can be done for them, but I cannot forget that the Militia force of Canada stood by us in time of danger when required, and certainly they are entitled to share these positions with the new comers who are trained in the Military College. With regard to the hon. gentleman's charge, of the Department being political, I can only say that the Department is not political, and that this particular officer was not on duty at the time. Several gentlemen, in referring to the officers who have been sent to Halifax and to England, seem to consider that they were incompetent to hold these positions, until they received instructions in England, or from the regular regiment at Halifax. This is quite a mistake, as the hon. gentleman will see. The Major General commanding the Forces in Canada, after the commissions were granted, decided to recommend that every officer be put in training for three months with a regular regiment, so as to brush up whatever knowledge they had, and also to get an internal knowledge of the economy of the regiment, which can only be acquired by living in the barracks, with the regiment, and being trained with it for a certain given time. I am happy to say that the Commandants who went to England brought back the best possible certificates from the officers by whom they were trained. The other officers who were sent to Halifax received their certificates from the Commandant Lord Alexander Russell, and when I had the pleasure of meeting that gentleman, he spoke in the highest possible terms of the soldier-like bearing of the young men we sent down there.

Mr. DALY. It would seem as if hon. gentlemen opposite doubted that Major Smith was at Halifax at all; but I can 'assure them that he was there a considerable time, and that he served on duty with great credit to himself. From my acquaintance with military circles in Halifax, I before they went there; they merely went to Halifax to become more thoroughly acquainted with the discipline of the regular army.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). No one doubts but that they were at Halifax. What I say is that they were accepted as appointees to one of these Military Schools, and for a three months' course in Halifax—that was the case in this particular instance, at any rate. The hon. gentleman, the Minister of Militia, now says besides that a portion of that three months was spent in leave of absence.

Mr. CARON. I do not say that at all; I say that if the officer went up to the constituency the hon. gentleman refers to, he was on leave. He had gone through the training at Halifax, and was on leave.

Mr. LISTER, Was he still under pay?

Mr. CARON. Yes; he was under pay.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I am taking the hon. gentleman's own answer to a question I asked him, when he stated that this gentleman, until the time he was gazetted to the School, was under the pay of the Government, at $3 per day. I assumed that that was correct, and taking that information as a basis, I had no other course than to assume that while he was there he was under the pay of the Government. Now, that is proved further by his own statement in court at London, that he was an officer in the Military School. In reference to the other question, I am prepared to concede to the officers of the volunteer force all the justice they are entitled to in such cases. They should be shown all the consideration that the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), claims for them. But there is another question. There is a Military School, which costs a good deal of money, and the question is, is it any use to the country? If it is, it is only natural that positions, such as that reterred to, should be given to the graduates of the School, because if they are doing any good there, they are supposed to be more proficient in the details of military life than those who are only attached to the volunteer service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is very unfortunate that that officer should have mixed himself up with the elections. However, my hon. friend will have an opportunity on Concurrence," I dare say, of expressing his view on that subject emphatically. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman if I understood him correctly in saying that there were nine officers attached to the Cavalry and Infantry Schools?

Mr. CARON. Twelve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And of these, four, I think he said, were cadets, two of whom had commissions in the Imperial army already.

Mr. CARON. There are only two cadets in the schools.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Which two?

Mr. CARON. Mr. Frier and Mr. Siers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Two of these were gentlemen holding commissions in the Imperial army. do not obj ct to their being employed, but it is no good to the other cadets. What length of standing have the other ten, or what was the minimum?

Mr. CARON. The only one who was out of the service at the time is Herring He was made a Lieutenant when he went to Halifax. Major William Gordon was from the 14th Battalion. Major William Henry Vidal belonged to to the 12th Battalion. Major Henry Smith was Adjutant of the 40th Battalion. Lieutenant Charles J. Coursol was in the 65th Battalion. Lieutenant David Douglass Young was attached to the force in Quebec; he is the son of a Quebec lumber merchant; and lived for a time in England, where he joined a militia battalion. Mr Herring came from the Eastern Townships. Mr. Wadmore is a gentleman who came out from England where he had been for several years Adjutant in a volunteer battalion. When he came to Canada he joined the School in Halifax, and although there only a short time, he passed a very brilliant examination, and is looked upon as a very valuable addition to our force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But he had never held a commission in the Canadian Minitia at all?

Mr. CARON. I think not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGAT. It may sound somewhat ungracious; but, having reference to the fact that so many of our own cadets had not received the offer of any appointment of this sort, and also to the fact that there are a great many deserving officers, as the hon. member for Muskoka pointed out, in the force, whose services ought to be recognized, it is very much to be regretted that these were all passed over in favour of Mr. Wadmore, unless there were very great reasons, which do not appear, for giving him the preference.

66. Government aid towards sending a team of Oanadian Militia artillerymen to Shoe-buryness, England, or for artillery competition in Canada..... $2,000 00

Mr. CARON. I am going to drop this vote; but before doing so, I would like to read a short paragraph taken from an English newspaper, about the team that represented Canada at Shoeburyness last year. It is headed "Canadians honoured by their closest competitors," and is as follows : --

"Sir Thomas Brassey, K.C.B., M.P., at the distribution of prizes to the Third Kent Artillery (Royal Arsenal Brigade), on February 12th, said, in addressing the brigate, that he had been informed by Colonel Hozier that on the occasion of the late competitions at Shoeburynees, the corps, for almost the first time in its history, did not get the first place, which it usually held; but they had been beaten by a party of volunteers from Canada, and if the men of the Third Kent were to yield the palm to any competitors, no rivals should be more welcome than their gallant friends from Canada. "The presence of volunteers from Cana ia,' he said, 'proves that the good example set by the home volun-teers is being followed by the great colonial dependencies, and they know that the Force is even more important with them than with us. Depend upon it the emergency might be greater in Canada, and there Depend upon it the emergency might be greater in Canada, and there-tore we should rejoice that the Canadians, with our fellow-countrymen in Australia, have formed greater bodies of volunteers."

I may state that after the team returned to Canada, I received several letters speaking in the highest possible terms of their behaviour while in England and of the high position they took among their comrades there.

67. Improved Rifled Ordnance $15,000 00

Mr. CARON. This is for the purpose of getting muzzle-loading guns for our batteries. The guns now in the hands of some of our batteries have become perfectly useless. I hope every year, for four or five years hence, that a considerable vote will be allowed by Parliament for the purpose of providing guns that are necessary for properly arming our batteries. There is no use of our keeping them up unless we give them proper guns.

Mr. DAVIES. What kind of guns are they?

Mr. CARON. Nine-pounder muzzle-loading field guns, with carriages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman made some experiments two or three years ago, if I remember rightly, in constructing ordnance in Montreal. What became of the guns there constructed?

Mr. CARON. The experiment, to a great extent, failed, I am sorry to say. It was tried when my hon. predecessor, Mr. Masson, was at the head of the Department. As far as solving the problem of transforming the guns is concerned, it has been a complete success. One has been finished, and it has been tested by Major-General Strange and other officers, and has proved to be a very excellent gun. There were ten guns ordered. The contract was given to Gilbert & Son, Montreal. They got into difficulties, however, I believe, and they abandoned the contract. The Department transferred the matter to the Department of Justice, and the case is now before the courts. Judgment is only delayed by the absence of Major-General Strange, the witness required to prove our case. But I hope he will be here shortly, when the case will go on and be decided.

Resolutions to be reported; Committee to sit again.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and at (2:20 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 28th March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. SCRIVER moved that the First Report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament be concurred in. He said: It will be remembered that I made a motion for the adoption of this report some days ago, and at the request of the First Minister and several hon. members of the House the matter was left over for further consideration. I beg to state now, what I stated on that occasion, that the important matter of the report is a recommendation that certain legal works in the Library be transferred to the Library of the Supreme Court, and put under the Department of Justice. The recommendation does not, however, propose that any works which are needed for use or consultation by members of this House shall be so removed, and it proposes that this work of transferrence shall be done under the supervision of yourself, Sir, the Speaker of the Senate, and several members of the legal profession who are members of this House, and therefore it will be done with great care, and in a way not to prejudice the rights and convenience of the members of this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am informed that it is the practice of some legal gentlemen to carry away numbers of books, and I would like to know if that is the case.

Mr. SPEAKER. Not to my knowledge. If it is done it is contrary to the rules.

Mr. CARON. It will be remembered that the report came before us a few days ago and it was hold over for a further consideration of the question of what books should be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the Supreme Court Library. Now it seems to me that it would be fraught with the greatest inconvenience to members of Parliament if the books were transferred from our Library to the Library of the Supreme Court. The inconvenience to which the Supreme Court may be put to at present would be felt by members of Parliament, which would be deprived of books which are continually consulted during the sitting of Parliament, upon questions affecting legislation and matters upon which discussions take place in the House. Now, I do not see how any book affecting jurisprudence, or eivil law, or the common law, or the statute law of Great Britain, or books of American law, could be dispensed with in a Library like our own. I think it is very important that the Library of the Supreme Court should be made as complete and as perfect as possible, but I do not see that we could consent to that Library being improved at the expense of our own. The time of hon. members here during the sitting of Parliament is so limited, so taken up by Parliamentary work that it would become almost impossible for hon. members to be running from the Parliament building to the Supreme Court to consult such books. There is another inconvenience which must strike every hon. member; at four o'clock or five, the Supreme Court Library, as I understand, will be closed, and this would prevent any hon. member from consulting these books. If the other inconvenience which I consider to be an insuperable difficulty to the transfer that is now spoken of, the inconvenience of running down to the Library for these books could not be overlooked. I think the Library has suffered from books not being there when they were sent for, and asked for many times. Several of the American and English reports have been transferred to the Supreme Court Library, and I am told, at great inconvenience to members of this House. I think so far as the standard works are concerned, if it is necessary that the Supreme Court should have them their might be duplicate copies, but certainly we should not deprive hon. members of this House of the advantage of consulting such works.

Mr. BLAKE. I entirely concur with the hon. gentleman in the view that the Parliamentary Library ought to contain all books which are ordinarily required for the discharge of our Parliamentary duties; and I agree with him also that if it is a question of the convenience of the Judges of the supreme Court and the professional gentlemen attending the Supreme Court, and the convenience of the members of Parliament in the discharge of their Parliamentary duties, it is obviously our duty to attend to our own convenience in this regard. I was myself extremely doubtful of the expediency of the action of the Library Committee some two or three years ago in removing the reports from the Library at all. I had not the good fortune to be present at that meeting of the Committee or I should have opposed that proposition, because it seemed to me to be one very doubtful in its propriety. At present we are thus circumstanced: the reports are in the Supreme Court, and the text books are in the Library. Now the hon. gentleman knows, as every member of the legal profession knows, as every hon. member who is not a lawyer, upon a moment's consideration, must perceive that this disjunction of the reports and text books destroys the utility of either branch of the Library. We cannot use the text books-no person who is worthy the name of a lawyer, uses the text books, the ordinary class of text books, except as a vehicle to convey his enquiries into the report, in which he finds set out at length that which is oftentimes with extreme brevity, and sometimes with the inaccuracy which belongs to extreme condensation, presented in the text books. No thorough lawyer takes his learning from the text books. There are of course approved text books which form standard works of law, from which you may sometimes properly quote, but as a rule it is entirely unsafe to deal with a text book unless fortified by the report. Now, the circumstances in which Parliament is at present situated are that we have the text books in the Library; but if we want to refer to those authorities on which the text books in main depend for their authenticity and value, and which contain fall expositions of those decisions from which the text books draw their conclusions, we must either go or send down to the Library of the Supreme Court. I did not understand that such an arrangement would be tolerable at all on the for the purposes of Parliament-I distinguish these from the purposes that a member may have in the discharge of his legal avocation while here-when called upon to consult a report, should be required to leave this building and go to the Supreme Court. I understood that the terms on which the reports were sent there were that they should not merely be accessible to us there, but that when we wanted any particular report, a messenger could be sent down and the report obtained. I also understood that it was not intended that the hours which the Supreme Court might please to occupy, and which the discharge of judicial duties rendered reasonable, should confine our access to those books. But as a necessary incident of the reports being transforred to the Supreme Court, that library would have to be kept opened as long as this House was sitting, and the officer should be kept in attendance for the purpose of supplying any report for which a messenger might be sent from this House. I maintain that unless a system of that kind prevails, we shall not have the facilities that we ought to have, to render the arrangement a proper one for the discharge of our Parliamentary duties. It certainly was not intended by the Library Committee last Session, when its re-port was presented to the House, that those text books which are in constant use by members of Parliament-for instance, text books on criminal law, which were cited as those to which we frequently have to refershould be removed from our own shelves here. But there are a number of text books which do not partake of that character. You may want to see them, perhaps only once in the Session, when some particular question may be up. But, as a rule they are only for lawyers in the pursuit of their avocation, and not for the Parliamentarian. It seems, then, that it is reasonable to adopt this view—that the reports and those text books which are more lawyers' text books than those of the Parliamentarian should be given, but on the condition I have mentioned, that the Library containing them shall be open as long as this House is open, and that there shall be facility for a member to send down and get what he wants. Either that or you will have to retrace your steps, and bring the text books back. Now, on the whole, with the modifications I have suggested, the experiment might be tried of leaving the law reports, and the kind of text books to which 1 have referred, down there. But the present state of things is entirely unsatisfactory. I have not considered the matter from the point of view of the Supreme Court, because that, though not unimportant, is a secondary consideration, so far as the discharge of our public and Parlia mentary duties is concerned.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I was glad to hear my hon. friend the Minister of Militia enter a protest against the transferrence of a portion of the law library from the Library of Parliament to the Supreme Court. I was glad to hear the objection come from him, because it seems to me that he and his colleagues have the remedy in their own hands. If it is necessary for us to have in the Library of Parliament the law reports as well as the text books, we ought to have them there. I think the country is rich enough to provide the Judges of the Supreme Court, and the profession practicing in the Supreme Court, with a proper set both of text books and reports. The cost of provid-ing a set there and a set in our own Library would be so inconsiderable that it is a reproach to Parliament that it has not supplied the necessary funds for that purpose. However, if I recollect rightly, when I ventured on a former occasion, in this House, to object to the removal of the text books, my hon. friend who has just sat down was pleased, in a jocular remark, probably intended for my personal benefic, to make some allusion to members of this House following their professional avocation while professing to dis- hon. gentleman. charge their Parliamentary duties. No doubt I may occasionally do that, as all of us are obliged to do. But, apart altogether Mr. BLAKE, from the advantage and convenience to members of this House who happen to be lawyers of having access to such reports as they require to consult in the ordinary business of their profession, I do entertain the opinion that a complete set of law reports as well as text books is essential to a complete Parliamentary Library. When I take up the order paper, I see among the Public Bills and orders the titles of Bills respecting carriers by land, respecting the election of members of the House of Commons, respecting a Court of Railway Commissi ners, respecting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, respecting titles to land, respecting the distribution of the assets of insolvent debtors, respecting the Patent Act, respecting the law of evidence, and numerous other subjects of that kind upon which for the proper discharge of our Parliamentary duties it is necessary for us to refer to the reports as well as the text books. I therefore think the Parliamentary Library is not adequate for the purpose for which it was designed unless it contains them toth, and I think that the removal of these reports to the Supreme Court was a deprivation of the Library of Parliament, and an injury to its usefulness. I think the cost of a duplicate set would be a mere bagatelle. Certainly under $5,000 would provide a complete set of reports for one or the other library, and a complete set, I think, should be provided for both. In order that we may satisfactorily discharge our Parliamentary duties here, we need the reports as well as the text books. It is absurd, as the hon. member for West Durham has pointed out, to separate the text books from the reports, for each is valueless without the other. We require the text book to guide us in finding those reports to which we must refer, and we need the reports to ascertain authoritatively what the law is, because every lawyer knows that if we cannot rely on any statement in the text books we ought to be able to verify it by referring to the report. For these reasons, and especially as I have heard the hon. Minister of Militia object to this severance of the reports from the text books, I hope the true remedy will be provided, namely, to supply a complete set both of text books and law reports for the Supreme Court Library and the Library of Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think sufficient has been shown in the statements made to convince my hon. friend who moved the adoption of this report on behalf of the Library Committee, that it does not meet with the approbation of the House. My hon. friend, I think, had better withdraw his motion, and the Library Committee being made aware of the general feeling of the House, can take other action.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) has enormously underestimated the cost of supplying the two libraries with complete sets of reports, when he says $4,000 or $5,000 would do this. It would not do for the House to run away with the notion that this could be accomplished for less than $20,000.

Mr. MILLS. It would at least require that sum, and the observations made show that great inconvenience would arise, under any circumstances, from the division of the Library. This discussion shows the propriety of having the Archives, the General Library and the law reports placed in the same building so as to be easily accessible. Perhaps, if the hon. gentlemat could see his way to dispense with the Senate, the Supreme Court might occupy the second Chamber and the difficulty be thus got over.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think I would like to see this House abelished on the proposition of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. Not this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the second Chamber.

Mr. MILLS. This is the first,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the House of Lords is before the House of Commons. The question of the Archives is quite a different one from that of the Library. I quite agree with everything said against the divorce of the text books from the reports. The text books are merely a sort of analytical index of what the reports contain, and no lawyer would be satisfied to rest his legal argument on the text book without first verifying it by examination of the reports. It is better that the practitioners of the Supreme Court, and even the Judges, should be put to a little inconvenience, by having to come up here occasionally to the Library to examine the text books rather than that Parliament should be put to a great inconvenience when a discussion takes place late in the afternoon. If it be an important question that is under discussion, members run to the Library for the purpose of getting books to strengthen their argument or see whether the statement made is correct, and though a book may not be wanted more than once or twice in a Session, it still may be wanted for the discussion of a very important measure, and if not here, great inconvenience and injury may result. On the whole the House is not prepared, at all events, to concur in the report, and I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion rather than have a vote on it.

Mr. SCRIVER. Before withdrawing my motion, I might ask you Mr. Speaker, whether the proper way subsequently would not be to move a reference of the report back to the Library Committee with the request that this portion be reconsidered. If I withdraw my motion the report remains before the House, and some disposition will have to be made of it.

Mr. SPEAKER. You can withdraw your motion and then move that the report be referred back on an amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move in amendmen that all the words after "That" be struck out and the fol_t lowing inserted :

The said Report be referred back to the Joint Committee on the Library for further consideration.

Amendment agreed to.

SAN FRANCISCO, WINNIPEG AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ORTON moved that Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the san Francisco, Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company be withdrawn and the fees and charges paid thereon refunded, less the cost of printing and translation, in accordance with the Thirteenth Report of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

P. E. I. COMPENSATION CLAIMS.

Mr. DAVIES moved for copies of Orders in Council, relating to any claim made by the Government of Prince Edward Island for compensation for money expended in constructing or repairing piers in that Province, and to the examination of, and report upon the piers of that Province.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman should confine himself to asking for a copy of the Order in Council which contains a complete report. But if he asks for the reports on the wharves, he cannot expect to have that for months. It is a very voluminous work, and it is not required. If the hon. gentleman wants the Order in Council and statement, he had better confine himself to that, and I will bring it down on Monday.

Mr. DAVIES. Of course, in the position in which I am, I will have to accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The report would make more than a ream of paper with the plans, and of course it is a 'abour of several months. I simply warned the hon. gentleman that, if he wants the information, he had better confine himself to the Order in Council.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 130) to amend the Civil Service Acts of 1882 and 1883.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Bill contains very few changes of the Acts now in force. It is proposed to make a little clearer a certain clause for the classification of the different employé; and the examination which those employés have t) undergo. Another change concerns the promotion examination. Some difficulties have occurred under the law as it exists, as to whether the promotion examinations were not sometimes. I will not say out of the reach, but consisting of subjects which would not be necessary or would be outside of the reach of those who have passed several years in the Civil Service in their different positions. This new Act provides that the subjects of examination for promotion will have to consist chiefly of the different subjects concerning the requirements of each Department and of each branch of each Department, and that these subjects will have to be chosen after consultation between the Deputy-Head of the Department and the Head of the Department, and then submitted to the Board of Examiners for examination, the examination of course taking place according to the rules made by the Board of Civil Service Examiners. Another small change is made in the case of attorneys, barristers, military or civil engineers and some special officers, who by the law now in force are exempted from the promotion examination. It is to make it clearer. It is proposed to state that, in the case of attorneys, barristers, engineers (military or civil) officers of artillery in the Militia Department, architects, actuaries, land surveyors or draughtsmen, when employed or seeking promotion in the line of their profession, they may be dispensed from examination. We understand that, if a lawyer would like to enter into the Civil Service as an ordinary clerk, he will have to be subject to examination in the same way as other candidates, but, if a man is employed for special services, either as a lawyer or a member of either of the other professions mentioned in the Act, he would be exempted from this examination. Another small change is made on account of extra or additional remuneration, which might be paid to Deputy-Heads and other employés. The law sail "unless such a sum should be put in the Estimates for such a pur-pose." It is proposed to change the wording to "unless a sum is voted by Parliament for the purpose." Then there is a change in reference to the office of inspectors in the Post Office Department. The assistant Post Office inspectors were appointed at a certain salary, and required ten years' service before they received the $200 increase, and ten years more before another increase. These officers will have at their appointment $1,200, and, as the clerks in the office over which they preside, they will have the ordinary increase of $50 a year to a maximum of $1,600. Superintendents of letter carriers is an office which has been created in the Post Office Department, and their salary, instead of $400 is to be $600, with the ordinary increase of $40. Those are the principle changes. The chief aspect of the Bill as a new departure is in reference to the examination for promotion, about which there has been a good deal of complaint made. It will be also asked, as I stated before, that a salary of $600 be paid to a clerk to assist the Board of Civil Service Examiners. I have given notice of a resolution to that effect.

Bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like the Government to make some statement as to public business during the remainder of this Session. I think the time has arrived when the convenience of all parties would be consulted by such a statement. It practically reduces itself into a question of the measures not yet brought down, and the Franchise Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When we got to the Orders of the Day I was prepared to have gone over the different items. I find that after sitting three months a majority of the members of the House are anxious, if possible, that we should prorogue on or about Easter, if the state of public business will permit.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have come to the conclusion that if we press the Franchise Bill we cannot hope to prorogue at that time, therefore Government have made up their minds to move to discharge that item and then, with due diligence, and short speeches, I think we may get through the rest of the paper. There will be some difficulty, I dare say, with measures that may come from the Upper House, but they will not take much time, and I propose to put a notice on the paper to introduce a Bill amending in some regards the License Bill of last Session. That, with the business on the paper, will, I think, very nearly dispose of the whole of the public business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if there is any chance for us to get some of those undiscussed motions passed for returns. There are some papers that I would like very much to get down. Could we not come to an arrangement to pass those notices of motions upon which there is no discussion, at once, so that we may get out the papers next Session if we cannot get them this?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and I would pro pose to-night, or Monday night, to go over the paper and call over those items that are not opposed. But as I had occasion to state before, my experience has been that the moment one item is opposed, the hon. gentleman who has charge of it gets angry and says: "Well, if that is opposed I will oppose every other motion on the paper." I have seen that done again and again. So that if we try that experiment once again it must be with the understanding that an hon. gentleman so moving shall make no remarks.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And that if any one says "oppose," the hon. gentleman must submit with good nature and not hurt his neighbours.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest to-night.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Suppose we do it now.

Mr. BLAKE. The happy result which the hon, gentleman has foreshadowed of an early prorogation is a little dependent upon the period at which he will bring down the measures which are not yet brought down. He mentioned the License Act, and said that a couple of other measures would practically conclude the business. His the hon, gentleman altogether forgotten Quebec?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, we will take care of Quebec.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. BLAKE. No, but I am in earnest, because we want to know when. The hon. gentleman said he would bring the Quebec Bill down this week.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not be able quite to bring it down this week; we will bring it down early next week. With regard to these notices of motion, if anybody says "oppose," then it must be dropped; but I hope hon. members won't oppose any motion for a return of papers.

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite sure no hon. member will be so churlish, because his motion is opposed, either by Government or some other member, as to prevent other hon. members from getting their motions disposed of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the hon. gentlemen is an optimist.

Mr BLAKE. I have heard him several times make this statement, but I think it is not the general experience he refers to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would just say, however, since this arrangement has been made, that if any hon. gentleman does not happen to be present when his motion is called, the motion will not be dropped,

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly.

ENQUIRIES INTO SHIPWRECKS.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Act respecting enquiries and investigations into Shipwrecks and other matters, as to the powers of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in certain cases reported to him under it.

Mr. DAV1ES. There must be a mistake in inserting the second section, which has escaped the attention of the hon. Minister. The Bill was passed through Committee so hurriedly that I had not time to notice it. The second section reads as follows :--

"No confirmation by the Governor or person administering the Government of Canada, of any report under the Act hereby amended, is or has been required since the passing of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862, the provision in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, referring to such confirmation being expressely repealed as from that time, by the Merchant Shipping (Colonial Inquiries) Act, 1882."

There is no sense in enacting that; it is simply a mere instruction, or a memo which the Deputy-Head or somebody in the Department has made and which was incorporated in the Bill by mistake.

Mr. McLELAN. In the old Act such confirmation was required, and this takes it away.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the third clause should be eliminated as well as the second, for the third clause is also merely an explanation of what the law is.

Mr. McLELAN. The decision of the law clerk was that as the old law enacted that it was necessary the reports should be confirmed, it was necessary now to affirm that the Governor need not confirm them.

Mr. WELDON. Then simply repeal the clause. This does not repeal it.

Mr. BLAKE. This is not an amendment to the law it is simply an assertion of what the law is.

Mr. MILLS. It was evidently an instruction written by some officer for the draughtsman, and the draughtsman, instead of accepting it as an instruction, accepted it as a clause. It enacts nothing, but simply explains what the law is. The hon, gentleman might make a Bill of a hundred pages precisely in the same way by stating a hundred things that the law does not enact.

Order for third reading allowed to stand,

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 126) respecting the Vancouver Island Railway, the Esquimalt Graving Dock, and certain railway lands of the Province of British Columbia, granted to the Dominion.

Mr. GORDON. I desire to say that I regret very much that a matter of so great importance to Canada should be passed over in such a manner as it is passed over in this Bill. I desire before its final passage to enter my last protest against it. It has been stated by the hon, the Minister of Railways that the coal mines of British Columbia have lain there undeveloped for the last fifty years, and that one of the results of the passage of this Bill will be to create a greater development of the coal industries. If the hon, gentleman were to go back fifty years, he might have taken a voyage of discovery from the 1sthmus of Panama to Behring's Straits, and he would scarcely have found a white man on the Pacific coast at that time. It is within the last ten years that the great industries of the Pacific coast have sprung into existence. During thirteen years of that period, these lands to which I am now referring have been absolutely closed from development, no matter how desirous capitalists may have been in any part of the world to secure those lands. It has been stated, and I am sorry to say with considerable emphasis, that these lands have not been closed, and that the reserve has been lifted. That, Sir, is not a fact. The reservation has never been lifted from what is known as the Island railway belt. It has merely been modified, its boundaries have been changed, but the same proclamation which changed those boundaries re-reserved the lands as they are to-day. The reservation may be found in the British Columbia Gazette of June 14th, 1883, in which they cancelled the reservation of 1873 placed on these lands at the instance of the Dominion Government. It merely rearranges the boundaries of the land proposed to be given away, and re-reserves the land in the same proclamation, so that my hop. friend the junior member for Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare) was entirely astray in his bold declaration that the Provincial Government had taken the reservation from those lands, and I am astonished to think that he would make such a declaration when the evidence to the contrary was to be found in the Library of Parliament. Another reference also was made to the fact that the company that had been incorporated, known as the Clements' Syndicate, were receiving more lands and more moneys than this present Bill proposes to give. That, Sir, is also a mistake, and that it is a mistake is proved from the maps that define the limits conveyed in this Bill. It may all appear very well to say that this land grant extends half between Courtney River and Seymour Narrows. At first sight it would convey the impression that this was the boundary of the land to be given to the company; but, if you look further, you find that all the alienated lands in the belt are to be taken out of the contiguous lands to the north of that line, which will include nearly every foot of land within the boundaries of the original reservation. Then again the boundaries were changed, running across, as it were, detaching the Victoria peninsula from the original twentymile belt, and it was so arranged that the line was to strike cross the head of Saanich Inlet to Muir Creek, on the Straits of Fuca. Take a straight line from that point to Crown Mountain, and you will have a uniform width of twenty-four miles, and the whole of the land in the belt as now defined will be greater than the twenty-mile belt from Seymour Narrows to Esquimalt, especially when you consider that the original reservation included also the lands alienated from the Crown. On these points, I desire to set the matter straight, although I do not think the hon. gentleman did it with a view of deceiving the House, but it would have that tendency, it would have a tendency to reduce the lago San Francisco was largely dependent upon the Coosh quantity of land, and as a consequence reduce the value of the gift to this company. Now, the hon. the senior member for Victoria (Mr. Baker), I think, in his estimate of the value of this land, placed it at $4,631,100. He was very careful in his estimate.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Oh, it is pretty approximate.

Mr. GORDON. Approximate, I presume. Well, a letter which appeared in the Toronto Globe and was re-published in the Montreal Gazette, and which is not at all unlikely to have been written in the interests of this company, after giving a general description of British Columbia, states that mineral and timber lands within this reserve will be sold by the syndicate at the uniform price of $10 an acre, free from all reservations and conditions whatever. Now, $10 an acre on 2,000,000 acres of land is exactly what my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Homer) and myself have contended is being given to this company, $20,000,000 in round numbers, not taking into account at all the increased value of the coal at its real value. Now, $10 an acre is no price at all for good coal land; $40 an acre has been paid within the last three months.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Not to the Government.

Mr. GORDON. To individuals, within the belt, for the mineral rights only, to private holders. So that, in order to ease down the public sentiment of Canada, and prevent people from looking at what they the Company are getting and looking at it closely, they proclaim, or some one for them, proclaims that $10 an acre will be the price; but I venture to say that if the hon. the leader of the Government were to introduce a clause into the Bill making it compulsory for them to sell at a uniform price of $10 an acre, in alternate sections of 5,000 acres each, through the District of Comox, from the Qualicum River to Seymour Narrows, some effort would be made by them to prevent any such clause being put into their Act. It is not my desire, and it is a hopeless case, to plead against the Government and the Opposition united and to stand up here as an individual, or two or three individuals, to declare what we believe to be the facts. The question has been raised that this question has arisen out of the sectional differences between the mainland and the Island. That has no existence whatever. How could I, as an Island man, submit to such a proposition? I represent the largest part of Vancouver Island, extending from within five miles of the city of Victoria to its northernmost limit. I have a right to believe and to feel that the interests of these people are to be sacrificed, and consequently I have a right to act regardless as to the location. I do not regard the Gulf of Georgia as separating any part of the Province of British Columbia from any other part. It is a natural highway, and does not separate Vancouver Island from the mainlind any more than a highway through the Island separates one part of the Island from the other, and in my view has no political significance whatever.

Mr. BAKER. Swim across it and see.

Mr. GORDON. It is a good thing we have it. So I think I have disposed of those points pretty conclusively, the reservation has never been raised, and the proof of that is that it has been impossible for any man to secure one foot of land, to get a Crown grant to any extent, within that country since the 1st of June, 1873. It is wrong to state that the non-development of that country is at all attributable to the lack of enterprise of the people. They have been de-barred from availing themselves of those vast resources which have been lying there so long and are only now being opened up on account of the increased vitality that commerce and manufactures are now receiving on the Pacific coast. It is only now that our coal is beginning to be appreciated; it is only now that the people of San Francisco find they cannot do without our coal. Until a few years

Bay, the Newcastle and Bellingham coal mines. The Bellingham Bay mine has not produced any coal for years; the Coosh Bay mine is so exhausted that it cannot be worked profitably; and within the last few weeks I saw the Newcastle mine was on fire. None of this coal stands equal to ours in the markets of San Francisco. It has become a matter of necessity to them to have our coal. Why, Sir, I can remember twenty years ago when there were 20,000 or 30,000 tons of coal lying at the Vancouver Coal Company's pit's-head without any one making an offer for it, when they could not dispose of it, and when the men had to lie idle for months because there was no demand for the article. What is the case now? After the three months' strike last summer at the Wellington colliery was terminated, and when the steamship Wellington went into San Francisco with the first cargo after the strike had ended, the streets of San Francisco were blockaded for three or four squares with people wanting that coal. Dray men unhitched their horses from the drays and left them standing in position in order that they might secure their load in turn. That is the position our coal holds in San Francisco, and that position will be maintained provided that a lively and healthy competition exists, which can only be secured by a number of capitalists being engaged in the same enterprise, that is, in rival enterprises in that particular industry. Then, again, if this land is all thrown into the hands of one company what is to become of the other mines? Rivalry in coal mining will naturally bring the price to that point which would enable a company of capitalists, even though they were all interested in different mines, and perhaps induce them to take steps to develop our iron mines -at any rate far sooner than if all our coal resources were left in the hands of one company, who desired them for one purpose especially, and that is to serve their railway across the continent for all time to come, and then to serve their own interests by getting the highest price possible for their coal, which they could do if they had no competi-tion, whether in San Francisco or at the various points north of that. I feel that I have been doing my duty in making one last protest against the passage of this measure I now move in amendment, seconded by Mr. Homer:

That whereas the Act respecting an arrangement with British Columbia provides for important changes in the terms of Union, be it therefore resolved that the modifications proposed by the said Bill be submitted to a direct vote of the people of that Province before receiving the sanction of this Parliament.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to make one observation in relation to that before this important motion is passed, as I was not here during the debate the other night. There is one fact which I have heard stated, and if it is true it has a very important bearing upon this question. I am told, but I do not know how true it is, that the people who control the Central Pacific Railway are the people who own the Pacific steamships, one of the largest fleets of vessels afloat, and who naturally control the steam navigation of the Pacific coast. One of the objects of building the great Canadian Pacific Railway has been to open up communication with the eastern world, China, Japan and the Indies. I am told that the gentleman who is at the back of the gentleman who has got this concession to build this railway in British Columbia, is a gentleman who is getting his support and his money largely from the Pacific Railway people: in other words, the gentleman who is building the road has his support, influence, power and means from the Central or Union Pacific Railways who control the great fleet of Pacific ocean steamers. And if, as I have also heard it stated, they have obtained by this concession, control of the most important coal deposite on the Pacific coast-certainly the most important owners of a portion of that territory—and if, as I am told, these are the only deposits in Canadian territory that are yet absolutely known to be of any great material value, I think it is a matter that demands the most serious consideration of this

Mr Gobdon.

House, and that we should consider it deeply before putting it out of our hands and beyond the control of the Government and handing it over to the control of a rival company of a rival nation. It affects not Canada alone but the Empire. 1 do not know whether the information I have is correct or not, but if it is correct it is a position and a statement that ought to make us pause before we pass into the hands of a foreign company and a foreign people the power to control the great coal deposits without which the use of the Pacific Ocean is nil to any enterprise that Canada may hereafter initiate in connection with our great railway. I am not going to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter, but I have felt it to be my duty to make these remarks, having heard this information from New York-in fact, having had it upon very direct authority, coming from capitalists of that company, who are looking forward to the passage of this measure and expecting that in consequence they will obtain the monopoly of that coal, without which we cannot navigate that ocean; and, in view of these facts, I say it is a position which ought to make the members of the Government hesitate and pause before they pass a measure which will dispossess them of these important interests.

Mr. SUAKESPEARE. I do not desire to occupy the time of the House more than a few minutes. The hon. member for Vancouver District (Mr. Gordon) referred to the short time the coal mining industry had been established in British Columbia—the short time of ten years. To my own knowledge the coal mines of the Province have been worked for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. GORDON. I said so.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I have been in British Columbia myself twenty two years, and I know they were worked two or three years previously.

Mr. GORDON. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I said that twenty years ago there were 20,000 tons of coal at the pit's head of the Vancouver Coal Company, seeking a market. During those twenty years trade has undoubtedly taken a forward movement, but more particularly during the last ten years.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. During that period gentlemen have formed companies for the purpose of working the coal mines of the Province, and the companies have failed. To my own knowledge three companies have thus failed. With respect to the reserve: I have not the documents before me, but I know that action was taken by the Provincial Government with respect to the releasing of the lands reserved on Vancouver Island, and if such action did not take place I am very much surprised, for I can assure the House that at the last General Election that very question was raised and brought up against some members who occupied seats in the Local Legislature, the charge being that of re-leasing the reserve. They were blamed for doing so and were charged with having thus placed themselves in the hands of the Dominion Government. So it certainly was, and is, the impression to-day that the reserve was re-leased by the Provincial Government as regards the lands on Vancouver Island. With respect to the extent of the line, to which the hon. gentleman referred, above Comox, and between there and Seymour Narrows, I contend that this company does not get the same quantity of lands as the Clements' Company were to have received. To my knowledge the Provincial Government have sold lands during the last year, since this settlement was arranged with the Dominion Government, beyond the line to which the company have got lands above Comox. That is proof positive that the company does not get the same quantity of land as the Clements' Company were to obtain. With respect to giving away the coal lands; if this settlement Bill were to be thrown out to-day those lands would be givn ; to some company for the purpose of building the railwaye the Provincial Government themselves would give the coal ands rather than not have the railway built. So far as regards the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) with respect to the steamship line, I fail to see why any objection should be raised on that score, because it is, I believe, generally known that another company is about to place a line of steamships between Victoria or some other point in British Columbia and China-I refer to the Allan Company. I am informed on very good authority that it is their intention at once to place a line of steamships on that route, and also on the route to San Francisco. There need not be the slightest fear entertained that one company will monopolize the whole trade on that part of the coast. Capitalists are always wide awake to invest money wherever there is sufficient business to warrant it; and there will be not only the steamship line which now runs from San Francisco to Victoria, but there will be another steamship line. The Dunsmuir Company intend placing a line of steamers on the same route. So that there will be no monopoly in the hands of one company, but there will be two or three and possibly four lines running. British Columbia is only beginning to be known, and when the rich resources and the great wealth of the country are more generally understood, there will be a great desire on the part of capitalists to direct their attention to that quarter. I have no intention of detaining the House with any prolonged remarks, further than to state this : I am still of the opinion that one of the principal reasons why objections are taken to this measure is the little feeling of jealousy existing between the main land and the Island; and I do not think I would have said so much on this question but for the amendment which was introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster and Victoria District, asking the appointment of a committee to enquire as to a location for the graving dock, which is already located at Esquimault on the Island. That showed on its face a feeling of jealousy, a disposition to take from the Island that to which she is entitled, and that on which the Home Government have decided, the Home Government having agreed to give £50,000 sterling if it was located at Esquimalt. Yet those hon. gentlemen have advocated the appointment of a Committee of this House on the subject, and introduced an amendment to that effect. No further remarks on my part are necessary to show to every hon. member that jealousy is at the top and bottom and all through this matter.

Mr. HOMER. The general opinion of members of the House appears to be that this measure is entirely a local measure, because it has received a majority of the votes in the Local House of British Columbia. But it must be remembered that several measures which passed that House unanimously has been vetoed by the present Government, among the disallowed Bills being a railway Bill, which would have opened up localities which would have proved feeders to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Looking at this question from a national point of view, it is a very important one; and it is this view which the House should take, not a l cal view. This project will interfere very materially with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Parliament has voted millions of money for the construction of that railway, and to secure its early completion, so as to enable it to control the Pacific trade as far as possible. Why then should we vote a vast sum of money to enable a road to be built which will come inte direct competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, especially on the Pacific coast. Some hon. members amendment suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver who were absent when the subject was previously discussed appear to understand that the grant of land which the company are to receive amounts to 2,000,-000 acres, including 400 square miles of coal lands. And according to that report that would amount to 16,000,000 tons per acre, which would give 4,600,000,000 tons of coal, which, at 5 cents per ton, would amount to $230,000,000. Now let us throw off nine-tenths of that have the controlling interest in the Island railway. The amount, and take only one-tenth, and we have the sum of $32,000,000, calculating it at 5 cents per ton. Let us even reduce the amount to $20,000,000, and we have that large sum, in addition to the iron one and other minerals which are to be given to this monopoly, to build 70 miles of railway. Now, who are these men who control this monopoly? They are the men who control the Southern Pacific, the Texas Pacific, and the Ceneral Pacific Railway, and who have every prospect of controlling the Northern Pacific. Where, then, would be our trans-continental line, our Canadian Pacific Railway, with this company controlling these roads and controlling the immense coal monopoly which it is proposed to give them. I venture to say that Canadian Pacific Railway stock would depreciate 25 per cent. if this monopoly were established, upon the supposition that these men will control such large interests, centering upon the Pacific coast. I hope the Government will give the amendment favourable consideration, and not allow this property to pass into the hands of foreigners, so that in future times we may be able to utilize it for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. BAKER. I can understand the hon, member for Vancouver offering some opposition to the passage of this measure, but I fail to see why the hon. gentleman from New Westminster should oppose it. The hon. member for Vancouver said that the Straits of Juan de Fuca certainly did separate the Island from the Mainland, but that was not an insuperable barrier to the matter. If the hon, gentleman thinks that that is an insignificant stream, the best thing he can do is to wade across it and see how he will come out of it in the end. Possibly every hon. gentleman here is not aware that these straits average some 25 miles in The narrowest part is nom the N.E. point of width. Valdes Island to Point Grey, at Burrard Inlet, which is 19 miles. I remember this distance particularly, from the fact that a short time ago a cable was laid between these points, the cable required from Nanaimo to Point Grey being insufficient (some 23 miles) to cover that distance. Now, if the hon. gentleman from Vancouver thinks there is not sufficient water between the Island and the Mainland to make a marked and distinct difference, I beg to set him right on that point. He has laid great stress on the value of the coal lands, and has stated that they are worth $20,000,000, and that some of them could be sold at the present time for $40 per acro. That may or may not be correct; if he believes it to be correct, I presume he rather refers to the price obtainable from private individuals. because so far as the coal lands held by the Government are concerned, they are held at $10 per acre. The hon. member for Vancouver also says that he does not speak from a sectional point of view. Now, I wish I could think so; I wish sincerely I could accept the statement he makes, and which, doubtlessly, he believes to be correct, but I should require further proof of the fact that he is entirely disinterested in his expression of opinion in this matter. Of course I quite understand the position the hon. gentleman holds. In fact, I have had conversations with him on the subject, and I can understand his being obliged to oppose the sacrifice of these coal lands. But that does not apply to the hon. member for New Westminster, and inasmuch as he admits that millions are spent on the Mainland, surely to goodness he should allow the Island to have a small portion of the expenditure without opposing it. The to the effect that the Terms of the Union will be thereby changed, I fail to see. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) stated that the promoters of this railway are essentially American. Now, the Bill distinctly shows that the persons who are interested, ie., the contractors for this railway, are Robert Dansmuir, John Bryden, and James Dunsmuir-these are the three who others are Charles Crocker, Charles J. Crocker, jun., Stanford and Huntington, of San Francisco. It is true these gentlemen are largely interested in the Central and Southern Pacific Railways, but what difference does that make with us, since we have to have that railway t) make connection with the Mainland in some way, otherwise the transcontine tal railway, so far as British Columbia is concerned, is not of the slightest benefit to that particular section of the Province. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell) was also good enough to say, in his usual nice and pleasant way, that the gentleman at the head of the firm was backed by the capital of the Union Pacific Railway. Now, I am in a position to know that that company or any person interested in it have nothing to do with the Island railway or with the Settlement Bill which we are now discussing. The Central Pacific have, and so have the Southern Rulway people, but the Union Pacific people have nothing whatever to do with it. He also mentioned about the steam ship line, but all I can say about it is that if we are always to wait for the most favourable thing which could possibly transpire, to satisfy individual or sectional interests, we might wait till doomsday. Long before I went to British Columbia, steamers were running between San Francisco and Victoria. The Hudson Bay Company endeavoured to start a steamer, with a view of fostering a regular line of mail steamers, but she was shortly afterwards lost, and they never prosecuted that enterprise. The result is, that the mail steamships have ever since been in the hands of Americans, and but for American capital and American enterprise I would like to know where we would have been to day. If we cannot get what we desire, we must take what we can getour hand on, and wait for more advantageous arrangements when the time arrives. It is not necessary for me to go further into the subject. The matter was thoroughly discussed the other day, when we all stated our views, and what I stated a week ago when the debate came up, I rigidly adhore to. The hon. gentleman from New Westminster said that a number of Bills including some Local Railway Acts passed by the Local Government had been vetoed by the present Administration. Well, we can understand that there are Bills which should be vetoed, if the Local Legislature undertake to legislate upon matters not belonging to them, or which may be detrimental to Dominion interests as a whole, or to Imperial interests generally. Such Bills, of course, would be disallowed; but inasmuch as this Bill has been arranged between the two Governments, and passed the Local House by a very large majority, I cannot see that we have any other matter in particular to enquire into than-have we made a good bargain with British Columbia or not. If we have, we should pass the Bill without further discussion.

Mr. GORDON. I merely wish to remark that the hon. member for Victoria stated that the hon member for Vancouver was obliged to oppose the Bill. I am not obliged to do anything.

Mr. BAKER. I did not say obliged to do it, with the intention of convoying the impression which he evidently thinks I did, but I said I could quite understand his being placed in that position in which he had to do it, holding the views he does.

Mr. GORDON. That is a distinction without a difference. I took the words down to this effect—that the hon. member for Vancouver was obliged to oppose this Bill. I declare, Sir, that I am not obliged to do anything when I come to this House.

Mr. BAKER. You are obliged to do your duty.

Mr. GORDON. In opposing this Bill I am going to do my duty; I am opposing one of the best friends I ever had in British Columbia; but I am opposing this Bill because I believe it to be inimical to the Mr. BAKER.

best interests of Canada. I oppose it because I believe its being implemented will be detrimental, not only to the best interests of the commerce of the Pacific coast, but to those of every individual who lives in British Columbia or on that coast. These are the motives which induced me to oppose this Bill. I could have got unbounded praise, Sir, from certain quarters, if I hal supported it and kept silent. But I do not come to this Parliament to look for any such favours, and I hope that while I am here, whatever opinions I do express will be formed after careful consideration as to how the matters before the House will affect either Canada, as a whole, or any of the Provinces of Canada. I think the hon. gentleman should at least withdraw that remark, which is objectionable in the highest degree.

Mr. BAKER. I think the hon. member from Vancouver knows me sufficiently well to understand that if I have made a remark to which he has taken umbrage, I must have done it unwittingly and with a view of palliating his opposition, inasmuch as it has been distasteful to him, I withdraw the statement which he alleges I made.

Mr. GORDON. I will simply say that no one can be more anxious than I am to see a railway built between E-quimalt and Nanaimo, believing as I do that it will be a benefit to all the people in that portion of the Province. But, Sir, when we give away all these lands, extending as far as Seymour Narrows, isolating the people of Comox from every chance of enterprise, shutting up from development these vast reservations which are granted to the company, I say that, notwithstanding my desire to see that railway built, I am of the full belief that it would be in the interest of the Government to build that railway and to manage the coal lands in the wise manner in which they have managed the coal lands in the North-West, and I must oppose the passage of this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The clause which the hon. gentleman introduced into the Bill at the last stage was one referring to the boundary, in the meantime, between British Columbia and Canada; and the hon. gentleman, as he promised, has laid upon the Table and has been kind enough to send across to me, the map by which he supposes in this Act of Parliament to indicate the boundary temporarily. I was very much surprised to find that this map should be acceptel by my hon, friends from the Province as a correct representation of British Columbia. It was my misfortune, Sir, to have been misled on a former occasion by this map; and I have often been reminded of that fact. After having looked at the map, and having examined it carefully, I was unfortunate enough to call that country a sea of mountains. This map is my authority for that expression. I understand that if any exception is to be taken to the country, it is that it is rather too level and champain a country for proper drainage, because there is not enough fall to the rivers. Therefore, how can we accept that map now as a proper record of British Columbia, when it has been decided for a number of years that it is not a true representation. Sir, I have been deprived this evening of one of the cherished illusions of my youth. I always hoped that when I came to join the assembly of notables, I should find these notables walking together in brotherly love; but having come into this great assombly, 1 find Shakespeare and Homer quarrelling. I hope I shall find them once again united to decline to accept this third clause, and to decline to recognize this aspersion on the country from which they come, which would be involved in our agreeing that this map is a correct representation of what British Columbia really is. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he still persists in this clause, whether he proposes to make any, and if so what, arrangement as to the territory itself. He proposes to give country-Canada or British Columbia-shall deal ad interim with the interests of the lands?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same as any of the others.

Mr. BLAKE. But it is not in the clause.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended to introduce a measure? Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the arrangement be the same as that between Ontario and Canala, that each Government shall deal on its own side, and that ultimately they shall confirm, and so forth?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no difficulty arising out of territorial questions relating to mineral or timber lands, because the Imperial Act which lays down the boundary speaks of the meridian running in a southerly direction until it strikes the Rocky Mountains, and then along the Rocky Mountains. So that the boundary will be either the water shed, or what British Columbia claims. British Columbia claims that under the fair construction of the Imperial Act, the boundary of that Province is the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains. Well, it is quite clear that it must be the eastern base of the water shed. In the meantime, we take the water shed. Under any circumstances, all to the west of that line must belong to British Columbia.

Mr. BLAKE. But, as I suggested the other day, the difficulty is to find what the water is. You have not a continuous range of mountains here; you have three or four ranges, and no one can tell what the water shed is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Smyth, Premier of British Columbia, is here at present, and there is a sort of understanding that we shall make an immediate search in the Archives of the C. Ionial Office, with the view of finding what the intention of Her Majesty's Government was by the pa-sage of that Act. After these papers have been thoroughly examined, the Government will come to some provisional ar. rangement, subject to the approval of Parliamentnext Session

Mr. CHARLTON. I am afraid, Sir, that we are dealing with this matter without taking sufficient interest in it. Perhaps we may not be justified in intermeddling with the affairs of British Columbia, but we are placing vast franch ses and powers in the hands of that thrifty Company which has amassed $186,000,000 on an original investment of $20 000,000; which has attempted to control the Legislature and the Supreme Court of the United States, and which has been productive of evil in that country and evil only; and I am afraid that we shall turn round at some future time and lament that we had not examined more carefully into this matter, and into the antecedents of the Central Pacific Railway Company, composed of Messrs. Huntington, Crocker and others, who attempted to get one of their own creatures appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and who have been fighting the United States Government to get them to help them to pay their indebtedness. I am afraid that we are putting into the hands of these men powers that we shall regret having put into their hands before many years pass over our heads.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONAD. We have not done it. It to let the Bill remain until Monday. is British Columbia.

Mr. CHARLTON. I know that we have not done it; but still it is to be lamented that it is being done.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed :- aware of the arrangement.

Bill (No. 116) to amend An Act respecting certificates of Masters and Mates of ships, and The Seamen's Act, 1873.-(Mr. McLelan.)

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed :-

Bill (No. 65) respecting the Hamilton and North Western Railway Company. - (Mr. Kilvert.) Bill (No. 57) respecting the Northern Railway Company of Canada.-(Mr. Small.)

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY.

Mr. PLATT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 73) respecting the Central Ontario Railway.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). There are two or three important amendments proposed to this Bill which I do not think we can get through in the hour devoted to Private Bills. I would therefore suggest that we do not take it up to-day but go on with other Private Bills.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). If the hon. gentleman proposes to move the amendment of which notice is given, and we are to have again the lengthy discussion that we had in the Railway Committee, I have no doubt it will be impossible to get through the Bill before the hour elapses; and as it would only be wasting the time of the House to have an unfini-had discussion of the Bill, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should allow it to stand until the amendment can be fully discussed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is unusual to move important amendments, to a Bill that has come from the Ruilway Committee where it has been fully discussed.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not unusual to move important amendments provided the House is not taken by surprise; and in order to prevent that, notice has been given on the notice paper two days in advance. These amendments have been on the notice paper since the Railways Committee rose.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I quite agree with my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) that, after a Bill is so exhaustively discussed as this Bill was in the Railway Committee, it is almost useless to renew the discussion at this period of the Session in the House, but if my hon, friend from East Hasting (Mr. White) insists upon his right to discuss at length the amendments of which notice has been given, I see no possibility of getting through them in the hour. I know that my hon. friend could talk, if necessary, for not one but three hours without stopping.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman must be aware of course that it means to kill the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON. No; because next Wednesday, as I understand the practice of the House, or on Monday, if Private Bills come before Government business, there will be an opportunity of discussing it at length.

Mr. BLAKE. On Monday there is no doubt that, by the Order of the House, Private Bills will come on after questions, so there will be an opportunity of getting through the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON. In that case, perhaps it would be better

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. member for East York is under a misapprehension, if he thinks I want to kill the Bill. I have never since I have been in this House tried to kill anyone's Bill, or desired to do so. He is under a mistake if he thinks I want to kill the Bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes; I was under a mistake. I thought the Government had taken Monday. I was not

COMMONS DEBATES.

Mr. PLATT. If it be the desire of the House. I have no objection whatever to let the matter stand until Monday. I only want to be assured that no advantage will be taken of the delay, and that a chance will be afforded for proceeding with the Bill.

Motion postponed.

NAPANEE, TAMWORTH AND QUEBEC RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No 80) to amend the Act incorporating the Napanee. Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, were read the second time.

Mr. BELL moved that the said amendment be concurred in.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have understood that the rights of the Napanee and Tamworth road are to some degree involved in the same question that is at issue in reference to the Contral Ontario road. If that be the case, and as it is possible that some amendment of this Bill in reference to the Napanee and Tamworth road may also require to be made, I would suggest to my hon. friend who has charge of this Bill, that it also should stand until Monday, because, if these amendments are concurred in, there will be no possibility of amending the Bill without recommitting it.

Mr. MACKENZIE You cannot amend the Bill when it comes back to the House, except in regard to matters introduced by the Senate. You cannot introduce any fresh amendments at that stage.

Amendments concurred in.

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The debate on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper for the third reading of Bill (No. 196) respecting the Vancouver Island Railway, the Esquimalt Graving Dock, and certain railway lands of the Province of British Columbia granted to the Dominion, and Mr. Gordon's motion in amondment thereto, was resumed.

Amendment (Mr. Gordon) negatived.

Mr. HOMER moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but be read the third time this day six months.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost; carried.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the noes have it.

Mr. GORDON. Ring in the members, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. Not unless five members stand up.

Mr. GORDON. That rule has not been adhered to.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes it has, always.

Amendment (Mr. Homer) negatived on the following division :---YEAS :

Main motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY-RECIPROCITY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker. I desire to call attention to a subject which I think is of vital importance to the interests of this country. I had hoped to bring this matter forward in another shape when we could discuss it more fully, but the rules of the House, and the fact that we are drawing near to the end of the Session, preclude me from bringing it forward at any other time. I refer to the state of matters which will follow the expiration of the fishery articles of the Washington Treaty. It is known to bon. gentlemen that that Treaty will expire on the 1st of July, 1885, and I think at this pre-sent Session of Parliament it becomes the duty of the Government, or at any rate the duty of the House, so to express itself that some action may be taken, that negotiations may be opened which will prevent any interregnum occurring between the expiration of that Treaty and the coming into force of a new one, if a new one can be negotiated. I submit that nothing could be more injurious to the interests of Canada as a whole, and nothing could be more injurious to the interests of that particular portion of Canada which is more specially interested in the fishery question, than a return to the state of matters which existed when we had no Treaty between Canada and the United States; and my main object in bringing this matter before the House now is, if possible, to prevent that interregnum, because, unless steps are taken at the present Session of Parliament to discuss the matter, unless the Government assure us that they are about to take steps to open up negotiations, there will certainly be an interregnum. Hon, gentlemen know that whatever Treaty is negotiated must be submitted to this Parliament for final approval, and in order to be so submitted to Parliament it must be negotiated before the next Session. If we are not to take action until the next, Session the expiry of the Treaty will have taken place before a new Treaty can be submitted to Parliament. My excuse in bringing the matter t before the House at this late period of the Session is, first, that no other opportunity is offered to me, as appears by the notice paper; and secondly, that it is absolutely essential, in order to prevent the state of things I have referred to, that the matter should be discussed during the present Session. During the past nine or ten years we have had the fishery articles of the Washington Treaty in To some extent they have given satisfaction, force. and in some quarters they have given dissatisfaction, but I think the experience we have had, both under the Washington Treaty and in the interregnum which took place between that Treaty and the expiration of the old Reciprocity Treaty, and under the period the latter Treaty has been in force, has paved the way and enabled both this Government and the American Government to approach each other in negotiations on a better and safer footing than they were able to do before. There has been one or two opinions held in the United States and in Canada on the subject of reciprocal trade relations between the two countries, which I submit no have foundation whatever in fact; and I believe myself that those opinions which formerly were entertained are not now held to any great extent. There was an opinion held at one time in the United States that the abolition of the Reciprocity Treaty would have the result, if not of ruining Uanada, at least of bringing her to sue for political union with the United States. If any such opinion ever was held I am sure the experience of the last ten years must have dissipated it. That opinion can no longer be held by reasonable men who have any knowledge of the history, or of the state of matters existing in Canada. They all know, or ought to know, that whatever may have been in times gone by, whatever feelings may have existed on the part of any portion of our people, whatever desires there may have been towards political union with the United States, that period has gone by. Although I believe it would be for the interests of Canada to have closer commercial relations with the United States than we have now. I believe that even the refusal of the United States to grant such closer commercial privileges would not result in the ruin of Canada, or in driving her to seek political union with that country. Moreover there was an impression held, which I for one did not share, but which was shared to some extent, at any rate, by the people of this country, and fostered to a larger extent by politicians, that Canada, by enacting a high tariff would be able to force the United States into granting her reciprocal commercial privileges. I think, Sir, that idea is also being dissipated, and that we have come to the conclusion that whatever Treaty may be negotiated, we never can hope to force it upon our neighbours, we never can hope to obtain it by resorting to threats of this kind. The bringing into force of a very high Tariff has not proved efficacious, and cannot prove efficacious to obtain reciprocity with our neighbours, when we consider the fact that we are but 4,000,000 of people as opposed to 40,000,000 on the other side. Now, from July, 1885, we will be face to face with the expiration of these fishery articles of the Washington Treaty, and we ought now to make up our minds what course we are going to pursue. There are a number of courses open to us. We may determine, if we are thick-headed enough and stupid enough in our own interests to do it, to endeavour to exclude the Americans altogether from our fisheries; we may determine to throw those tisheries open to them without any compensation; we may determine to levy a tribute upon them, as in times gone by, in the nature of a tonnage duty on their shipping; we may determine to sell them the right to fish in our waters as we did by the articles of the Washington Treaty for a limited number of years; or we might take another course and make the possession of the great national wealth we possess in those waters, the basis of trade negotiations with our neighbours. Now, if we were to adopt the course of throwing open our fisheries to the 148

Americans without any compensation, it would, of course, simply result in ruining our own fishermen. It cannot be imagined for a moment that our fishermen could compete in our own waters on equal terms with the Americans if, when they went to the one market which, for certain sportions of their catch, is open to them, they find themselves confronted with a duty of $2 a barrel, while their rival pays no duty. Fishing side by side with their American neighbours on equal terms, having all our ports open to the American fishermen, and then being handicapped with the duty, is a state of things which, of course, has only to be mentioned to meet with disapproval. If we take the second course I have mentioned, and revert to the state of matters which existed between 1866 and 1871, and levy tonnage dues on the American vessels which come into our waters, I think those who have a thorough knowledge of the subject will be prepared to join with me in saying that nothing could be more unsatisfactory. It is unsatisfactory from every standpoint. It is unsatisfactory, because the Americans constantly and persistently evaded payment of the tonnage dues. It is unsatisfactory because the efforts to enforce the payment of the dues resulted, during the five or six years the scheme was tried, a great deal of heart-burning, ill-feeling and national antipathy. I think the Government acknowledged it was unsatisfactory; and those who were present while the evidence was taken before the Halifax Commission, and those who have taken the trouble to read that evidence as printed, cannot but come to the conclusion that when the dues were raised beyond a nominal sum, a large portion of the American fleet constantly fished within our limits without paying such dues. As regards opening our waters on the same terms as we have opened them to Americans for the past ten years, namely, for a sum of money to be assessed by arbitration, I may say is an unsatisfactory mode of solving the difficulty. We know the difficulty that occured in settling the matter at the Halifax Commission; that the award was not satisfactory to either country; that Canada did not revieve half she claimed, or half what those who understood the question thought she was entitled to receive; that there was very great disgust felt in many parts of the Dominion at the small sum awarded. On the other hand, the Americans thought they paid too much, and those interested in fostering ill-feeling between Canada and the United States endeavoured by every means in their power, by misrepresentations in their press and other means, to induce the people of the United States to believe they had paid for the privilege a larger sum than they ought to have paid. To my mind, that mode of solving the difficulty is an unsatisfactory one. It is not a dignified position for a country like Canada to take, possessing, as she does, valuable terri-torial rights which I venture to say are se valuable if not torial rights, which I venture to say are as valuable, if not more valuable, than those possessed by almost any other country in the world, to offer to sell them for so many dollars to her neighbour. There is another course which I have suggested, and it is one which our best statesmen and thinking men have approved of, not only the statesmen who have charge of public affairs to day but those who had charge years ago, and that is, that those great territorial rights in our fishing waters should be made use of by us as a lever by which to obtain in return for them commercial privileges, advantages, and rights, from the United States. I find that in 1871, I think it was, when the right hon. gentleman, the present First Minister was in charge, he entertained the same idea that I have now the honour to submit to the House-that it was inconsistent with our dignity, and was not a proper mode of dealing with our fishing rights, to sell them to any one for a sum of money. At a meeting of Council on July 27th, 1871, at which the right hon. gentleman was present, and at which there were also the present Minister of Railways,

Minister of Public Works, and Minister of Finance, this subject was reviewed, and in an able Minute of Council they laid down the following as the correct principle :-

"The principle of a money payment for the concession of territorial right has ever been most repugnant to the feelings of the Ganadian people, and has only been entertained in deference to the wishes of the Imperial Government. What the Ganadians were willing, under the circumstances, to accept as an equivalent, was the concession of certain commercial advantages, and it has therefore been most unsatisfactory to them that Her Majesty's Government should have consented to cede the use of in-shore fisheries to foreigners for considerations which are deemed wholly inadequate."

I think the right hon. gentleman in that minute of Council struck the right key note. I think, though the Government were obliged at that time, owing to the pressure broughton this country by the Imperial Government, to submit to the cession of those privileges for a money compensation, that the opinion which the right hon. gentleman stated, did exist in the minds of the people against that course, and it exists to-day to a greater extent; and I hope before this debate closes, some expression of opinion will be given by the First Minister, showing that he entertains now the same statesman-like view of this great and important question which he entertained and expressed at that time in the minute of Council. I think anyone who looks at the current of public opinion in the United States, who looks at the expression of the official opinion that has been given there lately, will see that the Americans themselves are keenly alive to the importance of those fisheries, and are keenly alive to the necessity that exists that they should have access to them. I will take the liberty of quoting to the House a paragraph on this subject, which appeared in the Message of the President of the United States, on 5th December last. The President said :

⁴⁴ Notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington was duly given to the British Government, and the reci-procal privileges and exemptions of the Treaty will accordingly cease on July 1st, 1885. ⁴⁵ The fisheries industries, pursued by a numerous class of our citizens on the northern coasts both of the Alantic and Pacific Oceans, are worthy of the fostering care of Congress. Whenever brought into com-petition with the like industries of other countries, our fishermen, as well as our manufactures of fishing appliances and preparers of fish prowell as our manufactures of fishing appliances and preparers of fish so ducts, have maintained a foremost place. I suggest that Congress create a Commission to consider the general question of our rights in the fisheries and the means of opening to our citizens, under just and enduring conditions, the richly stocked fishing waters and sealing grounds of British North America."

Every one will admit that it was prudent, proper and statesman-like to take time by the forelock and suggest the appointment of a Commission to investigate this question. I say nothing of the reference the President made to the consideration of the general question of their rights to the fisheries. Those rights I do not think require any clearer definition than the usage of a century has given them. The rights of the Americans are clearly defined by the Treaty of 1818, and it is too late in the day for any statesman to seek to reopen that question, which was once a burning one, but which was settled by the Treaty I have named. Under that Treaty the Americans have the right to fish outside of the three mile limit, and not inside of that limit. But I presume the President intended to refer, in the words I have quoted, to the contention the Americans make-and it is a very important contention -that they have the right to fish within three miles following the configuration or sinuosities of the coast, which is in opposition to the view maintained by Canadians, and maintained also by British statesmen, although in a half-hearted way, at times -- that the Americans have only the right to fish outside of a three-mile line drawn from headland to headland. Into that question I shall not enter. I had an opportunity of looking into it at some length, and with some care, some years ago, and I formed a pretty streng opinion on it. I merely refer to it to show that in the absence of a Treaty there is a question which will almost surely give kind was again referred to arbitration, knowing that rise to a very great deal of international difficulty. we would have met the same difficulty again—I had Treaty there is a question which will almost surely give Mr. DAVIES.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the men who command the American fishing vessels, when they are pursuing their trade eagerly, and when they find that their prey is escaping from them and going into limits which they should not go inside of, are apt to disregard the law and the Treaty limits, and to take the fish where they can find them, relying upon the chances of escaping detection or of their Government backing them up if they are detected. They further rely upon their right to fish inside of the headland line. Well, I do not think they have that right. I think the evidence taken, and the series of State papers which are compiled and found in the records of the FisheryCommission, show conclusively that they have not; but we should never lose sight of the fact that while they may not have by law or Treaty that right, they have always persistently claimed it; and they are prepared, as I see by reports in some of their papers, when the Treaty expires, to claim it again. I mention this to show one of the difficulties which will arise unless this question is disposed of. Now, if time had permitted, and if I had had an opportunity at an earlier period of the Session, I would have liked to have called attention, at greater length than I can on the present occasion, to the importance of these fisheries. Many gentlemen who do not reside near the sea coasts have but a faint idea of the vast mine of wealth which encircles our coasts, and a faint idea even of the coasts themselves. We know that we have nearly 4,000 miles of coast, which is surrounded by waters teeming with the most valuable fish, and although we who come from the Maritime Provinces or have studied the question, know that, while in some years the fish are not as good or as plentiful as in others, still, taking it year in and year ou', there are no fishing grounds in America, at least, equal in richness and vastness to ours. We know also that the United States have a vast amount of money and wealth invested in these fisheries. I made a small compilation of figures from their statistics, with which we I will venture to trouble the House. I find, leaving out of account the money invested in fisheries with which have no concern, confining myself to the cod and mackerel fisheries, the United States last year had 78,000 tons of shipping engaged in these fisheries alone. I find that, leaving the cod fishing out of the question, they had over 358 versels engaged in the mackerel fisheries, employing over 5,000 men as sailors and fishermen, and making a catch of over 226,000 barrels of mackerel. Now, of that large number of vessels, I find by their own returns that sixty-three were engaged in fishing in our waters, and, that they caught there over 28,000 barrels of fish. I wish upon this point to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that while the American returns show that sixty-three vessels were engaged in catching fish in our waters last year, our statistics with reference to this important matter are so badly kept, that they show a very much smaller number so engaged. I turned up the Report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the only reference made to the number of American vessels engaged in the mackerel fisheries in the Gulf of St. Lawrence last year was, that fifty vessels were so engaged. Well, Sir, this is a very important matter, and when the Halifax Fishery Commission sat, one of the greatest difficulties we had to contend with was the difficulty of obtaining accurate and careful information. In some instances this difficulty was found to be insurmountable, and I hesitate not to say that we could have obtained evidence as full as we hoped to have obtained it, as full as we had good reason to expect we could have obtained it, respecting the number of American vessels that fished in our waters, the award which we got would have been much larger. I had hoped, finding this difficulty which confronted us almost from the first day the Commission sat, and knowing the difficulties which might arise if a question of the same hoped that steps would be taken to provide for the compilation of accurate statistics on this vital point. It has not been done, and I think it is a great pity. I think we may find some day that it would be a great loss to us that it has not been done. I think it might easily have been done, not with absolute accuracy, but with approximate accuracy-that is, to test the number of ships which enter our bays from year to year and the catch of fish they take there. Now, I find, as I say, that our fishery reports only show that there were fifty American vessels engaged in that trade. But on turning to the Annual Report of the Boston Fish Bureau, I find there were no less than sixty-three. I ask the House to allow me to read one paragraph from this Report:

"The Massachusetts catch the past season amounted to 168,811 barrels. against 258,382 barrels in 1882, a large decrease of 89,571 barrels. The Southern fleet numbering 129 sail, as usual of late years, they started early, sailing March 12, landing the first catch in New York, March 31. The early catch was followed with fair success, mostly being landed fresh accounts for the small amount of cured fish reported as taken South. The fish were found to be abundant and of mixed sizes. As the The early catch was tollowed with fair success, mostly being issued fresh accounts for the small amount of cured fish reported as taken South. The fish were found to be abundant and of mixed sizes. As the season advanced, the fleet worked off the New England shores, fewer fish constantly being seen. The fishermen being of the opinion that a large body of mackerel were off this coast, but did not show themselves, were not willing to leave the favoured grounds of the past few years. About 60 sail went to North Bay in July, returning with poor reports and few fish; later in the season the catch not improving and more favourable reports having been received from North Bay, quite a fleet once more went there, returning with fine fares of fish of a fair quality and size. The total number of United States vessels fishing in North Bay during the season being 63, with a catch of 28,666 barrels. The catch off the New England shores amounted to 185,019 barrels; the Southern catch, 13,000; total catch of salted mackerel by the New England fleet, 226,685; a decrease of 152,178 barrels from that of the previous year. The schooper "Edward W. Webster," Captain Soloman Jacobs, as for aeverai years, is once more "high line" with the following fue record. Sailed from Gloucester March 15, hauled up November 20, during which time, with a crew of 17 men, caught 2,160 barrels of mackerel that were salted, and 400,000 mackerel were sold tresh, realizing gross $27,440.00, or net $25,700.00, the crew sharing $709.75 each. During the season three trips were made to North Bay and 1,100 barrels of the catch taken saited, and 400,000 mackerel were sold tresh, realizing gross $27,440.00, or net $25,700.00, the crew sharing $709.75 each. During the season three trips were made to North Bay and 1,100 barrels of the catch taken there. Gaptain Jacobs adds to his report: 'It is my opinion the body of large mackerel will be in North Bay in 1984, and the small fish off this shore.' The catch of the Prince Edward Island fishermen is estimated as 10 per cent. over that of the previous year, with a slight improvement in quality. The Nova Scotia catch also shows an increase. Of the provincial catch, 75,226 barrels came to this market, against 37,616 in 1882."

So we see that although we had not during the past season the large fleets of American vessels which once frequented the Gulf of St. Lawrence in search of fish, we have had the large number of sixty-three, or thirteen more than our report gives. And we must remember two facts in comparing the number of vessels which now frequent that Gulf with the number which were there years ago. One is, that the vessels are much larger now than they formerly were, and the other that the appliances they possess at present are much superior to those which the old vessels possessed, and therefore the same number of vessels would make a much larger catch than they would years ago. Now, Sir, I wish to make the same complaint with reference to our Trade and Navigation Returns. They do not show with any degree of accuracy the quantity of fish caught and exported from the Maritime Provinces, and this is a very important and serious matter. When we were at the Halifax Fishery Commission, and the evidence was being taken, the Trade and Navigation Returns were asked by the American counsel to be taken as absolutely binding against us, and when a certain number of barrels were shown by the returns to have been caught, the Americans asked us to accept the number as binding, because as they said the Canadians would be sure not to put down a less number than were caught; and this, I must confess, seemed to be a reasonable argument. Why, Sir, when I turned up the Trade and Navigation Returns, and saw the quantity alleged to have been caught and exported from Prince Edward Island alone, I knew from my own knowledge that the returns were inaccurate; and when I applied to the leading fish merchants and told them the they will be prepared to give us in return a fair and reasonnumber, they laughed at it, and said it was ridiculous. Those returns state that 45,285 barrels of pickled mackerel were Americans that they did give us compensation when they exported from the Maritime Provinces to the United States last year. On turning up the Report of the Boston Fish Bureau, I find that 75,000 barrels are there stated to have been received from the Maritime Provinces in Boston alone. So that there was a mistake in these returns of 30,000 barrels in the article of mackerel alone. I say that these things ought not so to be. Our statistics in reference to this great fishing industry of ours should be more accurate; they should be so reliable that in any future negotiations we may be able to refer to them with the assurance that they have been compiled with approximate accuracy. Passing from that discrepancy in the returns, I wish to bring to the notice of the House the fact that while we caught 75,000 barrels last year, the Americans caught in our waters 28,000 barrels, making a total of 103,000 taken from our waters to the United States, or one-third of the entire consumption of mackerel in the United States.

Mr. McNEILL. About what would the value be?

Mr. DAVIES. That is a very fair question to ask. The value of mackerel depends very much on the class. These fish vary very much in price. No. 1 mackerel this year are worth $20 a barrel ; No 2, $14, and No 3, $10. The hon. gentleman will be able to judge from these prices about what the value would be. The value of these fish is enormous; and this year the prices are a little higher, owing to the fact that the catch on the American coast has been smaller than usual. Hon. gentlemen will see that this is not the most certain industry in the world. Mackerel off the American coast are one year abundant, and the next year very scarce. This is a precarious business; and I want to come to that point, to show how absolutely necessary it is to the Americans to have access to our waters. You will find, on turning to their statistics, that they have now employed in the mackerel fisheries no less than 358 vessels, of over 40,000 tons, which are valued at over $2,000,000. The point I want to come to is the importance of these vessels having the right of access for fishing purposes in our waters. Some years you will hear the Americans say it is of no importance to them at all to get access to the Canadian waters. I say it is of vital importance, for this reason, that the immense amount of money involved in that industry requires to have a sure return and without that access they cannot have that return. In certain years the American fishermen go out and fish off their own coast and make a reasonable return. They may succeed, as they have sometimes done, in making a good catch off their own coast, for five years in succession. Then will come a cycle of yearsperhaps three or four in succession-when the fish on their own coast are very scarce, and then it is absolutely necessary for them to have access to British American waters, because, if they do not, the vast amount of money invested in the mackerel fishing industry makes no return, and the immense number of men employed become dissatisfied and leave the business. Then, they will say again, we can catch all we want outside of the three-mile limit. I won't go into that matter, because, if there was one thing that was proved before the Halifax Fishery Commission, beyond all doubt, it was, that if the Americans were excluded from the threemile limit they could not eatch mackerel in paying quantities at all. The quantity of mackerel caught by them inside the limits just made the difference between a successful and an unsuccessful venture. Therefore, I say that admission into the three-mile limit is a very great boon to them; and I say more than that—looking at the vast amount of money invested in that industry, the great number of men employed in it, and the precarious character of the fishing off their own coast, it is an absolute necessity to them to have access to our waters, and I believe able trade compensation. Now, it has been argued by the took off the duty. I am not going into the great question of who pays the duty on the mackerel-the consumer or the producer. The general question has been debated very often in this House, but it is not applicable to this peculiar business. The question in this case depends simply on whether or not the home consumption at the time is equal to the home demand. If the Americans have a good fishing season off their own coast, if their vessels catch enough to snpply their own demand, and we force our own fish in at a time when their demand is already supplied, the chances are that we have to pay the duty, or at any rate a portion of it; but under other circumstances, when they do not catch sufficient off their own coast to supply the demand, then, the demand not being supplied by themselves, the price will go up until the foreign producer is tempted to supply the market for them. In that case the consumer pays the duty. I acknowledge fish, for which the Americans give us our sole market; but ordinarily, we do not pay the duty, because they do not catch enough off their own coast to supply the demand, and the price goes up sufficiently to tempt us to supply it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a great political heresy.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not think it is a political heresy at all. I will repeat the proposition if you like.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES. If the hon, gentleman agrees with me he will have to reverse his policy in some other directions. There are particular exceptional circumstances, when if the Americans catch enough to supply the demand and we send in our fish, we have to pay a portion of the duty. But what I want to submit is this, that this business of fishing is 60 precarious in its character, the amount of money required to be invested to make it successful is so large and heavy, that every drawback to its successful prosecution should, if possible, be removed. We should not be subject to the possibility of being obliged, at the time we have made a fair catch, to pay a duty to a foreign country when we sell them our fish. A business which in itself is precarious, is made more precarious still by the chance, that under some conceivable circumstances, we may be obliged to pay, from time to time, a portion of the duty. The American market, as I said, is the best market we have for our mackerel; it is the only market for our No. 1 mackerel. I see the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) opposite me, and he knows we have a market in the West Indies for a certain portion of Nos. 2 and 3, but our chief market, the market where we get the best prices, where our best fish is consumed, where the demand is for our best fish, in the American market and the American market alone. That will be best seen by reference to the tables of our catch and export. I find, by our Trade and Navigation Returns, that last year of 67,449 barrels of mackerel exported by the Dominion, the United States took 45,285 barrels; of our export of codfish, 725,334 quintals, the United States took 175,439; of fresh herring, our export in all amounted to 1,409,050 pounds, worth $26,857, all of which was taken by the United States; and I believe nearly the whole of it came from the county of Charlotte, and, as my hon. friend who represents that county tells me, our statistics do not contain over a quarter of our export of this kind of herring, they are as faulty and incorrect as I have shown them to be with reference to other fish. It is a most deplorable fact, and one to which I hope the hon. Minister will direct his attention, that our a returns do not show even one-quarter the amount of fresh herring exported.

pickled herring, we exported 123,883 barrels, valued at $500,000, and of this the United States took to the extent of 80,915 barrels; of smoked herring, we exported 8,452,529 pounds all of which was taken by the United States; other sea fish we exported to the value of $150,000, and of this the United States took $143,000 worth; other fresh fish we exported to the value of $240,912 and the United States took it all. Those figures show that the great market for our fish is the United States; and we cannot expect for many years to come, at any rate, to have any other market for our fresh fish, nor can we hope, for years to come, to have as good a market for our salted or pickled mackerel or herring as we have in the United States. Those are the facts with reference to this fishing industry, and I think hon. members will see that it is vitally important for us, that this question should be so arranged, that the admission of our fish to the American markets should be so settled, that when the present Treaty expires the new arrangements made will be able to go into force without any intervening space, without any interregnum. It is important that we should not be subjected to any of the international difficulties which were caused from 1868 to 1871 by the seizure of American vessels for breach of the laws under the Treaty of 1818; no one desires to see that state of matters occur again. I remember very well the time when, every few months, an American fishing vessel was dragged into port for infraction of these Treaty laws, went through the Admiralty Court, was put up at auction and sold. The result was that heartburning and illfeeling was engondered, not only on the part of shipowners and crews, but also in the shipping ports, the towns of Gloucester and West Haven, and all the towns along the American coast. And this ill-feeling and heartburning was spread, through the medium of the newspapers, all over the country. No one desires that such a state of affairs should again recur. Therefore, it is eminently desirable that this important question should engage the attention of our statesmen without delay; it is eminently desirable that they should impress on the Home Government the necessity of giving it every consideration, and that that they should enter into negotiations, during the recess, so that the result of their action may be known to this Parliament at its meeting next Session. Let me call the attention of the House, for a few moments, to a few figures in connection with the Reciprocity Treaty which formerly existed, and to the importance of getting it renewed. What I maintain is this, that the existence of reciprocal trade relations is mutually beneficial to both countries. That is evident from the fact that the trade of both countries increased very largely under the existence of those reciprocal trade relations, and that after those relations ceased, and we were relegated to the old system of a Chinese wall between the two countries, our trade ceased to increase-has remained almost stationary; and a trade which might be four times as large as it is now, has been dwarfed and kept stationary by the erection of these Chinese bar-riers. In 1852, before the Reciprocity Treaty came into force, the aggregate trade between the British Provinces and the United States was $17,000,000; under the stimulus given to our trade relations by the operation of that Reciprocity Treaty, it rose from the small sum of $17,000,000, during the ten years the Treaty was in force, until it reached, in 1866, the last year of the Treaty, $82,000,000; and, Sir, these trade relations were not beneficial to Canada or Canadians alone, but were equally beneficial to our neighbours across the line. Trade does not take place between a man and his neighbour unless they both find it beneficial, and the profits reaped on both sides from that trade were very large. I remember well that before that time, in the Maritime Provinces particularly, we were considered what is called a poor people; the Americans had the idea that our soil was sterile and unproductive, Of and our climate cold and forbidding, but under the stimulus given by the opening up of fresh markets on both sides, they found our country was a rich country; that it yielded handsome returns in agricultural productions. We found that we grew richer through this interchange of commerce under the reciprocity treaty. Land went up in value, people had more hope and confidence in the future, and, I venture to say, there never was a period in the history of the Maritime Provinces when the wealth of those Provinces increased in the same ratio as it did during the period in which the Reciprocity Treaty was in operation. Confining myself to the Maritime Provinces. I find that the aggregate trade between them and the United States in 1854, the first year of the Treaty, amounted to $6,899,792; in 1864-I cannot get the returns for 1866, but they showed a much larger amount than the returns of 1864-it had risen to $20,276,615. I believe myself, but I have not the returns at hand to verify my statement, that the trade reached nearly $30,000,000 in 1866; but, at any rate, confining myself to the returns I have, I find that during those two periods the aggregate trade had risen from $6,000,000 to $20,000,000. What has been the result since? The aggregate trade between the British Provinces and the United States had reached to $32,000,000 in 1866, the last year of the Reciprocity Treaty. What is it now? I am sorry to say that our trade has not since then increased. Last year the aggregate trade between Canada and the United States, excluding of course British Columbia and Manitoba, which I have to exclude for the purpose of my comparison-last year that trade, instead of increasing and being over $100,000,000 rather fell off, and it is a little below $82,000,000 -$81,729,894; s) we have the extraordinary fact existing that while those reciprocal trade relations were in force, our trade multiplied and increased with a rapidity almost unparallelled, and since that time it has remained dwarfed and stationary, at the figures I have given you. In 1864, old Canada, comprising Ontario and Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, exported to the United States over $43,000,000 worth; in 1883 that export had fallen off to $35,910,404. We all know that we do not export our produce to a country without getting profits upon it. Hon. gentleman may say: But we have found new channels of trade, our trade, has gone elsewhere. It is true we have been compelled to go elsewhere, but the point I want to make is this: that we can trade with mutual advantage with our neighbours to the south of us, and more profitably than we can with those who live in distant climates; that nature has given us the power to produce certain things cheaper than they can produce them, and they can produce certain things that we want cheaper than we can; and the mutual interchange was mutually profitable, and a growing trade grew up which, since the abrogation of these reciprocal trade relations, has been warped and stopped. The total exports of this Dominion are $94,037,480, of which Great Britain takes $47,145,217, and the United States $37,620,394, leaving for all other countries $9,271,864. These figures show that, in spite of the barriers raised up by both countries and the high Tariff duties the United States put on our articles which their people require, and the taxes we put on the goods they produce and which we want, the exports of this country to the United States last year was $37,620,3:9 and of that $35,962,000 were the produce of Canada. If we analyze that, we find that, of the products of the mine, we sent to the United States $2,198,014 worth, and to Great Britain $443,831 worth; of the fisheries, to the United States $3,186,218, and to Great Britain $2,337,072; of the forest, to the United States $9,916,040, and to Great Britain $13,027,337; of animals and their products, to the United States $5,567,588, and to Great Britain $13,158,194; of agricultural products, to the United States $11,989,280, and to Great Britain $9,474,740; of manufactures, $1,603,274 to the United States, and $1,211,189 to Great Britain; and in Canada believes, belong to her, we shall see how dangerous of miscellaneous, to the United States $502,050, and to Great Britain $19.741 worth. I will not go through other statistics that I have here, showing the effect upon the different Provinces, because I recognize the fact that the Session is drawing to a close, and that I have not the right, although this is an important subject, to occupy much time; but before I sit down, I will call the attention of hon. gentlemen to a few of the leading articles we export from Canada, and the proportion which the United States takes of those articles. Of horses, we export 13,019, of which the United States took last year $12,63.; of horned cattle, we exported 66,396, of which the United States took 23,280; of swine, we exported 3,858, and they took practically all; of sheep, we exported 308,478, and they took 228,541; of poultry and other animals, we exported 161,229, and they took practically all; of eggs, we exported 13,451,410 dozen, and they took all. The trade in that apparently trivial article has increased to enormous proportions, and last year we exported over thirteen millions of dozens. Certain interested parties in the States are now proposing that a duty shall be put on our eggs. 1 think it would be a lamentable thing for the consumer, as well as those who export, if that should be so.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. I have no doubt the hon. member from Cape Breton would find that his interests would be affected by it. Of hides and skins, last year we exported $460,983 worth, and the United States took it all; of wool, we exported 1 375,572 pounds, and they took it all; of barley, 8,817,216 bushels, and they took it all; of beans, we exported 142,422 bushels, and they took it all; of oats, we exported 1,024,053 bushels, and the United States took 607,953 bushels; of rye, we exported 1,047,809, and they took it all; of hay, we exported 93,740 tons, and they took 89,000 tons; of mait, we exported 1,329,958 bushels, and they took it all; and of potatoes, 2,424,979 bushels, and the United States took 2,181,631. Now, I have read over these main productions of our farm, in order to show hon. gentlemen that the main articles we export, the produce of the farm, are consumed and purchased from us by our American neighbours, and it is therefore of the greatest importance to us, as well as of importance to them, that the trade us, as well as of importance to them, that the trade relations between the two countries should be made as free as the political exigencies and the revenue requirements of the countries will permit, and if it is so made, it will be mutually beneficial to both parties. I propose to submit a Resolution to the Hou-e, embodying my view on this point, and that resolution contains a statement that it is desirable, in any perception of the the the the two of the the two of the the two of the the two of the two of the two of the the two of two of the two of two of the two of two o negotiations that shall be entered into between Canada and the United States, that Canada should be represented by a nominee of her own. I take it that will meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite. I know it has met with the approval of the right hon. gentleman in times gone by, and I feel sure that it will meet with his approval now. We have had sad experience of trusting the regulation of our territorial interests to those who did not understand them, and the regulation of our commercial interests to those who were appointed by the Mother Country alone and who did not possess that knowledge which no one but a Canadian can possess. We have had experience, on the other hand, that when our negotiations are conducted by Canadians themselves they result, not in our being over-reached or in our coming out second best, but at any rate in our interests being fairly and fully and properly represented. I think, if we can only recall the Treaty which was entered into some years ago and negotiated by a nominee of the Crown without consuliation with Canada, the Treaty known as the Ashburton Treaty, whereby Canada lost millions of acres of most valuable land, which I believe, and almost every statesman it would be that our interests in this matter should be decided upon or negotiated by a gentleman who does not possess the full knowledge he should possess of Canadian interests. I will not trouble the House any longer. I have taken up much longer time than I intended to do, and the importance of the question is my only justification. I move, seconded by Mr. Charlton, that all the words after "that be struck out and the following substituted :-

In view of the notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington, given by the United States to the British Govern-Treaty of Washington, given by the United States to the British Govern-ment, and the consequent expiration, on the 1st July, 1885, of the reci-procal privileges and exemptions of that Treaty, this House is of opinion that steps should be taken, at an early-day, by the Government of Qanada, with the object of bringing about negotiations for a new Treaty, providing for the citizens of Canada and the United States; the reciprocal privileges of fishing and freedom from duties now enjoyed, together with additional reciprocal freedom in the trade relations of the two countries; and that in any such negotiations Canada should be directly represented by some one nominated by its Government.

Mr. HACKETT. It is not my intention to make any lengthened remarks on this subject. The question, however, is one of great importance to the people of Canada, and I feel I would not be doing my duty were I to give a silent vote upon it. I listened with great attention to the hon gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Davies), and, I think, it must be a matter of gratitude for us all that an hon, gentleman of the Opposition should rise in this House and completely justify the action of the right hon, leader of the Government as regards the Washington Freaty. I think that hon. gentleman must have forgotten the position taken by his party at the time the ratification of that Treaty was before this Parliament, in 1872; he must have forgotten that at the time the right hon. gentleman, in one of the finest parliamentary efforts of his life, introduced that Treaty to the consideration of this House, it was opposed at every step by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who now come forward and advocate a renewal of that Treaty. I will trouble the House for a moment by reading a few remarks made on that occasion by hon. gentlemen opposite. The mover of this Resolution stated that he feared Canada might be absorbed by the United States. Well, Sir, when the Washington Treaty was ratified, it was argued by hon. gentlemen of the Opposition that it would lead to annexation, and that Canada would eventually become a part of the United States. 1 find on folio 110 of the Debates of 1872, that the leader of the late Government (Mr. Mackenzie) said :

" They did not know what course the Administration might take, but they knew this, that as public men they were bound to take an attitude in relation to that Treaty, and having maturely considered everything in connection with it, they came to the determination that as patriotic public men their duty was clearly to reject the Treaty."

He also said :

"If the Government carries the Bill, as he had no doubt they would he would be able to refer at some future day to what he had said to-night in order to show that he, at least, had raised his voice in protest against the national wrong and degradation."

Now, Sir, what great change has come over the hon. gentleman since. Will he raise his voice to-night in opposition, when a prominent supporter of that party gets up and strongly advocates a renewal of that Treaty? I think he will not. I find that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) stated on that occasion:

"They should feel entirely satisfied that before the Treaty was ratified we did not make a mistake—by one fell sweep we shoul i not destroy the hopes and blast the prospects of this country."

It was going to destroy and blast forever the prospects of the country at that time.

through which America would gat possession of this country. "As to the merit of the fishery articles, he maintained that the ex-pense that would be incurred in preventing frauds of the revenue would be quite as much as had been hitherto expended in the total exclusion of "Americans from Osnadiau waters."

Mr. Anglin also said :

"It might be said that this was the best that could have been obtained, but he, for one, was not satisfied to barter away our fisheries for any such paltry price: and, as far as his voice and vote would go, he would resist any such attempt to dispose of them."

Now, Sir, it must be gratifying to hon. gentlemen occupying the Ministerial benches, and to their supporters, to find that after a lapse of ten years that Treaty has become so popular that hon, gentlemen opposite are very uneasy lest it should not be renewed. All the hon, members from the Maritime Provinces know that this Treaty has proved of great advantage to the fishermen of those Provinces. Much has been said with regard to who pays the duty. The fishermen of the Maritime Devinces are well server that fishermen of the Maritime Provinces are well aware that when they entered their fish for sale on the wharves of Boston or New York, they had to pay the duty. They knew their fish came into competition with the fish of the United States, and the American fisherman coming in with his cargo on one side of the wharf, and the Canadian fisherman with his cargo on the other side of the wharf, the Canadian found that he came into direct competition with the American fisherman, and before he could place his fish on the market, he was obliged to go to the American Custom House and pay a duty of $2 per barrel, while at the same time he did not receive one cent higher price. This shows that the consumer in the United States did not pay the duty, but that it was paid by the Canadian fisherman. On that occasion it was argued clearly and well that the ratification of the Washington Treaty would give such an impetus to the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces that the exports of fish to the United States would largely increase. I am pleased to find that that argument has been verified, and that a very large increase has taken place in the principal product of the fisheries finding a market in the United States. Although the hon. gentleman said much with regard to the United States furnishing a market for our fish, we know there are markets outside the United States for several of the articles of fish produced in Canada. There is one article especially, mackerel, caught in Canada, the principal market for which is in the United States, and which is always eagerly sought after in that country. I find that in 1874, one year after the Treaty came into operation, the exports of mack-erel from Canada to the United States were 80,474 barrels, amounting in value to $712,448. I find that the exports, according to Provinces, were: From Que-bec, 164 barrels; from Nova Scotia, 71,160 barrels; from New Brunswick, 2,561 barrels; from Prince Edward Island, 6,589 barrels. Now, I find from the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1882-and the hon. gentleman endeavoured to make it appear that these returns are very inaccuratehowever, I find that the exports in 1882 to the United States were 110,352½ barrels of mackerel, being an increase over the former period of 29,978½. Since that time the canning industry has been started in Canada, and I find that in 1882 we exported 42,600 cans from NovaScotia; 120,642 from New Brunswick; 430,819 from Prince Edward Island, or a total value of mackerel exported to the United States from Canada, of $1,181,656.85, or an increase of $469,228.85, showing that the Washington Treaty has stimulated this particular branch of the fishing industry and has increased it 50 per cent. or more during the last ten years. This is quite sufficient to show that the Washington Treaty had a very beneficial effect upon the fishing interests of the Maritime Provinces. The Treaty had been beneficial not only in stimulating trade between the two countries in this regard. but it has also been beneficial in this respect, that a very large amount of money has found its way into the Dominion Treasury. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has said it is a wrong principle to barter away rights of this kind ; but we know it was necessary in the interests of the two countries that this Treaty should be negotiated. We believe,

[&]quot;Holding up the Treaty in his hands, he said : Here was the hole and our belief has been proved to be correct, that the privileges surrendered by the United States were less than those surrendered by Canada, and it was only fair that the United States should be called on to pay to Canada compensation for additional privileges thus obtained. So we not only gained by that Treaty the freedom of the markets of the United States for fish, but also $4,500,000 in cash. Although we gained those privileges, still the advantages were not altogether on the side of Canada, because the United States have found in Canada a market for a large quantity of their fish. We know that when our fish go to Boston or New York, it is not consumed at those points, but it finds its way to the western country. Under our policy of building up the North-West, with a large population going in there year after year, it is only reasonable to assume that in a few years we shall have a good market for our fish in our own North-West. Taking that view of the matter, I find, as 1 have said, a large quantity of American fish comes into Canada, and the United States have received some advan-tage in this regard. In 1882, we purchased from the Americans fish to the value of $603,440. I find, on looking over the descriptions of fish thus brought in that the qualities are the same as our own, and that in one item alone, that of oysters, the import value was no less than $260,568. In Prince Edward Island we have valuable oyster fisheries, but they are not developed as they might be, simply because we find we cannot secure a market in Canada. The people of Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, and Hamilton, and all the large cities in the west, are supplied with oysters from the United States, and we are able to sell a comparatively small proportion of our fish. It is of great importance to the fishermen of Prince Edward Island that they should be protected in this repect, and if the United States are going to tax our fish cans and resort to similar measures, the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces should be protected, and the oyster fishermen of Prince Edward Island should be protected in the markets of Canada. With respect to the general question, it is of great importance that the Treaty should be renewed if possible. It is very improper, imprudent and unwise to rise and make speeches and state that we are totally dependent on the markets of the United States. We should not approach the Americans in that manner; we should approach them, if at all, in a man'y, independent spirit. In fact, overtures on this occasion should come from the United States and not from Canada. We have approached them on several occasions, and they have rejected the offers made by Canada. It would be more in accordance with the dignity of Canada and the genius of our people to allow the Americans to make the first overtures in this direction. While I think it is very desirable to enter into a reciprocal arrangement with the United States, I would say this: It would be very undesirable to have partial reciprocity. I know there is a Bill before Congress at the present time, providing that several articles of Canadian production be admitted duty free or at a low duty, and I know it is part of the policy of the Government, and is embodied in the Tariff Act, that when the duty is taken off Canadian articles, similar duties will be removed here. If we are to have reciprocity with the United States, and we find the people of the United States are desirous to treat with us in this regard, we should not have partial reciprocity; we should not have reciprocity as regards coal and lumber and leave the products of the farm in the same position as before, but we should have reciprocity in the products of the fisheries, the mine, the forest, and the farm. In Prince Edward Island we sell a large proportion of our produce in the United States. We grow a large quantity of potatoes. We are obliged to seek a market in the United States and we can only sell them there when there is a short crop there and high prices, have been carried out on a basis so favourable to us, had because there is a duty of 15 cents per bashel. Our pointees Canada not been represented by the leader of the Govern-come into competition with these grown in Maine; and as ment. Having confidence in the gentleman who negetiated regards the duty, we are aware that the consumer does not pay it, but that our growers are obliged to pay it. The potatoes exported from the Island for the year ending 30th June, 1883, amounted to 722,893 bushels, on which 15 cents per bushel duty was paid, making the value $108,441. The fact of the potatoes coming into competition with those of the United States would have a tendency to reduce the price after paying the duty. That is obvious to any person who has studied the question. Another article we sell largely to the United States is horses. Last year the people of the Island sold to tra lers in the United States from 800 to 1,000 horses, which were taxed at 20 per cent. That duty is paid by the people of the Island. I would, under these circumstances ask the Government, not to enter into any negotiations for partial Reciprocity; but if we are to have reciprocity, let us have it on the basis of the Treaty of 1854, a Treaty which would include the products of the fisheries, of the forest, and of the farm. I do not think I need deal with this question at any greater length. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has introduced this Resolution as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Sapply. It is not a proper time, it is not a fair way to deal with members of this House. Much as we desire to see reciprocity with the United States, we also desire to see this Government sustained, and I think it very improper that an important matter of this kind should be made a party matter, for, although the hon. gentleman said he ignored party, he treated the question from the narrowest party standpoint, and he brings it before the House in the endeavour to embarrass the Government, when they are trying to have the House vote the supplies to carry on the business of the country. Now, he has made it part of the resolution that a representative from Canada should appear in the negotiations between the United States and England for a renewal of reciprocity. I say that that is not necessary, for we have an hon. gentleman in this House at the present time who has been treated very harshly and severely by hon. gentlemen opposite-I mean the High Commissioner to England, who is perfectly competent to undertake that service. The present Government, in their wisdom, thought as the trade of Canada was increasing and extending to all parts of the world, and as we could only speak in these matters through England, that it would be proper and right and in the inter-ests of the people of Canada that Canada should have a representative at the English Court to attend to Canadian matters. The High Commissioner was there, and I am glad that while hon. gentlemen are endeavouring to prevent him from going to E_i gland to attend to the affaire of Canada, that in view of the fact that these negotiations may be opened up within a year or two, we shall have a gentle-man so near the Throne as the High Commissioner will be, a gentleman possessing the energy, the enterprise, and the ability of the High Commis-sioner, to attend to the affairs of Canada; and I know, coming, as he does, from one of the Maritime Provinces, he will see that in any negotiations which may be opened up, or in any new Treaty which may be ratified between the United States and England, the people of Canada shall be dealt with fairly and equitably, and that no injustice will be done to us, as was done under the Ashburton Treaty, which was referred to by the hon. gentleman. In the Treaty of Washington it was found important that Canada should be represented; and we know that the success of that Treaty depended largely on the exertions of the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government. We know that, as the hon. gentleman proved by his speech and affirmed by his Resolution, great and beneficial effects have flown into Canada from that Treaty, and that it could not that Treaty, who so ably represented the affairs of Canada, and who always takes a lively interest in the affairs of Canada-that gentleman being still at the head of the right Government, and having still around him the gentlemen composing his Cabinet who were with him in that day, we need entertain no fears that any more injustice will be done to Canada, in the event of negotiations being entered into, than was done to us in that Treaty in 1871,

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, member for Prince (Mr. Hackett) laments the course taken by the hon. gentleman for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in bringing forward this motion upon going into Committee of Supply; but, Sir, no other course was open to that hon. gentleman. No member; of this House needs to be informed that a notice of motion could not be reached, and if it was the hon. gentleman's desire to discuss this question this was the only course left open to him to pursue. I think, in pursuing this course, he is perfectly justified, and that he has acted in the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman from Prince (Mr. Hackett) seemed at first to suppose that the question before the House was the discussion of the merits of the Washington Treaty, and that it was incumbent on him to defend that Treaty. He went so far as to say that the hon. gentleman who moved the Resolution had, to a great extent, justified the Washington Treaty, and was in favour of moving for a renewal of that Treaty. Now, the Treaty of Washington was opposed by the Liberal party at the time it was under discussion. It was opposed first, because it gave away the claim of Canada for compensation for the Fenian raids. It was opposed, secondly, because it accepted a money compensation in place of seeking to obtain trade concessions from the United States. The Treaty was opposed also because it gave away the navigation of the St. Lawrence in perpetuity, without any adequate consideration, the only consideration being the granting to us the right to navigate the River Yukon, in Alaska, and the Stickeen, which we had before. So much for the Washington Treaty. The Resolution does not advocate a renewal of that Treaty. The merits of that Treaty were not in discussion, and the Reform party is on record distinctly in opposition to that Treaty; the leader of the Opposition having, at the time it was under consideration, moved a Resolution condemning the Treaty, on the ground that it gave up the claim for compensation from the United States for losses by the Fenian raid. The hon. gentleman tells us that he thinks it unwise to state that we are dependent on the markets of the United States. I do not know that that is a fact that we could conceal, were we to attempt to do so; and I do not know that it is necessary to conceal from ourselves or the country anything in relation to the trade of this country. These facts are spread on the Trade and Navigation Returns, and any man of intelligence can ascertain anything which can be of interest to discuss in this House. I dare say the authorities of the United States are as well aware of the state of our trade, and the extent to which we are dependent on their markets as we are ourselves. He says it does not comport with our dignity to approach the United States in this matter. Well, I suppose we are a much more dignified people than the United States; we have 4,500,000 of people, and we are much more dignified than the United States with 54,000,000. But it seems to me that the fact that the United States Government have given notice that the onnea States Government have given notice that the fishery clauses of the Treaty will be abrogated, opens up the question, and is, in some sense, an invitation to us, to open discussion and negotiation upon this question; and I cannot comprehend in what way we would be lacking in dignity and self respect if we did approach the Government of the United States in this matter, with the view of securing con-cessions in the trade relations existing at the present time between the two countries. He tells us, moreover, that it is unnecessary at this juncture to per cent. The passenger fares, in 1871, amounted to Mr. HACKETT.

make advances for the purpose of securing these concessions, because, forsooth, we are to have these concessions without making such advances; because there is a Bill before Congress which is going to give some of the concessions we are asking for. Well, Sir, the Morrison Bill, which has been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, provides for the admission of lumber and salt and iron ore, free of duty, but it is not supposed that Bill will pass. Those most conversant with American politics feel quite assured that, pending the Presidential election, which comes off in November next, no changes whatever will be made in the Tariff. That Bill probably is reported and placed before the country as a feeler to test public sentiment, and if the hon. gentleman expects that Canada is to derive advantage from the passage of that Bill during the present Session of Congress, I greatly fear he is doomed to disappointment. He says, in conclusion, that we should open up the whole question of securing the American market for all our products. Well, he is entitled to give advice on this question; I do not feel warranted in doing so. I hope, however, if the Government take the course which we hope they will take, and open negotiations with the United States for reciprocal relations to a greater or less extent, they will, if possible, secure the free admission of all natural products -fisheries, products of the soil, the forest, and the mines of Canada. But, Sir, I do not know that it is necessary to enlarge upon the advantages that are likely to be derived by this country from reciprocal trade with the United States, in so far, at least, as it may concern the admission of our natural production to that country. We all know, Sir, that the trade of Canada, during the continuance of the Reciprocity Treaty, did receive a very great impetus. We all know that whether that treaty was beneficial to the United States or not, it was highly advantageous to Canada. We have to the south of us, Sir, a great country—a country now possessing, it is said, at least 54,000,000 inhabitants—a country whose trade is rapidly extending and growing in importance; and, placed as we are on the borders of that country, with our boundaries coterminus with theirs, and extending from ocean to ocean, it is a matter of very great importance to us that the trade relations between these two countries should be intimate. We may imagine that if the different sections of the United States had been separated from each other by hostile Tariff walls-if, for instance, the New England States, in one group, had a fiscal system of their own, the Middle States, in another group, had another fiscal system; the Western States another, the Southern States another, and the States on the Pacific slope another-if such a condition of affairs existed in that country, it would have seriously impeded the growth and prosperity of the United States. Of this we may be certain-that the Free Trade relations existing among the thirty seven States of the American Union have been vastly promotive of the com-mercial prosperity of that country. Canada is another section of this continent, and we are just as much interested in having Free Trade relations with the United States in our natural productions as any one of these groups of States is interested in having Free Trade relations with any other group of States that I have mentioned. A few figures of the rapid growth of the trade of the United States will tend to show more conclusively than mere words the importance of our securing some modification of the trade relations existing between the two countries. We find that in 1871 there were 44,614 miles of railway in the United States, and that in 1882 they had increased to 107,153 miles. This increase fairly illustrates the great growth of the business of the country. In 1871 the freight earnings amounted to $294,430,000; in 1882, on a very much lower scale of rates, they amounted to $503,337,000; an increase of at least 120

$108,898,000, and in 1882, to $202,140,000. The number of railway employees in the United States in 1870 was 154,027, and in 1880, 236,058. The exports of that country, in 1860, amounted to $316,242,000; in 1870, to $455,208,000, and in 1880, to $823,946,000. The internal commerce of that country, in 1880, was said to have increased to almost the incredible sum of $10,000,000,000, according to the report of the Statistical Bureau of that year; I have not been able to obtain any later report. These figures illustrate the great growth of the commerce of the United States, and the growing importance to Canada of securing more intimate trade relations with that great country; and fortunately, Sir, there seems at present to be a tendency towards a modificacation in American public sentiment with regard to the Tariff relations of the United States with surrounding countries. The exclusive sentiment of the United States seems to be giving way. Recently they negotiated a Reciprocity Treaty with the Sandwich Islands; this year they have negotiated a Reciprocity Treaty with the Republic of Mexico; and the utterances of public men in the United States warrant me in stating that the authorities in that country are anxious to negotiate reciprocal trade relations with all the American States in both North and South America. Now, Sir, this willingness which is evinced by the American authorities to have more intimate trade relations with surrounding States, warrants us in approaching them; and the fact that they have given notice of the abrogation of the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington, indicates that the circumstances at present are singularly propitious, and that we may enter, or attempt to enter upon these negotiations with better hopes of success than at any time for years past. Now, I wish to place tersely before the House a few figures with regard to our trade, which will illustrate, more thoroughly than words, the importance of attempting to secure that which the Resolution asks the Government to make the attempt to secure. The following figures are a comparison of our exports to the United States with our exports to all other countries:

So that you see that the percentage of our exports to the United States were within 3 per cent. of being as great as our exports to Great Britain—a very extraordinary circumstance when you consider that our trade with Great Britain is entirely unhampered by duties, while our trade with the United States is hampered by protective duties which tend to exclude our products from that country. If we take a few specific articles and compare our exports of these articles to the United States with those to all countries, and take the proportion that go from the Province of Ontario to the United States, we shall have some interesting revelations:

It will be seen, therefore, that the United States take almost our entire export of iron ore, shingles, sleepers and ties, horses, swine, poultry, eggs, wool, barley, malt, beans, oats, potatoes and hay, and that they take a very large propor-tion of our lumber and sheep. Of this total export to the United States. Ontario furnishes over three fourths in wool, eggs, barley, malt, beans, iron ore, rye, sleepers and ties, swine, lumber and horned cattle, and over one-half in sheep and poultry. Upon most of these articles the United States Government impose a duty. In 1883, they collected duties as follows : -

Barley and malt
Beans and peas	51,000	00
Oats	61,000
Rye	91,000	00
Potatoes	327,000
Wool	169,000	00
Poultry and other animals
Live stock	570,000	00
Lumber and shingles
Iron ore	27,000	0 0

Total $4,060,000 00

And the list I have given is not a complete one, for it does not include wheat, flour, meal, oatmeal, cheese, butter, the products of the forest other than lumber and shingles, meats, fruits green and dry, hops, hides, &c. If these articles were all included, we would find that the duties levied by the United States upon Canadian products entering that country would not have been less than $4,500,000 in 1883. Now, these duties are levied upon articles of which the United States raise the greater portion of the supply for themselves. Of course, when an article is imported into a country which does not raise that article, the consumer pays the duty, but if only a small proportion of the consumption of any article goes into a country, if the larger portion con-sumed is raised in the country itself, it is fair to assume that the producer of the smaller portion imported pays the duty, or, at any rate, pays a large por-tion of the duty. With reference to barley and malt, while we export to the United States 8,000,000 bushels a year, that country raises ten or twelve times as much as we export; and with regard to oats, our exportation to the United States of 1,000,000 bushels is a very small percentage of the crop of that country. The same remark holds good with regard to rye, beans, peas, potatoes, wool, and live stock; and with regard to the 600 odd million feet of lumber which we export to the United States, the effect of the duty is to deduct nearly the whole amount from the pocket of the producer here, for it would be absurd to suppose that the removal of duty on our exportation of 600,000,000 feet would affect the price of the immense quantity produced in the United States. The same observation applies with equal force to iron ore; in that also, we pay the duty. We may assume that to the extent of this sum of $4,000,000 levied on the importation of Canadian products by the United States for these duties, the receipts from the articles exported by us, were those duties removed, would be enhanced to the producer in this country by a considerable, if not a very large proportion of the duties levied. I do not know of any one article of the production of this country which would be more benefited by Free Trade than the article of iron ore. We have north of We all admit that it would be well that we had a large

Mr. CHARLTON.

Lake Ontario and in various other parts of the Province of Ontario very superior iron mines, favourably situated for the exportation of ore to the United States, and which produce a class of ore that is in great demand in that country; yet the exportation last year to the United States amounted only to the total of 44,635 tons, valued at $134,037. I looked up the statistics, a day or two ago, of the Lake Superior iron mines, mines not more favourably situated for supplying ore to the American blast furnaces than the mines of Ontario, and I find a striking contrast in the volume of trade in iron ore shipped from those mines, and in the ore produced from the Ontario mines. I find that while we exported from ours but 44,635 tons of ore last year, the export of the Lake Superior mines was, in the same year, in gross, 2,948,000 tons, valued at $24,263,000; and I find also that the production in charcoal pig iron of the Lake Superior mines was 72,962 tons, valued at $2,006,000, giving a total volume of trade of the Lake Superior iron mines of $26,269,000, against a total volume of trade of $134,000 in the export of iron ore from the mines of the Province of Ontario. A great boon would be con-ferred on the mining interest of this country if the duty which excludes this ore from the United States should be removed, and we were allowed to come in for some share of that trade, of which to-day we have only the paltry sum of $134,000. I shall not detain the House longer on this subject. I have, as I said I would, put the figures tersely before the House, and I think the House must be convinced from them that reciprocal trade relations in these articles is very desirable. There can be no doubt that it is the duty of the Government to use such efforts as they may be able to put forth for the purpose of securing this great boon to the country. I believe the present time is a favourable one for making this attempt; I do not believe that since the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty there has been so favourable an opportunity for attempting to re-open negotiations with the United States as the present time affords, and I hope our Government will act in the interests of Canada in this respect, by endeavouring to re-open negotiations with the United States, with the view of securing such modifications of the trade relations between the two countries as will allow the admission of as large a proportion of the products of the soil and mines and forests of Canada into the United States as may be possible. I beg therefore to second the Resolution.

Sir JOHN A, MACDONALD. In the few words I will say on the motion, I shall endeavour not to allude to the Washington Treaty, lest we might have the prolonged dis-cussion we have had again and again on that subject. I am quite satisfied with my position with respect to it, and will allow it to rest, merely saying that there was a feeling of disappointment in the country when the notice for abrogation of the fishery clauses was given. I have no doubt that this country would have been quite satisfied if no such notice had been given, and the arrangement, which was to last for ten years, with two years' notice, had gone on without observation on either side. The country would have been well satisfied, the Maritime Provinces would have been well satisfied, and the fishery interests would have been well satisfied. Then the only thing which would have remained would have been to have a new arbitration, in order to get a new valuation of the difference in value between the American and the Canadian fisheries for the next ten years, or for whatever period might have been fixed. However, that is all gone, and we must meet the case as it is. I do not know any reason why the hon. gentleman who moved this, or the seconder, laid before the House these elaborate statements to show the value of trade with the United States, rather than a small one; and I think Canada, as compared in her action with the action of the United States, has done everything that she could well do in order to secure that desirable object. In the first place, there was the original Reciprocity Treaty which was finally consummated in 1854. The merit of that, as far as Canada was concerned, rested altogether with the Administration of Sir Francis Hincks, the Liberal Government of that day. Although the Government of which I was a member in 1854 had accidentally, from the retirement of Sir Francis Hincks, the duty of carrying out the Treaty to its consummation, by introducing and carrying into law the Act which ratified that Treaty, still it was the merit of the Reform party; and it was a great merit; it did a great service to Canada. That, as we all know, was a Treaty for reciprocal free trade in the natural productions of the two countries. We regretted when the Americans, from, I must say, a rather natural feeling of irritation against England, gave notice for the cancellation and the termination of that Treaty. It was no fault the termination of that Treaty. It was no fault of Canada that that Treaty was terminated. Canada, during the troubles which arose in the internecine war between the North and the South, did everything that she could to preserve friendly relations with the Northern States; and I can well remember the repeated statements of Mr. Seward, who was the presiding genius of the Northern States in those days, that he wished the Mother Country, Great Britain, had been as friendly in her action towards the Northern States as the Province of Canada had been. Then when the Treaty was ended, Canada attempted by every possible means, by sending agents to act with the British Minister at Washington, by stirring up her Majesty's Government in England to interest itself in the renewal of the Treaty, by doing everything that possibly could be done to induce the American States to enter upon a renewal of the Treaty, or a Reciprocity Treaty of some kind. We went so far, again and again, in pressing it, that a great many Canadians, in the press and at public meetings-and the voice was heard in Parliament-thought the Government had gone too far, that in fact it had humiliated itself by going, as it were, on its knees, to Washington to entreat for the renewal of that reciprocity. Well, Canada at first thought that a great blow had been struck at her prosperity in the future, but the people faced it manfully, and, strange to say, while it was a loss—we cannot deny it was a loss— Canada survived it and still was prosperous, and still went on in her development and expansion. Her prosperity was checked, but it was not destroyed. Then, the attempt was not ended by the failures of the Canadian Government to succeed at once. It was renewed again and again. It was renewed by the Government, of which I was a member. We sent one Minister after another. Sir Alexander Galt and Sir William Howland went to Washington. When my hon. friend opposite assumed the Government, he sent a very able leading member of his party, Mr. Brown, to Washington; but it was all of no avail; the Americans had taken a certain line, and we had to submit. And I believe that the feeling which then existed still exists, and that you will never get a Treaty between the United States and Canada for reciprocal trade in the natural productions of the two countries. The Americans saidwhether truly or not I do not know-that it was a nominal reciprocity, but all the advantages were on the side of Canada. We had no market of sufficient importance to offer to them for their productions of grain and cereals and fisheries. We, on the other hand, had to gain everything by their markets being open for the articles which were specified in the Treaty. That feeling, I believe, still exists, specified in the Treaty. That feeling, I believe, still exists, and unless the United States will come at some time or other to a conclusion that they would be willing to enter upon a Reciprocity Treaty, not only for our natural productions, but for our manufactures as well as our natural pro- the United States in both instances, who was desirous of ducts, we will never have a Treaty. I am quite satisfied the United States will not agree, the country will not agree, the voice of the country will be against a repe-tition of the Treaty of 1854. Then, Sir, the only question is this—can we have a Treaty on a larger basis? My hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says there never was a more fitting or opportune time for opening negotiations. Mr. Speaker, I cannot see for the life of me what indication there is in that direction. The President, in his Address, which has been mentioned by my hon. friend who made this motion, stated that the notice had been given, and it might be an opportunity to have a Commission to enquire into the best means of acquiring permanently the advantages of our fisheries-some words of that kind, I forget exactly what they were. Has there been any response to that in Congress? Has there been any step taken to take up that recommendation of the President? It has fallen dead. There has not been a single voice raised in its favour, and I venture to state that there will be no voice raised in its favour during the present Congress. Then the hon. gentle-man says there will be no success of any measure until the Presidential election is over. The Morrison Bill, I believe. has been dropped. No action has been taken in Congress to admit reciprocity in salt, or in ores, or in coal.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman will permit me-I did not say the Morrison Bill had been dropped.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; but I believe it has. I understand it has.

Mr. MILLS. It must have been to-day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hear it has been dropped. I was told so a few moments ago. But the hon. gentleman does not think any more than I do that that Bill will become law. If there is no indication that the United States people, that their representatives, their Congress, will accept the recommendation of the President and appoint a Commission, or go into the question and see whether there cannot be an arrangement, and if we know and the hon. gentleman admits-and it is evident he is correct-that by no possibility will there be a Bill to allow reciprocity in these articles, what indication, what sign is there that there would be any use in our going again, for the fifth or sixth or tenth time, on our knees to Washington, and asking them again, for heaven's sake, to enter into a Treaty with us? I think it would be a great mistake to pass this Resolution. I think it would hamper the action of the Government were we to say at once to the Americans what it is proposed to say by this Resolution. They had the opinion in 1854, and in 1865, and they will have it now if we adopt a Resolution of this kind-they will think : "Canada must have the Treaty; Canada must open our markets; Canada must come upon her knees." No, Mr. Speaker, I think that this Resolution is unfortunate, ill-timed, and as such we must oppose it. The hon. gentleman says the United States have begun to alter their policy, that a new feeling has arisen in the minds of the people. There are some faint indications that the very heavy, the very oppressive, the very unscientific Tariff of the United States, the war Tariff, that presses so severely on the people—there is an indication of a desire for an adjustment, but there is no indication of such a readjustment as will reduce their Tariff to an equality with ours, protective as it is called by the hon. gentlemen opposite. Until they do that, until they bring down their Tarifi to an equality, or nearly an equality, with ours, there cannot be reciprocity. I do not see how it can be. But the. hon gentleman says that the United States have shown a desire to extend their trade by having a Reciprocity Treaty with Mexico and the Sandwich Islands. Who commenced negotiations in those cases ? Was it the Sandwich Islands and Mexico? No; it was the Government of getting control of the trade of those two nations, inferior in population, inferior in wealth, and very much subject to American influences. They desired to increase that influence and to obtain control of the trade of those two nations; but it was not King Kalakua, it was not the President of Mexico, who wanted the Treaty; it was the Government of the United States that pressed upon those almost auxiliary nations and forced upon them, almost forced upon them, these Treaties. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that we must, to a certain extent, pursue the same course. They know that we are ready at any time; we have told them unmistakably that we are ready at any time to renew the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854. They know perfectly well that we are quite ready to go on with the fishery arr ingements made by the Washington Treaty on the same footing as they were before. They know perfectly well that Canada is always open to enter into any reasonable arrangement with them, and I think that we ought to leave it there. I think it would do no good, I am satisfied it would frustrate any hope of entering into an arrangement with them, if we passed this Resolution. I do not now feel it right to say what the course of the Government would be; I think it would be premature to say, what, after due consideration and consultation with Her Majesty's Government, may be done between now and July, 1885. I am quite satisfied the passing of the Resolution declaring that we must enter into immediate negotiations - because if that Resolution passes, we must do so; it is an Order of this House to enter into immediate negotiations for a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty-would be simply to bring upon us the same rebuffs we have got on so many previous occasions. I hope the hon. gentleman won't press this Resolution. I am quite satisfied that it is inopportune. The hon. gentleman's intentions and motives are good and most praiseworthy, and he has put his case exceedingly well, and has argued the interests with which he is charged, the interests of one of the Maritime Provinces, very well and very forcibly; still, I think it is inop-portune that he should have made this motion. Had he made this statement and this argument without concluding with a motion, it would have been well; but I ask this House not to hamper the course of the Government by prematurely stating our anxiety for a renewal of the Treaty with the United States.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to say a word or two before the motion is put. I do not take the view that the hon. gentleman who leads the Government has taken on this question. I do not think the motion would be inopportune, nor do I believe the dignity of the country would be hurt, even though we failed in negotiations with the United States upon this question. I believe that the old notions of diplomatic dignity

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I say nothing of dignity-

Mr. MILLS-are gone by, and it is well, I believe, we should undertake to strengthen our position, and at the same time strengthen the hands of those in the United States who are in favour of more liberal trade relations with this country, and that we should show that we are disposed to enter into negotiations with them for more liberal commercial arrangements than those which exist at the present time. This is a practical question. The Treaty will soon terminate with regard to the fisheries, and the hon. gentleman will be obliged to meet the state of things that will arise after that termination. It is perfectly obvious that we cannot well go on as we were before this Washington Treaty was abrogated with respect to the fisheries. It is well known, also, that on the subject of coal duties, there are large quantities of coal imported into Canada from the United States, and there is a considerable quantity imported into the United States from the eastern glad to hear the leader of the Government express that portion of Canada. The same is true of the lumber trade, opinion; and although we may not be able, under our fiscal and when we look at the number of matters upon which there is international trade between the two countries, I do not think the difficulties will arise to which the hon gentleman has referred. There are certainly very important matters, affecting both countries, upon which negotiations could take place, where we would have, according to the views of hon. gentlemen opposite, something to offer. Now, with regard to our claims within the three-mile limit, the hon. gentleman knows that the argument that was made before the Fisheries Commission at Halifax, shows that the American legal counsel contended that the Convention of 1818 simply laid down a rule of public law, as applicable to that portion of the waters from which that country was excluded. Well, it is perfectly obvious, that if they laid down a rule of exclusion with regard to our bays and harbours, the same rule will apply in their own case. Then the hon. gentleman told us, some years ago, when this matter was under discussion, that we had large fishing interests in Hudson Bay, from which we had power to exclude American fishermen. Now, I understand that American fishermen go every year for the purpose of fishing in that bay, and no attempt has been made to exercise our rights of excluding them; and the hon. gentleman knows that the principle of acquiescence will there apply, and that if we permit them to go for a number of years into that bay, without protest, for the purpose of carrying on their fisheries, we will not have the power to exclude them at no distant day. When we look at all the matters connected with the termination of the fishery arrangements provided for by the Washington Treaty, it is apparent that the interests of the people are so large and important in their character that this House should express an opinion on the question. It will not be any disadvantage to us as a people, but a very great advantage, to show the American people what we are prepared to do, and those of them who are disposed to adopt more liberal trade relations than those which have hitherto existed and who are ready to renew arrangements with respect to the fisheries, will know precisely what our views are and what our position is. I am certain that those who are favourable to more intimate trade relations will have their hands strengthened by our action in this particular. At all events, we shall have asserted a principle, one of good neighbourhood, and one in the commercial interests of the two countries, and having done so, it will be no discredit to us if the Americans choose to adopt towards us an illiberal policy, one detrimental to their interests as well as to ours.

Mr. GILLMOR. The constituency which I have the honour to represent is very deeply interested in this question. It is just on the border, and the termination of the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty will affect us very seriously. I had expected to have heard from some member of the Administration who is acquainted with the fishery interests of the Maritime Provinces better than Iam. I have been very seriously exercised with respect to this matter, since the announcement of the termination of the fishery clauses was made. I do not know the intention of the Government; of course, the Government alone can enter on negotiations. I have been exceedingly anxious that they should feel it to be their duty to see if negotiations could not be renewed. Those members who represent Maritime constituencies know how very seriously this change will interfere with their fishing interests. My constituency must be seriously injured if any interregnum occurs be-tween the expiration of this Treaty and the renewal of it, or the completion of some other arrangement. The free trade we now have in fish is of very great importance to us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. GILLMOR. There can be no doubt of that. I am glad to hear the leader of the Government express that policy and the fiscal policy of the United States, to make the arrangement broader, yet I had hoped the Government, for the sake of the Maritime Province, would have considered it their duty to see if some arrangements could be made with the United States, and while not going on our knees, not under-valuing our fisheries, not under-stating our position, not going begging to any person, they could fairly approach the Government of the United States and see if a new arrangement could be made with respect to the fishery clauses. Whatever may be said of the Washington Treaty, and I know very little about it except so far as it has affected our interests in the Maritime Provinces, with respect to fisheries it has been beneficial to us. The House is aware from my trade views that the largest amount of reciprocity that could be obtained would suit me best; but I do feel that this question of the fisheries is one of vital importance. We on the sea board know how the matter stands. It is almost impossible to protect the fisheries. I am quite satisfied, from the stand which the British Government has taken, that if the fishery question is re-opened, it will have nothing to do with it, and it will involve a great deal of trouble to protect the fisheries. I desire the Government to feel that this matter is one of such great importance that they should endeavour to make some arrangement whereby matters will go on as peaceably as they have done. With regard to statistics, it is almost impossible for the Government to obtain correct statistics on the frontier. It is like people going to market. There are hundreds of boats daily fishing, and many of them go to the American side to dispose of their fish. With respect to herring in Charlotte County they take thousands of dollars worth, and in a few hours afterwards have them in the American market. I am satisfied we do not keep an account of one-tenth of our fish. With respect to this Resolution, I did not wish it to be considered as a vote of want of confidence; I know the mover took the same view, and I am glad that the leader of the Government did not so consider it. I feel it is of the utmost importance to our fishermen, I repeat, to have some arrangement made. Whatever the value of our fisheries may be, and I will not go into that question now, I think we were pretty well paid-that is my honest opinion-a free market of 50,000,000 of people, without any restriction being imposed on trade, is a great boon to us. And it is a great advantage to us to have American fishing boats coming there in the winter season and leaving in those communities not $10,000 but $100,000. They come and purchase our fish, and our fishermen must suffer very much if some arrangement is not made whereby matters can proceed as they have been proceeding. I know the case rests entirely with the Government, and I hope and rather trust, from what the leader of the Govern ment has said, that he is not unmindful of this matter but feels its importance.

Mr. KIRK. I regret very much that the First Minister has not given us some stronger assurance that efforts will be made to secure a renewal of the Washington Treaty in so far as the fishery clauses are concerned. When we con sider the condition of affairs in the Maritime Provinces prior to the Washington Treaty, there is no wonder that the people feel considerable uneasiness. I remember well when fast-sailing armed schooners were employed by our Government to watch American vessels which attempted to fish within the three-mile limit, and if they fished there or bought fresh fish for bait, ice or stores, they were liable to be seized. There is, I repeat, considerable uneasiness in regard to this matter in the Maritime Provinces, lest the old state of affairs in the Maritime Provinces be renewed, and I did hope that the First Minister would have given the House some assurance that efforts would at least be made to have the Treaty renewed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will only make one remark. I quite understand the spirit in which the two. last speakers have addressed the House; but I would have the House remember that those speeches, showing the wonderful advantages accruing to Canada under the Washington Treaty, will be read and quoted at Washington, and will not help us to make a new Treaty.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to allow the House to dispose of the motion under any impression that can possibly be drawn from the speeches from this side of the House, that it is considered in this House that all the advantages of reciprocity are on the side of Canada. I think the speech of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), showed very clearly, that so far as from us going cap in hand ask-ing Reciprocity from the people of the United States, we have a quid pro quo to offer them, of fully as great value as anything they can offer us. The hon, gentleman who moved the Resolution before the House, as he was well able to do, from his information on everything connected with the Fishery Commission at Halifax, showed the enormous value to the United States fishermen of our fishing grounds in the Lower Provinces. I think he showed very clearly that we have great value to offer to the United States, and that the United States will not be slow to appreciate that fact. But there is another thing which has shown very clearly the advantage which the United States must derive from any Reciprocity Treaty with us. Allusion has been made to the Reciprocity Treaty that the United States made a short time ago with the Sandwich Islands, and we know from the discussions which took place in Congress, that notwithstanding the small population of those Islands, notwithstanding the fact that the United States had a much larger population in proportion to theirs than they have in proportion to the population of Canada, it was shown that the advantage to the United States was so enormous that that Treaty must be maintained even at considerable sacrifice. Now, if it is important to the United States to obtain a Reciprocity Treaty with the Sandwhich Islands, apparently having a small population which could not be compared with ours, it must be much more important to the United States to obtain a Reciprocity Treaty with the Dominion. While stying that the United States do and will derive great advantage from reciprocity, an advantage which, I believe, they felt at the time we had that reciprocity, there is no use of our attempting to deny that the Dominion will also obtain great advantage from it. It stands to reason that, lying as we do alongside another nation, it is of great importance to our people that the utmost freedom should be maintained in our trade relations with them. Believing as we do that any restrictions placed upon trade are generally an evil, we can quite understand that we would gladly hail anything which would tend to remove those restrictions. I think it is an unfair construction to put on the hon. gentleman's speech in any way to let it be believed for an instant that we are going to derive the only, or the chief, advantage from reciprocity. As to our right to discuss the matter at the present time, it is very clear that unless it is discussed now, the time will come when this Treaty is abrogated before our country can make any preparations for its abrogation. If it had not been brought before this House, as it is now, there would have been no opportunity to do so at a suffi-ciently early hour, and I think that is a sufficient reason for the hon. gentleman bringing it up and for its being fairly discussed this evening.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). As I am one of the few who had the honour of voting for the ratification of the Washington Treaty in this House, I hope I will be pardoned for making a few observations—and very few they shall be. I believe, Sir, that my vote on that occasion was one of the great reasons why I was left at home for ten years. But I am happy to say now that those who contributed to my defeat for that vote have changed materially since that time, although I am far from believing that the course which they are now pursuing places us at any advantage to secure a Treaty on the same terms. I am really amused to listen to the free-traders of this House advocating a Reciprocity Treaty, while they hold that always the consumer pays the duty. They are most anxious to secure the free admission of all the products of the soil, the sea, the mine, and the forest. We find after considerable experience that in exporting the products of Canada to the United States, we contribute to the revenue of the United States to the extent of about $4,500,000 a year. Now, I say, while the United States compel us to contribute that amount to their revenues, on the products of the soil, the sea, the forest, and the mine, we would be pursuing a very foolish policy indeed, unless we compelled them to contribute a portion to the revenue of the Dominion of Canada.

The House then again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

PUBLIC WORKS-CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL. PUBLIC BUILDINGS, OTTAWA.

100. Additional Public Buildings, Wellington street $150,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last Session $200,000 were appropriated for this work, and the contract was given to the lowest tenderer, Mr. Charlebois, for $295,000. When the work is complete, it will have cost $593,000, including the site, which cost $85,000.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, NOVA SCOTIA.

	(Sydney Quarantine Hospital-To complete	$2,500	00
101	New Glasgow Public Building	10,000	00
	Truro Custom House, Post Office and Savings
	Bank-To complete	17,000	00

	Pictou Marine Hospital-Including extension	550	60
	Amherst Public Building	10,000	00
	Arichat Post Office, Custom House, &cSite
	Yarmouth Post Office, Custom House, &c	10,000	00
	North Sydney Post Office, Custom House, &c	7,500	00
	Baddeck Post Office, Custom House, &c.,	4,000	00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote for the Sydney Quarantine Hospital will complete the work. The contractor is Hugh McDonald and the amount of the contract $3,750. For the New Glasgow public building, that is, a Post Office and Custom House, there is a revote of $6,000 and a new vote of $4,000. The probable cost will be $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue there?

Mr. BOWELL. It was $51,219 last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the Truro building the contractors are Messrs. Townsend & McKay, and the amount of the contract is $21,000, in addition to which there will be expenditure for furniture, fences, heating apparatus and incidentals. The whole cost will be $36,000, including the land.

Mr. McISAAC. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the public building at Antigonish is finished or not. Last year $3,500 was voted for it, and there is nothing provided this year. Am I to infer from that, the building is finished.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Antigonish building is completed. We had only to repair or change the interior of the building.

Mr. McISAAC. What I wanted to know was, whether a sufficient sum has been voted to make all the repairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Quite sufficient for all the repairs required. The next item is the Windsor Post Office, Custom House, &c., for which there is a revote of $4,000, and a new vote of $7,000. A contract has been given to J. McIntosh, and the amount of the contract is $19,800, in addition to which there will be furniture and fittings, fencing, heating apparatus, &c., which will bring the whole cost up to $35,000. The next vote, a small sum of $550, is to complete the Pictou Marine Hospital. For the Amherst public building, there is a revote of $5,000, and a new vote of $5,000. No contract has yet been given, but it is supposed that the whole, when complete, will cost about $28,000. There is a vote of $10,000 towards the erection of public buildings at Arichat; the site cost $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue of Arichat ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The value of exports is $33,000 and of imports, $34,000, and goods entered for consumption, $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the cost altogether ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There it will be on a smaller scale, about $15,000.

Mr. WELDON. What is the quantity of land purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. An ordinary lot, I suppose, costing about $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt this was discussed last year when the hon. gentleman asked the originul vote; but if the total Customs revenue is only $3,000 or $4,000, an expenditure of $15,000 for an edifice to house the Customs officers who collects that sum seems rather a wasteful expenditure.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We put all the offices together, the Post Offices as well; the expenditure seems large, but when we consider that we have to pay rent and so on, and the service is not so well performed by having different offices through the town, the hon, gentleman will see that in the long run this expenditure will be to the advantage of the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the population of Arichat?

Mr. PAINT. Isle Madame, by which this public building will be served, has about 6,000 inhabitants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to know the population of the district, but of the town or village of Arichat.

Mr. PAINT. About 5,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman give me a concurrent statement, showing the amounts heretofore paid for rents of buildings, in the various places and a memorandum of the total cost of these several buildings. The Committee ought to know how much has been paid heretofore for the rentals of Custom Houses and Post Offices, in these places, and what the additional expenditure, for Arichat, under the head of Richmond. in the shape of interest and probable repairs will be.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will do my best, but the hon. gentleman must see, by the number of works, it will be very difficult to obtain that in a short time.

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman must recognize the fact that it is very important the Committee should have this information.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not say otherwise, but the time is rather limited.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will take a note, I do not think he will find it such a serious business. The question is one that is becoming of considerable moment, as to the policy the hon. gentleman is going to adopt. He knows every new building put up in a small town means demands from a great many others for similar buildings, and if it is to be the policy of the Government to accede to those demat ds everywhere, it will entail a considcrable capital outlay in the first place, and in the second place a considerable outlay for repairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Yarmouth we will have the Post Office, Custom House and Revenue Office in the one building. We had a vote of $15,000 last year and I ask for a revote of $10,000. The population is 6,280; the Postal revenue, $5,000; Money Orders issued $78,000; Customs duties, $87,000; other revenues, $1,300; exports, $718,000 and imports, $623,000; goods entered for consumption, $583,000. That this is a place of considerable importance, I cannot say, because we have not yet the site; therefore we have not prepared the plans and specifications, but I suppose this will be between $30,000. North Sydney Post Office and Custom House, we took a vote of $15,000 last year, and this here?

is a revote of half of that sum. This is in the same position as the other. The works have not been begun because we have not obtained the site. The population there is 5,484, the Custom House revenue is $36,000; other revenues, $2,000, or $38,000 altogether. The exports are $128,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the total expenditure?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be about the same, The Baddeck Post Office-this is a smaller place. We took a vote of $8,000 last year, and we have asked for a revote of $4.000. The site has not been selected. We have had some difficulty in finding a proper site, and, therefore, I prefer to delay the matter and obtain a site that will suit well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the population now at Baddeck?

Mr. PAINT. It is about 2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have it here. According to the Census, the population is 1,765. Well, that is a very small population for the hon. gentleman to indulge with a Post Office and Custom House. What is the revenue?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The revenue from Post Office and Custom duties and other revenues is about $5,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And what total expenditure does the hon. gentleman estimate?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, this will be a small vote. It will cost about $15.000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $15,000 on a revenue of $5,000. The hon. gentleman will find it expensive if he gives Custom Houses at that rate all over the country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps this is an exception.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say it is, but I would like to know why. While we are on that, I would call attention to the fact that Arichat is reported to contain 910 people. That is the statement in the Census-910 souls

Mr. KIRK. That must be a mistake. It must be 9,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I looked at the Census, and found that the population given for East and West Arichat was 3,552, and the natural increase since 1881 would give at least 4,000.

Mr. PAINT. I may explain it this way. The popula-tion of the Isle Madame was about 6,000 souls. That is divided into four districts, and the whole centres in this town. This public building serves the 6,000 people, and it is like the wards of a city-probably the hon. gentleman will understand that.

Mr. MILLS. There must have been twins there since the Census.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Many of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Census return puts down Arichat at 910 souls.

Mr. PAINT. And the ward of a city might be said to contain so many inhabitants, and there might be six wards.

Mr. VAIL. It is an island.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Arichat is an island, it appears. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail) says it is an island.

Mr. PAINT. No; it is on an island.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost

10

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract is for $21,225. When completed, with the furniture and fittings, and the heating apparatus and contingencies, it will cost between $27,000 and $28,000.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, NEW BRUNSWICK.

1	St. John Marine Hospital-to complete	$12,000
	Woodstock Post Office, Custom House, &c	12,000
	St. Stephen's Post Office, Custom House, &c	7,000
	Moncton Post Office, Custom House, &c	17,000
3	Dorchester Penitentiary	25,000
	Newcastle Post Office, &c	7,000
	Carleton Post Office, &c	6,000
	Esthurst Post Office, Custom House, &c	6,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost of the St. John Marine Hospital will be $25,000. This is to complete. For the Woodstock Post Office, we had a vote of $15,00 last year. We ask a revete of $8,000, and a new vote of $4,000. The contractor is Mr. Limerick. The amount of the contract is $14,450. The amount expended up to now has been-1881, $4,000; 1882, $1,600; 1883, $1,200; last year, $10,250.

Mr. WELDON. What is the whole cost to be, including the land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $28,000 complete.

Mr. MILLS. What is the price of the land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it was $4,000 altogether. It was two lots. We purchased one and it was not large enough, and then we purchased the adjoining lot.

Mr. MILLS. Then this is costing a good deal more than the hon. gentleman estimated. I think he said the contract price was something over $14,000, and the cost will be $28,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract price is $14,450; then there is $4,000 for the land, making $18,450; then the furniture and fittings, the heating apparatus and the contingencies for grading, fencing, and so on-all that takes the $28,000. The next is St. Stephen's Post Office and Custom House. A site has been purchased at a cost of $3,000. There is no contract yet given.

Mr. GILLMOR. Will the hon. Minister say why these buildings have been delayed so long? It was thought important three years ago to make this appropriation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site was purchased, I think, only in October last, but we were not in a position to go on with the work at that time. We have now got a title and the work will at once be commenced. The site was purchased from one Mr. Marks, for $3,000. We have not yet got an estimate of the cost of the building.

Mr. GILLMOR. The residents there are surprised there has been so much delay. I have been charged with having asked for this building, but that is not true; I never asked for it. A Customs officer visited my county in 1881, just before the election, and he was very much surprised that there was no public building there. But we never asked the Government for an appropriation for this building. I had asked the previous Government for an appropriation, and the leader of the Government told me that public buildings would be erected only in the most important and populous places as fast as the revenues would admit of it; but as he thought St Stephen did not come within that category, I failed to get public buildings there. But before the old Government went out, I did get an appropriation of $2,000 for a small breakwater on the Island of Grand Manan, that would serve the fishermen as a protection for their boats in a case of storm, but the present Government did not see fit to hand that money over after they came into power. As I said, an officer of the Customs Department visited the town, and was much surprised that centre of the population, a such an important place as St. Stephen was without public from St. John Post Office.

buildings, and he was surprised also that I had never presented the case to the Government; he thought it was so important that the case would at once be attended to. That was three years ago, and the surprise is that there has been so long a delay, because this site has always been in the market, and could have been bought three years ago as well as now. However, we ought to be grateful for the favour. I certainly am very grateful for getting a Custom House without asking for it. Many of my friends here have asked for appropriations for Customs Houses and have not got them, and I advise them in the future to say nothing about it and they would be more likely to succeed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman objects to the vote?—because I would be much pleased if he would tell me, for example, that he does not think it is wanted.

Mr. GILLMOR. Well, that has been put to me frequently; I think the Finance Minister put that question to me; but the Finance Minister and the Government can do just as they please about it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It shows that the Govern-ment has been looking after the public interests in that county as well as elsewhere. He may be sure I will do my best to give him a good building that will be a credit to the county.

Mr. GILLMOR. I am very grateful for it, as the representative of the county.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a difficulty about the title; the papers were sent to the Minister of Justice for investigation, and that is the reason of the delay. Moneton Post Office, Custom House, &c., $17,000. The contractor for these buildings is Mr. J. T. O'Doherty, for the amount of $21,480. Dorchester Penitentiary, 25,000. This is to continue the works. The contractor is G. A. Duffy. The penitentiary, up to the present time has cost, from the beginning, $370,000. This is for a new wing; and there is the expense of heating it, of fitting up the machinery, the dry-houses, the blacksmith shops, the storehouses, materials for repairs, the architect and contingencies. In 1883-81 we had an appropriation of $30,000. We have carried from that appropriation to 1883 a balance of $3,000, making the expenditure on that vote to October, 1883, $24,000, leaving a balance of $14,000. Total amount applied for, $29,000.

Mr. WELDON. Is the fence around the building completed? Last year a prisoner was shot in attempting to escape.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We must go on by degrees. As soon as the main buildings are completed we will replace the wooden fences by stone fences. Newcastle Post Office, &c., $7,000. There is a revote of $6,000. The total cost will be probably $20,000, and the fittings, furniture and heating apparatus, about $10,000 more. The building will cost $15,300. The site was purchased from the corporation.

Mr. WELDON. Who selected the site?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was selected as other sites are selected, in this way: when a Government building is to be erected in a town or city, the available lots are, as a rule, offered to the Government, and then an officer of the Department is sent to examine and report. 1 always send an officer who has no interest in the place, so that his actions will be quite disinterested. He reports on each site separately, and then we decide the lot which shall be purchased.

Mr. WELDON. The Post Office is not situated so as to accommodate the people of Carleton, for it is not in the centre of the population, and is only a few minutes walk

SIT HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is in the middle of the three wards, and is in the business centre of the town.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not heard any complaints of the site since the lot was selected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much will the Quebec examining warehouse cost altogether?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have paid already $7,665, the balance to be paid to the contractor, Denis O'Brien, together with boilers, machinery, heating, furniture and incidentals, will bring the amount up to $69,000. With respect to the Sherbrooke Post Office, the work has been performed in a very unsatisfactory manner, and the Government have been obliged to take the contract out of the contractor's hands. We are now calling for new tenders to complete the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister give some explanations respecting the Montreal Drill Shed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A large lot which belonged to the corporation of Montreal, was handed over to the Dominion Government for the purposes of a drill shed. The walls of the old drill shed were standing, and the architects considered they could be used up to a height of three or four fcet. An examination showed, however, that the structure was in a worse condition than was anticipated, and that it would be required to be built from the toundations. Even the piles were found to be very unsatisfactory, and to be not perpendicular. Under these circumstances, the building will cost more than was first intended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain the $15,000 for the Quebec military buildings, including drill shed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This whole vote is for the Drill Shed, which will cost $30,000, but there was an agreement made last year with the Quebec Government and the city of Quebec, that they should furnish together $30,000, which, with the amount voted last year, will make $60,000, and in case of their holding exhibitions, &c., the building may be used for that purpose, though it is under the control of the Government. As to the Sorel public building, $10,000, I may say that a lot has been given by the town of Sorel 130 by 110. We take a portion of that, about 10 feet, to make a wider street, in order to be safer from fire, and to give the building a better appearance. The plans and specifications have not been made because the title has only been lately passed upon by the Minister of Justice. The buildings to be erected there will cost, I suppose, about $30,000.

Mr. AMYOT. Will the drill shed at Quebec be begun this year? 150 Mr. AMYOT. I hope the Government will do their utmost to erect new buildings in one way or the other, as the present building is very unsuitable for its purpose, the roof being almost useless to exclude the rain.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say that the Government of Quebec have voted $15,000, but it was contingent on this Government furnishing $60,000 We find, however, that our $30,000 and $30,000 from them would erect a building, so we did not accept that proposition. The Government of Quebec will ask the Legislature to give $15,000 more upon this Government expending $30,000, and I have no doubt they will put the money to the credit of the Minister of Public Works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the Sorel public buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A Post Office, Custom House, Inland Rovenue Office and Weights and Measures Office. As to the Lévis immigrant station, nothing has been done, and therefore I ask a revote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Montreal immigrant buildings are going to be gone on with, I suppose.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the Minister of Agriculture told me before he loft that he would be able to give me the lot in a short time. The Montreal examining warehouse I must say is in a very poor condition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not this the same building which was erected ton or eleven years ago at a cost of $200,000 or $250,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the whole cost of that building up to 1878 was $203,000; up to the present time, $233,000. The joists are all rotten, and we had to prop the floors quite lately. The inspector of buildings condemned the building unless the floors were propped. The contractors are now going on with the work. I think the money that we are asking will complete it; but I do not promise that, because as we go on, we find that the defects in the floor and joists are greater than we had thought in the beginning.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The difficulty about that buildings is this: We have called for tenders and tenders have been received, but I advised my colleagues that we should not sign the contract until the city of Quebec and the Quebec Government would deposit to the credit of the Minister of Public Works the sum of $30,000, because I cannot undertake to construct a $60,000 building with a vote of only $30,000, and if anything happened by which the city corporation would not pay, or could not pay, the Government would have the building on their hands, and would be bound to complete the work at a cost of $60,000, instead of $30,000. If the money is not placed to my credit, we will have to reduce the work to $30,000, and have a drill shed of our own without any communication with them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the Cornwall Post Office, Custom House, &c., we ask a revote of $3,000, and a new vote of $2,000. The contractors are Gordon & Ross, and their contract is for $37,000 odd. In 1882, we expended $8,000; in 1883, $11,000, and in 1884, $11,000. It is expected that this $10,000 will complete the contract. The furniture, fittings, heating apparatus, incidentals, &c., will cost altogether $26,000. We voted $2,000, and the balance of the old vote is $17,000, making $19,000. The balance to be still provided to complete is $7,000. For the Brockville Post Office, Custom House, &c., a contract has been let for $37,320, and the contractors are Thomas Tomkins, Crain & Co. The expenditure in 1882 was $3,000; in 1883, 3,600, and in 1884, $3,700 - altogether $10,300. The furniture and fittings, heating apparatus, &c., will bring the total cost up to $44,000. On the 31st of October, we had a balance of $9,400, and we take a new vote of $17,500, making $26,000, so that to complete the work we shall have to ask for $17,000 more. The vote for the Kingston Penitentiary is all for small works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman intend to do anything in connection with the matter I mentioned to him—the drainage of that institution?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I had a statement the other day from the Chief Architect in my Department, to the effect that the drainage is good, that there is no complaint about it; that the ventilation is also good. The only difficulty is in connection with the small cell. I have not been asked by the Department of Justice to put two cells into one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that this vote is in addition to a vote of $15,000 for the present year, altogether $23,000. What do the two together mean? There is no new building going on at Kingston, I believe.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have the statement here. The breakwater has been extended eastward, by 100 feet, by 30 feet depth, and encloses a place 300 feet long by 100. feet wide, for the protection of vessels. The west wharf was in bad repair and had to be strengthened. The heating of the building, workshops, &c., was provided for, and the docks were also overhauled and improved. Three large heating boilers were put in the building. The laying of a new main pipe was attended with much difficulty, in order to obtain the quantity of water required. A new water main was laid, and branches carried to the storage tanks; a large section, 55 by 30 feet, of the roofing was complained of and had to be repaired.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the House to some bills of costs which have been ordered by the Public Accounts Committee to be laid on the Table of the House, with reference to the Hamilton Post Office. As the discussion of these will require some time, I will make no objection to the item now passing for this Post Office, provided the matter can be discussed with equal freedom on Concurrence when the Speaker is in the Chair.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no objection to this, and will enquire into the matter, so as to be able to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the Stratford Post Office and Custom House in round numbers?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $350,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much did the site cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was bought three years ago, and it I think we paid $40,000 for it.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that last year I moved for returns con-Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. cerning the removal and repairs of the St. Thomas Drill Shed; unfortunately that return did not come down in time to enquire into the expenditure then. In it I find that it is stated that instructions were given by the Department to Mr. Ware, the architect, to the effect that the whole work, comprising expenditure for superintendence and other expenses, was not to cost more than $2500. The report shows that the expenditure was $2,844.86, although Mr. Ware was told that, under no circumstances, the cost should exceed $2,500, and although he reported back that by reducing some of the repairs he would be able to get the work done inside this figure. I desire to know why there should be this difference of between $300 and $400.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of what the hon. gentleman has said, and I think I will be able to explain the difference. It is most likely some additional work that was asked for by the Department of Militia.

Mr. WILSON. The returns came down only this Session, though moved for last Session. With reference to St. Thomas Post Office, I regret exceedingly that the work has not progressed more rapidly. I do not blame the Government, who have perhaps done all they could to push on the work. During last summer I know the contractor complained that he was unable, under any circumstances, to get labourers to go on with the work in an efficient manner. Although I am glad this money is being expended in St Thomas, I feel it is recessary there should not be any waste or extravagance in the construction of the building. My predecessor urged very strongly on the Government that they should construct this building, and it was intended that a certain kind of stone, a grey stone, should be used; Mr Arkell urged on the Government the necessity of changing it for the Oredit Valley red stone, and in one of his letters, dated St Thomas, 20th Sept., 1882, he writes to Mr Thomas Fuller as follows: —

"Mr. Lindop is an xions to order the stone and would like to know your views. If possible, give him the orders. The Government have lots of money."

Well, it appears ultimately that the Government did decide upon changing the stone and allow an extra cost to be incurred thereby of some $2,000. But we find another letter written by him, a vory peculiar letter indeed, a strange letter, coming from a citizen of St. Thomas, one who had been a representative of the people, one who ought to have had the interests of that locality thoroughly at heart. It put me in mind very much, when I read the letter, of a saying I heard when the First Minister was up there during an election campaign. The remark then made was that, if St. Thomas should be so unwise, so foolish, so thoughtless, so regardless of its own interest as to select an Opposition candidate, they did not deserve the public expenditure upon public buildings there. Well, Mr. Arkell appears to have re-echoed that, because I find him writing, on the 9th October, 1882, to the Minister of Public Works, stating:

"DEAR SIR, -I feel very anxious that we shall have public buildings here that will present a good appearance, and the only way to do it will be to stick to the original plans, and to use the red stone "-

It appears there was some conversation at that time about changing it—

"the difference will be $2,000. I have written Mr. Fuller on the subject. The people here do not deserve it."

Well, I cannot say what the people here had done to cause such censure, unless their rejecting him at the polls—" The people here do not deserve it." However, I must congratulate the Minister of Public Works on having paid no attention to his previous supporter. He did not feel that what had been stated by Mr. Arkell cught to be carried out. I, too, have something to complain of in reference to the way in which the expenditure has gone on up to the present time. I do feel that there ought to be, in carrying on a public work, that same economy, that same care, that same caution taken as in any person's private affairs. I find, in the first place, an item, in a return brought down this Session, for examining the title for property there That item amounts to what ?-$145 and some cents. Now, I know perfectly well there was no earthly necessity of any such an expenditure as that upon the investigation of the title. The title originally was from the Crown to one Lawrence, from Lawrence to his nephew Scott, from Scott it was made to the Presbyterian Church, from whom the Government bought the property, and that was the title, the search that this individual, a Mr. Macdonell, really required was to make into the title. And this is not all. A lawyer there, by the name of MacLean, who was paid by the Presbyterian, Church, which formerly owned the property, made out all the papers, made all the transfers from the Presbyterian Church, and charged them for the work performed, and yet we have the nice sum of over $145 charged to the works of that locality. Then we go on a little further. We find the original cost of the land was $7,087.26. I do not think that an unreasonable price; in fact, I think they bought the land very cheaply. We find Mr. Henry Lindop, the con-tractor of the place, for the time he has been working, re ceives $17,820. We find also that Mr. Ware, the architect inthat locality, a very good man I have no doubt, a pains-taking man, receives $559.51. We find W. E. Lindop, a brother of Henry Lindop, the contractor, and what do we find him there for? We find him receiving for photographic views of the building, $45. Now, as anyone who had been there would see perfectly plainly, the building is very little above the ground, very little work has been performed, and what in the world is $45 here charged for photographs, unless it is charged to cover the expense of photographing those who are engaged there-masons and others.

An hon. MEMBER. Perhaps the Minister.

Mr. WILSON. And perhaps the clerk of the works was on the top of the building at the time, and we will soon come to the clerk of the works. I do not think the Minister would hardly have stood upon that building, if he had been there, to be photographed. We come to another item-James W. Harper, to pay Chief Architect's staff. Now, they have not expended a very large amount of money in this locality yet-$17,820. What does the clerk of the works cost this building, charged to this locality ?-$2559.77. Mark you, they had an architect there, paid him between $500 and $600, and yet the other architect and the staff are charged to that work, $2,559.77. They are not satisfied with that. They must have a clerk of the works. They have an architect; that is not sufficient. They must have somebody else, and who is he? This same individual, the same person who is shouting so freely that the Government had lots of money, and to be sure and get the building completed in a creditable manner. We find Thomas Arkell clerk of the works; and what is he getting?—$1,350. And it is notorious—it is known fullwell that he devoted precious little time in looking after these buildings. It is well known that he is a grain merchant, and that a good portion of the year he is not in the city at all. He may have written a few letters. He may have notified the Minister of Public Works that he hat better have another photograph taken, so that his friend, Mr. W. E. Lindop might have another opportunity of photographing the stone as it rose above the ground. But the idea of having a clerk of the works getting $1,350, and doing comparatively very little! Those are not all the charges in this famous return. We come to another-advertising. To advertising is charged $260.64. What that is for -very little advertising was ever done there-I really cannot say. It may be that the advertising is a very nice thing to cover up the doubtful transaction. It would require something of that kind to do it, and "advertising" is just as good a heading as anything else, I suppose. Printing, $7.62. Perhaps that may be in the Government Department here, regards the people there, I have great confidence in them, but certainly the charge to the clerk of the works in the Public Department here I think is ample and sufficient to cover the cost of printing. Another is contingencies. They are not satisfied with printing, but they must have contingencies, and to that article we find $436.90 charged. We find, too, that the expenditure on the works at St. Thomas, for which the amount paid to the contractor is $17,820, runs up by charges for clerk of the works, for architects, for printing, for contingencies, and in other ways, to $30,272. Now, we have only had a vote taken of $48,000 to build these buildings; they are not up to the first storey yet, and, if the buildings are to go on at this rate, the Minister of Public Works will well understand that there must be a much larger amount voted. What I complain of is, that if the same kind of expenditure is to take place in the coming year as took place in the last year, the Minister ought at least to put in another $20,000, or at least another $10,000. Therefore, I really do hope a little more care and caution will be exercised in the manner in which the public money is expended, and 1 might say here, that if the public building in St. Thomas is any true criterion as to the manner in which moneys are expended in various parts of the Dominion of Canada, it is no wonder that our public buildings cost more than they ought.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am very thankful to the hon. member for calling our attention to these different items. Of course he is a new member and is not accustomed to the necessary expenditures connected with these works. For instance, he is very much surprised to see $7 or $8 for printing, and asks what printing there could be at St. Thomas. He thinks it must have been done here. No doubt it was done here. The hon. gentleman knows that we have to print forms of tenders and specifications which cost money, and in this case the printer's bill amounted to $7 or $8. Then, as to the architect. As usual an architect has to prepare the working plans, but the ordinary plans are prepared at the office here, as a rule, by the Depart-ment. The architect on the ground has to look after the building as it proceeds. He has not, like the clerk of works, to look at every stone that is laid down, at the mortar or cement, but to have general supervision of the building, and for that he is paid in accordance with the ordinary rules of the Department-I cannot remember exactly the percentage, but I think it is between 3 per cent. and 5 per cent.; therefore, he is paid for that. As to the clork of work, he happens to be Mr. Arkell, who was formerly a member of Parliament. He had coased to be a member of Parliament, and as I had confidence in Mr. Arkell and thought he would be a good clerk of works, I employed him as such. He has done his duty well, and has been paid like any other clerk of works, neither more nor less. Then with regard to the photographs. It must be remembered that these works are at a long distance from headquarters, and we have to have photographs from time to time of the works as they proceed. Sometimes a difficulty occurs in relation to the work and I cause a photograph to be prepared and sent down; otherwise we would have to be constantly on the road, and I have no time to lose in travelling. When I have to decide about a difficulty, I want to see it with my own eyes, and a photograph gives a great deal better ilea than four or five pages of description.

Mr. WILSON. They must be very dear photographs to cost $45.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman was a photographer he would not find it too much, and perhaps and if they sometimes make a mistake they always try to correct it afterwards.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt the hon. gentleman makes very satisfactory explanations, as a rule, but I really think the facts disclosed here warrant some notice. Now, $17,800 were spent up to date in the erection of these buildings. The services of the architect, the clerk of works, and Mr. Edmond Ware—who is something of an architect, I suppose—amount to $4,500 in round numbers, as professional services for supervising the expenditure of $17,500. Now, I hardly think the Minister himself would contend that this is a fair proportion; I regard it as a monstrous disproportion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will remember that the whole amount expended is $30,272, and, as I said just now, the work has been very much delayed by the contractors. The right kind of labour could not be obtained, and they could not obtain the right stones, hence the delay. There must have been some good reason given to the Chief Architect that he did not recommend taking the contract from their hands. Of course, when we see contractors doing their best to fulfil their contract, we have some consideration for them. Now, as to the amount expended for the examination of the title, that amount was expended by the Department of Justice in investigating the title. The hon. gentleman just now has given a history of it. The Department of Justice is very careful about getting good titles. When we are to expend a sum of money, $30,000 or $40,000, on a lot, it is better to expend $150 in securing a good title than to leave it in doubt and perhaps afterwards lose a large sum of money. Besides that, all those bills of costs are taxed in the ordinary way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know something of bills of costs, and have had to pay a considerable number of them for the examination of titles, and I say distinctly, regarding these bills of cost in the present instance, that some of them seem to me simply scandalous. I think it would be well that that particular item should stand over to be investigated.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, along with the others. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There will be further charges for clerk of works and for architect's staff.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the hon, gentleman will hardly wish the Committee to understand that it is necessary to expend $4,500 for superintending the erection of a building to cost $17,500.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total expenditure will be $30,000; building, $23,000; land, $7,000. The amount paid to the clerk of the works was necessarily larger than usual, from the fact that delay has occurred in putting up the building. An officer was also sent from the Department to see how the work was proceeding, and his expenses had to be paid.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the architect, Mr. Ware, is stated in the return to have received $3,118. I think the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) has done a great service in eliciting these details from the Government.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Minister of Public Works shat he should insist on the clerk of the works attending to his duties a little more energetically. I have nothing to say against that officer, but if he would act a little more energetically, the contractor might expedite the work. I also desire the Postmaster-General to make a note of the fact that the entrance to the Post Office is too narrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to Amherstburg Post Office, $15,000 will be required to complete the work after this vote is taken.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Has the Department any rule in regard to the erection of public buildings in towns?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sometimes they are crected on account of population, and sometimes on account of the business done in the town. At Amherstburg there is a large trade going on. The Customs duties amount to $71,000 and the other revenues to about $2,500. The value of the export is $555,000; imports, $343,000; goods entered for consumption, $321,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I can well understand the hon. gentleman's argument with regard to Amherstburg, but I think there are other places where the argument does not hold good. The population of Amherstburg was 2,672, according to the last Census, and yet the public buildings there cost a considerable sum. Now, I find that Berlin, with a population of 4,000, has public buildings costing $15,000. The population of Orangeville is 2,847, and the hon. gentleman is erecting, or proposing to erect, buildings there costing $5,000; Gananoque, with a population of 2,800, is having public buildings at a cost of $8,000; Barrie, with a population 4,800, is having public buildings to the extent of $16,000; Port Hope, with a population of 5,500, has public buildings costing $15,000; Clifton, with a popu-lation of 2,347, has public buildings costing $12,000. Now, of course, I do not know the system on which the hon, gentleman is acting with respect to these public buildings, but on that basis of population there are many towns of three times the population of some of these which have no public buildings. In my county there are two or three towns exceeding several of these in population, and yet I do not see that he is proposing to erect any public buildings in that important county. The hon, gentleman knows that in that county there is the town of Goderich. He knows the beauty of its situation and the importance of the place, for he has been there, and while he is dealing out his favours so extensively to other places, I hope he will not forget the capital of the great county of Huron, and will see the propriety of erecting public buildings there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is true I visited the town of Goderich more than once. It is a very pretty place, as the hon. gentleman says, and it is a place where one is hospitably received, especially by the hon. gentleman himself. But we have been expending a large sum of money on the harbour there, and I am afraid we will have to expend some more, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not have me erect public buildings there, to the detriment of the harbour, which is a very good one, without which the place, though it is very pretty, would be rather a poor place. I do not say that public buildings may not be erected there—that may come afterwards—but my attention has not been called to it more than once, and that not so very far back, and I could not do it at the time. I have no doubt that good years are in store for it, and that public buildings may be required there, but I am not in a position to say positively now.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not see that the hon. gentleman has anything for Goderich harbour.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will find that it has not been forgotten before the Session is over.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am glad to hear that, as h has not forgotten other harbours in that locality. I ma say, however, that I give him the fullest credit for bein open to argument, and I think that on that side of th House he is the most accessible gentleman who has eve occupied his Department. Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has not paid a visit to the section of country from which I come, because there are some places there considerably larger in population than some of the points at which public buildings are either erected or are in course of erection. Some of his colleagues have recently been visiting in that direction, and I hope these places have impressed them sufficiently to enable him to do something in that locality, more than has been done in the past. The town of Strathroy is the most populous town in West Middlesex, having a population of over 4,200—much larger than some of these other places. There is also the growing town of Glencoe, which is looking for consideration of this kind, and I trust that the recent visits of the Postmaster-General and the Minister of Finance, looking forward as we do to a visit of the Minister of Public Works, will endorse what I have said, and show that these places are in every way entitled to consideration.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). How much has been expended on Galt public buildings, and how much is required to complete them?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site has been given by the population, and the plans are being prepared.

Mr. BAIN. I believe the corporation of Dundas in the adjoining county recently made application for a grant for public buildings there. Have they any prospect of receiving that grant in the Supplementary Estimates this Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer that question, because these grants in the Supplementary Estimates must remain my secret until the Governor sanctions them. If, however, the hon. gentleman does not find a vote in these Estimates, he will have great hopes for next year.

Mr. BAIN. I understood the corporation sent a deputation to wait on the Minister at a recent date, and I have no doubt they urged their claims with all that eloquence which some of those gentlemen know well how to use. Recently the Department over which the hon. gentleman presides sold a public work in that locality, for which they have realized a respectable sum—a work which a good many people thought belonged to the Province. I may remind the hon. gentleman that the town of Dundas showed its faith in the National Policy by its works, during the last election contest. I should be happy to hear that they will have an opportunity of sharing the surplus.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The vote for Clifton Post Office, $12,000, seems a large one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; it is large, but I am sure the hon. gentleman will admit that a place situated so much in sight of our American cousins should have a better building than a place in the interior. The business there is large. The contract is for $28,000. The furniture, fences, graining, heating apparatus, &c., will bring the total cost up to $13,000; we have expended already $14,000. For the Barrie Post Office, &c., there is a revote of $6,000, and a new vote of $10,000. The total cost will be $40,000. It is expected that we shall require a balance of $4,500 to complete the Port Hope building next year. When I was in Toronto last year I saw the Collector of Customs, and afterwards conversed with the Minister of Customs about the Examining Warehouse there. It was found that the work could not be performed properly without extending the building. Instead of completing the whole work now, we intend to go by degrees. The contract is for $72,000, and the fixtures, furnitu e, incidentals, &c., will bring the entire cost up to $13,000. After this has been paid, we shall have to provide : tout $22,000 more. Nothing has been done at Orangeville yet, besides selecting a site, which will cost, I think, $1,200. We obtained it from the corporation of the town, and the title is yet to be given us. I suppose the entire cost of the buildings will be $22,000 or $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The postal revenue is $3,583, and the money orders $4,000. The site for the Peterborough building has not yet been selected. A number of lots were offered, and I had to send an officer to make a report upon them. For the Berlin Post Office, Custom House, &c., the work is going on. The contractor is Mr. W. H. Lewis, and his contract amounts to $23.900. When completed, the whole work will have cost $38,600.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A few days ago I had occasion to bring before the hon. gentleman a petition which had been presented to his colleague, the Postmaster-General, praying for the erection of a public building in the town of Paris; and that hon. gentleman, with his usual courtesy and his pleasant smile, said that I would have to look in the Estimates for it; and I have been looking here for some time, and have not found it. The printer has evidently made some mistake, and it can only be rectified in the Supplementary Estimates. The hon. Minister is evidently not taking votes for any new building this year. If he were I would be disposed to press him a little more strongly on, that point. But I would like to have his explanations.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If there is a mistake, I think it is my hon. friend who is making the mistake. He will remember that on the day on which he spoke of Paris, these Estimates were before the Youse. He never called the attention of myself or of my Department to the wants of Paris, and therefore I am not surprised at his finding nothing in these Estimates. We did not wish to put into these Estimates votes for any new buildings. The Supplementary Estimates are yet to come. If Paris is not found there this time, the hon. gentleman will remember that Paris was not built in one day, and therefore he may expect that Paris will be built another day. We have to examine the place and its population and revenues, and to make arrangements about obtaining a lot-to see whether the corporation will give us a lot, or whether we shall have to purchase one. All these preliminary examinations must be made before we can submit a request for a vote. But the hon, gentlemau may be sure that I have not forgotten his request, though I cannot tell him that I will recommend a vote this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the hon. gentleman has not introduced any new votes here; but if he introduces new votes, he should either put them in these Estimates, which are more easily discussed than the Supplementary Estimates, or bring down the Supplementary Estimates earlier than usual. It is very awkward having new votes on totally new subjects brought in in the Supplementary Estimates. The practice heretofore—I am not speaking of last year—has been to consider in the ordinary Estimates new appropriations, and to use the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of supplying any additional votes that might be wanted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The practice of the last two years is the best—that of putting down in the ordinary Estimates the continuation of works already undertaken, so that Parliament can then see how far we can go for new works. We then take the list of new works asked and select the most pressing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to that course, provided the Supplementary Estimates are brought down at a period which will allow us time to discuss them. I doubt whether, at the date they are brought down, they can be reasonably discussed; and if the hon. gentleman brings down new propositions, some discussion must be had on them.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, MANITOBA.

	(Parliament Buildings. Winnipeg-To complete.) Lieutenant-Governor's residence and stables,	12,000 00
100	Winnipeg Post Office	7,500 00 40,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must explain, with reference to the Parliament Buildings in Winnipeg, that this is only to complete them. We have had in the Suplementary Estimates of the current year a large sum of money for these buildings which are authorized by Order in Council. The Manitoba Government represented that the buildings they had were not suitable to be used for the purposes in question, and we have, therefore, to ask Parliament to give us the vote of money for this purpose. These buildings are now far enough advanced to allow the Legislature to sit in them, but of course we will require to complete the ground, &c. As to the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, we have paid up to the end of December last, since 1881, $74,000, and we require $7,500 more; altogether the expenditure will amount to about $90,000. With reference to the Post Office, it is under contract. We are building on the site of the old one, as it is central, and the price asked for new lots was so high we did not think proper to purchase another We recommended last year, under these circumsite. stances, the erection of a temporary Post Office on Government land which may be removed, if necessary, when the new building is completed.

Mr. WATSON. What is the total cost of the temporary Post Office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think between $12,000 and $13,000. It is a large building, with a vault, &c.

(ally..... 5,000 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nothing has been done about the Lunatic Asylum or Hospital, and the Department of the Interior has not selected the site.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The same remark applies to the jails.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). We voted, last Session, $7,000 for public buildings at Regina. 1 do not see a revote this year. Have the Government abandoned their intention of erecting public buildings there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The buildings intended to be erected there have been erected, and I have been informed by the Department of the Interior that no new vote was required.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That is evidently hardly the case. The intention was to put a court house and juil in that town within the year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That may come in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. CAMERON. I was there in the fall, and the officials told me the buildings were to go on this spring. The intention was to put the buildings up, and I am surprised not to find them in the Estimates.

. Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt a court house is required, and a vote for it will likely be found in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I desire to ask the hon. Minister whether he has selected the site, the particular spot, in that objectionable place, Plummer's Bay, for a quarantine station, and of the sum of $75,000, how much is to be expended on the purchase of a site?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not been informed by the Department of Agriculture where the exact spot is that they intend to select for this work; therefore, I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman must see that the vote is the same as last year. It is a revote. Therefore we have not expended a dollar. The next is the Nanaimo Post Office. This is to complete the work. This is for the outside, the grading and so on. For the British Columbia Penitentiary, New Westminster, there is a sum of $15,000 in the revote column. It should not be there; it is a new vote.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would like to ask if that $4,000 for telephone service is an inclusive amount, or if it is according to the number of telephones.

Sir HECFOR LANGEVIN. It is what it costs per annum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems a large amount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The annual expenditure is $1,500. We have $2,500 towards purchase of sets of instruments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was the same last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last year we had to put in the cables.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these for the Public Buildings at Ottawa alone?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Public Buildings, and also connected with the outside, with the city, between certain residences or offices and the Buildings here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman expect to pay $4,000 every year ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Between $1,500 and $2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is an enormous increase apparently, for salaries of engineers, caretakers, &c.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is apparent, but it is not real. It was paid by different Departments, and, as stated last year, all these salaries and employés have been put under my Department. The increase for fuel is required, as we have some new buildings outside that have to be heated. Besides, the fuel costs more now than it used to.

Mr. MILLS. I thought the National Policy would have put down the price. Mr. THOMPSON. Is any portion of this first amount of $175,000 to be appropriated towards building a new Railway Committee room?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; there is nothing for that. Last year hon. gentlemen spoke generally in the House of improvements to this Chamber, for examp'e, and they complained of rooms being required for Committees and to be used by the members generally. As there was no vote for that, and I had to comply with the request of the House and make the improvements that hon. gentlemen must have seen in this room, for the ventilation and for the skylights, and for other improvements, arranging the seats so as to give more space to members and also prevent the draughts that they were complaining of in the rear seats; the amount for these improvements has been put in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year that will come down early next week. I know that members, as well as some of my officers, have been speaking of a new room to be erected near the present Railway Committee Room over the yard, where there is a large space for that purpose, but the Government have not decided upon making that improvement now. I have not heard that there were complaints this year about the want of space. Of course, if the House would wish to have a new room, we would have to see where it could be crected, and we would have to ask the money from Parliament.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that the Committee is already too large. It consists of over 130 members, and by reducing the number, the room we occupy now might still be large enough, for a few years at all events, for the time is not far distant when the Senate will be abolished, and then we may use that room.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is bespoken.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1 am afraid that will take some time.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the experiment with electric lights has proved successful, and whether this Chamber is to be lighted with electric lights.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, the experiment has been successful to a certain extent. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press me as to that, because we have to decide between two companies, and if we have to choose one and put the other aside, the House would not wish that by a statement here we should damage one company, and therefore the hon. gentleman will prefer not to press me on that point. As to lighting this Chamber, it is my wish to do so, but I am not in a position to say that we can do it this year. I am informed that the electric light has not yet been introduced into Chambers of this kind. In England, they have not introduced the light into the House of Commons. They have it around the House, in Committee rooms and in corridors and so on, but not in the Chamber. I understand that at Washington they have not introduced it either, nor at Albany; but we are watching the progress of the electric light, and as soon as it is introduced in a public building of that kind, we will have to follow suit. I do not suppose the House would wish me to try the experiment. I think it would be better to leave those that have more money than we have and are more important countries, to try the experiment, and then we may follow suit. As soon as we can do it, we will.

Mr. SPROULE. As far as your experience goes in the House, what difference d) you finl in cost between the electric light and the gas light?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have not had it long enough in use to be able to say that. It would require to be used at least six months or a year before we can show United States, since the year 1873 .- (Mr. Charlton.)

the difference. However, hon. members may judge for themselves about the beauty of the light. It is a much softer light, and it does not throw any heat; and it will be a Godsend to us here in this room if we can have this light and be able to use it whilst we are writing and remaining here; but, if it flickers, then hon. gentlemen would complain at once, and in case they might complain, because it is one of the privileges of member of this House as well as of every British subject to be able to grumble, I will take care the gas is not removed, so that if they complain of the other light, we may take the gas again. As soon as the eletric light is used for the upper part of the Chamber, no doubt we will have a good deal more gas on the lower level.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see an item for heating the Public Buildings at Ottawa, $53,000; and heating the Dominion Public Buildings-fuel, &c, $31,000. Why are these items separated ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will remember that last year the heating of the Custom Houses, Post Offices, and other public buildings throughout the Dominion, was put under my Department, which accounts for the second item.

Resolutions to be reported ; Committee to sit again.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 31st March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WINNIPEG AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved that the petition of the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company, presented this day, be now read and received.

Petition read.

Mr. BLAKE. What is this for ?

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I understand, as those gentlemen who are members of the Railway Committee will understand from the discussion which took place a few days ago in that Committee, that an Act was passed last Session to sanction the amalgamation of two railways projected from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay-one from Winnipeg to the Nelson River, and the other to another point on Hudson Bay. The Act provided that the two companies should hold a meeting by the 1st of November last, and should pass resolutions to carry out the amalgamation. It also provided that the companies to be amalgamated should have certain extensions to their charter; and under that Act one of the companies called a meeting, passed the requisite resolution for amalgamation, and transmitted it to the Government. The other company called its meeting, but it has not passed any resolution for amalgamation, and has, I understand, with-drawn from the proposed amalgamation. The hon. Minister of Railways stated in the Railway Committee, the other day, that the Government were anxious to aid the construction of that line by a land grant bonus, and that as the two companies had not succeeded in their amalgamation it would be necessary for the Government to decide which of the two should have the aid from the Government. The Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company, the one which passed the resolution favouring the amalgamation, requires certain amendments to its charteran extension of the time for constructing the line, and other alterations which were given to the amalgamated company by the Act of last Session; but inasmuch as that Act became inoperative, in consequence of the non-carrying out of the amalgamation scheme, it was necessary that the company which has done all it could to carry out the amalgamation, should have the powers which would have been granted under the Act of last Session. I believe the present Bill^{*} is for that purpose.

Mr. ORTON. When the matter was before the Railway Committee the other day we were led to believe that this amalgamation clause had been strictly conformed with, and that the charter was still in existence. It was stated then by the hon. member for Kent, and also by myself, that we had reason to believe that this clause in the Amalgamation Act had not been complied with, and that therefore the charter had ceased to exist. But one of the promoters of the Hudson Bay and Winnij og Company's amalgamation charter distinctly led the Committee to believe that it did exist, and in consequence of the expression of opinion by the Committee and the Minister of Railways I was induced to withdraw the Bill, which I had temporarily taken charge of for another member. Now we find that such has not been the case, and hence the application to Parliament to have this unusual course taken, without any notice being given. I may state that there is another railway company which have a charter to Hudson Bay, the Nelson River Ruilway and Steamship Company, and it certainly seems not unfair that this course should be taken. If it is not unfair to others they propose to construct a road by the east side of Lake Winnipeg, as I understood it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in stating that it was said to the Committee that the amalgamation had taken place. I can understand how such an impression was created, but the discussion arose upon the point taken by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that the charters of these two companies had lapsed; and that point was met by the statement that, irrespective of the lapsing of the original charters, an Act was passed last year authorizing them to be amalgamated and given Parliamentary sanction to their existence. Then the promoter of one of these existing companies which had been authorized by an Act of last Session to amalgamate, stated that a meeting had been held between the companies, as provided for by the Act, and had been adjourned from time to time; but I did not understand him or any person to say that the amalgamation had actually taken place.

Mr. ORTON. I understood distinctly, and I think many other members of the Committee understood, the hon. member to state that the clause with reference to amalgamation has been complied with. He certainly led the Committee to believe that the companies had amalgamated.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think that the hon. member for Selkirk stated that section 5 had been complied with ; but he went on to say further that a meeting of his company had been held in September, and that it had been adjourned to another time, but whether the other company held a meeting or not was not clear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman did not understand him to say that the amalgamation had taken place? 17

Mr. MACKENZIE. No. Mr. CAMEBON (Victoria),

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). What the hon. member for Selkirk said was that the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Company had held a meeting and passed a resolution for amalgamation, and transmitted it to the Secretary of State; and that a meeting of the other company had been summoned before the 1st of November, but had been adjourned from time to time, and had not yet passed a resolution for amal. gamation; showing that the amalgamation had not been completed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, that is it.

Petition received.

CENTRAL ONTARIO RAILWAY.

Mr. PLATT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No: 73) respecting the Central Ontario Railway.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WHITE (Hastings) moved that the following words be inserted after the word "line" in the third line of the section :-- " Via Bancroft, in the township of Faraday in the county of Hastings.'

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it is in accordance with the rule that that amendment should be put, as no notice has been given of it, and it proposes to define or limit the route of the railway.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I did not think it was necessary to give notice of it. I do not think the promoters of the Bill will object to it.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It is an important change in the character of the Bill, and I think notice should be given of

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I move that the following clauses be added to the Bill - notice has been given of these :

Clauses be added to the BiH - notice has been given of these: "6. The Company shall at the point of junction of their railway with the Midland Railway of Canada, in the township of Madoc, in the County of Hastings, afford all reasonable facilities for the exchange of traffic passing to or from points on the Midland Railway system, from or to points on the said Central Ontario duilway north of said junction, and shall, at said point of junction, take from the Midland Railway of Canada without unreasonable delay, and with all convenient desi-patch, all cars, trucks, and such like means of conveyance, which may be consigned to points on the said Central Ontario line north of the junction as aforesaid; and will also receive upon their line of railway; north of the said junction, all cars, trucks and freight destined for points upon the Midland Railway; and shall hau, carry and convey the same, as the case may be; to or from the said junction, with all reasonable thereof, as the case may be; that they will permit and allow sidings at points on their said line connecting therewith and under their control, for the loading of timber, lumber, wood or other fright carriage by such cars as are above mentioned to points south of said junction on said Midland Railway, such sidings to be worked and used on reasonable terms, and that the Central Ontario Company will, in respect of said freight, give every reasonable facility, and all this shall be done and afforded at a milesge rate of freight to be agreed upon and failing agreement as shall be fixed from time to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the town time to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to time by the tover-mor in Council. A state of the said line to and failing agreement as shall be fixed from time to time by the Gover-nor in Council. A shall be fixed from time to time by the Gover-"7. The Midland Railway Company shall, at the said point of junc-tion of their railway with the said Company's railway, afford all reason-able facilities for the exchange of traffic crossing to or from points on the Central Ontario Railway, north of the said junction, and shall, at the said point of junction, take from the Central Ontario Railway, with-out unreasonable delay, and with all convenient despatch, all cars, trucks and such like means of conveyance, which may be consigned to points on the said Midland Railway south of the said junction; and will also receive upon their line of railway, south of said junction, all cars, trucks and freight destined for points upon the Central Ontario Rail-way, north of the junction, and shall haul, carry and convey the same as the case may be, to or from the said junction, with all reasonable despatch, and deliver the same at the said junction, or to the consignee thereof, as the case may be. "8. That the Midland Railway Company will, to and from points on their line south of the said Junction, carry and convey by the carload or otherway, freight and failway, at the same rate per mile at which freigh and passengers are carried, for the time being from the said junction to the city of Belleville; and in the event of any dispute as to the said rate, the same shall be fixed by the Goveraor in Council. "9. That the Central Ontario Railway Company will to and from points on their said line north of said junction, carry and convey by the car-load of otherwise, freight, and will convey passengers to and from the said junction with the Midland Railway, at the same rate per mile for which freight and passangers are, for the time beinz, carried from the same point to the point on Lake Ontario or the Bay of Quinté used as a shipping point by the Central Ontario Railway Company, and in the event of any dispute as to the said rate, the same shall be fixed by the Governor in Council, so that in either case the freight and passenger business to and from the front may take such line to the point of junction as may be deemed best, and that Belleville shall, as regards the business to and from the county north of the said junction, have equal facilities with other points reached by the said Courtal Ontario Railway south of with other points reached by the said Central Ontario Railway south of said junction."

These amendments have been agreed to by the president of the railway. When the hop, member asked me if I would have the kindness to take charge of the Bill, the president of the road suid he was most anxious to make arrangements for connection and running powers with the Midland system. I said that if he and those who were interested would come to some arrangement I would support it in overy way I possibly could. I went to a great deal of trouble to get the solicitor of the Grand Trunk and the president of the Central Ontario and the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) together. After two or three meetings, they agreed to add to the Bill certain clauses, which were drawn by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott). He and the hon, member for North Hastings and myself met and the clauses were read over, and at the request of the president of the Central Ontario Company they were printed and added to the Bill. After they were added to the Bill he consulted a member of this House, who I understand informed him how they would injuriously affect this Bill. I then told him we could agree to other clauses, which would be satisfactory to all concerned, to have the railway extended to the northern part of the county of Hastings. Now I think that I have fully explained to the House why I moved these resolutions. They were got, up with the advice, consent and knowledge of the Central Ontario Railway Company, through the president, who now would not allow them to be inserted in the Bill. I will not divide the Committee on the clauses because I intended to divide the House on them when the Bill came before it. I hope these clauses will be added to the Bill.

Mr. PLATT. The explanations given by the hon. gentleman do not seem to be such as should recommend themselves to the members of this House. He bases his claim to the right to impose these amendments on the fact that certain conditions were agreed to by the president of the company which is asking this extension of the charter. Whatever agreement may have been come to between the president and those who are negotiating for other companies and localities, was never intended to become a part and portion of the Bill. I had no knowledge that these amendments were made, nor did I know they were printed. The printing was simply an experiment to see in what shape the Bill would appear with these amendments, and it was done with the knowledge of the promoter of this Bill. That is the proprietor of the railway. As soon as they were printed he saw their effect, and although he was perfectly willing to make these arrangements with the managers of other railways for the purpose of carrying freight on reasonable and fair terms, he was not willing to have such arrangements inserted in the Bill because to do so would seriously effect his financial arrangements. The people with whom he was negotiating for capital to construct the road, as soon as they found out that restrictions were proposed to be placed in this Bill such as are not found in other Railway Acts, refused to assist him in his financial arrangements. He was willing to agree to such arrangements, but wished to have them made in the usual way. If these conditions are to be imposed in this case, they should | and another, but should not be put into the B ...

be imposed on all railways; and to do this they should be added to the General Railway Act. It is not right or reasonable that the promoter of this charter should be so singled out and such conditions imposed to his prejudice; by so doing his financial arrrangements would be seriously interfered with. These amendments were made and printed solely because the president of the road desired to show his willingness, a willingness which he often expressed beforehand, to enter into any sort of bond or agreement with other corporations for the purpose of carrying freight, and he is still willing to do so, but the objection to these clauses is that, in the first place, they are unusual amendments, amendments which are not inserted in other railway charters; if anything is to be done of this nature, it should be done in the General Railway Act, so as to bring all railways under the same provisions. The House will hardly see fit, at this stage after the Bill has been fully discussed in the Railway Committee, to put in this charter restrictions which would seriously interfere with the promoters of this enterprise in their finan, cial arrangements for the construction of the road. I need not at present dilate upon the vast importance to the promoters of this Bill of its passage this Session nor of the vast importance to the country of the carrying out of this project. The chief objection to these amendments, and a fact which must prove fatal to the claims to those who are now seeking to impose these restrictions, is that this company has been allowed to go on and construct 40 miles of railway out of their own means through a very difficult portion of the country, and while this construction was going on, we heard of no restrictions. They were, on the contrary, encouraged to go on, but now, however, after these 40 miles have been constructed, and when the company wish to extend the road further, the city of Belleville and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and I do not know who else, step in and wish to impose those restrictions.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I told the hon. gentleman there were negotiations going on between the Grand Trunk Railway and the president of the Ontario Railway C. m pany, and that the arrangement I propose was agreed to by the promoters of this Bill. The promoters of the Bill were anxious to carry out the very arrangement which I now submit to the House, and the hon. gentleman himself has told me that whatever the president of the road agreed to would be quite satisfactory to him. The president of the road wrote letters, which were published in the Madoc Review, and which will be read by the hon. member for North Hastings, and those letters will be put in the possession of hon. members of this House to show that these amendments which I now propose originated with and were supported by the promotors of this Bill. It is said that this company is getting nothing in return for what we are asking in these amendments, but they will get running powers over the Napanee and Tamworth road when it reaches Bridgewater, over the Belleville and North Hastings Railway, and, if necessary, over the whole Midland Railway system which amounts to 500 miles, at the places where their road will connect with this system. The Napanee and Tamworth Railway Company has a charter, passed this Session, for a road over the same section of country to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but this charter they are prepared to abandon if the Central Ontario Company will give these powers asked for to the other roads.

Mr. PLATT. I did not know the nature of these amendments at all until I saw them printed in a Bill which was laid on my desk. I knew that negotiations were going on; but as soon as I saw the president of the railway and asked him if he would agree to these amendments, he refused. He said they might be fair enough between one company 1204 the amendments to suit him?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, such proposition was made by you.

Mr. BOWELL. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the president of the company did not agree to these amendments?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). This subject was very fully discussed in the Railway Committee a few days ago. There were three different divisions taken in that Committee, after the most ample discussion, every member thoroughly understanding the question. The Committee decided that it was not right to impose upon this company traffic arrangements of a peculiar character, such as those covered by the amendments of my hon. friend, when the company simply asked power to build an extension of its line and to make certain alterations in its internal economy in regard to bonds and capital stock. My hon, friend says the Napanee and Tamworth road has this very Session got a charter allowing it to build in the very same direction; and if it has got a charter without having any such onerous conditions attached to it as are proposed to be attached to this Bill, that is an argument attaching them to this Bill. If we have chartered a company to extend its line in the same direction as this, crossing also, as it does, the Belleville and North Hastings line, and have not imposed any conditions upon that company, why should we now impose conditions upon this company? The very argument he advances is conclusive against the position he now takes. The whole discussion in the Railway Committee proceeded the other day upon the supposition that the Belleville and North Hastings road, now part of the Midland, had the right to extend its line-

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to call the hon. gentleman to order. He had no right to discuss what took place in Committee. We had better adhere strictly to rules, especially as the leader of the Opposition began it.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not understand the rule in that sense at all.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that, after the Committee has reported, it is not out of order to refer to its discussions.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think it is.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, it is.

Mr. CAMERON. I can only say that, in my experience, I have in this House repeatedly heard such discussions referred to.

Mr. PLATT. The member for East Hastings (Mr. White) has already referred to them.

Mr. CAMERON. However, if my hon. friend is so cap-tious, I will put it in another way. There are various ways of getting over a difficulty in this House and elsewhere. He objects to my reterring to what took place in Committee. I will say simply that, in the discussion that has taken place and the arguments which have been advanced in favour of these clauses which my hon. friend from East Hastings now proposes, he bases the claim to have been imposed on the supposition that the charter of the Belleville and North Hastings road now exists authorizing it to extend its line in the direction this company now proposes to extend, and it is expressly upon that ground, that, as that is still in existence, if we charter a rival company, we have a right to impose conditions, that he proposes now to impose them. Looking at the Act of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway, which became law on the 24th March, 1874, I find it provided that "The said railway shall be commenced within two years, and com-pleted within four years to the village of Madoc, and within five years to the Seymour Iron Mines, and within ten years to some point in the Mr. PLATT.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Then did I not propose to alter after the passing of this Act, or else the charter shall be forfeited as regards so much of the railway not completed."

It appears to me that the charter of the road, quoad any extension beyond the Seymour Mines, or the point to which it has already gone north of that, expired on the 25th March, 1884; and, that being the case, what possible foun-dation have we now for attaching to this Bill conditions relative to the Belleville and North Hastings road north of the point where it has gone now, on the supposition that it has the power to build further north? The fact that this charter has expired is a conclusive answer to the proposition to add these clauses to the Bill. There is a very important view affecting the public interests of the whole country in reference to this road. The proprietors of this road are Americans, who, in order to develop iron mining properties of great value and extent which they have in the North Hastings region, have come here and built a railway at their own expense from Trenton some seventy-six miles northward. They have brought in and expended American capital to the extent of upwards of $2,000,000. They have not asked for public aid to the extent of a dollar. They have not received any public aid. They have built this road with their own money. They come to the House now, and ask power to extend their road further north to a junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they also ask power to increase their capital stock and certain powers in reference to their bond issue. Is it right that we should now say: "We will clog your enterprize and attach conditions which will prevent your financing in order to carry on your enterprise, in which you have already put so much money and by which you have done so much to develop that great interest; we will clog that with conditions which will render the extended charter perfectly valueless to you." I do not propose to discuss the merits of the conditions. I am aware that negotiations did take place between my hon. friend representing that part of the country and the president of the railway, in reference to certain traffic arrangements which he was perfectly willing to enter into. If the conditions come within the General Act, this proposal is not required; if they go further than the General Act, they should not be imposed. It would be hampering this Act to impose them. The General Act gives power to make a traffic arrangement for 21 years, which would answor the purposes of both companies, and all the president intended to intimate was that he would accede to any reasonable traffic arrangement with the Grand Trunk, as representing the Midland Company, and running it; but when it is proposed to impose onerous conditions upon him and his company, he says: "What consideration have I for yielding to this?" If the Government are going to grant a bonus to the road, they can impose any conditions they like having reference to a fair interchange of traffic; the Government have everything in their control if they propose to grant Government aid to this road, but, if not, no other conditions except those which the General Railway Act imposes upon all companies ought to be imposed upon this company.

Mr. BOWELL. It is just as well that the Committee should be placed in possession of all the facts connected with this Bill and the amendments which are now proposed. I confess I was not a little surprised when my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) denied the statement of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) in moving the Bill, that the amendments were agreed to by the president of the company, Mr. Ritchie.

Mr. PLATT. I did not deny that.

Mr. BOWELL. I understood that the hon. gentleman did.

Mr. PLATT. I denied that I agreed to them.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman agreed to or did not agree to; but I know that, without any solicitation on my part, representing the North Riding of the county of Hastings, Mr. Ritchie waited upon me in connection with this Bill and related what he proposed to do. He said he understood I had some objections to the Bill. I replied that I had no objection to the extension of his railway to any distance, that I trusted it would even ultimately extend to the Pacific; but, as the Belleville and North Hastings Railway, which was now a part of the Midland system, had a charter for the extension of the road from Eldorado northward as far as Bancroft, I thought the interests of that company, which were the interests of the county generally, should be looked after and preserved. His reply to that was that he had already—it was something new to me, because I knew nothing of the negotiations which had been carried on-made suggestions by letter to Mr. Bell, the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, and also, I suppose, of the Midland at the present time, for making such traffic arrangements and giving just such privileges over the road northward to Bancroft as I had proposed to him. He further informed me that he had made the same proposition to Mr. Wood, the local member for the North Riding of the county of Hastings, who was originally not only a promoter but a director of the North Hastings Railway. I at once said to him : "If that be the case and you are prepared to carry it out, it may as well be put in the Bill to prevent any doubt arising in the future." He agreed, but he said he did not know why an arrangement could not be made without putting it on the Statute. My reply was that, if he was desirous of extending the privileges he proposed to give to the Midland system by the letters he had written to the parties I have montioned, there could be no possible harm in placing it in the Bill in order to prevent any difficulty in the future. At his suggostion, I had certain amendments prepared. Those amendments, when read by myself and presented to Mr. Ritchie, I thought were unfair, as they were one-sided, asking him to extend privileges over his road which were not given to him over that portion of the Midland which was formerly the Belleville and North Hastings, from Belleville to Eldorado; and I said I would have them so changed that just such rights and privileges as were asked from him should be conceeded to him over the other portion southward from Eldorado. He agreed to that, I then asked a member of this House who is a lawyer of much railway experience, if he would kindly put those amendments in shape so as to meet the views of Mr. Ritchie and mysolf. Acting on my solicitations he did so. I took those amendments to Mr. Ritchie. I read them over to him two or three times calmly and deliberately, and then in addition to that I asked the gentleman who had drafted the resolutions to meet us in the Committee Room. The three of us sat down and went over those resolutions; he agreed to the amendments in every single particular, and the suggestion was then made that as the amendments were of a somewhat important character, the Bill had better be reprinted before it went to the Railway Committee. He replied that he thought that the suggestion was a proper one, and that it was only fair to the Committee who would be asked to consider them. With his consent, knowledge, and approval, and in fact at his suggestion, I caused the amendments to be printed, and I knew nothing of any objection to them until the Railway Committee met. The House can well understand why I should have been somewhat surprised on learning that he objected in toto to the whole smendment. I then stated: "If these amendments go further than you intended originally, and if you still intend to give traffic arrangements over your road to freight that is going south, we will retire and so amend the Bill in order to meet your view." However he declined the advantages they expected to derive from the expen-that, I suppose, upon certain advice—what it was, I do not i diture of their money. Now when they knew this to be know. That is the history of the affair in so far as I or the hon, member for East Hastings have any connection with this Bill. But let me go a little further. In 1874, as my hon. friend says, a charter was obtained for the construction of what is known as the Belleville and North Hastings railway, running from a point on the Grand Junction Railway about 14 miles north to Belleville and still on northward. After the road had been constructed as far as Eldorado, the Central Ontario obtained a charter from the Legislature of the Province of Ontario. I think my hon. friend opposite said that we allowed him to go on and construct his road without any interference, until he applied for an extension of the charter. That is very true, because we had no power, no authority, and no light to interfere with it. The Local Legislature had given him a Bill containing most extrao dinary powers—as I may relate before I sit down—and under that Bill he proceeded to construct his road. But in the construction of that road he crossed the Belleville and North Hastings at the point of junction at Eldorado, and when the question of carrying freight from that section of the county, which is a vast mineral territory, came up, those with whom he was connected distinctly told the parties owning mines in different parts of that Riding, and in that section of the county, that unless they acceded to their request and demands in selling their mines to this Company, they never would carry freight over their line. It may be said in reply that they are compelled under the General Railway Act to carry this freight; but we know very well from experience that if a railway company have made up its mind not to give facilities to any person in carrying freight, they can find plenty of pretexts for doing so, and I do not know where they could be used to a greater extent, and where more damage could be done than in a mineral region. If a farmer, as is the case there, owns valuable mines in close proximity to the line of this sailway and to its depot, and he desires to mine the ore and send it to market, he goes to the railway company and says : "I want you to carry my freight," it is very easy for the company to say, "We will carry it, but we have no means just now at our disposal to enable us to do so." It is easy for the company to say that they have the locomotive power, but have not the freight cars to enable them to carry his freight, because if they do it will be to the detriment of their own business. These amendments provide that in case any farmer, or any person owning a mine desires to have freight carried either to the I'renton terminus of that railway, or to Belleville by the Belleville and North Hastings from Eldorado southward to the Bay of Quinté, and they are not prepared to furnish the freight cars and other appliances necessary to carry freight, the Company shall be compelled to take empty freight cars at the junction northward from Eldorado to the point where the mine is situated, and to return them loaded over to the Midland system in case they desire to go by that route; and on the other hand, if they have any freight that they desire to send to the Bay of Quintéwhether it be lumber, or square timber, or logs, or anything else-when they bring it to the junction at Eldorado the Midland Railway will be compelled to carry it for them under the same terms and at the same rates as they Threats had been made carry their own freight. by the parties connected with the road, and naturally created distrust in those who are interested in the town-hips and town of Madoc, in the city of Belleville, and the community generally, Belleville having contributed $150,00+ towards the construction of these roads, the town of Madee $30,000, and the county $-0,000, in order that they might not have the whole traffic taken from the northern portion of the county to the front by another route, thereby depriving them of all the case, and knew that threats had been made that freight would not be taken, that the Company had built a road exclusively for themselves those interested in the prosperity of Madoc and Belleville thought it but right in the interests of the whole county to take measures at once to extend the line of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway. They raised subscriptions, they paid their money, and they explored two lives for the extension of their road. The moment that was done the parties holding a charter for the Central Ontario Railway at once applied for the extension of their line to the northward; and in order to allay the feelings of the people, the residents wrote a number of lotters to various parties interested, telling them that they were quite prepared, if they would not go on--that was not in their letters, but they made such an intimation personally -that if the Belleville and North Hastings line was not extended, the traffic arrangements which they asked on behalf of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway, should be conceded to them. In order that there may be no mistake about that I will read a letter published in the North Hastings Review, published in the village of Madoc, written by Mr. Coe. a gentleman who is largely interested in that mining district, and who sold what is termed the Coe Mine to this Company, who owned besides vast tracts of land in the mineral districts. I repeat to the Committee that as soon as the survey was begun, in order to secure the traffic for the south, they began to assure the people that it was quite unnecessary, insemuch as they were desirous of receiving all the traffic they could possibly obtain for their road. On 6th March, 1884, Mr. Coe published a letter in the North Hastings Review. I may state that Mr. Coe has been a resident of Madoe since 1867, and has been constantly since that time, engaged in mining operations. In that letter he says:

"Sig.—Having been so long a citizen of Mador, I feel fully alive to everything that will promote its interests and improve its business facilities. I have been approached by numbers of my fellow townsman who feel that the Central Ontario Railway, having no direct connec-tion with our town, will, in the near future, do Madoc great injury, by carrying to another quarter many of the pass agers and a great deal of the trade and freight traffic which in the past and now has been tribu-tory to Madoc. Feeling quite satisfied in my own mind that the Presi-dent and Directors of this railway had no motive in making any arrange-ments in respect to the working of this line around a purely commercial dant and Directors of this railway had no motive in making any arrange-ments in respect to the working of this line except a purely commutcial one, I wrote the President, and afterwards had an interview with the Direc-torate of the road on the whole subject, and was very much gratified on doing so, to find that they were disposed to do everything in their power to accommodate not only the peiple of Madoc, but the residents of North Hastings. Of course, I pointed out in the interview that took place very fully the desires of the citizens here, and also that I under-stod the people of the city of Belleville were greatly interested in the facilitating of the intercommunication from the extreme north to the southern borders of Hasting."

"That a great deal of business, commercially, had for years been the outcome of the enterprise of the Belleville merchants, that the county and land business had to be transacted in Belleville, and that the edu-cational institutions located in Belleville and Madoc to our northern residents is evident. In view of these facts I urged that everything should be done to meet the desires of those who were interested in having a proper harmony of working between the two roads-the B. & N.H. and Central Ontario."

Then Mr. Coe says :

"In reply these gentlemen said they were inclined to do all that lay in their power to bring about such arrangements as would be satis-factory to these interests, and to show their gool faith the President, Mr. Ritchie, addressed the following letter to myself, handed me a copy of one already mailed to Jno. Bill. Esq., Belleville, and another to A. F. Wood, M. P. P., on the subject. They are as follows :--

" JOHN BELL, ESQ.,

" TORONTO, Feb. 20, 1884.

"Att'y G. T. R'y.

"DEAB SIR,-The Central Ontario Railway is desirous of making some arrangement with the Gran I Trunk Railway for a connection with their line at Eldorado by which we can have communication with Belleyille and Madoo ()n-our part we are willing to place these points upon as favorable terms for the traffic of the North Hastings district as any points upon our own line.

"Yours truly, "S. J. RITCHIE, Pres.

Mr. Bowell.

"WM. COE, Esq., Madoe.

WM. UOE, ESQ., Madoc. "DEAR Sig-Your favour 23rd icc ived. In reply to the completints you speak of that Madoc and Belleville are to be shut out of the north country. I can but answer you by inclosing you a copy of a letter which I addressed to A. F. Wood, M.P.P., in reply to a similar completint. I also inclose you copy of letter to John Bell, as Attorney for the G. T. Riy, which he assured me would be entirely satisfactory to them. So far from wishing to drive away any business, we are cally too anxious to get it from any source that may present any just as soon as we are in shape to take it. Neither Belleville nor Madoc need have the slightest concern about lack of facilities for getting into North Hasting.. Your neighbours need lose no sleep on this account and you can assure them of thus. no sleep on this account and you can assure them of this.

" Very truly yours, "S. J. RITCHIE."

" TORONTO, Feb. 20, 1884.

"A. F. WOOD, M.P.P.

"DEAR Sig, ---Referring to our verbal statements to-day. I have to say that the Central Ontario Railway is ready and very anxious to make any arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway that will give Belleville and Madoc equal facilities for the traffic with the North Hastings district with those enjoyed by any point upon its own line.

" Very truly yours, "S. J. RITCHIE."

Mr. Coe in conclusion said :

"You will perceive that this matter is now in a fair way of being arranged in some way that will be mutually advantageous to the differ ent railways as well as in accommodating the citizens of all parts o the county."

With these declarations and letters-the declaration of the president to myself and to the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White), the letters which he sent to the local member (Mr. Wood), who was deeply interested in this matter, the assurance to a gentleman acting on behalf of the Midland system and the Grand Trunk stating he was willing to carry out those arrangements, and the volun-tary declaration on his part to me that he was still prepared to carry them out, and the fact that it was with his knowledge, consent and advice that the amendments were prepared -I ask the Committee whether it is treating fairly members with whom he was in communication and the companies represented by appearing before the Committee at the very last moment and declaring that he would not now accept any amendment to the Bill. He lured them on to silence until the last moment, preventing further operations going on in the way of surveying or locating the road, those interested lying under the impression that such was not necessary because he would grant the traffic arrangements which he pledged himself to do; and now this gentleman asks for an extension of the road and refuses pointedly and peremptorily to carry out that to which he had agreed. Some hon, gentlemen will say: "You should take his word and the word of the company." If the pledges made in those letters and the promises given to hon. members in connection with this matter are of no more value than they appear to be, it is the duty of the House in granting the Company further privileges to provide that they shall not interfere with the rights of others, but shall carry out that which, while not to their own detriment, is in the interests of the country. But the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who is a lawyer, and I am not, tells the Committee that the charter of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company has lapsed I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would deliberately attempt to mislead the Committee, but I think he has not carried his research sufficiently far to justify the statement he made. Since the passage of the Acts incorporating the Belleville and North Hastings, the Grand Junction Railway and the Midland system they have been amalgamated by an Act passed by the Ontario Legislature. If power was not given in that Act to enable the Midland system to construct this road, then I admit there would be a great deal of fo: ce in the hon. gentleman's contention. But if he will turn to the Act of amalgamation, passed on the 10th March, 1882, he will find the following clause:-

"The company shall have power in order to connect their railway with the iron mines in the townships of Showdon, Glamorgan, Gdway, with the iron mines in the cownships of Showdon, Grändrigen, Gräwäy, and Lutterworth terbuild sidings or branches from what is now known as the lines of the Victoria Railway, by such routes as may be found best to the said mines, and they may extend what is known as the Gränd Junction Railway its present terminus in the township of Madoc to the village of Bancréfs, in the township of Faraday, to the iron mines situate between said points; and for said purpose all the Acts relating to the said consolidated company."

This clause gives the Midland Railway Company power to extend their road from Eldorado to Bancroft, so that even if the time given in the Belleville and North Hastings charter has expired as contended by my hon. friend, it is more than revived by this charter, because the time is unlimited as to the period at which it can be built.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). No; the existing time would still apply.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a question between lawyers and I am advised to the contrary. The clause says that they shall have power to extend their line from the northern terminus of the Belleville and North Hastings, then the Grand Junction; for I may say parenthetically that these two lines had been amalgamated before they became part of the Midland system. It goes on to say that they have a right to construct as far as Bancroft ; and I may say that before venturing this opinion I consulted a legal gentleman in this House of eminence, who gave me the opinion that they had the power under that clause to construct a line no matter at what period, unless it were repealed. Knowing that to be the case we went on and had the line surveyed. Now, what we ask is this: That having the power under that Statute to extend our line from Bancroft northward, no other charter should take its place, unless something commensurate should be given in lieu thereof; in other words that they should be compelled to carry freight from the northern part of the country to the junction, at rates which would be fair and equitable, and if no arrangement can be come to as to what would be fair and equitable rates, the clause provides that the tariff should be arranged as between the two companies by the Governor in Council. Having promised this to the parties most interested we say that it is too late now to repudiate and say that they will not grant these privileges, because they think they are going to interfere with what they consider to be their rights; in other words, to keep the people of North Hastings and South Hastings in the position in which they have been in the past; that if they do decide now to go on and construct the road, then it was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrators were there will be two competing lines. I say it would be better in the interests of both companies that there should not be two competing lines, that one line will be able for years to land itself, the company at once applied for some process of come to do all the business that there will be to do; an ! all law-1 forget what it is called-before the award was made. that the parties interested in the town of Madoc, and township, who have taxed themselves for the construction of these roads, ask, is no more than ordinary traffic arrangements. They ask that this Company shall bring their freight to a certain junction and allow another road to take it to the south; that the Midland system shall bring the traffic that may be required from the county of Hastings to its northern terminus, and hand it over to the Ontario Central to carry still further northward, and not allow them to charge any more than they would for ordinary carriers, so that there may be no difficulties thrown in the way of a free interchange of traffic between these two parties. 1 might mention as another reason why I think this Committee should agree to the amendment, the declaration on the part of those connected with the road that they would not carry freight for the others unless they were prepared to do ro.

Mr. PLATT. When was that declaration made?

Mr. BOWELL. In the Riding itself, to different parties.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have the proof. This is the first that we have heard of it.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has not heard everything, and he may not have heard this declaration, but Mr. Ritchie has.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). He denies having made such a statement or that it was made on his authority.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that it was made by him or on his authority, but it was made by the manager of the Company, and those associated with him; and if the hon. member for Prince Edward county is desirous, I can furnish him with the name of one of the gentlemen to whom the threat was made. I say more, that under the extraordinary powers given to this Company they are enabled, strange as it may appear, to locate their terminus, and to expropriate mining lands on the ground that they are required for their purposes,

Mr. PLATT. We cannot interfere with that.

Mr. BOWELL-and so grossly has that privilego been abused, that last Session, in the Ontario Legislature, a Bill was passed defining what rights they and all other companies have in that particular. This very compassed their own lands, pany over and the terminus which they proposed to adopt, and located all their works and the end of their road on the very top of what the owners of the land believed to be a valuable mine, and expropriated it under the clause which they have in their charter, in the same manner as they would expropriate ordinary lands for railway purpose. When I was told that they had done that I said that it could not be possible; I called my hon. friend's attention to it, and he could not believe it; he said there could be no such authority under the law. But the president of the company pulled out of his pocket a judgment of the Court-because the owners of the mine had taken it into Court,-deciding that by the privileges given to them under the Act of the Ontario Legislature, and under the expropriation clause of the different Railway Acts, they had a right to locate their terminus upon lands in which there were valuable mines, and to expropriate and take that property from the owners. I know further, that in the carrying out of what they consider to be their rights, in passing through valuable farms, the Ontario Railway Company refused to pay what Central they declared to be the exorbitant demands for the landto which I do not think any one would object-and when about to decide that the farmers were entitled to so much money for the injury done to their property as well as for the paid the expenses and demanded another arbitration. Another award was about to be made for the same thing and I am not sure but that a third award was made,

Mr. WELLS. They cannot do that legally.

Mr. BOWELL. I am coming to that; but the law was so worded that they did do it and the arbitrators did not give their award. The parties put the case in Court and the company had to pay it, but for months and months in the meantime the terrorism which existed in that section of the country had induced the farmers to take what was offered for their land, rather than be driven into Court. As the hon. gentleman says, it was not legal, and the Courts decided against them, but meantime the mischief had been done, for rather than be driven into Court, not knowing what the result would be, the parties accepted what the Company thought proper to give. I say that when we find a company, and they are not all foreigners - the manager is a Canadian as are others connected with the road-I say when the Committee and the country find that such advantage is being taken of the innocent and honest farmers along the line of the road, the Legislature of the country should step in and forbid them,

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does this Bill deal with that subject at all?

Mr. BOWELL. No it does not; and though these facts may not be acceptable, though they may not be palatable, I am giving them as a reason why we should-

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). They are irrelevant, not unpalatable.

Mr. BOWELL. They are unpalatable, but not irrelevant. I am giving these facts to show how they are conducting their business, and to show the absolute necessity of the Legislature intervening and placing on the Statute Book of the country that which they say by word of mouth they are willing to extend. That I do not think is irrelevant and I shall be very much surprised if the rights of the people are not guaranteed in this matter. The Railway Act I am aware makes certain provisions, but when we consider the difficulties which have always presented themselves in enforcing those clauses, where the railway company is determined not to accede to the wishes of the people, and give them the desired accommodation, we should make such provision as to compel the companies to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why does not the Government amend the Railway Act for that purpose?

Mr. BOWELL. I might retort by asking why did not your Government do it when in power?

Mr. MITCHELL. We did not experience any difficulty then which you say exists now, but which I do not believe exists.

Mr. BOWELL. I have nothing further to add. I have explained to the House precisely the position which these two companies occupy. I have pointed out what is asked in these amendments, which were suggested by the company themselves and accepted by others who were interested in that section of the country, and who had privileges out of which they were legislated by the Ontario Legislature when these companies were amalgamated; and I think we are not asking too much when we ask that such restrictions should be imposed as will be in the interest of the people and of the country generally.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not understand, from what has fallen either from the hon. Minister of Customs or from the gentleman who moved these amendments, that any agreement has been arrived at between the parties in whose interest they are moved, and the company asking for this legislation. If it were established clearly that there was an agreement come to, and that the House was morely called upon to ratify that agreement, it would be a different matter. But we have been treated with a long statement regarding interviews and negotiations, which, as the hon. Minister himself admits, have absolutely failed. It is the case every day that parties meet together and attompt to arrange, but do not complete arrangements. In the present case, the negotiations came to nothing; therefore, the whole matter is before us, and I submit that we are called upon to deal with it as if there had been no negotiations whatever. I listened with very great interest to the discussion on this question when it was before the Railway Committee. It then came to my knowledge for the first time that a railway had been built by American capital for eighty miles into the back country, silently and unobtrusively, almost entirely unknown to the majority of the people of Ontario. I understand that it is the policy of the Government—and I endorse that policy—to attract foreign capital to this country from all sources. I understand that the great iron industries of the United States are interested instance a railway had been built largely by the contribuin the extension of this railway; that they desire to obtain our iron ore for purposes of their own, and that they are not appealing to the Canadian people for assistance, but are building this road out of their own resources. Under these circumstances I doubt if there is a case on record which has appealed more forcibly than this does, for all the freedom which the Legislature can give to the enterprise in question. I am surprised, therefore, that the hon. Minister of Customs, even though trammelled as he must be by local interests, should, instead of meeting the issues squarely, go out of his way to try and defeat the Bill by a narrative of matters which, in my opinion, are wholly irrelevant to the issue. Has he addressed one argument to the real question between the Company and the House? We have nothing to do with these supposed agreements, which did not amount to anything. We have the question before us: Is it in the interest of Canada to grant this charter, and to allow this Company, with their own money, to build their line from its present terminus into our unknown wilds, in order to develop our resources at their own expense? Did the hon. Minister address one word of argument to that issue? I failed to hear one word. I might enquire : Did the hon Minister of Customs remember this issue, when a Bill of a very similar character unanimously passed this House a short time ago? That was a Bill dealing with a company called the North West Coal and Navigation Company, limited-a company formed in England, having mining rights in the North-West, and which applied to Parliament to have railway powers attached to its mining powers. That Bill passed this House unanimously there not being one attempt made either in Committee or in the House to restrict the Company in its absolute freedom. The hon. Minister of Customs did attempt to intimate, not by argument, but by assertion, that the present Company would do wrong-that having a large amount of mining territory under its control, it would discriminate in its own favour, and against others having mining interests in the same district. Why did he not express the same fear with regard to the North-West Coal and Navigation Company? That company, I understand, possess extensive coal mines in the vicinity of Belly River. I suppose others have mining interests there also; but when we clothed that company with railway powers, we did not attempt to control its operations with regard to carrying the coal of others. We gave it a charter to develop that coal region, and no doubt the House felt that if that company did not perform that work, others would come forward to develop the coal mines, and do the carrying trade. So, if this Company is willing to bring money from abroad, and to spend it in developing our undeveloped treasure, I fail to see why we should hesitate for one moment to grant it the necessary powers. On the contrary, I think the hon. Minister of Customs has made a grave mistake in giving reason for it to be felt abroad that even one member of the Government could be found to throw an obstacle in the way of the development of this portion of our great natural wealth.

Mr. COLBY. I suppose my hon. friend, who happens to be a member of the Government, is also a representative of the county of Hastings, and has certain duties to discharge in relation to matters which concern his constituents; and I suppose he has not addressed this Company in his capacity as Minister of Customs, but rather as the representative of a constituency which is largely interested in the project now before the House. Like the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I heard this matter discussed in another place, and it presented itself to my mind something in this wise : Some enterprising gentlemen from abroad-and I think the local community benefited have reason to be grateful to them-came to Canada with the view of developing the very valuable iron mines in the county of Hastings, where in the first tions of the Ontario Government and of certain municipalities, running from Picton to Trenton, and purchased that railway at very much less than its original cost.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. COLBY. Having acquired that section they extended it, I believe, into the back country, by means of a very liberal charter from the Government of Ontario-a charter which was intended to help forward a laudable and commendable industry. Now, these gentlemen who have built their mining road for their own convenience largely, come to this Legislature and ask powers to extend their road to a point of connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to convert it from its original character, as a local and mining road, into a road of public concern. I think that we, as members of this Legislature, when asked to grant a charter of this character, connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway and crossing the Grand Trunk road, which is destined for large traffic, have a right to consider that charter with reference to the interests of the country at large and the interests of that section especially which it it destined to serve. I believe it was very generally admitted in another place where his subject was discussed that one railway will practically serve the necessities of the whole of that part of country ; that although the Belleville road has powers to extend further northward, although Tamworth road has a Bill now before the House the giving it power to extend northward, yet, practi-cally, one road is quite sufficient to serve all these localities; the people there desire but one road, and I am sure we ought not, unless compelled to do so, throw upon them the burden of constructing more than one road. It seems that from the Bay of Quinté, or the St. Lawrence, or both, three roads have been started running into this back country; one, the road referred to; another, the Belleville and North Hastings road; and the other, the Napanee and Tamworth road. There is a point about thirty-five or forty miles from the frontage where all these roads naturally converge. That point is Eldorado. The road now applying for a charter is built to and passes that point; the Belleville road is built to that point, and the Napanee and Tamworth road is built in that direction, twenty miles from it. This seems to be the natural central converging point for these roads starting from Trenton, Belloville and Napanee. What is the proposition before us? Hastings county has a direct interest in this matter in a double sense. It is to be largely affected by it and has besides already contributed for the construction of a road running into the back country. The county of Hastings has contributed $80,000, the township of Madoc $30,000, and Belleville $50,000, or a total of $160,000 contributed to reach this back country north of Hastings. Now, the proposition emanates from my hon. friend here in his capacity as member representing the constituency of Hastings, and from his colleague from the same county, and from the Mayor of Belleville, who was here the other day, before the Railway Committee, and other gentlemen repro-senting these local interests, to this effect. They say : We want nothing unfair, we do not want to build a rival road running to the Canadian Pacific Railway; we do not want to embarrass these gentlemen in the slightest degree; we desire that they shall have their charter which shall be for the benefit of the whole country, but what we desire at the same time is simply this, that these roads radiating from Eldorado as a common point; that this road, the Belleville road, and the Napanee and Tamworth road shall, so far as regards freights passing from Eldorado northward on the Trunk line, be treated equally. That does not seem unfair; it does not seem unreasonable that this Company should not be permitted to make discriminating rates in favour of its and the other gentlemen representing those local interests own line against these other localities, which have invested ask, is a reasonable request. They ask nothing that will 152 their money in the other lines and are interested in reaching the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It cannot do it under the general law.

Mr. COLBY. I am coming to that. These gentlemen ask that the same rates from Eldorado down, and the rates given each of these three roads those freights may takethat freights brought over the Canadian Pacific Railway down to Eldorado and north part of Hastings shall be carried at the same rates. That proposition seems to be a reasonable one; it is one which has been assented to by the promoter of this Bill, the present president of the railway himself. He says it is a reasonable proposition; letters have been produced over his own signature in which he says he is prepared, when he gets his Bill, to make running arrangemonts on this basis, so that there will be no unfair discrimination. Now, the question we have to consider is, if this be a reasonable proposition, and it is admitted to be so, whether we should not put some clause in the Bill which shall make this proposition binding, so that it will be actually carried out in good faith whether the present president of the road continues to be the president or is replaced by some other man at some future day, or whether the railway be controlled by some other set of men who might have a different policy. The question is whether we ought not, by some such clause, place the condition of the people of Hastings on a sound, permanent, substantial basis, and not leave it subject to the caprice of future managers of the railway. I say it is right we should do so. There is strong justice in their claims, and no good reason, as far as I can see, has been advanced why this proposition should not be embodied in the Bill. A suggestion was made by an influential member of the Railway Committee, that this would be an artistic piece of legislation, and what struck me, at the time, as having considerable force was,-that if any provisions of that kind are to be incorporated, they should not be incorporated in a special Act but be made part of the general railway law. That was certainly a plausible argument and one that had considerable force, but on reflection, I do not think it altogether applicable, because I do not think you can have any general railway law that will most all the conditions of companies; I do not think we can dispense with considering every Bill on its merits and trust wholly to a general rail-way law. It is impossible to construct such a law as will meet all possible contingencies. We have, for instance, a Joint Stock Company Act, which meets the con-ditions of most companies that desire powers, so far as powers can be given under that Act; but if persons come forward and ask a special charter, if they ask powers slightly different, perhaps, to those given under the Act, shall we say to them : Here is a Joint Stock Companies' Act, you must organize under that or not at all; we cannot consider any special case or any special conditions, so long as there is a Joint Stock Act for the organization of Joint Stock Companies, we cannot incorporate special companies. But we do not take that ground, and we incorporate special companies under that Act. By a parity of reasoning, we should adopt the same principle and follow the same course with regard to the General Railway Act. It should be so constructed as to meet the conditions of the large majority of cases, so that it will not be necessary to create special legisla-tion in each particular case, but at the same time, there are special cases which cannot be covered by any General Act, whether a Joint Stock Company Act or a Railway Act. The present is of that class of cases, and what these gentlemen from Hastings, what the members representing that constituency, and the Mayor of Belleville.

hamper the railway in the carrying out of its work; they ask nothing but what is conceded by the President of the Company to be a reasonable request, because he has pledged himself to carry it out, at some future time, as a reasonable arrangement; and I see, therefore, no reason why this Legislature should not be fairly asked to embody these amendments as a condition of the charter, and I believe myself, from my own knowledge of the condition, that it will have a permanently good effect, and I believe it will be better for the Company, although it is true they have the right to be the best judges of their own interest. It has been said that they propose to go in and build that road with their own money. We do not say in the charter that they shall build it with their own money. We give them the same bonding powers we give to other roads. They will appeal to the money markets and to capitalists wherever they can find them. They have a right to do so under that charter; and if they can go to capitalists and say that by this arrangement with the Belleville road and the Tamworth road, which are not onerous to them, they have headed off any attempt of those companies to extend their lines to the Canadian Pacific Railway, they will stand in a better position in regard to capitalists than they would if both those roads were in a position to ask for powers of extension, and competition of that kind might be dreaded in the near future. I believe then, under all these circumstances, the proposition being reasonable, the objections seeming to be almost wholly that it should be brought in as a modification of the General Railway Act instead of an insertion into a private Bill, but the real force of the argument of these gentlemen representing the locality being admitted by almost everybody, being admitted by the interested parties themselves, this Legislature may very fairly permit this reasonable proposition to be embodied and to be made a binding condition in this Bill, so that, when the liberal-minded president of the road, who is perfectly willing to carry out running arrangements, is superseded by somebody else less liberal, it will not be in the power of the Company to do away with the arrangement, which is in the interest of the whole country, and in the interest of existing railways, in which municipal moneys have been invested, and is not, as far as I can see, injurious to any person.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). In reply to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I have to say that, having looked through these clauses which are proposed to be added, I have no doubt whatever that passing them would place the Central Ontario Company so completely in the power of the Midland Railway in reference to the control of its own line, that the president of the Company feels that so strongly, having carefully considered the clauses since they have been in print, that he informs me he will be under the necessity, if this House should adopt them, of withdrawing his Bill, because he would be taking the power to extend the road beyond Bancroft at such a serious cost or injury to his own Company that it would be folly for him to take it. My hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Colby) has said it would facilitate the obtaining of money to build this line, if he could show that fair terms were given to the Midland Company and the Napanee and Tamworth line. Instead of that, the people proposing to lend their money on the bonds of the Company for the purpose of making the extension would see that the line was so hundicapped by these clauses that they would not put a dollar into it, and the president feels that so strongly that, if these clauses are added, he feels he must withdraw the Bill. The House should understand that the result of adding these clauses will be that the Bill will have to be withdrawn and the Central Ontario Company will have to wait until Parliament thinks fit, at some other time or in some other way, in my opinion, expired.

the Midland system into the control of the Grand Trunk. The best proof is that the clauses originally drawn by the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, which I have in my hand, provide for the Midland Railway having running powers over the whole of the Central Ontario Railway system. When those clauses were shown to my hon. friend from North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) even he, though not experienced in railway matters, saw at once that they were most unfair to the Central Ontario road. He then said so, and went to an hon. member of this House, who looked through the clauses and said they were quite unfair and one-sided, and I believe drew these altered clauses, not understanding the true position of the matter; but these altered clauses, although not so objectionable as those originally drawn by Mr. Bell, practically would have the same effect, and the Central Ontario Company will be compelled to withdraw the Bill in toto from the House if these clauses are passed. My hon, friend says that the Railway Act cannot provide for all cases. If it does not provide for an interchange of traffic on fair terms between two railways at the point of junction, it ought to do so. That is a point that applies to every two railways that cross or touch each other, and if the machinery of the Railway Act is insufficient for that purpose, the sooner it is amended the better. There are no special reasons why this Company should be put in a different position or under different restrictions to overy other company that joins or touches every other line of railway; and if we are going to put these clauses into this Bill, we ought to put them into every railway Bill which comes to the House, because every railway touches some other railway somewhere, and the Railway Act says it shall interchange traffic on fair terms at the point of junction. If that were amended so as to impose some penalty on the company which refused to do that, or so as to provide, as I think it might, that a company complaining should have the right to go to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in order to enforce that provision, then there is something that all companies might resort to; but there is nothing in the circumstances of this case to justify putting this Company in a different position from every other. As to the point that the Midland charter is still in existence, it seems very clear to me that the Statute my hon. friend read does not affect the question at all. I understand that Bancroft and the township of Faraday are in the free grant district. Am to authorize the extension of this road. They have already built-and it is a point which has been lost sight of-from the point of junction with the Midland system south of Eldorado, 36 miles north with their own money, and it is proposed to put the traffic over those 36 miles which they have built with their own money on equal terms as to the Mid-land traffic and the Central Ontario traffic; and in fact these clauses are a cunningly devised mode of putting the road into the control of the Midland system, and through

I right in that supposition ? Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON. Then this Act of 1883 did not at all extend the powers of the former company, and did not remove the restriction or limitation as to time imposed by the original Bill. It simply had the effect of saying that, instead of going straight from Eldorado to a point in the free grant district, they could extend the road "from its present terminus in the township of Madoc to the village of Bancroft, in the Township of Faraday, to the iron mines situate at that place, and passing by way of the iron mines situate between said points." It allowed them to go in a devious way, touching at iron mines on each side. As there were two years of the original charter then to run, that two years' limitation still applied, and on the 24th March, 1884, the power to extend to Bancroft by the Midland Company,

Mr. Colby.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I would not have referred to the matter again if the hon. gentleman had not referred to this Bill. What is the fact? A company that he was a partner in, a company that he was connected with, a company that he gets profits from, agreed to build this road to Bancroft; agreed with the town of Belleville, which gave them $150,000; agreed with the county of Hastings, which gave them $80,000; agreed with the township of Madoc, which gave them $30,000; but, so soon as they got their road built by municipal and Government aid, then they sold the road to the Midland system of railways, and now he, as solicitor of the Company, as adviser of the Company, as part of the Company who got the people of Hastings to give their $80,000, and the people of Belleville to give their $150,000, and the people of Madoc to wille to give their $100,000, and the people of Madoc to give their $30,000, with the promise that they should go back to Bancroft, after they have sold the road and got the money and divided the profits, wants to shunt the people of Hastings and the people of Belleville on one side. Now, what is the position of the people of Hastings? They are not in a position to give any more aid to the railway. What is the to give any more aid to the railway. What is the position of Belleville? It is not in a position to give any more aid to the railway. There are many of us in Hastings owning property who will have to pay taxes for the next twenty-five or thirty years to swell the profits of these gentlemen. I think the hon, member who is promoting this Bill ought to consider the position he has placed us in. He ought to consider that if he and his associates get $500,000 profit out of this road, those who are to contribute this profit deserve some consideration. Now, the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was very eloquent over the assertion that this was American capital. Let me give him a little information. Half the capital of this road is borrowed from Canadian capitalists. There is a gentleman here in Ottawa who has loaned $500,000 towards building that road. Again, the hon. gentleman says that no proposition has been made. I contend that this proposal comes from the president of the road. He comes here authorized by the Company to push this matter. He came and solicited me to assist him, and I did so. He requested the Hon. Mr. Abbott to draw up the clauses, and he ordered the clauses to be printed. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that when he started this matter he ought to accept this propo-sition and support it. Now, let me just say that we are asking nothing unfair or nothing unreasonable; we are asking nothing but what we are willing to give. He will get the same privilege over 500 miles of railway of the Midland system, and he will get the same privilege over fifty or sixty miles of the Napanee and Tamworth Railway, as we are asking from this Company. That proposal came from himself; it should be carried out, and when an hon. gentleman says in this House that there has been nothing proposed, I say he is mistaken. I contend that if there is a gentleman in this House who ought to assist the parties who are trying to get an arrangement made with the Ontario Central Railway, it is the hon. member for North Victoria. He is the party who has made the money-he and his associates-that we have got to pay for the next 25 or 30 years. I contend that if this Company gets the road back to Cal-lander-and the Napanee and Tamworth Railway will not push the road back-the Midland system will stop at Eldorado; for that will be in the interests of the Company, and will increase its rovenue by getting the right of traffic, at any rate. I hope this Committee will adopt the resolu-tions placed in your hands.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can find no fault with the Minister of Castoms for interfering in the matter which so closely interests the section of country of which he is a representative. But, it strikes me that all this talk about Ontario-I think, I say, they ought to hesitate before they palities have given to these roads in the past, has nothing at all to do with this question. The whole question seems to be simply this: These people who have applied to this Parliament have a road now in operation for seventy-six miles, as I understand-for thirty-eight or forty miles beyond Eldorado, the common point to which the Hastings road is built; and the claim of the hon. gontleman who moves this amondment is. that they shall have a right to operate over that distance of road from the common point of junction, not only to the point already com-pleted, but to the point on the Canadian Pacific Railway that this road has to join. Now, let me ask this House one question. Suppose an independent company had come to this House asking for a charter to build a road from the point where this road is chartered to connect, does any one here pretend to say that that independent company would be refused that road? Certainly not. For have we not given an enormous sum of money to connect the Ontario system of roads in the west with the Canadian Pacific Rail-way at Gravenhurst? And if these gentlemen come before this House now, having already built seventy-six miles of road with thirty-six or forty miles beyond the common point of junction, and are prepared and offer to go on and build at their own expense, without any public subsidy, a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, surely that is what Canada is looking forit is men who will build roads giving a connection with our great system of railways without asking any subsidy, and I hope that we will permit that. But to say that because these men, who have eighty miles of this road already built and in operation, come here and ask to make that connection, we have a right to force on them a condition which this Parliament has no equitable right to demand, seems to me unreasonable, unjust, and unfair. This whole thing is in a nut-shell. I can quite understand that the terrorism the Grand Trunk Railway Company have exercised, not alone at Ottawa, but in the other Legislatures of the Dominion, both in Quebec and Ontario-I can quite understand their interfering and insisting that such conditions shall be attached as they see fit. But without considering whether they are responsible or not, the contention of the supporters of the Bill is this, that the General Railway Act provides for these traffic arrangements and gives the Company every protection and security they are entitled to have. If it does not give them this, then I say amend the General Railway Act. Take the same position that the advocates of the Grand Trunk Railway Company's Bill did in the Committee-that the Minister of Railways took when he said: "We will not put that condition in the Bill, because it will affect the raising of securities and the finances of the Company, but we will amend the General Railway Act." And if that Act to-day is not sufficient to cover the conditions required, as the Minister of Railways is going to bring in a measure for the purpose of amending the General Railway Act, let a clause be put to cover the present case. It will be very easy for the hon. Minister of Customs, representing, as he does, a constituency which will be affected by this measure, to introduce into the General Railway Act a clause which will meet and cover the full requirements. Sir, it does appear to me that this is legislation which, if I understand the matter aright, they have no right to ask for. We ought not to include in this Bill conditions and provisions which will have the effect of limiting the benefit and operations of a railway already constructed; but, as we have heard from the mover of this Bill that it will be withdrawn if it is so hampered, I think this Committee should hesitate when they find that without the cost of a dollar, without any bonus whatever, they can get that connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway pushed into the wilds of the money that Hastings and Belleville and other munici. I thus hamper a Bill which may have the effect of preventing that connection. Sir, I must say that I think this matter ought never to have come here. It was fully discussed in the Railway Committee, discussed in the most ample manner in that Committee, which three times decided upon it, and three times rejected the proposals which were considered unjust and unreasonable, as they were presented by the opponents of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) referred to the fact that the promoters of this Bill would probably withdraw it it this clause were inserted. For one, I have no hesitation in saying, as a member of this House, that I decline to be bound or influenced by any suggestion of this kind. When gentlemen come to this House and ask that railway charters be passed, it is our business to deal with those charters as we think proper. Any suggestion that they will take only what they please, and that if Parliament inserts certain clauses they will withdraw the Bill and not bring money into the country, should not influence our action. The truth of the matter is, that people outside are too apt to think that the only business of Parliament is to grant railway charters out of which they can make money; it is a popular idea and should be abandoned, and the sooner promoters are made to abandon it by the action of Parliament the better it will be for all parties. I, therefore, think the threat to withdraw this Bill should have no influence with this House. Then the hon. member for North Victoria stated that the effect of the amendments would be to place this line, which is going to be extended, entirely under the control of the Midland system; and he told us, as proof of this, that there had been certain clauses prepared by the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, who happens to be Mr. Bell, who is interested as a Belleville man in this matter, with that object; but the hon. gentleman was careful not to tell the Committee that those clauses were not embodied in the Bill-that those clauses which were going to place this extended line under the control of the Midland system when they came to be submitted to the Minister of Customs as representing North Hastings, and, having an interest in this matter, were changed; and therefore the hon. member for North Victoria can hardly say those clauses are going to accomplish that object, when his only proof is that certain other clauses which were withdrawn and are not here, would have accomplished it if they had been in the Bill. So far, therefore, from these clauses tending to place the whole railway under the Midland system, according to the argument which the hon. member for North Victoria presented, the very opposite is the fact: the clauses which would have done that are not before us; they were withdrawn because they were unsatisfactory. The hon, member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said the object of the amendment is unfair, because they proposed to allow the Midland to operate the railway and have running privileges over the road. I do not understand anything of this kind is contained in the amendment. There is no proposal to operate the road--to have running arrangements over it. There is simply this: At a certain point of junction, the Company shall take the traffic which comes to it from other railways, on equal torms, and run it over the railway. That is all that is pro-posed in the amendment. We are told this ought to be in the General Railway Act. Probably, it ought to be in the General Railway Act; although, I am bound to say, that from the discussion which occurred in another place, as well as the remarks that have fallen from the hon. gentleman, one would imagine that all the powers given here are in the General Railway Act. If all those arrangements by which they are compelled to give equal rates to traffic coming on the line are already in the General Rail restrictions on this particular Company. I wish the Comway Act, no injury can befall the Company from the mittee to notice, moreover, that it is proposed to impose powers being placed in this Bill. They cannot say, under these restrictions, not on a mere paper railway, but on a those circumstances, that the charter is going to be ruined, railway already built and upon which traffic is already Mr. MITCHELL.

because it is proposed to place in this special Bill, special clauses, covering conditions which, according to the statements of some hon. members, are to be found in the General Railway Act. I believe it is desirable to have uniform legislation as far as possible, but I do not believe that, because certain powers are not conferred in the General Railway Act, we should be prevented from dealing with every Bill as it we should be prevented from dealing with every Bin as it comes up. This particular Bill happens to be in a peculiar position. There are three prongs, as it were, running to one long handle, and the proposal is simply, by such arrangements as are proposed, to secure this Company in the extension of its line from the probability, almost from the possibility, of competition in their extension, by simply providing that they shall give equal facilities to the three lines for the purpose of carrying traffic which may come to them from either one or other of the three lines. When we are told that this simple provision, which everyone must admit is in the interests of the country, is going to be so injurious that the Company will withdraw their Bill if it is granted, then I am bound to say that we are entitled to view with considerable suspicion, at all events, their professions of willingness to make any running arrangements which may be necessary hereafter. When they come to us, as they have done in this case, with clauses agreed to by themselves, not under the influence of the legislative terrorism of the Grand Trunk, but which the president of the Company first suggested to the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, and in accordance with statements made to persons interested in that district of country, that he would make reasonable traffic arrangements-when the president made this proposition, and the clauses were drawn under his instructions, he is hardly in a position to come here and say that if the House inserts those clauses in the Bill he will withdraw it. When any company comes before Parliament and threatens to withdraw a Bill because certain clauses are inserted or others are omitted, I am quite prepared to assert the independence of this House. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) suggests what is quite right, that the president of the Company promises hereafter to make traffic arrangements. That is all that is proposed by the Bill, and we should have clauses inserted in it to carry out the arrangement made by the president of the Company and Mr. Bell, at the suggestion and request of the former

Mr. PLATT. The afternoon has been spent in discussing amendments to carry out negotiations which have taken place between the president of the railway company and some hon. gentlemen opposite. So far as regards the arguments advanced, they go to show that there is no necessity whatever for inserting the amendment, and the willingness on the part of the president to act fairly and honourably with other companies. This road has been described by the last speaker as one running from the frontier north to the common point, Eldorado, with three prongs and one long handle. Has he considered the effect of placing restrictions on this one road and not placing them on the other roads? I hold in my hand the Bill which has passed this House to grant a charter to the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway. That is a charter without any restric-tions; it gives the company power to run in almost any direction from Eldorado to Callander. We desire the Company whose Bill is under discussion to be placed in the same position as other companies chartered this Session. Is there any wonder that the promoter of this Bill or the proprietor of this railway should fail to see why amendments should be accepted, when Bills giving charters to rival companies have passed this House without restrictions being inserted therein? This is an attempt to impose exceptional running. I do not think any such legislation has been proposed before during my parliamentary career. Then, so far as the southern part of the county of Hastings is concerned, and especially the city of Belleville, I can assure this hon. Committee that the promoters of this Bill have no antipathy to that city and wish to place no obstacle in the way of her advancement. We have admired her enterprise for years; we have rejoiced at her successes, which have been many; we have regretted her failures, which have been few; but we are not prepared to admit that the vast wealth of our northern country shall remain undeveloped, as it has for centuries, simply because the abundant and valuable minerals of that region cannot find their way to market by way of Belleville. The promoters of this Bill have opened up a more direct route to market by way of Weller's Bay, where, at enormous expense, they have established one of the best shipping harbours They have, already, by their own means, in Canada. without a cent of public aid, constructed a railway through a difficult portion of the country, to within a few miles of the mines, and we now ask power from this Parlia-ment to extend the line still further northward, in order to still further develop the resources of that almost un-known region; and if they, the promoters of this Bill, think that the better, and cheaper, and shorter route to the markets of the world is by way of Trenton, I do not think the city of Belleville has any right, nor do I think that city has any desire, to throw obstacles in their way.

Mr. BOWELL. We make no such claim.

The hon. gentleman has spoken of the Mr. PLATT. large amount of money expended by Belleville and the county of Hastings in unsuccessful efforts to bring the iron ore to the frontier at that city. Well, is that any reason why they should seek to recoup themselves for losses entailed by their dealings with others by imposing restrictions upon those who have never received and have never asked anything from them. I do not think the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) made any threat when he spoke of withdrawing the Bill if the proposed amendments be at tached to it. He merely expressed his opinions that with these restrictions the charter would be worthless. Such is my opinion, but I do not say the Bill will be withdrawn in consequence of such restrictions; but I do say, that I fear the imposition of those restrictions will have a tendency to leave the northern part of Hastings without those facilities for reaching the frontier markets, for which the city of Belleville, as well as the representatives of Hastings, have zealously laboured for years. I believe that if hon. gentlemen opposite thought that by their opposition to this Bill they were impeding the construction of the road they would be slow to take the steps they are taking today. I can readily understand their position, however, and having made a strong show of opposition, ostensibly in the interests of their constituents, I hope they will yield this point-that the trade of the country should not languish in order that certain localities, without geographical facilities, may live in the vain hope that fortune will some day favour them to the disadvantage of the country at large. I sincerely hope the House will reject the proposed amendments and leave the Company free to pursue their work untrammelled by unusual and unjust restrictions.

Mr. BOWELL. Allow me a word or two of explanation with reference to the remarks which fell from the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). He said that in all my statements I had not shown that any arrangement had been made. I took it for granted that in all the negotiations with the president of the Company we should take his word, as a gentleman, and that I had done so; and I say more it is not a position we should take, either as the representatives of the people—a legislative body—or as individuals, when we solemnly agree to certain amendments to a Bill, that certain arrangements should be carried out, that we should not keep faith one with the other. At least, if one party to an agreement thinks, in the interest of the Company he represents, he should withdraw from an agreement solemnly entered into, he should at least inform those with whom he is negotiating that he withdraws from the arrangements he has been making and not leave them in ignorance, and the Committee and the House without any knowledge of the repudiation which has taken place. I desire to say also, that neither I nor the hon. member for East Hastings, desired to take any step which might, unfortunately, be construct as an attempt to prevent the construction of a railway into that country. We have long advocated the extension of that road, and the best evidence of our interest in it is what we have voluntarily put into these enterpises, without expectation of receiving any reward therefor. 1 desire to say, that if these amendments, which were drawn up with a view of giving the same rates to the Central Ontario as to the other roads, do not carry out that agreement, I pledge my word that such alterations shall be made in the amendment, upon the third reading, as shall give fair and reciprocal rates to these companies. Further, I say to the hon, gentleman for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), on the authority of Mr. Rathbun, a gentleman whose word I am quite propared to take-one who, I am satisfied, will never repudiate what he states-that he is prepared to enter into precisely the same arrangements with regard to his own road, the moment it touches the other system, for giving the same rates over his road as he asks from theirs.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Why did not you put that in the Napanee and Tamworth Bill? You take Mr. Rathbun's word, but you do not take Mr. Ritchie's.

Mr. BOWELL. We have no reason to take the word of the latter gentleman; and judging from what has taken place within the last fortnight, I do not think even the hon. gentleman would say that we should put in black and white what he agreed to, in order that that agreement may be carried out. I repeat that if there is the slightest privilege given to the Belleville and North Hastings which is not given also to the Contral Ontario, I will agree-as I am sure the hon. gentleman behind me will agree-that the amendment shall be reconstructed at the third reading, in order to meet the view of my hon. friend from North Victoria, or the promoter of the Bill. A good deal has been said about the question of whose money this road is being built with. I know the parties connected with the road in the north are receiving great advantages from the Ontario Government, not given to others. I am glad to see that the Government of Ontario have extended aid in that way, that they have taken the position of extending these railways, more particularly into the back portions of Ontario, by which the resources of the country may be extended. 1 find, by a return brought down on the last day of the Session of the Ontario Legislature, that one gentleman connected with this road-not holding any stock in it, but who holds mines in that district, and is connected more or less, not only by the land company, but in the interests of the railway company-I mean Mr. Coe-has obtained 51,000 acres of land in the mineral regions of that country, at, as I am informed, 25 cents per acre less than it could be obtained by anybody else, with the additional privilege of utilizing all the wood upon it, less the pine; while any other gentleman here would have to pay 25 cents more per acre for it, reserving all the merchantable timber on the land. He has also the privilege of buying 46,000 acres more, and this is all in connection with railway enterprise. I am not at all finding fault with this, if it is given to place this Company on as good a financial basis as possible, and I hope it may succeed; but I ask for the county with which I am connected, that the agreement made by these gentlemen should be carried out in good faith. I cannot ed with by traffic arrangements-not running arrangements, because we do not ask them; not operating arrangements, because we ask nothing of that kind, but traffic arrangements-that they shall receive the traffic from Deseronto via Napaneo through that road, and by the Belleville and North Hastings, not at a ruinous rate, but at the rate at which they carry their own freight. These arrangements are all we certainly require, and notwithstanding my legal friend's interpretation of this law, my view is that of legal gentlemen whom I have consulted, and I think it is the common sense view, that the charter is still in existence. The charter incorporating the Belleville and North Hastings Railway gives power to extend the line to some point in the free grant territory. That power extended for only ten years. If it has expired, there would be an end to that privilege, but the Act making the Belleville and North Hastings Railway a part of the Midland system does not say that the powers and restrictions contained in that Act shall be continued in this Act; it gives absolute power under the clause I have read, to extend the railway to a point not mentioned in the former Act at all. The original Act says to some point in the free grant territory: that would mean from the northern boundary of the township of Madoc northward to the Ottawa River. But the amalgamation Act gives distinct power to extend the road from the present terminus to Bancroft, in the township of Faraday.

Amendment negatived, and Bill reported.

Mr. PLATT moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BOWELL. I object to the third reading now. We proposed to move the amendments we proposel in Com. mittee.

Some hon, MEMBERS. Move now.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is in order for the Bill to be now road the third time.

Mr. WHITE moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee, with instructions to insert the clauses which he had moved in Committee.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Com-mittee, reported, and read the third time and passed :--

Bill (No. 66) to reduce the Capital Stock of the Maritime Bank of the Dominion of Canada, and to make other provisions respecting the said Bank.-(Mr. Wood, Westmoreland.)

Bill (No. 91) to incorporate the Niagara Frontier Bridge Company.-(Mr. Camoron, Victoria.)

WAREHOUSING LICENSE, ST. JOHN, N.B.

Mr. WELDON enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to establish a general Inland Revenue Warehouse in St. John, N.B., to enable merchants not having a special warehouse to place in bond tobacco brought by them from Montreal or elsewhere ex-warehouse? Or whether arrangements will be made to enable merchants in St. John, N.B., to pay the excise duties on tobacco ex-warehouse from Montreal, at St. John, and not at Monreal?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under present regulations, any merchant or owner of a warehouse may apply for and obtain a warehousing license under which other merchants may warehouse tobacco in bond. The inspector is informed of this, and should such license be taken out, the Excise duties would, of course, be paid in St. John instead of Montreal.

NEWFOUNDLAND PROHIBITIVE DUTY.

Mr. DESJARDINS enquired, Whether the Government has received information relating to a recent Resolution enacted by the Legislature of Newfoundland, to the follow-ing effect: "There shall be a duty of one hundred per cent. imposed upon all packages containing merchandise imported into this colony, provided that this duty shall not be levied until proclamation by the Governor in Council shall first issue, and shall then be made to apply to importations from countries to be mentioned therein, which shall levy a tax on packages from this colony or in which inspection of merchandise from this colony is made compulsory;" and ther it is the intention of the Government to take any n in the matter, so far as Canadian trade might be ted by it?

r LEONARD TILLEY. Communications have been ved from the Board of Trade and Corn Exchange of treal within the last two days, and the Government are giving the matter their best consideration.

ONTARIO LAND IMPROVEMENT FUND.

Mr. HESSON enquired, What balance (if any) is now due to the Province of Ontario on account of the Land Improvement Fund? Does the Government still allow and pay interest on said fund at the rate of 5 per cent.? Have the Dominion Government at any time refused to make provision for the payment of principal or interest on account of said fund when requested so to do? Have the Ontario Government now made a demand upon this Government for payment in full of said indebtedness? If so, will a sum be included in the Supplementary Estimates for payment of same?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. By the fifth clause of the award of the arbitration appointed to adjust the debts of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it was declared (page 3) that the Upper Canada Improvement Fund, amongst other special or trust funds, should be the property of and belong to the Province of Ontario. By the seventh clause of the award (page 6), it was declared that from the Common School Fund, as held on the 30th June, 1867, the sum of $124,685.18 should be taken and deducted, and placed to the credit of the Upper Canada Improvement Fund, that sum being one fourth part of the moneys received by the late Province of Canada, between the 6th March, 1861, and the 1st July, 1867. In the accounts recently rendered to the two Provinces, the said sum of $124,685.18 was credited to the Province of Ontario as on the 30th June, 1867. Correspondence is now taking place, and has been going on since October last, between the Ontario Govornment and the Finance Department respecting the several accounts, and enquiries are being made as to the circumstances connected with the origin and distribution of the fund in question; and it is expected that during the recess a settlement will be arrived at of all the accounts between the Provinces and the Dominion. We stated in October or November last that the Government were prepared to dispose of these accounts, but it has not yet been convenient. I do not know that there was any distinct demand made.

LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. GAULT enquired, When does the contract call for the completion of the two new basins on the Lachine Canal, and what will be the probable cost of those works?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract calls for the completion of the two new basins on the Lachine Canal in September, 1884, and the probable cost of these works is $150,000.

DOMINION EXHIBITION.

Mr. GAULT enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to have the Dominion Exhibition held in Montreal this year, and to make the usual grant for that purpose?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has not been decided where the exhibition will be held, as far as the Government are concerned.

SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next, to consider the following Resolution :--

That it is expedient to provide that in the accounts between the Dominion and the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, the amounts by which the respective debts of the said Provinces were increased by the Act 36 Vic., cap. 30 (as explained as to Nova Scotia by the Act 37 Vic., cap. 3) shall be calculated and allowed to the Provinces aforesaid, as if the said Act 36 Vic., cap. 30 had directed that the increased amounts should be allowed from the date of the coming into force of the British North America Act, 1867, and the amounts of such increases respectively from the last mentioned date to the 1st of July, 1873, shall be deemed capital owing to the said

Provinces respectively, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. as part of their respective subsidies; and further, that as respects the Provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, the amounts hitherto calculated and allowed as the debts of these Provinces respectively, shall be increased by such amounts as shall make the total amounts thereof respectively bear the same proportion to the respective populations of the said Provinces as ascertained by the Census of 1881, as the total amount calculated and allowed as the rcspective debts of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, as provided hereby, shall bear to the respective populations of it he last named Provinces, as ascertained by the said Uensus of 1881, and the amount of such increases to the said Provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. as part of their respective subsidies.

He said: This is changed from the original notice. In looking over the matter as it stood, I found that it would not be doing justice to the Provinces which came in later. Take this 1 y way of illustration: If the amount to be placed at the credit of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should average $1.50 a head of the whole population, then, by the amended Resolution, the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, British Columbia and Manitoba will receive that $1.50 a head upon their population of 1881. If upon the population of 1881, collectively, of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, it amounts to $1.50, it will be added to the other Provinces in proportion. As Prince Edward Island only came into the Union in 1873, it would receive nothing under the Resolution as it stood before.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite clear that the original Resolution was quite indefensible.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; because it did not carry out what the intention of the Government was on the subject.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution :--

[That it is expedient that a sum of $600 be appropriated for the payment of the salary of a clerk to assist the Uivil Service Board of Examiners; and to provide for the salaries of the Assistant Post Office Inspectors at the sum of $1,200 on their appointment, with an annual increase of $50, to a maximum of $1,600; also for the salaries of Superintendents of Letter Carriers at $600, with an annual increase of $40, to a maximum of $800; Mail Transfer Agents $400, with an annual increase of $300, for letter carriers, messengers, box collectors and packers.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ANALYSTS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House, to morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may cause such remuneration as he deems proper to be paid to the Analysis appointed under the Bill now before the House for the prevention of adulteration of food and drugs, and such remuneration, whether by fees or salary, or in part by both, may be paid to them out of any sums voted by Parliament for the purposes of the said Bill.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY-THE COUNTY JUDGE OF ELGIN.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WILSON. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which, although somewhat personal to myself, is also one of public importance—I refer to the repeated applications I have made requesting that a return be brought down of the petitions and charges against Judge Hughes, of the county of Elgin, asking for an investigation into those charges. Repeated enquiries have been made up to this date, and no satisfaction has been given me by the Government. Why the Governshield the Judge and thereby prevent the people in that county from being freed from the injustice under which they petition was lying in the Department and here that have been labouring for a long time. It is million to the people in that the petition was lying in the Department and here that ment should feel a desire to withhold this information I have been labouring for a long time. It is well known, I think, to every hon, member here, that in the year 1862 there were charges preferred against Judge Hughes; that these charges were tried before a [competent court, and after a long and thorough investigation was made into them he was found guilty and impeached; and I may say, that if the law had been vindicated, if the decision arrived at by that court had been carried out by the Government of the day, Judge Hughes, on account of the offence committed at that time, would have been no longer competent to hold the position which he has held from that time to the present. Now, Sir, having as I thought, a perfect right to present to this House an Address, I asked that roturns might be brought down in order that I might have an opportunity early in the Session, of seeing whether those charges were of such a nature as justified the people of that county in domanding redress at the hands of the Government. I moved early, and it is now nearly the close of the Session, and yet I am without those papers; I have had no opportunity of seeing those papers, although I have asked for them so frequently as, doubtless, to weary the House. This is my last attempt, as I know full well that even if the papers were all brought down at this time of the Session, I would have no opportunity of bringing the matter up. Now, Sir, I would not, perhaps, have adopted this course had it not been for a statement made by the First Minister in, reference to this matter, when he used these words:

"THE COUNTY JUDGE OF ELGIN.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Notices of Motions are called, I would beg to state that the hon. member for Elgin has moved several times for papers connected with the petitions for the removal of Judge Hughes. I ascertain from the House that one of the objects of the return was to get copies of papers under the impeachment. The papers were dated as far back as 1862 and diligent search has been made in the Department of Justice and in the Secretary of State's Office, every where hut ther earnot be found where, but they cannot be found.

"Mr. MACKENZIE. Look in the Minister of Interior's pigeon hole. "Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Secretary of State has written to Toronto to try and get copies of the papers connected with that impeach-ment. In the Globe of the 18th March, it was stated that the Dominion Government has shown signs of intending to do nothing in the matter of the petition for the removal of Judge Hughes; that the petition has been returned with several small objections, the return being an insult to the people of Elgin; that Judge Hughes is a man after Sir John's own heart, who wants the matter to be allowed to drop. The small object-ions against the petition amounts to this: that there was a paper sent down professing to be a petition, but no signature was attached to it, and it was sent back for the purpose of getting one man at least in Elgin to sign it. It was sent back with the request, first, to get the signatures of the petitioners; secondly, to get the dates when the acts complained of were done; and thirdly and generally, for a more orderly arrangement of the ground, which spread over twenty-five years. "Mr. WILSON. I might ask the hon. First Minister when this sup-"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Secretary of State has written to posed petition was returned to Mr. Stanton. "Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The petition was received in the Department on the 21st January, and the Address was moved on the 28th January, so the hon. gentelman had full notice that petition was coming down, and he moved immediately after he heard it was sent down. The petition was unsigned, and complained of acts happening a great many years ago. I cannot exactly tell the hon. gentleman, be-cause I do not know; the information was not supplied to me, but I will ascertain, when the letter was written back from the Department of Jusice asking that a petition might be sent. if it was to be sent?" Justice asking that a petition might be sent, if it was to be sent."

Now, Sir, although perhaps my hon. friend might have immagined that there were no petitions-and he distinctly stated that there were none sent down, that there was merely a paper with no signatures to it, I would like to call his attention to a petition that was sent down a year ago last March and still, remains in the Department, and is in a follows, under date of 27th March, 1883:-

the possession, I suppose, or it ought to be, of the Minister of Justice. Has he made any effort to ascertain whether that petition was there or not? Was he correctly or properly informed in reference to their being any petition or not? I hold in my hand evidence showing that that petipetition was lying in the Department, and he certainly ought to have made a return of the paper that was in the possession of the Government. I think, therefore, I have just cause of complaint that there was apparently a desire on the part of the Government to prevent my obtaining those returns in time to ascertain whether any action should be taken or not, and therefore the statement made by the Globe is to a certain extent borne out by subsequent events. It so happens that at the time the petition was prepared, it was resolved to petition not only the Dominion Government but also the Ontario Government, the petitioners not knowing definitely which Government had the right to investigate charges into the conduct of a country Judge. Two petitions were prepared ; the signatures placed upon each were identical; one was to be sent to the Dominion Government and the other to the Ontario Government. The petitioners did not send the petition to the Ontario Government, and I have the document in my hand. The other one was forwarded to the Governor in Council, and is, I suppose, still in the hands of the Minister of Justice notwithstanding the First Minister's statement to the contrary. If there is any doubt as to the genuineness of that petition, any doubt as to the signatures attached to it, I can show the First Minister this petition, which is a fac simile of the other one, and he will find among the names a number of the leading men of St. Thomas, including sevcral lawyers. The petitioners asked for an investigation into the charges preferred against Judge Hughes, calling the attention of the Government to the fact that that Judge had been impeached so long ago as 1862. As regards the assertion made by the First Minister, that I was notified in regard to there being a petition brought down against Judge Hughes, I may say that I had no knowledge, either directly or indirectly, until I saw the statement in the public press; that I had no communication, either directly or indirectly, with the parties who were presenting these charges. As there might be a question with respect to the petition having been sent, I will read a portion of it. This one is addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, and is, as I have before said, a fac simile of the one sent to the Minister of Justice. The petition says:

"That David John Hughes, Esq., has been for many years past and is now Judge of the County Court of the County of Elgin, and holds other official positions which by law are entrusted to him as such County

Judge. "That many years ago a public investigation into the official conduct of the said David John Hughes was held before the Court of Impeach-The said David Solid Hughes was held beind the the Gold Dohn Hughes was found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the said David John Hughes was found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the said Court of Impeachment of making a personal profit out of his patronage of the appointment of a Clerk of the Division Court in St. Thomas, a verdict which makes him legally and morally incompetent to hold his present position."

Then the petition goes on to refer to other charges which it is not necessary to read. If the First Minister desires to see the petition and the names attached, I will allow him to do The petition is signed by William Coyno, merchant; 80. H. Lindop, builder and contractor; Elijah Moore, J.P.; Henry H. Waddell, merchant; James Stanton, barrister; W. F. Ellis, barrister; John H. Robinson, barrister; in all, eleven or twelve leading citizens. In order to show that the Department of Justice did receive the petition, and that the First Minister was incorrect in his statement that the petition was not in the Department, I will read the follow-ing correspondence. The Deputy Minister of Justice wrote by any person. "I have also to call your attention to the fact that in a number of cases, no time is stated at which the matters complained of took place. "It would be convenient, in stating the charges and grounds on which the complaint is based, to state them in the order of time in which they occurred. "The petition is therefore returned to you for signature, and for amend-ment in the particulars indicated.

" JAMES STANTON, Esq., " St. Thomas."

It will be observed that the suggestion or statement was made that the petition was returned. Immediately the First Minister made the announcement that no petition or charges were in the possession of the Government, I wrote to Mr. Stanton. He immediately had the charges signed by the former petitioners, or as many of them as he could find. He had the petition signed, and he, acting for petitioners, forwarded the document to the Department. That document was mailed in St. Thomas on the 24th. A letter of the same date was written and mailed to me. I received the letter on the morning of the 25th, and on the afternoon of the 26th I had a notice on the Paper enquiring of the Government if they had up to to that time received any such document. When the question was asked of the Government the Minister of Public Works, in the absence of the First Minister, stated that no petitions were in the possession of the Government; and when I further asked whether the Government intended to take any further action in the matter, the reply was that they could take no action, as there was nothing before them. Now, I do not accuse the First Minister-I do not say he is to blame in the matter-but what I do say is, that there should have been better supervision over the Department of Justice, so that when an Address is passed here, and when we are entitled to receive the papers covered by that Address, the Deputies of the Departments should furnish the Ministers with correct and reliable information. The Government are in possession of the petition, and they are asked to investigate the matter. It is their bounden duty either to act upon that petition or else to give a positive refusal and say that the charges are not ample and sufficient for investigation. They have certainly a right to say that the impeachment and the suspense of judgment which took place in 1852 should not now be revived. We all know perfectly well that a Judge is not entitled to hold his position a day after he has been found guilty of using his public posi-tion in any way to better his private circumstances. This was proven after full and fair enquiry. Now, I have dome my duty in regard to these charges. Some may say that I have brought this matter up on personal pique. I have taken no direct or indirect part in the matter, and I should not have referred to it at all had it not, to a certain extent, been the impression that I was trying to get information out of the Government that the Government was not in possession of. How it is that these petitions have been lying in the Department of Justice, and that, though I have time and again asked for them, which an Address of the House called for, and yet that information has been withheld, is something which I cannot account for. However, if the Government choose to take that course, upon them be the responsability and not upon me. Having placed the matter before the House so as to exonerate myself from any censure in connection, with the matter I leave it in the hands of the Government, hoping they may see their way clear to give some definite information, so that I may be able to say to the people of the county whether or not the Government intend to enquire into these charges.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am rather sorry that the hon, gentleman did not tell me that he was going to bring this matter up, for this reason, that only yesterday I had a letter from Mr. Stanton, whom I know very well, stating that I must have been under a misapprehension when I stated that there was no petition signed. Upon that I communicated with the Department of Justice, and I suppose there will be an answer to-morrow. At present I have nothing more to say than I stated before. Immediately on the appearance of the enquiry of the hon. gentleman on the Order Paper, that question being :

"Whether the Government have taken any steps to enquire into the charges preferred against the official conduct of D. J. Hughes, Judge of the County Court of Elgin; and if not, whether it is their intention to do so, and when?"

I immediately called the attention of the Department of Justice and the Deputy Minister sent me this memorandum :

"An unsigned petition, asking the investigation of certain charges An intergret period, asking the intrastigation of certain charges against the Judge, was received. A copy of this petition was sent to Mr. Hughes, and the original returned to the person who forwarled it in order that the signatures of the petitioners might be supplied, and also the dates (where not given) of acts complained of."

There is the further statement by the Deputy Minister :

" That petition was received in the Department on the 21st January, and the Address was moved on the 28th; the petition was unsigned and and the Address was indeed on the 20th, the periods was duling bell and complained of acts happening a great many years ago, as well as recently, and also of acts the dates of which were not given. It was returned for the fillowing purposes: First, for the signatures of the petitioners; secondly, for the dates when the acts complained of were done; and thirdly and generally, for a more orderly arranged "tatement of the grounds. At all events, it was manifestly unfair to make these charges upblic hefters the Indee had an opportunity of answering them. public before the Judge had an opportunity of answering them. Although the petition was unsigned, we asked the Sepretary of State's Department to send a copy of it to Judge Hughes, which was done."

It was upon the authority of those papers that I made the statement to the hon. gentleman with respect to the impeachment which took place so long ago as 1862, and I think the House will agree that it is far too late to enter on the discussion of charges against a Judge which were made more than twenty years ago, he having gone on as Judge ever since, and I suppose he has given satisfaction, so far as I know, at least. The papers in reference to that impeachment are not to be found in the Department. The last known of them, they were in the hands of Mr. (now Chief Justice) Wilson, who was then Solicitor-General, and there is no memorandum in the Department about them to show where they are now, whether they have been age done by them. The hon, gentleman also knows that mislaid or destroyed. It is quite clear it would be highly | the worms do a great deal of damage to the timber there. improper, however, to go into a matter of more than twenty years standing. I have not Mr. Stanton's letter by me, in which he simply stated that I must be under some misapprehension, and that he had sent a petition signed. After hearing the hon. gentleman's statement, I fancy it must have been in this way: that Mr. Starton enclosed a paper signed by some persons, and it was upon that docu-ment that the Minister of Justice thought he could found no investigation. But he wrote for another petition which would state the facts and dates and the suspicious circumstances to warrant an investigation. I dare say the hon. gentleman can quite understand that a process against a Judge is a very serious matter, and that the charges must be made with great particularity-must be charges of specific offences, must be so specific that there may be no difficulty in making enquiry into them. That paper, which was pre-sumed to be a petition, setting forth specific charges, was unsigned, and has been sent back to be signed, and has not yet been received.

Mr. WILSON. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that it is not yet received?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, I do not know. I only say that I received Mr. Stanton's letter on Saturday, and I sent it at once to the Department of Justice. I think the hon. gentleman was good enough to mention that he would bring up the matter to-day; but I will make more enquiries to-morrow, and on going into Supply, I shall be able to make a more specific reply than I have made now. At all events, I have given all the information I have myself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the same Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Cow Bay vote is a revote. The work will be proceeded with by the Depart-ment. There has been a good deal of damage done to that pier by storms.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Apparently every year Cow Bay comes for a new grant. I think I remember it figuring in the Estimates at least a dozen times.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose it is in a very exposed place. Up to 1878 the amount expended on it was $90,000, and the amount expended since is $11,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was bought from the proprietors in 1875.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any chance of the expenditure coming to a final close?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so. As long as storms exist, I am afraid we shall have to repair the dam-

Mr. MACKENZIE. The worm that did most damage in that quarter was a Senator. I would like to know if any one is authorized to expend any money there without geting a vote from Parliament.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nobody but the Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. One of the first things that the hon. gentleman did after he came back to power, was to pay some $5,000 or $6,000 to a private person, who said he had expended it on this work. I hope that process will not be continued.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. All I can say is, that so far as I can recollect, the only money paid has been for work done by the Department. The vote for Benecadie Pond is a revote of $1,500, which is required to complete the opening of a passage from the pond to the lake, and building the sides of the same with crib work. It is in Cape Breton. Cheverie is in the county of Hants. This sum includes a revote of $1,500. The work is under contract, and this sum is required to complete it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will any of this cover extras?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it is not an extra, the amount of the tender which was the lowest was larger than the vote of last year, and of course we have to supplement it by this sum. There is a contract there also. This is to pay for the balance of the contract. The contractor is Mr. J. McGee. His contract was for $11,400, and the $3,000 here asked for will complete it. The $1,000 for Coffin's Island will complete the work; also the $600 for Three Fathom Harbour. Great Village River is in the county of Colchester, and this amount of $3,250 will complete the The House then again resolved itself into Committee of work. There is a contract there for $12,000, of which this is the balance required. The $1,000 for Chipman's Brook repairs is required in addition to the $1,500 for the repairs to the old wall on the west side, as shown by an examination of the wharf. With reference to the $1,000 for Harbourville, the Chief Engineer states this is required to complete the repairs now being carried out on the east and west piers, as shown by an examination lately made of these harbour works. This is in King's, Nova Scotia.

> Mr. McISAAC. $5,000 were voted last year for McNair's Cove. Has that money been expended?

> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it has been, or will be before the 1st of July.

> Mr. McISAAC. Was the work done by contract or by day work?

> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It must be by day work; it was a small vote and most likely expended in that way.

> Mr. McISAAC. I expected to see this vote not only repeated but doubled this Session, in order to make the repairs which have been allowed to become necessary. This work was commenced and finished in the early years of Confederation, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and it cost over $30,000, from first to last, exclusive of last year's vote. In 1879 or 1880, in consequence of the storms that generally occur in the fall, a certain amount of damage was inflicted on this work. This damage I brought to the notice of the Minister at the time; and the people of the locality also, by a petition, brought it to his notice.

and urged the necessity of immediate repairs being made, on the principle that a stitch in time was profitable economy, particularly in a case such as this. The hon. Minister, however, heeded neither information nor representation, but allowed $30,000 to disappear almost altogether. He seemed to pay particular attention to this senatorial Cow Bay, where as often as there is a storm there is some damage, and as often as there is damage there is a vote in the Estimates. I tail to see why he does not give the same attention to this particular work at McNair's Cove, because I maintain that for want of such attention, $30,000 or $40,000 value of work has been completely lost. The hon. gentleman commenced repairs last year by a vote of $5,000, when, in fact, there was nothing left to be repaired. The wharf had been swept away, and no trace of it left for any useful purpose; whereas, if he had paid attention when the matter was first brought to his notice, less than $5,000 - $1,000 in 1880 or 1879 would have saved between $30,000 and $40,000. What has been ex-pended is worth nothing at all. Where large vessels sheltered before the wharf was carried away, now, even after the expenditure of $5,000, the smallest fishing boats cannot get any shelter. I do not think such neglect on the part of the hon. Minister to make timely repairs will add to the reputation his Department has for efficiency and economy. I am far from saying that his Department is not entitled to a reputation for efficient administration; but, as far as the saving or preserving of costly structures like this is concerned, its reputation has actually yet to be earned. This is not the only case I have to complain of. There is another breakwater in the same county which cost $3,000, and that has nearly gone also-the breakwater at Tracadie. I had the honour to present a petition to the Depart-ment early in the Session, and have brought the matter to the hon. Minister's notice every Session for the last few years, and I now assure him that unless some provision be made this Session, the $8,000 expended on this breakwater will follow the $30,000 he allowed to be wasted at Cape George. If the breakwater was worth commencing, it is worth preserving. It is far better, in the public interest, not to commence these works at all, if they are to be allowed to disappear in so short a time. There is another work, also in the same county, and the hon. Minister knows all about it -- that is the breakwater at Bayfield. Last Session the hon. gentleman was good enough to promise that he would give it his attention this Session and make the necessary provision. I hope he will not forget that promise; $5,000 was expended in 1878, commencing the work, and unless it is now looked after immediately, that $5,000 will be gone also. The hon. Minister of Railways knows all about these works. In 1882 he did us the honour, in my county, to pay us a visit, and he gave us a very eloquent address, during which he enumerated these public works-St. George, Tracadie and Bayfield-described their delapidated condition, and said the only thing he needed to make the required provision for these public works was the assistance of the representative of the county to vote the money. I can assure him I am ready to assist him to vote all the money required, and I think that I can assure him the assistance of hon. gentlemen on this side to carry out that side of the bargain.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not sure I will agree to assist in any corrupt bargain.

Mr. McISAAC. I am not disposed to call it corrupt; it is only a delayed duty on the part of the hon. Minister of Railways, and I must ask and insist, if my insistance will be of any avail on the hon. Minister of Public Works, that he should save at least what is left of the money that he and others have expended on these public works. He com-menced these works himself, and I say again he should not have commenced these structures if he thought they would ber (Mr. McIsanc) did not notify me that he would bring not be worth preserving. I trust when the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, the necessary provisions will be found in them to make those absolutely necessary repairs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid my hon friend has put the matter a little too broadly. I do not think I stated quite in those very distinct terms the case as he has put it, but I must say that the gentleman whose interests I was advocating at the time, the gentleman whom I was supporting in that county at that time, as a candidate for this House. has since been elected by a very large majority in that county as a successor to the present Judge Thompson, who now graces the Bench of Nova Scotia; and I might tell my hon, friend that it would be impossible for his advocacy to be stronger or more pressing on the Minister of Public Works in regard to these works than the pressure that is constantly brought to bear upon him by the hon. gentleman's colleague for that county in the Local Legislature. I am in hopes that between them they will be able to induce my hon. friend here to take such measures as will prevent any further injury to those works and make them as useful as possible.

Mr. McISAAC. Does the hon, gentleman say that the only merit the works possess is the fact of their being advocated by a gentleman who represents the county in the Local Legislature?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I do not. I do not see what the hon. gentleman means. He does not mean to say that the only morit the works have is the fact that he is advocating them in this House?

Mr. McISAAC. I am asking whether the only value which he attaches to these works is the fact that aid is asked for them by a gentleman in the Local House?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I, say no. I say the works themselves are important, very important, but the hon. gentleman is very well aware that there are a great many very important works in this country that it is not possible to grapple with at the same time; but I have said before, and I express again the hope that the strong appeal the hon. gentleman has made, and the still stronger appeals that have been continuously made by his colleague in the local branch of the Legislature, will succeed in duly impressing my hon. friend here, and I can assure him that my advocacy and support will not be wanting in anything that can be done to promote the advancement and the security and the extension of those important works.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Minister of Railways forgot to tell us exactly what he did promise during the election. We would like to know that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it would not be edifying for us all to give our experience and fight our battles over again, and restate what we have said in the course of a parliamentary campaign. I am afraid, although I think my memory is tolerably accurate, I could hardly rely on it for minute details in a matter of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will take it confidentially.

Mr. MILLS. It is rather a novel statement that the Minister of Railways makes that the importance of these works is being pressed on the Government by a gentleman who has been elected to another Legislature for the performance of other dutics. Why does the hon. gentleman take such pains to inform the House that that gentleman, besides discharging the duties he is elected to discharge by the electors, has undertaken to discharge the duties which devolve on the gentleman who is elected for that purpose in this House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry the hon. mem-up the question this evening of these works for which we are asking no money this year; because, I would have been prepared to give him a distinct answer. I hope, if he has other matters of the kind, he will give me till next day, at all events, and then I will be prepared to give him the information.

Mr. McISAAC. I will take the information on Concurrence. I have no desire to press the hon. Minister.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is impossible that I should be prepated on every work for which a supply is not asked. As to McNair's Cove, I would like him to be a little more precise in his dates. He said the work was carried away in 1881, or in 1880, or in 1879. It might be 1878. would like to know exactly what year it was, so that I might be able to answer him. If the work is all carried away-

Mr. McISAAC. Not quite all.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The fact that I asked $5,000 last year shows that we were informed differently, and that I was taking care of the work. Perhaps that $5,000 was not enough and we might have asked more this year, but my attention was not called to it.

Mr. McISAAC. Less than $5,000 would have been sufficient, if expended in 1880, when the damage was first done, but it is the neglect to apply the money in time that has made it worse.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Let the hon. gentleman not speak of neglect. Let us wait until Concurrence, and we will fight it out then.

Mr. McISAAC. There will be no fight about it. The money will settle it.

Mr. KIRK. I have looked to see if there was a revote proposed for certain breakwaters for which a vote was taken in 1882, in the county of Guysboro'. Last year I brought the matter to the notice of the Minister, and when the Estimates were under discussion he promised that he would carry out a suggestion of mine, that an engineer should be sent down to examine those harbours to see what it would cost to erect breakwaters to meet the wants of the dishermen. 1 asked the question here this winter, whether the promise on that occasion had been carried out, and he answered me by saying he thought 1 had made a mistake, and intimated that no such promise had been made. In answer to me, he quoted from his answer given last year, which was:

"When the time came to use the vote of $3,600 appropriated by Par-liament, enquiries were instituted as to the total amount required to make it a really useful work. It was found that the amount was so large the Government were not prepared at that time to proceed with the work."

That was his answer, when I asked if it was the intention of the Government to expend this money in crecting those breakwaters; but, when the question came up on a vote in the Estimates, I explained to the Minister that I did think he was justified in withholding the expenditure of the money, the $3,000, from the fact that the Engineer, in 1874, had reported that it would cost $53,000 to build a breakwater, and I thought it was hardly reasonable to expect him to expend $3,000 on the building of a breakwater when it would cost $53,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What harbour is that?

Mr. KIRK. New Harbour, in the county of Guysboro'. I suggested that in order to ascertain what it would really cost to build a breakwater for the necessities of the fishermen there, he should send an Engineer during the recess to examine it, and he promised me to carry out that suggestion. I said:

done. The fact that the Bag. Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

work would cost $53,000 was, I think, a sufficient reason for refusing to undertake it with 3,000. But this report was given while the policy of the Government was not to undertake any work of a local nature. This policy, however, has been changed by the Government, they having decided to build smaller breakwaters for the basefit of the fishermen. What I should suggest is, that the Government send their Engineer there again to see what a breakwater would cost that would be service-able for the fishermen." "Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a proper suggestion, and I will do that."

Now, you see it was the Minister himself who made the mistake as to his not having made that promise, and not I. I was expecting that an Engineer would be sent down, and that the Minister would be prepared during this Session to propose an additional vote or a revote of the $3,000, with perhaps an addition for the breakwater at New Harbour, but on looking over the Estimates I do not find there is any revote of $3,000 or any other sum; and I therefore hope he will place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates this year and carry out the suggestion made last year that an Engineer in the meantime, during the recess, before the money is expended, will examine the harbour and report what it will cost. If it is found that a breakwater suitable to the fishermen will cost $53,000, I will not ask him to expend a dollar, because I do not think so large a sum should be expended on such a work for local purposes. My impression, however, is that a work sufficient for all purposes can be erected for $5,000 or $6,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last year we had no vote of money for this work, and, therefore, as there was no vote, there could not be a revote. The hon. gentleman says I promised there would be an examination made. Does he say there has been no examination made?

Mr. KIRK. Not since the promise was made, that I know of.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If I made a promise, I have no doubt the Engineer has fulfilled my promise. It is impossible for me to say, at the present moment, whether an Engineer was sent there or not. When a promise is made, I give the order. I am not in a position to say whether there will be a vote or not, but there is no revote, because there was no vote last year. In the meantime, I will see what the report has been about this case, and if it is possible to submit an item to my colleagues before coming down here with the Supplementary Estimates, I will do so.

Mr. KIRK. The Minister will remember that although there was no vote in the Estimates last year, he explained to the House that it was not necessary to revote the money of 1882, because it could be expended any time before, I think he said, the 1st of November; and there was no need to vote it again; that in the meantime he would send the Engineer, and if he found the money could be usefully expended he would have it expended before the time expired.

HABBOURS AND RIVER', P.E.I.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose the report was not favourable. There is $1,250 to complete Murray Harbour, South River. This is a revote. It is for the purpose of improving the channel so as to provide for a comparatively straight channel, and make it both wider and deeper.

Mr. McINTYRE. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister to the harbour of St. Peter's Bay, for which I see no vote in the Estimates. In 1882 the sum of $6,000 was voted to complete the breakwater there on the east side, the part on the west side being completed during the Mackenzie Administration. There was a contract entered into with a man named Sirnott, and last year, I believe, he performed a certain portion of that work, but last fall a storm carried away the larger portion of it. Now, I may state to the hon. "I am not finding fault with the hon. Minister for acting as he has away the larger portion of it. Now, I may state to the hon. The fact that the Engineer of the Department reported that this Minister that, personally, I am not aware of the facts, but I will give them to him as they have been stated to me by those who are in a position to give information on the subject. I have had several letters from that section of the country, complaining of the manner in which this work has been carried out. The first complaint is that the contract should have been finished in September last and the second complaint is, as I have heard it, that no security was required for the completion of the contract; and third, that no prepara tions have been made to continue the contract. The harbour, last fall, I am told, was in a state of complete dilapidation. Since my attention was drawn to this condition of affairs. I placed on the Order Paper a notice calling for correspondence and documents, but it has become so late in the Session that it could not be reached, and of course it had to go like the others, last Friday. But the complaint is very strong, that no preparations have been made to continue the contract and that the work seems likely not to proceed any further. I may say that this conviction is strengthened by the circumstance that nothing has been done during the past winter with a view of going on with the work next summer. No timber, or stone, or material of any kind have been procured for the purpose of going on with the work in the spring. Of course, in that section of the country, as in most other parts of Canada, the winter is the proper time to prepare for the work of the summer. Now, it is very desirable that this work should be looked after and that this gentleman should be compelled to continue his contract, otherwise the harbour, if allowed to continue in its present condition, will be completely destroyed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was ready the other day to give the information if the hon, gentleman had had an opportunity of making his motion. I will answer the hon. gentleman now by saying that John Sinnott made a contract with the Department on the 10th of February, 1883, for the construction of a breakwater on the eastern side of St. Peter's Bay, for the sum of $3,930, agreeing to complete the same on the 29th September the same year. Early in September he asked for an extension of time, stating it would be impossible to finish the work during 1883. He was informed that no extension would be granted, but that he must finish the work; and on the 6th of October he was informed by the Engineer in charge that he would be held responsible for the work in its unfinished state, and liable for all damages which might befall the work by its being left unfinished. The amount paid Mr. Sinnott for this work is $1,500, and is paid in proportion to the work done. The hon. gentleman said that he understood there were no sureties given. He says he only heard so, and I must say he made a fair statement. There were not any sureties for the contract, because it is not the custom of the Department to require any, for the reason that we withhold the sum of 5 per cent., which, in this case, amounted to $196.50, as security for the completion of the contract,

Mr. McINTYRE. Do I understand from the Minister that the work will be proceeded with in the spring.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course.

Mr. DAVIES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister in what manner the vote for Victoria Breakwater last year was expended. Was a contract let, or was the work done by day's work? Has the whole amount been spent? And can he tell me in what position that breakwater stands now? Is it his intention to let any contract for the completion of it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Supplementary Estimates, I think, will contain the vote for that work. Wood Island is in the same position. The amount of money was too small, therefore we did not proceed with the work.

Mr. DAVIES. Would the hon. gentleman tell me whether that work was done by contract or by day's work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think by days' work. So far as I can recollect, $2,000 was expended.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman intend to take any vote to complete the breakwater?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think a small voto will appear in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman, of course, understands that a very large amount of money has already been expended, which will be absolutely useless unless the work is completed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to the breakwater at Negro Point, it will be remembered that about one-third of the work was destroyed by gales in 1873. We expended, in 1882, $55,000; in 1833, $30,000; in 1884, $31,000. We now ask for a revote of $40,000, which is required to carry on the work during the next fiscal year. I understand the work is being restored, with good prospect of it being a permanent one, and much stronger than it was in the first instance, experience having taught us what is required to resist storms there. With respect to Mispee breakwater, $3,000 is asked. This is for the construction of a breakwater 200 feet long by 25 feet wide. The probable cost will be $10,000. The amount of $4,000 is asked for a ballast wharf at Hopewell Cape. This vote is required to construct a further length of 200 feet by 20 feet. As regards the item for Buctouche, the $1,000 is a revote to complete the work, the total cost of which will be $4,00^o.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is this wharf accommodation -at Carleton, St. John, N.B.?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been no expenditure there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why then ask a vote? It is on the wrong side of the harbour altogether. There is no railway there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly there is; it runs down to Carleton on the wharf.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not a Government road, and why build a wharf for it? What company is it?

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). This is the Carle on Branch, I presume; part belongs to the county and part to the city. It is an extension of the New Branswick Railway.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It does not belong to the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All the railway wharves and harbour accommodation belong to the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken: The Government does not own an inch of the harbour of St. John. I should think that this vote ought to be taken out now, and put in again four years hence, when it will be required afresh.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I expected that the Minister of Finance would be here to explain this vote, as I have not the information; therefore, I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the vote to pass, and take the explanation on Concurrence. Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not think that the vote should go on at all, as there must be some mistake. I do not wish to delay the Committee, but I think that vote should be struck out.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am certain there is no mistake, as the vote was taken last year, and repeated this, after consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But really there is no explanation possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman should not allow himself to prejudge the case. There may be a very good explanation, as I have no doubt there is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon: gentleman knows that when he was Minister of Public Works he constantly aided railways which were not Government railways. He gave them infinitely greater facilities than this small amount to a railway company to extend their wharf accommodation. As the hon. gentleman set the example over and over again, of giving public money for the assistance of railways, I do not think that he should say that this is starting a new principle, or that it is not a right and proper expenditure. I take it for granted that this railway company required assistance, and instead of giving it, as the hon. gentleman did, to place rails on the road, it is given to assist in extending their wharf accommodation. This is a perfectly right and proper thing, and is entirely in conformity with the policy which the hon. gentleman himself pursued, and for which he asked and obtained the support of this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I never aided any railway by vote. The giving of rails to existing branches was a different thing, and I took a vote of the House for it, but this is for an extension of a wharf. It is assumed by the vote that it is a Government work, whereas the Government have no railway on that side of the harbour at all. I do not think that the hon. gentleman is so much in love with the company that he should build a wharf for them without telling them that he intended to do it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This vote is for the purpose of encouraging and probably purchasing from that company the property they have there, and to give facilities for a winter port. It is part of the arrangement in connection with the western railways on that side of the harbour.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then it should be worded differently, and called wharves and wharf accommodation. This looks as if the Government owned the wharf already.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Carleton Branch Railway Company own the wharf, which is 1,600 feet in length, and capable of extension, so as to make it the finest wharf accommodation in America. It is required for the purpose of affording facilities for loading and unloading freight.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does the Government buy the land?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is proposed to buy the land and afford accommodation there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What accommodation ?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. For the railways coming there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Which railways?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Those coming through from Montreal. One is by crossing the bridge on the eastern side and this is on the western side.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is the Grand Southern and the Canada New Brunswick, which is to have the wharf presented to them?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If the arrangements are made which are contemplated, to have a through line from Mon-Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

treal to St. John, then the New Brunswick Railway Company have leased the road from the boundary of Maine to St. John, including the Carleton Branch, and the Carleton Branch Railway owns this railway and the 1,600 feet frontage on the western side of the harbour; and this is for the purpose of affording facilities there for the discharge of cargoes and for the erection of elevators or anything else that may be necessary for the handling of freight.

Mr. MACKENZIE. When was this project gone into?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was Parliament asked last year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government were asked to afford the facilities, and the Government complied with the request.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They do not appear to have spent any money.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; because a satisfactory arrangement could not be made, and therefore it is asked to allow the matter to stand over until next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Government have no Bill before Parliament authorizing them to engage in such a work.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will find, before the House rises, that there will be Bills before the House which will enlighten him on this subject.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Perhaps there will. I know that when I pointed out similar acts in the past, Bills have been introduced, and perhaps this will be done again. But there has been no sanction of Parliament given to this connection. The hon. gentleman is not able to tell which of the railroads is to obtain this money, or if it is to be paid to them and on what terms. I am very sorry the whole Government are not able to give us some explanation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much money will be wanted ?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is just possible, if the business which is hoped for is obtained, that an additional sum may be required, but this is all at present.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the Minister of Public Works bring down any correspondence or Order in Council in respect to this? Of course I cannot move for them at this period of the Session.

Mr. GILLMOR. Will the Grand Southern Railway have a right to use that wharf, in the jevent of the Government purchasing it?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Of course, the Government will be very glad to afford facilities to all lines to connect with it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The New Carlisle vote is for a long pier. We shall probably require $8,000 or $9,000 more. The vote of $750 for Trois Pistoles is a mistake; it should be $1,750, so that in the Supplementary Estimates we shall have to ask for $1,000 additional. The vote for Rivière du Loup is for the purpose of building a cross wharf at the end of the pier, to afford additional protection. At times the wind is so strong at the end of the wharf that vessels cannot remain there. This will give them shelter inside.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is the depth of water?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sixteen fcet. But there is more than that at the lower end of the pier.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would not be sufficient for ocean steamers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the ocean steamers do not go there. We have been three years at the work of improving the channel of the Saguenay below Chicoutimi, and it will probably require as much more as we are asking this year to complete it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you do with the chains and anchors which are removed from the St. Lawrence

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are sold, and the proceeds are put in the public Treasury. This year the work of removing the chains and anchors will be done in the channel of the harbour of Quebec. There are still nests of chains and anchors there. The vote for the harbour of refuge on the river Nicolet does not complete the work. The work has proceeded rather slowly, and we encouraged rather than discouraged the slowness of the work, because we found that instead of making a long pier, we could, by bridging, avoid that, at the depth of water required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth of water does the hon, gentleman get in the harbour?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say exactly the depth, but it must be considerable, as it begins at the mouth of the River St. Lawrence. River Yamaska, there should be in the first column a revote of $10,000; it is a misprint. St. Zotique is a revote also, and placed in the wrong column by a misprint. Etang du Nord, $6,000, is printed as a revote, but there should be no revote. St. François, Island of Orleans-that is a revote. Quebec Marine Hospital Wharves, $1,500, to complete the wharves commenced two years ago. Berthier, $4,500, to complete the pier at this place, in accordance with the Estimates; there is a contract for this, and this is to complete it. Rivière St. Louis, $5,000; this is the end of that work. Lanoraic, $4,000, that is a revote; the contract was given the other day. Percé, $5,000, is a revote; we did not proceed with that work because we wanted to have the wood contracted for during the winter. We would not be justified in undertaking a breakwater there, as it will be an expensive and very costly work, and we thought it could be postponed. Queen's Wharf, Quebec-we will require to expend $8,000 during the year on that Government wharf. St. Jean d'Orleans, $3,000, which will complete it. Port Daniel, $6,000, not expended last year; the localities furnish the timber, and the work will be proceeded with during the year.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the sum of $2,000 placed last year in the Estimates for the removal of bars at Portage du Fort and Bristol. The bar at Portage du Fort was removed but not that at Bristol; no dredging has been done at the latter place at all. Has the amount of $2,000 been expended in removing the bar at Portage du Fort, and will an amount be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the removal of the bar at Bristol?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have expended a portion of the money, and there will be something to checr the hon. gentleman in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There will be an amazing lot of cheerfulness in the Supplementary Estimates, from the statements made.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Barachois do Malbaio and mouth of Newport River, $1,000, for removal of obstruc-tions; that is a revote. Ile aux Grues, $5,000; there is a contract there; this will not complete it, we will require probably $1,500 more.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Cobourg Harbour, Lako Ontario. This is a revote of $10,000 and an additional vote of $4,000. This work has been delayed by the failure of the previous contractor. Tenders were called for, and contractor is Mr. J. W. Dinwoodie, for $42,750. Tenders were called for, and the new About $9,000 will be required next year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will that complete it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid not, as there will be some work required on the east pier. Up to 1878, $73,000 were expended, and since that $31,000 more have been expended, making a total of $104,000. With these $4,000 and the $9,000 additional required, we will have a total of $117,000, which is, as far as I am informed, the amount required. Port Hope Harbour, $7,500 is a revote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has there been any dredging or extension of the piers there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is dredging, and there is some pier work being constructed. This will be-for pier work $3,000, dredging about $3,500, and about $1,000 for the engineer and for the superintendence. The $65,000 for Toronto Harbour is to complete the work. The works undertaken at Toronto have been most successful. The hon. gentleman will remember that we employed Capt. Eads, a very eminent engineer in the United States, in connection with the Mississippi and so on, and we paid him, I think, $5,000. At the time it was considered a large fee, but I must say that his report, with the modifications that were required afterwards, was not a dear report even at that amount, and the work is a most successful one. Small piers have been built out from the island towards the lake, and thus new land has been formed there, and the island is increasing instead of being washed away as before. The whole work is very perfect, and, when completed, I think it will be a credit to this House, which has given us the money, as well as to the Government, and a great benefit to Toronto. This is to complete the work. Of course, there are other works in the interior of the harbour, which are more of a local nature.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the two channels left?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; two channels have been left open. Capt. Eads thought that the new channel should have been closed, but experience in Toronto of mariners and others, as well as the desire of the Chief Engineer of my Department, not to close that, has had for its result that the western channel remains as it is and the new channel is there still, and it is found that it does not work detrimentally to the harbour. Of course, if it were found not to succeed, it would be very easy to close it entirely and complete the work that Capt. Eads thought should be undertaken there, but it was thought better that the channel should be left open.

Mr. MACKENZIF. It as anything been done in the west channel?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think there has been some dredging done there and it is still going on.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The year before, the dredging wis made in the wrong place there. I would like to know how it is continued.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know about that. They have found the right place now, and are going on with it.

Mr. MILLS. Where is this sum of $4,00 for Rondeau Harbour being expended ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for the entrance to the harbour, the pier work that is damaged, for repairing the piers at the entrance to the harbour and the beach to the west of the lighthouse.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon gentleman know whether steps are taken to protect the timber in the neighbourhood of the Rondeau—the growing timber that ex sts or did exist on a portion of the land which forms the harbour?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1 am not aware. There has been no complaint made to my Department about this.

Mr. MILLS. The point to which the hon. gentleman refers is owned by the Local Government—I think some 4,000 acres. I know on some old maps the extreme point is marked as a military reserve, but there is no timber growing on that; it is simply a sand bar which extends some distance east of the harbour, and there never has been timber growing there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask if the hon. gentleman's attention has been called to the condition of the works constructed at Bayfield Hanbour. I think I moved or asked a question on the subject in the early part of the Session, and he intimated to me then that he would make enquiry about it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; I have enquired and I think I have made a report to Council on the subject—a report which is now there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman state whether the damage which was done by recent storms will be repaired this season? It ought to be if the work is to be preserved at all.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think what I communicated to Council covers the whole ground. I cannot say whether this is to come up in the Estimates or not. But I will take a note of it.

Sir HECTOB LANGEVIN.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There has been a considerable sum of public money spent there, and I hops the hon. gentleman will not overlook it. Considerable damage was done there last fall, and it may require some money—not a very large sum—to repair the injury which has been done. There is another harbour in which I know the hon. gentleman takes a lively interest—the harbour west of Goderich, Port Albert. I drew his attention to it last year, and I think he gave a sort of promise that he would be disposed to deal with it this year. I believe representations have been made to the Department of the hon. gentleman that some work requires to be done there. I hope that, while dealing with other harbours on the lakes, he will not overlook that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a faint recollection that Port Albert came under my notice recently, and I suppose we will hear a little more about that before the end of the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is being done at Collingwood?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of this amount of $19,000, $14,000 will go to the completion of the breakwater, and $5,000 for dredging in the inner harbour.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth of water does that give?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sixteen feet. The amount of $7,000 for Kingston Harbour is for the continuation of the work of deepening it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Removing the shoal, I suppose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. The amount of $10,000 for Little Current will complete the work, I understand. The works undertaken and performed there, I am informed by my Chief Engineer, are very successful. The amount of $20,000 for Kingsville is a revote. That is in South Essex. The work is proceeding there under contract.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman promised to give me some particulars as to the harbour of Morpeth; who is the contractor, and the probable total amount that would be spent?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract price was $17,400 for the excavation of rocks and dredging for foundation for a pier. The pier will be 500 feet in length and 10 feet in depth, but the shore end will be 25 feet in width. The whole cost will be about $25,000.

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. gentleman has arranged to have this pier so constructed as to be capable of extension at any future day, because all that could be done with $20,000 would not provide a really good harbour. It is a step in the right direction, but I hope it will be so let as to be capable of extension hereafter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We wish to make this a complete work by itself; but the plan may always be extended. We will be in a better position to judge of the wants of that locality when this is completed.

Mr. CASEY. It is an important and growing little place, and I think in the near future it will require a much more extensive harbour. It should not be built on a contracted plan.

Mr. MILLS. In reference to Rondeau Point, I would like to call the Minister's attention to some circumstances connected with it. It extends out westward a long distance in the lake, so that while there is considerable shelter afforded on the east side of Rondeau Point for vessels, if the wind shifts to the east they are frequently driven on the shore. It was supposed when this wharf was built out a certain distance that by turning it to the westward it would protect that portion of the water against east storms, which was already sufficiently protected by the Rondeau Point against west storms. But, if the hon. gentleman extends it out only 500 feet it will not afford protection to vessels drawing a very great depth of water. It would require to be extended 200 feet further, and therefore it is very desirable that the hon. gentleman should leave it in a condition that it could be continued at some future time, and also be turned to the westward so as to afford complete protection to vessels seeking shelter there. I observe that the hon. gentleman has not taken any further vote for the improvements in the River Sydenham. would like to ask him whether the vote of last year for dredging in the north branch of the Sydenham has all been expended, and whether the amount taken was sufficient to remove obstructions to navigation up as far as Wilkesport, the head of navigation on that river. I would like to call his attention to a matter about which spoke to him privately a little while ago, with reference to building a wall for the protection of the road along the west side of the township of Sombra. I had a communication from the municipality a few days ago, in which I was informed that the Government had promised to build a stone wall, with a view of protecting the road against the encroachment of the river, upon condition that the Municipal Council would fill in the vacancies where the water has already made considerable encroachment on the road. I have in my hand a copy on the Resolution passed by the Council which, I think, the hon. gentleman told me he had received; and I would like to ask him at this point, seeing that there is no appropriation in these Estimates, whether there is to be an appropriation and whether the Government is considering this subject.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As for the River Sydenham I cannot say exactly whether the whole amount has been expended, but if it has not, it will be expended before the 1st of July.

Mr. MILLS. Is the appropriation, $5,000, sufficient to remove all the obstructions up to Wilkesport?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say just now, but when we come to Concurrence I will take an opportunity of answering the different questions on those votes that are not asked for this year, in addition to the explanation that I can give him now. As regards Sombra, I directed this work to be noted in the Supplementary Estimates to be laid before my colleagues.

Mr. CASEY. I desire to ascertain who were the other tenderers. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state whether Mr. Askwith, who obtained the contract, was the lowest tenderer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. W1LSON. Representations have been made to the Minister with respect to works at Port Stanley and Port Burwell. I see no amount in the Estimates for these ports. When the railway company obtained charge of Port Stanley, in 1880, an agreement was entered into between the Government and the company, by which the company were to make an annual return of the dues collected. I find no such return has been made. I desire to ask the Minister whether we may hope that an amount will be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for works at those two ports.

Mr. CASEY. Great interest is felt in Port Stanley, as is evidenced by representations made to the Minister. That part of the Lake Erie shore is much exposed to certain winds, and disasters are of frequent occurrence. A strong case has been made out in favour of doing something at Port Stanley. A strong case has also been made out for Port Burwell: 151 Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The respresentations made to me in respect to those two harbours have been made quite recently, and therefore it is quite impossible that amounts should appear in the Estimates. These representations, after they have been investigated, will be laid before Council, and Council will decide whether a vote shall be placed in the Supplementary Estimates or not.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the return to be made by the railway company, the hon. gentleman will remember that the harbour was given in trust to the Port Stanley Railway and transferred to the Great Western and subsequently to the Grand Trunk. One of the conditions was, that all tolls collected should be expended on repairs; and although the railway company has been of late years pretty liberal on the question of repairs, it would be more satisfactory to have a proper statement brought down yearly. The harbour is in a very bad condition. Large accumulations of mud are brought down by the stream and deposited where the vessels usually lie. Great inconvenience thus arises every year, because vessels are almost unable to swing round in the stream. If the Minister will consult his engineers, he will find they have reported to that effect.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to Midland Harbour, nothing has been done there, because the railway company and the Government are to do their respective shares of the work, and we are now in communication with the company in regard to the work.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to enquire whether the amount appropriated last year, $3,000, for the removal of boulders, &c., at the Narrows, above Pembroke, has been expended. Is it the intention of the Government to continue dredging?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand the amount was expended. I think an amout has been placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the object referred to.

Mr. ALLISON (Lennox). Will the hon. gentleman state whether an amount will be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of dredging Napanee River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter is being looked into; the Government are not forgetting that river.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the Minister will furnish me with a detailed statement which he promised with regard to the River Thames.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a statement from the Chief Engineer to the following effect: The survey made last summer commenced at Middlemiss, about fifty-five miles by the river, and thirty-five miles by rail, below London, and traversed the most favourable line of country to Fort Talbot on Lake Erie, a distance of twelve miles. The fall between these points is fifty-seven feet, being at the rate of four and a-half feet per mile, the gradient of a cutting over the whole distance. The average depth of cut would be 68[‡] foot; the greatest depth 169 feet. Total quantity of excavation 22,500,000 cubic yards, requiring at least 600 acres of land. The construction of a bridge 140 feet in height to carry the Canada Southern Railway, and 13 highway bridges of from 50 to 100 feet in height, and as farms would be severed, the owners might demand large amounts for damages or the construction of bridges. The object in the minds of the promoters is to provide means for carrying off surplus water from the River Thames during the period of high water, freshets, &c., and within the limits of a reasonable expenditure the scheme may be classed as impracticable.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does this item of new dredging plant cover the expense in connection with the new dredges which are to be constructed in the United States?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; it covers a portion of it.

Mr. CAMERON. Is there no establishment in Canada where they could be constructed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we could not have them constructed in Canada. I am glad to say, however, that I have lately been informed that a large establishment in Kingston is now trying to procure the necessary models to perform work of this kind, and that in future we will most likely be able to have this work done in Canada.

Mr. CAMERON. I am told that they construct these dredges at Port Dalhousie, and I think the hon. gentleman had that in his mind last year, for according to the report of his remarks in Hansard, he intimated that they would be constructed in Canada.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; we tried and failed.

Mr. CAMERON. My information is that there are two places in Canada where they can be constructed. wish to ask the hon. gentleman whether or not tenders were called for, or whether the contract was given to the Lockport firm without any tenders being called for.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The information I have on that point from the Chief Engineer of the Department is to the effect that these dredges are not constructed in Canada.

Mr. COCKBURN. I believe several dredges were got up in this country for the Ontario Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They may be smaller dredges. These are very powerful dredges, and if the hon. gentleman will enquire again, I think he will find that they cannot be built here.

Mr. COCKBURN. We can build as powerful dredges here as are built in any other country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The statement of the Chief Engineer is as follows :---

"The manufacture of dredging machinery is a specialty is not car-ried on in Canada, and the machinery required for the new dredges is being constructed by the Pound Manufacturing Company, of Lockport, N.Y., which, for many years, has been engaged entirely in the con-struction of dredging plant and excavating appliances. "Canadian contractors, as a rule, have had their machinery constructed at Lockport.

structed at Lockport. "Last year, La kin, Conolly & Co., of St. Catharines, contractors for the harbour works at Quebec, had their new dredge constructed in Chicago, and this winter are building a second—even obtaining the iron to be used in the machinery truss work from the United States. "With respect to the halls, plans and specifications were submitted in December last to Messrs. Cantin, Montreal, who declined; R. Davi, Kingston, who would construct only two secows tor $5,400; W. Power, Kingston, no reply; Calvin & Son, Kingston, declined; S. Mickhena, St. Catharines, declined; Muir & Bros., St. Catharines, declined; Morgan & Sutton, Lockport, N.Y., two scows, $3,950; dredge hull, $7,500; tug hull, $5,500. The tender of this firm was a coepted for dredge for Ontario, and it may be stated here that this firm make a specialty of the construction of dredge hulls and turgs, and therefore keep in stock the quality and dimensions of timber required in their construc-tion....

"With respect to their offer for the construction of two scows for $3,950, the following statement of tenders received nine months pre-viously for the construction of two scows for Quebec dredging plant, is Port Dalhousie. "With reference to the Manitoba dredge, it may be stated that though the North-West Transportation Company had offered the timber they had on hand for the construction of a barge, which by the way came from the State of Minnesota, for the construction of a dredge hull at Winnipeg, it was found not to be at all suitable, either as regards size or character of wood, and the dredge hull was therefore obtained from Morgan & Sutton, who have constructed it in the same manner that they have constructed a very large number for the Panama Ganal, and it is now on its way to Winnipeg, where it will be erected and ready for service on or before 15th April next. "In no other way could this dredging plant have been obtained so cheaply."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first vote is to continue the extension of the short line towards Mingan for a distance of about seventy or seventy-five miles. The whole distance is 155 miles, which, at $150 per_mile, will cost $23,250. The vote for the line from Battleford to Edmonton is required to put the line in order. The posts are all rotten, and the wire is in a very bad condition. Edmonton to Saskatchewan, $1,350; this is an extension towards the North-West. The same from Edmonton to St. Albert, $675, the poles being furnished to the Government free of cost. Telegraph lines British Columbia, land line between Australian Ranche and Barkerville, $1,500; the lines require to be put in order and the poles are all rotten. Land line between Victoria and Nanaimo, the same for this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the arrangements that require us to construct this line?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under the Union Act with British Columbia, we are required to keep up these lines. The revenue is steadily increasing and we have reduced the estimates to a minimum.

These models will be most likely exhibited to the Council, and we will have to select the best.

OCEAN AND RIVER SERVICE.

142 Maintenance and repairs of Government ... $140,000 00 steamers

Mr. McLELAN. The steamer Newfield requires a new boiler, and during the portion of the year the Government will engage another steamer.

Mr. DAVIES. Is any portion of that amount to be appropriated for the Northern Light? Last spring she was ordered by the Government Inspector to go upon the slip of Pictou for repairs, and she went there, but she was ordered back again by the Department, and the agent reprimanded for allowing her to go. The Government In-spectors have not given her a certificate yet, and the hon. Minister knows she is engaged in a most dangerous and arduous work.

Mr. McLELAN. The Northern Light was put upon the slip and repaired in the spring, under the directions of one of the inspectors, Capt. McElhinney, and was then taken to Charlottetown, where she remained during the summer. Another inspector, not knowing that she had been put upon the slip in the spring, and had been seen by the Government Inspector, directed Mr. Lord to send her to be placed again on the slip. This sum asked now will be sufficient to cover any repairs necessary to be made on the Northern Light and also on the steamer Newfield; there has always been a large amount expended on the Northern Light.

Mr. DAVIES. The papers brought down show that no inspection was made of that steamer. I was not aware Capt. McElhinney was a Government Inspector. The Inspector of Hulls for the Maritime Provinces is, I think, Mr. Pope, the only one appointed under the Inspection Act.

Mr. McLELAN. Capt. McElhinney is Inspector General of the Dominion, in the employ of the Department, and is sent wherever necessity calls him. He is an inspector under the Act, without any particular location.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. Minister will remember that the agent reported that the steamboat had a very serious strain near the sternpost, and that he could not repair it in Charlottetown. It would be necessary for it to go on the slip. If I had known that these Estimates were coming up to-night, I would have had the papers here. The agent thought that, when the vessel was in motion, they could keep the water down very well, but that when she was lying by the side of the wharf with the usual amount of freight on board, she took in a great deal of water. I was very much surprised at the statement, and I did not understand from the papers that that defect had been properly remedied, and if she is running now with that defect, it is very serious.

Mr. McLELAN. That defect is not from a strain at the sternpost. He supposes that some bolt hole has been unstopped.

Mr. DAVIES. But it could not be remedied without going on the slip?

from some small hole left. It is a very common thing in the | boilers.

launching of ships that some bolt hole is left unfilled. They know the amount of the leakage and it is not at all serious.

Mr. DAVIES. The amount of leakage was pretty seri-

Mr. McLELAN. I think not very serious.

Mr. DAVIES, The hon. Minister will remember that the agent could only give a supposition as to what was the cause of that leakage. Whether it was that the sternpost was started, or that a bolt had come out, or whatever the cause was he could not tell, and he supposed it might be the absence of a bolt or something of that kind. I would like to know whether it is the intention-pardon my being so persistent in this matter, because I have to cross in that boat in a few days, and take my life in my hands, and I want to know if it is safe-to put the boat on the slip early this spring and to have her thoroughly examined.

Mr. McLELAN. Certainly; she is to go on the slip and undergo very extensive repairs-more extensive, I think, than in any season yet, judging from her condition now. It will require very serious and heavy work to get the track broken open this spring, and the vessel will be put on the slip at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria), Has part of this increased amount for maintenance and repairs of Government steamers been caused by an amount of expenditure upon the steamer Sir James Douglas? Is part of that $15,000 required to cover an expenditure not originally contemplated by the Department, the return for which I have called for?

Mr. McLELAN. No; that is the expenditure ending 30th June, 1884.

143 For the providing of a steamer to replace

Mr. WELDON. Is that amount calculated to furnish the steamer?

Mr. McLELAN. The boilers and machinery are already provided and paid for, and some materials were saved from the wreck of the other vessel. This sum will be sufficient to equip her.

Mr. WELDON. What materials were saved? I should not think there could be much, from the place where she was wrecked.

Mr. McLELAN. It is reported by the officers that from $3,000 to $5,000 worth has been saved.

Mr. WELDON. From the wreck?

Mr. McLELAN. From the wreck; and the hon. gentleman will bear in mind that the machinery and boilers were not placed on board the other vessel.

Mr. WELDON. I have not the returns here, but, if my memory serves me right, the return brought down shows an expenditure of nearly $40,000 on the vessel. I think Mr. Brown was paid nearly $39,000.

Mr. McLELAN. No; the return included the boilers and the machinery, which brought it up to about $45,000 altogether.

Mr. WELDON. I speak subject to correction, but I fancy not. The tender for the hull was $29,900. I think there were some items for machinery, but I think the expenditure on this side was nearly $40,000.

Mr. McLELAN. No; the hon. gentleman will find that $29,000 about covers the expenditure on the hull and the Mr. McLELAN. No, it could not be found; but it was equipment of the hull, exclusive of the machinery and Mr. WELDON. The tender was only $29,000, and surely that vessel was not completely finished, hull and spars, or she was different from any vessel that is launched, and the amount of the tender was paid up to $900.

Mr. McLELAN. The inspector reported that she was completed according to the specification, which was very full, in hull, and spars, and rigging and sails. The inspector's report was that she was all finished, with the exception of about $300 of expenditure.

Mr. WELDON. Who is the inspector who reported?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Coker, I think.

Mr. WELDON. I do not recollect seeing any return from Mr. Coker brought down.

Mr. McLELAN. If it has not been brought down, if the different reports from the inspectors at different stages have not been brought down, I will see that they are brought down.

Mr. WELDON. I moved for the payments to Mr. O'Brien and the certificates on which they were paid. I do not think that has been brought down.

Mr. McLELAN. I will see that it is brought down. That is the condition of the matter. The inspector reports that the vessel was completed, except about $300; the contract was for $29,000, and $29,000 was paid. The expenditure on the machinery and boilers makes it up to about $45,000.

Mr. WELDON. I observe that in the tenders and specifications, and in the contract, there was no place mentioned for the delivery of the vessel. I have understood from persons who tendered that they were under the impression that they had to deliver her in Halifax. It made a serious difference in the tenders, as anyone can see by looking at them. They range from $64,000 down to $29,000—I exclude Clarke's tender, which was $25,000. Some of the tenderers were men whom I know to be perfectly qualified as to the building of a vessel, but the amount was small and a man could hardly build a vessel for that amount, and some were under the impression that they were bound to deliver the vessel in Halifax.

Mr. McLELAN. I think not-the wharf at St. John. You refer to the first contract?

Mr. WELDON. Yes.

Mr. McLELAN. That was at St. John.

Mr. WELDON. That made a vast difference, because it was a comparatively easy task to bring the vessel down to St. John, and a safe one; but it was very different to take her to Halifax at that season of the year, and if the contractor had to insure her, he would have had to pay an enormous premium. It seems to me it was a very great risk going around to Halifax, and it was a most extraordinary proceeding, when the tug Hercules went for the boat that she was not towed to St. John and put in order. The Minister stated before that he was guided by Captain Guildford and Mr. Brown. I do not think either of them was acquainted with the Bay of Fundy, not as well as the hon. gentleman himself, because Captain Guildford was employed between Halifax and St. Pierre Miquelon; Brown was an officer in the Navy, and neither of them had the slightest experience. nor, may 1 say, had there ever been a Bay of Fundy pilot on board the Newfield.

Mr. DAVIES. What is to be the intended draft of the vessel that is going to assist the Northern Light in keeping communication open to the Island?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot give the draft at present; she will have much less draft than the Northern Light. Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings, P.E.L) With regard to this vessel that is to replace the Princess Louise that is lost, I understand she is to be much less draft than the Northern Light. I think it will be a mistake for the Government to build a vessel of much less draft than the Northern Light for ice purposes, because the screw will be so near the surface as to render the vessel unfit for forcing her way through the ice. The great merit of the Northern Light consists in her great draft enabling her to carry the screw so far below the surface that it does not come into contact with the ice. I am glad the Minister is going to put the Northern Light in a good state of repair for the coming season; and I hope they will give her a thorough good overhauling and make her as strong as she was at first, perhaps-et least make her fit for the service that she has been fairly well carrying out until the present time. In connection with that point, I may suggest to the hon. Minister that he should take some steps with respect to assisting the crossing at the Capes by providing a strong tug to be placed there during the winter to enable the crossing to be done more satisfactorily and regularly. I have had a little experience of that sort of thing myself this winter in coming here to Parliament, when I was detained eight days waiting for a crossing, and if there had been a steam tug it could have made the connection with the mainland almost every day. The trouble is the open water that intervenes between the ice and the board, and a small boat cannot make the connection between the board and the running ice. If a small tug was placed there, it is my opinion it would very materially assist communication at those points. It would not cost the Government very much to put on an ice boat. as an experiment for one season, and if they found the idea a good one, they could supplement her service by placing a boat on each side, which would certainly accomplish a much desired object. I trust that when the Supplementary Estimates come down, the Government may see fit to provide for getting a boat for this purpose. She can be very safely taken care of at Cape Progress, where a wharf is now being constructed, and can be worked out to the edge of the board ice as it forms, and can be safely docked at the edge of the board ice, where she can be at all times utilized and connected with the running ice in the Straits. In that way I believe there would be more good done in facilitating our winter communication than in any other way.

Mr. PAINT. I wish to correct one statement made by the hon. member for St. John in connection with Captain Guildford. I understood the hon. member to say that he had not the slightest experience of the Bay of Fundy when he was appointed to tow that vessel round. Now, Sir, we have not got a better sea captain in the Dominion.

Mr. WELDON. I said he had no experience in the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. PAINT. His reputation dates back to 1860, when he was employed as pilot on the Great Eastern, from New York to Halifax, and he has been sailing round our shores ever since. Besides that, he was engaged to lay cables in the Bay of Fundy, and within the now last past three or four years, so he could not be a novice in that bay since that time. His reputation and character as a seaman are of the highest standing, and cannot be impeached in any sense.

Mr. WELDON. I said with regard to the Bay of Fundy, and I say so still. A man may be a good seaman enough to cross the Atlantic or to run between Halifax and southern ports, but I think he requires a good knowledge of the tides and currents of the Bay of Fundy channel, in order to navigate it safely, and an experience which only persons accustomed to navigate it at regular periods can ac quire.

Mr. PAINT. That opinion does not apply in this case, inasmuch as the ship was in deep water when the steel hawser or towing cable parted,

Mr. WELDON. What is intended to be done with the new vessel? Will she be sent home to receive machinery, or will she be brought out?

Mr. McLELAN. She will be brought out.

Mr. DAVIES. The question came up last year about steam tugs on the route between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, and I understood the Minister of Railways, who then spoke on behalf of the Government, that it was their intention to consider that question, and an early answer would be given. Now that the question has been repeated by the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., (Mr. Mac donald), I would like to know whether the matter has been considered by the Government, and whether there is any probability of these steam tugs being placed on the route? Last year it was complained that the boats were too small, that we ought to have larger boats and well manned, not only for the ice but for the openings. I know the man who had charge of the service on the Island boat had a waterboat ready, and all he was waiting for was to get a promise that he would be paid. This question of the steam tugs was raised last year. It has been raised again by the hon. member for King's, and I should like to have the answor of the Government on the point.

Mr. BRECKEN. I fully concur in what my colleague has said. There are many men on the Island who advocate the trial of steam launches across the Straits. It is but right that a trial should be made. Whether it will be successful or not, it is not for me to say.

Mr. McLELAN. The matter has not yet been decided. I have had several communications and consultations with heads of the Departments of Post Office and Railways. Very much will depend on the condition of the railway conve-niences and the position of the wharves on each side of the Straits. If the wharves were constructed, a tug could be placed on the service at once.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). For what is the additional $1,000 required? Last year I particularly asked that the agent at Victoria should not be appointed on the Examining Board. 1 find, however, he was appointed. That officer and the officer in command of the steamer Sir James Douglas are still at loggerheads; and the consequence is, the examinations must be very nicely conducted. I ask that the first named gentleman should be removed from the Board and another gentleman appointed.

Mr. McLELAN. Steps are being taken to carry out that idea. The increase of $1,000 is to meet expenses caused by the examination for certificates for coasters on inland waters.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are all persons engaged in managing vessels carrying passengers and freight obliged to pass examinations ?

Mr. McLELAN. Officers on vessels carrying passengers require to have masters' and mates' certificates; but these are not required on freight vessels, if the freight is less than 100 tons.

I understand the Minister received a Mr. DAVIES.

able consideration or not? I understand that my colleague presented it to the Department, and he is aware as to the necessity of the prayer of the petition being granted. The north side of the Island is very much frequented by ship-ping, not only by small fishing schooners but by large vessels, and the bight of the Island is an awkward place to be caught in during stormy weather. There is no place where a life-boat, is more needed than in the harbour of New London. I desire, therefore, to enquire whether the petition has been received, and whether its prayer is likely to receive favourable consideration ?

Mr. BRECKEN. The hon. gentleman is quite right. I had a memorial entrusted to me, asking for a life-boat to be placed at New London and another life-boat at Rustico. T presented the petition and used my influence to secure lifeboats for both places. I am aware that in New London a life-boat is very necessary, and at Rustico it is equally so, and I trust the Minister will see the necessity of providing life-boats at both places. At Rustico, where the lighthouse is on the beach and stands on a frame, it has been represented that if the Department would grant a life-boat, it could be placed under the lighthouse and the service of a crew obtained gratuitously. Rustico is a bar harbour, which is very much frequented by fishing vessels. Several lives have been lost there, and in the cause of humanity the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could not expend money more profitably than in providing a life boat for that harbour. I believe a life-boat is equally necessary at New London. I do not think we have a life-boat on any part of our coast; but if there is any part of the Island which requires such appliances, it is that of Rustico, and also that of New London.

Mr. McLELAN. I think it is altogether probable that there is more than one point on the Island where a life-boat is necessary. I cannot promise to undertake all the work necessary to be done in this field. It is probable, however, that I will get at least one boat for the Island. There are very many points all over the Dominion, both on the seacoast and inland waters, where it is necessary to place life-I have had designs drawn and specifications preboats. pared for the most approved life boats, and these specifications are now in the hands of the officials. We will call tenders for a number of these boats and locate them at different points, with captains and crews duly selected, organized and put into practice. It is found that life-boats have heretofore been stationed at very many points; but no person practically had charge of them, and when occasions arose for their use, they were generally found unserviceable. I have adopted the plan of appointing a captain, giving him a small sum, and allowing him to select the crew; and we pay him so much for every time his crew practices, and they must practice once or twice during the season.

Mr. DAVIES. What will be the cost of the construction and equipment of a life-saying best?

Mr. McLELAN. From $300 to $500.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask whether the Minister has taken into consideration the representations of Captain Pollock, to furnish a life boat if a company should be formed at once to take charge of it without additional expense, and if it is intended to have a life-boat located there.

Mr McLELAN. I have considered his case, with others, but we have not decided upon the points on the lakes at which they shall be located. They will all be fully considered before the boats can be got ready.

Mr. DAWSON. The establishment of life-saving stations on the upper lakes was spoken of last year, but I suppose nothing has so far been done. It was promised that there should be life-saving apparatus provided at certain stations petition from the inhabitants on the north side of Prince nothing has so far been done. It was promised that there Edward Island, asking that a life-boat be purchased and should be life-saving apparatus provided at certain stations stationed in that locality. Has the petition received favour- on these lakes, and that boats should be placed at them, for they are undoubtedly very much needed. We have had wrecks, and there has been a great loss of life, and I think it is quite as necessary that we should have some provision of this kind for the upper lakes as well as for the sea-coast. Of course, we cannot expect it all at once, and I have no doubt the Department has been considering the matter, and that in the proper time the upper lakes will receive a fair share of attention in that regard.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman say that he expects to obtain life-boats of a suitable description for from $300 to $500?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I speak from memory, but it strikes me that the life boats on the English coast cost a great deal more than that. I think they cannot obtain first-class life-boats, such as they use on the English Channel, for less than £200 or £300 sterling.

Mr. PAINT. £400 storling.

Sir RICHARD CARFWRIGHL. That is more than I expected, but I can hardly think that for ocean service the amount named by the Minister will suffice.

Mr. McLELAN. It is found that a much lighter boat is more serviceable than the heavy iand cumbrous boats which are used in England, where there is a longer coast, and the lighter boats can be constructed, I believe, for the sum I have named, with all the latest improvements of the United States service, which is very efficient.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many life saving stations are being maintained by the Government in all parts of the Dominion, and how many on the lakes?

Mr. McLELAN. There are only five which are paid; but there are a number of life-boats located at different points-a number on the lakes, others on the River St. Lawrence, and others on the sea-coast. I cannot remember the exact number at present.

Mr. PLATT. I am glad to notice the increased interest which is being taken in this branch of the service, and I hope the Minister will take it upon himself to conduct this branch of the service with a degree of activity which has been unknown in the past, and that the service will be conducted on a scale of efficiency such as we have not hitherto witnessed. My hon. friends are asking that life-boat stations should be established at different points on the River St. Lawrence, the lakes and the sea-coasts; but unless they prove more efficient than those which have been in operation, little good will come of them. I am not aware that any efforts have been made by the Government to educate mariners on the inland lakes, as to the points at which the boats now constructed are located. I think it is a great defect of the system that there are no means of keeping mariners thoroughly informed as to the exact location of these stations. A few weeks ago reference was made to an unfortunate wreck which took place on Lake Erie, which in all probability, had the crew of the unfortunate vessel been aware of the existence of a life boat in the vicinity, they might have remained on the vessel until rescued instead of going down in their own yawl boat. I think that, as in other countries, the mariners upon every vessel sailing on the lakes, should have a chart or list showing the location of all these boats connected with the life-saving stations. Another point to which I would call attention is, that we know very little of where the money expended on life-saving stations has gone. I find no mention of it in the Minister's Report, and no mention of the number of the boats is given. I would like also to ask the Minister to explain to the Committee whether or not any instructions have been issued from the Department, as to the manner of controlling these stations; whether there is any signal service in this country to afford communication between the lifesaving service and the wreck; whether there is any system of patrol along the coast, or of constantly keeping watch during storms; whether there is any system of enlistment, or whether the crews are expected to attend the stations during dangerous seasons of the year. So far as the life-boats in my county are concerned, there is a material defect in this respect, and although we are supposed to have a life-boat, neither captain nor crew could be found when their services were needed. Last fall a man's life was imperilled within sight of the station, and he would have lost his life but for the energetic and adventurous conduct of some fishermen on the shore, who risked their own lives by venturing out to save this man's life, at the point where the life boat was landed. At this very time the captain of that life-boat was some six or eight miles away, and if he had been required he would have needed a life-boat better than the one we have to reach and rouse the crew on that occasion. The other life-boat in that county has not, I believe, been called upon to rescue any imperilled mariners. If it had been I believe the result would have been the same. These things occur because we have no proper system. Up to the present time, so far as I can learn, neither captain nor crew have received any remuneration for the services they were expected to perform, which fortunately they were not called on to perform. I think the hon. Minister ought to take into his earnest consideration these various defects in the system, and instead of spending money in enlarging it, he should perfect what he has. A very great difference of opinion exists as to the proper location of stations on the coasts of the county I represent. I may state here what I stated last Session, that one of these life-boats, as at present stationed, is of no possible value. I am aware that the hon. Minister took a great deal of pains to enquire as to the best locality; but my own impression is, that if he solicits the opinion of the sailors accustomed to that part of the lake, he will find very few indeed to endorse the placing of the lifeboat at the village of Wellington. I have enquired of the oldest inhabitants and the mariners at that place, and I find that, during the experience of the oldest inhabitant, there has not been a single life lost within ten miles of that port by drowning from a wrecked vessel. I suppose the hon. Minister has been shown reports which state that there have been wrecks there; but these have taken place at the docks, as the place is on the open coast, and they go into the report as wrecks, although no lives have been lost Now, I have before me some information that was obtained, in reply to enquiries made by the Department of Marine, as to the best locality for the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Prince Edward; and I propose showing, by brief extracts from those reports, that the opinion of several of the principal mariners of that county coincides with the opinion I have expressed in favour of Salmon Point. The first is the opinion of Captain O'Hegan to Captain McElhinny, dated on the 15th of December, 1882:

"In answer to your question with reference to the establishing of life-saving stations on our Prince Edward coasts, in my opinion the most suitable places for two of them is, one at Wellers' Beach, and another at West Point, or between that and Wellington, on the beach."

This would bring the life-boats nearer to the dangerous coast I speak of-Salmon Point. On the same date, a letter was written by Captain McCullough, of the village of Wellington, in which he recommends Wellington. Then Captain Nelson Hudgins, a master mariner of twenty-five years' experience, says:

Mr. DAWSON.

[&]quot;I would be in favour of three stations—Salmon Point, Presqu'Ile and Long Point. If only two are given, one at Salmon Point and one at Long Point. * * I think that Salmon Point is the most dangerous part of the coast of Prince Edward. * * * The greatest loss of life, in my opinion, has occurred at Salmon Point." John Abercrombie, Athol: "Have lived twenty-nine years near Salmon Point, and can testify that there has been more loss of life and property in the vicinity of Salmon Point than all the rest of the north cost of Lake Ontario, and think it is high time that something was done by the Government to save life. A good crew could easily be had."

Peter Huff-"Lived on the Point forty-five years; think Salmon Point the best place."

Capt. Hiram Welchea, Master Mariner: "In my opinion, Salmon Point is the place to locate the first life saving station, because there has been more loss of life in that vicinity than anywhere along the coast in my recollection."

coast in my recollection." Capt. John Heniman, Sinth Marysburgh: "I have had a good deal of experience along the coast of Prince Edward. I don't think there has been so much loss on Salmon Point since the light was placed there, but I think it one of the best places to locate a life saving station." Capt. Hargrave, Master Mariner, South Marysburgh: "If two stations are to be located, Salmon Point should be the first (the road runs right along the shore, so that the boat would be available for a long distance along the beach.)" Capt. Lobb. Master Mariner Milford: "I have had a good deal of along the beach.)" Capt. Lobb, Master Mariner, Milford: "I have had a good deal of experience on the coast for fiteen years, and in trading about the Points now in question. I believe Salmon Point would be the proper place to locate a life-saving station." Peter Ryckman: "I believe Salmon Point to be the worst point on this coast for wrecks, and that is the most desirable place for a life-stving station."

Now, Sir, I think the Government should take into their earnest consideration the advisability of protecting this dangerous point. I know they will point at once to the report of Captain McElhinny, who does say in one part of his report that Wellington is the best place for a station; but his best argument is that a crew could easily be obtained at that place. I may say that Salmon Point can furnish as good a crew as any part of Ontario. But Captain McElhinny makes this observation in his report:

"Salmon Point must be of very sharp, rocky formation, as shown in the case of the bodies of those saved from the wrecked schooner Folger, being very much mutilated in coming that short distance to the shore, and a vessel must go to pieces very quickly."

He says further, referring to Captain McCullough's recom mendation :

"Captain Hugh McCullough, a person of a good deal of experience, gives in a letter his opinion, and recommends very strongly Wellington Beach for a life-saving station----''

Wellington Beach is a very different place from the village of Wellington. But Captain McElhinny goes on to say:

"It being central between Huyk's Point and Salmon Point. This, considering the distance between huy a point and Sainon Point. This, make the life boat of very little use to Sainon Point, as no boat can go in the trough of the sea, and would have to be wheeled the whole length of the shore round the light."

So that, after all, Captain McElhinny gives us this statement that Salmon Point, the most dangerous part of the coast, is still unprotected. I may refer to the difficulty which seems to arise at South Bay Station, or Long Point as it is called, and I would like the hon. Minister to state whether the exact location of the life-boat built for that place has yet been agreed upon. Some say it should be on the lake coast, others on the bay coast. It might as well be in one of the mill-ponds as on the bay shore, for it would be utterly useless there. There are some other matters which I would like to have had the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the House. I have asked for papers, which I trust will be brought down. I would like to know if any report has been received from the captains or crews of these boats, in various parts of the Dominion, so that we may know it they have been of any service whatever to the country. We know that many wrecks have occurred and many lives lost, and it is high time to consider the amount of money that has been expended in this service, the length of time since its inauguration and what return it has rendered. There is one other point to which I wish to refer, not to effect any particular purpose, but merely to show that the anxiety of the Government to secure a suitable location for the life-boats has existed for some length of time. It is somewhat strange that the life-boats destined for Prince Edwards did not arrive for five or six months after they were reported to this House as finished and ready for shipment; as long 'do. However, the Government made a great mistake in the ago as 1882, the Government made strenous efforts to secure a proper place for the location of the life-boat, especially strenuous just before the elections. A year after that, Capt. McElbinny was sent to Prince Edward to make enquiries about the coast, but the Department had made up its mind beforehand that Salmon Point was to be the locality. 1 do not know the object for writing the following letter, but the date is suspicious, the 12th of June, 1882, the day before the election ; and Mr. Young, to whom the letter was addressed, happened to be a former supporter of this Government, though for good and sufficient reasons he did not see fit to attach himself to the party supporting the Government. So Mr. Young was written to, the day before the election, in these words :

"DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES, "OTTAWA, 12th June, 1882.

SIR,-The Department has had under consideration the question of Sig.—The Department has had under consideration the question to establishing a life-boat station along the lake coast nearest Salmon Point. I understand that you are the owner of the land, and from your experience I presume you are able to give a reliable opinion as to the best and most convenient place to stational life-boat. I have to request, therefore, that you will inform the Department as to the best place for the near in in one opinion and close to the promote which you would the station, in your opinion, and also as to the price at which you would be willing to sell, say one acre, in the event of its being determined to place a station on your land.

"I am, Sir, "Your most obedient servant, "WILLIAM SMITH, "Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries."

The answer came after a considerable time, as follows :---

" SALMON POINT, 24th June, 1882.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your important questions, bearing date 12th June, I beg to say that the Dominion elections—it being near polling day—was the cause of my laziness in replying, as I felt great interest in trying to sustain the present Government, &c., &c."

Such was the effect produced by this letter, and I will allow hon. gentlemen to draw their own inferences.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Young voted all right.

Mr. PLATT. I think he did. If this was the first letter, there might not be so much cause for complaint; but this is not an insolated case. Another letter has come to my hand, written almost on the same day to a gentleman who had a little difference with the Government but who formerly supported them; and the letter sent to him was couched almost in the same language as that to Mr. Young, but it had not the same effect. This Mr. Young is a man of experience, who has written voluminous letters to the Department, but so far as I can learn none of his recommendations have been accepted by the Government. He expresses himself most strongly of the opinion that Salmon Point should be the location for the first and best life-boat. I shall not read the other letter which was written on this occasion, but I have it in my hand and can read it if necessary. I do not wish to make any capital out of this, but I hope the Government, in the conduct of this service in the future, will try to keep politics out of the question. On the other side of the line, our American friends keep politics out of it, and they seem to take a great deal of pride in the fact that, although at a change of Administration most of the other offices are changed, the life-saving service is kept intact. I trust this Government will copy in a great many respects, so far as the administration of our life service is concerned, the life-saving service of the United States.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. gentleman's opponents say that the Government elected him a member for this House by advertising for the Welland Canal to go by Presqu'Isle Harbour. If they wrote letters to keep him out of the House, through the life saving station, they did more to keep him in it by the Murray Canal.

Mr. PLATT. Iam not responsible for what my opponents location of the canal as well, as far as the result to the public is concerned, though they may have benefitted, indirectly the county I have the honour to represent, by causing it to change its representative.

Mr. CASEY. I want to allude to a matter in which I think no politics are concerned. I am aware that a deputation has had an interview either with the Minister or his Deputy in regard to the placing a life-boat at Port Stanley. A life-boat is not only of use at the place where located, but also for a considerable distance up and down the coast, and here the coast is dangerous and the necessity for a life-boat pressing. I understand free storage is promised to the boat in a building belonging to the Grand Trunk Railway, and a captain of long experience has undertaken to take charge of the crew, so that everything is favourable for the establishment of a life-boat at that point, at the least expense to the Government.

Mr. PAINT. In reference to the selection of the points where these life-boats are to be e-tablished, it must be borne in mind that one of the most difficult things to be accomplished is the proper selection of a site, inasmuch as a wreck will take place on the lee shore just where the gale or squall strikes the ship and carries away her musts and sails, and then she will go ashore, perhaps, at the must safe and smooth part of the coast, and the life-boat may be in quite another position, where it might be supposed a wreck would occur. So, with a steamer, wherever the machinery ceases to work, there the wreck will occur.

Mr. McLELAN. There was a great diversity of opinion in the county as to where the boat should be placed, and after consideration of the different points, these were sclected. For six or seven years one of the old life-boats was stationed at Salmon Point, and during all the time she was there her services were never called into requisition.

Mr. PLATT. Will these crews be paid anything for their services—the services of the past year?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

146. To provide for investigation into Wrecks and Casualities and collection of informa- tion relating to disasters of shipping	$1,500	00
147. Expenses in connection with Canadian Registration of Shipping	500	00
148. Montreal and Quebec Water and River	38,000	00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the force the same? Mr. MoLELAN. Yes.

149, Removal of ubstructions in navigable rivers $2,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see the hon. gentleman very often does not use this at all.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been very little expenditure. I have ascertained that there are a number of wrecks it is important to have removed, and we propose to take steps to remove all those,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to the sum. I merely note that a year ago nothing at all was done.

Mr. PAINT. As to the triennial list of shipping, it has been brought to my notice frequently that we should have the list of shipping every year, and it was so issued some seven or eight years ago, but this $1,500 has been voted separately to enable us to have the list only every three years. Is there any objection to having it every year?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think the necessity would warrant our having it every year. It is a very expensive thing to have it yearly. Mr. PLATT. LIGHTHOUSE AND COAST SERVICE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is the detail of this vote to be found? In former years it used to form part of the Estimates. The detail ought to be given somewhere ---where is it?

Mr. McLELAN. You mean the names?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not the names, but the various points at which they are employed, with the salaries, and also the number of new appointments that have been made.

Mr. McLELAN. That is published in the report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this $3,023 increase for?

Mr. McLELAN. For the additional lights we may put in operation during the year.

S'r RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many?

Mr. McLELAN. From eighteen to twenty-two.

Mr. PLATF. Does the hon. Minister recollect whether there is any change to be made in the salary of the lighthouse keeper at South Bay Point? It was stated last year that it was only $150 per annum, and it is not in keeping with the salaries paid at other places.

Mr. McLELAN. I think a small increase has been given to that gentleman, making the salary $200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This a new form, rather, of putting it in. What does this refer to ?

Mr. McLELAN. The agencies in the different Provinces for the lighthouse services at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Quebec and British Columbia.

S.r RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want the hon. gentleman to revert back to the old fashion under which we had a dozen pages and more devoted to details of the lighthouse service that were probably as well out; but if he will look back to the old Estimates, he will find, I think, that very much more full details were given, and might conveniently be given, with respect to some of these large items, such as the item which immediately follows, of nearly $300,000, of which not the faintest detail is given, I perceive, in these Estimates. Now, in other Estimates, such as the Estimates of the year 1878, and so forth, the hon. gentleman will find that a reasonable amount of detail was given, occupying about half a page, and although I do not want to detain the hon. gentleman too much now, I would suggest that next year, so far as that goes, some further detail might be given. It is rot convenient to be called upon to vote nearly $300,000 without further information than is given here. If the hon. gentleman will look back to the older Estimates, he will find that a very reasonable amount is given. For instance, "Maintenance and Repairs" are divided into three or four sections-below Quebec, above Montreal, and so forth-and in these some reasonable amount of information is given as to what is required. I think it would be more satisfactory to the House if, in future, a little more detail were given of this large vote.

Mr. McLELAN. I will read to the hon. gentleman, if it is necessary to detain the Committee, the sub-division of the salaries of the lighthouse-keepers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall not ask him to do that on this occasion. I suppose I will find some tolerable information about that in the Return he has laid on the Table, but it is not proper to be asked to vote $300,000 or $400,000, without having before you in the book you are discussing some little more detail than we have here. What I want is something like this: In the last Estimates I myself brought down for 1878-79, the Department provided very tolerably full information about these, dividing them, as I see, into the several heads, and, although it is not necessary to cumber up the Estimates with a dozen pages giving the details of the number of lighthouse-keepers and so forth, I think that the one page was useful which contained something like the details the hon. gentleman proposes to give: for instance, how much was required for buoys and beacons, how much for repairing, maintaining and arranging lights and light-ships, how much for boats, how much for oil and so forth. I think that might be judiciously restored. It was the custom in former times to give all that information, and it is much more convenient to have it in a page in the Estimates than to have to look it up.

Mr. McLELAN. Difficulties may arise from dividing the estimates in that way. There may be an accident to a lighthouse, a fire or an undermining by the sea—that is an expense upon maintenance and repairs, and this may largely increase one of the sub-divisions and largely increase your appropriation for that, while in other points it may be less than you estimate for, and when you take a lump sum in this way, you are not tied down to any particular expenditure for any particular service, and it is unwise to do so, in view of the liability to accidents in matters of this kind. The sub-division we have is:

Chimneys, burners, reflectors, &c	$11,000 0	90
Oil	32.000.0
Coal, wood, water and freight	37,000 0
Oil tanks, tinware	3,000 0
Repairs, lumber, stone, cement, machinery, &c.
Lanterns, lamps, &c		C
owder	9.000 0)(
Signal stations.	3,500 0)(
Repairs to dwellings, boat houses, wharves and sheds		0
Buoy service	36,000 0
lumane establishments	10,000 0)(
Paint, oil, glass, white lead, &c	10,000 0
Hardware, rope, rubber packing, &c	6,000 0
Baize, chamois, flannel, polishing powder, &c .
Sundries	6,500 0

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But these are just the items that may be advantageously put in as in former years. I did not ask for the extreme sub-division that prevailed before when they were divided in that fashion in half a dozen sub-heads. But even if the hon. gentleman requires to take a pretty large allowance for contingencies, which can be easily put in, still it is desirable to have some more information than we have here.

Mr. McLELAN. We will take that into consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not desirable that so large a vote as this should be taken and left entirely at the disposal of the Department in the way the hon. gentleman suggests.

152. Maintenance and repairs to lights, fog whistles, buoys and beacons, humane establishments and provisional depots.... $288,860 00

Mr. McLELAN. This sum covers all the lighthouses and the increased buoy service. Buoys are found necessary at additional points, and several new fog whistles have been added during the past year which are of expensive maintenance. The humane establishments are hospitals at the different points where we establish life-saving institutions.

Mr. WELDON. There ought to be a better fog alarm at the harbour of St. John. The bell-buoy is not at all sufficient for the purpose. 155 Mr. McLELAN. Considerable repairs were male to that bell-buoy last season, and I understand it is now in a better condition.

Mr. PLATT. In the early part of the Session I asked the Government for information regarding a change in the direction of the range lights at Weller's Bay, and I was told it was not the intention to make any change. Since then I believe a petition has been received by the Department asking for a change in that harbour, and also asking that spar buoys be placed at the entrance in order to remedy the failure of the light to be in range with the channel.

Mr. McLELAN. That will all be enquired into as soon as possible by the proper officer of the Department. No decision is made in the office upon petitions or applications without enquiry by some competent officer of the Department. Whenever we receive a potition signed by so respectable a body of men as are the constituents of the hon. gentleman, it will be attended to.

153. Cape Race Light..... $1,300 00
154. Completion and Construction of Lighthouse and Fog Alaims...... $40,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. This is for building one or two fog alarms. I will give a complete list of items before Concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We ought to have it now when we are asked to vote the money in Supply, because this is the proper time for discussion. Although it has been once or twice done as the hon. gentleman now proposes to do, it was done under protest by reason of some accidental failure in obtaining the information. We are asked for $40,000, and the hon. gentleman does not state any details or places where he is going to spend it. We are not anxious to delay him, still we have a right to know how this money is being spent.

Mr. McLELAN. The sheet is not yet from the printers, but will be here before Concurrence, and will be distributed to the House.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) With this large vote of $40,000, I think the Government ought to erect a fog alarm at East Point, in the Lower St. Lawrence, in answer to a runerously signed petition from the leading shipping merchants of Quebec, Halifax, Prince Edward Island, and other maritime ports. This is one of the most important places in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, and more shipping passes this point to Prince Edward Island than at almost any other point on the Lower St. Lawrence. The importance of the situation would warrant the Government in giving due attention to this matter at an early date, and I trust they will take steps in that direction at once.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will find on the sheet when it comes before the House that provision is made for that.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) The hon. member for King's asks for a tog whistle at East Point -I suppose he means in Prince Edward Island. But there is another East Point in British Columbia, and representations have been made to the effect that one is very necessary there. Will the sum provide for the erection of a lighthouse on East Point?

Mr. McLELAN. There is some appropriation made for some new lights in the hon. gentleman's Province; I am not able to state just now where it is.

Mr. BAKER. We shall be informed on Concurrence, I suppose. That seems to be an excuse for almost everything —in fact I regard this Concurrence as a snare and delusion.

MARCH 31,

Mr. McLELAN. It is a very difficult matter in a multitude of applications that come in for lights, buoys and fog whistles, to make a selection and keep within the sum that you have reasonably asked Parliament to grant in any one year. This paper is in the hands of the printer, but it has not yet been completed. I will bring it down on Wednesday, and full discussion can take place on Concurrence.

Mr. BAKER. I can fully understand the difficulty ex-perienced in discriminating between the various claims made. I would, however, be failing in my duty if I failed to bring before the Minister the fact that in the opinion of the whole Maritime population of British Columbia a lighthouse is required on the eastern point of Saturna Island. trust when the Minister arranges for the distribution of the $10,000 he will give this matter every consideration.

for lighthouses?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. I desire to draw the Minister's attention to a case of hardship which occurred in Prince Edward Island. A piece of land having a frontage of 111 chains was taken from the farm of Rodger Campbell for lighthouse these fry, was particularly marked. Hon gentlemen will purposes, he being induced to give it for a nominal sum on bear in mind that with the increase in population, and with purposes, he being induced to give it for a nominal sum on the representation being made to him that he was eligible for recommendation to the appointment of lighthouse keeper. When his name was forwarded to Ottawa, it was found that he was beyond the age, and the Minister had no option but to refuse his request. Then Campbell sought to have his offer withdrawn, or to be paid the real value of his land. He has made a number of applications, simply asking to have the value of the site assessed by any respectable man whom the Minister chooses to appoint. Campbell is a most respectable man.

155. Construction of Lighthouse at Colchester Reef, Lake Erie 156. Signal Stations......$7,600 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many signal stations are in operation, and how is the service conducted ?

Mr. McLELAN. The signal service has been used during the past season: first, for reporting the condition of the ice in spring, which information is telegraphed to points of call and is cabled to Liverpool; and second, to report vessels inward and outward as they pass the Guif.

Mr. McNEILL. No doubt the signal service has been a great benefit to the country. It is most important that we should have a signal station established at Manitowaning, the gateway between Georgian Bay and Lake Huron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the Minister would state the number of stations.

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot give the exact number, but almost all the lighthouse keepers along the gulf and coast are engaged in this work and receive an allowance yearly. Then there is a superintendent at Quebec who receives these reports, and sends them to the points where they are desired. There must be about one hundred officers engaged in this sorvico.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that there is a considerable increase in connection with the fish hatcheries, and perhaps the hon. gentleman would state what he finds. generally, is the result of this very considerable expenditure. I know that there was some doubt on the part of those who profess to be experienced in these matters whether the expenditure of this large sum was productive of much good, and whether more good would not be got in the way of developing our fisheries, in seeing that fish were not destroyed during the spawning season, and that the close season was generally observed, than by the sum devoted to fish-breeding. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will state his opinion on the subject.

Mr. McLELAN. My own opinion is that fish breeding is capable of being made a great success. I have been giving attention to the returns of salmon fishing, from the lower Mr. DAVIES. Does this amount cover land expropriated Provinces more particularly, and I find this result : That in all the rivers in which we have been placing young fry the supply of fish has either been maintained or increased, whilst in the rivers in which we have placed no fry, and more particularly on the northern coasts of the St. Lawrence there has been a great decrease in the catch of salmon. The increase last year in the Restigouche, where we had placed the increase of appliances for destroying fish, it is very difficult in any river or lake to keep it supplied with fish, and that considering all the destructive appliances that are used, if we are able to maintain the supply we are doing a good deal, because we find where the fishermen are left to themselves they soon clear out a river or lake.

> Mr. HACKETT. The question of the preservation of the fisheries for the people of Canada is one of great importance. I would say that I have no objection to the remarks of the Minister so far as the inland rivers and lake fisheries are concerned ; but I think the coast fisheries are being rapidly depleted by the use of the apparatus or machine called a trap, which is set round the coast for the purpose of capturing fish. On the coast of Prince Edward Island we have had small experience in that regard. But we have had some of these traps, and the experience thus far has shown that if continued they will ultimately result in the destruction of these fisheries. I think some steps should be taken to prevent those traps being used, unless on headlands or outeide the spawning grounds of the fish. Gentlemen who are acquinted with the habits of the fish know that they come around capes, and bays, and estuaries, of the coast, and deposit their eggs, and that these traps are set on those spawning grounds, and the result will be that in a few years they will be destroyed, and the fishermen will not be able to follow the occupation which they have had for many years. I hope the hon. gentleman will take steps to prevent the use of these traps, because I believe the result of their gen-eral use will be as I have stated. We find that in the United States, where they have had larger experience than they have in Canada, the result has been that the coast fisheries have almost been totally destroyed, and the people of the United States have been at great expense for the purpose of restoring those fisheries. So far, the means recorded to have been found inadequate to restore the coast fisheries of the United States. With regard to Prince Edward Island, it will result detrimentally to the interests of the people of the Island if these fish traps, which are the worst kind of apparatus for capturing fish, are to be continued, and I hope some steps will be taken by which this mode of fishing will not be increased but curtailed in the future.

Mr. McISAAC. I quite agree with the hon. member who has spoken, that the proper protection of rivers, and the removal of obstructions, such as dams, are the best means for preserving and propagating our fisheries. Very little good, I believe, results from hatcheries. In that respect I have to differ from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In doing so, I may refer to a discussion which took place in the other Chamber some weeks ago, when an hon. gentleman, who represents there the county of Lunenburg a county more remarkable for its fisheries than any other county in the whole Dominion-contradicted entirely the statement made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries just now. He did not condemn the hatcheries on principle, but the manner in which they are conducted; and he declared that he could prove that they are an ontire failure. Last year I had occasion to complain to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that a large portion of the expenditure on fisheries, and in paying the salarios of officers, was money thrown away. As a case in point, I referred to a fish-way and dam on the St. Mary's River-that branch of the river which rans out of Lochabar. The Minister was kind enough to refer the complaint to Mr. Rogers, the inspector, who com-municated it to the overseer of the district. The overseer visited the place and made his report, and I have no hesitation in saying that his report is absolutely false. I do not blame the authorities at Ottawa, for they are misled by many of their subordinates, and that is one of the reasons why the protection of our fisheries is in so many cases a farce. I will read the report of the overseer, which is addressed to Mr. Rogers :

"SHERBBOOKE, 3rd July, 1833.

"DEAR Sin .-- I was on the ground this spring, the very first day the alewives made their appearance, and can testily that I saw them accend the fishway to the very top in quantities; and there are men at Lochabar who caught barrels of them. For salmon, footbabar has never been a resort, and I do not believe that any try to go up. They can if they wish.

"I am, yours truly, "ALLAN MCQUARRIE, Overscer. "W. H Rogans, Esq., Fishery Inspector."

Mr. Rogors publishes this letter in the Halifax Herald, in troducing it by a letter of his own, endorsing every word of it. Shortly after its appearance, I was spoken to by persons living in the locality about it; and since my arrival here I have taken the trouble to write to the owner of the mill that is operated by this dam; and if any person would have an interest in suppressing the truth with regard to the fishway, it would be the mill owner. Yet he was frank enough, though not to his own interest to make this statement, which is dated the 5th March, in reply to my enquiry whether he remembered the day the overseer examined the ladder :

"I did not hear that any fish were caught above the fishway the time McQuartie was here. I doubt if he saw any going up, for the flood in the agring partly broke the fishway, and it was not repaired until a few days after he was here."

The fishway was out of repair, and was not repaired until some days after McQuarrie left; and yet he says in his report to Rogers that he himself saw the fish ascend the ladder. Now this state of things should not be allowed to exist any longer, and I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to send some reliable person there as soon as possible to make a correct report, because neither McQuarrie nor Rogers is to be relied upon. Tais Mr. Rogers has a hobby of his own, a ladder, which he is always putting forward. This will be seen in the letter which he sent to the Halifax Herald on the 5th of July, 1883, in introducing McQuarries' report. It is as follows : -

" To the Editor of the Herald :

"Sup.-The following from the Overseer of Fisheries at Sherbrooke, as to the workship qualities of a ladder of the old pattern built by my-self some years ago below the dam, will be of interest just now Isaac Gaits, overseer, informs me about the same is the case with a ladder of the same years ago below the dam, will be of interest just now Isaac Gaits, overseer, informs me about the same is the case with a ladder of the same years ago below the dam, will be of interest just now Isaac Gaits, overseer, informs me about the same is the case with a ladder of the same years ago below the dam at the date of the same is the date of the same years ago the day, and they visit the ladders at improper times, see no fish, and veport accordingly. This Lochaber fishway has been con-demned over and over again by the knowing ones."

It is well known that Mr. Rogers is an inventor of ladders. The first ladder to which he refers here he claims to be perfect; if it is, there is no reason for improvement; yet in his letter he says: "This has been condemned over and over again by the knowing ones." This, I think, is simply a rebake to those who venture to condemn his ladder. Therefore, I ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, again, as the season is approaching when the fish will ascend the river, to send some reliable person down to examine the place. Mr. Rogers gets $1,400 for travelling expenses, and what does he show for it? Everybody knows that there is no river more celebrated in Nova Scotia than the river St. Mary's for its fisheries, and particularly its salmon fisheries, and since the erection of this dam the salmon and other fish have deserted altogether the portion above the dam. A few alowives make the exception. Every statement in this letter of Mr. McQuarrie is false. That is bold lapguage to use, but it is the truth, and every resident along the river for 20 or 30 miles will corroborate what I say.

Mr. McLELAN. Will the hon. gentleman send me a copy of the letter; it is a serious matter if an officer has made a false return. There must be some convenience, a ladder of some kind to enable the fish to pass over the dam.

Mr. McISAAC. There is a kind of a ladder.

Mr. McLELAN. Of all the ladders I have seen, Mr. Roger's is the best and on the right principle, and if the ladder in question is one of Rogers' and is properly constructed, it ought to be able to effect the purpose. I have instructed Mr. Roberts to see that the fish have facilities to ascend to their breeding grounds. The hon. gentleman referred to the remarks of the hon, member for Lunonburg. Lunenburg is one of the greatest fishing counties in the Dominion, and we have placed fry in some of the rivers of that county. There is no hatchary yet on that coast, but some fry has been taken there, and the overseor reports that during last year there was a considerable increase in the catch of salmon.

Mr. McIAAC. The request is made in this letter that a warden be appointed near this dam. There is one within five or six miles of the mill who is a relative of the mill owners, and naturally does not take the same interest in looking after the fisheries as he otherwise would, and it is necessary to appoint a warden who is not a relative of the mill owner.

Mr. MCLELAN. If he were too near the mill, he might get his grist there.

Mr. McISAAC. I do not recommend any one in particular, so that I have no personal interest in the matter in any special appointee.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) I want to take this occasion to advocate, as I did last year, the payment of an adequate salary to the Inspector of Fisheries in British Columbia. Mr. Alex. Caulfield Anderson, the inspector, receives but $1,200 a year, and why he should receive less than any other Provincial Inspector of Fisheries I cannot imagine. I must do the hon. Minister of Marine the justice to state that last year he did increase Mr. Anderson's salary, but still it is not equal to that of the Inspectors of Fisheries in the other Provinces. Of course, when one is advocating an increase in expenditure, or anything which entails the expenditure of public money, the question is asked : Will it pay? What is the return? If a Custom House or Post Office is asked for, the Government will ask, what are the receipts? Is there sufficient revenue to yield a sufficient return for the money expended ? Possibly hon. gentlemen in this House are not fully alive to the value of the fishery interests of British Columbia; but, perhaps, I can onlighten them on that subject. I have a memorandum, showing that for the year

1883, up to the 31st December, the total value of exported fish, fish oils, &c., including the consumption by the European population throughout the Province, was $1,603,145.42, and the consumption by the Indian population throughout the Province, by computation previously made and published, $4,885,00"; making a total of no less than $6,488,145.44. There is sufficient in that to show that there must be as much work devolving on the Inspector of Fisheries in British Columbia as on the inspectors in any of the other Provinces. I do not wish to detract from any other Province, but I do think that the inspector in British Columbia should receive, not only as much as the inspectors of the other Provinces, but should receive a larger amount, in view of the increased cost of living in that country. The comparative value of the yield of the years 1882 and 1883, exclusive of computed Indian consumption, was: in 1885, $1,603,145.42, and in 1882, $1,842,675.05—which shows a deficiency in the year 1883, of $239,529.63, arising from shortness of salmon pack and deficient fur seal hunt. The pack of canned salmon in 1883 from Fraser river amounted to 12 canneries 105,701 cases, and from the northern rivers and inlets, to 11 canneries 90,501 cases, or a total of 196,292 cases. The pack of 1882 was 265,610, which shows a deficiency of 1883, compared with 1882, of 58,769 cases. The value of vessels employed, together with boats, nets aud ordinary equipment, was $253,245.00, and the computed value of stationary plant $515,000, or a total value of $768,245.00. The number of men employed during the season was 70 sailors, 2,934 fishermen and seal hunters, and 2,136 shoremen, making a total of 5,070 persons engaged in the trade. These statistics give a very fair idea of the importance of our fishing industry, and show the necessity of increasing the inspector's salary. Mr. Anderson is a gentleman of very high culture, a man of intelligence and ability, and 1 think the Department would be very sorry indeed to lose his services. If the Department desires to retain him in his position, it is necessary he should be paid commensurate with his services; and I hope the hon. gentleman will give the attention to this case which it is fairly entitled to.

Mr. PAINT. I wish to say one word in reference to the remarks of the hou. member for Prince County, Prince Edward Island. He protested against the use of fish traps, and I wish to say a word on behalf of the fishermon of Nova Scotia. He objects to fish traps; I protest against the use of purse or tuck-seincs. The hon, member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island, referred to the sixty-three American vessels that were in the Gulf of St. Lawrence last year; but he did not say that they had loaded with the aid of seines. The vessels throw the bait overboard, and the fish rise to the surface, and they run the seines round the shoal of mackerel and load their vessels this way, destroying mmense numbers, the small ones being thrown away. In dealing with a Reciprocity Treaty or anything like that, care should be taken to treat with the Americans in regard to the destruction by them of the fish in our waters. Our Nova Scotia vessels have not yet taken that method of oatching fish, but the Americans have done so, and they loaded twice last year; this is a more destructive method than the trap.

Mr. DAWSON. The constituency which I represent extends for 600 miles along the great lakes, and fishing is very extensively carried on there. I will not detain the House more than a few minutes, but I desire to refer to a matter which I think of very great importance to the country at large. I suppose that fish traps on the sea coast correspond with our pound nets on the great lakes, and there is to doubt that those pound nets are most destructive to the fish. They are set all over the lakes now, and are coming fair to a large class of the population up there, the Indian population. In some places the fish are actually swept out of the lake. The Minister has very well said that these nets would clean out a lake, however large or small it was, and there is no doubt that they have cleaned out the Georgian Bay a great deal. I think there should be some restrictions upon them. I must say, with regard to the fish hatcheries, that, so far as I have observed and heard, and the general opinion as far as I have heard it expressed is, that they are eminently successful. There can be no doubt that, but for these fish hatcheries, the fish would be very soon exterminated in some parts of the Great Lakes. They have been successful on Lake Ontario, and at Detroit, on the American side, they have been exceedingly successful, and wherever they have been tried. It is contrary to reason to suppose that, if you throw mil-lions of fry into the water, perfectly alive and well, it will not increase the quantity of fish. It is absurd to imagine that it would not, and it has been proved that these hatcheries have been eminently successful.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. member who has just sat down expresses a strong opinion which, if it were correct, would justify the voting of this money or a larger amount; but 1 am not satisfied that his opinion is a correct one. I would not give my opinion as strongly as he has done his, but I would recall to his recollection and to that of hon. members that the gentleman who was for twenty years the head of the Fishery Department, Commissioner of Fisherics, published an open letter which I read in the newspaper last year, in which he stated that, notwithstanding the enormous sums we had expended in this Dominion for the last twenty years, ranging up to I do not know how many thousand dollars, in his mind the system was a failure. It seemed to me that this would have been an appropriate time for the hon. Minister, if that letter or the conclusions which Mr. Whitcher submitted to the public as his conclusions after twenty years experience were incorrect, or if the data upon which he formed them were incorrect, to explain to the House and the country, who are called upon to vote $30,000 or $40,000 for this purpose, wherein he was incorrect— was it in his data, or in his conclusions, or in his reasoning ? Certainly the country have a right to suppose that a gentleman occupying the position he did for so long, a gentleman supposed to know so much and credited with knowing so much, would, in giving such an opinion, do so with more than ordinary knowledge and with a right to be believed and to have his statements accepted. Perhaps he may have overdrawn it, or he may not; but I think the Minister should have given us not a simple opinion as he did to night, but some reasons for it. As to the question of protecting the fisheries with the overseers; I am inclined to think, and there is no disguising the fact, that, to a very large extent, these men do not do their duty, that the rivers are not protected as they ought to be, that the wardens are afraid to discharge their duty in some instances, and in other instances do not discharge it from other causes, but, as a matter of fact, they do not do it. I would refer the Minister to the fact that, in Prince Edward Island, last year, one man, while discharging his duty, who caught three or four parties in flagrante delicto and tried to arrest them, was so brutally maltreated that he has been a cripple ever since. I believe he has put in some sort of claim to the Minister, and I hope that in order to show the wardens throughout the country that they will be protected in the performance of their duty, his case will be considered. In regard to the hatcheries, my opinion has been very much shaken by Mr. Whitcher's statement, and before Concurrence I would like the Minister to give us some further information upon this subject. Anomore and more into use every day, and some restrictions ther year, at all events, I will not let the vote go by with-should be put upon their use. The pound nets are very un- out making a thorough personal investigation into the question. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) says, because you put so many fish in the river, they must naturally breed. It does not follow at all. In the hatcheries they are fed by hand up to a certain period, and, when they are thrown into the river, they no longer find their food provided for them, and the instinct which nature provides for young fish to seek their own food is to a large extent deadened or lost by the habit incurred in the hatcherics of having their food provided for them, and it is very generally believed that millions of them die because they have lost the instinct of looking for their food.

Mr. DALY. I am a practical fisherman. I enjoy the sport of salmon fishing every spring, and visit most of the rivers in Nova Scotia. 1 have visited Gold river, East river, Salmon river, and the rivers of Halifax county and Lunenburg county. I can bring personal evidence to bear to show that in those rivers where fry are sent from the Bedford Hatchery, the salmon have increased, or have at least held their own. I believe, if the hatchery at Bedford had never been established, the rivers I allude to would have been in a much worse state than they are, and each season shows that those fish that have been put in as fry for three or four years preceding come back to the river and have done good. I quite concur, from my own observation and from fishing in those rivers, in the statement that good has been done by the hatcheries, though not perhaps to the extent we anticipated, but I would be very sorry to see that item left out. The Minister's returns will show that those rivers to which fry have been sent from the hatchery have improved or held their own.

Mr. DAVIES. The returns do not show it.

Mr. SPROULE. In reference to fish hatching I am aware that some years ago Mr. Wilmot deposited a number of young fish in some of the rivers there of a kind that had not been before found in that part of the country. Our experience has been that they have grown and done well. With reference to the Inspectors of Fisheries, it appears to me important either that some more stringent rules were adopted and the inspectors required to carry them out, or else that the system should be entirely abolished. From year to year they draw their salary and give little or no return for it, especially the inspectors of inland fisheries. We have a law forbidding sawdust to be thrown into streams and ferbidding dams from being built across streams to prevent the fish from going up or down; notwithstanding this law and these inspectors, in my part of the country at least, the law is everywhere violated. These men come up once or twice a year and stick up in some public place a copy of the law relating to the catching of fish out of season and that is all you see of them; but when the time comes to draw their pay they are always on hand. Complaints have been made to me by fishermen on the Georgian Bay, that at least one of the inspectors there permits a relative of his directly to infringe the fishery regulations, whereas others have not the same privilege. The fishermen also complain of a system that appears to be in vogue of giving leases to men for certain districts. They say that parties who, for some reason or other, possess a little influence, get leases to fish in certain districts and keep all others out of that district. Another question is in reference to the size of the mesh. I will say nothing about that now, because I believe the rule of the Minister of Marine is in the right direction. So long as the fishermen were allowed constantly to decrease the size of the mesh there, it would soon have resulted in the total destruction of the fisheries. However, the only points upon which I would urge the attention of the Minister are those in reference to the appointment of inspectors, that they should not enabled, with proper care and the best appliances, to be related to men who are directly interested in the busi- fill the deep sea fisheries with fish of all kinds. ness; in giving out licenses, that they should be general I think this is quite sufficient to show-I do not care what licenses, allowing a man to go anywhere he likes to fish; and lastly, as to the inspectors, that they should either be compelled to discharge their duty, or that the whole system should be abolished.

Mr. KAULBACH. I quite agree with my hon. friend who has taken his scat, that we should encourage fish hatcheries, as they are a great aid in re-stocking our rivers. And while encouraging this branch of the fishing industry, we should not be unmindful of the streams themselves, and see that access is had for the fish, and that obstructions such as exists in some of the rivers in my Province, do not prevail from the want of an inspector willing and ready to attend to his duty. I regret being compelled to make this statement; but it is nevertheless true, and simply the centiments of other members besides myself. In my own county there are grievances, and I have heard the same in other countics as well. The Lahave, in the county I have the honour to represent, has been obstructed for years by mill dams which prevent the passage of fish, and by sawdust, which not only destroyed the fish, but impeding the navigation of that beautiful river; and although the inspector has been informed of this crying evil, he will not adopt the proper means of overcoming it. I have reforred to this on a previous occasion, and I hope the hon. Minister will realize the position, and either compel the inspector-whom I view as a public obstructionist to the river fisheries, a statement I think I am correct in, for at all events, he has characterized himself as such on the Lahave-to do his duty, which hitherto he, as an inspector, has been cither too incompetent or unwilling to perform, or perhaps both, or failing that, he be removed altogether, and thereby make room for a better man.

Mr. MOFFAT. The salmon hatchery has been transferred to the river Restigouche for the purpose of re-stocking the rivers, and it is quite right that it should be there. But the greater portion of the fry that is hatched in the hatchery in the Restigouche river is put into that river and at a season of the year when the fry can only be good for trouting; and I can safely say that the treatment the fish frequently receive is cruel to the fish and painful to the observer. You see dead salmon from which spawn have been taken lying on the ground, and the pigs going out and eating them. It may be from the incompetency of the officer, or it may be from the treatment they receive, but I am safe in saying that for the re-stocking of rivers, hatcheries may be necessary, but I do not think it is fair and right that such a valuable fish should be destroyed for the purpose of putting them in there to feed the smaller ones.

Mr. HACKETT. With regard to the question of fishbreeding, a good deal has been said here to night to the effect that it cannot be successfully carried on. Well, whatever may be said on that point, we know that in the United States this question has engaged a great deal of attention, and public men there have arrived at the conclusion that something should be done, not only toward re-stocking the valuable inland fisheries of that country, but also the deep sea fisheries. In 1871, a gentleman of great experience in this matter, Professor Spencer Baird, was appointed by the United States Government to investigate the whole question of the re-stocking of the inland coast and deep sea fisheries of the United States. He undertook that great work, and he finds not only that he could, by scientific means, re-stock the inland fisheries of the country, but he also undertook with great success to re-stock all the depleted coast and deep sea fisherics of that country. Professor Baird is of the opinion that not only can he successfully stock the inland waters of the United States, but he is also

Mr. Whitcher or others may write on the question-that it is of the greatest importance that we should not only restock the depleted fisheries of the inland waters, but that some measures should be adopted for the purpose of improving the coast fisheries of the country. Most of the American fishing is carried on outside of the three-mile limit, and the United States fishermen, under the Treaty of 1818, have the right to fish outside of that limit. If, therefore, the strongest measures were adopted towards the purse seine fishermen, they would still come and seine in the Gulf. The most destructive mode of fishing in the Maritime Provinces is that known as trap fishing. I want to make this distinction: The people round the coast resort to brush weir fishing. They construct weirs along the coast, and these are altogether different from traps, which are machines constructed to gather in and destroy fish, and they are only used at times when the fish resort to the coast to spawn. When you prevent the fish coming to the coast to deposit their eggs, you at once des-troy the fisheries. These fisheries have for a number of years given employment to our people and afforded subsistence to our fishermon and their families. Now, however, these men who resort to legitimate modes of fishing, the gill net and the hook and line, find that capitalists who are able to purchase trap nots are destroying their very means of subsistence. In the very next item of these Estimates, we are asked to grant a subsidy of $150,000 as a bounty to our fishermen. What for? To provide them with boats and gill nets for the purpose of prosecuting the fisheries outside of the coast and round the coast; and while you grant that money as a means of encouraging them, you at the same time allow capitalists from abroad, and especially from the United States, to set trap nets and destroy the valuable fisheries which you vote a subsidy to encourage our people to prosecute. Such course of action is inconsistent. If we wish that our people be encouraged to prosecute the fisheries, which led our people first to settle by the sea, which led Champlain to cross the ocean to this country, we must prevent the prosecution of trap fishing around the coasts of the Dominion. I feel strongly on this point. I know how it is in regard to Prince Elward Island. The Acadian French, who were the first sottlers and who have prosecuted the fisheries for 100 years, found that when they made their valuable fisheries known, United States capitalists came in and set nets round the coast in the coves and bays which are the spawning grounds and are thus depriving the people of the means of prose-cuting the fisheries by which they have provided for them-selves during 100 years. I represent these people, and if it is the desire of the Government, and I know it is their desire, to preserve these fisheries for the people to whom they legitimately and properly belong, they will prevent such apparatus from coming into competition with gill nots and hand line fishing. One of the hon. members for British Columbia (Mr. Baker) has said that the inspector of that Province only received $1,200 a year. I have a complaint to make. We have in Prince Edward Island one of the most able fish inspectors in this country, a gentleman who is not only thoroughly qualified practically, but is also well read in the matter theoretically. This gentleman receives a salary of $800. I think I have a perfect right to make complaint that the Island inspector only receives $800, cspecially when the hon. gentleman from British Columbia declared that the inspector of that Province received the smallest salary of any inspector in the Dominion. The hon. gentleman made a great mistake. I trust the Minister will see that the inspector of Prince Edward Island is paid a fair solary in compensation for the services he so very ably performs.

man has spoken so strongly and warmly on the subject. The protection of the river fisheries is a very important duty which the Government should look carefully after. In the county which I represent there happens to exist the dest river fishery in our Province. I was exceedingly astoniahed that the hon. member for Halifax, who is a sportsman, did not refer to the Margarce. He should know that the Mar. garce is an excellent fishing river, particularly for salmon, and excels any other river in Nova Scotia; and I regret to say that river is hardly as well protected as it should be. It is not only necessary to protect the rivers, but it is also necessary to re-stock them, and I believe the fish-breeding establishment in Nova Scotia has done good service. But besides the inland fisheries, there is another important fishery which requires protection-that is the deep sea fishery. The trap nets, to which the hon member for Prince Edward Island has referred, are very destructive to fish, and I hope that some means will be employed by which the destruction of the fish will be lessand. The fish rise to the surface and are trapped. The fisherman use only a portion of them, and allow the rest to be thrown overboard and thus poison the fishing grounds. There is another unfortunate method which should be discontinued, and that is trawling along the coast. There is one section of my own county in which the people take the law into their own hands. The district of Cheticamp never allowed either their own fishermen or foreign fishermen to set trawle in that section of the country, and the result is that the fisheries there are more productive than in any other part of the Province of Nova Scotia. Wherever they use trawls, or trap nets, or other infernal machines, it is noticed that the fish are going to destruction fast. I have no hesitation in saying that means should be used to protect the fisheries against these appliances.

Mr. McLELAN. I wish to say a few words in reply to remarks which have been made by hon. gentlemen. I am glad to hear the hon. member for Prince County bear testimony to the efficiency of the fish inspector there, and I am equally sorry to hear the hon. member for Lunenburg speak of the inspector for Nova Scotia, and I would suggest that if he has a complaint to make he should make specific charges, and a complete investigation will be made. The hon. member for Restigouche speaks of the manner in which the parent salmon are treated. There may have been such cases from the want of skill on the part of the person manipulating them, but I think that injury done, in that way must be exceptional. I know of cases in which the fish of some of the hatcheries have been marked, and the the fish of some of the natcheries have been marked, and the same fish have been taken there for three or four years, so that little injury must have been done. The hon, member from Queen's, Prince Edward Island, referred to a late officer of the Dopartment, Mr. Whitcher, and to his opinions respecting the results of fish culture. I believe there is not a man in the Dominion of Canada who is a firmer beliaver in the advantages and banefits of fish culture than Mr. Whitcher, How we for benefits of fish culture than Mr. Whitcher. Ho was for a long time an officer of the Department, and faithfully served the Government. I do not want to enter into the particulars of the reasons why he published the letter which he did publish, or for what purpose it was published. But as an evidence upon which I found my views as to his opin-ions of fish culture, I may say that almost the first paper which came to me, after my return from the Fishery Exhibition, was an elaborate report from Mr. Whitcher, prging the purchase of a fish hatchery, which was in the hands of a private gentleman named Mr. Price, since deceased. I shall not say anything more about his motives, which were acknowledged to me at the time.

Mr. McINTYRE. I wish to say a few words with receiving the bounty, at the manner in which it has been distributed; I speak more especially of my own county. am well aware that the bounty which was granted in 1882 was only distributed last fall, and that a large portion has not yot been distributed. I was approached by several fishermen shortly before I left home, who declared to me that they had sent in applications, and had never received any bounty whatever, and they said that several others who had made application had received their bounty. think there is something wrong in regard to the distribution. I may state that it has not been the same even in all the counties of Prince Edward Island. Although the distribution only took place last fall, in King's County, in Prince county it tookplace last spring. At that time there was an election going on for the Local Legislature, and immediately before the election took place a distribution took place for that county. I think it is wrong that the fishery bounty which was to have been used for the benefit of the fishermen should have been used to make votes either one way or the other. Another point to which I direct the attention of the Minister is that when these fishermen make application for the bounty there are no forms to be had. I remember last summer and fall that the fishermen came to the subcollector in the village where I live, and the usual reply was made that he had run out of forms. Another point is that the sub-collector in my village carries on a mercantile business; and I understand that acccording to the regulations of the Customs Department he should not do so. I do not bring this to the attention of the Minister from any personal feeling, but this gentlem an who is in every way capable of acting as sub-collector is in the habit of selling goods, and the first thing which is kept out of the fisherman's bounty are the bills which they owe to this gentleman. I do not think that should be the case.

Mr. McLELAN. What is his name?

Mr. McINTYRE. Michael Foley.

Mr. BOWELL. That is at Souris?

Mr. McINTYRE. Yes, By Order-in-Council last fall the fishermen were directed to send in their claims before the end of 1883. The fishermen complied with that direction, as far as they possibly could; but when they applied for forms, the same objection was made as before-there were no forms; and up to this time there are dozens of fishermen in that section of the country who have not received blank forms, although the time for receiving them has expired. There ought to be a more simple method, it appears to me, of distributing this bounty than the method now pursued. It places too much power in the hands of sub-collectors. A man who has taken the proper amount of fish required, may chaim the bounty, and he is to be put off on one pretext or another. I understand there are instances of some cases of men having been induced to send in claims in order to get the bounty when they had really no right to receive if, not having taken the full quantity of fish required. So far as I could learn, I know of only one case in my section of the country, of a fisherman not having taken a sufficient quantity of fish to entitle him to the bounty and who nevertheless received it. Another matter that bears very heavily on the fishermon of Prince Edward Island is the regulation in rogard to the length of the boat which declares that the length must not be less than fourteen feet keel. This a very great hardship to our fishermen. There is a large section of our coast along which there is no harbor, and the fishermen are consequently obliged to haul their boats every night and every morning, so that they find the boats under fourteen rule too strictly, but I cannot allow the discussion to profeet keel the most convenient. It appears to me that the ceed further.

essential ground for this bounty is the quantity of fish caught; it does not matter whether they are taken on a raft or in a basket, so long as the required quantity is taken. It would be a great misfortune to our fishermen if they were obliged to use boats so large and bulky that they could not handle them. There are not many regular fishermen on that coast; most of them till the soil as well as fish. There is another point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fishcries-a point which affects many other counties as well as my own. Certificates have been rejected sometimes for no other reason that I know of except some informality in filling them. I know of several instances of hardship which have resulted from errors of this kind. I know of one case in which two men were fishing in a boat which was supposed to return 25 cwt. of fish, and they put that quantity down for the boat, when it was really the quantity caught by each. I believe several cases of this kind have occurred. I think it would be an act of generosity on the part of the Minister to inquire into the cases of these people, as most of them are poor, and, if possible, to grant the bounty to those who, from ignorance or the want of some formality in filling up the forms, have forfeited it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings, P. E. I.) I do not altogether agree with my hon. colleague that there should be a simpler method of granting this bounty. On the contrary, I think we ought to restrict the method, because I believe instances have occurred in which people secured the bounty by going to their next neighbour, who might be a justice of the peace, and getting him to give them a certi-ficate. I think every fisher man should be tobliged to go to some sub-collector or officer under his jurisdiction, and make a proper affirmation before he gets the bounty. If that were done, it would prevent a great deal of the fraud which now takes place. It is proper that the fishermon who fish should get the bounty. But it should be seen that those who are not entitled to it should not get it. With respect to the length of boat, I agree to some extent with what the hon. gentleman has said. Our fishermen pursue their work on a coast where there are few harbours, and they have to haul their boats night and morning. Although their boats are small, they carry on deep sca-fishing. I know of several cases of hard-ship in which fishermen have been shut off from the bounty because their boats were only twelve or thirteen feet keel. An hon. member has referred to the sub-collector of Souris; but I venture to say that the Minister of Customs has not a more efficient or faithful officer in his service in any of the Provinces; and if the sub-collector has a small business besides, it is a legitimate one, and does not interfere with his duties as collector. I am satisfied that any returns made under him have been properly carried out, and that he has seen that men making returns for fishery bounties have made a proper affirmation. Now, I wish to impress upon the Minister the absolute necessity of more strictness in regard to the granting of these bounties. I would suggest that some person in each locality-either the Collector of Customs or some one else-should receive a small fee for seeing that the regulations are properly carried out. If that were done, it would prevent much of the fraud that takes place. I have never heard any complaints of blanks running out, and if they did, the sub collector could easily write forms suitable for the purpose.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I must say this discussion is entirely out of order as there is no question before the Committee on which a general question can arise. I allowed the hon. gentlemen to proceed because I did not wish to draw the

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. BOWELL presented a Message from his Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows : -

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1884; and, in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1857, he recomm ends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 31st March, 1881.

Ordered that the Message and Sapplementary Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am informel that these Estimates have been, before being laid on the Table, communicated to certain members of the press. I do not think that is respectful to the House. The members ought to have these Estimates first; they ought not to be given to special favourites of the press. 1 am sure the hon. Minister of Public Works had no hand or part in this, but I desire to protest in the name of the House against the practice which, I think, is very improper.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not aware they have been communicated to any one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will enquire, I think he will find that what I have stated is the case.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2:30 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

IIOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 1st April, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), from the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of this House during the present Session, presented the following as their Fifth Report:—

That as the contracts for the printing and binding of the Official Report of the Debates of this House expire with the work of the present Session, and as the contractors have expressed in writing their willingness to accept an extension of their respective contracts for another Session ou the same terms and conditions, as those of the present contracts; the Committee recommend that the same be extended accordingly.

Mr. MACDONALD_(Kings, P.E.I.)

The Committee have had under consideration the question of the translation of the Official Report of the Debates of this House, and have decided to recommend :

1. That commencing with next Session, with the object of securing the more prompt delivery of the daily French edition, the English proofreader be required to prepare for the use of the translators, a fair copy of the daily sheets of the Debates as revised and corrected by members for the bound edition, and that thereafter the translation be performed from such revised daily sheets.

for m such revised daily sheets. 2. That the chief translator be required to keep a record of the daily work performed by each member of the translating staff, which record shall show the translation performed, and be signed, by each translator and certified to by the chief, and fyled every Saturday with the Clerk of the Committee.

3. That the appointment of Messrs. Bouchard and Lassalle, as additional translators, for the work of the present Session remaining to be done be continued and made permanent.

continued and made permanent. 4 That Mr. A. E. Poirier be appointed as an additional translator and that his appointment date from the commencement of next Session.

5. That, commencing with next Session, the salaries of the trans ators be as follows:-

that in addition to	the work of	translation, the	chief translato and that in addition to the work of translation, the chief translator be required to make the index.

PRIVATE BILLS-EXTENSION OF TIME.

Mr. BEATY moved that the time for receiving Private Bills be extended one day, and that for receiving the reports thereon, five days; and that the notice required by the 6th Rule to be given by Committees prior to consideration of Private Bills be reduced from a week to one day for the remainder of the Session, pursuant to the recommendation of the Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. SCRIVER, in moving that the Second Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament be adopted, said: The first important matter in this report is the recommendation that the Government shall appropriate $2,000 for the purchase of 300 copies of a second edition of the late Dr. Todd's work on "Parliamentary Government." They are now being prepared, and I believe will soon be printed. Another is that Mr. Thayne, who has been employed as an extra clerk since 1879, in preparing a new and revised catalogue, be placed on the permanent staff of the Library at a salary of $1,000. There is also a recommendation "that the Librarian be directed to report at the beginning of each Session to the Committee the names of those persons who have failed to comply with the rules under which they have been permitted to borrow books from the Library; and that the Librarian be au-thorized to renew the tickets of admission to the Library to those only who have complied with the rules." There is also a recommendation with reference to an application that was made for the privilege of copying manuscripts, or rather that they should be sent abroad for the purpose of being copied. With reference to that application, and to settle the matter generally, the Committee adopted the following rule :-

"That, while every facility be given to those who desire to copy mannscripts, under no circumstances are the latter to be removed from the Library."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I doubt whether that report which recommends the appropriation of money is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The report only asks the Government to recommend a certain sum of money. It does not appropriate any money.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is a resolution that the Government be asked to appropriate.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is the recommendation :---

"That the Government be requested to ask for an appropriation of $2,000 for the purpose of purchasing 300 copies"-

Motion agreed to, and Report concurred in.

SUSPENSION OF RULE.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved that the 51st Rule of this House be suspended in so far as it affects the petition of the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:

Bill (No. 131) to amend an Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company.-(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WHITE. (Hastings). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the time of the House for five minutes, and I regret to do so at this stage of the Session, because I know that all members are anxious to get through with the business. In the Committee a few days ago I made a joke with an hon. gentleman, and I regret it. It is reported in the Montreal Herald as follows :-

"Mr. WHITE. They pay me for supporting Bills, and perhaps they do not think you worth paying."

Mr. Speaker, I do not care for the remarks made by the reporter in sending a report to the Herald, but the Montreal Gazette commented on it, and in addition to that there is a long editorial, and then the Hamilton Times said a little on the matter. I believe there was not a single member in the Committee on that day but was satisfied it was only a joke, and that I did not intend to hurt the feelings of the hon. gentleman; and I am sure that the members of this House will believe me when I say that, if there was a particle of truth in it, I would not repeat it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that all the members of the House-and I know it by the laughter with which they have accepted that remark-know that I am cunning enough not to make that open confession and acknowledgment. If I got any advantages from the Grand Trunk Railway or any other company I would know enough to keep my mouth shut. Now, Mr. Speaker, without solicitation from any party, I have received the following telegram :--

"MONTBEAL, 31st March, 1884.

"To JOHN WHITS, M.P.

"Am confined to my house by sickness or would have written you Saturday. You certainly have never sought or received any compensa-tion or consideration in any shape or manner whatsoever from this Company, either in connection with its legislation at Ottawa or any other account. Will send letter to-day.

"Yours truly, "W. WAINRIGHT."

Now, the agent here in Ottawa sends the following :----

"OTTAWA, 31st March, 1884.

" To JOHN WHITS, Esq., M.P.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant, "A. H. TAYLOR, "Agent, G. T. R."

and publish this short telegram and this short letter from the agent here in Ottawa, and that the Hamilton Times, and the Belleville Ontario, will do the same, as they are the only other papers that have referred to this matter. It has been said that I own a foundry, and my brother owns the other half, and that we have received favours from the Grand Trunk Railway; but I say positively from my seat in Parliament that neither directly nor indirectly has the Grand Trunk Railway Company ever carried one pound of freight for me without my paying the outside farthing for doing so. I have never, directly nor indirectly, received, nor have I been offered, from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or any other railway company, anything to promote or assist in any shape or manner any Bills before this honourable House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. gentleman, if he feels that I intended to hinder him at all, will accept my apology when I say that I did not in-tend to do it. I have been told that the hon. gen-tleman has a difficulty with the Grand Trunk Rail-way Company. Well, if he has it is not my business; that is the human of the heat it is not my business; that is the business of the hon. member for Northumber-land (Mr. Mitchell), and I have nothing to do with it. He has a perfect right to find fault with those who oppose their Bills. If there has been any business transaction between them, it is not my duty to interfere. I hope and trust that the hon. members of this House will accept this acknowledgment of the mistake I made, and that they will believe me when I state that the remark was only made by way of a joke. There were some members of the Committee close by me who have known me for a good many years. The hon. members for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) and Halton (Mr. McCraney) know me well. The hon. member for Huntingdon and myself entered this House together, if I mistake not, fourteen years ago; the hon. member for Halton has been in and out with me during that time. I was opposite them in the Committee, and I am satisfied those hon. gentlemen will bear me out in saying that I spoke by way of joke, and I regret I made the joke.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Herald newspaper, or at least its reporter, will have the kindness to give this denial,

Mr. MITCHELL. Although I am the person pointed out by my hon. friend, and the person to whom the remark was made, I must say, that though his words were coupled with rather a slighting remark to myself at the time I was in the Committee, it affords me the greatest pleasure to know that the hon. gentleman spoke in joke. I thought, at the time that the remark was indiscreet, and I hoped the hon. gentleman would have corrected it after he made it; but even at this late day it affords me much pleasure to accept the explanation, and to know that there was no foundation whatever for the charge which has been based upon the remarks the hon. gentleman then made.

Mr. SCRIVER. As the hon. gentleman referred to me, I would simply, say that I was present at the meeting of Committee at which he made the remark to which he has referred, and I certainly understood it, as I believe every member of the Committee present on that occasion understood it, to have been made in a purely jocular sense.

PUBLIC BUSINESS-THE FACTORY BILL.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask whether the Government are in a position to say whether they intend to prosecute the Factory Bill this Session or not. I had supposed it would have been proceeded with early, as we have been told from day to day that it would be taken from day to day. It is a measure to which a good deal of interest attaches on the part of two classes, the manufacturers and the employés, and representations have been made upon it. I have no doubt many hon. gentlemen have suggestions to make; I have myself received some five and twenty suggested amendments, and I would like to know whether it is intended to prosecute that measure or not; if so, I really think it ought to be proceeded with before the very last dying hours of the Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Minister of Finance, who has charge of that Bill, I regret to say, is not here to answer, but he will give an answer to-morrow.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 120) to amend the Weights and Measures Act of 1879.

Motion agreed to; and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. Hon. members who have this Bill will see that I have caused to be reprinted the suggested amendments that have been accepted.

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman I observe has fixed $10 as the minimum penalty. It is possible there may be cases in which weights have become light from wear and tear, and where no moral wrong was committed. Under such circumtances $10 would be a severe penalty.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Experience has shown that light penalties are inoperative, and it is because we found it necessary to increase the penalty that $10 was fixed as the minimum.

On section 4,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is the minimum penalty made $5, while the amount is $10 in the first clause. Under this clause it is not possible for a trader unconsciously to commit an offense, because he must be aware that the law requires all weights and measures to be stamped. The maximum penalty is, however, fixed at $50 instead of $25.

On section 5,

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister explain why he imposes a specific penalty of $40 for forging or counterfeiting stamps used under the Act. In the preceding section there is an elastic provision making the penalty not more than $50 and not less than $5. If the principle of having a fixed penalty is applicable in one case it is applicable in the other.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may say that we have adopted these fines from our experience of the working of the Act, and we have only amended them where amendments have been found necessary. We have not altered every clause of the Act, and I think we had better allow the section to stand as it is.

On section 7,

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the proviso of this clause ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that any time I have attempted to introduce any Bill into this House, I have had more trouble to explain it to the hon. gentleman than any other member of this House. As to the proviso, it is simply, I suppose, because that the scales mentioned there cannot be inspected in any other way.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the meaning of the dormant scales montioned here?

Mr. BLAKE

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose they are scales which cannot be used until they are set up.

On section 10,

Mr. BLAKE. Has there been found some difficulty in recovering fees at present so as to render this special provision necessary ?

Mr. COSTIGAN, Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. It is understood, I see, to imprison a man if he does not pay fees. I can understand a man being imprisoned for not paying forfeitures or penalties, but it seems rather harsh at this time of day to put a man in gaol for not paying fees. I do not remember at the moment of another instance in which the non-payment of fees is punishable by imprisonment in the common gaol.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In that case I would consent to any amendment which would prevent its having that effect.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, then we had better have the amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Perhaps as the only object of the amendment is to include these fees it would be as well to strike out the whole section.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HALL. I have been requested by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), who is absent, to move that to the section 26, the following be added as a subsection:--

"Every hermetically sealed package of canned goods, such as fruit, vegetables, fish and the like, must have the exact weight of the contents of such tin, can, or package, legibly and permanently marked on it; and any packer or other person found guilty of selling such goods in any such tin or package, on which the weight of the contents is not represented as above specified or on which the weight is misrepresented, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $2 for the first offence, and to a penalty of $10 for each subsequent offence, and to se zure and forfeiture of all such tins or packages found on his premises and not marked as hereby required."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Since the introduction of this Bill, I have received several communications, complaining of frauds in connection with the sale of canned fruit and vegetables, owing to cans professing to contain 3 lbs., actually containing only perhaps $2 \text{ or } 2\frac{1}{2}$ lbs., and cans professing to contain 2 lbs. containing perhaps only $\frac{1}{4}$ lbs.; and it has been suggested, in order to meet such cases, that all hermetically sealed packages should contain as much as they profess, for the security of the public. I have no objection to accepting this amendment as clause 10 instead of the one which has been struck out.

Mr. VAIL. Will this provision be confined to goods sold in the country, or will it apply to goods shipped out of the country? It might very seriously affect our export trade in the Lower Provinces, and it should be carefully considered.

Mr. BLAKE. And would the hon. gentleman say whether or not these complaints have been made with reference to home manufactured goods, or to imported goods?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the complaints are more on account of imported goods than the home manufactured.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it the home manufacturers who are making the complaints?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; the complaints come from persons who are not interested in the manufacture of these goods at all. If the clause should affect goods for exportation, the wording of it might be changed. Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman had better not include in the operation of the clause goods for exportation without careful consideration. It would no doubt increase the price of the goods, and as long as the foreign country to which they are sent does not complain, perhaps we had better leave the export trade as free as we can; not that we want to send out false weights, but if there is no weight marked on the cans at all, we had better leave the municipal legislation in the foreign country to regulate the matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The clause might be amended by adding the words, "not to affect such goods for exportation."

Mr. BLAKE. There is just this point that occurs to me at the moment. If there is to be a very minute weighing, it may add considerably to the cost of the article. In the case of many of these hermetically sealed goods I believe it is quite impossible to fill the vessel quite full. The goods are boiled, and a vacuum is created on their cooling. It is impossible, I suppose, to arrange with mathematical accuracy for the precise amount of vacant space. It may, therefore, be impossible to predict the precise weight, to ounces or fractions of ounces, the quantity these small vessels would contain, and unless some margin of an ounce or two were left, the cost of the goods might be increased.

Mr. SPROULE. These goods are usually put up in half pound and pound cans, and so on; and are bought as so many half pound or pound or four pound cans. As they are put up now, they are put up on that principle and are supposed to contain a definite quantity. It would be an advantage to the public to know that they were guaranteed the amount in the can when they bought it for a certain weight.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should be sorry to see any alterations in this clause which would render it inapplicable to the export trade. The alteration proposed is simply this, that we should insist on full and correct measure being given to our own people, but be free, if so inclined, to injure the foreign purchaser. The effect of such a course is evident from the English trade with China, where English goods have been almost driven out of the market in consequence of the untrue, to use the least offensive word, marks on goods to China.

Mr. DAVIES. There is not much danger of fraud in this matter. In the articles of lobster and canned goods, the cans are made of certain sizes supposed to hold one pound or two pounds, or other definite weight, and it is in the interest of the manufacturer himself that the cans should be filled up, because they are put into a boiler and boiled, having a safety valve for the steam to escape, and are afterwards hermetically sealed, so that the manufacturers cannot half fill the can. If this section be enacted, you cannot have a regular stamp to put on the cans because some cans will weigh an ounce more or less than others, and each can, therefore, will have to be weighed and stamped. I do not think the hon. member can give any instance of fraud having been committed with respect to these canned meats, lobster or salmon. The manufacturers are compelled to fill the can right up before boiling, and the cans are marked approximately, as near the weight as possible.

Mr. HALL. Although the motion in amendment is not originally my own, I can state there is great abuse in this respect, certainly as regards canned vegetables which are palmed on the public as half pound or pound tins and often contain very much less than the professed quantity. There can be no difficulty about the amendment. It will only oblige parties canning these goods to exercise more caution in filling the cans, and it is better the cans should be in excess of the weight, and the price raised, than that the public should be compelled to take them at much less than their professed weight. The material is comparatively inexpensive, particularly in the case of vegetables, and the manufacturers will only be put to the trouble of making certain that the quantity that they put in will, after evaporation takes place, give the full weight.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think there will be much difficulty in carrying this out. It will be easy to ascertain the weight of the packages which are made of certain regular sizes, and the dealers in foreign markets will have more confidence in trading with this country when they know to a certainty they will receive the full measure as stamped on the packages.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not think the hon. gentleman can point to any case in which complaint was made in the foreign market that our fish or meats, shipped in hermetically sealed cans, were short in weight. I have had experience here and in London, and know that complaints have been made in regard to salmon, mackerel and lobsters, but I never heard any complaint of their being short in weight. I would suggest that as these complaints are limited to vegetables and fruits, this amendment should be confined to these articles. This canned fish and canned meat business is a ticklish one, already sufficiently handicapped, and if you add on anything which will make it more expensive, great dissatisfaction will be caused. This amendment calls for the exact weight, but it is impossible to get exact weight.

Mr. McLELAN. I have frequently heard complaints that fish exported was deficient in weight. In Nova Scotia that complaint is frequently heard from the foreign ports, and a remedy was adopted in a particular locality by appointing inspectors under the Act to strictly inspect all the fish exported, so that the exact weight marked on each barrel was contained in it. By that means, the standard was raised of the fish in the locality to which I refer. If we have the reputation now of keeping up the weights in cans, it is desirable that we should maintain that reputation and thus hold the market.

Mr. VAIL. There is a great difference between barrels of fish and canned fish. 200 lbs. put in a barrel can be easily weighed, but in case of canned goods a certain allowance must be made for the weight they will lose in the process of canning, and you cannot calculate the weight to a few ounces. Should this clause be enacted, our shippers of canned fish will be in a very different position from the American shippers with whom we have to compete, and a considerable time must elapse before the fact is established that our cans contain the amount professed.

Mr. WELDON. The salmon are put whole in barrels Very few salmon will fill a barrel, and they are put in after being salted. With regard to the canned fish, we know that it is immediately after the fish are caught, and on the fishing grounds, that they put them in cans and hermetically seal them. The cans are all made during the winter, and they are made pretty nearly the size—one pound cans and two pound cans, and it would be utterly impossible to carry out the provision to make them the exact weight. I agree with my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island that the canning business is sufficiently handicapped without having this additional burden put upon it.

Mr. DAVIES. Strike out the word "exact." The definition of that would be down to the fraction of an ounce, and it is impossible in these large canning establishments to carry that out.

Mr. BLAKE. A man would not be safe if he put in more than the weight.

Sir JOHN A, MACDONALD. Make it " not less than."

Mr. WELDON. I would suggest that this had better stand over to be printed, and then it can be added at the third reading. If is a very important matter to the canning industry, which is a very important industry in the Lower Provinces.

Bill, as amended, reported.

PUBLIC ANALYSTS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution :-

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may cause such remuneration as he deems proper to be paid to the Aralysts appointed under the Bill now before the House for the prevention of Adulteration of Food and Drugs, and such remuneration, whether by fees or salary, or in part by both, may be paid to them out of any sums voted by Parliament for the purposes of the said Bill.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into to go up there? Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. The analysts, so far, have been paid at the rate of $300 as a fixed amount from the fund, and that has been supplemented by fees of from $5 to $8 on samples. We do not propose to change that, but we propose to employ a chief analyst, who will be attached to the Department in Ottawa, and will have a larger salary than the others. It is not proposed to give him more than $2,000 or $2,400. Of course he will need to be a gentleman of superior education.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he to have fees too?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not as chief analyst of the Department

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me it would have been more convenient for the House if the hon. gentleman had spread upon this Resolution that he is going to create a new public officer, with a salary of $2,000 or $2,400. That should have been so stated, and the hon. gentleman should have asked for authority for that. At the present, the only authority he takes is authority to employ such an analyst as he thinks proper, and to pay him such prices as he thinks right. As long as the hon. gentleman stated that he was not about to alter the Act in such a way as to increase the burden on the Treasury, the Resolution did not seem to be of much consequence; but if it is to result in a new officer being created, with a substantial salary of this kind, he ought to have that spread upon the paper and so have it confirmed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think it is taking a hasty step at all. The Civil Service Act provides for new appointments.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say it was a hasty step. I was simply showing that the financial proposition-and we are not in Committee discussing the financial propositionought to be stated in such a manner that the House can intelligently deal with it. But a simple proposition that the Government may appoint whom they please and pay them what they please is no practical solution of the question. Is this gentleman to have $2,000, or $2,400, and to be an officer of the Department? Is he to travel about at all and analyze elsewhere, or are samples to be sent from various places here to him for analysis? What is the precise scope of his functions?

Mr. COSTIGAN. As chief analyst his duties will be confined to his office here. We have analysts in all the large centres throughout the Dominion, and the system may be extended. They are paid a sum which cannot be exceeded by the money at our disposal. I do not think this chief analyst will be appointed this present year at all, but this Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

is only to provide for his appointment. The Resolution provides that if appointed, he shall be paid out of money voted by Parliament for that purpose. As to the duties of the officer, he will not be expected to travel through the country. His duties will be performed here in Ottawa. In cases of appeal from analysts all over the country, they may refer to him, and he will guide and advise them in reference to their duties.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then he is not to analyze anything himself?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He may be analyst in a local capacity ; for instance, in the district of Ottawa he will perform the duties of an analyst, and besides that he will be chief analyst over the others.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman says he will be an authority to appeal to. Suppose the analyst in Toronto for analysing food or drinks, wishes to appeal to the chief analyst; are the specimens to be sent down here or is he

Mr. COSTIGAN. The specimens will be sent here.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then what is the use of an analyst at Toronto at all if the specimens are to be sent here? There is nothing in the Resolution respecting the number of analysts the Government may appoint, nor as to their location, nor as to their duties.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The appointment of the chief analyst is the only question we are discussing now. Objection is taken that we are to create a new officer a chief analyst.

Mr. BLAKE. The clause is not confined to appropriating money for the appointment of a chief analyst; it extends the appointment to subordinate officers. It provides that the Government shall have power to appoint any number of analysts at any salaries they please.

Resolution to be reported.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No 114) for the prevention of the Aduteration of Food and Drugs.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a point of order. This Bill contains a certain money clause; it is not in order in con-taining this clause. Under the English Parliamentary practice as under ours, any clause appropriating money must be introduced in the mode prescribed by the Rules of the House. Rule 88 of this House says:

"If any motion be made in the House for any public aid or oharge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be pre-sently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the House shall think fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a Com-mittee of the Whole House before any resolution or vote of the House do pass thereupon."

This Bill is, of course, in order as a Bill. It was not necessary that there should be a preliminary Committee if the money clause had not been made a part of the Bill; but the money clause being made part of the Bill it seems to be quite obvious that the steps which the hon, gentleman has taken in moving to introduce the Bill, in reading it the first time and the second time, there have been proceedings taken, votes and resolutions passed with respect to charges on the people otherwise than according to the forms of the House. The precedent to which I wish to direct your atten-tion Mr. Speaker, and which seems to be quite conclusive, occurred on 14th March, 1878, and is reported in the English Hansard as follows :-

hassett, obtained leave to introduce a Bill for the purchase of Irish railhassett, obtained leave to introduce a Bill for the purchase of Irish rail-ways, he, Mr. Monk, submitted to the judgment of the Speaker whether the hon. gentleman should not have proceeded in Committee of the Whole House, and the decision of the Chair was that the question could not be solved until the Bill was before the House. He found now from a copy of the Bill that it contemplated the purchase of the Irish railways at a very considerable expense to this country. According to the standing order of this House with respect to the application of public money it appeared that this House would receive no petition for any sum relating to public service or proceed upon motion for charge upon the public ex-penditure whether ont, of the consolidated fund or out of money is to be penditure whether out of the consolidated fund or out of moneys to be provided by Parliament unless a consent or recommendation was re-ceived from the Orown. And accordingly if any motion was made in the House for any aid from the public revenue whether out of the con-solidated fund or out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, the con-sideration and debate thereon should not be presently entered upon, but should be adjourned until such further day as the House should think fit, and should then be referred to a Committee of the Whole House before any vote could pass thereon. Now we submit it to the judgment of the right hon, gentleman in the Chair that the hon. member for Galway had taken meither the one course nor the other; he had neither moved in a Com-mitee of the Whole House nor did he produce any evidence of the con-sent of the Crown for any prospective grant of public money for the purchase of the Irish railways. In looking at the Bill it appeared that a certain number of clauses were in italics or in blank as it is called and if the House went into a Committee on this Bill those clauses would be invisible to the eye of Chairman of Committees. But in the Bill it was stated that it was expedient that the Board of Trade should be em-powered to acquire work and maintain these railways in Ireland. He penditure whether out of the consolidated fund or out of moneys to be was stated that it was expedient that the Board of Trade should be empowered to acquire work and maintain these railways in Ireland. He was aware that there was an apparent precedent. In 1874 Lord George Bentinek obtained leave to bring in a Bill to stimulate the prompt and profitable employment of the people by the encouragement of railways in Ireland, and that Bill contained no fewer than eighteen clauses printed in italies, or in other words, blank clauses, authorizing the advancement of £16,000,000 sterling for the purposes of the Bill. He had not been able to find any decision by the Speaker of that day as to the propriety of the Bill being brought in otherwise than in a Committee of the Whole. Lord John Russell said he should not oppose the introduction of the Bill, and then went on to say, 'I understand from the Speaker that in point of form no objection exists to its introduction, provided it does not introduce those money clauses which would require a previous Committee'. That no doubt was apparently a precedent in point; but does not introduce those money clauses which would require a previous Committee' That no doubt was apparently a precedent in point; but then the Bill was brought in under the standing orders of 1847 which differed materially from the standing orders of 1872. In 1847 it was not requisite that any motion for public money should previously receive the consent or recommendation of the Crown. But in 1852 a standing order to that effect was passed, and subsequently in 1866 his right hon. friend the First Commissioner of Works (Mr. Ayrton) moved the two standing orders which now regulates the proceedings of the House. The motion of his right hon. friedd was passed with the innaminous con-sent of the House, and rendered more stringeret the rules with recard to sent of the House, and rendered more stringent the rules with regard to money, bills. The standing orders then adopted not only imposed a restriction upon members of Parliament bringing in money fills, but also Parliament for grants of Parliament bringing in modey ring, but also on their bringing in folls which contemplated a future application to Parliament for grants of public moneys. He submitted therefore the judgment of the right hon. gentleman in the Char that the hon. mem-ber for Galway was not in order in obtaining leave to bring in the Bill, and, subject to that judgment, he would move that the orders of the 5th instant relating to a Bill for the purchase of Irish railways be read and discherged. discharged.

discharged. "Mr. SPEAKER. In answer to the question of the hon. member, I will endeavour to explain the practice of the House in connection with the Standing Orders to which he has now called attention. Whenever a Bill is introduced by which it is intended to authorize a oharge upon the public revenues, it is the practice, as he has stated, to print the money clauses in italics. Such clauses form no part of the Bill as originally brought in. They are treated as blanks. Before any sanction is given to them the Queen's recommendation must be signified, and a Committee of the Whole House consider on a tuture day the resolution is given to them the Queen's recommendation must be signified, and a Committee of the Whole House consider on a future day the resolution authorizing the charge. Unless these proceedings are taken the Chair-man under the Standing Orders will pass over the money clauses wita-out any question. Without such preliminary proceedings the Bill so far as the public money is concerned, is entirely inoperative. The hon. member has called attention to a precedent of a Bill proposed in 1847 for encouraging the construction of railways in Ireland. That no doubt is a 'precedent' in point, to which I will not further advert, as the hon. gentleman has brought it under the notice of the House. But there is another precedent of a very remarkable kind to which I wish to call attention. In 1868 a Sill was introduced to enable. which I wish to call attention. In 1868 a Sill was introduced to enable the Postmaster General to acquire, work and maintain the electric tele-graphs. The clause declaring that the moneys were to be provided by Parliament was printed in italics; and it was not until after the Bill had been read a second time and considered by a Select Committee that a resolution was come to, i a Comittee of the Whole House, authoriz-ing the application of public moneys for the purposes of the Bill. It is for the House and not for me to determine as to the expediency of allow-ing such a Bill as that to which the hon. member has called attention, to be introduced. The Bill is now before the House, and having regard to the precedents I have quoted, I feel myself bound by usage and preced-ent to hold that there has been no infraction of the standing orders or the rules of the House."

The whole theory on which such Bills are introduced is, that is hoped the consent of the House may be obtained, shall be in them but not of them; they are introduced in italies or blank and are considered as not forming any part of the Bill whatever. The House is thus informed of what the hope of the hon. member who introduced the Bill is as to that which will subsequently be inserted in the Bill; but this is merely done for convenience. Why are these clauses introduced in italies or in blank as the phrase of Mr. Speaker is? It is because to introduce them otherwise than in italics or blank would be to provide and to create a charge on the people otherwise than according to the standing rules of Parliament. It is because there may be full opportunity afforded to criticise the proposals that it is provided that a preliminary consideration in Committee shall be necessary. Here you find a Bill which contains these provisions, and which containing them, not in italics, not in brackets, but as an essential part of the Bill, has been read in the ordinary way, on the motion of the hon. gentleman -read the first time, and read the second time, and has not yet gone into the Committee. I am not saying that the Bill should have been initiated by resolution in Committee. There is great latitude on that subject. I suppose the true rule is that when the main object of a Bill, or the proceeding, is a money grant you should initiate it by Committee; but with reference to matters of administration, or anything else, it is not necessary, though it may be possible, though it may not be improper; but in either case unless you have a Committee, and the money clause sanctioned by the Committee in the first place, you cannot get the Bill and the money clauses. all Now, here we have a case in which the hon. gentleman has introduced as part of his Bill a money clause. The hon. gentleman has moved the first reading of the Bill, and it has been carried; he has moved the second reading, and it has been carried; and we have therefore a case in which the result of a vote of the House has been got as to the charge without the preliminary Committee, and if attention had not been called to it I dare say the Bill would have gone through the Committee without that course which is necessary to make the proceeding regular. I submit, therefore, that this money clause is part of the Bill, that the Bill is not regular, inasmuch as no money clause can be regularly introduced into this Bill in this way and under these circumstances, and that the two votes, the vote on the first reading and the vote on the second reading, were taken without any preliminary Committee to authorize it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course if the main object of a Bill is the granting of money, as in the case of the purchase of telegraph lines, and the other Bill which the hon. gentleman mentioned, then of course the Bill must be initiated by resolution, the royal assent must be obtained and the resolutions concurred in in Committee upon which to found the Bill. But when the main object of the Bill is not a grant of money, although there may be an incidental expenditure of public money, it has always been the practice of the Canadian Parliament to introduce these incidental clauses as part of the Bill, and the fact that the Bill is usually printed in blank is merely a practice we have adopted, nothing more. Now, in looking at the British North America Act you will find that the 54th clause only requires that no Bill for the appropriation of public money shall pass unless the assent of the Crown is first obtained, and until the resolutions upon which it is founded, are considered in Committee. The 88th rule provides that no regulation or vote for public aid shall pass until it is first referred to Committee of the Whole. Well, Sir, this is a mere technical form; the printing of a clause in italics, cannot in any way affect the Bill, especially against our uniform practice. This Bill, without reference to its money clause, can be brought to the stage for the convenience of the House these clauses, to which it when the House is called upon to deal with it, and the House can pass the money clauses supported by the resolutions which have been referred to the Committee on the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman when he says it has been our uniform practice. I agree with him-I stated myself the general practice as to the mode in which it should commence according to the object of the Bill, but I maintain that, in many cases, and I presume the practice is-when the proceeding is initiated by Bill in which it was intended to insert a money clause, this clause is either in brackets or italics. That has been our practice; it is the rule of the English Parliament; though I do not say that there may not have been occasions upon which that practice may have been inadvertently departed from; but I think the hon. gentleman is inaccurate in saying that our invariable practice is to introduce these clauses as part of the Bill.

Sir JOHNA, MACDONALD. I have seen cases of clauses introduced in italics, but I think the general practice has been as I have stated.

Mr. BLAKE. I have this to say, that the reason why these clauses are introduced in italics or brackets is simply because of this wholesome fundamental rule to which I have referred, that we cannot have a money vote or a charge on the people except under the 88th rule, which is the same as the English rule. Convenience is consulted by the clauses appearing in a particular way in the Bill, so that you can read them, but the fundamental rule, which is more important than convenience, is observed by their being so placed in the Bill, whether in brackets or italics, that they do not form part of the Bill. In this case we have proceeded with reference to a motion for a charge upon the people without that adjournment to a preliminary Committee which is a salutory provision against hasty and unadvised charges upon the people.

Mr. CARON. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that last Session the Militia Bill was, brought down exactly as this Bill has been brought down and the practice which is being followed to day was followed with regard to that Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order taken by the hon. gentleman, as I understand, is not that the Bill should have originated altogether in Committee, the main object of the Bill not being a charge on the people, but, that there is a money clause in the Bill, which, the hon. gentleman con-tends, is inseparably connected with the Bill, and therefore the Bill should drop, it having been erroneously brought to this stage. The practice and the rule unquestionably require that the money clauses should be considered in Committee of the Whole, and the practice is, that to accomplish this object, without any violation of the Standing Orders, the money clauses are originally introduced in the Bill in italics. The hon. gentleman has referred to a decision given by Speaker Brand, where, he says, these clauses were printed in italics and did not form any part of the Bill, and that the Chairman must pass them by, unless they are first passed in Committee of the Whole, and referred to the Committee on the Bill. Now it seems to me that to say that because these clauses are not printed in italics they should be considered as affecting the whole Bill, would be to allow the printer to cast the whole Bill, and that therefore whether they appear in one kind of type or another, cannot make any difference, whether these amendments are in one kind of type or another can make no difference. I think these clauses are not part of the Bill, and if they came before the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, whether printed in been passed by a preliminary Committee and referred to it is sold by a particular name. If a druggist makes an Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

the Committee on the Bill. I think this is the object: they are only printed in italics to direct the attention of the Chairman and the House to the fact that they are money clauses. I think I am borne out in this contention by the decision given by Speaker Denison in a similar case, in which the discussion was upon the Metropolis Local Management Act Amendment Bill:--

"This Bill was moved by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Speaker was about to propose the question, when an objection was taken by Mr. Roebuck that the right hon. gentleman ought to have begun by moving the Speaker out of the Chair, and then have intro-duced a resolution in Committee authorizing the introduction of such a Bill. This point being discussed, and it appeared that although the ap-Bill. This point being discussed, and it appears i that although the ap-peal was to local resources, a main feature of the Bill was the guarantee on the part of the country of principal and interest of any money raised by the Metropolitan Board of Works. Mr. Speaker said :-- 'Unquestion-ably if its main feature is the guarantee of money raised by loac, it may reach taxation, and the proper form of proceeding would then be by way of resolution in Committee of the whole House.' Mr. Speaker subse-quently said --- 'I have not the leest doubt of the power of the right hon. gentleman to introduce the Bill, and if the clauses referring to the raising of the money were guarded by being passed through a prelim-inary Committee of the Whole House, all that is required by the forms of the House will be accomplished.""

Mr. BLAKE. A preliminary Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. A preliminary Committee. Therefore, I think these clauses ought not to be considered as part of the Bill, and the Chairman of the Committee should pass them by without considering them. It is desirable that they should be printed in italics, in order to call the attention of the Chairman and of the House to the fact that they are money clauses. But I do not think we ought to allow the printer by using one kind of type or another, to cast a Bill, but, as Mr. Speaker Brand said, they are not part of the Bill.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2, sub-section 2, (a)

Mr. BLAKE. As this clause reads, it is impossible to comply with it, because it speaks of drugs being sold by a name recognized in the British or United States Pharmacopæis, and differing from the standard of strength or purity laid down therein. An article may have a name recognized in both countries, but a different standard.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It may agree with either one or the other.

Mr. BLAKE. If the standards differ in any respect, you will be imposing an impossible condition on the drug vendor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The clause might be changed by making it read, "the standard laid down in either."

Mr. BLAKE. In the first paragraph of (a) of the same any difference from the standard is fatal; the second paragraph requires a material difference to be fatal. I do not see why the two sub-sections should not be the same in that respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the word " materially" ought to be out.

Mr. MILLS. The effect of the clause will be to prevent any improvement in the manufacture of a drug. A scientific druggist might be prepared to make material improvements in the production of an article, and the hon. gentleman proposes to make it an offence to make a better article than that indicated in the Pharmacopœia.

improvement, all he has to do is to put on the phial a special name.

Mr. MILLS. Take the manufacture of quinine, almost every different establishment produces a different article through its own way of manufacturing. The improvements in its manufacture would, according to the view of the hon. gentleman, necessitate a change in the name.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what is done at present, because as soon as they change the chemical constituents they change the name; that is required to be done to make it intelligent to the profession. Proof spirit, for instance, are equal parts of spirits and water, but it is made above proof or below proof and sold under another name.

Mr. BLAKE. On the top of page two, the first sub-section is as follows :-

" If any substance has been mixed with it, so as to reduce or lower or injurioasly affect its quality and strength."

This would extend to the admixture of chickory in coffee.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is qualified by (c) in sub section 2.

Mr. BLAKE. No, because chickory is not required for the production or preparation of coffee as an article of commerce in a state fit for carriage or consumption.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In order to make a coffee suited to British palates, it may be necessary to mix chickory with it, and in this way it is made an article of commerce. On section 3,

Mr. BLAKE. How many analysts are supposed to be appointed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have analysts now in most of the chief cities, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Halifax and London, and we will need but two or three more.

Mr. MILLS. The whole Bill should be allowed to stand over. I am rather surprised that the colleagues of the hon. gentleman from Quebec, should agree to a measure of this sort, for if there has been any measure before the House this Session which has attacked Provincial rights, this measure is of that character. What is the hon. gentleman proposing to do? He is proposing by this Bill to regulate the diet of the population; he is proposing to interfere with police regulations. Now, matters of this sort-adulteration of food, the selling of bread of light weight, everything of that sort-have been regarded as a matter of police regulation, and, when we look at the English law on the subject, we find this was regarded as a municipal or police power, and the hon. gentleman is proposing to deal here with a question that comes more clearly within the rule of civil rights, than perhaps any other that has been brought under the attention of this Legislature. I find it is stated by Mr. Cooley, in referring to this class of question, that they belong to the municipal or police power of the Government, and they embrace every relation in the state of society relating to private life. The hon. gentleman might just as well undertake to regulate domestic matters, to say when a child should attain his majority, to say how property shall be inherited or transferred, as to say how property shall be disposed of in a local market. This is not a regulation of trade within the meaning of the Constitution. We know those words have been interpreted both by the Supreme Court of the United States and, under our own Constitution, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; we know that they have said, that the regulation of trade relates to larger questions than this particular class. The Privy Council in one case said, that the Articles of Union between England and Scotland provided that the regulation of trade should be uniform in the two countries, and yet they point out that there are local distinctions, because gentleman considers that the Local Legislatures could pass these do not come within the general definition of a regula | the Bill, and that we ought to pass it because they have tion of trade. This is a regulation of a civil right; it is interfering with the rights of the Provinces, and the hon. gentleman might just as well take charge of all these municipal and local affairs in every town and city of the Dominion, as undertake to deal with this particular question. It is not part of the oriminal law, otherwise we could embrace everything, the whole field of legislation, by simply declaring that this or that particular violation of some rule or provision is in itself a crime. I think it is perfectly obvious that, in dealing with this subject, the hon. gentleman is dealing with a matter of civil rights that pertains to the Provinces and ought never to be brought under the attention of this Legislature, We may go on making encroachments upon the Local Legislatures in this way indefinitely; we may undertake by piecemeal to deprive them of those rights and those powers which by the Constitution have been given them. That seems to be the policy that is adopted at the present time. We have several Bills before us, all dealing with questions of this sort, all undertaking, under some protext or other, to grasp powers that do not belong to this Parliament, but belong to the Local Legislatures, who are much more competent to deal with them and who ought to be allowed to exercise in their own way the powers which are vested in them by the Constitution. It is clear that we have not the power or the right to do what it is proposed that we shall do by this particular Bill.

Mr. BERGIN. Is not adulteration of food and of drugs an offence against the person, an offence against society at large? Is not the result of the adulteration of food and the adulteration of drugs, such as to imperil the life of the individual, who use that food or those drugs, and is it not a crime therefore, and ought not the Government to take such powers as would enable them to discover crime? I really cannot see that there is any force in the argument adduced by the hon. member for Bothwell. I do not believe it is the intention of the Federal Government to be infringing constantly, as the hon. member insinuates, upon the rights of the Provinces. I am sure that he is quite mistaken in supposing that this clause of this proposed Act will have that effect. I am ready to admit that the Local Legislatures could very well pass such an Act as this, but, when they neglect to do it, and it is a matter which involves crime, I think this Parliament ought to attend to it.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman's statement were correct with reference to so much of this Bill as may deal with procedure which is injurious to health-a point which is open to a good deal of discussion—I would point out to him that the Bill goes much further than that. If he will look at the 27th clause, he will find an express provision indicating that the Bill does go further. Sub-section (a) of that clause provides that, "if such adulteration is deemed to be within the meaning of this Act injurious to health," certain penalties follow and sub-section (b) provides that; "if such adulteration is not deemed to be injurious to health," certain other penalties follow. That proves to the hon. gentleman that indeed it was not necessary to cite it to prove to him, because it is proved by many other clauses of the Bill, that it is not based upon any assumed power directed to the preservation of the life of the community in respect of drugs and of food used, which may be injurious to the health. I will give him another instance. I do not suppose it is injurious to drink skimmed milk, but the Bill deals with that. It is no doubt a very wrong and a very immoral practice to sell skimmed milk as unskimmed, but it does not hurt you; and yet the Bill provides a penalty for it, unless you put on the can, in letters so long, it is skimmed, and the skimmed article is asked for. I must say also that, when the hon.

neglected their duty in that respect, he would in fact invoke an assumed jurisdiction on our part in every case-in which a Local Legislature did, as he thinks, neglect its duty. The proper course for him and for myself, as citizens of the Province of Ontario, is to use our franchise and our influence to compel the Local Legislature to do its duty within the sphere of its jurisdiction. but not to say: "You have neglected your duty, and we will pass you by; we will not force you to do it, but we will pass you by, and we will do it here." Else you may find, under that view, a very large and extensive area of jurisdiction assumed here and taken away from the Local Legislature.

Mr. BERGIN. I am afraid the hon. gentleman hardly meets the case as I have put it. I quite admit that skimmed milk may not positively be poisonous, but I think he will admit that it would be a geat deal better if it had the proper quantity of cream with it, if it had not been skimmed.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly.

Mr. BERGIN. And I think the hon, gentleman's arguing ment as regards Ontario possesses a good deal of the skim med mälk quality.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon. member for Bothwell has been good enough to call the attention of Quebec members to the assumed encroachment of the Federal upon the Local Parliament. But, if my memory serves me well, I think the basis upon which that Bill is created was admitted by the former Government, of which he was a part. I remember that an inspector of food and all those things that are sold in the groceries was appointed by the Liberal Government some years ago, and that we have had the report of that inspector every year distributed among the members. So, if we have no authority to go into the shops and investigate, I do not know that we were right then to do what we are trying to do now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This Bill is not one for the protection of the public health, but it is to prevent adulterated articles being sent from one Province to another, or from Canada, as a whole, to a foreign country. Beyond doubt it will come within the category that the hon. gentleman alludes to. As to the skim-milk question, I fancy if the hon. gentleman will look at the law in England he will find that it is considered one of the most serious offences against infants and children in England to pass off milk with too much water in it, and it is treated as a grave offence. A milk-and-water diet does not nourish, but it rather starves, and the mothers and the poor children who think they are getting the pure article sometimes get quite a different thing. Chalk and water, for instance, have been very extensively used to adulterate milk, the mixture containing, perhaps, a very little sprinkling of milk. Such adulteration is considered to be an offence, not only against morals and society, but an offence of the character of a crime. It is not enough to limit proscription to adulterated articles that won't poison, that won't kill, but we must in clude articles unwholesome in themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. I didn't say adulterated; I spoke simply of skim milk.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MILLS. Before the Committee rose at six o'clock I was setting forth some objections that seemed to me to lie against this measure, on the ground of our jurisdiction. One hon gentleman said that I referred in particular to the members for the Province of Quebec. Well, Sir, my reason members for the Province of Quebec. Well, Sir, my reason for doing that was that by the British North America at all. The hon. gentleman in doing this is giv-Act, with the general consent of Ontario, Nova Scotia and ing a power which is a usual thing to give to Councils. Mr. BLAKE.

New Brunswick, while this Parliament was given jurisdiction to deal with questions of property and civil rights, Quebec was specially protected under that provision of the Constitution. But I specially directed the attention of the hon. members of the Province of Quebec to this matter in order to point out that although they were protected by the Constitution against having the subjects of property and civil rights transferred to the Parliament of Canada, yet by legislation of this sort, by acquiescing in legislation beyond our jurisdiction, the courts would ultimately recognize a course of legislation that was long acquiesced in. This is done in the United States. We know there that where Congress has undertaken to legislate upon a subject that was supposed to lie within the jurisdiction of the States, and the action of Congress has long been acquiesced in, the courts refused to consider the question and to deal with it as if it were raised immediately after such legislation was had. There is no doubt the same rule would prevail here. If the Parliament of Canada should for a series of years legislate upon subjects of this sort and the Legislatures of the Provinces acquiesced in it, and the usurped authority was never brought before the courts, there is no doubt whatever that a court would be reluctant to disturb such legislation. Now I deny altogether the proposition laid down by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) that the Local Legislature, by neglecting to legislate upon a subject in the public interest, loses its right to deal with that particular subject, or by its negligence could transfer to this House a jurisdiction of which it was not seized under the provisions of the Constitution. When we look at the provisions of this Act we find that it comes within the ordinary municipal and police law. The hou, gentleman who has charge of this Bill could not pretend to say that he is legislating on the subject of crime. He is not dealing with a branch of the criminal law. We cannot in this House give ourselves jurisdiction over a subject by declaring something done under it to be a crime, and thus to deal with the whole subject on any such ground; otherwise, we might usurp a large field of legislation that does not belong to us. In the British North America Act, section 92, we find this sub-section :

"The imposition of punishment by fine, penalty or imprisonment for enforcing any law of the Province made in relation to any matter coming within the class of subjects enumerated in this section, shall be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province."

Now, so far as any offence against this law is made a punishable offence, it is not under the criminal law but under a mere police or municipal regulation. We are dealing with a subject that belongs to the Local Legislature and to which, under that particular provision of the Constitution, they have the power to attach any punishment they think proper, in the form of fine or imprisonment. This matter is referred to in a judgement by Mr. Justice Strong in the case of Severn against the Queen. In that case he says :

"The Provincial Legislatures possess authority to legislate in the exercise of what American authorities have conveniently termed the police power-meaning a power to legislate respecting ferries, markets, fares to be charged for vehicles let for hire, the regulation of the retail sale of spirits and liquora, and on a number of other corpected, but indefinite subjects, which, is all countries where the English municipal system or anything resembling it prevails, have been generally regarded and dealt with as subjects of municipal legislation."

Now, this case is a matter of exactly the same sort. When we look at section 6 of this Bill, we find that the Council of any city, town, county, or village, can appoint one or more Inspectors of food and drink. The hon. gentleman proposes here to confer power upon whom? Why, upon the Council of a town or city. Is the Council of a town or city a body created by the Legislature, and deriving its funcThis is a power usually invested in them, and which is vested in every Province of the Dominion. It has been recognized as such and the municipal law governed these questions before Confederation existed. I have here a small work by Justice Cooley, in which he deals with the question of civil rights, as they have been recognized by a series of decisions extending over centuries, rendered by the English common law courts. We find embraced in civil rights, religious liberty, civil liberty and political liberty, the police power and other matters. With respect to these powers, Justice Cooley says:

"The authority to establish for the intercourse of the several members of the body politic with each other those rules of good conduct and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights and to ensure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a corresponding enjoyment by others, is usually spoken of as the authority or power of police."

That is precisely what this measure proposes to deal with. The regulation of trade has never been held by any court in England, so far as I know, to be a regulation of the morals of trade. That is a municipal regulation, not embraced by the definition, regulation of trade, but under the phrase civil rights. The hon. gentleman by this Bill does not propose to regulate trade in the sense in which that expression is used in our Constitution, but he does propose to regulate trade by police regulations, as in the sense in which that expression is used in the municipal law in this country and in England. It is perfectly clear, then, that the hon. gentleman in proposing this Bill is proposing a serious inroad into the rights of the various Provinces. I think there would be no difficulty, if we were to examine the provisious of this Bill, to show that a large part of the powers possessed by the Local Legislatures would be taken away by it. It is not a question simply of convenience; it is not a ques-tion as to which Government or Legislature could deal with the question most efficiently. We are bound to keep in view this fact: that if we denude the Local Legislatures of so much of their power as to seriously diminish their influence, able and competent men will no longer seek to become members of the Provincial Legislatures. It cannot be in the interest of this Parliament or the public at large to make such encroachments on the rights and powers of the Local Legislatures as would impair their usefulness and prevent able and capable men from seeking election and taking part in Provincial affairs. Let me call the attention of the Minister in charge of this Bill to section 8. That section is as follows :--

"If the person having such articles in his possession, or his agent or servant, refuses or fails to admit the officer, or refuses or omits to show all or any of the said articles in his possession, or the place where any such articles are stored, or to permit the officer to inspect the same, or to give any samples thereof, or to furnish the officer with such light or assistance as he requires, when required so to do in pursuance of this Act, he shall be liable to the same penalty as if he knowingly sold or exposed for sale adulterated articles."

This is an attack on legislation in regard to civil rights. do not say that this Parliament might not deal incidentally with the question of civil rights, where it was necessary to the exercise of a power; but this Bill, from the beginning to the end, deals with nothing else. If the Government have power to legislate on this subject, they have power to regulate market fees, to make police regulations for the sale of the ordinary articles brought into market, to regulate the sale of goods on the shelves of every shop, to deal with all those matters, as matters of bargain and sale, which have been recognized heretofore as subjects for police or municipal regulations. The subject of trade and commerce has nothing to do with manufactures. This has been held by the English courts. The manufacture of a particular article, whether it is of an inferior or superior class, does not differ from the growth of an article. You can no more regulate the manufacture of drugs or any other class of articles than you can deal with the 157 these cases you are dealing with property and rights of property, as incident to property, all the and not making any regulation respecting trade. A similar question was dealt with in a recent decision given and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, relating to the Sixth Article of Union between England and Scotland. There is in those articles a declaration that the regulation of trade throughout the United Kingdom shall be uniform, yet the Judicial Committee observed that it had never been held to bind the Parliament of the United Kingdom to make the same local regulations for trade in Scotland as in England, because those local regulations are held to be police laws and not to relate to trade and commerce. The definition given to the words in the British North America Act is similar to that given in in relation to trade and commerce in this article of the Union I do not propose to discuss this question of jurisdiction further at this moment. The same power which the Government claim under the provisions of this Bill would enable them to determine what the status of every professional man in the country should be; to determine on what terms licenses should be granted to practice the medical profession; on what terms license should be granted to act as a chemist or druggist. The Government might, on the same ground, undertake to regulate every profession in the country. It is perfectly obvious that any such attempt at regulation would be an interference with the civil rights of individuals; and they are equally interfering with the civil rights of parties by the provisions contained in this Bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The House will be a little surprised at the speech delivered by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which would have been more consistent if delivered in 1874, when his political friends enacted the law now under discussion. The only difference between that law and the Bill now before the House is this: while the hon. gentleman assumed that the whole power with regard to that question was possessed by the Federal Parliament, we are only trying to make the Bill more workable in the country, and we simply allow the municipalities to co-operate with our officers in carrying it into effect. We are not, therefore, going in the direction of centralization, but in the other direction, for we are giving back to the people what the hon. gentleman took away from them.

Mr. SPROULE. One word with reference to some remarks made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), before six o'clock. He said this principle never had been adopted by the Federal Government of the United States. I find that on the 2nd of March, 1883, an Act was passed by Congress providing for the inspection of tea; another Act passed previous to that time provided for the inspection of coffee, butter, &c. They deal with only a few of these articles, but yet it is an acknowledgment of the principle, and shows that they recognize it as entirely within their jurisdiction. The first Inspection Act passed here was passed in 1873, and it provided for the appointment of inspectors to inspect flour, wheat, and other grains, beef, pork, fish and fish oil, leather, rawhides, petroleum and other articles. Then, I find that on the 29th August, 1873, an Order in Council was passed, I presume, under the superintendence of the late Government.

Mr. MILLS. No; we were not in power then.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. getleman was in power then.

Mr. MILLS. No.

afacture of a particular article, whether it superior class, does not differ from the de. You can no more regulate the manur any other class of articles than you can growth of a particular article. In to map out the districts and appoint inspectors in the various localities, such as are designated here, and I say it is rather strange to find these same parties now contending that we have not the power. It seems almost like the disposition of the hon. member for Bothwell to follow up the opinion which has been attempted to be laid before the people of the country, that there is a disposition on the part of the present Government to interfere with Provincial rights. think if there is any line of subjects on which we are entitled to legislate it is this. In 1876, England recognized the same principle. It has been recognized in the United States by Acts of Congress, and if we acknowledge the principle in the inspection of butter, why not apply it in other articles as well. I find that the Act passed in Congress in March, 1883, is doing a great deal of good, and I am sorry that there is not some provision in this Act, of a like character to one in the American Act, to prevent goods coming into the country unless they are up to a certain standard of purity. We know that a great deal of spurious tea is now coming into this country from the United States, owing to the passing of that Act, and it is sold in packages all over the country by peddlers to farmers and others, who are induced to buy it, not from its value, but from the prizes of one kind and another which are given with it. There seems to be no law to prevent this being done, and it is taking away the legitimate trade of merchants and others who are endeavouring to sell a good article. We all know that a great many of these articles are sold in the country, which are neither conducive to health or the nourishment of the body, and I think it is well that Parliament should put in operation machinery which, if it does not stop the importation of articles unsuitable for food, should at least prevent their being manufactured in this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we had better show that there is no desire on the part of my hon. friend to rob the different Provinces of their rights, but that he is actuated simply by a desire to amend the law which has existed since the 26th of May, 1874. That Act was intended to impose license duties, &c., and to prevent the adulteration of articles of food, drink and drugs. It was an Act passed by the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. The first clause contains a definition, just as this Act contains, of what adulterated food, drink or drugs mean. It goes on to provide that the Government may appoint in each Inland Revenue division one or more analysts of food, just as this Act does. It provides that the adulterated articles are to be seized and destroyed, that the analysts are to report quarterly to the Department. The power is given to these analysts to procure samples of suspected articles in certain ways. There is also a penalty provided in case the person refuses to admit the officer, or to furnish samples. It goes on to provide how the expenses of the analysts may be collected from the person who exposes for sale these adulterated goods. In fact, the whole tenor of the Act of 1874, in spirit, in intention, in purview, in penalty, and in purpose, is just the same as this Act, only this Act, after some years' experience, from 1874 to 1884, amends, in some few particulars, the Act of 1874.

Mr. MILLS. I have just a few observations to make in reply to the hon. gentleman. In the first place, the hon. gentleman was at that time on this side of the House, and I arm inclined to think he did not discharge his duty as well as we are doing at present, or he would have exercised a little more vigilance. In the next place, I never pretended that no mistakes were made up to the present time. The question of jurisdiction, as the hon. gentleman knows, is a difficult question, on which the House is liable to err. But we have now decisions of legal tribunals which enable us to interpret the Constitution, and the hon. gentleman ought inspectors appointed by the councils of these municipalities not to insist on a line of legislation which those decisions show is beyond the jurisdiction of this House.

Mr. SPROULE.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman explain the principle on which power is given to the councils of municipalities to appoint inspectors of food and drugs.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It has been felt that in order to make this Act a success, which should enlist the co-operation of the municipalities in the different parts of the Dominion, in order that it might be carried out with the least possible expense, and that the municipalities should have an interest in carrying it into effect, we simply provide means by which they can give us their help.

Mr. BLAKE. These observations are very important, as they indicate a recognition, by those who bring forward this Bill, that, as my hon. friend has pointed out, it deals with a matter of municipal or police organization. The hon. gentleman not only provides that a municipal council may appoint inspectors, but he gives them powers of prosecution, and provides that the penalties resulting therefrom shall go into their revenues; but, he said, that in order to the effectual prosecution of this Act, he feels it necessary that it should be worked in connection with the municipal machinery. But the municipal machinery and the municipal power are not here, but elsewhere.

Mr. COSTGAN. In some cases the municipalities themselves have been anxious to assist in carrying this Act out; but under the old Act they could not do so.

Mr. MILLS. The observations of the hon. gentleman show that the House, on a former occasion, made a mistake in dealing with a subject that belongs to the Local Legislatures and the municipal authorities, and he insists on con-tinuing that mistake. His present proposition shows that he feels that this power can only be properly exercised by the municipalities, to which it rightly belongs. If he proposes to deal with the question at all, he ought to repeal the law altogther.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then, I understand that the hon. gentleman objects to this Legislature giving power to any city, town, county, or village to aid in appointing the inspectors. Does this Act look like centralizing power here? If the Bill has power to appoint inspectors, and it has exercised that power, then it can give that power to councils, just as it can to individuals. If the council of any city, town, county or village, does not want to exercise the power to appoint inspectors, it need not-that is all. My hon. friend says that this power has been sought for by the municipalities. This Act in no way says that it can only be worked through municipal councils. It merely says that, for convenience sake, they shall have the right to appoint inspectors, if they choose to do it. That seems very reasonable-so reasonable that even if the hon. gentleman did wish to amend the clause, I do not think my hon. friend should agree to do so.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman has failed to apprehend the observations made from this side of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very probably ; they are not intelligible.

Mr. BLAKE. I will try to make them so. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill was asked the reason for this clause. He stated that in order to make the Act successful, it was found necessary to enlist the co-operation of the municipalities; he stated that some of them desired to co operate, but they had not the power. What was said on this side was that the clause which gave the power to the councils of cities, towns, counties or villages, to appoint inspectors, and to require the analyst to analyze, which gave power to prosecute, and provided that the penalties obtained by such prosecution should go into the municipal revenues, was a clause which showed conclusively that the Bill was of that character, in fact, which we say it is, and gives municipal or police powers—which was a confession on the face of the Bill that it was of the local character to which we referred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman understands, and so he does not answer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The argument is no argument at all, and is not worth an answer.

On section 7,

Mr. CASEY. I wish to call attention again to a matter to which I called attention last Session—that is, that neither the old Bill nor this one makes adequate provision for securing an analysis of suspected food or drugs. Under both Bills the initiative must be taken either by an Inland Revenue officer or the municipal inspector. The Inland Revenue officers, it appears, must have instructions from the Department, but the local inspector seems to have the power of acting on his own motion. Neither in the one case nor in the other, however, is there any provision for allowing the purchaser who suspects that which he has bought—

Mr. COSTIGAN. Clause 24 covers that.

Mr. CASEY. At first glance this does seem to meet the objection I was going to raise.

On section 14,

Mr. CASEY. It would be advisable, perhaps, as a proper punishment for those who adulterate food, &c., that a provision be made to publish the names of those found guilty of adulteration. They could be published in the Gazette, or better still, in the local paper.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That would be a matter for regulation.

On section 16,

Mr. MILLS. It does not require a great amount of common sense to show that this clause comes within the municipal law, and has been dealt with as such in almost every municipality in the Dominion, under some by-law or other as a municipal matter.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this copied from some other Act?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; it is a new clause. The adulteration by water has been, considering the extensive use of milk, declared to be injurious to health, because it is as fatal to the infants that use the milk as if it did contain poisonous substances.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not objecting to a clause, in a Bill of this kind, dealing with the adulteration of milk, but the mode in which we are dealing with it is another question; and I ask the hon. gentleman if he took the provisions of this clause from some other law existing in some other country.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is an original clause.

Mr. BLAKE. The provision says if the milk sold comes from an animal fed on unwholesome food. That seems very wide. Would you call distillery swill unwholesome food?

Mr. CASEY. This is a very important point, and it will be left entirely to the analyst to say whether the food is unwholesome or not, but he cannot report what the cow has been fed on from the milk, and I do not think you can lay on him the duty of seeing the cow fed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If it be a question of evidence, the analyst can decide.

Mr. CASEY. In that case, it would be brought to court without the services of the analyst at all, or there should be a consulting veterinary surgeon appointed, to assist the analyst in cases of this kind. If this is allowed, the Department will have to consider what is considered unwholesome food. There are different opinions on this point. For instance, distillery swill—some people contend that it is perfectly wholesome and does not injuriously affect the milk at all, while others say it is very injurious, so that we should have a mass of contradictory opinions. As to the reason urged for including adulterated milk in the Dominion Act, namely that it is poisonous or equally injurious with poisonous food, I do not think it is strong enough. The only ground for legislating against the adulteration of milk with water, or the weakening of it by skimming, is that it is a fraud upon the purchaser—he is not getting what he bargained to get; and I do not know whether that would bring it under our purview or not. The proviso again, making it lawful to sell skimmed milk if it is branded as skimmed milk, I think, will be quite inoperative. I do not think anyone will offer it for sale so branded.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think there is something in the objection of the hon. member for West Elgin as to this clause, because it would give rise to a great deal of difficulty and would be likely to lead to vexatious prosecutions where quarrels arose between neighbours. I would suggest that, instead of the present provision, it should refer to milk of an unwholesome character, and let the analyst judge of the milk itself and not of the food upon which the animal has been fed. The words as they stand at present would give rise to a great deal of trouble, and the object might be gained by saying "milk which is of an unwholesome character," and let the analyst decide whether that is so or not.

Mr. CASEY. Unless the analyst was a medical man, as he would not always be, it would be very hard for him to say whether it was of an unwholesome character or not. I think regulations would have to be framed to say what degree of weakness would be allowed, and what degree of strength would be required, and what ingredients would not be allowed in the milk. It must be made definite in some way or other.

On section 17,

Mr. CASEY. I see the suggestion which I make in regard to milk has been carried out in regard to alcoholic liquors.

Mr. BLAKE. I think this clause, which says that "alcoholic, fermented or other potable liquors, sold or offered or exposed for sale, shall be deemed to have been adulterated in a manner injurious to health, if they are found to contain any of the articles mentioned in the schedule," ought to say "shall be deemed to have been adulterated in a manner which makes them additionally injurious to health," because the clause seems to recognize the fact that if unadulterated they are not injurious to health. I want the Minister to consider that suggestion.

On section 18,

Mr. CASEY. What is the object of exempting certain articles or preparations from the operation of the Act?

Mr. BLAKE. This clause is practically a clause putting the whole operation of the Act as to the subject matters in the control of the Governor in Council, because you can withdraw anything you please from it and put anything you please into it. You may adulterate the Act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is from the old Act.

Mr. BLAKE. We are amending the old Act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is amended also.

Mr. BLAKE. In what respect?

Mr. CASEY. What is the object of giving this power? Why should any article be exempted from the operation of the Act?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman will see that this is a very valuable clause. New articles of focd may be introduced, new poisons or deleterious articles may be foisted upon the public. The 18th clause provides, that " the Governor in Council may, from time to time, declare certain articles or preparations to be exempt from the provisions of this Act, and may add to the schedule to this Act, or may remove from the said schedule any article or ingredient." The next clause says:

"The Department of Inland Revenue shall, from time to time, prepare and publish lists of the articles, mixtures or compounds declared to be exempt from the provisions of this Act, in accordance with the next pre-ceding section, and shall also, from time to time, fix the limits of varia-bility permissible in any article of food, or drug, or compound, the standard of which is not established by any such pharmacopœia or standard work as is hereinbefore mentioned."

I think it is very valuable. Of course, the Department will not act without clear evidence that the article ought to be exempted, without clear evidence that it is harmless, or, on the other hand, clear evidence that a particular compound or food, or drug is deleterious. That is published to all the world. Then Parliament meets a few months afterwards, and that is a check upon any improper conduct of the Department in that regard.

Mr. CASEY. I can see quite well that it is necessary to give the power of changing the schedule of the Act from time to time as to variability and as to the permissibility or non-permissibility of certain ingredients, but that is not what I object to in this clause. This clause provides that the Governor in Council may exempt certain classes of food from the operation of the Act altogether ; that is, he may state that certain classes of food or drugs are not subject to public analysis under this Act, in other words, that the Government may remove the safe guard which is given to the purchaser in regard to certain classes of goods at their pleasure. I do not see why this should be put in the Act. I have asked the Minister what is the reason, and I cannot find out by my own unaided intel-lect. This gives a reference to the schedule, and I do not find any schedule except the one referring to al-coholic liquors. That is the only schedule to the Act, but this clause appears to refer to an extended schedule of a similar nature in regard to other articles of food, and that is a schedule which has not been put in the Act. It cannot be the meaning of this clause that this schedule as to alcoholic liquors is the only one subject to amendment. It must intend to refer to a general schedule of the same nature.

Mr. MILLS. This section is, in fact, a proposition that certain kinds of property shall be held by permission of the Governor in Council and not under law. I can easily understand how the Governor in Council might be given power to seize property imported contrary to the provisions of the law regulating the Customs, but this is a proposal to confiscate property within the country. The Governor in Council is to make regulations, and is to make that an offence which before this Act passes is not an offence.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that the 17th section, which we have passed, declares that "alcoholic, fermented or other potable liquors, sold or offered or exposed for sale, shall be deemed to have been adulterated in a manner injurious to health, if they are found to contain any of the articles mentioned" in this schedule, cocculus indicus, chloride of sodium. copperas, opium, and so forth. Therefore, the hon. gentleman has satisfied himself that the introduction of any of which he asks us to pass the Act. It is proposed to us in this 18th section to give him power, if he pleases, to remove any one of these ingredients from this schedule. He has decided that they are injurious; why should he take power to take them out of the Act?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the clause must be considered distributive. "The Governor in Council may from time to time declare" that such an article should be exempt from the provision of this Act. That is one part. Then he "may add to the schedule of this Act or may remove from the said schedule any article or ingredient, the addition or removal of which is by him deemed necessary in the public interest." There is the schedule. It can only strike out.

Mr. BLAKE. My point is, that if we decide that all the articles or any one article in this schedule is an injurious adulteration, why then should you propose to take power to strike any of them out?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We might find that we were mistaken, and that they were a poison.

Mr. BLAKE. Parliament cannot assume that; it cannot assume that the Governor in Council is wiser than the collective wisdom of Parliament which had determined an article to be injurious.

Mr. SPROULE. If the analysis proves to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that any article is not injurious, then, no doubt, it will be added to the list. If it should be found that other articles not included in this schedule had been used for the purpose of adulteration, then the Governor in Council would require power to add those articles.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Grey is discussing the question as to the power to add, when the objection is as to the power to remove.

Mr. CASEY. The confusion arises from the fact that there are two separate classes of provisions in this clause. It provides, in the first place, that the Government may exempt from the operations of the Act certain articles and preparations; then, that they may declare that certain articles and preparations need not be subject to analysis at all. Therefore, the purchaser shall have no means of enquiring what is the analysis of the articles and preparations. Now, there is some reason in the argument that the Governor in Council ought to have power to add to the schedule from time to time certain other things found to be unwholesome, and I do not know why they should not. There is room for argument that they ought to have power to declare some things to be unwholesome which were at first considered to be wholesome; but in that case the schedule should not be in the Act at all, but the articles should be left at the option of the Governor in Council. Therefore, I move that clause 18 be amended by striking out the words from "declare" to "and may;" so that the clause will read "the Governor in Council may from time to time add to the schedule," &c.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a great deal in the arguments used by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I have spoken to my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill, and he consents that the words "or may remove" in the 24th line, and the words "or removal," in the 25th line, shall be struck out. I would ask my hon. friend not to press or strike out the power given to the Governor in Council to declare certain articles to be exempt from the provisions of this Act; because in the 19th clause you will find that this power may be beneficial, and it can do no harm.

Mr. BLAKE. It is in the direction of freedom.

these articles into alcoholic, potable or other fermented Mr. CASEY. It is in the direction of freedom to the liquors is injurious to health. That is the only theory upon vendor, but it is in the direction of taking away certain rights given to the purchaser. The Act gives to every purchaser the right to have every thing he buys analyzed, and I must press for the striking out of these words. It is a most important amendment to the clause. Whatever might be the intention of the Government in exercising that power, it certainly gives them the power to nullify the whole Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will accept that amendment.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 19,

Mr. BLAKE. You will see that by the 18th clause any change the Governor in Council makes is to be published in the Canada Gozette. Then, in the 19th clause, there is an additional provision which I do not object to, and that is to prepare and publish a list of articles declared to be exempt, so that besides the publication in the Canada Gazette there is to be a departmental publication. But in the second half of that clause there is also provision to fix from time to time the limits of variability permissible in any article of food or drug. There is no provision for publishing that at all, either in the Gazette or otherwise. It is a most important thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are quite right.

Clause amended by adding, "such departmental orders shall be published in the Canada Gazette, and shall take effect at the expiration of thirty days from the date of such publication."

On section 24,

Mr. CASEY. This clause aims at effecting what I stated was desirable some time ago; but it is not as perfect as it should be. I think the purchaser who wishes to have a sample analyzed should take the same steps as the inspector or revenue officer who procures samples for the same purpose, and I have drafted an amendment to that effect. I think this clause should provide that the private prosecutor, as I may call him, should make the same offer as to the verification of sample as the inspector is required to make under section 9, and the burden of proof would not be thrown on him, as to the sale or identity of samples, any more than it is upon the inspector. In that case, the proviso about the burden of proof would not be necessary, while as it is, I am afraid it will be practically inoperative, with regard to the private purchaser, because, generally speaking, he will have no other proof of the sale than his own evidence.

On section 27.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Should not the innocent vendor have recourse upon the manufacturer or compounder for the cost, as well as penalties, in case he proves his innocence? In such cases the manufacturer is primarily responsible, as he is the one who sells the article, and it may be a hardship upon the merchant who handles a great many articles not to have recourse for the cost.

Mr. BLAKE. It does seem rather hard that the vendor should have to pay the cost in such cases. You put on him the burden of proving, first, that he did not know that the article was adulterated, and secondly, that he could not have found it out with reasonable diligence, and if he has accepted that burden and successfully carried it out, you say he shall pay the costs of his lawyer and the costs of the Crown. I think when the hon. gentleman provided that the vendor should be exempt in any respect on proving these two things, he should be exempt altogether.

standard, and knows from whom he purchases them, he will salt is an essential ingredient in any of these liquors, but I not be likely to purchase them from the same manufacturer again. If you make it only applicable to the manufacturer, the provision would be almost useless.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I think that when, as now, the retailer is exempted from the penalties on proving the two things I have mentioned, he should also be exempted from the costs, which may be very serious.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There might be a few cases of hardship of that kind; but the question is, whether it would be wise, in order to relieve such cases, to do away with that liability.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course it will be the desire of the Minister and the Government that these articles should be subjected to a test. I do not know that the Department would willingly relinquish all claims for costs. But supposing a retail merchant became subject to the costs, his recourse should be on the wholesale merchant, and the wholesale merchant should have his redress on the manufacturer. It seems to me that the adulteration should be traced back to the guilty person, and he should bear the costs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that would be the best course. I do not desire to speak with confidence, but it seems to me that if a merchant sells an article which has been adulterated by some one else, he has recourse for the fraud by the general law of the land. But if not, I would ask my hon, friend to consider that well, and to provide for it, if it can be provided 10, in this Act, which I doubt.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If it were provided for in this Act, I think my hon. friend for Bothwell would come out strongly for private rights. But I rather think we had better leave the clause as it is for the present, and my hon. friend will look into it.

Mr. BLAKE. I rather think there is the common law power which the hon. gentleman refers to, and my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) confirms my recollection. If so, it is one of those civil rights which the common law gives, and which the hon. gentleman can neither grant nor take away.

On section 30,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would ask, in case a person having reason to suspect that an adulterated article is being sold, mentions the matter to one of the officers whose duty it shall be to prosecute, is it the understanding that the information given by that person shall be deemed confidential? I suppose it would not be necessary to use the person's name; and it seems to me the Act could be carried out more effectually if the name were not divulged by the officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe, as a matter of departmental practice, both in the Department of Customs and the Department of Inland Revenue, the name of a person giving information is not given up. Under this Act, there is no necessity of giving it up. A party says Mr. so-and-so is selling adulterated tea or sanded sugar; the analyst goes and examines the article; if the sample is all right, it passes, and if it is found to be adulterated the man is punished; and there is no need of giving up the name. That is the ordinary practice.

On the schedule,

Mr. BLAKE. I find that the schedule speaks of "chlo-ride of sodium if in excessive quantity." That is a very Mr. SPROULE. I think you will find that when the vague phrase. Who is to decide whether or not the quan-retail trader accertains that bis goods are not up to the tity is excessive? I do not know whether or not common have read that it is frequently put in beer merely for the purpose of inducing thirst. If it is not essential to the production of these liquors, I would prefer that the words, "if in excessive quantity," should be struck out. The clause as it stands is very vague.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I believe common salt is used.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the argument of the hon. member for West Durham is the best answer that could be given to his captious remark, when I suggested that power ought to be retained to regulate this schedule by the Governor in Council. I suggested that if experience showed certain articles to be required to be used in the manufacture, the Governor in Council ought to have power to add them to the list, but if not needed, to exempt them. The hon, member for West Durham now raises the same objection. He intimates he is not settled in his mind whether these articles are or are not used. As I understand him, he speaks in an indefinite way, as though we were not in possession of the knowledge whether they were or not used for the legitimate manufacture of the articles; if they are not, they ought to be exempt; if they are, or it is found in the future they will require to be, through any improvements in the manufacture, power should be given to add them to the list.

Mr. BLAKE, My argument applied only to common salt, and I did not state that other hon. members were equally ill-informed as I am on the subject. Parliament is legislating on the subject, and we ought all to be well informed before legislating. I was asking for information. I dare say some hon. gentleman connected with the trade could tell us something about it. I am sure the hon. gentleman has a colleague who could tell us at once whether salt is necessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Strike out the words "in an excessive quantity."

Mr. DAVIES. Before the Committee rises, the hon. gentleman will do well to consider the sub-section of section 2, brought to his notice by the hon. member for West Durham. Under it, any man who sells any innocuous mixture, such as coffee and chickory, is liable to a penalty. Chickory is often added to coffee, not for the reason stated in the proviso, but because many people like it, and if a man sells chickory and coffee and proclaims that he does so, he should not be liable to a penalty. That sub-section does not meet the case, and provision should be made to meet it.

Progress reported, Committee to sit again.

The House then again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WELDON. What was the change at St John?

Mr. McLELAN. The services of St. John and Fredericton were combined in the city of St. John, effecting a saving of $1,000.

Mr. WELDON. What is the salary of the gentleman in charge ?

Mr. McLELAN. The same as last year.

Mr. WELDON. What was the saving in making the change and taking the observatory from an efficient man in St. John and putting it in the hands of an inefficient man?

Mr. McLELAN. It was reported that observations were necessary at other points in New Brunswick, and the sum word was all employed under the arrangements then made, Mr. BLAKE.

but a saving was effected by combining certain services in the city of St. John.

Mr. WELDON. What is the saving in St. John?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot give the exact figures—from $500 to $1,000.

Mr. WELDON. The gentleman who had been in charge. there had been for twenty-five years making these observations, and the man who was put in his place was not fit for A man had to be sent from Toronto to instruct him. What was the cost of sending the person from Toronto to instruct the person now in charge ? As regards the gentleman who had previously charge of this observatory, he had been since fifty years taking observations with regard to the weather, in St. John, and his statistics were very valuable. It was a matter in which he was much interested; he did the work most faithfully, and I believe would almost perform it for nothing. The result is, that the service is not so well performed. The proper number of observations are not secured, and I believe the wind diagram is not published at all in St. John. It is published at Fredericton, and that is very valuable, but in St. John, on the Bay of Fundy, it is much more important. I understand that the wind diagrams are published only at Parry Sound, Presqu' Isle, London, Port Stanley, Toronto, Halffax, Fredericton, Sydney and Yarmouth, and that the Government is not satisfied with the way the service is conducted now.

Mr. MoLELAN. The Government is perfectly satisfied with the performance of the work at St. John, and the hon, gentleman has, I think, asked for returns in reference to the expenses of Mr. Gordon's trip to St John, which will be furnished him. The hon, gentleman will observe in the Report that the service at St. John is spoken of as being consolidated, and at a considerable saving of expense. I saw Mr. Gordon not long ago, and he reports that the services have been very well: performed at that place and no complaints have reached me in any way regarding it. Mr. Murdoch was a good officer and performed the service very satisfactory, but it was thought unnecessary to have Mr. Murdoch and Mr. Patterson performing the two separa o services and that it could be well done by one gentleman at a saving of expense,

Mr. WELDON. No application was made, I believe, to Mr. Murdoch, to reduce the expenditure of his office, and at the place where the observations were made by him, great facilities were afforded him, and he was dismissed without any explanation, and without any application to see whether the expense of his office could not be reduced. Mr. Hutchinson really knew nothing about the matter. Did I understand the Minister of Marine to say that it was on the recommendation of Mr. Gordon?

Mr. McLELAN. It was proposed to have observations taken at Sackville as an important point, and a consultation was held with him as to the means by which the funds could be provided for that service, and the suggestion was made that there should be a combination of the two services at St. John, and that in that combination a sufficient saving could be effected to provide for the service at Sackville. I think I overstated the amount of the reduction at St. John. It was not so much as $1,000.

Mr. WELDON. I should doubt very much if it reaches $500. The whole expense, in Mr. Murdoch's time, did not reach $1,000, I think.

159. Grant for Meteorological Observations, including instruments and cost of telegraphing weather warnings$48,000.00

Sir BICHABD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman inform us how many stations have been established in Manitoba and the North-West Tarritories? Mr. BAKER (Victoria). And British Columbia?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And in British Columbia? There is a very large area there which to a very considerable extent, as the hon. gentleman probably knows, has been to the present time a blank, and I believe the American staff have been communicating with the Department here as to the desirability of extending their stations. What has been done in that direction, if anything?

Mr. MoLELAN. Mr. Gordon visited the North-West during last season and made arrangements for the opening of a large number of stations at various points along the Canadian Pacific Eailway, and at other points with which there is telegraphic communication, and he has also made a recommendation that there should be storm-signal stations provided for Lake Superior in connection with the stations he proposes to open—some are already opened—in the North-West, at Rat Portage, Calgary, Prince Albert, Battleford, Touchwood, Rogina, and some other points. Ho proposes to open sufficient stations, and these will be in communication so as to serve storm-signal stations for Lake Superior during the coming year, and they will be in operation in time for the opening of navigation.

Sir RICHARD'CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman -I suppose he has not-any means of communication with any station on Hudson Bay, as yet ?

Mr. McLELAN. No; not yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far north is the furthest meteorological station we possess ?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to give the furthest one north.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I should like to ask the hon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he would not take into serious consideration the establishment of some meteorological station in British Columbia. It is very far west, and I see here there are observatories at Toronto, Kingston and Montreal, all of them comparatively close together. Surely the results obtained must be very, very similar. Now, west of the Rocky Mountains, I think it would be very interesting to scientists generally, and certainly to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, if some meteorological observations were taken in British Columbia. A small vote, say of $500, I think, would accomplish a good deal, and if the hon, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries feels inclined to go $500 better, it will not be despised, but I think a small sum would be well spent in the prosecution of those observations.

Mr. McLELAN. The subject will be considered.

Mr. BLAKE. They do not blow at all out there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They can raise the wind, there without it.

STRAMBOAT INSPECTION.

Mr. DAVIES. I want again to call the Minister's a tention to the necessity of appointing an inspector in Prince Edward Island. The hon, gentleman knows that this very winter there are at least three steamboats now needing large and heavy repairs, and I see by the return he has brought down that Mr. Coker practically acknowledges that his state of health was not such as would enable him to go to the Island, and he produces a certificate from his doctor, saying it was more than his life was worth. I do not blame him at all. I know the passage across to that Island is a very arduous and dangerous passage in winter. But the hon. Minister knows that the steamboats must be repaired during the winter. There can be no satisfactory repaired dore in the summer at all. The boats are now being repaired, and how is it being done? The Steamboat Inspector simply has to relegate his duties to someone else whom he has selected. I have no doubt, from the names of those whom he has selected, that they are very good men, in whom I, at least, have confidence; but still the public at large have not got that security which they ought to have in this respect. The boats are not being inspected by a man who is amenable to the Department and responsible for his inspection; they are being inspected by men who are good enough in themselves, but who are not responsible in the sense of having a position to maintain, and in the sense of being directly responsible to the Minister for their work. Now, that state of things will recur more or less every winter, and it cannot be a matter of much moment to the Department for Mr. Coker to possess this as part of his field. The interests of the public will be better subserved if one inspector is appointed for the Island. The reason is that the Island is separate from the mainland, and the inspector acknowledges that he cannot get there, and he has not been able to get there this winter. The boa's are now being repaired, not by a Government inspector, but by some gentleman to whom he has relegated his duty.

Mr. McLELAN. The appointment of an inspector for the Island will depend very much on the amount of work that is to be done on the Island. Under the present arrangement, the Lloyds have their official inspector there and the owners have him in charge of their boats. Mr. Coker is perfectly satisfied with the inspection that is being done by the official inspector of Lloyds.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman knows the number of boats on the Island. There are three boats carrying passengers and freight from the mainland to the Island, and he knows these boats must be inspected every winter; he knows the gentleman to whom he has referred is as competent a man as is to be found in the Dominion.

Mr. McLELAN. These two boats are undergoing repairs, and the repairs made this winter will serve for a number of years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe the total amount of fees received last year was about $12,000, and that the total expenditure was $16,000. Now, under these circumstances, the hon. Minister ought to give some explanation of the necessity, which does not appear at first sight, for the increase of $3,000 in expenditure. So far as the Public Accounts show there seems to be no necessity whatever for this increase of $3,000, nor did the Minister, in bringing down the vote, state any facts warranting him in demanding $3,000 more.

Mr. MoLELAN. The vote last year did not meet the whole expenditure. If the hon gentleman will look at the returns, for a few years he will find there is still to the credit of this fund a very considerable sum, and that during the period —I forget how many years—the fees for inspection were reduced because the receipts were larger than the expenditure. But, during the past year additional inspectors were appointed, and the number this year is still larger than it was last year. Additional inspectors had to be appointed very lately, in order to overtake all the work, owing to the increased number of boats and the increase in the work of inspecting hulls, machinery and boilers. Should the sum at the credit of this fund be exhausted, it will be necessary to increase the fees for inspection, and to make the receipts equal the expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where are these additional inspectors to be placed? And are they already appointed?

Mr. McLELAN. We have inspectors at St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Manitoba and British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that two gentlemen were employed only nine months, and others for a shorter | that the boilers would be raised and an inspection made at period. But the Minister does not say where the new inspectors will be placed.

Mr. McLELAN. One is appointed for Manitoba; an additional one has been appointed in Ontario, and one is to be appointed in British Columbia. The additional Inspector in Ontario is Mr. Taylor, who only served a portion of the year. Another one has also been appointed for the St. Catharines district. There are fifteen inspectors with a salary of $1,000 and travelling expenses.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) Is this sum of $25,000 to include the inspection of hulls?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. What will be the remuneration to the inspector of hulls in British Columbia? Also the salary of the Inspector of Steamboats in British Columbia?

Mr. McLELAN. The inspector of boilers and machinery is to have $1,200. The inspector of hulls has not yet been appointed.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to impress on the Minister the desirability of having the inspector of hulls distinct from the Inspector of Steamboats. The former should be a man who is a shipwright by trade. The person whom it is intended to appoint as steamboat inspector at the present time, I think I can confidently state, is not a man to be the inspector of hulls. He will make a good inspector of machinery and boilers, but will not do for the inspection of hulls.

Mr. DAVIES. Why is the hon. gentleman asking so large a vote as $25,000, when the expenditure was only $16,000 last year? I see the expenditure has been increasing $1,000 a year for a number of years.

Mr. MoLELAN. The inspectors appointed last year were not paid for the full year, and additional inspectors have been appointed for the coming year. It may even be found necessary to appoint one or two more to overtake all the work and prevent delay in making inspections. We have fifteen officers now.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think the salary of a hull inspector is too low at $1,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a grievance which has arisen in connection with the operation of the inspection laws. The tag Michigan, belonging to the International Wrecking Company, received extensive repairs to her boilers last winter. Inspector Risley was requested by the parties having charge of the repairs to visit the vessel and see if they were being made in accordance with the law. He failed to do so. He came to inspect the vessel in September, and refused to do so because the boilers had not been raised so that he could see beneath them. The repairs had cost several thousands of dollars, and the boilers were in excellent condition. As it was then about the commencement of the wrecking season, it was a matter of great importance to the owners that the vessel should be allowed to proceed to work. The inspector was requested, at all events, to grant permission for the vessel to run until the end of the season, when the inspection could be made, as several weeks would be required to raise the boilers. His refusal to apply the test, although the boilers were in excellent condition, led to the vessel being tied up during the latter part of the wrecking season, which caused great loss to the owners. I wish to ask the Minister whether Inspector Risley's action in this matter was strictly in accordance with the law; whether it was necessary to insist that the vessel's boilers should be raised so as to bring into view the bottom as well as the sides and top; and whether, if the boilers had been proved to be in good condition, he should in this matter. Such has always been the case. The not have given a permit for the vessel to run, on condition the end of the season?

Mr. McLELAN. Without having the papers before me I am not prepared to say that Mr. Risley acted strictly according to the law or not. I suppose, in the hon. gentleman's opinion, he acted too strictly according to the letter of the law, and not in the spirit of it. I dare say the hon. gentleman thinks that the inspector should have not so strictly followed the letter of the law; and perhaps that may be a proper view to take. In the working of a new Act, no doubt there is friction, and occasionally shipowners make complaints; but we are getting the Act gradually to run smoothly, and I hope it will be so worked that, while the law will be fully carried out, the people will have no cause of complaint.

Mr. CHARLTON. This is a case of very great hardship. The loss that resulted to the owners probably amounted to several thousands of dollars. No doubt the vessel's boilers were in excellent condition, and I have reason to suppose that Inspector Risley was fully aware of the fact. Mr. Risley was not without blame, he having declined to visit the vessel when repairs were being made, though he was at a point adjacent at the time. I certainly think this is a case where, if the inspector acted according to the letter of the law, he did not act according to its spirit. It seems to be abourd to refuse to make a test of the boilers when, having been repaired, they were in a better condition than they were years before, and in consequence of the Inspector's action, the vessel lost the best half of the season.

COLLECTION OF REVENUES.

BAILWAYS AND CANALS

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We shall be glad to hear the hon. gentleman's explanation as to the present con-dition of the Intercolonial Railway. I may make one remark, and it is this: I observe always, in addition to the $2,500,000, several hundreds of thousands figure in the capital account for rolling stock for the line. I think, as I have always said, it is high time the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway should be wiped out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman, during his absence from this House, which we all deplored, has forgotten the explanations that have been given. I did flatter myself that I had convinced the hon. gentleman that it was quite proper to add to the capital expenditure for rolling stock so long as you had a correspondingly increased business to provide for. That subject has been very fully discussed in the Committee on various occasions, and I think I succeeded in satisfying hon. gentlemen that the Intercolonial Railway forms no exception to the other railways in the country in that respect; that it is necessary and incumbent on the manager of every railway to keep the rolling stock furnished from capital account in a state of thorough repair and efficiency, not to allow it to run down, but to maintain it in good order; that whenever there is a large increase in the traffic of a road, it is necessary that the increased provision for that traffic should be made from capital account. I proved by evidence, on various occasions -by the Manager of the Grand Trunk, whom the hon. member for Northumberland will accept as a very high authority, the then Manager of the Great Western, and the Manager of the Northern—that rolling stock required for increased business was provided from and charged to capital account; and that all that was incumbent on the management of any railway was to maintain the road in a thorough state of efficiency, and that the rolling stock provided from capital account should not be allowed to run down. That will have to be accepted, I think, as the correct procedure expenditure on rolling stock, in 1874, up to 30th June, charged to capital account, was $2,640,427. In 1874-75 there was added to that to meet the increased or four years. But there is no doubt about it-I am not business, charged to capital account, $583,904; in 1875-76, $141,384; in 1876-77, $316,552; in 1877-78, $125,245; in 1878 79, there was no increased charge; in 1879-80, $19,995 and these figures indicate the fact that there was no increased business, comparatively, to provide for. In 1881, the increased charge to capital account was $224,920; in 1881-82, $358,859; in 1882-53, $628,244; and from the 30th of June, 1883, to the 31st December, the charge to capital account was $236,109, making a total to the present time, from the first, of $5,275,442. I draw attention to the fact that an examination of these figures, and of the figures which indicate an increased volume of traffic, will show at once that the amount charged to capital account to provide for the increased business was not in excess of the business

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Was not a large amount, in 1874-85, for steel rails?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I dare say there was a certain amount of it. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to a statement of the increased business, which will show at a glance that the demand for increased rolling stock charged to capital account has not been at all in excess of the business. The earnings amounted, during the last fiscal year, to $2,370,921, which was an increase over the preceding year of $291,658, and exceeded the earnings of 1879-80 by no less than $864,622. Any person acquainted, as the hon. gentleman from St. John is, with the operation of railways, knows that you cannot have any such increased earnings without having a very large increase in the volume of traffic. The number of tons moved in 1882-83, was 974,-961, or 132,005 tons more than during the preceding year, or 409,037 tons more than in 1879-80. The number of passengers during the past year was 878,600, against 779,994 during the preceding year, or 581,483 in 1879-80, or an increase in three years of 297,117 passengers. I think I have only to refer to these figures to show, at a glance, the necessary demand for increased rolling stock to carry on a business of that kind.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Does that include the Prince Edward Island Railway?

Sir CIIARLES TUPPER. No; we treat them separately in taking the estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, we can quite understand that, from time to time, as the road is completed and gets in working order, it ought to be expected to increase in business. With respect to some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman, however, I may say that during 1874 75-76, and if I recollect aright, a part, at any rate, of 1877, that road was being actually constructed, in large part. I think it was not fully completed until 1877, if my memory serves.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The fact is, it is not quite completed yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I see, to our sorrow; because the hon. gentleman spent $1,000,000 odd on capital account in 1883. But what I mean is this, that no fair comparison can be made between the years when the railway is in process of construction, when it is not completed, and when, as a matter of course, a large amount of rolling stock is most properly charged to capital. I have never objected at all to charges to rolling stock rendered necessary by the building of 100, or 200 or 300 miles of additional road. That would be quite fair and reasonable, but I have pointed out, over and over again—and in point of fact, we had come to the conclusion, in 1878, to stop the capital account altogether. It may be sometimes a fair thing to spread the expenditure for rolling stock over two, or three, improvements, and that all the other Pullman cars shall be going to say, in the present instance, that the thing has been done-if you go on keeping the capital account open for rolling stock all the time, there is a great temptation, and in some instances a great liability, to sums which should properly be charged to revenue account being charged to capital account. It makes things look pleasant; it gives a surplus when none exists, and in 1883, I see that $668,000 were charged for rolling stock to capital account. Well, it is no doubt true there has been an increase in the quantity of goods carried, an increase in the number of passengers, and an increase in the receipts, but I submit that $668,000 appears, prima facie, to be more than the increase which the hon. gentleman named would warrant, and it cortainly is open to the risk I have pointed out. If this abount he always open it is exceedingly convenient to put large charges for rolling stock to that account, and we really cannot tell whether the road is paying its way or not, so long as that item remains open.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hop. gentleman will see that I was not resting my case on a comparison between the years 1876-77. I was taking the last three years as an indi-cation of the impossibility of providing for the businessfortunately the increased business-of the road, without having a large increased charge to capital account for traffic. If you take the years 1876-77, you will find that the number of tons carried on the Intercolonial Railway for those years was 421,327. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman how I am to move 970,961 tons of freight in 1852-83, with the rolling stock which would be sufficient for 421,327 tons in 1877. The thing is perfectly impossible. You cannot, if you have merely rolling stock enough to handle your traffic, handle the largely increased traffic of last year-a traffic which is $291,000 over the traffic of the previous year-you could provide for no such increased business as that without having a large increased amount of rolling stock; and I say the manager of a railway is bound to keep, in a thorough state of efficiency and repair, all the rolling stock he has put on the road by capital account. In 1876 there were 100 locomotives on the Intercolonial Railway. Since that time there have been added thirtyfive, which are charged to capital account. So, all the rolling stock will be found to be in proportion to the amount of the business of the road. Of those 100 locomotives, a large number have been worn out and have gone to the scrap heap, and have been replaced by revenue account. I am quite certain that every member of this Committee will be only too glad to have a demand made for increased rolling stock if it is required to handle increased business.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Last year I think the hon. Minister stated that the contract with the Pullman Car Company would expire some time this year. Has he renewed that contract; if so, on what terms?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The service of the Pullman Car Company has not been at all satisfactory. The Paltman cars on the Intercolonial Railway have been below the present standard-have not had the conveniences and comforts of the more modern ones; and the question arose, as the contract terminated this year, as to what arrangements we should make for the future. We have entered into a provisional arrangement, under which that coutract will terminate in August, 1885, the date at which the contract between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Pullman Car Company terminates. We made that arrangement because we think it very important we should have a through Pull-man service, in connection with the Grand Trunk Bailway, between Halifax or St. John and Montreal. We have put the contract on much more favourable terms for the Government than before. It is provided that the Company shall put on two first class additional cars, with all the modern sent to our shops to be modernized at the expense of the Pullman Car Company. So that we shall have a greatly improved service in the meantime, and in August, 1885, when the contract with the Grand Trunk terminates we hope to make better arrangements for the service. It is also provided that at that time, after all these cars have been put in first-class condition, we may take over the Pullman stock on the road at its actual cash value at that time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the present arrangement for the conveyance of wheat to Halifax?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry to say that the comparative failure of the wheat crop in Ontario last year rendered it not a matter of very much consequence what the rate should be, as it has been found impracticable to obtain any large amount of grain during the present year. I believe the rates have been comparatively experimental.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my recollection is correct, the charge from Rivière du Loup to Halifax is between three and four cents per bushel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Stairs), who has been shipping grain over the Intercolonial Railway, tells me that it was six cents per 100 lbs. from Chaudière Junction to Halifax.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Grand Trunk Railway carry freight at a proportionate rate between Montreal and the Chaudière?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been no definite settlement of a permanent rate; but the Grand Trunk Railway has been extremely accommodating in giving a very low rate over that portion of its line, with the view of encouraging the shipment of grain at Halifax.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad to hear that it has been disposed to encourage trade in that portion of the Dominion.

Mr. VAIL. It has been reported that the Allan Steamship Company have exceptional advantages for the shipment of their freight over the Intercolonial Railway. Is that the case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Practically, the Allan Company and the Dominion Company are upon a par in that respect. They are the principal lines that come to Halifax, and regular lines of steamships coming there, that give regular quantities of freight to the Intercolonial Railway, have a lower rate than those that may come at irregular and uncertain periods. We attach great importance, of course, to preventing freight for Toronto and Montreal going by way of Portland and Boston, and with that object, have made as low a through rate as we possibly could; and I am glad to be able to say that we have been able to give such prompt dispatch, owing to the efficient condition of the road, as to enable us to compete very successfully with either Portland or Boston tor through freight going to Montreal or Toronto.

Mr. VAIL. Is that a permanent arrangement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has been in existence for the last year or two. There is no permanent arrangement beyond the present year.

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman say what, if any, special rates have been arranged for the carrying of coal from the Spring Hill Mines to Montreal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Where large quantities are carried, the rate is a low one; I do not, at this moment, remember the exact figures, but I know that coal is carried at a very low rate.

Mr. DAVIES. Is it under $1 per ton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, certainly not. Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. DAVIES. Is the carriage of coal from Spring Hill Mines to Montreal, or as far as the Intercolonial carries, under $1?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. There is a return moved for, and I wrote a note to Mr. Schreiber asking him to have that return brought down at once.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You do not appear to expect any considerable increase of trade on the Intercolonial; that is to say, the vote asked for is precisely the same as last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the same; but I think the Supplementary Estimates for 1884-85 will contain something.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is anything in the Supplementary Estimates for the present year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps they will contain a provision for an increased number of coal cars. I am told the Spring Hill Company are prepared for a great increase in the output and have made large contracts in Montreal for the delivery of coal, so that we will have to ask for some additional cars for that work. We hardly expect so great an increase in the traffic as last year has shown. I do not think we can reasonably expect that to be maintained during the present year. I do not expect to have to ask for any material increase in the rolling stock, except to have provision for additional coal cars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is the working expenses, and there is nothing expressly put down for the maintenance of the rolling stock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All the maintenance is included in this service. Locomotive power, $630,000; average expenses, $540,000; maintenance of way, $600,000. The grant for locomotive power includes the keeping of the locomotives in a state of efficiency. The car expenses include the cars now there. Station and train expenses, $300,000; general charges, $210,000.

Mr. DAVIES. Early in the Session I moved for a return showing the comparative wages of the employees on the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, but have not yet obtained it. I intended, if I had possession of it, to use it, with a view to inducing the hon. member to make better arrangements for these employees. While there is every reason that the principal employees on the Prince Edward Island road should not be paid anything like the sum they are paid on the Intercolonial, because their responsibility and work is much less, there is no reason why the men who are at manual labour should be paid on a different scale. A great discrepancy exists between the wages pail them and those paid at Moncton ; and the consequence is, that the best men are drawn away from the Island. The hon. gentleman gave as his reason for this discrepancy that the Prince Edward Island Railway does not pay, but that is no reason why these men should not be paid fair wages. The working expenses of the Intercolonial are $2,809 per mile and those of the Prince Edward Island road only $1,337 per mile; or the Intercolonial Railway is more than double the Prince Edward Island road. True, the receipts of the Prince Edward Island road are not large enough to pay expenses, but that is not a reason why the workmen should not be paid fair wages. I think the hon. Minister has not given this question the consideration he ought to give it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must join issue with the hon. gentleman in toto on this question. I am very sorry I have not been able to bring down the report asked for, but the Department has had to communicate with Moneton and Prince Edward Island before it can get the documents necessary to make the return. The papers are not necessary for the discussion, for I concede all the hon. gentleman claims. I concede that the employees of the Prince Edward Island are considerably below those of the Intercolonial Railway, but I deny that because the Prince Edward Island Railway does not pay is no reason why the men should not obtain pay the same as if it did. The hon. gentleman is unsound in his premises. What is the Grand Trunk Railway doing at this moment? What is the reason that Mr. Hickson has issued a document to make a large reduction in the pay of the employees? Their responsibility is as great and their duties as onerous as before; perhaps there never was a time, in the history of the Grand Trunk Railway, when every person had to labour to live in Moncton. with such assiduity and energy in order to grapple with the unusual difficulties, through the quantity of snow this winter. And yet, notwithstanding that, we find they are told that they must submit to a reduction in pay. Why? Because there is a reduction in the returns, because the receipts have fallen off. Why, the hon. gentleman knows that all the manufacturing industries in Great Britain, all the manufacturing industries in this country, are susceptible of the same thing. When things are prosperous, when the institution is paying, they pay the employees better. When there is a glut in the manufactured articles, when they cannot get sales, they reduce the pay and they reduce the time of the employees, and they tell the employé, whose family requires just as much bread, that he cannot have more than three days' work in the week. What principle is there which applies to other railways, which applies to great institutions like the Grand Trunk Railway, which applies to other industries in the country, that does not apply to the Prince Edward Island Railway? It is the same thing precisely. What did I do with the Intercolonial Railway? When I had to meet Parliament with the statement that we had to tax the people of this country $500,000 per annum to meet working expenses on that road, I reduced the wages of the employees from the highest to the lowest, and told them that the moment the accounts could balance, the moment the road could pay its way without taxing the people of this country, I would be only too glad to restore them. And I am only too glad to be able to say that three years ago I found we could balance the account, and that the balance, though small, was on the right side of the ledger, and it has been annually increasing, and we can maintain it. But that is not the condition of the Prince Edward Island Railway. There is no place in the civilized world where the people of the country have rail way facilities afforded them to the extent they have on Prince Edward Island. Why? Because no company would continue to run a railway under the circumstances of having to pay $100,000 per annum to do the work of the country, with a small population They have more railway in proportion to their population and in proportion to the size of the country, and they have the work done and performed at the cost of the rest of the people of this country. I say that under the circumstances, their responsibilities being altogether inferior, the amount of the duties they perform being altogether inferior to those that are performed on the Intercolonial Railway, they have no ground to demand that I should pay them any more, while the state of the account is in that condition, than is absolutely necessary to secure the proper and efficient performance of the service. I do pay all that is required, in order to get all the employees that are necessary, and to get the service performed vigorously and efficiently; and having done that, I do not feel that, com ing to Parliament as I am obliged to come, year after year to ask that out of the taxes of the people of this country that road should continue to be operated. I am in a position to go on increasing the wages beyond what I find is necessary to get the work efficiently done. It is very agreeable to the hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, to be able to pose here ation is very much larger.

as the advocate of the workingman, to be able to confront me and the Government, as the hard oppressive, grinding taskmasters of the poor people of Prince Edward Island. I have no doubt he will make a good deal of capital out of it, but he will make it on unsound premises, that I am sure cannot be sustained in this House. I pledge myself to the hon. gentleman to-night, as I pledged myself formerly to the employees of the Intercolonial Railway, that the moment we can balance the account on the Prince Edward Island Railway, as we have on the Intercolonial Railway, I will consider, with the greatest pleasure, the increase of the wages of the employees. Then there is another point. It is not so expensive to live on Prince Edward Island as it is to live in Moncton.

Mr. DAVIES. Just as expensive, and more so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask him what the cost of the products of the farm is in Prince Edward Island, and to compare that with the cost in Monoton. There is a very essential difference. Living is less costly, and you can obtain labour of every kind at a lower rate in Prince Edward Island than you can in Nova Scotia or in New Brunswick. Under the circumstances, I do not think the hon. gentleman has established a case for increasing the deficit between the earnings and the expenses of the Island railway by increasing the wages of the employees over and above that which I find necessary in order to secure the services of thoroughly efficient and good men in every department.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman does me an injustice in imagining that I raise this for the purpose of making political capital. I can assure him that I never mentioned this subject at all at any public meeting in Prince Edward Island. I have mentioned it in Parliament alone, where I thought it my duty to do it, and I do not see that there is any political capital to be made out of it, unless the case justifies it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me. I desire to say just one word before I forget it. He says employees are not allowed to complain. No statement could be more unfounded. There is scarcely a day on which I do not receive letters from the humblest employees of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, asking for an increase of payment; and I am able to say, at this moment, that no employé was ever, to my knowledge placed at the slightest disadvantage by the fact of his stating in the strongest and most impressive manner the grounds on which he claimed an increased payment. A'l these letters are received and considered; every one of them comes before myself, and they are all dealt with and decided upon in relation to a principle of what is considered fair and just; and I am happy to be able to assure the hon. gentleman that his impression that the employees are placed at a disadvantage who complain of the inadequacy of their remuneration, is entirely without foundation.

Mr. DAVIES. I am glad to have the assurance of the hon. gentleman that that is the fact at present, because I know that not very long ago a circular was issued to that effect, whether from the Department in Ottawa or the superintendent of the road I am not aware, prohibiting the making of these complaints: but that is neither here nor there, as to the justice or injustice of the claim they prefor. He has based his argument that it is fair to discriminate between the wages of the employces on the Intercolonial and those on the Prince Edward Island Railway, on the ground, first, that the cost of living in Moneton is greater than the cost of living in Charlottetown. Where did he get his information? I can assure him it is not the fact. The cost of living in Charlottetown, I do not hesitate to say, is greater than in Moneton. The civio taxation is very much larger. Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do they not make extensive contracts in Prince Edward Island, for potatoes at 18 cents a bushel?

Mr. DAVIES. The hon, gentleman is talking about contracts made in the remote parts of Prince Edward Island, where factories are established for the purpose of making starch out of potatoes, and that is a very special thing. These starch manufacturers take the large and small potatoes just as they come from the field, and then they do pay 18 cents a bushel. But, if he wants to buy potatoes in Charlottetown, as a workman living there, and fancies he will bay them there for 18 cents a bushel, he never was more mistaken. I have lived in Charlottetown all my life, and I know that the expense has been increasing every year; and I believe firmly that there is no part of the Dominion where the cost of living is more expensive than it is in Charlottetown. Therefore, I say the idea the hon. gentleman possesses is very incorrect, and the conclusion he draws is incorrect too. As to the rate of wages, he says there is a general reduction all over the world, and they must be content to have their wages reduced, and that the Grand Trunk Railway has been reducing the wages of its workmen. But that does not apply at all. If it does, it should apply to the Intercolonial as well as to the Prince Edward Island road. It does not apply to the Intercolonial, and while it may be very well for the Grand Trunk Railway to reduce wages all along their line, he is applying his rule between particular portions of the Government railways. Both these railways are worked by the Government and the workmen do the same amount of work on the Island railway as these at Moncton, and should receive the same wages.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not reducing their wages.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman was arguing that because there was a general reduction all over the world they should not complain. If there is anything in that argument, he should apply it to the Intercolonial as well as to the Prince Edward Island Railway. Here are two Government railways. He divides them into two parts. There are many parts of the Intercolonial, which, if separated from the other parts, would not pay, if you kept a special account. You take the Intercolonial Railway as a whole and you ought to take all the Government railways together, and the same rule that applies to the workmen on one road should apply to those on the other. So far as the argument about responsibility is concerned, I do not ask that those who have greater responsibilities on the Intercolonial Railway should not receive higher wages than those on the Prince Edward Island road. That argument is a good one when applied to the superior officers, 1 acknowledge. I did not contend that the superintendent of the Island road should receive the same salary as the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway; that the accountant who does only one-third as much work, on the Island railway, should receive the same pay as the accountant on the Intercolonial Railway. But when you come down to the lower grades of men, who do the same amount of labour on the Island road that is done by the same class on the Intercolonial Railway, it is unjust and unfair to discriminate between them, and pay one man less than you do the other for the same work. I confine it simply to the same class of workmen on both roads, and I have not heard the hon. gentleman give any reason which justifies the enormous discrepancy that exists between the men of the same class on these two roads.

Mr. HESSON. That is enough.

Mr. DAVIES. Now, let the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) just hold his tongue a moment. I have a right to bring this grievance before the House, and discuss it with the Minister of Railways, who will call me to Mr. DAVIES.

order if I am out of order. I am not going to be stopped by the hon. member for North Perth. He knows mething about the circumstances, and he had better wait to express his opinion on a subject that he knows something about.

Mr. HESSON. You have been telling us about it for a long time.

Mr. DAVIES. Then there are the conductors on the Prince Edward Island road who receive a much lower salary than conductors on the Intercolonial Railway. Lay here is a further injustice. The Prince Edward Island conductor has no hope of promotion. He remains on the little Island railway for ever with a smaller salary, while on the Intercolonial Railway there is hope of promotion, and the officers rise gradually from year to year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We sometimes bring the Island conductors over to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. DAVIE². Not often. I do not know an instance of it at present, though there may be some. I wish the hon gentleman would take that course and bring efficient and active men from the Island to the Intercolonial Railway, as that would remove the grievance, to some ittle extent. The hon gentleman knows that some of the best conductors on the Island railway were going to leave altogether about a year ago, and he had to pay higher wages to keep them. When the comparative returns come down, I can establish all my statements.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. member for North Perth knows nothing about this case, although the hon. gentleman has occupied fully an hour in the debate this evening, endeavouring to give information to the members of this House, and still he says we do not know anything about it. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about himself.

Mr. DAVIES. I rise to a point of order. The complaint I make is, that the hon. gentleman made such a noise when I was speaking that I could not make myself heard by the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not a point of order; that is a point of disorder.

Mr. HESSON. The hon, gentleman is wrong again. He has been endeavouring to enlighten the House for a long time upon a point that we could easily appreciate in five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. The hon, gentleman seems to have constituted himself the censor of the Honse, to determine how long my hon. friend, or any one on this side, has a right to speak.

Mr. HESSON. I determine to express my own views. I am responsible for the views I express here, and I am determined to express them. I say the hon gentleman has occupied so much of the time of the House that he must not complain if there is a little impatience exhibited by hon. gentlemen on this side.

Mr. HACKETT. The employees of the Prince Edward Island Railway have no reason to complain of the treatment they have received from the Minister of Railways. It is true their wages are lower than those paid on the Intercolonial Railway, but I think the Minister has endeavoured, to the best of his ability, to carry out the principle that men should be rewarded according to the labour they perform. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has stated that a great discrepancy exists between the wages paid on the two roads. It is true that conductors on the Island railway have not received the same compensation as those on the Intercolonial Railway, but the Minister has explained that they do not perform the same labour, and have not as great responsibilities. I must say that the conductors on the Island railway are as good men as can be found in this country; I think they are fully competent to assume the responsibilities of conductors on any railway in Lanada.

and I hope the Minister will give them a chance to improve I the next year? How does he find the improvements are their condition. The hon, member for Queens has made a very long statement with regard to this question. Well, I suppose he is interested. No doubt this question comes home to him very closely. I would wish that when he makes some complaint with regard to the working of that railway, he should go outside of his own family circle. The hon. gentleman complained that his own people, those who are very latimately connected with him, have not received justice. Now it is very wrong, I think, that because the hon. gentleman has some fault to find with the management of the public works of this country, he should bring his griovances here for the purpose of airing in this House what he may think a matter connected with himself. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, thinks that his own family, in this regard, has not been fairly provided for. I know very well that the hon. gentleman's family have been in the past very fairly provided for in Prince Edward Island; and a very important member of that family, in fact, I may say, the father of the hon. gentleman, is in the employ of the Government under the superintendence of the Minister of Rail ways, and I think he has dealt very fairly with him. When the Minister found it necessary to curtail the expenditure in connection with the Island railway, he found it nccessary that the hon. gentleman's father should take a somewhat smaller salary than he had been receiving from the former Government; but when he found the Government railways were paying an equal pro rata on the Island with those on the mainland, he raised the salary of the hon. gentleman's ancestor. I think it is not right at all that the hon. gentleman should come here and find fault, simply because his father has not received a larger salary. The hon. gentleman's father is, of course, a very respectable man and a fine gentleman, and it is proper that the son should endeavour, if possible, to secure for his father increased pay. But I do not think, on that account, the hon. member should find fault with the Minister of Railways as to the management of the Prince Edward Island Railway. The Minister has dealt as fairly with the employees on the road as circumstances would allow, and I hope he will find it possible in the future to increase the pay of the conductors. The Minister has already increased the salaries of the locomotive engineers, and I have no doubt the conductors would find no fault if they were compensated in the same manner as the engineers the Steel Company now stand?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I believe the debt has been discharged, and that the Government are now a little in the Company's debt. We have been in the habit of receiving from the Company large quantities of supplies, and although there was a time when the Company was somewhat in advance of us, and I confess I was a little apprehensive as to the result; but we stopped making any payments for supplies, and by receiving the ordinary supplies we required, and retaining the bounty to which they were eniron, I believe the balance has been placed on the right side.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Windsor Branch is held on a lease for twenty-one years, on the terms that we receive one-third of the gross earnings to maintain the line. The amount we receive is a little more than sufficient for that purpose.

Canals-Maintenance and Repairs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, What does the hon. Minister expect from the canals, in the shape of receipts, for working? What probability is there of increased trade? Has the hon. gentleman anything to say in regard to the policy of the Government as to the reduction or abolition of the tolls.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was a considerable reduction and re-adjustment of the tolls on the canals made a year ago, and the result has been an increased revenue. I will bring down the statement as to the receipts for last year and what we expect for the present year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is no further action intended to be taken with respect to the tolls?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to call the Minister's attention to the fact that a considerable number of complaints have been made by vessel owners as to the rates charged for towage through the canals.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think we have any control over the rates of towage. I will, however, make enquiry.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This matter, if within the control of the Government, is one of considerable importance to the trade and should be investigated. A good many parties who otherwise would make use of the canel are disposed to stop their vessels at Buffalo, on account of the towage expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What information has the hon. gentleman to give upon this vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1 think I must refer the hon. gentleman to the Report of the Minister of the Interior, which shows what work has been done last year, and I think also points out what is to be done in the ensuing season. The hon, gentleman will remember that the amount has been considerably increased. The old vote was $50,000, and it covered all the salaries and contingent expenses. The whole of the salaries are now charged to Consolidated Revenue, and the $60,000 will be expended strictly in the work of the Geological Survey at the various points indicated by the Director of the Survey.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentle-Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the debt of man know whether the Department has purchased one or more diamond drills?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really cannot say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suggested, two or three years ago, the desirability of obtaining one or two of these drills, and making a series of borings, to a reasonable depth, at certain points in the Dominion, and I rather think that something of that kind was done, though not very extensively or systematically. I think that probably more important information could be got in that way than in almost any other way in which the amount could be expended. I am not speaking to the prejudice of the regular topographical surveys, or geological surveys, but it has been found that these instruments are becoming very valuable and economical in making these enquiries.

Mr. HALL. Hon. gentlemen are aware that a Select Committee was appointed a few weeks ago to make enquiries with reference to this Survey. That Committee has met from time to time and taken evidence, and their report will be submitted to the House in a few days. It will, however, be so near the end of the Session, that I fear no practical result will be obtained during the present Session, and I feel it therefore to be my duty, as Chairman of Committee, to make a slight reference to some facts which have been auduced, and to the result of their investigations. There is a general feeling throughout the country, and I believe it is shared in this House, that the practical, useful result of the Geological Survey is not proportionate to the expenditure, and it was in order to get evidence upon that point that the Committee was appointed. Now, the appropriation for 1881-82-I select those years because they are the years to which the last report applies -was $110,000. The application of that money was as follows: removal from Montreal, $10,000; the purchase of Indian curiosities, $1,232; the purchase of natural history collection, $2,719, and the purchase of books and instruments, from Sir William Logan's estate, $4,500. These items make, in all, $18,451, leaving a balance of $91,549 as the amount which is supposed to have been devoted to the practical work of the Survey. Now, as to that work, I think it is a proper statement to make that the public have derived no return from it, except in the addition to the Museum, and the volume of reports which has lately been furnished to the House I cannot speak as to the value or extent of the additions which have been made to the Museum; I have no doubt that valuable improvements have been made, but the expense cannot have been very large. But so far as the report is concerned, the result is that it contains merely the report of Dr. Dawson's explora-tions in the Bow and Belly River district, to which 23 pages are devoted; Dr. Ell's explorations in the Hudson Bay district, 29 pages; Dr. Bell's explorations in New Brunswick, 56 pages, and Mr. Wilmot's examination of the mines in Quebec, 14 pages. Then we have Dr. Selwyn's essay on the change of nomenclature, three pages-a change which, I may say, has been much criticised by scientific men, as an unwise change; Dr. Selwyn's notes on the geology of south-eastern Quebec, and his Report of Progress for the two years. This Report of Progress makes reference to the work of other members of the staff; to Mr. Webster's work in the Province of Quebec; Mr. Broad's, in New Brunswick; to Mr. Fletcher's, in Cape Breton, and others. These references to the actual work of the staff are very brief, most of them occupying only eight or ten lines space, and none of them being over a page or a page and a-halt. Now, what strikes the Committee is (although there may have been useful work done by the Survey-and we believe there has been useful work done, and that the staff is a valuable one) but the complaint is that the public are not getting the benefit of that work. It certainly is, we believe, a just ground of complaint that of the work which was done in 1881 by these gentlemen there is not more to show for it now, for the use of the public, than six, or eight, or ten lines in the volume of the published reports. The facts would seem to show either that the work was not worth what it has cost, or e'so that the country should have got the benefit of it before the information became too old to be of any practical use. A striking example of that fact is Mr. Vennor's work in the phosphate region of this vicinity, to which great attention has been called, and to which American and other capital has been directed. There was a great demand for practical information as to the extent, location and value of these deposits, and Mr. Vennor was employed. His work, in 1877, 1878, 1879 and 1880 was carried on exclusively in that region, and though his work may have been very valuable, as I believe it was, there is not a published line as to all that work during these four years. He has left the Survey and there is nothing left behind him to show what his work has been. It has been said that the fault was Mr. Vennor's, that he should have made a report, and that he should not have left the Department without leaving his report. The Committee do not feel disposed to make references to any particular member of the staff, but they simply wish to call attention to the fact that the practical results of the work are not commensurate with the expense involved. They consider for instance that Mr. Vennor should not have been paid a large salary and travelling expenses during these four years without | reason why the Reports should not be got out at an earlier Mr. HALL.

making any report at all, or else he should not have been employed. I could give a number of illustrations in the same direction, but I will not trouble the House with them. I think these facts are pertinant, and I think the attention of the Government should be called to the conviction of the Committee that while we believe that the appropriation is not too large, still there is a lack of practical usefulness in the work of the Department. There has been very great delay in bringing out the reports of the Survey, and one of the suggestions of the Committee will be that instead of waiting for these reports until the end of two years, the results of the operations of the staff should be brought out separately, as they may be applicable to particular districts. It seems very unnecessary, for instance, that a person who wishes to know about the coal regions of British Columbia, should have to wait for two years for a volume of reports which he finds gives him a great deal of useful information, information which is interesting enough, but not interesting to him, about the coal regions of Cape Breton. It would be more satisfactory if the work in particular districts were reported upon, and the reports promptly published and circulated at their actual cost. We have had before us the result of the work of the Geological Survey in the United States. There the Report is a very valuable volume of 700 or 800 pages, which can be purchased for 50 cents, and is replete with a vast amount of practical information respecting the mineral re-sources of that country. Our Reports seem to be very de fective in that respect; they seem to lack in practical usefulness, so far as actual mining operations are concerned. These practical operations are very extensive in the Lower Provinces as well as in the Province of Quebec, but the referonces to them in the Roports are very meagre, embracing only two or three pages in some cases, while in others the most important mines are not even reported on at all. I call the attention of the House, and the Government especially, to these facts, in anticipation of the report of the Committee, because the report will be presented at so late a period that the matter could not in any other way have received the attention of the House.

Mr. MILLS. This Committee was appointed before I came into the House, and I have not seen the order of reference; but it seemed to me to be in some respects a rather extraordinary enquiry. I do not say that it is at all an improper one; but there are certain matters being disclosed before the Committee which in my opinion, ought to have been disclosed before the Minister, and ought to have been known to him. In fact, it is very important that every Minister should know precisely how his own Department is organized, and what is the condition and discipline of his staff. These facts are being disclosed before the Committee, and, to a certain extent, the enquiry has become a species of With regard to the matter sugdepartmental scandal. gested by the hon member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), there is no doubt that the geological investigation carried on by the Government, with the limited amount of money hitherto placed at its disposal, has been necessarily theoretical, and for the purpose of ascertaining the geological features of the country. An enquiry, with the view of ascertaining its mining resources is, of course, of very great importance; but my impression is, that if the Department turns the attention of those upon the staff to those particular features of geology to which the hon. gentleman has referred, it will be found necessary to vote a larger amount of money than has hitherto been placed at the disposal of the Department. Investigations, with the view of ascertaining the practicability of mining operations at any particular point, will necessitate boring, as the hon. member for South Huron has stated, and that of course means a considerable addition to the expenditure. I do not see any period. The branch is now at the Capital, and is under the supervision of the Minister, which was not the case when it was in Montreal; and the results of the field work done in the summer season, when alone operations can be carried on, can no doubt be made in the winter, and be published before the winter season is over. But it will, of course, require a great deal of diligence on the part of every member of the staff to have the work in such a state of forwardness that the Report can be placed in the hands of members before the Session closes. But I arose merely to call the attention of the First Minister to the disclosures' that are being made before the Committee, which I think ought to receive the early attention of the Minister in charge.

Mr. HALL. I do not know that the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell were intended as a reflection on the Committee-

Mr. MILLS. Not at all.

Mr. HALL-but I think that the Committee did not feel that they could exercise any control over the gentlemen who appeared before us. We had the Director himself there and certain members of his staff. It is true they made certain criminations and recriminations against each other; and although it was unpleasant for us to listen to them and to know that such feelings existed, at the same time we did 1 of think we could control them or prevent the gentlemen of the press from attending the meetings and publishing the proceedings. Of course, there was evidence that the relations of the members of the staff towards each other were such as to injure the usefulness of the service; but the Committee did not feel that it was in their province to do more than refer to this circumstance and not to attribute the fault either to the Director or to the members of his staff.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure that the hon, member who moved the Committee moved it with the object which was patent on the Resolution-to have general enquiry upon the progress and development and practical working of the survey; and it was thought that it would be a useful Committee. I regret, however, that it has almost degenerated-perhaps the Committee could not help thisinto a sort of trial of the Director on the evidence of his subordinates, and perhaps vice versa; for there has been crimination and recrimination. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that much of the cvidence that was given against the Director ought to have been laid before the Government by those gentlemen who gave that evidence. If the Director was guilty of laches, was incompetent, or neglected his work in any way, that ought to have been stated by these gentlemen to the Government, and they ought not to have kept their breath until it was brought out by a Committee. I can speak for the Minister of the Interior, that he will be glad to get the report of the Committee and to weigh well its conclusions; and if it reveals any defects in the system, he will be glad to correct them. Of these matters which have come out, of course I know nothing; neither does the Minister of the Interior. All I can say is, that the present Director was selected with the greatest care by his predecessor, Sir William Logan. Sir William Logan, whom we are all proud of, not only as a man of world-wide reputation, but as a Canadian, had his whole soul absorbed in the Geological Survey of Canada. When failing health rendered him unable to do the work, his great desire was to obtain a fit man to succeed him in what he regarded as the work of his life. He went to England and consulted Sir Roderick Murchison, who was considered the great geological authority of his time; and Sir Roderick Murchison said that of all the men he knew, there was no man at all equal, in his opinion, for that work, to Dr. Selwyn, who was then the Director of the Geological Survey in New South Wales. Well, he has been here for many years, and I would be slow to believe that he had failed ' and that, so far as I know, the Government of the Dominion, to come up to the standard which Sir William Logan went to seek, and which he thought he had found. Perhaps there may be faults of temper and other faults-those little rifts in the lute which occur occasionally to impair the harmony -and which must affect the efficiency of the service. However, that is something to be looked into. The hon. member for Bothwell has truly pointed out that this is a Geolo-gical Survey and not a mineralogical. The two are distinct, If you are going to look for the useful minerals, you must have a School of Mines, which must be a distinct branch, and must be paid as such. The general geological survey which relates to the general geological appearance of the country, which shows the various strata, and so forth, is the chief branch. Of course, in the progress of a general geological survey of the country, there crops up frequently, of necessity, the other question, the search for metals used in industries. But we cannot have two surveys, unless we have a double votea large vote for the search of useful minerals, and a general vote for a Geological Survey. That is all I can say upon this just now. The vote is a liberal one compared with that of former years. It used to be $50,000, with the expenses and contingencies taken out of that, so that there was a very small sum left for the actual service. Now, the expenses are paid out of the Consolidated Revenue and the whole amount is expended, as it ought to be, on the survey Hon. gentlemen spoke about certain items proper. not strictly geological, which were charged against that fund a year or two ago; as, for instance, getting those Indian curiosities. For a very small sum there was obtained a unique collection of Indian curiosities from British Columbia; the Indian curiosities were disappearing rapidly, through the introduction of European implements of all kinds, and it is well these were secured. I believe the collection was made by Dr. Powell, who was Superintendent of Indians in British Columbia, and it is a great source of interest to all persons interested in ethnology. That is the only item which was not strictly geological; at all events Parliament was aware of it and thought it was a good purchase. The whole of this money will be expended in the Geological Survey this year.

For Indians of Quebec-To relieve distress $1,200 00

For purchase of Glenkets for aged and infirm Indians of Ontario and Quebec....... 1,600 00 For Indian schools in Ontario and Quebec., New Brunswick and Nova Scotia...... 10,400 00 For Annuities under the Robinson Treaty.... 15,680 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is this amount of $10,400 divided?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $5,000 to supplement the Indian school fund of Ontario and Quebec; $2,200 to be expended in New Brunswick, and $3,200 in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MILLS. Before last year it was usual to keep the appropriation for each Province separate; of course the Indians come under control of the Dominion Government, but it is desirable this distinction of Provinces should be kept up, because the Indians in one Province might be a considerable charge and those in another but a light burden. I called the hon. First Minister's attention, some few years ago, to the manner in which he was dealing with the Indians of Ontario and those of Quebec. The Indians that reside north of the height of land, received a certain sum for the. surrender of their land, and this sum became an Indian fund; the Ludians of Quebec had never any lands to surrender and have not taken any lands. There are some residing north of the St. Lawrence, at the height of land, who state that they never made any surrender of their lands, yet the timber has been sold off those lands as timber limits, as trustees for those Indians, have not interfered in any way, have not sought to secure any right of use in the soil, or to obtain anything from the Government of Quebec in the interests of those Indians. Now, the hon. gentleman will see that he is not acting uniformly or according to a uniform principle, for certainly the Indians in the unsurrendered districts of the different Provinces have as much interest in the lands in one case as in the other. I do not say the Government here can obtain any title to these lands from the Indians, but where the Indians have made no surrender, the Government here, as trustees for the Indians, can see that their rights, whatever they may be, are protected in dealing with the Governments of the Provinces. The hon. gentleman comes here to ask for $4,200 from the public Treasury, whereas, in the case of the Province of Ontario, the hon. gentloman makes no such demand, because he goes to the Government of Ontario and says, you shall not take possession of these lands until you deal with the Indians, until you obtain from the Indians the surrender of their interest in their lands, and pay them or agree to pay them a certain consideration. Now, this has not been done in the other case, and I think there should be some uniform rule acted upon. If the Government, acting as trustees for the Indians, are going to abandon any claim on behalf of the Indians in the one Province, they should act precisely in the same way in every other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the difference is that the Indians in Ontario are rich and the Indians in Quebec are poor. The former are fortunate enough to have secured, early, reserves of considerable value and fertility, and the hon. gentleman knows that the Indian Fund in Ontario is very considerable, and they are able to take care of their own poor. In Quebec, with some few excep-tions, the reserves are small and the Indians in some portions of the Province, are far in the inhospitable portion of Quebec, in the vicinity of the Labrador coast, far up the Saguenay, and elsewhere, where their lands have not been valuable, and even if surrendered, would not generate a fund at all equal to the fund in Ontario. All we can say is that this sum is spent each year in Quebec. As a matter of humanity, it is voted. We cannot allow them to starve, and I am informed, from the information in the Department, that a less sum would be insufficient, and that even with that sum there is a considerable degree of privation and suffering, in long winters like the present.

Mr. MILLS. I am not stating that the sum is extravagant at all. My observations were not directed against the inadequacy of the reserves in the Province of Quebec, nor has the Indian fund in Ontario arisen from reservations or the disposal of reservations, but from the disposal of their interests in the country generally. Take the case of the Robinson Treaty-the hon. gentleman knows they have surrendered their claim to a larger extent of territory, but that the Government were not allowed to deal with the country until that surrender was made. I understand that Indians in the Province of Quebec have, in districts recently taken possession of by the Government, made a similar claim, but as they are few in numbers, they have no effective means of enforcing their claim against the Government, and so far as I know, the hon. gentleman has not taken any steps to assert that claim against the Government of Quebec. He has not said, before you deal with this property you must extinguish the Indian title. It is not a question of their rights to reservations, but their rights to the country generally, where no official or general surrender has been made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. The question in my mind is whether, if not have had a larger sum than the hon. gentleman is taking tendent-treneral says may up up the derived in a large meathat had been done or were done now, the Indians would

Mr. MILLS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am straid that the various Governments have been ra her lax in that matter,

Mr. PATERSON (Brast). I vish to bring before the notice of the Superintendent-General a few points with reference to the Indian schools. There came into my hands -I think sent by the Rev. gentleman direct, Mr. Wilson of Sault Sto. Marie, whom my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson) knows very well, and says takes a great interest in the Indians-a copy of a letter addressed to the Department, in which he alvocated what he considered would be great improvements in the matter of Indian schools. As far as I remember, he suggests that there should be a system of Government inspection, and that there should be a system of compulsory education-it amounts to that-and that that might be carried out by the way of imposing tines in withholding the annuity money from such children as did not attend school between certain ages, and also that the money that was thus derived by way of fine might be distributed among the band, or devoted to the extension of school building, or to the purchase of prizes to be given as a reward of merit to those who deserve it. He also suggests that a very great difficulty arose from the difficulty of enrolling the pupils, from the fact-though I was not aware of that, and it is perhaps more the case there than among those Indians that I am more acquainted with-that their names were not so clearly known. My hon. friend from Algoma says this gentleman is disinterested and has the means of knowing, and he says that there are difficulties, and the schools are not working as well as might be desired. He says, for instance, that where forty children should attend, perhaps not more than twenty do attend; and he goes the length of saying that after they have attained the age of ten or twelve years, and made sufficient progress, they should be drafted into the larger institutions, such as the Mohawk Institution, and that they should be fined if, when they attained the age of fifteen or sixteen years, they had not either learned or been apprenticed to a trade. I do not speak in the way of endorsing those propositions or not, but the Superintendent. General will agree with me that any suggestions coming from anyone who is labouring among the Indians, and is really interested in them, and whose recommendations come from a purely unselfish source, are worthy of consideration, and I think the grant taken for Indian schools is a very small grant indeed. If I remember aright-but I would ask the Superintendent-General-I think the Indian schools do not derive any grant from the Provincial Governmentsdo they?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think not.

Mr. PATERSON. I think not. Then is not this the case, that while our other public schools are aided by the Provinces, and the Indian schools are not aided by the Provinces, and whereas a large part of the cost of Provincial Governments, including school grants, is derived from this Government, and as this Government receives it by way of Customs duties and Excise, to which the Indians contribute, a very strong case is made out, as a matter of equity and justice, that there should be grants given by this Government to supplement such moneys as are contributed by the Indians themselves. Would it not be perfectly justified if the grant was on a much more liberal scale than it is, if that be necessary? I do not know the circumstances of all the bands. The large band with which I am more familiar is aided very much in the work, as the Superintendent-General knows, by the grant of the New England Society ; but it seems to me that a case of justice and equity can fairly be made out for a very liberal grant, not as a matter of charity, but common justice, because the Provincial Government pay funds to the public schools of Ontario, and the Superinsure from moneys received from this Government, and received by this Government by way of taxes as Customs and Excise duties. To these moneys the Indians contribute, as do their white brethren, and not receiving aid from the Provinces, it is perfectly right and proper and only a matter of justice, that their schools should be aided by the Government here. If they are in a state of inefficiency for want of funds, I think the Government would be justified in supplementing this grant. There are good school facilities on the reserve that I am more particularly acquainted with; but it is possible that on some other reserves the bands may not be as wealthy, and perhaps the New England Society do not contribute to all the schools.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They do not.

Mr. PATERSON. In such cases as that, while justice should be meted out, I think a too sectional view could not be entertained altogether. I would like the Superintendent-General to give his views on the public schools, as to whether he thinks a system of Government inspection is desirable, or whether the suggestions made to the Department are feasable and worthy of consideration. I do not know that the amount Government contribute to these schools would warrant much interference on the part of the Government; but I•suppose, as guardians of the Indians, they would be entitled to take that position. As to whether the imposition of fines and compulsory education might be made to work, I do not know.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Wilson is regularly engaged, and has been successful, I believe, as a minister, a teacher and guardian of children. I believe that the education given to the Indians in the front is very fair; that they rather take pride in the education of their children, and that with their contributions and their share of this fund, with the aid of the New England Society, they have a full proportion of school opportunities for education. There are Indians all over the Dominion in all stages of civilization, from near barbarism upwards. However, the general inspec-tion of schools would be a good thing. The hon. member for Bothwell, when he held the position of Superintendent-General, will, perhaps, remember that there was a good deal of difficulty about that—where the Indian children were educated, by denominational societies; these latter resisted strongly anything like general inspection, or anything like a selection of schoolmasters, or their being examined. They insisted that as they raised the missionery funds in their own denominations, and had charge of these Indians and their schools, they should select the teachers without reference to the Department. However, it is a subject of growing interest. One of the Bills I have introduced this Session provides-though it can only be valuable for the Indians who are in a somewhat advanced state of civilization-for municipal organization, and gives them power to make education compulsory. I hope the Act will work well. They can pass by-laws to that extent, and have some-what the same right of compulsion in the educational matters as is the case among the whites. I do not think it would be well to impose any penalties or cut off an Indian from his annuity if he don't send his children to school. That would cause great dissatisfaction, and would do no good. Still, as the Indians are progressive, we can introduce the white system from time to time.

Mr. DAWSON. I can say that the Mr. Wilson, who has been mentioned, is a very estimable man, and has done a great deal for the Indians at Sault Ste. Marie. He has collected a considerable fund in England and elsewhere, for maintaining his industrial schools at Sault Ste. Marie, for which there is a Government grant of $1,800 a year. There is an industrial school for boys and another one for girls. They are working so satisfactorily and doing so much good that clergymen of other denominations. Mr. MILLS. A Sir JOHN A. M Sir JOHN A. M his school is in connection with the Church of England -have followed his example and have established industrial schools at Wikmemikon, where large numbers are attending them. The other day they sent, through me, from Wikmemikon, at the lower end of Manitoulin Island, some complaints and reports, which I sent to the Deputy-Head of the right hou. gentleman's Department; and I believe instructions were sent up to the local agent to enquire into the matter. They complained that the funds were entirely too little for the number of scholars who were attending. They showed a very large and close attendance, both at the girls' and the boys' schools. The children were making very great progress. There the Indians live near together in a sort of community; they raise a good deal of wheat, and are getting to be very comfortable on the Island of Manitoulin, and therefore they are able to keep their children at school. They had for two schools, with nearly 100 children in constant attendance, but $1,200 a year. They had to board these children, and could not maintain them. selves without foreign aid. They have missionaries collecting for them in different parts of the world, who get but very little; still they collect enough to enable them to live. While on this subject, I would draw the attention of the Minister to another subject of great impor-tance. There were schools authorized among the wild Indians at Nipigon and other places-I think five in all, and an appropriation of $200 a year was made for each school. This sum, in a wild country like that, is too little to attract competent teachers, so that the Indians to this day are without schools, though they were quite willing to send their children to school. I sent in a representation the other day that $50 a year should be added in each case to enable them to maintain their schools, and I hope the Department will see its way to make that small additional grant, more especially in view of the fact that there is a very large amount due to those Lake Superior and Lake Huron Indians, under the Robinson Treaty-I believe as much as $300,000. Now, with such an enormous fund as that in prospect—enormous, as compared with their position —it is much to be regretted that the rising generation should be without education; and I think a point might be stretched, and even a little additional sum given yearly to promote education. I may also say that the improvement within the last two years has been very marked among all the Indians of Algoma. They are showing a desire to have their children educated, above all things, and liquor has been kept from them in a great measure of late years, so that their condition is very materially improved. I am very sorry to say, however, there is one very marked exception to this rule, and that is the case of the Indians at Garden River. They are the poorest Indians in Algoma. The other Indians are comparatively rich; if they are not so, it is their own fault, for they can obtain plenty of work. But at Garden River the soil is poor, and during last fall they were compelled to live solely on turnips. These poor people cannot afford to keep up their schools, and they have a very devoted teacher among them, who, although very badly off himself, manages to teach a great many of their children. His name is Rev. Mr. Ouillette, and a little addition might be made to the sum paid him. He at present receives $200, and an addition and a state of the sum paid him. additional $100 would enable him to keep body and soul together with less difficulty than at present.

Mr. MILLS. Are the Indian schools inspected?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Indian schools are inspected by the public school Inspectors of each Province. Mr. MILLS. Are they inspected in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The are inspected by the Indian Agents.

Mr. DAWSON. With respect to annuities under the Robison Treaty, I desire to enquire whether any progress has been made towards arriving at a settlement with the Ontario Government. A demand was made on that Government for arrears due the Indians under the Robison Treaty, the sum now amounting to $300,000. My opinion is that the Dominion Government should fund the amount, in the meantime, and trust to obtaining it from the Ontario Government in the future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the Indians have been very badly treated under this Treaty. They have not received the money which was due them. Considerable progress has, however, been made towards a settlement with the Ontario Government. I understand from the Minister of Finance, that he believes that in the course of this spring there will be an adjustment—it has been approaching for some time-between the Quebec and Ontario Governments, in regard to their respective liabilities. The moment that is arrived at, the fund belonging to the Indians will, of course, be adjusted, and they will be paid over the amount from some source or other. Looking at the matter from one point of view, the Indians have not suffered morally from this failure, as regards payments due them. However, that is no reason why they should not receive their money.

Mr. MILLS. The point in dispute is this: The Dominion Government claim from the Ontario Government the amount of money which the Indians were entitled to receive for the surrender of their claims under this Treaty. The Ontario Government oppose it on two grounds. First, that this is not a charge against the Provincial Government but against the Dominion Government, which, in taking over all the assets of the two Provinces-Ontario and Quebec-at the time of Confederation, took over this liability, and that therefore it is a charge against the Government of Canada, and not against a particular Province. Second, that if the lands were liable, as the Dominion Government claim the greater portion as lying west of the meridian drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, no claim can be made against the Ontario Government, when the tands, it is claimed, do not belong to them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have made some advances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some years ago the wate was $14,000. Will it increase or remain stationary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Treaty allowance to the Indians is $4 per head. For many years they have been paid only $1 per head; for some years they have been paid $4. They ask payment of arrears between the $1 and the $4 per head-that is their complaint.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say that, in a good many cases the money appears to go to missionaries which, I daw say, is a mode in which the Indians may get as much benefit as any other way, but still if the money was intended for maintenance and assistance of destitute Indians, it would not be strictly in accord with the vote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The clergymen in New Brunswick generally act as missionaries and, to a certain extent, as agents. Their salaries altogether amount to $1,630.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point is, that the most of this small grant appears to go as salaries to whitemen, rather than as food or grain given to the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that is so. These officers have been there for a long time, and there is a general impression that these clergymen who, by the way, receive small sums, are an excellent moral police.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The salaries of white men apparently constitute a large portion of this expendi-ture. I notice by last year's detail that there were several items which struck me as scarcely being chargeable to expenses for Indians, among them being an address presented to the Marquis of Lorne and performances of various kinds given in his honour. I think these amounts might more properly have been charged to the vote for the entertainment of His Excellency.

SIT JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). $1,900 for schools seems a small amount?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the sum is insufficient. I think, also, that owing to the different character of the Indians in British Columbia from those on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, we will be able to have fewer agents and more schools. The Indians of British Columbia are a different race; it is said that they have a considerable admixture of Mongol blood, and they are sturdier, stronger, and hardier men, more like white men than those on the east side of the Rockies, who are wild and untamed-more like deer than oxen. It is reported also that the chief cry of the Indians to Lord Lorne was that they wanted more schools. That is a subject to which I hope to address myself this summer.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). What the right hon. gentleman has stated is perfectly correct. There is a great amount of Mongol blood in the native Indians of Vancouver Island, at all events. They are strong and hardy men, very useful on board steamboats. I have known them to pick up six 50 lb. sacks and run along with them and put them on board ships. I may say that Dr. Tolmie, who has been in British Columbia for many years in connection with the Hudson Bay Company, has taken a great interest in Indian matters, and he has suggested to me that somebody should be appointed to teach those Indians farming, and arrange farming matters for them. I hope the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs will give his attention to the matter.

Mr. GORDON. I can bear testimony as to the good character of the Indians of British Columbia generally. I think they are advancing as rapidly as could be expected, especially at one point on the coast. A gentleman went there twenty years ago, when the Indians were comparatively savage. He taught them reading, writing and arithmetic, so that they were able to correspond with their friends. He also got workmen to teach them the mechanical arts. They have erected a saw mill, which they are running ; they have sash and door factories; and two years ago Mr. Duncan engaged a Paisley weaver from the district of Cowichan for six months, and at the end of that time this gentleman showedisome very fine specimens of shawls which were woven by the Indians. In fact, the Indians are in advance of the whites in that industry. I regret very much that circum-stances have occurred there recently which are calculated, to some extent, to destroy the usefulness of that gentleman's labours-a dispute having arisen between him and the church. With the merits of the case I am not familiar; but to the efforts of Mr. Duncan, in bringing these Indians from a state of complete savagery to such a condition that they are able to correspond with their friends, and that they labour and lead lives of sobriety, too much praise cannot be accorded. There are other points where similar results have been achieved. At the matter, in order that they may see, as I am quite sure Cowichan, twenty years ago, a man's life was hardly safe; but for several years there has been a Catholic mission there, and the missionaries have induced the Indians to take to agriculture to some extent. I quite agree with the suggestion which has been made, that where the land is suitable for agriculture a teacher should be appointed to teach the Indians agriculture. I think that the sum mentioned is entirely inadequate for schools among the Indians. For instance, there is not a school in the district of Comox. The agent of that section has to traverse the whole west coast of Vancouver Island, so that he cannot visit Comox more than once or twice in twelve months. In the district of Nanaimo there is no Indian school. A clergyman holds the services of the church there, but so far as I know, no effort is made to educate the young Indians. Still, they are gradu-ally becoming more industrious; the young men ally becoming more industrious; the young men are giving up the pursuits of fishing and hunting, and are taking to working in the mines and on the steamers that ply on the coast. They are the best sailors we have. At the time I left Vancouver Island, nearly all the stevedoring was performed by Indians. They are so far advanced that they performed this work by contract; and although they do it for less money than the Chinamen used to do it for, yet they will make $3 or $3.50 a day, when the Chinaman would only make a dollar. I do not wish to detain the Committee, but I thought it necessary to mention the inadequacy of the educational facilities for the Indians of British Columbia, and the desirability of having teachers in agriculture and arts.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the hon. Minister when he expects that this service will come to an end. It was expected that three or four years would complete the labours of the Commission. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to inform the Committee what amount of work has been accomplished, how many Indians have been located, and when the Commission are likely to reach the conclusion of their labours.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the right hon. gentleman answers that question, I would like to suggest that a great deal of benefit would accrue from a survey of the swampy lands of the Saugeen Peninsula being made with a view of forcing a road through them. They would thus be made of great value, not only to the Indian Department, but to the white settlers of that district. I should like, also, to call the attention of the Government to the condition of things that exist in that Indian territory at the present moment. Anedict has lately gone forth from the Indian Department, which fell like a bolt from the skies upon the settlers of that neig banhood, cancelling some 500 lots belonging to settlers and others in that part of the country. I am quite sure that the intention of the Government, in cancelling the sales of these lots, was a good one-that the cancellation was made for the benefit of the Indians, and also of the settlers; but it has been somewhat unfortunate, owing to the mode in which it has been done. No notice was given of this sudden change of policy, and the consequence is, that many boná fide settlers will find themselves in the occupation of lots, the sales of which have been cancelled over their heads. There are others who have spent very large sums of money in that district-men who have really built up that country -who have given employment to the settlers there, who have enabled them to sell their produce, by purchasing from them what they otherwise could not have sold, and who by that means have enabled the settlers to contribute to the revenue of the Indian Department. These men stand now to lose large sums of money, which they invested in land there on the faith of an understanding which I am informed has been in existence in that part of the country for some years. Minister as representative once, and he is supposed, conse-

I merely desire to call the attention of the Government to they desire to see, that no injustice is done to any of these parties, and that a hard and fast line is not adopted, but that each case is dealt with on its merits. I have been informed already that, so far as actual settlers are concerned, this will be done; but whatever arrangement is made, I hope that those men, who are the innocent purchasers of Indian lands, and who have spent large sums of money in building up that part of the country, will not be allowed to suffer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is one of the cases where lands have been sold years and years ago, belonging to the Indians, and the parties who bought them have not yet paid for them. Some have gone on making improvements and others have not, but they have been going on year after year without paying up. There must be an end to that. The Indians have a right to get the price of their lands, and the Government want the purchasers to pay or else the land will be taken back and sold to others. The hon. gentleman says that they have built houses and made improvements, but if they paid their debts to the Indians, the Indians would have no cause of complaint. The truth is that the Indians have no friends but the Department. There is a continual pressure by the white man to disregard their rights. True, they are sometimes not pleasant neighbours, but they are the original owners of the seil and we must put up with them with all their faults. We have no desire to deprive any man of his house and farm, but he must pay the debt he ewes the Indians. With reference to British Columbia, there is only one Commissioner there, Mr. O'Reilly, better known in British Columbia as Judge O'Reilly. From my acquaintance with Mr. O'Reilly, which is of recent date, I formed the highest opinion of him and his trustworthiness. I cannet say exactly when these reserves will be finally laid out and set apart for the Indians; I am discussing the whole Indian question with Mr. Smythe, the First Minister of British Columbia, who is now here, with a view, of expediting the surveys and the getting these reserves confirmed by the Government of British Columbia. As regards the suggestions made by my hon. friend opposite, that the Indians should have a farming instructor, we are trying to give small salaries to good farmers in the vicinity of Indian settlements to teach the Indians practical farming. While this will not be a heavy charge on the Treasury, it will be a substantial addition to the farmer's income.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon, gentleman get an annual report from Mr. O'Reilly, as Commissioner, showing the number of reserves set apart and the number of families provided for each year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that almost the whole of this $25,000 really goes to provide the salaries of some nine or ten white gentlemen; for instance, of the Fraser Agency, the total expenditure is $2,770, of which $1,700 go to the superintendent and his travelling allowances; $214-expenses connected with the visit of the Governor General; so that a very small sum will go directly to the benefit of the Indians. The same holds good as to the others. I do not quite understand the services these Indian Agents render; they may perform valuable public services, and great services to the Indians, but British Columbia is a long way off.

Mr. BAKER. And well we know it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Distance lends enchantment to the view.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had the Prime quently, to know a great deal about British Columbia. No doubt he will be able to give the information I require.

Mr. McNEILL. I only wish to explain what I am afraid I did not sufficiently explain a few moments ago, namely, that there are two distinct classes of persons to which I was referring. One class is composed of the actual settlers, as to whom I received the assurance that their cases would be judged on their individual merits; the other class is that of people who are not actual settlers in the country, in the accepted sense of the term, but are men who have paid large sums of money to third parties for lands for the purpose of cutting timber on them, and who have offered their money to the Department for the deeds of these lands, at the suggestion of the agent representing the Department in that neighbourhood, but have had the money refused and their lots cancelled. One of them, I know, now stands in the position of being liable to lose $2,000, owing to the representations made and the course now pursued. All that I ask is that such cases as these will be dealt with on their merits, as well as the case of the actual settlers, to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt.

Mr. MoNEILL: That is all right.

Mr. GORDON. I desire to make a remark with reference to the general benefits the Indians are supposed to derive from this fund in British Columbia, so far as it has come under my observation. I will cite one case of extreme hardship. For instance, there was an Indian shot at Nanaimo, by accident I think, last summer, and application was made to the Superintendent for relief for that Indian, and it was denied him, simply because he was not living on his reservation. At the same time, it was publicly stated in the newspapers of the Province that other Indians who frequented Victoria, particularly the Indian women who frequent Victoria, very often, it is asserted, for anything but proper purposes, are in the habit of getting aid from the super-intendent in the way of medicine without question. It is a matter of public notoriety there, and I am satisfied that if the Department becomes aware of the facts, and I think it is right they should, any little differences of that kind will be remedied. In the district of Cowichan, there is a gentleman who has an application before the Department for redress. He purchased land from the Provincial Government some fourteen years ago. He paid for his land, received his Crown grant, but the Indians have held the land ever since and will not give it up, and when he applies to the Provincial authorities they say they cannot deal with the Indians, who are under the charge of the Dominion Government, and the poor man has been kept out of his property all these years. He has not the means to carry it to the courts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What is his name?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Dodds.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know his case.

Mr. GORDON. The case is before you now, I think.

Mr. MILLS. That is an old case.

Mr. GORDON. Cases of that kind should be attended to, so as to show the Indians that where there is authority it will be exercised, and to teach them to obey that authority. I think there is nothing worse for an Indian than to understand that the law does not apply to him the same as anyone else. With regard to the duties of these different agents, I am afraid that the Indians do not get the full benefit of the money that is voted, but I have no doubt the hon. gentleman at the head of the Department will look into the matter and effect the necessary remedies.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The hon. member for South Dominion must be taken as a whole. There is a very Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) seems to think that large amount of expenditure in the other Provinces which Sir Richard Cartwright.

the whole of this vote ought to be spent in beef and flour, tobacco, tea, sugar, oatmeal and religious books, and articles of that nature. The only fault I have to find with the vote is that it ought to be three times the amount. Then the amount spent in salaries would compare much more favourably with the total expenditure.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman does not exactly apprehend the position in which this appropriation for the Indians of British Columbia stands, as compared with the Indians of some of the other Provinces. I believe British Columbia never secured the surrender of the Indian title; on the contrary, when an attempt was made on the part of the Government to locate the Indians, very serious objection was made by the Government of British Columbia to allowing them any reservation unless it was purchased for them by the Dominion. In the Province of Ontario-and it is precisely the same in the Province of Manitoba and throughout the North-West Territory-the Indians were recognized as having a certain right of occupation in the soil, and the white population were not allowed to go into soil, and the white population were not allowed to go into possession until that right was extinguished. The moneys which have arisen from the extinguishment of that right have become an Indian fund, and the Indians are largely provided for out of that fund. The hon. gentleman will see, by looking at this vote, that the appropriation made to British Columbia is very much larger than that made to Ontario and Onebec taken much larger than that made to Ontario and Quebec, taken together; so that we are in fact charging the Dominion of Canada-the older Provinces, that have already provided for their Indians in another way-with a large portion of the expense of providing for the Indians of British Columbia. I have no doubt whatever that this Committee would be willing to appropriate a much larger amount for the benefit of the Indians of British Columbia, if the Government or the people of British Columbia were to place at the disposal of the Government here a fund, in proportion to the number of Indians or the extent of their territory, as large as the Province of Ontario or the North West Territories have placed at the disposal of the Government. When British Columbia came into Confederation, I believe there was very little being expended upon the Indians. Perhaps the First Minister remembers whether there was anything at all expended by the Government of British Columbia before that Province became a member of the Confederation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very little.

Mr. MILLS. Very little indeed; and an hon. gentleman who represented that Province in this House for a long time maintained that this was useless expenditure, that it tended to pauperize the Indians, and that the more money was expended in that way the worse off the Indians were. I do not know how far that might be true, but there is no doubt that there is a view of the matter that the Government should guard against, and that is to take no steps to make the Indian population of the Dominion feel that they are dependent upon the Government of Canada for the means of subsistence, and that habits of self-reliance should in this way be undermined. I do not know how far this has been done in British Columbia, but I should judge from the statement made by my hon. friend from South Huron, from the Public Accounts, that the Indians have not been very much injured by this expenditure, for so small a portion of it has reached the Indians that they have not been much demoralized; but, if the suggestion of the hon. member for Victoria were carried out, the Indians there might suffer as seriously as the Indians in some other portions of the Dominion.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) apparently forgets that expenditure in the Dominion must be taken as a whole. There is a very large amount of expenditure in the other Provinces which we have not enjoyed yet in British Columbia. Our position is a peculiar one. We have about 33,000 Indians there, who are essentially a part of our population, and the expenditure which is here mentioned as exponded partly for their benefit has very largely to be devoted to administration and to looking after the Indians. If you take the North-West Territories, I find in the Estimates here there is pretty close upon half a million for the North-West Mounted Police. What are they for but to look after the Indians? We have got nothing of that sort in British Columbia. These agents, and those sent to assist them, act in pretty much the capacity and perform very similar functions to the North-West Mounted Police and the agents in other Provinces. The expenditure, as far as the Indians are concerned, is very small in the Province of British Columbia, and I reiterate the statement, that if the vote were considerably increased this discrepancy would not be so apparent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister was to state what the superintendents did.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will remember that British Columbia is an enormous country.

Mr. BAKER. Tremendous.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, immense; and there is a large population of Indians. It has been laid out in very large districts, where agents have been appointed, whose duty it is to look after the Indians as the Indian Agents do elsewhere, to keep the peace among them, and, where they are settled on their reservations to act in every respect as an Indian Agent would in Ontario and Quebec. There is only one superintendent, Dr. Powell; but there are several agents, having their districts assigned to them. Some of them are exceedingly good officers. They keep peace among the Indians, they endeavour to stop the use of spirits, and they are really making themselves generally useful, as Indian Agents do. As I said awhile ago, I think instead of paying these large salaries that we have been doing ever since British Columbia joined us, we had better, by-and-bye, as the Indians settle on their different reserves, have farmers employed to act as agents, and have more of them, with a small sum of $200 or $300 added to the farmer's annual income, and have them settled among the Indians, or in the immediate vicinity. Our agents are very good men, on the whole; peace is being kept in that country, and the Indians are progressive, as you hear from the hon. gentleman from British Columbia.

Mr. MILLS. I apprehend that the progress the Indians have made in British Columbia has been due not so much to the efforts of the agents as to the growth of industry among the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very likely. That is an additional reason for altering the system, reducing the salaries, and increasing the number of farm instructors. But all these expenses are not to be considered as so much subtracted from the sum voted for the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not necessarily condemning the system, but I merely call attention to what is a very patent fact, that the whole of this pretty large vote substantially goes to pay eight or nine gentlemen in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not propose to detain the Committe very long just now, especially as the House is so thin; but I suppose the hon. gentleman will allow us to discuss this pretty fully on Concurrence, if occasion requires.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right. It is past one, and a thin House.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman knows that discussion on Concurrence is often difficult to obtain. Will the hon. gentleman say why the vote for annuities this year is $24,000 less than last year? Has the number of Indians become less, or have the frauds that have been committed in two or three agencies been discovered?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are various causes, which the hon. gentleman can quite understand. 1 am afraid there has been an excessive payment to the Indians that has gone on from the very beginning; frauds have been practised, and men have been paid twice. The Indians are now being very rapidly settled on the reserves. Great exertions will be made to get them settled this summer. There are some few flying parties, some broken bands, if I may say so, headed by men of bad character, who like to infest the frontier so as to cross over occasionally into the neighbouring country. There is a mutual system of foray going on, stealing horses, cattle, and that kind of thing. But we are getting them all pretty well to the north of the Pacific Railway, far from the frontier, and getting them settled on the reserves. The moment they are on the reserve the Indians can be identified, the heads of families can be known, and the expenditure can be brought within a reasonable compass.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to invite the attention of the Minister to some matters that 1 think of consequence, and upon which further information might be desirable than what is given in the Report. Among the things which I notice in the Report is, that there are 225 salaried officials in the employ of the Government, in connection with this Department, whose salaries amount to $50,582.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not very much.

Mr. MILLS. It is very considerably more than it was a few years ago. In 1878, the same service was $37,038; it is now, altogether, $109,638. That is a considerable advance, with the same number of Indians to be provided for. Then there is the amount paid for farm instruction. I observe in the Report brought down that the cost of farm maintenance last year was $80,840. I do not find anything in the Report as the result of that expenditure. A certain quantity of grain was produced in connection with the Indian service in the North-West; but these products were raised, not on Indian farms, but on Indian reservations. It would be an advantage to the Department if a statement was submitted showing the amount produced on each farm. The payment of fixed selaries to parties so far beyond the supervision of the Government is not, of course, calculated to make them labour to the best advantage. We were told, when in office, by the hon. gentleman, that we ought not to have expended money for the payment of Indians when their annuities were being handed them. Such payments were necessary in 1875-76-77 and 1878. The hon gentleman stated that so soon as the Indians were placed on their reservations no such expenditure would be necessary. Yet we find that in 1878, $28,500 were expended in that way, and no less than $50,817 last year. So we have an expenditure which it was

member. When that speech is returned to the Hunsard room, the copy retained will be corrected exactly in accordance with the correction made by the member, and that corrected copy will go straight to the translators' room, and the translation will be made from that, so that we will have a translation from the corrected report without waiting for its being printed. Then we also pro-pose in this report that the chief translator shall translators. So far as the reporters are concerned, as they have what are called ten minute takes, and one comes in after the other to the table, there is no difficulty in knowing that each reporter does his fair share of work; but there is no such check in the case of the translators, and it is important that the Committee should know who are doing good work, and who, if any, are not accomplishing what they ought to accomplish. It is therefore proposed to have this check. The chief translator is to keep a daily record, which is to be signed by him and by the translator himself, so that the Committee may know not only the quantity of work done, but may be able, if there be any defect in the work, to detect who is defective, and, if that cannot be remedied, some one else will have to take his place. The report further recommends that two gentlemen who were appointed this year, towards the middle of the Session, for the purpose of enabling the report to be got out, shall be appointed as additional translators permanently, and, in addition to that, there is one other translator recommended for appointment, making in all eight regular translators, in addition to the two gentlemen who are at the Table, the two French reporters, who are supposed to assist, but experience up to this time indicates that they will not more than couut for one efficient translator. Now, looking at the object which the Committee have in view, and which it must be admitted is one of great importance, especially for the speedy delivery of the French report, I may say that, this keep a daily record of the work done by anticipated would be got rid of, absolutely increased. A large expense is involved in feeding Indians, the amount this year asked being $287,000. I understand that very recently orders were given that the quantity of provisions dealt out on certain locations should be diminished, and that several Indians have died of starvation-in the neighbourhood of thirty-during the past few weeks.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No such report has been made.

Mr. MILLS. I have a statement in my desk as to where the Indians were located, and the number who died. It is very desirable that we should have information on this question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will endeavour to answer fully, on Concurrence, all the points mentioned by the hon. gentleman, all of which are important.

Resolutions to be reported; Committee to sit again.

Mr. GIROUARD presented the First Report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows :-

Committee.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving that the Fifth Report (page 1240) of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of this House during the present Session, said: This report has relation to the French translation of the Debates about which there was some discussion a few days ago. The Committee, in presenting the report, had two objects in view. The first was to fairly remunerate the translators, but the chief object was to secure, if possible, a more rapid delivery of the French copy of the report. The practical difficulty in accomplishing that heretofore, has been that the translation had to be made from the revised proofs, and those revised proofs were hardly in the hands of the translators for a week, at any rate, after the revision of the speeches. The time then was so far gone that I am rather inclined to think that the printers looked upon the printing of French copy as a matter of less consequence than the printing of the English, and considerable delay occurred in this way. The proposal now made is that, if a speech, for instance, is delivered in the House at night, the next day the member receives a copy of his speech pasted on paper with a view to his making such correction as may be necessary in the speech. Two of these will be prepared in the Hansard room, one petained in that room and the other sent to the ever, I think that the Committee ought to go further; they Mr. MILLS.

Session, up to last Monday, the end of the month, we had 1,269 pages of Hansard. The daily edition, taking the average of the whole, averaged $25\frac{1}{2}$ pages. We had $25\frac{1}{2}$ The Committee, to whom was referred the question, whether Sir Charles Tupper is now member for Cumberland, or whether he has vacated his seat, beg leave to report that Sir Oharles Tupper has not vacated his seat, and is still the member for Cumberland. The Committee, to whom was also referred the Bill (No.111) respecting the Independence of Parinament Act, 1868, 41 Victoria, Chapter 5, beg leave to report the sail Bill, with amendments. All of which is respectfully submitted with the Minutes of Proceedings, and all the documents referring to the case, and in possession of the Committee. pages for each day during that time, but, during the first 13 days of the Session, we had but 116 pages of Hansard, or but nine pages per day, and that is including one day, the day of the debate on the Address, upon which we had 25 pages. Then in the subsequent 38 days, we had 1,181 pages, or an average of 31 pages a day, taking the whole time; but included in that we had 18 days when there were 31 pages and up-wards, nine days when there were 35 pages and upwards, two days when there were 40 pages, two when were 42 pages, one when there were 46 there when there were 48 pages-that pages, and one was the day when the longest debate of the Session took place. The general estimate is that three pages, or three to four, at any rate, is what may fairly be expected from a translator each day. If that be the case, then the number we have now, allowing three and a-half to four pages a day, ought to be able to give us the French translation so that it will be in the hands of the French members within three or four days at most of the time of the delivery of the speeches; and, in that way, that which has been a very serious grievance up to this time will, we hope, in future be removed, and the French members will be able to distribute their Hansard to their own constituents in their own language, within a reasonable time of the delivery of the speeches in Parliament. I beg to move the adoption of the report. Mr. COURSOL. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Committee have taken a step in the right direction; they have acknowledged that the French translators ought to form part of the regular organization of the Hanaard. It is just what we claimed the other day. How-

COMMONS DEBATES.

Dodd,

have done an act of justice towards the translators by giving them the increase mentioned in the report, but I see that this increase is to take place only next year. I think that the Committee would act wisely and would do justice to them, by giving them this year that salary which is small enough in itself; for these gentlemen will not have any more work next year than they will have this year. If the French Hansard is not completed up to the present day, it is not for the want of zeal on their part; on the contrary, I am credibly informed that there are, at the present time, 300 or 400 pages of translated copy in the printer's office. The translators, who have done their duty until now, should not be blamed because that copy has not yet come out of the printer's office. Since the increase of salary given to the stenographers is to be paid this year, I think that in justice to the translators, the $1,000 salary granted to them should also be paid immediately. Moreover, it is to be required of the French translators that they remain here for three weeks, and perhaps five weeks, after the Session. to finish their work. Since it has been found necessary-and very properly, I believe-to appoint a new translator, I do not see why he is not asked to help the others this year, so as to enable them to finish their work as soon as possible, for the translators are mostly members of the press; they have other business to attend to; they have to earn their living, and in consideration of the small salary which is granted to them, it seems to me that their work should be diminished by the addition of this new translator to their number. I think that as a mere matter of justice, the members of the Committee will see the necessity of giving to the translators, even this year, this salary of $1,000. At any rate, if the House is of opinion that they deserve a salary of $1,000, it seems to me that this salary, and not the $500, should be given to them this year. I still entertain the hope that the Hansard Committee will be pleased to take this Daly, matter into consideration, and that the House, especially, will see that the French translators be fairly treated. I is Daws not a favour we ask, it is simply an act of justice. The translators are performing a duty which is just as important as that of the reporters of the Hansard, but they receive less pay. The speeches reported by the stenographers are translated into French as rapidly as it is possible; it is necessary for the translators to have a good command of both languages; they are obliged to write themselves whatever they have to translate, to read over and correct their own manuscript before sending it to the printers, and to read it over again when it comes back from the printer's office. It is easily conceived that they work just as much as the stenographers, as every speech taken by steno graphy is sent to them to be translated into French. It is a long and tedious work which requires the highest degree of intelligence, the greatest zeal and assiduity on the part of these gentlemen. I hope the House, with its usual impartiality, will remedy this want of justice on the part of the Hansard Committee.

Mr. AUGER moved in amendment that all the words after "That" in the said motion be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof :-

"In the interest of economy, it is inadvisable to continue the system of paying out of the public funds a body of Official Reporters and Trans-lators of the Debates of this House."

Mr. COURSOL moved in amendment that the report be referred back to the Committee with instructions to amend the same by substituting in the fifth paragraph for the words "commencing with next Session," the words "including the present Session."

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has spoken on the main motion. He must get some other person to move the amendment.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved in amendment that the report be sent back to the Committee with instructions to amend the same by expunging the following paragraph:

"4. That A. E. Poirier be appointed as an additional translator, and that his appointment date from the commencement of next Session. "And by leaving out in paragraph 5 the name of A. E. Poirier.

Mr. Speaker, I make this motion in order to be consistent with the vote we have just taken. If we think that the expenses are increasing, I do not see why an extra employee should be added to the list of the employees we have already. I think that all those who have just voted to abolish the Hansard-because it is too expensive a publication for this House-will be consistent with themselves and will vote to have the report referred back to the Committee, with instruction to strike out the name which it is proposed to add by the report. These are all the explanations I have to give for the present.

Mr. SCRIVER. The Committee were fully convinced from the information given them that it was absolutely necessary to employ an additional translator as otherwise the translation would be kept back in such a way as to render it almost useless. It appears that the work is now in arrears for about four weeks, and it will be necessary for the translators already engaged to remain that time after the close of the Session, in order to complete the work. A majority of the French members of the House have made frequent complaints to the Committee in regard to this matter, and the Committee, after considering it carefully, and being satisfied that the present staff were inadequate to dicharge this duty with sufficient promptitude, decided to engage another assistant. were sufficient I may say that since the long night sittings commenced, the average quantity of printed matter has been nearly thirty pages of the Hansard. The translators consider that three pages a day is a fair day's work, and it was necessary, therefore, even allowing for the work that can be done by the French reporters, that a regular staff of eight translators should be appointed, and in view of this fact the Committee decided to appoint another one. Mr. Poirier was chosen because his testimonials were of the very best kind, and he was personally known to many members of the Committee as an accomplished journalist, and as a man specially qualified to undertake this work. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee were as reluctant as any members of this House can be, to add to the expense already made necessary to carry on this work; but it seemed to them that if the work was to be made at all satisfactory to the French members of this House it was necessary to engage another translator.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) suggested that as the House voted nay to the last amendment they ought to vote yea to this one. I differ with him altogether. As long as we preserve the system of an official debate, I have always voted to make it efficient and have supported any proposition that would tend to give us a thoroughly efficient and satisfactory report. I believe that it is worse than useless when it is otherwise. One of the conditions of its being efficient is that the French translation should be not merely good, but also rapidly brought out, so that our French confreres may have an opportunity of having the reports of important debates early while yet they are fresh and while their course is directed to them. The report of the Committee, both collectively and also in the statements of the hon. member for Cardwell and the hon. member for Huntingdon, indicate, that for the work this number of translators is required. When the press of the Session commences - and you cannot anticipate the debates- there is somewhere, upon an average, about thirty pages of the report daily, and the hon. member for Cardwell considers three pages a day good work for one translater. You have a proposition now to have eight translators on the permanent staff besides the two stenographers, whose work, the hon. member for Cardwell says, must be deemed equivalent to only one; you have therefore, the present equivalent of nine translators, when ten would be required to do the work. It seems, therefore, that the suggestion of the Committee is a right and proper one, in order that we may have an efficient French as well as an efficient English report. I propose to support the report of the Committee, in the view that as long as there is an official report it should be correctly and expeditiously brought out.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know the reasons that have prompted the hon. member for Montmagny to make this motion, as he has given to the House but very brief explana-tions. 1 for one, Mr. Speaker, will not be suspected, I am sure, of speaking in an interested manner upon this motion. I know that some members of the Committee and members of the House complained the other day, either that the salaries given to the translators were not adequate for the work they had to do, or that their number was not sufficient to do the work imposed upon them. I do not want to discuss the action of the Committee-I suppose they have able discussion it was finally concluded by the Committee thoroughly considered the work the translators have to advance the salaries of the translators in the same proto do. They have asked for the appointment of an additional translator, and against the gentleman whose name is mentioned I have nothing to say. We are not to judge of the political qualifications of the reporters and translators of the Hansard; but if I were to say anything I would say that so far as efficiency is concerned, so far as knowledge of the language is concerned, and so far as thorough qualification for the work is concerned, the gentleman whose name appears in this motion is as well qualified as any others at present on the staff. I did not know before his name was proposed by the Committee, that he was an applicant, but upon learning it I am very much pleased that he is to be nominated as one of the permanent officers of the staff. On the general question, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak with entire disinterestedness. We should not call up any unpleasant reminiscences of the past, when the question is to secure a competent officer of the House. The only questions that we should consider in the choice of reporters and translators for the Hansard are those of knowledge, ability and general qualification.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is one reason why I cannot support this amendment, and it is this: that while I voted cheerfully for the abolition of the report as now conducted -although I failed to accomplish what I intended by my vote-it now comes to a matter of supporting the Committee in their decision upon a domestic question. I have always taken it for granted that the House should support its standing Committees in their reports unless special reasons may be urged against such a course. I have heard no such reason urged at this time, and I shall support the recommendation of the Committee, which is considered essential to the system, so long as we have it; otherwise I would fail in the discharge of my duty to the House, although I voted for the original amendment.

Mr. BERGIN. I rise merely to say that the Committee appointed this gentleman as one of the translators on the recommendations as to his qualifications, and we declined to consider his politics at all. We felt that it was not the duty of the Committee to enquire into a man's politics but into his qualifications, and that politics have nothing whatever to do with a man's qualifications as a servant of this House.

Amendment (Mr. Landry) negatived.

Mr. AMYOT moved in amendment that the said report be amended by substituting in the fifth paragraph, for the words "commencing with next Session," the words "includ-ing the present Session." He said: I think that by this arrangement all parties will be satisfied, and we will have a permanent and effective staff for the Hansard. If the translators deserve that salary, they deserve it as well this year as next year. It is nothing but justice to give them immediately the salary to which they are entitled in the opinion of the Committee, and I think, also, in the opinion of this House. It is a trifling matter to this House. We must remember that this year they have done the work with only seven men, and they are, therefore, more entitled to increased remuneration this year than they will be next year when there will be eight men. As I said at the beginning, it will be satisfactory to all parties and there will be an end to the discussion.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Committee hesitated long before concluding to advance the salaries of the translators. It was felt that the same argument would not apply to the translators as to the Hansard reporters, as the latter had been trained to the work, possessed special adaptability and their places could not be supplied. It was considered a matter of justice towards them to advance their salaries, and the advance to take place after this Session. After consider-portion as the reporters, about one-third, the reporters advance being one third. The question as to the time when it should go into effect was also discussed, and it was decided that it would take effect, as in the case of the Hansard reporters, next Session. I think it would be entirely unfair to take the advance retroactive in one case and not in the other. I think that the Committee arrived at a decision which the House should sanction. I felt myself that there was no justification for granting an advance to the translators, most of whom are here acting as newspaper correspondents, and would be here whether they held translators' situations or not, and the salaries they receive are so much to the good. The case is very different with the Hansard reporters. They have no other employment. Although they are nominally employed here during only three or four months, they are practically unable to obtain other employment during the recess. I repeat that the proposal to make the advance retroactive in the case of the translators and not in that of the reporters is unfair.

(Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if the Mr. LANDRY. motion in amendment, as proposed, by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) is adopted, Mr. Poirier, whose name appears in the fifth clause of the report, will receive this year a salary of $1,000 without doing any work at all.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) His appointment only takes effect next year.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) By virtue of the fourth clause, his appointment only takes effect next year, and in the fifth clause it is stated that these gentlemen will only begin next year to receive the salary stated opposite their names, but the amendment which has just been moved asks that this salary be paid to them this year. Now, a word in answer to the hon. Secretary of State, who says he does not know the reasons which may have induced me to make a motion in amendment

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say that; I said the hon. gentleman had given no reasons.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) In that case, I think it is better not to make them known.

Amendment (Mr. Amyot) negatived, and report concurred in.

THE LATE PRINCE LEOPOLD.

Mr. SPEAKER announced that a Message had been received from the Senate with an Address to Her Most Gracious Majesty of condolence on the death of His Royal Highness, Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, to which the concurrence of this House was desired; and the said Address is as follows :-

" To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty,

" MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN :

"We Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty with the renewed assurance of our attachment to Your Majesty's Person and Government.

"The intelligence of the further affliction which has befallen You, in the early and sudden death of His Royal Highness, the Duke of Albany, has deeply touched the hearts of Your Majesty's subjects in this part of Your Empire; We speak in their name, as well as in our own, when we humbly tender You the expression of our respectful and earnest sym-pather pathy. "Your Illustrious Son had spent some time in Canada, during the residence here of the Marquis of Lorne and Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise.

Our attention was thus naturally drawn to the high position he had, so early in life, attained in the world of Literature and Science, and we had looked torward with confidence and hope to the increasing usesified our sympathy with Your own: Your Majesty's sorrows, we say it with respect of dutiful subjects, have been ours. "We pray that the God of consolation may comfort Your Majesty, and long preserve You to Your people."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the said Address be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE AT ST. CLOTILDE.

Mr. HOLTON enquired. Is it the intention of the Government to establish a post office at St. Clotilde, in the parish of St. Jean Chrysostome, county of Chateauguay? If so, when, and who will be named postmaster?

Mr. CARLING. The matter is now under the consideration of the Governmert.

LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSINGS.

Mr. DESJARDINS enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to bring down during this Session some measure to compel railway companies to do away with level crossings on roads or streets leading to and in the vicinity, or within the limits of large centres of population?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not the intention of the Government to provide for that matter, as it is already pro-vided for by 46 Vic., chap. 24, an Act further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act which provides as follows :-

"In case where any portion of a railway is constructed, or authorized or proposed to be constructed upon, or along, or across any turnpike road, street, or other public highway on the level, the railway company before constructing or using the same, or in the case of railways already constructed within such time as the Railway Committee shall direct, shall submit a plan and profile of such portion of railway for the appro-val of the Railway Committee, and the Railway Committee, if it appears to them necessary for the public safety, may, from time to time. with the sanction of the Governor in Council suthorize and require the company to mhom each safety may. to whom such railway belongs within such time as the said Act directs to carry such road street or highway either over or under the said rail-way by means of a bridge or arch instead of crossing the same on the level."

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of saying whether or not there is any truth in the rumours which have been heard within the last day or two, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have represented that the arrangements recently made with them are inadequate, and that they have asked for a modification of those arrange. ments.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No such communication has been made, so far as I am aware, to the Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND THE FISHERY AWARD.

Mr. DAVIES. The proposition to which the House is asked to accede, in the resolutions which I intend to move, is that Prince Edward Island is entitled to a portion of the amount awarded to Great Britain, as against the United States, at the Halifax Fishery Commission. This proposition has been discussed once or twice in the House, but not at any great length, and it has never been submitted to the Houso in a form in which the sense of the House could be taken upon it. Hon. members will better understand the few remarks which I shall make on the subject, if I real the resolutions to the House:

That by the terms of the Treaty of Washington, 1871, the privilege of using the territorial waters of the Dominion of Canada and the then fulness of his already distinguished career. "Your Majesty's bereavements have indeed been many and grievous, and the interest which You have so often and graciously shown in the afflictions of Your subjects, of low as well as of high degree, has inten-to American citizens, on and after such times as the necessary laws to carry the treaty into effect were passed by the Imperial and Dominion Parliaments, the Legislatures of the said Provinces and the Congress of the United States, in consideration of the payment by the United States Government of such compensation as should be determined by Arbitra-tors appointed by such Treaty.

That the necessary legislation in the premises was passed by the then Province of Prince Edward Island, in the year 1872, while such Liland Province of Prince Edward Island, in the year 1872, while such Esland constituted a separate Province, and being also passed by the Imperial and Dominion Parliaments and the American Congress, the Treaty came into force on the 1st July, 1873, from which date the American fishermen have continued to use and eajoy the said Fisheries. That immediately upon the passing of such legislation, Prince Edward Island as such separate Province and as a consenting party to the Treaty, became entitled to a share of any award which might afterwards be made in favour of Great Britain as compensation for the fishing privi-leges conceded by the Treaty to the Americans. That Prince Edward Island entered the Confederation on the 1st July, 1873, upon certain specified terms which did not either expressly or by implication transfer to the Dominion the right vested in the Pro-vince to a share of such compensation.

vince to a share of such compensation.

That subsequently the Commissioners appointed under the Treaty awarded to Great Britain the sum of $5,500,000 as compensation for the privileges accorded to the United States fishermen.

privileges accorded to the United States fishermen. That the Imperial Government paid out of such award to the Province of Newfoundland the sum of $1,000,000 as its share of the award and the balance of the said sum less certain expenses, was paid over to the Dominion of Canada, which now holds the same. That in the opinion of this House the Province of Prince Edward Island is entitled to receive such a fair proportion of said award as the value of the privileges conceded by that Province to the Americans, before entering Confederation, bears to that conceded by the Dominion as constituted when the Treaty of Washington was ratified. as constituted when the Treaty of Washington was ratified.

I have read the resolutions because they contain a recital of the historical facts connected with this question up to and during the time when the award was made. I may say that the people of Prince Edward Island, irrespective of party, have come to the conclusion that they are entitled to this sum, and I hope the reasons which induced them to come to that conclusion will be sufficient to induce a majority of this House to come to a similar conclusion. The question of the general right of the Maritime Provinces, as such, to share in this award, was brought before the House and discussed at great length in 1880, when it was decided in the negative. That question I am not going to revive. I take it that the large majority which voted against the right of the Maritime Provinces to share in that award as such has completely settled that question, and it is not my desire to revive it in any shape or way at present. But the decision of the House on that general question does not in any way touch the claim which is now presented for the considera-tion of the House. That decision was based upon an argument which was submitted to the House by the Prime Minister, and which ran something in this way: That under Confederation the coasts of the Provinces were merged with those of the Dominion at large; that the term royalties used in the British North America Act, did not apply to the fisheries; that the right to fish was one of common right, belonging to all the people, and could not be granted by the Crown; that the British North America Act conferred the right of legislation on the subject of fisheries upon the Dominion, and having the right to legislate it has the right of administration, and that the rights of administration and responsibility must be co-relative and must draw to it all the advantages. The proposition which I submit is one which does not trench upon the previous decision of the House in the slightest, nor is in any way involved in it. When that question came before the House for discussion, the claim which I have the honour to present now was brought to its notice then by my hon. colleague, and the then Minister of Justice took occasion to remark that whatever the merits or demerits of the claim might be, it must be understood that it was not then being passed upon. will trouble the House while I read some of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice at the time, because I am anxious to assure hon. gentlemen that I am not introducing for the consideration of the House any question in reference to this award, which has been decided by the House, but an entirely new question, which has not been passed upon by the House. The Minister of Justice said ;

Mr. DAVIES.

With regard to the observations of my hon. friend from King's, P.E.I., it may be said that the claims of the representatives of that Island stand in a somewhat different position from that of the elder Provinces, and it may be possible that there is something in their view of the case. It is quite true that negotiations did take place between the Island and the United States, with the consent and knowledge, I believe-I was not in the Government at the time-of the Dominion Govneve-1 was not in the Government at the line-of the Dominton Gov-ernment, on which, and under which, perhaps, certain rights and con-siderations may be due to the colony, which may not be due to the other Provinces. I can only say that, should that, on investigation, be found to be the case, should the Government find, on a full and intelli-gent application of the facts that, under the Constitution and law, and under the Terms under which this Island entered the Union, that any consideration that can be extended to it, the representatives may be quite sure that the fullest and fairest considerations will be given to any claims that may be established."

This was the speech of the Minister of Justice in 1880-the present Chief Justice of Nova Scotia. Hon. gentlemen will see that the claims of Prince Edward Island were not being passed upon by the House, and were understood clearly to be reserved; and the Minister of Justice of the day though he did not give any expression of opinion assenting to the justice of the claim, clearly, was very careful in not denying this justice, in saying that it was an open question, a question to be discussed and decided upon after fuller investigation was given to the facts than had been given to them up to that time. Well, a notice of motion was given by an hon. member from the Island, somewhat similar to the one I present to-day, but it never was reached; and we stand to-day with this claim. which has been pressed by successive Governments of the Island on the Dominion Government from time to time-we stand to-day knowing that claim is unsettled, and I submit these resolutions for the purpose of having it settled, if possible. I may say that I quite agree with the Minister of Justice of that day, that in order to have an intelligent apprehension of this resolution and the claim which the Island makes, we must have a clear understanding of the facts which took place, and the action of the Island on the subject, before it became part of the Confederation. In 1871 Prince Edward Island, then a separate and independent Province, was being pressed by the Imperial Government to yield its consent to the Wash. ington Treaty, so far as it affected that Province. Prince Edward Island was very averse to yielding that con. sent, for reasons which were submitted to the English authorities in the form of a Minute of Council, and which were somewhat similar to those which moved the Privy Council of Canada of that day. The people of Prince Edward Island were averse to selling their territorial rights in these fisheries for a sum of money. They expressed themselves as very doubtful, if they did consent to such a sale, whether the Treaty guaranteed the payment of that money. And in the Minute of Council, which was forwarded to the Home Government, they urged and argued strongly, that instead ot receiving, in return for the concessions they were asked to make to the Americans, a sum of money, they should receive certain trade advantages. In the Minute of Council which is dated July 17, 1871, it is stated :

"That the natural market for its principal productions is to be found in the United States, as was very satisfactorily proven during the con-tinuation of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854; that the fisheries of this Island are the best and most valuable in America, and are much appre-ciated by the fishermen of the United States; that the different Govern-ments and Legislatures of this colony have always hoped that these fisheries would have done much to secure the advantages of another Reciprocity Treaty, or of some tariff concessions authorizing the free admission of the products of our agriculturists who form the majority of our population, and which would have resulted in promoting the pros-perity of the colony; that by the treaty now under consideration the inhabitants of this Island are asked to surrender to the citizens of the United States these invaluable fisheries without receiving in return any just or fair equivalent such as was hoped to be obtained." * The Committee submit that a commercial arrangement with the United States, in consideration of the use of the fisheries, would have been most acceptable; but as the Royal High Commissioners were unable to in-duce the American Government to change its commercial pairs, the people of this Island being extremely loyal and devotedly attached to "That the natural market for its principal productions is to be found people of this Island being extremely loyal and devotedly attached to British institutions, would be most unwilling to throw any obstacle in the way of an amicable settlement of all causes of difference between Great Britain and the United States, and would therefore willingly accept any reasonable money compensation, in addition to the privileges granted, as an equivalent. But under the treaty, nothing of the kind is guaranteed them "

Here we see that in the year 1871, two years before the Province of Prince Edward Island became part of the Confederation, its Government expressed their reluctance to concede the use of its fisheries to the Americans, for a mere money consideration. They folt that it should be made a matter of commercial treaty; but they went on to say, that while they yielded to the strong and urgent remonstrances of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, they submitted they had no positive guarantee, if a sum of money was awarded under the treaty, that it would be paid to them. Earl Kimberly wrote, in answer to that Minute of Council, a despatch intended to remove any doubt on that point, and stating if the Government of Prince Edward Island ratified the Treaty of Washington, he, so far as he could do it, would give them a guarantee that the value of the concessions made by them would be estimated by the arbitrators, and after being estimated, would be paid to them. In the despatch, which is dated the 3rd September, 1871, His Lordship states :

"Her Majesty's Government have learnt, with much satisfaction, that the Prince Edward Island Government have so willingly acceded their wishes in this respect. With regard to the observations contained in the Minutes of Council, which you have forwarded, to the effect that the Prince Edward Island Government would readily accept any reasonable money compensation, in addition to the privileges granted, as an equivalent, but that under the treaty nothing of the kind is guaranteed, I do not understand why the Prince Edward Island Government should object to the reference of the question of the money compensation to arbitration, which seems to be the fairest way of determining such a point, more especially as the fact stated in the Minute, that the rights of fishing conceded by the United States are comparatively worthless, is, it must be presumed, capable of distinct proof."

There His Lordship gave an assurance to the Government of Prince Edward Island, and through them to the people of that Province, that if they passed the legislation necessary to ratify the Treaty of Washington, the amount representing the value of the privileges they conceded by that treaty would be awarded to them; and, although His Lordship does not expressly say that it will be paid, the only logical and legitimate inference to be drawn from his despatch is that if they ratified the treaty, the amount awarded would be paid. Well, Sir, the people of Prince Edward Island did ratify the treaty, and I submit that without their ratification, the treaty would have been of no use, and would have had no force whatever, so far as the Island was concerned. The 33rd article of the Treaty of Washington expressly says that articles 18 to 25 inclusive, which are the fishery clauses of the Treaty :

"Shall take effect as soon as the laws required to carry them into operation shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, by the Parliament of Canada, and by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, on the one hand, and by the Congress of the United States on the other."

So that, by the very terms of the treaty, the Legislature of Prince Edward Island was made a consenting and assenting party to it, without whose assent and consent those articles would never go into operation. Articles 18 to 25 provide— First, that certain concessions shall be given to the Americans; and secondly, that the Americans shall pay for those concessions whatever the arbitrators may award. The people of Prince Edward Island were asked to accede to those terms, and we did so, after having submitted to the Colonial Ministry that there was a possible doubt about the payment of the money, and having received his answer that we should not entertain any such doubt, because the terms of the treaty were clear enough. Now, the question arises, what right had we in those fisheries at all? I submit that the very fact that we were made by Great Britain a party to the treaty proves conclusively the existence of our right. It is not necessary to the purpose of my argument that I should meet the objection that we had no rights as against Great Britain in those waters which she could not give to a foreign nation without our consent. I merely say that Great Britain did not attempt to do anything of the kind; and the right hon, gentleman at the head of the Government when he made his speech in this House in 1871, asking the House to assent to the treaty, expressly declared that the rights of the Province in those fisheries had been secured to it beyond all doubt, and secured in such a way that it could claim them as territorial rights, and Great Britain could not dispose of them without the assent of the Province. The words of the hon. gentleman were these:

"The recognition of the proprietary right of Oanada in her fisheries forms a portion of the State papers of both countries. Now, the rights of Oanada to those fisheries are beyond dispute; and it is finally established that England cannot and will not, under any circumstances whatever, cede those fisheries without the consent of Canada. So that, in any further arrangement between Canada and England, or England and the United States, the rights of Canada will be respected, as it is conceded beyond dispute that England has not the power to deprive Canada of them."

Now, the point I want to make is this--that if Canada had territorial rights in her fisheries secured to her by that treaty - territorial rights which she possessed and which could not be taken away from her, rights which, according to the right hon. First Minister, it was finally established England could not and would not, under any circumstances whatever, cede away without her consent, the same argument applies, in all its fullness, to the Province of Prince Edward Island which then was a separate Province and had as great a right in her fisheries, in the fisheries surrounding her coast, as Canada had in those surrounding her coasts. The right of the smaller Province in her fisheries was as great as the right of Canada in hers. Then we found ourselves, in the year 1871, in this position, that Prince Edward Island possessed certain clearly defined territorial rights, rights which the hon. First Minister says the State papers show conclusively Great Britain could not and would not attempt to force her to surrender without compensation, and that she, with the despatch of Lord Kimberly in her hands, agreed to cede those rights, the right to use those fisheries to the United States fishermon provided the value of the rights she was ceding should be assessed by arbitrators in the manner provided by the Washington Treaty. That treaty recognized the right of all of the Colonial Provinces to act independently one of the other. The Provinces of Canada, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island were equal in power, quoad the fisheries surrounding their respective coasts. Prince Edward Island ratified the treaty the 29th June, 1872, Canada the 14th June, 1872, and the United States Congress, the 1st March, 1873. I therefore submit this proposition to the House, from the treaty and the State documents I have read, that in the year 1872 before Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, she had, as a separate Province and as an independent consenting party award which might be made under that treaty, and I take it as an undisputable fact—a fact which will be conceded by everybody-that had Prince Edward Island remained in her independent position and out of the Union, no question would have been raised by Great Britain or Canada or by anybody as to her right to receive a share of the award. What the share would be would of course, be a matter of decision by arbitration to be indifferently chosen as between her and Canada. If that proposition is conceded, that before entering Confederation, Prince Ed-ward Island had a vested right to a share of the monies subsequently to be awarded, the only question left for our consideration is, did Prince Edward Island, by the terms which can easily be determined by referring to the terms of the Union. I submit these terms do not, either expressly or by implication, establish any surrender made to Canada by Prince Edward Island of the vested right she then possessed. These terms of the Union were very particular and special in defining what should be surrendered by the smaller Province to the larger Provinces, and what should be ceded by the larger to the smaller. Everything the Island was to get from Canada was expressly stated; everything she was to give up to Canada was expressly stated. If Canada took from us a steam dredge, they stated : "We take it and give you so much in return;" if they took a Court House, they made a similar statement; and any other Provincial property or right we possessed which they desired to have was expressly put in those terms, and the sum they were to pay, awarded. Nothing however was said, either expressly or by implication, about the vested right we possessed to a portion of this fishery award, and therefore I submit, as a proposition which ought to meet the acceptance of the House, that if the Island had this vested right, under the fishery articles of the treaty, to a portion of the award, and has not surrendered that right by any of the terms of Confederation entered into between her and Canada, she possesses that right still and has the right to have the sum settled and paid over to her by a fair arbitration, or any other mode which may seem to the House right and proper. It has been argued by gentlemen who take a different view of the case, that when Prince Edward Island came into the Union, she came under the British North America Act, and that the right to legislate upon the fisheries was vested in the Dominion under that Act, and this Act applied to the Island from the day she entered the Union. That is so; but I contend that the Island could only hand over to the Dominion the rights which she possessed at the time, and did not profess to, nor could she hand over the rights she had already parted with, before she came into the Unionthe right which she had sold to the Americans for a term of years—to fish in her waters. That right the Canadian Parliament could not interfere with. It was something which we had sold, and which had parted from us. I acknowledge that the right of legislating with regard to those fisheries will be vested in this Parliament after the expiration of the treaty with the Americans, but the right of legislation has not and cannot be held to embrace or interfere with the right we sold to the Americans for a sum of money. If the award had been made shortly after the Washington Treaty was entered into, every one knows that the money would have been paid to the Island; nobody would have asked the Island to pay it back, and it can never be contended, as a matter of justice, that because a delay took place in the rendering of the award, the Island should be deprived of the right she undoubtedly possessed at the time of Confederation. We only surrendered to the Dominion those rights which had not been parted with by us before. We entered Confederation, and with respect to those rights which we had not parted with, we stand in neither a better nor a worse position than the other Maritime Provinces. But with respect to the rights we had sold before entering the Union, we do stand in a dif-ferent position. Those rights had been changed into a debt due to us, vested in us which we did not and were not asked to surrender to the Dominion at the time we entered the Union. That money was in the nature of a rental. If the sum had been fixed at the time, it would have been paid us. We have in the case of Newfoundland, an authority which stands quoad the Washington Treaty on a similar footing or nearly so to that of the Island before the Island entered Confederation. We have in that case a clear authority and precedent for showing what Great Britain would have done with the money. We all know that, technically, this money was awarded to Great Britain ; but the moment Great Britain received it, she handed it over partly to Newfoundland, and mentioned; that this debt or unascertained sum of money Mr. DAVIES.

partly to the Dominion; if we had not joined the Dominion, we would have stood in the same position as Newfoundland and the Dominion itself, and England would have handed over to us what was considered our fare share of the award. The question is, did we surrender it? And that is the only question. I submit that we did not surrender anything to the Dominion, that we did not surrender any assets of the Provincial Government which are not expressly stated in the terms of Union to have been surrendered. We had lots of other assets besides this debt due to us by the United States for the use of our fisheries. We had treasury bonds lying in our treasury, we had moneys due to us by banks, we had other debts due to the Province. There were none of them expressly assigned, but no one has ever argued that they passed to the Dominion. They stand in no other position than this debt. There is no difference that I can see, and no one has ever had the hardihood to assert that these other assets of Prince Edward Island should be handed over to the Dominion. The mere fact that the money happens to have been paid to the Dominion, after we had become a part of it, should not entitle the Dominion to hold on to it. Great Britain paid the money to Canada merely as trustee to those entitled to it. The money is ours as a constitutional right; the money is ours because it was paid for a concession which we made to the Americans before we became part of the Dominion at all; the money is ours because it was paid for a right in the concession of which the Dominion had no concern; the money is ours because the right was vested in us as a Province at the time of Confederation, and was not ceded to the Dominion; and, comparing small things with great, I say there is just as much ground to assert that the portion of the award that was paid for the territorial rights of Canada should be ceded to Prince Edward Island as to assort that the amount which was awarded for the territorial rights of Prince Edward Island should be ceded to Canada. Of course, the portion coming to Canada would be larger, but that makes no difference in the principle. This question has been passed upon by a Committee of a Privy Council, consisting of the Finance Minister and two other Ministers whose names I forget. The report made by that Committee of Council is very short and very meagre; it does not enter into the circumstances connected with this claim at all; it morely says that, inasmuch as Prince Edward Island happened to enter into the Union on the day the treaty came in force by proclamation, therefore we have no rights; but they evade the whole argument. The mere accident that the President of the United States proclaimed a day for the treaty to come into force which happened to be the same day on which we came into the Union does not affect our right to a share of the award for a concession we made and legislated away two or three years before we came in at all. I will not trouble the House at any greater length on this subject. I dare say some other hon. gentleman from the same Province that I come from may desire to address the House upon it, and I will leave the matter in the hands of the House. My main contention, summed up, is this:-That we were induced to become a party to the Washington Treaty by the representations of the Earl of Kimberly that we had a guarantee in that treaty that any concessions we made would be paid to us after the award was made; that, in the face of that despatch of the Earl's, we ratified the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty much against the wishes of the Government of the day; that having ratified them and being an independent, separate colony, our ratification entitled us to receive, and we had in us at the time a vested right to, a portion of the money that was subsequently to be awarded; that, when we made our Treaty of Union with Canada, none of the Provincial assets passed from the Province to Canada except such as were expressly due to us by the United States was not mentioned in the terms, and, not being mentioned, remains to us at this day; and that the mere coincidence of the President of the United States proclaiming the 1st July, 1873, as the day the treaty was to come into force, and that being the day on which we entered the Union, does not and cannot take from us the vested right we possess.

Mr. BRECKEN. As my hon. colleague remarked in his opening, this is not the first time that this important question has been brought under the consideration of the House. I think I am correct in saying this is about the third time. I have listened very carefully to the arguments advanced by my hon. colleague, and I think he has pretty well covered the question. I think he will agree with me in saying that we have not advanced anything new, that the arguments put forward this afternoon were pressed upon the consideration of the former House of Commons in 1880. I have myself always had a very strong view as to the justice of the claim of the Island to a share of that fishery award, and I do not know that I can advance very much in addition to what has fallen from my hon. friend. In 1871, as he has stated, we were pressed by Lord Kimborly, the then Colonial Minister-and the House must bear in mind that Prince Edward Island was not then in Confederation; we did not enter Confederation till the 1st July, 1873; we were then a separate Province-and Secretary Fish, through the English Ambassador at Washington, Sir Edward Thounton, pressed upon the English Government the necessity of the Province of Prince Edward Island, anticipating what would be carried out by the treaty, and allowing Americans to fish in our waters. I was a member of the Government which drew up the minute which has been read by my hon. colleague, and I believe my name is attached to it. I remember the circumstances very well. We then considered that, when this treaty took place, we ought to receive some consideration, and what he said is quite correct, that the Island looked for commercial advantages and commercial considerations very much more than they did for any thing in the way of money consideration. The matter was brought under the consideration of the Island Government, and we acceded to the wish expressed in Lord Kimberly's despatch, and the Americans were allowed to fish in our waters. The treaty was made, and, as my colleague stated, in the articles of that treaty it was stipulated that the Imperial Government, the Dominion Government, the United States Government, and Prince Edward Island should, by legislation, confirm the terms of the treaty. In June, 1872, we did our part and confirmed the terms of the treaty, and what did we do? At that time we were out of Confederation. We agreed to the terms of the treaty, and we looked forward to a share of the money. I need not go over what was read by my hon. friend. We had an assurance from the Colonial Minister that our rights would be protected, and a request was made—and here is a point my hon. friend has not touched upon—that we should be represented at the Commission in Halifax. Lieutenant Governor Robinson, who was then the Governor of the Island, in a despatch to the Colonial Secretary, dated the 26th July, 1871, wrote as follows:-

"I may add that, in the event of the Acts necessary to give effect to the treaty being passed by the Legislature of P.E.I., my Government will apply to your Lordship for permission to send a representative to Halifax for the purpose of conferring with the agent of the Imperial Government whose appointment is provided for in the concluding paragraph of article 23 of the treaty, and of urging upon hin the claims of this island, to a just share proportionate to the value of our fisheries of whatever compensation may be awarded as an equivalent for the privileges which the colonies are asked to surrender.

usueries of whitever compensation may be awarded as an equivalent for the privileges which the colonies are asked to surrender. "My Government are, of course, aware that Great Britain and the United States are to be represented before the Halifax Commission each by one agent only; but they believe that it would be competent to Her Majesty's Government, as aforeasid, to receive information on the subj ci of our fisheries from a representative to be appointed by the Government of Prince Edward Island." Mr. Odo Rassell, Secretary of State, reports as follows :-

"I am to add that as regards the desire expressed by the Government of Prince Edward Island, that some person should be appointed to attend the Commission at Halifax, it appears to Lord Granville that it would not only be permissible but highly desirable that Prince Edward Island should furnish the fullest information before the Commission as to the value of the inshore fisheries on her coasts. The 24th arti le of the treaty provides that the Commission shall be bound to receive such oral or written testimony as either Government may present, and it will consequently be competent for the Government of Prince Edward Island to send to Halifax any person who may be selected as best capable of giving evidence on its behalf."

I think these two documents show that at that time Prince Edward Island was recognized as possessing separate and independent claims and rights, such as the Island of Newfoundland had when she received her million dollars. Now, as my hon. colleague has fairly conducted this argument, and has not imported any feeling into it, I wish to follow his example. However, I cannot abstain from making one remark, and it is this: In 1877, when the Commission were sitting at Halifax, my hon. friend was the leader of the Local Government, and he was employed by the Federal Government, then led by the hon. member for East York, to appear at Halifax as one of the advocates, I suppose, of the Dominion generally. Now, Sir, I cannot but express my regret that the hon. member, then Premier of Prince Edward Island, with all the information before him, having these two dispatches that I have just read to the House show. ing that this Island had been independent, and had a right to be recognized by the Commission, having also an assurance from the Imperial Government that she need not be at all doubtful as to her right of gotting her sharo-I say, I think it is matter of great regrot that my hon. friend did not then insist upon the rights of his Province to have a representative before the Commission in Halifax. I think it is a matter of great regret, because I expected that my hon. friend, upon becoming a member of this House, would have brought up this question before. At the last General Election in 1882, one of the most serious charges that my hon. friend brought against me was that during the years from 1879 to 1882, I did not advocate the interests of my Province in this House as I ought to have done, but contented myself with moving for papers; and that when an amendment was proposed by an hon. gentleman then representing Halifax, who is now Governor of the Province, I did not advocate the claims of the Province as distinctly as I ought to have done. The answer I made was that if I had erred how much more had my hon colleague erred when Premier of Prince Edward Island in not insisting upon the rights of that Province. He was before the Halifar Commission as counsel, and I suppose that he discharged his duties well. Why did he not have a representative of Prince Edward Island there, and if, as he argues here to day those separate rights existed, why were they not urged before the Commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE. Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to interpose one word, as I was in office here at the time. The reason, and a very sufficient reason, why Prince Edward Island had no representative was that the treaty did not provide for her sending a representative.

Mr. BRECKEN. I am quite well aware the treaty did not provide for it, but I am proceeding in the line of the argument of my hon. colleague, and I say that if our rights exist to-day, as I claim they do, they existed in 1877 when that Commission sat. A though my hon. frierd was counsel for the whole Dominion I should have supposed that, coming from Prince Edward Island, and his special duties being to collect information affecting the fisheries of that Island, he would have taken advantage of the opportunity to advocate the claims of Prince Edward Island then, as well as now. That would have been a more opportune time for him to have done so in his double capacity as Premier of the Province and as Dominion counsel before claims as the present Premier of Newfoundland did.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon gentleman contend that any counsel acting on behalf of the Commission could have asked the Commissioners to award a separate claim for any Province? The hon. gentleman knows that the arbitration was as between Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. BRECKEN. My hon. friend held a brief as counsel for the whole Dominion at large, but he was also Premier of the Colony at the time; and if that right existed then, as I contend it did just as strongly as it does to day, I say that it was the duty of the hon. gentleman, in some shape or form, to have brought that matter before the Commission. His clients were the Dominion Government, but he was also the Premier of the Colony and he should have made some effort to have pressed the claim which he says exists now, and which must therefore have existed then. The hon, gentleman is quite right when he says that in 1871 we consented to agree to the views of the Imperial Government, though they were contrary to our own views in the matter, and that in 1872 we confirmed that arrangement by legislation. And if that was the position we occupied when we legislated in June 1872, whatever award might be given by the Commissioners for the overflow of the Dominion fisheries within the three-mile limits, we would have our share of it in proportion. We had would have our share of it in proportion. bonds in the Treasury, we had money in our coffers, we had claims due us, but when we went into Confederation they were not handed over, nor were they asked for; and when this share was awarded, and we had legislated as we did under the treaty, we were then in precisely the same position as Newfoundland. That Commission sat in 1877. Suppose it had sat in August, 1872, and the award had been gvien, and a month or two after we had, by our legislation, confirmed it, would we not have been entitled to our share just as much as Newfoundland, and can it be said that because of circumtsances over which we had no control that Commission was delayed until the year 1887, that rights which existed in 1872, by this delay, were taken from us? I do not see how that is going to be the contention. I •remember very well the debate which took place in this House in 1880, and the very able speech delivered by the First Minister at that time-and, of course, in regard to constitutional questions both the Honse and the country look upon the right hon. gentleman as a very high authority. The First Minister contended.-and no doubt theoretically he was correct,---that the right to fish within the threemile limit was an Imperial right; that it belonged to Her Majesty's subjects in general; that fishermen might come from Ontario, Quebec, the North-West or any other part of the Dominion, and fish within that limit; that it was a common right, that it was not in the shape of a royalty, although Prince Edward Island particularly might enjoy greater advantages than other people from the fact that they are in the neighbourhood. But if that was an Imperial right, why did not the money awarded go into the Imperial treasury? Why was it handed over to the Dominion of Canada? Then there comes another argument: If it is not a territorial right but an Imperial right, and if the waters around the sho, res of the various provinces are the property of British subjects in all parts of the Dominion, why were $1,000,000 given to the Island of Newfoundland? If the hon. gentleman will turn to the evidence taken before the Commission they will find from the statements of one of the American counsel, Mr. Forster, that as regards the matter of the fisheries, the most valuable fisheries were around Prince Edward Island. We know very well that the Newfoundland bank fisheries are beyond the three-mile limit; and I assert, without fear of contradiction, that there is no part of the Dominion of Canada more seriously affected by allowing Americans to fish within the three-mile limit than Prince Edward Island. or partly in consideration of the amount due to the Mari-Mr. BRECKEN.

the Commission. He ought to have urged our separate I happen to know something about the matter, for when I was Advocate-General, an Ame dayn schooner was seized. brought into harbour and condem iel, and we had the whole evidence taken. If the Americans were excluded from the three-mile limit, taking one year with another, it would be disastrous to them in the prosecution of the mackerel fishing on that part of the coast. It is true that sometimes they may follow fishing outside of the three-mile limit; but, as a general rule, if they were prevented from fishing within that limit they could not prosecute fishing with success. Here is another point which gives Prince Edward Island a particular claim for the portion of the award. The Americans resort to a mode of fishing very different from that pursued around our coast by our fishermen. We have very few fishing schooners, and the general practice is to fish with boats. The Americans come there with seines and take fish of every description, probably not 25 per cent. of which are of any value to them, for they only take mackerel, and the other fish are thrown overboard, decompose in the water and damage our fisheries. Another consideration which goes to show that we should receive a portion of the award is, that the Americans will throw vast quantities of bait on the surface of the water for the purpose of drawing fish around them, and in that way they will draw schools of mackerel from the waters in which our men are fishing. These are arguments to show that we really have sustained a loss. not think that I need press the case further than to say that we were outside the Dominion when the bargain was made, and when it was ratified; and if the Commission had sat promptly, as it should have done, we would have been in the same position as the Island of Newfoundland. I agree with one remark made by my colleague, that mea of all shades of politics in Prince Edward Island consider that we have a just and equitable claim to a fair share of the $5,500,000 awarded by the Halifax Commission and paid by the United States Government to Great Britain for the privilege of fishing within the three-mile limit.

> Mr. McINTYRE. As this subject has engaged much attention among the people of Prince Edward Island for many years, I desire to say a few words in regard to i^t, especially as I had not the honour of having a seat in Parliament the last time it was considered here. I am glad the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has placed the case before the House in its proper light, because when it was last introduced it was in connection with the cases of the other Maritime Provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It must be remembered that we were altogether in a different position from those Provinces at the time the Washington Treaty was negotiated. At that time, as has been said, we were an independent Province; but as Great Britain was anxious that we should give our adhesion to the treaty, the Island Government of the day did so on the distinct understanding that this action should not prejudice our case, should any award be made against the American Government or whatever course might be ad pted, because at that time it was not certain whether an award would be made or not. On 1st July, 1873, Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, and on the same day the Washington Treaty was put in force by a proclamation issued by the President of the United States. This has been made the ground-work for refusing our claim to a share of the award. What the real ground-work was I have been unable to ascertain. I do not intend, however, to say anything more on that branch of the subject, because the action of the Government has done away with that contention, whatever it was. It will be remembered that, prior to the election of 1882, the Finance Minister came down with a proposition to give a certain amount of bounty to the fisher-men of the Maritime Provinces. This was in consideration, time Provinces in respect of this award. Whatever may have been the objection of the Government previous to that year, they receded from it on that occasion, for by giving our fishermen a share of the award in the shape of interest on it, they y gave away their case the fact, I fail to see accumulating their case Such being completely. what objection the Government can have under the present circumstances to granting us our fair share of the award. I hope it is not in consequence of Prince Edward Island being the smallest and weakest of the Provinces. I do not believe it is so; but at the same time I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that this idea is gaining ground on the Island very rapidly, not only in regard to this matter, but in regard to nearly every other measure respecting the Island. Our terms of Union are no more fulfilled to day, than we are receiving our share of the fishery award. Last year our Province received in the shape of bounty some $16,000. Now it appears to me that is a very small amount, and if we are to receive anything like the interests on our share of the award, it should be something much larger than that. I do not see why the balance of the interest which should accrue on our share should not be handed to the Local Government, after the fishery bounty has been paid out of it. Newfoundland receives without any trouble her share, amounting to a million of dollars, and it seems to me that if Newfoundland has a right to that amount, we have at least the right to an equal share, for the reason that the most profitable fish, the mackerel, have been taken by the Americans on our shores, while, on the other hand, on the shores of Newfoundland the fish which have been caught have been mainly herring, which have been used for the purpose of bait. The mackerel fisheries are not prosecuted there, because there are none of that kind of fish, or very few, on the shores of Newfoundland, and the cod fisheries are altogether beyond the three-mile limit. The hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution has so thoroughly advanced everything in connection with the subject, that I find it is unnecessary for me to say anything more than that I hope the Government will take whatever steps they see fit, to do justice to Prince Edward Island, not only in regard to this award, but in every other respect.

Mr. TUPPER. I regret very much that I cannot on this occasion give a hearty concurrence with the efforts made by the gentlemen who have just addressed the House, from the Maritime Provinces, in reference to this alleged claim. It always affords me, naturally, the very greatest pleasure to be able to add what little weight I can in securing what I believe the Maritime Provinces, or any of them, may be ertitled to at the hands of this country. But in the case which has been laid before the House by the three gentlemen, who are well able to advocate their claims, I have failed to discover any fair or equitable reasons for the courlusions to which they have arrived. It is admitted, I conceive, that there is no absolute legal right on the part of Prince Edward Island to receive the amount claimed by this resolution from the revenues of the Dominion of Canada, in addition to the treatment received and the rights already. granted that Island by the legislation which took place after the discussion in 1880, to which allusion has been made to-day. They claim that in all fairness, upon certain facts which they say existed in the Island previous to its entrance into Confederation, they are entitled to certain treatment, which has not been accorded to them. I do not hear to day any mention made of many other matters which are most important in the consideration of this question; I did not hear to-day any allusion made to what had preceded this treaty, in the older Provinces, or in Canada as she stood at the entrance of the Island into the Union. I heard allusion made to certain legislation passed in Prince mous expense to which the older Provinces up to the year 1873 had contributed, in protecting those rights which were secured under the Washington Treaty.

Mr. DAVIES. They never spent a dollar in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. TUPPER. I heard no allusion to the fact-and I think in connection with this matter, the all-important fact-that the Provinces of Canada, before the entrance of the Island into the Union, took upon themselves the responsibility, and incurred the expense of setting up the right which under the treaty has been admitted to exist. We know that for years the rights of British subjects in these colonies had been invaded; these rights had been denied by the citizens of the United States, by the fishermen of the United States and by the American Government. Under the old treaty their fishermen had invaded these waters, and they claimed and exercised the right of fishing in our waters for many years. The Government of Canada fitted out cruisers and maintained them, in order to protect the rights and claim the rights of the Canadian fishermenthey claimed that if the Americans wished to participate in those fisheries they must give some compensation. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have heard reference to the fact that nothing was mentioned in the terms of Union between the Island and the older Provinces, in 1871 as to the surrender of their rights, or of the rights which they supposed to exist in connection with the claims under the clause of the treaty in question. But I contend that as the whole course of events, and even the terms of the Union, show that when this Federal Government was seized with the responsibility of protecting the fisheries in the Islam when the responsibilities of protecting those fisheries was placed on the shoulders of the Federal Government, and when the expense in obtaining the treaty was incurred, and the treaty itself was signed and ratified, no word was mentioned in the arrangement between the Island and the Federal Government, we have every reason to believe, when treating this question in a general and broad way, that the Government and the people of the Island had no idea that when they entered into the Union they should ask that treatment should be accorded to them which none of the other Maritime Provinces obtained. We know to-day that this question is approached from a Prince Edward Island point of view, notwithstanding the general question of whatever rights the Maritime Provinces had, was thoroughly discussed, and was decided, and decided in a manner, I must say, which has created considerable satisfaction and approval in the Maritime Provinces generally. In the benefits of that settlement the Island has shared, though she never contributed one dollar towards the immense expense to which the Federal Government went in securing her rights under the treaty. The Federal Government out of this money has not only granted this bounty, which is an advantage to the fishermen of the Island to the same extent as in the Maritime Provinces, but has spent the same amount of money, in proportion to the necessities of the case, in protecting the fisheries of the Island, and in the development of the river fisheries of the Island, in the same way and with the same expense and care as in the older Provinces, which bore the heat and burthen of the day before the Island came into the Union at all. I would not have opposed the treatment accorded to the Island in the settlement of this question, but I think that treatment was fair and generous on the part of the other Provinces, and that the Island has very little to complain of in regard to that treatment. I think if we turn back to what happened previous to the settlement of this question, previous to the Washington Treaty, we will find that the Island, perhaps governed by the views of the hon. gentleman, who has just stated that they do not want to Edward Island, but I heard no reference made to the enor. | barter these rights for filthy lucro-but at any rate for some reason or other they did not place a monetary value on the fisheries of the Island. They never acquiesced in the steps that were taken by the Government of Canada in regard to this matter before the treaty; and I think that it is too late in the day for them, after the expenses have been shouldered by the older Provinces, to come here and say that, although they did not approve of the course taken previous to the treaty, in asserting those rights, still they want now to receive more than any of the older Provinces, or more than the rest of the Maritime Provinces, receive. I have taken the liberty of addressing these views to the House, mainly because, as a representative of one of the Maritime Provinces, I believe that pushing forward claims, such as this, that cannot be supported, and that have no hope of ultimate success after the settlement of the general question, injures the bond fide claims that may come from the different Provinces, and in reference to which it is desirable to show a unanimous feeling, and to back that feeling with such arguments as will convince the other Provinces of their propriety. I therefore regret that this question should again have been brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. HACKETT. Before this resolution is submitted to a vote, I want to make a few remarks in regard to it. The question is one of very great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. It is not a new question. It has been debated here for several Sessions, and I think hon. members are now pretty conversant with the details of the question. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has made a very good speech from the standpoint perhaps of his Province; but it must be remembered that we do not base our claim for this money on the fact that Prince Edward Island is a Maritime Province, but on the fact that the Government of the Island were called upon by the Imperial Government to ratify the Treaty of Washington, so far as the fishery clauses were concerned. At that time Prince Edward Island was a separate colony, and had no connection whatever with the Dominion of Canada. We ratified that treaty at the urgent request of the Imperial Government and we come here claiming that, having done so, the island is entitled to a portion of the award, and should be treated in the same way as Newfoundland had been treated by the Imperial Government. We all know that, when the question was before the Halifax Commission, the claim of Newfoundland was regarded as distinct from that of the Dominion of Canada; and in apportioning the award, the sum of $1,000,000 was allowed to Newfoundland for the privileges she conceded under the Washington Treaty. We base our claim upon the fact that when we were asked to assent to that Treaty, we were outside of the Dominion of Canada, and that the concessions granted to the Americans on our behalf were not granted by the Dominion of Canada, but by the peovince of Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman, who has just taken his seat, has referred to the fact that the Dominion of Canada has undertaken the protection of the fisheries. We all know that when a colony, under the British North America Act, becomes a part of the Confederation, under section 91 of that Act, the Dominion assumes the protection of its fisheries; that is conceded; but, while the Dominion assumes the protection of the fisheries, that does not give the Dominion the right to lease or sell those fisheries. All the colonies of British North America, before Confederation, had territorial rights; those rights were guaranteed to them by the Imperial Government; they held those rights almost from time immemorial; and when they came into the Dominion of Canada, they of course surrendered those rights to the Dominion, and the Dominion undertook to protect the fisheries of the several Provinces; but that fact did not give the Dominion any rights of territory, or any claims for compensation that those colonies might have had in those fisheries previous to Confederation. Now, Prince Edward Island had a right, the right to the purchase money had accrued to the Island before Confederation. Mr. TUPPER.

there can be no doubt about that—it is not disputed-to certain moneys which were to be granted as compensation under the Washington Treaty. By no word or implication has that right been surrendered, and I maintain that the Island is justified in claiming a portion of this money on that ground. We are very thankful that the Dominion Government have given us a share of the fishery bounty, but I submit that that is altogether distinct from this award. The bounty is given to the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces to encourage them in their industry. If we are to surrender our claims to this bounty, on the simple ground that we are to receive a portion of the award, I should be very sorry, because I think it is a right principle that the fishermen should receive the benefit of their fisheries. Now, I have something to say with regard to the fact that Prince Edward Island was not represented before the Halifax Commission. I think we had a perfect right to be represented there, and to press our claims for a portion of this money. I think that was the proper time to press our claims. It is indeed a matter of regret that this question should now come up before the Dominion Parliament; because the right of Prince Edward Island having existed since the Province ratified the Treaty, that right could have been put before the Halifax Commission, and we should not be obliged to come here now, as it were, supplicating the people of this Dominion to grant us a right that could have been obtained under the terms of the Treaty. Now who is to blame in this matter? There must have been neglect on the part of somebody in regard to presenting the claims of the Island before the Halifax Commission. I will not say that the hon. gentlemen who represented Prince Edward Island in this House, from 1874 to 1879, were delinquent in their duty; but I think it was equally necessary at that time, when the matter was still unsettled, that the hon. gentlemen who represented the Province in this House, should have pressed its claims. But, Sir, I have gone through Hansard from 1874 to 1879, and I have been unable to fin 1 that the hon. gentlemen who represented the Island at that time said one word with regard to this matter. They sat here silently watching the progress of business in this House, and never said a word in advocacy of the claims of the Island they represented. Now, I do not want to charge these gentlemen with neglect of duty. They probably considered that the matter was not worth attending to, then. But I do charge them with this fact, that they want to blame the representatives of the Island supporting the Government, at this time, and the Government itself, for not giving to the Island a portion of this money; and it comes with bad grace from these gentlemen who sat here silent, not saying one word in favour of the Province from which they came, now to charge us with any neglect of duty in this matter. In 1880, when this matter was discussed in this House, the hon. gentleman then representing a constituency in the Island, intended to submit the following Resolution. We know the House decided this money properly belongs to the Dominion of Canada, by a vote given in 1880, and several hon. gentlemen who now sit in this House then gave their vote in that direction; but that was on the general principle. We asserted that the claim of Prince Edward Island was separate and distinct from the claim before the House, and a gentleman who, I regret very much, is not in the House now, was prepard to move this Resolution in amendment to the motion that the money belonged properly and by right to the Dominion :

"1st. That before the 1st July, 1873, the Treaty of Washington was in full force and effect as respects Prince Edward Island. "2nd. That there was no express or implied surrender of the interests of the Island in the fishery award, at the time of the Island entering Confederation Confederation.

"3rd. That the British North America Act does not apply to the case eration and the said Act does not authorize the general Government to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the Island fisheries for the general purposes of the Dominion."

Mr. WOODWORTH. Who was the hon, gentleman who was going to propose that Resolution?

Mr. HACKETT. Dr. Muttart, who then represented King's county in this House. His contention, and it is the correct one, is that before the 1st of July, 1873, the Treaty of Washington was in force and effect as regards the Island, and that the Island, on going into the Union, did not surrender, in writing or in any way, any right or claim she had with respect to this matter. Now, it may be said that by the fact of the Island going into the Union at that time and subsequent to the ratification of this Treaty, she conveyed to the Dominion Parliament the right to deal with this question. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in 1875 a correspondence took place between this Government, then led by the hou. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and the Imperial Government, with regard to the rights of British Columbia; and in that correspondence I find the following dispatch on this subject. I want to show this House that the effect of any enlargement of the boundaries of the Dominion by the admission to Confederation of any Provinces subsequent to the ratification of the Treaty, did not affect the right of any Province with regard to this Treaty, and this is the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. This dispatch of Lord Carnarvon, dated the 12th of August, 1875, is as follows :---

"Her Majesty's Government have been in communication with the law officers of the Orown, with regard to including British Columbia, under the operation of the Treaty of Washington, and they are advised that the words 'Dominion of Canada' existing in the Treaty of Washington, article 21, must be governed by the state of things in May, 1871, and cannot now receive a wider construction from the fact that additional tarritory has since hear added to the Dominion In May, 1871, and cannot now receive a wider construction from the fact that additional territory has since been added to the Dominion. The article 33 provides the means by which the several articles named are to be carried into operation, but does not provide in any way for extending the meaning or operation of those articles, and Her Majesty's Government are advised that the Act of the first of March, 1872, and the Act of Parliament of Canada, 14th June, 1873, must both be con-strued with reference to the Dominion of Canada, as that Dominion was on the 8th of May, 1871."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAGGART, in moving the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 46) respecting the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company, said : No material changes have been made. The first change is in the fifth line, second page, to specify the indenture of sale; there were two sales, one from the North-Western Railway to the Ontario and Quebec Railway, and the other, that portion of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Perth and Smith's Falls; the change is to specify that. In the second clause, there is an addition made so that the Company can carry out the conditions of the indenture of sale and so that the stockholders, at a meeting, can change the chief place of business to Montreal. In the 8th clause, there is a change which enables the Company to issue sterling bonds instead of currency, if they choose. Then there is a clause added, the 10th, which extends the time for constructing the road and bridge to four years.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

St. CLAIR FRONTIER TUNNEL COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving second readings of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 62) to incorporate the St. Clair Tunnel Company, said : The amendments are all merely in the wording and not material. I think the attention of the Senate should be called to the construct that road from Selkirk and some point east of fact that amendments are made by them in Bills sent from this House which simply alter the phraseology without any apparent object, and without affecting the objects of the Bills at all. There are four pages of amendments to this Bill, all of a purely grammatical construction, and my own opinion is that some of them make the Bill worse than it was in the shape it passed this House.

Amendments read the second time and concurred on.

ST, LAWRENCE AND OTTAWA RAILWAY BILL.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 56) to empower the bondholders of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway Company, to vote at meetings of the Company and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAKE. Are these of the same improved character?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They are of the same character, and some of them are of a very extraordinary character. For instance, in the words "bonds outstanding and unpaid," we are asked to leave out the words "and unpaid." There is another amendment where, for the purpose of the Act, $5 is declared to be a pound; we are asked to put in "for the purpose of voting under the Act." The amondments are all of that character, and I really think we ought not to be put to the trouble, in this House, of altering the phraseology of our Bills in this way.

Mr. BLAKE. Who is it "finds some business still for idle hands to do?"

Mr. WHITE. I am afraid it is a very busy hand that does this.

Mr. BOWELL. He is an unknown character in this House.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

WINNIPEG AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP COMPANY BILL.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 131) to amend an Act to incorporate the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company.

Mr. ORTON. Explain.

Mr. CAMERON. I have already explained to the House and I think specially for the information of my hon. friend what the purpose of this Bill is.

Mr. ORTON. I have not got this Bill before me just now, but I have understood that the object of the Bill is not only to extend the former charter, but to give power to construct a road to which a charter has already Session. I have no objection to been given this any Bill passing this House which will ensure the rapid construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, but this Bill has been brought in a very unusual way into this House, and one of the clauses of the Bill proposes, I understand, to give the projectors of the original Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company a paid up capital of $400,000 of stock. Now, although I believe it is right the projectors of any railway in the public interest, and especially such a railway, should be paid for their expenditure in explorations and any expenditure they may have incurred in a scheme of such importance, I still think that the giving power to a company to have paid-up stock to such a large amount is a serious drawback to the work it proposes to carry out.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount?

Mr. ORTON. $400,000 of paid-up stock to the projectors of this road. I am happy to see they have taken power to Winnipeg on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which leads me to believe they are likely to take the route proposed in the Bill which I had the honour of bringing up in the Railway Committee in the absence of Mr. Royal, who had charge of it; and I hope that they will still see that, in the public interest, it is advisable to construct a road from the present Canadian Pacific Railway, the present railway system of that country, by the shortest possible route to Hudson Bay. It is well known that, on the east side of Lake Winnipeg and on the east of the Nelson River up to Fort Nelson, a road can be constructed probably 150 miles shorter than on the west, and to Churchill it is still nearer. I shall not offer any opposition to this Bill, except to draw attention to this extraordinary clause, which proposes to give a paid-up stock to the extent of $400,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I may state, in answer to the point my hon. friend has mentioned, that that particular provision is copied from the provision which the House and Parliament thought fit last Session to pass and to include in the Bill, in reference to the companies then proposed to be amalgamated. It is transcribed verbatim from the Bill of last Session, and Parliament has already given its sanction, under the circumstances of this case, to the provision. However, that or any other point which my hon. friend wishes to discuss in the details of the Bill will be fully considered by the Railway Committee when it has the Bill before it, which I believe will be on Friday next, under the Order of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I very much sympa hize with the general objection the hon. gentleman has taken as to the allotting of paid up stock without cash representing that amount, but the hon. gentleman and others have thought it all right to allow $30,000,000 of the stock of the Canadian Pacific Rail. way Company to be issued without consideration-for, out of the $55,000,000, there is only $25,000,000 paid up-and I really do not see why, when we swallow such camels, we should strain at such gnats.

Bill read the second time.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill (from the Senate) was considered in Committee, amended, reported, and read the third time and passed :-

Bill (No. 122) to amend the Acts 40 Victoria, chapter 49, and 45 Victoria, chapter 24, being Acts relating to Permanent Building Societies, carrying on business in Ontario. (Mr. Cameron, Victoria).

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on Mr. Shakespeare's proposed motion, that in the opinion of this House it is expedient to enact a law prohibiting the incoming of Chinese to that portion of Canada known as British Columbia.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) In rising to speak to the motion of my hon. colleague on this important subject, I desire to take this opportunity of thanking hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House for affording us an opportunity that we otherwise might have been deprived of, through a little slip of my own. It shows me that there is a very kindly feeling evinced towards the members of British Col umbia, and I trust that we shall find another exhibition of it by a unanimous vote in favour of the Resolution before the House. I may say that so far back as 1865, legislation was enacted in the colony of Victoria, in New South Wales, under an Act entitled : "An Act to amend the laws affecting Chinese immigration to, or residence in Victoria." Now, a peculiarity struck me in connection with this Act; it does not use a stream of immigrants of that class flowing steadily into the word "Chinese," but it uses the word "immigrant," in one of its clauses, and it defines what immigrants under the Act shall mean. In that clause it says:

"The word 'immigrant' shall mean any male adult native of China or its dependencies, or of any islands in the Chinese seas, not born o British parents or any person born of Chinese parents."

This Act goes on to say:

"The master of every ship, upon arrival at any port in Victoria, hav-ing passengers on board, shall distinctly specify and state in the list of passengers required by any Act now or hereafter in force relating to passengers arriving in Victoria, to be exhibited or delivered to the Col-lector or other chief officer of Customs at the port of arrival, whether any and which of such passengers are immigrants within the meaning of this Act, and in default of his delivering such list without so specifying, as aforesaid, such master shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £200."

Now, this law was in force in the year 1865, and remained in force until the year 1881, when it was amended by an Act entitled: "An Act to amend the Chinese Immigration Statute of 1865," and in that amendment I find in clause 2:

"If any vessel having on board a greater number of immigrants within the meaning of the Act (No. 259) than in the proportion of one such immi-grant to every hundrea tons of the tonnage of such vessel shall arrive at any time in any port in Victoria, the owner, master, or charterer of such vessel shall be liable, on conviction, to a penalty of one hundred pounds for each immigrant so carried in excess of the foregoing limitation.'

It also goes on to say:

"For the purposes of this Act, the tonnage of a vessel shall be ascer-tained in the manner prescribed by "The Passengers, Harbours and Navigation Statute, 1865."

Clause 3 says:

"Before any immigrant arriving from parts beyond Victoria shall be permitted to land from any vessel at any port or place in Victoria, and before making any entry at Customs, the master of the vessel by which such immigrant shall so arrive, shall pay to the Collector or other principal officer of Customs, thesum of ± 10 for every such immigrant, and no entry shall be deemed to have any legal effect until such pay-ment shall have been made and such immigrant for whom such sum has ment shall have been made and such immigrant for whom such sum has been paid, shall receive from the said Collector, or other principal officer, a certificate to that effect. If any master shall neglect to pay any such sum, or shall land, or permit to land, or suffer to land or escape from such vessel, at any port or place in Victoria, any immigrant, before such sum shall have been paid by such master or his agent, or before such list shall have been delivered, such master shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of £50 for each immigrant so landed or permitted or suffered to land or to escape : and in addition to such penalty, shall also uay the sum hereby required to be paid for each such immigrant." pay the sum hereby required to be paid for each such immigrant."

The Act goes on further to say:

"Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, any immigrant arriving in Victoria who produces evidence to the satisfaction of the Col-lector or other principal (fficer of Customs or other duly authorized officer, that he is a British subject, shall be wholly exempt from the oper-ation of this Act, and a certificate of the Governor of any British colony shall, on being verified to the satisfaction of such Collector or other officer, be sufficient evidence of the claim of such immigrant to exemption under this section."

It also says:

"The aforesaid sum of £10 sterling shall not be payable by or for any immigrant duly accredited to this colony by the Government of China or by or under the authority of the Imperial Government on any special mission. "The penalties and restrictions imposed by this Act shall not nor

"The penalties and restrictions imposed by this Act shall not nor shall any of them be held to be applicable in the case of any immigrant being one of the crew of any vessel arriving in any port in Victoria and no such immigrant being one of such crew shall be discharged and landed from such vessel within Victoria, or shall at any time go on shore, except in the performance of his duties in connection with such vessel, and every such immigrant so discharged or landed or so going on shore shall be liable to a penalty of £20 sterling. "Any vessel on board which immigrants shall be transhipped from another vessel and brought to any port or place in this colony shall be

"Any vessel on board which immigrants shall be transhipped from another vessel and brought to any port or place in this colony shall be deemed to be a vessel bringing immigrants into the said colony from parts beyond the said colony, and shall be subject to all the requirements and provisions of this Act, and all immigrants so transhipped and brought to such port or place shall be deemed to be immigrants arriving from parts beyond Victoria."

This Act clearly shows the intention of the people of Victoria, New South Wales. By the Act of 1865, re-enacted in 1881, they restrict the influx of Chinese immigrants to their shores, as it is a detriment to the colony to have such it. We find that Queensland, another of the Australian colonies, passed an Act, in 1877, entitled: "An Act to amend the Gold Fields Act, 1874," so far as relates to Asiatic and African aliens, and in other respects. By the title of this Act the framers did not make it apply exclusively to Chinese; nevertheless, it was to prevent the importation of that class particularly also Asiatic and African aliens. The Act goes on to say:

"The sum payable by an Asiatic or African alien for a miner's right shall be £3, and for a business license shall be £10 for each year during which the same is to be in force, instead of 10s. and £4 respectively, as which the same is to be in hered, instead of 105. and 27 respectively, as by the said recited Act is provided. "Any person who shall be found mining, or carrying on business on any gold field, not having in his possession a miner's right or business license lawfully issued to him, shall be subject to the penalties proviaed.

"In any prosecution or any offence against the provisions of this Act, the averment in the information that any person named therein had not in his possession at the time of the alleged offence a miner's right or business license lawfully issued to him shall be sufficient proof that such person had not such miner's right or business license unless the defen-dant shall prove the contrary."

That appears to be rather a peculiar clause, and at variance with our ideas of English law; the course of ance with our ideas of English law; the course of procedure is something like that of a naval court-martial. The accused is held to be guilty, and is called upon to prove his innocence. In this case the unfortunate immigrant has to prove that he has the right to mine under license—the onus of proof resting on him instead of the prosecutor. Coming nearer home, we find an Act for the prosecutor. Coming nearer home, we find an Act for the strict State of California, but the immigration of Chinese from the state of California, of the United State of California, of the United State of California, the under the state of the United State of California, the United State of Chinese Rest of the the United State of California, the United State of Chinese Rest of the United State of California, the United State of Chinese Rest of the United State State State State of Chinese Rest of the United State called the United States Chinese Restriction Act, which was passed in 1882. This Act, I dare say, is more generally known to the House, and I only mention it to show that in California legislation has been enacted to restrict the immigration of that most undesirable class, the heathen Chinese. That Act, although not perfect—very few Acts are—is sufficient to show that the intention of the people of California is to restrict, if not to prohibit, the influx of Chinese into that fair State. This matter having been taken up and represented at Washington, the Act above referred to was passed by the House of Representatives, and is at the present moment the law in the United States. As regards our own Province: We find that the people of British Columbia, through their representatives in the Local House, have passed a sories of Acts on this question, some of which have been disallowed. I will not refer to the Act passed in a previous year-the prohibitory Act which has been disallowed for reasons patent to every hon. member; but I will refer to the Acts passed in the last Session of the Local Legislature. These Acts were three in number. One is to prevent the immigration of Chinese. Another is to prevent Chinese acquiring Crown lands. The third, and the one which I think most applicable to our case, and the one which certainly will meet with the approbation of this House, is one to regulate the Chinese population of British Columbia. I doubt whether the first Act, to prevent the immigration of Chinese, will altogether stand the constitutional test when submitted to the Minister of Justice. Nor do I think the Act to prevent the Chinese from acquiring Crown lands should be passed, because I think it would be unfair, after a person is once in the Province, to pass legislation which would touch one and not all. But the Act which covers this case, or rather leads up to its consideration, is the Act to regulate the influx of the Chinese population of British Columbia. In that Act it states :

"The term Chinese in this Act shall mean any native of the Chinese Empire or its dependencies, and shall include any person of the Chinese race.

The Act goes on to say:

"Chinese having lands shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $40."

I maintain that there is sufficient matter before the House to show that in other parts of the British Empire, namely, in the colonies of Victoria and Queensland; and also in the State of California, legislation has been enacted to restrict this undesirable class; and I think we should take up the clauses that are embodied in the Act of our Local Legislature, and give an expression of opinion in regard to them. I have in my hand a pamphlet issued by the Board of Immigration of the Hawaiian Islands. They, strange to say, are anxious to get the Chinese there. They say :

"There are no authentic returns of the Chinese population, but it is estimated at 13,500. The immigrants bring no women with them, as a rule. Statistics recently furnished by planters show that about 5,000 are employed on sugar plantations. A very large number are occupied in cultivating rice, which is a profitable business. Others are engaged in garden vegetable cultivation, and in domestic services. An examina-tion of the Directory for the Kingdom (George Bowsers) shows that out tion of the Directory for the Kingdom (George Bowsers) shows that out of about 693 firms and persons engaged in business in Honolulu, 219 are Chinese, 40 are Hawaians, and the rest are of other nationalities. "Lately the cultivation of taro has engaged the attention of the Chinese, while the natives are disposed to cultivate it less It appears from the returns made by the planters that the Chinese are generally preferred as labourers. The situation of the Chinese in the Kingdom, their disinclination to bring women with them, their intermarriage with native women, or alliances with them; their great their, their aptitude for every kind of business, raise a number of social and political quesof the Viceroy, so that if it is deemed best to encourage further Chinese immigration, it may not be obstructed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if a Chinese Viceroy can take steps to prevent the Chinese going to the Sandwich Islands, surely, irrespective of this Resolution altogether, if proper steps are taken here, the immigration of the Chinese into British Columbia can be restricted, if not entirely prevented. Again, in the Report of the Attorney-General of Hawaii it is said :

"The large number of Chinese in the Kingdom make it necessary tor the Government to inform itself carefully as to the condition and thought the Government to inform itself carefully as to the condition and thought of these people. In numbers they are nearly as large as the Hawaiians, while they are distributed throughout the Kingdom, improving the land, cultivating rice, taro and vegetables, and in every direction, and in every place showing themselves to be the most industrious labourers in the Kingdom. In addition to this, they are rapidly acquiring wealth, and with that wealth will come, in some shape, political power. This body of men, so powerful and increasing so fast, is unknown to us. No attempts have been made to study them, or discover their ideas motives or movements. The Law Department is informed from time to time of the organization of secret societies, but what their purpose is, it is diffthe organization of secret societies, but what their purpose is, it is difficult to discover, nor is it an easy matter to investigate their social con-dition. Europeans who speak the Chinese are not readily obtained, and as a rule, they command very high salaries Excellent Chinese inter-preters can be obtained, but there is a disposition to believe that their race prejudices will control their honesty. The difficulty of securing a read and reliable method of knowing more about the theorem. good and reliable method of knowing more about the Chinese must be met. It is not only impossible to ignore these people, but it is mere foolishness to do so."

Now, Sir, if in a place where at one time the immigration of the Chinese into the country was agitated, so as to add to the population, and provide for what was considered at that time to be a necessary addition to the labour market, they now set their faces against the immigration of those Chinese for the reasons I have stated, surely the same rule might be applied to Canada in the interests of one of her I find also, according to the immigration Provinces. statistics, that even as recently as 1882, about 8,000 Chinese flocked into British Columbia. I know that as many as 450 arrived on board one vessel, and that eight vessels arrived in rapid succession within three and a half months, making a total of a little over 4,000 into that Province in that short space of time, and out of the whole number of Chinese added to our present unfortunately small population. there were not five women. Taking a still more recent time, taking the immigration of last year, according to the statistics furnished by the immigration agents to the Department of Agriculture and Statistics for the Dominion, I find that there were no less than 1,335 arrived in the first six months, and 1,622 arriving subsequently, making the total arrival about 3,000. Now, when we consider that in the Province of British Columbia, although it is no fault of our own, but may be caused perhaps by the insurmountable barrier of the Rocky Mountains-we have not that steady influx of desirable population which would give us as large a population as we might wish-owing to these facts, I say, we have not as large a population as we might desire, and certainly not as large as many of the members of this House would I am sure equally desire we should have. I have no doubt that every member of this House is particulary desirous of seeing the representation of British Columbia in this House augmented. I know that they are equally desirous of seeing the representation of Manitoba increased, as well as that of the North-West Territories, as was recently expressed in a discussion in this House at the present Session. Now the sooner we have a desirable class of immigrants coming into British Columbia, the sooner we shall receive that representation in this House which will be to the satisfaction of every hon. gentleman here. My colleague in moving the Resolution referred to the Orders in Council. I have already referred to them, as well as to the Acts passed in other parts of the world, which combined clearly show that this is not the only place where legislation has been enacted, or sought to be enacted, for the repression of that most undesirable class of immigrants. My colleague also referred to the petition sent by the people of British Columbia upon the subject. I was present at a large meeting in the city of Victoria, one of the largest ever held in the city which bears Her Majesty's name, and the people with one voice moved a resolution that a petition should be sent on to the Governor General in Council, requesting that measures should be taken by this Parliament to restrict, if not to prohibit, the immigration of Chinese into British Columbia. That petition was sent on, but with what effect we can only imagine, because up to the present moment it has remained, I have no doubt, in one of the pigeon holes of some office in the Departments of the Government. I hope yet to see that petition come to light, and that it will result in some action being taken to meet the wishes of the people of British Columbia. My colleague also mentioned the question of the competition of Chinese with white labour. Now, the Chinese work for $1 or $1.25 per day; and it must be remembered that they can live on from 10 to 15 cents per day, according to their mode of living, and they think they live most sumptuously. With white people it is different. Most of them have wives and families, and they can only expect to get the current wages of the place, which are $2 $2.50 per day. Now, it takes nearly the whole of that amount for a married man to keep himself and his family as they should be kept; and the point I wish to make is, that the white man is placed at great disadvantage when he enters the field of labour and toil in competition with heathens, who are able to live upon so small an amount. Now it is all very well for people to say that the white men should go ahead, until they starve out that class of people, and that employers of labour should not employ Chinese. That is all very well in theory, but it will not work in practice, because it stands to reason that when an employer has the option of getting a man for $2.50 a day, or $1.25, he is going to take the man who touches his pocket least; although I can state most conscientiously that I believe that the work done by one white man is equal, if not superior, to that done by two Chinese. They are not physicially equal to the performance of the same amount of work as are those who live on three good square meals a day. As I stated before, the Chinamen come without any wives or families. It is not necessary, nor would it be proper or politic, for me to give here an infinitude of reasons why Mr. BAKER (Victoria).

their immorality, of all things, renders the Chinese the most undesirable class to have in the Province. The experience of California and Australia, as well as of the Ilawaiian Islands, goes to show that the morals of this class of immigrants are decidedly low. I could state many things in proof of that, if it would be proper to do so; but I would simply intimate that their depravity is certainly beyond description. When we see people flocking into a country, we naturally expect that they are going to stop there, and establish their homes. But it is not so with the Chinese. They come for a brief period; they live on a very small amount of money; and after passing two or three years, they go back to China, taking with them from $750 to $1,000 each, and remain there for the rest of their lives. But they send back "my cousin." Every Chinaman has about fifty " cousins," and he sends his "cousins" to the country where he made his fortune, and they are everlastingly coming, without intending to stop, and they are of no advantage to the country when they do come. Another reason that makes them undesirable is, that they will not marry with any of the women in the country. If they did, I have no doubt a very desirable race would spring up. Now, I think sufficient has been said, not only by myself, but by my colleague, and by other hon. gentlemen interested in this question, to show that British Columbia does smart under the lash of a very great grievance in this regard. In the other Provinces of the Dominion you scarcely ever see ten China-men together. I question if there are in the whole of this House ten gentlemen who have ever seen ten Chinamen together; and I know that there are many in this House who have never seen a Chinaman at all. I have been frequently twitted about the Chinese since I have arrived in this part of the world, and many fond enquiries have been made of the hon. gentleman who, a few years ago, represonted Vancouver district in this House, in larguage possibly more forcible than polite, but sufficiently conclu-ive from his staudpoint, to show that that class of immigrants was a most undesirable one. Now, I am aware that the Treaty with China, signed in 1842, would possibly, although I would not say probably, bring about some inter-terence on the part of the Imperial Government, if Canada undertook to exclude the Chinese. But by that Treaty, I find, Hong Kong was ceded to Great Britain in perpetuity; the ports of Canton, Amoy, Foo-choo-foo and Shanghai were thrown open to trade and commerce; British subjects were released from all ports, and the Islands of Chusacg and Ku-lang-su were held until the specie indemnity had been paid by the Government of China to the Government of Great Britain. As four ports by that Treaty were thrown open to the trade and commerce of the world, 1 think, as an equivalent to that, we should throw open the ports of Halifax, St. John, Quebec and Montreal for a brief period, and let the Chinamen flow in there as steadily and continuously as the people of these Provinces would allow them to do. I think, if that were done, we should very soon find the whole country up in arms against that kind of immigration. We should also find that, like other immigrants landing at the ports of Halifax, St. John and Quebec, they would take a very long time to filter not only through Canada, but the United States, and until the railway was finished, at any rate, we should find very few John Chinamen coming across the Rocky Mountains to our Province. Now, it has been said that the Chinamen are no good. I say so too, but in a qualified way. They are good in some respects when wanted, but their day of usefulness has gone by. Last year we were not in the same position in British Columbia as we are this year. The railway from Port Moody to Emory is nearly constructed; the line from Emory and Yale to Savona's Ferry is very nearly constructed; and I am sure that the contractor for those sections of the Canadian Pacific Railway can find as many Chinamen and other labourers in the Province now as he is likely to require for the completion of that portion of the railway, with the exception of a few skilled mechanics, which Chinamen certainly are not. Consequently the arguments which were urged last year against the Dominion taking any steps to regulate the influx of Chinamen into British Columbia, on account of the prosecution of public works, cannot at this time hold good. Now, if there is one thing above another which should induce every loyal and British heart, and every Canadian heart, too, to oppose the introduction of the Chinese, it is their utter disrespect to women. We all know and feel that none of us in this world can get on without women. The Chinamen, if they do not themselves understand, should be taught, that they must do what all civilized people in the world do, that is, respect the fair sex. In conclusion, I may say that I have been frequently asked in conversation: "What are you going to do with the Chinese that you have already got?" Well, I would say, let them go back to-

" Their land of pimentos and chillies, Which are emblems of tempers as hot as their clime, Where the blaze of the sun quite bewilders the senses, And bleaches the roses of youth in its prime. Where the mutton too oft manufactured from goat, Is killed the same day it is crammed down your throat, And every man English, be he who he may, Can never eat less than two breakfasts a day.

Where the breath of the sea breeze comes o'er the 'senses,' Like the blast from the mouth of some farnace 'intenses, Where oysters, like cabbages, grow on the 'treeses,' And cows even browse in the depths of the 'seases.' Where the coup de soleil is a true coup de grace, And the fever called yellow is a knocker of brass; On the door of the tomb one enters to-day, And to morrow formatten is left to decay."

And to-morrow, forgotten, is left to decay

That is the fate the Chinaman will come to; and I hope the views I have expressed will be endorsed by every hon. member of this House by voting for a measure to restrict and regulate the influx of Chinese into the Dominion of Canada, or in any case into that portion of it known as British Columbia

Mr. ALLEN. My remarks will be very short, because, knowing the amount of business that is yet before this House, I do not care to take any greater portion of its time than is absolutely necessary. We find that the people of British Columbia are to-day as anxious, if not more anxious than ever, that Chinese immigration should be put a stop to. I am one of those who have had a good deal of experience with those people, and my experience is that of every civilized person who has had occasion to reside in their neigh bourhood, their habits cannot even be hinted at and their immorality is such that no white people raising a family would desire to have Chinese anywhere near their houses. The interests of British Columbia are at stake in this question; if we allow the Chinese to continue coming into our country, the experience of British Columbia will be the same as that of Australia and California, and there can be no doubt the concensus of opinion on all sides will be that means will have to be taken to prevent Chinese labour coming into competition with the white labour we wish to have in this country. As I said a year ago, we want immigrants who will remain here, who will spend here the money they earn, and who will do their share in building up our country; and the day will come when we will be obliged to adopt some restrictive measures in reference to this Chinese immigration; but, as Australia and California, and other countries, have not gone so far as is proposed in the Resolution of the hon. member for Victoria, I think we should amend it by inserting the word "restricting" instead of "prohibiting." An absolute prohibitive measure might be a high-handed pro-ceeding for a country like ours to adopt, which requires so many people, especially as other countries have not gone that far; and 1 would move, therefore:

That all the words after "law" be left out and the following inserted instead thereof: "restricting or regulating the incoming of Chinese into the Hominion of Concession." into the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HOMER. When this Chinese question was before the House last Session, I stated that as soon as there was a certain prospect of obtaining a sufficient supply of white labour to replace Chinese labour in British Columbia, I would give my support to a measure restricting the further importation of Chinese into the Dominion. Since that time. the Northern Pacific Railway has been built to a point on Puget Sound, within a short distance of the ports of British Columbia, and a large flow of immigration has gone into the State of Oregon and Washington Territorios, adjoining British Columbia, over that road, and a comparatively large immigration has also been brought by that road to British Columbia. By the addition of this immigration, and that which will come in during next season, to the Chinese popu-lation now in British Columbia, we will be enabled to obtain all the labour required to carry on railway construction and the various industries of the country; and I am thorefore prepared to support a measure introduced into this House for the purpose of restricting the importation of Chinese into the Dominion.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). This question is one of very great importance, and I feel that at this late period of the Session it will be impossible to give it that consideration which it demands at the hands of this House and the Government. I think the Government will have to take the matter into consideration at some early day, and I hope they will. I know that at the last elections in the different constituencies where there are large boile of mechanics and labourers-in the cities and towns for instance-this question was pressed upon the candidates with a considerable amount of vigour. In Ontario we are very much interested in it at present, and the time is coming, I apprehend, when we will feel, with our friends in the extreme west, that it is a question which must be taken into account; but in view of the fact that we have very little time now before us, and that there are some important measures yet to be considered which must really receive some attention at the hands of the House this evening, I think we had better postpone the consideration of this question. I beg, thereiore, to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BAKER. I would only state, in a few words, what I think every member for British Columbia is desirous this House should do, and that is that we should take a vote upon this question, so as to obtain the sense of the House on it, in order that at some near period a restrictive law should be enacted. It is simply in this view that we wish to obtain the sense of the House on the Resolution moved by my hon. rolleague.

Mr. GORDON. I am sorry indeed that the hon. member for Hamilton has throught fit to propose this amendment, and I am sure the people of Hamilton, a city not far from Toronto, will also be sorry to hear of it. We have had petitions presented to this House, no latter than yesterday, asking Farliament to introduce a measure restricting Chinese immigration, and another one has been presented from that city to-day to the same effect. That is evidence, to my mind, that a portion, at least, of the people of Canada, are beginning now to anticipate the near approach to themselves of the evils they have been heaping on the people of British Columbia, and I am satisfid there is not an hen. member from British Columbia, where every constituency is flooded with these Chinese, who would dare go before the people and advocate their admission to the Dominion. I think it is wrong to the people of British Columbia, after the long discussion which has been had on this subject, to endeavour now to avert a vote on a question which is not only of importance to British Columbia but of future importance to every part of Canada. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion, and allow a direct vote to be taken on the principle of the Resolution before the House.

Mr. BARNARD. I will not occupy the attention of this House more than a few moments. I am pleased with the present appearance of things. Formerly, we could not get a hearing on this subject. Now, fully one-half of the House are satisfied that the question is coming up. It is a question that affects us seriously in British Columbia. It is weighing upon us heavily, a small and poor population, such as we have, to have to support these Chinese. More than that, these Chinese will creep across your borders before you are aware. They will take advantage of the Canadian Pacific Bailway, and will cross the mountains into the North-West Territories, and when they come down to this Province of Ontario, you will understand someting about Chinamen.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Mr. Speaker, I seconded the amendment before you. It may seem strange that an Ontario member should take any interest in this question, but it occurs to me that, when a matter is brought before the House from Session to Session as repeatedly as this has been, and with almost unanimity on the part of the representatives of that section, and is concurred in by the people of that section, we are entitled to give it fair consideration, and although it is late in the Session, I believe it is a question of sufficient importance to that distant Province to demand a fair, reasonable consideration at our hands, and an expression from us. I believe it is a question of very great importance, perhaps of vital importance to the future of that Province. Surely it is reasonable to suppose that the gentlemen from that Province, who have spent almost their lives there, should be more familiar with the effect of the Chinese immigration than we are. Still, we can bring experience in other matters somewhat to bear on that question. It is not, as I understand it, a question of settling, so far as the Chinese are concerned. They do not become settlers, but they take, I believe, the place of those who would become settlers. It is a principle in settling a country, as well as in nature, that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time; and I believe it to be the fact that, where these Chinese are in great numbers, our people will not go. It has been stated time and time again, and every person who knows anything of it understands that these people do not come into British Columbia or any other portion of America for the purpose of settling. They do not take root. They come there to perform a certain amount of labour, earn a certain amount of wages, and go back to their own land. Much has been said in relation to the habits of these people. I shall not dwell either upon their vices or their virtues. We are informed that the parliamentary vocabulary would hardly be sufficient to describe them. Of virtues they have some, no doubt-one of economy-but I believe they carry that to an extent where it ceases to be a virtue. My reason for urging the consideration of this is based upon the fact that its tendency is to exclude our own people from that Province; I believe it tends to exclude our own settlers. The proposition is not to expel the Chinese who are there, it is not to absolutely prchibit their coming there, but it is to regulate it to that extent which experience shows to be to the advantage of the Province. I believe that the unrestricted influx of Chinese immigration can have no other effect there than the general degradation of labour, and I believe no greater calamity can befall any class of community or any community itself than anything which tends to degrade labour. Among the objections to slavery as it existed in the neighbouring Republic, among the great objections to it, was the degrading influence which it had upon the whites. Many opposed it on account of its injustice North Grey (Mr. Allen). I think it is desirable to restrict Mr. GOBDON.

to the slave; others on account of its degrading influences upon the white. Perhaps, at the time when slavery existed. there was not a more unfortunate class of persons than the poor whites, classed by the slaves themselves as "white trash." The habits of these Chinamen are such that I believe our white labour will not compete against them, and if they prevail to any extent, they can have no other tendency than to degrade labour. If the importation into that Province is to continue as it did during last year, it will soon become a question whether it shall be a Chinese colony or a colony of our own people. I believe, in the settlement of a new country like this, the quality of immigration is a matter of very great importance, of the first importance—what class of people the soil shall be "seeded down with." It would not be well, I think, that the people of British Columbia should feel that they labour under any special disadvantage from having joined this Confederacy. If they had not, they would have been responsible only to the Imperial authorities. Other colonies in the position in which they would have been had they not joined the Dominion, have passed restrictive measures against Chinese immigration which have not been disallowed by the Imperial Government. Hence, if we continue to refuse to give this question proper consideration, they may feel placed at a disadvantage in that respect. British Columbia is being rapidly brought nearer to us. Soon the railway will be completed, and the distance will be materially decreased. When we then extend our hand across the Rocky Mountains, it is our wish to grasp the hand of our own countrymen and not that of a settlement of Chinese. I shall have much pleasure in supporting the Rosolution with the proposed amendment.

Mr. FOSTER Before the vote is taken, I desire to say a word or two. In the first place, I desire to say that I think it is fair to the Province of British Columbia, and to this question as well, that we should express our opinion upon it, and should not adjourn this debate and so shelve the question. I am in favour of having the question voted upon, as a matter due, I think of right, to British Columbia and to the delegation which has so earnestly pressed for a vote upon this question. In the second place, I desire to say, as having spoken on this question last year, and not being in favour of a prohibition of Chinese as Chinese, that I occupy the same position this year, and yet I am going to vote for the amendment, reserving the right to say in what way and to what extent restriction should be applied. I do not believe that Chinese should be prohibited simply because they are Chinese. If a Chinaman is a good, decent, industrious man, he has as good a right here as any other man; but if there are classes that do not come under that category, then I believe that class of them should be restricted, and therefore I intend to vote, if it be allowed to come to a vote, for the amendment.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I quite agree with the remarks of the last speaker, as to the position of the representatives of British Columbia in this House on this question. When there is such a unanimous opinion on the subject in that Province we can scarcely disregard it. I have heard no sufficient reason advanced by the hon. member who moved the adjournment of the debate, why this question ought not to be voted upon at the present time. We are beginning to hear the question raised by labour councils in different parts of Ontario, and I think the question is as suming that importance that we cannot now reject the principle of the Resolution. I shall support the amendment of the hon. member for North Grey.

Mr. HESSON. I quite sympathize with the efforts of the representatives of British Columbia to regulate in some way the immigration of Chinese into their Province. I am disposed to support the amendment of the hon. member for that class of immigrants, from the fact that our friends from the Pacific coast complain so bitterly of the evils resulting from it. There must be something wrong in it when they so unitedly and so repeatedly express their disapprobation of that immigration, and I think it is but fair that there should be an honest expression of opinion by the members of this House upon that question; therefore, I do not think it desirable to adjourn the debate. We observe that in the United States restrictive, and in some instances prohibitive. laws have been passed against Chinese immigration, and I think it is time for us to move in the same direction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his motion to adjourn the debate. As I have already stated upon several occasions, I consider there is a great deal in the objection that is taken to the unrestricted immigration into British Columbia, and especially to the Pacific Coast, of Chinese. They are not of our people, they are not of our race, they do not kindly mix with us, and they do not even become settlers. They come over and work a little while and after making a little money they take it away home with them, though leaving the results of their labour. Then there are moral reasons which we need not discuss, which, perhaps, render a contact between the whites and the Mongolians inadvisable and unpropitious. But there are some considerations we must not lose sight of. In the first place, I do not know, at this moment, what the Treaties are between England and China on the subject of intercourse, commercial and otherwise. I presume, however, that England would not interfere with any legislation of ours, as she has permitted legislation in the Australian colonies. There is another point that should be very carefully considered. We are just finishing the Pacific Railway, and one of the objects of that enterprise is to enable Canada to compete with the United States for the Chinese and Japanese trade. I am glad to learn that our great Canadian steamship companies have it seriously in contemplation, as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway is finished to Port Moody, to establish a line of first-class steamers running from Victoria, or some other point in British Columbia, to Hong Kong and on to the Sandwich Islands. Now, this steamship company will have to make arrangements in Hong Kong and other Chinese ports, and I suppose they would like to go on to Canton, but I don't know about that. They will have to make arrangements to get a trade, and it might seriously impede the success of that line if we legislated in a manner to offend the Chinese Government. The Chinese Government is well informed on everything that goes on in the outer world; they are not the Chinese of fifty years ago. Like their neighbours in Japan, they are now embraced within the number of civilized nations, in every way civilized-I mean in modern ideas, as they have an ancient civilization of their own. But they have the same commercial ideas as the European nations and the nations of North America. Now, it might greatly impede the initiation of any trade between Canada and China if the Chinese Government found that when we approached them to make commercial arrangements we had shut down the gate and said : " We want to trade with you, but we won't allow any of you to come tous." This is a matter for grave consideration. Then, Mr. Speaker, there are certain contracts connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway which are to be finished, I suppose, next year; and I do not think the Government could have made such satisfactory contracts if it had been supposed that they could not get Chinese labour. The Government, however, are fully alive to the importance of the question. I believe that when our Pacific Railway is finished and trade begins to flow into British Columbia, not .nly by San Francisco and by Panama but across the continent by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mountains. We have had a large portion of that work com-there will be a flow into that Province of our own race, of pleted, I am sorry to say, by Chinamen. Before I loft people from England, Ireland and Scotland, and Europe British Columbia to attend to my parliamentary duties this generally; and then there will be no difficulty in supplying the wants of the labour market. Therefore, I would suggest that the hon. gentleman who has this motion in hand do not press it just now. Government will pledge themselves to issue a Commission to look into the whole subject during the present summer, to consider its trade relations, its social relations, and all those moral considerations which make Chinese immigration inadvisable; and we will be prepared to come down with the conclusions thus arrived at, at the next Session. I hope my hon, friend will accept that suggestion. We will issue the Commission and have it sit this summer. It will examine the whole question exhaustively, and will submit the whole case to Parliament at its next Session, and the results of that report will be laid before Parliament. I hope and believe, I am certain, that then we will be in a better position to deal with the subject, and I am satisfied, also, that the legislation which will be the result of such Commission will be in the nature of a restrictive regulation of Chinese immigrants, Under these circumstances, I hope the hon. gentleman will either be satisfied with my statement or allow it to stand over until he considers my proposition. I am sincerely anxious that the question should be dealt with; but we should not deal with it on this discussion, but when the whole subject, as well as the evidence submitted in Australia, California and Washington, has been condensed, collated and submitted to the Canadian Parliament, so that we may be able to have before us the same full information which those bodies had, before we take any action. That is my suggestion. I hope the hon. gentleman will either accept my suggestion at once and withdraw his motion, or allow the motion to prevail that the debate be adjourned for a day or two; and if he does so, I will give him an opportunity to bring it up again.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I am sure it is very gratifying to the members from British Columbia to hear the very favourable expressions from the leader of the Government. With respect to the Treaty between China and England, I do not think there is any difficulty about it. The Australian colonies took hold of this question some years ago. They passed restrictive measures, and the Home Government have allowed them, and they are in force in those colonies at the present time. We are cn the same footing with the Home Government as the Australian colonies are; hence, what they are in a position to do, we are equally in a position to do in that regard. So, there is no difficulty on that score. With respect to the steamer between China and British Columbia, if it is a condition that we are to have a Chinese population in British Columbia for the sake of the steamer running between those countries, I say the people of British Columbia do not want any steamer. That is the voice of the people there. What we want is to get rid of, or to prevent any further immigration of Chinese to the Province. There are steamers running between San Francisco and ports of China; yet the Americans have a measure prohibiting Chinese immigration. That restriction docs promoting onlinese immigration. That restriction does not prevent the steamers doing trade between the two countries, and they are doing a large trade, too. I do not anticipate for a moment that any restrictive measure which might be passed by this Parliament would prevent a Treaty or business rela-tions between the Dominion of Canada and China—not the slightest. If they are on head cli slightest. If there is any money in it, they are on hand all the time. With respect to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway: 1 presume it is well known to every hon. member that not one Chinaman has been employed on the road this side of the Rocky Mountains, and the Chinese question only affects the road on the western side of the Session, I made it my business to see Mr. Onderdonk. I put to him this question: Is it necessary to induce any more white people to come to British Columbia to work on your contract? He said : No; I have all the men I want, with the exception of first-class mechanics. I can give employment to quite a number of first-class mechanics, but as to other labour, I have all I want. I say we have enough labour in British Columbia to build all the railways we shall require for the next wenty years. Moreover, as I stated in the House the other day, I received a letter only a few days ago from one of the largest employers of labour in the Province, and he said this: I am sorry to say there are a large number of men walking about without being able to find employment. That is a very sad state of affairs; and yet we are told that it is necessary to allow those Chinese to come into the country-those slaves who are bought in China and consigned to Chinese companies in British Columbia, just the same as you consign a piece of merchandise, and after they arrive in the Province they are sold to the highest bidder. We are told that it is absolutely necessary still to allow those slaves to come in o British Columbia, and shut out the white men, who have their wives and children to feed, and clothe, and educate, and public and religious institutions to support. These slaves have no wives, they have no children and no churches to support. Every dollar they make, with the exception of a few cents required to maintain their miserable existence, they take back with them to China; and it is only a matter of a short time before what we are going to do upon a question of this kind. For they accumulate a certain sum of money; they my own part, I would sconer have it voted down, if hon. then leave British Columbia, and in their place gentlemen do not feel like voting in its favour, than that it comes another batch of slaves to do the same thing. It is no should be left hanging, as though we did not care about it. wonder that the Executive Council of the Provincial Govern- I am in carnest about this matter; the people in my Proment have constantly passed Orders in Council requesting the Dominion Government to pass some restrictive measure to relieve the people of that Province from the monstrous evils to which they are subjected. In view of these facts, it is a serious question, and one which cannot any longer be overlooked, and I sincerely trust that every hon. member will look at the question fairly and honestly and deal with it apart from all party politics, and vote on it on its merits, just as though the question affected their own Province and their own constituency. Let every hon. member consider how he would act if the Chinese were taking the positions which should be filled by their boys and girls, their sons and daughters, being meanwhile compelled to walk about unable to secure employment in order to enable them to sustain life This, I repeat, is a very serious question. With respect to the flow of immigration, I am happy to say there are large numbers of people going to that Province at the present time and we do not require ships to come from China bringing 300, 400 or 600 Chinamen at a time to British Columbia, as was done two years ago. Just imagine, in one summer bringing 8,000 Chinamen into that Province where there is such a small population of white people, and last summer 3,000 more came. For aught we know next summer we will have 3,000 more, or possibly 6,000, especially in view of another railway being commenced there, when no doubt an effort will be made to bring in a much larger number of this class of people. Hence the greater necessity, I may say, for this Parliament to pass a restrictive measure, or at all events to affirm the principle, so that at an early day we may pass a measure to prevent these people coming in. Now, with regard to appointing a Commission, I would say that that has already been done, for in 1879 this House appointed a Committee which met and took evidence, which is now on record, and is a matter of history. It was proven to that Committee that to allow those people to continue to go into that Province was very injurious and undesirable. Now, Sir, in addition to the restricted or prohibited from entering into Canada. Committee which was appointed in 1879, we have the No harm at least can come from voting on the experience of three colonies in Australia; we have the Resolution. I hope, therefore, the right hon. gentleman experience in the United States, which have passed a prohibi- will allow the motion to pass, and that he will not consider Mr. SHAKESPEARE.

tory measure, and we have also the local Acts which have been passed by our Province, and which have been disallowed. I think at the present time there are two Acts which were passed by our Provincial Parliament during last Session. Whether the Government will allow them or not, of course I cannot say, but I should hope that they would allow one of them; and at all events it seems to me that there is sufficient evidence to enable every member of this House to vote intelligently upon a question of this magni-tude. Surely it is a Provincial question, and if the Province has unitedly, without a dissenting voice, in the Provincial Parliament passed and voted in favour of some restrictive measure, surely they are the best judges of the situation, and the requirements of that Province. I maintain, Sir, that some respect should be shown to such an expression of opinion given in that Parliament. In addition to that, we have the representatives of British Columbia in this House, who I believe are unitedly in favour of a restrictive measure, and I think in view of all these facts some positive action should be taken. What does this motion to adjourn the debate mean? It means to burke the question; and I think the hon. gentleman when he made it-well, I was going to say that it was an ungrateful act, but I will not say that. Now, Mr. Speaker, I really am in favour of having a vote on this question. I think it would be far better to do that, and have the question settle than to adjourn the debate and leave it hanging fire, not knowing vince are in earnest about it, and are desirous of having some measure passed. Besides we had a petition sent to this Parliament, and presented yesterdey, from Toronto, and another to day, signed by so three hundred persons, asking that some prohibitory or restrictive measure should be passed by this Parliament. In view of these facts, in view of the evidence we have before us, I think if we were not to vote on a question of this kind we would be neglecting our duty, we would not be true to the interests of the people who have sont us here.

Mr. GORDON. As the seconder of the Resolution, I think it is right and proper that I should also state that I should object to the withdrawal of this Resolution. I am sure my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Government, would not wish to see supporters of his, coming from the Pacific Province, going back to their constituents and being charged with bringing forward buncombe Resolutions, or that after putting them forward earnestly, we agree to with-draw them simply because we are told to wait a little longer. That would be placing us in a false position. I am certain that the railway works do not now demand that this class of labour should be employed. There are thousands today lying idle; hundreds of men are applying to me, asking on what conditions they could get employment in British Columbia, and I always tell them, that until the Chinese are restricted from going there, I would not advise them to go into British Columbia and place themselves in the low, degraded level on which these people stand. I think, therefore, without prejudice to the Government, we should deal with the question before the House, and if the Resolutions are adopted, the Government will be ably to take such steps as may seem right and proper to them, having in view the interests of Canada as a whole, and the interests of British Columbia-I say that knowing the opinion of the House on the question whether they should be in any way that the representatives of British Columbia wish, under any circumstances, to interfere in any degree with any policy which would be conducive to the best interests of Canada, no matter in what part of Canada that policy may be applied.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I ask leave of the House to withdraw my motion for the adjournment of the debate.

Motion to adjourn debate withdrawn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After the strong appeal made by the hon. gentleman, and as I do not want to put them in the position of appearing to make a buncombe motion, I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the words "restrict or regulate" to be inserted in the amendment of the hon, member for Grey (Mr. Allen), and instead of the words "into British Columbia," insert "into Canada," because we could not prevent them from coming into British Columbia while we allowed them to come into any other part of the Dominion. If these amendments are made, I would not object.

Mr. ALLEN. I am willing that the amendment suggested should be made.

Amendment agreed to; and main motion, as amended, agreed to.

SUPERANNUATION OF JAMES HEARN.

The House resumed the adjourned Debate on Mr. Kirk's proposed motion for copies of all correspondence, papers and telegrams between the Government or any member thereof, and any person or persons relating to the superannuation of James Hearn, late Preventive Officer at Arichat, N.S., and also all correspondence and telegrams relating to the appointment of his successor and the continuance of the latter in office.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the House rose on Wednesday last, I was offering some remarks in regard to the operation of the superannuation system. I had drawn the attention of the House to the fact that a very large amount of money had been expended during the last year on superannuation, and urged that some consideration should be given to the question with the view of reducing that expenditure. I find that a number of years have been added to the time of service of those who were superannuated last year, and those additions have been made, in my opinion, in violation of the Statute. The third clause of the Superannuation Act says:

"The Governor in Council may, in the case of any person who entered the Civil Service after the age of thirty years, as being possessed of some peculiar professional or other qualifications or attainments required for the office to which he was appointed, and not ordinarily to be acquired in the public service, add to the actual number of years service of such persons, such further number not exceeding ten, as may be considered equitable, for reasons stated in the Order in Council made in the case; and such additional number of years shall be taken as part of the term of service on which the superannuation allowance of such person shall be computed—the Order in Council in any such case being laid before Parliament, at its then or next Session."

I find, among the number superannuated last year, two who do not come within the limits of that clause. Mr. F. B. Austin, who entered the Service when he was twenty-seven years old, and laboured for twenty-six years, was superanuated last year at the age of fifty-three; and four years were added to his time of service—and added, I contend, in violation of the Act. The Act also provides that when any person is superannuated, and a number of years are added to his time of service, the Order in Council adding them shall accompany the Annual Report submitted to the House. This has not been done in the case of the person I have just named. I find also that Mr. E. C. Barber, who entered the Service when he was twenty-four years of age, was superannuated last year, and the number of years added to his time was seven. These additions are made to the time of service, in order to increase the amount of annuity Civil Servants are permitted to draw after their superannuation, but I contend that the Act has been violated in the both of these cases, because neither of these gentlemen was over thirty years old when they entered the service. Now, the reason urged why the superannuation system is kept in force is, that it is desirable in the interest of the country, and in order to provide for servants who have been a long time in the employment of the country, after they grow old or incapacitated. But, in the case of those who were superannuated last year, there are grave doubts in my mind whether or not that was the moving cause of their superannuation. As I stated before, there were nonteen superannuated when they were only forty-eight years of age. I hold that that argument in favour of this system is not good. I do not think it is right, after a man has been in the receipt of a reasonable amount of wages annually for a great number of years, that the country should provide for him from the time that he retires to the time of his death. I hold that these people are liberally paid while in the service of the country, and that they should be required, out of the sums they receive, to lay by sufficient annually to provide for themselves and their families when they come to old age. I think the system leads to extravagance and rocklessness on the part of Civil Servants. I think if they were led to understand that out of the very liberal salaries they receive, they would have to provide for themselves and their families, they would be more economical. These people also have many advantages that other people have not. Bank clerks and clerks in other establishments, and people engaged in other occupations in life, have to pay taxes on their incomes, while these people have not. This circumstance gives them a great many educational and other I say it is unfair advantages over other people. that the country should be called upon, in the face of all these facts, to sacrifice the very large amount we are called upon to sacrifice annually, in order to add so many to the superannuated list. I admit that in some cases men have been superannuated while drawing very large salaries, and others have been appointed in their places at very low salaries. I notice that one man who was drawing $1,700 was superannuated, and another person was engaged to fill his position for $400. Well, that would undoubtedly be a case of saving, but I think it proves either one or two thingseither that the man drawing $1,700 was getting more for the duties he was discharging than they were worth, or that the man engaged to fill the position at $400 is getting much less than he deserves for the labour he is performing. I believe the first contention is the true one, for I have no doubt that the man recently hired for $400 is getting a salary equal to the duties he has to perform. But I believe the Act is being abused. I believe that in many cases men not at all incapable have been superannuated, in order to make room for others who are anxious to get places in which they may draw comfortable salaries, and live at case. I believe that has been the case in the past. It will be said, I presume, that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were parties to the inauguration of this measure as well as those on the opposite side of the House; but I do not care who put it on the Statute Book, or who is responsible for it. I hold that it has worked detrimental to the interests of the country, and that a very large amount of money has been annually expended under the operation of this system. I hold that it is our duty to seriously consider the whole ques tion and to abolish the system, as I contend it is not in the interest of this country that it should be continued. It has been abused in the past, and I believe it will be abused as order to relieve the country of the increased amount we will be called upon to pay annually, owing to the manner in which the Act will be administered, judging from its administration in the past, it is better we should abolish it altogether. There are other ways whereby those people can lay up something for their old age; there are insurance companies quite willing to take risks on their lives, and they can insure their lives the same as other men. I think, therefore, they should be put upon their own responsibility in this matter, in place of their being made a charge upon the country as long as they live. I know such a system has been in existence in England for many years, but there are many things in existence in England which we do not want out here, and I am sorry that, in this case, the English precedent has been followed. I believe the whole system is a mistake and should not be continued; I have shown by figures that it has been a drag on the Government resources, and no one can doubt that it will continue to be a drag as long as it is in existence. In introducing this Act, the Hon. Sir Francis Hinks declared that after a very few years it would be self sustaining; that although at the commencement, owing to the fact that a number of aged servants then in the employ of the country would cause a draw to be made on the resources of the country somewhat in excess of what it would be after the Act was in operation for a number of years, the payment would be in excess. He held that eventually the percentage deducted from the salaries of Civil Servants would accumulate into a fund sufficient to meet the demands on the Dominion Treasury for superannuation pensions. In place of this being the case, in place of the fund increasing, the sum annually paid out is fast increasing, while the amount contributed by the Civil Service is a mere fraction of the amount paid out annually. I do not whish to detain the House longer with this question. I have already submitted all the figures I have to offer on it to the House, and as it is late in the Session and I know that hon. gentlemen are anxious to proceed with other business, I will restrict myself to these remarks, calling the attention of the House to the fact that in adding those years to the time of service of the men who have been superannated, the Act has been violated, and that these men were not in a position to claim these additional years. Not only has the Act been administered to the fullest extent, but the Government have gone beyond the powers given them in the Act by adding years to the time of service of some of those who have been superannuated, thereby giving them more than the law says they should receive, and they will continue to receive this sum as long as they live. I simply wish to call the attention of the Government to this fact and I hope there will be some alteration made in the system.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 5) to amend the Act respecting the Election of Members for the House of Commons, being read,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). This is a very important and lengthy Bill, and had we reached it at an earlier period of Sessions I intended moving the second reading and having the Bill properly discussed. At this late period, however, it is useloss to expect that it will receive the consideration it deserves; therefore, I move that the order be discharged.

Motion agreed to; and order discharged.

TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

On the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 102) to amend the Act 41 Victoria, chapter 16, intituled: An Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, being read, but it is impossible for me, as a private member, to have it carried through this Session. I would ask the hon. Preimer, however, if he will give us the assurance that the Bill introduced by the Government in the Senate will be carried through this Session; it has been adjourned, from day to day, in the Senate, and it is for the hon. gentleman to decide whether there is any possibility of its being reached, and I may say it is a most important amendment. As the hon. gentleman may know, the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia has declared that the Scott Act is not in force in counties where no licenses existed at the time, and unless this amendment is carried, the Scott Act will not be in force in those counties. All that is necessary to carry it in both Houses is the influence of the Government, and if the hon. gentleman will give that influence, it will no doubt become law. I want to know if he means business, and if he will give that assurance.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). This is an important Bill, Mr. McMullan.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot give any such assurance to the hon. geatleman. The Bill was introduced in the other House with a bond fide desire to have it become law, to have it passed there and come down here. I have not watched the proceedings in the other House, but I am sure, if any delay has taken place, it has not been caused by the Government.

Order allowed to stand.

PETITION FOR LEAVE TO PRESENT A PETITION FOR A PRIVATE BILL.

Mr. BEATY. I ask leave of the House to present a petition for leave to present a petition from the London Life Insurance Company, and if the business of the House will not prevent it going through, I would press it to night. It only affects internal arrangements, being a matter referring to an increase of the capital and matters of that kind. I ask for leave to present the petition and move that it be referred to the Standing Orders Committee at once.

Mr. BLAKE. The first step is to ask for leave to present a petition.

Mr. BEATY moved that leave be granted to introduce a petition from the London Life Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BEATY moved that the petition be received and read, and referred to the Committee on Standing Orders forthwith, and that the rules of the House be suspended for the purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand that to be the course. The course is, that the hon. member should ask leave of the House, because the hour is not the proper hour for receiving petitions, to bring up a petition for leave to present a petition. Then that petition is presented; that is, a petition which states the grounds upon which the House is asked the indulgence that the other petition may be presented. Then the House determines whether that will be granted or not, and then, having determined to grant it, the regular petition is presented. The hon.gentleman seems to proceed per saltem.

Mr. BEATY: That is exactly the course pursued. The petition is for leave to present a petition.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a petition for leave to present a petition.

Mr. BEATY. Then the motion is that that petition be sent to the Standing Orders Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood it was the second petition.

Mr. BEATY. No; the second petition is not presented yet. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House. Motion agreed to; and (at 10:25 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. GIROUARD moved that the First Report (page 1270) of the Committee on Privileges and Elections be concurred in.

Mr. BLAKE. Some time ago, when this question first came before the House, I ventured to state the reasons which led me to a conclusion adverse to that which the Committee had arrived at, namely, that the seat for Cumberland is now vacant. I have not heard subsequently, either in this House or in the room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, nor do I observe in the recent report the hon. gentleman has presented, any such arguments as lead me to alter the opinion which I had already formed. Adhering to that opinion, I do not think it would be useful, at this stage of the Session, under the circumstances of the case, to detain the House with a reiteration of the arguments, but, adhering to it, I desire to divide the House.

Report concurred in on the following division :--

DEATH OF PRINCE LEOPOLD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise for the purpose of moving that this House do concur in the Address of the Senate (page 1273) to Her Most Gracious Majesty, of condo-lence on the death of His Royal Highness Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, by filling up the blank with the words " and House of Commons." I am sure this House will have a melancholy pleasure in joining with the other branch of the Legislature in conveying the sympathies of Parliament to our beloved sovereign in her late great boreavement. Some of us have had the honour of becoming personally acquainted with Prince Leopold during his short visit to this country, and of observing his gracious manner and the great intelligence of his conversation. He, Sir, like all the rest of Her Majesty's sons, had devoted himself to the public interest. The heir apparent, as it was his duty to do, has most sedulously attended to relieve his Royal Mother from the heavy duties of sovereignty by performing all those great coremonial duties which are cast upon the Crown. Of the other sons, one has sailed on every sea as an efficient officer of Her Majesty's navy; and another, the Dake of Connaught, who many of us also met when he visited this country, is now showing that he is no diletanti soldier, but he is performing active military duty on the plains of India. Prince Leopold, whose early death we now deplore, was obliged, in some degree, to take a different course in his public life. From a congenital delicacy of constitution he was not so able as his more robust brothers to enter into the active pursuits of manhood; but he was not deterred by feebleness of constitution from making himself useful, eminently useful-and remember that he was only thirty years old, or thereabouts, when he died. He had already devoted himself to the study of the arts, to the promotion of science, and to assisting by his presence, by his counsel and precepts, the various benevolent institutions which attracted his attention, and to which he rendered eminent service, in the name, and, as it were, as the representative of his august mother. To some of us, who are not so well acquainted with his character and career, owing to distance from the scene of his usefulness, and who are not so thoroughly acquainted with all he has done within his sphere during the short period of his life, I would call attention to a little brochure which has been placed in my hands, which speaks of the Duke of Albany, and I think the House will be interested if I read to them a few passages showing how a person of his high rank, notwithstanding the delicacy of his constitution, applied himself earnestly to the dutics of his high position, and showing with what fine tastes he was endowed. This little brochure has been published as a biographical sketch, and I am sure the House will be interested if I read a few quotations from it. So long ago as 1871, when his name was brought up in the House of Lords, the Duke of Richmond said:

"Although the Prince had not, on acount of his youth, the advantages Although the Frince has not, on acount of his youth, the advantages of the personal example of his illustrious father, he had been brought up in a manner in every way to imitate and follow his noble example. The assidiity Prince Leopoid had shown in all the departments of study in which he had been occupied, gave grounds for believing that he would fit himself for taking the important position in the country to which his birth entitled him."

Lord Granville, following, said :

"From some personal acquaintance with the illustrious Prince, I am able to sav that there are few young men of his years who have culti-vated their natural abilities with greater assiduity and success than Prince Leopoid has done."

Now, Sir, in order to show you how various and versatile were his talents, and how sedulously he applied himself to doing good on every occasion that presented itself, whether to art, science or morals, or to the development of England, or in assisting benevolent institutions, here is a short synopsis of what he has done:

"On February 19th, 1879, he delivered an address on university teaching at the Mansion House. On the 25th of the same month he presided and spoke at the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution. On May 19th, 1879, at Grosvenor House, he presided and delivered a remarkable address on the education of the deaf and dumb. On October 20th, 1879, he formally opened the fitth college at Sheffield. On April 14th, 1880, he laid the foundation stone of the High School at Oxford. On the 30th of June, 1881, he opened the Nottingham University building. At the Manchester Athenæum Soirée on December, 1881, he spoke on the culture of music. And on the 17th of December, 1881, he laid the foundation stone of the Princess Helena College at Ealing."

From that day up to the time of his death he was constantly employed in forwarding all such worthy enterprises, and in assisting and promoting all that is calculated to benefit the people of England. I shall, Sir, endeavour to show by a few short quotations that not only were his intentions good, but his intentions were ably carried out. While his exertions in all these various good causes were unremitting, the House will see that his style was most effective—so effective, indeed, Sir, that he received a most remarkable testimony from the Times. On the great question of university education, when there was a great meeting at the Mansion House in London, he made a remarkable address, so remarkable that the Times referred to it in the following manner:—

"The meeting at the Mansion House has revealed powers of expression in a member of the Royal Family which rivalled those of a great English orator on a field peculiarly his own. The crowd which thronged the Egyptian Hall came to see a Prince and to hear Mr. Gladstone. As it listened to the former in his turn, it must have felt that it had before it not merely a thinker, but a thinker with the gift of thinking aloud. No two better representatives of the cause of university teaching could have been selected than Prince Leopold and Mr. Gladstone."

No testimony could be greater than that given by the Times.' Let me now read some few sentences from his addresses, showing not only a careful style, but the earnestness and originality with which he applied himself to various subjects. Speaking about foreign languages and their cultivation he says:

"Sometimes perhaps, as the proverb says, we take what is unknown to be magnificent; but oftener I think we take it to be something unfriendly and distasteful to us. But we find that with every real increase of understanding of our fellow men of different races, some unkindly illusion disappears; we learn to realize their likenesses to ourselves, to sympathize with their national character, and to cooperate in their efforts after the common good."

Speaking of a great man and a great genius, Mr. Ruskin, he said :

"We have seen a man in whom the highest gifts of refinement and of genius reside, who yet has not grudged to give his best to others; who has made it his main effort—by gifts, by teaching, by tympathies—to spread among the artisans of villages and the labourers of our Englich fields the power of drawing a full measure of instruction and happiness from this wonderful wards, which rich and poor gain alike from. We have seen such a man in Professor Ruskin; and among all the lessons with which those who have had the privilege of his teaching and his friendship must have carried with them for life, none I think can have such deeper than the last;—that the highest wisdom and the highest treasure need not be costly or exclusive; that the greatness of a nation must be measured, not alone by its wealth and apparent power, but by the degree in which its people have learned to gather in the great world of books, ef art, and of nature, pure and enobling joys. I cannot think then that we need feel that this society is providing teachers who are too good for the work which they are to do. It may be long before her students can follow them as far as they can lead; but the work which they have to teach will be taught all the better, the methods will be sounder, and the personal influence of the teacher will stimulate them the more."

Speaking of the great benefits which Mr. Firth had accomplished, in establishing a college and otherwise engaging in philanthropic subjects, the Prince said :

"We must all welcome this new proof of Mr. Firth's wise munificence with pleasure, but now with surprise. We cannot wonder that when a man has tasted the happiness of great and generous actions he is easer to enjoy the high delight again, and finds other triumphs and satisfactions insipid as compared with the triumphs and satisfaction of confering on others a real and lasting good."

Sir John A. MACDONALD,

So again, and it is the last quotation I shall read, speaking of the noble work on laying the foundation of the University College, Nottingham, the Prince said:

"And the bappiness of our lives depends much less on the actual value of the work which we do, than on the spirit in which we do it. If a man tries to do the very simplest and humblest work as well as he possibly can, it will be interesting to him, and he will be proud of it. But if he is only thinking of what he can get by his work, then even the highest work will become a wearness to him I trust that your college will send forth many men trained to do good and honest work, so that to do work which is b sd or dishonest chall be simply impossible to them. Men like those may be proud of their trade, proud of their town; and I do not believe that we become better citizens of the world by being indifferent to the interests and honour of our town, or our own nation. I believe that the narrower patriotism is often the best way of leading us to the broader; and that the better a citizen a man is of Nottingham the better citizen will he bo of England; and that the truest sops of England will make the bost citizens of the world. Then it is, when a man has lived for others, has worked for public ends, that the good which he has done is not intered with his bones No! It lives after him; so that in the works which form the proud motio of your ancient corporation Vivit Post Punera Virtus."

After reading these paragraphs so noble in sentiment, so graceful in expression, one can feel what a loss England has sustained, and especially what a loss Her Majesty has suffered in her last bereavement in losing her youngest son. I will say no more, but will content myself by moving the Resolutions.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the motion of which the hon, gentleman has given notice. I think that if ever there was a sovereign in the history of Constitutional Government, I will not say in our own country, but in any country, who might fairly claim the sympathy of her subjects in her joys and her sorrows, that sovereign is the reigning Queen of this Empire. I do not believe that we of this generation do as yet realize what we owe to the long reign of the Queen. During that reign there has been a wonderful advance in the material prosperity and progress of the vast domains of which the British Empire is composed. That material progress and prosperity is palpable, and we all perceive and observe it. But there has been in various parts of the Empire a progress in other regards of a still higher and greater moment, not so palpable to see, which I believe cannot be fully realized except by succeeding generations. It has been the good fortune of Her Majesty as a constitutional monarch to inaugurate, under the advice of her Ministers, a series of reforms and changes in accordance with the modern spirit of the times, under which the material, the intellectual, the educational and the constitutional progress of her people has been really equally, although not so palpably and perceptibly from the nature of the subject, marked as the material progress. It is not many years now since in that very domain which the hon. gentleman's observations indicated to us, the lamented Prince, to whose untimely death we are referring, to some extent devoted himself, the great stride was taken by the Act of 1870 which practically gave a universal education to the British people. And we know in the constitutional advance which has been made in the Kingdom itself it has been Her Majesty's privilege in the language of her poet laureate:

"To set the bounds of freedom clearer yet."

And while that is so in the Kingdom it has been so even more markedly in the colonies, and most markedly of any of the colonies, in the colony, or rather the Dominion in which we are the people's representatives. Here, more than elsewhere, we can realize the progress that has been made. Here, more than elsewhere, we can realize that, almost insensibly, a revolution has been effected, and we have approached to an extent wonderful to contemplate the idea of popular Government as understood in this day. And, therefore, under her peculiarly monarchical attributes as a constitutional sovereign, I maintain it to be established, that there has not existed any sovereign in past times, and none exists to-day, who can more confidently challenge the sympathy of her subjects on an occasion like the present. But that is not the only claim the Queen has to our sympathy and affection. In her domestic character as a wife, as a mother, as a widow, she has been an example of the domestic virtues always dear to the British heart. And as a sovereign, she has endeavoured to preserve, and with great success, a pure court, and to set an example, in the most exalted stations, calculated not merely to maintain, but to elevate the standard of virtue among her subjects and curb that licentiousness which has too often appeared inseparable from great material luxury and prosperity. And, therefore, in every capacity in which we can look upon her, I repeat, the is entitled to demand not merely a nominal and formal, but a real and substantial sympathy with her in her joys and in her sorrows. And this occasion, as the hon. gentleman has observed, is one particularly calculated to elicit that sympathy. The loss is great. The loss is great of a young life such as that of the Prince's—a young life of great promise. I will not enlarge upon the different vocations in which in the course of his high functions the Prince evidenced that promise. I will only say with the hon. gentleman that he has proved that we may not inaptly apply to the son the language which the poet laureate addressed to the sovereign, on the death of the father :

"Sweet nature gilded by the gracious gleam, Of letters, dear to science, dear to art."

His position, like the position of any prince of the blood in these modern days, was a trying one; but, though he recognized the difficulties that beset the position, he recognized also the possibilities of usefulness which belong to it. And, as the hon. gentleman has said, he was not content with recognizing those possibilities, but he exerted himself manfully, effectually and successfully to develop those possibilities, and to be, in his position, a useful man to the generation in which he lived. His position was especially trying, living, as he was, all his short life under the shadow of that doom which has at length overtaken him, and which, however much it may have borne on his secret spirit, never seemed to have overborne him in those exertions which he made for the public good. That delicacy to which reference has been made, would naturally make him all the dearer to his mother's heart, and make this loss of him over whom she must have watched so anxiously, all this time, even severer than if he had been of that more robust constitution which, happily, is enjoyed by the other members of the royal family. We may address her then from the bottom of our hearts in the language of the same poet whom I have already quoted:

"Break not, O woman's heart, but still endure."

We may say to her, speaking in the name of the Canadian people, that we do indeed mourn the early extinguishment of that young life, and we respectfully lay at her feet our tribute of sympathy with the sorrow of her who survives to mourn that loss.

Motion agreed to; and an Address was voted to His Excliency the Governor-General, praying him to transmit the joint Address to Her Majesty, in such a manner as His Excellency may see fit.

ENQUIRIES INTO SHIPWRECKS.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Act respecting enquiries and investigations into shipwrecks and other matters, as to the powers of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in certain cases reported to him under it,

Mr. DAVIES. Has the hon. gentleman looked at the second section of the last Bill, as it was printed, to see whether a mistake was not made. I think it never was intended to form part of the Bill, as it simply declares the position of certain English Acts on the subject, and I think there was no occasion for expressing that in our Statute. It is simply a statement that a certain English law repealed a certain other English law.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will find that this is very much in the words of the English Act. The Imperial Shipping Act of 1854 required the finding of the court to be confirmed by the Governor in Council. In 1862 a new Imperial Act was passed which left it in doubt whether the confirmation was required or not. In our Act, which was passed in 1869, we provided that there should be a confirmation by the Gevernor in Council, passing over the Act of 1862, and taking as our authority the original Act of 1854. In 1882 a new Act was passed by the Imperial Parliament, and as there appeared to be a doubt whether the Act of 1862 repealed the Act of 1854 or not, the Act of 1882 expressly declared that it had, and that from 1862 no confirmation was required. The words used in that were very much the same as those which the Law Clerk has put in this Bill. They were :

"The confirmation of the report required by the said Act shall be deemed no longer necessary after the passing of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act of 1862, as a condition precedent to the suspension or cancellation of the certificate of any master or mate."

So that the language employed in this clause is very much the same as that employed in the Imperial Act, setting aside any doubts that existed after the passing of the Act of 1862.

Mr. MILLS. This seems to me to be a very extraordinary provision. The words used are:

"No confirmation by the Governor or person administering the Government of Canada, of any report under the Act hereby amended is or has been required since the passing of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862."

We might just as well assert any other fact. The clause enacts nothing. It is simply a statement as to the effect of a particular Act, and that an English Act. It is wholly unnecessary, and ought not to be included.

Mr. WELDON. A Statute must either be an enacting Statute or a declaratory Statute. This neither enacts nor declares nor repeals.

Mr. McLELAN. The provision in the Act of 1869 is a quotation from the Imperial Act of 1854, and that quotation is held by the Imperial Act of 1852 to be repealed; and this clause, in making the declaration that confirmation is not necessary, states the authority on which that declaration is made. It would, perhaps, have been better had the authority been first stated, and the declaration made afterwards.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know upon what this clause is founded, but I concur in the view that it is wholly unnecessary, and ought not to be inserted here. Even if you call it --as I heard an hon. gentleman opposite say it might be called---a declaratory clause, I think we cannot effectually declare the meaning of an Imperial Statute. We can effectually declare the meaning of one of our own Statutes, because we can either repeal or amend it, and we may amend it in the declaratory form, but this is declaring what the effect of Imperial legislation is, and it does not appear to me to be fitting that we should attempt to do that. I admit that this provision possesses negatively ono good quality which I wish a good deal of the legislation from the other side did posses ---I do not think it will do any harm.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think, on the contrary, it will do a great deal of good, because it is a declaratory Act. A doubt has been raised whether, under the Merchant Shipping Act, confirmation by the Government or person administering the Government of Canada of any report is or has been required since the passing of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act of 1862; the provision in the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, referring to such confirmation, having been expressly repealed by the Merchant Shipping Declaratory Act of 1882. The hon. gentleman says we cannot declare what the meaning of an Imperial Statute is. Well, I think we have pretty good authority for it. I think there was an Act passed in Ontario, declaring what was the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, which was an Imperial Act.

Mr. BLAKE. It had been incorporated in our own law, and of course we could declare its meaning.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We could not declare what the Parliament of England meant 200 years ago. However, the hon. gentleman says the clause can do no harm, and I think it had better remain. It might commence, "It is hereby declared and enacted;" and we could enact, as we have power to deal with the subject, that the confirmation of the Government is not required. But the draftsmen, I see, followed the form of the Imperial Act of 1882, which simply stated that "the confirmation required by the said Act shall be deemed no longer necessary." I think we had better leave it as it is.

Bill read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the Order for the third reading of Bill (No. 120) to amend the Weights and Measures Act of 1869, be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to; and the House again resolved itselfinto Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. I simply propose to provide that the section that was added to the Bill at the last meeting of the Committee regarding the labelling of cans shall not go into force until the first day of January next. I am informed by telegraph that several manufacturing firms have on hand a supply of cans for the year's operations, and it might be inconvenient to put this clause into operation at once. Another question has arisen with regard to the interpretation of the labelling or marking and I think the word "permanently" should be struck out so that manufacturers can either stamp the cans or label them.

The word "permanently" was struck out.

Mr. DAVIES. Does this clause embrace canned meats? Mr. COSTIGAN. The intention is to cover all goods hermetically sealed.

Mr. DAVIES. My opinion of the section is it does not cover that.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS-

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on Resolution to provide for remuneration of analysts to be appointed under the Bill for the prevention of Adulteration of Food and Drugs be received.

Motion agreed to, and Resolution read the second and third times, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 114).

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 114) for the prevention of the Adulteration of Food and Drugs.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Is it to be understood that what is to be done is to appoint a chief analyst at a salary from $2,000to $2,400, that he is to reside at Ottawa and shall not receive any fees, and that there will be no alteration in the system in reference to other analysts except the possible reduction in the fees they charge for their work, and that there shall be no large increase in their number during the coming financial year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The salary of the chief analyst will not exceed $2,400, and there will be no change in the other arrangements. The public burdens will be increased only by $2,400 at the utmost.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House then again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, we shall be glad to have from the First Minister—I think this is under his special supervision, he retains it——

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.—Full information as to the cause of this considerable increase, and I may remark that, in the Supplementary Estimates, a further sum of $70,000 is wanted. Before the explanations are given, I do not want to comment too much on the demand, but I may remark that we used to be criticised exceedingly severely for the amount which, under very difficult circumstances, my hon. friend the member for West Durham had to expend for maintaining this force, and I think, in asking more money, the least the First Minister can do is to recant the hard things which were said about this force in 1876 and 1878.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As Lord Beaconsfield said once, a great many things have happened since then. With respect to the first item, pay of force, including staff, there is an increase of $5,000. In consequence of the many demands on the force, it is found necessary to keep it up to the maximum authorized by law, 520 non-commissioned officers and men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this increase to go to the whole force, or to the officers alone?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To the whole force, noncommissioned officers and men. The force is now kept up to its full strength, 520.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many officers has the hon. gentleman got just now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I forget the number of officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a force, no doubt, which ought to be officered well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are three vacancies in the force at this moment, in the ordinary staff.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the hon gentleman passes to the next item, I would call his attention again to what I have called the attention of some of his colleagues to, and that is that I think a certain number of the commissions at his disposal ought, in all reason, to be given to cadets of the Military College, say two perhaps per annum, to those who have done best and who do not choose to accept commissions in the royal service. Here we are educating these men at very considerable cost to the country, and up to the present time, if I remember aright, none except Inspector Perry has been appointed to the force. I do not propose that they should have a monopoly of it by any means, but I think that in that service, in which it is desirable for many reasons that young men properly trained should be placed, and just such young men the Minister might very properly, especially remembering that some of his colleagues at Kingston on several occasions have alluded to the intention of the Government to employ these cadets in just that service, say that a couple in future would be given to them. He will get very good officers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should be very glad to say so because I think with the hon. gentleman that that ought to be done, and it has been done so far as we were able to do it. Mr. Porry was appointed. Then, on the very first next vacancy, Mr. Prevost was appointed, and I think he was a graduate. The difficulty has been that we have offered several commissions to graduates of the Military College and they have not accepted the position. The hon. gentleman from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) had a son who passol with honours, and I was very anxious to get him for the force, for he really distinguished himself in the Military College. I offered him a commission, which, after consideration, he refused. I do not remember the other names, but there were two or three others.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What rank?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Inspector, with the rank of Lieutenant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Sub-inspector, I sappose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, we have no sub-inspectors. The inspector is the subaltern officer, the superintendent is the captain, and then there is the commissioner and assistant commissioner. There are two or three vacancies at this moment. There is a gentleman, I may say, to whom I should like to give a commission, who, I am told by Col. Hewitt, will graduate certainly in June with very high honours. I think there should be not only two, but there should be a very considerable sprinkling in the force of these young gentlemen, and we should also have reference to the best young officers of the embodied force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite satisfied with that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite alive to it, and very anxious to carry it out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is his intention practically to offer these commissions to those who pass best? The English commissions, as he knows, are offered according to the merits of the graduates. I have never myself at all pressed upon the Government to give every man who passes through with a mere graduate's certificate a commission. I thought that half a dozen prizes might be given among the best, and that would be quite sufficient, in addition at any rate to what the Home Government does.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it would this sum is to be applied; what are the hon. gentleman's be well in all cases to state that the young man having the highest honours should have a right to claim the commission. He might, from physical or other reasons, not be so are the expenses for the men, and how much of this goes well suited, though his scientific and professional acquirements would be very good. But no man should get a commission as being a mere graduate; he should pass with honours.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be quite sufficient.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And I think other elements should be considered. It is a force belonging to the whole Dominion, and I have been anxious to get young men from the different Provinces. There should be a representation of the different Provinces in that force, if we can get the right men. At present there is only one French Canadian in the force, Mr. Gagnon, and a very good officer he is. Mr. Prevost was appointed, but he left the service, and I am sorry to say he did not do it much credit. I propose to supply his place with a gentleman from Lower Canada. Then we appointed the other day, as inspector, an officer of the highest testimonials who was employed here in the Governor General's Office, Captain Deane, who belonged to the English marines. Commissioner Irvine was exceedingly anxious to get a man of his description. There has been no man appointed without possessing scientific attainments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is an assurance which I am sure will be received with great satisfaction on both sides of the House, that the hon. gentleman is making his selections from among those who have passed with honours. I would like to know if the statement is true, that we have seen with some regret, that Col. Irvine had been superseded as commandant of the force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He has not been superseded. He has been down on leave, and left last week to resume command.

Mr. MILLS. I notice the amount asked by the hon. gen tleman is about $130,000 or $140,000 larger than the amount required in 1878, and is much larger than the amount of last year. Of course, the force is more numerous now than it was then; but I remember well that in 1878 the hon. gentleman and those who supported him called attention to the very high prices that were paid for hay, oats, and supplies of various sorts, and to the cost of keeping the horses of the Mounted Police. Although the expense was very large, as the hon. gentleman complained, at that time, it was nearly $140,000 less than the amount he asks now. It will be interesting to the Committee and the country to learn why this very large sum is required. We want to know if the hon. gentleman has succeeded in carrying out those plans of economy of which he was at that time such an ardent advocate? There is no doubt the facilities for obtaining supplies are much greater now than they were six years ago. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues told us more than once since this Session began that at that time the whole country was a howling wilderness, that there were hardly any inhabitants in the country except Indians and the Mounted Police, and that the latter were cut off from the outside world by the want of railway facilities and the immense cost of transportation. Now, those reasons as to the cost of transportation and the difficulty of obtaining supplies, were also the justification of the Government in 1878, when the cost of transportation was so great that it added immensely to the cost of maintaining the force in that country. Bat now though the facilities are greater and the cost of transportation has been diminished, the amount required by the hon. gentleman for keeping up the force has been greatly increased. It would be interesting to know precisely how this sum is to be applied; what are the hon. gentleman's estimates, how much is going towards the supply of horses towards payment and maintenance?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I dare say my hon, friend with bis usual diligence has looked over the Report of the Commissioner of Police, and he will find a great many of those questions which he speaks about solved there. The hon. gentleman says that the force has cost many thousand dollars more than it did in 1878. Well, there are 500 men now and there were only 300 then. That is one reason ; I do not know whether the hon, gentleman will accept that as a sufficient reason.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would call the attention of the hon. member for West Huron, who takes an interest in this subject, to a sort of consecutive statement which has been placed in my hand and which will apply to the various items forming this Resolution These estimates amount to $470,300. The Estimates for the current year are :-- Vote of last Session, $416,000; Supplementary, $70,000; total, $186,000; decrease in 1884-85, $16,000. Whilst the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway will ultimately reduce the cost of maintenance in the North-West, the expenses during the period of construction have largely increased. To efficiently perform the duties required of the force, and to adapt the service to the altered condition of the North-West, increased expenditure will be unavoidable. The following are a few of the causes of increased expenditure:--1. The immense demand for waggon transport, labour and the produce of the North-West for which hitherto the police were the principal customers. 2. The necessity for numerous small detachments of police along the line of construction, and the various trails leading to the railway, to suppress the introduction of liquor, smuggling and gambling 3. The removal of Indians from the plains south of the railway to the reserves in the north, and keeping them on their reserves. At the request of the Lieutenant-Governor, twenty-live men were sent to Fort Pitt, in September last, to keep "Big Bear" and his followers in order. During the present year it will be necessary to keep 150 men in the Northern or Saskatchewan River District, and the larger portion of this force will be constantly patrolling the country between the various Indian Reserves A large force will also be required in Treaty No. 4 (the Qu'Appelle District) to prevent the Indians gathering in numbers off their reserves. 4. The preservation of peace among the construction parties of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Rocky Mountains will require a detachment of fifty men. 5. Until recently the horses of the force were allowed to pasture "in herd" when not required for duty. During the past season this was impossible. The pasture near the posts was, in some cases, poor, and in others eaten off by the large number of horses in the vicinity; and the country being infested with horse thieves it was necessary to keep the police horses ready for service at a moment's notice, 6. Beef, which is the largest item of expense in a man's rations, has more than doubled in price owing to the excessive demand consequent upon the construction of the railway and general development of the country. 7. The demolition of Fort Walsh, which was necessary to effect the breaking up of the large bands of Indians who for years were camped in that vicinity, was the cause of much indirect expenditure. 8. Fuel at Fort Walsh cost, for years, from 50 cents to $1.00 per cord, being merely the expense of chopping. Coal on the line of railway cost last winter $20.50 per ton, and this winter, with the exception of Medicine Hat, $9.50 and $10.00 per ton. 9. The of Medicine Hat, $9.50 and $10.00 per ton. 9. The this item, being the amount required for furnishing the mortality among the horses of the force has been new hospitals, five in number. Transport and freight unusually heavy owing to the prevalence of glanders charges, guides, etc., $45,000. I had hoped that it would and influenza. At one post the stables were destroyed have been possible to reduce this item, but I now fear it by fire to prevent the spread of the disease. will not be practicable at present. The members of the Mr. MILLS. Mr. MILLS.

towards the wages and salaries of the men and how much | Pay of force, $160,000. In consequence of the many demands upon the force, it will be necessary in future to keep the strength up to the maximum authorized by law, viz, 520 non-commissioned officers and men. Subsistence, $80,300. This estimate is for 55J officers and men at 40 cents per day. The estimated average cost of a daily ration is 35 cents, but the force will be much scattered during next fiscal year, and it is more expensive to ration small detachments than large ones. The estimates, as printed, show an increase of $29,200 over the current year. This is caused by the estimates for the current year showing a decrease of $18,000 compared with the previous year. This decrease was made to enable the surplus provisions in the police stores to be consumed. Now that new buildings and commodious warehouses have been erected, it is desirable that the surplus should be restored, to be in readiness for any emergency. Forage $73,000—this estimate is at the rate of 50 cents per day for 400 horses. Oats will be cheaper, but hay is becoming dearer every year. Hay is, as a rule, obtainable only in small patches, frequently fifteen to twenty miles from the barracks, and the cost is more that of hauling than of cutting and curing. At Maple Creek this year the hay cost for cutting and curing $3.75 per ton, and for hauling to the barracks $14 per ton, in all $17.75 per ton. At Fort MacLeod the hay cost $22 per ton, delivered at the barracks. It will be necessary in future to keep the police horses constantly stabled and ready for duty. It is impossible for the police, with the many and sudden calls upon them, to cut or haul their own hay. The stock of forage on hand at the various posts is larger than any previous year, and we hope to be able to save $10,000 of the estimate of $73,000 with which to purchase oats in Manitoba next winter for the following fiscal year. Fuel and light, $15,000. This item will barely meet the requirements. Clothing, $37,000; no increase. It is satisfactory to be able to state that we are gradually accumulating a surplus stock of clothing. That in store at the present time is valued at $30,000, and in the course of a couple of years we should have in stock a full year's supply of clothing in advance of requirements. Repairs and renewals, replacement of horses, arms and ammunition, $47,000; horses, 50 at $150, $7,500; tents, $1,000; arms and ammunition, $4,000; saddlery, $6,500; $1,000; arms and animation, $2,000; saddlety, $0,500; harness and repairs, $2,000; waggons and buckboards, $3,000; general stores, $23,000. Total, $47,000. The force is armed with the Winchester repeating carabine. Fifty carabines and 100 revolvers are required to complete the arming of the force and to provide spare arms to replace those rendered temporarily unserviceable by wear and tear. The old Snider carabines with which the force was armed when first organized, are being returned into store at headquarters, and repaired by the armourer of the force. 180 of these carabines, with a good supply of ammunition, are now in store at Regina. "The adopted saddle is the "California;" about 170 are now in use, and it is proposed to purchase 150 more this year. The "universal" saddles issued to the force in 1874 have, to a large extent, become unserviceable from wear and tear. The shorter prairie journeys since the construction of the railway will, in many cases, enable the service to be performed with buckboards or light waggons, drawn by one or two horses, instead of four, as in the past. The demands upon the item for general stores will be very heavy during the coming fiscal year in consequence of the furnishing of the new bar-racks at several places. Medicine-medical comforts and hospital supplies, $7,000. There is an increase of $2,000 in force will be constantly on the move on the line of railway and between the Indian reserves and settlements. The expense of travelling part by rail, and part by stage or waggon, is frequently greater than if the whole journey were made by waggon. Men sent on special duty frequently have to hire waggon transport from the station at which they leave the train to the settlement or camp where their duties call them. Rate of pay-Commissioner, $2,600 per annum; Assistant Commissioner, $1,600; Superintendents (7), $1,400; Inspectors, (13), $1,000; Surgeon, $1,400; Assistant Surgeons, $1,200; Staff-Ser-geants, $1 to $1.50 per day; duty Sergeants, 75 cents to $1; Corporals, 60 cents to 85 cents; Constables, 50 cents to 75 cents. Constables commence at 50 cents per day, and receive an addition of 5 cents per day for each year's service until the maximum of 75 cents per day is reached. Working pay to artizans and others is paid as follows: Shoemakers, tailors, etc., 15 cents per day; blacksmiths, according to qualifications as shoeing smiths, 50 cents per day.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What price was paid for beef?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We used to give 7 cents per pound. Now it is 15 to 20 cents.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We gave 3¹/₂ cents per pound.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was live weight.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What parties have had the contract ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Different parties.

Mr. CHARLTON. I observe that Baker & Co., of Montana, had a contract amounting to $105,000. Did they tender ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; and they obtained it on the lowest tender. When the railway is finished cattle dealers and butchers in Ontario will be able to tender. Hitherto they have been unable to do so, as they could not get their cattle out there. Some cattle dealers in Ontario went to the North-West and settled, and when they sent in the lowest tenders they obtained contracts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was T. Howard one of the contractors this year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. To what extent are the members of the force or their horses employed in carrying this hay to the barracks?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not done at all now.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be cheaper to get a few draught horses for the purpose of transporting this hay, rather than pay $14 a day for teams.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It might be; but I hope the situation of the country in a year or two will be such that we will avoid paying these high prices, and at the same time there will be a market for what the people produce.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the Minister why the Indians to a large extent are also armed with Winchester rifles, and whether measures have been taken by the Government to prevent the importation of that kind of arms for the use of the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Indians, I am sorry to say, have too many repeating rifles and too much fixed ammunition. Formerly, the Mounted Police had a check upon the introduction of repeating arms and fixed ammu-nition from across the lines; but with the numerous trails that are now opened along the line of the Pacific Railway, it is almost impossible to check that. The Bill I hope to identical in spite of the better means of transmitted to the former of the pacific Railway. that are now opened along the line of the Bill I hope to identical, in spite of the better means of transport another it is almost impossible to check that. The Bill I hope to by the railway than existed in our time, and, consequently,

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman last year said he could exchange fowling pieces with the Indians for those rifles. What progress has he made with that trade ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that wo did not make any progress.

Mr. MILLS. I observe that the number of horses that the force now have are 400, only 70 more than the number they had in 1878, when the force was very much smaller; so that, in case of difficulty, the efficiency of the force, which largely depends on the number of horses, would not be any greater, although the number of men is about 200 more than formerly. The hon. gentleman also informs us that he is paying over $1 a ton a mile for the drawing of hay to the stations of the police. A large portion of the men must sometimes be unemployed, and it seems to me they might properly be employed in conveying the hay from the place where it is grown to the place where it is consumed. In fact, the practice seems to be based on the theory I heard put forward a few years ago, that the burning of Chicago was an excellent thing, because it gave employment to a large number of people engaged in industrial pursuits. The hon. gentleman seems to be acting on the same principle-that paying $1 a ton a mile for carrying this hay is a good thing, because it gives employ-ment to the people who draw it, and that if the policemen were employed in carrying it, it might reduce the expenses. He has applied to the police force the same principle that he has applied to the penitentiaries with regard to convict labour.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that my hon. friend is like Mr. Dick in David Copperfield, who saw the head of Charles the First in everything. Whatever it is, the management of the Mounted Police or of the penitentiaries, the National Policy and Free Trade must come in. The hon, gentleman says there are only 400 horses to 500 men. He must know that there must always be a garrison at the different stations. There is no necessity for keeping too many horses. Then, a great deal of the service is better done by the use of the buckboard. Besides, there is the railway to carry the men from one point to another. The hon. gentleman says we should employ the horses and policemen in carrying their own hay. Being a police force, the men must be always ready to be sent off at a moment's notice in case of disturbance, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that the police are very much harassed, and that additional work has been thrown upon them by the additional number of whites in the country, as well as the Indians, and it would be bad economy to scatter the men. As a police force, we want them to be always at their post. The cost of hay is very large now, but it will be less very shortly; and then I hope the hon. gentleman will let the head of Charles the First and Free Trade rest in peace.

Mr. MILLS. It was the hon. gentleman who introduced the King's head into this discussion, not I. The hon. gentleman said that the sale of this hay to the police gave the people of the North-West a market, and I pointed out the extraordinary character of the economic views which the hon, gentleman has put forward on this as on every other occasion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may be quite proper to keep the police ready, and that a certain number should be at headquarters; but the point that I made, and that my hon. friend from West Durham made, does bear on the COMMONS DEBATES.

the charges of extravagance made against us were utterly unwarranted and unfounded; and the hon. gentleman now in his own experience sees that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I see it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What supply of artillery have the force got?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two 9-pounders and four 7-pounders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not that a very small brigade of artillery ? I think in the early times it was considered by all parties that the very sight of a few pieces of artillery had a considerable effect on the minds of the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so. The Indians pay a greal deal of respect to a cannon, and think there is a mysterious influence about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I think there were some steel guns sent up at the very first.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The 9-pounders, I think, aro steel.

Mr. MILLS. They were sent to Rat Portage, were they not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no; you do not catch rats with a cannon.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We have had some caught in traps in this neighbourhood.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not all; some of the little ones.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say the police force do not use waggons themselves for transport purposes at all?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For drawing ammunition not for drawing hay by contract.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They are supplied with waggons? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Were they also bought in California?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; in Markham, East York, the county of my hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They cost me something, I believe; my impression is that the hon. Minister gave the order at a very critical period during the election.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A pure mind would never suggest such a thing. I gave no order for waggons.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest the propriety of purchasing a few small mountain howitzers which could in case of emergency be carried on the backs of mules. I recollect an instance of the effect of this weapon in dispersing Indians in the United States. A small party of troops transporting mountain howitzers, on going though a pass in the mountains, were unexpectedly attacked by Indians; the emergency was great, they had not time to dismount the howitzers but pointed them and fired from the mules, creating great consternation among the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And among the mules-

Mr. CHARLTON. The Indians, on being asked, afterwards, why they fled so precipitously, said they were accustomed to all kinds of arms but never had mules fired at them before.

MAIL SUBSIDIES AND STEAMSHIP SUBVENTIONS.

Mail Subsidies.

125. Steam communication on Lakes Huron and Superior $12,000 00 Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. CARLING. This is the same vote as last year, no increase.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many steamers are employed in the service?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot say the number of vessels; we have a contract until 1885 for carrying the mails between San Francisco and Victoria.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) This contract has been running about six years. There are three steamers, at least, performing said service, and in winter run not less than three times a month, although the "Terms of Union" only call for a fortnightly service-formerly the sum of $54 was paid for the same kind of service; during the summer months they run every six days or so without increased subsidy at present.

127. Steam communication with the Magdalen

$7.800.00 Islands

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is more than used to be voted.

Mr. CARLING. I think it is a fortnightly service.

128. Steam communication between Grand Manan, N.B., and Mainland..... $4,000 CO

Mr. BURPEE. How is this service done?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. By an international boat, and by a boat from St. Stephen's and St. Andrew's. That arrangement expires this year, and new arrangements will be carried out, by which we will have a more satisfactory boat.

Steamship Subventions.

129. Steam communication between Halifax and

St. John viâ Yarmouth $10,000 00

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Under what arrangement is this?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The same arrangements which have been in existence for three or four years; it is an annual arrangement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Has the Government tenders from any other lines to perform that work? What is the reason it is given year after year to the same line?

Sir LEONADD TILLEY. I am not aware of any new offer being made, as far as my Department is concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are tenders advertised for?

Mr. CARLING. No, I think not.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no arrangement made for next year at all, and the arrangement is made yearly with the same line. The International line receives $4,000 for the connection between Yarmouth and St. John, and then for the connection between Halifax and Yarmouth, $6,000 a year are paid. That has been running for a number of years.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). What I want to ascertain is whether the Government have received tenders from any other company to do the business between Halifax and Yarmouth. For some years past the Fishwick Steamship Company have performed that work, receiving $6,000, and $1,000 has been given to the Nova Scotia Steamship Company between Yarmouth and St. John. I am informed that the latter have offered to run other boats between Yarmouth and Halifax and to give better communication on the south shore. I want to know if the Government have received these offers, and if so whether they have considered them, and whether they have decided to give the $6,000 to the Fishwick Company again.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No such proposals have reached the Post Office Department or the Finance Department, as far as we know. I will enquire of the Secretary of State, as they may have been sent there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it the intention of the Government to advertise for tenders for the performance of this work?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is difficult. There are very few boats. Perhaps the arrangement could not be made as economically, but I will note the hon: gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). The Local Government have advertised for tenders over the same route, and the subsidy has been paid by them, up to last year, to the same line, but a great deal of dissatisfaction is felt with that line along that shore, and I am informed that strong influence is being brought to bear on the Governmentstrong influence in the city of Halifax-to induce them to continue the grant to the same Company. I think the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) will bear me out in the statement that there is dissatisfaction on the south shore with that line. I think it would be well, as the member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) has suggested, if tenders were asked for, and I believe the people generally would receive better satisfaction. I know the Nova Scotia Steamship Company, if the Government give them the opportunity, are prepared to put on a better class of boats, drawing less water, which would serve the south shore better than the work is now being performed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What time in the year does that contract expire? As I understand from the Postmaster General, the contract is from year to year.

Mr. CARLING. At the close of navigation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do these run all the year?

Mr. CARLING. I understand that every spring the arrangement is made, and they carry the mail until the close of the season.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But there is no reason to close. The sea is open all the winter.

Mr. CARLING. But the arrangement is made every spring.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is made, I suppose, for a year, or from some date in the year to some other date. The close of the season, according to our ideas, would be somewhere in November or December.

Mr. CARLING. I understand it is made in the spring of the year until the next spring.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has it been made for the ensuing year?

Mr. CARLING. No, it has not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the Minister could get tenders if he pleased.

Mr. CARLING. I suppose so, but I understand there is only one line of boats.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend beside me says there are other lines.

Mr. CARLING. I am sure the Department would be glad to receive an offer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, if it be really as my hon. friend was saying, the fact that the public are indifferently served by this line, the Department should ask for tenders and see what offers would come.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Do I understand the expect the country Postmaster General to say that no agreement now exists ing it is accepted?

with any steamship line, and that they will receive tenders for the service for the present year.

Mr. CARLING. There is no arrangement for the coming year. It will be looked into, and if it can be done it will be done.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Was that spent last year? Was there any service done?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, some services have been rendered, but there has been no money paid. Mr. Bentley proposed to perform the service by means of a Company, under a vote for Brazil of $50,000, and there was a vote also for a line between France and Canada. The original arrangement with Brazil expired, the Company broke down, and the whole thing fell through. Mr. Bentley came to the Government a year ago, and proposed that, if we would give to a Company he was about organizing $25,000 for a monthly trip from France to Canada, added to the $50,000 for the service to Brazil, he would organize the Company and perform the service for the $75,000. The Government received favourably the proposition, but declined to enter into a contract until he could give all the information as to the character of the steamers, their size and speed, and everything connected with it. In July or August, he came to Canada after having been in negotiation with some German house, I think it was, and the German house agreed, pending a contract with the Government of Canada, to send out three steamers, as they did send them in the autumn, to Canada, and send them on to Brazil, but with the understanding that they were not to receive any pay unless a contract was entered into by Mr. Bentley with the Government this spring, in which case they would receive compensation for these three trips that were made. If a contract was not made this spring for the service, then he and the Company arranged that they were not to receive anything. Mr. Bentley did not succeed finally, although the steamers came out and made the three trips. He is now in England and I had a communication with him; having other communications as to the service between France and Canada, I cabled him to say other proposals were in, and not to make any arrangements, because he might make them and then say we had not treated him fairly. He cabled me in return that the proposals were on the way out for the performance of this work, and there are some alterations suggested in the original contract. For instance, they were required to have provision for forty cabin passengers to Brazil. It is proposed in the new arrangement, as I understand, that that is to be reduced to twenty-five. Then there are two ports in Brazil that the Brazilian Government required they should visit. They were not of any importance to Canada, and Mr. Bentley was negotiating with the Brazilian Government to have those two struck out, because they were expensive to enter, and very little business could be done there. His proposition to us was that we should accede to these concessions if the Brazilian Government agreed to them. There is no contract entored into; we are under no engagement to him whatever, and, though I do not know the exact nature of the proposition that is now on its way out, the original proposition was for a monthly trip between France and Canada, the steamer going on to Brazil, for which he was to receive $75,000. We take this vote because it may drop through with him as far as the arrangement with France is concerned, and we would be open to enter into any other arrangements.

Mr. MILLS. What advantages does the hon. gentleman expect the country is to gain by this arrangement, supposing it is accepted ?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The advantage is that, while the trade with Brazil, when that contract was in existence, was not as great as we expected, still, like every new enterprise of the kind, it requires some time to establish it, and this proposition with reference to a steamer between France and Canada will be of great advantage to us. For instance last autumn, goods sent by that steamer were entered at a lower rate of duty than they would have been, if they had passed through England or any port in England. So we have a direct and an indirect advantage from the establishment of a direct line of steamers between France and Canada. With reference to Brazil, the Government consider it of sufficient importance to continue that vote because, though there has not been so large a trade as was expected, the imports have been very considerable during the last two years from Brazil, large quantities of sugar and of coffee have been imported, and our exports have increased; and, though it has not quite realized our expectations, we do not consider it desirable to drop the vote in case such arrangements could be made.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was any additional subsidy granted by the Brazilian Government to this Company?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, they had appropriated $50,000 a year, the same as we did.

After Recess.

Mr. MILLS. I understood the hon. Minister of Finance was to give some explanation about this vote as to what purposes are supposed to be achieved by it. I think the hon. gentleman knows that his distinguished predecessor in office, Sir Francis Hincks, has over and over again pointed out the inutility of this bonus. He has pointed out that our relations with Brazil were such that an extensive trade could never grow up between the two countries. I think he has established that fact pretty conclusively, and it seems to me that the Minister of Finance, in asking a continuance of this vote, is bound to show some of the advantages that he expects to gain by it—in fact he is bound to show that he is appropriating money in the public interest. I do not think he has done that; and I am certain that the Trade and Navigation Returns, during the short period in which this appropriation has been made, shows that if the trade in the future is to be at all like what it has been in the past, there is nothing to warrant this appropriation.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have only had in the past year a very partial service. During the past year there has been only three trips, and nothing has been paid. The Trade Returns, therefore, cannot be expected to show the results, as the work has not been performed, and the Government were not called upon to pay for the service. However, the trade has been increased by the vessels that have made these trips, and though it is not as large as we desired, still it is perhaps as large as we could expect ; if the original contract had been carried out according to agree. ment and had been continued for five years, I think it is very probable the results would have been such as to justify the payment for five years. But they did not perform the service for the five years, and but a small portion of the money appropriated has been paid. If the service has been running regularly once a month and continued over two or three years we might have such results as would be satisfactory. The Government think that if the service was continued regularly once a month, and the public understood it, and could depend upon shipping by one of the steamers, then we would have a larger amount of business, no doubt; but with the limited sum we paid and the limited service performed we could not expect any great result.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. VAIL. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to say, that the intended $75,000 of this money is for a line from France to Halifax and thence to Brazil?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a vote for the current year of $50,000 for a line to France as well. The arrangement was made, but it was not carried out last year. We did not think we could give $75,000 for the two services, that is, once a month from France; because this vote is $50,000 for once a fortnight—once a month from France aud once a month from Brazil; that is, half of the $50,000 for Brazil and half the amount for France.

Mr. VAIL. An offer was made by Mr. Senecal, and a paper was laid on the Table a short time ago, which outlined a route, and I think he proposed applying for a subsidy. I would like to ask whether this is to come in with his proposed arrangement?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is before the Government at the present time. When that proposition was made, thinking it was just possible that Mr. Bentley might enter into some arrangement, we cabled him to say that another offer was before the Government, and not to make any arrangement without communicating with us. Mr. Senecal's proposition is now before the Government.

Mr. MILLS. Then if that offer is accepted, I suppose that this $75,000 will all go to that gentleman—giving effect to this arrangement.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No, Mr. Senecal's proposition has nothing to do with the proposal; it is a separate and distinct proposal between France and Canada, and it stands upon its merits in this appropriation.

131. For subsidy to line of steamers to run fortnightly between France and Quebee, provided the French Government appropriates a sum equal to the amount contributed by the Dominion of Canada for the same service......$50,000

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The French Government gives a bounty to their vessels, and the calculation has been made in the communication of Mr. Senecal, and it is correct, that the bounty that would be given to the French vessel to sail between Canada and France would be practically about $75,000 in lieu of $50,000. For the $50,000 we would give, they would receive in bounty under their law, about $75,000, and that would be accepted as equivalent to a direct vote of $50,000.

Mr. DESJARDINS. It is evident from the explanations the hon. the Finance Minister made this afternoon on the preceding item, that the contract Mr. Bentley has undertaken——

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He has no contract.

Mr. DESJARDINS. To run a line between Brazil, Canada, and France had not worked satisfactorily, and that three distinct trips only have resulted from the two votes we have passed since 1831. I think, therefore, that the idea of combining the two lines ought to be abandoned, and that a direct line from Canada to Brazil, and from Canada to France, ought to be established with more regular and more frequent communication. It is evident that with communication only once a month, it is impossible to create such a current of trade as would make such a line a success. I know personally, that, in 1881, several offers were made to the Government by influential capitalists in France, who were ready to invest a large capital in the establishment of a line of steamers to perform a fortnightly service. The only point in regard to which those gentlemen could not agree with the Canadian Government was this, that while they were ready to undertake the establishment of such a line on receiving a guarantee of a subsidy for ten years, the Canadian Government refused to guarantee a subsidy of $50,000 for more than three years, and therefore the nego.

tiations failed. That fact is to be regretted, because those gentlemen from their position and influence occupied a strong position in France, and we could have obtained from them all necessary guarantees for the successful accomplishment of their object. But that has failed, and we are, I understand, now face to face with another offer, if I can judge from the memorandum which has been distributed, and I do not know to what extent the Government will be ready to meet the demands of the new Company. But one thing I am aware of and it is this, that the Government should meet French capitalists liberally who wish to invest their capital in the establishment of a regular line of steamers, and guarantee them a subsidy for at least ten years; and by this means we will succeed in obtaining a line of steamers which will accomplish the object we have in view, namely, the establishment of direct trade with France. We know that the economic conditions of France have become quite changed, and we have as much chance to successfully export large quantities of our goods to the French market as we have to any other country. So that I think this question is a very important one, and I hope the Government will succeed this time in carrying out the object we have had in view in voting every year a subsidy of $50,000, which unhappily we have so far been unable to apply.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I object to any term so long as ten years. The contracts given to the Allan Line have never exceeded five years. Is not the bounty referred to confined to French bottoms?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the bounty could only be obtained by the vessels being built in France.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If they were built here and sold to France a sum would be obtained, but a smaller one.

Mr. MACKENZIE. About one-third.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Besides the bounty given on ships built in France, there is another bounty granted to ships running under the French flag. For instance: If there were four steamers of 2,500 tons each, the bounty of construction would be $128,000, while the bounty for navigation would, supposing there was a fortnightly service, reach $101,000 or 505,000 francs besides.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Under this arrangement, the steamers have made six trips; they may make three more during the year. There are two proposals before the Government at the present time for the performance of this service, monthly or fifteen trips in the year. These proposals are now under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. How much of last year's vote has been paid?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Only three trips have been paid for, but five or six have been performed altogether.

Mr. WELDON. What steamers have done the work?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Juliet was one. The Furness Lice proposes to make fifteen trips, making either St. John or Halifax the terminal port in the Dominion. We refuse to give any money useless the terminal port is in the Dominion.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is an arrangement made with a line of steamers to sail between Antwerp and Canada, once a month, $2,000 for the round trip. The Company made five or six trips last summer. The object of granting the money is to encourage, if possible, German immigration. We provide that the vessels shall be of certain size, and speed, and have accommodation for steerage passengers. The next vote, $24,000, is for steam communication between Canada and Germany, to carry out a similar arrangement made with a company to run a vessel monthly, either from Bremen or Hamburgb. The arrangement made with respect to the Hamburg service is, that they shall perform not less than ten trips during the year. One of the steamers was lost on the way out, having some passengers on board That is the arrangement made with these two companies

Mr. MACKENZIE. What ferries have keen	established?
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I could ha	rdly say, but

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I could hardly say, but this is for forry purposes generally.

Mr. MACKENZIE. A speculative sum?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To a certain extent. The increase is $5,000 for the establishment of additional schools. There are ten Protestant and nine Roman Catholic schools, and the teachers' salaries are paid out of this vote. It is improbable that this sum will be sufficient, and a further amount may be asked in the Supplementary Estimates. The remainder of the vote is for roads, bridges, school houses, and for mail service, which is largely increasing in the Territorics. Part of it is also for the conveyance of lunatics to the Manitoba Penitentiary.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Are no schools aided except those in connection with the denominational missions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all. The schools there are generally denominational Indian schools. The Indians are happily under the rule of either some Protestant or Catholic clergyman, who are the best guardians and teachers of these people.

Mr. MILLS. Where is this money expended? I believe all the old-settled portion of Keewatin is now included either absolutely or conventionally within either the Province of Manitoba or the Province of Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Part of it is intended to cover the conveyance of lunatics from the districts to the Manitoba Penitentiary; and among other items is the payment of the Lieutenant-Governor's Private Secretary.

Mr. MILLS. The Icelandic settlement is now included in the Province of Manitoba, and the settlements in the neighbourhood of the Lake of the Woods are included either in that Province or the Province of Ontario, so that the settled portion of the district is now included in either one or the other of these two Provinces. The Council itself is no longer in existence and can have no expense. It is perfectly obvious that the hon. gentleman has not considered the changes that have taken place, because this appropriation is really unnecessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that six years have elapsed since 1878, and I dare say a good many people have gone in there since.

Mr. MILLS. Where?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say in what particular part.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gontleman is mistaken, because he will find that there is no settled portion in the district, except in parts included in either Manitoba or Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure the present Lieutenant-Governor of Keewatin would not expend the money unless he wanted it.

Mr. MILLS. That is not at all the question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, we will look at the Report of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. MILLS. It is perfectly clear that there is no district of Keewaydin for which to make provision.

Sir JOHN A, MACDONALD. Has the hon. gentlemen ever looked at the map?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I have looked at the map, and it is a district around the North Pole.

Sir JOHN A, MACDONALD. I must correct the hongentlemen's geography; the North Pole is not in Keewaydin.

Mr. MILLS. I did not say it was; but there is as much propriety in providing for the one as for the other,

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. MILLS. No; I think this is a monstrous proposition, if the hon. gentleman will persist in providing for the Government of a district which contains no people.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. According to last year's accounts, the vote was mostly spent for the maintenance of lunatics.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the hon. gentleman knows that all the lunatics found in the Keewaydin or the North-West are sent to the Manitoba Penitentiary and, of course, we cannot throw the expense of keeping them upon the Government of Manitoba. They receive them and take care of them, and we pay for their care. We know 'that there is a certain percentage of lunatics to the population, and if it required $5,000 to take care of lunatics last year, there must have been a considerable population to draw them from.

Mr. MILLS. There is an unsettled district lying north of Ontario and Manitoba and the North-West Territories in which there is a certain roving Indian population. There was a district marked out, called Keewaydin, which embraced the Icelandic settlements north of Manitoba and the settlement along Rainy River; but the boundary of Manitoba has been extended eastward to the boundary of Ontario, and northward sufficiently to include the Icelandic district; so that there is no district of Keewaydin at present, and there is no more propriety in providing for the Government of that district than there would be for the copper mine on Mackenzie River.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I observe that last year nearly $600 of this amount was paid to some person style. Secretary of the Government of Keewaydin. It is impossible that he could have had any duties to perform.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume he performed the duties of Secretary of the Governor of Manitoba.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is not right, for he is paid otherwise for that. It is impossible that this secretary could have had anything to do. I would ask the hon. gentleman to look into that, at any rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are just two items-$600, which went for the secretary and the rest for the lunatic. The bulk is for the lunatic, and the balance for the secretary.

Mr. DAWSON. This little place, for which the grant is made, is a portion of my constituency, and very active disputes have been going on there for some time past; at least, they were exceedingly active last summer, and I think it right that the Government of the Dominion should continue to maintain order there until those disputes are settled.

178 To meet expenditure to be required to put into force the Act respecting the traffic

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not this vote largely in access of what is likely to be wanted. I observe that there is a considerable increase, with no apparent necessity for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It must be largely for printing. We hope to have the consolidation all printed for the use of members at the beginning of next Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who has taken Mr. Cockburn's place?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. O'Connor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is he doing this, in addition to preparing those elaborate and voluminous reports for which we paid $8,500? I think the hon. gentle-man is taxing him too much. Has he got $8,000 for look-ing after the boundary, and $3,000 for looking after the I Statutes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; he has made two reports on the boundary question, which are now being prepared, and the case will be argued in England this summer.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the beginning of one employment coincident with the end of the other, or was there any interval?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell. One succeeded the other.

Mr. BLAKE. How long was the poor fellow without employment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell without notice.

Mr. MILLS. Will his report be printed for distribution? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It certainly will not. We are not going to print our brief.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is necessary to build the new barracks at Fort MacLood, Maple Creek and Medicine Hat.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was expended besides for Fort MacLeod, $45,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is to finish the erection of the three. At Fort MacLeod, in consequence of the change in the river course the old barracks were falling into the river, and new barracks are being erected in a more suitable place. In their vicinity, there will be lands sold at a very considerable profit, which will recoup for this expenditure.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Not if you sell to middlemen.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The middlemen pay very well.

182 On account of expenditure in connection with surveys of Lakes Superior and Huron $10,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. This is to make a survey of Georgian Bay, which was decided on last year. Commander Boulton, who is conducting the survey, commenced operations in the autumn, and during the coming season will make a chart of the whole Bay, showing where the shoals and rocks are. He has one assistant, a gold medalist of Kingston College, a young gentleman whom he was anxious to obtain, and he will have several men with him besides the crew.

Mr. DAVIES. Has the assistant any experience in coast surveying.

Mr. McLELAN. No; he has no experience, but will soon acquire that.

Mr. DAVIES. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of what the survey will cost?

Mr. McLELAN. $10,000 will cover the expenses this year, and in the course of the year we will be able to see what time it will take to complete the service, and what it will cost. Of the $6,000 voted last year, a considerable portion went to purchase the instruments.

Mr. DAVIES. Has Captain Boulton made any report giving any idea of the probable length of time it will take to make this survey ?

Mr. McLELAN. He said he supposed it would take two or three years. This year he takes one assistant, and after the year he will take others if nccessary.

Mr. DAVIES. A large grant will be required each subsequent year? Mr. McLELAN. No; because a considerable portion expended in the purchase of instruments will not be required another year.

Mr. DAVIES. From all the information I can gather from the officers in charge of the survey of the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the hon. gentleman will find it will be cheaper in the long run to have a much larger staff. With one assistant, Captain Boulton will take nearer twenty years than three to do the work, if it is done with the same care as the survey of the Gulf coast.

Mr. McLELAN. We have given him all that he asked for, and will give him all the assistance he requires.

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to these surveys in the great lakes, they are absolutely necessary, as the shipping on the Canadian side of these lakes is increasing very fast. The Americans have had a very careful hydrographical survey made of their side of the lake, all the shoals and rocks being marked out most carefully; while on our side we have nothing but Capt. Bayfield's charts, which are porfectly wonderful, considering the time they were made, and the information he was able to obtain; and since his day, a good many shoals and rocks have been discovered, on which vessels have been wrecked, exceeding in value, to a large amount, what the survey will cost from first to last. These surveys are absolutely necessary, and I am glad to see the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has at last taken the matter in hand.

Mr. DAVIES. I was raising no objection to the vote.

183 Niagara Falls Commission-Revote. $683-65

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is anything likely to be done on ours or the American side, or has the thing practically lapsed ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it has not; the State of New York has taken it up and has made an appropriation for an American park, paid for and maintained by the State of New York. It failed last year, and the year before the vote failed from some political reason or other, but they have changed their mind, and the vote has been granted in New York. So I presume we will have to take up the question, and do our part on this side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know how large that park was to be, how many miles of the Niagara River frontage it would have?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I do not. I read the account with some interest in the New York papers some time ago, but I cannot speak with any recollection of the area, but I believe it is to be very extensive; and they are going to hide or obscure in some way all the buildings on the American side, by some mode of planting the bank with the same species of timber that was supposed to be found there when Father Hennepin first discovered the Falls.

181 To provide for the payment of Mr. Fabre's salary and contingencies of his office...... $2,500 00

Mr. LAURIER. I understood, some time ago, that Mr. Fabre was not to be continued in office.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He was appointed for three years. The arrangement made with him was for three years, and now, I think, two years have passed away.

Mr. LAURIER. Am I in error, or was not the statement made some time ago, that he was not to be continued any more?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. LAURIER. I thought so

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was not to be renewed.

arrangement was for three years, that two years had clapsed now, and that next year was the last year.

Mr. LAURIER. The impression conveyed, I think, was that he was not to be continued any longer. Has Mr. Fabre made any report?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is it? Is it in print?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The report has been sent to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is the use of its lying there, unless members of Parliament have an opportunity of seeing it?

Sir IIECTOR LANGEVIN. It has not been asked for.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Government ought to send it to Parliament. It is not fair or reasonable to ask us to continue a vote of that kind without having the report before us. My hon. friend should not shelter himself behind the statement that there was no request. There was a request; I requested it myself when there was some conversation upon it last year. It was asked and promised. I do not think it is treating Parliament fairly.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the reports made up to that time were made known to the House, but the reports since have not been brought down, I suppose because there was no notice given; but, of course, if the hon. gentleman wishes these reports, I have no doubt it would be easy to bring them down.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the report is in proportion to the work done, it would be very easily read and very easily brought down. It might be brought down to-morrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not always the longest reports which are the most effective or the best.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not the length of the report that I refer to, but the paucity of the results.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow the reports to be brought down and read before he passes an opinion upon that subject.

Will the reports be brought down Mr. LAURIER. before Concurrence?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know. We will bring them down.

Mr. MILLS. Is it a fact that during the two years, Mr. Fabre has succeeded in inducing one emigrant to come to Canada?

Mr. BLAKE. I think there was one mentioned.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentlemen are asking what has been the result of the mission of Mr. Fabre to Paris. The hon. gentlemen have been asking whether there are any reports, and it is the first time the demand has been made for those reports. Mr. Fabre was appointed, as has been already explained here, as Agent for the Province of Quebec in Paris. The Government of Canada took advantage of this appointment having been made by the Government of Quebec, and thought that they could avail themselves of his services in the interests of the Government of There is a great misapprehension about the Canada. utility of having a representative, either official or unofficial, on the continent for the Government of Canada. heard the hon. gentleman who has just sat down asking whether it was true that one emigrant, during the course of two years, had been brought from France to Canada, and had been induced to come by the Agent of the Province of Quebec, acting, in a certain measure for the Government of Canada in Paris. The hon. gentleman, if he wants to be informed, will learn that there are my hon. friend, whom I saw smiling a moment ago, when

Sir John A. Macdonald.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The answer was that the at the present moment in the Province of Quebec gentle. men of means, who came from France, and who have already acquired property to a large extent; that a number of people have not only been applying, but have left the continent to come to Canada under the advice and with the information supplied by Mr. Fabre. Mr. Fabre is not a Commissioner of Canada; he is not clothed with the authority that might put him in a position to do still better work or more useful work than has been done; but I, for one, can bear witness to the number of people obtaining information at Paris, at the office there of the Province of Quebec, and from the gentleman who is representing the interests of the Government of Canada. Mr. Fabre is under direction of the High Commissioner in London. On the continent it is not only French emigration which requires information; there is a large emigration from Switzerland, from Germany, from all parts of the continent, passing through Paris to take passage for America. Out of 94,000 emigrants that left the harbour of Havre in the four years, between 1878 and 1882, only 12,000, I think, came from France, and the others passed through Paris going to Havre and thence to America. I must say that, owing to the deficiency of a direct line of steamers from France to Canada—and it is to be regretted that the efforts which have been made since 1880 have not proved fruitful to the present moment-emigration from the continent of Europe to Canada has not been as large as it could be. This, I hope in the future, will be remedied, because I hope that such a line of steamers will be established. I hope that the Government of Canada will find their way of meeting the efforts of those who have been working and trying to have such a line of steamers, so that their efforts may be crowned with success. There has already been great progress in sending emigrants, and especially in directing trade from the continent to Canada. The Trade and Commerce Reports show to what extent trade has increased between Canada and France during the last three or four years. As I said before, the result has not been very great, but, Mr. Chairman, with this small appropriation of $2,000 and another appropriation of $500 for expenses, this Parliament must not expect great results from the agency in Paris. Emigrants from Italy, passing through France and asking for information, are directed to Liverpool by the Agent in Paris. They cannot be sent directly, and nobody need be surprised that before they reach Liverpool a large portion of them should come under the influence of the numerous agents of the various lines of steamers running to Boston and New York. I think, therefore, instead of grudging this small amount, the Parliament of Canada ought in future to increase the appropriation made for the agency in Paris, and that our representative there might be vested with some authority from the Government of Canada. Is it not reasonable to expect that a large and profitable trade could be established between Canada and a nation of 37,000,000 of people, especially when it is remembered that a large portion of the people of Canada are one in language, religion and national affinities with the people of France. I think that the appropriation made for Mr. Fabre, in Paris, small as it is, has produced good results; and I think that when better trade relations are established between the two countries, this agency will produce more fruitful results even than it has done yet. Only a week ago a young gentleman, possessing large means and representing French capitalists, was directed to Canada by the Paris agency, and has gone to Manitoba to make investments in farming lands. Statistics might be furnished showing the extent of our trade relations with France, and if the reports of Mr. Fabre are not before the House it is the fault of those who did not wish to ask for such information. I have not heard any one yet asking for such information, but I am sure

I was speaking about the Paris agency, will be much interested in reading the information contained in those reports.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated that Mr. Fabre is under charge of the High Commissioner, and of the Department of Agriculture in respect of the emigration work in Paris. It seems under these circumstances, we might have expected that the report of the Minister of Agriculture would have contained the report of this officer, but I do not perceive that it does contain any report from Mr. Fabre. The hon. gentleman has started a theory which may be applicable to the proceedings of the Legislature of which he has been more familiar during his political life, but which is certainly novel to this Chamber, namely, that if public information obtained by public officers and for which the public pays is not communicated to the public, it is the fault, not of those who have gathered the information, not of those who are responsible for the official being employed, not of those who are responsible for his seeing that his reports are sent in, but of somebody or other who has not asked for them. We ought not to have had any reports of Immigration Agents because we did not ask for them!. The proposition is, with respect to the hon. gentleman, preposterous. I say it is the duty of the Government which asks Parliament to vote this money to produce the reports which are in the archives of the Government, so that we may consider them and thereby be enabled intelligently to act upon them. Now, then, not merely is there no report from . Mr. Fabre directly, but there does not appear to have been any communication notified to the public between him and the High Commissioner. The High Commissioner makes report upon the general subject of emigration, which is brought down to the Minister of Agriculture; and he also makes report on continental emigration in which he says:

"Sir, I have much pleasure in sending you the following report respecting my recent visit to Holland, Germany and France, in connec-tion with the important subject of continental emigration."

And he narrates that he left London on the evening of the 20th with Mr. Dyke, the Agent; arriving at Rotterdam he called on the agent of the Allan Line; at Amsterdam he called on the agents of the line of steamers running to New York. He also visited the Amsterdam exhibition. At Frankfort-on-the-Maine he learned some information about Manitoba. At Berlin he received the hearty co-operation of Sir John Walsham, Secretary of the Embassy. Dr. Otto Hahn, Agent of the Department of Agriculture, met him at Basle. Mr. Hanswirth, Mayor of the Canton of Berne, met him at Basle. He also found that the Cunard agents and other steamship agents at Basle booked emigrants to Manitoba; and he adds his conclusions as to the mode of obtaining a fair share of German emigration. But I have not been able, in my cursory perusal of the remarks of the hon. gentleman on the subject of continental emigration, which he says is a report of his visit to Holland, Germany and France, to find any account of his visit to the latter country, or of his operations in that country; nor have I been able to find that Mr. Fabre had ever communicated important public documents at all. I do not understand, therefore, how it is that so much good has been done and we have never heard of it. I do not see why this rose has been suffered to blush unseen up to this late hour of the Parliamentary season. I am quite sure if it was the fact that so much had been done, as the hon. gentleman supposes has been done, we should have had the reports long before this.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I must plead guilty to an important omission in the Report to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. I certainly did have communication with Mr. Fabre in Paris, and I have no hesitation in saying that, although he has been regarded there mation which he did not possess. Mr. Fabre, by an Order principally as an officer of the Government of Quebec, yet I think this Government were quite warranted in giving him the very small sum contained in the annual appropriation for services rendered to the Dominion. I had an opportunity of seeing that gentleman on more than one occasion, and I found him very warmly devoted to the interests of this country. I found the tables of his office strewn with Canadian literature, and I am aware that it is the constant resort of all Canadians visiting Paris, as the office 1 occupy in London is the resort of Canadians who visit the British metro-There are very few Canadians who go on the polis. continent and visit Paris who do not find their way to Mr. Fabre's office.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I know one who does not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon, gentleman says he knows one who does not. I am quite certain if he had done so, he would have met with a very cordial reception as every Canadian meets with who visits that gentleman's office and asks advice and assistance. I have great pleasure in bearing my testimony not only to the zeal and devotion which Mr. Fabre evinces in the public service of Canada, but I have no hesitation in saying from personal knowledge that that gentleman has succeeded in gaining the confidence and esteem of gentlemen of great influence in Paris and France. I had the pleasure of meeting, at Mr. Fabre's house, gentlemen of the highest position in both branches of the Parliament of France; and it is within my own personal knowledge that Mr. Fabre loses no opportunity of turning to advantage the acquaintances he has been enabled to form and the confidences he has established, to inspire in the minds of men who influence public opinion to as large an extent as any persons in France do influence public opinion, a desire to promote the interests of Canada. I happen to know that in one of the leading organs of public opinion, edited by a distinguished member of the French Senate, Mr. Fabre has again and again had an opportunity of inspiring that journal, through his acquaintance with that Senator, with sentiments and opinions in regard to the trade and commerce and the general interests of the country, of very great value. I did not consider it necessary to take part in this discussion; but after the re-ferences made by the hon. member for West Durham, I could not do less than bear my humble testimony, and my very sincere testimony, to the conscientious and zealous efforts which Mr. Fabre is making to promote the interests of this country and the very considerable success which is attending them. The table of his office is covered with Canadian literature which he places in the hands of parties visiting his office, either residing in France, or, as the Secretary of State observed, foreigners who come to this country through France and obtain from Mr. Fabre further information with regard to the Dominion. I believe that this insignificant sum, so far from being thrown away, has been wisely appropriated, and its appropriation has been attended with very beneficial results.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman who has borne testimony to Mr. Fabre's efforts, state whether he has received any report from that gentleman or not?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will answer the question as Mr. Fabre's reports are made to my Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not asking the hon. gentle-man; I am asking the Minister of Railways or the supposed High Commissioner, as it is to him that Mr. Fabre's reports will have to be made. I am asking the responsible adviser of the Government; I called him Minister of Railways, for I sometimes mistake one for the other, but I mean the Lord High Commissioner.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I thank the hon. gentleman for his kindness to me. I was willing to give him inforin Council is instructed to send his reports to the Department of the Secretary of State. His correspondence generally takes place with the High Commissioner. His position, I must say, is a very peculiar one in this way: having once sent a report to the Minister of Agriculture direct, the Secretary of the High Commissioner informed him that he had to correspond direct with the office in London, that he was an officer of that office and that his correspondence would have to pass through it. However, by an Order in Council, as I have mentioned, his reports are sent to the Secretary of State's Department. Hon. gentlemen opposite will probably say that the fault lies with the Secretary of State in not having produced those reports. They were not ready for the report of the Secretary of State during this Session, but they will be laid before the House. I can tell hon. geutlemen opposite that before Concurrence I intend to bring down statistics of the work done, of the results attained and the results that might be attained if something more were done in that direction by are Frenchmen, commanding capital to the amount of the Immigration Department. I must say, and I express $700,000 or $800,000. If he wants to see how this immithe feeling of many hon. members who have a right to speak on this subject, that Parliament might be more miste; let him read the articles of M. Le Roy Beaulieu on liberal towards Mr. Fabre and give more consideration to the immigration to Buenos Ayres and the Argentine Repubthe importance of the office.

Mr. LAURIER. It matters very little, in my opinion, as to the officer to whom Mr. Fabre was to report, because 1 do not think his reports can show anything like substantial progress or substantial results. If Mr. Fabre acts in any capacity in Paris it is as immigration agent. My conviction is that, so far as immigration from France to this country is concerned, the money is lost and at least is a useless expenditure. It is a well-known fact that the French do not emigrate, and that the population of France is decreasing instead of increasing. If that be so, it affords conclusive evidence that all attempts to bring emigrants here must prove unavailing. If the population of France is decreasing, how can it be expected that the French people will leave their own country to go to any other country? France has its own colonies. It has had Algeria for forty years, and what are the results achieved ? What are the results of the efforts which have been made in this direction? I confess I cannot see what they are; I cannot see that we have had anything like the immigration from France that we have been led to believe, excepting a few individuals coming out now and again. The hon. Secretary of State stated that several capitalists had come, asking for information with a view to investing in this country. It is true that several well-known French capitalists did come to this country, but if they did do so, they have returned to France.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman's statement, and I do not think he will be complimented by his countrymen in trying to decry the immigration which might be had from that country-immigration of the best possible class, and very desirable for the Province of Quebec in particular. I do not speak of the immigration which members of the late Government, and his friends, once brought into this country, socialists and communists, but 1 speak of such an immigration as Mr. Fabre is directing to this country, good mechanics, good farmers, and men of some means, immigration of the best possible kind. I am exceedingly surprised at his statements; I will take a note of them, and I am sure somebody else will do-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Hon. gentlemen need not be surprised. My hon. friend has shown himself to be perfectly ignorant of what is passing in other countries, and especially of what is passing just on the other side of the 45th parallel. He says there can be no immigration from France, because the population is decreasing. Well, Sir, this is no sound argument; the population of Ireland is decreasing, and does he say there is no immigration from that country? The hon. gentleman has not been studying the movement of European emigration. He says that there is no immi-gration from France, because the population is decreasing; but I say that if the population is decreasing, it would prove that somebody is leaving the country. He says that there is no immigration from France, because they can hardly supply their own colonies. Does he not know that there are hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen in the United States? He should know these facts from the returns of immigration of the different Consuls in New York, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Los Angelos, and other places. The city of Los Angelos where I spent some time myself, has a population of 22,000, an important portion of which is French; of the eight directors of the Merchants and Farmers' Bank of that city, the leading bank in that district, no less than four of them gration movements is progressing, he should read L'Econolic, and he will see that French immigration is going on there by thousands every year. In Lower California alone there have been no less than 10,000 or 15,000 French emigrants who have settled there within the last twenty years. A gentleman whom my hon. friend knows, I believe, M. de Molinari, has written that, with moderate Government assistance, an exceedingly good and profit-able immigration of the most desirable class of people could be had. We have had a small number of immi-grants of that class into Canada, and the reason we have not had more is that the means have not been sufficient to bring them here. The Government of the Province of Quebec was not rich enough to pay the expenditure of a large emigration organization abroad, but out of the hundreds of thousands of dollars which is being expended by the Dominion Government, a considerable French immigration might be directed to this country. I tell my hon. friend that he might have known, as I stated before, that over 93,000 emigrants have left France by the one harbour of Havre, within the space of three or four years. Large numbers of immigrants are leaving Gascony, the region near Bordeaux and the Bay of Biscay, every year; the very best class of men, good farmers, hard working men, who would make a splendid population for any country-the Basques, who discovered America long before the discoveries which are known to history. From Normandy from Britany, from the old French Flanders, we would have the best possible agricultural immigration. I have been informed on good authority that if proper means were taken to afford encouragement to that class of emigrants, so as to contend successfully with the work of the different ocean steamship companies who are inducing immigrants to settle in the United States, we would have-if we could secure immigration immediately from the French ports to Canada - we would have a large and valuable immigration. I do not want to do more for them than for desirable immigrants in other parts of the world; I do not want to blame the Government of which I am a member, but I say, that for the small means we have had at the disposal of the gentleman who represents the Dominion of Canada, with regard to emigration in France, good results have been obtained, and that better results may be expected. I say that certainly the small paltry sum of $2,000 should not be grudged to the gentleman who in France occupies, in the esteem of the people, a position of which every French Canadian might be proud. Mr. Fabre is highly connected, not only in the literary world, but in the world of business. He has given information to the Legislature in France and the French Government, as well as to those directing the best business papers, and those who are working for the establishing of just such companies as we would desire to have. It is said that Frenchmen are not usually considered to be a migrating people, but that statement is hardly reliable, when we consider the fact that they were the discoverers of one-half of the new continent.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. COURSOL. In support of the words which have fallen from the Secretary of State, I beg to read an extract from a letter which was lately received from a gentleman in France. I have translated it, and I shall read it to the House, as I believe it has a bearing on this subject :

"France is greatly in need of an outlet of her surplus energies-for "France is greatly in need of an outlet of her surplus energies---for want of an opening, they become stagnant. "Let the working classes in France once find out that labour is well paid and land cheap in Canada, there will be no difficulty in pur-suading them to turn their faces towards the Dominion. This season, a thousand good French emigrants, able to pay their way, with some resources left to resume, in better conditions, the struggle for life, are expected to sail for Canada. "In the wake of the emigrants, the industries and arts of France will follow, so that the whole country, for the loss of her citizens, will find full compensation in the double movement of the balance of trade find full compensation in the double movement of the balance of trade to and from Canada. "The French tradesmen and labourers who go out to Canada, as a rule, are sober, industrious, intelligent and skilful in the exercise of their handicrafts—besides they are thrify and saving. "When they leave France, they never go empty handed, but take with them small sums varying from $100 to $1,000. "In short, the emigration from France is supplied by the most active and enterprising members of the working classes, who might have done wall at home. but who had the ambition to better their situation in life. well at home, but who had the ambition to better their situation in life.

"The emigration from France, small as it is can now be discerned as an element of progress in the Dominion. "The French Canadians will gradually be initiated by them with the newest methods and appliances in all scientific and industrial pursuit, whilst French trade and capital will rapidly follow in the footsteps of the pioneers. "The present troublous times in France are predisposing families of means to forsake their native land and seek shelter in Canada.

"It is not rare for the owners of ancestral chateaux and estates to apply for pamplets at the Uanadian agency of Paris. Some feel them-selves oppressed in their religious belief, others in their political servitude; some are ruined by change of Government, others by financial disasters, whilst an influential minority are completely estranged by a form of Government to which they cannot reconcile themselves.

"Last year, six titled noblemen, among whom the Duc de Blacas, and the barons de Véréz and de la Rue, have settled themselves in Canada, and a number of young men of good (amily have settled both in Quebec and Ontario. "This spring, about forty farmers from Brittany, with means, are ex pected to go to Winnipeg."

Now, we expend large amounts of money to promote immigration from England, Ireland and Scotland, and we have agents in the chief cities of every one of those countries. We bring immigrants also from Sweden and Germany, and even from Russia, at a large cost to this Dominion. Now I, for one, complain, and I regret exceedingly, that the Government have not thought it proper to have a sufficient amount put in the Estimates, to be placed at the disposal of the agency in Paris. It is only the paltry sum of $2,500 which is in dispute, a sum less than is paid to every agent and sub-agent employed in England or other parts of Europe. Mr. Fabre is known to perform his duties with much ability; but he has no staff, and no assistance whatever; he is provided with no pamphlets for distribution; in fact, nothing has been done by this Government to promote French immigration to this country. Now, I think it is time that some means should be provided for encouraging that immigration. Pamphlets have been issued at the cost of private individuals; but the Government have provided no possible means for instructing the French people as to the trade of this Dominion, and as to the value of our boundless lands and forests. I hope the day is not far distant when we shall seek immigration from France. There are seaports in France from which the immigrants could be sent to Canada at a trifling cost to the Dominion. We encourage the poorest classes of population to come to our shores from other countries; but there are in France promote immigration from France would be attended with people of means who are ready to come, and who would success; but, judging from past experience, it is not, in my in the factories in Montreal, men of a high class, who have come from France, and who are a credit to themselves and to the parties which brought them here. Why did they bring them out? Because they had a knowledge of the trade. In the glass factories, and in many other factories, these men are employed. We know the value of their services in France, and that value can be enhanced in this country. I hope this is the last Session when we shall not see a proper amount placed in the Estimates to the credit of the immigration agency in Paris. Whether there may be some difficulties in connection with the British Ambassador that I am not aware of, or whether our agent may not be recognized, is not the question. The main thing is for this Dominion to recognize its agent in France, and to provide him with the means of expounding the knowledge of this country, and then the immigration will come.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. Secretary of State said he was surprised, because, as he put it, I had decried France, the land of his and of my ancestors. I do not admit that I decried France, or any other country. I maintain that I only spoke the truth, and I would not hesitate to speak the truth on the floor of this House, even if it should be disparaging to my own country. The first duty of a member of this House is to speak the truth, whether it is pleasant or unpleasant. No one would be more pleased than I if I thought we could harbour the hope of inducing French immigration to come to this country. I am of French origin myself, and it is natural to suppose that it would be most pleasant to me if it were possible for me to induce immigration from the land from which my ancestors came. But we have the fact staring us in the face, that at the present moment the population of France is decreasing-not on account of immigration, but from social causes to which I do not care to allude. Under such circumstances, it is vain to attempt to promote immigration from that country. Until the population of France is brought to the healthy state that it will increase from natural causes. I maintain that it is useless to have an immigration agent in that country. The people will not emigrate. I am informed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that the immigration from France to the United States has been, in ten years, 73,000, or an average of 7,000 a year. What has been the immigration from France to this country? Where are the proofs of immigration to be found? Where are the agriculturists, the class that we want? Is there a single agriculturist to be found in the country to-day who has come from France?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. There may be one here and there, but that is all. There have been a few mechanics come to the cities, and I am sorry to say that at one time it was thought better to get rid of those mechanics.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When ?

Mr. LAURIER. Six or seven years ago. Since then, we have had no mechanics from France. At all events, that is not the class we want. The class of immigrants we want, above all, are agriculturists, who will settle on our North-West lands, and I am sorry to say I do not think we can get them from France. The hon. gentleman told us that we bring poor immigrants from Ireland. Of course, we shall have immigrants from Ireland; but France is differently situated from Ireland. If the Irish emigrate, it is because of the bad land laws; but in France they have that very peasant system which it is thought would prevent immigration from Ireland. I would be only too happy if I thought that any effort to become good and loyal citizens of the Dominion. We have lopinion proper to spend a single dollar for that purpose,

Mr. HESSON. The report of the hon. Minister of Agri-1 for Canada; he is at the disposal of those who go through culture shows that there has been some little improvement in that direction; the statement of the hon. Secretary of State is borne out by the fact that in France some work has been done, whether through Mr. Fabre or other causes I am not prepared to say, but in the Report of Immigration of 1881 the number coming from France was 104, while during the past year it amounted to 306. This shows a very marked increase which, of course, may be accounted for by the fact that Mr. Fabre has been doing some service.

Mr. ROYAL. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps proper that I should speak on this question in the language of the gentleman whose services are the subject of this debate. I refer to Mr. Fabre, our Commissioner at Paris. Residing, myself, in the North-West, I have been in a position to witness the results accomplished by our Paris agency. We have had in the North-West-and on this point I will take the liberty of contradicting the hon. member of East Quebec (Mr. Laurier)-we have had in the North-West some three years ago, attempts at colonization, which have partly failed because the Paris agency had not been organized on a proper footing; the want of information which was felt at this Paris agency prevented a great number of persons from joining the tide of emigration which was started in France, but which unfortunately failed subsequently. On the other hand, we have cases of individual colonization; and we have seen important settlements created by five or six persons who have come from France. These persons have brought with them large amounts of capital, and the farms which these individuals have improved are now thriving establishments. Most of these new settlers have come to the North-West, after getting information from Mr. Fabre, at Paris. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of the Paris agency is the work of the supporters of the hon. member for East Quebec; and if, at a certain period, we have had a certain class of immigration to which the hon Secretary of State has refered a moment ago, an undesirable immigration, which we have been obliged to divert on the American continent, it is due to the friends and supporters of the hon. member for East Quebec. This immigration has ceased, because the Hon. Mr. Fabre has not thought proper to encourage the immigration of socialists. Let the proper means of organization be given to Mr. Fabre, by the opening of a proper office, by establishing at Paris an immigration agency, such as there are in other parts of the European continent, and I am certain that we shall have a large immigration, an immigration which will be important not only as regards the number of immigrants, but also as regards the capital which they will bring with them to the North-West. There is certainly, with all due deference to the opinion of my hon. friend, the member for East Quebec, quite a tide of immigration from France, not from the poor class, but among men having capital and exercising an influence on the people. 1 am in a position to know this by letters which I have received from people with whom I have been corresponding for the last three years, and quite recently a gentleman from France wrote to me that certain capitalists there, were desirous of investing money in these enterprises. Even now, I am having a correspondence with the Department of the Interior, with a view to obtain a land grant for a French settler now residing in Manitoba, and who is in a position to establish a very extensive ranche. He commands sufficient capital to draw here an immigration which will be beneficial both to him and to the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, wonder is expressed at Mr. Fabre not having, with $2,000 a year, sent here 1,000 or 2,000 immigrants every year. Well, for my part, I am astonished that Mr. Fabre should have done as much as he has done, with the limited resources at his disposal. He is acting semi-officially as immigration agent has been found on either side of the House to discourage Mr. LAURIER.

Paris, and he endeavours to direct them here. I think, Mr. Speaker, that instead of judging so severely, and so unfairly I must say, the efforts made by Mr. Fabre, hon. gentlemen opposite, who have themselves established this agency when they were in power, should be the first to ask the Government-that which we are unanimous in asking on this side of the Housethat this agency should be put on a proper footing, not only as a matter of form, but also as to the result which should be obtained, and these results we will never get them as long as we curtail the appropriation which we are asked to vote to maintain a sham organization of an agency at Paris. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for East Quebec has, I believe, made a statement which is not exactly true, when he said that the French population was decreasing. I think this is a point on which there are differences of opinion. The population has remained more or less stationary, but it has not decreased. After the great European wars, the population remained stationary for a moment, in consequence of these wars and of the large emigration which went to South America and to other parts of this continent. As to the causes which are pointed out, they do not exist on French territory; and as the hon. Secretary of State has said, if the hon. member for East Quebec only took the trouble to read certain essays on economy which are published in scientific reviews, he would find that instead of decreasing, the French population is increasing. It is not increasing in the same proportion as it was wont to increase; it is not increasing in the same proportion as in the Province of Quebec, but it is certainly increasing in a proportion which is perceptible enough to be noted by those who deal with this branch of political economy. My intention is not to add anything more to my remarks, and I shall conclude by saying that the efforts made by Mr. Fabre have been very fruitful; that if we have in the North-West large and thriving establishments managed by men having capital, energy and intelligence, it is due to the efforts of Mr. Fabre. I am certain that if the agency we have in France was better organized, if it was stronger, the results instead of being individual, would become general, and the hon. members opposite would be the first to praise the Government for having asked the House to vote not only $2,000, but $10,000 or $20,000 for this purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentlemen who have just spoken have taken a view of the case which is not, I believe, borne out by the facts. In the first place, the hon. Secretary of State has advocated, as a wise thing, justified by the results, the present arrangements in Paris. The only fault he finds with it is that it is not an adequate arrangement, that larger arrangements ought to be made, but he says great things have been done under the present arrangement. We have not seen them, but he says they have been done. The policy of the Government, however, of which the hon. gen-tleman is a member, has been disclosed, and that is to discontinue the arrangement, not to renew the contract with the Hon. Mr. Fabre, which was for a period of three years, and it is therefore plain the arrangement is not a satis-factory one to the Government; it is plain, therefore, that the state of things is not such as they are prepared to continue. Whether they propose to enlarge or to diminish or what, Mr. Fabre's engagement is not to be renewed; and from the statement of the hon. gentleman, I should presume there was not any settled policy of enlargement, because he called on my hon. friend opposite him (Mr. Laurier) to join hands in order to put a pressure, and he knows how to put a kindly pressure on the Government, to create, as I believe, a large immigration agency in Paris. I may say that we have been endeavouring to obtain immigrants from all the countries of the continent, and I believe no man any well-considered proposal to obtain immigration from any country on the continent. We made special arrangements to obtain Mennonite emigration when we thought such arrangements were likely to be successful; we endeavoured to secure a German emigration, a Scandinavian and Teutonic immigration and, of course, looked for an increase of population from the United Kingdom; and I entirely agree that if there be any reasonable prospect of obtaining emigration from France, we ought to make every effort to obtain that also. I thoroughly sympathize with the views of the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Laurier) and with their natural desire that there should be emigration from that country to Canada, and I see no reason why we should not devote ourselves, if it be proved we can devote ourselves with any reasonable expectation of practical results, to securing emigration from France, as ardently, at any rate, as we do, to secure emigration from Germany or Spandinavia or any of these other That is the reason I felt it to be quarters. necessary, when I saw the report of the High Commissioner and found he had left out France, to call his attention to that omission, and we received from him a short verbal report in the usual flowery language of the hon. gentleman, but which did not contain as much practical information as I would desire as to what had been done or what was contemplated to be done in France. The question is a great one. The hon. gentleman says the population of France remains stationary or diminishes, and that this is due to emigration. He said when he found the population of a country diminishing, he attributed it to emigration. For instance, the population of Ireland diminished, and was there not emigration from Ireland? He put the two things together as cause and effect. We know where the great refuge of immigrants from all nations of the world has been for a long time; we know it has been this continent; we know if there has been a French emigration to a large extent, it has been, unfortunately, not to our side, but to the other side of the line-and we know there has been a larger French emigration to the United States from the little Province of Quebec than from the Empire or Republic of France. Look at the statistics of emigration from France

"From 1821 to 1830, 8,497, or 850 a year; from 1831 to 1840, 45,575, or 550 a year; from 1841 to 1850, 77,252, or 7,700 a year; from 1851 to 1860, 76,358, or 7,635 a year; from 1861 to 1870, 37,749, or 3,770 a year; from 1871 to 1880, 73,301, or 7,303 a year."

That has been the emigration of France to the United States. Compare that with the emigration from Quebec to the United States, and compare the population from which the emigration from Quebec is drawn and the population from which the emigration from France is drawn, and then tell me whether France is an emigration country or not The statistics are not hard to find; they are at hand, and they have been abstracted, not very long ago, from two important and anthentic sources of information, the "Annales Démographiques Internationales" by Cheroin, and the article on mortality in France in the Encyclopædic Dictionary of Medical Science, by Bertillon; and these statistics indicate results which I do not think agree with the view of the hon. Secretary of State, whose view I understood certainly to be, that if the population of France was not increasing rapidly but was stationary, that was due to emigration.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say that. I said that the argument which has been drawn by the hon. member for Quebec was not correct, or logic.l, or conclusive. It was not because the population of a country was decreasing that one was obliged to say, as he did, that there was no emigration. I said the population of Ireland decreased and there is emigration; therefore, because the population decreased, we must not necessarily conclude there is no emigration. Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman desired the House to draw the inference that the decrease was due to emigration, and in that lay the strength of his argument. If you find a country in which, compared to the amount of its population, there is a very small emigration, and if you find that notwithstanding that small emigration the condition of the population is stationary or not increasing, then you certainly find, by these two circumstances, that it is not a very fruitful field for an immigration agency. The condition of things in France is this:

"The several territorial changes that have taken place in France during the past half century have very nearly counterbalanced each other. The annexation of Savoy and Nice, in 1861, brought an addition of 1,346.949 to the population, while the annexation to Germany of Alsace and Lorraine entailed a loss of 1,964,143. Making proper allowance for the slight difference in these figures, we find that the average annual increase of population during the present century in France has been 95,039. The rate, moreover, is not increasing, but, on the contrary, is diminishing But when we compare these figures with the statistics of the other large nationalities, we discover that there is a startling difference. For example, during the last five years the annual increase of Great Britain and Ireland has been 310,118, that of the German Empire, 493,360, and that of the United States, 1,155,446. These figures reveal the absolute increment to the nations. But when we analyze them, the result is not less striking. We find that for every 10,000 i .habitants in the United States an addition is annually made of 260; in Germany of 115; in Great Britain and Ireland 101, while in France the increase is only 26. A similar result is reached by an inspection of the excess of births over deaths. In 1879 this excess in Great Britain and Ireland is only 26. A similar result is reached by an inspection of the excess of births over deaths. In 1879 this excess in Great Britain and Ireland was 436,780; in Germany 592,098, but in France only 96,647. "These figures are somewhat modified by making the proper deductions for excess of emigration over immigration, inasmuch as the losses to England and Germany are much greater from this source that to France; but the modification in less than at first thought would be supposed. In 1879 the loss to Great Britain and Ireland from this source was 160,157, and to Germany only 28,004, while that of France was 2,783. Even after making all necessary deductions, we find that the net increase in Germany was 564,094; in Great Britain and Ireland, 276,603, while in France it was only 93,854. In view of these suggestive facts, it is a matter of interest to enquire whether this slowness of increase is owing to a low birth rate or to a high rate of mortality. On this subject the statistics give conclusive evidence. For example, in Austria the average annual death rate is one in 310 of the inhabitants; in Italy, one in 340; in Germany, one in 400; in France, one in 450, and in England, one in 800. Thus we see that the death rate in France is more favourable than in any of the other large European nations, with the single exception of England. The cause of the diminishing rate, therefore, must be sought in the decreasing number of births. If we enquire whether the number of marriages has diminished to any very considerable extent, the answer, perhaps contrary to the general impression, must be in the negative. The statistics show that from 1801 to 1865 the number of marriages per year in every 1,000 of the inhabitants slightly increased ; and, although since 1866 there has been a slight diminution, the difference is not enough to be taken into serious account. We are, therefore, driven to the conclusion that the chief, if not the only cause of the diminished increase of the population, is to be found in the decreasing average nu

Now, in contradiction to what the hon. member from Manitoba said :

"The diminution, moreover, seems to be characteristic of the rural districts as well as of the cities. In the Department of the Pyrénèes, for example, the birth rate in the course of the century has fallen from 44 to 32 per 1,000; in Rhône, from 36 to 26; in Tarn, from 31 to 25, and in Indre, from 37 to 27. But while such are the factain regard to France, what do we find to be the proportional increase in other European States? The answer is at hand. While the average number of births per 1,000 inhabitants in France is only 26, in Switzerland it is 30; in Denmark, 31; in Norway, 31; in Belgium, 32; in England, 35; in Austria, 38; in Prussia, 36 5, in Saxony, 40, and in Russia, 50. While in Germany, the average number of children per marriage is 5-25, and in England, 4-79; in France it is only 3-31."

I think these statistics answer the question.

185. To provide for the painting of an historical picture commemorative of the establishment of Confederation (revote)......$4,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who has got this in hand, pray? This is an important vote. Who is to commemorate the Fathers of the Confederation, and are they being done cheap? There are some 25 or 30 of them at $100 a piece.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. member was not here last Session, or he would have known all about it. It was explained very fully, and every member who was here and who is here to night will remember perfectly well the statement made, on the motion, I think, of the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Laurier). The artist who is employed, Mr. Harris, is now engaged in the work at Montreal, and has made considerable progress, but no portion of the money has been paid.

186 To meet cost of litigated matters	$5,000 00
187 To assist in defraying the expenses of the

tion the Advancement of Science	25,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. Some explanation about this.
