Jouse of Commons Debates

SECOND SESSION, FIFTH PARLIAMENT.-47 VIC.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 12th March, 1884.

The SPEAKEE took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOMINION STATUTES.

Mr. AMYOT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to furnish yearly to the several organized Municipalities a copy of the Dominion Statutes, or at least a copy of the Public Statutes?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am under the impression that all the Municipalities are included in the free list of distribu-tion. However, if the distribution is not done now, I shall see that it be done in future.

MONTREAL POST OFFICE.

Mr. HOLTON enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to improve the post office service in the city of Montreal by keeping the office there open until a later hour each day than at present, and by providing for the immediate delivery of mails arriving there in the evening ?

Mr. CARLING. My attention having been called to the inconvenience of the present mail arrangements in the city of Montreal by the representatives of that city some time ago, I instructed the inspector to make enquiries into the matter, and he has made a report, upon which the postmaster has been ordered to keep the post office open until 10 o'clock each night.

THE CHIEF CLERK IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. CASEY enquired, Who is the chief clerk in the Department of the Secretary of State ? On whose recommendation was he appointed ? What were the special qualifications which led to his appointment over the heads of others ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is a chief clerk in each of the different branches of the Department. The chief elerk of correspondence, which is the main branch of the Department, is Mr. Henry J. Morgan, who is a chief clerk of the first grade; in the register branch, the chief clerk is Mr. L. A. Catellier, who is a chief clerk of the first grade; the Queen's Printer, Mr. Chamberlin, is a chief clerk of the first grade; Mr. W. Henry Jones is a chief clerk of the second grade; and Mr. Alphonse Audet, the keeper of the records, is a chief clerk of the second grade. Mr. Catellier and Mr. eccasion aforesaid? Morgan were appointed on the 1st of January, 1879, Mr. Chamberlin on the 1st of July 1881, Mr. Jones on the 1st Sir CHARLES T of July, 1880, and Mr. Audet on the 7th of June, 1883. hon. gentleman, that the Government have a report from Some of them have been a long time in the Civil Service, one of the arbitrators, but not an award; that this report all of them were formerly either in the Departments or in the House of Commons, and they have been recommended and appointed by Orders in Council generally. The chief clerk of my own branch, (Mr. Morgan) the clerk who represents the Deputy, was appointed in 1853, I do not know under whose recommendation.

Mr. CASEY. I ask leave of the House to explain what I mean by special qualifications. When a man is appointed and not promoted, I understand that the Civil Service Act requires his special qualifications to be stated.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I would like to suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he wants some special information, he might move for some papers. I know what he means. He might better have asked directly what he wanted. If he wants any particular information he may ask, and the answer will be given.

CANAL BETWEEN THE THAMES AND LAKE ERIE.

Mr. CASEY enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to proceed at an early day with the work in connection with the canal between the River Thames and Lake Erie (through the township of Dunwich) for which surveys were made during the past summer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. To give a full answer to this question, I would have to read a statement which has been given to me in reference to it. I suppose that would not be in order, in which case I may say that the information obtained by these surveys shows that, within the limits of a reasonable expenditure, the scheme may be classed as impracticable.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That was known before the surveyors went there.

CLAIM OF MR. GEORGE LAVOIE.

Mr. BILLY enquired, Whether the Government have in their possession an award made by one of the Dominion Arbitrators, in relation to a claim presented by Mr. George Lavoie, asking for an amount sufficient to cover the losses incurred by him in the burning of his barn and its contents, in May, 1872? Does the said award state that the said fire was caused by one of the locomotives of the Government, on the Intercolonial Railway? Is it stated in the said award that, in equity, the Government is bound to pay to the said George Lavoie the amount claimed ? Does the award further state that the amount claimed is not too high ? Finally, is it the intention of the Government, if the award contains such statements, to reimburse Mr. George Lavoie for the amount of the losses by him incurred on the

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to say, in reply to the states that the fire was caused by a locomotive, and that, in the opinion of the arbitrator, the Government ought to pay the damage; that the Government do not intend to pay, because the Government are not liable in the premises, the spark arrestors of the engine having been proved to be in good order.

CLAIM OF JOSEPH D'ANJOU.

Mr. BILLY enquired, whether it is the intention of the Government to pay the claim of Joseph D'Anjou, for ties belonging to him, and removed at St. Fabien Station, in 1882, by the employees of the Intercolonial Railway? If not, for what reasons?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At the time the claim of Joseph D'Anjou was established, he was indebted to the Government in the sum of $192, which, after deducting the value of the ties, $157.50, still leaves a balance due to the Government by him, of $34.50.

ALFRED OGDEN.

Mr. KIRK enquired, Is Alfred Ogden employed by any Department of the Government? If so, by what Department? What are his duties and what salary does he 'receive?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On enquiry, I find that Mr. Alfred Ogden is not employed by any Department of the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And gets no salary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He cannot get a salary if he is not employed.

WELLINGTON BRIDGE, LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. CURRAN moved for copies of all correspondence relative to the necessity of further accommodation for foot passengers at Wellington Bridge, Lachine Canal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no objection to bringing down any correspondence. My recollection of the matter is 'that the hon. member for Montreal West made a very urgent application to the Government while the bridge was in process of construction to have accommodation provided for foot passengers, but it was found that the work had proceeded so far in the construction of the piers that a very great cost would be involved in affording this accommodation, and the contractors were unable to comply with the request of the hon, member for Montreal West.

Motion agreed to.

EDINBURGH FORESTRY EXHIBITION.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) in moving for copies of all cor-respondence between the Dominion Government and the Governments of any of the Provinces, or between the Dominion Government and any person or persons respecting the advisability of adopting measures to secure an exhibit of Canadian woods at the Forestry Exhibition to be held in the city of Edinburgh in August next, said : I desire to make a few observations and will endeavour to make them as brief as possible. It will be admitted we have in Canada undertaken on many occasions to bring this country into prominence in England and the other countries of Europe. The course taken by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in securing the coming of the tenant farmer delegates to Canada had a very considerable effect in that direction. We have also had the able assistance of the Marquis of Lorne and the Earl of Dafferin in bringing Canada into prominence in the old country; but I think it will be admitted that there is no more effecthe exhibition of our products at the great exhibitions of the world. I believe the Canadian exhibit held at the Fisheries Exhibition in London last summer, under the superintendence of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had more to do with bringing Canada into prominence in Great Britain than any other step taken previous to that time. It is true we expended a good deal of money in connection with that exhibition, but the fact that Canada was brought into such prominence by that means, the fact that Canada was in the mouths of so many people during the course of that exhibition has, I think, been justified by the Government in the expenditure made. In connection with that exhibit of wood, with which my motion proposes to deal, at the Forestry Exhibition in Edinburgh, in August next, I believe that such an exhibition would also tend to advantage Canada to a very great extent. It may be contented that the representation, if made at all, ought to be made by the different Provinces, who are more interested in the forestry of this country than the Dominion of Canada, but, if such an exhibit were made under the authority of the different Provinces, it would have to be divided up under four or five, or perhaps more different authorities, and it would not, to my mind, be nearly as effective as if that exhibition was made under the authority and under the jurisdiction of the Central Government; and I believe that I am not in error in stating that the industry of wood, the lumber industry, is of sufficient importance and has been of sufficient importance, in the commerce of this country to justify the Government in making a small expenditure in connection with such an exhibition as that which I advocate. I find, on looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns for the sixteen years which have elapsed since Confederation, that we have exported of the natural products of the country to the following amounts: Products of the mine, \$51,416,647; products of the fisheries, \$89,100,487; products of the forest, \$352,353,118; agricultural products and animals and their products, \$514,977,645. It will thus be seen that the exportation of the products of the forest, during those sixteen years, have amounted to an average of 33 per cent. of the exports of the whole of the natural products of this country, and, if we include the other exports with the export of the natural products we find the exports of the products of the forest amounted to $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. of the whole of the exports of this country during the last sixteen years; and permit me to say, in addition to that, that the exportations to which I refer have no reference to the manufactures of wood or to the ships which have been exported during that period of time. It must, therefore, be admitted that the trade in the products of the forest is of sufficient importance to justify us in giving to that industry some consideration, and in endeavouring, if possible, if it be in our power, to give it the prominence it deserves in the old country. It has been stated, I am aware, by some hon. gentlemen, that the lumber industry is a waning industry; but when I inform the House that the exports of last year amounted to \$25,370,726, as against an average export, during the last sixteen years to which I have referred, of \$22,022,069, it will, I think, be admitted that that trade has not reached a point of decadence which causes us to believe it is not an important element in the exports of this country; and, if it is a waning industry, if the views that are held by hon. gentlemen in reference to it in that respect be correct, it must be because the products of the forest are being out or burnt away; and, even in that connection, it seems to me it would be desirable that we should obtain all the information in our power to enable us to conserve these forests, by ascertaining as accurately as we can what modes are adopted in Norway and other northern countries of Europe for the preservation and replanting of the forest, and I know of no means which would be more satisfactory in this respect than a retive mode of bringing about that desirable result than by presentation of Canada at the exhibition in Edinburgh in Sir CHABLES TOPPER.

August next, where whoever might be in charge of that exhibition would be brought in contact with representatives from those countries, and would be enabled to obtain the information that would perhaps enable us to preserve our forests from the destruction which has been going on from various causes. I do not intend to prolong my remarks in relation to this matter. I think the subject is one that ought to commend itself to the Gevernment of the country and to the House, and I would venture to express the hope that the hon: leader of the Government, and the Government of which he is the head, will consider whether it would not be in the interests of this country, including all the Provinces, that the exhibit, if any be made in Edinburgh in connection with this forestry exhibition, should be made under the authority and under the auspices of the Central Government, instead of being divided up and subdivided, as it would be if made under the authority of the different Provinces.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to say something on the subject which has been brought before the House, and many members wish to speak on it, as it is a matter of great importance; and, as we should like to have an opportunity of doing so, I would prefer that the debate should be adjourned, if it would meet the views of the House. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think it would be desirable to have some expression from the Government in relation to this matter, because, if this debate is adjourned, it will take a place upon the paper where it will not likely be reached this Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would be paying a very bad compliment to my hon. friends who propose to speak, to come to any decision as to the course we ought to take before we hear their speeches. However, I might simply say that the Government thoroughly recognizes the importance of this question. The moment the official intimation was communicated to the Government that this forestry exhibition was to be held at Edinburgh, and inviting the action of the people of Canada as exhibitors, the Government transmitted copies of the papers to each of the Provinces-because the forests, as is well known, belong to the different Provinces, the Government having no authority of their own, except in the North-West, which is a prairie country principally, so that really it was in the hands of the Provincial Governments more than the Central Government-inviting them to act in the matter. There have been answers received from some of the Provinces but not from all. The papers will be brought down at once, the debate will go on, and I have no doubt the House will be glad to hear the discussion, and the Government will come to a conclusion as to what extent, if at all, they should ask for a vote of the House.

Mr. ORTON. I presume that the Dominion Government are making preparations for an exhibit at the coming Colonial Exhibition in Great Britain in 1886. No doubt the products of the forests of this country will be adequately represented there. It would also, I think, be desirable that we should have some expression of opinion by the Government as to whether they intend to have Canada represented at the Colonial Exhibition, because it would require some time to make the necessary preparation.

Mr. COCKBURN. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to say a word in respect to a very important product of the forest-I need say nothing of the staple article of pine as it is always a saleable commodity-I refer to the article of birch. It is worth mentioning that we have in the northern part of Ontario, and, perhaps, in the northern part of Quebec also, an immense quantity of very valuable black birch. Walnut is becoming very dear and scarce, and has almost disappeared from Ontario, but we have a splendid substitute for it in this birch I discuss this question now. Still, I think the hon. gentle-have mentioned. If the existence of this timber was made commonly known by the Government, it would be conferring a great boon upon the population throughout Northern Ontario. There is a vast quantity of this timber all along the Ottawa River to Luke Huron, which is very useful in the manufacture of furniture, and for various other purposes.

Mr. FISHER. Before this matter is disposed of, I would like to draw the attention of the Government to another phase of the question than that which has been alluded to by the mover of this motion, and that is that there will not only be an exhibition of forestry and of the products of the forest, but there will also be a meeting of gentlemen who are interested in tree planting and in the promotion of forestry, which is now obtaining a great deal of attention all over this continent. I would remind the First Minister that in our North-West, in that portion of it which is directly under the charge of this Government, the question of forestry is a very important one, and the report of such a com-missioner as might be sent by this Government to this exhibition, would be of great value in regard to future treeplanting in the North-West. I have before me a circular by which I am sorry to see that exhibits at this exhibition ought to have been entered by the 1st of March, though it may be possible that exhibits from this country might still be allowed. I have also a communication from a gentleman who has been foremost in this country with regard to the science of forestry-I allude to the Hon. Mr. Joly, of the Province of Quebec. In speaking of this question, he says: "There is a serious risk at this late date in our sending exhibits to this exhibition, which might, perhaps, not do the country justice." At the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition our country obtained the foremost position in regard to lumbering exhibits, and it would be a cause of great regret to everybody in this country, especially those engaged in the lumber business, if Canada was not able to make a proper exhibit at the coming Colonial Exhibition. It is a question for serious consideration whether, at this late date, when the entries are already closed, we could make a satisfactory exhibit. I think that in view of the importance which forestry and tree-planting must obtain in the near future in this country, it would be very desirable that the Dominion Government should send a commissioner who might make a report, the publication and distribution of which would be very valuable in promoting the science of forestry in this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will consider the matter.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

THE HIGH COMMISSIONER AND IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BLAKE moved for a copy of the letter of the Minis ter of Agriculture of the 5th of July, and of all cablegrams addressed to the High Commissioner, calling his attention to the demand existing in Canada for the labouring classes, and informing him that notwithstanding the large immigration which has taken place the requirements are still unsatisfied. Also, copies of special circulars issued by the steamship companies quoting the Minister's cable messages by request of the High Commissioner. Also, copies of the cuttings from the London newspapers on the subject forwarded by the High Commissioner. He said : I consider these papers are important in connection with the question which exists in this country as to the prudence and the propriety of the steps which have been adopted by the Government with reference to the immigration of certain classes of the population. I hope the hon. gentleman will bring them down at an early date.

Mr. POPE. Of course it is understood that I am not to man might have known that he was foreclosing me on a subject on which I feel very strongly. Had he brought this question on at the time fixed for discussion——

Mr. BLAKE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. member for Renfrew declined to accept the arrangement that was proposed, and therefore the hon. gentleman is left perfectly free to discuss it.

Mr. POPE. I am ready to stand by every statement I have made. I have always advocated the bringing of immigrants into this country. And the hon. gentleman will not find anything in any letter or cablegram out of which he can make any capital against the Government. I will accept the hon. gentleman's challenge when the papers come down. I am willing the motion should be carried, but I ask that it be extended a little so that it shall include all telegrams sent from this country in which it was représented that there was no labour to be found here for immigrants; and also that it shall include clippings from such newspapers of Canada as have represented the same thing:

Mr. BLAKE. Let the hon. gentleman amend my motion if he chooses to do so.

Mr. POPE moved that the following words be added to the motion :— "Also copies of all cablegrams from Canada and cuttings from Canadian newspapers transmitted to England, and all correspondence obtainable on the subject of the labour demand in this country."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

NEW MODEL OF A BALLOT BOX.

Mr. OUIMET moved that the petition of Joseph Dominique Ernest Myrand, of the city of Qaebec, read and received on the 25th February, instant, praying for an examination of his new model of a ballot box, 'be referred to a Select Committee of this House, to consist of Messre. Bossé, Shakespeare, Royal, White (Cardwell); Hall, Macmaster, Laurier, Weldon, Daly, Landry (Kent); Davies, Trow, Haggart, Kaulbach and the mover, with instructions to examine the movie, and ballot box and report to this House as to the expediency of adopting the same for Dominion elections.

Mr. IVES. I suggest that the name of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) be added to the Committee,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suggest that the name of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) be added.

Mr. OUIMET. I have no objections to add the names mentioned.

Mr. BLAKE: I suggest the addition of the name of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry).

Mr. OUIMET. I may say to those hon. gentlemen whose names I have selected without consultation with them, that the duty will not involve any great loss of time, as it will not require more than half an hour or an hour to examine the wonderful box, which, as I am told, will do away with all ballot papers, and evils and mistakes which ensue from them.

Mr. MILLS. This may be a very interesting invention. If the hon, gentleman says it does away with ballot papers, it may be just as well that the ballot boxes should return candidates as the returning officers.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I hope this invention will also embrace some arrangement by which the ballot boxes will always arrive in time.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). I suggest the addition of the name of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook).

Motion, as amended, agreed to. Mr. Pope.

TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND GERMANY.

Mr. BLAKE moved for copies of all despatches, and correspondence and reports, not already brought down, on the subject of a treaty between Great Britain and Germany under which immigrants to Canada shall enjoy the same immunity on visiting Germany as those who have become American citizens. Also, concerning concessions from the Prussian and Bavarian Governments to the Allan Canadian line of steamers as to the agencies and booking office in Germany. Also, as to a monthly steamer of the North German Lloyds' from Hamburg to Montroal. Also, as to the setting apart of a tract of land for German immigrants and for Swiss immigrants respectively. He said: This motion is also founded on the same report of the High Commissioner to which I alluded a moment ago. In that report the High Commissioner, after his visit to the continent, stated that one of the greatest difficulties in procuring immigration from the German Empire was the lack of a treaty such as that which is mentioned in this notice, and such as we know has been the subject of discussion for a considerable time; and he pointed out the importance of entering as early as possible upon negotiations with a view to the consummation of such a treaty. He also pointed out that concessions by the Prussian and Bavarian Governments to the Allan line of steamships, which has local agents in Germany, would be an important element in securing a large German immigration; and he also referred to the importance of making an arrangement for a monthly steamer of the North German Lloyds' from some German port to Montreal. He also referred to the importance of setting aside a tract of land for German and Swiss immigrants, respectively, as an element to be taken into account in considering the question of the immigration of people from the continent. Bearing in mind the fact that the hon. gentleman in his special capacity of conductor of the immigration business of the other side, subject to the instructions of the Minister of Agriculture, has reported on the importance of taking these steps to facilitate immigration, and in view of the fact that, in his general capacity as High Commissioner, the hon. gentle-man is charged with the conduct of this class of negotiations on the other side, I think it is important to know what steps have actually been taken by him and by the Government to carry out these suggestions.

Mr. POPE. I may say that I believe the Allans are really our agents in Enrope, and they are very good agents at that, and cost us nothing. As to the other matter referred to by the hon, gentleman it is very difficult to bring about. There may have been some written negotiations—I think there were some verbal communications, but whatever there is will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to know that so much of the report made by the High Commissioner has been approved of by his superior officer.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE AT LEAMINGTON.

Mr. LISTER moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government and any person or persons respecting the erection of a post office at Leamington, in the county of Essex. He said: I wish to say a few words with reference to this question. I may say that it is nearly two years since the General Election was held in this country, and certain constituents of the hon. member for South Essex have represented to me that previous to the Elections of 1532 not only the member for South Essex (Mr. Wigle) but the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson) promised the people of Leamington that a post office would be creeted there. I am also informed that as no steps towards the erection of that post office have yet been taken, the people of Leamington are naturally anxious to know when the Government will move in the matter. It is true Leamington is not a very large place, but if such promises were made by the hon. gentlemen they were no doubt made with the sanction of the Government, and the honour of the Government is pledged to the fulfilment of those promises. I may say that in looking over the return of post offices constructed during the last three or four years, it would seem to me that the promise made by the hon. members I referred to, does not seem to be an unreasonable one. I find that a post office was erected in Carleton, N.B., in 1883, where the total revenue from the Post office, Customs and Excise office amounted to only $1,552. Carleton, I believe, is represented in this House by a Conservative member. The cost of the post office in that place was $16,500. Another post office was erected in Sussex, which, I believe, is in the county represented by my hon. friend from King's, N.B. I do not know whether it was done to help him in the elections or not, but I find that it cost $21,753, and the total revenue from the Post office, Excise and Customs amounted to the enormous sum of $2,680. I find that in the town of Hull a post office was erected, at a cost of $21,290, the total revenue amounting to $1,798. In the town of Berlin, a post office was erected at a cost of $44,600, while the revenue amounts to $45,000. I believe my hon, friend for North Waterloo sitting on the opposite side of the House represents the county in which that money was expended. A post office was also erected in the town of Gananoque, in the county represented by another hon. gentleman on the other side, at a cost of $8,217, while the annual revenue from that building is $23,567. Port Hope, which is represented by the hon. member for East Durham, had a post office erected in 1883 at a cost of $25,912, while the total revenue amounts to $40,134. I find also that a post offce was erected at Nanaimo, B.C., in 1882, at a cost of $18,994, from which the total revenue is $1,552. So I repeat, that in view of the fact that these post offices have been erected throughout the country at that particular time, just previous to the Elections of 1882, yielding such revenue as I have named, it was not an unreasonable promise for these hon. gentlemen to make. I think these hon. gentlemen respectively should get up and say whether they made such a promise, and if they did, to give reasons, if they can, why that promise has not been carried out.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I have great pleasure in tendering my thanks to the hon. gentleman for the kind attention he has paid to the county of Essex during the present Session. I trust the Government will always give proper attention to the representations of hon. members of this House, and that we will have the cordial assistance of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) in securing the erection of this post office. I am satisfied that if one thing were wanting in order to secure that building it was the assistance of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister); and I now appeal to the Minister of Public Works, in that gentleman's presence, in the presence of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and other hon. members, to implement any promises he may have made, to give the thriving town of Learnington a public building in the shape of a post office and Custom house. I may tell the hon gentleman that by the manner in which he has brought forward certain matters this Session in connection with the county of Essex, he has made himself the tool and the instrument,the unconscious instrument—for the gratification of private malice. I may also tell him, that he is talking about matters of which he has no personal knowledge. He has made charges against me in the House, although he said at the time he was making them that he had no personal knowledge of them. He made a charge against me with regard to a particular harbour of which he did not in it.

even know the name; and on another occasion he attacked a respectable gentleman holding a public office in the county, though he did not know that gentleman's name. I say that it has been charged against that gentleman in this House, and in the press of the country that he has been shielded by the Postmaster-General because he was a Tory politician. I may say that that unfortunate gentleman never supported me when I was the candidate for the representation of the whole county, and that I am entirely disinterested in mentioning this matter, because he does not now reside in the portion of the county I represent, and never did reside there. He is not a Tory partizan, and I may say that he is so respected by the people, that living as he does on the boundary between the counties of Essex and Kent, he has represented in the County Council of Essox the old Reform township of Mersea, and in the County Council of Kent, the Reform township of Romney. That is the man whose character has been attacked because. by no fault of his, a registered letter was lost-who has been attacked in this House and in the Reform press of this country in order to make capital against the Postmaster-General. Now we have an attack made upon me and my colleague from Essex, and through us upon other gentlemen in this House, with respect to a public building at Learnington. Well, I trust that if there is anything fair or proper in the proposition of the hon. member for West Lambton, it will receive attention. I trust that there may be a public building erected some day at Learnington; and with respect to promises, I can tell the hon. gentleman that I hold my-self responsible to the people of North Essex for any promise I made there or here or anywhere else. I consider myself as independent as any man who sits on either side of this House. I do not presume to dictate to the Government of the day what they shall or shall not do, and no member of that Government has ever offered to dictate to me what I shall do in this House or out of it. I am quite satisfied that the hon. member for South Essex has not noticed the attacks the hon. gentleman made on him because he considered that the proper manner of treating them was with a contemptuous Now, with respect to public buildings at silence. Leamington, I feel it due to that portion of the county of Essex, although I have ceased to represent it, to say that any promise which was made by me or by my colleague, the hon. member for South Essex, will be faithfully fulfilled to the letter; and I tell the hon. gentleman that while I might have retaliated by bringing up little instances in which he might have failed to do the duty he owed to his constituency, I refrain from doing so. I also tell him that in any matter affecting his constituency in which I can honestly and in good faith be of any assistance, I shall for the sake of my friends in West Lambton be willing to assist him to the best of my ability. I do not think that it is to the credit of the hon. gentleman, coming from a section of country whose interests are not largely represented in this House, to allow himself to be made an instrument for the purpose of creating an antagonism between different localities, instead of doing as we might, pull together for the common benefit of the people of that district. I do not know why my hon. friend has chosen to single out that county or myself for his attacks in this House. I am not aware that I have ever done anything to the hon. gentleman to cause him to attack me in the manner he has done during the present Session. I know that his visits to the county of Essex have been confined to those official visits which he has made as Crown Prosecutor, as the paid official of the Attorney General of Ontario, to do duty which the local ministers ought to perform, and which they pledged themselves in the Local House to perform when they received their increases of salary; and to that extent the hon. gentleman has taken the shilling to advocate their cause outside of this House, and possibly

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman when he states that the Government built a post office at Gananoque, and to inform him that such is not the case.

Mr. COOK. Before this debate closes, I would like to ask the Government if they are aware that the erection of a post office in the town of Barrie, in the county of Simcoe, has been made to do service in several election campaigns. I do not suppose for a moment that the Government would use the public money for the purpose of influencing an election; and I am sure that as soon as the attention of the Minister of Public Works is drawn to the fact, he will at once put his foot on it and crush out any movement on the part of any of his friends in any constituency to do that sort of thing. A post office was for many years promised to the town of Barrie; and just before the last Election the hon. gentleman representing the constituency in which that town is located succeeded in inducing the Government to put a sum in the Estimates for this purpose. Just before the Election of 1882, a piece of land was purchased for this post office, and the Government got a man with a wheelbarrow to commence digging a hole to show the people of Barrie that they were in earnest about building a post office. They also had a waggon load or two of brick brought and placed on the ground. They remained there until the next Election for the Local House. When that time arrived it was noised about that the building was going to be erected im-mediately, and the consequence was that there were a few more loads of brick brought to the ground, and this time they succeeded in getting a wags on instead of a wheel-barrow, and enlarged the hole. But they did not build the post office. Well, immediately after the election, a petition was filed against the member (Mr. Phelps), and he was eventually unseated. In the meantime, the proceedings stopped, and the second enlargement of the hole did not take place. But after he was unseated, and an Election was about to come on again, they immediately started another game on the people, to endeavour to make them believe that they were going to have the post office, and I believe that this time they got half-a-dozen waggons and went to work to make the hole larger still. But since the Election I believe nothing more has been done. Now I know that after the attention of the Minister of Public Works is drawn to this matter, he will not permit that to be done. He lives in the Lower Province. It is unfortunate for the people of Barrie that he does not live in Ontario, because if he did he would not have allowed that to take place. But the Ministers from Ontario are censurable for not having noticed it. But I am glad to say that the people were not hoodwinked the third time. Barrie being a Conservative town, at the last Election gave a majority of 6, whereas at a previous Election it gave a majority of 158. This shows with what success efforts are being made to convert it into a Reform town, and of course hon. gentlemen opposite would not like that.

Mr. SPEAKER. Before the debate proceeds any further I would ask the hon. member for North Essex to withdraw the statement he made with regard to the hon. member for West Lambton having taken the shilling to advocate any-thing in this House. I do not think he meant that.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I did not mean that the hon. member took the shilling to advocate anything in this House. I think that the natural provocation which I have received from him all this Session, unnecessarily, and without any justifiable ground, is my excuse, and if I have transgressed the Rules of this House in any manner, I beg to apologize to you, Sir, and to the House.

the Supplementary Estimates, but then they may be too public had been led to expect that the towns having the late to have any effect. I do not want to raise an objection most business, the towns contributing most to the revenue, or to find any fault in particular with buildings that have been erected in the constituencies of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is not pleasant, I know, to hon. members to have it cast in their teeth that certain things have been done in their favour, but I wish to call the attention of the Government to this one point. I myself, I think, first brought under the notice of the late Administration the necessity of giving increased post office accommodation, espe-cially in towns where there was a large Customs and revenue service. I pointed out that in the large cities enormous sums of money were expended in the erection of very fine and costly buildings, and without attempting to detract from the architectural beauty which, I think, it is desirable that Government buildings in large cities should have, in order that they may challenge the admiration of strangers, I still hoped that some of the very great expenditure in those cities might be saved, and that the public interest might be served by the erection of public buildings, not so costly in their nature, in some of the other, not so large, but very important towns. The leader of the Government then, although the finances were not in the best condition possible, took the subject into consideration ; and after I had brought it under his notice on one or two occasions, he announced to the House that he had a plan whereby he intended to give to four or five of the larger towns which have since become incorporated as cities the benefit of public buildings, and he mentioned the names of those towns. One was the city of Belleville which is in the county represented by the hon. Minister of Customs, and the others were the city of Guelph and the city of St. Catharines, and the city that is within the borders of my own county which I have the honour of representing here, and also the town of Stratford. I merely mention this point in order that the Government will notice that when my hon friend (Mr. Mackenzie) who then led the Government, adopted that plan, the Government, in adopting it, was not influenced by any political considerations at all, and in saying that I desire to do so without seeming to impute to hon. gentlemen opposite that they act solely on such considerations ; but it is an unfortunate fact in connection with public buildings erected under their Administra-tion, that, if I remember aright, there has been no public buildings erected in a riding which happens for the time being to be represented by an hon. gentleman on this side. It is the more difficult for me to understand that they have given as full consideration and justice to the different municipalities as did my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) when I note the fact-a fact upon which I do not wish to comment, but which has been alluded to by the hon, member for East Lambton-that many of the towns which have got these public buildings-and I am not finding fault with that for the present-have not the amount of public business transacted in them to anything like the extent that have other important towns which were passed over. That is the point I wish to bring before the Government. It does seem to me that while there are legitimate means which the Government may use to strengthen themselves and the hands of their friends, it is not a legitimate weapon to use against their opponents that public moneys contributed by all the people of the country should be spent for the benefit of particular localities, unless such expenditure be in the public interest; and again I repeat, without saying that the buildings erected have not been in the public interest, that the only way to avoid feelings of might I say jealousy ?-- I may; perhaps, use that expression-liowever, I will only say that if any regard is to be had for public feeling with respect to the equitable and fair distri-bution of public money in that direction, the Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to take this oppor-tunity of saying a few words on this question which I intended addressing to the House on the bringing down of public interest would have been served better if the public interest would have been served better if the

Mr PATTERSON (Essex).

were taken up in their order, and facilities in the way of public buildings given to them as the public finances warranted. That much 1 desire to say preliminary to mentioning a fact which no doubt has, previous to this, been brought to the attention of the Government by the Postmaster General, who has been memorialized, I believe, for the erection of a public building in the very important town of Paris which now, thanks to the kindness of my hon. friends opposite, forms a very important part of my constituency. They represent that it is a very large and very important town, and, without instituting any invidious comparisons, I might say more important than many that have been favoured with these public buildings. I might say that the business transacted there of all kinds is of greater magnitude than that transacted in those other towns. I thought that perhaps the hon. Postmaster General would have recognized this as a very fitting time and a very auspicious opportunity for manifesting, by a vote in the Supplementary Estimates of this year for that town, his desire to relieve what I consider has been the unvarying monotony of granting public buildings to towns and cities wholly represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, in full accord with the Ministry of the day. I mention this without desiring to arouse any feelings of enmity or hostility on the part of hos. gentlemen opposite, but I do think that in the expenditure of public money contributed by all the people of the country, we should, in the matter of the erection of these public buildings, take the same line of conduct that was uniformly acted up to by the late Government. If we should do so, I think that in any further grants that are to be given, the one that has been already brought to the notice of the Postmaster General cannot but receive favourable consideration at the hands of the Government.

Mr. HESSON. I am glad that we have had a post office erected in the town of Stratford, and from what I can learn from hon. gentlemen opposite it was the intention of the late Government to have erected a post office there, but unfortunately the revenues of the country were not then in a condition to warrant such an expenditure. When this Government found themselves in a position to do so, they very wisely adopted the course contemplated by the late Government, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is well to take up first those larger towns in which the Customs, Excise and Post office revenues combined make it desirable in the interest of general usefulness that public buildings should be there erected. I am glad to say that in the town the hon. gentleman referred to, where a post office has been erected, the revenue is of such a character as to justify that expenditure, and it is not one of those small towns to which my hon. friend has referred. In the town of Stratford the revenue returns of last year gave Excise $58,000, Customs $42,000, Post office $9,000, or a total revenue of $109,000, and the Government were paying rent in three different places. I think it was but right that the Government, under such circumstances, should take that place into consideration, and the post office erected there is a credit to the Government of the Dominion. It is not of that gaudy cheap style of architecture of which the country would be ashamed and which prevailed in the buildings erected under the late Administration. I do not believe it would be judicious to erect public buildings in every small place, but when the place is worth such structures, they should be constructed in a manner worthy of the Government, and not as erected in Guelph and Brantford in the days of the late Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. In reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Brant as to the unvarying monotony with which grants were made to counties represented by friends of the Administration, I must say that as regards New Brunswick his remarks are not quite correct; for during the county of Carleton which is represented certainly not by a supporter of this Government, in the county of York, which was not represented by a supporter of this Government, and in the county of Charlotte, in the town of St. Stephen's, which was not, and is not, represented by a supporter of this Government. If the hon. gentleman's accuracy in all other matters may be measured by his accuracy in this, the House will have not a very good impression in regard to it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I said I spoke subject to correction.

Mr. MACKENZIE. At what place in York was there any building put up?

Mr: FOSTER. The post office in the city of Fredericton. Mr. MACKENZIE. No, not by the present Administration. It was by the previous Administration.

Mr. PATERSON. So the hon. gentleman is inaccurate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am happy to be able to set the mind of the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) at rest as to the Barrie post office. I think he has not been there lately, and has not taken as much trouble as he ought to have taken to inform himself as to the facts. I find in a Barrie paper of the 14th February some remarks which I will read to the House. I suppose, as a good Reformer, the hon. gentleman never reads the Conservative paper, and so is only half informed as to matters in his own county:

only half informed as to matters in his own county: "Our Reform friends will not be at all pleased at the vigorous way in which the work on the new post office is being pressed. Ever since Mr. McCarthy first brought the matter before the attention of the Gov-ernment, they have been in hopes that his efforts would be unsuccessful. When tenders were called for, it was a mere electioneering dodge, and the knowledge that the Reformers are an authority on this subject doubtless led many to believe it. When it was announced that the ten-der had actually been granted, we were assured it was bogus. When the work of excavation was commenced, the Government was just digging a little hole in which to bury Mr. Phelps. As soon as the elec-tion was over, according to our Reform contemporaries, whe, off-course, are in Sir John's confidence, the whole thing would be permitted to fall through. When the bricks were put upon the ground, they were mere dabs of clay that would melt at the first shower. These, ef neurse, were would think they would cease. But nothing of the kind. When the excavation was stopped by the frost and a dozen men and teams thrown out of employment, there was rejoicing among the Barrie Grits, and Mr. Phelps was not ashamed to stand up in his place in the House and assert that it was stopped because he was elected. But now, when the stone is being delivered and the mallets and chisels of the stone-dressers are ringing all day, there is not a word upon the subject, not even a local line in either of Mr. Phelps' or grang. What is music to the publie aer ing all day, there is not a word upon the subject, not even a local line in either of Mr. Phelps' organs. What is music to the public ear is heard by them with bitterness of spirit."

Mr. IRVINE. I ought to be very thankful to the mem-ber for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Foster) for having referred to Carleton. The hon. gentleman must know very well that the promise, at all events, if not the contract, was made by the present Government during the time the country was represented by the late Mr. Connell. I have to remind the member for King's that the Government of this country has done better towards the people of Carleton, New Brunswick, than he did. Last fall, he delivered a temperance lecture in the town of Woodstock, and he could not do that without reminding the people that, if they sent up a petition to the Government of Canada numerously signed, he would use his influence with the Government to put an illuminated clock in the tower of that building; but, he said, in return remember that your duty is to send a man to support the present Government. Allow me to say that the hon. gentleman got his deserts. Although it was in a Methodist meeting-house, he received hisses. That is the pay the hon. gentleman received.

Mr. IVES. In the absence of my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), I would like to call the attention of the Government to another kind of grievance altogether. It seems to be the practice here to complain that public buildthe present regime grants have been made for post offices in ings have not been erected in towns of a certain size. Now, as a citizen of Sherbrooke, I have to complain that public buildings have been erected there, that is to say, they have been commenced, and the progress of construction has been continued so long that, if they are not finished soon, the people will really not be grateful when they are completed. I do not think the Government are doing this intentionally for the purpose of influencing the electors of Sherbrooke, because it is well known all over the Dominion that the people of Sherbrooke are the most uniformly sensible people that exist in the Dominion of Canada. They cannot be endeavouring to make better Conservatives of the Sherbrooke people than they now are; but, badinage aside, I think it has been almost as bad to have a public building erected in Sherbrooke as to have it not commenced at all. That building, which should not have cost more than $25,000-I do not know what it cost-and which is a building of the kind that our people are in the habit of putting up in six months, has been going on for two years. The principal street of the city of Sherbrooke has been filled with lumber and material and stone and rock for two years. The building is not now completed. The progress is very slow indeed, if anything is being done, and, unless the hon. Minister takes hold of the matter with that promptness for which he is noted, it will be two years still before the public will have any advantage from that building, or will be relieved from the nuisance of having the principal street of the city obstructed with rubbish and brick and material unnecessarily. For my part, I do not want a public building built in Richmond if it is going to take two or three years to complete a building such as the people themselves would complete in six months. Our people do not take long in putting up a building of that kind, and they have an idea that the Minister of Public Works, when he undertakes to do a thing, does it promptly; and I can tell him that his reputation is suffering sadly in our part of the country from the manner in which the contract for the public building in

Mr. KIRK. As this is a question in which so many members seem to be interested, it might be well for me to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works the fact that I have presented a petition from the town of Guysboro' asking for the erection of public buildings in that town. I am not going to complain that the present Govern. ment or any Government have not done their duty in regard to erecting public building in towns, as far as Nova Scotia is concerned, because I think not only the late but the present Government have done their duty admirably in that regard. There are many towns in Nova Scotia where they have public buildings that do credit to the Government who erected them, but we have other towns that require those buildings, and the town of Guysboro' is one of them. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works, when he brings down his Supplementary Estimates, will pay attention to the petition presented to him, asking for a sum of money to erect buildings there, and will place a sum of money in the Estimates for that purpose.

. Sherbrooke is being dawdled over.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As the hon. Minister seems to be in an unusually receptive mood, I would call the attention of the First Minister to the extreme desirability of redeeming certain promises made in his name touching the erection of a post office and custom house in the town of Napanee. I am not prepared to say that he made them, but I am prepared to say they were made for him—at least I was so assured by a great number of very highly respectable citizens of Napanee, who supported him. Now, Sir, it is rather hard that the people of Lennox, and the citizens of Napanee should lose both the First Minister and the Custom house, and I hope that justice will be done them.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the Government is justified in erect. Ing buildings in any town where they are required. Now, Mr. Ivns.

Sir, I believe that in no town in the Province or in the Dominion can an investment be made to better advantage, in the way of public buildings, than in the town of Owen Sound. At the present time we pay rent for a post office, we pay rent for a Custom house, and for the office of Inland Revenue. I believe if the Government were to spend a reasonable amount in putting up public buildings there it would pay good interest on the capital invested. I would recommend the Government to take this matter into their serious consideration, and I hope they will see the ir way clear to make an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. As a number of hon. gentlemen are making suggestions in the public interest I would take the opportunity of making one if I have correctly construed the principle on which these public buildings are erected. My hon, friend beside me (Mr. McIsaac) tells me that a public building was erected in his county for some purpose but that it did not accomplish that purpose. Now that is unfortunate. He has been returned as an opponent to the Government in this House. I would therefore suggest that in future these public buildings should be placed on wheels so that they could be removed from place to place in case they do not serve the purpose for which they were erected.

Mr. McISAAC. I hardly feel obliged to my hon. friend beside me for making a reference to the building in my county. He asked me whether there was any building in my county about which I had any complaint to make, and I told him that I was fortunate in that a building was purchased there in 1881 and converted into a public building. But I have this to complain of, that the building is not yet finished. I had nothing to do with it. It was my opponent who, in the interest of the county, I presume, and particularly in his own interest, carried on negotiations with the Government for securing that build-ing. That building was purchased in 1881, and somewhat over $5,000 have been voted in two instalments since, but I am sorry to say that it remains in pretty much the same condition it was at first. It may be finished by this time although that is rather a long time to finish such a building. It is about in the same condition as the building referred to by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). During the past two summers a load of brick has been hauled on to the spot every month or two, and a load of sand in another month, just enough to say that the work is going on. I hope no further time will be lost. I call upon the Minister of Public Works to see that it is finished immediately; and I may tell him also that the plans according to which portions of the building are fitted, are anything but satisfactory. The result is entirely too small, and there are other arrangements which are unsatisfactory for county purposes, and I consider it a great pity that so much public money should be expended in the way it has been. It might be expended to better advantage to the county, and, perhaps, to better advantage to the gentleman who had the superintendence of the expenditure-that is my oponent at the last election. I do not know whether it has done him any good. I have nothing to say against the gentleman. However, he did not happen to come here. I see by the return referred to by the mover of this motion that large sums have been expended on public buildings in counties where the revenue was not nearly as large as in my county; and I hope the Minister of Public Works will take means to ascertain how this work is being done, and that if further money is voted, and it ought to be voted, it will be more properly expended than the money voted in the past. Itce by the papers brought down the other day, that the warden of the county was in correspondence with the Minister of Public Works but received no reply. Two or three and the warden wrote to the Minister of Public Works to find out the terms on which the county should have the use of these rooms. This was over a year ago, and he has had no reply. I am not censuring the Minister of Pablic Works. I am glad that so much money has been expended there, because if the principle that has been insinuated guides the Government in the expenditure on public buildings, I am very glad that I happen to be an exception, and that over $5,000 have been spent in a county which sent an opponent of the Government to this House.

Mr. DAVIES. I have no complaint to make that a public building has not been erected in my county town, but I complain that the Government, having had a first class building handed over to them, have managed to burn it down. A few years ago a building was handed over to the Government as a public building. It was roofed with slate and was well protected against fire. The workmen were demanding a National Policy, there were plenty of men out of employment, and in order to give them employment-so it was rumoured-the slates were positively removed from this building and replaced by wooden shingles. The Gov-ernment were warned at the time that the result would be, in case a fire took place in that wooden town, that these wooden shingles would probably catch and burn the whole building down; but it was necessary to give employment to the unemployed at the time, and they went through what seems to be the ridiculous farce of removing slates and putting on wood. The other day a fire took place; the south side of the squaro was destroyed, and just as predicted the their various offices at Nanaimo. sparks flew over and caught these wooden shingles and the whole building, costing the Government $75,000, was destroved.

Mr. FARROW. This question has taken a very wide range. I suppose I represent a riding as important as any other riding represented in this House, and it is in a county as important as any other county in the Province of Ontario. I do not rise to make a charge against the Government, but I do rise to make a charge against the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). It is not the first time he has risen in this House to belittle his own riding, and I am very sorry for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explain.

Mr. FARROW. I will before I finish. I say our county is second to no county in the Province of Ontario, and the other night my hon. friend had not a good word for his own riding, which is in that county, and to day what does he do? When this discussion is going on, when he might have put in a good word for the town of Seaforth where they have no post office, what does he do? Why, Mr. Speaker, he says that the Government ought to build a post office in Napanee. I think it would have been well, and I say it in all good nature and advisedly, if the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) had put in a word for Seaforth, Exeter and Goderich. Those places are represented by what they call Grits, but I feel an interest in those places. The town of Wingham, which is in my riding, I hope will not be overlooked. Although I am constantly spoken of as having been an ardent supporter of the Government for a great many years-a fact which I do not deny, for I am proud of it-yet they have overlooked this nice little town, but I hope when it has grown a little larger we shall have a Government post office and Custom house combined, erected there.

Mr. VAIL. I desire to take this opportunity of saying that there is an important town in the county which I represent. A few days ago I received a letter from the inh abitants of Digby, asking me how they should proceed to bring the subject of public buildings before the Minister of Public Works, and whether it was necessary to forward that I was quite sure the Minister would take the matter into consideration, and if he were disposed to build post offices in any towns in Nova Scotia, the claims of Digby would be among the first considered. When the petition is forwarded I hope the hon. gentleman will consider the claim put forward, and if he will enquire into the necessities he will find they are great. Digby has no public buildings of any kind, and it is a place deserving of some Government buildings.

Mr. GORDON. The remarks made by the mover of the motion with respect to the Nanaimo post office leads me to offer a few observations in regard to that building. It has been stated that the post office revenue was only $1,500, and that the expenditure on the building was over $19,000. That statement is calculated to mislead the House, and if the Government were expending $19,000 for $1,500 revenue, I would not support their action. What are the facts? The post office building at Nanaimo is intended to accommodate the Customs, Savings Bank, Post Office and Telegraph Office, and Internal Revenue Office. The Customs revenue last year amounted to over $34,000. I do not know what the revenue from the other branches amount to. I think the Government are perfectly justified in erecting such a building as will provide security for the books and documents of the various departments. These branches were formerly accom-modated in wooden buildings, which were liable to be destroyed by fire at any time; the present building is, how-ever, fireproof, and I think the Government were fully justified in erecting a building that will afford security to

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). One of the complaints made by the mover of the resolution was, that the Public Works Department had constructed too many post offices in the country. That is not the complaint I have to make; my complaint is that they have not built a sufficient number. When the hon. Minister of Public Works comes to consider the question of providing for an increase of those valuable adjuncts in connection with the collection of public revenue, I hope he will take into his favourable consideration the claims of the town of Fembroke, in my constituency, a town of very considerable importance, where a very large amount of revenue is collected. I take this opportunity of drawing the attention of the hon. Minister to its claims, and I venture to express the hope that when the Supplementary Estimates are submitted, it will be found that its claims have been recognized.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon, member for Renfrew (Mr. White) has already called my attention to the wants of the town of Pembroke, and of course those wants will have to be considered and weighed well; but I am not in a position to say what the Government may do regarding the buildings at Nanaimo. I could not exactly hear what the hon. member (Mr. Gordon) said, but I may say that I think we have done what is required at present. If the town grows by the opening of the railway, which I suppose will be the case, of course, its wants will be greater, and the Government can afford to further consider its claims. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) has called my atten-tion to the town of Digby. I do not think I have yet received the petition of which he spoke, but I shall have great pleasure in receiving it and submitting it to my colleagues. The hon member for East Huron (Mr. Farrow) has called my attention to the requirements in his riding. It is a very important constituency, no doubt, and requires the consideration of Parliament, which, no doubt, it will receive in due time. The hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) has spoken of the building at Charlottetown, which he nearly accused us of having burnt down. I think the hon. gentleman will remember that-though if he did know it, I do not think he would have spoken as he did-when the roof was removed, it was a petition. I told them to send a petition by all means, and done in accordance with a report made by the architects who were instructed to examine as to the condition of the building. The recommendation of my officers was to put on the roof as it had been built; and if it has contributed to the burning down of the building, I am very sorry, but it is not the only building with such a roof in thriving Charlottetown. The building will have to come down, and there will no doubt be an item in the Estimates to re-erect a building there. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Allen) has called attention to the claims of Owen Sound. That is a familiar name to the Government. I think we have done a great deal for that place by way of harbour improvements, and no doubt the hon. gentleman will see that we cannot do everything at every place; we must do something at one place and afterwards do something at another place. Therefore, I think the erection of a public building may remain in abeyance until we see what the improvements in the harbour bring forth. As to Napanee, all I can say is, that so far as I am concerned this is the first time I have heard of a public building being specially required there. The ex-Finance Minister has called the attention of the House to that place, which is a very important town no doubt, and it will be placed on the list of names of those places where public buildings are asked. I cannot say more than that. As to Guysboro', this is the first time that my attention has been called to it. My hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) has called attention to the delay in the erection of the public buildings at Sherbrooke. He is perfectly right in saying that the delay is very great. The reason for that delay is the fact that according to law if we call for tenders we have to accept the lowest who complies with the conditions and specifications of the Department. That system is one which has been followed for many years, though it has been found faulty by the several Ministers who have occupied the position that I occupy to-day. But it is provided for by an Act of Parliament, and I suppose each Minister has hesitated in asking for more powers than the Act gives. There would be less delay if we could follow the rule which prevails in some other countries, where the Chief Engineer, or other officer, makes calculations and estimates of the work to be done-makes the specifications. Then they call in some contractor who is known to be a good contractor, who has done work for the Government, and who has fulfilled his contracts well. He is asked if he will execute the work at the price mentioned by the engineer. The contract is made with such a contractor as that, and the Government is sure that they have a good contractor, and that the price is sufficient to complete the building and leave a profit to the contractor. Under the law we are obliged to accept the lowest tender, and the result is sometimes as we find it in this case, that the contractor breaks down after a cortain time, and we have to take the work off his hands. This necessitates the making of new estimates and specifications for the remainder of the work. My hon. friend may rest assured, however, that my Department is pushing and will push that work to completion in as short a time as possible. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) has spoken on the subject in a kind way, I must say, for he did not cast any reproach on the Department, but he thought that perhaps some of the buildings erected from time to time, not in the large towns, might be perhaps a little costly. The hon. gentleman must remember, however, that when you have to put a post office, a Custom house, an Inland Revenue office, a Weights and Measures Office, and sometimes an examining warehouse under the same roof, you must have a large building; you want to make it a substantial building, and, therefore, it will cost more money than you sometimes might desire. At the same time, I do not think there has been any extravagence in those places. The buildings are about that matter on my hon. friend. I must say that the Gov-the same now as when they were erected under the previous ernment is in an unhappy condition about all these post Government, and under the Government which preceded offices. There is no pleasing hon, gentlemen. If a public any extravagence in those places. The buildings are about Sir HECTOB LANGEVIN.

them. My attention has been called to the same subject by another hon. member, and I called the attention of the Chief Architect especially to it, in order that he might reduce as much as possible the expense without impairing the appearance of the building or destroying its usefulness. The hon. gentleman may rest assured, therefore, that the matter has not escaped my attention. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) has spoken in a very amusing way about wheel-barrows, carts, &c. These things may be known to him but they are not known to my Department. We had a site secured for the erection of the building, we gave the contract after calling for tenders, and the con-tractor is going on with the work. I am informed by my officers that the work is being proceeded with with all due diligence, and that the building, when completed, will be a substantial building, one which would be a credit to the place and to the Department. Now that I have answered as fully as I can the remarks made by the different hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, let me say to the hon. mover of this motion, that although two members for the county of Essex have spoken to me more than once with regard to this matter, of a post office at Leamington, there is no correspondence of any kind, and I would suggest that under these circumstances he should withdraw the motion.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman forgot to say what estimate he would put in for Paris.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Paris is such a large place, and would require such a nice building, that I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman just now. He will have to wait for the Supplementary Estimates, and if he finds anything there he will be rejoiced, and if not I will be sorry with him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does the hon. gentleman say that he remembers nothing of any representations to him about Napanee?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. None that I remember.

Mr. BLAKE. We all know what an active memory the hon. gentleman has; we know how much he is master of the affairs of his Department, and I am convinced, Sir, that his memory on this occasion played him false. The hon. his memory on this occasion played him false. gentleman is an accessible man, he is courteous, he does not frown down those who approach him on public questions, and I am sure the first Minister was not afraid, he was not under any apprehension which would prevent him approaching the Minister of Public Works and asking him to make good those promises, which, if not made by him were made in his name, to the electors of Lennox, in con-nection with a post office in Napanee. Therefore, I am convinced that the first Minister must have represented to the Minister of Public Works repeatedly, must have told him time and again, and yet the Minister remembers nothing about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is convinced that representations must have been made to my hon. friend, and that he has forgotten them-that his usual accuracy of memory has failed him. The hon, gentleman says he is convinced this is the case, which only shows that he may be convinced, or profess to be convinced, and all the same be in error. The truth of the matter is, that I heard very little, if anything about a post office or Custom house during my election campaign. On the contrary, we heard that we should have our public buildings occupied by way of rental-that they should he rentod still, because the person who rented the building was either a widow or daughter of the former proprietor, and her only means of subsistance was the rent of the building. So I never pressed building is erected in a constituency represented by a Ministerial supporter, it is stated that he is affected by getting this building-that it is placed there for a purpose. If a building is erected in a county which is represented by an hon. gentleman opposite, then hon. gentlemen, like the hon. member for York says, here is a building like the one in the county of Antigonish, which is built for the purpose of bribing the people to vote against the present member. So that there is no pleasing them any way. If we build a post office in a constituency of a Ministerial supporter, then it is said that it is built for the purpose of unduly gratifying him, or bribing his constituency. If we build at a place which is represented by an opponent, then we are told that it is for the corrupt purpose of stealing away his constituency from him.

Mn. LISTER. I wish to say, in reply to the hon. member for North Essex, that when I introduced this subject, I had no idea at all that it was going to provoke the dis-cussion it has, or perhaps I should have been deterred from bringing it before the House at all. I would simply say to that hon. gentleman and to the hon, member for South Essex, that while they are representatives in Parliament they do not certainly represent the great proportion of the community. Those people have a perfect right to bring their grievances before this House by any means they think proper, and they have thought proper to bring this matter before the House through me. Now, I desire to assure the hon. member for South Essex that I have now, as I always have had, feelings of the greatest personal kindness towards himself. I should be sorry to say anything that would wound his feelings on this or any other subject. But if he thinks proper to take exception to what I say in the discharge of a public duty, I can say nothing as to that. I think the hon. gentleman, however, did not do credit to himself in referring to me in the way he did. As he has withdrawn those words, perhaps I need not say anything further about them. But he made an attack on Mr. Mowat, because Mr. Mowat, not being able to attend two Assizes at the same time, thought proper to appoint me Crown Counsel in the county of Essex, and I hope I discharged the duties devolving upon me there faithfully to the Government and to the public. The reference which the hon. gentleman made to me in that regard was unworthy of him, and when he reflects upon it I am sure he will think so himself. Now, I made no complaint against the hon. members for Essex or against the Government; I simply asked for information. I asked those hon. gentlemen to say whether it was true or not that they had promised the people of South Essex that there buildings would be erected. The hon. member for North Essex, while he was willing to reply, said that the hon. member for South Essex would treat my words with contempt. It is somewhat extraordinary to me that the hon. member for North Essex should have thought proper to reply himself. I asked this question, and it has not been answered; the hon. gentleman has not stated whether he made this promise or not. If he did, he should frankly say that he did; and if he did not, he should contradict that statement. I can only repeat that I have found no fault at all with the construction of this post office, but I mentioned the fact of these post offices having been built at these small places as evidence that the statement which has been made had something reasonable about it. In the town of Sarnia, where I have the honour to reside, the Customs receipts last year amounted to $94,646, and the place has some 6,000 inhabitants. In addition to that, we have Post Office receipts and Inland Revenue receipts; and yet the public offices in that town are a disgrace to the country. But, strange to say, a place with no more than 500 inhabitants, and yielding an annual revenue of only $1,500, can have public buildings erected, while large and prosperous business towns in the security therefor, with copies of all correspondence as to country are denied them. I think it is the duty of the Gov- such arrears.

ernment to adopt a general principle for the erection of public buildings where the business done requires them, because otherwise the Government lay themselves open to suspicion, if suspicion only, that they are putting up buildings in these small places for the purpose of purchasing the constituencies.

Mr. WIGLE. I cannot sit quietly and allow the statements made by the hon. member for Lambton to pass without notice. It appears from what he has just soid, that the town of Sarnia is entitled to a post office. Well, if the hon. gentleman will look more after the interest of West Liambton and allow South Essex to look after itself, he would be better serving the interests of his own constituents The people of South Essex are perfectly satisfied with their representative, but it appears that the hon. gentleman cannot find anything wrong in West Lambton, and he goes fishing about the country. He first took up the question of the Colchester lighthouse, and he could not find anything wrong there. Then he took up the Morrisburg post office, and he did not find anything wrong there Then he went to the Kingsville harbour, and he found it was all right. Then he went to the Wheatley post office, and tried to insinuate that Mr. Fox, the postmaster, was not the kind of man he should be; and the very same correspondent who wrote to the hon. gentleman, sent a letter to the Globe newspaper stating that the Wheatley postmaster had lost a registered letter containing $500, whereas we found out that it was less than $100; and that the postmaster said, "as soon as I find that the letter is lost, I will pay the money," and he paid it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is referring to a former debate.

Mr. WIGLE. I will leave that matter, then. I have said all 1 care about saying in reference to it, at any rate. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman makes a motion for certain papers regarding the Leamington post office. Well, Leamington is not a large village, but it is a place where a great deal of business is done and it probably ought to have a post office. I have always urged on the Government to build a post office there, but it has not yet been built. hope that when the village grows a little larger, it will get a post office, and I am satisfied that when it is entitled to one, the Government will give it a post office. I am responsible for the acts of the Government in South Essex, and the people of South Essex are satisfied; and I say that I never promised South Essex a public institution of any kind in any election I ran in that constituency. I am perfectly independent, and I think the people of South Essex will not thank the hon. gentleman for poking his nose into that county. If the hon. gentleman wants any information with reference to that county, he can get it at any time by asking its representatives; and if he wants us to assist him in promoting the interest of his constituency, all he has to do is to come to us and say so, and we will be happy to assist him. But if he keeps fishing around, as he has done in South Essex, the people of that district will not think as much of him as they have hitherto done.

Motion withdrawn.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY FREIGHT CHARGES.

Mr. INNES moved for statement of the amount of freight charges of the Intercolonial Railway against the Londonderry Steel Works of Nova Scotia, for each of the years 1879 to 1883, inclusive; the amount paid on account thereof in each of such years, with dates of payment; the amount remaining due in respect of each of such years, and the Mr. DAVIES moved that the motion be amended by clear that if persons have lent money on mortgage on the adding the following words: "Also, statement of any special the factory, or have become its creditors generally, and freight charges of the Intercolonial Railway allowed to the afterwards find that the Government have a superior lien Spring Hill Mines Coal Company for the carriage of coal from the Spring Hill Mines to Montreal, also the ordinary freight charges of the said railway for coal, fish and agricultural products from the principal stations on the said railway in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to Montreal."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ST. CROIX COTTON FACTORY.

Mr. INNES moved for a statement showing the value of machinery imported for the St. Croix cotton factory at St. Stephen's, N.B., the date of import, the amount of duties chargeable on the same, the amount paid and the amount still due and the security held therefor, and copies of all correspondence on the subject.

Mr. BOWELL. I would like the hon. gentleman to inform the House what object he has in moving for these papers. I am not aware there is anything peculiar in the importation of machinery or the collection of duties in connection with the St. Croix cotton factory any more than there is with any other factory in the Dominion. If there is anything wrong, I should like to know what it is, and I am sure the House would be glad to know the facts connected with it.

Mr. INNES. The papers will show that. What I wish to know and what the House wishes to know, is, whether this factory is indebted to the Government for duties.

Mr. WELDON. The statement of the affairs of that Company some time ago showed that a large amount of money was due the Government for duty. If that is the case, we wish to know whether the Government have taken a first lien on the factory and claim priority, as the hon. Minister of Finance did in the case of the Exchange Bank.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no knowledge of the statement referred to. No instructions were issued to give that cotton factory any advantage in connection with the payment of duties upon the machinery they imported, other than given any other similar company in the country. Of course the hon. gentleman will understand I am not questioning the veracity of what he says, but I have no knowledge of the settlement of which he speaks. The practice that has been in vogue in connection with the importation of machinery for any of these establishments has been this: They have been allowed to bring in the machinery to place in their mills. It goes in piecemeal, but after it is placed they are asked to pay the duty before operations are allowed to begin. That is the practice that has been carried out in connection with the Montreal factories, and not only cotton but other factories throughout the country, as well. If there has been anything remiss in the collection of duties down there, it has not been through any instructions given from the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite clear there has been very serious remissness, for I have been given a copy of the statement of the affairs of that company, which has been in operation for a considerable time, and in that statement there is an indebtedness to the Dominion Government for Customs duty on machinery, to the amount, if I remember aright, of some-thing over $30,000. If it be the case that the invariable instructions of the Department have been to allow the machinery to be first set up as it goes in piecemeal, and then to insist on the payment of duty before operations begin, it is clear there has been a violation of those instructions, on the pre-sent occasion, of a very serious character. I assume the Government has a lien of priority for those duties; per-haps the hon. gentleman will inform me if that be so. It is thing else. Let me explain that the hon. gentleman has Mr. Innes.

on the property, innocent persons may be very much embarrassed, and the indulgence of the hon. gentleman's officer may add to the distress occasioned to the people by the unfortunate failures that have cropped up throughout the country.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no question as to the lien the Government holds on all property brought into the country, on which duty has not been paid. That has been settled lately in a suit instituted in Montreal. I can inform the hon. leader of the Opposition that it is just possible that por-tions of the machinery may have been imported and not used, that a number of looms may have been placed in the mill and never yet used, and the delay in collecting the duties may have arisen from that fact. In some cases that fact has been called to my attention when I asked why the full amount had not been collected. Acting on instructions to collect the duties before operations commenced in the different mills, these may have been allowed to remain standing for too long a time.

Motion agreed to.

"A," "B" AND "C" BATTERIES.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) moved for a return show ing the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men at present comprising "A", "B" and "C" Batteries, the Cavalry School and the Schools of Infantry; also, return giving the names of the commissioned officers of "A", "B" and "C" Batteries, the Cavalry School and the three Infantry Schools, distinguishing such as are graduates of the Royal Military College; also, the dates of appointment of each, and the date of their commissions in the Militia; also, showing their previous service, and their qualifications.

Mr. WELDON moved in amendment that the following words be added to the motion : "And from what Provinces they respectively come."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FORTIN. Mr. Speaker, before this House proceeds with the business of the evening, I would like to make some explanation relating to part of a speech made last Monday by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). My remarks will be in the shape of a personal explanation. During the said speech, the hon. member pronounced the following astounding words. The hon. gentleman, it appears, wanted to pay a great compliment to the discipline that was carried on on board a vessel which I had the honour to command for sixteen years, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but we will see whether he carried out his purpose. The hon. gentleman said :

"Let me make a comparison between the state of efficiency of the "Let me make a comparison between the state of efficiency of the Militia of this country and that of our Navy. A few moments ago I observed Commander Fortin in his seat. Let us see how men in the navy have learned that the first duty is obedience. When an order comes from a superior they at once obey it. On one of the little excursions down the River St. Lawrence, Commander Fortin, of the Osnadian Navy, was on board. While going down the the river, the men had a line run out aft for the purpose of catching fish. They hooked a por-poise. On hauling it on board the steamer, Commander Fortin said it was a shark. The men all thought it was a porpoise. But the Com-mander said it was a shark; and ever from that day to this, wherever the broad pennant of the Canadian Navy floats, a porpoise is known as a shark."

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this article is-1 do not know whether the word ludicrous is a proper made several errors. First, I was not on board of a steamer. The vessel that I had the honour to command was a sailing vessel, built after the celebrated America, now owned by General Butler, perhaps the finest vessel in the world. picture of La Canadienne can be seen in the library of this Parliament, and I may be allowed to-say, having been her Commander for so long, and having found the vessel such a faithful friend, that the tallness of her masts, the great spread of her wide sails, and her fine lines, made her very fit for the service which she performed-a diffi-cult and important service, the service which was composed of cruising all the time, day and night, to protect the fisheries, and to prevent evil-doers from doing evil. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not of the vessel that I wish to speak. It is of its officers and its crew and of myself, because, in those few words, we are attacked; we are attacked not violently, perhaps not willingly, but, Mr. Speaker, we are attacked in our honour. The officers and the men that I had the honour to command were submitted to the same discipline as on board of men-of-war-if there was a difference, it was more strict-and those men understood what honour was, what duty was, what truth was, and, when those men were commanded to do a duty, day or night, in good weather or bad weather, they went to work and obeyed without reluctance in any way. Now, it is I who am specially attacked in this speech, and the people of this country, and perhaps the people of other countries where the speech of the hon. gentleman may be read, will suppose that I do not know the difference between a porpoise and a shark. Sir, I hold in my hand, printed reports for thirteen years in which reports I have described minutely eighty three species of marine animals and fishes, and I think that hon. gentlemen and the public generally who know how long and hard I worked in describing these fishes, will believe that I can make a distinction between a porpoise and a shark. Now, Sir, as regards the discipline on the vessel which the hon. gentleman made the subject of his remarks. I will repeat, there was rigid discipline on board, and the men had great regard for truth and honour, and all the qualities of gentlemen. I think if I had been in the place of the hon. gentleman who spoke, and wanted to prove that there was good discipline among the sailors and that they were men of truth and honour, I would have contented myself with saying that the Commander, while in a state, I may say, of distractedness, saw a porpoise being hauled on board his vessel and he called it a shark, and asked his men and officers to call it a shark too; and I would have said that the men and the officers, out of regard for truth and honour, said it was not a shark but a porpoise. That is what the hon. gentleman might have said. I do not wish to speak at length on this subject. I rose not only to defend myself but to defend the officers and men who served under me for thirteen years-men who did their duty to their country under the flag which floated over their heads; men who did their duty in time of peace and who would have done their duty as well in time of war; men who would have stood to their guns and defended the flag of this country as their forefathers did before them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough, first to prove that the remark of the hon. member was altogether erroneous, and that if those who in this House or in the country, wish to sneer at the old Commander of La Canadienne and her officers and sailors, let them first go round the Gulf of the St. Lawrence and question the mariners who have seen us, and the fishermen who received help from us, as to the manner in which we performed our duty. I might also appeal to that hon. gentleman under whom I then served, and who is now a member of this House, when he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I was ordered to go and report myself to the then newly appointed Minister of Marine the moment Confederation took place, and I went up the River Miramichi amongst strangers to me and to my men; and I would like that hon. gentleman who has seen us at work, to be pleased to tell this House and the country how we performed our duty.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the House passes to the next item on the paper, I wish to make a few explanations to my hon. friend—personal explanations to Commodore Fortin as a question of privilege. I may state to my hon. friend that I had not the slightest intention in the world of saying anything uncomplimentary to him in the remarks which I made in the House the other evening—far less had I any intention to say anything uncompli-mentary to the officers and men of La Canadienne. I said, in all seriousness, what I said at that time, that I believed that their efficiency was undoubted, that a state of discipline existed which was complimentary to the Commodore and to the officers under him. If I made a statement about a little incident which occurred when the Commodore was passing down the Gulf, I did not do it of my own self; it was a common report I heard from several hon. gentlemen in this House. My authority for the statement was the hon. gentleman for Kestigouche (Mr. Moffat), and I asked him to day whether the statement he made was true or not, and he told me he had the information directly from the Lieutenant who commanded the vessel, Lieutenant Têtu. I am sure any hon. gentleman who heard me speaking on the motion the other evening, knows perfectly that I had not the slightest intention of saying anything derogatory to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, or to any of the officers or crew. I merely, perhaps, not believing the little story myself as I heard it from the gentleman, stated it for the purpose of illustrating the speech I made that evening, without any intention of insulting the hon. gentleman or any of the officers of his ship.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker,---

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the House is willing, this matter cannot be discussed any longer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, Go on.

Mr. MITCHELL. I merely rise because I have been referred to by the hon. gentleman from Gaspé (Mr. Fortin), and I am only going to occupy a few minutes. I feel it due to him, when insinuations have been made against him, and he is made the subject of what I thought to be ridicule, but which my hon. friend who has just sat down has explained he did not mean as ridicule, but simply repeated as a story-I say when the hon. member for Gaspé refers to me in the manner he did, he does it for the purpose of eliciting from me my opinion of the services he has rendered this country. I had the honour to be the Minis-ter of Marine and Fisheries under whom the hon. gentleman served, and I will say this for him, that for efficiency, for discipline, for cleanliness and order, for the manner in which he fulfilled the duties of the very important office he held as Chief Magistrate or Judge, extending along a thousand miles of coast, his conduct was such as reflected the greatest honour alike upon himself and upon the Government he served. Sir, as his Minister, I take this opportunity of paying to that hon. gentleman the highest compliment that can be paid him. He was always zealous, and he did what a great many Militia officers do not do if we may judge from the statements we heard the other night-he obeyed orders-and looking at the reports, extending over thirteen years, and seeing the study, the attention, and ability, and particularity which those reports displayed, every one must agree with me in saying that the country owes to my old friend the Commodore a debt of gratitude for his practical services, and for the manner in which he performed important and delicate duties along that coast, where now his present constituency lies, and the respect and confidence of whose inhabitants he then earned. In the Department over which I presided, we all liked him, we all loved him, and I can only say that I regret that he has had to come before this House and to make the personal explanation he did. But I am sure the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) did not mean anything personal, and that as he has made a retractation, I hope my hon. friend from Gaspé will forgive him.

Mr. FORTIN. Certainly, I accept with pleasure the explanations of the hon. member for South Lanark.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Mr. HAGGART, in the absence of Mr. ABBOTT, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 32) to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I trust this Bill will not be pressed to-night, as I know the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), desires to speak upon it. The hon. gentleman is at present absent from his place, but may return in an hour or so, when it might be taken up.

Mr. HAGGART. I will not press it now, if it is understood by the House that the Bill can be taken up later in the evening; but the promoter of the Bill is very anxious to have it pushed forward, and requested me to move it tonight.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Go on.

Mr. CAMERON. There is nothing to be gained by pressing it to-night. I wish to raise a question of privilege in regard to this Bill, a question which affects the House, and I should prefer the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) to be present. The Bill was proposed by the hon. member for Argenteuil, and it was carried to its pre-sent stage by that hon. member, and I wish to raise a question of privilege affecting the position of that hon. gentleman in regard to this Bill. I do not like to discuss it in his absence; he is in the city, and I believe was in the House to-day. It is a matter personal to himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see how a question of privilege can arise in any way on a private Bill. If it is a question of privilege, it must be taken up as such, and certainly not in the discussion of a private Bill. However, this order can stand over and be placed at the foot of private Bills, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will be present at that time.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed :

Bill (No. 59) respecting the Northern and North-Western Junction Railway Company.-(Mr. Small.) Bill (No. 75) respecting the Manitoba South-Western

Colonization Railway Company.-(Mr. Ross.)

Bill (No. 80) to amend the Act incorporating the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company.-(Mr. Bell.)

Bill (No. 89) to amend the Act incorporating the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company, and to change the name thereof to the Montreal and European Short Line Railway Company.-(Mr. Tupper.)

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Mr. HAGGART, in the absence of Mr. Abbott, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 32) to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. MITOHELL.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I rise to a point of order. I notice that the Bill stands on the Orders in the name of Mr. Abbott, the hon. member for Argenteuil, and I think it is according to our rules and practice that nobody else can move the Bill. I believe it can be done by another person in the case of public Bills, but not in the case of private Bills. The promoter of the Bill must move it himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. The English practice is that a member cannot move any Bill for another, if it is opposed in any way.

Mr. HAGGART. If a public Bill can be moved by another person I do not see but that the same rule should apply to private Bills.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. ABBOTT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I submit a question of privilege, a question of very considerable importance, a question which affects the independence of Parliament as well as the dignity and independence of members of this House. It is generally known, it is stated, I believe, in the public press, that the mover of this Bill, the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) is the solicitor, the advocate, the standing counsel of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is understood that in that position the hon. gentleman prepares all agreements, all documents, concerning the affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and prepares such Bills, advises upon such Bills, as it may be necessary to submit to Parliament by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and under his engagement as the advocate, the solicitor, or the standing counsel of the Company. Now, it is understood that this Bill which the hon. gentleman introduced, of which he moved the second reading, and promoted before the Railway Committee, was prepared by the hon. gentleman, advised on by the hon. gentleman, in his position as standing counsel, advocate, or solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If that is the fact, it is strange that the hon. gentleman should have introduced this Bill, moved its second reading, and moved it so far; because the hon. gentleman appears to occupy a peculiar position in relation to this Bill, and to all other matters of legislation in this House, in which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are concerned. Of course, as a member of Parliament, as the representative of the county of Argenteuil, he is bound to bring to the consideration of this and all other questions, a free and unbiassed judgment. As the solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as their counsel, their advocate, of course he is bound to advocate their interests. Now, I submit that it is a difficult matter for a member of Parliament occupying that position, when he comes within the walls of this Chamber, to lay aside his professional capacity, and to assume that free and independent position which every member of Parliament is expected to assume when he comes to deal with questions before this House. Now, I wish to raise the question here, whether or not the hon. member for Argenteuil, if he is the paid solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, has a right to move this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I might ask the hon. gentleman if he is going to raise a question of privilege as to this Bill?

Mr. CAMERON. As to this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not consider that this is the time to raise a question of privilege relating to this Bill. The question of a member's seat can at all times be brought up, but a question relating to a Bill cannot be brought up while it is under the consideration of the House.

Mr. CAMERON. The question I submit is the question of the right of the hon, member to move this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. There appears to be no question about that right. May says:

"Though a member interested is disqualified from voting, he is not restrained, by any existing rule of the House, from proposing a motion or amendment. On the 26th July, 1859, Mr. Whalley moved an amendment to a clause added by the Lords to a railway Rill, in which he admitted that he was personally interested. In the debate, exception was taken to such an amendment having been proposed by a member having a pecuniary interest; but the Speaker rule i that though it was a wellknown rule of the House, that a member under such circumstances could not be permitted to vote, and though the course adopted was certainly make a motion was restrained, and he had been given to understand that Mr. Whalley did not intend to vote."

Mr. CAMERON. Allow me to call attention to a rule passed in 1858, which reads as follows :--

"That it is contrary to the usage, and derogatory to the dignity of this House, that any of its members should bring forward, promote or advocate in this House, any proceeding or measure in which he may have acted or been concerned, for or in consideration of any fee or reward."

Let me also call your attention to a statement of May:

"It has also been declared contrary to the law or usage of Parliament for any member to be engaged, either by himself or any partner, in the management of private Bills, before this or the other House of Parliament, for pecuniary reward."

The point I make is that if the hon. gentleman-I do not say it is a fact—is the solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, although he has no pecuniary interest in this Bill, yet as the paid solicitor of the Company he is not in a position to promote it in Parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has no right to vote upon it, but according to the authority I have read, he is not restrained from proposing a motion or amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. But you will permit me to say that that is not my point at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair; order, order.

Mr. CAMERON. That is not the point I am submitting at all, Mr. Speaker. I quite admit that a member interested in legislation has possibly a right to move a motion or amendment with reference to it in the House, possibly a right to discuss it, but no right to vote. But I mean to say that a professional man, who has been engaged professionally outside the House in connection with a matter of legislation, has no right to promote that measure in the House, and the rule of 1858 was intended to cover that class of cases. It arose in this way. There were complaints in the public papers that professional men in England had been engaged in advocating the claims of certain Indian princes. These professional men were also members of Parliament, and the interests which they represented outside they also advocated in Parliament. This rule was made to cover that class of cases; and according to it, a professional man, so situated, has no right to advocate in Parliament any matter of business in which he has an interest outside of Parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member raises a question of privilege, he must conclude with a motion. That is just where the difficulty is. When an hon. member objects to another hon. member moving a Bill at any stage, he is raising a question of privilege that ought to be raised as a distinct question, and that ought to conclude with a motion; and when an hon. member brings forward a question of privilege, the motion to which he alludes should be relevant thereto.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But you do not propose that a member should make a motion to decide a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. No; if there is no motion made I decide there is nothing to show that a member is disqualified from moving a measure because he has a pecuniary interest in it, although he is prevented from voting.

Mr. CAMERON. My object, Mr. Speaker, in calling attention to this matter, was to enable the hon. member to state in his place in the House whether he comes within the class of cases mentioned by me as coming under the rule passed in 1858. I stated, when I rose, that my information was derived from the public press, and I asked if that information was correct, because if it was, the hon. gentleman was not capable of promoting this legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman has spoken three or four times——

Mr. CAMERON. I have a perfect right to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Whenever there is a decision of the Speaker, and any hon. member chooses to dispute it, he must appeal from that decision without debate.

Mr. CAMERON. I am not disputing the ruling of the Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

Mr. CAMERON. I want to know what the ruling is.

Mr. SPEAKER. I decide from May, page 389, of the edition of 1879, that although a member who is interested is disqualified from voting, he is not disqualified by any existing rule of the House from proposing a motion or amendment. Therefore, so far as I can see, the hon. member is not disqualified from moving this motion.

Mr. ABBOTT. I move that you do now leave the Chair. Mr. SPEAKER. Shall this motion be adopted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hour for private Bills is up. It is the standing rule that one hour after the evening sitting is dedicated specially to private Bills. That hour is now over, and as I have on the paper some measure in which I am interested, I claim the privilege of coming, in my turn when the time is over.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hour for private Bills is used up, then the House must proceed to other business on the paper. As I told the hon. gentleman who was speaking on a question of personal explanation, he was taking up the time devoted to private Bills.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Mr. Speaker, you only took the Chair at 8:20.

Mr. SPEAKER. Whether I took the Chair at ten or fifteen minutes past eight, makes no difference. The Bill will be talked out in any case.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I would like to ask whether we are to understand that it will be the rule hereafter that the hour for private Bills means up to nine o'clock, for if the Chair is only taken at 8:20, that only leaves us 40 minutes.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour dates from the hour I take the Chair, and if I only took the chair at 8:20, the hour is not yet expired. There are still ten minutes left.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I maintain that I am not wrong in claiming that the hour is over. If it is not over, as you have just mentioned, it will soon be over. What is the question before the Chair? I maintain that the position I have taken is correct and I intend to prove it to you in the five minutes not yet elapsed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speak French.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). I am called upon to speak French and I will do it with great pleasure. I trust it will be in my power to show in a clear and distinct manner—

Some hon. MEMBERS. English.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is very extraordinary that when I want to speak English they will not allow me, and when T want to speak French they will not allow me.

An hon. MEMBER. Speak in Gaelic.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). I must admit that I never spoke Gaelic. French and English are the two only languages I ever spoke. But to come back to the main question now laid before us, I think I may say that the rule invoked by us is binding and cannot, by any means, be done away with. If you are of opinion, Sir, that the hour is over, I am willing to end my speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the hour over.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION BILL.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Charlton, that Bill (No. 6) to provide for the punishment of Seduction and like offences, be read the third time, and the motion of Mr. Foster (p. 666) in amendment thereto.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). I would like to ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, whether this Bill has been reprinted or not, as it was understood, I believe, when the amendment was moved, and it was cut all to pieces, that it should be reprinted. I ask if it has been reprinted, and, if so, why it has not been distributed?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; it has been printed.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). It is not distributed.

Mr. SPEAKER. 1 am informed that it was distributed this morning.

Mr. DESJARDINS. We have not the French copy.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I object to going on with the Bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He cannot object, because it is not required to be printed. No amendments need be printed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was understood by the House, and settled by the House, in fact, that it should be printed before it was discussed, and that was one reason why the adjournment of the debate was moved, in order that it might be printed and distributed to members for their information.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The matter was suggested, but that does not afford ground for any member to take exception under the Rules of the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. The amendment was printed in the Votes and Proceedings, page 205. It has been in the hands of members for some days.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is in the Votes and Proceedings. The Bill has been reprinted, and the amendment is in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. MILLS. The rule does not apply to the amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I moved the adjournment myself, and I moved it for the purpose of having it printed for the information of members. That was the ground of my motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is printed in the Minutes, in the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not what we required.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Every member is supposed to look at the Votes and Proceedings. The Bill itself was printed.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. SPEAKER. The understanding was that the amendment should be printed, and the amendment was printed in the Votes and Proceedings; but the only Order of the House on which I can go is the Rule of the House, which says that a Bill, before the second reading, shall be printed in English and French, and there is no Order of the House which requires that a Bill should be printed afterwards. The debate was adjourned in order that the amendment should be seen in print.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a motion before the Chair, moved by Mr. Foster.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). He does not move it now

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Foster) does not choose to move his motion, I move that the Bill be now read a third time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The motion cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then the House can pass on the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of Mr. Charlton that the Bill be read the third time, and the motion of Mr. Foster in amendment thereto.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). I move that the debate be adjourned, for the purpose of having the Bill printed and distributed in both languages.

Mr.CHARLTON. The amendments have been printed and distributed in both languages in the Votes and Proceeding, and, as you yourself ruled, Mr. Speaker, there is no Order requiring the printing of the Bill after the second reading. I submit that that motion is out of order, and, while I am on my feet, I wish to call attention to the motion now before the House. It will be in the recollection of the House that, in the Bill as originally introduced, the first clause provided for the punishment of seduction under promise of marriage, and for the punishment of a feigned or pretended marriage. That has been divided into two sections. One has been incorporated in the Bill, that for the punishment of seduction under promise of marriage, and the second is named in this amendment now before the House. In consequence of dividing one section into two, it became necessary, in section 4, to refer to offences named in three sections, which were formerly named in two, and the changes provided are merely verbal ones, except the one making a false or pretended marriage a crime. It is merely dividing the first section in the original Bill into two, making two sections for two offences, and making the verbal changes necessary in consequence of one section being divided into two. The matter is easily understood. It has been in the hands of the House since the last debate; it is printed in the Votes and Proceedings; and, although I would be quite willing to abandon this proposed section as to feigned or mock marriages, I do not think the House has any objection to that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is that the debate be now adjourned; the hon. member cannot give any reasons in the motion.

Mr. MILLS. Is not that amendment out of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment is that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. OUIMET. I shall support the amendment of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Landry). But I would like to know if it is to be understood that our privilege of getting the papers of this House in French ceases after the second reading of a Bill. I think if the use of the French This is a mere amendment. Hon. gentlemen may take some other method of killing the Bill, if they want to do it, but this objection cannot legally be taken. I until the Bill is disposed of, every order of this House to have the Bill reprinted as amended, should mean that the Bill should be reprinted in French as well as English.

Mr. MACKENZIE. So it is.

Mr. OUIMET. I have had the Bill as reprinted in English, but I could not get it in French. It has certainly not been distributed, and I pretend that we have a right to it, and we shall insist on that right. This Bill, as it now stands reprinted, would be a disgrace to our Statutes. But I shall reserve further remarks on it until it is reprinted in French.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I shall vote for the amend-ment of the hon. member for Montmagny. I must say, however, that we, the French members, do not always insist, as we have a right to do, that motions and other proceedings be read in both languages. Very often, in order to expedite business, in order that the time of the House may not be taken up by reading all the documents and proceedings in French, we waive the right and say "dispense." But hon. gentlemen should understand that though we may waive that right, they should not try to refuse it to us. This Bill has not been reprinted in French, though there was a formal Order of the House that the Bill should be reprinted as amended; and, Mr. Speaker, you have admitted that it was the understanding of the House that it should be reprinted in French as well as in English, and the First Minister has expressed the same opinion. Now, if that Bill had been reprinted only in French, I wonder whether those hon. gentlemen who are not willing now to delay its consideration because it is not printed in French, would not have insisted on the Bill being reprinted in the language which they understand best. Of course, I am not speaking for myself alone; I understand both languages and am able to speak them fluently enough to be understood, but it is a right, and when our right is contested, we must insist upon it. I am sure all will admit that this right is not left to the will of the majority of the House; it is a right we have by the Constitution of the country, and I must ask you, Mr. Speaker, that that right of ours be recognized and acted upon. For my part, I have often waived my right to have these papers read in both languages, but if that right is contested, of course we shall have to insist upon it strictly, and have all documents, all motions, and all proceedings read in both languages.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very sorry that our friends from the Province of Quebec take the position they do in this matter, and for this reason, that at this stage of the Session, the point they take is equivalent to a defeat of the Bill, The rest of the Bill has been acted upon, except the amendment I moved the other night. It is simply an amendment providing for the punishment of seduction under promise of marriage, limiting the act to twenty-one years. This amendment, now before the House, has been printed in French as well as in English, and has been in the Votes and Proceedings since the day of the last debate took place. This amendment could not be incorporated in the Bill. The point raised by my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, does not hold, because all the information he desires is already printed in French, and, Sir, I cannot but consider the objection raised to be not upon the point of the matter not being printed in French, but as an objection raised for the purpose of assassinating the Bill. The Bill cannot be reached again if this motion for the adjournment of the debate passes. Under cover of asking that the Bill be printed in French, the motion is directed against the provisions of this Bill as it stands; and although I would extend the utmost courtesy to the members from Quebec, I feel disposed to hold that the request is not a reasonable one. I assort that the papers, the motion, the amendment, are all in French; that these gentlemen have everything that they require in the French language in reference to this Bill, and the reprinting of Canada, while performing any such contract as in the first section of the this Bill in French will not enlighten them in the slighest degree. The Bill as it stands before the House now is simply the Bill as it was first introduced, printed in French, and with the one part of the clause which was struck out, reinserted-that with reference to seduction under promise of marriage. I regret very much that this course has been taken. I must say that I recognize in the course that is taken, a desire, not to get information in French, but a desire to kill the Bill, under the pretext that it has not been reprinted in French.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. My attention is called to the fact that the hon, member has made an accusation that ought not to have been made.

Mr. CHARLTON. If I have made any accusation, or said anything in my remarks that was unparliamentary, or was unkindly to my French friends, I am very sorry. But it strikes me that they are quite able to understand this Bill without waiting seven or eight days to have this amendment, which, as I have said, has already been printed in French for several days, reprinted in French again.

Mr. VALIN (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I believe we are entitled to a French copy of this amendment. Among the members of this House, are a great many lawyers, but we are not all lawyers, and it is of the utmost importance that laymon-such as myself-who do not always understand the somewhat exclusive wording of the law should have a copy printed in French, of this Bill, in order to get information on the actual bearing of such an important Bill as this. Moreover there is a rule stating that both languages will be used in this House, and I for one will insist on its being carried out. We will have to give explanations as to our conduct, and it is important that we should know what we are doing, because it is a question of marriage, and marriage is always a very interesting matter. The crime, for the punishment of which this Bill provides, also requires all our attention. Before taking a decision we will have to consult persons thoroughly conversant with the law. I, for one, am not prepared to express an opinion until this Bill and the motion amending it shall have been printed in French, for one word misunderstood might perhaps be sufficient to put us in a false position, and we would be very sorry to give a vote which would be detrimental to the Province of Quebec or to the French speaking people.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Translation). After the peremptory reasons just given by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Valin) I have no more to say.

Motion agreed to on a division, and debate adjourned.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved that the Bill be printed in both languages, together with the proposed amendment.

Motion agreed to.

FRAUD IN RELATION TO CONTRACTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 12) for the better prevention of fraud in relation to contracts involving the expenditure of public moneys.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Before the House resolves itself into Committee, perhaps the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to explain in what shape the Bill came from the Special Committee?

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Bill was passed by the Special Committee with an amendment. The most simple way is to read the Bill, which is as follows :-

said, Act mentioned or awaiting payment in respect of any such contract or having held any such contract or awaited payment as aforesaid, within twelve months previous, or who, holding or having held any such contract, within twelve months thereafter subscribes, furnishes, gives or promises to give or furnish any sum of money or consideration whatsoever, either directly or indirectly, by himself or by the agency of another person on his behalf, to any person whomsoever, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a penalty of not less than one thousand dollars, together with imprison-ment, for a term of not less than one month and not more than twelve months; and in default of payment of the penalty so incurred, the offen-der shall be imprisoned for a further term of twelve months unless such penalty be sooner paid; and the offender shall, in addition, forfeit all right and claim to recover any payment in connection with such contract." said, Act mentioned or awaiting payment in respect of any such contract

tions, or twelve months after the Elections, from providing, either directly or indirectly, any funds in order to secure the election or return of any member of Parliament. The clause, as framed by Dr. Wilson, is drawn in such a way as to secure the object I have in view, which is to prevent contractors from providing, during the time they hold their contracts with the Government, any sum of money, directly or indirectly, for the promotion of Elections. That is the object of the Bill, which is a sound one, and one which should meet with the approbation of the House. Under these circumstances, I think the Bill should receive the assent of the House. I need not go into any details; I desire to avoid such a course; but I am sure the First Minister will see that the object I have in view is to secure the purity of Elections, and the larger the election funds are the greater i is the danger of poisoning the electoral body. There can be no doubt that if you provide a remedy to prevent large contributions to election funds, there is a chance of our having pure Elections. I propose this Bill in the interests of the public, and with the good intention of its being passed and afterwards carried into effect. If this measure does come into effect, we shall have pure Elections. We know that our election expenses are small, and they should be so. I need not say that we have had, in the Province of Quebec, cases of persons who have said they control the Local Legislature. That has been a boast made in the public papers. It should not be so, and I think if the House will pass this measure, it will have a beneficial effect. I do not say it will cut off all the evil. but it will, to a great extent, deter the improper expenditure of money, as offenders will be liable, not only to a money fine, but to imprisonment. The amount of $1,000 would be a small penalty to a man who is making thousands upon contractshe would laugh at the money penalty; but the punishment by imprisonment will have a deterrent effect, and will certainly prevent others from following such examples. I believe the measure is a good one in itself, and that there is not an hon. member who does not feel that it is one which | involving the expenditure of the candidate's money. should be adopted.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). The remarks of the hon. gentleman induce me to say a few words, and I will speak them in English. The object of the Bill is to prevent all fraud in relation to contracts involving the expenditure of public money. The hon. gentleman believes that, if the Bill becomes law, the election expenses will be very small, and that we will have fewer Elections in future. Our election expenses are always small, except perhaps those in the county of L'Islet. I have here a statement of the expenses paid by the hon. gentleman in his last election, and I intend to prove that his Bill, if it passes and becomes law, will never prevent him from doing what he has already done. The Bill is rather late in being introduced. It should have been passed last Session, before the hon. gentleman was returned by a minority of the electors. I have here, I say, copies of the hon. gentleman's election expenses, and I see that while he was canvassing his county generous.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. CASGRAIN. To what extent?

Mr. LANDRY. Not to a very large extent-I suppose to the extent of his means. I find by one of the items that he gave a $10 bill for a bazaar, and 25 cents for a young lad who had taken his first communion that year. The hon gentleman was so pleased that he could not do otherwise than give him 25 cents. I will now read it in French as it is in the return :

I hope, Sir, that the hon. member, if he wants to have a pure election, will not lose his time by attending concerts or giving charity to a sick woman. I hope that he will observe the law himself, and that he will add an amendment providing that candidates should not go to such expenses. I hope the Bill, when it comes before the Committee, will receive all the attention it deserves. I hope that we will make such amendments as will render the Elections purer than before, not only in respect to contracts involving the expenditure of public money, but also in respect to Elections

Mr. CASGRAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the full amount of the expenses. That is the question now before the House.

Mr. LANDRY. No; the question before the House is the motion to go into Committee.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman will lay the paper on the Table, as the Rules require, we will see what the expenses are. I ask the hon. gentleman to lay it on the Table.

Mr. LANDRY. As a schedule to the Act I suppose. I. hope it will be translated into English for the use of hon. members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In looking over the Bill, I notice that the Committee have retained a feature of the original Bill which induced me to speak against it before, he met poor children and poor widows, and was very and I believe, to vote against it. The first clause of the Bill reads :

"Whosever, for the purpose of assisting in any election to the Par-liament of Canada, or to the Legislature of any of the Provinces of Canada, while performing any such contract as in the first section of the said Act mentioned, or awaiting payment in respect of any such con-tract."

Now, the House objected strongly, and I did personally, as an individual member, to this phrase "awaiting payment in respect of any such contract." After a man has had a contract with the Government and performed all the work upon it, and has ceased to have anything to do with the contract, but has not got his money, he is liable to be sent to gaol for a year, and to pay a large sum of money because the Gov-ernment refused to pay the amount. It may be a matter of long litigation. Look, for example, at the case of the Intercolonial Railway, which has been built for many years. All those claims are not settled yet, though the railway has been running for years, and yet this Bill disfranchises any one of those persons-he cannot be elected a member of Parliament, because ten years ago they fulfilled their contract and are awaiting their payment from the Government. This measure provides that if a contractor, while awaiting payment in respect to his contract, offers to give or promises to give any sum of money for the purpose of assisting in any election, either for himself or anybody else, he shall be liable to a penalty and shall go to gaol at the discretion of the court for one month or twelve months. So he is disfranchised, and cannot be a member of Parliament and cannot assist either in his own Election or in the election of his friends, even though the expenses should be as moderate as they were in the case which my hon. friend behind me has alluded to. This provision was considered exceedingly objectionable last Session, and in Committee I shall move to strike out these words, and after they are struck out, so far as I am personally concerned, I do not object to the rest of the Bill.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move to amend the Bill in the way I have stated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point raised by the hon. gentleman may be fair enough as regards the man's own election. My hon. friend, I presume, did not intend to interfere with that. But there are very grave objections to any man who has an unsettled claim against the Govern-ment being allowed to subscribe to Elections. There is no more fertile source of bribery than the desire of men, who have large unsettled claims against the Government, to ob-tain a favourable settlement. And I think my hon. friend beside me is quite right in saying that this is a matter which should be settled by law. While men have these unsettled claims against the Government, they should not be allowed to subscribe to the election funds of either side. There is no intention of disfranchising anybody. They are not deprived of their votes, though I think there may be force in the First Minister's contention, that a man should not be prevented from subscribing to his own election.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think my first objection, relating to a man's own election, is unanswerable; indeed, the hon. gentleman admits that it is. But after a contractor has fulfilled his contract, the action of the Government in keeping him out of his money should not prevent him from having the same right as any other man in the land. No Government should be able, by hanging up a man, to prevent him from exercising the same right as any other man.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know that very heavy unsettled claims are preferred against the Government by the contractor after the completion of every con-tract. We know that it is in the contractor's interest that claims. The hon. gentleman knows, and every man in this House knows perfectly well, that whenever a large contract is concluded, these extra claims are preferred, and we all know that the Government are likely to treat them leniently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman speaks from experience, I have no doubt. He speaks with authority.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What is the point of order. The hon. gentleman says we all know that Governments are lenient, and I say I suppose he speaks with authority, and we will take his own statement. I am not making any charge of any kind. I am only saying that I suppose he speaks from his own experience, and I do not admit that the experience has been the same on this side. But what I say is this, under this provision any Government could hang up a man and prevent his exercising his rights by refusing to pay his account, and in that way make him subject to an indictment and to imprisonment as commiting a misdemeanour. I think it is an outrageous proposition : I think the very statement of it shows that it is outrageous; and I certainly press my amendment to strike out these words.

Mr. CASEY. There is a point that both my hon. friend from South Huron and the hon. leader of the House have overlooked. This measure has been discussed as if it prevented somebody who had already a right to be a candidate at an election from being a candidate. It only applies to contractors, and we know that contractors have not now a right to be candidates or to sit in this House until their contract is settled up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has been decided in the other way. When a contractor has finished his work he ceases to be a contractor, and all that remains to be done is to settle his account. This is decided by English law; and it was decided some years ago, by discussions in this House, who were contractors and who were not.

Mr. CASEY. With regard to the time between the conclusion of their work and the settlement of their account. that contention, no doubt, applies. But my hon. friend is right in insisting that that is just the time when corrupt contributions are likely to be made to Elections-just the time when a man who is hung up by the Government is willing to shell out in order to be cut down.

Mr. IVES. Not cut down.

Mr. CASEY. Not cut down in his figures; he might out up rough if he were. Without imputing any motives to Governments, past or present, we know that constant charges of this kind have been current, and they will continue to be current until the thing is put an end to. If the hon. gentleman wishes to clear the skirts of the Government of all suspicion of being influenced to make favourable settlements with contractors, if he wishes to guard against such attacks as have been made when contractors, for in. stance, took frozen whiskey to spend it among the electors, he should support this measure. Now, the hon. gentleman wishes to prevent that sort of thing, and his only way to do it is by adopting this proviso which the First Minister wishes to strike out.

Mr. MILLS. I think that what we ought to consider in a measure of this kind is, whether there is any real mischief likely to occur from the absence of such a measure, and whether there is any evil to be remedied by that particular clause which the hon. First Minister proposes to strike out. What is the proposition alleged by the promoter of the Bill? It is simply this, that a man who has claims against the the Government should take a favourable view of his extra Government that are still unsettled, claims to which he thinks he is entitled, but to which the Government thinks he is not entitled, he is much more likely to secure their settlement if he is a promoter of the Elections in the interests of the Administration than if he were not. The experience of hon. gentlemen during past years shows that there is an evil in this particular that requires to be remedied, and that this measure does meet the mischief. The hon. gentleman says we are depriving a party of his rights. I do not know that any one would feel very much grieved, who has claims against the Administration, to be deprived of the liberty of contributing any aid to any election other than his own, while that claim remains undisposed of. If the hon. gentleman will permit this clause to remain a part of the Bill, he will not find many petitioners asking that they shall not be restrained in their liberty, and that they be allowed to exercise those rights which he is so anxious to secure to them, by striking out this provision. The hon. gentleman says the Government may hold over a claim indefinitely. I suppose any person who has a valid claim against the Administration can, in almost every instance, have redress by petition of right; and however anxious the Government may be to delay settlement, they cannot prevent him seeking redress in the courts. We have had many instances, during the last ten years, of redress being sought in the Court of Exchequer, and of its being obtained against the views and even the active opposition of the Administration. This is not an unreasonable proposition. There is a real evil requiring redress, and this clause does afford a reasonable remedy for the mischief. I do not suppose it is possible to propose a measure in this House as a redress for some wrong in the conduct of public affairs, to which exception caunot be taken. But the fact that exception may be taken is, after all, no valid objection against such a proposition. The question is, if there is an evil that requires to be redressed, is this a reasonable mode of seeking to redress it? I think there does exist the mischief sought to be remedied, and I believe this is not an unreasonable remedy. Before the hon. gentleman objects to this, he ought to submit to the Committee some mode of redress for the mischief complained of, which will accomplish the same object and be less open to objection than that bəfore the Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must say that this provision in this clause will be called an Act for the purpose of inducing Governments to be corrupt. The hon, gentleman admits that any other person has a right to spend money in a legitimate way to promote his own election or the election of a friend, or anybody else. Provided his expenditure is within the limit of the law, there is no fault in him. A man who has performed his contract to the public and the Government has a right to take his money; but if there is a dispute between the two, he is to be punished for doing what otherwise would be perfectly correct, for fear that the Government might grant him, if he might be corrupted, some favour. That is like the old plan adopted with the children of our English and Scotch kings, that when a young prince behaved badly they had a boy who was whipped in punishment for the young prince's sins. For fear the Government may be corrupt, this man is to be guilty of a misdemeanour and sent to gaol. But what is to prevent the corrupt Government saying at once to contractors-the hon. gentleman says we all know the Government will be lenient in settling the account-well, if the Government is corrupt enough to be lenient because a man has subscribed to election funds, all the contractor has to do is to go the Government and say: settle my claim at once; this Act is passed, as long as I have to wait for payment, I caanot help you, but just pay me what I want and I will do 'so. Of course the Government, if it be a corrupt Government, as it must be in order to make out this case, they will over stepping the mark, and, in his zeal to make our elec-waiting payment; then he will spend his money and be very grateful for having got such a large sum out of the Government; he will work at the elections; he will come down handsomely, as my hon. friend says. There is no ground or basis for that sentence in the clause; otherwise, personally, I do not object to it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is no doubt that there have been and that there are still to day a number of contractors with large claims pending against the Government for a long period of time. Of course, in many instances, that cannot be helped; but these contractors, in the meantime, are absolutely in the hands of the Government, and being under the influence of the Government they will, in order to get a settlement of their account, in order to get the favour of the Government, befriend the Government, by subscribing in the proper time for the Elections. I can say this from what I have seen, and I know it is the experience of everybody. This clause does not deprive any man of his real rights. A contractor cannot be a member of Parliament under the law as it exists to-day. If this clause were for an unlimited period, I agree that it would be hard; but the period is limited to a certain time-six or twelve monthsduring which he will be debarred from subscribing. There is another reason which I consider covers the case. Why should that man be at liberty to subscribe at an election at all, when no money is wanted for an election? The hon. member for Montmagny quoted my personal election. I gave every cent in my expenses which I had to expend directly. I was bound in honour and conscience to do it, and I did it; and what did that amount to? It amounted to some $340 for running that county during more than six weeks. That was all my own expenses and I might have made my expenses heavier. I made them exactly under the law and I do not want any contractor to come forward and help me to pay my election expenses. Where is the member of Parliament to-day who could not carry his own elections for three, or four, or five hundred dollars, especially in the counties? Therefore, I mean to say that it is not needed at all to have recourse to outside subscribers. It is not necessary at all, and, in the few instances in which it might be necessary, a candidate will find a friend to help him rather than go to a contractor. That is what I want to bring to the consideration of the House, and I am sure this is the true principle upon which we ought to be guided in conducting our own elections. That is the reason why I bring this measure forward, and I hope it will be carried with the intent that I have in viewthat is to say, to make it effective before the country.

Mr. CARON. Occasionally we hear a good deal about Provincial rights. Now, there is a point in the Bill of the hon. member which I consider to be of very great importance. I can easily understand that we should have juris-diction to enact a Bill for the purposes of our own Federal Elections

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the hon. member will allow me, we will discuss that question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CARON. But how, in a Bill framed by an hon. member in this House of Parliament, he could put in such a clause as to provide that whoseever, for the purpose of assisting in any election for the Parliament of Canada, or the Legislature of any of the Provinces of Canada-

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will you allow me?

Mr. CARON. I can understand that the hon. gentleman's zeal should display itself in regard to elections affecting the Parliament of Canada, but 1 am afraid he is wittle up the account at once. Then the party will not be tions absolutely pure, he is going beyond the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and enacting a law affecting elections over which we have not the slightest jurisdiction.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the hon gentleman would have allowed me, I would have cut short that speech. If you refer to the Act passed last year, you will see that we have provided exactly what is in this Bill. It applies both to the Local Legislature and to the Federal Parliament.

Mr. CARON. But that is no answer that the hon. gentleman should make mistakes two years running.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is the House, not me.

Mr. CARON. It is no answer to say that the hon. gentleman made the same mistake last Session. If it is wrong this Session, he should not have put it in the Bill last Session; or, if he found it out after the Bill passed last Session, he should have taken it out this Session.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see, if he looks at the measure, that it is declared in this Bill that this is a crime; it is made a misdemeanour. Now, while the Local Legislatures can punish by fine and imprisonment any offence committed against any of the laws of the Provinces, it is very doubtful whether they could declare any particular act against their legislation a crime. I am not going to argue the question as to whether they can do so or not. They certainly have the power of declaring certain acts, by the British North America Act, offences against local legislation, and can punish them by fine and imprisonment, but I do not think, when they are specially authorized to punish such offences by fine and imprisonment, that we can assume that they have any implied power beyond that to make any offence a crime; and this Act declares that. Whether it is expedient or not expedient to declare offences against local legislation crimes, is another question; but there can be no doubt that, if it is proper to declare this act a crime, here is the proper place to make that declaration, and it is by an Act of the Parliament of Canada and not by an Act of the Local Legislatures that the declaration should be made. Now, the hon. the First Minister refers to the clause which he 'read, relating to contractors awaiting payment, and he thinks it strongly objectionable that we should declare that parties who have claims against the Government, should not, while those claims are in existence, be allowed to contribute to any other elections than their own. The fair way to consider this question is to consider what are the practical mischiefs that grow out of the power to make such contributions, on the part of persons who have claims against the Administration, the same as those who have actually subsisting contracts. Why, look at what transpired in the case of the Local E ections last year, in the Province of Ontario. Every. body knows the Shields' brigade, who went from this city into the Muskoka district. Ever, body knows the relation in which those parties are said to have stood to the Administration. They were large contributors to the election of the Conservative candidate. Their corrupt acts were in part, and only in part, disclosed in the courts. It was rumoured abroad everywhere that those contractors had their work remeasured by an engineer favourable to them, for the purpose of enabling them to receive a larger from the Government than they otherwise sum would receive. Now, I am not saying whether that is a well-founded charge or not. I am expressing no opinion upon that. I do not care whether it is welltounded or not, for the purposes of this discussion. But it is a very serious matter that such a charge should be made, and that a large portion of the community should believe such an offence possible. Suppose they had already completed their contract, and were simply awaiting payment and asking for remeasurement of their work by an ! engineer more favourable to them than the one who had amendment.

been employed on the road, would not all the objections that apply to their conduct, while there is a subsisting contract, be equally applicable to them in case their work had been completed and was simply awaiting payment? I say that hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, as well as on this, will see that the objection would have been quite as strong if their work had been completed and the contributions had been made, as it was when the work was incomplete, and those contributions were made. If we propose legislation on this subject, we should look at the evils that are likely to arise in these cases, and should make our legislation what experience shows is necessary to remedy these mischiefs; and it seems to me that the objection is quite as strong in the case of parties who have been contractors and are awaiting payment from the Government, as if those contracts were still subsisting. and something was still required to be done on the part of the contractors. If the right hon. gentleman can point out any difference in the hypothetical cases that I have put, in the case of actual contract and the case of a completed contract awaiting payment, I should be delighted to hear the distinction which the hon. gentleman, no doubt, can make; but, to my mind, they seem to stand upon exactly the same footing, and the objections which lie against the one lie equally strong against the other, and if a remedy is proper in the one case a remedy is equally proper in the other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it necessary to go into any discussion of that section. The hon. gentleman has explained his views and I have explained mine. But as to the point raised by the Minister of Militia, there is a good deal in it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills), is quite correct in stating that a Provincial Legislature cannot declare any matter to be a crime or a misdemeanour or any other branch of the criminal law. What the British North America Act declares is that, for the purpose of enabling the Legislatures to enforce their laws, they can punish a breach of those laws by fines or imprison-ment, or by fines and imprisonment. They can do that, but that does not make it a branch of the criminal law. Therefore, for the purpose of making it a branch of the criminal law, it must be put in a Bill here. But, on the other hand, the Parliament of the Dominion must be very guarded, as, under the guise of making a matter a criminal offence, they can rob a Local Legislature of most of its jurisdiction. They can say, for instance, that a man who does not pay his debts for a year has committed a misde-meanour, an offence, and shall go to gaol. That interferes with the law of contract.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Take the Factory Act as an illustration.

Mr. MILLS. The Factory Act is a case in point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will discuss the Factory Act when it comes up. Parliament could, in fact, deprive the Provincial Legislatures of most of their jurisdiction, for they could declare any breach of contract to be a misdemeanour. Now, the question is whether we ought to interfere with a subject connected with the election laws of the different Provinces. They can pass a law in the Provinces stating, in the words of this Bill, that no contractor shall be allowed to subscribe to any election, and if he does subscribe to any election and commits a breach of this Statute, then he is liable to fine and imprisonment. They can do that. Hence, I think my hon. friend's objection is well taken, in spirit, though if it is to be declared a misdemeanour, it can only be declared a misdemeanour by this Legislature.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I assent, with as good grace as possible, to the suggestion of my right hon. friend, and accept the amendment.

Mr. CARON. I propose that we strike out of the Bill the words "or to the Legislature of any of the Provinces of Canada."

Mr. CASGRAIN. There may be something in the objection made by the Minister of Militia, but we discussed the same point last year and the House, after deliberating upon that very point, adopted the view which I take now, and in which I followed in the Bill passed last year. Of course, if the House does not desire to follow the precedent of last year, it may go back upon its former decision. Of course, I am in the minority and cannot dictate, but I desire to call attention to the fact that in the Bill of last year these very words are inserted and are the law of the land to-day.

Mr. DAVIES. I have no doubt that this Legislature has power to pass the Bill in the form in which it now stands, but, personally, I do not think it is a matter of good policy for us to interfere and to declare, with reference to elections for the Local Legislatures, that certain things shall be misdemeanours. We may have power to do it in strict right, but I object myself to any unnecessary interference with Provincial rights, and on that ground 1 am strongly inclined to support the objection taken by the Minister of Militia, although I think the hon, member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) is right in introducing it. As a matter of policy, I think it is not desirable.

Amendment (Mr. Caron) agreed to.

Mr. MACMASTER. The effect of the clause as it now stands would prevent a tenderer for a contract from being a candidate for Parliamentary election. Of course, it is undesirable, and it could not be, that a tenderer whose tender was accepted, could be a candidate at a Parliamentary election; but the effect of the clause, as it now stands, is to prevent every man who has put in a tender for any public contract from being a candidate for Parliamentary election.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a very proper thing.

Mr. MILLS. I think it simply prevents him subscribing for the election, not from being a candidate. But it is a question relating to the independence of Parliament, as to whether he may or may not be a candidate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If he is a tenderer he cannot put up the $200 under this clause.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that it is a very desirable thing. I do not think any man who is a tenderer for any public contract ought to be a candidate for Parliament. I think the amendment is a very excellent one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong. Now, suppose tenders are called for, and there are ten, or fifteen, or twenty tenderers. They send in their tenders and they remain there before the Government, who are not ready to decide. Or, suppose the Government wish, under this law, to prevent a man who has tendered from being able to run at an election, the tender might be taken into consideration and kept two, three or four months. He is a tenderer, and his tender is there and he cannot be a can-Surely the object of the Bill is the exact contrary didate. of this. You do not wish to put the fate of a candidate, or of any man who wishes to be a candidate, in the hands of the Government of the day, but you wish him to be free. In this case, the man who has tendered might be not at all acceptable; he might have put in the highest tender; but the Government not having decided, but keeping the matter three, four or five months in suspense, he cannot become a candidate, even though he were the most desirable candidate of his party. That, I think, is not the desire of the House.

interests of the party, it is a very simple matter for him to withdraw his tender.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then he will forfeit his deposit.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If he puts in his tender and insists on being a contractor, then he cannot be a candidate. If he prefers running for Parliament instead of getting a contract he can withdraw his tender, and I apprehend he he will be relieved of all responsibility.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say that it is not desirable that any contractor should be a candidate for Parliament. I take that stand at once. I think the difficulty raised is of a most infinitisimal kind. I think a great many men are more likely to be good candidates, on either side, than the small number of persons who would be tendering for contracts under the Government. That is, of course, a matter of opinion. I think the provision a very excellent one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the words, "or holding such contracts, and while such contracts are under the consideration of the Government, for acceptance or rejection," be struck out.

Mr. MILLS. I do not see that the provision touches the person's eligibility, and that is the question which the hon. Minister has raised. His own case is excepted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not excepted.

Mr. DAVIES. That would be met by inserting, "in any election except his own."

Amendment (Sir Hector Langevin) agreed to.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is something in this Bill which I think is contrary to our legislation, and that is as regards the punishment of the offender. I do not think the Bill is a good one, and I will vote against it as a whole; but if the Bill is to pass, I say that, considering the circumstances of the case, there should not be a minimum of penalty and of punishment. Let the House set the penalty as high as it deems proper, but leave it to the Judge to consider what less amount of imprisonment and fine should be imposed. A triffing offence might arise—for a nest of law-suits will be created by this Bill—and hon.gentlemen opposite will not object to provide, as is done even with respect to felonies, that the penalty should not be more than a certain fine or certain term of imprisonment, leaving the application to the Judge. Such a provision would be more in accordance with our ordinary criminal legislation.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman always forgets that Parliament intervenes and passes an Indemnity Bill.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think the hon. gentleman should make that statement, as he himself passed a Bill to relieve a very large number of his supporters from penalties attached to violating the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. BLAKE. And you.

Mr. BOWELL. I never asked any consideration at your hands, or at the hands of anyone else. The statement made in regard to myself I knew was not correct, and I challenged the hon. gentleman and his party to test it in the courts, or anywhere else. When the hon. gentleman made that statement, he made an insinuation which I believe he knew was not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BOWELL. I apologize to the House, not to the hon. gentleman, who, I think, knew when he made the statement that he was stating what there was no foun-House. Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not see any particular ready to talk about introducing Acts of Indemnity, they difficulty. If the tenderer be a desirable candidate in the should look at their own deeds: they should look at what they have done in their Local Legislature. How many were relieved there? How many were relieved by those hon. gentlemen in this House, when a dozen contractors, from the Speaker of the House down to hon. members, who were sitting here; when half a dozen, or seven or eight, of the hon. gentleman's friends were afraid to take their seats Some resigned and were re-elected and others were rejected, and that hon. gentleman was always ready to pass an Act of Indemnity. It would sound very well, coming from the hon. gentleman, to talk in this way, if he could clear himself, and if his party had never the case, we could well understand their assumed purity and virtue in connection with these matters.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg to say that according to my knowledge and belief, and it has always been such, the hon. gentleman's seat was voided. I believe that was decided by the Privileges and Elections Committee, which decided the case of Mr. Anglin, and I believe if it had not been for the Indemnity Act, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bowell) would have been liable for the penalties. So with the case of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who resigned in consequence; so was it with the late member for Restigouche (Mr. Moffat); so was it with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier). So to say that that Indemnity Bill was designed to meet cases on one side and not on the other is—I will not repeat the hon. gentleman's offensive words. He will remember the words he used to me the other day; he can apply them to himself.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I move that the clause be changed so as to read, "the penalty not to exceed a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months." The idea of imprisoning a man for twelve months for giving a subscription of perhaps $1 for election purposes, is preposterous.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I desire to direct the attention of the House to the nature of some of those offences, in cases covered by the Indemnity Bill, to show how contractors, such for instance as Mr. Currier, might be made liable to the clause in the present Bill. An officer of the Government went to his saw-mill and bought some boards which he wanted. Mr. Currier's man sold the boards and the bill was sent in in the ordinary way, in the name of Mr. Currier, who received the money but lost the receipt. Everybody in the House felt that the case was—

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think not.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was known and proved that Mr. Currier had been for years doing a large business for the Government—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am quite sure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, this individual sale was one such as any hon. gentleman might make in the ordinary course of business; it was a small account of $2—that I am sure about. It struck me as being a very hard case. Suppose a case of this kind. Take the case of a trunk maker, or a man who makes boxes, and a contract is made with him to furnish ten, or twenty or thirty packing boxes for any of the Departments. He is to be paid for them; he is as much a contractor as if it were to build a railway or a canal, though the whole account may only be £10. Yet if he should accidentally, after becoming a contractor, give 25 cents to a bey on his first communion, for improper purposes, for political purposes, or without any purpose—if he subsoribes $1 to make up the $200 for a candidate, or to bring out a workingman's candidate who cannot raise the $200—this man who has a contract for £10, which contract is not yet finished, is liable to be tried for a misdemeanour, and pay a fine of not less than $1,000. The mere statement of such a case, shows with how little consideration the Act has been framed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Committee to whom the Bill was referred reported it in its present form, and I do not think it deserves the strictures which the hon. gentleman has thought proper to pass upon it. It is true, the Bill may not be as properly drawn as it might be, and that is the reason why last year I asked the House to give me the benefit of their assistance in making the measure as perfect as possible. Moreover, last year I asked the Government to take this measure off my hands, and make it a Ministerial measure. I did my best with the Committee, however, to frame the Bill as well as possible, and it is in the hands of the House. It is a public question; it is not my own private in the way in which I think it would be most beneficial to the public. At the same time, I repeat, it is more in the hands of the House than in my hands.

Mr. BERGIN. I do not feel disposed to vote for this amendment of the Secretary of State any more than I feel disposed to vote for this Bill, which appears to me to be most effectually framed as a means of executing private vengence on a contractor who may dare to exercise his political opinions on any occasion. I do not know that this House has had before it any such tyrannical or arbitrary measure as this appears to be. No discretion is left to the Judge. No matter how trivial may be the offence, how small may be the sum, or how innocently it may be expended, the Judge must fine the man $1,000, and he may also add a year's imprisonment. And the offence against public morality -- the offence against public justice, does not end there. In addition to all that, if his contract happens to be a good one and he is obnoxious to the person who prosecutes him, or the Government who directs the prosecution, all his profits in that contract are to be taken away from him. I ask you whether it is just and proper, in a free country like this, that such a law should come in force. To test the opinion of the House, I move the Committe do now rise.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman has taken certain objections to the Bill as it stands, but he has carefully avoided making any objections to the amendment proposed by the Secretary of State, which meets his objection. The Bill does not leave the matter in the hands of the Judge, but the amendment of the Secretary of State leaves him a discretion. It says that the man shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000—the fine may be $1; or by imprisonment—not "and," it is disjunctive—of not more than six months; it may be an imprisonment of one hour.

Mr. BERGIN. Does not the hon. gentleman consider it of any consequence that the man should forfeit all his rights in addition. I object to the whole Bill, and I move, in amendment to the amendment, that the Committee do now arise.

Amendment to the amendment agreed to, and the Committee rose.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 2) to amend the Criminal Law, and to extend the provisions of the Act respecting offences against the person.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock,

PRAYERS.

FRAUD IN RELATION TO PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to move, seconded by Sir Richard Cartwright, that the House resolve itself into Com. mittee of the Whole on Monday next to consider further Bill (No. 12) to amend the Act for the better prevention of fraud in relation to contracts involving the expenditure of public moneys. I desire to take the opinion of the House on the principle of this Bill. It is true that the second reading of the Bill seems to carry with it the adoption of the principles by this House; but at the same time there are many ways in which a Bill may be disposed of by this House. After the proceedings of yesterday I do not consider that the House has expressed an opinion upon the question whether or not contractors in the future will be allowed to subscribe to election funds, as they have done in the past. That is the question that I desire to take a vote upon.

Mr. TROW. The hon, member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin) was not in the Chamber when the Resolution was read.

Mr. SPEAKER. Was the hon. member for Gaspé in the House when the motion was read?

Mr. FORTIN. I was not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the hon. member's name must be struck off.

Mr. FORTIN. I heard the Resolution read from the gallery.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question has never been raised here before. In the English House of Commons, the gallery is spoken of as part of the House; but I think that here the case is somewhat different.

I never heard the pretention before; Mr. BLAKE. otherwise an hon, member who was in one of the recesses might give his vote. If this be admitted, we can call on hon, members who may be in the gallery to vote. I have seen the hon. Minister of Railways several times in the gallery during this Session while votes were being taken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The practice in England is that the galleries are part of the House. No doubt the gallery is a portion of the House, and common sense shows that it is to be considered so because the object of the rule is that no member shall vote on a motion who has not had the opportunity of hearing it. He can hear it in the gallery as well as on the floor; not only that but if other people be in the gallery, we can say there are strangers in the House and they are obliged to leave. The galleries are as much a portion of the House as the floor, and members, if they choose, could speak from the gallery. They go all round, and there is no reason to make a difference between this House and the English House.

An hon. MEMBER. They might vote in the recesses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the recesses they cannot possibly hear. The recesses are for the purposes of get-ting out of the House and are portions of the corridors. We have reporters in the gallery to report our speeches, and there is no reason why a member should not hear as well as they.

Mr. BLAKE. It follows that if we are to adopt the practice of the English House, in which the hon. gentleman has rightly said the gallery is part of the House, an hon. member can address the House from the gallery.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see why not.

Mr. BLAKE. For the sixteen years this House has been sitting, members have not unfrequently retired to the gal-lerics when they wanted to avoid voting, and have never been called on to vote. I pointed to a notorious instance, that of the hon. Minister of Railways, who withdrew to the gallery to avoid voting. If we are now to decide after sixteen years that on the purpose of voting and speaking hereafter the galleries are to be considered part of the House, it is well; but it is a revolution.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I may say there is a precedent to the point. I recollect the ex-speaker, Mr. Blanchet, decided that if a member left his place for a moment he could not vote. In my own case I left my seat for a moment and it was decided that I could not on that account keep the floor.

Mr. MILLS. This point came up in the case of the member for one of the Yorks, Dr. Strange. He was in the gallery and the question was raised whether having heard the motion he had a right to vote or not, and it was decided by your predecessor that he had not.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a rule if an hon. member leaves his seat while the vote is being taken, he is liable to have his name struck off the list. The inconvenience is this, that if a member must not, while the vote is being taken, leave his seat.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Bothwell says the question was decided in the case of the member for North York.

Mr. MILLS. Dr. Strange came and voted, and said he heard the motion put while in the gallery; your predecessor decided that he had not the right to vote.

Mr. CARON. A couple of Sessions ago a case identical to this came up. The hon. member for Leeds happened to be in the gallery while a resolution was moved by the leader of the Opposition. He came down here and was called on to vote, because it was considered that his being in the gallery did not exclude him from the House and that consequently he was bound to give his vote.

Mr. BLAKE. There was no ruling.

Mr. CARON. The reason given was the same as in this case, that, being in the House, he had heard the motion read, and could not be prevented from voting like any other hon. member who had heard the motion read.

Mr. ORTON. Some years ago, an hon. member for one of the Hurons stated that he was in the recess when the motion was read, and his vote was allowed.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No, Mr. Speaker, he did not say that he was in the recess, but leaning against the door leading into the recess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt the question was raised in the case of the hon. member for Huron, and it was decided, as he stated that he was in that square box and heard the motion read, that he had a right to vote. His vote was challenged because some hon. gentleman said he thought he was in the post office at the time, but he said no. he was there and heard the motion, and thereupon his vote was recorded.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This vote, I believe, is not settled? Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yet the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) has left his seat. Is his vote to be struck off the roll?

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has also left his seat.

Mr. SPEAKER. I feel a great deal of delicacy in deciding this matter, because there is no precedent recorded. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) cites the case of Dr. Strange, who said he was in the gallery and heard the motion, but that was not considered sufficient and his vote was taken off. The hon. member for Quebec county (Mr. Caron) calls attention to the vote of Dr. Ferguson, under similar circumstances, which was allowed. I do not think either of these decisions were recorded. The reason of the rule is that a member shall hear the question put, because he must understand the question before the House before he votes. In England the practice is that a member may speak from the gallery, that the gallery is a part of the House. I think here it would be an inconvenient practice, unless the House so wishes it, but if the hon. member says he heard the motion put, I must accept his statement. I think the question that ought to be put to the hon. member is: "Did you hear the motion put." Did you hear the motion put?

Mr. FORTIN. I heard the motion put, certainly,

Mr. LANDERKIN. I ask for your ruling on the point I have raised as to the vote of the member for Montmagny, who has left his seat.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is another point. I think there a member hears a motion in the gallery and leaves the is a rule that any member who leaves his seat before the gallery to vote, his vote may be struck off. The rule is that vote is declared looses his vote. Mr. LANDERKIN. The member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbo⁺t) has gone out.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you mean, Mr. Speaker, that the member loses his vote when he leaves the House, or when he goes from one seat to another in the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. When he goes from one seat to another. That is the reason that hon. members call out "order, order," when a member is seduced to leave his seat.

Mr. TROW. The member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin) must have left his seat in the gallery to come down here.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, under your ruling, the vote of the member for Gaspé must be struck out. If he heard the question from the gallery, he must have left his seat, because we see him voting here.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is just what I pointed out before, the inconvenience of the practice when a man hears the question put in the gallery.

Mr. BLAKE. I ask your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. I shall order his vote to be struck off on that ground.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In reference to the case of the member for Montmagny, who has left his seat since the vote was taken?

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Mr. Speaker-

Mr. SPEAKER. I think, owing to the long discussion on the point of order, you had better not call attention to members having left their seats. I find Mr. Ray's name is not recorded. I think the Clerk called out Mr. Reid. You voted for the motion?

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. HESSON. The member for Marquette is not in his place,

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the accident of hearing-

Several hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it desirable that some understanding should be arrived at on these points, in regard to which there is no precedent recorded.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This question about the gallery has been raised for the first time. It would be convenient to have that matter settled. I do not care which way it is settled, so long as it is settled, whether in future we are to consider the gallery a part of the House or not. That is one point. The other is whether an hon. member who, before he votes, or after he votes before the vote is declared, moves from one seat to another, loses his vote. The practice has been that the gallery is not considered a part of the House. In England the practice is otherwise, and the reason of the rule is what you have stated. We had better have that decided in regard to the future. As to the second point, I should be very glad if the ruling is carried out that a member loses his vote by leaving his seat. It is exceedingly inconvenient, disturbs the taking of a vote, and causes very unseemly noises in this House, so I should be very glad indeed if it is decided that every member who votes shall vote from the scat he happens to be caught in when the vote is put, and shall remain there until the vote is declared. If it is the general opinion of the House, I think it would conduce to the progress of business and prevent unseemly noises.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Perhaps it would be well to make those who make the noises lose their votes as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps so. As to the gallery, the practice ought to be settled. Mr. SPEAKEB.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman comes a little too late with these observations. You have already rules, Sir. You have ruled, first, that the gallery is a part of the House and an hon, member who hears the motion there does not lose his vote; and you have ruled, secondly, that an hon. member who changes his place during the progress of a vote, after the motion is put and before the vote is declared, does lose his vote. Therefore, it follows that the member for Gaspé, if he had remained in the gallery could have voted from the gallery. You have settled these questions. The leader of the House proposes that these questions should be unsettled in order to have them settled again. First, the vote of the hon. member for Gaspe was allowed, notwithstanding the fact that he was in the gallery when the question was put. Afterwards, it was struck off, because, having heard it in the gallery, he moved from his seat and came down here to vote. The vote of the member for Montmagny was also about to be struck off for the same reason, when you very properly suggested that it should not be noticed, owing to the long discussion on the point of order. Therefore, the matter is decided, unless any proposal is made to reverse your decision, or unless you, upon further consideration, decide to recall it. It follows from these decisions that, in accordance with the view of the hon. gentleman, which you have so far adopted, we can in future speak from the gallery.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I, of course, acquiesce in the proceedings of my colleagues, and on the whole agree, first, that the member, if he heard the motion from the gallery, had a right to vote; second, that if he leaves his seat after the motion is put, he forfeits his right to vote. No doubt that these two points are now settled, and my suggestion is that some rule should be made to cover them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope it will be settled one way or the other in consequence of this discussion. The question I put to the hon. member for Gaspé was "Did you hear the motion?" I did not ask him where he heard it. He said he did hear it, and I ruled that as I understood the rules of the House that was sufficient. But it would be a very inconvenient practice, if continued, that the gallery should be considered part of the House for the purpose of speaking or voting, and I would like the House therefore to authorize me to declare that for the future the gallery is not part of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. If the question is submitted to the House for decision, it had better be disposed of only after sufficient time for consideration. I am very glad the First Minister who defended the practice ten minutes ago, now says it is very inconvenient. I quite agree with him.

Mr. ABBOTT. We must not omit consideration of the question as to how far we would abandon our jurisdiction over the galleries if such a rule is made. We must not give up our right to consider the galleries as part of the House for admission of strangers, or for the exclusion of strangers.

Mr. SPEAKER. As part of the House except for purposes of speaking or voting.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If hearing the motion gives a right to vote, I may mention that the other night I was standing in this porch and heard a motion quite distinctly, and when it can be heard distinctly there, why not be allowed to vote just as well as when one can hear it from the gallery?

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill (from the Senate) was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 107) to amend Acts 40 Vic., cap. 49, and 45 Vic., cap. 24, being Acts relating to Permanent Building Societies and Loan and Savings Companies carrying on business in Untario.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1 move that the motion of Mr. Houde on the notice paper, "that this House is of opinion that the Liquor License Act, 1883, should be repealed," be the first Order of the Day for Monday next, and take precedence next after Rontine Proceedings.

Mr. BLAKE. It was arranged some time ago across the House that this motion should be proceeded with to-day. It is well known that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) had given a notice of motion on this subject, but as it was desired to reach a discussion on this subject, the motion of my hon. friend for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde) had precedence, and from time to time that motion has been postponed for one reason or another. Ultimately it was arranged across the House that this motion should be proceeded with this day. So late as last night on the adjournment, I called on the hon. gentleman to say what Government business he would take after that motion, whether that motion would come on first, saying that it might be possible to conclude it before adjournment, and asking what business he would take up after that. The hon. gentleman announced that he would take the first Government notice. I pointed out that that was not one that would take any time, and asked what he would take after that, and he said the House would probably go on with Supply. He now proposes, without any notice, that the arrangement made across the House, with reference to which we have arranged our affairs as to business, should be departed from, and that the motion of the hon. member for Maskinongé should not be considered, although it had been arranged across the House several days ago that it should be proceeded with to-day, and although that arrangement was repeated and reinforced across the House last night. Now, Sir, these arrangements across the House are sacred arrangements-arrangements upon the faith of which members on both sides act. They are arrangements with reference to conduct of public business which, if broken without any cause at all, without ex planations given, without any proper justification, and with out any other arrangements being made in consequence of that, render it quite impossible to conduct public business efficiently; and I think I have cause of complaint that the hon. gentleman should not have intimated his intention of departing from that arrangement-grave cause of complaint, the more so that I have been told that it was arranged yesterday that it should be departed from. If my information on that subject be correct, and it was arranged by the Government with the hon. member for Maskinongé, that his motion should not come on to day but should be postponed until Monday, I have still graver cause of complaint, inasmuch as by that arrangement that decision had been reached yesterday. And it is difficult to understand how the conversation which took place last night could have taken place, how that could have been the understanding, and how it could have been repeated. That is the first point, The second one is, that I think the motion ought to go on. I see no reason why it should not go on. I do not see the hon. member for Maskinongé in his place, but no doubt he is in attendance-I saw him not long ago, and he told me he would be in his place this atternoon. If he is not here it must be because he understands that the Government is about to insist upon this postponement. I think this is a convenient day for the discussion of this motion. This is convenient day for the discussion of this motion. This is our day which was taken away from us by the Government, but taken away from us almost contemporaneously with the understanding that this particular Thursday should be devoted to the discussion of this motion. Then the hon. gentleman says: "No; we take the day away for Government business," although we had reason to may be disposed of on any Government day by taking half understand, until we heard a rumour, two or three hours an hour, and it is the common practice on Government days, question, upon which the people's minds and the minds of hon. members are agitated, would be the cheval de bataille of the day. Then the hon. gentleman said : "I propose to have this discussion on Monday." Look at the order paper for Monday. Among other business there is a very important Bill, that for the incorporation of the Loyal Orange Association. By this arrangement that Bill will be thrown over for this Session, because the time for receiving reports of Private Bills will expire in a few days, after next Monday and before the following Monday; and if the measure is postponed over Monday first, it will not come on effectively this Session. Besides, rumour says the Government intend to take all succeeding Mondays. The hon. First Minister has had a conversation with the Minister of Inland Revenue on the subject I observe, and no doubt the Orange and Green are quite in accord as to this disposition of the matter. Whatever differences may have existed between the hon. gentlemen a while ago, which resulted in a painful, though fortunately only a temporary separation, no difference whatever exists between them on this subject. But there is a great deal more than that. There are three or four pages of important notices of motion in the hauls of private members, which should come up and ought to be taken up, but which cannot be effectively debated if the proposal of the Government to take Mondays is carried. I think the proposition of the hon. gentleman is extremely objectionable; and I move the following amendment :-

That all the words after "that" be omitted, and the following in-serted: "It was arranged across the House that Mr. Houde's motion on the Liquor License Act should be called as the first item of business, and before the Government business of this day; that this arrangement should be observed: that to fix the said discussion for Monday next will prevent the consideration of much important business in the hands of private members; that notices and Orders of the Day be postponed, and that the motion of Mr. Houde be called."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken in his opinion that there was any arrangement or suggestion of any kind declared yesterday with respect to this motion. I had no communication with the hon. gentleman, or with Mr. Houde-

Mr. BLAKE. I do not say that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD-of any kind; nor was there any determination come to or expressed by myself, or so far as I know by any member of the Government. All I can say is, that this morning the members of the Govern-ment had a conversation with Mr. Houde, and it was agreed to postpone the motion until Monday and make it then the first Order of the Day. I announced some time ago that the Government were very desirous that the House should be prorogued by Easter; and, in order to do this, it is neces-sary to push forward Government business. It was for that reason that we took Thursdays. I do not know whether the day was fixed for the discussion of the license question before Thursdays had been taken or not.

Mr. BLAKE. I think about the same time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then it was an open day.

Mr. BLAKE. Thursday had been taken and perhaps it was the same, or the next day, that this arrangement was made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Thursday was suggested by me without recollecting the fact that it had been taken as a Government day. It can be of no consequence whether the subject be discussed to day or on Monday; but I would ask the House to assist the Government in getting on with Government business. The hon. gentleman alluded to a number of notices of motion on the paper. On looking over them, I find that most of them are for returns, which may be disposed of on any Government day by taking half ago, that this licensing question, which is a very important after considerable progress has been made with Government business, to go over notices of motion and carry those which are unopposed. I do not think there is much difficulty in the matter. I think the proposition is a reasonable one. We will discuss the licensing question fully on Monday, and after Routine Proceedings, which will be very short, the day can be devoted to this very important question. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his amendment, but allow us to go on with business and discuss the licensing question on Monday.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. member for West Durham has referred to private business, and especially to the Bill of which I have charge, the Bill to incorporate the Loyal Orange Association. If the effect of carrying the motion moved by the leader of the Government is to take away all Monday next from private members, so as to practically prevent the moving of the second reading of this Bill, and if the time for the reception of reports on private Bills be not extended, I must oppose the motion made by the leader of the Government, inasmuch as it is my wish and intention to have a discussion on that Bill and a vote taken at the earliest day on which it is possible. On that occasion no doubt the hon. member for West Durham will give me his support and assistance, and with that we will no doubt succeed in carrying it.

Mr. BLAKE. I will express my views fully.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I hope the hon. gentleman will support the Bill respecting which he has made many enquiries during the last few days, and which he now brings forward as a reason for opposing the motion of the leader of the Government. Probably the difficulty may be got over by an arrangement being made to extend another week the time for receiving reports of Private Bills, in the event of time not serving on next Monday for a discussion of the Orange Bill as well as a discussion of the motion of the hon. member for Maskinonge (Mr. Houde). If it be understood that the time for receiving reports on Private Bills be extended, I shall have much pleasure in supporting the motion of the leader of the Government; but except on that understanding, I shall vote against it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. First Minister has very coolly stated that there is no busine s of importance in the notices of motion, and that the Government will allow time to move them as a matter of form. There are a good many motions on the notice paper in the hands of private members which are of importance; a good many motions which hon. members wish to discuss, and in taking the course proposed the hon, gentleman is depriving a great many members of an opportunity to present their views.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a notice of motion.

Mr. CHARLTON. Several of those now on the paper are most important motions. The hon. gentleman's proposal will merely allow them to be called and carried with out discussion. The course which is being taken is one that tends to stifle discussion on important subjects which hon. members desire to discuss, and which in the interests of the country should be discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER. Call in the members.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I should like-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I presume the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) wishes to exclude the Orange Bill from being called.

Mr. SPEAKER. House I may say that I wish it to be understood that if a private business to be done the Government should have Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

member changes his seat after the motion is put, he is liable to have his vote struck out of the division.

On the main motion being put,

McDougald,

Dickinson,

Mr. MACKENZIE. As I am anxious to relieve the distress of some hon. gentlemen in the House, I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that this motion is out of order. No order can be postponed in this way without notice being given. Such is the well known Parliamentary law, and I can give you a number of cases if you desire. The motion is practically to put a specific order ahead of some other orders, and thus deprive members of the opportunity of proceeding with their motions. I would not be so anxious to take the point of order but for my feeling of sympathy for the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who is always courteous and obliging to myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. I could not hear what the hon. Before putting the question to the gentleman said, but I think considering the amount of hesitated before taking away the only day on which private members will have an opportunity of moving matters with which they are charged, and it is with deep regret that I see they have been able to get a majority to enable them to do this. I think it would be well if they would yet consider whether they will deprive private members of the opportunity of getting their business before the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not hear me, and I may repeat that I was calling attention to the fact that this motion was out of order. May says:

"When it becomes necessary to disturb the appointed order of business, and to give precedence to some important subject of debate, a special order is made for that purpose. If it be desired to give priority to a notice of motion on any day on which Orders of the Day are entitled to precedence, notice having been previously given, a motion is made that the Orders of the Day be postponed until after such notice of motion."

Now, I have searched the Minutes and I cannot find that any notice has been given, and, therefore, the motion is entirely out of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This motion stands on the paper as it is. It cannot come up before Monday and there is no order of the House that Mr. Houde's motion should come up to-day.

Mr. BLAKE. No; but of course my hon. friend is right in the point of order. The motion is one of which notice is required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The House has destroyed that by having decided the matter by a vote.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no. All the House has done is to negative an amendment to a motion. That is only a decision that the House shall not substitute certain words in the main motion. Now the words in the main motion fall to the ground and we are where we were.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order having been taken, and this motion being one of which notice is required, we will proceed to the Orders of the Day.

EASTERN EXTENSION RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow, to consider the following Resolution :--

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor General in Council to acquire for the Dominion, from the Government of Nova Scotia, the Eastern Extension Railway from New Glasgow to the Gut of Oanso, and the Steam Ferry in connection therewith, together with the rights of the said Province in the Truro and Picton Branch Railway, for the sum of one million two hundred thousand dollars (S1,200,000), and the new rolling stock and equipments of the said railway, for a sum equal to the cost thereof and charges: the said sums, with interest thereon at per cent. per annum from the lat October, 1883, to be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, after the necessary legislative provisions shall have been made by Nova Scotis for giving effect to the said acquisition, according to the agreement between the two Geovernments to that effect, laid before this House on the 6th day of February, instant.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

1. Charges of Management...... $169,123.15

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is to be take the position for $200 or even $400. We take a Colregretted that this item is not divided, as it used to be, under different heads. The hon. Minister will see that there are some twenty different items here which are not pay from $200 to $400 to the officer who discharges that 104 necessarily connected. I would suggest that in future it would be convenient to have them divided. I rather think also, that a portion of these sums are voted by Statute.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has only been within the last year or two that it has been considered desirable to submit a formal vote to the House. But since that time there has been no change made in the arrangement. There may be something in what the hon. gentleman says, although I do not see that any great inconvenience arises from the items not being divided, and if it is thought desirable to separate them it will be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When three or four subjects not necessarily connected are connected in this way, the discussion becomes exceedingly iregular, and more time is lost than would be if they were divided. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what is the absolute cost to the country of managing the savings banks. If my recollection serves me, we now borrow some $26,009,090 in this way, and it is a matter of considerable practical moment to know exactly what that costs.]

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have not yet made the estimate this year, but I think it was made last year, and the commission was found to be a little over one quarter of 1 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course that varies as the debt increases.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It varies from time to time, but not very much, as the salaries paid are in proportion to the amount deposited. The salaries go up to $400 is a rate; I think there are only one or two above that; I think the highest is $500, and the lowest $200. If the amount deposited in a bank is small, the commission is a little more in proportion than in the larger offices; and as the deposiincreases, and is paid into the larger offices, the commission becomes less. The calculation was made about two years ago, and I found that one quarter of one per cent. would psy the salaries and all the expenses in connection with the savings banks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In former years this was not a matter of quite so much importance, because then the sum borrowed was only about $9,000,000 or $10,000,000 and a large portion of it was borrowed at certain points where great sums were deposited. But the total number of these offices has apparently increased very much; and I would like to know what the hon. gentleman's present arrangements are. Of course, where the salary is so small as $200, there may be difficulty in getting the right sort of man to take hold of it. Is there any alteration in the regulations now that the sums have so much increased? What rule has the hos. gentleman laid down with respect to these minor offices where the salary is about, say $200? What is the allowance for contingencies? There must be some.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentlemin will require to have safes in those offices.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Perhaps, in some cases; now it is so arranged that the banks have branches in almost every important town, and therefore it is only in a few cases where safes are required. The salaries and mode of payment remain the same as when the hon. gentleman was Finance Minister, the minimum salary being $200 and the maximum $400, except in one case where the party is not an officer of the Government. It is exceedingly difficult to get a reliable party, a man who can give the necessary bonds, who is not holding office under the Government, to take the position for $200 or even $400. We take a Collector of Customs, especially in the Maritime Provinces, where this system is more generally in force, and there we pay from $200 to $400 to the officer who discharges that duty. In some cases it is the postmaster, but we have discouraged latterly the appointment of postmasters, because we have not the same check on them as we have on other officers. I think there are but two cases where the parties are not officers, the one in NewWestminster, B.C., if my memory serves me right, and there the agent receives $450 or $500; and the other one in Yarmouth, N.S., where the person appointed is not an officer; and as there is over $500,000 deposited there, he gets $500. All the other salaries range from $200 to $400, and they are paid on the same principle as when the hon. member was Finance Minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At Yarmouth the sum assigned is only $300.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has been increased since that return, the 1st July.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then practically speaking, almost all these men are obliged to deposit in banks. Is that the general rule?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not at all desire to criticise the management of the savings banks; where they have increased as largely as they have generally, I am quite aware some little irregularities occur. We have seen statements that there have been some losses in connection with these, but I do not notice any sums put down on account of losses of savings banks. I would not at all desire to hold the hon. Minister responsible for any on so large a business as this for some few losses which may have occurred, but I would like to know if any have occurred— I do not mean losses indemnified by the securities.

Sir LEONARD TILLY. There has been two or three defaulters, I think, in Nova Scotia, and proceedings have been taken against them. I cannot say what the position is, but I will enquire and inform the House before Concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know the amounts and the probable losses.

Mr. DAVIES. Last year I called the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that while in Nova Scotia they have branches in the different counties, in Prince Edward Island the savings bank is confined to the capital. The object of these banks is, of course, to enable the small farmers and labourers and others who have money saved to deposit it in a place of safety. As the savings bank institution is carried on in Prince Edward Island, there is only one office, and that is in the capital. So far as the wants of capitalists who have money to invest that is all very well, but as regards the wants of small farmers and labourers, fishermen and others, living in remote parts of the Island, it is impossible for them to take any advantage of the savings banks at all. I would suggest to the hon. Minister the desirability of establishing in the other counties of the Island branch offices for the purpose of receiving these deposits. If he did, it would be a very great advantage to those who have money saved. One of the local banks attempted to meet this want, the Merchants' of Halifax, but while that is a good bank, and the people have confidence in it, they have not that confidence they would have in a Government savings bank. It would be a very great advantage to the people of the outlying counties if branch offices were established at Summerside or Souris, either in the post office or elsewhere, so that they would enjoy the same facilities which are enjoyed by the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is evident that a man who has $2 or $5 to deposit will not travel 20 or 30 miles to deposit it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No doubt it would be desirable to have these savings banks in every county throughout the Dominion, but I may state for the information of Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

the hon. gentleman, that perhaps not half the counties in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have them. They are established at points where there are considerable numbers of persons employed, but it would not be politic on the part of the Government to establish too many of these offices, for the lowest salary that can be paid is $200, and if that had to be paid in places where there would be only $2,000 or $3,000 deposited, it would make a very high rate of interest. It was intended in the vote of last year to give another office to Prince Edward Island, and I was under the impression, and am so still, that an office has been established at Summerside, though I am not very positive that that has been done. Having been consulted with reference to this by, I think, the representative from that district, some time ago, I decided that it was a locality where we would be justified in having an office, and I am under the impression that an office has been established there; but, if it has not been done, I can only say I will enquire into it, because I was under the impression that it was done. The other county did not appear to have so large a number of that class of persons who would be taking advantage of the appropriation; but still applications come in from year to year, and, as the hon. member will see, we are asking for an additional sum in case it is made out to the satisfaction of the Department, and of the Government, that the locality for which application is made would give the advantage to a considerable number of persons, and that the amount deposited would be such as would warrant the Government in making such an arrangement. If in a locality, such as the hon. gentleman speaks of, first, there are parties whom it would be important and desirable to benefit by such facilities, and, in the next place, the amount deposited probably be enough to justify the Government in paying the $200, then it will be applied there. The hon. gentleman will see that it might easily be a losing operation, and no doubt there would be any number of applications if it was supposed that it was only necessary to ask for the $200 to have it appropriated. Summerside has been provided for, or was intended to be provided for, and this vote proposes to give a small sum for the purpose of opening some additional offices.

Mr. VAIL. The Finance Minister might extend this system a little further than he has, with great benefit to the people and without any loss to the revenue. There are some counties peculiarly situated, and I refer especially to the county I represent. It is divided by a bay 30 or 40 miles long, running through the centre of the county, and one portion of the people are cut off from the mainland, and they have no banking facilities at all. There are many thousand people in this section of the country, mostly fishermen, who are earning a certain amount weekly and receive their money every week, and it would be a great advantage to these people to have the opportunity of investing their money in that way. I hope he will take this matter into consideration, and, if he can see his way clear, give them the benefit of a savings bank at Westport.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have one in your county.

Mr. VAIL. Yes, two, one at Digby and one at Weymouth, but this neck of land extends over 40 miles, where the people are entirely cut off, and they are very much in want of something of this kind, as there is no banking agency at all amongst them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman lay down any limit? He said very truly that it would never pay to receive a few thousand dollars, and pay an official $200 and the contingent expenses, which must be more or less, for the purpose of so small a deposit. Does he lay down any limit? In Nova Scotia, I observe there are no less than thirty of these savings banks, and, although remainder can hardly, I should think, have an average-

Mr. VAIL. Yes, they have.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRICHT, What sum would they have on an average?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not know what the average is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He will see that it would require very nearly $100,000 to keep the expenditure within a quarter per cent. I would like the Minister to take a note, and, at Concurrence, if he will be good enough, to bring down a memorandum showing the total expenditure for savings bank purposes. That, of course, would in-clude that portion of the expenses of his own department which might properly be chargeable to savings banks. If I am not mistaken a good deal of the vote for contingencies and a good deal of the general vote are incurred in consequence of the savings bank expenditure. There is a special branch to look after it, I think. This is now becoming a very important thing. There are $26,000,000 of money borrowed at call, and they have to be looked after. What is the arrangement now as to odd days? Is it the same as it was in former times? What notice does he require? Is it the same as before?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, the same as formerly; but we seldom hold them to that. There is a certain number of days during which we are not bound to pay it. We have made one change since the hon. gentleman was Finance Minister. At that time they received the interest from the day the money was received to the day it was A change has been made in that respect. If it is paid paid in the early part of the month, they receive no interest for that month, but commence at the first of the month following, and, if it is paid at the end of the month they do not receive anything. There must be a full month. They receive nothing for the portion of the month the money is paid in, or the portion of the month in which it is drawn out. In every other respect, it remains just the same as it was before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No matter how long it remains on deposit.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No matter how long. We found in some cases some parties in the towns were using it as a bank account, to some extent, and therefore it was to check that that we found this was necessary. We reduced the amount to $3,000, and made this a condition, and there was not the same inducement to do that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Allow me to understand. If a man pays in money on the 15th of one month, and six months afterwards draws it out on the 15th, he would loose fifteen days at each end?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He would lose a month.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to that. I think the hon. Minister is dealing very liberally with the public, and 1 do not at all object to that. The more important question, however, comes up here. We have now $26,000,000; we may have more; the hon. Minister thinks, I believe, we will have more. Of course, in prosperous times, the Minister understands that nobody supposes there will be any great amount of withdrawal, but, should the times become less prosperous, then a considerable amount of with-drawal might occur. I would like to know exactly how at present the hon. gentleman proposes to meet possible withdrawals? He has altered, if I remember aright, to a very considerable extent the provisions made in my time for retaining a large amount of gold over and above what the those at Halifax and at Yarmouth have large deposits, the | that partly with a view to meet just such contingencies as I allude to, and they might be much more formidable now than in the earlier days, seeing that our savings bank det posits are double or triple what they were then. I notice that, by the returns, a certain amount of the guarantee which, I think, has not yet been used-the English Im-perial guarantee-is held by the Minister. That, I suppose, is intended to take the place of gold, and to be sold if required?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, of course, so far, is good enough; but does the hon. Minister make any spe-cial reserve with respect to this $26,000,000, except this guarantee of £500,000 or £600,000 sterling, whichever it is? How does he propose to meet a possible contingency of that kind?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is well known to the House that the law was amended in this respect. Previous to 1879, 25 per cent. of the circulation-so far as that is concerned this is a separate question, but not separate exactly-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not altogether separate.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not altogether separate-25 per cent. of the circulation was held in gold. That was amended by reducing the amount of gold to 15 per cent., and 10 per cent. was held in Dominion debentures guaranteed by the Government, and that was arranged so that, at any time, if necessary, we could fall back upon that £600,000 sterling to meet any demands that might be made after the gold was exhausted. We do more than that. As to the savings banks, I do not feel so much alarmed about that, when I inform the hon. gentleman that, from 1874 to 1879, when you would have supposed—particularly during a portion of that period— that the amount probably might be reduced in the savings banks, the amount was increased $2.800,000, which, of course, was about equivalent to the interest. The hon. member will himself recollect that he was not called upon during all his five years of office to provide for the savings bank. Therefore, I think this is a fair inference, although the amount is larger and we are, perhaps, more likely to have a considerable call. But I do not feel any doubt or hesitation about that. I am satisfied that we will have no difficulty in that respect, even though we should experience the difficulties that were experienced from 1874 to But there is another reason why we should 1879. hold in reserve, to a certain extent, as we do in the banks, not less, as a rule, than $2,000,000-we may require it for ordinary expenditures. At the present moment exchange is very high, there is likely to be a demand for gold, and our circulation may be reduced to some extent. Under these circumstances the Government, as our predecessors did, keep a very considerable amount deposited in the banks, not only to meet the savings bank call, if that was necessary-which I am satisfied it will not be-but to meet the demands for gold. In addition to the 25 per cent. in gold, and to the guaranteed debentures which can be converted into gold at short notice, there is always in the hands of the Government, lying principally in the Bank of Montreal, a considerable sum to meet any such demand should it occur. Therefore, we do not allow these deposits to get below a certain point if we can help it, in order to meet any emergency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Besides the gold, which I think is about $3,000,000 is it not?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; probably, over $2,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course the hon. immediate wants of the circulation required. I had retained gentleman must remember that under the present policy he is becoming to a very great extent the sole custodian of the gold reserve of the country. Every bank return shows that more and more. He has got to furnish gold on a certain call to an extent which was not known in former years. However, what I want to know is how much he proposes to hold? He has now got about $42,000,000 in the savings bank, and in Dominion notes payable at call. That is about the position, roughly.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Forty per cent. is held by the banks-about $10,000,000 of it. That cannot be presented and payable on call very well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are only compelled to hold it in certain contingencies. The hon. gentleman will remember that that contingency is one which may or may not occur-we are speaking of possible contingencies. What I want to ascertain is exactly how much the hon. gentleman thinks it is necessary to hold in reserve. He has his $3,000,000 in gold; he has got £600,000 sterling and the guaranteed 4 per cent. of the Imperial Government, which of course, are as good as gold, and I have no doubt he could use them as floaters at an hour's notice. Besides that he has a special reserve of $2,000,000 which he proposes to keep for meeting just such demands. Now, there is one point on which I think the hon. gentleman's memory is at fault. In my time they altered the law, so that for certain amounts notes were issued. You must hold gold for the whole amount of extra issue. It was not nearly 25 per cent.; and after a certain point you had to hold gold for every dollar you issued, and that he did away with. Well that was of no great consequence so long as these deposits remained small, but it becomes another question when they run up to sums like $42,000,000. Now, I do not think the hon. gentleman, as I said, is in any very great risk of having to provide large sums for redeeming circulation; I think his precautions are probably sufficient for that. But the other matter is of somewhat more conse-quence, I want to ascertain about what the hon. gentleman thinks is the cost to the country of borrowing money thorough savings banks. There is first the 4 per cent.; there is next what he says is 1 per cent., that is 41 per cent. that it costs us. Is this amount of $2,000,000 intended to be held always at interest or not?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. These are Dominion bonds bearing 4 per cent., therefore there is no interest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In that case I am speaking of what he keeps in the banks to meet these special demands.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is 4 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that there is no loss upon that; so that we might then consider that supposing the reserve to be sufficient-of which I am not quite sure; probably future events will disclose that-from $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to 43 per cent. according to his calculation, will cover the cost to the country of borrowing this money. That is his calculation?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But that is on the hypothesis that $2,000,000 will be sufficient. Well, Sir, I see here some little increases made. By the way I suppose the Winnipeg allowance is an allowance for the extra expense of living at Winnipeg.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; of course it is more expensive living there than it is in Ottawa, but the impression is that that state of things will not always continue, because when the country is opened up fuel and other articles will be more in accordance with what is charged here. Therefore it was not desirable to fix the salary permanently at a higher rate, because, as the hon. gentleman knows well | has been added over the withdrawals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

it is difficult to cut it down again when once you have established it. Therefore the principle was adopted of paying about the same rate of salary as is paid here, and then giving a certain percentage as board allowance, varying it according to the amount of salary, though the small salaries receive a larger percentage than the higher salaries. We gave what was considered about sufficient to pay the additional expense of living there, and we can regulate the scale. At the present time it is not as expensive as it was a year ago, and therefore there is not as much paid to some of the officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman says it is not as expensive as it was a year ago, but he asks for $50 more.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is for an officer who has been in the North-West a long time, I presume. Length of service entitles most of the officers to an increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman will see that the increase ought to have been among the $5,700, in the line above.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is just what he would receive if he were here; he would receive that $50, although the amount paid additional has no reference to this. That is what he would be entitled to here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not understand me. He said the board allowance was made to meet the expenses of living in Winnipeg, which, he said, had been decreased, and that is true. They are less now than they were a year ago, as I can answer from my own personal knowledge. But notwithstanding that, he has increased this board allowance. His argument would have been quite good if it had been to increase the permanent allowance.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is not the board allowance. I think it is an increase of salary without reference to board allowance. It is probably in the wrong place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see an increase of $1,000 for Victoria. What is the cause of that?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. An additional officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there only one savings bank there?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is one in Victoria, one in Nanaimo, and one in New Westminster-three in all. A very large sum is deposited in Victoria.

Mr.VAIL. 1 find from the return of the savings banks of Nova Scotia that in thirteen of them there has been an increase of $100,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive here an in-crease of $1,300. I suppose that is due to the increased number of officers that the hon. gentleman employs,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, in part. The hon. gentleman will see that, according to the scale of salaries, they range from $200 to $400. If an officer was receiving $200, and the deposits increased to $30,000 or $40,000. then he would be entitled, under the scale, to receive another $100. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail), has just now point-ed out that there has been a large increase in Nova Scotia, and it is the cause of the increase throughout the country generally that these parties are entitled to an increased salary of $50 or $100, as the case may be, according to the increase of deposits.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman state the total amount of deposits in the savings banks?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the last return showed $26,000,000, and since then $1,750,000, in round numbers, Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman, while the discussion was proceeding, said something about not desiring to mix up the post office system with the savings bank system, more particularly under his own control. What was the special reason for making that statement? Because it occurred to me that many of the post offices in outlying places were very convenient offices in which to manage savings banks, and it could be done cheaply.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Where defaications have taken place they have been almost exclusively committed by postmasters, not under the Post Office savings bank arrangement, but where they were agents for the Finance Department. These were effected in this way. Notices are sent from the Department to the depositors every quarter, stating the condition of their accounts. A postmaster who had not entered a deposit, when he saw this letter come from the Finance Department at Ottawa, destroyed it, and the result was that we did not obtain information until the defalcation had taken place. It was thus in the power of the postmaster to intercept communications between depositors and the Government, and in that way the difficulty occurred in the two or three cases to which I have referred

Mr. DAVIES. I observe that the Finance Minister has returned over 330 Post Office savings banks in the Dominion. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will give some information respecting the system in the Maritime Provinces.

Sir LEONARD THLLEY. We had in the Maritime Provinces a different system from that which existed in Ontario and Quebec. In the latter two Provinces it was mainly carried on through the Post Office Department and was under the directions of the Postmaster General. In the lower Provinces we had a different system of Goverment savings banks; these have been continued and still exist. The Post Office Department has not established offices because we have made other arrangements, and their establishment would entail additional expense.

Mr. DAVIES. I am anxious to have the Post Office system extended to the Maritime Provinces if possible. I see that the average expense of the Post Office savings banks is 44 per cent. It does not appear to cost more than under the system in force in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it the working classes who use these savings banks in the Maritime Provinces?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. VAIL. With the exception of Halifax and St. Johnno large sums are deposited. It might be an advantage to decrease the amount allowed to be deposited $3,000, and increase the number of savings banks.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is the principle on which we have acted. When the hon gentleman was in the Government he took $10,000 from one depositor. We have reduced the limit to $3,000 and have thus gone on in the direction indicated.

Mr. VAIL. I am not finding fault.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman is doing very well. In the Maritime Provinces capitalists formerly used the savings banks for the investment of very large sums, and many trustees who had amounts of $10,000 were glad to have the privilege of investing them there. I know many instances myself of this kind. I think the change made is a desirable one, being in the direction of enabling the people to take advantage of these banks for their deposits.

Mr. VAIL. I mentioned one case last year where a party had $30,000 invested in the bank; $10,000 in his own name, $10,000 in his wife's name, and $10,000 in the sames of his children.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The moment it came to the notice of the Department it was ordered to be paid back.

Mr. DALY. The hon, gentleman will not say that this was a permanent investment, because if it is the case to which reference was made, the money was there only for a time waiting investment of a more permanent character. Such instances are known—and they have come within my personal knowledge—where money is invested in the savings bank until investment in mortgages or otherwise at a higher rate of interest are offered. I do not think savings banks are used to a large extent in the manner suggested.

Mr. VAIL. There is not the same necessity for giving them privileges of this kind as there is for the poorer classes who deposit their money for safe keeping, or as a permanent investment.

Mr. STAIRS. I would like to ask the Firance Minister whether there is to be any provision for opening a savings bank in Dartmouth. There has been a strong memorial presented on that subject, and I think a good case has been made out. Though Halifax is near to Dartmouth the hours in that office are such that the people of Dartmouth cannot use it to any extent without considerable cost. I hope if it is not provided for in these Estimates the Government will consider it during the recess and make provilion for it next year.

Mr. DAVIES. If the town of Dartmouth, which is so close to Halifax, that you can cross over to it for one or two cents, is to have a savings bank, what is to be said of large counties where there are 40,000 or 50,000 farmers who are perhaps 40 miles away from a savings bank?

Mr. STAIRS. We will endeavour to get a savings bank in Dartmouth if we possibly can, as I think it is needed, and I suppose farmers who are living 40 or 50 miles away from savings banks should have them too.

Mr. HESSON. I concur in the desirability of giving al possible facilities for people to make these deposits, and although 4 per cent. is paid on these deposits, and one quarter per cent. for cost of management, it would still repreent a much cheaper rate as a loan to the Government than anything they can get in a foreign market. I notice that about \$23,000 is paid for commissions on the payment of interest by our agents in the old country, and that would be saved by obtaining the loan here. By giving facilities for deposits in these banks, we not only get our money at a cheaper rate of interest, but the interest remains in the country instead of being exported. I think that in that regard there has been a great improvement within the last few years, as our foreign indebtedness has to some extent become a home indebtedness, and I hope further efforts will be made in that direction as quickly as possible. I am informed that money is becoming cheap to-day, and that the banks will not take money on the understanding that they are to pay anything like $\tilde{3}$ or 4 per cent; and as the depositors in savings banks are limited to from \$1,000 to \$3,000, they are the class whom we should encourage into a system of saving. For these reasons, I think that every possible facility should be given to such depositors.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may point out that the cost is $65,000 on $26,000,000; whereas the cost on the $100,000,000, which is about what is represented by $4,000,000, is about $23,000. So the hon. gentleman will see that there is a marked difference between the sam paid in that respect for the management of the debt and the sum paid here. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what he proposes to do should the interests on money at call fall, as it has done before, considerably below 4 per cent. At the present moment I do not think that difficulty is likely to arise because my information differs from that of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I think there is no difficulty in getting 4 per cent. in the banks just now, but they may reduce it as they did before.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may say that there is no intention at present to reduce the rate of interest paid to the people of the country who deposit their small earnings with the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No matter whether the rate obtainable in the open market falls or not?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When that time arrives we will judge of the question as we have judged at present. I may say that parties do not really receive 4 per cent, because as I stated before, if the money is deposited in the middle of the month and paid out in the middle of another month, there would be one month's interest lost in, say, six months. The Government consider it to be a matter of vital importance that there should be institutions such as these, where parties having small earnings may put them for safety. In the next place if there was a loss sustained, we believe the country would justify us in incurring that small loss rather than that we should withdraw from the people the advantages they now possess. At present there is not such a state of the money market as would warrant us in asking that depositors should receive less than 4 per cent. under the conditions which I have stated. As to the question of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Stairs) we have an amount to cover the opening of such new offices as the Government may consider it wise and proper to establish. So far, however, we have not seen our way clear to give Dartmouth an office, owing to its proximity to Hali fax, where we have officers paid by the year who can take this money without additional expense. I cannot say what our decision may be in the future.

Mr. HESSON What I said with reference to the payment of commissions on the interest paid in the foreign market of $4,750,000 is perfectly correct, and I might have added the additional expense in obtaining the loan in the first instance in the old country, because I understand that no loans are quoted without paying commissions to float them. When this is added to the 4 per cent. it will make it more than the 4¹/₄ per cent. we are now paying to our own people. The more we encourage our citizens to deposit in the Government savings banks, the better.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as it goes; although it is not very profitable for us to have our own people lending us money at $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. if we could borrow it at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the other side, particularly as this money, which is practically taken out of the wage fund of the country, will require to be replaced to a very great degree by other moneys borrowed at a much higher rate of interest outside of the country. There are two sides to the question, as the hon. gentleman will perceive. I quite agree that it is not desirable that the Government of the country should violently or frequently change the rate of interest; but that is a matter which ought to be very care. fully considered. I was not speaking of an imaginary case, but of an actual case, that while the banks would not give more than 3 per cent. on deposits, the hon. Minister was paying 4 per cent. I would go a good way to encourage the deposits of the poorer classes; but there comes up a question which my hon. friend raised whether the limit of \$3,000 is not too large. A man who has \$3,000 to his credit in hard cash is not to be considered a very poor man, and for that reason among others I think the hon. Minister would do well to consider the question of decreasing the rate. The House ought to understand that the hon. Minister is paying largely above the market value of money, whether at 4½ or 4½ per cent. If he could succeed, as he intimated to us, in borrowing money at 3½ tion in the savings banks, as I understand the statements per cent. in England, he is still paying largely in excess of in the papers, and I am anxious to know if any defect has Sir RIGHARD CARTWRIGHT.

the market value, making allowance for commissions and other charges. I would be glad if the hon. Minister would just briefly state how he stands just now with relation to our London agents.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman knows that the commission we pay is $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the coupons as they fall due, because that was his own arrangement. The hon. gentleman says that I stated that I expected to get money at 31 per cent. I did not say that. I stated the other day that agents advised us to issue a short loan at ten years at 4 per cent., because the redemption of the other would not be at par, but about equivalent to our 4 per cent. loan; but when that 4 per cent. loan matured our $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cents. would probably be at par. I did not intend to convey that money could be got at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the real practical question at this moment is the maximum. There is no doubt that the present rule has been abused; that is, that other persons than those for whose special benefit these savings banks are established avail themselves of them; and it is not to be forgotten that the observation the hon. gentleman made with regard to minor losses of interest through the broken periods, applies more to the cares of the smaller depositors than the larger. The larger depositors, who can make their own arrangements, and who use these savings banks as a means of investment, are very likely to divide at the end or beginning of the month and loose very little in that way; but the smaller depositor, who wants a savings bank to put his money into, who cannot derive any profit from his money unless he does so, and who requires more hurriedly to take it out, is the person who is most likely to be the loser by the broken periods. That is an added reason for reducing the maximum. It was formerly found that $10,000 was too large, and it was reduced to its present figure; but it is said that sums are broken now, and stand in the names of different depositors, though belonging to one person. That is a dishonourable arrangement, and the circumstance that it exists under the present limit of $3,000 is an indication that you may still further reduce the limit without exposing yourself to any more danger than at present. Perhaps when I said it was a dishonourable practice, I used too strong a word; it is an evasion, at any rate, of the regulation. I think, therefore, that what we have to consider is whether the policy of the Government, in reducing the maximum from $10,000 to $3,000, should be extended further or not. I agree with my hon. friend that when you get up to $3,000, you get beyond the point at which we can talk of the working classes. So far as my experience goes, if a workingman has over $3,000, he invests it, and very properly so, in a homestead or in real estate, instead of putting it into a savings bank.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Our agents have an instruction that if a person brings in a large sum to be deposited, it is to be taken for a long time, in order to check the practice referred to.

Mr. STAIRS. I do not think the limit at present fixed is too high. I know cases in which mechanics in Halifax have the savings of a lifetime in the savings bank, and to whom it would be a great inconvenience to have to take their money out.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BLAKE. There are accounts and papers with refer-been discovered in the system of audit for which we are asked to pay and whether any change has been made in consequence of these defalcations?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Some six or nine months ago, with reference to the Audit Department, a change took place which led to the discovery to which the hon. gentleman refers. That is now in process of litigation and we cannot say what the result will be. Of course there may be a very considerable deficit.

Mr. BLAKE. It is found there was some weakness in the system which before prevailed. I am not blaming the hon. gentleman, for I suppose he continued the old system.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, but the Deputy Minister of Finance thought it might be amended, and new regulations were adopted, which led to the discoveries referred to.

Mr. BLAKE. Were they with reference to the audit.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; and I will bring the new regulations down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some years ago I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the large amount of the Sinking Fand. That has since increased considerably. With reference to his intentions, or his expectations, if he prefers to call them so, with respect to the new loan, the hon. gentleman in making his explanations said nothing about his intentions with respect to the Sinking Fund. I should like to know whether he proposes to continue the policy of having a large Sinking Fund, in view of the new loans he contemplates making. It appears to me the time has come when the Sinking Fund can be fairly dropped. Other nations have none, and our standing is good enough not to require it any longer. It is clear this Sinking Fund is becoming a serious incubus in more ways than one. It is now $1,250,000, and it has this serious disadvantage, that it raises the nominal price of our bonds beyond their genuine value, which is not desirable. We are obliged to purchase back many of these bonds at a very considerable premium, and for this reason I came to the conclusion some years ago that it is desirable that we should have no more Sinking Funds, as the credit of the country is sufficient to dispense with them. What is the policy of the hon. gentleman on that point going to be?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman says he came to the conclusion some years ago to have no sinking fund. From 1874 to 1878 he did not put that in practice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course not.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Therefore I did not take the course proposed. There is something to be said on both sides. During the time the hon. gentleman was in office he, looking at both sides of the case, took the ground that, on the whole, it was better to have a Sinking Fund. In that respect, I agree with him. There are advantages and disadvantages, but under the circumstances and seeing there is not one of the Colonies issuing loans without a Sinking Fund, I purpose, in the next loan, following in the steps of my illustrious predecessor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman is making a serious mistake. I find the Sinking Fund is nearly double what it was in my time, having risen from $500,000 to nearly $1,400,000. It is quite a different thing to have a sinking fund of $500,000 and one of $1,400,000; moreover there is this very great difference, that I was then establishing a new system of loans-of 4 per cent. loans-and moreover the American securities were being offered in the market at precisely the same price as I obtained for the loans I floated. Now the American securities are vastly ahead of ours. Their 41 per cents were then being offered in the markets at par, while our 4's were and moreover money is cheaper now than it was then. And, although of course the hon. Minister must follow his own judgment in that matter, I regret to hear him say that he is not disposed to consider the question of dropping the Sinking Fund. I think that, in more ways than one, it is a serious error to continue it, but it is for him, of course, to decide, on his responsibility. It is my business only to call attention to the fact that the Sinking Fund has swollen to nearly $1,500,000, which, in the practical operation, means that we have to purchase our 4 per cents. at premiums of 4 or 5 all the time. I do not think that is a very profitable transaction for us, and besides it is open to the two objections I have mentioned-you keep your securities at a point beyond their genuine value, and that is not a desirable thing; and you add unnecessarily, which is a point he may well consider, to the nominal expenditure of this country. Of course, if he is going to take any action, he has got to make it pretty soon, because he will probably have, within the next two years, to borrow a pretty large sum of money; and it is for that reason that I call attention to it now.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not see the connection between the statement made by the hon. gentleman and the propriety of changing the policy. He justifies himself for not adopting the policy he now recommends, because American securities were nearer the rate at which our securities were. I do not see that that has anything to do with it at all. It makes no difference whatever to us. If American securities were double what they are, it would not affect our position one iota, it would not affect it to the extent of one cent. Then, if he makes the statement with the view of showing that our securities have not advanced in the same proportion as the United States securities, if that is the object he has in view, he knows perfectly well the reason which has led to the increase in the value of American securities. The Government have been paying them off at the rate of $100,000,000 a year, and certain securities, by the American law, are absolutely necessary in order to secure the bank circulation; so the fact that they are diminishing in number and the increased demand have increased their value. It does not bear on the question of the advisability of our having a sinking fund or not. The Sinking Funds will be less this year than before, because about $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 will be taken up of the sinking fund in the present year. Of course they are maturing, and they are held now by the Government; but, as I stated before, I cannot see any circumstances at the. present time that at all change the reasons or make it desirable that it should be done now more than when the hon. gentleman had charge of the financial affairs of the Dominion. They were then about $900,000 or $1,000,000; this year perhaps they will be about $1,250,000; but that does not affect the case at all. The question is simply this, what woul I we receive for the debentures if they were placed on the market if they had no sinking fund provided for them? They would not bring the same price, and that must be taken into account as to the loss we sometimes sustain by buying these at a sum in advance of what we sold the debentures for, and that is a question to be considered in settling this point with no reference whatever to the value of American securities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I can explain to the hon. gentleman, or at any rate to many members of this House, that it made a very considerable difference when I was offering my loans. The price investors will give depends upon the price for which they can obtain as good securities in the market, and, when the American Republic were offering their securities at a certain figure, it was not very easy for the Canadian Government to get a higher rate. The hon. gentleman cannot fail to see the connection. What investors look at is the value of money and the number of being offered at 90. Now the circumstances are different, other securities that are offered, and there is therefore a strong connection between the price to be obtained for Canadian 4 per cents. and the price to be obtained for American 41 per cents. As to the other point which he raises, I admit frankly that it is a point for mature consideration. I am not pressing upon the hon. Minister to act contrary to his own judgment, but I am pointing out one or two reasons why, in my opinion, it is advisable even to lose a point or two rather than to go on paying a large additional sum every year $-4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., as far as we are concerned, instead of 4 per cent. Of course, he must do exactly as he decides. It is for him to weigh the various difficulties in the way of negoloans, and for him to decide. siness. My business, however, is That is tiating his business. to call his attention and that of the House to the fact that our Sinking Fund is larger than, I think, that of any other State of similar size at the present moment. He may be aware-I am not-of a State with an equal amount of securities on the market, that has an equally large Sinking Fund, and he must see that using this \$1,250,000, which will go on increasing all the time, in this way, is not a very desirable thing. I am not proposing to abolish the Sinking Fund altogether, even if it were possible. He cannot do that. He is bound to go on with the Sinking Fund in the majority of these loans up to 1894 or 1895, I think. What I say is, the Sinking Fund which will be at his disposal, under present arrangements, is so large, that it would be wise for him not to add to it, and to endure even a slight loss-and I believe it would be a very slight loss, if any at all-in consequence.

Mr. HESSON. This is the first time I ever heard objec⁻ tion being taken to securities being strengthened by a Sinking Fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then you know very little about it.

Mr. HESSON. I think I have had as much experience in regard to Sinking Funds as the ex-Finance Minister, perhaps not in a large way, but in a small way, and we must judge from experience. We know, that if you put securities into the market without any provision for a Sinking Fund, you will not get as good a price as if there was such a provision. I do not think it is any mistake for the Govern. ment to invest in their own securities. It is simply retiring their own securities every year to a certain extent, and it strengthens the value of their securities abroad. I think the hon. gentleman established a very good precedent when he established that, and perhaps under more trying circumstances than the country is now called upon to pass through. I think it would be unwise to abandon a policy which has been found to answer so well in municipalities, where I think they manage these things as carefully as anywhere else.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sorry to differ with my hon. and experienced friend, but I will say thishe will understand it is not a question of dispensing with the Sinking Fund altogether. Under our arrangements, a very large Sinking Fund indeed will be applied to the payment of our securities for the next twenty four or twenty five years. I have very great doubts whether, in our position, a Sinking Fund is any longer wanted, and I have very great doubts whether it would add to any appreciable extent to the price we would get, while it undoubtedly will add to the burdens of the people of this country, because he must remember that every dollar unnecessarily taken from the people involves a greater loss than is represented by every dollar that goes into the Treasury. But we are not discussing the question of abolishing the Sinking Fund. For the next generation, at all events, we will have always a large Sinking Fund, which will go on increasing. It goes into an accumulated fund, and the interest is always added, and I say that, as it stands, is quite enough, and there is no need to add to it a new Governor arrives, everything moves on as before, any further. I found the Sinking Fund increasing more than I thought desirable, and I did not hesitate to state to the Minister of Finance that I had determined myself and would have supported him, in 1880, or in 1879, if he had pleased, in dispensing with the Sinking Fund from that time out. I admit there is something to be said on both sides, but I think the advantages of the Sinking Fundare outweighed by the additional burden on the people, especially as we will not dispense with the Sinking Fund or a million and more applicable to it for many years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

2. The Governor General's Secretary's Office..... $9,710 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is an annual increase to one messenger, $30; there is a decrease in the third class clerks of $100, and an increase of $50 to the chief clerk-on the whole a decrease of about $20, if you deduct the amount of appropriation last year to C. C. Jones, made under pecu-liar circumstances. The law provides that in the absence of an official, a chief clerk, for instance, the next on the list discharges the duties and receives the salary. In this case the chief clerk, a Mr. Stewart, died, and the Act does not provide for that, and we took a vote of $145 to pay him the amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose these $3,000 are distributed for Aides-de-camp at the pleasure of His Excellency.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A question was raised, I think it was last year, whether it would not be advisable to have a gentleman born, or at least brought up, in Canada attached as one of these Aides de-camp. There is a good deal to be said for that, in my opinion, although, of course, it is also very proper that His Excellency should have with him such officers as he may please to bring.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not recollect any reference being made to that subject last year, but there is a good deal in what the hon. member says. Of course, the Governor General's wishes must be considered in the matter. But while there is a good deal to be said in favour of the appointment of a Canadian, still I do not think that it should be laid down as a fixed rule.

Mr. BLAKE. I was going to say something to the same effect. Of course, His Excellency's Aides-de-camp are a part of his family, and it is very reasonable and natural that he should have the selection of them, but I have no doubt that his own comfort and the efficiency of his office, in some not unimportant respects, would be greatly promoted if we were to recur to the old system. In the old Province of Canada we had a Provincial Aides-de-camp, and I have no doubt whatever, that a native officer who was thoroughly acquainted with the people of the country, and could teach the new comers of the Staff, and inform those in authority on many important points, would be very conducive to the easy working of the office. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the suggestion is one of no little practical moment. It is no new thing. In the old Province of Canada we had a Provincial Aides de-eamp who filled the post for very many years, who was a man of great discretion and judgment, and was found extremely useful to the successive incumbents to the high office of Governor General-our old friend Col. Irvine. I think the sooner we recur to that plan the better it will be to the office.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In many of the Provinces, before Confederation, we had a gentleman filling that situa tion. In New Brunswick, there was an officer holding the position for over twenty years. There is a great advantage in it, as when a change in Governors General takes place, and

There are many advantages, no doubt, attached to that officers, who, on an average, receive $1,470 a year. principle, but still we are not in a position, I think, to ask that that should be the case.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I think it is well the question has been raised in the House, as it may attract the attention of His Excellency.

I understood the Minister of Finance to say Mr. MILLS that when an officer was absent and his duties were discharged by another officer of inferior grade, the second one received the same compensation as the first. Is that in all cases?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; that is the law now, and it is adhered to.

Mr. MILLS. I think I can show that the hon. gentleman has departed from it.

3. The Office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada..... $18,847 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have there been any promotions in the Department, or anything but ordinary increases?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. None. The hon. gentleman will notice that $1,000 was appropriated last year for extra work; that is struck out. There is an allowance for the Private Secretary of the President of the Council, which is the only increase, except the annual increase of $50 in a few cases. For instance, two first class clerks have $50 each, and four second-class clerks have $50 each, being increases.

4. The Department of Justice... $16,950 00 5. do do (Pententiary Branch) 5,260 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain about the increase and promotione?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is one second class clerk added to the Department of Justice, at a salary of $1,300. He was transferred from the Penitentiary Branch, where he was receiving $1,250. I believe during the present year one person has been transferred from that Department to the Department of the Interior, either this year or the close of last year.

Mr. BLAKE. I see where there were two third-class clerks, there is only one now. Did that change the hon. gentleman referred to take place in the promotion of one of these third-class clerks?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No, it is a transfer. I suppose they found little use for him there, and he was required in the Penitentiary Branch.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe there is a third-class clerk added to the Penitentiary Branch and a third-class clerk gone away from the Justice Branch. Is it an exchange?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes. A third-class clerk has been appointed to the Penitentiary Branch in place of the other who is transferred to the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLAKE Is the third-class clerk a new appointment or a transfer?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it is a transfer, but I do not know?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a very considerable increase. Last year the vote was $36,980; this year we are asked to vote $43,160, and we are asked for five additional employees, 32 as against 27. Independent of other matters, I call the attention of the Minister and the House to this: If you deduct the four messengers who are receiving $400 or $500 each, it follows that we have 18

Really that seems a very large figure for the Department of Militia and Defence, or any similar Department. They must be all first class clerks, or very nearly so, in order to obtain such a salary average. However, the hon Minister, of course, will give his explanations to the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I should like also an explanation as to why it is that the Militia Department employs an architect and draughtsman. Surely if the Government have the Public Works Department and a Chief Architect, all work should be done under his supervision; but here is another Department which should have nothing to do with architectural work, employing an architect and also a draughtsman. Is there to be an Architectural Department in connection with each of the Government offices, or what does it mean? I think it is a great mistake, and one which should not have been taken without first obtaining the opinion of Parlia-ment and its sanction thereto. This is an entire Departmental change.

The hon, gentleman will see that the Mr. CARON. increase is one which has been occasioned by a change which the Government considered it advisable to make in the Department of Militia. The Government considered that the Military works, which were being carried on by the Public Works Department added considerably to the works already so very large under that Department. And mo cover, it way considered that the repairs which are continually being n a e to the military works in the country, fortifications and baracks, and other works requiring special knowledge, if I can use that word, would be better carried out by a gentleman who possessed not only the knowledge required by an employé of the Department of Public Works, but also knowledge of military works. I must say that the first item which has been referred to more particularly by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), that for au architect, was inserted in the printed copies of the Estimates by mistake. I therefore ask to drop that item, $1,800 for an architect. The addition to the expenditure in this Branch of the Department is $1,000 for a recond class clerk and draughtsman, and $800 for a third-class clerk. These are required to enable the Department to carry out the change which has been considered advisable in transferring to the Department of Militia the work which had heretofore been carried out by the Department of Public Works. I think, judging from the experience of the past, it is an improvement; and these changes were made with the concurrence of the Minister of Public Works, who has had considerable experience, as both sides of the House will readily admit, in his own Department. Leaving out the item of $1,800 which will be struck out, hon, gentlemen opposite will see that the addition is altogether caused by this change in the system, which has been followed up to the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What promotions has the hon. gentleman made in his Department, if any?

Mr. CARON. There are no promotions. Col. Bacon, who was acting here as Brigade Major, was transferred to the position made vacant by the death of C l. Walkem

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What appoint ment is it?

Mr. CARON. Colonel Bacon was appointed, by Order in Council, at a salary of $1, 50. The salary received by Colonel Walkem was $1,700.

Mr. BLAKE. I see there are two second-class clerks instead of one.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentlemam is quite right. The second-class clerk to whom he referred is Mr. Donaldson, who used to be in "B" Battery, Kingson. He is a gentle-man who possesses special qualifications, and he has been appointed to the Store Branch. Hon. gentlemen will understand that from the addition which has been made to the forces, the work of the Department is more than double what it was a few years ago and it was indispensable to have a man like Mr. Donaldson who was thoroughly au fait with all the technicalities of the Store Branch of the Department. So he was transferred, on the report of the Deputy Minister, to that Branch, at a salary of $1,150.

Mr. BLAKE. He had not been in the permanent Civil Service before?

Mr. CARON. No; it is a new appointment.

Mr. BLAKE. He comes in as a second-class clerk?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. About what age may he be?

Mr. CARON. I am told he is about thirty-two years old. Of course he is perfectly young enough to do the work in the most efficient manner.

Mr. BLAKE. Was he submitted to an examination under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. CARON. No; he was brought in for special qualifications and because it was found absolutely necessary, in that Branch of the Department, to have a man who possessed the knowledge of military stores, which are not qualifications contemplated by the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the age of Col. Bacon?

Mr. CARON. I suppose he is a man of about 48 or 50. The hon gentleman will recollect that Mr. Walkem was th gentleman who had charge of the ordnance land belonging to that section urder the Act, and it really belongs to the Department of Militia. This officer requires the drawing out and proparation of plans for transfers of property, which are occasionally made by the Department, and Col. Bacon was a gentleman who besides being a Brigade Major had all the knowledge which was required to replace a gentleman in the position of Mr. Walkem. He had been an engineer, and he has a very considerable knowledge of architecture. He is a draughtsman, and can draw out plans and copy any maps, which are continually needed in the discharge of the duties required in that Branch of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Was he examined ?

Mr. CARON. No; he was brought under the exemption, which is contemplated by the Act, which provides that in certain circumstances, specialists may be brought in without submitting to the ordinary examination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is also a thirdclass clerk, I notice.

Mr. CARON. Yes; this is in consequence of the increase of work in the Store Branch of the Department. The hon. gentleman will understand that from our permanent establishment, which is altogether new, and which is carried out under the vote of last Session, allowing the Minister of Militia to organize the new schools of infantry and a school of cavalry, an increase in the staff of the Department is absolutely indispensable. I may say that I do not consider that the increase in that branch of the Department is sufficient to carry on the increase of work which has taken place within the last few years. However, inasmuch as I am always ready to carry on the Department in the most economical manner possible, so as to be able to submit the votes which I am called upon to ask from hon. members, who are always sure to criticise them in the most thorough manner, I thought that I would merely add one third class clerk in the Store Branch of the Department, as I considered it necessary to make this new appointment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is a new man? He has not been in the service before? Mr. CARON. Mr. CARON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under what rule is a third-class clerk appointed at a starting salary of $850. The hon. gentleman will observe that two of those third-class clerks are apparently at $1,000 and one at $850. Now, what is the present maximum of the third-class clerks under the recent emendations of the law, and at what rate are they usually expected to begin ?

Mr. CARON. This third-class clerk was employed in the cartridge factory at Quebec. He passed the Civil Service examination under the Act, and he was transforred to the Department to replace Mr. Jones, who left the Department. Mr. Jones was receiving $1,000. Mr. Knight, besides passing the examination took three optional subje ts on which he passed. He is, besides, an accountant, and it was impossible to get the services of a gentleman who possessed the qualifications which he possesses without g ving him at the outset the salary which I recommended should be given him. In giving him the $850, I have saved an additional clerk who would have been required unless I had found in the gentleman who received the appointment the qualifications possessed by the gentleman who was appointed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the maximum salary of the third-class?

Mr. CARON. The minimum is $400 and the maximum $1,000, under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BOWELL. The grade of junior second class is abolished and the third-class goes up.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman stated that this officer was appointed in place of another gentleman who left; but I find that there is an additional third-class clerk.

Mr. CARON. I explained to the hon. gentleman that in consequence of the increased work in the Department it was considered necessary to add to the staff. The new appointment is a third-class clerk, who has not yet been appointed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another besides.

Mr. CARON. No, no other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman takes power to have three in place of two.

Mr. CARON. The new appointment which I spoke of is that of Mr. Donaldson, who has been transferred from "B" Battery, and, having special qualifications, has been appointed without being subjected to the examination required by the Civil Service Act. Mr. Knight fill d the place left vacant by Mr. Jones, in November, 1883, at a salary of $850. The third is the new appointment which has not yet been made, but is considered necessary in consequence of the increased work in that branch of the Department. The new clerk, when appointed, is to have $850.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Last year the hon. gentleman took a vote for two cierks at $1,000 each. Now he takes a vote for three—one at $850, and two at $1,000 each. That $850 is, I presume, for Mr. Knight.

Mr. CARON. There are three third-class clerks. One is Mr. Clark, at $1,000 a year. Mr. Jones, who received $1,000, has been replaced by Mr. Knight, who receives $350. The third is an appointment which is not yet made, and for which the salary will be $850.

Mr. BLAKE. Last year there were but two third-class clerks—one at $1,000, who remains at $1,000, and another at $1,000, who has been replaced by Mr. Knight, at $850. Therefore, the hon-gentleman proposes to give the maximum $1,000 for the new third-class clerk whom he proposes to appoint.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will see that Mr. Jones' salary was $1,000. But he is gone, and I am asking for a revote of that amount to pay the salary of Mr. Donaldson, who was paid last year out of the funds voted for "B" Battery, and who is now on the Civil Service list. Consequently, the hon. gentleman will see that the real increase which I am asking Parliament to vote is $850 for the new appointment.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Tell us the names of the two at $1,000 each.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has given us one man who was in before and is in charge now. What is his name? He is a third-class clerk.

Mr. CARON. Mr. Clark.

Mr. BLAKE. I have got two third-class clerks at $1,000 each, of which Mr. Clark is one. I strike him out; that leaves one at $1,000. Then I find another at $850, Mr. Knight, in the place of Mr. Jones; I am left with one thirdclass clerk unaccounted for.

Mr. CARON. I am telling the hon. gentleman that the new appointment is an appointment at a salary of $850. I say the position left vacant by Mr. Jones and filled by Mr. Knight is a position, the occupant of which shall receive $1,000 a year. I have left the amount which he was receiving $1,000, and which was voted last year, in the Estimates, and which I ask Parliament to vote this year.

Mr. BLAKE. Why.

Mr. CARON. Because the difference between $350 or $700 which may be given to the new man to be appointed, I complete by adding the balance to the salary paid to Donaldson, who is transferred from "B" Battery, and which was not provided for in the Estimates of last year, except in the amount voted for "B" Battery. I kept that amount so as to complete the salary and make the new appointment of $850.

Mr. BLAKE. Donaldson is a second-class, clerk is he not?

Mr. CARON. No, he is not.

Mr. BLAKE. What is he?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman misunderstands, but no doubt the fault is mine. Mr. Clark receives $1,000 a year; then there is the office vacated by Mr. Jones, who was receiving $1,000; I leave in the Estimates this year his salary as $1,000, as provided last year, and I make a new appointment so as to be able to meet the requirements of the Store Branch of my Department, and to that new appointee I give $850.

Mr. BLAKE. Who is he.

Mr. CARON. He is not appointed yet.

Mr. BLAKE. But the other man; Jones' place is filled by Knight at $850.

Mr. CARON. So it is, but I leave the salary which was paid to Jones so as to be able to make up the new appointment which I am making at $850, and a portion of the salary which Donaldson is now receiving, who has been transferred from "B" Battery.

Mr. BLAKE. That is entirely indefensible. We have now got to the bottom of it. We have got Mr. Clark at $1,000, and we have another new appointment proposed at $850, and beside these we have a vote of $1,000 for a thirdclass clerk to be accounted for, and the hon. gentleman accounts for that by saying that he shall receive $850 and the difference of $150 will be used to supplement the pay of some other clerk in some other grade. That will not do. If the hon. gentleman wants to pay Donaldson let him ask for the money under the proper head, but he must not ask us to give $1,000 for a clerk who is to receive only $850, in order that, with the difference, the hon. gentleman may give an increase to some other clerk. That cannot be done under the law. It will be military law, if the hon. gentleman does it, martial law, not the law we understand.

Mr. CARON. The position vacated by Mr. Jones, who received $1,000, has been left vacant and a new appointment of $850 given to Mr. Knight. Mr. Jones' position is left open, but the amount he received is voted so as to provide for the filling up of that position.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know which of these explanations we are to accept. We were told that Mr. Jones' place was filled by Mr. Knight, and we were told the reason why Mr. Knight received $850 to fill this place was that he had special qualifications to fill it, and then we were told that the hon. gentleman asked for $1,000 in order that he might use the difference of $150 to supplement the salary of another clerk. Now, he tells us that is not so; that Mr. Jones' place is not filled, that the $500 is for a new appointment, and that he proposes to fill Mr. Jones' place at the maximum rate of $1,000. Why should he give this maximum rate in the appointment of a third class clerk,

Mr. CARON. Mr. Jones was receiving $1,000, and his salary is placed on the Estimate at full, to provide for the new appointment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You cannot give $1,000 to a third-class cierk without special reasons.

Mr. CARON. There are special reasons.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon, gentleman told us that the office of Mr. Jones was to be filled by Mr. Knight, at $1,000.

Mr. CARON. I made a mistake. Mr. Knight is appointed at $850. The position left vacant by Mr. Jones is still vacant, and will be filled by a new appointment.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman says he was mistaken in one point. Did he also mistake as to the qualifications of Mr. Knight, who was the most admirable person that could be found?

Mr. CARON. So he is.

Mr MACKENZIE. He is still as good a man as he was?

Mr. CARON. He is quite as admirable as he was.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is utterly impossible for me, with my limited capacity, to understand why Mr. Knight, an hour ago, or nearly so, was admirably suited to discharge the duties Mr. Jones had to discharge, and he should now ask $1,000 for what $850 would suffice for. That is not explained yet; and then, if the hon.gentleman wants another thirdclass clerk, we ought to know what he is wanted for, and he must begin at the amount fixed in the Civil Service Act. He is adding to one salary illegally, and is now asking us to sanction the vote of a salary for another third class clerk, at the maximum, to begin with, instead of the minimum. That is also contrary to law, and no explanation is given.

Mr. CARON. I have given the hon. gentleman every possible explanation. I have repeated, time and again, how the new appointments were to be provided for. I have told the hon. gentleman that the position of Mr. Jones, not being filled, was left vacant, and was to be filled by a gentleman, and I provide for the salary which was voted last year to Mr. Jones. I have also explained that Mr. Kuight was appointed at $850.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us, now, whether it is intended to apply $1500 for this $1,000 towards Mr. Donaldson's salary because he said so a while ago.

Mr. CARON. No; Mr. Donaldson is provided for by the vote of $1,150.

an increase to some other clerk. That cannot be done that is the only purpose that the hon. gentleman gave us for asking it—he only wanted $850, and was taking $1,000 to supplement Mr. Donaldson's salary. Of course, he will now strike off that $150, and will probably order Jones, Knight & Co. to form in close column and beat a masterly retreat.

Mr. CARON. I have told the hon. gentleman the $1,000 was provided for the vacancy in my Department, and is intended to be given to the new occupant, provided the man who fills the position will have the qualifications to receive that amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, it is very obj ctionable to have an appointment of a third-class clerk made at the maximum. There is no use in having thirdclass clerks appointed in any Department at the maximum salary. It is a very bad precedent. It will do mischief, as the hon. gentleman knows right well, if you find in the Militia Department, where the salaries are very high, much in excess of the other Departments, that a man comes in as a third-class clerk at $',000, the maximum of the class. The precedent is a very dubicus one, at any rate. It would be botter to face the question at once, and put him in some grade where the precedent would not be so injurious to the rest of the Service.

Mr. CARON. The only difference is about the amount of $150, and I think, as the hon. gentlemen have shown so much confidence in me, they may leave it to my discretion to decide whether it will be given or not. If it is not given, it will be struck off next year, and the hon. gentleman will be convinced that I am trying to work my Department in the most economical manner possible.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think that is a proper matter to submit to this House for its consideration. The whole of this Civil Service Act proceeds on the principle of gradation. The hon. gentleman or his colleague, submittel a measure two or three years ago for the purpose of Civil Service examination. The parties who have entered the Civil Service are put in various classes. They begin at a certain salary. H rea vacancy occurs in which the party who held the office was receiving $1,000 a year. That was the maximum sum, which, perhaps after years of service, was obtained by this officer. Now, when that officer has risen from $300 or $400 up to $1,000 by efficient public service, extending over a series of years, the hon. gentleman proposes that the new occupant to the office shall begin at the point which the late occupant only reached after several years of f.ithful public service. Suppose the hon. gentleman acts in this way with regard to every vacancy. He need only hold the office a few years until every clerk in every grade in that office receives the maximum salary allowed by the law. He enters at the maximum salary. There is no such thing as a gradation, or an increase of salary, except by the transferrence of a party from one office to another. Now, if that is the principle upon which the Government is going to proceed, then we ought to have an amendment of the Act, we ought to have that policy enunciated here, and the hon. gentleman should propose that, instead of parties beginning at the minimum salary fixed by the Civil Service Act or regulations, they shall begin at the maximum salary so fixed; he should do away with this progressive increase of salary provided for under the Act. The hon. gentleman makes to this House a proposition in direct violation of the Act, in violation of the spirit, the principle and the policy of the Act. His proposition is that, there long a vacancy in an office held after a number of years of service at $1,000, an inexperienced party shall be appointed to fill it at the same salary, instead of beginning at the smaller amount. If he wishes the House to assent to that proposition, it should come before the House in some other way than by a violation of the principles and spirit of the Act under which he professes to act.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will see that I have been carrying out, in the administration of my Department, exactly the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. Last year, Mr. Walkem was receiving a salary of $1,700. Parliament agreed to that amount, and I filled the position left vacant by his death by appointing Col. Bacon at $1,450.

Mr. MILLS. Then you do not want $1,000 now.

Mr. CARON. I am asking only for $1,450. This vacancy has taken place in one of the most important branches of the service, and I am asking Parliament to vote a salary which was voted last year. I do not at all say that I will give that salary to the occupant of the position which I want to fill, but if I can find a man to fill that position at a less salary than the amount voted last year, I shall do as I did in replacing Mr. Walkem, to whom I gave $1,500 instead of $1,700; and next year the hop. gentleman will see that I have not taken advantage of this vote. I consider that the position to be filled require a man of special qualifications, and though I do not think it will be necessary to give $2,000, I think it prudent to ask Parliament to vote this amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will see that the Civil Service Act is going to be made simply waste paper if every appointment to be filled in his Department, or in any other, is to be filled by a man coming in and getting the maximum, on the ground of special qualifications. Now that proviso in the Act allowing the Minister to appoint men with special qualifications was intended, as we all know, to meet exceptional cases. There was no intention that half-a-dozen men should be pitchforked into any Department, under the plea of special qualifications. It was supposed to be an almost invariable rule that men would commence at the minimum of their grade, as Col. Bacon, I suppose, is going to do. It was never intended that these special qualifications should be used for appointing third class clerks, or people of that kind, but it was intended only to give Ministers the benefit, in the higher branches of their Departments, of special qualifications which could not be easily obtained in the Department. That is the ground-it is not distrust of the Minister of the Militia at all. Though the amount is only a few hundred dollars, an important principle is involved, and the principle is that the Civil Service Act is to be maintained, and that it shall not be allowed, simply by a s'roke of the pen, or upon the recommendation of the Minister, that so and so shall get $1,000 on entering the service, when the minimum salary, perhaps, is only $400. I believe that the Ministers would consult their own convenience by adhering to the Civil Service regulations. They may be sure that such a case as this will be made the foundation for other applications.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. It is very important that the Civil Service Act should be carried out in its entirety and in good faith. It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman has said, that special qualifications might induce the head of a Department to recommend an increase of salary beyond the minimum of a class in which the party enters the service, but except in special cases, the minimum salary should be paid, of course. As to this particular case, perhaps the Committee would allow the order to pass, and my hon. friend, between now and Concurrence, will consider the arguments of the hop. gentleman opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understand the last two items are to come off.

Mr. CARON. It would be impossible for me to carry out the change which has been made in my Department unless we had proper officers. Of course, the hon. gentleman will understand that at present there is no officer who can assume the control of public works which heretofore were carried on by the Department of Public Works. As it is contemplated to transfer to my Department the conduct of certain public works, it is necessary for me to provide a staff capable of carrying on those works. The only appointment which I can strike off is that of a first-class clerk, at $1,800, but the $1,100 for a third class clerk and the $800 must remain.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to know whether this transfer of part of the public works of the country to the Militia Department has been made by Order in Counci or under authority of an Act of Parliament. The Act constituting the Militia Department, I do not think authorizes anything of this sort.

Mr. BLAKE. This is, of course, a question of policy which, so far as I remember, has been settled by an Act of Parliament. We have frequently discussed the advantage of having a united management of all the public works under one office. So recently as last Session and the Session before, it was stated that we must go further in this direc-tion, and the Minister of Public Works took charge of the heating of all the buildings. It was said it was import-ant to have them concentrated in the charge of one Department. Now, here we find a plan for the creation of new military buildings, which, with their repairs, are to be handed over to the Militia Department. If so, why should not the Justice Department take charge of the repairs of the penitentaries, &c.? Why should not the Customs Department take charge of the Customs houses, and the Post Office Department take charge of the post offices, and so on? Is there anything so very peculiar in the military buildings that it requires my hon. friend's knowledge of architecture to get these made ready, and his knowledge of accounts and of estimates to assure absolute accuracy of the fulfilment of these works? If it is something personal to my hon. friend, we would all bow with submission; but it is a general question of policy to be adopted.

Mr. CARON. I do not think the hon. gentleman is discussing the question from the right point of view. He is comparing the post offices and Customs houses to repairs of fortifications, for instance. The hon. gentleman must admit that there is a very great difference between those matters and keeping up important military works, which may have cost enormous sums of money-not to Canada, but which have been transferred to Canada. It is neces sary that these works should be carried on by some one possessing special knowledge of military works. In England, as the hon. gentleman knows well, and in every other county, these military works form a special Department, under charge of a person possessing special qualifications. It may not be necessary to have so large a Department in Canada, or so skilful officers, but it is necessary for us, in keeping up these military works, to have them under the control of a specialist, and it is for that purpose that they have been transferred to my Department. Although the hon. gentlemen may criticise my expression of opinion on a subject of that kind, I may say that the experience of the past, both in the Department of Public Works and in that of the Militia, has shown that these military works were not carried on as well as they would have been had they been under the control of a person possessing special qualifications and who might supervise these important defensive works which we have in Canada. That is the reason which induced the Government to transfer, by Order in Council, public works appertaining to the Militia Department, instead of leaving them under the control of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I should like to know where the Order in Council is.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman will bring down the Order in Council before Concurrence, and allow full opportunity to discuss this item, it may be allowed to pass. This, however, is an important question of policy, and I should like to see the Order in Council before Concurrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the fortifications at Quebec, Kingston and other places, ordinary architects, however skilful they may be in erecting Custom houses, are quite inefficient in building walls to resist an attack. In the case of the Marine and Fisheries, the Department erects all the lighthouses, except very large, permanent stone buildings. The Order in Council will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. The First Minister has declared that the military authorities hold that a specialist is required for this purpose. If the hon. Minister of Militia had retained the item for an architect, I could have understood it, but the hon. gentleman struck out the item for a specialist.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reason can easily be explained: The hon. Minister was anxious to economise. He thinks he can obtain the services of Col. Hewitt, a distinguished engineer, who is at the head of the Royal Military. College, to look after the fortifications for a time. If it is found necessary, afterwards, to have a military architect, an item will be placed in the Estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There have been no new walls or bastions built recently, and all that is necessary is to maintain the old works.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works will rise in defence of his Department.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am always ready to defend my Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware, from personal knowledge, that Col. Hewitt, and the other officers, are a hard working set of men, who have plenty to do in performing the work properly belonging to them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are no new permaner t fortifications. All that is required is to maintain the present works.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There have been no new works constructed since 1846. The same system of carrying out repairs has been pursued for many years.

7. The Department of Secretary of State $43,230 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are some alterations here, and apparently an addition in the Queen's printer's branch. The other items seem to have been somewhat reduced.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The change is due to the promotion of an officer who received $1,100; but there is a reduction by the appointment of one third-class clerk at $400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the gentleman promoted ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Mousseau.

Mr. MILLS. I de ire to invite the attention of the Secretary of State and the Finance Minister to the cost of this Department. In 1878 the amount asked for, including cost of Mounted Police grant, was $31,990, or about $29,000 for the Department. Over $43,000 are asked for 1884. The Finance Minister publicly stated, when out of office, that the amount expended by the Government was too large by at least $1,000,000. In connection with the Department, the number of employees has increased from twenty-five, in 1878, to thirty-nine in 1884, and there are at present forty-two. This is one of the Departments in which the work does not grow very rapidly; except in the matter of registration of deeds, there is no more work there than formerly. In the present depressed condition of trade and industry, with the prospect of a very large falling off in the revenue, with thousands of people in all our towns and cities out of employment and obliged to go abroad to obtain that employment which is denied them here, it is certainly very important that the Government should undertake to economise, and that Parliament should see that large sums which are unnecessary should not be voted for the purpose of Civil Government. It is, Sir, perfectly obvious that this Department has grown in cost of management much more rapidly—I do not say in consequence of anything done by the hon. gentleman who is now Secretary of State, because I see that the amount last year was quite as large as the amount asked for the succeeding year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is a reduction of $2,400.

Mr. MILLS. That is for next year; but the amount is apparently $1,000. The amounts are $14,245 for the current year, and $43,230 for the succeeding year. But I still revert to the point to which I called the hon. gentleman's attention before, and that is, that the Department costs now about $14,000, while in 1878 it cost $29,000.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The decrease this year, I said, was $2,400. That is to say, $1,015, and if you take into consideration the statutory increases there will be another decrease of $1,450, making $2,460 less for next year. If I go on at this rate for six years, we will come up to 1878.

8. The Department of the Interior $107,034 00.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In our Estimates, this vote is separated into different branches, and I think it will be better to discuss them separately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Deputy-Head is the same; so is the Surveyor-General. There has been an increase of $50 in the Chief Clerk (Secretary) salary. In the salary of one Chief Clerk there has been an increase of $75. Then, there is an additional Chief Clerk at $1,800. He was brought from the Department of Justice. The next clerks are the same, with but a slight reduction. In the next there is an increase. I suppose some new clerks have been appointed. There is an additional third-class clerk in the Geological Survey Branch. I think the others are merely statutory increases. The additional second-class clerk must have been promoted from the class below. Then there is an additional third-class clerk, at $400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are apparently three or certainly two additional third-class clerks.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; there was a promotion of a third to a second, and two third class clerks were brought in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the total is only slightly less than in 1833-84, but I should imagine that the present work of the Department is not as great as in 1882-83.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The work is increasing annually. The number of surveys is increasing, and the number of clerks is, of necessity, also increasing, and I think the hon. gentleman will admit that it is necessary to have a very full staff for the Department of the Interior, in order to secure promptness in the work. There have been complaints of delays, although a great many of those complaints are unfounded, still there is no doubt that the staff has been greatly overworked.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I notice that there is one first-class clerk, for whom no vote is asked this year. Has some clerk left?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; the hon. gentleman will note that there is a substitution. One at $2,250 seems to have gone, and another gentleman at $1,800 has taken his place. Who is the man who has left.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I forget at the moment, but I know that Mr. Hall was the gontleman who came in his place. He is a valuable officer. especially selected after enquiry by the Deputy-Minister from the Department of Justice, who really begged the Minister of Justice for him, as he was very much required in the Department.

Mr. MILLS. It is impossible that the House can form a proper idea of the expenditure of this Department from the facts put before us. The hon, gentleman should have laid before the House some evidence of the work of the Department, and the particular Branches of the Department in which that extra work is to be found. I find that in 1878, for instance, in the Land branch, there were twenty-five clerks employed; to-day, I observe, the hon, gentleman has sixty-two in that same branch. Then $30,800 was sufficient to meet all the expenditure. Now the hon, gentleman asks upwards of $67,000. Has the hon, gentleman a larger number of persons engaged in the preparation of maps? Is there anything in the hon, gentleman's report to show that the number of letters received and written, the amount of work done, the number of patents issued, have so increased as to justify the large sum asked? The hon, gentleman oright to place before the House some evidence that this large sum is necessary, before he asks us to vote it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is some foundation for the statement of the hon. gentleman as to the report not being submitted to the House. It has almost broken the heart of the Department not to have been able to get the report ready in time. I am glad to say I saw it in galley three or four days ago, and it will be in the hands of the House almost immediately. I regret that, from stress of work, it has not been here before. The hon. gentleman compared the work of 1878 with that of 1883-84. Why, since 1879 there has been more money collected and more work done, I was going to say by ten times, than from the time the country was acquired until 1879 We have received upwards of $1,000,000, and there is $1,000,000 due to the Government and certain to be paid, because we have the land and the present payments as security. It was no fault of the Department that the report has not been down before. It was pressed very much, and it will be here in a day or two. In the meantime, I think the hon. gentleman will not object to the vote, seeing that we are not asking for so much as was voted last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, there is something in that; but the understanding is, that the hon. gentleman will not ask Concurrence until he brings down the report containing the information my hon. friend is seeking for.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I can promise that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGH F. On that understanding, and on the statement that the heart of the Department is nearly broken, I think we can concede this point. But before we part from this item, I would like to call attention to an item on page 109, "Dominion Lands chargeable to Income," under which large sums are asked for the Land Board at Winnipeg, which I think collects most of the money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The money is collected by the local agents and forwarded to headquarters; and the Board at Winnipeg grants titles and supervises the actions of the local agents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The final item here reads: "Inside service—extra clerks at head office, Ottawa, publishing maps, advertising, and other similar expenses, $30,000."

Mr. MILLS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That requires explanation, and will be explained fully when we arrive at that item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I merely call attention to it. These two votes are substantially for the same work, and I should think that this $30,000 for additional clerks at the head office ought to be charged to the Department of the Interior.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information now, but when we arrive at the item 1 think it will be shown that it is in the right place.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not had a great deal to do with the Department of the Interior, and what little I have had has been extremely unsatisfactory. I think I only express the opinion of a large majority of the people of this country, when I say that the administration of that Department, under its present head, is not such as gives satisfaction to the country. I do not propose to enter into the causes of complaint now, because perhaps it is not the proper time. I have placed on the paper a notice for correspondence, and I would like the hon. gentleman to see that the head of that Department—who is not very rapid in furnishing information or carrying on business—sends down that information before we come to discuss the different votes required for the business of that Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will certainly bring down the papers, if the hon. gentleman h s a motion for them. I differ from my hon. friend when he says that the country is dissatisfied with the administration of that Department under its present head. My hon. friend may be dissatisfied.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman knows why I am dissatisfied, and when the papers come down, I think we shall show why the country is dissatisfied, too.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Geological Survey, the salary of the directors seems to be the same. There is an increase which seems to be the regular annual increase, $7,400 instead of $7,050.

Mr. MILLS. This seems to be about the only Branch in the hon. gentleman's Department that indicates its natural growth. There has been no very great change. Two additional parties are put on the field staff and there is the annual increase under the Civil Service regulations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is acting as Librarian?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Dr. Thornburn, formerly head master, of the Collegizte Institute.

M. MACKENZIE. He cannot give his whole time and services for $600.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; he is a retired officer, and is fond of books and geological studies, and he is there with a nominal salary for the love of the thing.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He has other employment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is on the Board of Examiners, but he went in there without any expectation of being on the Board of Examiners. He took this office first as he thought he would like to be there, and he is a very useful man. When the Civil Service Board was being established, he was put on it because he was a superior man.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are his duties?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose, to look after the books as Librarian, and I fancy he takes a good deal of interest in the scientific and artistic arrangements of the specimens. Then, he is especially valuable for a duty which I think everyone will admit is of great importance in an institution of that kind that is, the popularizing of it in the public mind. He is always ready, in the absence of Dr. Selwyn, to do the agreeable to the numerous visitors, and the report of the directors will show the wisdom of the transfer from Montreal, by the fact that the visitors instead of numbering hundreds, now number thousands.

Mr. MILLS. I never doubted that it was the proper thing to have this important branch here instead of in Montreal, and I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman admit the propriety of the transfer. I suppose one important duty of Dr. Thorburn is as, Librarian, to look out for the various scientific publications throughout the world, and see that a proper collection is made for the Library in the Geological Museum. This du:y is perhaps as important a duty as can devolve upon him, and will no doubt require a considerable portion of his time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then there is the item of North-West Mounted Police, in which there is no real increase. There is apparently an increase of two third-class clerks, but they have been employed temporarily for years and are now on the permanent list, having passed their examination before the Board.

Mr. MILLS. When this branch was connected with the Department of the Secretary of State, two clerks were considered sufficient to do the work, a first-class clerk at $1,700, and a junior second-class clerk at $1,000. That was the cost in 1878 and in the early part of 1879. There are altogether but 500 Mounted Police, and for the Department. Management of these, the hon. gentleman has four clerks and a messenger, and the expenditure is to be $7,300, an extraordinary sum. Two clerks would still be quite adequate to do the work. In any well managed business office, two men of ordinary intelligence would be considered ample to do all the work required.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman has twice called the attention of the Finance Minister particularly to this matter of cost. The hon, gentleman understood me to state that $22,500,000 would be sufficient for I stated that I thought $22,500,000, the expenditure. between 1874 and 1878, would have been sufficient, but I never undertook to say-he is referring to the Department of the Interior-that, when that Department was managing hundreds of millions of acres of land, when nearly half a hundred million acres were surveyed and in the market for sale, and when, as the leader of the Government has said, they have received in three years ten times as much as during the whole period the hon. gentleman was in office, I never attempted to assert for a moment that the expenses for the future would not exceed $22,500,000. The hon. gentleman and others have often referred to that statement as if it applied for all time to come, when it was distinctly made with reference to the period between 1874 and 1878, when no such expenditure was required in the North West; or in the Post Office Department, or in other Departments of the Public Service.

Mr. MILLS. The Police Force, until recently, remained at the same number as it was fixed at before 1878. The number since then has been slightly increased, but the cost of c rrying on the Police Branch at that time was less than $3,000, when the hon. gentleman said that the cost of the Government of the country was too high; and here, in a fixed Department, where there was no possibility of the increase of the work of the Department, the cost has been increased from less than $3,000 to more than $7,000.

S:r JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says, he is satisfied that, with two active clerks, the whole business could be done.

Mr. MILLS. So I am.

ance in an institution of that kind that is, the popularizing enjoy his satisfaction, but Parliament did not think so when they passed the Act, especially after full explanation of the services and the duties, making the new organization of which he complains. He must complain of Parliament for not being as well satisfied as he is himself, that two clerks could do the work. It would require the Herculean powers of labour of the hon. gentleman to do it. In addition to the Force being increased to 200, 300, and then to 500 men, there are stations to be attended, the duties are immensely increased, the necessary supervision is immensely increased since the hon. gentleman was personally acquainted with the affairs of that body. I think the hon. gentleman knows personally the gentleman who now holds the office of Comptroller, and he will admit that he is a very active and zealous officer. I place every confidence in his statement, and he finds and feels that there is not a man too much employed for the efficiency of the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The question would arise in this, as in some other matters, whether all this work had not better be done from Winnipeg in place of being done from Ottawa. It appears to me that, as it is, the Comptroller, who is equivalent to a Deputy-Head, to do his work properly, has to spend half, or perhaps two thirds of his time in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ob, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has he not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He makes two trips in the year. It takes not many weeks now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, it does not take anything like the time to reach the principal stations of these people, but, as he has been transferring so much of the other work of the Department over to Winnipeg, it might very well be considered whether the civil head of the Mounted Police Branch should not be there too. It is a question of policy. I merely mention it. I cannot pretend to say whether it would be better or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is quite worthy of consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I have seen would incline me to think it would be better.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. the First Minister has several times to-day thrown the blame upon Parliament for legislation he himself has initiated, and he thinks he shakes off all responsibility by saying, Parliament did so and so.

Sir JOHN A, MACDONALD. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It appears to me that he did. Of course he is responsible, as Minister, for what he submits to Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I accept the responsibility. I do not at all throw any blame on Parliament; on the contrary, I praise them for having their minds open to the arguments used at the time, and being satisfied with the arguments and reasons given, and with the policy of the Government, and crystallizing it into a Statute.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman had not always such confidence in Parliament. If I remember, not many years ago, the hon. gentleman was not willing to accept the judgment of Parliament as a correct judgment. On the contrary, the hon. gentleman said that the Government at that time ruled by a mechanical majority. He denied that those who supported the Administration had exercised their judgment, or had reasoned upon public questions. He said they followed the Government blindly, and placed the most implicit confidence in whatever the First Minister proposed. It seems to me that what Parliament did on that occasion, in the estimation of the hon. gentleman, Parliament may do on the present occasion, in the estimation of gentlemen on this side of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Exactly. SIE JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MILLS. And I am inclined to think that the hongentleman, if he were on this side of the House, would not be willing to accept an Act of Parliament as conclusive evidence that what the Minister proposed was right. When we are called upon to consider questions of this sort, it seems to me that we ought to consider them upon their merits. When the hon, gentleman asks for a vote of $7,200 for the administration of a Department having the control of 500 police, it is always in order for this House-in fact, it is the duty of the House—to consider the question whether that amount is actually required or not. Now, in my esti-mation, it is not required. In my opinion, the amount is unnecessarily large. I believe that the affairs of that pur-ticular branch could be administered for half this sum, and, holding that opinior, I have thought proper to express it here, and I have given my reasons. I have shown that when the country was more inaccessible, when the cost of that administration must have been greater than it is at the present time, 300 policemen, at all events, were taken in charge by a Department having two clerks, at a salary of $2,700.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will not say that I agree with the hon. gentleman; I am quite satisfied with the action of Parliament when it agrees with me; he is not satisfied with the action of Parliament unless it agrees with him; and if I were over there and he were here, I might attack the Administration of the Government even if it were fortified by an Act of Parliament; but I quoted the Act of Parliament to show that this was sanctioned by Parliament, and any Government must feel strenghtened by having the sanction of the House of Commons, even if that House of Commons be composed of a majority generally supporting the Ministry, Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The present salaries are $26,350; statutory increase, $860; proposed promotions from one class to another, $1,100; proposed appointments, $4,000, in consequence of the increase of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no increase, to do the hon. gentleman justice, of $4,000. There is a total increase of $1,023, but not an increase of $4,000, There may be variations to that extent, but that is the total increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a Depu y-H ad, $3,200, and $50 increase to a Chief Clerk. There is an additional second-class clerk at $1,100, and a promotion from the third-class. He passed his examination. There is a reduction of two in the third-class clerks. I find it necessary to have an officer specially detailed for the Indian Affairs. Mr. White, the Comptroller, acted for me, but his work is so great that he had to give it up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the First Minister has a Private Secretary in his capacity as President of the Council and also as Superintendent of Indian Affairs?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; but I do not intend just now to employ a private secretary at that salary. I must have some one specially engaged for that work. I have two private secretaries, Mr. White, Comptroller, and Mr. Joseph Pope. Mr. White can no longer attend to the work, and I must have somebody else to assist me. My hon, friend for East York knows that the political correspondence of the Head of the Government requires a Private Secretary for that branch alone. Then I want an officer to attend to the correspondence, which is sometimes only semi-official, in the Indian Department.

Mr. MILLS. Whatever the hon. gentleman may say to explain the expenditure in the Land Department he cannot put forward the same explanation in respect to the Indian

The work in that branch is now precisely Branch. what it has been ever since the Treaty regulations were made. Throughout the older Provinces, there has been no change. In the North-West, the hon. gentle-man has still the same number of Indians to oversee that the late Administration had, but he has this advantage over the late Administration, that they had certain treaties to negotiate; I believe every year there was a treaty negotiated, which involved a considerable amount of expense. But so far as the administration of the work of the Department is concerned, it is now precisely what it was in 1878, except in so far as the hon. gentleman may have increased it by those unfortunate experiments in mining operations. Notwithstanding all this, we find that the expense of the Department has enormously increased. In 1878 there were eleven officers connected with the Indian Branch, whose salaries amounted to $11,880; while there are now thirty-one officers, whose salaries amount to $32,310. That is a threefold increase in the number of employees and in the expenditure. In 1878 we charged the salary of the Inspector of Indian Agencies in the North-West to the Department, he was treated as an officer of the Department, whereas, at present, the hon. gentleman charges the expense of that officer's salary to the appropriation for expenditure in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. I refer to Mr. McCaul.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman would only enquire a little he would find that the business of the Department has enormously increased, and with respect to some of these salaries it is merely a transfer. For instance, the whole Toronto general agency was broken up and transferred here, and two officers, Mr. Plummer and Mr. Dalton, are transferred here, and their salaries are added to the inside service instead of being, as formerly, charged to the outside service. Mr. Dingman, who has been appcinted an inspector, is also added to the number. If the hon. gentleman would happen, in his walks in the morning, to go into the office, I think his old employees would prove to him that the work is so severe that they were obliged to declare, especially in the Accountant's Branch, that they could not get on without further help. In fact, the bookkeeper, the hon. gentleman knows, said he would resign unless he got some considerable assistance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a sort of symmetry, as my hon. friend will see. The cost is three times as much as it was in his time, and the First Minister is expending three times as much on the Indians as my hon. friend required to do.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt that if the hon. gentleman wishes to vacate the office, my hon. friend will go there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If he knew how much worry these Indians sometimes cause me, I would not congratulate him on the change.

10. The Office of the Auditor General $18,925 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive there have been some considerable changes. Will the hop. Minister explain?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Barber was superannuated. He was a first-class clerk and received the maximum salary. One person has been promoted from second to first-class, another from third to second, and there has been a new appointment to the third-class, which will make a difference, notwithstanding an increase of $50 in a few of them, of $275 less than the year previous. This was due to the superannuation of a first-class clerk who was at the maximum and filling the position by a clerk at the minimum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What age was Mr. Barber? 106

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He was not quite sixty, but he was superannuated on the certificate of his medical man, that he had heart disease and must retire from the service.

11. The Department of Finance and Treasury Board..... $57,162 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The clerks seem to be the same, but a messenger appears to have been abolished.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. One officer, Mr. Higgins, has been superannuated. He was at the maximum of his class. A messenger has been superannuate 1, and we do not propose to fill the position. There was a promotion of one employé to another class. Altogether there is a decrease of $1,162.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that soms officers have been dropped and some changes made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As regards the staff, there is no altoration in numbers. We have appointed an additional messenger. The Inspector of Standards has been transferred from the inside to the outside service. The first-class clerks have been reduced by one. This gentleman was estimated as first-class last year, because he was doing the duties pertaining to that class. This gentleman, Mr. Hall, although he passed the necessary examination, could not, it was held, under the Civil Service Act, rise at once from the thirdclass to the first-class, and therefore he is estimated this year as second-class. Mr. Devlin, last year, was third-class; this year he is second-class.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe there is no increase as between last year and the present year; but I do no think there was any great occasion for the increase which has taken place during the last few years. The expenditure has run up from $26,000 to $34,000, after disposing of the Inspector of Standards and also of a mechanic who used to be attached to that branch. The hon. gentleman is not responsible for that, but the increase is considerable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a considerable increase in various ways.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will see, on looking at the figures, that the principal increase is caused by the proposition to add to the staff two second-class clerks, either by promotion or by appointment. The Commissioner, the Chief Clerk and the Accountantare the same, $50 statutory increase is given to the Clerk of Statistics. The first-class clerk, and Assistant Accountant, are at the maximum. The proposal is, as I have said, to add two second-class clerks. Some of the third-class clerks, instead of having been appointed at $400, as provided in the Civil Service Act, are clerks who have been transferred from the outside service. Whenever I find it necessary to have an experienced man, one whom it would require twelve months to educate for the work, I have a man transferred from the outside to the inside service, under the Act, at the salary he received at the place from which removed; and then I appoint a third-class clerk for the outside service. I may explain to the Committee that these two clerks, at $1,100, may not be appointed. If I find third-class clerks who have passed some of the optional subjects which would fit them for the positions, I will employ the cheaper ones. However, in the Accountant's Branch, where the clerks must have a knowledge, not only of the law, but of mathematics, so as to enable them to make the calculations for drawbacks, &c., a better class of men than you find among third-class clerks in the Department, is required, and I bring them from the outside service. That accounts for the apparent increase in this estimate. I may not, as was the case in regard to my last estimate, expend the moncy. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Auditor-General's Report or the Public Accounts he will find that, though we took $32,950 last year, the expenditure was only $30,428. If the hon. gentleman will look at the expenditure of the Department in 1878, the last year of their reign, adding the con-tingencies to the salary account, he will find that the expenditure was $44,610, while last year it was only $36,785, notwithstanding the fact that there have been about $1,000 statutory increases every year during the last five years, thus showing a reduced expenditure last year, as compared with 1878, of $7,874.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister of Customs is to be congratulated. He is the sole member of the Government of which so much can be said; but I am bound in honour to say that no complaint whatever can be taken to the increases which the hon. gentleman speaks of in his own Department. I shall be glad, however, to know what are the optional subjects in the Customs Department to which he referred.

Mr. BOWELL. The optional subjects to which I referred are those which are provided for candidates passing Civil Service examinations. Such as precis writing, a knowledge of accounts, book-keeping, and various others subjects. I may state for the information of hon. members, that the plan was adopted of allowing a third class clerk an additional sum of $50 on entering, for each optional subject upon which he passed, and for which he received a certificate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is very reasonable. Is there the same rule in all the Departments?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought that, perhaps, in the hon. gentleman's own Department, they might have varied from some of the others.

Mr. BOWELL. That would be in the case of promotional examinations. Then we have special examinations for surveyors, gaugers and other officers of that kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice in the fifth item, that the hon. gentleman took, last year, a vote for two first-class clerks; now he asks for one. Is that a death or a superannuation?

Mr. BOWELL. That is the case of Mr. Grant, who, though comparatively a young man, was in such a condi-tion of health, that on the certificate of his physician here, as well as in New York, where he was obliged to go, he was superannuated. The position is not yet filled, though the work he formerly performed is now done by a third class clerk. Mr. Grant obtained his rank for long service.

Mr. GAULT. I think the Minister of Customs is to be congratulated on running his Department so economically. In fact, I think he runs it too closely, and that if he spent $20,000 more, it would be a great advantage to the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the hon. gentleman might be a little more liberal in considering claims presented to him. I have had something to do with presenting claims to his department, and I find him hard as nails.

Mr. GUILLET. I have the same complaint to make.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT: I would suggest, on the doctrine of averages, that the hon. gentleman's economy will only make up for the too great laxity elsewhere.

14. The Department of the Postmaster-General. $147,330 CO

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I recollect how we with reference to the public health. were abused for asking $87,000 for this service a few years ago, when we had only ninety-two clerks. No doubt there has been a good deal of increase of business in the North-West, but I think a battalion of 171 clerks, and a vote of $147,330 Statute.

is more than the increase in the work of the Department in the last four or five years would fairly warrant. I notice by the Public Accounts, that some thirty or forty extre hands were employed in the Department during last year:

Mr. CARLING. There has not been a single extra hand employed in my Department during the last year. These in 1882-83 were made permanent clerks last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to hear that. Will the hon. gentleman explain the necessity for the additions in other items.

Mr. CARLING. There are no additions, except junior clerks, who come in at the salary of $400 a year. The addition of ten clerks is on account of the great increase in the business of the Department. No less than 1,000 new post offices have been established within the past five years. This, with the general increase of business, the opening up of new mail routes in the North-West, the increasing number of mail contracts in different parts of the Dominion, and the increase in the savings banks, accounts for the growth of the expenditure. The increased revenue of the Department last year, I may state, was something over $200,000.

Mr. HESSON. I am surprised that the increase has not been greater, and that the hon. gentleman has been able to conduct his Department with salaries so much lower than those of the other Departments. I presume that he requires in his staff as much intelligence and experience as are required in similar officers in other Departments, as his is one whose work is identified with every interest in the country. This state of things is very gratifying, considering the in-creased work in the Post Office Department, which must have taken place within the last five or ten years, and the increased revenue which is being derived from the Department. I think the Postmaster General is, perhaps, if anything, too close. The officers there, some of them, work very hard, and are very poorly paid.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman. Apparently the work of the Department has increased but 25 per cent. in the last five years, while the expenditure has increased 100 per cent., although you ought to be able to manage the larger amount of work for a little less, proportionately, than the smaller amount.

15. The Department of Agriculture $44,695 00

Mr. McLELAN. Besides the statutory increases, the only addition is one third-class clerk in the fourth division, at $350.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the duty of the gentleman described as an attaché?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot give a fuller explanation than I have given, but I dare say that the Minister in charge of the Department, who is absent on account of ill-health, will be able to give it on Concurrence. I will make a note of it, and draw his attention to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. Minister of Finance know whether the Statistics and Census Branch has been specially created with the view of looking after the Census affairs? I think the vote first appeared in this shape last year. Some of these titles are rather unfamiliar. Statistical officer and attaché are new terms.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. My own impression is that the attaché is a gentleman who understands foreign languages; but we shall give the information on Concurrence. The statistical officer, I think, is employed in obtaining statistics

16. The Department of Marine and Fisheries $36,142 50

Mr. McLELAN. These are all increases under the

Mr. Bowell.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The increase of $1,360 is composed of these two items: $960 for ordinary increases under the Statute, and $400 for increasing the salaries of the Chief Engineer and the Chief Architect by $200 each.

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these increases made under special anthority.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The salaries of these gentleman are fixed by Order in Council, subject to the sanction of Parliament. The Chief Engineer, Mr. Perley, and the Chief Architect, Mr. Fuller, are two gentlemen of very high position, and their salaries are very small compared with the work they have to perform, and with the salaries granted to similiar efficers outside of the Government. I would have been disposed to ask for an increase of $500 for each of them, but it was thought that we could not give them more than we give to the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the case of gentlemen in whom special skill is required, are the increases provided by the Statue, or are they made by Order in Council and by the authority of this House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The salaries of officers who are professional men and occupy a special position, are not fixed by Statute; but of course we cannot increase these salaries without the previous sanction of Parliament. I may say to the hon. gentleman that if these officers were to leave us, I doubt very much if we would be able to obtain as good officers, and with equal experience, for the salaries we give to these gentlemen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have there been any deaths or superannuation, or are the gentlemen of the staff the same?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. One officer was transferred from another Department, and one vacancy was filled; but the staff is not increased.

18. The Department of Railways and Canals.... $45,227 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the changes here?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is one first-class and one second-class clerk more. These are the only changes, and the increases are simply the statutory increases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the first-class clerk who has gone? There were six last year, but there are only five this year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot answer that question. I will take a note of it,

19. Departmental Contingencies......$171,950 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a considerable increase in this.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In the Post Office Department and the Department of Agriculture, there is a large increase in printing and stationery and other contingencies, owing to increased business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is included in the amount for Departments generally? Does that include the High Commissioner's ?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; this is for stationery generally, to the various Departments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the last Public notice sho Accounts, I observe that at the end of Civil Government, the High Commissioner of Canada in England, Sir Alexander Galt, is entered for amount expended in contingencies for his office, $5,452. That was the reason why I enquired Motion whether any allowance in this item of $171,000, was made for the High Commissioner, under the head of contingencies for Departments generally, $18,000. Does this include any such item ? In 1883, apparently, a considerable sum was included for the High Commissioner.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is, I think, no such sum included in this sum of $18,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no mistake about this having been included before. It is the only head under which it perhaps could be charged. Does the hon. gentleman know what is included in that, in a general way?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not. It is practically for stationery.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon.gentleman explain the $3,000 for commissions?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will take a note of it and do so on Concarrence.

Resolutions to be reported, Committee to sit again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House; and (at 11:25 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 14th March, 1384.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY LEASE BILL.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the name of the mover of this motion be substituted for that of Mr. Abbott, member for the scounty of Argenteuil, as the promoter of Bill (No. 32), to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No notice has been given of this motion, and it cannot be made.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would come under Rule 31, which says that the Rule requiring notice does not apply after the Bill is introduced. It is on the same principle as that on which the Committee was altered on the Bill of the hon. member for L'Islet.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not a correct application of the Rule. No notice is required by that Rule, because the House has defined the stages through which the Bill must go, but this is an extraneous motion not connected with the progress of the Bill through the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no such intention in the Rule. The rule of notice does not apply to the Bill introduced.

Mr. HAGGART. The former promoter of the Bill is firmly convinced he had a perfect right to move the Bill, but as it is getting late in the Session and an argument may arise, similar to that which arose the other night, he thought it better in the interest of the Bill that his name should be withdrawn and another substituted.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it comes under this rule—that notice should not apply to Bills after their introduction or to Private Bills. It comes under the same ruling as I made with regard to altering the Committee of the Whole for a Bill.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT.

The following Report was laid on the table: --Annual Report of the Department of the Interior for the year 1883.-(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT ACT AMEND-MENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 111) respecting the Independence of Parliament Act 1878, 41 Victoria, Chapter 5.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, the Bill is an amendment to the Independence of Parliament Act of 1878. The first clause is introduced in consequence of the discussion which arose as to the meaning of the first section of the Act of 1878, the Independence of Parliament Act, in which some weight was given to the word "attached." was said that, if a salary is attached in any way to the office, although the salary is not received, the party acting, doing the duties of any commission or appointment of any kind, although, by his appointment and by his distinct agreement, no salary is to be received, but he is to act gratuitously, he is disqualified from holding a seat in Parliament. That appeared to the Government to be unreasonable, and they desire to have the Act amended. The first clause of the Act provides for the disqualification. It is proposed that this sub-section shall be added :

"Provided further, that nothing in this section shall render ineligible any person holding any office, commission or employment of the nature or description mentioned in sub-section (a) of this section, as a member of the House of Commons or shall disqualify him from sitting or voting therein if by his commission or other instrument of appointment it is declared or provided that he shall hold such office, commission or employment without any salary, fees, wages, allowances or emolument or other profit of any kind that may be attached thereto."

It is to remove the question that was raised, that, if a Statute attaches a certain salary, although, by positive agreement or by commission or appointment, the party is not to receive the salary so attached, still he is disqualified. The second clause speaks of the case of Sir Charles Tupper. I do not know that the second clause is required. However it has leen inserted in the Act, following the precedent of 1874, in the case of Mr. Macdonald, who was Queen's Printer in Nova Scotia, and had a seat in the House, and it was declared in the Act that, by that, Mr. Macdonald did not forfeit the sca⁺.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That was not in 1874.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, in 1867-68. The principal object of the Act was to prevent the voidance of our seats by myself and all the Government. It was in 1867 that that Act passed. During the discussion, the point was raised that Mr. Macdonald, the hon. member for Antigonish, if I remember aright-----

Mr. MACKENZIE. No; Lunenburg.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend's memory is more perfect than mine in many things, I see. The point was raised that he held an office which disqualified him, and, under the circumstances, Parliament allowed this clause to be put in, declaring that it did not vacate his seat. In pursuance of that precedent, the second clause is inserted The last clause provides for an indemnity:

"This Act may be pleaded as a bar and discharge to any action or suit pending, or which may be brought against Sir Charles Tupper, for any matter, cause or thing mentioned in this Act, and shall also be a discharge of any judgment for any such penalty as is mentioned in the next preceding section, and any costs on such judgment."

The point will naturally be raised that, if an action has been commenced, there is a sort of vested interest in the costs. This clause is an exact copy of the Act introduced in 1877 Mr. SPEAKEB. in the case of Mr. Perry. At all events, I propose that this Act should be sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when they will consider; in the first place, the propriety of altering the Independence of Parliament Act, and will then consider the case of Sir Charles Tupper, a point in reference to which has already been referred to that Committee. It is therefore proper and germane to that reference that this Bill should be sent to that Committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Which is to be taken up first, the reference or the Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the reference sught to be taken up first; the Bill afterwards.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose it would be the proper thing, when a matter has been referred to a Committee to have the Committee report before introducing the Bill. The hon. gentleman proposes now to have the reference and the Bill before the Committee at the same time. The proceeding is most unusual.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would perhaps be proper if that were the only point in the Bill, but I think it is well that the Committee should decide on the first point, which is in reference to Sir Charles Tupper's case, and then whether, in the future, if the Government choose to employ any member of Parliament, for special reasons, to perform duties, to sit on a commission or otherwise, without getting anything for it, that fact of his accepting that commission, when he agrees positively that he shall act gratuitously, shall vacate his seat. That is for the future. That is a point that I desire to have fully considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They can consider it in all its bearings. That is why I propose the reference of this Bill. I take it that the Committee will consider the references in their order, and that the first question to be decided by that Committee will be the reference made the other day, and afterwards they can discuss this Bill at their leisure. If they come to one conclusion, it may affect the Bill very considerably; but, at all events, as far as I am a member of the Committee myself, and I think I can promise, they will be taken in their order, and the Resolutions will be considered first, before the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Mr. Speaker, I do not think that for the last sixteen or eighteen years any important Bill has been introduced in Parliament with fewer and more unsatisfactory explanations than the hon. gent'e-man vouchsafed to give us upon this occasion. I say it is an important Bill, one of the most important Bills ever submitted to any Parliament, a Bill covering principles that, in my estimation, are of the most vicious character; and yet the hon. gentleman moved the second reading of this Bill without a solitary word of explanation. He vouchsafed no explanation until the hon. member for West Durham drew his attention to the fact, and then I humbly submit that the explanations given by the hon. gentleman are by no means satisfactory. The hon. gentleman stated that this Bill was an outcome, or was due to the discussion of the motion of the hon. member for West Durham, made some time ago in Parliament to declare the seat for Cumberland vacant. But the hon. gentleman knows that notice of this Bill was given on the Notice Paper before that discussion on that motion took place in the House. The hon. gentleman stated in reply to my hon. friend from East York, who objected to a reference of this Bill to the Committee on Privileges and Elections at all until they had reported upon the resolution already referred to them, that the Committee would examine the matter, and especially the first clause of the Bill. Now, I say that the first clause of this Bill is not a question that ought to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections at all. It is a question touching the independence of this Parlia. ment; it is a question of policy that the Government, to deal with, and to ask the Committee on Privileges and Elections to formulate a policy for the Government is a course that has never been taken in this House except by the bon. gentleman. Now, Sir, I say this Bill is a vicious Bill; it is a bad Bill, and ought not to receive the sanction of Parliament. I am opposed to the Bill upon several grounds. I am opposed to the Bill in the first place because the Minister of Railways, having, with his eyes open, and knowing what the law was, accepted the position of High Commissioner to England with the emoluments, the allowances, the perquisites and the profits connected therewith, his seat for the county of Cumberland thereby became vacant under our Independence of Parliament Act. I am opposed to the Bill because it goes further than that; it not only proposes to indemnify the Minister of Railways for illegally sitting in Parliament, but on the assumption that the seat for the county of Cumberland is vacant, the Bill undertakes to make the Minister of Railways a member for the county of Cumberland by an Act of Parliament. I am opposed to this Bill, in the third place, because it is a direct violation of, and interference with, the Independence of Parliament Act-a direct interference with the Independence of Parliament Act in the interest of one man and to cover one solitary case; and I say that it is contrary to the rule and the practice of this House and of the Imperial Parliament to legislate in the interests of one man. Now, I said the seat of the hon. member for Cumberland is vacant. I discussed that point to some extent some time ago; I propose discussing it again, and as this is an important question, a question that, in its present shape, has never been submitted to the Canadian Parliament before, I make no apology to the House for dealing with it at some length. Now, Sir, I say that the seat of the hon. member for Cumberland, by his acceptance of the office of High Commissioner to England, thereby became vacant. The First Minister contended, when we were discussing the proposition of the hon. member for West Durham to declare the seat for Cumberland vacant, that the acceptance of the office of High Commissioner, with the salary attached thereto, did not vacate the seat; and the hon. gentleman was good enough to refer us to several precedents in England which, he contended, bore out his assertion. He referred us to the case of Mr. Gladstone who, while he was a member of the Imporial Parliament, was appointed to, and accepted the dis-tinguished position of, Lord High Commissioner to the Ionian Islands. He referred us to the case of Sir Stafford Northcote who, while he was a member of Parliament, was appointed by the Imperial Government Lord High Commissioner to Washington; and the hon. gentleman upon other occasions referred to other cases. He referred to the case of Lord Castlereagh who, at one time, was appointed Special Envoy to Vienna; and to Lord John Russell who was also appointed Special Envoy to that Court. He referred also to the cases of Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Aylesbury who were appointed respectively Ambassador and Special Envoy to the Court of Berlin. But the hon. gentleman, if he had taken the trouble to examine these precedents and the ground upon which they were justified in England, would have come to the conclusion without the slightest hesi tation, that they had no application to the position occupied by the Minister of Railways. Sir, under the Imperial Act, neither of the positions mentioned were disqualifying positions or disqualifying offices; but under our Independence of Parliament Act the office of High Commissioner to England is a disqualifying office, and that beyond all controversy. The acceptance of that office is not only a disqualifying act, but its acceptance and the retention of a seat in Parliament at the same time, are clear violations of our Independence of Parliament Act. Sir, the hon. gentleman is not the law here. We have no such law in Canada; Parliaknows quite well that the cases he has referred to as justi- ment never adopted any such rule as was adopted 350 years on their responsibility to the House and the country, ought | fying the retention by the Minister of Railways of a seat in this Parliament with the office of High Commissioner do not apply to the case of the Minister of Railways. The offices the hon. gentleman referred to were tem-porary offices; they were special employments for the purpose of discharging special services. It has been held in cases of that kind in England, apart from the law that prevails there, as distinguished from the law in Canada, that such employments would not necessarily, or at all, vacate the seat of a man occupying such position. Mr. Todd lays that rule down in his work on Parliamentary Government in England, page 260 :

"Moreover, it has not been considered the practice to consider the employment of members of the House of Commons upon Royal Commis-sions, or on special services, & c.—which are not regular offices, and to which no stated salary is attached—as coming within the disqualifying operation of the Statute; even when remuneration is received for such services.

There you see the words that are used, "which are not regular offices." Now, in this case, the position of the Minister of Railways is an office created by an Act of Parliament. The hon. gentleman knows further, that the positions held by the gentlemen he has referred to were either of Ambassador to a foreign Court, or of Minister Plenipotentiary to a foreign Court, or employment of a similar character; and the hon. gentleman knows quite well, that in England for over 300 years the position of Ambassador or Minister Plenipotentiary is excepted from the operation of the Independence of Parliament Act. If the hon. gentleman will refer to Hatsell, page 22, he will find there a resolution of the English Parliament passed in the year 1575, a resolution which has become part of the law in England, and is the law of England to this day, and that has been quoted on discussions in this question in the Imperial Parliament as still being part of the law of England. The following is the rule referred to: "On the 9th January, 1575, it is resolved, that any person being a member and in service of ambassade shall not be removed during such service;" and the following cases were decided under that rule :-

"On the 19th of November, 1606, a Committee is appointed to consi-der of the case of several persons, who had received employment from the King, since the last Session; and on the 22nd they report, and it was adjudged upon question, that Sir Charles Cornwallis, Ambassador in Spain, Sir George Carew, Ambassader in France, and Sir Thomas Edmunds, Ambassador with the Arch Dake, should still stand in their several places. "On the 24th of April, 1641, Sir Thomas Roe acquaints the House, that His Maisety has commended him to undertake a survive at the Dist in

This Majesty has commanded him to undertake a service at the Dist, that Germany, invited to it by the King of Denmark, and other Protestant Princes. He has leave from this House to be absent; and to continue a member of this House, notwithstanding his employment as His Majesty's

Member of this house, notwithstanding his employment as his majesty s Ambassador in Germany. "On the 15th of February, 1711, the election of Sir Henry Belasyse is declared void; he having, since his election, accepted the office of one of the Commissioners appointed to enquire into the number and quality of the forces in Her Majesty's pay, in Spain and Portugal, and to examine into several accounts relative to those forces.—See the proceed-ings on the 9th and 14th February upon this question."

Now, Sir, it is not declared void thereupon the ground that it was an office, but an office as distinguished from the high position of Ambassador and Minister Plenipotentiary :

"On the 5th of March, 1713, several writs are issued in the rcom of Mr. Herne, Mr. Murray, and Sir Joseph Martyn, they baving accepted the offices of commissaries, for treating with commissaries on the part of France, for settling the trade between Great Britain and France. "On the 17th and 19th of April, 1714, a question was moved, whether this office of commissaries, to treat with commissaries from France, was a new created office, within the meaning of the set of 6th Oueen Anne?

And was passed in the negative. "On the 7th of July, 1715, on a question, whether Mr. Carpenter, having been appointed Envoy to the Court of Vienna, is thereby included in the disability of the 6th Anne, ch. 7? It passed in the negative."

Now I say that has been the law of the Imperial Parliament for the last 350 years. There is no exception to that rule in England. It is recognized as the law in England to-day ; but it ago by the Imperial Parliament. In this matter we are guided solely by the Independence of Parliament Act, and that being so, the hon. Minister of Railways' case comes clearly within the Independence of Parliament Act. The rule that provails in England has passed into law. A mem-ber there can occupy the position of a member of the Imperial Parliament, and at the same time hold the position of Minister Plenipotentiary or Ambassador. Here the law is Here we have no such law; here we have different. a law to prevent any such occurrence. The law in England has never been altered or changed, in that respect, although modified in perhaps a hundred different ways, in the last 350 years, and officials or gentlemen occupying the position to which I have just re-ferred are still exempt from the operation of the Independence of Parliament Act. The hon. gentleman knows that in England the first law passed in the Imperial Parliament with respect to the independence of Parliament was, 23 Edward the Third. That prohibits "taxers, collectors or receivers of the fifteenth then granted " from sitting in Parliament. This continued the law and was practically unchanged up to 1709, when the Statute still in force, 6th Anne, c. 7 (1709), was passed, but through all the changes which have been made in England in the law for 350 years the law is unchanged with respect to members occupying the positions which Mr. Gladstone and Sir Stafford Northcote occupied, and on the authority of which the hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) based the retention by the Minister o Railways of his seat in Parliament. This very question came directly before the Imperial Parliament in 1851. The 11on. Richard Lalor Sheil, then member for Dungarvan, was appointed by the Imperial Government to the distinguished position of Minister Plenipotentiary to the Grand Duke of Tuscany. On his acceptance of the office Mr. Sheil's seat was declared vacant, and it was moved in the Imperial Parliament that a new writ issue for a burgess to represent Dungarvan, and a new writ issued accordingly. The very day after the issue of the writ it was discovered that a mistake had been made, and that a writ should not have issued. A motion was made in the Imperial Parliament to issue a supersedeas to the writ for a new election for Dungarvan. Let us see on what ground the supersedeas was granted, because it was granted and the writ was recalled. Mr. Hayter, in making the motion, said :

"He was in error in moving yesterday a writ for this borough. He had moved it on the assumption that the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, having accepted the office of Minister Plenipotentiary to the Grand Duke of Tascany, had vacated his seat for the borough; but it turned out that this was a mistake, for on referring to precedents, it appeared that the seat was not vacated by the acceptance of that office. Therefore the only course now left him was to move that the order be

Therefore the only course now left him was to acceptance of that office. Superceded; and with that view he begged to move that the order of yesterday, the 4th instant, in reference to the writ be then read. "The Clerk having read the order, "Mr. Hayter begged to move, "That the Speaker do issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland to make out a supersedeas to the said writ for the election of a burgher to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Dun-gartan."

Mr. Roebuck discussed the question somewhat fully, and Mr. Hayter replied, stating :

"The hon. gentleman wished to know whether or not the present "The hon. gentleman wished to know whether or not the present course was that usually pursued. Now, he apprehended the usual course was, when an error had been committed, to rectify it as soon as possible. The fact would depend on the commission of the act. On reference to Hatsell, volume 2, page 23, there was this entry: ""On the 7th July, 1715, on a question whether Mr. Carpenter, having been appointed Envoy to the Court of Vienna, is thereby included in the disability of the 6th of Anne, chapter 7, it passed in the negative."

automative of the out of Anne, chapter 4, it passes in the negative." "There were several instances where gentlemen who were members of the House had discharged the duties of ambassadors also; there was the case of Mr. Canning, of Sir Robert Adair, and of Lord Burchersh. Therefore it seemed clear that the mere acceptance of this office did not divest the ambassador of the character of member of this House.

Mr. French said :

"He thought the proceedings quite contrary to common sense, that an hon. member should accept an office of emolument and still retain (Mr. CAMEBON (Huron).

his seat. Here was the acceptance of an office of emplument under the Crown, which would moreover leave the constituency unrepresented— Mr. Canning's was merely a temporary mission. It would be well if the Attorney-General explained."

And the Attorney-General did explain. He said:

And the Attorney-General did explain. He faid: "The House would be aware that by the Statute sixth of Anne, the acceptance of any office of profit from the Crown, makes the election void. The question was whether the acceptance of this office of envoy to a foreign court—such as had been accepted by his right han. friead Richard Lawlor Sheil, came within the disability of the Statute of Queen Anne. Now there were distinct precedents where that House had decided that the acceptance of such office did not come within the disability. A case of inadvertence had occurred in the issue of a writ for the Borough of Dungarvan. In fact the Borough of Dungarvan was not vacant; and therefore no election could at present take place. In case an election did take place under the circumstances the gentle-man so elected would not be entitled to take his seat in that House did he present himself at the Table. The Right Honorable Bichard Lalor Sheil was at that moment member for Dungarvan; and the question was now, what course they were to adopt to remedy the error. He saw no accurse but to anthorize the Sneaker to issue a writ of supersedeas." course but to authorize the Speaker to issue a writ of supersedeas."

That was the course taken in that case, and the ruling was based solely on the Rule of Parliament to which I have referred. I say therefore upon these authorities it is manifestly clear that a gentleman holding the position of Minister of Railways cannot hold a seat in Parliament if he accepts the office of High Commissioner to England. The First Minister took objection to the motion of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) on another ground. He said that if a member of the House held an office under the Crown, such, for instance, as the office of Minister of Railways, which by law he can hold, with a seat in Parliament having first obtained the approval of his constituents, he had a right to hold with such office a political or disqualifying office; that having the right to hold a political office he had, as a consequence, a right to hold a non-political or disqualifying office, and the acceptance of the non-political office does not vacate his seat. The hon. gentleman's argument is, that by adding a disqualifying office to a qualifying office, which the member has a right to hold, the member has the right to hold both offices and his seat; that the offices are cumulative, that having the right to hold one he has the right to hold the other. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point out a single case in the history of Parliamentary Government in England for 500 years where a Minister of the Crown and Member of Parliament, holding a political office, an office which does not disqualify, which is consistent with occupying a seat in Parliament-that a man has a right to hold a non-political and disqualifying office, the holding of which is in violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point out one case where that has been done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact while he calls on me to cite a case, he has just stated that English precedents are of no value and that we are governed altogether by the Canadian Statute.

Mr. CAMERON. That only makes my case the stronger. I say that even in England, where the law is not so stringent as here, he cannot point to any such case. The hon. gentleman rests his case solely on English precedents, and yet I repeat that he cannot in the English records find a case analagous to the case of the Minister of Railways. I say there were certain offices created before the Independence of Parliament Act in the sixth year of Queen Anne, and that that Statute did not apply to offices created before 1705. It only applied to those subsequently created. For example take the case of Lord Middleton, who, in 1725, was appointed one of the Lord Justices of Ireland without salary; and the case of Sir William Gifford, who was 'appointed in 1710 to an office under the Crown without vacating his seat in Parliament. In both cases the Statute of Anne did not apply Then because the offices were created before it passed. again in cases where both are offices of State they can be held together without disqualification, as, for instance, where a member of Parliament accepted an office of State, and having thereby vacated his seat, and been elected by the people, and appointed to a second office of State. This can be done without vacating the seat on the acceptance of the second office. This doctrine is illustrated by the cases of Sir Robert Walpole, Mr. Pitt, Lord North, Mr. Canning and Sir Robert Peel, each of whom, at different times, filled the positions of First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, without disgualification. Under the same doctrine, we have the case of Mr. Spencer Percival, who, in 1809, was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and succeeded the Duke of Portland as First Lord of the Treasury, retaining both offices; and by the case of Mr. Bathurst, who, in 1821, held one Cabinet office and assumed the Presidency of the Board of Control. As late as 1873, we find that Mr. Gladstone, First Lord of the Treasury, assumed the office of Chancellor without vacating his seat. But I say these were all offices of State political and nondisqualifying offices, and under the Independence of Parlia-ment Act the holding of both offices was perfectly consistent with a seat in the House. I again challenge the First Minister to point out a single case of a member of the Imperial Parliament holding a non-political, or a disqualifying office at the same time that he held a political office and a seat in the House. So much for the vacation of the seat. Now what does the hon. gentleman want us to do with respect to this Bill? What are the provisions of this Bill? What does the hon. gentleman want to commit Parliament to by this measure? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman wants to commit the Parliament of Canada to a lie. He wants to commit the people of this country to a lie. Ho cannot get his Bill through Parliament except by committing Parliament to a lie. The second clause of the Bill says :

"That the said Sir Charles Tapper did not by reason of his accepting or holding the said office of High Commissioner for Canada under the said Commission, cease to be a member of the said House."

The hon. gentleman asks this Parliament to affirm that Sir Charles Tupper by accepting an office of profit under the Crown, did not thereby vacate his seat in this House. That is the proposition to which he wants this House to commit itself. I say it is an extraordinary proposition. I say that on the face of it it is a plain untruth. I say that if any man by accepting an office under the Crown ever did vacate his seat in Parliament, Sir Charles Tupper did by the acceptance of this office, and the seat for the county of Cumberland is now vacant and a writ ought to have issued for a new election. I say that the hon. gentleman himself will not get up in Parliament, and on his responsibility as a Minister of the Crown state that Sir Charles Tupper has not vacated his seat. He will not say so; he cannot say so; I challenge him to say so. I say that Sir Charles Tupper himself will not say that he has not vacated his seat. A reference to the Act would convince anybody who is not blind to the truth that by the acceptance of this office, an office in the gift of the Crown, an office received by Sir Charles Tupper with all emoluments, allowances, and profits connected therewith—that he has vacated his scat. If that is the fact, and if we must pass this Bill, let us pass it on proper grounds. Let us pass it with the truth on the face of the Bill, and not a transparent lie. I say that every step taken by the hon. gentleman from the first day this Session opened, from the day he introduced this Bill, down to this hour, is the clearest possible indica-tion that Sir Charles Tupper is not to day a member of this House. Sir Charles Tupper's own conduct from the hour the House met until it closes, unless the Bill in the meantime passes, is a clear indication of the fact that this Bill on the face of it does not tell the truth. If it tells the truth what is the meaning of this Bill? If Sir Charles Tupper did not cease to be the member for the county of Cumberland, why does the hon. gentleman intro- on the rights of the people of this country.

duce a Bill to make him a member for that county by Act of Parliament. If Sir Charles Tupper is still a member for the county of Cumberland, why was it necessary to refer the motion of my hon. friend for West Durham to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? The hon. gentleman will contend that he never vacated his seat, the Bill says that he did not vacate his seat, and yet on his own motion he refers it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and he introduces this Bill to indemnify the hon. gentleman to justify his illegal, unjustifiable and unwarrantable conduct of sitting in Parliament in defiance of the Act. Still on the face of the Bill we are asked to say that Sir Charles Tupper did not vacate his seat by accepting the office of High Commissioner of the Canadian Government in England. But that is not all that is stated in this clause. It states that not only did not the hon. gentleman vacate his seat, but that he did not become disgualified from sitting or voting in Parliament and did not commit any offence against the provisions of the Act. Yet the hon. gentleman wants to idemnify Sir Charles Tupper. If he did not violate the Act, what is the meaning of this Bill? If Sir Charles Tupper is not to-day open to the penalties for a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, why is this Bill before Parliament, and why is the House asked to vote on it? I repeat, that the whole of the hon. gentleman's conduct, the whole of Sir Charles Tupper's conduct, from the first day Parliament met down to the present hour is the strongest possible evidence we could have that Sir Charles Tupper is not now a member of Parliament, Sir Charles Tupper tells us that he has always the courage of his convictions, and does any man tell me that he is not conscious that he is not a member of Parliament when he has avoided voting from the first day Parliament opened until to-day. I say that he is disqualified; I say it is an outrage on Parliament to ask the House, in the face of these facts to say that the seat is not now vacant. No one believes that it is not vacant, and least of all the First Minister and the Minister of Railways. If we are to pass a bill let us do so with the truth set out on the face of this Bill; let the hon. gentleman pass his Bill honestly, openly, and above board. Let him say to the Minister of Railways:" You have vacated your seat it is true; I want to have you in Parliament, and 1 will pass an Act making you a member of Parliament by Act of Parliament." This is not the first time this course has been taken by the hon. gentleman. He did it in this House, in this Parliament, when we gave a seat by a resolution of this House, to a member now here, but the hon. gentleman wants to do it more formally this time. To-day he fills a vacant seat by Act of Parliament. I ask the hon. gentleman does he not see how he is lowering and degrading the position of a member of Parliament? I ask if there is any person in this House who does not see how he is lowering and degrading the position of the Minister of Railways by undertaking to make him a member of this House by Act of Parliament. What does he say to his colleague? He says: You have no right, you have no business to sit here, your seat is vacant, but I will make you a member of this House by Act of Parliament, and I will call upon my majority in this House to vote that Bill through for this purpose. Sir, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Railways will stand this-so high spirited and sensitive-a gentleman, as he is, so keenly alive to the honour and dignity of Parliament, that when a vote is about to be taken, he leaves his place in the House and sits at the back of the Speaker's Chair. Will he be satisfied to occupy the position of a member of Parliament by Act of Parliament? I trust that the hon. gentleman will not do that. The position taken by the First Minister is an extraordinary position; it is a scandalous position; it is an outrage on the freedom and independence of Parliament, and

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, and the First Minister knows where he stands. He knows that he can force this Bill through Parliament, and that our solemn protest will not stop him. He knows that he can make Sir Charles Tupper a member of Parliament by Act of Parliament, and he will do it. These were not always the views taken by the hon. gentleman with respect to the dignity of Parliament. He was once strong upon the necessity, in the public interest, of protecting the Independence of Parliament. When a Bill was introduced for the purpose of indemnifying some members of the late Parliament who had unwittingly violated that Act, the hon. gentleman in the strongest language, opposed the passage of that Bill, contending that everybody was assumed to know the law, and such being the case, if a member committed a violation of it, he had to take the consequences. That was the ground taken by the hon. gentleman in 1877, when he denounced the hon. member for East York and the Government of which he was the leader, for submitting to Parliament a Bill to indemnify members who had unwittingly violated the Independence of Parliament Act I will bring the hon. gentleman face to face with his own declarations on that occasion. I propose to read from Hansard, and I am glad we have an authoritative exposition of the hon. gentleman's views on this question. On the motion for the second reading of that Bill, the hon. gentleman, then leader of the Opposition, stated:

"He could quite understand that there might be occasioned when "He could quite understand that there might be occasioned when a Bill of Indemnity might pass, when some one had unwittingly committed a breach of the law, in regard to which they had two or three precedents in England. But this Bill sets aside the law of the land, and provided that a person who sat in this House wrongfully, if he had a bona fide belief that he had a right to sit there, should still retain his seat. The country would say there was no use in Parliament passing laws to pre-serve the independence or purity of Parliament, or to protect the people serve the independence or purity of Parliament, or to protect the people against having improper representatives in the House, persons who had forfeited their seats, if this Bill were to pass. It would be said : what is the use of passing laws of this kind, if the moment persons are found to have violated the laws they are repealed."

I agree with the hon. gentleman in what he said then, but his course to day is not what he indicated was the proper course in 1877. The hon. gentleman went on to say :

"Such a measure would weaken the moral sense of the people of the country.

Will hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House cheer now?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMERON. It will no doubt grieve them to weaken the moral sense of the people of the country. The hon. gentleman continued:

"Here was a Bill of Indemnity, by which not only would men be deprived of the right acquired under the law, but if it passed, no one need trouble himself about penalties hereafter, for no gentleman would be patriotic enough to bring actions against corrupt members of Parlia-ment at his own expense. If a case was inquired into, and it was shown before a Committee of the House that a party had unwittingly broken the law, there might be reason for passing a Bill of Indemnity; but to bass a whitewashing Bill of that kind would be to make Parlia-ment the laughing stock of the whole country."

Sir, the hon. gentleman's chickens have come home to roost. Is the hon. gentleman asking for a Bill of Indemnity only? No, he asks for a good deal more, Sir. I would object to even a Bill of Indemnity in this case, because the Minister of Railways openly and not unwittingly violated the law. An ignorant violation of the law was the ground and the only ground, for the Bill of the hon. member for East York. This Bill goes further; it makes one a member of this House who has no seat in Parliament.

Mr. HESSON. How did you vote on that question?

Mr. CAMERON. That shows the ignorance of the hon. Mr. CAMERON. That shows the ignorance of the hon. gentleman—how little he knows on this or any other sub-ject. If he knows anything about it, he knows that I was independence of Parliament Act. I am not surprised at this not in Parliament then; but I can tell him how I would have voted if I had been there. The hon. Minister of Agriculture also gave his opinion of the Bill of 1877, in the following words :-

"They should be aware how they made precedents which would last till the end of time. Hon members ought to be clear and free from any entanglement with influences which the Government might bring to bear upon them. A great principle was at stake. They should not forget the duty which they owed to the people of this country. While it might be felt that the action of the law was harsh, and while they might wish to believe the hon. gentleman in question—and no one could desire to do so more than himself—yet he would not like to infringe upon a great principle. Any person who has, at any time since the passing of the said Act, been elected a member of the House of Compassing of the said Act, been elected a member of the House of Com-mons, and who, acting under bona fide belief that he was or continued to be qualified and capable of sitting and voting as a member thereof, has sat or voted therein, shall be and is hereby indemnified, exonerated, freed and discharged from all pecuniary, penalties or forfeitures what-soever (if any) which may have been incurred by him by reason of having so sat or voted at any time up to the end of the present Session of Parliament. Who was to say whether an hon. member acted bona fide, except the hon. member? Ever since he could remember, he had heard that no member of Parliament should have transactions with the Government to the extent of a single dollar. He did not believe there was a single man ignorant of those principles, and that being the case, Government to the extent of a single dollar. He did not believe there was a single man ignorant of those principles, and that being the case, while he regretted that any hon. member was placed in that position, he felt justified in voting against the Bill. If they allowed the in-dependence of Parliament to be infringed, and if they took the ground that members of this House, who ought to know what the law was, were to be excused, the result would be disastrous, and there was no knowing where the thing would end."

Now, Sir, I agree with every word of these extracts which I have just read. If the doctrine laid down there is a sound constitutional doctrine, if it is in accordance with the rules of Parliament and with the Independence of Parliament Act, then I say that every word uttered by those hon. gentlemen on that occasion is an argument against the passage of this Bill. Now, I say that a Bll of Indomnity can only be justified upon the ground I have indicated, that the violation of the law was committed unwittingly. Do hon. gentlemen on the other side pretend, will the hon. First Minister pretend, that the hon. Minister of Railways violated this law in error and unwittingly. No, Sir; the hon. Minister of Railways is too astute a man for that. He knows the law perfectly well, and he must be presumed to have known the law when he violated it by taking the office of High Commissioner. The hon. gentleman did it with his eyes open and with a full knowledge of all the facts. It is as gross a violation of the law and the rights of the people as was ever perpetrated in this country; and I say that Parliament ought not to sanction this Bill. Had this House been asked to pass a Bill of Indemnity it would have been bad enough; but we are not only asked to indemnify Sir Charles Tupper from the penalties which he has incurred, but to make him a member of Parliament by Act of Parliament; and that I will oppose. But that is not all. We are asked to say what is not true, that the hon. member has not vacated his seat; then we are asked to say that the hon. gentleman should be idemnified and that there is just cause for his being indemnified which is not correct. We are asked to go a step further; we are asked to amend and to change the Independence of Parliament Act-and in whose interest? In the public interest ?- for the benefit of this great country? No, Sir; in the interest of one individual and to cover one solitary case. I say there never was, in the whole history of Parliamentary Government, any such Bill as this passed through any Parliament-a Bill changing the Independence of Parliament Act in the interests of one individual, indemnifying that individual and making him an M.P. by Act of Parliament. What will be the effect of this change? The effect will be that the Government can to-morrow appoint one half of the members of this House, if they would accept the appointments, to positions under the Crown, and give them all the emoluments, allowances and profits, but not the salary. That will be the effect of this coming from the hon. gentleman; he has always been opposed to the independence of Parliament; he has always been anxious to have surrounding him, in and out of Parlia ment, hangers on and seekers after office under the Crown. From the moment he first took his seat in Parliament, he has persistently and consistently opposed every movement in the direction of making more stringent the Independence of Parliament Act; he has constantly and persistently advocated the policy of leaving in the hands of the Government the appointments to high places of trust under the Crown and of giving those places of trust the orown Parliament. I have a right to go further than that; I have a right to say, and I do say, that every change in the Independence of Parliament Act tending to restrict the power of the Government to appoint members of Parliament to office has been forced on the Government by the Liberal party. The only Independence of Par-liament Acts that we have, that are worth being called so, are Acts which were forced through Parliament by the action of the Liberal party. In 1843, shortly after the Union, the first Independence of Parliament Act was passed by the Baldwin-Lafontaino Government, and provided that "all officers employed under the Crown receiving annual salaries or allowances should be disqualified " from sitting or voting in Parliament. This would disqualify the nominee or appointce, who had either salary or allowance, from sitting or voting in Parliament. This Act was continued down to 1855. In 1855, the hon. First Minister was in power, he was the ruling spirit in the Government, and he changed the Independence of Parliament Act. He found it too stringent, so he introduced the Act of 1855 which provided :

"That no person holding any office at the nomination of the Crown to which an annual salary, or any allowance, fees or emoluments, in lieu of an annual salary, are attached shall be eligible as a member of the Legislative Assembly."

The only disqualification was appointement to an office with a salary or something in lieu of an annual salary. That was a retrograde step; it was going back from the Act passed by the Baldwin-Lafontaine Government. In 1857, this was changed. True the hon. gentleman was in power, but he had fortified his Government by receiving into it Messrs. Sponce, Cartier and J. C. Morrison, all of whom had been old Liborals, and the power of public opinion was so strong that he was compelled to pass a more stringent Independence of Parliament Act; and he, therefore, passed the Act 20 Vic., chap. 22, the 3 d section of which provides :

"That no person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment, permanent or temporary, at the nomination of the Crown, to which an annual salary, or any fee, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind or amount whatsver from the Crown is attached shall be eligible as a member of the Legislative Assembly."

That is the Act we have now; that is the Act which was passed in 1857 and continued in force down to 1868. In 1868, the hon. gentleman was again in power; ho was sustained by an immense majority in this House; he had just come from the country triumphantly; he was intoxicated with the marvelous success which attended him in the Elections of 1867; he was surrounded by hungry hangers on, and placemen and office hunters, whom he could not feed with the crumbs which fell from his table, because the Act of 1857 was in force. But the hon. gentleman was equal to the occasion; he changed the Act of 1857, and introduced the Act of 1868, which provided :

"No person accepting or holding any office, commission or employuent in the service of the Government of Canada, at the nomination of the Urown, to which an annual salary, or any fec, allowance or emolument, in lien of an annual salary from the Urown, is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he sit or vote in the same during the time he holds such office, occupation or employment."

You know what the result of that was. Parliament, to a large extent, was filled with place hunters and placemen, and the evil culminated in the appointment of an hon. member to a position under the Government which he heid for two years, in which time hedrew $14,000, besides his sessional allowance, and also sat in Parliament during all this time. Public sentiment became aroused to such an extent that hon. gentlemen opposite were compelld to take action. In 1871, the hon, member for West Durham made a motion on this question affirming the necessity of a more stringent law; that motion did not pass, but it had the effect of compelling the Government, during that Session, to introduce the Act we now have on the Statutes and which is practically the same Act as that of 1857. Let us see what the intention of Parliament was in passing this Act. Let us see why it was passed. We are told this acceptance of the Iligh Commissionership is not a violation of the independence of Parliament because there is no salary attached to it; we are told that the Crown has a perfect right to avail itself of the services of members of Parliament so long as it does not give them an annual salary. Let us see what was said on that question when the Act was brought before the House in 1871. Mr. Blake moved:

"That in the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient that any member of this House should be engaged in the service of the Government of Ganada in any paid employment, such as that in respect of which the Hon. John Hamilton Grey, member for the city and county of St. John, in 1868, entered into the receipt of $300 per month of the public monies,"

That motion was voted down; but as a result of public opinion, a Bill was introduced into Parliament, on the discussion of which a good deal was said by some leading members supporting the then Government. The late Sir George Cartier made some observations on it, and Mr. Masson, now of the Senate, made the following observations:---

"He hoped to see the Independence of Parliament Act amended so as to prevent any member from receiving from the Government any emplatment, whether yearly or otherwise. At the same time, he thought that the Government were not to be blamed because they did not contravene the Independence of Parliament Act in giving Colonel Grey a monthly salary."

There you will see what the hon, member was driving at that the law should be made so stringent that the Government would not have it in their power to provide any member of Parliament with any office under the Crown. On the motion of the hon, member for West Darham, the late Sir George Cartier said :

"He would now announce that the Government, having considered the independence of Parliament Act of 1868, had come to the conclusion to introduce a measure to re-establish the state of things that existed in the old Parliament of Ganada in reference to the independence of members."

Under the law of 1857 and 1871 it is quite clear that no member of Parliament could be appointed to any position in the service of the Government, under the Crown, while he occapied a seat in Parliament. That was the condition of affairs until 1868, that condition of affairs was restored in 1871, when the Hon. Sir George Cartier introduced his Bill; and section 1 of the Bill of 1871 and section 1 of the Bill of 1878, which the hon. member proposes to amend, are the same. The hon, gentleman is new proposing to amend the Bill of 1871, because the Bills of 1871 and 1878 are ident.cal. In introducing this Bill Sir George Cartier said:

"He explained that the principal provision of the Bull was to restore the independence of members as it was under the regime of the old Parliament of Canada, viz.: that the Government could not employ anmually, monthly or temporarily, or at all, any member having a seat in this House."

That is just what the hon. gentleman is violating, that is the ground upon which Sir George Cartier introduced the Bill, that is the promise he made to Parliament, that is his interpretation of the provisions of the Bill; yet we are told now the Government have a perfect right to nominate any member of this House to a position under the Crown, so long as he does not get an annual salary. And on the second reading of the Bill, Sir George Cartier said :

"The object of this Bill was to place the law on the independence of Parliament in the same position as it had been under the old Act of the Parliament of Canada, rendering it incompetent for the Government to employ any member of the House in any service whatever."

It is quite clear from the interpretation of Sir George Cartier that a gross violation of that law has been committed in the present case. I say that a gross violation was committed openly, above board, wantonly, in the face of the Act of Parliament; I say the Bill the hon. gentleman is submitting to Parliament is unprecedented in the annals of Parliament, and I challenge the hon. gentleman again to give this House a single instance where, in the Imperial Parliament or in the Canadian Parliament, the Government of the day, or any member of the House, ever succeeded in carrying through Parliament a Bill that not only indemnified the member violating the law, but gave him a seat in Parliament, not for the Session in which he violated the law, but for the whole of the Parliament, and not only that, but amended the Independence of Parliament Act in the interests of one individual, and to cover one individual case. It has been tried in England. A few evenings ago I referred to the case of Mr. Forsyth, who was appointed to the position of Standing Counsel to the Secretary of State for India while he occupied a seat for Cambridge in the House of Commons. Attention was called to his position; it was referred to a Select Committee. The Select Committee reported that Mr. Forsyth, by accepting the position of Standing Counsel to the Secretary of State for India, had vacated his seat for Cambridge. He had sat during a portion of the Parliament. An Indemnity Bill was brought in. That Bill passed the Imperial Parliament, the three readings in one day. In the subsequent Session a Bill was introduced, at the instance of Mr. Forsyth, to amend the Independence of Parliament Act, to enable him to sit in Parliament and occupy his position as Standing Counsel to the Secretary of State for India. What was the result of the discussion on that Bill? It is worth while considering it. The discussion upon that Bill is to be found in volume 185 of Hansard, and some of the first lawyers of the day expressed their opinion upon it. It was not as objectionable a Bill as this. It did not give Mr. Forsyth the seat, as this Bill expressly provides in the case of Sir Charles Tupper, but it proposed to amend the Independence of Parliament Act so as to qualify him in future. Serjeant Gaselee, in discussing the question, said :

"The learned gentleman (Mr. Forsyth) had been returned for the "The learned gentleman (Mr. Forsyth) had been returned for the Borough of Cambridge; the question arose whether he could sit, and a Committee decided that he was excluded by the Statute of Anne. The object of that Act was expressly to exclude persons holding places under the Crown—' placemen '—from the House of Commons. If that Statute was not a wise one, repeal it altoge her; but he did object to repealing it piecemeal and in favour of an individual."

Now, I say that is exactly what the hon. gentleman is doing in this case. He is repealing the Statute piecemeal and to cover an individual case. It was further stated, in discussing the Bill, by Sir Roundell Palmer:

"His hon. and learned friend said it was an accident and an anachronism, and that if the attention of Parliament had been called to the case, provision would have been made enabling the Standing Counsel to the Secretary of State for India to sit in that House. But how his hon, and learned friend was able to divine what would have been the legislation of the House, if a question had been brought before it which never was brought before it, it was difficult to understand."

He also said :

"He protested against legislation which prejudiced the principle of a large and important public statute resting on public policy, by taking a particular case out of it without any sound reasons applicable to that, more that to other cases."

I say every word of the statements of Sir Roundell Palmer is applicable to this case. This is an attempt to amend the Independence of Parliament Act in the interests of one man. More than that, it is giving that one man, who is not I the officers of the Government of Canada, to which any salary, fee, now, a member of this House, a seat in this House for the balance of this Parliament, and I shall vote against the Bill. I say it is a vicious Bill. I say it is not justified by any argument or proposition submitted by the First Minister. I say in every feature of it, and in every provision of it, and in every clause of it, and in every sentence of it, it is a vicious Bill. I say it is contrary to the opinion of the best writers upon the subject. I say it is contrary to the principles of representative Government. What does it do? Instead of allowing the people to select their candidates, the Government of the day, if backed up by a majority, select their candidates, and, more than that, they select their members of Parliament and make them members of Parliament. I say it is contrary to the first principles of responsible Government, that the people, who should have a voice in selecting a candidate and returning a member to Parliament, in this case are deprived of that right; and gentlemen on the Ministerial benches are proposing to elect to Parliament by an Act of Parliament a man who is not now a member of this House. 1 say it is subversive of the rights of the people of this country and ought not to be passed. It is to allow the majority of this House to do what they ought not to do, to put in Parliament a man who has not been elected to that position by the people. At every stage of this Bill, from the first to the last, I shall raise my voice and record my vote against it.

Mr. GIROUARD. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this ques tion ought to be considered from a legal point of view. That is what I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite mention several times, but I believe anyone who has listened to the argument or to the speech, the violent speech, of the hon. member who has just sat down, will be convinced that that hon. gentleman has considered this question from every point of view except the legal point of view. I will not follow his course. I will endeavour, as I did last year, when the King's county election case, Prince Edward Island, came up for discussion before this House, to free myself from poli-tical sympathy or antipathy. I am going to examine this question, as I did last year, from a purely legal point of view. The hon. gentleman has said that we, members sitting on this side of the House, are going to elect a member to Parliament. I said last year we were not sitting here to elect anyone to Parliament. That was the duty, that was the mission, of the people of this country. No more to-day than last year am I going to give my vote for the purpose of electing a member to Parliament. I differ from the hon. gentleman upon the main question. I believe that, under the circumstances of the case, Sir Charles Tupper never vacated his seat, and it is in this respect especially that I differ from the hon. gentleman. If Sir Charles Tupper had received a salary, which is attached under the Statute to the office of High Commissioner, I T would not hesitate one moment to vote against the Bill. have listened with a great deal of attention to all the precedents quoted by the hon. gentleman, but I believe he has not quoted a single one which is really in point or similar to the case under consideration. All the precedents or cases quoted by the hon. gentleman were cases where salaries were actually received. In this instance I defy them—perhaps they will be able to do it, but I have not been able—to find a single case in England, or in this country, where the salary is removed, not only by a letter or an agreement on the part of the nominee, but also by the very paper of appointment, and when it has been held that a member of Parliament was disqualified. But, Mr. Speaker, I believe I am anticipating the course of my argument. Let us look first at the Act for securing the Independence of Parliament. Section 1 says:

"No person accepting or holding any office, commission, or employ-ment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the Government of Canada, at the nomination of the Crown or at the nomination of any of wages, allowance, or emolument or profit of any kind is attached. shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he sit or vote therein."

In the first place, I contend that all these words-" salary, fee, wages, allowance, emolument, or profit of any kind ' must have the same meaning. All the authorities who have written on the interpretation or construction of Statutes, and among them Maxwell, lay down the rule that when two or more words susceptible of analogous meaning are coupled together the rule is noscitur a sociis; they are understood to be used in their cognate sense. They take, as it were, their colour from each other. If these words "salary, fee, wages, allowance, emolument, or profit of any kind " have the same meaning, it is very plain that a mem. ber of this House may be appointed by the Government to an office to which only travelling expenses or the expenses of that office are attached. If we look at the dictionaries of Somner, Johnson, Todd, Spelman and Burrill, we will find that they state that the word "fee" is derived from the Anglo Saxon "feoh" which means a "stipend or reward"; it follows that the words "salary, wages, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind," which is the last word used in the Statute, convey the idea of reward or pure profit. Then certainly no one can reproach Sir Charles Tupper because he has claimed the necossary expense attached to the office of High Commissioner. But let us go a little further. Let us look at the Statute of 1830, providing for the appointment of an officer known as the High Commissioner of Canada in England. , The Statute says :

"The Governor may, under the Great Seal of Canada, from time to time appoint an officer to be called the High Commissioner of Cacada, who shall hold office during pleasure."

Then his powers are defined in clause 2. Clause 3 says: "The High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000 per annum." I hold, Mr. Speaker, that this salary is attached to the office of High Commissioner, but as the Commission of Sir Charles Tupper, or the paper appointing him, does not provide for a salary, but on the contrary provides that there shall be no salary, I hold that that commission is not a valid one under the Statute; it is null and void under the Statute, and therefore his seat never became vacant and he is still the member for Cumberland.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." Under what precedents, by what legal argument, can they pretend that this Government has a right to violate a Statute more than any one else? This Statute says the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the High Commissioner for Canada, and it says the High Commissioner "shall receive a salary." Under what law has this Government the right to declare in the commission that this High Commissioner shall receive no salary? I say the moment that stipulation is made in the paper of nomination, the nomination thereby becomes null and void under the Statute, and it being no nomination under the Statute, the seat of Sir Charles Tapper therefore never became vacant. I defy hon. gentlemen to controvert that position, or to prove the fallacy of my argument. I can quote precedents which show beyond doubt that the first condition required in order to affect the seat of a member of Parliament, or in order to sue him for the penalties mentioned in the Statute, is that the validity of the appointments must be established. In the case of Rex vs. Day Lord Tenterden said, "The mere acting as inspector would not vacate the office of alderman unless he had been duly appointed to that office," so we may say the mere acting as High Commissioner would not vacate the seat of Sir Charles Tupper in Parliament for the same reason in the case cited. The informality consisted only in this, that the inspector the words of the Statute respecting the salary of a High was appointed by the justices outside the session, though still by the justices, but as the Statute provided that he could not be nominated out of the Session, his nomination was set asido and it was held, under these circumstances, that he had not vacated his scat as alderman. What is the case here? The Statute says there shall be a salary attached to that office; the Government, in the commission, said there shall be no salary. Is the power of the Governmentstronger than the power of the Statute? I say no. The consequence is that the commission is not a valid one upon its face, and the seat never became vacant. I mentioned at the cutset that the hon. gentleman who has just sat down quoted many precedents to show that a member of Parliament cannot hold an office of emolument under the Crown without vacating his seat. I am not going to deny that principle, which is elementary, but it does not apply to the case of Sir Charles Tupper. Now let us look at the Order in Council making this nomination. In a report dated 30th May, 1883, from the Right Hon. Sir John A. Maedonald, it is stated that it would be necessary to appoint a successor as High Commissioner of Canada in London, to Sir Alexander T. Galt, whose resignation was to take place on the 1st of June, 1883; and it is expressly stated that Sir Charles Tupper was to hold and had accepted the office without salary. The commission also provides that Sir Charles Tupper will hold the said office "without salary," but otherwise "with all and every the duties, powers, right, authority, privileges, and advantages, unto the said office of right and by law appertaining during pleasure." It is also stated that the expenses of the High Commissioner will be paid in the same manner as the expenses of Sir Alexander T. Galt. So by the appointment and the very acceptance of the office, no salary is attached to the office, and therefore the commission of Sir Charles Tupper, if valid at all at common law, under the general powers of the Cabinet, has no validity at all under the Statute. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), stated the other day that Sir Charles Tapper would have an action against the Government to-day for the amount of his salary. I would like to know under what law he can claim that salary? Could he claim it under the commission appointing him? No, he cannot. He is not nominated with a salary attached to the office, but he is expressly nominated without a salary, and that is exactly where the fallacy of the hon. member for West Huron lies. I could understand that there might be some difficulty if he had renounced the salary subsequent to the nomination. In that case it might be considered that the salary being given, not as incidental, but as essen-tial to the position, the nominee had no right to renounce that salary. But here the salary has been detached from the office by the commission itself, and therefore it seems to me very clear that Sir Charles Tupper has no such action as was mentioned the other day by the hon, member for West Huron. The hon. gentleman seems to have been surprised at the position I laid down that the Government has no right under the Statute to appoint a High Commissioner without a salary. Let us look at some other offices in the country. Are we going to be told that the Government has a right to appoint a Lieutenant-Governor to any Province without a salary-I always mean up. der the Statute ? Can they appoint a Judge without a salary ? The nomination of a Judge without a salary would be against the State e and would be null and void, and he could not sit in any of the courts created by Statute. It is true the Government can nominate a Commissioner, even a High Commissioner, a Judge and certain other officers under the general powers of the Administration; but these officers will not have the character mentioned in the Statute creating those officers, and therefore cannot subject the nominees to the penalties mentioned in the Statute. I have no doubt hon. gentlemen have noticed Commissioner. They are, "The High Commissioner shall I believe that is in some respects a case similar to the present one; but the case nearest to the present one is that quoted the

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. Yes; in order that the commission shall be valid, the salary must be mentioned in the commission. The words of the Statute are imperative. There is a very well known rule regarding the interpretation of the Statutes, that when the Statute declares that something "shall" be done, the language is imperative and the thing must be done. But here the thing was not done. The Government had no right to do it in that way. Honourable gentlemen opposite admit that. How can we say the commission is valid when the commission is against the provision of the Statute; and according to the authority which I have mentioned, that of Lord Tenterden, the first condition required in order to subject the nominee to the penalty specified in the Independence of Parliament Act is, that you must show upon its face complete and valid appointment. This was not a valid a appointment.

Mr. MILLS. The appointment is valid, but the condition is void.

Mr. GIROUARD. The whole paper is void.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GIROUARD. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but I base my argument upon the decision of Judges who understand the law better than they do. The salary is essential; it is an essential factor in the appointment, and as such could not be detached by the Government. I will refer the House to several cases, among others, to one which is reported in the English Jurist. That is the case of Liverpool Corporation vs. Wright, where it was decided that a recorder, who under the Statute was entitled to fees could not agree with the corporation to take a salary instead. upon two grounds of public policy. It was held that the fees were necessary to the dignity of the office, and in that case the agreement was declared to be null and void. But here the renunciation to salary was not in the paper making the nomination, it was in a separate paper; it was not in the commission itself. Icome now to a more recent case decided in our own country, that of Mr. Taillon, the present Attorney-General of the Province of Quebec. The Independence Act of the Province of Quebec is a copy of our own Act. In 1880 the Province of Quebec provided for the appointment of an officer to examine certain municipal accounts. On 24th September, 1880, Mr. Taillon, then, and still, the member for Montreal East, in the Assembly of Quebec, by Order in Council. was nominated with all the powers, rights, privileges, emoluments and advantages attached to the said office. There was a salary attached to this office in these terms—the terms are not imperative, as are the terms of the Statute providing for the nomination of a High Commissioner, but at the same time there is a salary attached to the office.

"The appointment of such Commissioner shall be during good pleasure, and his salary may be fixed by Order in Council, but shall not exceed $3,(00 per annum, over and above travelling expenses."

Mr. Taillon received his travelling expenses, but he did not receive a salary; in fact no salary was ever fixed by Order in Council. He was sued by one Laliberté for penalties provided in the Quebec Statute, the same as in our own Statute. A decision was given by Chief Justice Meredith, on March 13th, 1882, in these terms:

"Considering that when the defendant sat as a member of the Legislative Assembly of this Province, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, no salary, fee, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind was then attached to the office which the defendant then held, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration; it is in consequence considered and adjudged that the action and demand of the said plaintiff against the detendant, be and the same is hereby dismissed with costs in favour of the said defendant."

Mr. GIBOUARD,

I believe that is in some respects a case similar to the present one; but the case nearest to the present one is that quoted the other day by the leader of the Opposition. I have taken the trouble since that time to go over the whole report of the case, and it is apparent that the decision in that case does not bear out the hon. gentleman's proposition or the propositions adduced by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House — I refer to the Harvey case, before the Imperial Parliament. Let me say that Mr. Wynn, the mover for a Committee to enquire into the charge made against Mr. Harvey, from whose statements the leader of the Opposition quoted so fully the other day, was accused of partiality. In discussing that case, Mr. Harvey, in answer to Mr. Wynn, said :

" I see by a motion of the gallant officer the member for Lincoln, that thirty or forty commissions have been appointed with salaries attached to them. There are several members or Parliament in these commissions to whose names it is true, the remark is annexed to the return, that they have declined salaries.

In the County Rate Commission I find the names of Mr. Law Hodges, and Mr. Shaw Lefevre, who it is said, 'declined to receive salaries.' Their declining to receiv them rather implied that they could take them if they pleased, and the acceptance of this office worked their disqualification, according to the reasoning of the right hon. gentleman. Why the right hon. gentleman has suffered such appointments to pass unnoticed, I cannot conceive, unless it be, that as 'Commissioners' and not found on the Journals of the House, they are a subject beneath his notice. Again, I find, that there has been a commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case of the subject beneath is notice. Again, I find, that there has been a commission on Irish fisheries, in which case it was laid down that the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case of the subject beneath the Commission on Irish fisheries, in which case of the subject beneath the commencement, refused to receive any remuneration, That, no doubt, is very creditable to Mr. Walker ; but if the doctrine be approved, as agitated by the right hon. gentleman, that the acceptance of office-such paid offices as these paid commissionerships, -constitutes the evil, and vacutes the scat in Parliament, I am a little suprised, giving the right hon. gentleman credit for not being actuated in the smallest degree by personal feelings or party motives in bringing forward his motion of this evening, that these commissionerships should have altogether escaped his attention.''

Mr. Humo said on the same occasion :

"I can have no objection to comply with the request of the right hon. Baronet. Had I been a member of the Committee, in the case of Mr. Harvey, I should have asked how it was that an hon. member for Marylebone had been appointed to an office of profit, and been permitted to proceed to a foreign coantry, without vacating his seat, and without any notice having been taken of his appointment in this House. I should have asked how the hon. member for Kilmarnock had been permitted to accept an appointment, and to receive largely the public money without vacating his seat. And I should also have asked how an hon. member for Dundee had been permitted, without a notice being taken of his appointment, to hold another office of profit. That would have been the course I should have pursued had I had the power. There are, in all, about sixteen members of this House who have received offices of profit, and yet no notice has been been taken of their appointment. The first blot was hit in Mr. Harvey's case. But I shall take especial care that such appointments, shall, in future, be rigidly examined; and I shall also consider whether I ought not to bring those who have been already made under the notice of the House."

This shows that Mr. Wynn, whose opinions were quoted the other evening by the leader of the Opposition as sustaining his view, is not, after all, a very impartial authority on a question like this. But I will show that even in the opinion of Mr. Wynn, a case like that of Sir Charles Tupper would not come within the prohibition. Mr. Wynn said and of course this portion was not quoted by the hon. gentleman:

"But the hon. member, in his letter to the Noble Lord, the Secretary of State for the Home, Department, said that he would not receive any emolument or profit from the office, if Parliament should be of opinion that its acceptance would oblige him to vacate his seat."

Mr. Harvey had applied for the salary in the first instance, but when he applied he was told that perhaps he would render his seat vacant, and thereupon he declared that he would not receive any emolument from the office if Parliament decided that his seat would thereby become vacant. Mr. Wynn goes on to say:

"The hon. gentleman's refusal to accept a salary was therefore only a qualified refusal, dependent upon the refusal of Parliament as to the effect of accepting a salary. This, I contend, does not exempt him from the disqualification created by his original acceptance of the office."

Here you have a conditional refusal of the salary. I apply, said Mr. Harvey, for my salary if I am entitled to it, but Sir Charles Tupper says from the very inception to to-day, I am willing to perform the dutics of the office, and at the very beginning 1 want it to be understood that I desire to receive no salary, and I want my commission so to state. New let us see what the Attorney General said on this Mr. Harvey's case; and I presume his words will have more weight than the words of Mr. Wynn, who moved against Mr. Harvey. The Attorney General said :

"The next question to be considered is whether the case is altered by "The next question to be considered is whether the case is altered by the fact of no salary baving been assigned, and in my opinion it is not; because the party holding the office might go to a Minister of the Crown and say (assign me a salary), and if the Minister refused he could go to the court of Queen's Eench and procure a mandamus to compel an assignment of salary, which salary would commence from the date of the appointment. If Mr. Harvey's renunciation of the salary had been absolute and unconditional, a question might perhaps arise as to how far that renunciation was binding, but it was only conditional, it could have no legal operation." it could have no legal operation.

If Sir Charles Tupper had been appointed High Commissioner without saying a word as to the salary, and without having written a paper to the effect that he wanted no salary, and if he never received any portion of that salary, perhaps there would be something in the argument of the hon. gentleman in saying that Sir Charles Tupper might go to a court of justice and ask for a mandamus granting him the salary attached to his office by Statute. But this is not such a case. You have a refusal of the salary from the beginning. When the question was before the Council, in fact before the commission was issued under the Great Seal of Canada, Sir Charles Tupper said, I want no salary, and the commission under the Great Seal says that he shall receive no salary. Now this is what I understand to be the We have before us a Bill which law at present. the hon. gentleman who spoke before me said was at Act to elect a member to represent the county of Cumberland in this House. I do not look upon that Bill in that light. This is only a declaratory statute. It is not a Bill declaring a new law, but declaring what the law always has been. It is a Bill to remove doubts, and have we not reason to ask that doubts should be removed? We all know that lawyers do not always agree. They do not agree before they reach the Bench, and they do not any more agree upon the Bench. Has the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act been violated in this case? Not at all. Now can it be supposed for one moment that a Minister of the Crown was appointed to that office for the purpose of being influenced by the Crown? It is not possible to make a supposition of that kind. Then the evil which was intended to be prevented by the Independence of Parliament Act does not exist in this case. That is a sufficient reason why Parliament may say: As there may be doubts whether a member of Parliament can hold any office under the Crown without salary or profit of any kind, without exposing himself to become subject to severe penalties for the violation of the law, which he never intended to violate, and as there is no reason why there should be penalties for anything of the kind, we shall say that for the future Sir Charles Tupper shall continue to hold the office of High Commissioner, which he has done for the last twelve months to his own credit and to the advantage of the country. I had occasion to be on the continent of Europe last fall, and I was very much pleased to hear there that at the Cable Convention, held in Paris in September or October, where twenty or thirty Powers were represented, Sir Charles Tupper was present, not as the servant or repre-sentative of the British Ambassador, but as the representative of Canada. For all these reasons, I am in favour of this Bill, and especially because it tends to enact more expressly what I have always considered to be the law of this country.

Mr. LISTER. I shall ask the indulgence of the House

pertinent to the question under discussion. The hon, gentleman who has just preceded mesays that he was in Europe during the last season and had the pleasure of seeing Sir Charles Tupper there as the representative of the Dominion of Canada; yet he took a good deal of trouble to argue that Sir Charles Tupper was not High Commissioner in England at all during that time. Sir, I do not propose to enter into the history of Parliament in England so far as this question is concerned. I think that has been fully dealt with by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me on this side of the House. The question before the House is one of a very simple nature. It is a question of the 'proper construction to be put upon what is known as the Independence of Parliament Act. Before considering that, let us review for a moment the position Sir Charles Tupper has occupied since the time he received his appointment. We know, Sir, as a fact, that he was appointed to the High Commissionership; we know as a fact that he accepted that position; and we know as a fact, by the papers which have been laid on the Table of this House, that during the time he held that position he received from the Dominion Government some $4,000 in one payment, and some $1,500 in another payment, making $5,500 that he received from this Dominion for services or something else during the time he occupied that position. Now, Sir, there is a very great distinction between the law of England and our law on this subject. Hon. gentlemen who have preceded me have pointed out, though hon. gentlemen who have argued the question on the other side of the House have ignored the fact, that in England, there is no Statute similar to the Statute existing in this country; and it is upon that Statute and that alone that the status of Sir Charles Tupper in this House must be decided. It gave me a great deal of pleasure to hear the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) assure the House that he would approach this case in a judicial spirit-that he would look upon it as if he was deciding the case as a judge. I am sure that that expression must have given great satisfaction to hon. members on both sides of the House, and I am sure that if the hon. gentleman was sincere in the statement he then made, he will be found voting against the motion proposed by the hon. leader of the Government. Now, Sir, if we look at the Independence of Parliament Act, we find that it says:

"No person accepting or holding any office, commission or employ-ment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the Government of Canada, at the nomination of the Urown, or at the nomination of any of the officers of the Government of Canada, to which any salary, fee, wages, allowance or emolument, or profit of any kind, is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he sit or vote therein."

It is contended that Sir Charles Tupper did not vacate his seat because by the commission appointing him no salary was attached to his office; and upon that ground the hon. gentleman who has just preceded me urges that sir Charles Tupper's appointment as IIigh Commissioner was void. I would say to the hon. gentleman that this being a statutory appointment, and the Statute Statute authorizing the appointment, fixing the salary, and stating imperatively that that salary shall be paid, the moment a man receives that appointment, the salary attaches, and he is entitled to draw it; and 1 believe that the law laid down by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House is correct, that if Sir Charles Tupper brought an action against the Government, he could undonbtedly recover the amount of hissalary. But in look. ing at this Statute, we should ask what induced Parliament to pass it. We know that members of Parliament were sitting in this House while receiving a salary from the Government, and so great had the scandal become that this legislation was forced upon the Government to prevent that sort of thing ; and the words of the Statute are so comprehensive that it would be impossible to find words in the Engfor a few moments while I make such remarks as I think | lish language to cover more than they do, Salary, emolument, allowance, fee, stipend, everything that it is possible for the English language to express, is mentioned here, so that there could be no possibility of a gentleman in that position holding a seat in this House. The hon, leader of the Government stated the other night that his seat had not become vacant, and the hon, member for Jacques Cartier has said the same thing here to day. If the seat is not vacated, why is this legislation asked ?—why does the Government come and ask Parliament and say that Sir Charles Tupper is still a member of the House, if he is in fact still a member of the House ?—why should the leader of the Government ask the House to pass this measure at all ? But Sir Charles Tupper is not a member of this House, and the hon, leader of the Government knows that perfectly well. I will ask the attention of the House while I compare the language used by the hon, leader of the Government in 1877 with the language he used the other night. The hon, leader of the Government the other night stated :

" My hon. friend has been advised that he did not forfeit his seat. He has been advised that he is still the member for Cumberland and has every right to sit or vote; but the question having been raised in the public press, the hon. gentleman did not choose to record his vote and add to the weight of the opinion of this House on the great questions before it.

These are the words the hon. leader of the Government used the other night, and we find, on going back to 1877, that the hon. gentleman then, in the strongest possible language, opposed the measure which was then passed-a measure which proposed merely to indemnify hon, members of this House who had then unwittingly violated the strict letter of this Independence of Parliament Act; and that measure did not provide that they should retain their seats, but that they should go back to their constituents and be re-elected if their constituents still had confidence in them. This Act provides that Sir. Charles Tupper shall not only be indemnified against the penalties provided for by the Act but further that he shall retain his seat in this House. This is a provision directly contrary to the Independence of Parliament Act; it is a provision which declares, in fact, that although Sir Charles Tupper is not a member of this House, he shall, by Act of Parliament, become one. I say that a Bill such as this is of a most pernicious character, a Bill which goes far beyond that which the hon. the leader of the Government opposed in 1878 in the strongest language possible. He said :

if they allowed the Independence of Parliament to be infringed, and they took the ground that members of this House, who ought to know what the law was, were to be excused, the result would be disastrous, and there was no knowing where the thing would end."

We find further that the then hon. member for Compton used language equally strong. Now, if Sir Charles Tupper, in accepting this position, believed, at the time, he accepted it, that it was competent for him to do so, or if, in other words, he had, in the opinion of the leader of the Government, unwittingly violated the Act, there would be some reason for introducing a Bill to indemnify him. But what do we find? I charge Sir Charles Tupper with knowing that he was violating the Independence of Parliament Act when he accepted the position he had no right to accept, and I charge him with knowing at the time that in accepting it, he was vacating his seat. The hon. leader of the Government read a letter from Mr. Todd whom everybody recognizes as an authority on constitutional questions. In that letter, Mr. Todd gave him to understand that, according to Parliamentary practice in England, Sir Charles Tupper was not eligible for the seat, but he went on to say that he would leave the Canadian Statutes to be the judged by Sir John himself, so we find that at very time the appointment was made, the Government had taken the precaution to consult Mr. Todd about it; and his letters intimated, as plainly as anything could, that, under the Canadian Statute, Sir Charles Tupper had no The word "salary" is one thing and the word "allowance" right to take his seat, because Mr. Todd said to the leader is another. An allowance may be a salary or it may not, of the Government that as to that Statute the latter was perhaps a better judge than he. That is proof positive that these hon. gentlemen, at the time, had in view the eligibility of Sir Charles Tupper for that position, that they had considered the question, that they had read the Statutes and there is no man capable of forming an opinion upon the Statute who could fail in coming to the conclusion that the appointment of Sir Charles Tupper was contrary to the spirit and intent of the Statute. Sir Charles Tupper accepted that position.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Todd's letter is dated 21st December, 1883.

Mr. LISTER. It shows, at all events, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman had some doubts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will read the first passage:

DEAR SIR,—As I observe in the newspapers, criticisms in relation to Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Railways, and also High Commissioner for the Dominion, in England, continuing to hold his seat, and as it is probable the question of his right to retain his seat, will be raised in the ensuing Session, it occurs to me that you might like a reference to some English precedents bearing on the points."

He wrote that on his own accord.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. leader of the Government says he never consulted Mr. Todd, nor asked his advice, nor solicited the letter he has read here. I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement, but I say that a lawyer, as astu'e as the hon. gentlerian, as familiar with constitutional practice as he is, who has the vast parliamentary experi-ence he has had, and in view of the discussion which took place in 1877, in which he then expressed the most decided views as to the right of a member of Parliament to hold a position under the Govern-ment, it is somewhat extraordinary that the hon. gentleman should have made this appointment. We find in the Order of Council that the hon. leader of the Government stated it was on account of Sir Charles Tupper's health that he was appointed to this position. Be that as it may, I say that hon. gentlemon opposite were bound to know the law, and the law is as plain as the English language can make it, that a person in the position of Sir Charles Tupper had no right to occupy the position of High Commissioner. Sir Charles Tapper's whole conduct from the time this Session commenced up to the present, has shown an unmistakable consciousness that he is not qualified to occupy his seat in this House. It is a scandal to this Parliament and to this country, that an hon. Minister occupying one of the highest positions in the gift of the Crown, the High Commissionership, should have been found sitting in this House, supporting measures from day to day, advocating them with all the power power we know the hon. gentleman possesses, asking his supporters to support the measures he introduced, but which he himself is afraid to vote for-that itself shows the conviction Sir Charles Tupper felt, that he was not qualified to hold his seat in Parliament. Such being the case, he has no right to sit here, and hon. gentlemen opposite are doing a most grievous wrong to this House and the electors of Camberland in providing that Sir Charles Tapper shall be a member of this House when, in fact, he has vacated his seat. If we look for one moment at the language of this Act, we see it is impossible to come to any conclusion other than that if Sir Charles Tapper accepted any emolument or allowance as High Commissioner, he vacated his seat. It is absurd for the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) to argue that because the word "salary" is used, every word following that must mean the same thing; that allowances must mean salary, that emoluments and fees must mean salary.

as argued by the hon. member for West Durham, the other night; and we have proof here in the papers which have been laid on the Table, that allowances were given to and received by Sir Charles Tupper. If those allowances were received by him, there can be no doubt that, under the Statute, that reat has become vacated. If it is vacant, why should hon. gentlemen, why should this House by an Act of Parliament say that he is still a member of it ? Why should the independence of Parliament be violated or attempted to be violated in the way proposed here? If he is still a member of this House, as it is urged, why should we pass this Act? If he is not then, I say that the Parliament of this country has no right to make him a member of Parliament by an Act of Parliament. If it is felt that the late member for Cumberland has unwittingly violated the statute, it is within the province of this House, should it believe that statement that he did unwittingly violate it, to indemnify him against the penaltics under the Statute; but by no possible argument or process of reasoning can the House go so far as to say, because they do say it under this Act, that because that seat is vacated, Sir Charles Tupper shall be replaced in it. If the seat is not vacated, this legislation is entirely unnecessary, as far as this portion of it is concerned. If the seat is vacated, there is no precedent in England or in Canada or in any other country which has a constitutional Government, for such legislation as this-a legislation to take away from the people of Cumberland county the right to say who shall be member for that county, and by an Act of Parliament say that Sir Charles Tupper shall be a member of this House for that county. Sir, I say that you are doing a grievous wrong to the people of Cumberland county, you are violatviolating a principle of constitutional Government, you are violating a plain Act of Parliament upon our Statute Book, merely for the purpose of putting him there. I say it is better for a thousand Sir Charles Tuppers to lose their seats than for our constitutional law to be violated in a single jot. No ground of expediency can justify the hon. member in introducing legislation of this kind. You are destroying the foundations of our constitutional law and of the liberties of this country. No motives of expediency should have induced the leader of the Government to introduce such a measure as this into the House, even for the purpose of saving Sir Charles Tupper from the consequences of his act. I stated, when I commenced, that I did not intend to detain the House for any great length of time, and I will only briefly review the points I take in this matter. I say that, under this Act, Sir Charles Tupper was disqualified. I say that by no possible construction of that Act can it be said that he did not receive allowances from the Government of Canada while he was acting as High Commissioner. That being the case, he became disqualified. I say then that, while the Government may have a right or may have some colour of justification for introducing an Act to indemnify him against the penalties for the violation of that Act, it can have no justification whatever, for declaring that he has a seat in this House, in view of the fact that the hon. the leader of the Government, the hon. the Secretary of State, every hon. gentleman who has spoken upon this subject, has declared that Sir Charles Tupper's seat was not vacated. If it has not been vacated, there is no necessity whatever for that clause in the Act, and if the House believes he unwittingly violated the law, it is competent for the House to indemnify him against the penalties. But to go further, and by their own act to say that his scat is vacated—because the declaration of the fact, in the Act before the House, that it is not vacated, is an admission that it has been vacated —is to make a daugerous thrust at constitutional Government in this country. I repeat, if a thousand Sir Charles Tuppers were to lose their seats, it is better than that the constitution and the laws of our country should be violated.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to make a few observations on this subject which I think is one of very great moment. The hon, gentleman who has introduced this Bill has informed the House, in the first place, that the measure is altogether unnecessary; that it is perfectly clear that Sir Charles Tupper has not vacated his seat as member for Cumberland, that he has not in any way violated the independence of Parliament; and yet the hon. gentleman proposes to proceed upon the assumption that his colleague has done both, that he has violated the independence of Parliament in accepting an office of cmolument under the Crown, and that he has thereby vacated his seat. Now, this is a matter of very great moment. In England and in Canada, we have sometimes had cases of parties unwittingly violating the law, and of Parliament undertaking to indemnify them against the consequences; but I think this is the first instance of a case of a clear violation of the law done deliberately, done notwithstanding the fact that public opinion was called to this particular violation, as Mr. Todd's letter shows, and that it was expected that parliamentary action might be taken upon the subject-I say, notwithstanding these facts, we find that Sir Charles Tupper was appointed to this office of emolument under the Crown, and the hon. gentleman now proposes that he shall still retain his seat in Parliament-I say this is the first instance where the seat has been given to a party who has vacated it. We, on two or three occasions since Confederation, have dealt with the subject of cases of members unwittingly violating the Independence of Parliament Act, but, in those cases, while we have protected them against the consequences of that violation, so far as the fine is concerned, we have never undertaken to retain them in their seats. The hon. gentleman knows right well, in the case of Mr. Norris, and in the case of Mr. Currier, and in the case of my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail), and in the case of Mr. Jones from Halifax, in all those cases, the hon, gentlemen who had violated the law were compelled to go to their constituents for re-election; but the hon. gentleman proposes, in this case, that, although his colleague has violated the law and although his seat has become vacant, he shall be protected against the consequences of that violation, and shall, by the provisions of this Act be reinstated in the seat he has lost by his appointment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him for one moment? In 1874 a Bill was introduced by the Government, of which the hon. gentleman was a member, indemnifying Stanislaus Francis Perry for having sat and voted as a member of the House of Commons, and the first clause is this. The hon. gentleman said just now they merely indemnified these members for the unwitting mistake, but did not give the seat. Here is the first clause:

"The said Stanislaus Francis Perry is hereby declared to have been and to be, capable of being elected, and of sitting and voting in the House of Commons," etc.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see, from reading the preamble of the Act, that it is not at all a case similar to the one now before the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the Act was unnecessary.

Mr. MILLS. In that case, Mr. Perry had tendered his resignation as a member of the Local Legislature. He had done it in the only way open to him. He had taken every possible precaution to divest himself of the seat in the Local Legislature —

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But he forfeited his seat, all the same.

Mr. MILLS—in order to be qualified for election to the House of Commons. He was elected by his constituents with a perfect knowledge of all these facts. He was elected by his constituents after he had taken those steps, all of depend upon the acceptance of a salary in order to vacate the which had been taken with their cognizance, and it was seat, under the provisions of such an Act. Let me ask the after, first, his resignation, and then his election, and after all this had been done, that Parliament passed that Act, a declaratory Act, in which it is stated that the hon. gentleman, having taken all these precautions which are set out in the preamble of the Bill, has not vacated his seat.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the same Act.

Mr. MILLS. No; it is not the same Act. If the hon. gentleman could show that Sir Charles Tupper had accepted this position before he was elected as member for Cumberland, if he could show that he had tendered his resignation of the office, if he could show that there was some irregularity in the tendering of his resignation that was altogether beyond his control, if he could show that he had done everything in his power to divest himself of his office, and that, after he had done that, he was elected by the people for Cumberland, then he might quote that Statute in defence of what he proposes to do to-day; but that is not the case. Sir Charles Tupper was elected member for Cumberland; he was not disqualified at the time of his election. He has since accepted a disqualifying office by which his seat has become vacant, and, after that vacancy has arisen, the hon. gentleman proposes that a Parliament, in which a majority of the members sitting in this House are not members for Nova Scotia, shall elect a candidate for one of the constituencies of Nova Scotia. That, Sir, is the position the hon. gentleman has taken in this Bill. Now, I deny that the position is a sound one. I would like, however, briefly to allude to the observations made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). That hon. gentleman reads a commission and says it is a valid commission.

Mr. GIROUARD. No; I say the commission is null.

Mr. MILLS. Then the hon. gentleman argues that there was no appointment at all, that Sir Charles Tupper was not High Commissioner, and that although he received $5,000 for acting as Commissioner, nevertheless his seat has never become vacant by the acceptance of the office, because there was in law no valid acceptance. Well, Sir, as I understand the law with reference to the provision made by Act of Parliament for an appointment to any particular office, if the Government advises the Crown to make the appointment in accordance with the provision of that Act, and they attach a condition inconsistent with the Act, the condition is void, but the appointment is valid.

Mr. GIROUARD. Can you show that by authorities ?

Mr. MILLS. The hon, gentleman can have no difficulty in finding any number of authorities in that sense. He knows very well, for instance, that two parties cannot agree upon a mode of settling a dispute between them which would divest a court of its jurisdiction. The same rule which applies in that case would apply in this, and if there is a provision made by Statute that there shall be a salary attached to a particular office, and an agreement is made between the Government and a candidate that he shall not receive that salary, it will not change the character of that office, it will not make any difference. Where the Crown, as a matter of prerogative, has the power of making an appointment and where there are certain emoluments, or fees, or allowances, which the Crown has the power to grant in connection with that office, it may separate the appointment from the particular office, as in the case of the appointment of Queen's Counsel or Queen's Sargeant, in such cases the Crown can make an appointment to an office without perquisites being attached to the office. But where the policy of Parliament is indicated by the provision of an Act of Parliament that a certain office shall be an office of emolument under the Crown, it is not in the power of Govern- perfectly obvious that the Government do not possess that ment to change the character of that office, and it does not dispensing power which the hon. gentleman says they do

Mr. MILLS.

hon. gentleman this question: If the office is accepted, when does the seat become vacant? How much salary must accrue? Is it not the very instant that acceptance takes place that the seat becomes vacant? Then the question arises, did that acceptance takes place? Did it take place when the patent issued, or did it take place before? There are many cases in England where an agreement to accept office is regarded as an acceptance, and the writ issues accordingly. Now there are many instances of that sort. There is the case of Sir Henry Petty, who was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer on the 4th of February, and he was elected for Cambridge on the 6 h of February, but the patent did not issue till after the elec-tion; and if the view taken by the hon. gentleman was sound, the result would have been that the seat would have bacome vacant again. But it was held that the very moment he agreed to accept the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer his seat became vacant, and although the patent for the office did not issue till after his election, nevertheless, accord. ing to the view of the hon. gentleman his seat was not vacated, he was entitled to retain his seat, and a second election was wholly unnecessary. There was, too, the case of Mr. Addington. Mr. Addington had agreed to accept the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, but the King became insane and the patent could not issue. Mr. Addington's seat was held, nevertheless, to be vacant, and he was obliged to go back for re-election, although after his re election Mr. Pitt continued to hold the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer and proposed the Budget to Parliament and Mr. Addington did not, until some weeks afterwards, receive the appointment of Chancellor of the Exchequer. So that is is perfectly obvious that when Sir Charles Tupper agreed to accept this office he agreed to accept it subject to the provisions of the Statute, and we cannot look at the patent which he received for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was qualified or disqualified in this acceptance. The fact that there is not a salary provided, or the fact that the patent says that there shall be no salary, discloses nothing in regard to the matter. We look at the Statute itself. Wo see by the Statute that it is an office of emolument, that it is a disqualifying office by the Statute, and being an office of emolument and therefore a disqualifying office, the moment he agreed to accept it his seat in the House of Commons became vacant. Let me suppose a case. Suppose the hon. gentleman had appointed Sir Charles Tupper as Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. There is a certain salary attached to the office. Suppose Sir Charles Tupper had agreed that in that office he would not accept the salary. Supposing that his patent had been issued, as it has been in this case, providing that he should be Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario without a salary. Does the hon. gentleman say he could have retained that office of Lieutenant-Governor and retained a seat in this House and remained Minister of the Crown ? Does he pretend to say that by simply agreeing that something shall be done contrary to the provisions of the Statute, contrary to the policy of Parliament, that therefore the hon. gentleman can accept that particular office? Why, he could do the same thing with the Chief Justiceship. He might appoint the Minister of Justice, or one of his colleagues in this House-the Secretary of State, for instance, who is a member of the Bar—he might appoint him Chief Justice on the same principle, with the understanding that there shall be no salary attached to the office. He might issue a patent, and that hon. gentle man might sit in the court as Chief Justice and sit in this House as a member for his constituency. I say, Sir, that the proposition is a preposterous one; it is one that will not bear investigation; and it is possess, in this particular instance. Parliament itself has had a policy upon this subject. It has declared that this office shall be held with a salary not exceeding a certain amount, and it declares that the person holding that office shall be the subordinate of a particular Department of the Government, indicating clearly what the policy of Parliament is upon that subject. And taking that view it is clear that the Government cannot adopt a policy which will, in effect, repeal a particular provision of the law and make that a mere volunteer's office which by the provision of the law itself is really a Parliamentary office.

After Recess.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY LEASE BILL.

On the Order for Private Bills being called,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Before we proceed to the consideration of private Bills, I desire to submit, as a question of privilege the matter which I brought up a day or two ago. The point I submitted was that a Bill before this House cannot be promoted by any member who has advised on the Bill in his professional capacity. I charged that in the particular instance in question, that of Bill (No 32) to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and for other purposes, the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) way the paid counsel or solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I charged that as such he had prepared and gone through the Bill in question, and I argued that accordingly he was incapable of promoting the Bill in Parliament. You Mr. Speaker, ruled against the point I took. I think there may probably have been a misappre-hension as to the question submitted. I refer you again, Mr. Speaker, to the rule under which I submitted that question. It is a rule passed in 1856 by the Imperial House of Commons, and is referred to at pages 99 and 390 of May. The Bill now stands in the name of another hon. member, and of course the question is not of so much importance, except as settling the rules and practice of the House. I do not propose to discuss the question now, although I intended to discuss it at that time. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule on that point.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the question the other night was as to the hon, member having a pecuniary interest in the Bill, and I read the decision of May on that point. But there is a rule of the House of Commons in England, which I presume is applicable to this House. It is as follows :-

"That it is contrary to the usage, and derogatory to the dignity of this House, that any of its members should bring forward, promote or advocate in this House any proceeding or measure in which he may have acted or been concerned, for or in consideration of any pecuniary fee or reward."

That is a resolution of the House of Commons of England, which I presume applies to this House.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 32) to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Before the preamble is adopted, I should like some explanation as to the pecuniary results. Of course the hon. gentleman will understand that the pecuniary results, in so far as they affect the Canadian Pacific Railway, are of public interest, in view of their relations to the country, and also with respect to the question of tolls. This to explain the alterations. ini 108 question becomes of still greater importance in consequence of a declaration not long since made on behalf of the Government, that they would decline to accept securities on lines leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, dreading the responsibilities in which they might possibly be involved by reason of those leases. The Bill before us is one which proposes to legalize a lease, and the preamble recites that it is expedient to do so, and the lease is made a schedule of the Bill. Under the lease, as proposed to be legalized, very large but indefinite sums, which I cannot compute, are agreed to be paid. What I should like to know is, what is the gross sum of the rental or annual considera-tion that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be called on to pay in virtue of this agreement ?

Mr. HAGGART. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company guarantee to the Company 5 per cent. on the cost of the road. The cost of the road will be $25,000 a mile, for the number of miles built, together with $2,000,000 of the original stock of the Company.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the mileage?

Mr. HAGGART. It is from Montreal to St. Thomas, and the extension from St. Thomas to Windsor. The distance, I understand, is a little over 400 miles.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the $25,000 per mile include the cost of the bridge.

Mr. HAGGART. No; there is the additional cost of the bridge across the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Then we have not got the full obligation yet.

Mr. HAGGART. The estimated cost of the bridge and approaches into the city of Montreal, is limited to $3,000,000

Mr. BLAKE. Is interest paid on that at 5 per cent.?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; after the money is expended.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it will be $25,000 a mile on about 400 miles, and in addition $3,000,000 on the bridge, and in addition $2,000,000 of stock.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes

Mr. BLAKE. But I understood the hon. gentleman to say that $25,000 a mile would be the cost of the road.

Mr. HAGGART. No; it has been paid at par, in cash, which is part of the cost of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. Part of the cost? Then the road is estimated to cost more than $25,000 a mile?

Mr. HAGGART. Part of it.

Mr. BLAKE. But all over ?

Mr. HAGGART. The average price will be over $25,000 a mile, as some of it is $25,000 and some of it more than that.

Mr. BLAKE. We know, from the railway statistics, and I mentioned it formerly in the House, that the cost of the Credit Valley part, over what was paid by the Government and the municipalities, would not have been much more than $10,000 a mile. So the remainder is going to cost a great deal of money, at that rate.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that the cost of the Credit Valley is a great deal more than that.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course I feel for my hon. friend's difficulties in promoting this Bill.

On section 1,

The first clause has been considerably Mr. BLAKE. altered in Committee, and I would ask the hon. gentleman

Mr. HAGGART. The portion between Smith's Falls and Perth was sold, and the amount of money received for that pertion is deposited with the Government, as security. Mr. BLAKE. What is the mileage? Mr. HAGGART. Twelve miles, and the amount $300,000:	Mr. BLAKE. Then there is the rental by the lessors agreed to be paid to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway;
Mr. BLAKE. Then the debenture stock of the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company—that is, the portion of the stock that is going to the Canadian Pacific Railway—is the price of the 12 miles. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.	Mr. HAGGART. It is on an average of about $20,000 per mile. Mr. BLAKE. At what rate? Mr. HAGGART. Six per cent.
Mr. BLAKE. As part of the guarantee of the Canadian Pacific Railway?	Mr. HAGGARI. About of miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; 112 miles. Under the charter, they have power to extend either from Smith's Falls to Ottawa, or from Smith's Falls to Montreal.	Mr. HAGGART. Five per cent. Mr. BLAKE. And what is the mileage ? Mr. HAGGART. Fifty-two miles are finished, and the rest my opinion, amply protect any litigation or suit or claim made by the various municipalities which have contributed to the Credit Valley Railway-contributed so liberally that the Credit Valley Railway gave a bond for the fulfilment of these obligations with the municipalities; for I find, according to this Bill, as originally drawn, and as presented here, that the moneys are to be paid directly to the bondholders and the stockholders of the company, thereby preventing any municipality having a lien, or claim, or suit pending, from obtaining redress. I, therefore, beg to move a new clause, to this effect :

"Nothing in this Act contained shall affect any pending suit or liti-"Nothing in this Act contained shall anect any pending suit or fit-gation or cause of action, or suit, or any contract, covenant or agree-ment heretefore made between any of the railway companies herein-before named, or between any of them, or any cther corporation or individual; and any judgment rendered or execution issued against the said Ontario and Quebec Railway Company in respect of any such suit, litigation, cause of action or suit, contract, covenant or agreement, which shall be returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, shall be satisfied by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and shall be chargeable by that Company against the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company."

I think this will cover all the difficulties that I apprehend in the matter.

Bill amended and reported.

Mr. HAGGART moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I have just one observation to make. As far as I can gather from the statement of the hon. gentleman and the informatian we have with reference to the Credit Valley Railway, that road was built largely, mainly I might say, with public municipal money. What money was provided from other sources amounted to somewhere about $10,000 a mile. Whon we were discussing this subject formerly, it was understood that that road was bonded for $20,000 a mile, which really represented only $10,000 in cash. The statement of the hon. gentleman to-night is in accordance with the reports in the newspapers-which intimated that there was a meeting a short time ago to increase the bonded debt of the Credit Valley Railway that there are bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile on this road, on which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are paying 5 per cent., that is 2½ per cent. on $10,000 a mile of private funds, irrespective of the public municipal money which has been put into the road.

Mr. HAGGART. The bonds on the road issued so far are only in the neighbourhood of $20,000 a mile, and the power to increase that is for the purpose of completing the road and equipping it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). Before this Bill is read the third time, I have an amendment to propose, which was very fully discussed in the Railway Committee. The original promoter of the Ontario and Quebec Railway was Mr. Hubertus, who spent most of three years in making a survey of the country between Toronto and Ottawa, organized a company and obtained a charter, which was afterwards handed over to the company formed by Sir Hugh Allan to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. That company failed to carry out their contract, and the matter lay in abeyance for a number of years. In the year 1881, the pre-sent company applied to this Parliament for a charter for a railway over the same route as that of which the survey was made by Mr. Hubertus. While Sir Hugh Allan's company was in existence, Mr. Hubertus handed over to them the charter and the result of his years of work, and they agreed to pay him $1,000 in cash and $2,000 in paid-up stock of the road. The $1,000 cash was paid but he never received the additional $2,000. The matter remained in abeyance for some years, until the year 1881, when the present company applied to the Parliament of Canada for a charter, and Mr. Hubertus then put in his claim for the additional $2,000 that had been promised him. That claim was entertained by the present Ontario for their charter, and they agreed to have the matter enquired into and to pay Mr. Hubertus the amount found to be due him. They did make an enquiry. The president of the road gave instructions to two directors to investigate the matter; these two applied to a third to report, and the whole board of directors constituted themselves both judge and jury and found, as might have been expected, a verdict in their own favour, and they declined to acknowledge the claims of Mr. Hubertus. On the matter coming up now, Mr. Hubertus renews his claim for the $2,000, and this claim is re-endorsed by the first president of the company, Mr. J. M. Currier, also by the Hon. Billa Flint, one of the original Directors of the road, who appeared before the Railway Committee and gave evidence proving that Mr. Hubertus had earned by his exertions a far larger amount than that which he claimed. Mr. Alonzo Wright and other directors of the read have also fully endorsed Mr. Hubertus' claims. The Ontario and Quebec Company made an offer three years ago to the Toronto and Ottawa Company to pay them $30,000 or $40,000 to abandon the claims for their work, and we find that the Ontario and Quebec have adopted not only the name and preamble Mr. Hubertus' road, but they have utilized of hia exploratory surveys, maps and profiles and all the accumulated work he had done, and have gone on his route from Ottawa to Toronto with very little variation. I move in amendment thereto, that all the words after "that" be left out, and the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with power to add the following Clause thereto:

Whole, with power to add the following Clause thereto: "That whereas, H. J. Hubertus was the first promoter of a railway line between Toronto and Ottawa, and with others obtained an Act of Incorporation therefor, and a claim for compensation for exploratory surveys, &c., has been made by him against the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company and the said claim has been recognized by the said Company, and it is expedient to previde for a final disposition of the said claim, it is hereby provided that the amount of said claim shall be determined by the Judge of the County Court of the County of Carleton, Ontario, in such manner and upon such notice to the parties as to the said Judge may seem proper, and the said Judge may decide, scoording to Equity, and his decision shall be final, and not subject to appeal, and may be enforced in any of the Courts of Law or Equity of the Province of Ontario."

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it necessary to make a few remarks, after the statement made by the mover of that resolution and to give a very brief history of the facts in relation to this case. The mover of that amendment states that Mr. Hubertus was the first promoter of that road. Long before Mr. Hubertus came to this country that road was projected, and I am informed that a gentleman by the name of Fowler, a great many years ago, projected a road from Ottawa to Toronto, and spent a fortune in it. A number of other gentlemen projected it after Mr. Fowler thought of building it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). Mr. Fowler came after Mr. Hubertus.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose he did, Mr. Fowler lost a fortune. I was never aware that Mr. Hubertus had any to lose. Certainly he did not spend any money, as far as I can learn, on the project. The history of the company of which I have the honour to be a director is this, as far as Mr. Hubertus is concerned. On the passage of the Bill through Parliament, three years ago, Mr. Hubertus made a claim for compensation. That claim, so far as the projectors of the road could understand, had really no foundation, the fact being that Mr. Hubertus got a charter for the road which charter expired by limitation; but prior to its expiry hehad sold that charter to Sir Hugh Allan, who had agreed to give him, so far as I could understand, $1,900 in money and $2,000 in stock. I believe he got the $1,000 in money from Sir Hugh Allan, and it is alleged he never got the stock, from the fact that Sir Hugh Allan was unable to float the bonds of the road and go on with its construction. Thereand Quebec Railway, when they applied to this Parliament fore, that charter fell dead too. Subsequently, another charter was got for that road, over the same line, which came into the possession, indirectly, of the Grand Trunk Railway, through Mr. Cox, of Peterboro', who purchased it, I believe, from Mr. Scott. They commenced to build that road and have laid out in the vicinity of $100,000 on that line almost side by side with the road of the Ontario and Quebec Company. When we were getting our charter, Mr. Hubertus made a claim that because Sir Hugh Allan failed to pay him the $2,000 he had promised, he had, notwithstanding his charter had expired, a claim on our company for the payment of that amount. Hubertus alleged that his plans and specifications and experience and outlays had been of some service to the company. When the matter came before the Committee of the Senate, it was arranged that the directors of the company should enquire into his claim, and if it was found that he had any claim, they should settle it. That was the understanding come to in the Senate at the time. At the earliest meeting of the directors, therefore, the matter was taken up, and I wrote to Hubertus asking him to send in his claim. I got nothing but a long rigmarole, signed by Mr. Currier and by Senators Flint and Skead, stating his services, but with no evidence to show that he had ever done anything, or that his services had ever been utilized by the Ontario and Quebec Company or by any of their officers. There was nothing to show, on which I could base any foundation to pay the claim. I wrote to the engineer of the road, asking him if he had ever got any information from Mr. Hubertus, or had ever seen any of his plans, and he replied that he did not know Hubertus, had never heard of his making a survey, did not believe that he ever had, but that he might have made an exploration, that he had, but that he hight have made an exploration, that he had never seen any of his plans and that he had certainly never utilized any plan or specification of his, or at all benefited by his experience. Although I had the greatest desire to do something for a person in his position, I could not find any foundation on which to pay his claim. At the time I felt sympathy for him; when he said that Sir Hugh Allan had not paid him, and I asked, Why do you not proceed against the estate, which is worth millions of dollars, and well able to pay all claims against it? Mr. Hubertus cannot pretend to say that the Ontario and Quebec Directors ought to pay him this claim, because they simply applied to this Parliament, years after Sir Hugh Allan purchased the charter and after it had expired, he having failed to float the bonds of the company. Years after that, when we applied to this Parliament to get a charter to build a road to open up communication between the east and west of this country, Mr. Hubertus comes, as a species of blackmailer, upon us and threatens, if you do not give me this compensation which I claim, I will come time after time to this Parliament—and he does come here time after time—and, endeavour, by opposing you, to force you into paying what I claim as compensation for services which may have been rendered to Sir Hugh Allan, but certainly have not been rendered to the Ontario and Quebec Company. Further than that, this claim came before the Committee of the Senate, and the Senate Committee, hearing Mr. Hubertus' statement, made a reference, as I told you, which was enquired into by Mr. Thibaudeau and my-self, the board of the Ontario and Quebec, and our report was made in accordance with that, finding that we could find neither a just nor even an equitable claim for the payment of anything to Mr. Hubertus. But Mr. Hubertus appeared before this Committee of Railways and Canals within the last few days and his claim was discussed, and it was decided by a large majority of the Committee that he had no claim, and the Committee refused to recognize it. So that I cannot think that the House, without a tittle of evidence, without anything to support what is stated in this resolution before the House, will consent to engraft on to a Bill a resolution so unique in its character, one that I have never heard of Mr. MITCHELL.

before in connection with any legislation passed by this House. If the House desires to deal with it, the proper course would be for the hon. gentleman to move that the Bill be recommitted back to the Committee on Railways and Canals for them to again consider any evidence which Mr. Hubertus might choose to supply, if he has any, and not to relegate it to a County Court or any other court for consideration. These are the facts, and I hope the House will not hesitate to pass the Bill, and to tell Mr. Hubertus, and others like him, who attempt to blackmail companies, that they cannot do it.

Mr. BLAKE. We have had the singular advantage of being able to hear, from a director of the Company, what the facts are, and, after hearing them, I really do not see that there is any ground for this motion.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Wallace, York) negatived.

Bill read the third time.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the Bill do pass.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it can pass in this shape. I would direct your attention to the first clause. It seems seriously to affect existing rights of the Crown, and no assent of the Crown has been given to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the point is a good one. The Bill had better be read a third time on Monday.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall the third reading be re-considered?

Mr. BLAKE. That is not necessary, I think. It is only necessary to adjourn the motion that the Bill do pass, until Monday.

Motion allowed to stand.

WELLAND RAILWAY BILL.

Mr. BERGIN, in the absence of Mr. RYKERT, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 44) to authorize the transfer of the Welland Railway to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and for other purposes.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself in Committee.

On section 2,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think that second clause ought not to be finally passed, at all events by the House, until the Grand Trunk Bill is finally passed. I have no objection to its going through Committee, if it is understood that the third reading of the Bill shall not be had until the Grand Trunk Bill comes up for consideration. You will see that the second clause provides for the payment of the money to be taken in payment of the debt due to the Great Western Railway, to the Grand Trunk. Now, until the arrangements contemplated by the Act between the Grand Trunk and the Great Western are carried out, the passing of the present clause, in its present shape, finally seems to me to be premature. I understand that the hon. the Minister of Railways made a statement to-day in the Railway Committee, as to the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to the fusion of the Grand Trunk and Great Western. So far as I have considered that subject, I am not prepared to assent to the correctness of that opinion, so while I do not object to the Bill passing through Committee, so that it may be advanced a stage, I only assent to it on the understanding that we shall not be called on to finally consider the matter until the Grand Trunk Bill is before us.

Bill amended and reported.

Mr. BERGIN moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). For the reason that I stated to the House in Committee, I think the third reading had better stand until the Grand Trunk Railway Bill comes up, inasmnch as there is an important provision in this Bill, which is contingent on the House assenting to the provisions of the Grand Trunk Railway Bill, namely, the application by payment to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of money belonging prima facie to the Great Western Company.

Mr. BERGIN. I have no objections to let it stand until next Monday.

Motion allowed to stand.

BILL IN COMMITTEE.

The following Bill was considered in Committee and reported :---

Bill (No. 9) to amend the several Acts relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway.—(Mr. Kilvert.)

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

The House resumed the debate on Sir John A. Macdonald's motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 111) respecting the Independence of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. An hon. member reminds me just now that the House will now proceed with the election campaign, and Sir, if we are to elect a member by Act of Parliament, of course the observation is quite correct, for we are not now engaged in discussing a question which legitimately and properly falls within the functions of Parliament, but we are actually engaged in an election campaign, and we are about to decide whether a certain gentleman shall be elected member for Cumberland or whether he shall not. I have already called the attention of the House to what I held to be a sound proposition, that the Government cannot make a bargain with any person whom it is authorized to appoint under a Statute to accept the appointment contrary to the provisions of the Statute. It is a sound rule and a very ancient rule of constitutional law, one that was laid down some centuries ago by Chief Justice Fortescue in his celebrated instructions to Edward the Fourth, that the Crown must conform to the law, that the provisions and policy of the law must be pursued, and that in the exercises of it power where the powers are statutory, the Crown is as much bound to conform to the rules of law, in the exercise of its powers as is any private individual. We know very well that, in the exercise of the power, the power itself must be strictly pursued, and if any conditions are attached to the exercise of the power contrary to those provided in the grant of the power itself, the conditions so attached are absolutely void. In order to fully apprehend this question, it is important to look at the provisions of the law itself. If Parliament has enacted a policy on this matter it is the bounden duty of the Government in this matter, where certain duties are imposed on the Crown by Statute, to see that the law itself is strictly pursued and that the Crown is not called upon to do any act contrary to the provisions of the law. If the Government are not satisfied with the law, if they think the policy indicated is a mistaken policy or one that is not in the public interest, it is open to them to propose to the high court of Parliament a measure for altering that policy and that law. But so long as the law remains intact, they must follow its provisions and conform to its policy, as must the humblest citizen in the land. When we look at the provisions of the Act, we see the preamble declares :

"It is expedient that Oanada should appoint a representative for the United Kingdom, to watch over those interests which shall be duly accredited to Her Yajesty's Imperial Government."

There is one condition on which the office is to be held— "during pleasure." Would any hon. member on the treasury benches seriously argue that the Government might make a condition different from that provided by Statute that the High Commissioner shall hold office during pleasure. Could the Government provide, in the arrangement with the High Commissioner, that he should hold office for life, for five or ten years, or during good behaviour? It is perfectly obvious that such would be contrary to the provision of the Statute which says "during pleasure;" and an appointment made upon conditions contrary to this provision would render the provision void, because the law itself detarmines in that respect the condition on which the office shall be held. The Statute further goes on to say. It is his duty:

"To act as representative and resident agent of the Dominion in the United Kingdom, and in that capacity to execute such powers and perform such duties as may from time to time be confered upon and assigned to him by the Governor in Council."

It is perfectly obvious, from this particular provision that, he is an officer subordinate to the Administration, not a member of the Administration—no such idea was intended to be conveyed—but that his office should be one subordinate to the Government. And in addition to those powers specially mentioned in the Statute, he should from time to time receive instructions from the Government here. He is:

"To take the charge, supervision and control of the immigration offices and agencies in the United Kingdom under the Minister of Agriculture."

He is subordinate to the Minister of Agriculture; the duties of his office are in that particular attached to the Department of Agriculture, and he is to report from time to time to the Minister and be under his control. He is:

"To carry out such instructions as he may from time to time receive from the Governor in Council, respecting the commercial, financial and general interests of the Dominion, in the United Kingdom and elsewhere."

In the third place, it is provided that the High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000 a year. It is here provided that he shall receive a salary. It is true that a maximum sum is indicated; a less sum might be given, but some sum is intended to be designated ; and it is not in the power of the Government to provide that he shall receive no salary in respect of a salaried office, and to dispense with this provision of the law, and in fact repeal it-it is no more in their power than to say that it was competent for the Government to make the appointment for five years, or tenable during good behaviour, when the Statute says it shall be held during pleasure. In all these particulars the appoint-ment, if the Government choose to make it, must conform with those conditions. They cannot change the provisions of the law and alter the status of the officer, nor can they make his duties different from those which are indicated in the Statute and beyond the power there given. What is it that disqualifies? It is not the fact of receiving a sum of money. I have already pointed out that Mr. Addington agreed to accept the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer. His agreement was held to have affected his seat, though he never entered on his office and though no salary accrued; the fact that he had accepted office vacated his seat, although he had never received a dollar. The same principle has been applied in other cases. The moment the office is accepted, that moment the seat is vacated, even though no salary has accrued. Suppose the salary was placed at $100; the moment Sir Charles Tupper agreed to accept the office and the Government agreed to confer it, his seat became vacant, though no precise sum had actually accrued. It is not necessary to rest this case upon the fact that this is a disqualifying office, one which by Statute a salary is attached. We see from the papers brought down that Sir Charles Tupper has received an allowance of about $5,000, It matters not whether it was to pay expenses or not it was in excess of the sum required to pay personal expenses. By accepting the $5,000 he was saved expenses which, as a Minister, he would have incurred; so, in fact, he received $5,000 in the shape of emplument and profit. Therefore, upon the ground of having accepted this sum, apart from the other consideration, his seat in this House is vacant. Now, Sir, speaking with regardto the time when the office becomes vacant, I find that in the case of Mr. Phian, who was appointed Secretary of the Admiralty, it was held that the appointment, being vested in the Board of Admiralty, it was not an appointment under the Crown, and yet Mr. Phinn felt himself called upon to resign his sent, and to accomplish this he accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. It seems, however, that he did not receive notice that the office was conferred on him, and Sir Fitzroy Kelly, speaking of this matter, said :

"Absording to haw and the invariable usage of the House, whenever an alloe was granted under the Grows and the person had intimated his acceptance of it, from that moment his seat was vacant and a writ was moved for as soon as possible."

So that on every ground it is perfectly obvious that Sir Charles Tupper has vacated his seat as a member for Cumberland, because he accepted an office to which a salary is attached, and the moment he accepted that office he vacated his seat. He vacated his seat because it is an office of emolument, and beyond all doubt in the matter it has been made vacant, if it was not vacant before, by the acceptance of the money he received as profit in connection with this office, to enable him the more efficiently to discharge his duties. Now, I was rather surprised by the observation made by the First Minister, in reply to my hon friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister). My hon friend referred to a letter which was read here, from Mr. Todd, and he pointed out, that the letter showed that the Minis-ter had not accepted his seat in this House insdvertently. The leader of the Government said that the letter was dated in December. It is true that the letter does not show that he had consulted Mr. Todd at the time the office was accepted. That was not the point. But the letter disclosed this flot, that the subject was one of discussion, one which had been brought before the public, that Mr. Todd was so strongly impressed with the serious character of the question that he believed that it would be the subject of discussion in this House, and he addressed that letter to the Minister on the 27th of December. The House did not meet until the 17th of January, and unless we suppose that the Minister had no conversation or discussion with his colleagues on this subject, it is perfectly obvious that for nearly a month before the House met the subject was one of discussion between the First Minister and the Minister of Railways. So he did not take his seat in this House inadvertently. He did know that his right to sit here was questioned. He did know that it was held by many that it was not right to sit here, that the seat for Cumberland was vacant, and that a new writ should issue. Now, Sir, there is no analogy between this case and the case of a casual appointment for a specific purpose. Take the case of Mr. Oobden, for instance, who, while a member of Parliament, was appointed to assist in the negotiation of a commercial treaty with France. Upon that subject, Lord John Russell, when the matter was brought before Parliament for consideration, said :

"It is a specific matter in which he does not act as Plenipotentiary; but if any convention should ensue, Mr. Cobden will be associated with Mari Cowley in that convention. It is very properly said that the British Government ought not to depend on volunteers. There is no salary for a person on a special mission, but it is proposed that the ex-penses of Mr. Cobden, while on that mission, shall be defrayed out of the wilden news?" the public purse."

He undertook certain specific duties, limited in their char-seter, which he was called upon to discharge, and his expenses, his actual disbursements while engaged in the discharge of those duties, were paid for him out of the public Treasury. He received no profits, no emoluments, he was merely protected against absolute loss. But the present is a wholly different case. Here the Government have thought proper to submit a Bill to Parliament declaring that it is necessary to have a permanent officer in England, declaring what his functions shall be, declaring how he shall be appointed, and upon what conditions he shall hold that that office, and declaring that that office shall be an office of emolument under the Crown. To that office they have appointed Sir Charles Tapper, and having so appointed him, it is perfectly obvious that his seat in this House has, in consequence of that appointment, become vacant, and that a new writ should issue for the election of another person to fill it. Then I observe, it is preposed by this Bill to declare that Sir Charles Tupper-to remove doubts in the matter-shall be the member for the county of Cumberland. Let me call the attention of the House to the provisions of the British North America Act on this point. Section 37 of that Act provides, that the House of Commons, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, consist of a certain number of members, which are therein specified, and that Nova Scotia shall elect a certain number of those members. It states the number at that time to be returned from Nova Scotia, and the number of districts into which Nova Scotia shall be divided; and it states the conditions upon which an additional number of members may be given to that Province. Then it goes on to state that each of the eighteen counties of Nova Scotia shall be an electoral district, that the county of Halifax shall be entitled to return two members, and each of the other counties one member. Those are the provisions of an Imperial Statute. That Statute authorizes us to substitute other provisions for these on certain conditions. What are the other provisions? They are that every ten years after taking the Census, the representation shall be distributed in proportion to the population amongst these various Provinces. But it does not give us power to deal with this country as a unit, or to deal with this subject in the same way as it might be dealt with by the Imperial Parliament, which has no such restriction, no such Statute standing above it. It does not give us power to alter the law except on particular conditions and in a specified way. The seat for Cumberland is vacant. By this Bill it is proposed to put a member in that seat. Who elects that member? Sir, it would be those who vote in this House and in the other Chamber. Are they Nova Scotians? Do they belong to Nova Scotia? Are they the consti-uents provided for by the British North America Act, acting under its authority and subject to the limitations it imposes? Not at all. Those who will vote for the Bill and elect Sir Charles Tupper to the seat he has vacated, are not Nova Scotians at all. Some are from British Columbia; some from Ontario; and some from Quebec. These are the electors who are called upon to elect Sir Charles Tupper to the seat he has vacated by his acceptance of office. Why, Sir, if we can elect Sir Charles Tupper, we can elect somebody else. Were we to strike out the conditions relating to his appointment and his election to the seat for this constituency, we might provide that not Sir Charles Tupper, but semebody else, might be elected to that seat. We might provide that some resident of some other Province shall represent this particular constituency. There is no limitation to our authority in this matter if we propose to depart from the provisions of the law. Then, Sir, there is the question of policy, to which I referred this afternoon. The Government propose by this particular. measure to radically change the policy of our law. It is. not simply this one case or this particular constituency which will be affected. The whole law, not only with regard to representation, but with regard to official appointment, will be changed. Your predecessor, Sir, I believe, now holds the office of Collector of Oustoms at Quebec; but. according to the rule laid down in this Bill, that hon, gentleman might have been appointed, on condition that he should not receive the salary attaching to his office, just as Sir Charles Tupper has been in this case; his commission might state so, and he might be Speaker of this House and Collector of Customs at Quebec at the same time. Any hon, gentleman might be appointed a Judge in one of the courts, and if he would agree not to accept a salary he might continue to be a member of this House and of the Government. Take the case of the Prime Minister. We know what his feelings are towards the Government of Ontario at this moment. When the Lieutenant-Governor's time expires, the Government might advise His Excellency to appoint the Prime Minister Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, without salary, and he might accept that appointment and remain Prime Minister of the Dominion at the same time. You see that there is no limitation to the abuse that is possible. This measure completely unsettles the law in this particular; there is no office which a Minister or member of this House could not take under the policy indicated by this Bill, if he would only agree not to accept the salary provided for that office. Now, Sir, let me call the attention of the House to observations which the First Minister addressed to the House on another occasion, which were not so pertinent then as it seems to me they are now. He said :

Said : "As history showed, a constitutional course was sometimes very inconvenient to an arbitrary and oppressive Government. All would remember what Charles Fox said to Napoleon the Great when they were discussing the introduction of trial by jury into France. Napo-leon objected to it on the ground that 'the system was so very in-convenient.' 'Well,' Fox replied, 'it is for the inconvenience of the system that the people of England like it.' And it was because of the inconvenience to the Government of the constitutional action of the Senate, which put a stop to their bargain with the hon. member for Selkirk to make him a rich mac, and to pay him for his service support. that an unconstitutional course was proposed.

for Selkirk to make him a rich man, and to pay him for his servile support, that an unconstitutional course was proposed. "Mr. SPEAKEE. The hon. gentleman cannot say that an hon. mem-ber is paid for his support. "SE JOEN A. MACDONALD. Then a reward, a gratuity. As Shake-speare said: "A reward is better than a peculium." All would remem-ber how the hon, member for Selkirk was about admitting that he was, interested in the company. He (Mr. Smith) said it was none of his (Sir JOHN A. Macdonald's) business to ask whether he (Mr. Smith) had an interest. But it had to come out at last, and the hon. gentleman who had the astuteness to get the Government into the bargen, had not the astuthe astuteness to get the Government into the bargain, had not the astu-teness to keep the matter to himself."

Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman has himself found that these limitations and restrictions are very inconvenient to an arbitrary Government. He has found, for some political or private reason, that it was convenient to appoint a member. of this House High Commissioner to England, to appoint him to an office which, by the provisions of the law, vacated his seat. He finds it convenient that the hon, gentleman should not go back to his constituents for re-election, and that he should not resign that office. From our point of view, it is necessary that the hon. gentleman, in order to be elected, should resign his office, for it is one that disqualifies absolutely and renders him ineligible to a seat in this House as long as he continues to hold it. The hon. gentleman has found it inconvenient to return to his constituents and ask them to bestow their confidence in him again. He still holds the office and is anxious to regain the seat from which his acceptance of that office has removed him; and his colleagues press upon the House this Bill, in order that he may, in spite of this disqualifying office, regain the seat which has been vacated. I trust, Sir, that this House will seriously consider this proposition. I trust that they will do no such violence to the law and to the Constitution, in order that Sir Charles Tupper may be saved the inconvenience of returning to the electors of Cumberland, in order to regain a seat in this House in a proper and constitutional manner.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The right hon. leader of the House has moved the second reading of this Bill, accompanied by an intimation that he intends subsequently to move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Privi- Bill should not be referred to that. Committee in conse leges and Elections. My hon. friends opposite have, in the different speeches to which we have listened this afternoon and this evening, opposed the Bill on principle, which is, no doubt, the proper course to pursue on the motion for the second reading. But they also oppose the referring of the Bill to the Privileges and Elections Committee. Now, in opposing that referrence, it seems to me, that they are quite inconsistent with themselves. We, who have had the honour of sitting in this House in former Parliaments, will recollect that when a motion was made, affecting the seat of an hon. member of this House, at that time occupying the Chair which you, Sir, now occupy, my hon. friend, the member for East York, I recollect well-and I have confirmed my recollection by a reference to Hansard-took the ground expressly that inasmuch as that the question had arisen of the right of a member to a seat in this House, that question ought, ipso facto be referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee, and ought to be considered there, and there alone, before it was discussed or considered in the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That was not a Bill, as this is.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not say that it was a Bill; but I say that that question, in the same way as this Bill, raised a point as to the rights of an hon. member to sit in this House. The principle my hon. friend then laid down was that the question should be at least referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in order that that Committee should make a report to the House, on which report the House should act. My hon. friend says that that was not a Bill; but what difference does it make. Was not the question then, as now, whether an hon. member ought to sit in this House or not?

Mr. MACKENZIE. That has been referred already to the Committee two weeks ago.

Mr. CAMERON. I know it has, and what harm is there in referring this Bill to that Committee which is now seized of the subject? My hon. friend opposite object to this reference to the Committee, and they assume that the case is so clear that it is beyond argument that the hon. Minister of Railways has forfeited his seat in this House, that there is nothing to refer, nothing to discuss, and that in the words of my hou. friend who has just sat down, the thing is perfectly certain and beyond all doubt. I have great respect for the knowledge and experience of the hon. member for Bothwell, but I confess it does not seem to me that the matter is so perfectly clear and beyond all doubt; so far as I have been led to form an opinion, it is in the opposite direction. At any rate, it must be perfectly clear that a question of this kind, involving the citation of lengthy precedents, such as those with which the hon. gentloman for West Huron favoured us to-day and on a former occasion, and involving such a number of precedents as those cited by the hon. member for Bothwell, -it must be quite clear that a question involving points of that kind, involving the necessity to look up the records of Parliament to ascertain what has been done in similar cases when similar questions arose in the Parliament of Great Britain, is pre-eminently a question which this House, as a whole, is not competent to deal with until it has been first referred to that Committee which is specially constituted to deal with questions of this kind-a Committee which is composed of hon. members selected specially for their ability to consider points of this kind, and which will consider the case fully and report their conclusion to this House. This Bill, involving, as it does, the question of the right of an hon. member to occupy a seat in this House, is one that ought to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and notwithstanding that there is contained in it, in the first clause, a general principle, the hon, member for West Horon argued that the quence of that fact, but surely it is the practice of this House to refer Bills involving general principles to Com-mittees. My hon. friend, I think, has had two or three Bills referred to Committees for consideration, involving general principles; the hon. member for L'Islet had a Bill involving a general principle, also affecting the Independence of Parliament Act and the election of members of this House, and he had that Bill referred to a Committee for consideration; and it is the ordinary routine and practice of the House that all Bills should go to a Committee, whether they involve a general principle or refer to a special Act or a special case. It is true that an untimely fate has overtaken the Bills of my hon. friends, to which I have referred, but that was not the fault of the Committee to which they were referred. The cause of their untimely fate might be found nearer home, by my hon. friends whose Bills have been unfortunately slaughtered. My hon. friends also object to this Bill as being wrong in principle, on the ground that it is not right for Parliament to legislate on a subject of this kind, and, I presume, to remove a doubt or to relieve from a penalty, if that penalty has been unwittingly incurred. Are my hon friends opposite consis-tent in that position? Do they forget what occurred in the Session of 1877? Do they forget the Bill that they themselves introduced, not a Bill to remove a doubt in one particular case, but a wholesale whitewashing Bill-a Bill to whitewash, as it was alleged, probably about half the mem-bers of this House, and a Bill of what I must term a most reckless character. The material clause of that Bill was to this effect:

"Any person who has at any time since the passing of the said Act, been elected a member of the House of Commons, and who, acting under the bons fide belief that he was or continued to be qualified and capable of sitting or voting as a member thereof, has sat or voted therein, shall be and is hereby indemnified, exonerated, freed and discharged, from all pecuniary penalties of forfeitures whatsoever (if any) which may have been incurred by him by reason of having so sat or voted at any time, up to the end of the present session of Parliament."

That is the wholesale whitewashing Bill which my hon. friend opposite introduced and carried through Parliament by the large majority he then had at his back, in spite of the protests of the hon. gentlemen on this side, who then occupied seats on the opposite side. Some of my hon, friends who then sat on that side were twitted by the then Ministerial supporters that they themselves would be benefited by the Act, but they repudiated the benefit. My hon. friend who sits before me said, with indignation, that he wanted no such legislation; the hon. Minister of Customs, when taunted by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) with the fact that he himself would be relieved by the language of the Act, repudiated the Act and said he wanted none of it. Every member of the then Opposition opposed the passage of the Bill, yet the hon. member for East York, the then leader of the House, carried the Bill through, and whitewashed wholesale, probably about half the members of the House, who had been charged, at any rate, with having violated the Independence of Parliament Act. Some of them, no doubt, had done so; in some cases it was perfectly clear, but what did that Act say? It whitewashed everybody who chose to say: I acted under the bona fide belief that I was entitled to sit. It did not consider the question whether he had or not violated the Act, whether he had done so with his eyes open, or inadvertently, but it said that as long as he bona fide thought he had a right to sit and vote, he should be whitewashed and re-established in the future. Yet these hon, gentlemen stand up and say this Bill is wrong in principle, this Bill which is only introduced for the purpose of removing a doubt, it a doubt exists, in a particular case, and removing that doubt particularly in the case of a gentleman having the claims the hon. Minister of Railways has to the favourable consideration of the House and the country, a man who certainly, if he has erred in this matter—which I do Market A and the country of the special reasons for the appointment of one special reasons for the duties of that high and important office, the Minister of Railways, apparently from the terms of his commission, volun-teered his services for a temporary period, and volun-teered them without a salary. Now, my hon. friend Mr. CAMEBON (Victoria), not admit-has erred unwittingly; a man who is entitled to be relieved, if anyone is; and when the Bill, on the face of it, shows plainly and squarely what the doubt is, states the specific case and the ground on which the relief is sought. Has any one hon, gentleman who has spoken on the other side ventured to say that there has been any actual violation of the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act by what the hon. Minister of Railways has done?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON. Have we heard that argument from that side of the House? Has anyone ventured to argue that this case is within the mischief contemplated to be removed and prevented by the Independence of Parliament Act?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON. Not one has said it. What is the mischief that is intended to be prevented by the Independence of Parliament Act? It is the mischief of the Government of the day controlling by corrupt inducements the members of this House to support them. Does that apply to this case? Can it be, for instance, said that the hon. Minister of Railways has been induced or influenced, directly or indirectly, by any pecuniary consideration in this matter? Can a man be both a briber and bribee? Can he bribe himself? Because that is the position the case would be in if it can be said that it is within the mischief contemplated to be guarded against or removed by the Independence of Parliament Act. When we come to consider the principles upon which a doubtful Statute, if it be doubtful, is to be construed—the hon. member for Bothwell whose authority, I will admit as a constitutional lawyer, for if not a lawyer long in standing, he is certainly one in spirit; I say so with all seriousness and earnestness, for the hon. gentleman has a legal mind and was quite competent to weigh and consider the legal bearings of cases of this kind even lorg before he had the honour of being a member of the Bar-the hon. member for Bothwell will admit it is one of the elementary canons of the construction of a Statute that when you consider the extent of its operation, you must consider the mischief to be remedied. When we ask: Is this case within the mischief contemplated? can it be said there is the slightest foundation that the case of the hon. Minister of Railways is within the mischief that act was intended to prohibit? Can it be said that he was affected by any inducement connected with the existence of the office of High Commissioner, in his course as an independent member of this House? That is what the Act was intended to provide for-the independence of members of Parliament. Has the independence of the hon. Minister of Railways been affected, directly or indirectly, remotely or approximately, by the acceptance, on his part, of the office of High Commissioner? Moreover, as far as I can gather, after hearing the terms of his commission read, it was not an acceptance of a permanent character, but simply an undertaking or offer on his part to discharge, for a temporary period, the duties of the office when it was desirable, for reasons connected with his health-reasons connected, too, with the existence of a vacancy in that position and the absolute necessity of having a gentleman entirely within the confidence of the Government in the position of High Commissioner, one with an experience and knowledge of what had been going on during the time when the late High Commissioner, Sir Alexander Galt, had filled the office. Whenthere were special reasons for the appointment of one from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has argued that the Government cannot change the character of the office, and that there is a change in the character of the office if the person appointed to it accepts it without a salary, and he referred-I think, if I am not mistaken, it was he who referred-to the case of Daniel Whitton Harvey. Now, the case of Daniel Whitton Harvey is entirely distinguishable from this, as anyone who refers to the facts will see. The appointment of Daniel Whitton Harvey was made, he was actually appointed to the position, but, after the appointment was made whereby ipso facto his seat in Parliament became vacated, he wrote and said he accepted the position on the condition that he did so without a salary, in order to save his seat. But it was too late; the harm was done; he had been appointed, and the very appointment to an office to which a fixed salary was at that time attached vacated his soat. The Statute creating the office of High Commissioner says that the High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000. Now, with all respect to the opinion expressed by my hon. friend who sits behind me (Mr. Girouard), I must say I totally dissent from it. I do not think that the acceptance of the office without a salary was inconsistent with the terms of that Act, or that the commission was therefore void, nor do I agree with the opinion of my hon, friend from Bothwell, that the appointment to the office without a salary is an alteration of the character of it. The office is the same, whether a salary is attached to it or not. There was no obligation on the Government to fix a salary, but if none had been fixed, it might be argued that, at some future time, an arrangement would be made to pay the High Commissioner, or he might be entitled to be paid on what we lawyers call a quantum meruit. But here a proposition was made by the Minister of Railways that he would accept the office without a salary as attached to that office, and that was the beginning, apparently, as far as the documents before Parliament show, of the transaction that led to his appointment to this position. Well, from the first, there was no salary, quoad Sir Charles Tupper, attached to that office. He said, I will discharge the duties without the salary. The Government said on that condition we will appoint you High Commissioner; and he was appointed on that condition, in accordance with the terms of the Act, because I do not read the Act as making it compulsory to attach any salary whatever. Then, my hon. friend from Bothwell has argued that a member of the Government might equally well accept the office of Lieutenant-Governor of a Province, or a Judgeship, or anything of the kind; but surely he must see the inconsistency between the position of a member of the Government, a member of the Privy Council, and one of those offices he has mentioned. But between the position of a member of the Privy Council, a member of the Government, and the position of High Commissioner, temporarily discharging the duties of that office in England, there is no inconsistency. Sir Charles Tupper could perfectly well discharge the duties of both offices, and hold them both, and when in England could act as High Commissioner, and when here could act as Minister of Railways, as he has done. I think, therefore, as far as I can form an opinion on the Statute, that really this Act is not necessary; but, if there be a doubt about it-and, if my hon. friends are so clear on the subject, we may assume that there is a doubt about it-this is a case in which the doubt ought to be removed, and, therefore this legislation is proper, is reasonable, and is fair. Moreover, we are follow-ing in the footsteps of the hon. gentlemen opposite, but very far behind them. Where they whitewashed by hundreds, we are only whitewashing by one. We are dealing with a special case, and a meritorious case, a case deserving to be disposed of by Parliament and to have any doubt which may exist removed. For that reason, I have and when the matter comes before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, my hon, friends will have an opportunity of repeating their arguments; but, if they do repeat them, they can only show that there is a doubt, and if they show that there is a doubt, they show the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. My hon, friend has misrepresented the Act of 1877-

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I read it.

Mr. MACKENZIE-very materially. If Sir Charles Tupper, for instance, says that he unwittingly violated the law, and wants indemnity for it, I am willing to vote that indemnity, but I am asked, besides doing that, to seat him as a member afresh. We are undertaking to elect him to Parliament, as well as to indemnify him. The Act to which the hon. gentleman alludes, for which I was responsible, having brought it in and carried it through the House, did not ensure the seats to any of the parties who might have rendered themselves liable to the penalty. It simply removed the penalty from those who unwittingly got themselves placed in a wrong position. There i, therefore no analogy whatever between the two cases, and he must have seen that perfectly well, though he endeavoured to raise a dust to cover his own retreat. Why is this Act brought in at all? Notice was given of an intention to amend the Act before the case was discussed in the House at all, showing the Ministry were perfectly conscious that Sir Charles Tupper was not entitled to sit after having accepted that office. I was some-what surprised to hear the argument of the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), but, of course, the logical result of his argument is, that he will vote against the Bill, because he has stated frankly that his opinion is that there was no power to make the appointment, and that, if made, it was illegal; and to be illegal is of course to to be unlawful, and therefore, there is no necessity for the Bill, and, of course, he will vote against it. I did not hear him say that he will vote against it, but the logical se-quence of his argument is that he will. If the hon. member for Victoria only desires an indemnity for an unwitting violation of the law, I am willing to vote for it, but I am not willing to accept the responsibility of electing a member to this House.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The word "unwittingly" is not in the Act, and I read the very words of it, so I do not think I can be accused of throwing dust or attempting to mislead.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that that Act did not confirm the seat to anyone. It left that quite open, and nothing can show more clearly than the fact that one of my colleagues, being interested in a company that had a contract, went to the electors and lost his seat. Let the hon. member for Cumberland follow the same practice.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). He would not lose his seat. Mr. MACKENZIE. Let Ministers and my hon. friend for Victoria pass a similar Bill to what was passed in 1877, and they will see where Sir Charles Tupper lands, in the same manner as was seen in 1877. The hon. gentleman has endeavoured to raise a cloud of dust, and he is entirely wrong, and has either misapprehended the Act to which he alludes, or has misinterpreted it to suit his own argument.

ing in the footsteps of the hon. gentlemen opposite, but Mr. BEATY. The question before the House is unvery far behind them. Where they whitewashed by doubtedly one of great importance, in connection with the hundreds, we are only whitewashing by one. We are dealing with a special case, and a meritorious case, a case deserving to be disposed of by Parliament and to have any doubt which may exist removed. For that reason, I have no hesitation in supporting the second reading of the Bill, I understand them, in connection with this matter. The Minister of Railways was appointed under the Act of 1880. authorizing the appointment of a High Commissioner in England for certain purposes. He was appointed to do the duties which appertain to that office, as stated in the Statute. without salary. That is the first feature connected with this transaction. He performed those duties, and he also received in connection with that office, as I understand it, his expenses, approximating to $5,000-as expenses and not as salary, not as wages connected with the office, nor as profit. Now I think it as been conceded pretty freely, although it has just now been denied from the Opposition, that the spirit of the Act has not been violated in connection with this transaction. The intention of the Act was that members of Parliament should not be under the influence of the Administration of the day, by reason of offices being given to them with which a profit might be associated. Now, we have already seen, as a matter of fact, not only from the Patent which has been read to the House, but from the Public Accounts, that the hon. Minister did not receive any salary, or wage, or allowance, or profit whatever; that whatever he did receive was in the way of payment of his expenses of living in England during the period he was there. Now, that being the case, I submit, as a matter of law, that not only has the spirit of the Act not been violated, but the mischief intended to be prevented has not been committed; and we have in the very words of the Act itself a provision sufficiently clear, I think, to show that the Minister of Railways, in accepting this office, did not come within the Act at all. Now, if the Minister did not come within the words or the letter of the Act, and did not violate the spirit of the Act, then certainly his seat has not been vacated. I suppose it will not be denied by any hon. member of this House, that before this Act was passed the Minister might have accepted this office. Now, under the Act itself, did he by accepting the office of High Commissioner, in fact violate it? Now, I submit the very words of the Act show that he did not, and if the House will permit me, I will read the words of the Act of 1878:

"1. Except as hereinafter specially provided— "(a.) No person accepting or holding gny office, commission or em-ployment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the Government of Ganada, at the nomination of the Grown, or at the nomination of any of the officers of the Government of Canada, to which any salary, fee, wages, allowance or emolument, or profit of any kind is attached; shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons of Ganada, nor shall be sit or vote therein; "2. Provided, that nothing in this section shall render ineligible, as aforenaid, any person holding any of the following offices, that is to any."

aforesaid, any person holding any of the following offices, that is to say:" Presidents of the Council, Minister of Finance, &c."

"Any person:" holding office like the Minister of Railways is not ineligible-those are the words of the Statute. The Minister of Railways, the President of the Privy Council, or any other Minister is not ineligible by the words of They come within the exception. this Statute. The Minister of Railways may accept or hold any office to which the first section has reference. Those are the words of the Statute, and I particularly point out the fact that the second section comes in and especially protects all such persons. Now, I submit, that the letter of the Statute, as well as the spirit of it, have not been frustrated in this matter, have not been violated by reason of taking this office without a salary. But I should judge that the Crown prerogative would be sufficient to appoint a person to such an office to do such services, without an Act of Parliament. But there is an important feature in connection with this matter that has been strongly pressed upon the attention of the House by various hon. gentlemen, and though the hon. gentleman for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) has alluded to it, it seems to me that sufficient attention has not been given to it; and that arises from the words of the Act of 1880, authorizing the appointment of a resident Agent, or High Commissioner. It has been contended by hon, gentlemen opposite that there is a salary attached to this office which the patent granted by the Crown cannot detach. I think that is the meaning of their contention, that there is a salary attached to this office by reason of the words of the Act of 1880, which the grant from the Crown cannot take away. The fact is stated that it is " without salary," but, nevertheless, because by the Act a salary is claimed to be attached to the office, it is argued the salary must continue. Now, I submit there is no salary attached to this office, unless the Government who appoints the High Commissioner attaches it. Unless the Government in the Patent gives him the right which this Act authorizes them to give, if they withhold that salary then there is no salary attached. If they take the salary away, the salary is not there; therefore, the argument has no force. The Act expressly states that the High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000. He may receive $1; the Administration may give him $1, $10, $100, $1,000, but they cannot give him $10,001. They may give him no salary; they can give him $1 or they can give him $10,000; but if they give him any sum within the limit, then the Act authorises it to be so, and then by the grant to the High Commissioner, the salary is attached, and whatever force there may be in the position of a Minister accepting the office with the salary attached under these circumstances, it would apply in such cases. But to my mind that is not the real difficulty. The difficulty as I understand it, is the payment of these expenses, the payment of that sum of nearly $5,000. That, it seems to me, is the real gist of the matter. Now, I will read, with the consent of the House, a few passages from Todd's Parliamentary Government in England, vol. 2, page 260, London edition of 1859:

"In regard to the first of these principles, it should be observed that

"Thus, the acceptance of an office from the Crown, accompanied by a formal renunciation of any salary, fee or emolument in connection there-with, does not disqualify."

Does not that exactly meet the case we have in hand?

Mr. MACKENZIE. From what book are you reading?

Mr. BEATY· From "Todd's Parliamentary Government in England," at page 260. Thus I read :

"Thus, the acceptance of an office from the Orown, accompanied by a formal renunciation of any salary, fee or emolument in connection therewith, does not disqualify."

"Acceptance" here is italicised to show the importance of the word. The party receiving and accepting office must accept it in act, formally and with the salary attached; he must accept it, not renouncing the salary which is attached to the office, but he must accept it with the salary attached ; and when a person has accepted office with salary attached, there can be no doubt that the operation of the Statute shows that such person is disqualified. But it must have been accepted. In the case afterwards referred to, Mr. Pryme accepted the position of Commissioner of Bankruptcy, to which fees were attached. He was appointed, the commission was issued, he accepted the position and held it three months. but he never took any fees and never performed any service. The matter was brought before the Imperial Parliament and discussed very elaborately, and the result was that the whole House, after hearing the discussion and the opinions of the law officers of the Crown, dropped the matter and said it did not come within the Statuto. That was a case precisely like this one. He accepted office without fees; the fees were not payable until the work was done; he never did any work; hence, having done no work, though he had accepted the office, and the commission had been issued, he was not entitled to any fees, and he was not disqualified because he did not receive any profit. That is the whole gist of the matter. I read the brief note of that case:

"But where the remuneration is by fees and not by salary, and the disqualifying office was relinquished before the performance of any duties, or the receipt of any fees-theorgh held for a period of three months-it was no. considered to vacate the seat.

"Moreover, it has not been the practice to consider the casual employment of members of the House of Commons upon Royal Commiswhich no stated salary is attached—as coming within the disqualifying operation of the Statute; even when remuneration is received for such services."

Even when remuneration is received for such a casual service, it did not come within the disqualifying operation of the Act. But to come more particularly to the point which I said I deemed the most important issue in this questionthat is the receipt of the expenses. Let me turn to this work again, and see what the writer says in regard to members of Parliament and Ministers of the Crown becoming Commissioners under the Statute, by Royal appointment or otherwise. The author says, at page 350:

" The persons appointed to serve on Royal or Statutory Commissions are selected without reference to their political opinions as supporters or opponents of the existing Administration, and generally on account of or because they possess special qualifications for the task. Sometimes, at the discretion of Government, members of one or both branches of the Legislature are appointed upon important public commissions, not merely because of their personal fitness, but also for the purpose of obtaining a direct representation of the commission in Parliament."

If it is the case that members of Parliament may be appointed as members of Royal Commissions or Statutory Commissions in England, as is clearly stated, why cannot the Minister of Railways hold this commission, which has no salary attached to it? In a note, the writer says :

"On March 26, 1868, two members of the House of Commons declined to vote on a question before the House, because it was about to be considered by a Boyal Commission, upon which they had been appointed. "Thus, Lord Stanley aud Mr. Spencer Walpole having been appointed (by the Russell Administration) members of a Royal Commission, consisting of twelve persons, to enquire into official oaths, and report whather are super could be dispensed with or altered upon their taking consisting of twelve persons, to enquire into official oaths, and report whether any such could be dispensed with or altered, upon their taking office under Earl Derby, in July 1866, a new commission was forthwith issued, substituting other persons in their places on this Commission. Again, the Schools Inquiry Commission, appointed in 1864, included Lord Stanley and Sir Stafford Northcote. When these gentlemen entered Earl Derby's Ministry t.ey remained upon the Commission, but abstained from signing the report, which was presented in December 1867, as they stated, ' partly on the ground that official duties have prevented us from attending the later meetings of the Commission, or studying with sufficient care the evidence produced; partly, also, because, as members of the Executive, we think is better to reserve our opinion on the points at issue until the time comes when action can be opinion on the points at issue until the time comes when action can be taken upon them.""

We come to another illustration on the matter. The writer save:

Says: "Thus, in 1859, General Peel, Secretary of State for War, and Lord Stanley, President of the India Board, were placed on a Commission to enquire into the organization of the Indian Army; and in the same year the President of the Council (Marquess of Salisbury) being a Colonel of Militia, was appointed on the Commission on the organization, etc., of the Militia. In 1868, Lord Chancellor Cairns was a member of the commission to consider the state of the Neutrality Laws. "Thus, the Royal Commission appointed in 1841, and which is still in existence, to enquire into the Decoration of the new Houses of Parlia-ment, and generally into the promotion and encouragement of the. Fine Arts in the United Kingdom, has included actual as well as former Prime Ministers, with other leading state-men."

I take it that these cases and instances show that members of Parliament may be appointed Royal Commissioners and Statutory Commissioners for various purposes, and yet be not disqualified under the English Act, even where such office with profit is accepted; and hence, in the case in hand, it does not disqualify either. But there is another point still, that in reference to the expenses. I find, on page 355 of this work :

"All the expenses attending a Royal Counsision are defrayed by the Treasury, out of moneys annually voted by Parliament for such purposes. But it is not usual for Commissioners to incur any extraordinary expen-diture without the previous sanction of the Home Office, by whom the application would naturally be referred to the Treasury."

Also on page 352:

"The services of persons appointed as members of a Royal Commis-sion are generally rendered gratuitously; although compensation is occasionally allowed for their time and labour. Actual expenses incurred are, effectives, defrayed out of the public funds."

These clauses indicate that in cases of this kind, members of Parliament and Ministers have their expenses paid, and the offices are not considered to be offices with profit. And that is the point which I wish to impress upon the House most particularly, as it seems to me to contain the gist of the whole matter. If, for instance, the Minister of Railways had gone to England and done this service, and returned, and had received no money from any Government source, it could hardly be contended, with any show of reason or common sense, that the acceptance of the office under those circumstances would be a disqualifying act within the Statute of 1878. The actual expenses incurred are defrayed out of the public These cases show beyond any doubt that when perfunds. sons are appointed on Royal Commissions, or Statutory Commissions, they receive their expenses, whether they be members of Parliament or Ministers of the Crown; and this circumstance does not disqualify them in any sense whatever, within the meaning of the English Act, which reads that the acceptance of "an office with a profit," or the Act of 1878 which practically and substantially means the same thing, because the last words of the clause clearly show that that was the object and the intent and the purpose of the Act. The only word which can have any force whatever in connection with the idea that expenses are associated with the office, is the word "allowance." Now, what does that word, placed in that particular position mean, if not the same idea which is conveyed by the words im. mediately proceeding and immediately succeeding — the words "salary, fees, wages, and profit of any kind." Does it not mean simply that it must be in the nature of a salary or a fee; that it must, in fact, produce a profit to the person receiving it, else it does not bring the person within the disqualifying clause. I am not so familiar, except by means of books, with the history of the country for the last twenty years as to say, with certainty, how many of our Ministers of the Crown have gone on expeditions or enterprises of this character, but I believe there have been some instances. There is, for instance, the case of the Hon. Mr. Macdougall, who, if I am correctly informed, was appointed in 1865, when he was Secretary of State, a Commissioner, duly accredited with power to deal with foreign Governments, and with our own West India Islands for the purpose of aiding trade and commerce between Canada:and those islands. I am told that he went there, and that his expenses were paid in connection with that service, but it was never contended by anybody that by reason of his taking that office and receiving his expenses in cornection with that service, his seat as a member of the House was vacated. And, if I recollect correctly, the leader of the late Government, the hon. member for East York, went to England and France, accompanied, I believe, by the Agent-General-though on that point I am not quite sure-when he was Prime Minister, and performed services in connection with immigration and other matters, matters connected with different Departments of the Government here, and not with the Department of which he was the head. The hon. gentleman's expenses were also paid. Now, if the rule is to be applied in this way, if it is claimed that when Ministers are receiving their expenses upon expeditions of this kind, they are receiving profits or allowances, then these gentlemen should have been excluded from the House, and the interpretation which the leader of the late Government put on the Act, is not the correct interpretation. We know that our Constitution has been largely made up by precedents of this character ; and it is the boast of writers and statesmen and parliamentarians of all classes that the elasticity of our Constitution has been such that it has been able to expand or contract just as the emergency may require; that it furnishes the means, not only of avoiding disruption, but of avoiding any act which would destroy the Constitution or the Government. That has been one of the boasts in connection with the English. Constitution, and a most valuable feature of our Constitution we consider it to be. That is the interpretation which has been put on this Act of Parliament, or practically the same Act, for the last twenty years or more, in this country, by Ministers of both parties, by leading statesmen in England, whose dicta in reference to matters of this kind, are received as settling constitutional questions, whose conduct in connection with the determination of questions of this kind are considered as giving the meaning to Acts of Parliament, just as judicial decisions give meaning to Acts of Parliament in the practical matters of life. These dicta, these expres sions of opinion, these announcements by Ministers and parliamentarians, give a settlement to the meaning of these Acts, and decide the course which members of Parliament may pursue in connection with similar transactions. I take it, Sir, that hon. gentlemen opposite will not go back on a record of this character, a record which extends for a period of thirty or forty years, during which Ministers have gone everywhere, doing business of every kind, within their own Departments or out of them, and always received their expenses. During all this time no person ever doubted the propriety or reasonableness of their conduct, and certainly no person ever contended that they were violating the Inde-pendence of Parliament Act. The point contended for by hon. gentlemen opposite, that a salary was attached to the office, is disposed of, I think, by the words of the Act in con-nection with the commission. With regard to the question of expenses, I think that the decisions which have just been cited from this work, and whose correctness cannot be disputed, settle that point beyond all question. We come back, therefore, to the point whether the Bill should have a second reading and go before the Committee. For my own part, I consider that it is a wise and proper thing to pass this Bill as a matter of precaution, to save the Minister from that unnecessary annoyance which has already commenced in connection with this matter, by suing the hon. gentleman, and otherwise prosecuting him in the courts. I say it is necessary that the Governmennt who appointed him, the party who supported that appointment, and the country to which he rendered such excellent service, should see that he is not annoyed or harassed by incidents of this character, but that he should be fully protected against them so far as it is in the power of this House to protect him. While I see it quite unnecessary to pass the Bill, except simply for the purpose of protecting the hon. Minister from being harrassed, I think it is the proper course to pursue, to save him from further difficulty, and that as members of this House, following the precedents which have been laid down, following the spirit of the Act, and following, as I contend, the letter of the Act, we should pass this measure of protection. It is claimed that members of Parliament may have been appointed to these offices, and after that go back and be elected, and that they can take their seats in this House after the election, though they have an office with a salary attached. I do not think the Act has such a meaning. I claim that the meaning is, that persons holding these offices are directly and expressly withdrawn from the force of the first section of the Act, and are not rendered ineligible, though they hold the office to which the first section has reference. I submit, again, that the meaning of the words, when read together, clearly indicate what I have stated. The words are:

"Except as hereinafter specially provided, no person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment, &c. " * Provided that nothing in this section shall render ineligible, as aforesaid, any person holding any of the following offices."

That is to say, including the office of Minister of Railways. Holding what? Rendering ineligible what? By taking and holding any other office with a salary attached. That is the meaning, and the clear meaning of the words. Hon. gentlemen may exercise their imaginations upon these Mr. Mr. BRATY.

words, and the force of the imagination of hon. gentlemen opposite, as I have had occasion for the last two months to know, is very extraordinary. As has been said before, they drew upon their imagination for facts in a great many instances. Their treatment of various questions in this House, such as the National Policy, has illustrated that over and over again, in an abundant manner. But reading this Statute in its plain terms, I find that the hon. Minister of Railways docs not come within the first section, and not coming there, is not ineligible to a seat in this House, though he filled an office with a salary attached thereto. I therefore think, under all the circumstances, that it is a waste of words on the part of the Opposition to contend for the position they take, and that this Bill should pass its second reading.

Mr. DAVIES. I shall not detain the House at any length on this question, which has been already argued at such length by hon. gentlemen on both sides. But some views of constitutional law have been taken by hon. gentlemen tonight which I, for one, cannot allow to pass unanswered. I must express my very great disappointment at the manner in which the right hon. leader of the Government introduced his motion for the second reading of this Bill. When the question was first raised, a week or two ago, by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and when he made a speech in which he showed or tried to show that the position he took was a legal and constitutional position, that could not be successfully assailed, the right hon. leader of the Government apologized to the House for not being able to answer him, by stating that the matter had been sprung upon him -which I thought was a fair explanation-and that he was not ready at the moment to answer a very powerful constitutional argument, in support of which were brought a large array of constitutional authorities. But I did think that when the hon. gentleman had an opportunity to think the question over, and to examine the authorities, then when he came down and asked the House to assent to the second reading of this Bill, he would have been able to back up his motion by a reference, if not to colonial authorities, at least to English ones. But the hon. gentleman made his motion in perfect silence; and when he was taunted with having done so, he gave the very best argument which I suppose he had in favour of the Bill, and that was that there was a precedent for it in the case of Mr Macdonald, of Nova Scotia, in 1868. That was the sole and only argument which the has gentleman advanced in this House to-day for asking hon. members to give their assent to a Bill which is as gross a violation of the independence of Parliament and the rights of the people as anything which has ever been introduced into this Parliament since it has been a Parliament. Now, before I discuss the case which the hon. gentleman cites, I want to call attention to the position taken by the hon, member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), who has just resumed his seat. If I followed his argument correctly, it amounted to this, that Ministers of Crown do not come within the purview of the Independence of Parliament Act at all.

Mr. BEATY. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman nods his assent; I am glad I understood him correctly. Well, I will venture the assertion that the hon. gentleman will not find another member of this House to assent to that proposition. I will qualify that, and say that the hon. gentleman will not find a lawyer in this House who will give his assent to that proposition. I go further and say that he will not find a Parliamentarian of any standing who will assent to it. Such a proposition, if assented to, would be the destruction of the Independence of Parliament Act entirely. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a Minister of the Crown can hold other offices of emolument—can be Lieutenant-Governors or Judges of the land?

Mr. BEATY. It is not my fault if that is the law.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, if the hon. gentleman will put such a strained and forced construction on an Act of Parliament, I am not surprised at all at the position he takes. I will not respectful to him, but I think it is a position which he has come to very hastily, and without reading the Act carefully at all. What does the Act say:

"No person accepting or holding any office, commission or employ-"no person accepting or noting any once, commission or employ-ment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the Government of Ganada, at the nomination of the Crown, or at the nomination of any of the officers of the Government of Canada, to which any salary, fee, wages, allowance or emolument, or profit of any kind, is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons."

And then there is a proviso exempting certain officials by name from that clause, viz.: the officials who, by virtue of their office, are members of the Government, and any other person who may be appointed to any office which may be hereafter created, entitling him to be a Minister of the Crown. These are the only cases which the law removes from the sweeping enactment of the first section. The Act goes further. There was a possibility, I suppose, that some ingenious gentleman might suggest a mode of escape by which a blow might be aimed at the Independence of Parliament. The draftsman, I suppose, was aware that a certain class exists, exists in this House and has existed for a long time in Parliament, whose object is to weaken and undermine the Independence of Parliament Act; and the draftsman, in addition to what I have read, went on to say:-

"Provided the Minister of the Crown be elected while holding such office, and be not otherwise disqualified."

That is perfectly plain, and does not afford of a loop-hole for the hon. gentleman to escape through.

Mr. BEATY. Which office does that proviso refer toan office described in the first section or in the second section?

Mr. DAVIES. Any man can see that it refers to the offices mentioned in the second section. I cannot make it any plainer to the hon. gentleman. Supposing a new office is created, which makes the holder a Minister of the Crown, in that case the person holding the new office shall not be disqualified, provided he is not otherwise disqualified. There is the very case in point. The gentleman whose position we are discussing here to-night, did not hold any one of the offices mentioned in that section, but he came within the latter part. He holds an office which entitles him to be a Minister of the Crown. Now the only question is, is he otherwise disqualified? If the hon. gentleman is right in his contention, he cannot be otherwise disqualified. See how ridiculous the proposition is. He can be a Judge, or a L'eutenant-Governor. He cannot be otherwise disqualified ; still the Act says, in so many words, if he is otherwise disqualified, he shall cease to be a member.

Mr. BEATY. If he is not otherwise disqualific? by some other Act, he is not declared disqualified by the urst section.

Mr. DAVIES. The law does not say so. The hon. gentleman further argued that inasmuch as the hon. Minister of Railways received a commission, in which commission it was stated that he was to hold the office of High Commissioner, without salary, he did not accept an office with a salary attached. But the hon. gentleman will see that the salary is attached to the office of Minister of Railways by Statute and the salary is attached to the office of Minister of Railways by Statute, and to the office of High Commissioner by Statute. The Statute says : "The High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000." It does not matter whether the Government reduce it down to $500 or $5, there is a salary attached to the office, and therefore, it is, in the very words of the Statute, one of those offices within the first section of the Act, the acceptance of which disqualified a man from sitting take up the Hansard, and I find that, so far from his repuin this House, which any salary is attached." There is by Statute, a salary of some kind attached to the office of High Commissioner, and therefore it is that kind of office the Legislature intendsay that his position is ridiculous, for that would not be ed to provide against, any Minister or any member of Parliament accepting, and in accepting which the hon. gentle-man has vacated his seat. The hon. gentleman says: Do you contend that if the Minister travels in the discharge of the duties of his Department and receives his travelling expenses, he thereby vacates his seat? Certainly not, because a Minister in so doing is merely discharging the duties of his office. If he goes to Toronto and has his railway fare paid, it is the same thing as if on a wet day he took a cab to his office, and charged the cab hire to the Department. If, in the discharge of the duties of his Department, he incurs necessary expenses, those expenses are paid by the Government and do not vacate his seat. There is no analogy between this case and the case of a Minister accepting a wholly distinct appointment which involves the discharge of duties not Minis-terial in their character, which are statutory in their character, to which the salary is by Statute attached, and which, in the direct words of the Statute, disqualify him from holding his seat. Passing from the hon. gentleman to the hon. gentleman on the same side, who immediately preceded him, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), he argued strongly this was a case which should be referred to a Committee, and I listened with astonishment to the hon. gentleman asking us to take that course. He agreed that this was a most important Bill; that vital principles were involved in it; that it would, should it pass, create a precedent of the most important character for all time; and heasks us to adopt the second reading, to accept the principle of the Bill, and then, after we have conceded the principle of the Bill, to refer the details to a Committee. Why, the hon. gentleman knows well that we will give our case away if we vote for the second reading of the Bill; the hon. First Minister knows well that when you pass the second reading of a Bill, the principle of the Bill is passed upon and agreed to by the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not in all cases.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman will not dissent from that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do dissent from it.

Mr. DAVIES. The principle of a measure is assented to when you adopt its second reading. If we adopt the second reading of this Bill, we will assent to its principle, and the reference to the Committee will be only to consider the details. What is the necessity of referring this Bill after wo have agreed to it? It is like locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. We first assent to the principle and then refer it to a Committee. The hon. gentleman said he had one authority in support of this Bill, and that was the Bill passed in 1877 by the Ministry of which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was the leader. The hon. gentleman said he disapproved of that Bill, that it had been repudiated by his friends, that though it was a Bill to whitewash, as he termed it, a large number of the members of this House, yet such was their high sense of dignity, as members of this House, such the personal value they placed on the independence of Par-liament, that they repudiated the Bill, that they would have none of it. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), he said, repudiated it. He dil not want to come under its cover; he wanted to stand on his own footing, on his own bottom; he did not want its saving effect. I wonder that the hon. member for Northumberland sat silent when his views were so misrepresented. I "No person accepting any office to diating that Bill, that hon. gentleman expressed his cordial approval of it. He said he was proud that the hon. member for East York had introduced it; that he was glad to come under its operation, because he and a large number of others had, or possibly might have been held to have had, unwittingly offended against the strict terms of the Independence of Parliament Act. I refer to the language that hon, gentleman used on that occasion, and you will see, Mr. Speaker, how utterly reckless the hon. member for Victoria was in his facts. He should have verified his facts before he ventured to make such an assertion in this House. The hon. member for Northumberland then said :

"He approved of the policy, from whichever side of the House it came, of taking measures whereby hon. members would be relieved of responsibility for acts done unintentionally and in ignorance of the construction placed on the Independence of Parliament Act. He was ready to go before a court of law, and he defied anyone to obtain a con-viction against him for a violation of that Act. He was, therefore, per-fectly free to express an Independent opinion, and that opinion was, that a measure should be nessed to relieve hon members who hed through a measure should be passed to relieve hon, and that opinion was, that inadvertance or ignorance, violated the Act, from charges brought against them by social pirates who instituted the presecutions in order to make money. A dozen members of this House had been served with writs of from 4500,000 to $1,000,000, and it was not right that they should be mode subject to enprove the trubble and expense and expense. be made subject to annoyance, trouble and expense, and even danger, during nine or twelve months, in consequence of a certain construction having been placed on the Independence of Parliament Act. The feeling of justice entertained by Parliament and the country would sanction and ratify the proposed measure. He cared not for party, but he wished for justice to be done."

So that the hon. member for Northumberland, instead of repudiating the measure of the hon member for East York, gladly hailed it as a measure of justice and relief which, he thought, it was proper and prudent should be introduced and carried. I do not know that I need refer any more to that measure of 1877, which has been cited once or twice by hon. gentlemen opposite as a precedent in this case. It bears no analogy whatever; it is not stated here that the hon. member for Cumberland, acted unwittingly or unknowingly, that he slipped into this office by mere error or inadvertance and wanted to be relieved from the penalties. If such a statement had been made, there would be no feeling against granting the relief, as the hon. member for East York stated. Did he accept this office knowingly or wilfully?

An hon. MEMBER. Or maliciously?

Mr. DAVIES. In my belief, he accepted it with the intention of not coming back to take his seat. It was only when the railway policy of the Government was changed and they found it was necessary to have him back, that they brought him back—that Mr. Todd's opinion was obtained. But, long before he took his seat in this House, long before he violated the Act, long before he incurred the penaltics the Government had been notified by the authority to whom they applied, the late Librarian, that while there might be some excuse for Sir Charles Tupper taking his seat in this House under the practice and precedents of the English Parliament and the rules of that Parliament, he could give no opinion, and would not give any opinion, as to whether he was not violating the Act of our own Parliament, and therefore, he took his seat without having obtained any opinion that he was doing so constitutionally or legally. He knew, and do not hon. members see from the very silence of the hon. the First Minister himself. that he knows and feels that the member for Cumberland had acted illegally in taking his seat, and that it cannot be defended? Does any hon. member suppose that, with his long experience and with his knowledge of constitutional law, he would not have been ready to give some reason for this Bill, if any reason could be given, when he introduced it? Do you think he would have moved it in solemn silence; do you think after the able arguments which were adduced by his opponent a week or two ago, showing that the position taken by the member for Cumber-land was totally illegal and indefensible, that the First Minister would have moved his Bill in silence, and there was attached to it money, or profit or salary, but would not have replied to those arguments if arguments could have been adduced by him? No; the hon. member knows well that he could not, and therefore he discreetly and adroitly adopted the other course and moved his Bill, as I have said, in solemn silence. But, Mr. Speaker, further than that, the Bill of 1877, which was cited as a precedent, cannot be invoked by hon. members opposite, and why? Because they have been told, time and again, that if they only went as far as the Bill of 1877, and relieved the member for Cumberland from penalties, if they would state that he incurred those penalties unwittingly and ignorantly, both sides of the flouse would join in relieving him from them. But they go further than that. They do not stop there. Having acknowledged by their Bill that he has lost his seat, having acknowledged that the seat was void and empty, having acknowledged, in terms almost, that a writ should go out, they come here and say : We will reelect you; we will not refer to the electors of Cumberland the right to elect a successor, but we will elect you, and, in our omnipotence, we will declare you entitled to the seat. I am afraid we are establishing precedents which, in the near future, perhaps, and certainly in the future, will be found to be most pernicious. Last year you legislated an hon. member out of his seat; this year you are legislating a member into his seat. The hon. member smiles, but I would like to be sitting in this House and hearing him, if such a measure hal been proposed by his opponents. How he would have invoked the spirit of our Constitution, and the great necessities, in this the initial stage of our constitutional history, of starting upon fair and just and equitable lines, not laying down precedents from a party standpoint alone, not laying down precedents which can be justified from a party stand point alone, but precedents which are broad and general in their character, and based upon haw and justice and consti-tutional usage. What are we doing here? The hon. member is not laying down such a precedent. He is going further than over this Parliament has gone before. He is going further, I venture to say, than the English Parliament ever went. If he is not, let him cite a precedent in support of it. He is going further than any constitutional Parliament ever went, because he is declaring that a man whose seat is vacant shall be elected to fill it without asking the electors whether they are satisfied or not. Now, in order that we may understand this Act of Parliament which we are considering, this most important Act, correctly, let me refer the hon. gentleman to the measure he introduced and passed in the year 1858 He referred to it himself. I looked it up to see if it was analagous or apropos to this, and I find it is not, but on reading it over I find that the preamble recites what the hon. gontleman then understood to be the meaning and spirit of these Independence of Parliament Acts. The hon. gentleman, at that time, found there was a doubt as to whether all the Ministers had not violated the law by accepting their offices without going back to their constituents, and they recite that, by the British North America Act, the old laws of the several Provinces. respecting persons holding offices of profit or emolument at the nomination of the Crown, applied to the election of members to this House, and that certain gentlemen, naming them, had held such offices, and it was doubtful whether they were disqualified or not. But what is the recital in the preamble:

"And whereas the said offices, although no salary or emolument was attached to any of them at the time of the acceptance thereof by the persons aforesaid, respectively, or at the time of their said electico, res-pectively, may yet, by reason of the expectation that salaries or emolu-ments would be attached to them, be considered as offices of profit under the Grand attached to them, be considered as offices of profit under the Crown.²

Why, the hon. gent'eman then held, and declared in the preamble to an Act of Parliament, that an office, not because because there was reasonable expectation that some day profit or salary might be attached to it, was within the spirit if not within the letter of the Act. The hon. gentleman recited, therefore, that statutory relief was necessary. "It is consistent," he says, "with the spirit and intent of the Act," that those parties should be indemnified, and he went on and indemnified them. Now, there is a case, a very strong case to my mind, because it shows what were the views which the fathers of Confederation had as to the necessity of Independence of Parliament Acts, and as to the manner and spirit in which those Acts should be construed. He says, you must not construe an Act of this kind as you would a common Statute, which imposes a penalty for an offence, but you must see what is the spirit of it, and he says, although no salary was attached to these offices at the time, still there was an expectation that a salary would be attached to them, and, therefore, it comes within the spirit of the law, and we will pass legislation indomnifying them. He did; but how far did he go? The Act went on to refer to the case of Edward Mortimer Macdonald, and said he had been elected a member of the House of Commons for the county of Lunenburg; that, after being elected a member, he had accepted, from the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia, the office of Queen's Printer, and he was to be indemnified in the same way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, Well?

Mr. DAVIES. That was not an office connected with the Government of Canadu at all. That was at the beginning of Confederation, when it was not clearly understood whether such an office would disqualify or not, and, therefore to remove doubts, Mr. Macdonald was indemnified from the penalties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Still, he kept his scat under that clause.

Mr. DAVIES. Certainly. I have failed to see why any Act of Indemnity was necessary for Mr. Macdona d.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That may be, but the House thought so and legislated him in.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman thought, I suppose, as a matter of precaution, it was better to pass it, and he did pass it, but if it is a precedent, perhaps he will show what particular Statute or section that gentleman offended against. He cannot do so. It was merely from abundance of caution that was put in. How can that be cited as an authority for the position taken to-day, that a Minister of the Crown who has offended with his eyes open, who has taken his seat after notice from the press of the country, that he would be prosecuted, who has taken and held it illegally, and has introduced and promoted the most important Government measures of the Sossion—in what way can that old precedent be cited as a precedent for this? There is no analogy between them; none whatever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What about Mr. Perry's case?

Mr. DAVIES. I will come to that, and I will show that that will not help him out of the mire, in the slightest. What was Mr. Perry's case? It was a case when Prince Edward Island was entering Confederation. Mr. Perry had been Speaker of the Island House of Assembly. Mr. Perry had resigned to himself as such Speaker, and, being advised that there was some doubt whether he could do so or not, he resigned to the Lieutenant-Governor, he resigned to the Colonial Socretary, he resigned to all the officials in the colory, I believe, and he went to his election and was elected. After he was elected, the general dissolution took place. Mr. Perry again resigned, and to make matters doubly sure he went back and was re elected by a larger majority. He came before this House, and what was the question? As my hon. friend from Bothwell has mentioned, the electors elected him with a knowledge of all these facts. He came to the House and said: "It is a doubtful legal point whether I could resign the Speakership of the Local Assembly or not, and I ask the House to remove that doubt." What did the House do? The House recited all the facts; they recited that he had:

"Taken in good faith, so far as it was possible for him to do, every step in his power to divest himself of his position as a member of the legislative Assembly; and that according to the spirit and intent of the Act "-

Meaning the Act for the abolition of dual representation he was not disqualified from being a candidate. And it went on to declare that he was:

"Capable of being elected, and of sitting and voting in the House of Commons of Canada, notwithstanding any irregularity in his said resignation as a member of the Legislative Assembly."

That is all the House did—notwithstanding any irregularity in his original resignation, they declared him capable of being re-elected. But the facts connected with his resignation were all known to the electors. He never accepted office after he took his seat in this House. There was no analogy between the two cases at all, because the only question in Mr. Perry's case was, whether he had legally resigned a local office which he held in the Province before he came here at all, and while the Province was separate. He was not accused of offending against the Independence of Parliament Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Wasn't he?

Mr. DAVIES. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then he was, after that Act was passed.

Mr. DAVIES. He was not accused of offending against the Independence of Parliament Act; nor did he think at the time, nor do I think now, that the Act was necessary. It was done as a matter of precaution, because he was being persecuted, as the hon. member for Northumberland stated, by a lot of political pirates, who thought they would ruin him with suits. But the hon. gentleman declared him to be capable of being elected notwithstanding any irregularity in his resignation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, he was a qualified candidate. Ile went before the people and they elected him, with all the knowledge as to the resignation. There was no vacancy then. The hon. gentleman might declare his seat to be vacant; I will undertake to say that he would not have done so, and I will undertake to say there is not a gentleman on either side of the House who would have voted for such a harsh Bill. What is the hon. gentleman doing in this Bill? He not only relieves from penalty, but he says that Sir Charles Tupper ought not, by reason of his accepting or holding the office of High Commissioner, to cease to be a member of Parliament. But he had ceased to be a member of Parliament. If the Bill has any object at all, he had ceased to be a member of the House, and therefore, the hon, member for Bothwell argues it is a doubtful question whether you can make him, by a mere vote, a member of the House-whether he must not be re-elected by the people. Now, there is another point, and it is outside the salary question. It has always seemed to me very clear, as a lawyer, that when Sir Charles Tupper, as High Commissioner, went to England, when that commission authorizing him to discharge all the duties and exercise all the powers, to possess, and retain, and hold all the advantages which attach to that position, and when he accepted $5,000 of advantage, he clearly violated the first section of this Act. Supposing he accepted the office without salary, the question is, did he come within the meaning of the words " loes, wages, or allowances "? Now, when you come to construe that section, you must consider its history, and what do you find? Do you find, as an hon. gentleman opposite contend. ed, that these words are all to be construed in the same sense as a salary. Not at all. If you go back you will find that when that section was first passed it said that no person accepting or holding any office or employment in the service of the Crown to which an annual salary, or any fee, or wages, or allowance in lieu of a salary, is attached, should be disqualified. Very well. We had, after a time, the scandal in this House of a gentleman being paid—I forget how many thousand dollars—by an evasion of the Statute; he was paid monthly instead of yearly, and it was argued that he did not come within the strict words of the Statute; and the Legislature, to prevent the repetition of such scandals, to prevent the moral sense of the community from being shocked by seeing men who were believed to be independent retained by the Prime Minister at so much a month, came in and declared that hereafter no person accepting any office or employment, whether it be permanent or whether it be temporary, employment, whether there be a salary attached to it or not-leaving out the words "in lieu of a salary," and adding the words "fee, wages, or allowance," these words being used distinctly as opposed to salary; because in the original Act it reads, "in lieu of salary" showing that they meant the same thing. The words "in lieu" were left out, and they used here—"any fee, any salary, any wages, any allowance, or emolument or any profit of any kind ;" and I challenge any hon. member to suggest, in the English language, any words which could have covered the receipt of $5,000 in the way and manner in which Sir Charles Tupper has 'received it, better than these words used in that section. But you may argue that it is not a salary; so you may argue that it is not an allowance, or emolument; that it is not profit of any kind. Why, he took his commission with a clause inserted in it that he was to have all the advantages pertaining to the office. He knew, the Government knew at the time, and the public knew. because it was enacted in the Supply Bill, that the High Commissioner was to get $4 000 or $5,000 a year. He knew it was one of the advantages the commission was to give him, and he took it with his eyes open, and he took the money too; therefore, he directly violated the Act. When we turn up to see what the meaning of these words is, as given in the dictionaries, we find they mean "that which is allowed for expenses of maintenance." I think this $5,000 was allowed for that very purpose, or " something conceded as a compensation"-as a compensation for his expenditure, house rent, fuel, and other incidental expenses of that kind. Therefore, I say that when he took that commission, with all the advantages attached to his office, and when it was by statute declared that one of the advantages was to receive $1,000 or $5,000 a year, he directly and wilfully violated, not the spirit alone, but the letter of the Act, beyond all doubt or peradventure; and you cannot, by twisting the Act or the meaning of the word salary, get around the fact that he receives as part of his perquisites, as part of the advan-tages of his office, as an advantage that was allowed by Statute to him-it being in the Bill of supplies passed every year-the sum of $5,000 as an allowance for his expenses. I do not think it is creditable for hon. gentleman to contend that Sir Charles Tupper's services have been so meritorious that this House is justified in violating the Independence of Parliament Act in his favour. Sir Charles Tupper stands in no better position as regards this Act than any other hon. member of the House. If he was seeking to be relieved from a penalty only, then he might plead, not only that he sinned in ignorance, but his meritorious services. But when he is not pleading to be relieved from penalties, but is pleading to be legislated into his seat, it is not creditable to the lawyers of the House to use the argument that discussed in this House in a non-partizan manner, though I this should be done because his services are alleged to have do not know whether the public will judge of it in that been meritorious as High Commissioner. I do not reply to light, but such is my opinion-I say it is very extraordinary the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), be-, that hon. gentlemen opposite have thought more of the Mr. DAVIES.

cause all the lawyers on his side of the House have repudiated his arguments as untenable. The hon. gentleman's position is like the old trick of the thimble and the pea. One moment he is High Commissi mar; at another moment he is a member and Minister of Railways; one moment he is here, another moment he is there. And the hon. member for Jacques Cartier could not find him at all. He was not High Commissioner because he said there was no salary mentioned in the commission; he was not a member because his seat was voided; and an effort is now being made to put him back in his seat by virtue of an Act of Parliament. These are not arguments which should com. mend themselves to the sober sense of the House, and although the Bill may be carried, it will establish a dangerous precedent, a bad precedent, one not based on justice, and one which is in violation of the Statute law of the land, and which some day or other, I fear, may rise up in judgment against hon, gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I only ask the patience of the House a few moments, to state the impression I received from the debate of to day, as well as from the debate of the other day, on the question now before the House. I have been astonished, and I am sure hon. members of the House have felt as I have done, at the amount of ingenuity displayed, at the great efforts that have been made, at the great professional talent that has been exercised on the other side of the House to prove -what? That the hon. gentleman has done something which he himself said he did not do, and would not do; to make him say yes when he said no; and by technicalities, by hair-splitting and by taking clauses of the Statute and placing one against the other to say-what? That an hon. member of the House, and a member of the Government, had accepted, according to the terms of the Statute, an office of lucre, of profit and gain to him, when it is well known, when it is perfectly accepted by every one, that the hon. member did not accept an office of gain; but that before even the proposition was made to him to take that office and perform the duties for the country and the Government, the hon. gentleman said he would not accept an office of lucre, profit or gain. Why, Mr. Speaker, we have been kept here several hours-doing what? Discussing a clause in an Act, although the whole question is contained in a nutshell when we come to discuss the principle of the Act. When we come to the principle of the independence of Parliament, we find it is the acceptance of some position of gain and profit by an hon. momber, destroying his independence and disqualifying him from acting in an independent manner in the House and outside of the influence of the Crown. Have we not had it proved, and have not hon. gentlemen admitted it, not only that the office, and duties of the office, were performed without salary, but that the Order in Council which was passed provided that the law should not be evaded, but complied with; that the spirit which must pervade the action of the Gov. ernment and the conduct of hon. members should be maintained; and that this spirit of the law should not, any more than the letter of the law, be put aside. The Order in Council has been read, and I may be allowed to read a line of it. It says:

"And whereas Sir Charles Tupper has kindly consented to proceed to England, and there to perform the duties of the office for the present and without salary."

Has the hon. gentleman whose integrity, whose honour, whose name, whose fame, should be as dear to hon. members as the independence of this House, been properly treated in this discussion ? During this discussion, I will not attribute it to party feeling, for I am sure the question has been technicalities of the law in preserving the independence of Parliament, which has not been threatened, and not destroyed by the act we are discussing, than they have thought of the dignity of the House and of the duty of every hon. member; on both sides, to try and preserve, before the world, the honour, integrity, name and good fame of every one of our colleagues. Where do all the Statutes and precedents which have been quoted tend? They all tend to show that, in some instances, hon. members had unwittingly placed themselves in a position where doubts existed as to whether they had become disqualified; all those precedents and Statutes quoted showed that the parties in question had actually done something which they did not intend to do but which had disqualified them, and an Act was passed either to in-demnify them against penalties, or an Act was passed to remove any doubt that might exist, in giving them seats to which they were entitled. In the present case, the House has the uncontradicted evidence that the office accepted was without profit or gain and that it was intentionally and expressly declared that the duties of the office would be performed gratuitously and pro bono publico. The argument used by hon. gentlemen opposite has been this: You The argucannot, by an Act, take away the privilege from the people of Nova Scotia of electing any of their representatives in the House of Commons. You cannot, by an Act, declare that a man is not a member of Parliament, and re elect him. This is very well for a popular argument to go before the public. But the Acts quoted cover cases where doubts existed, as in the case of Mr. Perry, as to whether gentlemen were duly members of the House or not, and in that particular case, the Statute declared that he was a member of the House. He was made a member of the House by the Statute passed, not because the people did not think he was really a member, but because it removed all doubts on the subject. And this is the main feature of the present Bill. The First Minister does not say: I affirm that the hon. gentleman is guilty, that he is not a member of this House; I admit he has lost his seat, but I want Parliament to declare, at my dictation, that he is elected by this Parliament as a member of it. The right hon. gentleman has never thought of it-no man of common sense would ever think of such a proposition. But the right hon. gentleman says in his Bill: "Whereas, such an office has been held and such duties have been performed by a member of this House, who was also a member of the Government, and whereas, those duties have been performed without any salary, or profit, or gain to him, we propose this Bill, not because we think that he is disqualified, but to remove all doubts in the minds of those who might have doubts -and I give credit to hon. gentlemen opposite that, judging by their arguments, they at least have doubts-I say that by the express language of the Bill he shall not be disqualified, he shall not be any more trinted with the accusation, he shall not be any more suspected of having been disqualitiol or of having offended against the Independence of Parliament Act." The hon. Minister of Railways has not been in the position to be unduly influenced by the Crown, and by passing this Act we shall not cease to cherish the privileges of Parliament and shall not be suspected of being subject to iuflience of the Crown, light as that influence is in this country. We must cherish those principles and liberties, but we must not carry our jealousy of our rights to such a point that it would be injurious to members of the House who, under such circumstances as those which surround this case, have been performing duties of a high character, and who, in advance, have declared that they would only perform them for the sake of their country, for the good of the Government, and for the good of the people. Hon. gentlemen have been speaking of the $1,000 special expenses in the previous debate on this subject, but I must give credit to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), for having to-night lifted the discussion tion the fact of whether a few hundreds, or a few thousand dollars, had been spent in personal expenses. I put this question to hon. gentlemen who have spoken of these personal expenditures: Suppose a member of the Government should leave here and go to England and perform the duty of another officer who would have been appointed by the Crown; supposing that in his travels, and not having a salary, he is obliged to spend a few dollars out of his own pocket. When he comes back he is asked: Well, you have been doing duty for the Government; have you been spending any money for travelling expenses? He would reply: Yes; I have disbursed so much. He is repaid the amount he has disbursed; I would ask hon. gentlemen would that hon. member be in any way, would he be to the extent of a cent or a dollar poorer or richer by his appointment when he comes back to his duties as a Minister of the Crown in Canada? Has he had any profit, any lucre, when he returns to resume his duties ? I say that he has received no consideration for his services, and that, pecuniarily, he is in the same position that he was when he left the seat of Government to perform those duties. I have been reading to-day some precedents from an old book written by Hatsell, from which we can learn what was the origin of the Acts for the pro-tection of the independence of members of Parliament. They originated at a time when the Crown was misusing the power of the Crown to corrupt members of Parliament, either by giving offices or money, or decorations, or other things of that kind. It was then that these Acts began to be inscribed in the Statutes of Parliament. We find that it was considered that certain officers in the army and navy, ambassadors, and others, accepting offices of that kind, were not considered as having violated the Independence of Par-liament when they accepted these offices, with payments from the Crowm attached, and that long before the Acts exempting them from disqualification, were passed. And why? It was because their services were required for high public duties, or for the procuring of special information for the general good of the community; and it was not right to put them on the same level as those who accepted sinecures or offices of emolument for the purpose of obtaining profit for themselves. These offices were exactly similar to the duties performed by members of the Gov-ernment holding portfolios under the Crown. This old writer says:

"It is not a question proper for me to discuss here, where the line should be drawn with respect to the degree of influence which the Ministers of the Orown can safely be entrusted. The idea, on the one hand of excluding from the House of Commons every man who holds an office in the Government of the country, and who, from that situation, is the best qualified to give the best information relative to the Department which he belongs to, is too absurd to be maintained for a moment."

A precedent is quoted to the effect that on the 18th and 19th of April, 1714, a question was moved, whether the office of Commissaries, to treat with Commissaries from France, was a new created office, within the meaning of the Act of Sixth Queen Ann, and it passed in the negative. The office of Commissary was nearly the same in title, and very much the same in its duties, as the office of High Commissioner, and it was decided that the holders of that office were not excluded from their seats in Parliament. On the 17th of January, 1717, Lord Middleton, Lord Chancellor of Ireland:

"Desires the sense of the House whether he is incapacited to sit, in respect to his being continued in a Commission for Ireland, which Commission has been renewed since his election, but it is an offixe of no profit. The House are of opiaion that he is not within the meaning of the Sixth of Anne, chap. seven, and he accordingly came into the House."

and for the good of the people. Hon, gentlemen have been speaking of the $4,000 special expenses in the previous debate on this subject, but I must give credit to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), for having to-night lifted the discussion to a higher platform, and for not having taken into considera-which the same questions have arisen under similar circumstances. I say we must be guided by precedents in Eng-land when the principle involved is the same. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat was, I think, rather indiscreet in his argument. I believe that nearly all the precedents he has cited point to exactly the same conclusion to which I have arrived, on the Bill now before the House. Who is exempted from that disqualifying clause if we take the strict letter of the law? The members of the Cabinet are exempt. If I wanted to go as far as my hon. friend opposite, I would argue that Ministers are altogether exempted from the clause which declares that office holders are ineligible to hold seats in Parliament, not only the members of the Cabinet, but also any other member occupying an office which may hereafter be created to be held by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, and entitling him to be a Minister of the Crown, are exempted. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had argued that disqualification is the holding of an office of emolument under the Crown. It cannot be, since, according to the proposition of the hon. gentleman, Ministers of the Crown are exempted from the operation of the first clause.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon, member for West Durham may laugh, but he must not carry my argument farther than it goes. I am only enlarging the proposition of the hon. member for Queen's, and with him, I say that, taking the strict letter of the law, those whose names are men-tioned in the second clause are exempted from the first clause, they are eligible, and not disqualified, provided they are not disqualified otherwise, from setting here as members of the House. It cannot be argued that disqualification means, in that case, the holding of an office as contemplated in the first section. No; there are other disqualifications. The Act for the election of members says that a certain class of people cannot be elected members of the House. A man who is not a British subject, a man under a certain age, a Judge of the land, a minister of the church, cannot be elected to this House. I understand the hon. member for Queen's does not admit that his proposition went further than to say that Ministers of the Crown are only exempt from the disqualification enacted by the first clause of the Act quoad their Ministerial officer. However, I say that the argument which was put forward by the hon. member for West Toronto was not, after all, to be scorned, or set aside with such contempt as it was. Whenever you want to impose a heavy penalty, you must interpret your Statute in the strictest and reverest sense of the letter, as well as the spirit of the law. Every interpretation of the law, favourable to the accused, must be accepted with deference. But, Sir, I do not support my argument in favour of the Bill upon that pretension. My argument stands upon a broader basis. I say that the spirit of the law has not been contravened by the action of the hon. Minister of Railways. I say that the letter of the law has been complied with by him with great care, and by the Minister who recommended that Sir Charles Tupper should be appointed to go to England and perform the duties of High Com-missioner, temporarily and without salary; and I say that the Government, as well as the recipient of the office, had well weighed beforehand what they were doing. They did not want to act against the spirit of the law, against the principle of the independence of Parliament; and if we do not want to restrict the question to the narrow, trifling aspect of a few dollars paid for personal expenses—and this aspect of the case has been abandoned to night—I say it is not because the statute has said that the salary might be attached to the office, that ing carefully considered the debates, having studied the the person accepting that office without salary should be suthorities and precedents cited, I must say I am not disgnalified. The Act creating the office of High Commis- convinced that the second clause of this Bill is established.

sioner, says that the Government may pay a salary, provided it is not above $10,000; they may pay less; they may pay nothing. And I say that a member of the Administration cannot be regarded as in the same position as a member of Parliament, so far as independence or the influence of the Crown is concerned. Ministers of the Crown are in receipt of money from the Crown, and are in a certain manner, under the influence of the Crown, if influence it may be called; but it is not undue influence, because the position they occupy, and the high duties they have to perform for the country, prevent them from being suspected of being subject to any influence except the lawful influence of their own constituents and the honour and prestige of the country. and the honour and prestige of the Crown and the country. I challenge my hon. friends on the other side of the House to contradict me when I say that there is not a man in this Parliament, on either side of the House, who believes, for a single moment, that the hon. Minister of Railways accepted the office with a view to any personal profit. In accepting it, he acted according to the spirit of the Constitution and the privileges of this House. This question should not have been discussed here but should have been left for discussion to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, and in that view I say the hon. gentleman was wrong in saying that at the second reading of this Bill we would adopt the principle. That is the ordinary rule, but that is not the case when on the second reading of the Bill the promoter announces that he only puts the facts of the case before the House in order that they may be referred to a Committee. The case is laid before the House frankly and squarely. After the affirmation of the legal position assumed by the hon. Minister of Railways, and solely to provoke a vote of this House, a doubt is expressed whether the fact mentioned in this Bill implies an infraction of the law, and to solve that doubt it is asked that it be referred to the proper Committee. In concluding my remarks, I must say that I wish the hon. members on the other side, in treating this question, had considered a little more our dignity and the duty we owe to respect and protect the honour, the dignity and integrity of our colleagues in this House. This should be our first thought, and then we should think of our privileges and independence as members of this Parliament.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise with great diffidence to say a word on this question. After the able way in which it has been discussed by those hon. gentlemen who may be considered, from their legal attainments, to be most competent to give an opinion on it, I will not attempt to make any lengthy remarks, but I do not wish to give a vote without a few words of explanation. I shall vote for the second reading of the Bul, not because I believe the second clause has been at all established by anything yet said in the House, but because I think we owe it to the hon. Minister of Railways to ensure to him the most ample protection against any liability he may have incurred, but which this Bill declares he has not incurred. This, I admit, is not a logical proposition; it is hard to find anything logical about this measure, and even those prepared to accept it in perfect faith must come to the conclusion, that after this House, by its solemn vote, shall have declared the seat to be not vacant, we refer to a Committeethe question whether, after all, the seat is vacant or inot, and I cannot conceive any proposition more indefensible. I vote for this Bill because I believe that a protection should be given the Minister of Railways. In discussing this question, no man appreciates more highly than I the service this hon. gentleman has renduced, whether as High Commissioner or as Minister of Railways; but hav-

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

On that simple proposition, I should feel constrained to vote | against the second reading of the Bill, were that the only question before the House; and therefore, in giving the vote I intend to give, I wish it to be understood that I am not supporting the proposition that the hon. Minister of Railways has not vacated his seat. Driven by some current not understood, the ship of State has drifted into shoals and quicksands, so far that the pilot finds that he cannot avoid Scylla on the one side and Charybdis on the other; he therefore calls upon his crew to jump overboard, and by main strength lift the vessel over the breakers and land her safely in the harbour. But that, I think, is an ignominious way of getting into a harbour. If there is a doubt, there is a constitutional way of solving it. The hon. Minister of Railways should have taken the course of going to his constituents, and then, with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, those whom he has hitherto represented would have sent him back to Parliament with a larger majority than he had before. I cannot conceal my conviction that that would have been the proper course to pursue. Although I am a young member of the House and have not the legal attainments of many hon. gentlemen who have spoken, yet I think on this question every man is bound to vote according to his convictions of what is right, and not according to what his party say he ought to do. This is not a question of policy, but a question of right or wrong, and I feel bound, in giving the vote I intend to give, to state my convictions with regard to one on the principles involved in this measure.

Mr. WELDON. This question, put as the hon. gentleman from Muskoka has put it, is simply an Act of Indemnity for an act which, the hon. Secretary of State says, has been committed unwittingly and unknowingly, not by the hon. Minister of Railways, but by the Government themselves. In that case, I think there would be very little difficulty in passing the Bill, for it would receive general acceptation at the hands of the House. This Bill however involves three propositions. The first is one which makes a radical change in the Independence of Parliament Act and will involve serious consequences; that section ought not to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If the Government choose to change the Act providing for the Independence of Parliament, it is their duty, as responsible Ministers of the Crown, to bring down that measure to Parliament. So far as my parliamentary experience goes, this is the first instance of a Bill in which so grave a principle is involved, has been referred to a Committee. With regard to the other portions of the Bill, it has been pointed out that the second section declares the hon. member for Cumberland shall continue to be a member; and the third clause indemnifies him for what he has done. That is practically how the Bill stands. By the first section, the Government wish the Act to be amended, to make some improvement in it so as to make parties eligible to the House; the second declares that section is unnecessary because the hon. gentleman did not violate the Act; and the third declares that if he did, he shall be indemnified. The hon. Secretary of State contended that the Order in Council was the agreement by which Sir Charles Tupper accepted the office of High Commissioner, and that he ac-cepted it without salary. That is practically to contend that an Order in Council may override the law. But you cannot override the law. We have had this week an Order in Council declared by the Supreme Court to be of no effect, because it did not comply with the law. It must do so. If the law declares that a salary is attached to the office of High Commissioner, no Order in Council can alter the law. The hon. Secretary of State and the hon, member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty) put forward the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty) put forward ("The disqualification, however, attaches immediately upon accept-his proposition, that any Minister of the Crown can accept jug an office of profit under the Statute, so that the subsequent resigna-any office that is exempt from the operation of the first section, but without salary.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That was the proposition of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon, gentleman misunderstood me. I said that a Minister of the Crown, as such, was exempted from the provisions of the first section; that the Minister of Railways, as Minister of Railways, we exempt from the first section.

Mr. WELDON. As I anderstood my hon. friend from Queen's, the acceptance of a specific office as a Minister of the Crown by a member of the Privy Council, was exempted from the operation of the first section. It was the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty) who said he could hold any other office while a Minister of the Crown. The logical conclusion from that is that, assuming the contention of the hon. member for Toronto is right, the bon. the Minister of Railways can, while he holds that office, hold also the office of Commissioner and be a member of this Honse; but, if he resigned as Minister of Railways, en instanti he would cease to be a member of this House. But hon. gentlemen, in arguing from that section, forget the last words of the section. There are two provisions with regard to a Minister. First, when he accepts the office, he vacates his seat. He stands precisely in the same position as an officer under the first section, but he has the right to be elected again, if his constituents will return him, and to retain his seat and his office as a Minister of the Crown; and also, provided that he is not otherwise disqualified. It has been put forward that perhaps that might mean that he might be an infant or an alien, but neither an infant or an alien can hold office as a Minister of the Crown, and we must look and see what were the other disqualifications. One of these is that no Minister of the Crown should hold any office under which he is disqualified from holding a seat in this House. The first section is general in its provisions, and declares that no person shall hold a seat in this House who holds an office to which a salary, allowance, and so forth, or profit of any kind is attached. The second ection cuts that down by allowing members of the Privy Council, who are Ministers of the Crown, as such, to hold their seats, unloss they are otherwise lisqualified; that is, if they came within the operation of the first section in any other way, the position of Minister of the Crown will not remove that disqualification, and they are not entitled to hold a seat in the House. That is the proposition. It is a question under the statute, and the whole purview of this Bill is the best evidence to show that that Act has the meaning which has been put forward by hon, members on this side. In order to construe an Act, we have to look to the Act which it repeals in order to see the mischief it was intended to remedy, as put forward by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron). What was the mischief? The previous Act had the words, "salary or in lieu of salary, and upon that a case did occur which was held not to be within the Act, and this Act was passed to make it salary or wages of any kind. Now, there is another proposition I put forward. By the Act of 1880, the High Commissioner is by law to receive a salary. Then, by law, by that Act, to that office a salary is attached. No Order in Council can dispense with that. Nothing but the Act of Parliament can remove that, and I say that no formal renunciation of that can do away with the express directions and provisions of the Act. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty) read this from Todd's "Parliamentary Government":

"Thus, the acceptance of an office from the Crown, accompanied by a formal renunciation of any salary, &c., does not disqualify."

But read what follows :-

tion of such office before the meeting of Parliament, and the refusal to accept of any salary, involving the question of di. qualification arising out of the same, will not save the seat."

Now, we must see to what authority Mr. Todd refers. Any lawyer who has any experience will know that frequently, when we refer to the authorities upon which the propositions in text books are put forward, we find that the propositions are not borne out. We find that Mr. Todd refers, in the portion read by the hon. member for Toronto, to Mr. Bathurst's case in May's "Parliamentry Practice." On turning to May, we find he puts forward exactly the same language, we find that this is, in fact, copied from May, and we find that May refers to a passage in the life of Lord Sidmouth as the authority upon which he formulates that principle. In turning up that book, we find it was not a question that was brought before Parliament, it was not a solemn decision of Parliament, but we find that in consequence of a difficulty which occurred in Lord Sidmouth's Government, when he could not get Mr. Robert Peel, afterwards Sir Robert Peel, to accept office at that time, finding it was important that the office should be filled ad interim by a member of the Government, he wrote to Mr. Bathurst asking him to accept the office ad interim, and he says:

"It is the opinion of Lord Liverpool and Lord Castlereagh, and I con-fers it is mine, that the office of President of the Board (f Control should be associated at present with that of some other person now a member of the Government."

The note at foot of page says that, after much persuasion and suggesting various objections, which were all overruled, Mr. Bathurst consented to the arrangement, on the understanding that he was not to receive any emolument. He accepted the office on the 30th January, 1821, and it was not until the 5th February, 18.2, that he was succeeded at the Board of Control by the right hon. Chas. Williams Wynn. That is the only precedent cited, and the question was never raised in Parliament, and his legal right was never tested; but, upon the fact that he did hold that office, it is put forward as a principle, as if settled by some case, that a member can hold an office without profit. I say that this office had a salary attached to it by the law of 1880, that it was intended for the purpose of keeping up the dignity and importance of the office that it should have a salary, and the very case is in point which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier cited from the Jurist, the corporation of Liverpool against Wright, where an agreement entered into between the Corporation and the Recorder, that he should be paid a salary instead of fees, was held to be void; not that the appointment was void, but the agreement was Among the grounds put forward were : first, that void. there should be no bargain in respect of an office of trust, because a person accepting an office of trust can make no bargain in respect of that office; and, secondly, because the law presumes that all the fees are required for the purpose of enabling him to uphold the dignity and perform the duties of his office. So in this case, the law did provide a salary to enable the High Commissioner to uphold the dignity and perform the duties of his office, and the Order in Council, so far as regards that salary, was of no effect, not to the extent my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier would carry it out, but to the extent of these words being repugnant to the meaning and intention of the Statute. I will assume, it is true, that Sir Charles Tupper has taken no salary; I will assume that the argument of the hon. member for Queen's, in regard to the allowance, is not a sound one. Assuming that it was still an office of profit, and was created by Statute as an office of profit, the prin-ciple is that the acceptance of that office affects the seat, according to the proposition I have read from Todd, follow.) stanced the case of Mr. Ferry, in Prince Edward Island. Now, ing the quotation made by the hon. member for Toronto the great objection that has been raised to this Bill is not so (Mr. Beaty). Then the disqualification follows immediately much that it attempts to indemnify the Minister of Railways on accepting an office of profit under the statute. Now, —if he has violated the Independence of Parliament Act—

there is no question about that. A case occurred in 1840 or 1841, when Sir Edward Sugden was appointed Lord Chancellor of Ireland. He was at that time member for Ripon. It was said he had accepted the office of Lord Chancellor, but he took his seat in the House and continued to vote. Attention was called to it by Sir Thomas Wildo, who was a member of the House, and a discussion took place. Sir Robert Peel endeavoured to continue to Sir Edward his seat, that the patent had not issued, and that it was necessary the patent should issue before he vacated his seat. There was great doubt that the proposition put forward by him was correc', and the general feeling in the House of Commons was, that it was a strained construction of the Act, that Sir Edward, after accepting the office of Lord Chancellor of Ireland, had not vacated his seat as member for Ripon. We find that principle is laid down in several other cases which have been referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell. Now, Mr. Speaker, all that is with regard to the second section, of which so much has been said. I think the attention of the House has not been sufficiently called to the first section. It makes a radical change in regard to the Act concerning the indepen-It reads as follows :dence.

" Provided further, that nothing in this section shall render ineligible "Provided instant, that nothing in this section shall render ineligible any person holding any office, commission or employment of the nature or description mentioned in sub-section (a) of this section, as a member of the House of Commons, or shall disqualify him from sitting or voting therein, if by his commission or other instrument of appointment it is declared or provided that he shall hold such office, commission or em-ployment without any salary, fees, wages, allowauces or emolument, or other profit of any kind that may be attached thereto."

That at once changes the position of every member of this House and every member of the Government. According to the argument of the Secretary of State, and of the member for Toronto, any member can be appointed to any office, and have his expenses paid, and still hold his seat in the House. It strikes me that the whole principle of the Act is that when members become Ministers of the Crown, when a change of Government takes place, the members when a change of Government takes place, the members who take office must go back to their constituents to see if they approve the course they have taken. That is the principle; but if it is the case that any Minister of the Crown, without any exception, can take an office without salary and hold his seat, not only during one Session but during the whole Parliament, and have a vote every year in the Estimates to reimburse his expenses, then any member of this House, simply with a commission, may travel across the water, or go to any por-tion of the world he pleases, and have all his expenses borne by the country. I ask hon. members opposite if they are prepared to make that precedent. It is outside the case of Sir Charles Tupper. It is with a principle that we are dealing now. It seems to me that if the Government had represented to this Parliament, before this Bill was brought in, that under a mistaken view of the law, Sir Charles Tupper had unintentionally violated the Act in accepting this office, the Government might and should then have brought in a Bill of Indemnity relieving him from penalty; but at the same time, to tack on to that Bill a whole general law with regard to this subject, is quite another thing. and we have got now, in accepting this Bill, to make the radical change contained in the first section and to accept the two propositions of the hon. member; first, that although Sir Charles Tupper has accepted the office, he has never ceased to be a member; and second, that he is not liable to penalties. This Bill is different from any other Bill ever brought forward. To tack this on to the Bill is to strike at the whole principle of the independence of Parliament, both in the Act passed in 1867 and the Act of 1878.

Mr. BRECKEN. My hon. colleague, in his argument, inas that it is legislating him into this House; that we are discharging the functions that properly belong to the elec-tors of Cumberland. Now, with respect to the case of Mr. Perry, I happened to be a member of the Government at the time, and the case, as I now recollect it, was this: There was no provision in our Local Acts for a Speaker to resign. Dual representation was not permissible. Mr. Perry went to his constituency and was returned to this Parliament at the Dominion Election, in 1873. Before that time, he was ineligible-there is no doubt about that. The question was thoroughly looked into, and there was no doubt about the question in that Province, and that opinion was backed up by the action taken by this Parliament, when they thought it necessary to pass an Act of Indemnity. They actually made him a member of Parliament by an Act of the Dominion Parliament, because no one doubted that he was ineligible at the time. There was no provision in our Island laws, by which the Speaker of the Local Legislature could resign: it is true that his constituents elected him, knowing that to be the fact. I suppose every man is assumed to know the law, but practically, and in fact, it was not known. The question did not come up until after Mr. Porry was elected, if I remember aright. I was Attorney General of the Province at the time, and the question was not brought to the attention of the public until after he was elected for this Parliament. At that time he was ine'igible; still, Parliament passed an Act to confirm him in his seat. I am not going to say whether Parliament was right or wrong. Dual representation was illegal, and they might have looked upon that as a technical violation of the law, but not a violation of its spirit, inasmuch as Mr. Perry had resigned. I think my colleague is hardly correct in had resigned. I think my conceque is hardly correct in saying that Mr. Perry went all around the political compass before resigning. I think he made an attempt to resign; however, he was not eligible. Now, Mr. Speaker, assuming that there is a grave doubt in this case, all the analogy I see between this case and Mr. Perry's is, that Mr. Perry was altogether ineligible under the law; that there use a defect in the law index which Mr. Perry that there was a defect in the law under which Mr. Perry was elected--a law which permitted dual representation. What is the case in regard to the Minister of Railways? Will hon. gentlemon say, when they look at the spirit and intention, that it was a gross and flagrant violation of the principles involved in the Independence of Parliament Act? I say, no. If hon. gentlemen will look at the matter in the calm, impartial spirit recommended by the Socretary of State, they will come to the conclusion—I am assuming, for argument's sake, that the Act has been infringed-that if there was an infringement it was a technical one. What is the spirit and intention of the Independence of Parliament Act? It is to prevent the Cabinet of the day from using undue and improper influence and inducements to lead members to sacrifice their independence, that members shall be placed beyond the reach of temptation, and that the Government of the day shall be powerless to tempt them, either by offers of office or distribution of patronage, to withdraw from the allegiance to the party which they think it their duty to support. But here is the Minister of Railways, a member of the Cabinet himself, a prominent member, and while we are not supposed to know what takes place in the Cabinet Council, we are satisfied, from the prominent position he occupies in the country and on the floor of Parliament, that he is one of the members who largely moulds the policy of the Government. How can it, therefore, be said that the Minister has violated the spirit of the Act, or that the principle established by the Act, for protecting hon. members from being unduly influenced, has been in any way infringed. If a doubt exists, it is a technical one. How was the appointment made? Here is a Canadian statesman offered the position of High Commissioner. In the most open manner possible he accepts one of the mist public positions in the gift of the Govern-I ment, and he goes to England as High Commis-sioner to represent the Dominion. Can any hon. mem-ber think that he was actuated by a desire that was unpatriotic and discreditable to him as a public man. Whatever he did, whether it was right or wrong, he did openly and above board, and in such an open and public way that if the Independence of Parliament Act were infringed, the Minister could not expect to avoid the matter being brought up. It is a case quite different to that of a member who takes a contract on the sly, for this was done most openly. Then hon gentlemen have raised a very nice point, saying that the Act declares that the High Commissioner is to receive a salary not exceeding $10,000 a year, and that the commission under the Great Seal which appointed Sir Charles Tupper, sets forth that he accepts the office without salary. It may be a very nice point whether taking the appointment under such a commission, Sir Charles Tupper could not afterwards claim the salary specified in the Act. What was stated by the First Minister? He said the Minister of Railways was in ill-health, and was going home to England for a short time, and his colleagues thereupon suggested that he should fill this office for a time. When the hon. gentleman accepted the office on that suggestion, he specially stated that he took it without salary. It is no argument, in construing the Act, to allude to the very valuable services which that distinguished statesman has rendered to the country. It is a reason, however, why the question should be discussed solely on its merits, and no reflection be attempted to be cast on that hon. gontleman, for I am sure the duties which he performed as High Commissioner-and I read them this morning in one of the journals of the day-were very onerous, and saved the country an immense amount of money. I admit, as I have said, that this is no argument in construing the Act; but we cannot forget the case of Mr. Perry, who was ineligible to sit here and yet who sat here in 1878, by virtue of an Act of the Dominion Parliament, emanating from hon. gentlemen who then held the reins of power. The present case may be looked upon as a techincal violation of the law. Assuming the Minister of Railways to have been guilty of a technical violation of the law, the spirit of the law has not been encroached upon; there has been no attempt to interfere with the independence of Parliament; but the hon, gentleman's course has been above board and rebuts the presumption of attempting to act in a manner which the Act is intended to prevent. I think Parliament will not be establishing a dangerous precedent in saying that if a doubt exists that doubt should be removed. My colleague (Mr. Davies) stated, and I was sorry to hear him say it, that perhaps one reason why the Minister of Railways adopted this course was, because he did not intend to come back and take his seat in Parliament. What is the use of imputing such a motive, when an hon, gentleman, whose constitution was impaired, owing to the great length of time he had devoted himself to public duties, went to England under such circumstances. There is another point which I wish to mention. If this Act does pass, I do not think that the most out and out opponent of the measure will be able to impute to this side of the House, or to the Conservative party, that they find it necessary to legislate Sir Charles Tupper into Parliament. I admit that that is no argument to apply to the consideration of the Statute, but still it has an important bearing upon the motives which influence hon. gentlemen in voting for the Bill. Sir Charles Tupper is a statesman who occupies as p ominent a position in Nova Scotia as the position occupied in Ontario by the right hon. First Minister, by the hon. gentleman who loads the Opposition, by the late hon. George Brown, or by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He represented that Pro-vince for twenty-nine years, and he came here the sole Conservative and advocate of Confederation from that Province, and he has reaped a reward that has fallen to the lot of few public men. He has seen his most able and determined opponents, year after year, sitting side by side with him, and as I heard an hon. gentleman say a few years ago, in alluding to his political career, if he commands a large majority he owes it to his great abilities as a states-Under these circumstances, I say that no hon. man. gentleman can say that we had any fear about the re-election of Sir Charles Tupper, for the county of Cumberland. Therefore, I say, that those hon. gentlemen who may think proper to vote for this Bill, vote for it as hon. gentlemen voted to sustain Mr. Perry in remaining in Parliament, because there was a technical objection in the Act.

EASTERN EXTENSION RAILWAY.

Sir UHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain pro- that the Government of Nova Scotia would encounter in Mr. BRECKEN.

posed Resolution (page 825) to authorise the acquisition for the Dominios, from the Gove ment of Neva Scotia, of the Eastern Extension Railway from New Glasgow to the Gut of Canso, and the Steam Forry in connection therewith, together with the rights of the said Province in the Truro and Pictou Branch Railway. He said: After having had the honour of occupying the attention of the House at its present stage for so long a period, I shall trespass as briefly as possible on the attention of the House in moving the resolution which I have in my hand. I may say, Sir, that it will be in the recollection of the House that several years ago, when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was leading the House, the policy of appropriating the Pictou Branch of the Intercolonial Railway, for the purpose of providing for the extension of the railway system of Nova Scotia, was submitted to the consideration of this House. On that occasion, Sir, I gave that proposition my very hearty and cordial support, as I believed it would be a measure which would be advantageous to the country. It will be also recollected that the Manager of the Intercolonial Railway, at that time, took very strong exception to the proposal to transfer the Pictou Branch -to cut it off from being part of the Intercolonial Rail-way. Mr. Brydges, who is thoroughly acquainted with the operation of the Intercolonial Railway, took the ground that the Branch from Truro to Pictou was not only the most profitable portion of the Intercolonial Railway, but that it was, in fact, the only portion of that railway that was profitable, and that yielded a net profit in return for its operation. The objections to severing that portion of the Intercolonial Railway from the Intercolonial system was urged also on other grounds than its being the most valuable portion of the road. I must confess, Sir, that the further experience in connection with the operation of the Intercolonial Railway has proved the soundness of the view which Mr. Brydges urged, as to the importance of its being retained as a portion of the Intercolonial Railway system. The Branch from Truro to Pictou involves the connection between the large coal mining districts of Picton and the city and harbour of Halifax; and from its important connection with the transport of coal, and the coaling of steamers at the port of Halifax, and the development of the various industries which largely depend upon the coal region, from a variety of causes, it was found that it would be attended with great inconvenience and disadvantage, and that, in fact, parting with it would, to a large extent, dislocate the railway system as it had been carried on. The Governmen', however, of which the hon. gentleman was the leader, having put an Act upon the Statute Book under which the Pictou Branch was to become the property of the parties who would extend the railway system in Nova Scotia, that of course, required to be carried out. It was hoped, in the first instance, that it would not only promote the construction of a sailway from the town of New Glasgow to the Gut of Canso, but an extension of the railway system in the Island of Cape Breton. It was subsequently found that the best terms that could be obtained by the Government of Nova Scotia to secure the extension of the road to the Gut of Canso, involved not only the necessity of taking over the Branch from Truro to Pictou, but of paying some $600,000 over and above the value of the Pictou Branch. The House is familiar with the difficulties that arose between the contractors and the Government of Nova Scotia; and also with the facts of the transfer of the Pictou Branch. That was finally settled here, I think, by an Act of 1879, which provided that the Branch would be handed over when the contractors had completed the line. That line has been practically completed from Glasgow to Picton, and the ques-tion came up as to its transfer. The Government acquired the right to the Picton Branch; negotiations ensued between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government here in regard to that question; and looking to the difficulties operating a comparatively short line of railway, looking to the increased expenditure that would be involved, looking to the necessity that would arise of increasing the rates upon these roads, and looking to the dislocation of trade that was likely to result from the severence of the Branch, from Truro to Pictou, from the Intercolonial Railway system, it was finally agreed, between the present Government of Nova Scotia and this Government, that we should practically take the position of the Government of Nova Scotia and pay the amount of money they were obliged to pay to the contractors for the Eastern Extension, and that, subject to the sanction of the Legislature of Nova Scotia and this Parliament, this Government should retain the Branch from Truro to Pictov, and should acquire the Eastern Extension Railway from New Glasgow to the Gut of Canso. I may say that although in that particular I believe I entertain a different view from that of a large portion of the party with which I am connected in the Province of Nova Scotia—I refer to that in connection with the administration of local affairs-I am of opinion that the arrangement that has been arrived at is in the interest of the counties through which this portion of railway runs. I believe this policy is also in the interest of the Province of Nova Scotia as well as of the Dominion of Canada. 1 believe it will not involve any additional expenditure on the part of the Government of this country. The portion of the Intercolonial Railway, between Truro and Pictou, is the only portion that pays a considerable amount of net profit over and above the expenses of operation; and I think the result of this transaction will be that we shall stand in quite as good a financial position at the end of the year as we should if we had lost the Pictou Branch. Regarding, also, the interests of the various industries of Nova Scotia, especially the connection between the coal mining interest of Nova Scotia and the harbour and city of Halifar, I think it will be found that the policy propounded in this resolution is a policy not only in the interest of Nova Scotia, but in the interest of Canada. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is necessary to discuss this question at any length, because I believe the policy which the Government have adopted will meet with the cordial approval of both sides of the House.

Mr. VAIL. I do not intend to oppose the passage of these resolutions; but, as I was a member of the Government in 1877, when the Act was passed authorizing the Government to transfer the Pictou Branch to any company that would construct a road from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, with a steam ferry accross the Strait, I feel that I may be permitted to refer to a few circumstances which have occured since that time, and which have led up to the legislation now proposed. In the first place, it must have been the object of the Government in 1877, in making a transfer of that property, that the property so transferred would result in a benefit to the company constructing the road: and I hold that if it had been intended to hamper the transfer in any way, so as to make the road valueless to the company, alter it became possessed of it, it would not be carrying out the object for which the Government intended the road in the first place. The Act of 1877 not only contemplated the transfer of the road after the construction of the line from New Glasgow to Canso, but it contemplated the transter of the road after $400,000 had been expended upon its construction if the company demanded it; and the object of that was to further assist, if possible, the company, and to enable them to complete the road. A company was formed soon after the Act was passed; they commenced the con-struction of the road and went on with it until 1879; when there was some difficulty in carrying out the arrange ments. Either the work was not being done in a manner satisfactory to the Government, or there was some defect in the charter, or some other difficulty, which resulted in a Government were in a position to receive it. Nothing more combined arrangement and agreement being entered into at was done in reference to this matter, except that the Local

Ottawa, between the Dominion Government, the Local Government, and the company. Under that agreement, the road was not transferable until its completion from New-Glasgow to the Straits of Canso, and it was provided that : " in the event of the said two lines of railway and ferry becoming the property of the Nova Scotia Government." The Eastern Extension Railway should be completed by that Government. Sub-section C of clause one of the agreement reads :

(c) That in the event of the said two lines of railway and ferry becoming the property of the Nova Scotia Government under the preceding sub-clause before the said Eastern Extension Railway and ferry are completed, clause before the said bastern by tension kallway and ferry are completed, e upped and established, the said last named railway and ferry shall, with all reasonable despatch, be completed, equipped and established by the Nova Scotia Government and the said two lines and ferry shall be therea/ter efficiently and continuously operated by the Nova Scotia Government to the satisfaction of the Governor General of the Dominion Government to the satisfaction of the Governor General of the Dominion in Council, at a fair and reasonable tariff of charges which shall be made and established by the Nova Scotia Government, subject to the approval of the Government of the Dominion, and which shall only be altered or amended with the assent and approval of the gaid last-named Government."

It will be observed here that this agreement especially provides for the road falling into the hands of the Government before it is completed, and that on the extension of the road between New Glasgow to Canso, and its equipment, the Local Government, having become the successors of the company, shall be entitled to receive the Pictou Branch upon certain conditions. Under an arrangement subsequently made with the company, the Nova Scotia Government took the power to take over the road from the company, including all their rights and privileges in the Pictou Branch, before a certain day. Before the day named in that agreement, the Government of Nova Scotia, which was then in accord with the Dominion Government, was defeated at the polls. A new Government came in; they took the necessary steps, before the date named in the agreement, to take over the road, and carry out the arrangements with the company. After the Act was passed, two members of the Government came to Ottawa. While here, as the papers show, they had a conference with the hon. Minister of Railways, and they were led to suppose, at that time, that no obstacles would be thrown in the way of a transfer of the road as soon as the Local Government were in a position to receive it. While the two members of Government were in Ottawa, resolutions giving certain subsidies to railways in different parts of the Dominion were under discussion in this House, and the question was put across the floor by the leader of the Opposition to the Minister of Railways, as to what arrangements had been made in regard to the Pictou road, and what position it was in. On that occasion, the hon. Minister of Railways used the following words, which may be found in the Hansard, page 1332:

"The Committee are aware that under the legislation which has already taken place, the Government of Canada agreed to hand over the branch from Truro to Pictou, for the purpose of securing the con-struction of the line eastward. The Government of Nova Scotia, with struction of the line eastward. struction of the line eastward. The Government of Nova Scotia, with an additional subsidy, secured the construction of the line of railway to the Strait of Canso. Under the existing legislation, the whole of that property is therefore the property of the Eastern Extension Company; but the Government of Nova Scotia made a contract with that com-pany, which bound the company in case the Government, by a certain time paid them their actual examplifue which had been given to them, to hand over to the Government of News Scotia the whole property. The arbitration provided for in that con-Scotia the whole property. The arbitration provided for in that con-tract between the company, and the Government of Nova Scotia, is now taking place. It is expected that in a few days the road from Truro to the Strait of Canso will be in possession of the Government of Nova Scotia, and the Government of Nova Scotia are anxious to utilize that for the purpose or securing the extension of the railway system to Syd-ney or Louisburg, in Cape Breton."

That is the plain statement the hon. Minister of Railways made in this House last year, and it shows, I think, and ought to convince this House, that it was his intention to hand over the Picton Branch as soon as the New Scotia

Government proceeded under the authority of the Statute to borrow the money to pay for the Eastern Extension, about $1,250,000; they proceeded to close the arrangements with the company and paid them $500,000 on account; they agreed to take over the road on the first of October and pay the balance, and early in August I think. On the 11th August, the Commissioner of Public Works in Nova Scotia, informed the hon. Minister of Railways that arrangements had been made for the transfer of the Eastern Extension; and on the 20th of the same month, the Manager of the Railway, Mr. Scott, was sent to Ottawa to arrange the details with the Manager of the Government road for the transfer of the branch. Mr. Scott was then informed that no action could be taken until September; but on the 6th of September the business would be taken up. He consequently returned to Nova Scotia, and it was not until the 4th of October that any action was taken. In the meantime, the Nova Scotia Government was obliged In the to take over the road from the company and raise the money to pay the balar ce, and of course they had to work the line of railway between New Glasgow and Canso without the Picton Branch. Two members of Government came to Ottawa in October, in hopes to get the matter settled ; and, notwithstanding this conversation had taken place with the Minister of Railways, that I have referred to, in May last, and notwithstanding his utterances in the House at that time, and notwithstanding that the Dominion Government knew all through the summer that these negotiations were going on, that they were perfected, and that the Local Government was bound to take over the road on the 1st October, still they never gave the slightest intimation or hint that they intended to throw any obstacles in the way of the transfer of the road, until an Order in Council was passed on the 4th October, and I think it was not until some few days fter that, that the Government of Nova Scotia were made aware that such an Order in Council had been passed. That Order in Council is based upon an opinion of the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Justice recites the Act on which the Order in Council is based, and he states that:

"The only obligation of the Government of Oanada to the Government of Nova Scotia, in respect to the Pictou Branch, is to be found in the Act above recited, and whether into the hands of "the company" or of the Government of Nova Scotia, it is, in my opinion, cont-mplated that the Government of Nova Scotia, it is, in my opinion, cont-mplated that the Government of the Dominion shall only divest itself of the Pictou Branch after the Eastern Extension and ferry shall have been 'completed, equipped and established,' and the tariff of charges fettled. This, it is represented to me, has not been accomplished; the ferry and the appurtenances have not been 'completed and established,' the railway has not been 'equipped,' and the tariff of charges has not been sutmitted to the Government of Canada and approved. A memorand im, specifying what ioling stock was necessary to the 'equipment' of the road, is stated to have been furnished to the Nova Scotia Government so far back as last spring. It will be observed that, under the language of the Act as quoted above, thatwo lines of railway and the ferry are to be 'efficiently and continuously operated,' by the Nova Scotia Government, at a fair and reasonable tariff of charges, to be made and established by the Nova Scotia Government, subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council. The steps which it would seem necessary for the Government of Nova Scotia to to take in the matter now, in order to become entiled to the transfer of the Pictou Branch are—first, the providing of the necessary equipment for the two lines of railway; second, the completion and establishment of the ferry and appurtenances; and third, the sumission to the Government of Canada of a tariff of charges, to be approve they His Excellency in Council."

Now, there is no such thing to be found in either of the Statutes or in the agreement, that the Government of the Dominion would require from the Nova Scotia Government that both lines should be equipped before the line was transferred. The Act and the agrement state that the line from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso was to be properly equipped and worked and completed to the satisfaction of the Nova Scotia Government, but there is no place to be found in the Statute where it states that the Pictou Branch should be equipped, and equipped to the satisfaction of the Dominion Government, before it was transferred.

Mr. VAIL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand my hon friend to mean that the Government of Nova Scotia could have taken over the Pictou Branch and not operated it could have taken it over without being able to operate it and maintain it? The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that is not the case.

Mr. VAIL. No; I mean that, reading the agreement and the Statute based upon it, it was not necessary even for the Eastern Extension to be completed before the Nova Scotia Government, as successors of the company could call upon the Dominion Government to hand over the Pictou Branch, because it says they shall go on to complete it according to the original arrangement with the Government, so that it could not have been contemplated—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, if the hon. gentleman admits that the Government of Nova Scotia were bound to operate the Pictou Branch, he must necessarily admit that they must be provided with rolling stock, and that the Government had a perfect right, knowing that they were bound to operate the road, to take care not to dislocate the whole traffic of the country by putting that line in their hands when they could not operate it.

Mr. VAIL. I do not admit that. The Dominion Government could in that case fall back upon the Act, which provides that, if they did not work it to the satisfaction of the Dominion Government by giving three months notice, they could become possessed of the road again. That was the remedy, but there is nothing in the Statute to say that the Local Government must put the rolling stock on the road before asking that it be handed over. If it was intended, in the first place, when the first enactment was made, authorizing the Government to transfer the road, that they were to put such conditions upon it as were required by the Dominion Government, before it was handed over, the object would have been fustrated; the property would have been useless, it would have been an elephant on their hands-they could not have done it. Now, the Minister of Justice states that this road was to be completed and cquipped between New Glasgow and Canso. But previous to that time, the Manager of the Government railways, Mr. Schreiber, as long ago as the 28th July, 1882, after having examined the road, states in an official letter that the road was completed:

"I may say I went over the works some time ago, and so far as a cursory examination a lmitted of it, it certially appeared to me that they had built a good, substantial road, and upon enquiry at the Strats of Canso I learned that the steamer employed had performed her service fairly well. If I am right in my views, it would appear as if the company were entitled to receive the roal."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman aware that this same Government had declared that the road was not finished ?

Mr. VAIL. That does not touch the case at all. My hon. friend seems to think that my desire is to say something that will provent these resolutions being passel. That is not my intention.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I should fancy not.

Mr. VAIL. But I think it is well that the House should have the history of the whole case, because having taken authority to borrow money, and having to borrow it in the English market—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Where the hon. gentleman himself had rendered it impossible for them to get a dollar.

Mr. VAIL. I did not interfere with my hon. friend when he was making his speech, and he should not interrupt me now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I imagine it would be a case of "save me from my friends."

Mr. VAIL. There would have been no difficulty if they had returned the £52,000 deposited by Barings as security for the syndicate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That you have since admitted you have to return.

Mr. VAIL. The Local Government admitted that they have to return the money-.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. VAIL-in consequence of an unknown agreement made by the hon. Minister's friends before they went out of power.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. . They had better return it before they lost their credit.

Mr. VAIL. This is beside the subject, and I should not have diverged if the hon. gentleman had not interrupted me, and I have been obliged to follow him. He has made the divergence, not I. So that really the company had complied with all the requirements of the Dominion and Local Government when Mr. Schreiber was enabled to make that statement, and the conditions spoken of by the Minister of Justice had really been complied with. In October, the members of Government, finding that the Dominion Government did not intend to transfer the road without conpling such conditions with it as to make it valueless to Now the House will see at once that it would be quite imthem, returned to Nova Scotia, determined not to do anything, and it was not until late in December that they were finally obliged, in consequence of the obstacles thrown in the way, and I think I may properly say, unfairly thrown in the way of their obtaining the Pictou Branch. The Order in Council refers to a statement of the rolling stock that would be required on the Pictou Branch before the Nova Scotia Government would be entitled to receive it from the Dominion Government, and it was referred for a report to the Manager of the Nova Scotia road, a man who is well known in Canada, at least in the Province of Quebec, as very well qualified to give an opinion on what would be required on a road of that kind. I refer to Mr. Scott, who was the General Manager of the Nova Scotia road, and he states that:

"In compliance with your instructions, I beg to submit to you my "In compliance with your instructions, I big to submit to you my views respecting two of the main conditions named by the Dominion Government that, from their standpoint, they consider necessary your Government should folfil, before transferring the Picton Branch Railway. "In the report of a Committee of the hon. Privy Council, dated the 20th October, 1883, the first condition reads as follows: 'T nat the assignees agree to a tariff of rates upon a mileage basis, framed on the interco-lonial Railway tariff of charges for traffic to and from the Pictou Branch' Branch.'

Branch." "Now, in assenting to this condition, as I interpret it, your Government would, of necessity, be obliged to accept the present tariff in force on the Intercolonial Kailway as the basis upon which to calculate the pro-portionate rates to accrue to the 'Nova Scotia Railway.' The Eastern Extension Railway showing a mileage of eighty (80) miles, and the Pictou Branch fifty-two (52) miles, gives a total of 132 miles to be oper-ated by your Government, as against 840 miles of the Intercolonial System. As the bulk of the traffic, coal, is confined to only forty (40) miles of the Pictou Branch, viz., from New Glasgow to Truro, I consider it equitable to compare the mileage of the two railways, as forty (40) is to 618 miles (Truro to Chandière). "On the conditions imposed your Government is bound to carry freight over the forty miles on a proportionate tasis. It must be remembered that the traffic having its chief source at New Glasgow and Stellarton that the traffic having its chief source at New Glasgow and Stellarton Last the traffic having its chief source at New Glasgow and Stellarion (coal districts), the heavy charges for terminal expenses, such as em-ployees, heavy wear and tear of siding track and motive power in shunting, and all contingent terminal work, will fall upon the Nova Scotia Kailway, with its small mileage. Apart from this, the Branch has heavy and lorg grades, with severe curvature, to contend with, as against comparatively easy grades and fair alignment. These are the Practical difficulties to be met with in operating the Pictou Branch. "Your Government being asked to accept aprorats on a mileage basis, the question arises as to the margin of profit left for the Branch. From my experience, rates are established between connecting lines (were the

From my experience, rates are established between connecting lines (were the bulk of traffic consist of coal and iron o:es) on an equal mileage basis, or virtually on a local tariff, where the difference in mileage is so great. The local rates for freight on the Intercolonial Railway, as far as ordi-nary merchandise, lumber, etc., are concerned, are far out of proportion to those of roads of a similar character to the Pictou Branch, in point of Commetition. Head the conditions hear nor rate on the tariff now in force competition. to solve. But to ask that a road of forty (40) miles (bearing all the heavy terminal expenses) should prorate with a railway of the length of the Intercolonial, upon a large coal traffic, is a proposition totally impracticable, and at variance with all past usage.

"To illustrate the position, I beg to submit the following figures, show-ing what proportion the Picton Branch would receive, taking the present tariff and last year's traffic as a guide:

possible for any Government or any company to take over the road and be obliged to run it upon a tariff of that kind. Then, as regards the rolling stock the Dominion Government required from the Local Government, I will just refer to a table comparing the two railways. The Intercolonial is 840 miles long, and the Nova Scotia roal is 130 miles. On the Intercolonial there were 1,018 coal cars, and the Dominion Government required on the Nova Scotis Railway, 55). The total rolling stock at present on the whole Inter-colonial is put down as worth \$3,580,000. They wanted the Nova Scotia Government to put rolling stock on their road to the amount of \$843,000. The gross earnings per mile on the Intercolonial road have been \$2,500, but on the Nova Scotia road it would only be \$1,800; so the House will see that the conditions that were required of the Nova Scotia Government, in taking over this road, were entirely out of proportion to anything that is required elsewhere. Mr. Scott's report shows clearly that it is quite out of proportion to any rolling stock or rate that is required on any road, either in Canada or in the United States. and it will be seen that in Pennsylvania, the roads charge 14 cents per ton per mile for carrying coal, but the Dominion Government actually wanted to oblige the Local Govern-ment to carry coal over the Pietou road for $\frac{1}{10}$ of a cent per mile. That was a condition that no Government could have accepted. I do not think that the Local Government received fair treatment from the Dominion Government. I do not believe the Dominion Government would so have treated the Local Government of Nova Scotia, if they had been in accord with the Dominion Government instead of being politically opposed. The hon. Minister of Railways has asked the House to adopt these resolutions. It is better, I think, in the interests of the coal mines of Nova Scotia, it is better perhaps in the interests of the counties through which the road passes, and it is better I am sure, in the interests of the Dominion Government, in a pecuniary point of view, that these resolutions should pass, and that the Dominion Government should hold the road. I only hope that now as they are taking over this valuable property, they will carry out the obligations that I think rested upon the Local Government when they took over the Eastern Extension, and expected to get the Pictou road, and that was to extend the line through the Island of Cape Breton. I hope that the Dominion Government will remember this, and that they will feel bound to do what is necessary to complete the line from Canso to Louisburg, or to the eastern end of Cape Breton.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Owing to the lateness of the hour, I will not speak on these resolutions to-night, but reserve my remarks for another stage.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have a word or two to say about this matter. I am not going to reply to the remarks of the hon. member from Nova Scotia, because there is always a Nova Scotian ready to do that from this side of the House. I want to call the attention of the House to what transpired when this Bill, transferring the Pictou road to the Nova Scotia Government, was passed. It will be remembered, at that time, when hon. gentlemen who are now in Oppo-sition held the reins of power, they brought in that Bill, and at that time—perhaps the Minister of Railways will excuse me for referring to the fact-that Minister seemed to be in perfect accord with the Government in the transfer of that very important Dominion property to the Nova Scotia Government. It was one of those strong evidences of the strong desire he always has to serve Nova Scotia interests, even at the cost of the Dominion Government. I admire him very much for it; he is exactly the kind of Minister we want for New Brunswick. I only wish that the course pursued by the Minister of Railways were followed by some other Ministers a little nearer home. I called the attention of the Government to the course pursued at that time. There were in the Government, at that time, four members who united with myself, and I was then their leader, because there were three parties in the House then, as now: the Government of the day, represented by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the regular Oppsition, led by the present Premier, and a kind of guerilla Opposition mainly led by myself. If there ever was a measure brought before the House that I fought against, it was that for the transfer of the Pictou Branch from hardly with the Nova Scotia Government. I do not blame the hands of the Dominon Government. I will not occupy the the Minister of Railways for saying that the Dominion divided the House on it. I predicted that the time would come when the road would be retransferred, and I declared that the Dominion Government had allowed to pass out of its hands one of the great feeders to the Intercolonial; and I am proud to see that my warning on that occasion proved correct, and that there are four hon. gentlemen who have therefore said nothing about the Local Government; but I received a proper reward for their foresight, now in a posi-tion to help to get back into the hands of the Dominion Government that property which never should have left it.

Mr. WOODWORFH. I cannot allow these resolutions to pass without offering a few remarks. I have taken some interest in this railway question from its inception to the present time, and I have watched it very carefully. I do not intend to go into it in detail; but I find myself almost unable, from a Nova Scotia point of view, to give my vote for these resolutions. From a Dominion point of view and as a member of the Dominion Parliament which is entrusted with the interests of seven Provinces, I can vote for them. Looking at the matter merely from a 1 rovincial standpoint, I think the Dominion Government has not driven a hard bargain with the Government of Nova Scotia, as was said by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail); but owing to the unbusiness like way in which the Local Government approached the Dominion Government, owing to the want of business tact, owing to their own neglect, they threw away an asset worth $4,000,000 for $1,200,000. do not think the Minister of Railways is to blame. I think the acting Minister of Railways, who represented the Minister of Railways, who was in Eng- cussion, but the statement of the hon. gentleman is such, land when the negotiations were going on, was not to that a word is required to be said about it. The hon. gen-blame. They were acting with the Local Government under the says that $4,000,000 is the value of this asset, and it a proposition made by that Government, and no man ever could be sold to the Dominion Government for $1,200,000. Mr. VAIL.

bargain chose to ask and accept. The hon. member for Digby forgets that on 30th May last, the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia sent a dispatch asking the Dominion Government if they would take the Pictou road and the Eastern road and pay them what they had paid out, and the expenses of the arbitration. That was the foundation of the proposition. The Local Government came here last fall and perfected the arrangement. Now, the hon. member for Digby says he is going to support the resolutions. He finds himse!f between the old boy and the deep sea. In his anxiety to serve his friends in Nova Scotia, whose servant he was and delegate he was, and who charged for his services the small sum, but the very large sum in view of Nova Scotia's financial distress, described by him, $2,000, for his trip to England last summer, in conducting these negotiations, the hon. gentleman finds himself compelled to vote for these resolutions. If he does not, he stabs his friends, the Local Government, and he is well aware that the Province is very much excited over this matter at the present time. He knows the very great difficulty experienced by the Reform Local Government in holding together, because their own friends are annoyed at the wilful neglect of public duties and the unbusiness-like way in which they, the Local Government, conducted this transaction, handing over a property worth $4,000,000 for $1,200,000, and their offer is in writing and has been brought down with the correspondence. The hon. member for Digby has said that if the Local Government were the friends of the Dominion Government they would have been differently treated. I do not believe so. I expected to hear the I do not believe so. hon. gentleman give some reason for the vote he is about to give. But he said, no; he merely is about to give. wanted to show-and I could not see from his speech how he did show it-that the Dominion Government had dealt time of the House by reading my remarks on that occasion; Government had made a good bargain. I believe the Local but at every stage I opposed the Bill; on its second reading, Government, constituted as it is, had better be rid of in Committee, and on its third reading I moved a rider and it and have the $1,200,000 in their pockets, if they it and have the $1,200,000 in their pockets, if they possess no better business qualifications than they have displayed in this transaction, for it is quite apparent they could not have run the railway successfully. The Minister of Railways is too much of a statesman to attack and cast slurs at anyone unless attacked, and he thought I detected, by reading between the lines, what his opinion was. What was the hon. gentleman to do. Fourteen members of the Dominion Government, representing the whole country, received a proposition for the sale of the whole line. It was presented by the members of the Nova Scotia Government, and the proposition was to hand over the road on being refunded the outlay. Looking to the Province of his birth he might have wished to have given them more, and he might have felt sore with these men, this Local Government, for having acted in such an unbusiness-like way. But it was impossible for him to ask more from the Dominion Government, of which he was a member, than the Local Government requested they should have. He is obliged to defend his resolution and he could not do it; for, as the hon. member for Digby said in closing, it is a good bargain for the Dominion Government. It is a good bargain, and he, the hon. member from Digby, may thank his friends in Nova Scotia that the Dominion Government made a little more than $3,000,000 from that Province.

heard of any person offering more than the other party to a

Mr. BLAKE. I had not intended taking part in the dis-

I think the whole question may be put in a nutshell. The Government of Nova Scotia felt, as I understand, that unless with a considerably increased tariff of freights, and especially for coal, they could not make money out of this enterprise if they owned it, the Government of the Dominion declined—rightly or wrongly I will not now discuss—to allow the transfer except a tariff should be settled, and they proposed as a general principle, the application of the existing tariff, which was a low tariff and a tariff over a long line to a short line. Now, presumably, that policy is the policy which is to be continued to be adopted by the Dominion Government. But the hon. Minister of Railways has said that he believes that the general result of this transaction will be to leave the work of the Intercolonial system, with this addition, just about where it was before; that is to ay, I suppose, that there will be some loss on the Extension line, and considering the interest on the purchase price; but that that is made up by retaining the Pictou Branch, which has been profitable. Well, if the line is to be administered—and I am not now discussing the policy of administering it on those prin-ciples—on the policy of the Intercolonial, if these results which the Minister of Railways expects from this transaction are to be the results, I think it is guite clear that the Dominion has not acquired a very proutable asset, it has acquired an asset which will leave the result of working the Intercolonial just about where it was, and we will not make a large profit out of the investment. On the other hand, Nova Scotia will have derived this advantage from the transaction, confessedly, that whereas the Local Government stated that their intention was to make this road pay, more by high tariff than by the extent of the trade, the Province of Nova Scotia will not be burthened by that high tariff. The tariff will be kept lower according to the very point of difference between the Minister of Ruilways and the Government of Nova Scotia. The Province of Nova Scotia states that this is an asset which may be made valuable by raising the operations and the tariff, which will make the road more profitable. The Minister of Railways says: We insist on the tariff being kept where it is at present. The Government of Nova Scotia says: We want to make a profit out of the road at that rate. The Minister of Railways has said about as much to-night, an I taking all the considerations together, he thinks it will pay its way, and no more. Well, if it is going to pay its way, as he proposes to raise it, it is going to pay its way to the advantage of Nova Scotia, because the country will be benefited by the lowness of the freights, and therefore the arrangement is one which, if the Province of Nova Scotia was to make profitable, it would dc so by burdening the country, by maintaining the rates; and if the Dominion is to be bene-fited, it is because the tariff is to be kept low. For those reasons, I think the observations of the hon. member for King's are not justifiable.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have filled in the blank with $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, as that was the amount of interest which the Province of Nova Scotia was paying the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. BLAKE. It is for a short time?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the adoption of the Second Report (page 704) of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of this House during the present Session.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, of course, whatever is necessary to be done in order to get up within a reasonable time the French translation, must be done, but it was arranged at the time an additional French reporter was agreed to be engaged, that both French reporters should be employed, in the very long intervals when they are not engaged in the service of reporting, in translation. As far as I can understand, the work of the French reporters is not more than one-tenth of the ordinary work of the House. It is perhaps less than one-tenth, but I cannot conceive that it is more. It is perfectly obvious, therefore, that ninetenths or more of their time would be unoccupied, and the distinct understanding was that that large portion of their time would be devoted to translation. Now, if I am correctly informed, up to the period at which the report was presented, no work of translation had been tendered to the French reporters, and consequently no translation had been done by them. I would ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Committee as its chairman to say whother this is the fact, or what is the fact as to the amount of work of translation that has been done this Session, or hal been done up to the time this report was presented.

Mr. WHITE. I may say that the hon. gentleman is quite right in his statement. It was rather a surprise to the Committee when the fact was stated that the two French reporters had not been employed in translation. The statement was made that the French reporters, although very excellent reporters-and I may say here that it is very difficult to get good French stenographers-were not good transla-tors. But orders were given immediately that they should be employed. I may say, however, that, even with that additional assistance, from a closer examination made of the duty of translating by the Committee, we think the work still requires a larger number if the French copy is to be got out in anything like reasonable time. I am quite satisfied that some other method will have to be adopted, because the present method is going to be expensive. I think the Committee will probably see whether something cannot be done before the class of the Session, and to recommend some other method to the House. I may state that up to the 8th of February we had no night sittings, and up to that time there were eighty eight pages translated of the revised English edition of Hansard. Since that time night sittings began, and from that moment the French copy went behind. The Chief Translato - says :

400, and sent manuscript translation to page 317 from 118. This makes—striking out two Sundays and one legal holiday—199 pages for 13 days of work. Adding to this several pages translated into English from the advanced sheet, and also Sir Charles Tupper's second speech on the Pacific loan, we have about 214 pages of manuscript translation in 13 days. If we now take into account the fact that 214 pages of English Hansard mean about 234 of French, we have 18 pages of manu-script translated per day, since the midnight sittings' reports commenced to come in, by a staff of five translatore, which I consider over the average that could be reasonably expected from us unless requested to work on Sundays." work on Sundays.'

I believe that statement is sustained by those who are engaged in the work of translation. Three pages per day of Hansard by one translator is considered very good work. Of course, everyone understands that translating is much more difficult than mere transcribing, that it requires sometimes a good deal of care to render the exact meaning of the speaker. The ordinary number of pages per day of Han ard for one of our long sittings, lasting, say, till midnight, is about thirty pages; consequently at the rate mentioned it would require ten translators to do the work, and to keep up with the English copy. Now, we propose by this report to add two gentlemen for the balance of the Session, who will be paid at the rate of one translator, and by that means we hope the balance of the work will be got out in such a way as at the end of the Session there will be no further French arrears than there is to day. I know that a good d(a) of dissatisfaction exists among the French members of the House as to the French copy, and I may say that one of the difficulties in connection with it has been that the translators have been accustomed to translate only from the revised edition of the English Hansord, and that although by the rules the revised English reports have to be handed in to the reporters within twenty-four hours from the time the speech was delivered, as a matter of fact, in practice, owing, probably, to the circumstance that leading members cf the House-Ministers and leading members of the Opposition—have not much time for revision, considerable delay takes place, and I think at this moment the revised editition is thirteen or fourteen days behind. With the staff cf reporters we now have at the table-and I can say with some knowledge of what I am talking about as to that matter, that I do not believe there is to be found anywhere a more efficient and a more thorough staff than we now have-with that staff I believe we could go on with the translation into French, of the daily edition, without any trouble whatever, with the understanding, of course, that the French members who speak in English shall have an opportunity of revising their report before it is put into type. So far as the English members are concerned, I do not think they would require that privilege. If that were done, we would be able to get the French copy out a great deal sooner than we have been able to do in the past. I may say, however, Mr. Speaker, that even though the service of the two French reporters were utilized for the balance of this Session, these two extra translators will still be required.

Mr. BLAKE. I should be sorry myself if the last suggestion of the hon. gentleman were adopted—that is to say, that the permanent French record should be taken from the unrevised English Hansard. I think, probably, the result would be a good many complaints arising out of a misconception of what hon. gentlemen have said, especially when we are told that the revised Hansard not unfrequently is quite a different document from the unrevised Hansard. That there are still materially important alterations required may be assumed from what the hon. gentleman has said, that the staff is unable to get the revised copy back within Government, if the state of public business will permit, that the prescribed twenty four hours. My impression is if that the House should rise before Easter; time seems to be rule were rigorously adhered to, and if it were thoroughly flitting away on account of the weighty measures and dis-understood that as soon as the clock indicated that the cussions before the House, and these cannot be interrupted twenty-four hours had expired the unrevised copy would be either for the convenience of the House or members of the set up, that much of those difficulties would be got rid of Government, nevertheless I hope that prorogation will

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

All that the hon. gentleman has said with reference to the subject matter of my enquiry renders it only more pressing that the services of the French reporters should be utilized. I think the House and the Committee are entitled to some further explanation-because I presume the hon. gentleman and the Committee assume that the orders of the House have been carried out-but I say I think the House and the Committee are entitled to some further explanation than has been given, why the Chief Translator, or whoever is in authority, did not obey these orders of the House and did not hand the copy over to the reporters to be translated. The hos. gentleman says the Chief Translator did not do it because he did not think they would do it wellhe thought they might be good reporters, but not ex-perienced translators. He had no right to judge of that. This House has ordered that they should be so employed. If they were found inefficient then other persons ought to have been obtained. These were obtained on the understanding that they should be employed to do translating as well as reporting. They were engaged for that purpose, and I presume that it is not from any unwillingness on their part that they have not done so, and I am quite unable to understand on what principle it is that an officer of this House should have deliberately disobeyed the orders of the House and declined to hand over the work, that ought to have been handed to these reporters, until this time, when we are now called upon to pay the consequence of that neglect by an additional expenditure on work which, if it is to go down, it is to go down, very likely, on the ground of its financial cost to the country.

Motion agreed to,

ST. PATRICK'S DAY-ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DALY. As it has been the custom of this House to adjourn on St. Patrick's Day at six o'clock I beg, Sir, to move, seconded by Mr. Massue, that when the Speaker leaves the Chair at six o'clock this House do stand adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock p.m.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). If another Monday is to be allowed for the disposal of ordinary private business and not taken by the Government as Government day, I would have no objections to paying that respect to the ob-servance of St. Patrick's Day, by an adjournment at six o'clock, which has been usual, especially as I have no doubt many members of the House will desire an opportunity of listening to what, I have no doubt, will be an eloquent address of the hon. leader of the Opposition which is to be delivered this evening. But if the Government intend, ε_S I have heard stated, to take next Monday, and the following Mondays of the Session for Government business, I shall be obliged to oppose the motion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Daly); because there is a long list of private business in the hands of private members which has to be disposed of, and that would be defeated if the House were to adjourn at six o'clock. I hope the Government will give another Monday for the disposal of private business.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This not being a Gov-ernment day, we are in the hands of the House. If the majority think that an adjournment should not take place at six o'clock, the Government will graciously submit. I really do not know what is the feeling of the House on the matter. I however express to the House the desire of the take place at or before Easter. However, that is for the order, which he had a right to do, and my motion was House to consider. If it be not the desire of the House to adjourn at six o'clock, and if there is strong opposition, it will be manifested by hon. members speaking against it; but unless that is the case I will consider that a majority of the House desire that we should follow the usual practice of adjourning at that hour. I do not know that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) can force the Government's hand by asking their intentions for the future; but I take it that all Private Bills will have every opportunity of being discussed and going through or being rejected during the present Session.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand that the motion can be put without notice having been given. As the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) has chosen to make reference to myself, I may say that I think it inexpedient to adjourn the House at six o'clock in view of the pre-sent state of public business. The First Minister has, for the first time in my Parliamentary recollection, made the announcement in regard to the time he desired prorogation to take place, five or six weeks before that period. That announcement was calculated to accomplish the hon, gentleman's object, no doubt; but it was also calculated to render it extremely difficult to engage in proper and legiti-mate discussion of public business. The hon. gentleman has referred three times to-day to proroguing at Easter, and if prorogation is to be settled so long in advance, and so utterly irrespective of the condition of public business, it is desirable that we should husband our hours now. There is a very large amount of business in the hands of private members who have had less opportunity this Session of dealing with their measures than any previous Session I am aware of. The hon. gentleman cannot have intended to adjourn at six o'clock to-day, because he proposed on Friday last to fix for this day the motion of the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde), with respect to License Laws, and it was, no doubt, intended not to discuss the question for about three hours but to conclude the debate. I find that in 1881 the House sat on the evening of St. Patrick's Day and considered Supply until a quarter past one a.m. In the subsequent year the day fell on a Saturday or non-sitting day, and of course the question did not arise. Under ordinary circumstances when the House met at an earlier period and was not doing much work, it was fitting that it should adjourn at six o'clock on St. Patrick's Day. Now, however, we are in the thick of the Session, and are told we shall have a very short time to consider private business, and our duty to the public therefore requires us to labour and not to play to-night.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think I deserve censure of the hon. gentleman for having announced prematurely the desire of the Government, if public business will permit, to prorogue at Easter. We met on the 17th January, and Easter will occur on the 14th April, and this will give about a Session of the usual length, three months. As regards the motion respecting License Laws, it is quite true I stated that the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde) should have to-day to discuss the question. It is not my fault that it was not set down as the First Order of the Day. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) appeared to think, judging by the tone of his argument, that I had made some arrangement with the hon. member to adjourn at six o'clock. I had no communication directly or indirectly with the hon. gentleman, and I was not aware that he was going to move the motion until I heard it. The first thing I did on being foiled in my attempt to fix the discussion on the motion of the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde) to-day was to give notice that to morrow the Government would ask to have the matter taken up and fully discussed. That I thought was fair to the hon. gentleman and was due to him. The hon. gentleman opposite took the point of thrown over. I thought it was right and fair to the hon. gentleman who had postponed the motion at my conven-ience, and not his own, to give him to-morrow to discuss it. He will not lose his motion; I will take care as leader of the House that he shall have an opportunity and lose nothing from his kindness in meeting my views.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn at a future period is not in order now. A motion of that kind is only in order when it is to adjourn now. The motion must therefore be renewed.

Mr. DALY. I give notice that I will renew it at six o'clock.

THE CASE OF DANIEL MCCOURT.

Mr. BERGIN. The leader of the Opposition some time ago asked for papers to be brought down in connection with the dismissal of Daniel McCourt, a labourer on the Cornwall Canal, and in common fairness-I will not accuse the hon. gentleman of not being fair-he should place a motion on the paper, that I may have an opportunity of discussing the matter with him.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 123) to amend the Customs Act, 1883, 46 Vic., chap. 12. He said : This is a short Bill of three clauses. The first clause is simply to add to the Courts having jurisdiction to try cases of violation of the Customs Act, the Vice-Admiralty Court. It will be remembered that at the time when this law was consolidated and amended, the Courts in NovaScotia had decided that the Federal Parliament had not power to confer jurisdiction on the Admiralty Courts. On an appeal to the Supreme Court it was decided that the Parliament of Canada could confer jurisdiction in any case in which they thought proper to act. A clause was contained in the Inland Revenue Act, and it has been thought advisable that it should be reenacted in the Customs Act. The second clause repeals clause 84 of the Customs Act, which prevents any evidence being given in cases of dispute as to the correct value of goods other than that which is borne on the face of the invoice. Under the old section of the law the same provision existed, with this addition, that no evidence could be given as to the correctness or the incorrectness of the invoice except by the Crown. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) thought it was unfair that in cases of contested invoices the only parties who should have the right to give evidence should be the Crown. He thought that all parties should have the same right-that the person importing the goods should have the same right to establish the correctness of his invoice as the Crown had to give evidence as to its incorrectness, and on that hon, gentleman's suggestion those words were struck out, without, I am bound to say, paying proper attention to the effect of striking them out. By striking out these words the clause simply provides now that no evidence can be given, and hence an invoice would have to be accepted, whether correct or not, as to the value of the goods. My proposition is to repeal the clause altogether, leaving the question of evidence as it exists in all cases which come up before Courts. If the Crown contests the invoice they will be bound to show that it is incorrect, and on the other hand, the party importing will have an equal right to give evidence as to its correctness. The third clause simply adds these words to the end of the 153rd clause of the Customs Act as it exists :

"And any such conviction may be had in a summary manner, before any two justices of the peace, or before any judge or magistrate having the power of two justices of the peace."

The same provision will be found in section 174 of the Act. Bill read the first time.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY LEASE BILL.

The Order for resuming the adjourned debate on Mr. Haggart's proposed motion that Bill (No. 52) to confirm the lease of the Ontario and Quebec Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and for other purposes, do pass, being read,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said: I may inform the House that the assent of the Crown to this measure has been obtained.

Bill passed.

WELLAND RAILWAY TRANSFER BILL.

Mr. BERGIN moved that Bill (No. 44) to authorize the transfer of the Welland Railway to the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and for other purposes be discharged and referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding the words "to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council" to section 5.

Motion agreed to; and Bill recommitted, amended, reported and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was real the third time and passed :-Bill (No. 9) to amend the several Acts relating to the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Company.-(Mr. Kilvert.)

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company, was considered in Committee of the Whole, reported and read the third time.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the Bill do pass.

Mr. WILSON. Before this Bill is passed, I wish to call the attention of the House to some of its clauses, especially the fourth clause, in which the Company ask power to construct a road from some point at or west of Ingersoll to the town of Windsor. In a previous discussion in this House, the Government urged very strongly the importance of constructing a national railroad which might in every way in future serve the purposes for which we require a railroad to the North-West. Perhaps the strongest argu-ment that was then used to show why we should advance the very large sum of $30,000,000 towards that object, was that immigrants from the old country would be retained in Canadian territory without the necessity of passing through any portion of a foreign country to the North-West, lest we might lose a large number of them. No sooner has that been done than we find this same Company asking us now to enable them to construct a branch line which will to a very great extent divert the traffic from the Canadian line to lines through a portion of the United States. I could understand the propriety of granting a charter for this branch line if it was necessary to serve any want in the section of country through which the Company desire to construct it; but that section is already most thoroughly supplied with railway facilities, and it requires no further accommodation of that kind. We have first the Grand Trunk running from London to Windsor; then we have what used to be the Great Western road, having two branches running from the city of London one to Detroit, and the other to Port Huron ; then we have another road, and a very important one -a road that has hitherto worked harmoniously with the Canadian Pacific Railway-the Canada Southern division of the Michigan Central. not aware that anything has been done by that road against offering every convenience and facility for traffic between it and the Canadian Pacific Railway. In addition to those tion of the road. After reciving the grant of $2,000 per mile, Mr. Bowell.

Thomas to St. Clair, besides other branches through that section; so that altogether there is a complete network of railways in that section. I ask therefore what is the neces-sity of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company asking for this charter? It is not for the purpose of conveying freight from the western section of Canada to the east, or from the east to the west, because all the necessary facilities exist at present. The only desire of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in asking for this charter, is that, if the line running through Canadian territory north of Lake Superior should not prove to be a success, if they should not be able to keep it open during the whole of the year, they may have a road for conveying freight from the western peninsula of Ontario through to Chicago, and from Chicago to the North-West. Their object, if they intend to build the road, which I greatly doubt, is to obtain means of ingess to the North West Territories through American territory. If that be the case, if that be the course the Company are going to adopt, I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Immigration to the fact that he will find that by taking immigrants through the Ame-rican territory, more especially through the Western States, we will lose a very large number; a very large portion of the expenditure incurred on immigration will be useless; and the Government will defeat in toto the policy which they declared to be the motives which influenced them to spend a large amount of money for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have every reason to believe that if the Canadian Pacific Railway reach Windsor, they will have an opportunity of uniting with the Wabash Railway or with other roads reaching Chicago; and as soon as they reach Chicago, they will have no difficulty in connecting with their own road and reaching the North-West Territory by that I have no doubt that the Wabash road means. extending and holding out inducements to day to the Canadian Pacific Railway to reach Detroit, will give every facility to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we will have an American line through to our North-West; so that the road along the northern shore of Lake Superior will be, to a great extent and through the greater portion of the year, comparatively useless. Feeling that to be the case, I would rather no charter had been granted for I cannot see any necessity for granting any charter, unless it be the desire of the Company to reach the North-West through American territory. I wish, to as great an extent as I pos-sibly can, to curtail their opportunities of using this as a lever to do injustice to other roads which are perfectly willing to unite with them on fair terms and give them reasonable running rates. They are asking to construct a road from Ingersoll or from some point south or south west of Ingersoll to Windsor. If the road is to be extended from the Credit Valley westward, it is proper that the section of country through which it will run should receive benefits accruing therefrom, if there be any. We know perfectly well that when the Credit Valley was first chartered, it was intended to be a road in the interests of the farming community, that would afford facilities and advantages to those who felt that too high rates had been charged; and almost every municipality which granted aid to the Credit Valley, ontered into an agreement with that Company that certain rates of freight and no higher should be charged. We know that the municipalities contributed very liberally to this road; almost every municipality through which it passed contributed. Not only that, but the Ontario Government acted very liberally and granted a very large amount, and since this House thinks proper to take this road out of the hands of the Province of Ontario, I contend that the Ontario Government has a just claim against the Dominion Government for the amount they have contributed towards the construc-

in the first place, the Company found they were unable to build the road, and they came back to the Ontario Government with an appeal for aid, and the Ontario Government grante l them a further subsidy of $1,500 per mile, making in all $3,500 per mile. This aid was granted in the interests of that section of the country through which the road ran, to enable the people there to get their various articles to market at cheaper rates than those they previously had to pay. The road was constructed to Ingersoll; it remained there for a length of time, but it was comparatively useless at the time it had its terminus there; and feeling that it did not accomplish the object the promoters of the road had in view, the promoters came to the city of St. Thomas and made overtures for the extension of the road to that city. They urged upon the people of St. Thomas that they should give liberally to the road in order that St. Thomas might be made the terminus. Under this inducement, with the full understanding and belief that their city would be the terminus of the Credit Valley and Ontario and Quebec road, the people of St. Thomas granted the Company the unusually large amount of $50,000 in the way of a bonus, but what is the Canadian Pacific Railway now asking? They are asking, although we treated them so liberally, to extend the road from some point west of Ingersoll, between Ingersoll and the town of St. Thomas, to the St. Clair river, thus leaving St. Thomas comparatively a way station. I feel this House should hesitate before doing an injustice to any municipality situated as is St. Thomas, and having contributed as liberally as did that city. Further, I believe, and I think those who are acquainted with that section of the country will agree with me, that if the extension of the road is to be made, if the Canadian Pacific Railway should feel a desire to build a road there, no better alignment of road can possibly be obtained than that alignment lying between the Lake Eric and the River Thames. They will get a straight road, a road with perhaps the best grade that can possibly be obtained on the continent of America, and yet, for some reason unknown, they want to start from Ingersoll or some point west of Ingersoll. This House should hesitate before enabling the Canadian Pacific Railway to use this charter as a lever, not only upon the Michigan Central but upon the Grand Trunk Railway, to offer them better terms than they would be able to obtain under any other condition. Not feeling desirous to detain the House any longer with reference to this matter I beg to move in amendment thereto, that the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with power to amend the same, by leaving out all the words after the word "from " in line 47, section 4, to the word "Ingersoll," inclusive, and to insert the words "St. Thomas" instead thereof.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). Before this motion is carried, I wish to say a few words with reference to it. I was one of those who were opposed to the building of the Credit Valley in the first instance because I thought we had all the roads required for the purpose of conducting the business of the country in the western part of Canada—I have reference to the competing lines at that time, the Grand Trunk and the Great Western. The road, however, was built; and built, as my friend the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) says, to the town of Ingersoli, and it remained there, for that was the terminus for a very considerable period, until the people west of that point and between that and St. Thomas, and the town of St. Thomas concluded that it was desirable that it should go to St. Thomas, and they therefore granted a bonus of, I believe, the sum of $50,000. At that time, they forced and insisted upon the road having its terminus in a certain point in the town of St. Thomas. That, I believe, has been done. It has been carried out to the very letter, or, if not, a lawsuit is going on at the present time by the people of St. Thomas against the Credit Valley Railway to compel them to carry out to the letter what they say was originally intended. Now, had there not been an amalgamation of the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways, my hon. friend might have been correct in his assertions, but he knows he is as far wrong as any one possibly can be in the assertions he has made on this occasion. It is true that, as far as the town of St. Thomas is concerned, there is all the competition that is necessary or that is desirable, all that is wished for in any part of the country-that is, the old Great Western, or the Great Western division of the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canada Scuthern Railway. These run through from that point to the town of Windsor, and the consequence is that they are competing lines there, and he has every reason to be thankful for the competition that exists there. But what are the facts with reference to a much more important part of the country than he represents? I have reference to the part between the town of Ingersoll, north of the Canada Southern Railway, and the old Grand Trunk Railway. We have no competition there at all. The amalgamation of the roads has passed the main lines and all the branches under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway. We have, therefore, no competition whatever. Now, I think it is very desirable that competition should exist in that part of the country, and I believe that this Bill has a tendency to create that competition that is vory desirable. It is rather amusing to me to see this hon. gentleman taking such a very great interest in this road, and giving as his reason for it that we have granted such an enormous amount of a bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think, if you look over the Votes and Proceed-ings, you will find that my hon. friend from Elgin voted against it, and did everything he possibly could against it, and was not at all desirous that that grant should be made in any way whatever. Therefore, I think he at least is one of the last persons in the world that should ask to have this road terminated at his town of St. Thomas. As I said before, there are many important localities between Ingersoll and the Detroit River. There is the city of London, Strathroy, Glencoe, Chatham, and points all along there, which are much more thickly peopled than where his roads go; and where the Canada Southern and the southern branch of the Great Western go, there is competition the whole way, whereas, from the point I have spoken of, from Ingersoll west, there is no competition whatever, but all these places are under the control of the one great ruling railway. As it is asked here that they shall run from a point in the town of Ingor-soll west to the Detroit River, it must pass very nearly, if not quite, through the localities of which I have spoken, and give the competition which is desirable to all the points of importance on that line. I think, under the circumstances, the House will see fit, as the Canadian Pacific Railway has been supported as it has, to support the original portion of the Bill and pass it as it was originally brought into this House. As far as regards my hon, friend's extraordinary interest in the western States, or his fears in reference thereto, I think he has really no thought or care in connection with that whatever. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be a railway of importance to that part of the country, they have to seek a connection with the western States, and they have to seek it through the most important part of the western peninsula which they can find; and, in the road they are projecting at the present time, they come to a point where they connect with either of these competing lines to the city of Chicago, in case they have no desire to build a line of their own, thereby creating not only the competition which is so desirable to the western peninsula of the Dominion of Canada, but also to the United States, to the city of Chicago. They must have feeders from the west as well as from the east if they wish to be an important line, and it does seem to me that it would be like a jug without a handle if that road were to run to the town of St. Thomas or the city of London and there terminate. As to their making running arrangements over the Canada Southern or the Great Western or Grand Trunk, we know, in relation to the Grand Trunk, what is the feeling that exists between the two roads at the present time, and we know that no running arrangements could be made. And as to the Canada Southern, the very reason why they are building this line there and extending the Credit Valley as they propose is to have an in-dependent line to connect with either of the three great roads running from Detroit westward to Chicago, so as to create the competition which is so very desirable.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoke.

Mr. WILSON. I am rising to a point of explanation, and I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that my hon. friend from East Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan) said I had stated in this House what I knew to be wrong. I emphatic-ally repudiate in strong terms, as strong as I possibly can repudiate, any insinuation of my hon. friend in that respect. I attempted to state what I actually believed, and I might say that I am responsible to this House and to my own conscience whether I speak what I believe or what I do not believe; and I therefore repudiate in toto the remarks made by my hon. friend.

Mr. MACMILLAN. Just one word in explanation. When the hon. gentleman said that was the best line through to the western peninsula, what I say is that I differ with him in that, and I believe I am correct in stating that the other line is the more direct and the better line.

Mr. BLAKE. No, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman used the very unparliamentary expression that the hon. member for East Elgin knew he was stating what was not correct. I attempted to call your attention to it at the time, but did not succeed, as you were otherwise engaged.

S'r JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman's recollection is not perfect. He did not say that.

Mr. WILSON. I took his words down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. · You could not have taken those words down. What he said was that the statement was as erroneous as it could possibly be. Well, the statement may be erroneous, without-

Some hon. MEMBERS. He said he knew it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He said nothing of the kind.

Mr. HAGGART. The Ontario and Quebec Railway Company do not wish the amendment made to their Bill which is proposed by the hon. gentleman opposite. They wish to have the opportunity of extending their line at any point they may think proper from Ingersoll westward, and which may be found, by the engineering survey of the country, to have been the most feasible route. They are not at all anxious to build that portion to Detroit, but they have had some additional correspondence with the Canada Southern Railway Company, in which they found they could not make arrangements with the Canada Southern Railway Company for the carrying of their freight from St. Thomas to Detroit unless the Ontario and Quebec, or the Canadian Pacific Railway, made a promise to the Canada Southern Railway Company, that what freight was delivered to them at St. Thomas and carried down to Brockville, would be delivered to that Company for the purpose of being taken to any port in the United States. They want to be at liberty to carry freight to any port which they may think ront jurisdiction of which the hon. gentleman has spoken. proper in the United States, and by any means which An Act of incorporation had been obtained from the Pro-they might think proper, and for that reason vince of Canada before Confederation and subsequently, from they want an extension of their line westward to the fact that the diocese took in some lands belonging to Mr. MACMILLAN.

Detroit. They are not at all anxious, as I said, to complete it, and they only build it for the purpose of carrying out the arrangement and the promises which the Canadian Pacific Railway made to Parliament awhile ago, and they were anxious to have a line for the purpose of securing a certain amount of freight to the western peninsula, and also for carrying on the business of a railway company if necessary, or, if freight was offered them, for the purpose of carrying that freight to Detroit or any point westward.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). When this matter was before the Committee 1 remember that the hon. member spoke very strongly indeed, because the Company asked for the right to start from anywhere west of Toronto, and the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill stated Ingersoll, and I took it for granted that the mover of this resolution was satisfied with Ingersoll, and that it was a compromise. At least I thought they were all perfectly satisfied in Committee.

Mr. WILSON. I said St. Thomas.

Mr. WHITE. He said St. Thomas, but he said Ingersoll at the same time, and I took it for granted the hon. gentleman accepted Ingersoll.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill passel.

ROMAN CATHOLIC EPISCOPAL CORPORATION OF PONTIAC.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 84) to incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pontiac.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved it-elf into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to ask whether this application is based upon the difficulty which arose from the decision in Dobie and the Church Temporalities with respect to the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. WHITE. The reason for this Bill is because the diocese which it is proposed to incorporate embraces certain portions of territory that are not included in any of the Provinces that have yet been formed; therefore it was deemed necessary to come to this Parliament and obtain the powers sought for. I believe the same powers have been asked for from the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec in portions of both of which Provinces this diocese is situated, but it also embraces part of the land situated in the vicinity of Hudson Bay and James Bay outside of any Province.

Mr. BLAKE. As to where these lands of the Hudson Bay and James Bay are it might be difficult to say. Does the hon. gentleman mean that concurrent Local legislation has been obtained in Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. WHITE. I think so.

Mr. CARON. This Bill came before the Private Bills Committee, and the reason given for seeking legislation from this House was that besides the diocese being a portion in the Province of Quebec and a portion in the Province of Ontario, it also extended beyond the two Provinces and embraced a portion of the lands extending as far as Hudson Bay. Hon. gentlemen know that this diocese comprises districts in which missionaries have been labouring. What the hon. gentleman said about concurrent jurisdiction doesnot apply to this Bill, but it applies to another Bill incorporating the Roman Catholic Diocese of Ottawa. In this latter Bill it was absolutely necessary to have the concur-the Province of Ontario, an Act of incorporation was obtained from the Province of Ontario. The powers which are sought for by this Bill are exactly the same as were granted by Ontario, except that as the Bill covers territory beyond the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, it was considered advisable to obtain a charter from Ottawa also.

Mr. BLAKE. Though not agreeing, myself, with a good deal of the reasoning given, I think it is not at all unreasonable that wherever Local legislation has granted powers of incorporation we should endeavour as far as we can, to confirm them here in analogous circumstances. I do not now propose to say anything with reference to the other Bill which is coming on presently; but with reference to this Bill it seems from what the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill has said, that he was not quite sure that there was concurrent legislation. My own impression is that it is an unfortunate step to take to legislate here in this regard, otherwise than with a view to confirm or get rid of any difficulties which may exist in the implementing of the will of the Local Legislatures in this matter. I think there are yet serious questions to be settled as to where our jurisdiction is. I do not think private parties ought to suffer from the nonsettlement of these questions by our withholding our hand from implementing, or completing Local legislation, but if there has been no Local legislation we seem to be taking an unfortunate step, the soundness of which I question. The other Bill sooms to fall exactly in the principles to which I allude. This one seems to be going a step in advance of that question which I, as a defender of Provincial rights, am somewhat indisposed to sanction.

Mr. MACMILLAN. I have looked at some portions of this Bill, and I suppose that in considering the preamble we are also considering the principles of the Bill. Now, the fourth and fifth sections of this Bill seem to me to contain some very extraordinary provisions, and to ask for legislation which is utterly unwarrantable and ought not to be sanctioned by this House. If it was for the purpose of passing an Act with reference to lands or properties I should have no objection to it, but we are asked to form them into a joint stock company, into a mortgage company, into a loaning company. They are to be purchasers and sellers of real estate, and so far as I can see we are asked to empower them to do everything except being a bank of issue. Now, it seems to me this is going altogether too far. Section 4 says :

"The corporation shall be capable of taking, holding, and receiving any real or personal property, notes, bonds, mortgages and agreements, or other obligations, for the payment of money by virtue of any pur-chase, agreement, voluntary conveyance, or of any last will or testament of any person whatsoever."

Then section 5 goes on to say:

"The corporation may from time to time sell, exchange, alienste, let, demise, lease, or otherwise dispose of property, real or personal, belong-ing to, or vested in, the corporation."

That might be all right so far; but it goes on to say:

"And other property real and personal of every nature and kind whatsoever."

My hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Blake) spoke of the case of Dobie vs. The Temporalities Board. That had recase of Dobie vs. The Temporalities Board. ference to funds and properties belonging to the Church at that time. The Board did not seek to get possession of properties at any future time. In this case, however, the institution becomes a thorough exchange market, with power to buy and sell land, take mortgages upon land, sell mortgages, take promissory notes, and it appears to me to be created an institution simply for the purpose of buying and selling lands, negotiating mortgages and promissory notes and everything of that kind. I think under these direction and the circumstances it is a step in the wrong direction, and the than he is himself; indeed, not so much so, for he may have sooner we put a stop to legislation of this kind the better.

Mr. CARON. I do not understand how the hon, gentleman can take the view which he has just presented to the House. The property which is invested in the corporation is for trust purposes; moreover the hon. gentleman, possibly from not having attended the Private Bills Committee, ignores the fact that these clauses were amended so as to protect, in so far as it was possible for this Parliament to protect, Provincial rights, which seemed to have caused the discussion which is now taking place. I direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the amendments introduced by the Private Bills Committee for the purpose to which I have referred. For instance, clause 3 was amended by introducing the words "and subject, also, to the provisions of the law of the respective Provinces." Clause 4, which seems to be so obnoxious to the hon. gentleman, is also amended by adding "subject, however, to the same Local laws;" and clause 5 was also amended by adding a most important provision, which reads as follows :-

"Subject, however, to the same local laws; and provided also that the corporation shall within ten years after its acquisition of any such real estate, sell or otherwise dispose of and alienats so much of such real estate as is not required for the use and occupation, or other like pur-poses of the corporation."

This amendment was introduced as it was identical with the provisions introduced by the Private Bills Committee last year in similar Acts of incorporation sought from this Parliament. Taking into consideration the clauses as amended, I think the rights of the Provinces are perfectly protected.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon, member for East Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan) is mistaken in supposing that this Bill confers on the body incorporated any of the powers of a loan company. It only gives the corporation power to hold lands for church purposes. The hon. member for East Middlosex would not surely deprive the Church of the power to accept gifts or acquire lands for church purposes, and as provisions are inserted under which land can only be held for ten years, except such as is required for church purposes, the objection has been met and should not be pressed.

Mr. MACMILLAN. I do not understand it in that way, because the latter part of section 5 says "and also from time to time purchase and acquire other property, real and personal, for the use and purposes of the corporation."

Bill reported, and read the third time and passe I.

ROMAN CATHOLIC DIOCESE OF OTTAWA.

Mr. TASSÉ moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 95) relating to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Many hon. members on this side of the House are not satisfied with this Bill. We are not satisfied as to the desirability of granting this legislation, but we are perfectly willing, as it is considered to be of advantage to the parties seeking it, not to object to it, and I hope and trust the same good will will be shown by them to others, who are equal to them in every respect, when the time comes. I hape the leader of the Opposition and the leader of the Gradmuncht who allow these Bills to become law-for they are both responsible for the legislation of the House-was act as men and keep as quiet then as they do when this Bill is before the Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg to say to the hon. gentleman that I am no more responsible for the legislation of the House some influence on the majority. It is quite true that he may thus appeal to the leader of the House if an impropriety exists, and I have no doubt whatever that the leader of the Government will take notice of it. I state that the principles on which I thought parties coming here and applying for this Bill were not unjustifiable. I do not concur in a good deal of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Dobie vs. the Temporalities Board. It is, however, the law at the present time; it may be changed on a further review of the law. In the meantime I am not unwilling to concur in helping parties out of the difficulty created by the decision in Dobie vs. Temporalities Board, just this far: If I find Local legislation in two, three or four of the Provinces concurrent and of the same character as the legislation on which doubt has been cast by the decision in that case, I am willing to concur in legislation to remove the doubt affecting the Local legislation. That is what I understand is being done in this case, and, therefore, from my point of view, I do not object to it. That is what Quebec and Ontario have, so far as they could, accomplished. The question is whether it has been successfully accomplished, and doubt is thrown upon that successful accomplishment by the decision of the Privy Council. What we are called upon to do is to remove all doubt as far as we can, and effectuate the will of the Local Legislatures with reference to a matter of property and civil right. For my own part, speaking with the responsibility of a single member of this House, I can see no objection to that course.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I may say that no special advantage is asked, no new legislation, no new privileges. The Act of 1845 incorporating the Roman Catholic Bishops of The Act Toronto and Kingston, gave power to organize new dioceses which were not specially included in that Act. In 1849 several new dioceses were created in Lower Canada, amongst them being the diocese of Bytown. Afterwards an amendment was made in 1861 which changed the name of the diocese of Bytown to that of Ottawa. Legislation was again sought in 1882 in the Legislature of Ontario, because the old Act of the old Province of Canada only applied to all property in Lower Canada; and as the diocese entered into the Province of Ontario, the powers granted by the Act of 1849 have been expressly given by the Ontario Act of 1882, and the present Act, as the hon. gentleman has just stated, is only to confirm legislation which was passed in the two Provinces, nothing more.

Bill reported.

Mr. TASSE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BOSSE. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not satisfied with the explanations which have been made to this Bill. It seems that the corporation was originally created by an Act of the Province of Canada, and afterwards some amendment was made by the Legislature of Ontario since Confederation and these Acts would certainly affect the lands and the civil rights in the Province of Ontario. I do not see, therefore, how there can be any doubt upon the question; but as I am in a small minority in the matter I would simply ask that the Bill be allowed to pass on a division.

Bill read the third time on a division, and passed.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CURRAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 21) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Before you leave the Chair for the purpose of going into Committee on this Bill, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which was referred to and received some discussion in the Railway of the fusion or amalgamation between the Grand Trunk and the Great Western. The Minister of Railways stated on that occasion, that the Minister of Justice had advised or express ed the opinion that the fusion or amalgamation between those two companies which had been effected, was in accordance with the statutory powers already existing in favour of the Grand Trunk, and that no further legislation was necessary to sanction and ratify that fusion. I have reason to believe, from some enquiries I have made, that the opinion of the learned and hon. Minister of Justice was not an opinion in writing, and was not an opinion given deliberately as his own legal opinion on the question, but was an expression of opinion based principally on the opinions which had been obtained by the Grand Trunk Company from various leading members of the profession. I have heard that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition had given an opinion on the point, and also that the right hon. leader of the House had given an opinion upon it.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon, gentleman will allow me to interrupt him I would state that I never gave any opinion on the point whatever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I never gave any opinion on the point.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am glad to hear that the weight of two such eminent lawyers, as the two hon. gentlemen who have just given the contradiction, is removed from the side of the legality of this arrangement. All I can say is, that my information came from a very direct source. was informed, positively, by a gentleman who should have known, that Mr. Bell, the solicitor of the Grand Trunk, had quoted both the leader of the House and the leader of the Opposition as lawyers who had expressed an opinion in favour of the validity of the amalgamation. The names of other learned gentlemen were quoted, among them being Mr. Christopher Robinson, and Mr. Bethune, who stand at the head of the legal profession in Ontario, as were also the opinions of leading counsel in England. The only opinion I have seen was one which, sometime since, I saw in an English newspaper, as given by two counsel in England in favour of the validity of the fusion. That opinion was subsequently, I believe, withdrawn by one of them, and, at any rate, it was based, so far as the statement of the case went, on an incomplete case, on a case which did not state all the Statutes bearing on the question. Now the opinion that the fusion of those two companies is valid and legal, under existing legislation, may be right or it may be wrong. For my own part, with all humility, and distrusting the correctness of my own judgment when put against that of the learned gentleman who have given opinions on the other side; but as the great weight of the opinion of the leader of the House and the leader of the Opposition is removed from that side-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I had forgotten for the moment that in 1876, I believe, I did express an opinion on the subject.

Mr. BLAKE. I may say that I was a little surprised when the hon. gentleman spoke, because the papers were laid before me containing a copy of his opinion; but for my own part I declined to give an opinion, thinking that the matter would become a Parliamentary question, and that I would like to look into it.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am glad to hear the cortradiction. I am inclined to think that if we saw the upinion of the hon. gentleman and the case on which it was based, we might have reason to doubt whether the opinion went as far as the Grand Trunk authorities insist. We all know that the value and importance of an opinion by counsel on any question depend entirely on the case submit-Committee when this Bill was before it. I mean the question ted to the counsel-whether that case is correct, whether it truly sets forth all the facts and all the circumstances. Now, so far as I have been able to give any consideration to this question-having looked through the various Acts of Parliament, numerous as they are, with respect to this question-I confess that the opinion I had formed was that this fusion was illegal and unsupported by any statutory authority. The only authority which I have been able to find is that contained in the old Grand Trunk Act, passed by the Parliament of Canada in 1852, which I do not think is effectual to give authority to the Grand Trunk for the purpose of this fusion. But the circumstances of the country have entirely changed since the passage of that Act. The object to be accomplished by it was to secure communica-tion from the western frontier of Ontario to the eastern frontier of Quebec, or at least into the city of Quebec; and when we look at the subsequent legislation of Parliament, I think there can be little doubt that the power contained in that Bill has become effete and insufficient to sustain this arrangement. But the Grand Trunk Railway Act of 1878 seems to me to put it beyond all doubt-I say it with all respect to the arguments used on the other side-that this fusion cannot be sustained as within the powers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The first point to be considered, of course, is what is the nature of the existing arrangement between these two companies. So far as I understand it, it is simply a joint working agreement whereby they agree to pool their receipts and agree to an application of the pro-ceeds in a certain specified manner. This would be termed a working agreement, so that I think it would come within the fifth section of the Act of 1878, which says:

"It shall be lawful for the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to lease or enter into working agreements with, or to agree for, running powers over the line of any railway company in the Province of Ontario which by its Act of incorporation or the Statutes relating thereto has power to make any such arrangement with any other company, upon such terms and conditions and for such period as may from time to time be agreed upon."

But then there is this proviso :

"Provided also that this section shall not give to any of the above mentioned railway companies other than the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada any more or greater powers in the respect in this section mentioned, than they now have, nor shall this section apply to any company whose lines runs in the same general direction and competes with the said Grand Trunk Railway, nor to any Company whose line runs between the Detroit and St. Clair and Niagara Rivers."

Now that the Great Western line does run in the same general direction and is a competing line with the Grand Trunk Railway, is beyond question. That it also runs between the Detroit and St. Clair and Niagara rivers is also beyond question. That it is, therefore, excluded by the terms of this clause from making any such agreement with the Grand Trunk, and that the Grand Trunk is prohibited from making any arrangement with the Great Western, is perfectly clear. The arrangement partakes of all the descriptions in this clause; it is a lease, a certain working arrangement, an agreement for running powers over the Great Western; and the Great Western, ever since the arrangement was entered into, has been run as a part of the Grand Trunk line. It may be said that if the Grand Trunk had power irrespective of this Statute to make that arrangement, it would then be valid; but I think this clause is a clear and emphatic expression of Parliament that no arrangement of that character should be made between the Grand Trunk Railway and any other line running in the same direction or competing with it, or running between the Niagara and Detroit rivers. Now, I do not propose at this stage of the Bill to take the responsibility of moving the rejection of so much of it as sanctions or ratifies this amalgamation. I feel that the responsibility of doing so, after the arrangement has been carried out and acted upon for the last two or three years, and after it has be a very serious responsibility. The part of the country which I have the honour to represent has no interest whatever in this particular question that I am aware of. If it were a Bill sanctioning a fusion with the Midland Railway which runs through my constituency, it would be my duty to oppose such an arrangement. But as the opinion was expressed in the Railway Committee by the Minister of Railways that this fusion was legal, 1 felt that it was my duty not to tacitly acquiesce in that opinion, but to state to the House emphatically that in my opinion a grave doubt does exist on the subject, and that the House must now take the responsibility, if it thinks fit, of sanctioning the amalgamation between these two companies, which is the most complete amalgamation which could possibly be effected. It provides for the extinction of the Great Western stock, and substitutes Grand Trunk securities for it-in fact puts an end to the Great Western Railway Company altogether. For these reasons I have called the attention of the House to this Bill, and more particularly my hon. friends on both sides who represent constituencies in the western part of Ontario, where I know the majority of the people were at the time very much opposed to this fasion and are I believe still opposed to it. If it be the opinion of the House and of the public that arrangement should be sanctioned, I do not propose to oppose it. But I have done my duty in calling attention to the legal po ition of this question at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the House should have an explanation from the hon. Minister of Railways in regard to this matter. He cortainly induced the Committee to pass the Bill without much consideration in this respect, by stating that it was strongly the opinion of the Minister of Justice, who had given full consideration to it, that the amalgamation was now complete, and could not be affected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We were not told that it was a casual opinion, but one arrived at after due deliberation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is a difficulty in connection with receiving opinions of Committees. In the last Parliament the Minister of Justice very frequently obtruded his opinion to guide us, and was always able to give an opinion, without asking time for consideration. It is somewhat different now, no doubt. Consideration, no doubt, has been given to it, but it is an objectionable practice that members of the Government should go to any Committee, and, by stating the opinion of the legal adviser of the Crown to be so and so, influence it to pass certain Bills. With regard to this Bill I had the greatest possible objection to the introduction of the amalgamation clause, until I was informed that the thing was accomplished, at any rate, and the Bill might be considered without reference to it. As the matter stands, if the hon. member for Victoria is correct, the Bill should be referred back to the Railway Committee, where it certainly did not receive the consideration which it would have received had we been aware of this at the time. I have the greatest objection to the amalgamation of roads, particularly when running in the same direction, and think it is wrong to sanction the blunderings of a gigantic corporation which would override all other interests in the neighbour-hood. This Bill, apparently, was brought in for one purpose, but it will accomplish another purpose, if allowed to pass without that consideration to which it is entitled. As a member of the Railway Committee, I must ask that it stand for present consideration unless the mover proposes that it be referred back to the Committee of Railways for farther consideration and report.

been sanctioned by the Bill so far as it has proceeded, would by my hon. friend from Victoria is not, I believe, tenable.

He has referred to the contention that has been maintained by the Grand Trunk Railway in connection with this amalgamation, and he has mentioned the names of some of the distinguished jurists who had expressed their opinions as being favourable to the view that powers vested in the Company to effect this amalgamation. I may state for his information that, in 1882, parties connected with the Great Western Railway Company were anxious to have a final and definite opinion upon this subject. They consulted Messers. Wesley & Davie, eminent counsel in London, and their opinion concurred with the opinions of others which I will read in a few moments. As the right hon. leader of the Government has said, an opinion was obtained from him in the matter; at the time, he was not a member of the Government but a practising lawyer, and he concurred in the opinion of Mr. Bell, the Grand Trunk Railway solicitor, which was submitted to him. As regards the statement that the hon. leader of the Opposition has given an opinion on this subject, he was then a member of the Government and his opinion was not obtained, but that of the firm to which he belonged was obtained; and that opinion I will take the liberty of reading to the House:

"TORONTO, 30th October, 1876.

"In the matter of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Great Western Railway Company of Canada, our opinion has been asked upon the following questions :--"1. Did the amalgamation mentioned in and confirmed by the Act of the Canadian Legislature passed in 1854 (being 18 Vic. Chap. 33) exhaust the powers conferred by the several Acts then in existence piving the power to the two railways above named to unite or amalgamate.

"2. Is it competent for the two railway companies above named to amalgamate or unite under the powers contained in existing legislation in Canada.

in Canada. "We have considered all the Acts passed by the Parliament of the Legislature of the late Province of Canada and by that of the Dominion of Canada bearing upon the two questions above stated, and the following may be referred to in particular:--"[1851, 14 and 15 Vic., Caps. 73, 74,75 and 148; 1852, 16 Vic., Cap. 37, 39, 41; 1853, 16 Vic., Cap. 73, 74,75 and 148; 1852, 16 Vic., Cap. 37, 39, 41; 1853, 16 Vic., Cap. 76; 1854, 18 Vic., Caps. 33; 1834, 4 William IV., Cap. 29; 1845, 8 Vic., Cap. £6; 1816, 9 Vic., Cap. 81, 16 Vic., Cap. 44; 1853, 16 Vic., Cap. 99; 1855, 18 and 19 Vic., Cap. 176, 32 and 33 Vic., Cap. 31, 33 Vic., Cap. 50 (section 8), 35 Vic., Cap. 55 (Section 5.) We are given to understand that no attempt has ever been made to effect an amalgamation or union of the two railways named in the heading hereof are given to understand that ho attempt has ever been made to effect an amalgamation or union of the two railways named in the heading hereof under the provisions of the Act 16 Vic, Cap. 39; that the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company merged into the Great Western Railway under the provisions of the above Acts;—that the Great Western Railway way received aid under the Acts relating to the main Trunk line above way received aid under the Acts relating to the main Trunk line above referred to; that, in fact, formed part of such main Trunk line, and was one of the Compauies referred in the Act 16 Vic., Cap. 39, (the Union Act), and the Act 16 Vic., Cap. 76 (extending the Union Act) as form-ing part of such main Trunk line. We are of opinion that the provisions of the Union Act (16 Vic., Cap. 39) and of the Act extending the same (16 Vic., Cap 7) and the powers of amalganation and union thereby conferred were not exhausted by the agreement referred and confirmed in by the 'Grand Trunk Railway Act, 1854,' (18 Vic., Cap. 33) and "3. That it is competent for the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Great Western Railway Company of Canada to units Oanada and the Great Western Railway Company of Canada to unite under the provisions of the Acts above referred to."

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). What is the date of that opinion ?

Mr. CURRAN. 30th October, 1876.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Of course, it makes no reference to the Act of 1878, which is the stumbling block.

Mr. CURRAN. I may state that the opinion of Mr. Æmelius Irving, of the 9th October, 1876, of Mr. James Bethune, of the 11th October, 1878, of Mr. M. C. Cameron, also in that month, as well as the opinion of John Hilliard Cameron, all agree in that respect. I fail to perceive from the argument that has been made by the hon. gontleman, wherein he refers to the 5th clause of the Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway, 41 Vic., chap. 35, that there is anything in this clause which would deprive the Grand Trunk Railway of any of the powers conferred upon them by the legislation upon which these opinions are based. I do not think that in this law there is anything that repeals any of the powers conferred; on the contrary, it merely , nsert in the present private Bill, a condition that the powers heretofore Mr. CURRAN.

refers to certain Acts which they may do, and in no way alters the position occupied by the Grand Trunk Railway up to that time. I believe the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways, the other day, had reference not only to the legislation upon which these opinions are based, but also to this clause 5, of 31 Vic, chap. 25. This clause says:

"It shall be lawful for the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to lease or enter into working arrangements with, or to agree for running powers over the line of any railway company in the Province of Ontario, which by its Act of incorporation or the Statutes relating thereto has power to make any such arrangements with any other company, upon such terms and conditions and for such period as may from time to time be agreed upon by the respective heards of directors of company, upon such terms and conditions and for such period as may from time to time be agreed upon by the respective boards of directors of the said companies and the board of directors of the Grand Trunk Rail-way Company of Canada: Provided however, that no such lease or agreement shall take effect until it shall have been submitted to and received the approval of two-thirds of the proprietors or persons having the right to vote at the special and general meetings of the said Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, voting in person or by proxy at any special or general meeting of the said company : Provided also, that this section shall not give to any of the above mentioned railway companies other than the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, any more or groater powers in the respect in this section mentioned, than they now have, nor shall this section and competes with the said Grand Trunk Railway, nor to any company whose line runs between the Detroit and St Clair and Niagara Rivers, or to any railway lines owned or leased by such last-mentioned Company."

I contend that this clause in no way sustains the objection raised by my learned friend, and I am satisfied that, on careful reading of it, he will come to the conclusion himself that the Grand Trunk Railway Company in amalgamating and forming one company with the Great Western Railway Company of Canada, have in no way exceeded the powers vested in them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that, at this stage of the matter, looking at the way in which this Bill now stands and the source from which it is backed up, I can do much more than state my views to the House in reference to it. The Government having adopted this Bill, and the hon. the Minister Railways having stated before the Committee the other day that he had recast the Bill and eliminated therefrom all the objectionable features, I feel that, however I may differ from him in the last statement, it would be useless to attempt to get any alteration made in this House, where a strong Government such as this is, takes the stand it has taken, and takes charge of such a Bill as this, and proposes to carry it through the House. I have felt very warmly about this Bill. I have felt it my duty before the Committee to point out the various objections which existed, to my mind, to the passage of the Bill as it stood; and, although the Minister of Railways states what he did state there, I fail to perceive that he has eliminated all the object tionable features of the Bill, and I would beg to call attention to two or three amendments which I still think he may consider it desirable to make in the Bill. I felt so strongly, after leaving the Committee the other day, about a statement that was made there, that I felt it to be my duty to address a letter to the Minister of Railways upon the subject. With the permission of the House I will read it :

"OTTAWA, 14th March, 1884.

"The privilege which the Grand Trunk arrogates to itself, of pur-chasing the stock and bonds of other companies, and a which it has a stock of any other railway company, under very severe penalties. "The privilege which the Grand Trunk arrogates to itself, of pur-chasing the stock and bonds of other companies, and on which it has lately so largely acted is a privilege conferred on that company by one of its own private acts; and so far as I can see, and according to the best advice I have taken, such a privilege should not be taken away from it advice I have taken, such a privilege should not be taken away from it, except by a private Act relating to it; and I think it would be quite in-consistent with the course of legislation, to put into an amendment of the Gameral Paillance Act relating to it; and I think it would be quite inthe General Railway Act, a provision taking away a special privilege already specially given to a private company. "Under these circumstances, I am satisfied that the proper course is to granted to the Grand Trunk Company to buy the stock and bonds of other companies, shall cease and determine. "Yours sincerely,

(Signed) "P. MITCHELL."

Now, the gentlemen who were present at the Railway Committee when this question came up know that, when I submitted an amendment there, it was suggested to me by the hon. Minister of Railways that I should withdraw the amendment, and the Government would take the subject under consideration, and give an early answer whether they would adopt my suggestion or not. I received an answer to it later in the day, and that was, that while the Govern-ment, as I understood it, recognized the principle of the amendment I had submitted, they thought it inconsistent to put it in the Bill because it might affect the floating of the securities the Bill provided for. I said, I care not how it is done so that it is done, in order to secure the public against the exercise of such powers as they now possess. But, after mature reflection, and after consulting with several friends on the subject, I became convinced that it was my duty to address that letter, which I did. I felt, after we left the Committee, very strongly upon some other points. I felt that, in a matter of this importance, where the Goverment had, as they said, entirely recast the Grand Trunk Bill, and the readjusted Bill was put upon the table of the Committee Room a few minutes before it was taken up to be considered—and as it involved such very serious interests, alike to the Company and to the public, as this Bill does, as the Bill was recast based upon very voluminous statements made by the Deputy Finance Minister in relation thereto, statements very complicated in their character-I felt that time ought to have been given to that Committee to consider the provisions of the Bill, and to consider the statements upon which it was founded. I was overruled in that. The Committee adopted the Bill. But, on considering the matter and looking over these state-ments after I got a copy of them—and the Minis-ter of Railways was kind enough to give me a copy of the reports of Mr. Courtney-I came to the conclusion that Mr. Courtney's first report was substantially correct, except in one important particular; that was, that a mistake of £1,000,000 sterling had been made in relation to the figures, and had been made against the country and in favour of the Grand Trunk pretensions. His second report was of a very different character, as anyone who will take it up and read it will see, and it is upon that second report the Minister of Rulways founded and prepared the amended Bill now under the consideration of this House. The Minister of Railways stated that he called upon Mr. Courtney to give him a calculation as to the charge upon the country which this change would involve, whether it would be increased or diminished by it, and by the statement made by Mr. Courtney he showed that about £11,000 sterling a year would be saved to the country by the passage of the Bill, and by permitting the Grand Trunk to carry out the consolidation and amalgamation which the Bill contained. What do I find in Mr. Courtney's report ?- in Mr. Courtney's second report, upon which the present Bill is founded, which the hon. the Minister of Railways stated to the Committee that the Government had adopted and were proceeding to support in the Legislature of this country-I find this extraordinary statement, that it is not based upon facts ascertained by Mr. Courtney himself, but upon statements submitted by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, without a particle of evidence, so far as the Committee or this House knows, upon which to make the statement of the statement which to sustain them, and it contains in itself so material an error that £1,100,000 of an annual charge is placed in a certain portion of those liabilities where it ought not to be placed. The House has had no opportunity to verify the statements; the Committee had no opportunity to verify the statements; Mr. Courtney himself does not say he had any opportunity to verify the statements but he says : -

"The former memo. dealt only with the capital of the companies affected by the Bill, annexed hereto is a statement furnished me by the Company with respect to the payments on account of the interest. From this it will be seen that in order to pay all the interest now upon the road which has to be pail before any interest can be paid on the Government claim, the yearly, net earnings of the road would have to be, in rough numbers, £2,584,285; under the Bill now under consideration when the yearly net earnings reach that figure it would appear that there would be not only sufficient to pay all the charges for interest, but there would be in addition apparently some £11,000 or £12,000 each year to go towards the interest on the Government claim."

Mr. Courtney goes on and gives the statement as furnished by the Grand Trunk Company to him upon which he made this report. I have not seen the statement furnished by the Grand Trunk Company, but I have carefully gone over the securities named, and I find that they have exaggerated the current liabilities, as they stand to day to the enormous amount of £300,000 sterling or about \$1,500,000. Sir, I think it behooves this Government to watch the course of any logislation of this kind, and when legislation involves, as this Bill does, such enormous interests, I do not think it is either for the credit of Government or of Parliament that this legislation should be forced upon us in the way it was, without these statements being substantiated and some examination made by the Railway Committee by going into it for the purpose of finding out whether they were founded upon facts or not. Now, Sir, Mr. Courtney, in his statement, says it will leave just £11,000 or £12,000, and he says that is based upon the statement of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I tell this House that that statement is furnished by the Grand Trunk Company, and if any hon. gentleman who is conversant with figures will take up that Bill, and make a calculation of the interest upon all these securities contained in all these schedules, he will find that the statement as furnished here by Mr. Courtney and based upon the Grand Trunk statements, increase the current liabilities at this moment of the Grand Trunk Company by $\pounds 300,000$ over and above what the actual fact is as to the existing charge upon that Company. Why is this done, Sir ? It is done for the purpose-it is wrong, perhaps, for me to say it is done for a purpose—but I will tell you what the effect of it is. The effect is to enable the Grand Trunk Company to come before this House and show that their liabilities amount to a certain figure at the present moment, and that by the additional liability which they are authorized to create, the charges will be some £11,000 or £12,000 sterling less than they are to day, exaggerating existing liabilities by £300,000. I have gone into the figures carefully, and I have taken the precaution to get a man thoroughly versed in statistics to go over them for me, and I am confirmed in the statement by the calculation at which that gentleman has arrived. Is that the course this Parliament ought to adopt, to take up a hostile Bill thrown before us on Friday last, without any particular examination, after the statement that Mr. Courtney has given here, founded upon information given him by the Grand Trunk officers? He has had no evidence, the House has had no evidence, the country has had no evidence. I ask this House if it is a proper course to pursue in relation to this legislation. Sir, it is useless to talk about this matter. I have already done my duty, at all events, in relation to it. I am not going to take up the time of Parliament by continuing to talk when Government have made up their minds that this legislation shall pass. They may have evidence I do not possess; they may have some means of arriving at this calculation that the House does not know; but at all events after very careful consideration, after looking into the thing very deliberately, and giving it great attention, I have come to the conclusion, and I can make the statement without fear of contradiction, that there has been a misstatement in the calculation of the existing annual charges of the Grand Trunk to-day to the extent of \$1,500,000. Sir, I am going again to call the attention of the Government to two points that they would do well to consider: in sub-section C of section 5 it says:

"And the remainder of the said consolidated deben'ures and stock by this Act authorized to be created and issued, and any sums remaining out of the sums mentioned, &c."

And I would suggest that these words be added: "The approval of the Governor in Council being first obtained Then if the Grand Trunk Company have thereto." power to go on and buy up these debentures and consolidate liabilities by the proceeds of this stock, then they are bound to lay a double track, and that before they could appropriate the surplus money to any other purposes than those approved of by the Company, they should get the approval of the Governor in Council to do it. The other point is this: I think after section 18 this clause ought to be put in :

"That f: om and after the passing of this Act the power of purchasing the stock and bonds of other railway companies shall cease and determine."

It is well known that most of the embarrassments of the Grand Trunk have resulted from the fact that they have used the moneys which have been raised from time to time in buying up bonds and stocks and securities of the Northern Road, of the Grey and Bruce, of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, of the Vermont Central and others, and by this means endeavouring to obtain a monopoly through Canada of the whole railway system. Sir, it is only the other day that I felt a little proud of the Minister of Railways when he resented, in a very remarkable manner, the attempt of the officers of this Company to coerce Parliament and to dictate to it; but I must confess that it looks to me very much like a capitulation at the present time, and I regret very much to see it. At all events, I have washed my hands of any responsibility in the matter, and in conclusion I will read this letter that I sent to the Minister of Railways this morning :

" OTTAWA, March 17th, 1884.

¹⁴ DEAR SIR CHARLES TUPPER, — The Grand Trunk Bill, as reprinted for the second time was brought before the Committee, with so little pre-vious time for consideration, that it was difficult to judge precisely what its effect would be. And I may say the same thing of Mr. Courtney's reports. Now it seems plain that there was misconception about some portions of the Bill, and apparently, grave errors in the reports. The main points are with reference to using the proposed increase of capital for double-tracking, &c., and prohibiting the Company from dealing in railway stock and bonds.

⁴ There is still no provision which requires that the additional capital procured by manipulating the securities, will be used in double tracking. The Act says it shall be done to such extent, as the directors capital procured by manipulating the securities, will be used in double tracking. The Act says it shall be done to such extent, as the directors may deem fit; which may be a mile or as much more as they think proper. The provision that the Company shall report to the Government what is done with the money, is no protection, because the Government has no power to interfere; and if it had power it would be too late as,the money will be expended b fore the report is made. What is wanted is a specific declaration that the money shall be expended in the double-tracking of the road, after that in rolling stock and equipment. "The words 'the general purposes of the Company' include any-thing and everything, and even the employment of the whole of it in purchasing the stock and bonds of other companies. "The second point,—all the more material in connection with the first,—is the improper power of dealing in stock and bonds of other com-panies. If any other railway company in the Dominion were to do so, every officer engaged in it is declared by your Act of 1882 to be guilty of a misdemeanor, whereas the Grand Trunk is permitted to do it, as part of its business; and, as you know, has repeatedly doze it. This anomaly in the teeth of the Parliament Act, should be done away with. "I mention these two points to you because it is possible they may come up for discussion in the House; and I do think the Government would stand in a better position, if after its long hesitation about the Bill it should insist on, or at least, some of its most obvious defects being modified if not removed. "Users much to see the aerror into which Mr. Courtney has fallen made the basis of a Ministerial declaration to Parliament through the Railway Committee, and I think such statements coming from the Com-pany interested in the Bill should not have been accepted without some reasonable verification. "At the meeting of the Committee, on Friday last, in answer to my

"At the meeting of the Committee, on Friday last, in answer to my question as to 'whether the new stock to be created by the Bill came after or before the Government debt,' I understood you to say that 'it came after it.' So far as I can understand the Bill I think you are in error in this opinion, and if you recollect I expressed doubt at the time, error in this opinion, and in you reconcore a stated by you." though accepting the conclusion then stated by you." "I am, &c., yours truly, (Signed) "P. MITCHELL."

Now, Sir, I feel it is useless to discuss this Bill or attempt to arrest its progress. I think the proper course to follow is that suggested by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), namely, that under the circumstances the Bill should be referred back to the Committee for the purpose of obtaining information in regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and to examine into the statistics submitted by Mr. Courtney, and enquire as to how he arrived at that information and whether it is correct or not. Having offered these few remarks, I feel 1 have discharged my duty in opposing the Bill. If the Government choose to take the responsibility of passing the Bill, upon them rests the responsibility of that act, and I think the probability is they will regret it hereafter.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me the statements made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) demand some further statement from the Minister of Railways with respect to the legal attitude of the Government upon this question. I do not pretend to have been able to follow the statement made by the hon. member for Victoria, or the statement read by the hon. member for Montreal, with any such degree of accuracy of apprehension, as would enable me to form an opinion whatever on the legal question which has been raised. So far as I could gather from the remarks of the member from Montreal, he says there was a concurrence of legal opinion obtained, in the year 1876, I think, in favour of the opinion, that power at that time existed on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Great Western Railway Company to amalgamate or make such arrangements as they did make, whatever the arrangements were. Of course, it would be necessary that the power should belong to both companies, it is not sufficient that it should belong to either. I have no idea whether they had that power or not; I have never read the Statutes respecting it, I never formed any opinion on it, and I could not follow the hon gentleman in the brief statement he made. If I rightly understood the hon. member for Victoria, he indicated that such was of no importance, because of the subsequent Statutes, the Statute of 1878, which was the stumbling block in the way. From that observation I would suppose the hon. gentleman rather concurred in the view as to the authority and power existing anterior to the Statute of 1878.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not go so far. I think it was a matter of doubt, but that after the Act of 1878 the doubt was removed, and it became illegal.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentlemen had agreed, there would have been entire concurrence, so far as we know, as to the power existing up to that time. I confess I was surprised and struck with regret, when I learned of the amalgamation or arrangements made between the two "I regret much to see the error into which Mr. Courtney has fallen. In his original report, according to my copy of it, he states the increase to be procured by the Bill at one million pounds sterling less than the fact, and this by a very obvious error of simple subtraction. "In the second, the statement handed him by the Company which he impliedly sanctions, makes it appear that the annual charge will be smaller under the Bill than it is at present by an error in the statement of the present annual charge of over one million five hundred thousand dollars. That is to say, the statement makes out that the new annual charge will be eleven thousand pounds a year less than the old annual charge by incorrectly adding to one of the items of the old annual charge an amount of over three hundred and forty thousand pounds sterling per annum. No doubt both of these errors, serious as they are, an emere oversight; but an oversight becomes important, when it is Mr. MITCHELL.

legislative sanction to the amalgamation of those two companies. The question is, what are we doing? If the hon. member for Victoria is correct, we are in effect now confirming the amaigamation. Then I think we have a very serious question of policy before us, upon which I have stated what my opinion is and what my vote would be. If we are practically reduced to the one question, whether, if there was any authority before, that authority has been taken away by the Statute of 1878, I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways to state specifically whether the attention of the legal advisers of the Government has been called to that particular point to which the hon. member for Victoria has referred, the question whether whatever powers were possessed before that time, those powers continued notwithstanding the Statute of 1878, or whether they were given by that Statute; and whether the deliberate opinion of the legal advisors is, that those powers were discontinued or were given by that Statute; and that in conse-quence, notwithstanding the Statute of 1878, or by virtue of that Statute, there was legal authority to-day for what has been done? That is one point which it is important we should know distinctly and clearly, and then we would be able to judge whether we should put it in any train for further investigation. It is a much simpler point than an investigation of all the old Statutes; it is a point on which it would not be very difficult to reach a conclusion. I do not know whether the hon, member for Victoria was concerned in the case which bore some resemblance to this, the amalgamation between the Northern and North-Western Railways, in which somewhat similar questions came up, though everything in these questions depends on the precise character of the clauses. That is one point to which the hon. Minister's attention should be specially directed, because the question is of gigantic consequence; and if we are now called on to confirm the amalgamation of the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways, I am against that amalgamation. If, on the other hand, the companies have power to do what they have done, I am in favour of facilitating the working operations under the existing power. This is just what I stated in regard to the North Shore. I would have opposed the acquisition of power by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to obtain the North Shore Railway; nevertheless, the company having been given power by Parliament by which they obtained practical control, I was not disposed to prevent the arrangement being carried out, however much opposed I might be to it. The company had got possession of the road, and the rest was matter relating to carrying it into effect. So with regard to the present case. Then there is the other point-I speak with considerable hesitation, not having been at the Railway Committee-the only other very material point, raised by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), in regard to which he is entitled to some little information, that is with respect to power to acquire the stock and bonds of other railway companies. Last Session I cordially other railway companies. Last Session I cordially approved of the proposition that some stay should be placed upon the power of one railway company to acquire the stock and bonds of other railways, unless Parliament specifically indicated what particular railway company it was authorized to so deal with. A general power to acquire stock and bonds I believe to be a mischievous power. Undoubtedly some years ago, I suppose for a specific purpose, as I said last Session-for the purpose of extending the road to Chicago - we gave a general power of this cha-racter to the Grand Trunk. Does the Bill propose to leave that power intact? If so it is objectionable.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Bill does not refer to it. It leaves that power as it was.

Mr. BLAKE. But the Minister of Railways said last Session, he would introduce a measure this Session, dealing with that subject generally. I supposed the power which had been given, and which might affect pending arrangements, was not to be taken away at a moment's notice; he said, the interval between this Session and next Session will be taken as notice. The hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) informs me that some companies have obtained such power this Session. This is unfortunats. I am opposed to the continuance of any power to a railway company to acquire stock and bonds generally of other railway companies. I believe, if they want such power, they should come to Parliament and tell us the bonds of the particular railway company they wish to obtain, and Parliament will decide, as it does in respect to granting leasing and amalgamating powers. 1 stated that I thought that was the most material point in the view of the case presented by my hon. friend from Northumberland. I do not think we are materially interested in the question of the finances of the Grand Trunk. I am not amongst those who have the remotest hope of this Dominion over receiving any substantial pecuniary benefit, whatever other benefit we may receive, from the existence of that liep. Therefore, it is a very nice theoretical question, but I do not observe that it is a practical question of very great consequence. We are concerned then with the general principles of legislation, and upon the two points which have been taken by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) I think we should have some further information from the Government benches.

After Recess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was stated several times in the course of the debate before recess, especially by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that the Government had charge of this Bill and were promoting it. The Government are not in charge of the Bill in any way, any more than of any other private Bill. It is no part of the duty of a Government as such to take charge of priva'e Bills, and in England they do not take charge of such Bills, except when the interests of the Crown are directly affected by them. Still, it is the duty of the Government to see that there is no private Bill legislation, or any legislation which is prejudicial to the public interests. With respect to this Bill, after the statement made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and the remarks which fell from the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and also from the leader of the Opposition, I think it should be allowed to stand over for further consideration. I shall not at present ask the House to refer it back to the Committee on Railways, but I will ask that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. One word of explanation. If I understood the right hon. gentleman aright, he stated that the Government would not take charge of the Bill. I based my remark on the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, in Committee, who stated that the Government had recast the Bill entirely, and that it was an entirely new Bill. If I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, I shall only be too happy to make the necessary correction. I understood him to say that the Government had taken charge of the Bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What I understood from the chairman, and from the Minister of Railways both, was that they had pointed out to the promoters of the Bill some objectionable clauses, that these clauses were removed, and that the Government approved of the Bill as it stood.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is right; that is precisely what occurred. I stated, as will be remembered, when the Bill first came before the Committee, that I had drawn the attention of the parties promoting it to a number of objections which I thought might be taken to the Bill as it stool, and I said it would be necessary for the Bill to stand over, in order that the Government might have an opportunity of fully considering those questions to which I referred. I stated, on subsequent occasions, that so far as the question of the legality of the fusion or amalgamation be-tween the Great Western and the Grand Trunk was concorned, the Minister of Justice, after careful examination of that question, had arrived at the conclusion that, under existing legislation, they had a legal right to amalgamatethat the amalgamation was legal.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That it was complete.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Precisely; that it had already taken place, and consequently it was not necessary to deal with that question in this Bill. I also stated that the Bill had been referred to the Department of Justice and to the Finance Department, and that the Bill, as recast and reconstructed, was not considered by the Government to be objectionable. In the outset, I stated that the Government entirely approved of what was one of prominent objects proposed to be attained by the Bill, and that was the doubletracking of the line between Toronto and Montreal, and were prepared to give any reasonable facilities in their power for the accomplishment of that object. And in a sub-sequent discussion with my hon. friend, I stated that Mr. Courtney had examined it from a financial point of view, and had arrived at the conclusion that the effect would not be to place the Government lien in advatce of what would be required to double-track the line, but that under the provisions of this Bill the claim of the Government against the Grand Trunk Railway would not stand in any worse position than it does at present, but that on the contrary it would stand in rather a better position, in conse-quence of the Bill claiming to be a consolidation of their existing liabilities and aiming at obtaining a readjustment of those liabilities, in a way which would furnish the amount of money required for that purpose without materially in-creasing existing charges. And when the hon. gentleman proposed that we should make it a condition that the doubletracking of the line should be the first thing dealt with, it was pointed out to my hon. friend that their ability to obtain the means of laying the double track between Toronto and Montreal would result from their being enabled by this Bill to effeet a consolidation and a readjustment of their liabilities, and to place their liabilities at a lower rate, and that therefore it was impossible to place the proposed condition in the Bill, sceing that the accomplishment of the work between Toronto and Montreal would, to a large extent, depend on the arrangement which was proposed. I quite concur in the statement of the right hon. gentleman, after what has fallen from the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and especially the leader of the Opposition, who states that he entertains great doubt as to whether the amalgamation of the two roads has been legally accomplished, and that if it is open to oppose that amalgamation, he is prepared to oppose it in this House. After that statement, I think it is quite impossible to proceed with the Bill to-night, and the only proper course to be taken, as my right hon. friend has suggested, is to adjourn the debate and allow the Bill to stand over for future consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I understand from the Minister of Railways that the Government will take charge of the BIII-

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear it, for we shall have a better chance of getting justice than if they had. I wish to call attention to another feature that may be affected by East York stated that he understood that the Railway Com-Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

the postponement of this Bill. The misrepresentation of the finances of the Grand Trunk, upon which the statement of the Minister of Railways is founded, that the charge is going to be less than $60,000,000 should be remembered so that the House may not legislate under a misconception of the facts.

Mr. MILLS. It is proper to ask the Govornment on what ground they ask for a postponement of this measure. Do they agree with the views put forth by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and the leader of the Opposition, that if the Great Western and Grand Trunk Companies have not the power of amalgamating, they are not disposed to give them that power? Are we to understand that that is one of the grounds on which the Government ask for a postponement of that measure? If that be the case, it is very important that we should know precisely what are the views of the Government on this important question of public policy. I think that in the country generally, the amalgamation of two very powerful corporations is looked upon with considerable alarm, and that if they have not the power of amalgamating, a large majority of the electors of the country are opposed to giving them that power. If that is the view of the Administration also, I think it is desirable that we should know it. The First Minister did not, so far as I could gather from the observations he made, say anything as to the policy of the Government in regard to this measure.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My hon. friend who has just spoken, I think a little over-stated what I said on this matter. I expressed my doubt, from a legal point of view, of the validity of the fusion that has taken place. But there is another point which he should have remembered as to which I did not desire to commit myself. It is this: This fusion took place two or three years ago; it has been in operation since then; the funds of the two companies have been mixed up; their rolling stock and their operations have been confused, if I may apply that term; financial transactions of great magnitude have taken place, on the view that the arrangement had gone into operation, and I am not prepared to deny that such a state of things may exist as would render it improper for Parliament now to refuse to sanction that arrangement. No stockbolder in either of the companies has thought fit to test this union in the courts. It has been allowed, by acquiescence, to go on and be acted upon; and it is possible that such a state of affairs may exist between the two companies as to require that the interests of the companies concerned, and the financial standing of Canadian companies in England, will have to be considered, if we are asked to refuse to give our assent to the sanctioning of the fusion which has already taken place. But, inasmuch as the action of Parliament and the railway company, as I un-derstood it, was based to a great extent upon the opinion expressed by the Minister of Justice through the Minister of Railways, that this amalgamation was already legal and in the power of the companies, I felt it my duty to inform the House that I did not individually assent to that opinion, and that if the House intended deliberately to sanction the amalgamation, it ought to have full knowledge that it was doing so. With regard to the legal authorities quoted by the hon. member for Montreal Centre, they did not seem to me to touch the subject. They do not come down to a later time than 1876. No opinion that he quoted, to my mind, removed the very serious doubt as to the validity of this fusion under the terms of the Act of 1878.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that it is at all necessary to go into a discussion as to what the policy of the Government is or may be on any question, until that policy is a matter before the House. My hon. friend from mittee passed the preamble of the Bill upon the statement of my hon. colleague, that in the opinion of the Department of Justice the amalgamation was already a fait accompli, that the companies were in fact amalgamated, and that the Bill in no way affected that amalgamation, which had taken place before. That is a very important statement. Then my hon. friend who has just spoken has expressed the opinion that the Act of 1876 and the subsequent legislation may possibly affect the whole matter, and may have in effect repealed the power given by the old Act; and that view of the case was pressed very strongly by the member for West Durham, who stated that if it were an open question he would vote against the amalgamation, and would only agree to support the Bill on the understanding and the conviction that the amalgamation had taken place and could not be voided. If that be the case, the Bill is a mere matter of arrangement of the internal affairs of the Grand Trunk Railway, with all its enlargements. After that statement, I think we ought to reconsider the Bill, and we shall take an early opportunity of consulting the Minister of Justice again before it is pressed.

Mr. STAIRS. While the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland are fresh in the minds of the House, I wish to say a word or two in reference to the financial statement presented by the Grand Trunk Railway, some points of which he seems to take exception to. I think the particular figure to which he objected was the amount of £583,000 sterling, being the interest which is to be paid to the Great Western Railway Company on Great Western preference stock. The hon. member for Northumberland stated, in his remarks before six o'clock, that this was about $370,000 too much. I would just like to show where the hon. gentleman is wrong. To look a little more closely at the statement presented to the hon. Minister of Finance, we find that the whole amount required, under the present existing arrangement, is £2,584,285, to pay dividends and interest and charges on bonds and other classes of securities, made up as follows :-

"To pay pre-preference charges as per schedule, £640,000; to the Great Western Section, preference and the ordinary stock holders, £583,285; to the Grand Trunk Railway, preference stock (as per margin), £631,000; to the Grand Trunk Railway, ordinary, as now existing, £670,0.0."

These are the amounts required yearly to pay the interest and charges existing, before the people of Canada can obtain any dividend whatever on their claim against the Grand Trunk Railway, of £2,584,285. Under the proposed Bill, the net revenue distributed, after earning the profits of which it is made up, would be £2,463,000, showing a surplus, after we deduct about £110,000 for the interest required to pay the increase on the debt to be created by this Bill, of about £11,000, to which extent the present contemplated arrangement is better for the Government and the people of Canada than the existing one. The one point we have to consider, and that point is disputed, is this £583,280. It has been asserted this does not tally with the amount given in the schedule No. 3, attached to this Bill, of the preference stock and the ordinary stock of the Great Western Railway Company. The preference stock in this schedule amounts to £500,000, and the ordinary stock to £5,000,000, the first bearing 5 per cent., and the second bearing a guarantee interest of 3 per cent. This amounts to a very much larger sum than the £583,000 placed in the Grand Trunk Railway statement. The discrepancy occurs from the fact that under the arrangement between the Great Western and the Grand Trunk Railway, not only did the Grand Trunk Railway guarantee 3 per cent. on the ordinary and 5 per cent. on the preference stock of the Great Western, but they also agreed to pay the Great Western 30 per cent. of the net earnings of the road. After you deduct the amount which is to be proto £585,000. I do not know whether I make the matter clear, but that is the explanation given by the Grand Trunk Railway authorities for the supposed discrepancy pointed out by the hon. member for Northumberland, The only qestion at issue is, whether the Great Western and the Grand Trunk Railway had the power to amalgamate. If they had, the Grand Trunk Railway had the power to guarantee the 30 per cent. of the net earnings of the Great Western. Of course it might be said that this should not affect the Go ernment claim; but in answer to that, it can be said that particularly the Government claim on the Grand Trunk Railway property is not weakened at all by the 30 per cent. guarantee to the Great Western, because when the Grand Trunk Railway guaranteed that, they did, so with the full knowledge that the profits on the Great Western would be equal to earn this amount. It is evident that the 30 per cent. of the net earnings of the consolidated road were guaranteed the Great Western only with the understanding that the Great Western itself would earn this, and that none of it would come out of the profits of the Grand Trunk Railway itself; so that the claim of the people of Canada is not weakened at all by this proposed Bill. Of course it is shown clearly, under the Bill, that the capital charges which come in before the Government claim are very much increased, but such charges are now all perpetual and under the new Bill they have no practical effect in weakening the Government claim at all. The hon. member for Northumberland will see that the Grand Trunk Railway statement is, that really the interest charges under the proposed change will be about £11,000 less than under the existing arrangements, so that he will be perfectly safe in supporting the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed :---

Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Saskatoon and Northern Railway Company.-(Mr. Ferguson, Welland.)

LOYAL ORANGE ASSOCIATION INCORPORATION BILL.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria), in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Loyal Orange Association of British America, said: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend, on the present occasion, to make any speech on the subject before the House, because I do not think it necessary, after the full discussion which the Bill received during the last Session of this House. The Bill, as introduced this year, is substantially the same as that introduced last year, with the exception of an alteration made in the preamble, certain words, which, if I understood rightly, were not acceptable to some of our friends who are opposed to the Bill, having been omitted from the preamble, so that they are not committed, by adopting the preamble and voting for the second reading of the Bill, to any declaration or expression of opinion as to the matters therein contained. If there is any clause in the Bill itself which, in the opinion of any gentleman in this House, is objectionable, and any reasonable or proper objection is pointed out to it, I have no doubt the Committee on Private Bills, when it comes to consider the Bill, will strike out, or alter, or amend these clauses, as it thinks fit. The subject is not one that needs, now, at this advanced period of the Session, and on a night like this, when I am aware that so many gentlemen desire to go elsewhere, to receive any lengthened discussion. I believe my friends, who think with me, and are in favour of this Bill, and intend to support it, are quite willing that there should be no further discussion of the subject, unless iu vided for the Great Western debt, schedule 1 and 25, amounts, reply to any objections which may be advanced against the Bill. Of course, if any hon. member of this House thinks it to be his duty to discuss the matter at length, we who are in favour of the principle of the Bill will be prepared to support it; but, in asking the House to sanction the second reading of this Bill, we only ask, as we feel, on behalf of this society, that right to hold property which has been conceded to all other societies who have asked it in this House. We ask no recognition by Parliament, no special privileges, but merely the legal authority to hold property in the name of the association as a corporation, without the necessity of the inter-vention of trustees. It is a subject that need not be discussed with any acrimony, and that, in fact, I think, on the present occasion, need not be discussed at all. If hon. gentlemen in this House are pre-pared to accept the Bill, or to express their opinions by voting upon it, without any discussion, we who favour it are quite willing that that course should be adopted; but, on the other hand, if any hon. gentleman thinks it necessary to discuss the principles involved in the question, we are quite prepared to sustain the application that this association now makes, by introducing this Bill, to be allowed that right to hold property legally, as a corporation, which has been granted to other societies, and that is all it asks. If more is contained in this Bill than that, we are content that any surplusage beyond that necessary purpose, should be struck out by the Committee or the House, and I have no doubt the Committee would do so when it comes before them. All we ask is the mere legal right to hold property as a corporation, without any other recognition, privilege, or right, conceded or to be conceded by this Parliament. I, therefore, move, Mr. Speaker, the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Call in the members.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The members of this society are willing this Bill should be discussed. We are entitled to time as well as any other society, and, if he wants to speak, let him.

Mr. MILLS. I think this is a very important measure, one that ought to be discussed in this House. It seems to me that, in proposing to incorporate this society, which exists not merely in Canada, but exists in other portions of the civilized world, it is important that we should consider whether it is asking from us powers which it is in our power to confer. Now, without going into the question as to the expediency of any such organization, it does seem to me that the Orange society, in coming to the Parliament of Canada and asking for incorporation, have come to a House or to a Parliament that has not the power to confer upon them the privileges for which they seek. Sir, even though this House had the power to incorporate this society, there are so many incidents connected with the history of the Association, so many incidents which it seems to me are not calculated to promote unity and good fellowship and feeling throughout this country, that, in my opinion, it would be highly inexpedient if we were to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Call in the members.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Members must bear in mind that the Orangemen will consider it an insult, unless there is a discussion.

Mr. MILLS. Even though we had power of granting an Act of incorporation, I think it would be highly inexpedient for us to do so. I am not calling in question the respectability, the earnestness, the sincerity of the great majority of those who are connected with the Orange society. 1 know their views differ widely from those I entertain. I b lieve it is not in the public interest, it is not calculated to good deal more than a religious and benevolent institution; promote good citizenship, it is not calculated to promote but, whether it is or not, I do not think the sanction of Par-Mr. CAMEBON (Victoria).

the unity or harmony of our population, to grant to the society, under the circumstances, an Act of incorporation here. What does this society seek? It is seeking power to hold real estate as a corporation throughout the various portions of this Dominion. Now, we know right well that this Parliament cannot grant this power of incorporation. Only a few hours ago we were considering the propriety of incorporting a body that had sought incorporation from the two Provinces, which had sought power to hold real estate and which came here for the purpose of being united into one corporation. But the Orange society is not incorporated in Quebec, it is not incorporated as a united society in Ontario, and it is not incorporated in all the other Provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, it is.

Mr. MILLS. I am quite aware that the society is incorporated in particular Provinces, but it is not as distinct provincial corporations that the society is coming here and seeking to have those corporations united into one. It is simply seeking power to hold real estate and to dispose of it when it is thought no longer necessary. I think, Sir, it is quite clear that we have not the power to grant the Orange society the power which they seek. We know that in an important judgment, not long since, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the members of that Board expressed the opinion that the power to hold real estate given by the Parliament of Canada would not enable any society to hold such estate against the policy of any one of the Provinces from which the power to acquire or to dispose of real estate was to be acquired. Now, that being the case, what is the object of the Orange Society coming here and seeking incorporation ? It is not certainly for the purpose of hold. ing real estate. It cannot acquire from this Parliament this power. Who may hold real estate, how it may be acquired or disposed of, is to be determined by the Legislature of each Province, and each Province has it within its power to determine what its policy shall be in that particular. It may decide that no secret society shall have power to hold real estate; it may decide that certain societies may have such powers; it may decide that this power shall be granted to all, or be limited in its extent; and it does seem to me that it is preposterous to come to this Parliament for power which we cannot grant and which, if we were to assume to grant it, would not be of the slightest service in any one Province to the society to which that power was granted. I think that we ought not to confer upon the society the power to hold real estate and to dispose of it when no longer required, when it is clear from the decision of the highest tribunal in the Empire that we do not possess that power, except, it may be, in the North-West Territories-certainly not within the limits of any of the Provinces. This being the case, I am not disposed to grant this power. I am not disposed to grant it, because I think, under the circumstances, it would be highly inexpedient. It is not in the public interest, and for this reason I am not disposed to vote for the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not propose discussing this Bill at any length. There are objections to the Bill itself of a very serious nature, to some of which my hon. friend who has just taken his seat has referred. Now, it is well known that the Orange society is a secret organization. As members of this Parliament, we know nothing of the secrets of the Orange association; we know nothing of the aims and objects of the association except what we gather from the expressions of the organs and leading members of it, and from the public press. Now, Sir, as far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to give my vote for the incorporation of a purely secret organization. It may be a religious and a benevolent institution, to some extent, but I think it is a liament ought to be asked to give corporate existence to any purely secret association. That is one of my objections to this Bill. I say further, that the Bill should not receive the sanction of Parliament, because it expressly deals with civil rights. In the second section of the Bill, it provides that the property now held in the Provinces in the names of trustees for separate lodges is to be transferred by the Bill to this corporation. By section five of the Bill, the Grand Lodge may acquire and sell property for the use of the provincial, the county, and the district lodges, or for private lodges. Now, I say that this clearly shows that the Bill proposes Now, I say that this clearly shows that the Bill proposes to deal, and does deal, with property and civil rights. Now, when asked to sanction this Bill we are asked to give power to corporations, to take the property of the private, or separate, or local lodges out of their hands, and transfer it to the association without any information, so far as we are concerned, that these private lodges really want anything of the kind. Now, the Bill is objectionable in another respect. It is a matter purely of provincial concern, a matter that ought to be dealt with by the Provinces, and the great Orange association has so treated the question up to a very recent period. They sought incorporation at the hands of several Local Legislatures and obtained it. I believe in Manitoba the association was incorporated, though I understand that the Bill was reserved for the consideration of the Government here and not allowed to go into operation. I believe, in the Province of New Brunswick, the society has been incorporated, and I think in Nova Scotia also. In the Province of Ontario a Bill was passed incorporating that institution some years ago. That Bill was reserved for the consideration of the Federal Government, and in the Minute of the First Minister, in dealing with that question, I think we have the clearest possible evidence, that this matter is purely one of property and civil rights, a matter that pertains entirely to the Local Legislatures, and ought to be dealt with by them. The First Minister, in passing upon the Bill reserved for the consideration of the Government here, said :

"If these Acts should again be passed, the Lieutenant-Governor should consider himself bound to deal with them at once, and not ask Your Excellency to interfere in matters of Provincial concern, and solely and entirely within the jurisdiction and competence of the Legislature."

The First Minister very clearly pointed out that the incorporation of the Orange society was a matter of purely Provincial concern; that the Lieutenant-Governor, if the Local Legislature passed the Bill a second time, should at once sanction it, because it was a matter solely and entirely within the jurisdiction and competence of the Local Legislature. I say upon that ground we should not sanction this Bill. There is another objection I make to the Bill. As I understand the Bill, it is a direct violation of and interference with the Mortmain laws in force in this Province. Under this Bill a dying Orangeman can leave all his estate to the Grand Lodge or to a separate lodge; but a dying Presbyterian or a dying Catholic cannot do that. I object to this kind of special legislation in favour of the Orange institution. I have another objection to present to the House, Hon. members will observe by the fourth section that the provisions contained therein are of the most extraordinary and exceptional character. What does the fourth section say? It provides as follows :-

"The constitution and by-laws of the said association in existence at the time of the passing of this Act shall, from and immediately after the passing hereof, become and continue applicable to the said corporation, until the same are altered in the manner pointed out in the said constitution and by-laws; and all the powers and duties vested in the said several lodges and the officers thereof, under the said constitution and by-laws, shall be exercised and performed by the said lodges and officers, after the passing of this Act, in the same way as the said powers and duties have teen exercised and performed, under the said constitution and by-laws, before the passing of this Act, until the said powers and duties are altered under the said constitution and by-laws."

The effect of this section is this, that the by-laws and the rules and regulations of this association, whatever they may be, are made part and parcel of the Act of incorporation. We know nothing about the secrets of the Orange institution; no man except a member of the body knows anything about those secrets; we know nothing about the by-laws of the institution; and yet we undertake, by this Bill, if it passes in its present shape, to make the rules and regulations and by-laws part of the Statute law of the country. But the Bill goes further. They are at liberty to change those by-laws and rules, and those by-laws and rules so changed are incorporated into and form part of the Act of Parliament. They are practically made part of the Statute law of Canada. It is a wholly unheard of thing in the history of incorporation of associations that the rules and by-laws should be made part of the Statute law.

Mr. BOWELL. They are not secret.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). On all these points I am opposed to the incorporation of the Orange institution, apart from the policy of incorporating such an association at all. A good deal may be said on a question of this kind. According to the preamble of the Bill, this institution now asking incorporation seeks it on one ground only. The preamble says:

"Whereas the Loyal Orange Association of British America has, by its petition, prayed for an Act of incorporation to enable it to hold property as a corporation, and for other purposes in connection therewith, and it is deemed expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition; Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:"

I say that incorporation is sought on the ground that this is a religious and benevolent institution, and solely such. I do not know what the Orange institution is elsewhere; I do not speak of what it is elsewhere; but I say that in the Province to which I belong it is not solely a religious and benevolent institution. It is more of a political organization than a religious and benevolent institution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Some hon. members opposite say "no." I am in a position to establish the statement I have used by the utterances of the leading members of the Orange order, and by resolutions of the Grand Lodge, and to prove that it is not only a religious and benevolent institution, but that it is a political institution, run in the interests of a political party, and for the benefit of a political party.

Some hon, MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not propose to enter at any great length into this point; but will the hon. gentlemen who say "no," deny that the Orange Lodge has expelled men for voting for a Liberal candidate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Will hon. members deny that the Orange Lodge has expelled men for voting for a Catholic candidate? Will hon. gentlemen deny that the Grand Lodge has more than once declared and put resolutions on their minutes, some of which I hold in my hand, declaring that it was improper to vote either for a Grit or the Popish ally of a Grit. If hon. gentleman do not controvert that, I do not care to occupy time in discussing it; but in my Province I say the Orange institution is largely a political institution and is ran in the interest of one political party. I have here a statement by one of the leading men of the association, who stated that the association always voted one way, and that that way was Tory. If so, I say it must be looked upon as a political organization; but I am not going to discuss at length that question to-night. I have thrown out a challenge. The challenge has not been met. Sir, I am in a position to prove, by

I documents in my hand, that my statements are correct. oppose the Bill principally because it is unwise for Parliament to incorporate this association on the four grounds I have set forth. I do not understand that hon, gentlemen have denied that it is a political institution, because, if so,

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

I will continue my remarks.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then I will take up some of the time of the House by trying to establish the statements I have made

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). You are only talking against time.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I hope hon gentlemen will not object to hearing statements read which come from the mouths of their own friends. The hor. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) stated that he wanted free discussion on this question; I am going to give him a little free dis cussion. What I am going to say is not original. They are the observations of men who belong to the Orange order. I have said that the association, while claiming to be for religious and benevolent purposes solely, is really a political association in Ontario. Some years ago I find that a person of note connected with the institution was sent as a delegate from this country to England, as the representative of the Orange association. He was a big man in the association, he had a dozen letters after his name, indicating his titles and position, he was a Knight of the Red Scarlet. He went to the old country and there at a public gathering of the order he made use of the following language :-

"It was true they did not discuss politics in their lodges in Canada but when they came to vote, they all voted one way.

Now what is that one way? Is it in favour of the Liberal candidates? No, Sir, not in my Province at all events. These are the words of one of their own men, a man who occupies a prominent position in the order. I find that in an election contest, held not long ago in one of the ridings of Ontario, a mass meeting of Orangemen was held for the purpose of considering the course they should pursue in the election. The poster which was placarded around the riding is in the following words :---

"MASS MEETING

" Of the OHANGEMEN of South Ontario.

"A meeting of all the members of the several lodges in the County will be held at Brooklin on Friday, 30th August, 1878, at 2 p.m., sharp it having been thought necessary that the Orangement should take some united action in the ensuing election. Full arrangements for carrying out the best method of securing cur lights as Protestants will be made. Every Orangeman is particularly requested to attend. By order,

"WM STEPHEASON, "Co. Master.

"WM. ROBSON, "Co. Secretary."

Now, what was the object of this organization ? What was the object of this meeting ? Why should there have been a mass meeting of Orangemen? If it was a political gathering a mass meeting of electors, not of Orangeman, should have been called; but it was a meeting of Orangeman called for the purpose of promoting united action, and assisting the Conservative candidate, and they did so decide by resolution. Now, I say that the organs and members of the Orange association have expressed opinions in the same direction. I will first give an extract from a speech of Bro. McCormick, D.M., which, I suppose, means District Master. This speech was made in the old country by this gentleman, who is a leading Orangeman:

"He would like them to get enrolled as voters, that at the next general election they would be able to vote for such men as Johnston, Verner, Hill Trevor, Oreighton and Stuart Knox; men such as these whose principles have been weighed in the balance and have not been found wanting. He was proud to say that everywhere the 'people's William' was being detented; that since last election, upwards of twenty-eight stats had been wrenched from the so-called Liberals, which gave to the Conservatives about forty-two votes on a division. This was a triumphant Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

blow given to the great Liberal majority with which the present Parliament opened. More success to the Conservative cause.

Do these words indicate that the institution is a purely benevolent and religious institution ? No, Sir; nothing of the kind. You will find further than a banquet was given to this Orangeman, and several toasts were given, among them being the Conservative cause throughout Great Britain and Ireland, which was drunk three times three and one over. Then, Sir, the toast of the press was given—no, not the press, but the Conservative press—all of which goes to show that the proposition I set out with, that this body is not solely and purely a religious and a benevolent institution, is correct. On another occasion, at the opening of an Orange hall near Belfast, Rev. Mr. Henderson, an English Church minister, was called upon to make a speech, and here is a report which a newspaper makes of it. It said :

"Rev. Mr. Henderson, in the course of one of his humorous, pathetic and thrilling speeches, defended the religious element of the Orange institution as well as its political, and reviewed the policy and spirit of the Radicals."

Now, Sir, I say that this all goes to show that the institution is something more than a religious and benevolent institution. I have quoted so far from the expressions of opinion by Orangemen in the Mother Country. Let me now give the House what the Grand Master of the Orangemen of western Ontario stated on one occasion at the Grand Lodge. He began with an apology for not having attended to Orange matters for some considerable time, and the reason he gave was that he was busily engaged in promoting the Conservative cause in the various counties. He stated :

"I principally regret that a continued absence from home, from the 8th of December last, to the 14th of February instant, fighting the battles of our party, has left a number of letters on Orange business unanswered."

He went on to sav :

"I trust you will be glad to know that your Grand Master has been honoured with a seat in the Legislature by that good old Orange county, South Simcoe, which for half a century has stood true as steel to the Uonservative principles of our order, but I have to repeat what I said in my address last year, that there have been Orangemen all over the Province, and notably in East Toronto, who have so far forgotten their duty to this loyal and Protestant swelet as to ally themselves with the Grit-Republican party in the recent continues, and in the latter case with a Roman Catholic, who, if not a Feman bimself, is at any rate the brother of one who invaded our soil and murdered our brethren at Ridge-way. This state of things calls loudly for the active interforence of the Orange body. If we ever hope to possess the influence in the country our numbers justly entitle us to, it can only be by union among our-selves, and I trust to see the day when the Grand Lodge will appreciate this fact and make it an offerce punishable by expulsion, for any m mber, form the Grand Master down, to resist or oppose the policy of the Orange from the Grand Master down, to resist or oppose the policy of the Orange body in Parliamentary elections."

Here was a Grand Master for western Ontario, declaring it was an outrageous thing for Orangemen to vote for a Liberal, especially if he were a Roman Catholic. Now, I stated that I was in a position to prove that the institu-tion was not simply a religious or benevolent institution, but that in Ontario it was a political organization, run in the interests of a political party, and that they always voted one way, and that was for the Conservative party. I go further, and I say that whatever may be the principles of the order—and I say nothing about that, because I do not know the secrets of the institution, or the principles on which it was founded-but whatever may have been the principles upon which it was founded, I say it is run now, not in the interests of benevolence or religion, but in the interests of a political party, and that the leaders of the institution, those high in authority in the order, run it in that interest only. Let me quote to you, not from the present, but from a late organ of the O.auge institution upon this question, to show that it is antagonistic to all who do not think as they do, to those who entertain more liberal sentiments in politics or are opposed to them in religion, that is to say, to the Liberal party and the Catholic Church. Here is what that organ stated not many years ago:

"We have not to be convinced, in the month of August, 1873, that the Grit or Radical party, as a whole, are not only traitors to our great Em-pire in general, but to our own happy Dominion in particular. • Let everyone remember that an Orangeman is sworn to belong to no society or body of men that are enemies to Her Majesty and our glorious Constitution, and in reality the Orange institution is more opposed to the Grit and Radical faction than to political Popery. The rebellion of 1837-38, the rewarding of the rebels in 1848, in paying them their losses when our people placed the same rebels in power; the sup-pressing of all institutions they regarded as loyal, or tending to loyalty their losses when our people placed the same rebels in power; the sup-pressing of all institutions they regarded as loyal, or tending to loyaly in Canada; their hatred and persecution of the Orange institution, and their recent insults which they have offered to Her Majesty's representa-tives in Canada, show most clearly that the Grit faction, in 1873, are as vile rebels in heart as the same faction were in 1837. * * * It is will that our brethren everywhere should know these things and govern themselves accordingly; and beware of the two smoking fire-brands—the Grits and their allies, the Papists."

This is the language which is used towards the Grits and, their allies, the Papists, who are put on the same ground, as being traitors and disloyal to their country; this is the language used on behalf of this purely religious and benevolent institution, which comes here seeking incorporation at our hands. Sir, if incorporation is granted on those grounds it is granted under false pretences. Let me read you something further on this point. There was an Orange gathering not many years ago at Hamilton, and there was a certain reverend gentleman who made a speech there. Reverend gentlemen, you know, generally use the strongest language; and on that occasion, he made use of the following language:

"Orangemen never commenced a riot, but when attacked always retursed home, with flying colours to the notes of the 'Protestant Boys,' and 'Croppies Lie Down.' None but Croppies have a right to feel that music grating to their ears. We must be united, the lecturer said, to effect any good. We want no Grits, no traitors in our ranks, to divide us. If united we shall conquer, but if we allow our enemies to divide us, they will laugh us to scorn and render us powerless. Grit traitors are making a strong effort to come in among the Orangemen, especially in Toronto. We hope to see their power abated, their wrath assuaged, and their devices confounded."

Here, you see, both classes to which I have referred are put in the same category : they do not want to see a Laberal in their ranks; and yet this is a purely religious and benevolent association. The organ of the association at that time made use of the following language : -

"A few years ago, in Ontario, the very expression of Grit Orange-man, to every man in the least degree acquainted with the Order, would be the subject of great amusement. It was then known, what every true Orangeman now knows, that Radicals could not be Orangemen, and no Grit, with any kind of a clear conscience, would for one moment which is the full of the ablication.

Yet the organization, the hon. gentleman says, is not political. In the same newspaper, on the same date, there is a piece of doggerel which I am going to trouble the House by and is as follows:-

By the blood of your fathers, the marty s of old; By the honour and courage that never were sold; By the throne that you love and the faith you revere: Watch, Orangemen! watch! the vile traitors are near.

- By the dread recollection of horrors long past;
- By the Radical who still is true to his cast
- By the Pope's low Grit allies, who plot to betray: Watch, Orangemen! watch! drive the traitors away.
- By all that kind Heaven or earth can afford
- By religion and love, and by torture abborr'd; By base superstition, and priestcraft and crime: Watch, Orangemen! watch! 'tis the crisis of time.

- By wife, home and children; by friends and by kin; By the one sacred triumph, of which Britons sing; By Conservative principles, keep the Radicals down: Watch, Orangemen! watch! and defend Uburch and Crown.

And yet this is a purely benevolent and religious institution, having no politics connected with it. Sir, I say there is no benevolence in the quotations I have given -- this setting of man against man, of party against party, of creed against creed, and this raising up of the worst feelings of our common humanity, instead of doing anything to allay them. I find that the Grand Lodge has also taken up the question as to how to deal with Grits who attempt to enter Orange lodges. In the Grand Lodge it was moved and

"Resolved,-That our humble petition be presented to the Grand Lodge of British America, praying that the constitution of our associa-tion be so amended as to prevent members of our association voting at any municipal or parliamentary election for any person or persons belonging to or in sympathy with the Roman Uatholic league, and in the event of their so voting, that they be expelled from our order."

Why, Sir, what does this mean? According to the resolution of the Grand Lodge, a Roman Catholic was not fit to be elected to a common council, was not fit to be made a pound keeper, and every member of the order was instructed to vote against him. And yet this is a religious and benevolent institution. Further, it was moved by another brother and seconded by another brother of the same Grand Lodge :-

"That inasmuch at it is reported that brethren of the Loyal Orange Institution at the recent Palliamentary election, voted for a Fenian sympathizer, in preference to a sound Pr. testant, beit resolved that the District Lodge of Toronto be directed to investigate the matter, and deal with the offending brethren as may be conceived conducive to the bests interests of our institution."

The sound Protestant was Mr. Coatsworth, and the Papist who was running against him was Mr. John O'Donohoe, the present Senator; and the members of the order were called upon to do-what? To expel from the Grand Lodge those men who exercised the right of free men, to vote according to their consciences. For doing that they were to be expelled from this religious and benevolent institution, run in the in-terest of our common humanity. This is not all. I have something further that I propose to trouble the House with. I have shown you that this is a political organization, run in the interests of one political party. I have shown you that a resolution was passed in the Grand Lodge, making a man liable to expulsion if he voted for a Roman Catholic or a Grit. I have shown you that this organization is opposed to the Liberal party and to the Roman Catholic Church. I say that an institution of that kind does not deserve recognition at the hands of an independent Parliament. I say that it is arbitrary and arrogant in resolving that men shall not be allowed to exercise the franchise in the way they see fit, without being subject to expulsion from the organization. At a meeting of the Grand Lodge of Ontario, held in 1876, the following resolutions were passed:-

" Resolved-That in the opinion of the Right Worshipful Grand Lodge, the ume has arrived when the Orangemen of Canada, without reference to politics or political parties, must units in one grand political phalan v in order to stop the encroschments of the Romiah Hierarchy upon the  Unswerving and an entropy of the public purse for sectarian purposes
 2. No grants of money from the public purse for sectarian purposes
 3. No separate schools, but free secular education for all.
 4. Taxation for all; taxation of all property held by religious bodies upon its fair assessment value. "5. The opening of all public institutions in the land, religious or otherwise, to public unspection by Government officials. "6 That it shall be the duty of the Country Master in every Orange county, in the event of a general election, or other election taking place, either for the Local or Dominion Parliaments, to submit the platform to the candidate or candidates, to ascertain if they will sup-port them or not, and then to call a county meeting before the day of polling, and if neither of the County Lodge to bring out a candi late.'

What is that if not political? Does that show a religious and benevolent spirit? It shows the most intolerant spirit that could be manifested by any class of the community. That is not all. The spirit of hostility is not only manifested towards the Liberal party, but also to the Roman Catholics. We have had ample occasion to learn that in Ontario during the last few years. We remember well the bitter discussion that took place in the press on both sides of politics, with respect to a book that was adopted in our com-The Catholic Arch mon schools. I refer to Marmion. bishop of Toronto objected to that book, and the Minister of Education withdrew it, because it was objectionable to a large and important body of his fellow-countrymen who have different religious opinions from his, opinions which ought to be and are respected by every right-thinking man. The Orange Sentinel, commenting on the action of the Minister of Education, said :

"It was an outrage on the part of the M nister of Education (Mr. Crooks) if he has made this concession to the priests for any reason  Because the Protestant public of this Province will not submit to Arch-bishop Lynch or any other Romish priest dictating what books shal or shall not be used at schools, which are almost entirely supported by taxes paid by Protestants."

Then the Orange Sentinel goes on to say :---

"The hand of Rome is on the throat of our public school system. The Protestant public are sick of this political pandering to Romanism which, if continued, will end in the destruction of our dearest liberties. Because Archbishop Lynch does not want the book inter-• • Because Archbishop Lynch does not want the book inter-dicted on account of its immorality, but because it exposes the lewdness of Romish ecclesiastical celibacy.

And so on. With these facts staring us in the face, it is folly to close our eyes to the fact that this institution is something more than a religious and benevolent institution. At a demonstration of Orangemen held not very long ago, in my own town, another reverend gentleman made use of the following words :--

"They should not on any consideration put a Roman Catholic into Parliament.

That is religion and benevolence.

" Read from papers showing that the Papacy declared their only hope of continuing to a vigorous old age lay in America, and that was by hav-ing legislators to make laws favourable to them. H ped no Catholic would be allowed into our Canadian Parliament. Said that a Roman Catholic was not a loyal man and could not be such so long as he placed the anthority of the Pope first. He would, therefore, advise his brethren that where they could not send a man to Parliament of the political stripe they desired, to allow a member of any other political party, if a Protestant, to represent them rather than a Roman Catho-lic."

Now, I think I have shown you enough to prove that this is something more than a religious and a benevolent institution, and that I am justified therefore in opposing it. It is a good deal more than that. You will find that an Orangeman is not at liberty to send his child to a convent, though there may be no other schools for miles distant, without rendering himself liable to expulsion. I hold in my hand the minutes of the Grand Lodge, and what do I find re ported there :

"H. E. Ketchum was expelled for taking his child to a Roman Catholic school; Wm. Stimpson was expelled for marrying a Roman Catholic." Mr. CAMEBON (Huron).

The feelings of the heart cannot even be encouraged by this institution which is so eminently benevolent and religious.

"Thos. Powell, for being drunk and using a knife on a Protestant." Had he used it on a Catholic, it would not have mattered. Now I find throughout this report a dozen of these cases:

"Dalton McVicar was expelled for marrying a Roman Catholic; Richard Brad ord for marrying a Roman Catholic; Alexander Kinch for marrying a Papist."

They were not particular about the name in this case. You find, from beginning to end, that almost every movement made in the Grand Lodge is a movement in the direction I have just indicated —all pointing in the one direction, not simply that it is a religious and benevolent institution, but something more than that—a political institution. This order has no right to ask incorporation on the ground of its being a religious and benevolent institution, if these extracts, which I have taken from the reports of the Grand Orango Lodge, are true, and they must be true, since the report is an official record. The society is, in fact, largely a political association, and is kept alive, to a large extent, for that purpose. Why, then, should we give this association corporate existence and Parliamentary recognition? What does it do every twelfth of July, but stir up old sores, old reminiscences, old memories that ought to be forgotten, in a free country like ours. I trust the hon. First Minister will not vote for this Bill. I know that he was a leading Orangeman at one time; I know that he was a Knight of the Royal Scarlet, and I remember reading an able speech of his, a powerful speech - a speech more able than I have ever heard him make in Parliament-Jelivered to his brethren in Kingston, and after the speech was over they marched down through the streets of Kingston to the tune of "The Protestant boys," and "To hell with the Pope." This is not the kind of proceeding to which we ought to give legal status. I hope my hon. friend, as he and I are growing older, as the shadows are growing longer, will be found on the same side, recording our votes against this Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The earlier part of the hon. gentleman's speech had to do with the constitutional right of this Parliament to pass this Bill. He took the ground that we had no authority whatever to pass a Bill of this kind, incorporating a body to hold property, because that was a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. But we have already, during this Session, incorporated two or three rather important bodies to hold property throughout this Dominion; we have incorporated the Wesleyan body, the new Methodist Church in Canada, and, curiously enough, we have made the articles of union--which may be said to correspond with the rules and by-laws, and regulations and constitution of the Orange society-a part of the Statute, giving it the effect of law, and giving to the body the right to change its provisions by a certain process afterwards, if they think proper. We have this afternoon created two corporations, so far as this branch of the Legislature is concerned, with authority to hold property. I know that the question has been raised by the hon, member for Quebec as to the right of this Parliament to create those corporations, to give them the power we are giving them, but notwithstanding that point was raised, this House, without any serious objection, at any rate, has created those corporate bodies. It is quite true that the granting of those powers will undoubtedly require, as I understand it, that the property be held subject to the laws of the several Provinces, but so far as we are concerned we simply create the corporation; the object is that they may have a corporate existence. The hon. gentleman further objected, on the ground that we were going to hand the property of the private lodges to the general body. That is a matter which, it seems to me, comcorns the lodges themselvee, and I am not aware that any petitions have been presented to Parliament from Orange can be there dealt with. We have the statement that it is a direct interference with the law of Mortmain and reference is made to one of the clauses of the Bill, in which it is said that an Orangeman, according to the interpretation of the hon. gentleman, could bequeath his property to a Grand or any lodge. This is a question also of detail, which can be dealt with by the Private Bills Committee, if this Bill should reach that Committee. Bat, Sir, the hon. gentleman, in the second part of his speech, after declaring that we had no power to pass this Bill at all, went into a general attack upon the Orange association. Sir, I ventured, when we were discussing this question on a former occasion, to point out the great inconvenience which would arise if, in questions of incorporation of public bodies which come here, we were to be bound by our opinion of the methods or principles of those corporations. The hon. gentleman has read the opinions of a number of Orangemen -pretty strong opinions, I will admit-but I venture to say that if he goes into some of our Protestant churches, or into some of our Roman Catholic churches, and listens to the controversial sermons which are sometimes there delivered, he will find the attacks upon Roman Catholics on the one side, and on Protestants on the other, quite as strong as anything he has given us here this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. WHITE. Do I undertand hon. gentlemen to say no?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Then I can only say that I have heard them, and the singular thing is that the strongest expressions the hon. gentleman has quoted to us to-day were those of clergymen. Are we to be told that they use stronger expressions out of the pulpit than they would use in the pulpit? But I am not prepared to admit that those expressions are reasons why this society should not be incorporated. Then we had read to us a platform, or what was said to be a platform, of the Orange body, to be submitted to every candidate, in order to determine whether the Orange body would vote I thought, when I heard that for that candidate or not. platform read, that I recollected something like it as being the platform of the Liberal party of the Province of Ontario. "No separate schools." That was one of them. Do hon. gentlemen remember who raised that cry in Ontario, and do they remember, as I pointed out once before, that it was the votes of Orangemen in the old Parliament of Canada which gave the extension of the separate school system to the Roman Catholics of Ontario, two Grand Masters of the Orangemen voting for it and the large body of the so-called Reformers voting against it, although they were supporting a Reform Government, which did not bring in the Bill, but supported a Bill which was introduced by an hon. gentle-man who is now a Senator. "No sectarian grants." That was another plank.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain who it was that put the Separate School Act in force-under what Government was it put in force?

Mr. WHITE. It was put in force, if I mistake not, as far back as 1852, under the Government of Mr. Hincks, with determined opposition from the late Hon. George Brown; and, from that day downwards, the late Hon. Mr. Brown and his followers in the Province of Ontario were the leading opponents of separate schools, and the Conservatives were attacked in every constituency in the Province of Ontario on the ground that they were not true to the Protestant principles which ought to govern them in that Province, because they were in favour of separate schools. And then, in 1863, when Protestants of those constituencies. That has been the some further extension of it, and Mr. Scott brought in his Bill, when Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was at the head of the Government-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Scott being a Conserva-

Mr. WHITE. Yes; Scott being, of course, a Conservative at that time; it was before he went into the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite—when he brought in that Bill, sanctioned and supported by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald and his Government, but opposed by the ordinary following of that Government from Ontario, that Bill was passed by the votes of Conservatives in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Scott was not in the House in 1852.

Mr. WHITE. "No sectarian grants." That was a cry on every Reform platform in Ontario. "Public institutions open to inspection." Have you never heard the late Hon. George Brown announce that as his policy, as what ought to be the Statute law of the land, that every public institu-tion receiving any grant of any kind from the Legislature, ought to be open to inspection? And I have no hesitation in saying that any institution which does receive a grant from the public Treasury ought to be opened to inspection by the Government if it chooses to accept that grant. "Taxation of church property." Why, that is a strong cry now, with the Liberals in the Province of Ontario. Take the Liberal newspapers, nearly all of them, and you will find that they are in favour of that principle. I believe even the London Advertiser, a newspaper edited by a prominent member of this House, is in favour of that principle. And so on with all these principles embodied in that platform, which was said to be offered to candidates for their acceptance. All these were the principles, which for years governed the Liberal party in this Province. One cannot but look back at the history of that period. I can remember very well, and all those who took part in political discussions in this Province of Ontario. can remember very well when broad Protestant principles were the basis and foundation of their whole political superstructure, when Conservatives were attacked in every part of the Province of Ontario, because they were said to be priestridden, because they were sold to the French of Lower Canada, because they were not true to the Protestant principles which ought to govern them. When the hon gentleman reads extracts from speeches delivered by Orangemen, I would recom-mend him to read the speech delivered by the late Hon. George Brown, when he was running for Toronto, in 1858, at the presentation of a gold watch by the Orangemen of Toronto or some of the Orangemen of Toronto, those who were disposed to go with the Liberal party at that time, headed by the late Mr. Robert Moody, who presented it; let him contrast the speech of the let der of the party in those days, who, even after he left public life, was recognized as the leader of the party, with the speeches he has quoted to us to day, and he will find that the speeches of to day are more milk and water-aye, the very skim milk and water at that—in regard to their strength, as compared with the speeches of the leaders of the Liberal party in this Province at that time. We have nothing to do here with the fact whether the Orangemen are Conservatives or L'herals. What we do know is, and it is a matter of record, that in many constituencies, Roman Catholics from the Province of Ontario-and we have them to-day in this House-owe their seats to Orange votes, and we know that it has been the steady record of parties in the Province of Ontario, that in their electoral acts, when candidates were put in the field, the liberality has been on the part of the Orangemen and the illiberalty on the part of the clear Grit history of the two parties in relation to their liberality towards our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens; but, as I have said, we are not here to discuss the question of whether Orangeism is wise or unwise, whether it is good, bad or indifferent, or whether it would be better if there were no Orangemen in the country. Extreme Protestants would say it would be better if we were all Protestants and there were no Roman Catholics. Extreme Roman Catholics would say it would be better if we were all Roman Catholics and there were no Protestants. But do we stop to consider that, when either the one party or the other purty comes here to ask for incorporation? No; what we have to deal with is this, in this particular case, that there are to-day in Canada at least 250,000 people. who are Orangemen-whether wisely or not, is not for us to consider here—they come to us just like any other body comes to us to ask a simple Act of incorporation, to ask that which is not denied to any other body that comes to this Parliament; and it does seem to me that, if we undertake to say that they shall not be incorporated, because, forsooth, their politics do not suit the politics of hon. gentlemen opposite who happen to be Protestants, and who, upon that ground, at any rate, cannot object to them, if we are to take that ground, we are laying down a principle of legislation which, in its practical effects, would prove exceedingly injurious if carried out in other cases which come before us. This is simply a Bill for the incorporation of people who, as citizens, conduct themselves certainly as well as other citizens: who, as neighbours, in neighbourhoods where Protestants and Catholics live together, meet their neighbours of the Roman Catholic faith, and live together as happily as men can do. I happen to represent a constituency where, in one part of it, there is a large Roman Catholic population, and where, in the very same township, there is a large Orange population. You meet the two classes at their bees, at their social gatherings, everywhere, no difficulty between them, each willing to help the other in time of need, each willing to visit the other in time of sickness or distress, when social intercourse is of its greatest value. By granting this Act of Incorporation, instead of increasing Orangeism, instead of embittering the feelings between Orangemen and Catholics, I venture to say the offert will be largely to decrease that feeling, by taking away that reasonable ground of grievance, which men have a right to feel when they come as citizens of a free country to a free Parliament, to ask for the privileges which are given without question to all others who choose to come here and ask for them, and who find their reasonable request refused.

Mr. BLAKE. Upon this question parties are divided. It is well known that the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite are divided, and it is known that the Liberal party does not think, or speak, or act, as a unit on this question. I am not speaking, I do not propose to speak this evening, in any shape or sense in the capacity which I, for the time being, hold as leader of the Liberal party, but to speak only in my individual capacity as a member of Parliament. I am not speaking for any one but myself. Although I gave a silent vote on the last occasion when this question was before us, and although but for what has occurred since then, I should have repeated that silent vote, I feel bound, on this occasion, to express my views upon the Bill before the House. The action of myself, and the action of those members of the Liberal party who voted against this Bill, have been misrepresented, soriously misrepresented, during the recess, and, indeed, an alleged party action has been stated, which did not in fact exist. A political course has been taken by the promoters of this Bill, which I propose to develop before I sit down, and which, I think, furnishes, of itself, ample justification for my departing from the intention I had to have repeated at this time, if there was no more trustworthy than this appears to be, reason against it, the silent vote which I gave before. I do not conceal from myself that, irrespective of those circumstances, there are important questions at stake upon this occasion; and my own opinion is that a temperate discussion of those questions is no evil, but rather a good. Hon, gentlemen opposite who have supported the Bill, and hon. gentlemen opposite who have opposed the Bill, are, many of them, apparently desirous that there should not occur that discussion, but it is as well that we should understand our exact positions. It is well that the reasons why we act on one side or the other should be made known. It is well that the objections and difficulties which some of us may have should be stated, in order that they may be answered and, if possible, removed. Hence, it becomes necessary for myself, and perhaps for others who may have voted for the reasons which I am about to describe as influencing the vote I gave, and which I am about to repeat-that we should state those reasons, in view of the character of the attacks that have been made upon those who voted against the Bill last Session. The first misrepresentation to which I wish to refer is one which was made, I think, by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) at an Orange gathering at Brockville, in which he said :

"The onus of defeat rests primarily upon the Reformers who, while professing to be Protestant Reformers, decided in caucus to oppose the measure.

Now, the hon. member for South Leeds could not know that to be true, because he was not at the caucus, and it happens to be entirely untrue. There was no caucus of the Liberal party at which this question was touched upon; there was no meeting or gathering, formal or informal, at which it was touched upon, and there was no decision or arrangement between the members of the party as to the way they should vote. There was no concerted action of any kind or description. On the contrary, to the few gentlemen who happened to approach me on the subject, I said that I thought it was a matter in which each man must decide for himself, that I did not conceive it would be a party question on the other side of the House, and that I did not conceive it was necessarily a party question on our side; and I deprecated all party action upon it. That was the advice I gave and which, so far as I know, was acted on; and, until the vote was taken, I had not myself any idea-with the exception of, perhaps, six or eight gentlemen at the most, who may have spoken to me-of the sentiments of the gentlemen with whom I usually act. Yet, Sir, we find hon. gentlemen, high in the confidence of the Orange order and members of this Parliament, declaring that there was a caucus of the Protestant Liberals, who decided to oppose the measure. I complain of that, Sir. I think I have reason to complain of such statements being made with a view to influencing persons of the same religious faith that I am, against us.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may state, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that he is entirely mistaken. The hon. member for South Leeds, who sits beside me, never spoke at any Orange gathering in the town of Brockville.

Mr. BLAKE. I have taken my quotation from the Sentinel which, I believe, is the organ of the Orange society, and which speaks of Mr. Taylor, M. P., for South Leeds, as having made this speech at, I think, Brockville. It may not have been at Brockville, but it was in that neighbourhood. The question is, was the speech made?

Mr. TAYLOR. I made no such speech, either at Brock ville or anywhere else, and I am not responsible for newspaper reports.

Mr. BLAKE. I have read from the organ of the hon. gentleman; and the other quotations I am about to make I shall take from the same quarter, and I hope they will be

Mr. FERGUSON. Put them on a par with the Globe.

Mr. BLAKE. I am about to state my own views frankly on this question. I dare say they will not please extreme men on either side, but I hope that to some moderate men those views may be acceptable. In the first place, the hon. mom ber for Cardwell (Mr. White) alleges that this Bill is similar to other Bills, upon the constitutional ground, which we have dealt with. I think there is a very marked distinction, on the constitutional ground, between this Bill and the other Bills, and I adverted to it this very afternoon. I pointed out that I did not myself concur in all the reasoning, or in the result of all the reasoning, in the case in the Privy Council to which allusion was made this afternoon; but it seemed to follow from that decision that a difficulty and doubt existed as to the relative powers of the Local and the Dominion Parliaments in certain cases in which there had been, at any rate, a corporation created by the Legislature of the old Province of Canada, which sought modification. I did not believe that the true solution was that alleged, but there was a difficulty. Now, Sir, how far have we gone? How far have I, at any rate, assented to our going? Thus far, that-since that decision had taken place-wherever there was a Local Legislature attempting to carry out the wishes of the corporators in each of two or more Provinces on a question affecting property and civil rights, I said I thought it was not unreasonable that, considering that doubt and difficulty, we should use what power we might have-which is undecided, in my judgment-to implement the wishes of the Local Legislatures, and to confirm, in effect, their legislation. That is the rule that I have laid down for myself in this class of cases. I did not intend to give my assent to any Bill which acts upon other principles. Perceiving that the earlier of the two Bills, which came on this afternoon, did not fall entirely within that principle, I pointed out that I objected to it. The second Bill seemed to me to come quite within that principle; and, therefore, from my point of view, though I sympathized, as the hon. member from Quebec will have observed, with his general view as to our powers, I thought it not an unreasonable thing that we should not interfere with local legislation, but act for the purpose of implementing or complementing local legislation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is no legislation of a local nature for the Methodist Bill. We have passed it.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that in the case of the Methodist Bill, it was stated in the petition, or at any rate, stated in the House, that legislation was going on and was being granted in two Local Legislatures. It was for the purpose of making sure, by the Bill, the Union which, as far as property and civil rights were concerned, was to be made complete by the Local Legislatures.

Mr. WHITE. Yes; they are going to apply for it.

Mr. BLAKE. They have applied, and the Bills are going through. Now, with reference to the particular measure before the House, there can be no doubt whatever that the general question of the incorporation of the society for the purpose for which its promoters ask its incorporation-which, as they say, is merely in order that they may have a corporate entity enabling them to hold real property — is one of civil rights and property. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that this is within the control, and the exclusive control, of the Local Legislatures. The report of the Minister of Justice (Sir John A. Macdonald) upon the Orange Bill of 1873, passed by the Ontario Legislature, which was reserved, reads thus :

"If the Acts should again be passed, the Lieutenant-Governor should consider himself bound to deal with them at once, and not ask Your Exc llency to interefere in matters of Provincial concern and solely and entirely within the jurisdiction and competence of the Bestineer." lature of the Province."

That was a perfectly correct statement. It is true it applied to Provincial incorporation; but it was a perfectly correct statement that this proposed incorporation was not merely within, but solely and exclusively within, the competence of the Province. There have been Acts passed, as we know, in several of the Legislatures, granting the Order incorporation. The order has been incorporated in Manitoba, in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick-in three at least of the Provinces. And we know also that it is not because these incorporations are deficient for the purpose for which they were made, that the applicants come here. They do not come here because they want more power in Nova Scotia, Mani-toba, or New Brunswick; not at all. The present incor-poration is adequate for all the purposes they want, only they cannot get incorporation in enough Provinces-that is the question. This case is quite different from the class of cases in which I am willing that Dominion legislation should intervene, to clear up any doubts arising from the decision to which I have alluded; it is not to implement such legislation, but it is because legislation cannot be obtained in some Provinces that the parties come here. It is not to confirm, not to complete, the legislation of any Province in regard to which difficulty had arisen under our complex system; but it is to coerce Provinces into accepting legislation which the Provinces would not otherwise pass. I wish to make good the propositions I advance as I proceed, and I shall do this by quoting extracts. I find that the Grand Secretary of the order (Mr. Keyes) said this:

"Bills have been passed by five of the Provincial Legislatures incorporating our association; but through no fault of ours, in three of these Provinces, Untario, Manitobs and Prince Edward Island, the Bills have never become law. Under these circumstances, and in order to settle the question, we have appealed to the Parliament of Canada for the passage of a general Act of incorporation for our society in the Dominion."

There you see it is not to supplement, to make good and pertect local legislation, but because local legislation cannot be obtained, that they come here to obtain that which they cannot get in the proper quarter.

Mr. BOWELL. Have you the date of that report?

Mr. BLAKE. No; but I remember the period; it was shortly before the last application to Parliament. Since that time, the Manitoba Act has been passed. Fears were entertained at that time that the former Manitoba Bill would be disallowed; I believe it was vetoed by the then Government. Then I have a report from the Secretary of a county lodge, as late as February, 1884. He says:

"We must not permit any political feeling in this matter, as it is very important to our institution to have a Dominion Act of incorporation. "Without such Act, our noble brethren in the Province of Quebec will be without one, as you all know it is no use for them to ask for incorporation in their Provincial Legislature, where Protestants are in the minimized. the minority.

There you see, Mr. Speaker, once again, that it is because incorporation cannot be obtained in a particular Province or in particular Provinces, that they come here, and not because there is some difficulty or defect in the power of Pro-vincial legislation, which they want us here to heal. This view is not a view which is held by those who oppose this measure alone; it was held by leading Orangemen. Leading members of the order, up to a comparatively recent period, held the view that the measure should not be brought here; that it was a matter of Provincial concern and should be discussed elsewhere. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) who introduced the Bill last Session, and who has occupied a very high position in the order, and who still holds a high position, speaking in Winnipeg, after the defeat of the Bill of last Session, said :

"He, along with Brother Marshall and other members of the order, had asked that the Incorporation Bill be not sent to the House of Com-mons, as he thought it should be brought out in the Ontario Legisla-ture; and if defeated there, they should wait till their friends gained power; but in spite of all argument on his part, he had been forced to take the Bill into the House."

Again, the hon. gentleman said, in a speech at Brockville, after the Session of Parliament:

"At the Session of Parliament he found himself needing more assistance than ever before in his life. "Many of his friends were adverse to the Bill being given a second read-ing: they were divided as to its effect; and in this way he found himself assailed on all sides." .

"Prominent Conservatives advised him to withdraw the Bill."

Once again, at Hamilton, he said:

"He was willing to admit that the Orangemen themselves were not as united in asking for the Bill as they might have been. They did not act as unanimously as they should have done; and there was no use in denying the fact that a certain portion of their own organization did not want the Bill to come to a second reading.'

Mr. Marshall, a gentleman holding high office in the order, speaking at Winnipeg, said :

"He had been opposed to sending the Incorporation Bill to the Dominion House. The battle had been commenced in Ontario, and should be fought out there."

These are statements all made since the defeat of the Bill last Session, and they seem to indicate that, on the part of leading members of the order itself, there Was a strong feeling adverse to the propriety of introducing this Bill here, and favourable to the view which I have ventured to take in this House, that substantially and essentially this is an attempt to make use of the power of this Parliament under the pretence that Dominion incorporation is really wanted and is really needed, when the reality of the case is, that Provincial incorporation is all that is really wanted and is really needed. And it is because the Provinces cannot be induced to grant that incorporation, or, at all events, because such is the case in some of them, that it is proposed to use alleged Dominion power to force the measure on those localities that object to it. By the Bill itself and as much of the constitution of the order as we are acquainted with, it is a divided organization, with Provincial, county, district and private lodges; and the local branches are to have the right to hold property. I do not intend to discuss the matters of detail to which the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) alluded, as I learned from the speech of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), and which might be remedied in the Private Bills Committee. Although those observations were very fit and proper, because they point to the essentially local character of the measure, as dealing with property and civil rights; yet they are not fatal to the Bill at this stage. The question with respect to the Mortmain Act shows what sort of a Bill it is; but even this is not fatal to the second reading, because, as the hon. member for Cardwell properly observed, that provision might be struck out in the Private Bills Committee. But I say that the essence of this Bill is alleged by the promoters to be the right to hold real property. I say that the right to hold real property is, if anything be such, a Provincial right-a dealing with property and civil rights. I say that we should not strain our jurisdiction to grasp that right in any case. I say, that we are to use our jurisdiction where we have it, for we may have it in some cases, as incidental to some classes of Dominion incorporations. For instance, I have supported, in this House, as a necessary incident of railway companies incorporated by us, the power of expropriating lands. It is a necessary incident of our power to incorporate certain classes of railways, that we should have that power of expropriation, and we use that power because it belongs to us. But, I say, that we should watch jealously, and when it is proposed to go beyond the necessary incidents of corporate rights, and when the whole essence of the corporation is, as it is claimed, the right to hold real property, it should be a very strong case which should lead us to interfere with it. And when we are told that the real reason why the promoters come here is not because the Provincial incorporation would not be adequate, but be I tained. But it is putting the cart before the horse to Mr. BLAKE.

.cause they cannot get enough Provinces to agree to incorporate them, that should end the question of the propriety of our interference. I maintain that they should go to the Legislature of Quebec for incorporation in Quebec, and to the Legislature of Ontario for incorporation in Ontario, and as Mr. Marshall and the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) have said, fight their battle there; and if popular feeling is ultimately with them, they will get their incorporation, and if it should remain against them, they must content themselves without it. But it is not only upon this ground that I per-sonally am opposed to this Act of incorporation. I entertain views on the point to which I am about to address myself, which, I dare say, are shared only by a small minority in this House, but none the less do I entertain them. I am opposed to State recognition of secret societies. I do not care how good their purposes, or what their objects may be; I believe it is a mistake to lay down the principle that any secret society should be recognized by the State. I think secret oath-bound societies are, so far as that point may be brought fairly into question in this case-though I agree that we are to decide it upon our own notions of what is right-I say that such societies are contrary to the spirit of English law as to recognized societies. I know they are contrary to the Quebec criminal law. Now, the Quebec criminal law is not to be modified by a private Bill in this House. We have power to modify, or repeal, or amend it; and an hon. gentleman has before us a Bill for its amendment, upon which I hope to have the opportunity, if it comes to a second reading, of pointing out what I understand are the true principles of action in cases of that description; but I say that the Province of Quebec cannot complain if we propose to amend or modify any portion of the criminal law, simply because that portion of the law is exclusively Quebec law at this moment; for wo alone have the power-they have not the power to deal with it. But the way to deal with the criminal law is to amend or repeal it by a general Act; and having amended or repealed it to such an extent, if you think fit, as will make this a legal society, as would make it legal to have such a society in the country, then to proceed to pass your private Bill authorizing that corporate entity to be created which is no longer contrary to the law of the land. It seems to me to be unprecedented and certainly very inconvenient that we should repeal a general criminal law pro tanto by the creation of a private corporation; because nobody can doubt that this private Bill, by which we set up the Orange society, by which we allow it to continue to extend the number of its lodges, and so on; by which we give it incorporation and State recognition, by which we give t power to hold property-nobody can doubt, I say, that it comes within the criminal law of Quebec. Now that is no way to escape from the operation of the criminal law. A measure might be brought down, as one was brought down in the other Chamber last Session, dealing with the criminal law on the general principles on which it is thought that it should be dealt with. I quite agree in the view, which I have expressed in this House on previous occasions, that unless on the greatest pressure of obvious necessity, we should pass common laws for all parts of the Dominion, in respect to common interests with which we are charged. I those conceive it to be an anomaly-perhaps justified in special circumstances, and only to be justified by special and obvious circumstances-that there should be one criminal law for one part of the Dominion, and another criminal law for another part; and, therefore, I think it is fitting that a law should be brought down on the subject of secret societies, making such portions of the Quebec law as it may be deemed fit to retain on the Statute Book, general, and modifying, in the sense which I shall take another opportunity of pointing out, such parts as are not deemed fit to be rethe subsisting criminal law, one institution. Your law should be amended first on general principles; and then if you find that the institution is one which you can legally incorporate, you may proceed to give it incorporation. Now, as I said, I am not in favour of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one; though many of my best friends are members of secret societies which are, as this professes to be, benevolent-secret societies which do not meddle at all with political topics-secret societies whose real action, so far as one of the public can know, is not inconsistent with, and does not go beyond, the avowed purposes of their association. But I believe the tendency of secresy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders-very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose. That is my general proposition with reference to secret, oath-bound societies, a point on which, I dare say, as I said before, I am in a small minority; for I suppose the vast bulk of at least the Protestant members of this House belong to one or other of these societies, and I do not wish to be understood as saying that these mischievous tendencies are carried out in many of those societies; the operations of which, so far as I know, are be-neficial. But these things are to be dealt with on general principles; and I maintain that secrecy is in itself a bad thing; and if societies are beneficial, they are beneficial in spite of, and not because of, this element of secrecy. Now, there are, of course, three attitudes that the State can take towards these societies, that is, suppression, recognition and neutrality. And I maintain that, unless a society be one for an obviously bad purpose, in this age and under our circumstances, the only course to take is not to suppress, not to recognize, but to occupy a neutral position with reference to it; not to interfere one way or the other, not to give State recognition, not to attempt—what is perhaps in most cases a fruitless attempt—suppression. Those who talk of the benefits of secret societies have, I think, read the history of early and of later periods, and of very late periods especially, on the continent of Europe, in the United Kingdom and in the United States, after a fashion in which I have not read it. 1 believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries is due to secret societies; and I think that we who hail from one or other of the quarters of the United Kingdom, we who are doubly interested in the peace, prosperity and contentment of each one of the three United Kingdoms, must have marked from early days what a baneful influence secret societies have had upon that part of the United Kingdom which, unfortunately, has given so much cause for trouble and humiliation and difficulty, to the Parliament of England and to the English people throughout the world. When you remember the Ribbon society, the Phœnix society, the Fenian society, all the other societies of this class to which I have referred, you may see very easily what immense possibilities of evil there are in the attribute of secrecy. Now, Sir, this is a view which is shared by many who have thought on this subject. I met, the other day, in a book which Mr. A. M. Sullivan has not long since written, an observation which struck me as being so pregnant that I will trouble the House with it. He says:

" "I had not studied in vain the history of secret oath-bound associa-tions. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization, and were often, on the whole, more perilous to society than open tyranny."

That is the statement of a very eminent man who was actively engaged in an agitation for what he believes. and what rules and constitution in the schedule, and to which many of us believe, would be the amelioration of the Irish we give power to alter its constitution as it pleases legalize, by a private Bill, and vote out of the operation of people. He saw what an important agency these societies would be; but he saw also from a sad personal experience, and from his own observation, what evil and demoralizing tendencies they have. The difficulty as to State recognition is this-it is essential; you cannot get rid of it; it is in the circumstance that the society is secret-you cannot determine how far, being secret, it may depart from its professed and avowed objects; how far, being secret, it may go, in what direction it may travel; how far, being ostensibly religious and benevolent, it may become a political society and not benevolent or religious; how far, being loyal, it may go in the opposite direction, as we know professedly loyal societies have gone in days gone by-how far this may be the case, you cannot determine; and, therefore, I say that State recognition ought not to be given to You cannot tell what sort secret, oath-bound societies. of tyranny may not be exercised by them. It is in the nature of these societies to become tyrannical and despotic. Openness and public discussion are the great guarantees of order, freedom, fairness and moderation. It is in private gatherings of men all of one turn, all of one thought, all of one opinion, that bitterness and misrepresentation and malignity revel and hold high carnival. It is just there that you are sure to have the very worst of that description of difficulty which exists too commonly even in all our public life, and which is tempered only in so far as our discussions are open, in the presence of the world, and of men of different opinions. It may be that in oppressed countries, despotically governed, secret societies are a melancholy necessity. It is possible. I do not admit it; but it may be so. They may be the only recourse of those countries which are aspiring to freedom. But that is not the con-dition of the people of this country. There is nothing here that we want, there is no amelioration of our condition that we desire, which we are not free to propose in public gathering, upon which we are not free to engage in public discussion. If we believe that those of a particular creed amongst us entertain sentiments not merely erroneous in point of dogmatic religion (which has nothing to do with the question) but sentiments hostile to the Constitution or dangerous to social order, we have a right to say so, a right to resist them, a right to challenge their opinions, and to challenge them to express their opinions. But we have no right, because we have no necessity, to engage for these purposes in secret societies, which, as I have indicated, have often been the fruitful mothers of malignity, misrepresentation and bigotry. The Bil, however, goes much further than simply giving the right to hold property. As I have said, it gives State recognition; it gives a corporate existence. For this purpose, it invokes the Interpretation Act; and the last clause gives this society power to carry on its work. It is true, the preamble of the Bill has been altered. Last Session it said that the society wanted power to carry on its work; this year it does not say so; but the clauses, so far as I can understand them, are the same; and, although the preamble does not give the power, the clauses do. The Interpretation Act gives powers which, perfectly legitimate, in fact, absolutely essential to an ordinary business corporation, are powers which yet may be open to some misconception and misuse in the case of a secret society, such as this, for the propagation of opinion. There is a power on the part of the majority over the minority. While that is necessary in the case of an ordinary corporation, in the case of a society like this, for the propagation of opinion, a clause of that description is likely to enable the majority to exercise tyranny over the minority. There is also given freedom from individual responsibility, which is quite proper in the case of ordinary business corporations; but, once again, peculiar force is given to this provision in the case of this organization, which we incorporate according to the hereafter. Of course, I know that there is the criticism that this may be amended in Committee, but it is necessary to refer to it. We are asked to incorporate an institution, with power to alter its constitution as it pleases and to give whatever powers it pleases to its officers afterwards; but we do not know what those alterations may be, as the veil of secrecy conceals its acts, and yet there is to be no individual responsibility for them. Now, my hon. friend from Huron alluded to a point which met with some cries of denial at first; but I did not observe, when he came to be answered, that his proposition was seriously challenged. He alluded to the proposition that the purposes of this society were almost wholly political. I am not going to discuss how the Orange society works in the other Provinces of the Dominion; I do not know how it works in the other Provinces; I do not know how far it is true to the professed objects of the institution, or how far it goes beyond them; I do not know whether it attempts objects peculiarly political or not; but I think I speak of what I do know, when I say that my hon, friend's observation as to Ontario is perfectly correct; and I think the circumstance that, after being met with those cries of denial, when an answer was attempted to be made to his argument this statement was not denied, is sufficient proof of that.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). He said that Orangemen were expelled for voting for the Reform party. I deny that.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know how that may be; but I shall furnish the hon, gentleman some information on that point before I am done. I maintain that the order is political in Ontario, and I say that the objections to State recognition of secret societies are doubly strong—in point of fact, they receive their chief vitality, when they are applied to secret political organizations. There, if anywhere, it is in open discussion only that there is safety, in open attack and defense, in public charges and public answers. Why, many of us believe, and, I am sure, most of us would gladly agree-if it were practicable; I do not think it is-many of us believe that the greatest boon would be conferred upon the public if you could abolish private canvassing, if you could arrange that the only mode of canvassing would be to meet the electors of both sides openly at open public meetings and there avow your principles and define your positions. Why? Because we know that a private canvass gives opportunities for statements which suit the political complexion of the person addressed; because we know it gives opportunities for private statements of the political faith of the candidates and for private assaults upon the political faith and standing of an opponent, and that it is in every way objectionable. I believe myself that publicity is the very breath of freedom in politics; and I have not hesitated to declare that, though I voted for the ballot as essential to freedom, 1 was never able to reconcile myself to the idea that we should always be obliged to poll our votes secretly; because I believe it would be a very great advance if the day should come, when we could believe that to all our people an open vote would be a free vote. It is only because there are cases where an open vote is not a free vote, that I yielded to the ballot as a necessity, and in order that the vote might be free. Apart from that, I believe the effect of the ballot itself to be injurious rather than advantageous. To bear out what I have said, with reference to secret political organizations. I will give you an instance in my own career. The first time I entered public life, in 1867, I was contesting two counties, one for the Local and one for this House. They were from 200 to 250 miles apart, and I had to run from one to the other in the course of my canvass. At a certain point, shortly before I left the South Riding of Bruce, to go down to West Durham, I found that a secret canvass was being made against me, premoted by this religious and benevolent association. One form of this canvass was a cry to the effect that my father was the man who had shot Col. Moody, in 1837; the other was a personal cry that I myself was a Roman Catholic.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). That must have been a Grit Orangeman.

Mr. BLAKE. Having been informed, beyond a particle of doubt, that these statements were being circulated in the south riding, on behalf of the Orange organization, at the last meeting there, knowing there were men in the room who were circulating these stories, I, without repeating them, called upon those who had made them, called upon anybody to come forward and state anything derogatory either to my father or myself, and I would answer then and there. But none of them would come forward. I called on them three times at a public meeting; but although the circulators of these calumnies were present, they would not come forward. In the West Riding of Durham, the same private canvass was going on, the same course was taken, the same precise calumnies were being circulated, and when I came to that Riding I was asked how about this and how about that; but I declined to deny things which no man would venture publicly to state. That is the evil of a private canvass, and especially of a private canvass conducted through the medium of a secret society. Do I object to this society because it is a political organization? Not at all. I approve of political organizations. I believe in political organizations which are public, which are avowedly political organizations, and are not afraid to declare them-selves as such; but I do not believe in secret political organizations, or in political organizations, secret or otherwise, which act under the guise of religion and philanthropy. I do not object to this society because the majority of its members are opposed to me in political opinion. That is no reason for objecting to it. They have as good a right to their opinions as I have to mine, and their right to hold theirs is as dear to me as is mine to hold mine. As I hold mine by the same tenure as they hold theirs, and as I would not part, for any consideration, with the free right to hold mine, 1 hold their right equally dear. But if that political organi-zation is opposed to me, I want to meet its members as such, and not as members of a religious and charitable society. Our religious opinions should be held entirely separate from our political leanings. No greater calamity can befall a community than when the cleavage of political parties is coincident with the cleavage of religious bodies. That is a great calamity and misfortune. I am anxious that, whatever our creeds or religious opinions may be, we should feel that they have nothing whatever to do with our political opinions, and that we should agree or differ on political questions entirely irrespective of the faith we may happen to hold on religious questions. The more you set up, as a combination, a great Protestant society, which is also a great political association, the more you make coincident, or strive to make coincident, the lines of division for the religious and the political convictions of the people, and act directly in the teeth of what I believe to be for the benefit of the State. Our political differences are bitter enough, without introducing into them religious differences, and if the odium theologicum which is known to be so bitter, is to be accentuated by political differences, it will become intolerable. Let us endeavour then not to make coincident the lines between political and religious opinion. Yet this society. which, under the guise of religion and benevolence, is in Ontario largely and chiefly political in its power and efficacy, is doing this very thing, which I believe to be for the public evil and not for the public good. I do not propose to refer, in support of my view, as to the political condition of this society in Ontario, to anything very ancient. I do not propose to refer even to things so ancient as those to which the hon. member for the West Riding of Huron (Mr. Cameron) referred. It is enough for me to refer to quite recent transactions. The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White), made a speech in the town of Woodstock on the twelfth of July last, and in that speech he made some very amusing allusions to the secret history of the conduct of this Bill. In the course of these statements, he took a line which I want to point out, and proved what 1 have declared with reference to this society being really and substantially a political organ ization. He said :

Mr, BLAKE,

"The Bill and its requirements were put before the people of the Dominion, but, before the second reading came on, unfortunately mis-takes were made. He was not going to find a great deal of fault with the Roman Catholics, or with the Reformers; but, so far as our own people were concerned, as Conservatives and Orangemen, they were not as anxious as they should have been. He would say to them, so far as the Reformers of Uanada were concerned, they should not forget the fact that nine-tenths of the members of the Orange society in the Province of Ontario belonged to the Conservative party."

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Suppose they do.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, suppose they do. I am sorry for it, but I do suppose it. I am merely showing that this is a political organization.

Mr. FARROW. That does not prove it.

Mr. BLAKE. If that does not prove it to the hon. member for Huron, I despair of proving it to him. I do not address the remainder of these remarks to the hon. gentleman :

"He thought, in justice, according to Reform principles, they should have passed over any little wrongs which they might have suffered in the past, and have voted for the Urange Incorporation Bill. He wished it had been so, and, if they had done it, he was satisfied that at the next election the Urangemen would have divided, and have gone in more for more and measures and not as strongly for nexts." men and measures, and not so strongly for party."

"And not so strongly for party." That is the hon. gentleman's description of the character of the Orange or ganization in Toronto, that they have in the past gone very strong for party, and that in the future they might have mended their ways and gone more for men and measures. And that is not a party organization !

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Those are good words.

Mr. BLAKE. They are very good words. I wish they would be made good :

"Mr. Bunting went to Ottawa; he worked day and night for the Bill he told the Frenchmen if they did not pass the measure they would be doing an act of great injustice. He spoke to Sir Hector Langevin, to Sir John A. Macaonald, and other members of the Cabinet, on the sub-ject. He referred them to the general support which the Conservative party had always received at the hands of the Orangemen."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh ! it is not a political party, but it gives a general support to the Conservative party.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Those are very good words; I am not ashamed of them.

Mr. BLAKE:

"He (Mr. White) thanked Mr. Bunting for the noble assistance he "He (Mr. White) thanked Mr. Funting for the noble assistance he gave them during that time of trial, assistance which they hoped would yet result in triumph. In conversation, along with twenty other gentle-mer, with Sir Hector Langevin, Mr. Lunting said: 'Sir Hector, we must have incorporation.' What was the reply? Sir Hector said: 'So far as incorporation is concerned, I personally wish you to have it, but I am opposed to all secret societies, because my Church is opposed to them. I like to see the (Ionserving restrict preserving), but i like the them. I like to see the Conservative party prosperous, but i like the prosperity of my Church better than that of the Conservative party. My ishops and priests tell us, the members of the Church, not to vote for all support my such societies.' Mr. Sunting, in reply, said: 'That is a great mistake, for there are no men on earth more anious to do jus-lice to all parties, and to give your Church any incorporation it may require for its conefit, than the Orangemen.' In his (Mr. White's) opinion, Sir Hector Langevin would find out that he had committed a g cat mistake; for, if ever he obtained the leadership of any Govern-ment in this country, it would be impossible for him to hold it without the assistance and co-operation of the Orange society."

"Theirs," says the hon. gentleman, warming into enthusiasm lowards the peroration :

"Theirs was a great organization; let it be good, prudent and cau-tious; and he said as a Conservative, remember the next general elec-tion, if we do not succeed in getting justice before that time, judge each man by his deeds. They should take a leaf out of Archbishop Lynch's book. The Orange society were in a position to rule the whole country if they were only true to themselves."

Theo, Sir, the hon. gentleman also delivered an oration at Hamilton. Three cheers were given for "Sir John" at a particular period of the meeting, and the hon. gentleman followed up the cheers by saying :

"He [that is Sir John] was as true and as consistent a friend to the Orange Bill as any member in the House. There was a proposition made that the Bill should be withdrawn, or at least a Bill granted to all the different Derived Provide Statement of the stateme made that the Bill should be withdrawn, or at least a Bill granted to all the different Provinces, with the exception of the Province of Quebec. Sir John said to him, 'Mr. White, don't accept that, for if you do it will only bring disgrace on your society. Butter have the Bill earried for the whole Dominion, but don't disgrace yourselves by deserting the worthy members of your order in the Province of Quebec.' Those were good words, and he was satisfied that nothing in the world would have given Sir John Macdoneld greater placewere than handing the Income given Sir John Macdonald greater pleasure than handing the Incor-peration Bill to the Governor for his sanction, because. Sir John was satisfied in his own mind that nine-tenths of the Orange members be-longed to the Conservative party."

Why, I see the hon. member is amused. I thought I would amuse him.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). That speech of mine, which he is reading, is the best part of the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. BLAKE. My proofs are always the best part of my speeches, and this is my proof :

"Supposing Sir Hector Langevin were the leader of a great party, and in its ranks there was a society which was as true to him as the Orange society had been to Sir John Macionald, he would go to Sir John and say: 'It is necessary, in the interests of our party, that this society, which is loyal to the Queen, to the Constitution are to the country, should have en Act of incorporation.' Sir John would have answered: 'Yes, with all my heart you shall have it.' The Prime Minister was leading a party that was fair and just while Sir Heator Leaverning a party that was fair and just, while Sir Hector Langevin was leading a party that was bound hand and foot to the Church of Rome, which possessed a grasping disposition, taking everything and giving nothing."

Well, then, the hon. gentleman had occasion to speak of the Minister of Customs, and, after giving him a very great laudation for the mode in which he executed his office, he said :

"" Orangemen had looked forward and expected him to speak on the second reading of the Bill, and in not doing so he (Mr. White) thought he had made a great mistake. They were proud of him when he stood up in the Commons Chamber and got Riel expelled from it; when he took the step of bringing the first Commoner, Mr. Speaker Anglin, to the Bar of the House to answer for his violation of the law which he helped to pass—the Independence of Parliament Act He (Mr. White) did not know why the Minister of Customs did not addres the House on the second reading of the Bill, but he was confident that Mr. Fowell would yet retrieve the lost ground, and stand before them as he he'd in the past, a worthy and an honoured member of the society. If he bad made a mistake, they must not be too uncharitable with him, they n ust bear patiently with him, and he was confident that, if the time came again, and the privilege was allowed to Mr. Bowell, he would stand up again, and the privilege was allowed to Mr. Bowell, he would stand up and speak for the Orange Incorporation Bill, even if he lost his seat in the Cabinet.'

Well, Sir, so far for the hon. gentleman, the member of Hastings. But there are some other recent proofs of the political character of this religious and benevolent organization, so far as it is managed in Ontario. Brother Marshall, to whom I already alluded, who occupies a high position in the order, and who was with the hon. gentleman at Winnipeg, said:

"The question was asked how they always voted, Tory and the auswer was because that party had befriended them.'

You see the statement is "they always voted Tory," but they are not a political organization! At the Grand Lodge meeting at St. Uatharines, the Grand Master, Mr. Merrick, who is also a member of the Local Legislature, said :

" I hope it will teach us a lesson for our future conduct not to trust to

"I hope it will teach us a lesson for our future conduct not to trust to mere political party as such, but to support and work with our best ener-gies for those who will support and work for us; and then, no doubt, we will be able to say, with the Grand Master of New South Wales: "In connection with the recent Parliamentary elections, we find that in every locality, throughout the various electorates, when a lodge was in operation the chosen candidate of the lodge received the greater number of votes.""

But it is not a political organization! Then, Mr. Johnston, at the same meeting, said :

"The brethren should endeavour to make the association less of a political organization, and more of a religious and benevolent association.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). How would that suit you?

Mr. BLAKE. That would suit me very well; but I do not perceive that the hon. gentleman is "a doing of it," Sir. Then there was a grand meeting of the Triennial Council in England, at which Canadian delegates were present, including Mr. Marshall and Mr. Bennett. Speeches were made by Mr. Bennett and others; and they indicated the condition of the order in another colony, and so far are not uninteresting. Mr. Neale, who represented New Zealand, South Australia and Queensland, spoke, and said :

"The last general election was the grandest triumph for Orangeism ever witnessed in New South Wal.s. We gained no less than twenty-eight seats in the Colonial Parliament; and a very large number of the other members were returned through the Orange vote, and only eight Romanists succeeded in gaining a imission."

That was the statement which these Canadian delegates heard, and which shows the condition of things, and the way the order is worked in New South Wales. At that meeting Mr. Bennett was present representing Ontario, and he made this statement:

"I may also tell you that we have in our country an Orange paper, and we have found it to have a beneficial and magical effect; because divided as the Protestants are in the country into two political parties, each of these parties bidding for the Romanist vote, so that the organs of these political parties dare not, for fear of offending the Roman Catho ics, say anything in favour of Orangeism—having a paper of our own, we not only get all the Orange news from all parts of the world, but have an organ, not only to put forth our views to the country, but to repel all at-tacks that may be made on us by the Roman Catholic and Jesuit press of the country." the country.

So that you find, Sir, that the Order is organized, and that here in Ontario, at the present day, by the confession of its leading men, though it comes here claiming incorporation as a religious and benevolent association, the guise in which it appeals to its friends, and the voice with which it speaks to those whom it asks to support it, are political. They say they are a political organization. They vote almost unitedly one way; they are a party political organization. Nor, Sir, is it to be wondered at, for we all know that in both the great branches from which the order springs, the Irish Grand Lodge, and the English Grand Lodge, the order was for a great many years, and I believe is still, political. I do not intend myself to attempt any statement of the origin, and still less of the progress and work of the Irish lodges; but I intend to read a brief extract from a letter written by Sir Francis Hincks, a few years ago, in which he says :

"I have read in many newspapers, as well as in the sermon of the Rev. Mr. Doudiet, a similar expression of opinion; that the cause of offence to Irish Roman Catholics is the celebration of the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne. I believe that those who entertain this opinion are under a complete delusion, from which it is most desirable that they should be freed. Irish Roman Catholics will user have resented the should be freed. Irish Roman Catholics will never have resented the celebration of an ordinary victory, but the Battle of the Boyne was the first of a series of victories which led to the complet; subjugation of Catholic Ireland to Protestant Great Britain, and the effect of that sub-jugation was that a Protestant minority, settled chiefly in one of the four Provinces of Ireland, was enabled to rule a Roman Catholic majority in the three other Provinces, with a rod of iron, during the eighteenth content.

mijority in the three other Provinces, with a rod of iron, during the eighteenth century. "The motto of the Protestant minority for years before the Orange lodges came into existence, was 'Protestant Ascendency,' and thus was maintained by penal laws, every amelioration of which laws was resisted by Orangemen with all the vigour for which they have ever been distinguished. When it is borne in mind that, for nearly a century after the Battle of the Boyne, no Roman Oatholic could either be elected or vote for a member of Parliament, that no Roman Oatholic could be a lawyer or a solicitor, that no Roman Oatholic could keep arms that his children could not be educated, and that his clergy were proscribed, that no Roman Catholic could own a horse worth over ±5; when it is farther borne in mind that every amelioration of these penal laws was gradually extorted from the Parliament, by the influence of English statesmen, who, differing upon other questions, were nearly all favourable to the Mr. BLAKE.

gradual repeal of the penal statutes; when, I say, all this is considered, it is not difficult to understand the hatred that is felt by Irish Oatholics to an institution whose distinguishing principle is 'Protestant ascen-dency,' and whose members habitually proclaim their adherence to this principle by their flags and party tunes—'Protestant Boys' and 'Crop-tics lie down '' pies lie down.'"

Sir Francis Hincks goes on to point out the continued political operations of the Irish Orangemen, with reference to Catholic emancipation, and with reference to Church disestablishment, as showing their active operation as a political body, up to a comparatively recent period. He proceeds to point out that the Orange organization has existed in the Province of Upper Canada, that there they were opposed to certain reforms, the promoters of which they were pleased to call disloyal; and he shows that they there also were a political organization. So, Sir, with reference to the English lodges; you will find that, at a very early day, in the enquiry that was made as to the Orange institution in Great Britain and Ireland, not very long after the order had been instituted in England, the Deputy Grand Secretary was asked some questions, and speaking of its true character he answered as follows:

469. It is stated here, "as part of a grand Conservative body, extend-ing over the whole Kingdom, and having its head in the Metropolis, the value of our provincial establishments is immense;" will you state what is meant by the advantage of having that general association all over the country, the head of the body being in the Metropolis; did you mean by the Conservative body, the Loyal Orange Institution?--No, the institution that is known by the name of the Conservative body or club.

470. This is issued under the sanction of the Grand Master of the Empire, His Royal Highness the luke of Cumberland?—Yes, so it is; but I should not hesitate to say it had reference to Conservative Associa-tions more than Orange, but I consider the one as interwoven with the other.

471. Do you mean that commonly called the Carlton Club?-Yes. 472. Will you state what is meant by this: 'Lastly, it enables men 472. Will you state what is meant by this: "Lastly, it enables men possessing wealth and patronage in their command to distinguish the true support of constitutional principles, to reward merit and honesty whenever it suffers oppression and distress;" by "it," do you mean the Loyal Orange Institution?—I should rather say, taken by surprise as I am, that it must mean the Conservative Institution; I have always con-sidered the two to be so interwoven, with a difference of name, that it is of little consequence.

of little consequence. 473. You consider the Loyal Orange Association of the same nature and identified with that called the Oarlton Club?—Yes, I should con-sider so, with this distinction, that the Orange Institution is a religious institution, and the Carlton Club does not profess to be so. With re-pect to a person being a member of the Carlton Club, if, as a gentle-man of some rank and situation in life, he is eligible, they never inquire respect to a person being a member of the Carlou Oldo, it, as a gente-man of some rank and situation in life, he is eligible, they never inquire I believe into his religion, which is no exclusion; whilst I have no reserve in saying religion is the first principle we look to in the Orange Institution; we exclude Papists, for instance, and we exclude Jews.

476. Are you to be understood to say, that you believe the Carlton Club and the Orange Institution are generally interwoven in their views, but you consider the Carlton Club more political and the Orange Institution more religious ?-Yes.

Then, I think, Sir, that pretty effectually proves that in the opinion of the Deputy Grand Secretary, the Orange institution and the Carlton Club were institutions of different names, indeed, but having pretty much the same object. That is also proved, practically, by the papers which were produced at that time. Amongst others, was the report of the Grand Secretary, in 1835, in which he says :

4. Perhaps the way of all others, in which Orangeism can be turned to 4. Perhaps the way of all others, it which orangeism can be turned to the best account, or can be rendered available to beneficial objects, is by a practical observance of its fundamental principles, when the execu-tive feels a necessity for making an appeal to the sense of the nation. If, however, by an abindonment, or by a compromise of those tenets, for the maintenance of which they profess to assemble, its members act so inconsistently as to countenance those candidates who avow their hosti-hity to the Protestant church and a free constitution, their continuance with us must prove ruinous to our cause. So obvious will this be to the least cultivated mind, as to need no argument in support of the fact. 5. Since the manis of reform it may not be foreign to the purpose to observe, that no small portion of the brethren have sunk into the soft observe, that no small portion of the brethren have sunk into the soft capitvity of its delusion. Hence it may not be superfluous to add, from representations to the D.G.S. both orally and in writing, that, in dis-regard of the "obligation" which is so much their proud but empty boast, a number of Orangemen have bestowed their suffrages on persons well known t) be opposed to the establishments of the land, and unfavourable to the existence of their own body. So at variance is such conduct, not merely with the spirit but with the letters of the laws by which their movements ought to be guided—so contrary was it to the votes, no less from feeling than from honour, which they are bound to which is calculated to cast a suspicion on the integrity of, to the entail-ment of a degradation with a mixture of contempt on, all belonging to it. 6. In illustration of the above, the D. G. S. has to offer an extract of a letter that he received from the D. G. M. of Rochdale soon after the election, than which nothing can more strongly show the justness of the remarks he had previously put forth, in condemnation of so vile a depar-ture from the pure essence of sound Orangeism, as therein is reported to him thus officially by that functionary, viz: 7. "No doubt you have heard of the triumph," says the writer, "we have gained over the Whig candidate, by the election of John Entwistle, For of Fachelus, as the approximation of the harowark. Yet after have gained over the Whig candidate, by the election of John Entwistle, Esq., of Foxholes, as the representative of this borough. Yet after obtaining the victory, I am not altogether satisfied, as three of our members voted for the Whig party, contrary to the principles of our loyal institution. 'The names of the persons who have gone against us are Richard Simpton, of warrant 68; James Whittl s, 266; and John Cross-ley, 302. The brethren of my district call aloud for the expulsion of these offenders. For Crossley I feel strongly, as haves compelled, by his master, to vote contrary to his wishes. I hope, therefore, you will take his case into your kind consideration, as I believe him to be really a true Orangeman. I shall feel obliged by your advice in what manner I am to act under these circumstances. At the ensuing meeting of the Grand Lodge, I hope you will lay this case before its dignitaries. In the mean time I shall await your answer with impatience.'' In the mean time I shall await your answer with impatience.'

8. Much credit is due to the D. G. M of Rochdale for his prompt report of these delinquents, as well as to the brethren of the district f r their just reprehension of characters so unworthy of their fellowship. Uther accounts of a similar though of a less specific colour, have been transmitted to the D.G.S., whose best attention to them shall be especi-ally given on his approaching tour of general inspection. With the names of the districts most disaffected he is well acquainted, and those Masters who shall appear to have connived at, nay, not to have used strong efforts to prevent these offences, may expect soon to be supersoded in their command. Such a desertion from principle on the part of the brother-hood, and such a derelicition of duty on the part of their officers, at a conjuncture of peril too like the present. when the altar and the sceptre are alike in danger, can no longer be suffered to pass with impunity. As an example, then, to deter, rather than to punish, let the two chief trans-gressors stand expelled, and the one so unduly influenced be suspended 11. The D.G.S. has now to notice a communication more in unison with the feelings of Orangeism than the last, reflecting no less honour on the the feelings of Urangeism than the last, reflecting no less bonour on the D.G.M. of Barnsley than upon the individuals, to a man, over whose proceedings that functionary has been invested with a superintendence. Prior to the late elections, the officer, parading his forces, in a brief harangue analogized the rudiments in which they had been more than traditionally instructed since their enrolment in our social bands. By the implied, as well as by the written laws, he reminded them their actions ought to be governed on these occasions, which was a theorem not to be refuted. Hence, while their cordial support was due to candi-dates cherishing sentiments congenial with conservative doctrines, they were bound to withhold it from aspirants entertaining ideas unfavour-able to legitimate designs. Indeed, it was bolutely imperative on them as Urangement to uphold persons who were resolved on repairing, instead as Orangemen to uphold persons who were resolved on repairing, instead of destroying our venerable monuments of antiquity by unrighteous attempts to level them with the dust. The consequence of this ingenious step was, that the whole of the district, with three hearty cheers, declared their readiness to vote in accordance with the precepts, in a virtual sense, thus enjoined on them. Such of the members as had no franchise to exercise would most cheerfully, they said, yield their assis-tance in any way best calculated to promote the good cause.

Such was the course of conduct pursued in 1835 by the Loyal Orange Association of Great Britain. With respect to this measure now before the House : alter its defeat last Session, at first there was a disposition on the part of the promoters to blame the Roman Catholic Conservative members who opposed the Bill and to deal rather lightly with Protestant Reformers. I might refer to a speech which the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) delivered in O tawa, which the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) read in this House, and which is reported in the Hansard of 1883. I refer also to a speech delivered by the hon. member for East Hastings at Winnipeg, when he said :

"At the first reading, the Roman Oatholic section of the House had expressed considerable sympathy, but had been compelled to oppose it, owing, no doubt, to instructions received from the bishops and priests. No country could afford to submit to the dictates of bishops, priests or ministers of any denom nation. The R-tormers said very little in the matter. The three Reform representatives from Manitoba acted nobly, but the rest were undecided as to the action they would take. Ho was advised to consult Mr. Blake, but refused, as that gentleman was an Ultramontane Protestant. "Many of the friends of the Order did not act as they should have done.

They forgot that they owed their seats to Orangemen, and were afraid that they would be killed if they supported it, and he told them that they would die anyway. "The Conservative party had not been as true to the cause as they might, but his advice would be to test them again; and if the Bill was defeated three times he would advocate the ballot-box."

There you see, Mr. Speaker, the disposition to which I refer, to blame those Roman Catholic members who voted against the Bill, and to deal rather lightly, as the hon. gentleman did at Ottaws, with Protestant Reformers. Then Major White said at Winnipeg:

"The association has not the influence it ought to have, because the members were not true to each other. The brethren should see to it that in all municipal and legislative bodies they had men who would that in all multicipal and legislative bodies they had men who would truly represent them. In the past they had taken the broad view that a man's religion should not be a bar to his political preferment; but the conduct of the Roman Catholic members of the House demonstrated that they could not represent Protestants, much less Orangemen."

There again, you see the same disposition-a disposition to blame the Roman Catholic Conservative members for not voting for the Bill, to declare it was a measure which they should have supported, and to threaten them with general ostracism in parliamentary and municipal matters.

Mr. WHITE. We will grant them absolution before next election.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has the frankness and manliness to avow it. The official organ of the Orange body says :

"The bigotry displayed on Monday by every French and Irish Roman Outholic member of the House of Commons has, however, opened our eyes, and in future we shall know how to act. As we said, although the Reformers acted foolishly and illiberally, still we think, under the pre-sent state of Canadian politics, an excuse may be found for their action, but none whatever can be offered for the course pursued by t e Conservative Roman Cathorics, and upon their shoulders, in the groatest measure, must rest the onus of our defeat."

There again, you see the first line taken by the promoters of the Bill-they were prepared to charge the Roman Catholics, whether Conservatives or Reformers, and particularly Con-servatives, with the onus of the defeat of the Bill. The Sentinel says:

"For years past the Orangemen of the Dominion have, under various political pretexts, and to meet the exigencies of political parties, been induced to support Roman Oatholics at the polls; but the measure of bigoted intolerance with which our liberality was met in the vote upon our Bill, precludes any possibility of this mistake again occurring.

The S n'inel goes on to say, with respect to the course of the leader of the Conservative party:

"The leader of the Conservative party has been charged with insin-cerity in his efforts to have the Bill passed, and while we believe that personally he has acted with the greatest sincerity towards us, and has used all his influence to obtain for us the redress we sought, still we cannot close our eyes to the fact that it is the first measure introduced since 1878, with his approval and sympathy, which has received such a weak support."

Now, Sir, that was the first start. That was the way the promoters of this Bill began to conduct the political campaign towards procuring a second reading this Session of the Orange Bill. After the attack, they were honest enough to say that they had not much to expect from the Reformers. They did say that they had a right to expect from the Conservative Roman Catholics their support of the Bill, and they showed the true principles of their leading men, in the observations I have just now read, as to the ostracism they propose to pronounce on Roman Catholics generally, in consequence of the course of the Roman Catholic Conservatives with reference to the Bill. I have said that in Ontario the Orange society is mainly a political organization, and I say that it subordinates all other considerations-its leaders cause it to subordinate all other considerations to the political and party consideration. That is proved by the course which was pursued shortly afterwards. Their tactics were changed, and they seemed to think it would not do to continue blaming the Roman Catholic Tories for opposing the Bill, that this might disturb their political alliances; and they must throw the odium on the Protestant Liberals, and on me particu-larly, as an Ultramontane Protestant. It would not do to go on saying that the Roman Catholic Conservatives had done wrong, and that they must not return Roman Catholics to Parliament, and the hon. gentleman did not wait until the next election to grant absolution. He granted absolution at once, and he turned the condemnation upon us, whom, for a little space of time, he was just enough to say he had no right to expect much from. And why was this done?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Read what I have said.

Mr. BLAKE. I have read what the hon. gentleman said —is he not satisfied. I cannot read all his speeches, but I will gratify him. There was a meeting, to which I have alroady referred, held in Ottaws, immediately after the defeat of the Bill, at which an address was presented to him, and the address contained the following paragraph:—

"From the proceedings in Parliament on the Orange Incorporation Bill, we have learned a bitter, but salutary lesson, and one that will bear fruit in due season. While we disclaim an intolerant spirit, we declare that henceforth the Roman Catholics must be prepared to reap as they have sown, and that if we are such disturbers of the peace as they declare us to be, we will for the future abstain from voting for them, and so deprive them of the power to mortify us by refusing to grant to us the same rights that we have always cheerfully accorded to them."

The hon. gentleman's answer was as follows :----

"Many Conservative members had asked and begged of him not to roin them, but he told them that he would stand by the order first. Another mistake was that of assisting to elect a Frenchman in Russell and an Irish Roman Catholic (Mr. Baskerville) in Ottawa city, and he said he was now ashamed of his actions; he hoped the Orangemen would forgive him for asking them to vote for Baskerville. There are very few Hawkinses. One Roman Catholic member of the House whose name he did not wish to mention, said to him privately: 'How can we vote for this Bill when the priest says he has power from the Pope to damn there of his constituencies who dare vote for a candidate for parliamentary honours who would support such a measure.' If the Conservatives would not stand true to us, then let us be Reformers. He likened them, at the present day, as being between the devil and the deep sea—the Roman Uatholics and the Reformers.'

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). One word; I believe the hon.] gentleman is reading from the Ottawa Free Press.

Mr. BLAKE. I am reading from Hansard. I do not know where the report was taken from, but it was read in the House and the hon. gentleman did not repudiate it.

"He kindly praised the Reformers who supported the Bill. He believed Mr. Blake had made a mistake in voting against the second reating. It was, at that time, within his grasp to have the united Orange vote of Ontario."

Now, Sir, as I have said, the Tory politicians who lead and direct, and control the bulk of the Orangemen of Ontario. believed it would not do to continue the battle with their own allies; and, as politics are the main ingredient, in their view of the order, as it is for the propagation of their own party politics that they work the order, they decided on taking another course; and the fight which existed against the Roman Catholic Conservatives was put to one side, and the guns were turned against us. Sir, it reminds me of the story of the Irish duel. The First Min-ister with the hon. Minister of Customs on one side, and the hon. Minister of Public Works with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue on the other, met in a coffee-room with hostile intent. They met to fight the battle to the bitter end; and the poor innocent fellow who is taking his breakfast upstairs, away by himself, is astonished by a bullet coming through the floor and striking him in the leg. He asks the waiter what is going on, and he replies, sure it is only Mr. Moriarty and Captain O'Toole fighting a duel, but thanks be to God they both fired in the air. The gentleman upstairs with the bullet in his leg did not thank Providence at all. This duel between the First Minister and the Minister of Customs on the one hand, and the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Inland Revenue on the other; this g eat demonstration of hostility, of voting squarely against one another; all this fire and fury and blood and thunder; all this threatening of slaughter ended by both combatants firing in the air, and hitting Mr. BLAKE.

the poor fellow up stairs who had nothing to do with the row. Now, Sir, I do not propose to be hit without protest. As I have said, they have changed their ground. They have determined that they will not fight with one another but will attack us; and what is the present argument? The present argument is, that the contest over this Bill is a contest between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, and that all true Protestants must unite in supporting the Bill against the Roman Catholics. That is the argument; that is the proposition. You cannot get out of it. And if we do not agree to that proposition, we are to be told-in our religious associations amongst those with whom we confer, and co-operate in religious work-that we are not true Protostants, because we have not gone against the Roman Catholics by voting for carrying this measure. I have made that statement; and with reference to that statement as with reference to the others, I shall produce the proof. But before doing so, let me give you two short extracts from recent utterances evidencing the same point. In November, 1882, a lodge meeting was held at Clover Hall, and an address was delivered by a great man in the order, the late local member for South Simcoe (Mr. Parkhill). He spoke as follows:

"If he observed the signs of the times correctly, there is as much need of Orangeism, both in Ireland and Canada, at the present moment, as there ever was. True, we may not have to fight, as our forefathers fought, but we must all, whether Grits or Tories, bury our political feelings and go united to the polis in defence of our Protestant principle?"

What is his proposition? I am to be told, being a Reformer, that I must bury my political feelings and join with my friend, Mr. Parkhill, whom I have the pleasure of knowing, and whom I should not suspect, from his appearance, of holding such bloodthirsty principles—that we are to unite against the Roman Catholics. At Rosemont, the hon. member for South Simcoe spoke at a lodge meeting. We are told that :—

"Colenel Tyrwhitt, M.P., was warmly received, and made a good, practical, Protestant speech, in the course of which he referred to the utter want of political principle in the Roman Oatholic electorate. The only principle they held was allegiance to their Church, and to its interests. On such matters Roman Oatholic representatives were a unit in the House of Commons. They even had an Irish Oatholic party in the House of Commons last Session, who met daily to consider their interests. While all this was going on, he was sorry to admit that Urange and Protestant representatives were divided. He counselled organization and unity on the part of all Protestants irrespective of polities in order to stem the aggressive march of the Papacy in this our beloved Dominion."

Now, this is not old. I am not reviving the buried fires of old days. This is reported on the 4th of January, 1883, and the speech was delivored on the 29th of December, 1882. 'Then, in the Sentinel of 12th July, 1883, these remarks are made:

"Mr. Blake is the most prominent man in the House who voted against the Bill. He is, at least by profession, the Protestant of Protestants, from whom such a vote was not expected.

He is, above all, by virtue of his leadership of the Opposition, the member of the Federal Parliament whose vote against incorporation influenced the largest number of his colleagues to vote as they did in violation of the just rights of large numbers of their constituents.

tion of the just rights of large numbers of their constituents. * * Bat, Mr. Bake, by his vote, threw his great influence in the House against the Bill, and, undoubtedly, thereby secured its defeat. He stultified his advocacy of Ontario's rights, and he made plain the hollow insincerity of his Protestant principles. His position in the House, his professions of Protestantism, his advocacy of Ontario's rights, made him a prominent target for the censure of Orangemen, because of a vote, which, if he were true to his principles and professions he would certainly have never given."

Once again you see the assertion that this is a question between Protestant and Catholic, and that a man who professes Protestant principles is insincere if he votes against this Bill. There was also a lodge resolution reported in the Sentinel:

"We are not surprised at Roman Catholic members who put religion before party; but we strongly condemn those Protestant members who preferred party before religion."

There again this is made a religious question. We are told that we voted for our political party and against our religious principles. Then Churchill lodge passed a resolution which was particularly directed against the humble individual the Orangemen and against the Catholics for that Bill, is not that a serious state of things? If this be true, I say that

"We particularly condemn the action of the Hon. Edward Blake, who, by voting for the Bill at one reading and against it at the next, showed that he was more anxious to embarrass his political opponents than to do justice to a large body of his fellow Protestants; and that we consider such a trifling with the question an insult to our order, and that in being guilty of it, the said Hon. Edward Blake has proved himself unworthy of the name he bears as an ultra Protestant, and also of the high position he occupies as leader of one of the so-called great political parties of this country."

Once again, you observe that my innocent conduct, for which I did not think I was to be blamed, in giving to this Bill what I have given to every Bill brought into this House since I have been in Parliament, and what I propose to give to almost every conceivable Bill, the courtesy of a first reading, and the opportunity of fair discussion on the second reading, is called trifling. Hon, gentlemen opposite, members of the order, called upon us not to be so unjust as to vote against the first reading. They pointed out that the first reading was not on the merits of the Bill, but that it gave an opportunity for discussion. I thought they were right, and I accepted their view; but Churchill lodge blames me, and various members of the order say that I was wrong. Then, Sir, the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) is reported to have said :

"No doubt there is danger in the air, and the Orangemen of Ontario should become the Ultramontane Protestant perfy in Ontario in contradistinction to the Roman Catholic Ultramontanes of Quebec."

Then the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White), himself, at Woodstock, said :

"The day was not far distant, if we did not show more pluck and courage in opposing the growing influence of the Papacy in this Province, when we should be obliged to fight, not as Conservatives or Reformers, but as Protestants, to free ourselves from the trammels which Rome's agents sought to place on us and our institutions."

Mr. Marshall, at Winnipeg, said :

"The Bill of incorporation was not defeated by the Roman Catholics, but by the Protestants, who were pandering to the Roman Catholic vote. He hoped Brother White would never ask a Catholic member to support the Bill, as he could expect no support from them; and if he did, he gave them credit for more honesty than politicians generally possessed." And I perceive that, only the other day, on the 11th March, a special meeting of the Middlesex County lodge was held, at which it was resolved :

"That the county lodge of the County of Middlesex of the Loyal Orange Association is of opinion that while those who last year voted for our incorporation did but their duty in having shown their willingness to accord us those rights which we, as Orangemen, are ever ready to extend to all sections of Her Majesty's loyal subjects, we have no words to sufficiently express our strong condemnation of the course of those Protestant representatives, especially from Protestant Ontario, who from political spleen voted to deny us (their Protestant fellowcitizens) those rights which they are always willing sycophantly to grant to Roman Catholics; Resolved, further, that we, the representatives of the Orangemen of the County of Middlesex, will not be satisfied until our full rights in the matter of incorporation are properly accorded to us, our motto being 'No surrender and no compromise,' and that a copy of the resolutions be sent to the public press."

Now, Sir, I think I have shown to you that, as I have said, the line of attack was altered-that the line of attack upon their party friends, and their religious opponents, who, they at first said, ought to support the measure, and who should be ostracised for not supporting it, they are obliged to abandon in order to strike at their political opponents by representing this as a case in which all Protestants ought to combine, and in which no man of true Protestant principles could have given, or could repeat a vote against the second reading of this Bill. Well, that may be true; but if it be true, I ask this House, without distinction of creed or party, if it be not a serious state of things. I ask if it be not a serious state of things that a religious war is to be raised in this country; because that is what it is. If it be the case that, as a matter of fact, this is an issue raised between us, in which all Protestants are to be on one side, and all Roman Catholics on the other, and in which I, a firm Protestant, am to be told that I am untrue to my profession of religion, to my Protestant principles, if I do not vote with | the Orangemen and against the Catholics for that Bill, is not that a serious state of things? If this be true, I say that every true lover of this country must deplore such a circumstance, and must forebode the greatest evil to his country from its existence.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). You are drawing it pretty strong; you are drawing on your imagination.

Mr. BLAKE. I have given the text, and I will guarantee that the comments are justified by the text. Now, Sir, I deny entirely that there is any such necessity. I deny that there ought to exist such an issue; and I tell the hon. gentleman opposite that no matter what his threats may be, no matter whether he may say that my speech does me harm or good, he will neither seduce, nor threaten, nor drive me on any such issue into any such line or any such professions. In furtherance of this same plan, this attempt to produce a religious prejudice against those who support this Bill, the hon. gentleman and others are declaring that I am controlled by the Archbishop of Toronto.

Mr. WHITE (Hasting). So you are.

Mr. BLAKE. I tell the hon. gentleman that he states that which is not the fact. Notwithstanding that I am relieved from the necessity of proving my case as to his statement, by his own statement in this House, I proceed to give the evidence of that as I have given the ovidence of other things. He said:

Mr. Mowat was controlled by Archbishop Lynch and they must come to the conclusion that he, too, controlled Mr. Blake. No doubt orders went from the Palace at Toronto and the great Reform statesmen had to obey."

I determined, as soon as I saw this statement of the hon. gentleman, that I would meet him here, face to face, and have this out with him, and have it out with him. I will. This is not all. The Rev. Brother Wright, at a meeting in Leeds, said :

"They (the Orangemen) were not defeated in Parliament solely by the Roman Catholics, but through the instrumentality of Ontario politicians who considered the smiles of Rome of greater value than the ap robation of their fellow Protestants. The Bill was defeated because Arobbishop Lynch raid, no. Christopher Fraser repeated, no; and Edward Blake bowed his head and whispered, no."

He voted "no" the last time; but I trust that the hon. gentle man will admit that his negative this night is not given in a whisper.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I drove you to it.

Mr. BLAKE. You drove me to it! Manage your own drove. At Winnipeg, again, the hon. gontleman said :---

"Unfortunately Archbishop Lynch had Mowat bound hand and foot, and it was even hinted he was getting a hard hold on Mr. Blake, and let us hope our own leaser will keep his skirts clear."

An hon. GENTLEMAN. He has no confidence in the breed.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon: friend says he has no confidence in the breed. Now, I have had the honour of the acquaintance, for a considerable time, of His Grace the Archbishop of Toronto, and I hope, being both of us Irishmen, I may even call myself his friend; but I have never, either directly or indirectly, through others or myself, by speech or writing, or in any way, had the slightest communication with Archbishop Lynch on any one political topic, of any description whatever-not this one only, but any political topic of any description. For aught I know, unless he may have given public utterance to the contrary, that prolate may entertain the same view with reference to the Orange Bill as I observe the hon. member for Hastings has said Archbishop Taché has, namely, that he was in favour of its being passed. But I say that in this, as in alother particulars, I have acted entirely upon my own judgl ment and wholly free from every-I will not say dictation or control-but attempt at dictation or control, hist or suggestion, knowledge or information, as to what the ori vions of that prelate or of any other prelate or dignitary or persons of the Roman Catholic faith might be on the subject. I have acted on convictions which I have entertained ever since I came into public life, on convictions which I was known to have entertained in the Local Legislature, and to have expressed, not on the floor of the Legislature, but to leading members, when the question was likely to come up in the Local House, with reference to another secret organization-convictions hostile to the incorporation of secret corporations, hostile to the incorporation of the Orange society. It is perfectly true that I am, as the hon, gentleman says, a Protestant, and it is also true -I suppose that is the meaning of his phrase ultramontane-that I am of that school of thought which is most opposed to what I believe to be the dogmatic errors of the Church of Rome. That is perfectly true. I pro-test against those errors; but I am also an earnest advocate of religious freedom and equality and the full rights of conscience. As the Ontario leaders of the Orange society declare that that Province is ruled politi-cally, by the Roman Catholic clergy, and that it must be freed from the domination of the Roman Catholic clergy by subverting Mr. Mowat, I notice they have sometimes said a word with reference to the conduct of the Province of Quebec, and as to its rule; and I desire here to advert to this question, speaking with the same plainness of speech which I have used this evening, though I may perhaps offend some of those who may have listened with approval to some things I have hitherto said. I say I do not find this pretention to be the exclusive standard bearers of Protestant principles and to lay down a rule and measure with which, unless all Protestants comply, they are to be held untrue to their principles, to be the proper attribute of this association, judged by its leaders in Ontario. I have spoken of Quebec. Now, in that Province there have been, for a long time, some persons-some persons only, I am glad to say-who have striven to create that regime in favour of their own party, who have insisted on extreme pretensions as to the rights of the clergy to use their influence in elections; who have sought to drag the clergy into the political arena; who have sought to pervert certain general language, which was used by the authorities of the Church, from its true sense and to turn it to the condemnation of one political party; who have sought to maintain the view that the clergy should refuse the rites of the Church to persons on account of their votes. who have sought to repeal the law as to undue influence, as far it affected the clergy; and there can be no doubt that these efforts on the part of some persons in Quebec met, in the past, with a measure of success. Pressure was used in several counties against the candidates of one political party, as Liberal Catholics; and the struggle was severe, and resulted in a great weakening of that party, from which it has not even yet recovered. The members of that party appealed, under these circumstances, to three tribunals; they appealed to public opinion, to the courts of the land, and to the highest authorities in their own church. They fought a long and arduous fight, which reached its climax, perhaps, in the period from 1875 to 1881. Public opinion, one of the tribunals to which they appealed, was roused to a consider-able degree in the Province of Quebec; and many Protostants there even changed their political views and left the party with which they had usually acted, because they felt that this pressure was a pressure inconsistent with the proper sphere of religion and the proper sphere of the Church. The members of the party appealed also to the law; and the law was vindicated in soveral cases. They appealed also to the highest authorities in the Church, and those authorities also interfered. We know well, for it is public to us, what was done. We know that, in 1876, an instruction was sent out from the Supreme Congregation of the Holy Office in these words: Mr. BLAKE.

"The Bishops of Canada must be made to understand that the Holy See faily acknowledges the extreme gravity of the facts reported by them; and the injury caused by these facts to the authority of the clergy and the holy ministry is particularly to be deplored. "Wherefore in order to make up for these great injuries, it is especially necessary to root out the evil. Now the cause of such great incom-veniences lies in the fact that these Bishops are divided among them-veniences lies in the fact that these Bishops are divided among them-selves, both as regards the political question and as regards other ques-tions which are now agitated in Canada. Therefore with a view to putting an end to these much to be regretted dissensions, it will be necessary that the Bishops, together with his Lordship the Apostolic Delegate who has been sent to Canada, concert with each other to determine a uniform policy to be followed by all and each of them with regard to political parties. "Another cause of these same inconveniencies lies in their too great interference in political affairs, without enough of heed for pastoral prudence. The proper remedy for these eccess of zeal, is to remind these Bishops of that which has already been recommended to them by the prudence. The proper remedy for this excess of zeal, is to remind these Bishops of that which has already been recommended to them by this supreme congregation, on Wednesday the 29th of July, 1874, to the effet that, on the occasion of political elections, they should conform in their advice to electors to what had been enacted in the Provincial Conneil of 1868.

"It must be added that the Church, while condemning Liberalism, does not intend to strike each and every political party which might chance to be called Liberal, since the decisions of the Church only apply chance to be called Liberal, since the decisions of the Church only apply to errors which are cpposed to Catholic doctrine, and not to any specified political party whatever, and that consequently, whoever, without any other foundation, declares that one of the political parties of Canada, namely the party called the Reform party, a party heretofore strongly supported by some Bishops, is condemned by the Church, who-ever makes such a statement acts wrongfully. "Finally, as to what concerns the main subject of the doubts pro-pounded; in order to determine what measures should be taken as regards Catholics, who, by reason of a pretended undue interference of the clergy in political elections, appeal to the civil courts; it is impos-sible to lay down a general rule for the Bishops on this subject, and therefore it will be the duty of whoever is in charge to provide in each case, with respect to the consciences of persons making such appeals.

therefore it will be the duty of whoever is in charge to provide in each case, with respect to the consciences of persons making such appeals. Therefore let the Bishops take the necessary measures to guard the honour of the clergy, taking special care to prevent as much as possible clergymen from being obliged to appear before lay judges. "Lastly, Bishops must be exhorted to observe the greatest reserve with regard to political affairs, by reason, especially, of the danger there would be of provoking a violent war against the Church on the part of Protestants, who are already restless and irritated against the clergy under pretence of undue interference in political elections. "Besides, the clergy must be brought to always avoid naming per-sons from the pulpit, still much more so if it is to discredit them of the occasion of elections.

occasion of elections, and to never make the influence of the ecclesias-tical ministry subservient to private purposes, except when candidates might become antagonistic to the true interests of the Church.'

Now, Sir, that was followed up by the pastoral letter and circular which were issued after the arrival of the Delegate Apostolic, and after an understanding had been reached with him in 1877. The Pastoral Letter of 18,7, contains the following passages :-

"The gravity of the events which have taken place since the last "The gravity of the events which have taken place since the last General Election, and the numerous and various difficulties to which they have given occasion, make it our duty to remind you briefly, our most dear brethren, of the principles and the rules of policy which were ex-pounded to you before now, in our councils, our circulars, and our pas-torals, and particularly in that of the 22nd of September, 1875. "The ninth decree of the Fourth Council, held in 1868, expounds your data are electoric the following to ward the sector of the se dity as electors in the following terms:-"Let the pastors instruct with great care, the faithful on their duties in election times; let them strongly impress on their minds that the same law which confers on citizens the right of suffrage imposes on them at the same time the very serious obligation to give their votes when-ever it is necessary, and always to vote according to their consciences, under the eye of God, and for the best interests of religion and of their country; that consequently, the less interests of religion and of their country; that consequently, the electors are always bound in conscience, before God, to give their suffrages to whatever candidate they believe to be truly honest and able to fulfil well and faithfully the important duties which devolve upon him, to be ever attentive to the welfare of the Church and State, and to work faithfully to promote and guard the wel-fare of the Church and State."

Then, after pointing out what had been done in 1873 and 1875, and giving a warning against the doctrines Catholico-Libérales, the pastoral goes on to say:

"Unfortunately, and against our intention, some persons were inclined to see in this document an abandonment of principle to come down to persons and political parties. Our wish has been to expound to you the true doctrine on the constitution and the rights of the Church, on the rights and the duties of the clergy in society, on the obligations of the Catholic press, and on the sanctity of an oath; such has been our only aim, and such is still our intention. In this we have followed the example of the Holy See, who, in condemning Liberal Catholics, has refrained from naming persons and political parties. In fact, there does not exist any Pontificial act condemning any political party whatever ; from this venerable source are only applicable to Liberal Catholics and to their principles; and the brief addressed to one of us in September, to their principles; and the orier addressed to one of us in September, 1876, must be interpreted in that sense. Following the example of the Sovereign Pontiff, and in accordance with the wise prescription of oar Foarth Council, we leave to each one of you to judge, under the cye of God, which are the men to whom these condemnations apply, whatever may be the political party to which they belong."

Now, Sir, at the same time, as I have said, a circular letter was issued to the clergy, from which I will read an extract or two:

"In analyzing the Linth decree of the Fourth Council, and the eighteenth of the Fifth, we find that the clergy must confine themselves to instructing the people as to their duties in election time; which duties are the following: 1st. To give their votes when sufficient reasons call for it. 2nd. To vote according to their consciences, and under the eye of God, and to give their support to the candidates whom they may prudently judge to be truly honest and able to discharge the duties of a construction to the construction over and to procue a faitfully the representative—which are, to watch over and to procure faithfully the welfare of religion and of the state. 3rd. Not to sell their votrs. 4th. To avoid intemperance, slander and perjury."

Another passage reads thus :

"When you shall have so explained to your people the principles which ought to guide them in their choice, leave to the conscience of each of them the option of applying them to persons and to parties. And whenever a penitent shall tell you that he has voted in all conand put into practice the well-known axiom: 'The same belief must be given to what the penitent says on his own behalf as to what he says against himself.'"

Then again, Sir, the letter says:

"The decree of the Fourth Council forbils you to teach from the pulpit or otherwise, that it is a sin to vote for such and such a candidate, or for such and such a political party. With much more reason is it for-bidden to you to announce that you will refuse the sac: aments for that cause.

"Nover give your individual political opinion from the pulpit. "Nover give your individual political opinion from the pulpit. "Never attend any political meeting, and never make a public speech on such matters without the permission of your ordinary. "If you have a right to vote, you may avail yourself of it, but let it be with prudence and without ostentation. It is proper that you should choose the most favourable opportunity for voting, and not wait till the last moment, when the excitement is always greater, and that you should not remain near the place where the election is taking place. "To those who may come to consult you privately, answer with prudence, with calm, without entering into discussions which would be compromising to your character; for you know well that language the most innocent and the most true is exposed to be, at such times, mis-understood, misinterpreted and misreported. And even if you see that people are greatly excited, it will be prudent on your part to state simply that what you have said from the pulpit must be sufficient to guide them."

Well, Sir, these documents to which I have referred contain' I may say, some injunctions in which I think the pastors of the Roman Catholic Church set an admirable example to the pastors of the other churches; I mean particularly those observations against selling the suffrage, against bribery, against corruption, against intemperance, against calumny, and against perjury. Then we go further. I do not confine myself wholly to the statements made by these ecclesiastical dignitaries. About the same time, a discussion was raised in this Parliament, and I wish to show that the views which are reprehended by these documents are views which were not held by all the Roman Catholics even of the Conservative party, On the 11th February, I think, in the year 1877, Senator Masson, then a member of this House, used these expressions:

"Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman sives in his letter that the party with which I act was controlled by a power which declared that free thought was a cardinal sin. Well, Sir, I say that this is no more nor less than a slander on the Conservative party; and as a Conservative and an Ultramontane, as I am called by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, from the Province of Quebec, as the leader of the Ultramontanes, I say that the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec, and I speak advisedly, are ready to give to the clorgy of the Province, and religious questions, that submission and that confidence which, according to our creed, wa are obliged to give them: and regarding questions reto our creed, we are obliged to give them; and regarding questions re-lating to the material progress of the country, and the political affairs of the country, we are ready and shall always be ready to give to the opinions of these gentlemen that respect to which they are entitled, owing to their high intelligence, their great virtue and their disinterestedness; but we are not ready to give any more."

Well, the matter was not finally settled. Notwithstanding what had been said, the discussion went on. Still the question was raised, and raised in pretty influential quarters, on the part of the Conservative party in Quebec, with reference to the law as to undue influence; and I felt it my dutythinking the question might become a serious one, and desiring to place myself on record, and as I might by my voice in some degree influence my fellow countrymen-to speak upon the subject myself; and I did so at the village of Teeswater, in the year 1877. From that speech I may be permitted to quote:

"Another demand of a very different character has been made from very high quarters, namely, that we should alter the law as to undue influence. Now, the basis of our representative institutions is that our influence. elections shall be free. Each of us is called on to surrender his share of control over the common affairs to the majority, upon the ground that this surrender is necessary, for so only can we reach a decision; but also on the hypothesis, without which the demand would be quite unjust-fiable, that, all having a common interest, and each man speaking freely for himself, the view of the majority is more likely to be sound—is more for himself, the view of the majority is more likely to be sound—is more likely accurately to represent what would be beneficial to the community than the view of the minority. This is the ground-work. Now, that ground-work wholly fails if the vote be not the expression of the voter's own opinion, but the expression of somebody else's opinion differ-ent from his. If, instead of its being his opinion, it be the opinion of his employer, his landlord, his creditor, or his minister, why, it is not his voto at all, it is somebody else's, and we have not submitted oursely is to the four more of our follow neutromore but parsible to the ourselves to the free voice of our fellow countrymen, but possibly to the voice of a very small minority, who have determined what the voice of the larger number is to be. Thus the whole basis of our representative is stitutions would be destroyed if we permitted the opinions of our em-ployers, creditors, landlords, or ministers to be forcibly substituted for our own. For this reason, besides the penalties which are en-acted against the exercise of undue influence, we have declared that the vote of any man so unduly influenced shall be null and void, and that elections conside by such undue influence shall be null and void, I cannot, if a landlord, say to my tenant, 'Now, tenant, is hall the annulled. I cannot, if a landlord, say to my tenant, 'Now, tenant, i shall turn you out at the end of your term if you do not vote for my candidate.' Though I may have a legal right to turn him out at the end of the term, yet I cannot give the intimation that I will, on this ground, exercise this right. If I do, the vote is annulled as not free I cannot, if a creditor. say to my debtor, 'I will exact that debt at once if you do not vote as I wish,' though I may have a legal right to exact my debt. I cannot, if an employer, say to my employee, 'You shall leave my employment at the end of the current term unless you vote with me,' though the law may not oblige me to retain him in my service. It has been found necessary in all these cases to prevent the relations to which I have referred from in all these cases to prevent the relations to which I have referred from being made the means of unduly influencing the vote, in order that this great cardinal principle of our Constitution—the freedom of each man to vote according to his own opinion—may be preserved intact. True, the landlord, and the creditor, and the employer have each the right to speak and persuade by arguments; and the confidence placed in them may be such that the voter's opinion may be changed; but between the argument the prevention the confidence which may but between the argument, the persuasion, the confidence which may conduce to a change in the mind and opinion of the voter, and that coercion which compels him to vote contrary to his mind on the threat of some loss or penalty, there is a broad and palpable distinction, and that is the distinction which the law lays down. Now, if there be a form of religion under which the minister is composed to have the power by that is the distinction which the law lay down. Now, if there be a form of religion under which the minister is supposed to have the power, by granting or refusing certain rites, or by making certain declarations to affect the state of the voter after death, is it not perfectly obvious that the threat of such results to the voter unless he votes in accordance with the opinion of the minister, might be infiaitely more potent than any of the threat of such results to the voter unless he votes in accordance with the opinion of the minister, might be infaitely more potent than any of the other threats which I have named—the exaction of a debt, the ejec-tion of a tenant, or the discharge of an employee? And would not such a threat be objoations to just the same objection?" "I am far indeed from implying that politics should not be handled on Christian principles. Whatever difficulties and differences there may be as to Christian dogma, there is, fortunately, very little difference concerning Christian morals. We are, fortunately, all united in this country in the theoretical recognition—however far we may fail in the practical observance—of the great doctrines of Christian morality which are handed down to us in the Gospels; and I believe it is on the basis of those doctrines that the politics of the country should be carried on. Dim indeed would be our hopes, and dark our expectations for the future, if they did not embrace the coming of that glorions day when those principles shall be truly, fully and practically recognised—if we did not look forward to the fulfilment of promises that 'the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord;' and that 'nation shall not make war against nation, neither shall they learn war any more;' if we did not wath for the leasons of the Great Teacher and Exemplar. When intercogated upon secular things—when asked as to rendering tribute to Cæsar, He said, 'Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's.' He laid down the principle, and He left the people—the querists —to make the application. So again when He was called upon to settle a dispute between two brothers about an inheritance, He said: 'Man, who made Me a judge or divider over you? Such was the view He took as to the duty of a minister, as to the work of the pulpit; and while l Such was the view He took as could be a minister and the second of the new party is a such that the party of a minister such that the party of a graning and per-suading, and influencing if they please, my own opinion is that the pas-tor of a flock divided on politics will be much more likely to retain the fullest confidence of all the members of that flock, and so to discharge effectually his great task, if he abstains from active interference in those political affairs on which there is and will be great division of opinion among them. But, sir, it has been argued in some quarters that the free exercise of one form of religion amongst us is impaired by this law. That would indeed, if true, be a serious thing. But, if it were true, we would still be bound, in my opinion, to preserve the fundamental principle of the freedom of the elector. No man, any article of whose creed should make him a slave would be fit to control either his own destiny or that of free men. A slave himself, he would be but a proper instru-ment to make slaves of others. Such an article of religion would, in a word, be inconsistent with free institutions, because it would not permit that liberty of opinion in the individual, which is their very base do not hesitate to say that to all ministers I would freely accord the right ment to make slaves of others. Such an article of religion would, in a word, be inconsistent with free institutions, because it would not permit that liberty of opinion in the individual, which is their very base and corner stone. But we are not confronted with that diffiulty. The public and deliberate utterances of high dignitaries in more than one Province of Canada have shown that the assertion is unfounded, and have recognised the right of evvy elector to vote according to his conscience; and the recent statement—com-municated to the public through Lord Denbigh—of the head of that Church, shows that the United Kingdom, where the law as to undle in-fluence is precisely the same as ours, is perhaps the only country in Europe where the professors of that religion are free to practise it. If this be the case in the United Kingdom, it is so here, and it is not true that there is any form of religion, the free and full exercise of which is impaired by the preservation of the great principle to which I have re-ferred. I trust, then, that the ill-advised pretensions which have been set up will be abandoned; but should they be pressed, I take the oppor-tunity of declaring that for myself, whatever be the consequences, I shall stand by the principle which I have laid down and shall struggle to preserve—so far as my feeble powers permit—to each one of my fellow-countrymen, whatever his creed, the same full and ample measure of civil freedom which he now enjoys under those laws which enable him and me, though we may be of diverse faiths, to meet here on the same after more the other and the second se laws which enable him and me, though we may be of diverse faiths, to meet here on the same platform, and here to differ or agree according to our own political convictions, and not according to our religious faith or the dictation of any other men, lay or clerical."

Now, Sir, finally, in September, 1881, there was a further communication dealing with these two subjects to which I have referred, and from it I will trouble the House with a very brief extract. It is a communication from the Prefect of the Sacred Congregation, Cardinal Simeoni:

"It has come to the knowledge of the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda that in your Province certain members of the clergy and of the secular body continue to interfere too much in political electione, by using either the pulpit or newspapers and other publications. "It is equally known to the aforesaid Sacred Congregation that a certain suffragan of your Lordships now endeavours to appeal to Parliam-nt to cause the Electoral Law concerning the so-called undue influence amended.

"Now as regards the first point I hasten to remind your Lordship that as far back as the year 1876 the Supreme Congregation of the Holy Office issued the following instructions :---

And then follows the instruction I have already quoted. The communication proceeds as follows:-

"In conformity with this instruction, your Lordship must without delay make known to all your suffragans, to the clergy and to all those whom it may concern, that it is the intention of the Holy Father that all the aforesaid prescriptions of the Holy Office be strictly observed. "As regards the second point, your Lord hip must notify all the suf-fragans that each of the Prelates individually must refrain from agitating or causing to be agitated the question of the amendment of the law con-cerning the said undue influence. If there should come a time when the Bishops assembled should judge unanimously that the proper time had come to make the aforesaid demand they must first apply to this Sacred Congregation to receive from it their proper instructions " Congregation to receive from it their proper instructions."

And that, so far as I know, was the final sotiement of that controversy, so far as concerned the views of the highest authorities of the Church, repeated after an interval of years. During that controversy, on 20th January, in the year 1876, the Archbishop of Toronto addressed a public letter to my hon. friend the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), which, dealing as it does with this subject, may appropriatoly be read at this time. It is as follows :--

" TORONTO, 20th January, 1876.

"Hon. A. MACKENZIE, "Premier of the Dominion of Canada.

"HON AND DEAB SIR,-I think this an opportune time to inform you and your Government that priests in our Archdiocese are strictly for- in order to promote which they are now saying they wish to Mr. BLAKE, bidden to make the altar or pulpit of their churches the tribune of political harangues for or against any party or candidate for election; or to threaten any spiritual disability for voting with either party. "Priests may, of course, instruct their people on the conscientious obligation of voting for the candidate whom they judge will best pro-mote the interests of the country; of taking no bribes; and of con-ducting themselves at the elections in a loyal and peaceful manner; but they are not to asy to the member from the altar that ther are to write for they are not to say to the people, from the altar, that they are to vote for this candidate and reject the other.

this candidate and reject the other. "It would be very imprudent in a priest, whose congregation is com-posed of Liberals and Conservatives, to become a warm partizan of either political party. "It would neutralize his influence for good in too many instances, and a priest requires all he possesses to forward the interests of his whole congregation.

"It is true that a priest, in his ordination, does not renounce his rights of citizenship, nor does he receive authority to impose on his congregation his own particular views of politics. "The Catholic Church asks no special favour from any party. Her existence is independent of both. She asks only that her people be put under no unjust restraint or ban. It is true that the old legislation of Eegland made the Catholic religion a bar to political and almost social Ecgland made the Catholic religion a bar to political and almost social existence; and though wiser councils now prevail in Courts and Par-liaments, yet some of the Protestant populace, and an occasional states-man in his individual capacity, so long educated in the traditions of the past, retain a deep-rooted prejudice and suspicion not easily conquered, that the Catholic religion should be a bar to preferment, and that the Catholic Church is inimical to free institutions and unfavourable to State rights. This is still a reproduction of the old Pagan cry: 'The Christians to the beasts,' or the old Jewish accusation: 'We have found this man perverting our nation and forbidding to give tribute to found this man perverting our nation and forbidding to give tribute to found this man perverting our nation and forbidding to give tribute to Cmaar.' "The Catholic Church asks only liberty to do good, and to be untram-melled by unjust laws in the exercise of her divine rights. I might here remark, that when in a free country, religious and sacred rights are brought into the arena of politics, then the Catholics have to follow them to the polis and contend there for their right, as in the case of education. We believe that parents have a perfect right to educate their children as they please. 'Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it.' Hence, when the Catholics of Lower Canada conceded the right of separate education to the Protes-tant minority of Lower Canada, the Catholic minority of Upper Canada claimed the same right, but had to contend for this right at the elections; and thus religious questions are dragged out of their sphere. The Catholic does not permit his religion to hinder the progress of the country, or the peaceful exercise of a different religion to his neighbours. When his religious principles are safe, the Catholic, under the impres-When his religious principles are safe, the Catholic, under the impres-sion that party Government is a lesser evil, gives his support to that which he thinks will perform its duties for the greater good of the coun-try and the happiness of the people.

ill perio... iess of the people. "I am, Honourable Sir, "Your very obedient servant, "JOHN JOSEPH LYNCH, "Archbishop of Toronto."

As I have said, there was a long and bitter controversy in the Province of Quebec with some who strove to abuse the power of the church in the way to which I have referred. That long and bitter controversy was a controversy in which my friends, the Liberals of Lower Canada, were the oppressed party, the party which was being overborne in it, which was suffering from it, in the constituencies; and though they have received justice at last in the particular to which I have referred, it is useless to disguise the fact that so long a conflict, waged in that manner, and with these weapons, has had a permanent weakening effect. But I want to know where, in all that time, were the Orange Tory leaders of Ontario. I want to know whether they were helping in the cause which has thus been vindicated in the end. I want to know whether they were expressing and actively manifesting their sympathy with those who were struggling for the rights which have at length been accorded them. It is not so; it is known not to be so. It is true that many of the Protestants of Quebec came to the assistance of the Liberals of Quebec in that struggle, but the Orange Tory leaders of Ontario were unflinching in their support of and in their consort with the very members who were waging that controversy against the Quebec Liberals. Why? Because they were united in political bonds with those members; because they rejoiced in their success at the polls, although that success was achieved against those with whom they professed to be in sympathy. They were kept in place and power by means of that partnership; and therefore they were untrue to the principles which they professed, and be incorporated. I have declared my views on this subject, and I have nothing to recall in regard to them. have shown where I am to be found in case any conflict may arise in which any church, whether Roman Catholic or Episcopalian, or Presbyterian, or what you will, shall strive to encroach on what I believe to be the just domain of the State. I believe that if you commit to any church absolute power and control over faith and morals, and if, at the same time, you commit to that church absolute and unlimited power to determine what is comprised within faith and morals, you concede necessarily to that church absolute power altogether; and I believe, therefore, that it is quite necessary to consider that there may be a point at which we may be called on to consider what the tenets of the church in that particular point of view are. I have shown that the struggle was fought out within that church; that those rights on which the Liberals of Lower Canada insisted have been vindicated and the electors have a right to vote as free men. But should such a struggle recur, which God forbid; could I, judging from the past, hope for any assistance, could the Liberal party look with hope for any assistance from the Orange Tory leaders of Ontario? No; because we have not received it in the past, and whatever their views of these leaders they subordinated them altogether to party politics, which led them to rejoice in the triumphs of those who were perpetuating principles directly opposed to their own. There are some other reasons which lead me to think that this society in Ontario is not a beneficial one. Its leaders claim a monopoly, not merely of true Protestantism, but also of loyalty. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White), at Winnipeg, said :-

"One of his reasons was, that with three others, he had opposed the Costigan resolution, which was a direct insult to the Mother Country, and to every loyal citizen in the country, except party leaders on both sides and members who were pandering to the Catholic vote, and not one member of the Orange society said, 'well done.'"

Grand Master Bennett said :

"You are no doubt aware that a most singular combination was formed at the last Session to defeat the Bill. We had the astounding spectacle of Protestant Liberalism and Ultramontanism in alliance to defeat it: Liberalism, because of the loyalty of Orangemen, and Ultramontanism, because of the advanced Protestantism of the Orange order.'

There you have it, Sir, laid down as a rule, that Orangemen are so loyal, and their loyalty is so offensive to others, that the Orangemen must be put down by force. I maintain that that is an offensive statement, and that a secret society which devotes itself to the propagation of such opinions as these, as to the loyalty of others, is one which does not deserve favour or State recognition. There is another reason. These Ontario Orange leaders claim that their object is to advance Protestantism; and they claim to advance it, by assertions with reference to the Roman Catholic Church, which I believe to be baseless. And here again I do not propose to deal with assertions as to dogma. I do not propose to deal with assertions with respect to religion, as to whether certain views are right or wrong, for we have nothing to do with them. But we have to do with their views as to the tenets of that church, as they affect the political condition and social order of the country. Those things are of material interest to us, and it is well that we should know what is advanced in the name of Protestantism, or with a view of promoting it, by the leaders of the Orange society in Ontario. In the Scatinel of 21st December, 1882, there is the following, which is headed " Allegiance to Rome only ":

"We have always contended that the Romish Church teaches its followers to be disloyal to every State wherein it exists, to recognize the authority of no temporal Government, and to own allegiance only to the Papacy."

On April 26th, 1883, the same paper said :

"It is hardly necessary to say that every true member of the church must yield to the Pope, the infallible head of the church, unquestioning | are of an entirely different character; they go far beyond obedience in morals, dogmatic faith or belief, and also conduct and civil affairs.

"No member of the church can dispute the right of the head of it to decide infallibly and dogmatically all questions affecting temporal power in Governments, any more than he can that of the faith and be-lief.put forth in her teachings. "The people in America are governed by constitutions which leave to themselves the people in America are governed by constitutions which leave to themselves the power of determining the character and structure of Government. "These constitutions are, therefore, inimical to the Church of Rome, in her opinion, and are only tolerated because they cannot be dostroyed. As she is at war with every form of Government not prescribed by herself, it would be her duty to destroy these constitutions, if she could ; nay she would be guilty, under her teachings, if she had the power, and did

"Is it not a humiliation that in a country like this, a loyal associ-ation has been refused the same privileges that are daily granted to those who proclaim the prerogative of a foreign Prince Bishop to be superior to those of Her Majesty and Her Government, privileges daily granted to those whose civil allegiance is firstly to the Pope and secondly wherever he might direct it though that should lead to the granted to those whose civit allegistice is instry to the Pope and secondly wherever he might direct it, though that should lead to the destruction of the dignities and prerogatives of the Imperial Urown, now largely directed by the responsible Ministers of the Government, who hold effice at the will of the people."

Again, in the Sentinel of the 8th of November, 1883, the following languago is used :-

"It is necessary to keep constantly before the mind of the Orange and Protestant public of the Dominion that Rome is still true to her motto, semper eadem. "She is the same to-day that she was a hundred years ago, planning, scheming, and contriving to subvert the best liberties and freest institu-tions of every State in christendom."

These are the statements repeated over and over again as to the political attitude of the Church of Rome, and all true Protestants are called upon to occupy an inimical position towards members of that church on the ground, first of all, that the adherents of that church do not owe civil allegiance to the Queen of this Dominion and the Constitution of this country; second, that they owe civil allegiance to a foreign power; and third, that that power is inimical to free institutions, and that its efforts are directed to subvert them as far as possible. That is the attitude with respect to the Church of Rome and its adherents in Canada to-day. Again, so late as the 19th February, 1884, at a meeting of the Grand Lodge of Ontario West, the Grand Masterwhile this Parliament was in Session, while this Bill was on the Order Paper-referred to the unfortunate affair in Newtoundland, said :

"Brethren, it is the old story. It has been told in Ireland a thousand times. It has been told in Fort Garry, Montreal and Newfoundland, and shows to us as plainly as the sun at noonday that when Romanism has the ascendarcy Protestants have no rights and are only tolerated, and that the teachings of Rome are the same to-lay as they were in '93-that to break faith with heretics is no sin, and that killing is no murder."

Then, Sir, in the same speech, he quotes approvingly from a weekly journal these words:

"It (i.e., the Orange body in Ireland) is acting strictly in selfdefense, for everybody who has read Irish history, or who listens to Fenian harangues, must know that from the moment when power passed into the hands of Irish Catholics no man of British blood or Protestant religion would ever dwell in safety on the soil of Ireland."

Commenting on that statement he says :-

"This statement, coming from a gentleman who on more than one occasion has spoken in no friendly terms concerning our order, shows that the thinking Protestants of this country are becoming alive to the necessity of having a Protestant secret society to counteract the influ-ence of the gigantic secret society of Romanism."

Now those are statements with which we have to deal today. If those views be correct, if those be correct statements of the tenets of that church, then it does not merely hold erroneous views in matters of dogma. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) and myself, do not agree in our religious views, and unfortunately we do not agree in politics, but our difference in religion does not make the difference in our political allegiance. Our differences in religion are questions between us and our consciences, between us and our God, to be disposed of individually by each of us. But then other views, which I have just now read.

divergencies of religions opinion. We have here a statement of views hostile to the Throne, hostile to free institutions hostile to our Constitution, hostile to social order and safety-views which are destructive to everything which we, in Canada-and I do not put the Catholic below the Protestant-which we, as a united people in Canada hold most dear. I say that if you tell me truly that in civil matters the adhe rents of the Roman Catholic faith do not owe allegiance to the Crown and the Constitution, but owe it to a foreign power, then they are not true subjects to the Queen, and they are aliens in the middle of the land. If this be so, I say that you cannot trust them. I agree with those gentlemen who sometimes, as was mentioned this evening, say harsh things uatil "they grant absolution before the elections"-I agree with them that if these are the tenets tenets of that church, I can well understand their hostility, from political point of view, to the Roman Čatholic я religion. If they believe that that church is hostile to, and desires the subversion of our free institutions, of our Constitution, I can understand their hostility going far beyond dogmatic difference of religion; I can understand that the whole institution is one with reference to which no alliance is to be kept. If it is their opinion, and if it be the case, that a Roman Catholic believes that no faith need be kept with a heretic, that the killing of a heretic is no murder, then social order and safety are at risk and we cannot possibly remain at ease if such doctrines as these are true. All those who honestly believe these opinions to be true of the Roman Catholic faith or of the adherents of that faith, could not possibly, if they are lovers of our Constitution and our institutions, honestly co-operate with it in politics. It is impossible, Sir, that an honost belief in these things, as the actual tenets of that church, could consist with political co-operation on the part of those who so believe, with Roman Catholics.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Do you believe what the Liberals in Lower Canada believe?

Mr. BLAKE. Order. On the other hand, all lovers of free institutions should combine against the evil which would be wrought, the pressing evil and danger to our institutions which would exist, it such indeed were the tenets held by such a large proportion of the citizens of this country. The question, then, is a serious one. We have it here; we have had it within the last few months; we have it stated as a doctrine of to-day, and the hon. gentleman nods assent to it, as the feeling an Orangeman holds with reference to his Roman Catholic fellow citizens. But are these statements true? Sir, I believe them to be untrue. I believe that the Church of Rome holds many religious doctrines and dogmas most gravely erroneous; to these I am entirely opposed.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). You believe too much; that is the trouble.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, perhaps I believe too much. I will not say that the hon. gentleman believes all he says; I hope he does. I have endeavoured, in my own poor way, and to the best of my humble ability, to promote the spread of those Protestant principles of dogmatic religion, those views of the Gospel and of the Bible, in which I agree. I am doing what I can in that direction, and have been for ycars; it is not much, but I have done what I could. I believe that a most potent fact in that direction is a greater union among the Protestant denominations; and I have always been desirous of seeing such a union acomplished for the better advancement of the Gospel, according to our views of it. I rejoice to see the evidence of a tendency towards that union, in the existence of those organizations in which ministers and people of various donominations mingle, forget their differences, and learn what is best in each other, and in what points they agree. I rejoice to see Evangelical Alliances, ciations, such as the one that exists in my own city. I have worked with Orangemen in the Synod of my Church and elsewhere; they have sympathized with me and I have sympathized with them; I cared not for our differences in politics; they have never made the shake of our hands less warm, or our co-operation in the work of our church less earnest; and it pains me that hon. gentlemen opposite should seek an occasion of this kind to raise a wall of division, even among those engaged together in church work, by uttering and circulating these calumnies against me, and by declaring that my Protestant principles are abandoned because I cannot, in my conscience, support a Bill for the incorporation of a society which propagates opinions like those. I know that I shall be misrepresented and misunderstood, and that men will be misled, in my Province and elsewhere, as to what I have said to-night. I cannot help it ; I felt it borne in upon me as a duty to say it: I had to say it. I say that men will be misled by designing politicians, who are using the cloak of religion and the cloak of charity to promote party politics. If we could forget our differences and agree to mingle in all charitable works, irrespective of our faith-as, God be thanked, although we differ in religion, we may agree in works of charity-it would be a blessed achievement. But to day what are you doing? You are promoting these calumnies in reference to another church; you are coming forward and de-claring untruly, as I believe, that the tenets of that church, from which you differ are in these respects detestable, and that every true Protestant must take the same position. It is a course of which I hops you will repent before you are many years older. Now, I am anxious for a Protestant ascendancy of one kind-for the spread of those opinions which I believe to be true but I am anxious that there should be no Protestant ascendancy of the material kind to which the leaders of the Orange Tory party refer, when they speak of that Protestant ascendancy, which existed in the past in Ireland, and to which they look backward with such longing eyes. I am not anxious for that kind of Protestant ascendency; and in my desire to promote my dogmatic faith, I do not countenance such weapons as the hon. gentleman and other Orange leaders use. My belief is that my Catholic fellow subjects do acknowledge allegiance to, and feel a loyalty to the Crown and the free institutions of this country. My belief is that they do not think that to break faith with a heretic is no sin, and to kill him no murder. I have not forgotten the declaration made against such calumnies as these by the Irish prelates, as long ago as the 25th of January, 1826, in a document which contains many statements of faith and doctrine, as to which Protestants and Roman Catholics are as wide as the poles asunder. But it contains two statements which touch our social and political system, and our relations to each other as citizens of one common country, as follows :-

Mr. BLAKE.

"The Irish Catholics swear, that the Catholics of Ireland do not believe that the Pope of Rome, or any other foreign prince, prelate, state or potentate, hath, or ought to have, any temporal or civil jurisdiction, power, superiority or pre-sminence, directly or indirectly, within this realm : and this without any mental reservation or dispensation."

The prelates go on to say :

"After this f.il, explicit and sworn declaration, we are utterly at a loss to conceive on what possible ground we could be justly charged with bearing towards our most Gracious Sovereign only a divided allegiance."

And with reference to the other insulting charge, they say this :

"The Catholics of Ireland not only do not believe, but they declare on oath, that they detest as unchristian and impions the belief that it is lawful to murder or destroy any person or persons whatever under the pretense of their being heretics; and also, the principle that no faith is to be kept with heretics."

differences, and learn what is best in each other, and in what There you find distinct statements which contradict allegapoints they agree. I rejoice to see Evangelical Allianees, Young Men's Christian Associations, and Ministerial Assoought not therefore to have been necessity for contradict ing; and yet, Sir, we find not ten years ago, not five years ago, not one year ago, but within the past few days, the most offensive of these allegations repeated, which I have shown would be subversive of the free institutions of our country, if true. Now, I am not prepared to mark as murderous, as treacherous and disloyal, nearly one-half of my fellow citizens. I do not believe the cause of Protestantism, of true religion, the advancement of the Gospel, the peace and prosperity, the welfare and the good Government of this Dominion, will be promoted by State recognition of this secret society, organized and led as it is, in Ontario, and devoted to the propagation of views such as those which I have exposed. I do not myself attach, in the discordant dissolution of parties with respect to this Bill, any particular significance to the question. I have viewed it from another aspect altogether; I have been anxious that we should understand what the real merits of the controversy are; and in my statement of what my objections are, I have endeavoured to sustain them, not by stale and musty authorities, but by recent and authentic utterances. But, perhaps, I am wrong; I dare say that I shall be more bitterly misrepresented than ever before by the Orange Tory leaders; and as to the Tory Roman Catholic leaders, they, too, the temporary struggle between them and their Orange allies being ended, and the alliance revived, will regard me all the more distastefully, because I have necessarily shown either how sham their battle is or how false and unnatural is their conjunction. But I have this satisfaction, that I have told plainly the truth as I believe it; and it will be an ample reward to me, if I have succeeded in explaining to moderate men on both sides the views I hold, and in pointing out what the true path of duty is in a community of divers races and creeds like ours; where we must combine firmness in the assertion of our own rights with fullness in the recognition of the rights of others; we must cultivate moderation and forbearance; we must avoid misrepresentation, calumny and abuse; we must hold to the ample acknowledgment of each man's individual rights of conscience in religious matters, and of the common citizenship of all in civil matters, if we would make of Canada a great and free country, inhabited by a happy and united people.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I wish to say a few words on this question before the vote is taken. I do not intend following the long and elaborate speech of the learned and hon. gentleman from West Durham, nor that of the hon. member for West Huron; but I intend simply to give my vote as I did last year, in favour of this Bill. I regret that there has been imported into this question a lamentable bitterness and a departure from the regular rules of debate, by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, after inveighing against this measure and other subjects in so elaborate a form. Last Session he had not a word to say, and I will not say that since then the mountain has laboured and brought forth a mouse.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh !

Mr. WOODWORTH. I do not wish to be interrupted, nor will I be interrupted. We listened with great attention to the leader of hon. gentlemen opposite, while enunciating his doctrines and making statements which we knew were not correct; and it is unfair and unmanly for some of the gentlemen into whose eyes I am now looking, to do that which we forbore from doing. They have not had a ludicrous mouse but an elaborate speech, which one would think the hon. gentleman had passed the recess in making up. If you, Mr. Speaker, had drawn the rules of debate according to the practice laid down in May, the hon. gentleman could not have delivered onc-half his speech, because page after page was turned over and over while he read his speech from the notes and documents he had tefore him, and no doubt he imagines that it will go down to posterity as a great production of his mind. If the hon. gentleman were of the opinion last Session which he now holds, he did himself then an injustice and this House an injury in forbearing to give expression to his opinion. While the first hour or two of the hon. gontleman's speech was delivered in a statesmanlike form, from a statesmanlike standpoint, the last few hours were not so elevated in tonc. The first hour or two he inveighed against secret societies from a statesmanlike standpoint, not only the Orange but the Masonic and all other secret bodies; he then proceeded to tell us they were the fruitful mother of bitterness, misrepresentation and malignity. Well, if his speech on this point should be read by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who happens to be Grand Master of the Masonic body in England, I question whether it would give the hon. gentleman, the leader of Hor Majesty's Loyal Opposition, an enviable place in His Royal Highness' estimation. I, as a Mason, deny the imputation cast upon the Masonic body: and deny the imputation cast upon the masched cord, and I tell the hon, gentleman he covered himself cunningly, as he generally does in his remarks, when he stated he did not know whereof he was speaking. He did not he said, belong to any secret society. How then not, he said, belong to any secret society. How then dare he in the presence of this Parliament, declare that the society which has for its foundation every Christian precept which the hon. gentleman elaborated and arrogated to himself, is not as high, from every moral point of view, as the precepts which the hon. gentleman holds sacred and dear? While telling us he was engaged in a Christian work, the hon. gentleman violated all the precepts that St. Paul taught. Did he not remember that one of the doctrines that St. Paul taught was that charity was not puffed up, that charity was kind and suffered long, and that while he talked religion for halt an hour he violated every precept that St. Paul ever wrote or taught? I would have been proud of the hon. gentleman, had be sustained his speech in the manner he opened it. I could not find fault with his opinions then if he himself entertained them, but when he came to inveigh against all secret societies, and use the uncharitable language he did with regard to a society which enjoys the highest repute all over the land, where the British language is spoken, aye, and where it is not spoken; for masonic societies have their influence in those countries too, and their leaders are quite as honourable as the hon. gentleman. Had he confined himself in his remarks, in a constitutional way, to the fact that the Bill should be relegated back to the Province that wanted it, that New Brunswick, Manitoba and Nova Scotia had it, but that Ontario had it not, no fault could be found; but he departed from the argument and attempted to make statements here which are undoubtedly false. The hon. member stated that he was against this Protestant cry, this Protestant ascendancy, and he took under his wing the Catholics of the Dominion of Canada. He has made another bid for their vote, as he did on the famous Costigan Resolution, and he did it in that manner which did him justice as a lawyer pleading at the bar, who took every possible view of the case, no matter how inconsistent one proposition was with another. He made a direct bid for the Catholic vote of this country. He made it as a gentleman who in all times had been against Protestant ascendancy, as one who did not believe the Catholics deserved the names attributed to them by certain Orangemen here and certain Orangemen there; and what did he do? He attempted to connect-and the argument was subtle but manifestly clear, that he intended to connect--the Orange body as a partisan institution with the right hon. the leader of the Government in this country. He intended to make him the father of all the sins of omission and commission of any Orangeman who, at any meeting, when a little excited, possibly, and excited unduly, perhaps, but still honestly excited, had let fall a loose expres-

the whole Orange body, and then at one fell swoop he says: "Behold your gods; John A. Macdonald, these are your friends; they are hating the Catholics and calling them everything that is evil in the world." The loyal Orange institution of Ontario, the Orangemen of Canada, have not, as a body, ever violated the decencies of private life, of public life, or of Christian life. We find the Minister of Inland Revenue standing side by side on the same platform with an Orangeman, voting with him, working with him, and appealing to the people to elect him. We find Orange-men standing on the same platform with a Roman Catholic, and appealing to the electors to elect him. Does this appear as if there was a wide separation here, and they were calling one another names? He knows, as a logician, that he cannot take these particular cases and make them general, and bring in the whole Orange body in that way. Did he not think he was bringing spirits up from the past which were hard to be allayed? Did he not remember the past? I think he did. Immediately he said, "I am not speaking of the past, I am not speaking of utterances of the past, I am speaking of them to-day." Well, if I can point not to a particular case of a Reformer, if I can point not to a particular instance where a Reform convention, not to a particular instance where a county convention had met together and called the Catholics of this country every opprobrious epithet which could be hurled at their heads, but if I could point to him where the whole Reform party, under the lash of the Globe newspaper, who whipped them into live as effectively as ever the knowt of the Russian whipped the Russian serf into line, if I point to that Globe newspaper which, with malice aforethought, not in the heat of debate, not as a gentleman might do before an audience, heated by debate, let fall a loose expression for which he might be sorry, but in the sanctum of the editor, in his room, deliberately laying down the platform which he, the hon. member from West Durham, as a member of the party, subscribed to and carried on his banners, and worked under that policy and on the platform, if I can point to that, what will be thought of the temerity of the hon. member himself and the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), who came into this House to night, and, instead of discussing this question in a calm and proper way, attempted to catch the Irish vote of the Dominion by taking up these isolated cases where Orangemen at some time had said something under great excitement against their Catholic brethron. He should remember what the Globe newspaper said at that time, and I will read him an extract. He asked my hon. friend from East Hastings whether ho was amused, while he read his extract, and he was cheered to the echo. He said, "Are you amused now?" And I nover heard people so pleased as they were to hear these printed words read by the hon. gentleman to the House. I ask how amused they will feel when they hear language like this which I am about to read, used towards the Catholics of this country by these gentlemen, and I charge home to the hon. member for West Durham as much of a participation in this as if the articles had been written by himself, because he acted under them, and utilized them, and never repudiated them. Never by voice or pen did he utter one word against the statements here made, but to-day he finds it convenient to get his friend from West Huron up, while he himself was out attending to a meeting somewhere, to read extracts to inflame the public mind, so that he might have time to get back to the House and read a five hours' speech, which he had been preparing for six months. I did not intend to say one word on this question, until I heard the member for West Huron get up and speak, but the trick was so apparent-

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The trick was so apparent---Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. Woopworth.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am not saying the trick, as applied to him. I say the trick. I make it a personal question. I personify the words and call it "the trick," and put them in quotation marks. I do not believe any member of this House is less frequently out of order than myself. I always take care of my language, and I intend to comport myself according to the rules of the House, and I am doing so now.

"Doubtless every intelligent man is aware----''

This is from the Globe.

" That, as far as an Irish priest is concerned, he is loyal to no one but , the Pope, and to no place but Rome."

What did he, the hon. member from West Durham, tell us here, with almost the last breath that he uttered? He told us that, if you could point to where a Catholic owed allegiance to a foreign potentate, he was no true subject of the Crown. He told you that, but he subscribed to these articles of faith, I am now reading from the Globe, and he has never repudiated them :

"Loyal! The thing is a joke. An Irish priest is not, and cannot be loyal to our Queen, our Empire, or our people. He had no part or lot with us."

Mr. DAVIES. What is the date?

Mr. WOODWORTH. Never mind the date. The han, member from Prince Elward Island is fond of dates 1 do not care a fig for the dates he generally gives the Hause.

Mr. DAVIES. Are you ashamed of the date?

Mr. WOODWORTII. Would you keep that little man quiet, please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WOODWORTH. That young gentleman with the infantile baby face, who looks as though he ought to be in a cradle instead of in the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will confine himself to the debate, without making any personal allusions.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I ask the Speaker if he will keep the gentleman from Prince Edward Island in his seat. If he will attend to that, he need not attend very much to my remarks.

"He is an alien, though born within the bounds, and his oath of fealty is the kiss of Judas. He lives to serve Rome and to crush Protestantism. The ignorance and degradation of the priests form the gloomier aspect of the picture. Springing from the lowest class of poverty, they are notorionsly illiterate and immoral. So deeply rooted has this notion of their debasement become in the popular mind that, when a boy is unruly, and his parents have failed in persuading him to learn some honest trade, they frequently consider the church their last and only resource. This idea is embodied in a current proverb, which may be rendered in English to the couplet :

> " ' Vicious and ignorant, gluttonous beast, Nothing remains but to make him a priest."

"One would think that one of the six (nuns) who accompanied him (Mr. Mackenzie) through the building (the convent of the Grey Nuns, Quebec), must have been ogling him, old as he is, and warming up his fancy to the boiling point. We venture to say that there is not in the Quebec nunnery anyone who has sufficient charms to enchant him, and if there is, she would be kept out of sight for fear that a bright glance from a pair of grey male blinkers might induce her to seek in the world that happiness which very few can find in a eloister. Why does Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie write thus just now? The reason is evident; the little gentleman fell asleep the other day in Parliament, and woke up to vote for the Ecclesiastical Incorporation Bill; he is now defending that vote by praising the institutions which it might have helped to perpetuate.

ing that vote by praising the institutions which it might have neipeu to perpetuate. "In Ireland, during the last half a dozen years, Popery has been meeting the moral and spiritual efforts of the missionaries of Gospel truth by physical force, in the shape of riots, turmoil, instigated in the secret chambers of the mass house. Every other week is Father Cahill parading some act of disturbance connected with the proceedings of the 'soupers,' as a proof that the Milesian reformatory movement tends to the disorganization of the Commonwealth. At the same time, the record of the Hibernian police tribunal furnish abundant evidence that, in nine cases out of ten, these disturbances have been originated by certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, stimulated and hounded on by the priesthood, whose craft was in danger."

And again :

And again: "Libsrty and Popery are incompatible, and freedom is a disgusting attribute, predicable only of Presbyterianism and the Conventicle. "The Catholic is rightly aware that mendacity assumes the stages of a cardinal virtue, when employed to advance the interests of 'mother church' and that what is black as soot to day, may be white as snow to morrow, if moistened with a syringe full of holy water. "Romanism is the most contemptible and emasculated sham which this empirical age witnesses. When a stranger enters the shop of a Catholic, the primary question must be—have yet a line from the blessed Father Fitzbenry, or thrice blessed Father Bruyers? If not, sorrow a farthing's worth of goods will ye get here, at all, at all? "The man may be in the last degree immoral, and do and say every thing that is vile, without being taken to task by these impious priests; but let him endeavour to live like a christian, and seek to enlighten his neighbors and down will come these bloodhounds of Rome upon him.

roads, no progress "-

Mr. CASGRAIN. What date?

Mr. WOODWORTH. Catholics are the same in all ages. They do not change their dogmas of faith. the time this was written, the man who deliberately wrote these words was the leader of their party, and was acknowledged by the whole party. Have they come to night to repudiate it when they find an Orange Bill here, and a Catholic vote to obtain, if possible, at the elections? I will read you something more:

"Let us take care, gentlemen, never to have our morality destroyed for the sake of physical good. (Cheers.) I object on this ground to having a low class of Irish Roman Catholics imported from the United States into this country. I object to it for several reasons. I object to it, because wherever these people predominate, there the peace, the happiness, and comfort of the community is destroyed. (Oheers.) I object to it because they sow feuds, and dissensious, and strifes, whereobject to it because they sow feuds, and dissensions, and strifes, where ever they are. I object to it, because they have no mind of their own. (Loud cheers.) Their body, their soul, their intellect, are in the hands of a bigoted prisethood. (Loud cheers.) The mind has a wonderful in-fluence on the body, and what is the effect of the Popish system on themselves? They cannot look you straight in the face. The system has injured the body, it has injured the mind, it has injured the tempers, it has injured the passions. You can scarcely find a noble, benevolent, open-countenanced man who is a sincere Roman Catholic. (Cheers.) There are two classes of Romanists: the one is an elucated class, men of intelligence; they are the few, and they make tools of the many to carry out the purposes of the priests. (Cheers.) There are three classes of Protestants, gentlemen. There is the Protestant who, like Gallio, cares for none of those things. He holds his hands, and lets religion and the world take their course. There is another class of Protestants, and in them I find a very important reason why I objected to the two Roman Catholics coming from the United States. These Protestants are in-dividuals, who, to bolster themselves up, and to better their trade, will dividuals, who, to bolster themselves up, and to better their trade, will pander to those Roman Catholics. (Cheers.) They are such Protes-tants as will introduce a Bill into Parliament to incorporate Romish intants as will introduce a Bill into Parliament to incorporate Romish in-stitutions—(Cheers)—who declare by their conduct that the Roman Catholic numeries are an advantage; who declare by their conduct that it is right and wise, and good, to encourage Popish colleges for the dissemination of Popish principles throughout the country. (A voice: Shame on them.) The Scotch came here with their honesty, their in-dustry, their religion, their handicraft, their bibles, their love of primer, the school master, the catechism, the Sabbath, the sanctuary, the min-istry to bless us. With rare exceptions, they do well for themselves and for the country. The Englishman comes, but less under religious influ-ence, but, on the whole, to do us good. The Irish Protestant comes here with his joyousness, versatility, frugality, and social habits, on the whole, to do us evil. (Hear, hear.) Their bishops and priests are politicians, and these enlist under their banner. Their numbers increase the arrogance of their priests, and form an element of political strife. the arrogance of their priests, and form an element of political strife. They increase taxation for the por. They render necessary a strong police force. They are the keepers of our low tippling houses, they are our chief rioters. They build our Papal churches, and were it not for them our poor-houses, jails, "penitentiaries and Magdalen asylums would be far less necessary, and frequently empty. (Hear, bear.) To be sure they have their uses. They are our servants, they build our range and raisers their uses. They are our servants, they build our They are excitable and riotous, when set on by the priests; insolent, in a moral point of view, they are, in every respect, an injury to us. They are excitable and riotous, when set on by the priests; insolent, and to say the truth, they are regarded as a nuisance, and are frequent-ly so treated. When creating riots, they are often shot down like wild beasts " beaats."

And so on, and so on, and so on. Mr. Speaker, I could keep this House quite as long as the hon. member for West Durham did in reading extracts from the same source, the Globe.

It is true I have none of my old speeches here to read by the hour, as he read his. After travelling over every possible subject that he thought would excite religious prejudice, and having tried to set class against class, and creed against creed, and brother against brother-after doing all this, it was a little too much-but I am blessed if he didn't go to repeating himself! He read an old speech that he made at some place called Teeswater :

> "Wild words wander here and there; God's great gift of speech abus?, Makes thy memory confused, But let him rave !!

He was cortainly abusing the gift of speech with a vengeance. One hour, I venture to say, would have sufficed to give all the pith and point that he wanted to give it; but he gave us hour after hour, and himself into the bargain. And I thought of the fable of Narcissus, who looked into the Castalian spring, and seeing his image reflected in the water, was so enchanted with the sight that he died with admiration of himself. The hon. gentleman saw the image of himself, and no doubt was highly pleased. Then he read us a missionary homily on virtue, on forbearance, on charity, and I thought my cup was full. I thought the hon. member had come out in a new role. He had shown us how very virtuous he could be. After repeating the most malignant words he could find about the Masons and the socret societies of this country, I did think that he would have spared us the infliction of a moral at the close; but, Sir, he did not. He gave us one hour of morals, and told us how he had been practising them all his life, though he forgot them here to night. He gave us one instance of why he hated the Orangemen. I thought that he did not do himselt justice also in this respect. He said that the Orangemen, or some other secret society, had charged his father with shooting down a Col. Moody, who was a Roman Catholic. He considered it to be a crime to be called a Roman Catholic; and certainly it was a crime to charge a man with shooting another, if it were done with malice and not in self-defence. He has shown that he has a personal feeling against Orangemen. The hon. gentleman storted out in a lofty tone, which I hoped he would continue, but he stopped suddenly and proceeded to show what Orangeman had said about Catholics, and sought to array the member for Montreal Centre against the hon. momber for East Hastings; the Minister of Inland Revenue against the hon. member for Victoria, and Protestant against Catholic, by this inflammatory speech. I am sure he has not done the cause of peace and quietude in this Dominion very much good. I am sure he will find that this speech, in the delivery of which he has turned over ream after ream of foolscap, and which he has determined shall be spread throughout the land, at the public expense, has not accomplished the object he intended; that is, to bring to his aid the Catholic vote of this Dominion. I am sure that in delivering this speech he did not intend that we should any longer live in harmony and peace, but rather as cats and dogs, as he said we are doing at present. I have prepared no speech; I did not intend to speak this evening; but I could not, as a member of a secret order, an order, every principle of which I cherish and hold dear, listen to its members being inveighed against by the hon. member, and at the same time listen to his admission that he knew nothing about the subject, without offering a reply; but as we all know, he invented this speech out of political necessity, and its delivery was uncalled for.

Mr. BLAKE, I repudiate entirely that the language I used to night had any reference whatever to the Masonic order.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I am confident this honourable House, though it is after midnight, will bear with me while I offer a few remarks. Let me say, I have no desire to speak on the subject, and it was understood with the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill that if no speech was made in opposition to the measure, no friend of the Bill should make any remark. But I did not think, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, from the length of time I have been associated with the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) as a member of the House, that he would over have devoted so much time to myself as he has done to-night. I am pleased; because when members of that party read the speech of the hon. gentleman, they will read also the remarks made by the member for East Hastings, and I am bound to say that they will not consider them the worst portion of the hon. gentleman's speech. To night the hon. gentleman was a preacher, a statesman, a warrior-he occupied all those positions. He sought strenuously to set class against class. I defy that hon. gentleman to say that since I have been a member of this House, I have ever uttered ungentlemanly words against any hon. member, no matter what his political or religious opinions. But I should like to look back and advert to some of the hon. gentleman's own acts, when he occupied a prominent position in the Government of the country. It is a well-known fact that during the rebellion in the North West, an unfortunate man lost his life. He took the blood of that unfortunate man and sprinkled it on the door of every church and school-house opportunity of hurling his remarks back in his face whenthroughout the land, and when he got into power he offered a reward of $5,000 for the capture of the murderer. It was through the death of Thomas Scott that the hon. gentleman got into power in Ontario. He will not deny it. He offered, as I have said, $5,000 for the capture of the murderer; and after he got him, what did the hon. gentleman do? He let Riel and Lepine go free; but when the Minister of Inland Revenue and myself, in our humble way, endeavoured to place poor unfortunate O'Donohue, the hon. gentleman's own fellow countryman, in the same position as Riel had been placed, what did the hon. gentleman do? He denied him the same right and privilege and branded him and punished him, the hon. gentleman then being Minister of Justice. He cannot deny it. The hon. gentleman's speech, I say, was unmanly, uncalled for and unnecessary, under the circumstances, because the men who are seeking incorporation are honest, true, loyal, noble, conscientious and good men, quite as good men as he is an quite as good Christians. There is not one of them who would attack the hon. gentleman as he has attacked them, or say of him what he has said of them. But they have gone forward heretofore without his support, co-operation and assistance. The Orange society will prosper after he is dead. I have my was over, he gave it to the boy from Hansard room, serious doubts that the hon. gentleman will have to change and I say it is a good thing that they have a good his mind and become more christian-like if he hopes to reach the happy land where there is no envy, hatred and malice. That is enough in reply to the hon. gentleman. He knows my opinion of him. We, as Orangemen, could appeal to the ballot box, but we will, as far as possible, forget and forgive. I will never, however, forgive the hon. member for West Durham. I will fight the question out with him on this line, and although he is the Hou. Edward Blake and I an humble uneducated John White, he will find he will meet me at other places where he will see that I will rally as many and as true friends as he can do. Orangemen have received an insult to night; the hon. gentleman has endeavoured to trample on them and crush them; he has used a word of three letters, but I will not use it. I trust and believe the Orangemen will live to keep the hon. gentleman in his present position, though he is willing to do anything, to bow and stoop to any position, if he can get on this side of the House. Yes, he would appeal to Irish Roman Catholics, to Protestants, to the sentiment of liberality; but when he gets the chance, he will brand the brow of every unfortunate Conservative Orangeman and drive him out of the country, while he will elevate French-men to positions of influence. He was willing to save the as to read his Teeswater speech, but he did not man who committed the murder of Thomas Scott, but he read the poetry. He spoke of heaven and God, and Mr. WHITE (Hastings).

was not willing to save an unfortunate fellow-countryman. Yet the hon. gentleman comes here and preaches-preaches the Gospel, protesting by the heaven above, the earth beneath, and the waters under the earth, that he is a Christian. Well,Sir, he goes to the councils of his church, and he there holds himself up as a great churchman, and says that there are no Protestants in the Church of England but the men who follow him. He made his great speech previous to the last election on the resolutions of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and we had copies of that speech in East Hastings by the cart load ; but, though there is not a man in the House of Commons to day who has more Roman Catholic votes in his division than I have, his cart loads of speeches on the Costigan resolutions did not keep me out of the House of Commons, and his speech to night will not keep many hon. members out of the House. There is such a thing as over-stepping the mark, and he has done it to-night, because he has got the Masonic society, and the Oddfellows and other good secret societies against him, and the line he took will not be forgotten. We must forgive, we are bound to try and be charitable, but we will not forget; and I for one will never lose any ever I can. I ask the House and the country that if they imagine there is in the whole world a crowned head or a public building which they are afraid a member of the Orange society will injure or ruin. Is there a single being alive to-day who believes that an Orangeman would do him harm, would throw down his fence or ruin his house? No, Sir, not one; and no man knows that better than the hon member for West Durham, who will not soon be forgotten by this side of the House. I made a remark in Hamilton about the hon. gentleman who leads the Government, and I am proud that I did make it. 1 said that the hon. gentleman was anxious that this Bill should carry, because if carried it would give the community what it required for its peace, happiness and prosperity. The reason the right hon, gentleman at the head of the Government has governed this country for thirty years is, that he was never found trying to put class against class, but has always endeavoured to create among them a feeling of kindly tolerance. You do not find him saying or writing anything against the unfortunate country I came from. But the hon. gentleman has gone into a private room, and for hours and days has collected, and heaped up, sized boy there, for otherwise it would have needed a wheel barrow to have carried it. And why did he do all this? He did it because the Orangemen want the right to hold a piece of land, to build on it, to buy it, to pay taxes on it, and to meet together in order to do good for the unfortunate orphans and widows of those who be-long to the order. That is the only sin they have committed. No; they have committed another sin, and that is that nine-tenths of them vote against the hon. member for West Durham and keep him in Opposition. I wonder if they will forgive him, but whether they do or not I certainly will not forget him. I hope and trust that I will never be in a position to have to go and ask a favour from him. Sir, I hope I may never exchange a word with him, since he used language against a society nine-tenths of whose members are better men and stand higher than he does-men who would do an injury to no one, men of whom the hon. gentleman would not take such an advantage outside the He made a great speech, walls of this House.

the Lord and all his greatness, but I say that he belongs to a class who puts one class against another, a class which the country has no room for, and I say that more has been done to night in that way than has been done by any statesman in this country since those celebrated articles were written in the Globe some years ago. It may be that I am a little excited because I think the hon. gentleman has not treated me with the courtesy which I think I deserve at his hands, because I have never, since I have entered public life, uttered an unkind word of him. He could find no fault with what I said of him either at Woodstock, or Hamilton, or other places, but that is not the way he treated me. However, I have only to say that I shall go on in my own humble way; that I love the society, and not only this society but another to which the hon. gentleman referred, for I am not ashamed to say that I belong to the Masonic fraternity, and that I respect it and I respect the members of it. I respect the members of the Orange society, and I know them to be good and honest and true men, and I say that there is no church which is doing more good to the unfortunate widow and orphan that these societies are doing. He stands up and makes unkind, unstatesmanlike and unnecessary remarks, and for what? To defeat a little Bill which asks for 30 by 60 feet of land, and asks for the privilege of holding and paying for it. I ask Orange-men to-night why they should be deprived of that right? Is there any reason for it? Are they not law-abiding, are they not ready to go and fight their country's battles, and if so, why should they not obtain this right? The hon, gentleman would like to crush us out. Bat, I tell him, unhesitatingly, that he cannot crush out the Orange tree which is planted in this country, nor can his associates, nor his journals; and in place of crushing it out he will add moisture to its roots, and it will grow, and its branches will extend and strengthen. I say the day will come, and I hope I may be in the House to see it, when this Bill will carry, whether the hon. gentleman likes it or dislikes it. Does the hon. gentleman think we are going to disband? Does he think we will go round crying like the Pharisees and Sadducees, some of whom I believe are in this House? No, Sir; we will stand true to our society and discharge our duties in a way and manner which will be a credit to us. Let me close by saying that I think the hon. gentleman went too far. I believe he took too much time in refusing a simple request which we asked from this House. It is not at all likely that we will carry the Bill, but I hope that he will yet be disappointed. But if we do not get it, we will do as we have done before: we will do without it, and we will do without it like men. I do not wish to reply to the hon. gentleman, because he is not worth it. He has thrown out more dirty, stinking slush-

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I must ask the hon.gontleman to withdraw that.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I will take back the slush. I regret having used it, because you are so courteous that I do not wish to annoy you. But the hon. gentleman used so many legal phrases and such nice language, what he had to say he said so nicely, that I thought he was going to make an excellent speech; but he spoke against time. Well, it is a bad thing to speak against time. We care not for any hon. gentlemen who use language against us. We will stand true to any hon. gentlemen who vote for our society. As I said twelve months ago, we will not forget them. If they must follow their leader, the man who hopes to be king of this country, but never will be, we will not forget it; but we will thank them for what they have done. It we cannot get the Bill, we will do without it; and let me tell that hon. gentleman again, that his language and his course towards us to-night will not soon be forgotten by the Orange institution.

Mr. CURRAN. I rise to say a very few words on the subject that has occupied the attention of this House for several hours past. When this discussion commenced, it was St. Patrick's Day; and, out of respect for the day, I heartily concurred in the view that had been impressed upon me, more particularly by my French Canadian friends in this House, that if possible we should allow this Bill to be brought forward and voted upon without any discussion. I was perfectly willing, having already on one occasion in this honourable House, given expression to my views upon this subject, to allow the matter to take that course. However, the fates have decided otherwise; and we have had this evening certainly some very extraordinary speeches; and with regard to one particular speech, that delivered by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think I do not go too far in saying that I have never heard anything in my life to equal it in the magnificence of its matter and of its manner. In so far as this question relates to the politics of this country, I take this opportunity of saying as a representative Irish Catholic, that if we did not know it before, the hon. gentlemen who have spoken here this night have informed us of the fact, that from time to time both political parties have enjoyed the pleasant occupation of abusing Irish Catholics and Catholics generally; and in so far as that particular branch of the subject is concerned, I think the balance of testimony is about equal on both sides. Fortunately, however, I think I can say for the Irish Catholics of this Dominion that they feel perfectly able to take care of themselves amongst all the political parties of this great Domi-nion. Now, Sir, I don't intend to repeat anything that I have already said in this House. I think it would be, however, a disappointment to those who, without respect to political party, have sent me here as their representative by an overwhelming majority, if I did not say a few words on this occasion. I will say first, that I was more than disappointed when I heard the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) attempt to reply to the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I do not think it will be necessary to go into the latter gentleman's vindication of himself or of his views regarding secret societies, with which I agree; for, as a matter of course, neither I nor any other Catholic can approve of any secret societies. But I did think that the hon. member for King's, who is a lawyer, would have sought to meet some of the arguments, at all events, that were brought forward in regard to the constitutional question which presents itself to this honourable House in the present discussion. Why, Sir, we have before us a proposition that is as plain as A, B, C. We have upon the Statute Book of the Province of Quebec, chap. 10, of the Consolidated Statutes, a law which declares in positive terms that every association of a secret nature, with the exception of the Masonic body of Canada, is illegal; and I must say that I was rather astonished to hear my hon. friend, the member for Cardwell (Mr. White) take the position he took in his speech to-night as regards this Statute. Why, Sir, so convinced is that hon. gentleman of the truth of what I am saying, that in order to legalize the Quebec Masons, he has introduced a Bill here to change that particular Statute, in order that these gentlemen may enjoy the privileges which they seek. It must be equally necessary for the gentlemen who are now seeking incorporation for this association to secure the repeal of that Statute first of all. Now, Sir, I do not think it would be advisable for me to travel over the ground I have already gone over in this House. think there are several reasons of still higher moment which I might urge here against the passage of this Bill; but the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition, as a legal argument, remains entirely unanswered by anything that has been said by the hon. member for King's. We have had the lucubrations of the Orange Sentinel and the equally violent abuse of the Toronto Globe.

I do not think myself, that in the past nor perhaps in the Does he deny what he has said? Does he deny what he present, either of these great party organs has any particular love for the class to which I belong. I may say, before resuming my seat, since reference has been made to speeches made during recess, that I am not going to rake up any bad feeling in connection therewith. I am perfectly prepared to meet on the floor of this House, or elsewhere, any gentleman who wishes to attack me face to face, but it would be out of place here, in view of what has transpired, in view almost of the arrangement that nothing should be said on this Bill, that I should say a word on this matter which would create ill-will, that I should revive any of those speeches, more particularly as nothing has been said on the floor of the House. Those post-prandial statements are probably to be accounted for in various ways; at all events, I have never uttered a word against any gentleman, other in this House or out of it, that I would decline to repeat here, and I now say, in conclusion, that whilst I hope that the discussion that has taken place here to-night will show all political parties that it is a bad thing to indulge in violent abuse, that such abuse will, at times, come home to roost, and afford innocent enjoyment to those who have been the victims of the abuse -to listen to what hon. gentlemen point out as what one or the other said about them-I say that the reasons which I gave last year, I now reiterate against this Bill. We have no constitutional right to pass this measure; and on that ground, as well as on others which I might urge, but do not intend to urge to night, I intend to cast my vote, as I did last year, against this Bill.

Mr. FARROW. The hon. member for West Durham, who made such a long speech, seemed to transgress the rules of propriety. You will recollect he chose to rules of propriety. quote a great deal to-night, and among others he quoted from Mr. Parkhill, who is an Orangeman. Before quoting him, he represented him as saying something bloodthirsty; after a time he read the quotation, but there was no blood in it, and I ask the hon. gentleman, what about the blood? He reminded me of a man who went to the post office to get a letter, and on being asked his name by the clerk, said : "Louder." The Clerk raising his voice asked again, same reply again "Louder." The man's name was "Louder," but the postmaster thought he was deaf because he answered every time "Louder." So the hon, gentleman seemed to be very deaf to night. I understand right well that he heard what I put to him, but he was dishonestly deaf. The hon. member for Bothwell, who has recently come into this House, and who has a legal mind, hastened to take hold of this subject, and I took his words down. We had not the power he said to pass this Bill, and the reason he gave was that this order existed in Ireland and in some other countries. But we have been passing Bills for years incorporating Roman Catholics, and Methodists, and Church of England associations, and do not these institutions exist in other countries? Is not the Church of England found in England? Is not the Methodist body found in England, and in all parts of the world? Therefore, I do not think it was very logical. Another point to which I wish hon. members to pay particular attention is this: the hon. member for Bothwell went out of his way to insult the Orangemen. Now, I will give you his words. He told us the Orange society is a promoter of bad citizenship. When a man is bound to be a drunkard, he does not promote good citizenship; therefore, I conclude he means the Orangemen are drunkards. When a man is a thief, he is not a good citizen; therefore, I conclude they must be thieves. When a man is a liar, he is not a promoter of good citizenship; therefore, logically, Orangemen are liars. If a man commits murder, he is not a promoter of good citizenship; therefore, logically, they must be murderers Mr. CURRAN said?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. FARROW. Then in what sense are they not promoters of good citizenship. I can tell the hon. gentleman, from twenty-five years' experience of being an Orangeman, of doing business with Orangemen, of knowing their constitution, their by-laws, everything about them, that they will stand on as good a level as he or any man in this House. Who compose the Orange society in this country, or in any land? Are not the clergymen of the Church of England in it? Are not the Methodist clergymen in it? Are not the lawyers of this country in it? Are not the merchants of this country found in it? Are not the best, the choicest people of this country found enrolled in the Orange order?

An hon. MEMBER. Ow !

Mr. FARROW. Ow! Now, that is your gentlemanly men. These are the men that can find fault; these are the men who can throw obloquy and every bad expression. Why, if there was only one political party in this country, and that was the Grit party, I could not belong to it. I ask the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) if he can name any lodge in Canada, any number of Orangemen in Canada, that are disreputable people. They will stand, I am sure, on a par in morals, in sobriety, in everything else that is good and honourable with other people. Now, the hon. member for West Durham laboured for three hours, and really it was labour in vain. Because what did it amount to? Here are 250,000 good men and true in this country, Orangemen, and they just ask that they shall own a few feet of land to build a lodge room. We incorporate—and I am glad we do incorporate; I am glad that Orangemen are in this House willing to incorporate— Oblate Fathers, Sisters of Charity, Roman Catholic Bills as they come up, day in and day out, in this Parliament, year in and year out, and give them the power to own thousands and tens of thousands of property in this country, to take mortgages and give mortgages, to take notes and pay notes, to do business on a large scale; and yet, when it comes down to a corporation that asks to hold $25 worth of land, or probably not more than $100 worth of land, and erect a little lodge room, they deny them that privilege. Now, I must say this, that there are 250,000 Orangemen in this country, and you must understand that they must be of some age before they can join that society, they must be eighteen. Now, what do you suppose the population representing that 250,000 amounts to in Canada? Take the families, take the wives, take the daughters-I tell you they sum up to 600,000 or 700,000 of the population of this country; and it is no wonder that they say we shall unite, and I mean to say that, if they did unite as one man, it is not the hon. member for West Durham, nor is it any other hon. member in this House, that can keep them from getting their right, their just right. I have been a member of the order for 25 years, and am in good standing at the present hour. I ought to know something about the constitution, or else I should be—I was going to say something pretty dull, if I did not know all about the order. Now, I want to refute a little logic of the hon. member for West Durham, I hope he will pay attention to it. I thought he was a college bred man. I know he attended college, for he has his degrees, but I do not think he understood mathematics very well. I think he has forgotten his reasoning that he learned in the books of Euclid. He said to me: "If I cannot convince the hon. member for East Huron by this reasoning, I give it up." Now, what was it? He was trying to prove to you, though he knew nothing about the constitution, though he knew nothing about the by-laws, though he con-lodge, he tried to prove to you that the Orange society was a political one; and I said, after he got through, "That is no proof." Now, what was it? Why, he said that threefourths of them voted Conservative. Well, then, it follows that one-fourth voted Grit. Now, the very fact that one-fourth of the members of the Orange lodges vote Grit shows conclusively to my mind, and it ought to his mind, that there is nothing in the constitution or by-laws that is of a political nature. I say, if one man out of the 250,000 voted Grit-one man-that would be proof positive that there was nothing in the constitution or by-laws against a man voting as he likes; but when a fourth votes Grit, why that is a plainer proof. Why, next year, there might be a half vote Grit, and the next year, they might all vote Grit. The constitution does not bind them. I could vote Grit just as easily as I do vote, and there is not an Orangeman, so far as the constitution, so far as the by-laws are concerned, that is withhold from voting just as he likes. The hon. member for West Huron had a great deal to say. He is my next neighbour, and he made a political speech, I suppose to elect him again in 1837, or whenever the election comes on. I could see it sticking out all the time. Ho made a great bid to night. Well, that speech of his will be taken at a discount when it reaches Huron. He said that the Orange society was not a benevolent society. I know that they do not give the large amounts of money that he gives, that he dispenses, that he distributes. I know that they do not give these large amounts of money, but can he point to an Orangeman's wife or family in distress in Huron that are not attended to by the Orangemen? Can he? If there are any such let him speak. He tells you that it is not a religious society. Does he know the constitution? Does he know the obligation? Does he know the by-laws? He is a perfect stranger to all these things, and yet he tells this House that there is no benevolence in the order. He tells this House there is no religion in the order. And yet there are members of the Presbyterian Church, ministers of the Presbyterian Church, ministers of the Church of England, ministers of the Methodist Church, and members of all Protestant Churches, and yet there is no religion in the order at all? Now, if I understand the Orange order, it is this: All it wants is to be dealt with as other people are dealt with. Its fundamental principle is to do unto others as they should do to you. It is a society set apart and consecrated to the high office of defending truth and freedom against all traitors, from generation to generation. Can you find fault with that? If there is a man found in any part of the country that tramples down truth and freedom—the Orangemen will not persecute him; that is against his religion, it is against the constitution to persecute any man, but he will, by his talk, by his actions uphold truth and freedom. Our friends on the opposite side would not allow freedom of speech in this House if you were not in that chair, Sir. I would not get the liberty of talking here to-night-and I have already had to work hard to get it while you are in that chair. The men on that side would not allow me to say what I am saying here to-night if you were not in that chair. You can tell that by their cries, by their obstructions, by their war whoops. The great offence charged against the Orange-men of this country to-night is that they do not vote right. Now, how is it that the majority of them vote Conservative ?- though all of them do not vote Conservative. I will tell you. They believe that the Conservative party of this country is the best party, a party of p. ogress; they believe that the party called Conservative is the loyal party. Now that is one of the chief planks in the Orange society—connection with Great Britain. I know what I am saying now, and I know this will be read in the Hanzard, and I know it will be published in our local papers, but I say it—I have heard fessed he knew nothing about the workings of the Orange | plenty of Grits in my neighbourhood say it would be a good thing, it would be a happy thing for Canada, if she was con-nected with the United States. I do not say that the majority say that, but I know that plenty of them say that, and I do not believe I would have far to go to find them here. It has been made a point against us to night that the Orange society is a political one, though one-quarter of them vote reform. Now, is it not well known that a majority of the members of the Church of England vote Conservative? It is well known; therefore you must come to the conclusion, according to the theory of the hon. member for West Durham, that the Church of England is a political society. Now, it is a well known fact that the Scotch Presbyterians of this country, as a general thing, aro Grits, therefore, according to his argument, the Presbyterian Church is a political society. Now, I suppose he thinks that is good logic. There is another point I wish to make before I sit down. I think a great insult has been thrown to-night by the hon. member for West Durham-and I am sorry for itagainst all the secret societies in existence in Canada-in the world. He does not believe in them. Now, what does that mean? It means an insult to the Good Templars that is a secret society. It means an insult to the Sons of Temperance—that is a secret society. It means an insult to that large and influential society, the Foresters. It means an insult to nearly two-thirds of all the farmers in Ontario-they are Grangers, and they have a secret society; and they got all they wanted to carry on their business. They got a fine charter from this House, and I cannot see why the Orangemen should be denied that privilege. Every society in Canada has been dubbed by the hou. gentleman, but I have not the least doubt in my mind that the hon. gentleman has done himself more harm than good. Another word. I have nothing to say against my Roman Catholic fellow subjects. I have lived on good terms with them both here and at home. I have found them very true, politically, and also true as friends. I do not find fault so much with my Roman Catholic friends because they do not support this Bill. 1 know the reason why—their church prohibits them from voting for us. What I do find fault with are these Grit Protestants. What church do they belong to? Some of them are Church of England, like the hon. member for West Durham. Does his church prohibit it? Some of them are Presbytorians, does the Presbyterian Church prohibit it ? Some of them are Methodists, does the Methodist Church prohibit it? Does the Baptist Church prohibit it? Does any other Protestant Church prohibit it? Your excuse is worthless. You have no real excuse. You stand doggedly against giving rights to Orangemen in this House. Why? Because the Orangemen do not vote for you. That is the reason, the real reason, advanced to-night; you cannot advance any other reason. You are not prohibited by your churches; you have only the paltry, misorable excuse because they all do not vote with you.

> Mr. BEATY. I am very glad that the last two speakers have removed this question from the theological arena in which it has been moving for the last five hours. There is an important question involved in this Bill, and I propose to occupy a few minutes in endeavouring to draw attention back to the question involved in the Bill itself. The first point which struck me as peculiar, looking at it from a political aspect was, that Liberals of all shades in this country should oppose this Bill. I, as a Liberal-Conservative and a Conservative-Liberal wonder at the fact that Liberals should prevent their fellow-citizens who happen to be Orangemen from obtaining that right which is given to every other class. The principle of Liberalism as I used to learn it was equal incorporated, and we find the opposition coming most largely and vehemently from the other side. This is a most astounding manifestation of liberalism which I would not have expected. Two or three points have been urged against the Bill which are worthy of notice. The Orange Association of British North America seeks incorporation simply for the purpose of holding lands and using those lands for the benefit of widows and orphans, and for the purpose of lodges in which to meet. The first objection of importance made to the Bill is, that this is a question which does not belong to the Dominion Parliament, but is one which should be dealt with by Provincial Legislatures. I will read a few words from a case before the Privy Council in England, page 283, of Cartwright's reports on cases on the British North America Act, in which the Law Lords declared the competency of this House to deal with the matter of lands and the incorporation of companies for buying and selling lands. Speaking of the power of the Dominion Parliament to incorporate such companies, the Privy Council says as follows:-

"The authority would belong to it by its general power over all mat-ters not coming within the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the Legislature of the Provinces, and the only subject on this head assigned to the Provincial Legislature being 'the incorporation of companies with Provincial objects,' it follows that the incorporation of companies for objects other than Provincial, falls within the general powers of the Parliament of Canada. * * Suppose the Dominion Parliament were to incorporate a company, with power, among other things, to pur-chase and own lands throughout Canada in mortmain, it could scarcely be contended. if such a company were to carry on business in a Province cnase and own iands throughout Canada in mortmain, it could scarcely be contended, if such a company were to carry on business in a Province where a law against holding land in mortmain prevailed (each Province having legislative power 'property and civil rights in the Province'), that it could own land in that Province in contravention of the Provin-cial Legislation; and, if a company were incorporated for the sole pur-pose of purchasing and holding land in the Dominion, it might happen that it could do no business in any part of it, by reason for all the Pro-vinces having passed mortmain Acts, though the corporation would still exist and preserve its status as a corporate body."

If we have this right as is set forth here in respect to incorporating companies to purchase and hold lands, we should exercise it; and if the Provincial Legislatures act in contravention of that power, that is not our fault and we are not to blame.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What case is that from which you quoted?

Mr. BEATY. (Citizens and Queen Insurance Company vs. Parsons. That seems to make it clear, as far as this particular claim is made, that it is competent for this Parliament to deal with the subject. The next important objection is that the Orange body is a political organization. The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Farrow) has answered that point pretty effectively. Why has it been said that the Orange organization is a political one? Simply because it is claimed that nine-tenths of the members of that organization support the Conservative party. The hon. member for East Huron has well answered that point by asking whether, if a majority of the Church of England supports the Conservative party they are necessarily a political body because of that fact, so with respect to other church bodies. No one would pretend to say that such was the fact. In regard to the Orange association, of which I am not a member, but of which I have had some knowledge for many years, it is well known to be a benevolent organization in some respects, and also a quasi-religious organization; but in no sense, except in the action of its members individually, can it be said to be a political organization. Another objection which has been put forward, and which is perhaps the strongest adduced, is that the Orange body is a secret society. What does this idea of a secret society mean? It has been properly said that if an incomparated had shall properly said that if an incorporated body should obtain from the Government a grant of money, the company or body should be under the supervision of the Government That is a point which must be conceded by every should it go forth to England and Ireland and Scotland where hon. member, but what claim has the Government or the thousands of Orangemen live, that that class cannot have money, and buy up their own lands and sell their own lands and exercise those powers given to almost every religious denomination, which is given to every other class of persons such as Masons, Oddfellows, Foresters, Grangers, Good Templars, Convents and various religious associations and denominations. We had only the other day before the House a bill to incorporate the Bishop of Ottawa es a sole corporation for the purpose of holding lands in Quebec and Ontario. What reason can you give why a benevolent or quasi-religious institution should not possess rights equal to those who have already obtained them. It seems to me that no reasonable objection can be offered to this proposition. And why is this society called secret? I do not know why, except that members of the Order use signs. and strangers cannot enter the lodges and take part in the proceedings. But is not that the case in almost every class of organization in the country. In almost every incorporated body there is some system of initiation, and it is no objecttion to have an initiatory ceremony, either riding the goat or doing any other peculiar act as is represented by persons who do not belong to the Orange order. Now, if they possess this element only, if they do not in their secret acts conspire against the Crown, and become traitors to the Constitution of the country, if they are not disloyal citizens in their conclavos, then, what point is there in urging against the society that it is a secret organization? if it were such a society as I have described, then I could understand why it should be suppressed, why it should not be recognized by law, why an appeal should be made to all loyal and true citizens, to all who are interested in the good fame of their country, to oppose organizations of this character. But no such pretense is made; no allogation is made that these men are not loyal citizens as ordinary men go, that they do not possess the qualities pertaining to good citizenship. Now, the leader of the Opposition made strong point with reference to the secret character of this and other societies. He did not confine himself to this institution, but he assailed every society of that kind in the country, the Masons, the Foresters, the Sons of Temperance, and others. Why does he not introduce a Bill and give practical effect to his sentiments with reference to this matter-a Bill for the purpose of suppressing all secret societies. But we find no such measure, and the hon. gen-tleman stands simply on the defensive in the matter, and the moving reason we find with reference to the question is-that it is said that nine-tenths of the Orangemen oppose the party to which he belongs. If nine-tenths of them supported him, I doubt if we would have heard the long and eloquent speech that we heard to-night, but the strong fact which presents itself to his mind is the statement-I do not know whether it is true or not-that nine-tenths of the Orangemen support the Conservative party. In this connection, it is a very remarkable fact that in looking over the names of the gentlemen from Ontario on the opposite side I do not find one Catholic representative in the Grit party. Now, why is that? Is it because they do not support them? Is it because of their illiberality in not supporting the Catholics that we find no representatives of that class among hon. gentlemen opposite representing the Province of Ontario. On this side, I find that we have a num-ber of them. We had one whom they pushed out the other day, Mr. Hawkins; we have Mr. Bergin, Mr. Coughlin, Mr. Labrosse, Mr. Tassé, Mr. Dawson and others. Now, I think it is important in the interests of immigration, and the progress of the country, that it should be understood that this House does not proscribe any class of citizens who do their duty to the Crown and the country. Why

when it claims nothing from Parliament in the nature of a the rights here that other classes have, that they cannot own property and stand on the same plane as their fellow citizens? On the contrary we should act upon the principle of doing justice to all classes of good citizens who pay their allegiance to the Crown, and maintain the institutions and the Constitution of the country. We should do this to all classes, no matter by what name they are known, no matter what private associations they may have among themselves; so long as they are good citizens they should not, in the interests of the country, be proscribed or tabooed. The Orangemen of the country, taken in the general, are just as good and industrious citizens, and, taking them as a class, as wealthy as any other, and if that is the case, why should we not promote the immigration of that class as well as of any other. But if we deny them this right, then, of course, they cannot be expected to come here if they cannot enjoy the privileges which are given to other classes. I was sorry to notice, from the observations of the leader of the Opposition, that he introduced a theological controversy into the House, that he introduced the firebrands of creeds, that he endeavoured to inflame the feelings of persons who were standing side by side, though they are opposed in religious opinions. If there is any particular idea which I entertain with reference to the future of this country, it is the duty of every person, and especially of every member of this House, to promote in the strongest possible way the harmony of Provincial action in conjunction with the Federal power, and the harmony of the several Provinces; that we should endeavour to unify the races of our nation and bring them into a homogenous whole, so that the country should not be disrupted by setting race against race, section against section, or Province against Province, but should, on the contrary, promote that which is true religion, the Christian, religion the promotion of the element of peace and good will among all classes of our countrymon.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion negatived.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I think I may fairly ask the indulgence of the House to make a few remarks on this Bill. I have sat here during the last two months, and have remained perfectly silent; and so I trust the House will indulge me for a short time, because, though what I have to say may not be new, certain personal allusions have been made to myself, and to a gentleman who lately represented, in the Local House, the county which I have the honour to represent here, which makes it my duty to reply to them. During the early part of the debate, the hon. member for Bothwell, as well as the hon. member for West Huron, endeavoured to convince this House that the Orange association was a political organization. I may say that I have been a member of the Orange asscciation during the last twenty years; and during that time I have done what the hon. member for West Durham describes himself as having done in his communication with Archbishop Lynch-I have never yet mentioned politics. As that hon. gentleman has chosen to quote some remarks of mine, made at Rosemont, I think I can fairly quote a speech of his made in St. James' school house, in Toronto. The hon. gentleman did not take the trouble to mention a speech which I delivered last summer at Orillia, in which, alluding to the course pursued by the hon, leader of the Opposition, I spoke of him as the Hon. Edward Blake, who had heretofore, in the Province of Ontario, set himself up to be a Protestant par excellence above other Protestants-a man whose church was not sufficiently Protestant for him, and who In the wanted to form a church of his own. speech made by the hor. gontleman in St. James' as there is any one Province in this Dominion to which we, school house, in Toronto-and a gentleman in this from any other Province, go, and in which we cannot enjoy the House can substantiate what I say-in which that hon. same privileges that we had in the Province from which we gentleman told those who were present that it was their came. Orangemen have their organization, and they own their duty not only to oppose Romanism in their own church, but to oppose it at every street corner.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I think my assortion is equally true with that of the hon. gentleman. He has also alluded to a speech delivered by Mr. Parkhill, who formerly represented South Simcoe in the Local Legislature. Prior to that he alluded to a speech made by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) which that hon gentleman denies over having delivered; so the chances are that Mr. Parkhill may never have delivered the speech to which the hon. gentleman allluded; but I have no doubt that whatever he may have said, like myself, he would not retract, like the hon. member for West Darham. He attempted to make it appear that I had rotracted a remark which I made last year, for the simple reason that it did not appear in Hansard. If it was necessary to make the hon. gentleman believe it, I would repeat it again. I am not in the habit of doing as he does-making statements and then retracting them when it is convenient to do so. The hon. member for Bothwell tried to make it appear that the Orange association was a political association more than anything else. I can only say as proof that his statement is incorrect, that a gentleman sitting in this House last Session, representing the constituency which he represents, though a Roman Catholic, saw fit to vote for the Orange Bill for the simple reason that he had received, I have no doubt, a large support from that body.

Mr. MILLS. And on political grounds.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Very well; say on political grounds. At the same time, if the hon. gentleman did not say so, some of his friends have said during the debate that Orangemen were obliged never to support a Roman Catholic. I may say, in further contradiction of what has been said against my friend, Mr. Parkhill, that he spent a good deal of time in North Simcoe in promoting the election of Mr. Long. Now, it has been said by several hon. gentlemen that in our lodges we speak of Grits and Catholics together, and make a common cause against them both. I may say that in the county I represent, we always class Grits with Canada thistles; we speak of them as noxious weeds, and they are never mentioned in the same breath with Roman Catholics. As it appears to me that the true way of looking at the Bill before the House is from the legal point of view, and as I, being a layman, am not able to throw any light on the subject, and as I am to be followed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who, I have, no doubt, will present the subject to the House in that light, I conclude by saying that I am in favour of the Bill, and that I trust it will be carried.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the debate closes, I have a pleasant duty to perform. I have in my constituency a fairly large and very intelligent class of citizens, who have asked me, if this Bill came into the House, to vote for it. I had the pleasure of casting a silent vote for it last year. This year I merely want to add a word to my vote. So far as the Orangemen of my own county are concerned, or the Orangemen of the Province of New Brunswick-and I have had a fairly wide knowledge of them for the last fifteen years—I can say truthfully two things: first, that no reli-gious war has been proclaimed, and, secondly, that they are not par excellence a political body. I believe that they live in peace and harmony with their fellow citizens, and that their chief object is the exercise of benevolence-and they carry that out-to those who are more particularly connected with their organization. I have just to add to this remark one other. A grievance will always exist so long property and they do their work, as a society, in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They go to another Province of the Dominion and they naturally look to enjoy the same privileges there as in that from which they come. The hon. gentleman who spoke so long, and, I am bound to say, so eloquently to-night, said he did not think it was right for the Parliament to force a Province to allow what the Provincial Legislature did not wish to grant. I do not think that doctrine has always been lived up to nor do I think it has been lived up to in Federal countries. In the United States, for instance, that doctrine has not been lived up to. The strong power of the Federal Government has been brought to bear in a very decisive way into compelling cortain States to admit what the State Legislatures would 1 ot admit, in giving certain definite and neces-sary rights to the citizens of that country. Not long ago, in the State of Kentucky, where the State authorized a lottery which was supposed to be contrary to the general order of morals of the United States, Congress legislated on the subject; that legislation is to-day stronger still through being put through Congress and by means of which that lottery will be suppressed, even after the State Legislature said it did not think it should be suppressed. In the case of countries constituted federally, as ours is, this will happen over and over again, that the General Legislature will have to look to certain particular rights that I hold may be easily asked and demanded. The Orangemen in my own Province are satisfied with the measure of liberty they have there under our Act of Incorporation, but they do consider it a grievence that when they go into snother Province, they are not allowed to have the same right of owning their property and being able to devise, bequeath or manage it in a corporate capacity.

Mr. BAKER. I should consider myself wanting in my duty if, as the Grand Master of the Free Masons in British Columbia, I did not give an unqualified denial to the state-ments made in this House concerning the Free Masons. Whether the hon, leader of the Opposition gave utterance to the impression that was in his own mind, or whether the language he used was quoted, I did not exactly notice, but he certainly did say that the Masons were guilty of misre. presentation, malignity and bitterness.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All secret societies.

Mr. BAKER. All secret societies certainly includes the body of Free Masons; and if so, I hold it to be my bounden duty not to be behindhand in repudiating the charge, and in acknowledging that there is no class of the community which has done greater good to the whole world than the Free Masons. The society is composed of every nationality and creed; we know no difference between Roman Catholics and Protestants, and there are many members of the Roman Catholic persuasion in the body of the Free Masons. I know there are some in my own lodge; what the penalty may be for their being there I do not know, nor did I ever seek to find out. As regards the Orangemen in the city of Victoria, we have quite a number there, among the best citizens in Victoria, and I quite agree with the member for East Huron that, whatever Bill comes up in the Honse of this particular nature, inasmuch as we have passed Bills of a similar nature for other persuasions, we should, in com-mon justice to the Orangemen, pass this Bill, and I shall have very great pleasure in giving my vote in favour of it.

Mr. WALLACE, (York). I was much interested in the remark made repeatedly by the hon. member for West Durham, that Orangeism was a political organization. I suppose he will remember the time when he tried to get sive control of such Acts as the Orange Corporation Bill. About 1872 the hon. gentleman was Premier of Ontario, and the right hon. leader of the House was Premier of the Dominion; and at that time the question of Orange incorporation began to be mooted among the members of the Orange order. The question was brought, I believe, before the notice of the hon. member for West Durham.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. I am informed so.

Mr. BLAKE. Your information is not true.

Mr. WALLACE. I am informed on very good authority; and also that the hon. gentleman said : " Do not bring the Orange Incorporation Bill before the Local Legislature of Ontario, because I am Premier; but bring it before the Dominion Parliament, and I will assist it there."

Mr. BLAKE. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. I have my information from a very reliable authority. At that time it was the proper thing to bring the Orange Bill before the Dominion Parliament, be-cause otherwise it might embarrass the Premier of the Local Government. We have had several hours to prove that it has no right to come here. Another thing he mentioned as a good reason for not bringing the matter before the Dominion Parliament was that, in three Provinces of the Dominion, it was brought before the Local Legislatures. The majority of the representatives of the people passed it, but, for some reason or other, it failed to be-come law. The hon. gentleman repeats that the order is political in Ontario. If he had his way he said he would abolish private canvassing all through the Dominion, and have all political canvassing on the public platform. If that had been the case, the hon. gentleman would not have been able to write to Mr. Wood, the celebrated letter: "You had better speak now;" and he would not have gained the man he was supposed to have bought on that occasion. He also said as a reason why the Orange Bill should not be passed—it has been stated by some hon. gentleman in his remarks-that nine-tenths were Conservatives, and that they were a political organization. He might as well say that because nine-tenths of the Church of England are Conservatives, that church was therefore a political or-ganization, and that because nine-tenths of the Church of Scotland were Reformers, that was also a political organization. If the Orange society is a political body, which I do not admit, that is not a crime. Are we not taught that it is the duty of every good citizen, who has a vote, to record his vote, and to take that interest every citizen should take in the politics of his country. If the Orangemen are active in politics, as many are, that is one of the highest recommendations—it teaches the duties of good citizenship to the members of the order. If the Orange order should not receive to-day its Act of Incorporation, it will be the means of increasing the power and influence of the Orange order. It will not do it any injury, because the hou. members will feel that they have a good right and a strong claim, notwithstanding the arguments of the hop. member for West Durham.

Mr. SPROULE. Before this vote is taken, I would like to say a few words on this question, especially in view of the fact that I represent a constituency, a large number of whom belong to this order. I have only to say, in reference to some of the charges made by the hon. member for West Durham, against this association receiving an Act of Incorporation, that they appear to me to be of a very flimsy nature. He first starts out by saying: "I am opposed in toto to all secret societies." That appears to me to be a the Orangemen to follow him and make it a political organ-ization for his own purpose, about twelve years ago, and I was amused to hear him say that the Local Legislature has exclu-do not know anything about these societies." Is it well to have from time to time, and from year to year, of the Acts of many secret societies, I think ought to be sufficient to give them some standing in our community, and to allow us to give them credit for something that is good. If, as the hon. member for West Durham admits, he does not know anything about their organizations because he never belonged to them, either this or any other secret society, how can he be sufficiently intelligent in reference to that body to condemn it? But what societies does he condemn when he uses this expression? He says, I condemn the Good Tempars, and yet he professes to be a temperance man, and tries to enunciate his temperance principles in various parts of the country. He says, I condemn the Sons of Temperance, because they, too, are a secret society; but he goes into a Sabbath school, and endeavours to promulgate the principles of these temperance organizations, and believes them to be good. He condemns the Oddfellows, and yet they are a philanthropic society, and are doing a great deal of good in the world to day. He condemns the Ancient Order of United Workmen, a class of men who are universally respected wherever they are known, and who are quiet, respectable, industrious members of society. He condemns the Tents of Macabees, another organization of a similar nature, a secret society, and adding to that an insurance association. He condemns the Foresters, he condemns the Masons, and he goes even further, and condemns the great body of agriculturists of this country, known to-day as the Grangers, because he is not admitted to their secrets. They are a secret organization, and, if that sweeping condemnation he has expressed against them holds good of the Orange society, it holds also good of these organizations. He condemns the Band of Hope and every society he knows nothing at all about, because he admits he knows nothing about it. Again, he condemns it because it is a political organization. I heard, at the same time, in answer to that, the melodious voice of the member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), saying, "hear, hear;" and yet, notwithstanding that, I know that in one of the important lodges in South Grey, nearly half the members of the order are his strongest supporters. I know that the Master of the Orange lodge in my own village was going round canvassing in his interest, any yet he adds "hear, hear." He says he condemns the organization because it stirs up strife. If I know anything of that organization, it is to be slow to take offence and to give none. The hon. member for Huron said members were expelled from the lod ge because they voted for Roman Catholics. Well, I can on ly say that that hon. gentleman must be as ignorant of the nature of the rules, of the regulations, and of the obligations of the Orange order, as the hon. member for West Durham is, or he would never make such a statement. In substantiation of that, he gave a quotation, and it was simply the opinion of a man feeling very strongly on the question, after the chagrin which had been experienced by the society when the Bill of Incorporation was refused. I can tell you, as one who has stood in connection with that order, that there is nothing to prevent any member supporting the rankest Roman Catholic the country brings forward to-day. I can tell you that there is nothing to prevent an Orangeman from supporting a Reformer or Grit, nothing that binds him to any political party-one more than another. Again, he condemns the organization because he says it is a secret one. What is there secret about it, I would like to ask. He says it is an oath-bound society, and he says that, notwithstanding the fact that their oath has been published, time and again, to the people of the world. He condemns it because its bylaws are secret, and yet, when anyone wants to join an Orange lodge, he has the by-laws handed to him and he can Orange lodge, he has the by-laws handed to him and he can at an early period in the evening, without what I read them before he joins. Is there anything secret about must call a waste of time; and when I say waste of time, I that? Their by-laws and rules and regulations are, at any do not mean that the Bill, with which I have the honour to condemn what we do not know, but the evidences that we time, laid before the public, and will stand the severest scrutiny that any organization will stand. But the only secrets that appear to be connected with the association are the same as you find in the Oddfellows, in the Tents of Macabees, in the Good Templars, in the Sons of Temperance, or in any other such organization. If I meet an Orangeman in the night, I give him a word and he replies, and that tells he is an Orangeman. If I meet him in the daylight, I give him a sign. But these are the only secrets connected with the societies. There is no oath-bound organization which compels them to stick together against the interests of the general community, or against any class, or religion, but it is as much the duty of an Orangeman to defend the rights and the religion of one Roman Catholic among ten thousand of them, though he should be only one, as to defend the religion of his own persuasion. If that is the case, and I know it is the case, why should we pass this sweeping con-demnation of them. If I know anything about secret societies that entitles them to be condemned, it is based on what I see as the outcome of these societies, why the secret societies should be condemned, it is the outcome of those societies. And what societies of a secret nature should be condemned ? Those which conspire against the general good of the public; those that endeavour to undermine the general foundations of society; those which band together and conspire against the interests of Government, or introduce treason into their organization. These are the societies that should be condemned, and not those which we find in every part of the country, amongst whom are enrolled the finest members of religious denominations or industrial pursuits in the country. So long as we find ministers, so long as we find men in the highest ranks of professions and in the highest walks of life, in agricultural or industrial pursuits, worthy and respected members of organizations that are universally acknowledged to be doing incalculable good in the country, we have no right to pass this sweeping condemnation upon them. This Act appears to be a simple one. Whether we have or have not the right to give that association incorporation here, I am not going to discuss, because I am not sufficiently conversant with the nice legal points which may be raised to say that we have, but that large number who represent that association in this country, if we have the power to confer that right, we would be doing great good to in giving them the Bill they ask. If there are objectionable clauses in it, as was said by the hon. member who introduced it, they can be arranged in Committee, so as to make them acceptable to the majority of this House ; but, if we throw it out of the House, we are only leaving them with a grievance which will tend, more than anything else, to increase their numbers at the rapid rate they have been increasing during the last few months. If would hear very little this were settled, we of the Orange association as being disagreeable or distasteful to the other members of the community. If you go down to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where they hold Acts of incorporation, you do not hear the objections that are raised here, you do not hear that the Orangeman are increasing. But we find that wherever you give a large and respectable class of people, like the Orangemen, a grievance, it has a tendency to induce thousands to go into the ranks who would never have thought of joining them if they were receiving the same consideration that other classes of people are receiving.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). I had hoped that the suggestion I made in moving the second reading of this Bill would have been adopted, and that we would have been able to come to a vote on the subject be charged, or its merits, have suffered in the discussion that has taken place, but because I am quite satisfied that all the discussion has not influenced one solitary vote or the opinion of one member of this House. I, therefore, think that when a subject is well worn and has been so well discussed as this was on a former occasion, that it was an utter waste of time to discuss it as it has been to-night. I feel that no new light has been shed around it, and not a single argument has been advanced that is likely to influence any member of this House. But, notwithstanding I made the suggestion in a spirit of peace and harmony, with a view to avoid any disagreeable and acrimonious discusion, the olive branch has not been received in the spirit in which it was held out to the other side of the House. When my hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) stood up, I wondered at his halting accents; I wondered at that scarcity of words, at that want of fluency which, for once, characterized him to-night. I saw he was not prepared to speak, that he was talking against time. He enunciated a constitutional proposition which I shall refer to soon. After he had enunciated what, with all respect to him, I must call had constitutional law, he soon became exhausted, and the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) took up the running, and he soon made it palpable to everybody that he was talking against time. He kept taking out his watch from time to time and looking at it with anxious feelings, in order to see if it was not time for his great leader to arrive, and how many more minutes he had to talk before his leader would arrive-because the word had been passed round that the leader of the Opposition had prepared a three hour's speech on this question which he proposed delivering here to enlighten this House to night; that he was going to hold out a bid for the French Catholic vote from the Province of Quebec; that he was going to make a bid for the Irish Catholic vote of Ontario and the rest of the Dominion; that it was necessary for the good of the party that he should make a great speech on this occasion. Unfortunately he was detained elsewhere in making another bid for the Catholic vote, at St. Patrick's meeting, or somewhere else, to night. But with hurried steps he came in, and then we saw the member for West Huron sitting down; but the taunts and jokes from this side of the House brought him to his legs again, and he turned over his manuscript notes of quotations from speeches of hon. gentlemen of this side of the House, and talked on for half an hour longer in a vain attempt to show that he had not been talking against time—a fact, however, which was palpable to everybody. Then we had the great speech of my hon. friend from West Durham. It was a great speech so far as I heard it. I listened to it as long as he was discussing the question seriously, and was advanc-ing arguments that he was desirous of being assented to, and being answered; but when he resorted to that copious manuscript of quotations from the speech of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) delivered in various parts of the Province, when I saw that he had got into that part of the speech which may be termed. I believe, in language which is used by most literary people, as padding, then I thought it was not necessary to occupy my time further in listening to what I had read in the newspapers, and which had nothing to do with the question, but was intended solely for political effect. I believe my hon. friend from East Hastings has fully and satisfactorily an-swered that part of his speech. There was one part, however, of the speech of my hon. friend from West Durham, in reply to which I purpose now briefly saying a few words, and that was what may be termed the constitutional aspect of the question. He enunciated the doctrine that this Bill was not within the jurisdiction of this House-although I thought he did that even very cautiously. He did not fully and thoroughly commit himself, so far as to make the bold declaration that it was not within our jurisdiction. Mr. ÇAMEBON (Victoria).

He said the principle he had laid down for the guidance of himself and the great party which he leads, in reference to legislation of this kind, was that we should only supplement local legislation, that we should not initiate legislation upon subjects that were within the functions of the Local Legislatures, but he did not go so far as to say that it was not within our power and within our functions to initiate, carry through, and complete legislation to apply to the whole Dominion, upon subjects that were within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. That principle he did not enunciate, if I heard him rightly. Then he said that we had come here with this Bill because some of the Local Legislatures would not pass it. I confess I was a little surprised to hear him make that statement with reference, more particularly, to Ontario; because if there is one single subject upon which the Reform party, the Grit party, and the leader of the Grit party in Ontario, ought to be ashamed, and thoroughly ashamed of themselves and of their party, it is the way in which they acted in reference to the Orange Bill. When the leader of the Government of Ontario spoke in favour of the Bill, voted in favour of the Bill, and did his best to get the Bill passed, and then was mean enough, dishonest enough—and I say the term is not too strong to characterize him-to go and advise the Lieutenant Governor to refuse his assent to the Bill, I say it was comtemptible, it was dishonest it, was unworthy the trade of an official politician, let alone an honest and Christian politician as the leader of the Government in Ontario has claimed to be. And I say the Opposition in this House, and the Reform party in Ontario, has no occasion to refer with pride to the course of their party in the Province of Ontario upon this Orange Bill. When, by a majority of the Legislature of the Province, they had deliberately expressed the opinion that this society ought to be incorporated there, it was the duty of the leader of the House to have carried out the dictates of the majority of that House, and not in a mean and contemptible way, try to stifle the Bill after making a judicious arrangement by which he managed to get some members of his Government to vote for the Bill and some against it, so that they might be safe before the country, that they might blow hot and cold, that they might keep favour both with the Orange and with the Green; and he arranged the votes as it might suit his purpose best in each constituency. Then, what is the value of the argument arising from the fact that that Legislature has not passed this Bill? Why, the Legislature did pass it, but the Government stifled it and destroyed it; so that the argument of my hon. friend that we were over-riding the legislation of the Province of Ontario, certainly does not apply. In Prince Edward Island, the Bill, although passed by the Legislature there, has not been sanctioned, owing to the Lieutenant-Governor of that Province not thinking fit to assent to it. But so far as I am aware, the leader of the Government had himself voted for the Bill, as was the case in Ontario. I am aware of the difficulties, with reference to this question, in the Province of Quebec. I had hoped there would be some general legislation that would have removed the difficulties surrounding that question in that Province. I do not believe that the skilful, and able, and eloquent, and fluent speech of my hon. friend from West Durham, will have the effect he has intended, I believe it should have, in making himself more favourably es-teemed by the Conservative Catholics of the Pro-vince of Quebec, no matter of what nationality they may be, and attracting them to his side. I believe they see through and understand the reason of his new born zeal against secret societes. I believe they are not to be tempted from their party allegiance by the effort which the hon. gentleman has made to night to hold out to them the idea that he is their friend, that he is the man to whom they should look for an alliance. I believe they too thoroughly realize who have been their true friends in the past; I believe they are too loyal to their Conservative allies in every other part of the Dominion to be tempted by the-I was afraid I was about to use an unparliamentary word--speech which the leader of the Opposition has delivered to-night. They know that the Orangemen of the old Province of Canada were always their best friends, and that hon. gentlemen opposite were always their enemies. They know that they owe many of the advantages they now possess to their Conservative allies. They know that among these measures was the Separate School Bill, which was passed in the interest of the Catholic population of Ontario. They know that the passing of that Bill was due to the support which Orangemen of the old Province of Canada were prepared to give to secure freedom of religion in every part of the country. They know that leading Orangemen have steadfastly voted for Catholic incorporation measures whenever a Bill was brought forward. They know that the Orangemen of Canada are Conservative and are liberal in spirit. They know the Orangemen have no bigoted prejudices which would lead them to oppose the granting of equal rights to all, and it is on that ground, and on that ground only, we come and ask the House to give the body incorporation, in order to enable it to hold its own property, a privilege which has been granted to-day to two Catholic bodies. Before I conclude, I must say one or two words on the constitutional right of Parliament to pass this Bill, lest it might be supposed that the objections put forward on that ground are in my judgment well taken, and that I feel unable to answer them. I had no hesitation, whatever, in agreeing to take charge of the Bill, from any doubt that it was not within the province and functions of this Parliament. The true doctrine is this: that this Parliament is seized of the right to legislate for the incorporation of any company or society whose operations are to extend to the whole Dominion, and that when once seized of that right, it has power to give all incidents necessary for the exercising and working out of that right. When we come to the question of the tenure of real property and the application of the Sta-tute of mortmain, the legislation which we may get here will be subject to any legislation which the Provinces think fit to pass on that particular point. A question has recently arisen on this point, and a late decision has been given by the Privy Council-a later case than that referred to by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty)-this was the Attorney General vs. the Building and Investment Company of Quebec, in which decision it was held that the power to incorporate that company and invest it with the right to take and hold real estate in every part of Canada, was vested in this Parliament; but that notwithstanding that power is capable of being granted by this Parliament, the society could take and hold such property as it acquired, subject to the laws of each particular Province, as affecting the real property of the character which it held and possessed. So if there happened to be a mortmain law in any Province, the society would take the property only subject to those laws. If there were not such laws in the Province, the society would take the real estate, in consequence of the incorporation by virtue, of the power conferred on it by this Parliament, without any local incorporation. That is the latest decision of the Privy Council, and it is in accord with the principles laid down by our own Supreme Court. In the case of the Quebec Lumber Company, the question of incorporation was raised, as the company intended to do business in several Provinces of the Dominion, and it was contended that the case came within the functions and powers of each Legislature, and not with-in the functions of the Dominion Parliament. The matter was referred by the Senate to the Judges of the Supreme Court, and, they reported that the Bill was within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. A similar question was raised in regard to the Canadian Provident Association, and a similar report was made in that case, the Judges laying down the doctrine, which is admittedly the correct doctrine, that where the Bill seeks to incorporate the society or company with power to do business in more than one Province, it is within the function of Parliament to pass such Bill, although, if the power is limited to one Province, it must go to the Provincial Legislature. If that be good law, it is beyond question that this Orange Bill is within the functions of this Parliament. I do not intend to say more, but I thought it my duty, as mover of the Bill, that I should justify the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and I must now leave the result to the House.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that as the time for the reception of the reports of Committees on Private Bills will expire on Thursday next, the same be extended for a further period of one week from that time.

Motion agreed to.

REPEAL OF THE LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the Notice of Motion given by Mr. Houde for a Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution, namely: "That this House is of opinion that the Liquor License Act, 1883, should be repealed," shall be the first Order of the Day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HOUDE moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution :-

Whereas the Speech from the Throne, delivered on the 9th of February, 1883, contained the following paragraph: "I am advised that the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, delivered last June, on the appeal of Russell vs the Queen, goes to show that, in order to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxi-cating liquors, and for that purpose to regulate the granting of shop, saloon and tavern licenses, legislation by the Dominion Parliament will be necessary, your earnest consideration of this important subject is de-sired." Whereas in pursuance of this recommendation, and on the repre-sentation made to this Parliament by the advisers of His Excellency that it was not a matter of policy, but a matter of necessity, an Act in-tituled: "The Liquor License Act of 1883," was passed by this Parlia-ment last Session.

was not a matter of poincy, but a matter of necessary, an Act matter of necessary, an Act matter of necessary and the poincy, and the international second s

He said : Mr. Speaker, this motion raises two points : first, can this Parliament vote to repeal the License Act of last year without contradicting itself? And secondly, if it can consistently and logically do so, is it expedient and desirable that it should do it? I will try to demonstrate briefly that we ought to solve both these propositions in the affirmative.

Mr. KINNEY.

It is a well known fact in this Parliament, at least among members who have followed the debates of last Session, that the necessity of having that Act passed was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, only and simply because of the interpretation then given by a decision of the Privy Council in the appeal of Russell vs. The Queen, and only and simply upon the assumption that that decision had left no other alternative in order to prevent the unlimited sale of intoxicat-ing liquors, at least in Ontario, than to have recourse to the legislative interference of the Federal Parliament for removing the impending evil. Had not that decision been rendered, or had it been then interpreted in the now light in which it is to-day, it is fair to assume that the Government would not have asked this Parliament to pass the License Act of last year, nor would they have thought proper to interfere at all in that matter. For fear lest there might be persons taking a great interest in the present question who would hesitate to accept my statement as well-founded, I beg the House to allow me to quote the declarations of the Government themselves on this important point. The Speech from the Throne delivered on February 9th, 1883, contained, among others, the following paragraph :-

"I am advised that the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Com-mittee of the Privy Council, delivered last June on the appeal of Russell vs. the Queen, goes to show, that in order to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors, and for that purpose to regulate the grant-ing of shop, saloon and tavern licenses, legislation by the Dominion Parliament will be necessary. Your earnest consideration of this im-portant subject is desired."

Three days later, that is on the 12th February, the right hon, the First Minister was still clearer in his declaration, and thus explained in the course of the debate on the Address the reasons why the Government intended to ask Parliament to legislate on the subject of the liquor traffic. The right hon. gentleman, answering the leader of the Opposition, spoke as follows in regard to the proposed legislation with respect to liquor licenses :-

"That subject was not willingly undertaken by the present Govern-ment. They were quite satisfied that the law as it obtains in the differ-ent Provinces, should be continued. They were quite satisfied that each Province should, so far as the law would allo x it, to enact such Statutes, deal with the subject of shop, tavern and saloon licenses. Neither the Government nor the Parliament of Canada, I take it, wish to interfere; and it was only when the decision, which was given in Jane last opon the Scott Act, a Dominion Act, and the subject was forced upon them that they thought it their duty to bring it before Par-liament. I never had any doubt that when the question was brought before the Courts, it would be decided that the different Provincial Legislatures have no right whatever to deal with that subject, except for revenue purposes—for the purpose of imposing taxation for provin-cial or municipal purposes. I expressed the opinion in Parliament years ago, and last year I expressed it at a public meeting in Toronto, or its vicinity."

We know that at the beginning of this Session the right hon. the First Minister, much to his credit, acknowledged that he had gone a little too far last year in the expression of that personal opinion. I continue quoting from the same declaration:

"But while that opinion was strongly impressed upon my mind I took no steps, nor did the Government of which I was a member, take any steps for the purpose of interfering with the legislation of the diffe-rent Provinces, or forcing Dominion legislation on the country, or trying to centralize such powers in this Parliament."

And a little further on the right hon. gentleman added:

Sir, if there be any value in that decision, and there is every value "Sir, if there be any value in that decision, and there is every value in it, because it is the law of the land, there is no check at this moment in the Province of Ontario against the unlimited, unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors. This is not a matter we can play with. It is not a matter of policy; it is a matter of necessity. If we wish to prevent the uprestrained sale of intoxicating liquors we must legislate immedia-tely. For I take it that any man in this city or in any other part of On-tario can open a saloon and sell liquors, and there is not a court in the world can prevent him doing so " " If the Provincial Legis-latures are insufficient, if the Provinces have not power enough to intro-duce wholesome regulations in restraint of the sale of intoxicating liquors, we will supplement any such power as they have by bringing the full power and the full authority conferred upon this Parliament by the British North America Act to the aid of the different Provinces in the cause of morality, to prevent the mischiefs that are caused by the unrestrained use and sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the different Provinces of Canada."

So, Mr. Speaker, being under the impression that the Provincial Legislatures had not the necessary powers to enact wholesome regulations in restraint of the sale of intoxicating liquors, this Parliament considered as a matter not of policy but of necessity, as the Prime Minister stated, so to come to the aid of the different Provinces in the cause of public morality, and for that reason, Sir, it passed the License Act of 1883. But we know very well, Sir, to-day, that if that Act is allowed to stand on our Statute Book, so far from lending our aid to the Provinces, it will be, on the contrary, a cause of great embarrassment, for you are aware since the Act of 1883 was passed the Privy Council has rendered another decision in a similar case-the case of Hodge vs. the Queer, a decision which sets clearly that their lordships fully admit the constitutional right of the Provinces to legislate on this subject of the liquor traffic, not only for the purpose of raising a revenue, but also for the purpose of promoting good order and public morality within their borders, or the limits of the municipalities created by them. Let us see what their lordships say. First, they give the true meaning of their decision in Russell vs. the Queen, which had been misunderstood, and secondly, they affirm the right of the Provinces to legislate on this subject of the liquor traffic. I quote from the Legal News of the 19th of January last, pages 21, 22 and 23:

"The appellants contended that the Legislature of Ontario had no power to pass any Act to regulate the liquor traffic; that the whole power to pass such an Act was conferred on the Dominion Parliament and consequently taken from the Provincial Legislature by section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, and that it did not come within any of the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the Provincial Legislatures by section 92. The clause in section 91 which the Liquor License Act, 1877, was said to infringe was No. 2, the regulation of trade and commerce, and it was urged that the decision of this board in Russell vs. Regina was conclusive—that the whole subject of the liquor traffic was given to the Dominion Parliament, and consequently taken away from the Provincial Legislatures. It appears to their lordships, however, that the decision of this tribunal in that case has not the effect supposed, and that when properly considered, it should be taken rather as an authority in support of the judgment of the Court of Appeal. * *

of Appeal. * * . "It appears to their lordships that Russell vs. The Queen, when properly understood, is not an authority in support of the appellant's contention, and their lordships do not intend to vary or depart from the reasons expressed for their judgment in that case. The principle which that case and the case of the Citizens' Insurance Company illustrates is, that subjects which in one aspect and for one purpose, fall within section 92, may in another aspect, and for another purpose, fall within section 91."

In the following paragraph their lordships analyze the Ontario License Act, and they say :--

"Their lordships proceed now to consider the subject matter and legislative character of sections 4 and 5 of the Liquor License Act of 1877, cap. 181, Revised Statutes of Ontario. That Act is so far confined in its operation to municipalities in the Province of Ontarie, and is entirely local in its character and operation. It authorizes the appointment of License Commissioners, to act in each municipality, and empowers them to pass, under the name of resolutions, what we know as by laws, or rules to define the conditions and qualifications requisite for obtaining tavern or shop licenses for the sale by retail of spirituous liquors within the municipality; for limiting the number of licenses; for declaring that a limited number of persons qualified to have tavern licenses may be exempt from having all the tavern accommodations required by-law, and for the regulating of licenses in taverns and shops, for defining the duties and powers of License Inspectors, and to impose penalties for infraction of these resolutions. These seem to be all matters of a morely local nature in the Province, and to be similar to, though not identical in all respects with the powers then belonging to municipal institutions, under the previously existing laws passed by the Local Parliamenta.

Local Parliaments. "Their lordships consider that the powers intended to be conferred by the Act in question, when properly understood, are to make regulations in the nature of policy or municipal regulations of a merely local character for the good government of taverns, etc., licensed for the sale of liquors by retail, and such as are calculated to preserve in the municipality, peace and public decency, and repress drunkenness and disorderly and riotous conduct. As such they cannot be said to interfare with the general regulation of trade and commerce which belongs to the Dominion Parliament, and do not conflict with the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act which does not appear to have as yet been locally adopted

"The subjects of legislation in the Ontario Act of 1877, sections 4 and 5, seems to come within the heads Nos. 8, 15, and 16 of section 92, of the British North America Statute, 1867.

British North America Statute, 1007. "Their lordships are, therefore, of opinion that, in relation to sections 4 and 5 of the Act in question, the Legislature of Ontario acted within the powers conferred on it by the Imperial Act of 1867, and that in this respect there is no couffict with the powers of the Dominion Parliament."

So it is clear by the decision of the Privy Council that the Local Legislatures have the right, first to enact laws in reference to the sale of intoxicating liquors, to regulate the sale by retail of intoxicating liquors, to appoint License Commissioners, and to give to such Commissioners power to pass regulations to regulate the sale of liquors in taverne, saloons and hotels, and even to decide, furthermore, the qualifications required to obtain licenses; and finallywhich is the chief point-to limit, at the discretion of the Local Legislatures, or of the persons to whom they delegate their powers in reference to this question, the number of licenses, in the interest of temperance, or to preserve good order and public morality within their limits. I ask you if this does not comprehend power as complete as the Federal Act of last year can comprehend—a thing which I think nobody will deny. Now, Mr. Speaker, the circumstances having thus changed, the necessity of having the interference of this Parliament in order to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors has ceased to exist. Therefore am I not right in contending this Parliament can repeal the License Act of 1883 without contradicting itself? The reason given last year to justify the interference of this Parliament in that matter was, under the circumstances, a plausible one, but it seems to me that such interference would be a mere pretence to day. To the authority of the Privy Council on this point we must add the authority of the Court of Appeal of Ontario in the same case, and the authority of the Court of Appeal of Que-bec in the case of the City of Three Rivers vs. Sulte, all affirming without doubt the constitutional right of the Provincial Legislatures to legislate on this subject of the liquor traffic, not only for the purpose of raising a revenue, but also for the purpose of maintaining good order and public morality within the limits of the different Provinces. It is true, the Government have officially published the limits of the license districts created under the authority of this Act, as well as the names of the Commissioners required to carry it into operation. But, Sir, the setting aside of this measure would have no bad consequences of this Parliament thinks there are good reasons why it should abstain from interfering in that matter. Last year there were doubts as to whether or not it could abstain; but to day, I think, there cannot be any longer doubts that it can, and I hope the Government will take advantage of that circumstance to consider this Resolution on its merite. I do not wish to cast any blame on the Government for having put into operation a measure passed by this Parliament; but, on the other hand, I claim for the House the right to modify its views and its Acts according to circumstances. I trust that for that reason the Government will leave this an open question. If the Resolution was adopted, a Bill based on it would be introduced, and a clause might be inserted in it to the effect that licenses already granted under the Act it is proposed to repeal should be valid until May, 1885. in order to save loss and trouble and damages to parties holding such licenses. I come, now, Sir, to the second point : Is it expedient and desirable that we should repeal the License Act of 1883? I believe it is, if we are to accept the opinion which, apparently at least, guided the Govern-ment when they said, through the hon. First Minister, that they did not wish to ask this Parliament to interfere with the powers of Provincial Legislatures, nor to centralize such powers in this Parliament, and that the intention was only to come to the aid of the Provinces, which were then believed, on account of certain circumstances which have since totally changed, not to be possessed with the necessary powers to legislate on the subject of the liquor traffic. To-day, Sir, we know that they have such powers. We know, besides, that our so-called aid, seeing the change of circumstances would be more embarrassing than useful to the Provinces. I am not arguing against the Government. On the contrary, I am relying on their policy so clearly propounded in the words I have quoted, and it is in relying on that policy that I have made this motion. As a matter of justice, I am ready to allow them the merits of it. I may be asked if I propose to repeal the License Act of 1883, as being an unconstitutional law, or a law otherwise objectionable in itself. Well, Sir, I am not a constitutional authority but, I must have some kind of an opinion on constitutional matters, as they are forced upon our consideration; and my opinion on this subject is that, although the letter of the British North American Act perhaps permits the concurrent exercise of this power by the Federal Parliament and the Provincial Legislatures, its spirit, interpreted as it ought to be, in the sense of harmonizing the action of these different bodies, instead of placing them in antagonism, militates rather in favour of the Local Legislatures. As to the Act itself, I look upon it as a good step in the direct on of promoting the great cause of temperance, as are also the Dunkin Act, the Scott Act, and the Crooks Act. But, however good it may be, that is not a sufficient reason why we should assume to legislate on a question which ought rather to come properly under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures. The question is not whether we are of opinion that we can make better laws than the Provincial Legislatures on this or other subjects; but the question is whether it is wise for us to assume to legislate on questions which the Local Legislatures are fully qualified to deal with, for the good of their respective Provinces, and which, from the very nature of things, come rather within their jurisdiction than ours. Whatever may be the decision of this House, the authors of the Act of last year will not have worked in vain; for I have no doubt that the friends and advocates of temperance will avail themselves of it, in order to induce the Provincial Legislatures to improve their local laws in this respect, where there is any improvement possible. I understand that in some Provinces, at least in Manitoba, the local laws are better than our law of last year. In Ontario, on the other hand, I see that the Local Legislature is introducing into its own Act of 1877, several wise provisions from our Act of last year. What this Government and this Parliament can do in the cause of temperance is to impose heavy import and ex-cise duties on intoxicating liquors, and I have no doubt that, with the present Minister at the head of the Finance Department, that good part of the work will not be overlooked. I say, then, to the advocates of temperance: Turn your praiseworthy efforts towards the Provincial Governments and Legislatures; try to influence them in favour of your noble work, and you will have at the same time served two great causes, temperance and provincial autonomy. I have heard complaints made by hon. members from Ontario about the manner in which the Provincial License Act of that Province, known as the Crooks Act, is administered. It is alleged that the License Commissioners of the Government of Ontario are political partizans, and that they act with partiality in the discharge of their official duties. If that be true, Sir—and it is not necessary for me here to say whether it is true or not—I would suggest that the remedy is to be sought for, not in the interference of this Parliament, but in the Legislature which controls that Provincial necessary to have uniformity of legislation on the subject Mr. Houde.

Government; and if that first attempt fails to bring the desired redress, in must be sought for by an appeal to the electoral body, which is the final resort for the settlement of all like political matters We have heard leading Conservatives in this House and out of it telling the Liberals that these gentlemen ought to have patriotism enough to place public interests above party interests. Well, I would ask my hon. friends from Ontario in particular, and my hon. friends from all the Provinces in general, whether this is not a fit occasion to put that principle into practice, and to place provincial privileges above party exigencies. For we must be frank; we must ask ourselves what we would do if the Liberals were in power today at Ottawa; we must ask ourselves whether we would stick very much to that famous License Act of 1873. Perhaps I am asking a question a little indiscreet, and for that reason I will let everybody answer it for himself. For my part, I would not stick to it, and I do not stick to it, although it so happens that the Conservatives are to-day in power here. The change of men at the head of power does not affect the principles which must be the basis of all sound politics; what is wrong for a party cannot be right for another, and vice versa. My conclusion is that when it is recognized that the Provincial Legislatures have the necessary powers to deal with questions which necessarily do not belong to this Parliament, and more especially, as it is in this case, on a question on which the Local Legislatures have had the undoubted privilege for years of legislating, my opinion is this Parliament ought to abstain from interfering, although, as it may be claimed in this case, it has perhaps a strict legal right to enterfere. In acting so, we would create sound precedents that would determine the broad spirit in which our constitution ought to be interpreted, and we would make our constitution what it ought to be after its model the British Constitution. For what is the British Constitution, if not the whole of established precedents or respected usages passed into law rather than the letter of a written law? Besides, the letter of our Constitution is far from being clear on more than one point. Take for instance section 91 with sub-section 3, and section 92 with sub-section'2 of the British North America Act, and you will see that they exclude each other totally. In fact section 92 with sub-section 2 reads as follows:

"In each Province the Legislature may make laws in relation to matters coming within the class of subjects hereinafter enumerated—that is to say direct taxation within the Province in order to the raising of a revenue for Provincial purposes."

On the other hand, section 91 with sub-section 3 reads thus:

"It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the class of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces, and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of the section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the class of subjects next hereinafter enumerated : that coming within the class of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say, the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation."

We have it declared in this constitutional Act that the right of raising money by any mode or system of taxation belongs exclusively to the Federal Parliament, and also that it belongs exclusively to the Local Legislatures to impose direct taxation within the Provinces. It is, therefore, obvious that the letter of our Constitution has nothing well defined in this respect, and that we must look for the spirit from a reasonable standpoint, and this applies more especially in reasonable standpoint, and this applies more especially in regard to the question now occupying our attention. We must not allow ourselves to be deluded by the idea that it is of liquor traffic throughout the Dominion. What does it matter whether the saloons in Victoria, B.C., do or do not close exactly at the same hour as those in Halifax, N.S.? But it matters much whether this Parliament shall or shall not assume, when it can help it, to grant licenses and to regulate the sale of liquors by retail in municipalities created by and holding their powers and privileges from Local Legislatures and having the constitutional right to impose by laws and regulations for the preservation of order and public morality within their limits. I believe that the time has arrived when we should unite together not one party alone, but both parties, to recognize and affirm the importance of Provincial Legislatures, and surround their autonomy by the proper safeguards. Legislatures which have to deal with the grave subjects of property, civil rights, education, religious liberty and the like, are not inferior in importance even to this Parliament itself, which has chiefly to legislate on financial, commercial and other material interests. We have seen, since the establishment of Confederation, the Lientenant-Governors of Provinces denied the right of having the title of Excellency applied to them, although it has never been thought that the dignity of the President of the United States, for instance, was lessened by the fact that the State Governors bear the title of "Excellency." We have seen the Ministers of the Provinces denied the right of bearing the title of "honourable" after their having ceased to be Ministers. We have seen it decided that Provincial Ministers, even during their holding of office, rank after simple members of the House of Commons in official ceremonies. All that and similar measures which have been adopted surely tended to minimize, so to speak, our Provincial institutions, and yet the Provinces are and must be considered sovereign within their sphere of action. It is not only my humble opinion; it is also the opinion of the highest tribunal of the land, the Privy Council itself, which, in this same decision rendered in the case of Hodge against the Queen, says:

"When the British North America Act enacted that there should be a Legislature for Ontario, and that its Legislative Assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the Province and for Provincial purposes in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92, it conferred powers, not in any sense to be exercised by delegation from, or as sgents of, the Imperial Parliament, but authority as plenary and as ample, within the limits prescribed by section 92, as the Imperial Parliament, in the plenitude of its power, possessed and could bestow."

So much, Mr. Speaker, for those-and I allude especially to eminent jurists outside of this House, having great influence on the politics of the country—so much, I say, for those who try to assimilate the Provincial Legislatures to mere municipal bodies. I need not add, Mr. Speaker, that those who, for the reasons which I have just so imperfectly developed, or for other similar reasons, believe that the License Act of 1883 should be repealed, could not approve or sanction the course which I have heard suggested outside of this House, and which would consist in enforcing the said Act for the sake of having a test case of its constitutionality before the Supreme Court and the Privy Council. I cannot see what good could be derived from that course, but I can well apprehend the evil which it could bring on. First, it would be to express a grave doubt about the constitutionality of what this Parliament did last year. It would be to question the constitutionality of what this Parliament did last year on the recommendation of the Government in passing the said Act. For my part, l have not questioned that point, because I did not think it was necessary to do so in order to argue my cause, and also because I did not wish to make this Parliament and this Government appear inconsistent with themselves. But I am much afraid that they will appear inconsistent with them- laws on this subject; and of New Brunswick I can also selves if they adopt the course I am speaking of. I wonder) speak from the announcement made lately in the Speech who, it is well known, like so much the centralizing views of the learned Judges of the Supreme Court-

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Hear, hear.

Mr. HOUDE. I wonder how they will relish the idea of preparing test cases of that kind for the pleasure of affording an opportunity of jeopardizing the privileges of the Provinces. Besides, the step I have just alluded to could have only, at least in my mind, this meaning, that this Parliament, although it is convinced to-day that the Provincial Legislatures have the constitutional right and the necessary powers to deal with the subject of liquor traffic for other ends than revenue purposes, wishes to supersede that right, to supersede those powers, if it can only obtain some legal sanction for that attempt, notwithstanding the official declarations of last year which I have quoted, notwithstanding the ministerial protestations of last year, which I have also quoted, that, when absolute necessity did not require it, this Government and this Parliament did not intend and did not wish to interfere with the legislation of the Provinces on the subject of liquor traffic. I ask myself why in the world we should need the Supreme Court or the Privy Council to tell us what our dispositions are or ought to be towards the Provinces. We have here, to day, to choose between a friendly and generous attitude, or a hostile and selfish attitude towards the Provinces, and our votes on this question will tell. It becomes us to avoid side issues, and to pronounce ourselves on the main issue squarely, like men who are not afraid of showing their true colours. Consequently, I think that the duty of every hon. member of this House is clear. Those who are in favour of curtailing the privileges of the Provinces as far as strict legality or the obscure letter of our Constitution will permit it, or the centralizing views of high tribunals will allow it, those gentleman-whose honesty I do not intend to contest for a moment, for opinions are free on such a question as this-will try to keep that License Act on our Statute Book, will try to go before the Supreme Court and the Privy Council with the hope of obtaining some sanction of one kind or another for their centralizing policy, if they think such a policy to be the wisest, and I suppose there are hon. members who honestly think it is the wisest. But other members, entertaining different opinions and principles on this question will say, this License Act of 1883 is no longer a necessity, therefore we will vote for its repeal without looking for any loophole to hide our responsibility. Before resuming my seat, I must call attention to a danger which, I believe, threatens us if we do not repeal the License Act of 1883. We are aware that the Privy Council, the Court of Appeal of Ontario, the Court of Appeal of Quebec, have rendered decisions, all affirming the right of the Provincial Legislatures to legislate on the subject of liquor traffic, for the purpose not only of raising a revenue, but also for the purpose of advancing the great cause of temperance and protecting good order and public morality within their limits. Knowing they have that right, it is not likely that the Provinces will abandon the exercise of it, and thus sacrifice a portion of their autonomy. That will not be done at least in three Provinces, I mean Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick. Of Quebec I can speak through personal knowledge of the popular feeling there, a feeling so general, so strong, so deeply rooted in the hearts of the mass of the people that any Local Government who would be blind enough to ignore it, would be sure to be swept away from power upon the first occasion presenting itself. I can speak of Ontario from the determination of its Legislature to enforce, by all means, its own -I see my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Landry) from the Throne, that the Legislature of that Province before me; I have him in my eye-I wonder how that hon. would be asked to protest against the enforcement of the gentleman and many other hon. members of this House, Federal License Act, 1883. More than that, the capital of Nova Scotia, the city of Halifax, has also pronounced against the advisability of enforcing that Act. Here, then, Sir, is a conflict, a serious conflict, which we are called upon to avoid, and which we can avoid without lowering our dignity. For we are here as the guardians of the autonomy of the Provinces as well as the interests of the Dominion at large, and we would be acting in the interests of both by declaring that it was through necessity alone that the License Act, 1883, was passed, and by declaring that this Parliament does not wish nor intend to interfere with the legislation of the Provinces in respect of the liquor traffic as long as, in the words of the First Minister in the course of the debate on the Address, last year, the Provincial laws obtain in their respective limits; and in giving, in fine, to the British North America Act, the broad and generous interpretation which alone can render its working harmonious and truly beneficial to the people of this country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must congratulate my hon. friend, the mover of this Resolution on his re-appearance amongst us, and I hope that he may long remain here. I may also congratulate him on the moderation of his remarks and the temperate way in which he has discussed this temperance matter. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentle-man has reasoned from beginning to end as if there was a disposition in this House to interfere with the rights, powers and privileges of the Local Legislatures. I am quite sure that I am speaking on behalf of my colleagues as well as on behalf of the party to which we belong and who works with us, in saying that there is no intention whatever to interfere with the rights, powers and privileges of the Local Legislatures. We are all in favour of the autonomy of the Provinces. From the beginning I had much to do with this Act of Confederation. It is a measure of which we all have reason to be proud. and I, who was actively engaged in arranging the preliminaries of that Act and went to England to secure its passage, may say to the hon. gentleman and to this House that I would not have remained a single day in London attending to those duties if I had thought for a moment that this Act would affect or weakon the autonomy of the Provinces. On the contrary, we took care that the autonomy of the Provinces should be secured, that their rights, privileges and powers should be defined in order that we might not have repeated in this country the difficulties and struggles that had recently occurred in the United States, and had caused the shedding of so much blood. Since that time I have always been a member of the Conservative Governments which, for most of the time, have conducted the affairs of this country, and at no time have my colleagues or myself had any desire or disposition to interfere with or curtail the rights and powers of the Local Legislatures; on the contrary, when there was a doubt, we always gave the benefit of it to the weaker body, to the Local Legislature. I would remind the hon. gentleman that when the Bill which has become the Act entitled : "An Act respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors and the issuing of licenses therefore," was introduced into this House, it was founded upon Resolutions that had been prepared, not by a Minister of the Crown, but by a large Committee composed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, a Committee that had worked for weeks and weeks, and that had the advantage of all the experience that could be brought to bear upon this subject, and the result of their labours received the sanction of this Parlia-ment. The object we had in view is stated by the preamble, which is very short and which reads:

"Whereas it is desirable to regulate the traffic and the sale in intoxishould be unitorm throughout the Dominion, and the same should be unitorm throughout the Dominion, and these provision should be made with regard thereto for the better preservation of peace and order; therefore Her Mejorty enacts; etc." Mr. HOUDN,

That was the object of this measure. It was for the purpose of making the law with respect to the traffic and the sale of intoxicating liquors uniform throughout the Dominion, and secondly, for the better preservation of peace and order. These two objects are not destroyed to day, they have not disappeared. The same reasons exist to day which guided us then in trying to regulate the traffic and the sale of intoxicating liquors, and in making the law uniform, and also to preserve peace and order throughout the Dominion. These objects still remain good objects, and this House and Parliament decided, after full deliberation, after examining and studying the subject for weeks and months, that this should be the law of the land, and it was accordingly made the law of the land. Now my hon, friend says that at that period we had only the judgment in the case of Russell vs. the Queen, that there was a doubt as to our jurisdiction, but that that doubt has since disappeared by the judgment of Hodge vs. the Queen. Well, Mr. Speaker, these decisions were both concerning certain laws that were in force then, and the questions decided by those judgments had nothing to do with and did not affect the present law. This law was not en cause, there was no question about it before the Privy Council; therefore, those judgments do not bear upon this law, and do not affect it. No court of justice has yet decided whether this is a constitutional law or not, whether it is ultra vires or not. We have had no decision on that point yet, and why should we, the Parliament of Canada, we the representatives of the people in the House of Commons, declare that because a judgment has been rendered under another law different from this one, we will accept that judgment as rendered upon this law, and say that this law is not constitutional, and confess, after a period of but a few months, that we were in error last year in passing this law, and that we submit to a judgment which really has nothing to do with this law? I say no, Mr. Speaker, we should not put ourselves in that position; and no doubt the hon. gentleman, when he thinks again about it, will see that it would be doing exactly what he says we would be doing if we adopted another course, of which I shall speak in a few minutes. He says this would be questioning the legislation of last year; it would be not only questioning, but it would be deciding here by our votes that this law is not law, that we had no right to pass that Act, and we are very sorry for having done so; we immediately pass a Bill this Session, send it to the Senate, and ask the Governor General to concur in it that it may be placed on the Statute-Book, because we are now of the opinion that the law which we took so much trouble to pass last year, after duly considering and weigh-ing it well, is a mere piece of waste paper, and an Act which we had no power to pass. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that is the course we should adopt respecting a solemn Act. We should not say that this judgment on a case under the Crooks Act, the Scott Act, or the Dunkin Act, is a final decision on our own Act, respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors and the issue of licenses, the liquor License Act of 1883. The mover of the Resolution goes further, and enters into the grave question of the interference of—he did not say whom—but the interference of some one with the Provinces; and he remarked that since Contederation, for example, the question of titles and pre-cedence has been regulated against the Provinces. The hon. gentleman must know, and no doubt he will admit it, that the question of titles and precedence is not a question settled by us, or one with which we have anything to do. It is a prerogative of the sovereign of this realm, and what the Queen has done was no doubt well weighed in the Councils of the Empire; and though we may differ about certain details of the tables of tables of precedence and titles, nevertheless they have been sent to us in that form from England and Her Majesty, the Queen, has said these shall be tables of precedence. What does it matter whether the Lieutenant-Governor of our Province, and not of our Province alone, but of all the Provinces, has the title of His Honour or His Excellency? I must say that at the beginning of Confederation the title of His Excellency was given to Lieutenant Governors, and I know that more than one of them would have preferred that at once the title to which they were properly entitled, that of His Honour, should have been given them; because, after all, it is no compliment to give a man a title which he is not entitled to bear. In this world each man has to take his place, and the Queen has determined there shall be certain rank among the public men of this country. Her Majesty has also determined what shall be the position of the Governor-General, the rank of the Commander of the Forces, of a Lieutenant-General, a Major-General or a Colonel; of the Ambassador when he comes here from Washington, of the Bishops as well as Ministers of the Crown and others. These tables of precedence have not been settled by us, I repeat, but were settled in England and sent out No doubt in England they thought they were doing here. it for the best, and they must have followed certain rules established in such cases. At all events I do not think the fact as to whether a Provincial Minister comes after a member of the House of Commons, or before him, lowers him in any respect. His position is always the same. He is a Minister of his Province, he has his position, his title, his power and his influence; and whether he comes after me or before me matters little-he has always the position which the constitution gives him. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, this question of title or precedence should weigh much in this matter, though I must say if I had had to make the list, I might have made some modifications in the direction to which the hon. gentleman referred. But as I had nothing to do with it, it is not a matter on which I am required to give an opinion. The mover of the motion has also referred to the Constitutional Act, and said there are certain matters which are not perfectly clear. Unfortunately it is about the same with all laws passed, even by this Parliament, and it is also the case in the English Parliament, and will continue, no doubt, down to the end of the chapter. These laws are made by men, and we do the best we can in framing them, nevertheless there are always loop-holes. Some people say that as we lawyers have something to do with the framing of the laws we try to make difficulties in order that lawyers may have a chance to live. No doubt that is a great calumny on the profession; I do not know that such a case ever occurred, but when difficulties happen we are all very glad to secure a good lawyer in order that the difficulty may disappear. My hon. friend (Mr. Houde) spoke, among other things, of the 91st and 92nd clauses of the British North America Act of 1867, and he sought to show that the third sub-section of the 91st clanse gives to the Parliament of Canada power to raise money by any mode or system of taxation, and that the 92nd clause gives the exclusive power to the Provincial Legislatures to impose direct taxation in order to raise revenue for Provincial purposes. I do not see any contra-diction between the two clauses. One gives to Local Legis-latures the power of direct taxation within the Provinces, for the raising of revenue for Provincial purposes. The other clause provides that the Dominion Parliament shall have power to raise money by any mode of taxation.

Mr. HOUDE. It is an exclusive right in each case.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Exclusive no doubt. The Local Legislatures have, under this clause, the power to impose direct taxation for Provincial purposes, and for that only; but the Parliament of Canada has to deal with all the Provinces, has to raise money for large public works, and all purposes, and it is given power to raise money by any mode or system of taxation. It raises money by Inland Revenue, by Customs, and by direct taxation as well; but that does not prevent the Local Legislatures raising money by direct taxation. Some have tried it to a very small extent I am glad to say, and they never found their Acts set aside for that reason. So I do not think that although the British North America Act is not a perfect Act, and although it is one in which certain flaws may be found, yet all in all we must congratulate our selves on the result of that legislation. It is a good Act and though certain difficulties will occur in the working of it, they have been very small indeed in the past. To revert to the motion of the hon. member by which he wishes to declare that the Liquor License Act of 1883, should be repealed, I must say that I do not agree with the hon. gentleman upon that point. I do not think the Liquor License Act should be repealed. I think we should put ourselves in the same position in which we were by the laws existing previous to the Act of last Session-that is the Crooks Act, the Dunkin Act, and the Scott Act-that is we should have the best judicial or authoritative judgment on the subject. We should know whether this Act is one which we have a right to pass, whether we have gone beyond our powers, whether it really infringes upon the rights, and privileges, and powers of the Local Legislatures. If we had a decision of that kind we would be in a position to decide what is the next step to take. If the law is declared unconstitutional, ultra vires, that law will have to be put aside, and it will be for Parliament to say whether something else should take its place, and how far we should go. Under these circumstances, I move in amendment to the motion, that all the words after "that" be replaced by the following :---

"In the opinion of this House it is expedient that the question of the competence of Parliament to pass the Liquor License Act of 1883, should be submitted with all convenient speed to the Supreme Court of Canada, or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or both."

By this means we will obtain a decision from a proper tribunal. We can obtain a decision from the Supreme Court on the question being put by the Government to them, and if we are not satisfied with that, we may go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or we may have a decision from both; but at all events we will be in the position of obtaining an authoritative decision on the constitutionality of this law. My hon. friend may say : what will happen in the meantime? He may say there will be suits entered and penalties imposed, and the law may be worked in that direction, at the same time that it may not be constitutional. I may say that the Government intend bringing in a Bill to amend the law during this Session, and that one of the provisions of that Bill will be that until a decision is obtained from the proper tribunal, as stated in my amendment, the penalties of the Act shall not have effect. They will not be exacted during that period, and thus nobody will suffer. Some of my friends have spoken about the time for the reception of applications for licenses under the Act. They say the time is so short that parties who wished to apply for their licenses had not time to do so. Well, the intention of the Government is to provide for an extension of the time, and there will be several other amendments proposed which I need not dwell upon just now. I hope, therefore, the House will accept the amendment which I have just put in your hands. It is one which should be accepted because it is a reasonable one. It is one we should adopt out of self respect to ourselves and to this Parliament. We passed this law hardly ten months ago, and I think we should not repeal it without having a decision of a judicial tribunal, and when we have that defully and provide some other remedy, if a remedy is required. I hope, under the circumstances, that the amendment will

Mr. AMYOT. I have heard with a great deal of pleasure the declaration of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the effect that this Government is opposed to the interference with the powers of the Local Legislatures. I believe that such is the case, because if I did not believe it I would not give my humble support to the present Administration. But they are to day in a position to give proof of that disposition. We have to-day before us a decision of the highest judicial authority of the Empire, the Privy Council, which declares that the regulation of the trade and sale of liquors is within the jurisdiction of the Provinces-that they are within clause 92 of the British North America Act, which says the power is an exclusive power. If that power pertains to the Local Legislatures, it is an exclusive power, and if it is exclusive, it cannot belong to others. This is obvious. Could I say to a man: Sir, I have a house, I give it to you, and then turn round to another man and say: I have this house, I give it to you? No; there is only one power according to section 92, and if that power fails us, then it is exclusively in favour of the Local Legislatures. The decision that has been given is as clear and plain as possible; and this Parliament, which is not in favour of interference with the Local Legislatures, which had not that decision before it last Session, should take this position, that in view of its love for the Local Legislatures and its jealousy for their exclusive powers, it will not again fight this question through the courts, or expose the power of the Local Legislatures to be interfered with, or expose this Parliament to the humiliation of having its law of last year declared unconstitutional. Such is the position of the case. Either the decision will be favourable to the Local Legislatures or to the Federal Legis-lature. If it is favourable to the Federal Legislature, it will be adverse to the last decision given by the Privy Council, adverse to the exclusive power which we claim for the Local Legislatures and adverse to that love for Provincial autonomy which is professed by this Government. On the other hand, a decision which would be favourable to the Local Legislatures would be equivalent to saying to the House of Commons: The law that you passed was ultra vires; you had no power to pass it; you committed a blunder, and you come twice or three times to us to ask for decisions to tell you that you are wrong; you have been declared wrong by the Courts of Ontario, by the Courts of Quebec, and by the Privy Council, and you come to be declared wrong again. That is the position, Sir. For my part I believe that when Confederation was accepted, the Local Legislatures had all the powers possible; but they consented, for the sake of the new confederation, to delegate some of their powers; but the understanding was that the Provinces would retain enough power and enough autonomy to accomplish the share that was given them by the Confederation Act. That is the reason why the word "exclu-sively" is put into this section 92. It was well understood that within the limits of its attributes every Province should be supreme, and that there would be no possibility of interference; it was understood that the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario or the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, or those of the other Provinces, should represent Her Majesty the Queen just as fully as the Governor General in the Parliament of Canada. Well, the judgment given says that our local laws are within that exclusive jurisdiction, and when we say that we love that autonomy of the Provinces, we should not expose that autonomy and those powers to be denied by the Courts. Last year, when we were asked to pass a License Bill, I felt surprise and hesitation. For 17 years the laws of the Local Legislatures had been administered in the different Provinces without anybody grumbling, these Provinces know- a little part which is constitutional in the centre of an Act ing what was for their welfare and harmony, and col- all the rest of which is unconstitutional. There are certain lecting revenues under these laws; but we were told by a gentleman, whom we are in 'the habit, with good right, of been touched. If a concurrent power exists, as SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN.

tainty, and we were asked to pass a general law. In the presence of that interpretation of a decision of the highest Conrt of the British Émpire, we consented. We were told distinctly in the Speech from the Throne that this was the only reason for passing that law. Well, we are told by the Privy Council in another case that that decision was not properly and rightly understood; and the last decision of that Court says that the laws passed by the Local Legislatures for nearly all the objects mentioned in our law are constitutional. What is then our duty towards the dignity of this Parliament and towards the welfare of the country? Our duty is to say: Well, we have been led astray by a decision of the highest tribunal in the country, which we did not understand properly; and, as we have acted once under the dictation of that Court, we will act a second time under its dictation, especially when the second dictation is much clearer and more to the point than the first. Our duty becomes imperative; we should say that we will restore to the Provinces their autonomy, their power, their resources. As to the unconstitutionality of the law, I have no doubt; and it was only in view of that decision of Russell vs. the Queen, that a doubt, or rather a hesitation came into my mind. If you look at section 8, of clause 92, you will see that municipal institutions are assigned to the Provinces. What is the keeping of good order in a hotel? What is the closing of the doors of an hotel at a certain hour? Municipal organization, nothing else. What is the granting of licenses? Municipal organization. Then if you look at section 13, you will see that property and civil rights belong exclusively to the Local Legislatures. What is the right of selling liquor or merchandise or timber in the country? It is a civil right; and when the Federal Goverment goes into a Province and says that nobody but such and such a party will be allowed to sell liquor, it infringes on the rights of the Local Government in the matter of property and civil rights. If you look at section 9, you will see that another exclusive right of the Local Governments is to issue shop, saloon, tavern, auctioneer, and other licenses, in order to raise a revenue for provincial or municipal purposes. What have we been saying in our Act? We say that to obtain a license, a man must pay a certain amount. That amount will go first to pay the salaries of municipal officers; and secondly, it will go into the muni-cipal fund. What right has this Parliament to interfere in the raising of money for municipal purposes? We have no such power. We are infringing upon the municipal institutions; we are infringing upon the civil rights of the Local Provinces; we are infringing upon the right of the Local Parliaments to institute those officers and to provide money for them. That is one of the reasons why this law is unconstitutional. We have no power to fix the number of licenses, because that is a municipal affair. Each municipality knows better than another the number of licenses We form an immense country, required within its limits. and in some of the Provinces which are two, three or four degrees more to the north than others, they may require more licenses; and much more liquor may be drunk there than in the southern Provinces, yet this Parliament is asked to declare that a certain amount would be fixed for each place. We have no right to do so. It was understood each Province would regulate for itself all matters concerning its municipal There is, perhaps, only one feature of institutions. this Act which is constitutional, and that is the part which provides against the adulteration of liquor. That may come properly within the clause relating to traffic and commerce, but I do not see why we should insert such reasons why the Act should be repealed which have not yet is respecting, that the decision in the case of Russell vs. the

claimed, I ask myself can there be two or three fathers with the same authority in the one house, two Kings in the same Kingdom? And why should we contri-bute to the existence of that concurrent power? Why go on with a system that provides first for the general organization-three commissioners and one license inspector, and notices in the Gazette and at the church doors and elsewhere, a very elaborate system under the Federal Act-and then go to the local system where licenses are required for local revenue, and where you have license inspector, notices of applications signed by a certain number of electors and so on; you pay a certain amount and then you have to go to the municipalty itself and there pay another amount; so that there are three different necessary modes to be taken to obtain a license. And at what cost? At the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the country. I do not see why we should keep up that system since we admit the Local Legislatures have all the necessary powers. The very proposition made by the hon. Minister of Public Works is the best proof that in the eyes of the Government there is a doubt. They are not certain that the law is constitu-tional; they are no longer certain after this judgment in the Privy Council, and they want the case decided. I have and have always had as much confidence in the members of the Administration who are lawyers as in any Judge of the land, and I think it is not fair to ask us to vote that we cannot be bound by their opinion. If we cannot be bound by their opinion, I think I owe it to my dignity, as a representative of the people and as a member of the legal profession, to take my own opinion and go according to it. Why go before the Courts? Because the Courts have not decided? If they have not, why did we pass the law last year? Have they decided? That is what is pretended since; then let us abide by the last decision. In whose interest should we go before the Courts ? It was insinuated slightly by the hon. gentleman that it was for the benefit of the lawyers. Well, I do not see any force of argument in that, nor do I see any great compliment to the profession to which I am proud to belong. Are we not able, when there are so many lawyers and legislators in this House, to decide that question for ourselves? Let us take the law as given by the Privy Council, and as inserted in the British North American Act, and we will have enough to guide ourselves. There is another reason. I said in the beginning that when Confederation was created, it was understood everywhere that sufficient resources would be given to the Local Governments to accomplish their share in Confederation. This Act that we passed has been declared by the Treasurer of one Province-I am not sure whether it has not been declared by the treasurers of two Provinces—that it will diminish the Provincial revenues by over $100,000 a year. We know that the Confederation Act, which is as perfect as a human thing may be, yet contains some little mistakes. We did not foresee that the revenues of the Local Government would diminish, and their expenses increase, and we all know that since 1867 that has been going on, and that to-day some of the Provinces are not in a position to educate their people, to keep up their reformatory schools, gaols and asylums, to open colonization roads or do their share in the work of Confederation. This is the time not to take away any of their resources but to give them more. This Act takes away from their resources. Is that in the name of autonomy and devotion to the Local Governments? It may be, but I admit that I cannot understand it at all in that way. But they say we will give give back the penalties or we will not exact them. Let there be one or two suits by municipalities, let there be some two or three hundred thousand dollars expended, and then we will come before this Parliament and say refund that please. Well, I would have preferred an amendment which I was expecting declaring this law would be suspended for one or two years. There is one legislation I would prefer in the name of our love for the Local Parliaments. I would like this Parliament to say that as there may be a doubt in the Confederation Act, we will give voluntarily to the Local Pro-vinces all the powers we can pretend to have. That would be a proof of devotion to the local autonomy of the Provinces that we could understand. The object of the Bill, we are told, is to make the laws uniform. But if I mistake not this would be legislative union. What do we mean by legislative union if not that the laws of all the Provinces and of every part of the Dominion should be uniform. But that is not what we want; Ontario does not want her laws to be like ours, nor do we want ours to be like hers. We have been born and brought up with certain laws, we are in the habit of living in a certain way, and we do not want to change; so that is no reason for us to pass that law, and if we consented last year it was because the Government declared that without it there would be anarchy. To day, however, that reason has disappeared. Uniformity-well, if you want it for liquor licenses, you will want it for nearly every one of the powers given by the 92nd section of the Act. You will want it for the lands; you will want it for the gaols. For the gaols it would appear more plausible. Those who go into the gaols have been generally coudemned under the laws of the Dominion. There would be more reason then to say: as they have been guilty under the general law, we should make all the gaols uni-form. Though power has been given to each Pro-vince in reference to municipalities, would it be just to say that all the municipalities will be under the same system? But we do not want it. We want our own system. Every Province wants its own system. Then, as to the incorporation of companies, how often have I not heard in this House and in the Private Bills Committee, we must pass this Incorporation Bill of a local society, because it will give universal law, general law, in every part of the Dominion for it? But the answer is that every local Province wants to have its own incorporation of companies, wants to regulate that itself, as it pleases. And then, there is the solemnization of marriage, would we want also a uniform law in that? What would be the object? All that would tend to a Legislative Union, and that is what we do not want, and we will not have it, and as long as we may oppose it, we will oppose it. I am sure the sentiment of this country at large is formed well enough for that. I think we may live happily under the Confederation if it is properly interpreted, if the rights of every Province are kept, if each one stands within its own jurisdiction and there is no infringement; but, if there is infringement, if the door is opened to that, if there is not sufficient resistance, if we begin in the evil path once, we do not know where it will end, we will be exposed to constant danger in regard to Confederation, and the happiness and prosperity of Confederation will disappear fatally. We do not know where it will end: perhaps it might end not in the way that all those great patriots who established Conthe way that all those great patricts who established Con-federation were then dreaming and hoping. We have been told—I speak of it only incidentally, and to answer it— that the title is nothing, "Excellency," or "Honour," or "Gentleman," or gentleman-barber I suppose—that makes no difference! Well, I have not been brought up in that idea. I think under the British Crown titles are something, because they come from the Crown-the source, the fountain of all dignity-and the nearer a man is to the Crown the higher generally is his title. We are not here a republic; I am not going to discuss whether we should be or not, but we are under the British Flag, and we like it, we like to live under that flag and under that Crown; and I say that under that Crown a title is something, and I am most happy to see in this House, gentlemen, our compatriots. who have been leading a life honourable, intelligent and patriotic enough to have deserved those titles. I see some on both sides of the House, and I am only desirous to see all whom I see in my presence on both sides who deserve it, receive titles as soon as possible. The more titles we have and the better titles we have on this continent, the better it is for the tie with the British Empire. It is to be deplored that the British Crown was not advised that, in giving a title to the Lieutenant-Governors, they should have given the same title of "His Excellency" as to the Governor-General. The reason is obvious. The Lieutenant-Governor represents the Queen; so does the Governor-General. He is not appointed in the same way, it is true, but when appointed he represents the Queen. Why is he not as excellent as the other? He has not the same attribution, he has not the same matters to deal with; true. but, in every matter dealt with the by Local Government, he acts as authoritatively as the Governor General when he acts under the Federal authority. So both are entitled to the title of "His Excellency," and it is to be deplored, from a conservative point of view and from the point of view of British respect, British institutions, these title have not been given. I had not intended to speak of that, and only do so because certain words have been spoken about it. I could not allow them to pass without saying from a conservative point of view what I think of titles. The most important objection, I think, urged by the Minister of Public Works is this-it is true that in the Russell case there was a judgment, and it is true that in the Hodge case there was another judgment, but, he says, on this liquor Act there was no judgment. Well, are we going in every act of our life to go before the Court and say: "I want a judgment!" When it is decided that a promissory note signed in such a way is valid, are all those who have to pay similar promissory notes to go before the Courts and say: "I want a judgment before paying !" When there is a judgment that has a general bearing, that says the laws passed by such and such a Province are constitutional, legal, and valid, when that judgment is given by the highest authority of the land, why is it necessary to go back? We said here last Session that these laws were not valid. All right for the time being. Since that, we have a judgment which decides that these laws of the Local Legislatures are valid. We cannot presume that the Privy Council will stultify itself. It has given its decision as clearly as possible. Why is it necessary to go back and say: "Was your statement in the Hodge case true? Did you study your case? Are you sure you are not mistaken?" That is the position we take in my humble opinion. That is my humble way of looking at it. I give my reasons humbly and frankly as I think I should do before this honourable House. I hope, with the mover of the Address, that this will be left an open question, but, open or not, I cannot disguise my opinion; I had to tell you what I think about the question, more especially when the question is one that affects the vitality of the Confederation itself.

Mr. FLEMING. When the License Act of 1883 was under the consideration of this House last year, I had the honour to draw the attention of the House to a proposition to which I beg to draw the attention of the House again. On the motion for the third reading of the Bill, I had the honour to propose in amendment:

DOBOUT to propose in amendment: "That the Provincial Legislatures have since Confederation exercised legislative powers in the regulation of the issue of licenses for the sale of intexicating liquons, and the hours and certain other incidents of the sale; that the Appeal Courts of Ontario and Quebec have each decided in favour of the exercise by the Provinces of the Dominion of this jurisdiction, and the Appeal Court has further determined that the judgment of the Privy Qouncil in Russell and the Queen does not decide that the Provincial Legislatures have not this jurisdiction; that the questions involved are now under the consideration of the Supreme Court of Canada and will shortly be brought under the consideration of the Privy Council; that the Parliament of Canada should not assume jurisdiction as proposed by the said Bill until the question has been settled by the court of last resort."

In view of what has transpired since that motion was pro- separate Legislatures. But, Sir, what is proposed? Lest year posed, I submit that it would have been prudent for this we were told by the First Minister in the debate upon the Mr. Anyor.

House then to have adopted it, because I see to-day that the hon. Minister of Pablic Works is proposing for the consideration of this House something very like what was proposed then, because after that proposition was rejected and after the License Act was adopted, the Privy Council has given the decision which that motion indicated, and that decision is to the effect that the Provincial Legislatures had the jurisdiction which they had exercised since Confederation. Now, Sir, there is nobody in this Honse who will undertake to say that the late decision of the Privy Council in Hodge and the Queen is not a decision assuring full power to the Provincial Legislatures for dealing fully with shop and tavern licenses, and for the complete regulation of the liquor traffic. But, Sir, it appears to me that in that state of the law, and with these facts before us, we ought at once to retrace the steps that were taken last year under a mistaken notion of what the law was, because at that time this House assumed that the previous decision in Russell and the Queen was to the effect that the Provincial Legislatures had not the jurisdiction which they had exercised since Confederation. I notice in the observations made by the hon. Minister of Public Works to this House that he says that the Act of last Session was not the Act of the Government, but the Act of the Committee; yet this House took its law from the Government; this House took its law from the declaration contained in the Speech from the Throne; this House took its law from the First Minister when he declared that there was a stern necessity for the interference of this Parliament, otherwise there would be unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors through. out the Dominion. Now, Sir, that was clearly a mistake. The hon. First Minister had, at the opening of this Session, admitted himself that it was a mistake. It was not then the fact that there would be the unrestrained traffic in intoxicating liquors unless this Parliament interfered. That reason for the legislation of last Session has been removed. and if there were that determination, that desire which is declared by hon. gentlemen in this House, to allow to the Provinces the exercise of those rights which they always have exercised-those rights which the people of all the Provinces supposed they had a right to exercise when they entered into this Confederation contract -if there were that desire upon the part of members, they would rejoice at this opportunity of retracing the steps that were taken last Session. But, Sir, I am sorry to say that there is a disposition in some quarters, at least, to assert a jurisdiction -- not on the ground of necessity, not for the reason that was put forward last year for the interference of this Parliament, not because the Provinces have not plenary power in this respect-but we are asked to adopt the amendment to the hon. member's Resolution for the purpose of ascertaining if perchance some court cannot give power to another Legislature than the one we always supposed had that power. Now, Sir, is that the policy? The Act of last Session recognized the propriety, if the First Minister's law had been right, of this Parliament interfering. I doubted that law at the time, but of course I would not presume to put my opinion against the opinion of the First Minister on a constitutional question. However, it does appear that even great constitu-tional lawyers may sometimes be mistaken in the law. If we had a declaration now from the First Minister, and from the Minister of Public Works, that they would gladly give the Provincial Legislatures that jurisdiction which nearly everybedy in this Dominion—because I execpt the hon. First Minister—believed that they had a right to exercise, then I could conceive that the Government here were doing something to remove the suspicion that exists in some minds, at all events, that this Government and this Parliament are encroaching in every possible way upon the autonomy and jurisdiction of the separate Legislatures. But, Sir, what is proposed ? Last year

Address that this subject was not willingly taken up by the present Gevernment ; we were told that the law as it obtains in the different Provinces should continue. Are they satisfied to day that the laws in the separate Provinces should costinue? If they are satisfied that the laws of the different Provinces should continue, then we will find them supporting the Resolution of the hon. member. I proceed to read :

"They were quite mainfied that each Province should, so far as the law would allow it, enset such Statutes and deal with the subject of shop, tavara, and saloon licenses. Neither the Government nor the Parliament of Canada, I take it, wishes to interfere; and it was only when the decision which was given in June last on the Scott Act, a Dominion Act, and the subject was forced upon them, that they thought it their duty to bring it before Parliament."

Sir, it was because of the decision in Russell and the Queen, or at least their interpretation of that decision, that they thought themselves burdened with the duty of interfering in this matter. The subsequent decision has removed that burden from their shoulders. Do we see any signs of relief when the burden is removed? Do we see any sign of rejoining because that burden is taken away? If we do, we will find the hon. gentleman standing up and supporting the Resolution moved by the hon. member. I proceed to read further :

"I never had any doubt that when the question was brought before the courts, it would be decided that the different Provincial Legislapurposed for right whatever to deal with that subject, except for revenue purposed for right whatever to deal with that subject, except for revenue purposed for the purpose of imposing faration for provincial or muni-cipal purposes. I expressed the optimion in Parliament years ago, and last year I expressed it at a public theeting in Toronto, or its vicinity. But while that opinion was strongly impressed upon my mind I took no steps, nor did the Government of which I was a member take any steps, for the purpose of interfering with the legislation of the different Provinces, or forming Dominion legislation on the country, or trying to contralize such powers in this Parliament."

What is the position of the hon. gentleman to day ? Last year ander the plea of necessity this Bill was passed; this year when that necessity is removed, when there is no longer any necessity, to use the words of the hon. gentleman himself, to "centralize power in this Parliament," in what position does he stand? Is it a position to dispute the suggestions made that the Government are endeavouring to centralize power? Is it a position to declare his satisfaction that there is no necessity for centralization? I fear that the attitude taken by the hon. gentleman is not the attitude we would expect from the declarations he made last year. It was solely on the plea of necessity that this House was asked to interfere last year. It was solely on the plea of necessity, I submit, that a great many members consented to interiere last year. I am satisfied from the speeches to which we have just listened that hon. members in this House supported legislation last year because they took their law from the First Minister and believed there was necessity for interference. But even the hon. gentleman's law must be admitted to be superseded by the law laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and that removes from every hon. member the necessity, if such a necessity exists, of subordinating his own opinion as to what is the true policy in the interests of the country or what is the law, to the opinions of the First Minister. So the matter stands at pre-sent. There is now no necessity and no reason why the rights which the Provinces Lold dear, which the Provinces when they entered Confederation declared they held dear, should be interfered with. Sir, what was the stipulation on the part of the Provinces? The hon. Minister of Public Works in words, which I was proud to hear, as a member of this House, declared that he being present in London at the time of the passing of the Confederation Act, would not have remained a single hour if any of the rights of the Provinces had been attempted to be taken away. When the Parliament of Canada passed an address to the Imperial Parliament asking for the moved this Resolution could not be answered in any other Confederation of the Provinces, among the sub-josts that were declared to be avoidablely within provinced as an incidental not that the Provincial justicity vincial jurisdiction, which the people of the Provinces of Canada expressly claimed they should still continue to exercise separate and provincial jurisdiction over, was this very subject of shop and tavern licenses. I have before me the words of the original address passed by the Parliament of Canada on February 3rd, 1865. Section 43 of that address, sub-section 12, says; tavern, auctioneer and other licenses."

There are no words in the original address in anyway limiting the power of the Local Legislatures with respect to those subjects. But it is claimed now that the words which were introduced into the Act in England-words added to the original declaration-" for provincial and municipal revenues,"-it is claimed that those words have the effect of limiting the Provincial jurisdiction to the power of exercising authority on those subjects for revenue purposes only. I should like to have asked the hon. Minister of Public Works, if he had been in his place, this question categorically: If when he consented as a delegate from Canada to the addition of those words in the Act, he had any idea that he was taking away any of the powers contained in the original address of the Provinces? I am satisfied he would answer me, as he did state to-day, that he had no such idea; that it never was in the contemplation of the framers of the Confederation Act that they would depart from the text of the original contract and original address and engraft upon the Imperial Act words that would limit the jurisdiction of the Provinces-that jurisdiction which the Provinces in their address to the Imperial Parliament had declared they desired to continue to exercise. But, Sir, we are told to day that the License Act of last Session has not been tested in the Courts, and that the decision in the case of the Queen vs. Hodge was not a decision on the validity of that Act. That was not the question here last year when we were asked to pass the Liquor License Act. I have already indicated the ground upon which the Government asked the House to interfere. We are asked to go further. The Court has not declared that the Act of last Session was ultra vires, and therefore we are to ask the Court to declare whether it is or not, and in the meantime we are to suspend all penalties under the Act until a decision is obtained. Was ever a Parliament asked to assume so humiliating a position? An Act of Parliament solemnly passed, after long consideration, is the subject of so much doubt as to its legality that all its penalties must be suspended-in fact if its whole operation was suspended it would commend itself more to my judgment-but its penalties are to be suspended, its validity is to be questioned and submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and in the meantime we are asked to retain on our Statute Books an Act of Parliament for which even the First Minister will not say there is any necessity, until we have obtained a declaration from the Courts as to whether it is constitutional or not. I was sorry to hear that the hon. Minister of Public Works departed, as I thought, from the solemn dignity of the debate in an attempt to answer the almost unanswerable, yes, the unanswerable, speech of the mover of this Resolution. In the course of his remarks the hon. gentleman took up some of the small incidental subjects which were touched upon and dealt with them at very considerable length-in fact he occupied the greater portion of his time in dealing with them. I propose briefly to address mysslf to those points, not because I think they are of any importance, but because they show that the hon. Minister felt that the arguments used by the hon. gentleman who moved this Resolution could not be answered in any other tion and the autonomy of the Provinces were disregardedrelegated to an inferior position. He mentioned as an incidental fact that in the table of precedence the advisers of the Crown in the several Provinces were put after members of this House. Now that had nothing to do really with the argument of the hon. gentleman. It was merely introduced incidentally to show that the tendency was to elevate to an undue position members of this Parliament, and relegate to an inferior position the advisers of the Crown in the different Legislatures. And when the Minister of Public Works dealt so long upon this small part of the argument, it proved to me, at all events, that the great constitutional questions underlying the argument of the hon. gentleman were such as could not be successfully answered in the face of a free people, desiring to exercise that freedom which the British Constitution has secured to them, and which we thought, and still think, the British North America Act secures to us.

After Recess.

Mr. FLEMING. When this House rose at six o'clock I had drawn attention to the original address presented by the Parliament of Canada to the Imperial Parliament upon which the Confederation Act, which is now the constitution of this Dominion, was based. I stated then that I regretted the absence from his seat of the Minister of Public Works, because I desired to know from him if, when in London, he had believed he was taking away from the Provincial jurisdiction any of the powers which were contracted for in that address by consenting to the words which were added by the Imperial Parliament, and are now a part of the British North America Act. The Confederation I then stated was based upon an agreemont made between the Provinces, and formulated in the form of an address passed by the Parliament of Canada. I pointed out that in that address the contracting parties had expressly stipu-lated that the Local Legislatures should retain the power which the Provinces had theretofore exercised with regard to shop and tavern licenses; that the words in the address were that "the Local Legislatures shall have power to make laws respecting the following subjects," among others, "shop, saloon, tavern, auctioneer, and other licenses." Those are the only words contained in the address on this subject. Now if I rightly understand the position of the opponents of Provincial jurisdiction they contend that the words added in the Act in sub-section nine of section 92, making it read as follows: "Saloon, tavern, auctioneer and other licenses, in order to the raising of a revenue for pro-vincial, local or municipal purposes," limit the jurisdic-I said I rejoiced to hear the words spoken by tion. the hon. Minister of Public Works when he declared that he would not remain a single hour in London if any of the powers stipulated for on behalf of the Provinces had been attempted to be taken away by Imperial legislation. I stated that if he had then been in his place, I would have put the question to him whether he supposed, at the time the Act was being passed, that the addition of these words did limit the Provincial jurisdiction? I beg now to call the hon. gentleman's attention to that question, and I would like to have an answer from him. The hon. gentleman does not condescend to give an answer. I assumed from the words he uttered in the House to day, that he did not suppose he was taking away any part of the Provincial jurisdiction; and 1 presume that that is his position still, although he declines to give an answer The answer might perhaps prove embarras-sing, if the policy which is foreshadowed by the attitude of the Government to-day is to be carried out. Now, Sir, before recess I drew attention to the amendment proposed by the hon. Minister of Public Works, and now I beg to direct the attention of the House to its ipsissima verba. Mr. FLEMING.

posed to ask this House to say that in its opinion it is expedient that the question of the competence of Parliament to pass the Liquor License Act of 1883 should be submitted with all convenient speed to the Supreme Court of Canada, or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or both. Now, I submit that before the House is asked to adopt that proposition, it ought to be informed what is the intention of the Government regarding that submission. Is it the intention of the Government to submit the question to the Supreme Court under the powers given to the Government by the Supreme Court Act? Is it the intention of the Government to have a case between the Government and some individual who may infringe on the provisions of this Act, submitted to the Courts? Is it the intention of the Government to introduce, as one of the contestants in such a case, the Provincial Government of any of the Provinces of this Dominion; or is it the intention of the Government, of their own motion, to submit a case without argument to the decision of either one or other of the courts? This House is entitled to some information on this subject; because if it is the intention of the Government to submit this question under the powers conferred upon them by the Supreme Court Act, then there is no appeal from such a decision; and that decision would not be a final one, because a case might arise afterwards, from the infringement of the Act by a private individual, which would proceed from the provincial tribunal direct to the Privy Council, without the intervention of the Supreme Court of Canada; and it might be that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on the case submitted by the Government would be overruled by the court of last resort in England. But, Sir, it is proposed that a case shall be submitted by the Government to either one or other of the Courts without the intervention of counsel on the part of those who are opposing Federal interference. Is it to be understood by the House before they commit themselves to this proposition that the whole thing is to be left in the hands of the Government, and that the Government, with the desire which seems to be manifested to retain this new jurisdiction, shall have the whole control of the preparation and the argument of this case before either one or other of the Courts? Is it proposed by the Government that it shall be submitted alone to the Supreme Court? Is it proposed that it shall be submitted alone to the Privy Council? Or is it intended that the case shall go before both of these trihunals? There can be no final decision of these trinunais, There can be no mat decision of this question until it is disposed of by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Now, Sir, suppose the Judicial Committee of the Privy Coun-cil, as the court of final resort, should deter-mine that this Act is within the competence of this Parliament? Sir, if it should so find, I for one will never concede that as a part of public policy that decision should be sought. I for one contend that this Act should be repealed, irrespective of the question of its legality. I take that higher ground. I have not attempted to argue it upon the legal ground; that is the lower ground. I argue it upon the ground of public policy; and as this question involves the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures over a matter in which they have exercised jurisdiction for the last 17 years, I hold that it is inexpedient, it is impolitic, it is dangerous to the best welfare of this country to inter-fere with that jurisdiction. I believe that when the Parliament of Canada in the year 1865 sent its address to the Imperial Parliament asking that Municipal institutions, and the control of shop and tavern licenses should be retained in the jurisdiction of the Provinces, the people of Canada intended that that jurisdiction should there remain. I believe that the people of Canada universally understood, when the Imperial Act passed, that that jurisdiction was secured to the Provincial Legislatures. I believe that no It is pro- one had a desire to question that jurisdiction, and I accept the statement made by the hon. leader of the Government last Session, that although he had questioned the right of the Local Legislatures for the last 17 years, yet he never had interfered or desired to interfere until a necessity pressed him to do so. I believe that the people of this country who stipulated for this jurisdiction will not part with it without a struggle; because if we stand by and part with this privilege of our Provincial Legislatures, to-morrow a new aggression may be made upon us. We do not know where this aggression may stop. We may find by-and-by that the rights for which the people of this country contended previous to Confederation will be gradually taken away. We may awake some day to find that an aggrandizing Parliament at Ottawa has assumed jurisdiction over those local affairs which the people of Canada stipulated should be subject to local control when they consented to Confederation. I beg to direct the attention of the House to the language of the Hon. Chief Justice Spragge, of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, in the case of the Queen vs. Hodge:

"One other consideration presents itself which is, to my mind, conclusive. This matter of licensing and of the regulation of places and persons licensed pertains to municipal institutions, and is moreover of a local nature. Now, the making of laws in relation to both these objects being committed exclusively to the Provincial Legislatures, and legislation by any other power being thereby excluded, it follows that the British North America Act operates to withdraw from legislative control by any power or body whatever, the licensing and regulation of places and persons licensed; powers, in regard to which, they have hitherto unquestionably exercised. The effect in that case would be more and other than a distribution of legislative power. It would be an extinction of legislative power in regard to subjects which up to Confederation had been the subjects of Provincial legislation."

Now, I ask are the hon. members of this House-are the people of this country willing that there should be an extinction of the objects and the powers of Provincial legislation that were exercised by the Provinces previous to Confederation? What is the corner stone of this Confedera. tion? What was the struggle which resulted in the compact that brought about Confederation? Was it not, on the one hand and on the other, a struggle for local control over local affairs? Local legislation and local control over local affairs is the key-stone of Confederation, and if you remove that key-stone-if you encroach upon its power-if you impair its efficiency, you are sapping the foundations of this grand Federal system of which the people of Canada are so proud. But I apprehend that possibly we may hear voices in this House declaring that this Act should be retained upon the Statute Book because it is an advance, in some respects, on previous legislation in the Provinces. I apprehend that possibly we may hear voices in this House declare that this Federal Parliament ought to interfere because they have put restrictions on the liquor traffic more severe in somelof the Provinces than the Provincial Legislatures had put upon it. Last session, although I protested against the passage of this Act, as an interference with provincial jurisdiction, on every motion that was proposed to put greater restrictions on the liquor traffic, I voted for the greater restrictions. I do not pretend to be a temperance reformer, but, at the same time, I do say that whatever legislation may tend to put greater restriction on that traffic, whatever advance hon. gentlemen may propose in the way of restriction on that traffic, will have the support of my voice and vote; but there are dearer rights than any of the rights attempted to be secured by such advanced legislation. There are the rights of the people of the Provinces to deal with the affairs that are their own. There is an attempt on the part of this Parliament-I do not say a designed attempt because I desire to conduct this discussion dispassionately-but there is an attempt on the part of Parliament to interfere with what has hitherto been regarded by everybody as one of the powers which the Provincial Legislatures could alone exercise—an attemp attacking what is a dearer right than any power, a dearer right than any privilege, or than any advanced legislation in the direction of temperance, which this Parliament could pass, because this Parliament, if it passes that legislation today, may impose retrograding legislation upon any of the Provinces to morrow; and we will be giving up the power o deal with a subject which, with others, is one of social order and Municipal government, peace and order of society among us. Now, Sir, I propose to revert to the question which I asked the leader of the Government at the outset of my remarks, and to remind him that this legislation was introduced last session upon the plea of necessity. His own declaration was that this was not a matter of policy but a matter of necessity. I ask now is it a matter of policy or is it a matter of necessity? The Privy Council has decided that it is no longer a matter of necessity; it therefore becomes now a matter of policy; and let us understand, face to face with this question-let there be no hedging about or hood-winking-let us understand whether it is to be the policy of this Parliament to interfere in a matter which, but last Session, it was declared could alone be interfered with on the ground of necessity. If that is to be the policy of the Government let us understand that that is the attitude to be taken by the Government, and I shall have great satisfaction is arraying myself side by side with the hon, member who moved this resolution and the hon. member for Bellechasse and the other hon. members in this House who are supporting this Federal compact. If this is to be a matter of policy, then I say this is a question above all other party issues. It is a question on which those who are faithful to the Federal compact, who desire that this country should grow up under a Federal system, should declare themselves hostile to any attempt on the part of Par-liament to render, in fact, the Government of this country a Legislative Union, and I shall have great pleasure in joining the new party, the Federal party of this country, and in associating myself with the hon. gentlemen who have supported this resolution opposing every encroachment on the rights which have hitherto been exercised by the Provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. BOSSÉ. (Translation.) I desire, Mr. Speaker, to explain and justify, in as few words as possible, the vote that I am about to give on the present question. I believe that the real question we have to decide is not the one which has been discussed up to this moment——

Some hon. MEMBER. In English.

Mr. BOSSÉ. I am only too glad, Mr. Speaker, out of deference and courtesy to the hon. member, whoever he may be, to address the House in a language less familiar to me than French is. I would at the same time most cordially invite him to follow our example. We have studied, and we have learned to a certain extent, English, in order to be able to converse more freely with our English speaking friends, and, inviting him as I do to follow our example, I am sure that, if hon. gentlemen do so, and if they learn French, they will find very many compensations. Perhaps, our intercourse being freer and easier, we will learn to know each other better, and by and by, in a short time I would hope, we will not-we French Canadians-be bandied from one side to the other as something very terrible, something to be very much dreaded indeed, but we would be sought for our own qualities and for our own merits. I was about to state that I intended merely to qualify, to explain, and to justify the vote which I am about to give. The question before the House does not seem to me to be the question which has been up to the present time discussed. We are not here upon the motion now before the House, to decide whether or not the License Act of 1883 is ultra vires, unconstitutional, or whether it is constitutional. That question, I take it, with the present state of things, must be decided by another tribunal than this. It is very much to be regretted, and we must admit with regret on all hands, that this question, as many other questions under the British North America Act, is far from being free from difficulty. Numerous judgments of our various courts are contradictory upon the same question. Several of those questions have been adjudicated upon by those courts, where we find the best men and the best Judges of the land have adjudicated upon them in contradictory ways. We, ourselves, in this House, are perhaps the best examples of the difficulty of applying and explaining the different sections of the Act, especially, and perhaps more than all, those which relate to this License Act. A year ago, or during last Session, it was thought by many that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Russell and the Queen was decisive as to this question. Some did not think so, but this House took it for granted, at the time, that that case settled this question. Since, another case, that of Hodge, so much spoken of lately, seems to show that the case of Russell and the Queen did not decide the first point. Are we now, without further authority from the Privy Council, to take it for granted that this case of Hodge decides, and decides finally, the whole of the License Act, and decides it in such a way that we, the House of Commons of Canada, after having, barely ten months ago, adopted the Licence Act, will, upon the authority of that case alone, declare that the whole of the Act is unconstitutional, that this House has passed an unconstitutional law, and are we going to revoke it without further trial and without seeking further where in reality is the truth. It has been said that no decisions have been had upon the Act of 1883. I personally know of two in the city of Quebec, in cases in which I was personally engaged, and in which two of our Judges, one of them one of the most eminent Judges of our Superior Court, have declared that the law of 1883, the License Act, was constitutional, and it was applied by them in their judgment as being a constitutional law. In the face of those facts, I ask again, are we to take it upon ourselves, exercising our own judgment, to declare that the law is unconstitutional, and recall what we passed ten months ago as being constitutional? If the question had been squarely and fairly put, if we were called upon to declare whether or not this law is constitutional, I am free to say that I, for one, would have been inclined to vote in the negative, and to say that our Act of 1878, in the Province of Quebec, that the Ontario Act mentioned in the Hodge case, were both within the limits of the powers of the Local Legislatures; but the question now before us is not that. The question before us is one of expediency. We have facing us the very great diffi-culties I mentioned a moment ago, the conflicting judg-menta the dimensity of conjugate only in this Home but ments, the diversity of opinions not only in this House but all over the country. How are we best to remedy this? Are we to allow the difficulty to continue by simply abolishing the Act of 1883? Are we to leave the courts of justice open to all the litigants? Are we to witness the array, the interminable array, of lawsuits that will result from that state of things? Or are we to go back to the Constitution and find, under our Federal Act, the remedy to be applied to cases like this one, which have been foreseen by that Federal Act? Up to this time, we find reported cases under that Federal Act which fill two large volumes. They will go on growing and growing until some remedy is found-I am wrong in saying until some remedy is found, for the remedy is already found—but until that remedy is applied as it ought to be applied. We find in other countries that remedy or a remedy very similar applied to similar cases. The Court of Cassation in France was established by the sittings of all the Chambers of that Court, to decide questions differently decided by the different courts of the country. They prononne what they call arrêts de réglement and these arrêts decide on the questions in dispute and establish what the law is upon each of these points. That court has been established one or two years, after the Code. Mr. FLEMING.

Code Napoleon has been in existence for nearly a century, and the Court has settled very numerous questions, and still settles at this day new questions which have not arisen before. Are we to believe that when we have to deal with the whole Con-stitution of our country, with the relative rights of the Provinces between themselves, and with the relative rights of Provinces with the Dominion, that the questions arising will be either not numerous or not important? They cer-tainly will be very numerous, and they have been, and will of necessity always be, very important, for the simple reason that each of them touches the very heart of our Constitution. Therefore, lawsuits will be numerous, and they will be con-ducted with a vigour such as might be expected from the nature of the cases. Therefore, I say that under these circumstances, the road seems to be clearly indicated for us, and that instead of encouraging continued lawsuits, we ought to refer the question to the court which is pointed out by our Constitution as being the tribunal to decide and to decide finally, these questions. But, Sir, I must say that I, for one, and I am sure many others, would not rest satisfied with only a julgment of the Supreme Court upon these questions. Rightly or wrongly, I will not say which, our people have become accustomed to consider the judgments of the Supreme Court as not having all the value they ought, perhaps, to have on questions of this nature; they have been accustomed to look for the authority of a higher tribunal, and I take it that in questions of this nature, especially, the authority of a higher tribunal ought to be sought. But besides, if we only refer the question to the Supreme Court the result would be practically useless, for the very simple reason that the opinion given by the Judges of the Supreme Court would not prevent litigants from seeking a remedy before the ordinary courts of law. From these courts appeals would be taken to the Court of Appeal, from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, and from that Court to the Privy Council where, perhaps, the original opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court might not be confirmed, and where, perhaps, a decision contrary to that opinion might be obtained. Therefore, I say, as a matter of public convenience, as a measure of necessity, if we want to arrive at something definite, a recourse to the Privy Council must be adopted. Then the question could be virtually decided, and, acting constitutionally, under the tenets and according to the precepts of the Confederation Act, avoiding the difficulties and ex-pense of prolonged lawsuits, we would obtain once for all a decision to be followed. I say again, Sir, that the mode suggested is all the more advantageous, because from this time up to the date of the decision which we are to expect in the Privy Council, all the rights of the Provinces will be maintained and will not be infringed upon. The Local Governments will collect their revenue, the licenses will not be interfered with by the Federal authorities, and the result, practically and virtually, will be the suspension of the License Act of the Dominion until such time as the question is settled.

Mr. LAURIER. In view of what has been stated by my hon, friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Bossé) I must refer to the language which was made use of last year by the Government and contrast it with their language of to-day. It is within the recollection of everybody, and has been mentioned several times to-day, that last year the Government proposed this legislation, which it is now sought to repeat, under the absolute plea of necessity. The Pri me Minister stated that there was no law to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors; that all the laws which have been passed by the Provinces were null and void, and that at any momentany man could open a shop, and there was no power on earth to provent him from selling liquor. In view of the attitude taken by my hon. friend, the words of the First Minister, though they have been already quoted in this debate, will bear repetition. The Prime Minister then said :

"That subject was not willingly undertaken by the present Govern-ment. They were quite satisfied that the law, as it obtains in the different Provinces, should be continued. They were quite satisfied that each Province should, so far as the law would allow it to enact such Statutes, deal with the subject of shop, tavern and saloon licenses."

Then later, the right hon. gentleman, speaking of the decision in Russell and the Queen, said :

"Sir, if there be any value in that decision, and there is every value in it, because it is the law of the land, there is no check at the present moment, in the Province of Ontario, against the unlimited, unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors. This is not a matter we can play with. It is not a matter of policy; it is a matter of necessity. If we wish to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors we must legislate immediately; for I take it, that any man in this city or in any part of Ontario, can open his soloon and sell liquors, and there is not a court in the world can prevent his doing so."

Mr. Speaker, this was very strong language, and it was owing to this language that that law was put upon the Statute Book. It is within the knowledge of many mem. bers of this House that it was with the greatest reluctance that many supporters of the Government, especially those representing Quebec constituencies, voted for that law. They looked upon it as an infringement upon the rights of the Provinces, they looked upon it as an infringement of the powers which rightly belong to the Provinces. But when they were told by so high a constitutional authority as the Premier of this Dominion that all the laws which had hitherto regulated the trade in liquors, were pull and void, that the Provinces had absolutely no power to legislate upon this matter, that the only power to legislate upon this matter resided with this Parliament, that any man could open a shop and sell without restraint, the consequences were appalling, and the prospect was such that they yielded to those considerations and enacted that law. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, without fear of contradiction, that had it not been for the strong language used by the Prime Minister, had he not given it as his deliberate opinion-and his opinion was entitled to great credit-that the Provinces had no right to legislate upon this mat-ter, this Bill would never have become law. But his authority was great with his followers. It was so But great that it induced a great many of his followers to vote for that Bill, against what they believed to be the best interests of the Provinces. There can be no doubt, in view of what has since transpired, that that obnoxious legislation has been obtained, as it were, under false pretences. There, can be no doubt that the opinion then expressed by the First Minister was wrong. It is now judicially established that the Provinces have the power to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors. This cannot be longer disputed. No one can say, in view of the decision rendered in the case of Hodge, that the Provinces have not the power to regulate the liquor traffic. On the contrary, the decision has been rendered upon that very point—it was the only question submitted to the Privy Council, and upon that very point the Privy Council has rendered a decision which is clear and manifest; and the decision is to this effect, that the regulation of the liquor traffic is within the powers assigned under the Constitution to the Provinces. It seems to me that under such circumstances, when the Government declared last year that the only motive which impelled them to legislate was the simple fact that the Provinces had no power to legislate, that they would have been satisfied to leave the matter within their control. They should declare to the House that they have been in error and will restore that power to the Provinces. That course would seem to be obviously the correct one; yet what do we see? Do we see the Government rising in their places and saying: We thought the Provinces had no power, but now we see that the Provinces have the power? No; they say we want to that it rests with the Provinces. Suppose the question test whether we have not the same power as is possessed by which it is intended to submit to the Privy Council be the Provinces. That is the position taken. I venture to say this: the true inwardness of this legislation is not to be found in Ministerial explanations or in the language of Ministers, but it is to be found in the Conservative press of Ontario. Anyone who has followed the Conservative press of Ontario for the last few years is aware that since the granting of licenses has been placed in the hands of Commissioners appointed by the Provincial Government, complaints have been loud and frequent against that system. Complaints have been loud and frequent that the commissioners were partizans.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. I see the complaints are even repeated in this House. I believe that the true inwardness is not only to be found in the Conservative press of Ontario, but also in the following of the First Minister from Ontario. If we have this law placed on the Statute Book, it is simply because these complaints have been loud and many. I am sure that every disappointed tavern keeper who has been refused a license has declared that it was because he belonged to the Conservative party; that every low and dissolute man whose application was refused, did not place the reason at his own door, but at the door of the Commissioners, and complain that the reason accusations were brought against him was because he was a Tory. The reason we have this measure is simply for party gain and advantage. It is to have the issue of licenses placed in the hands of Commissioners appointed by the Conservative Government. I believe if it were not for that consideration we would not have had this law. The placing of the resent law on the Statute Book is, in my opinion, an attack on the powers of the Provinces. What is the amendment moved by the Minister of Public Works? It reads as follows :-

"That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that the question of the competency of Parliament to pass the Liquor License Act of 1883, should be submitted, with all convenient speed, to the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or both."

Why is this amendment moved, I ask? Is there any doubt as to the power of the Provinces to legislate upon this matter? I could conceive the propriety of the amendment, if it were still an open question as to whether the power to regulate the liquor traffic belongs to the Provinces or to the Dominion. That was the question last year. But this year, in view of the decision rendered in the case of Hodge, can it be doubted any more, is it not in fact determined, that the Provinces at this moment have power to regulate the trade. Is it not now a certain fact that all the legislation passed by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec is law within the respective Provinces. But the aim of the Government, which last year would have been satisfied to let the matter rest with the Provinces, now wish it to be tested whether they themselves had not also the power which the Provinces possess. What is the question involved in the amendment? It is to determine whether the Act passed last Session is law or not I say, and I submit it to my colleagues, from Quebec especially, that the amendment is an assault on the rights of the Provinces. We have this fact on the one hand, which should not be lost sight of, that at this moment and according to the decision in the case of Hodge, the legislation of the Province is law. If the amendment is carried, what will be the result? We will have the question submitted to the Privy Council as to whether the Act passed by the Dominion is not also law. It has been well argued by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) that the power to legislate upon this matter cannot be confirmed. If it rests with the Provinces it cannot answered in the affirmative, and judgment be rendered that the law passed by the Dominion last year is valid and within the power of the Dominion Parliament-what then? The consequence will be that we shall have a double power, having authority to deal with this matterthe power already admitted as being possessed by the Provinces, and that which would exist in the Dominion. Then we would have two powers legislating concurrently in this matter-the Dominion power and the Provincial power. If the Dominion has power to legislate in this matter and the Provinces have the power also to so legislate, what will be the consequence? The consequence will be that the legislation of the Dominion Government will over-ride the legislation of the Provinces, and the powers which the Provinces now exercise must diminish. It is quite manifest that if this law, which it is intended to refer the Privy Council, is not an attribution of Dominion, what would be the consequence? the We would have two concurrent powers to legislate over this matter, and what would the consequence be? The consequence must necessarily be that the power of the Provinces would be curtailed by so much, that all the legislation which now exists in Ontario, Quebec, and the other Provinces of the Dominion, would be over-ridden by this law, and the laws which are now administered by the Provinces, to the benefit of those Provinces, would be superseded by the Act passed last year, on the plea that they were compelled to pass that Act. Let us see the road we have travelled since last year. Last year the law was introduced as a matter of necessity; it was not a matter of policy. It was not the desire that the Dominion should have power to legislate over this matter; the Government were willing that that power should be retained by the Provinces. But we find that what was last year a matter of necessity is this year a matter of policy, and it is sought to have the question determined whether this Dominion cannot also have legislation in this matter. In my humble judgment, this is an infringement upon the power of the Provinces. It cannot be otherwise; and I ask the attention of those who value this Federal system, when I enquire if the object of the amendment is not, in the end, to deprive the Provinces of the right which legitimately pertains to them to day. Now this is a serious matter, in my humble opinion. It is a step towards legislative union, as has well been said this afternoon. I say that every successful attempt made, on the floor of this Parliament, to deprive any Province of any power now exercised by that Province, however insignificant that power may be, is a successful step in the direction of legislative union. Now, I am well aware that legislative union is more in the favour of many members of this House than a federative union. I know that many hon. members would view the change to a legislative union without any alarm whatever. For my own part, I believe that the fed-erative system is the best of all systems which can be de-vised to govern this large territory. We are all aware that the fact of our having the present system of Confederation is largely due to the peculiar position of the Province of Quebec; it is largely due to the fact that the elements to be united were not homogenous. It is possible that if the elements had been homogenous the union would have been a legislative and not a Federal one, but whether or not those elements were all homogenous, I still submit that the best system, the only system by which to govern this great territory, is a federative and not a legislative union. Upon this question, let me quote the opinion of a man whose ideas I am sure will commend themselves to, and whose authority will be respected by, all the members of this House, and especially the members of French origin. I refer to Montesquieu, who, in his "Spirit of the Law" speaks thus:

"If a Republic be small, it is destroyed by a fereign force; if it be large, it is ruined by an internal imperfection. To this twofold inconveniency democracies and aristocracies are equally liable, whether they Mr. LIAURIER. be good or bad. The evil is in the very thing itself, and no form can redress it. It is, therefore, very probable that mankind would have been, at length, obliged to live constantly under the Government of a single person, had they not contrived a kind of Constitution that has all the internal advantages of a Republican, together with the external force of a Monarchical Government. I mean a Confeierate Republic. This form of Government is a convention by which several petty States agree to become members of a larger one, which they intend to establish. It is a kind of assemblage of societies, that constitute a new one, capable of increasing, by means of farther associations, till they arrive to such a degree of power, as to be able to provide for the security of the whole body."

Now, it is to be remarked that at the time Montesquieu wrote these words, the world had not seen the large Confederation which has since sprung up on this continent. At the time he thus wrote, the only Confederacies which he touched upon in the book were the Dutch Confederacy, the Swiss Confederacy and the German Empire. Now all these three put together would not exceed in size one of our Provinces, and any one of them singly would not exceed the size of one of our counties, and the danger which he thus foresaw, and which were obviated by this form of Government, are magnified by the magnitude of our territory. According to that authority, it would be impossible to govern these large territories, extending from one ocean to the other, by a single Government, unless, indeed, that Government were despotic, in which case there would be rupture. But our system obviates all these difficulties; our municipal and provincial divisions, our Federal system, all these wheels within wheels constitute a mechanism which is at once elastic and strong. Therefore, I say, that this system is the best which can be devised, and it behooves every man in this Parliament, every friend of this country, to see that no attempt is made upon this form of Government. I can well understand the conduct of the present Premier; but I confess I am surprised at the attitude taken by the Minister of Public Works and by some of the members from the Province of Quebec. I can understand the attitude of the Premier, because I do not think it is slandering him to say that his preferences are not in favour of a federative union. I believe it is a matter of history that at the time the Provinces were united, if that hon. gentleman had had it in his power to stamp the Constitution with his full mind, the bond of union would not have been a federative but a legislative one. It is a matter of history that the men whose ascendency at the time prevailed were Sir George Cartier, and the Hon. George Brown. It is a matter of history that it was through their combined efforts that the Constitution received the federative character which it did receive. They were both in favour of a federative union, and they were both at the head of large majorities, each one from his own section of the country, and their efforts prevailed in that direction. I believe I can also say that it is a matter of history that ever since, and especially since the hon. gentleman returned to power, he has endeavoured to forward legislation which is gradually superseding the federative character of this union and making it a legislative union. The outward forms are maintained : no letter of the law is attacked, but gradually and surely new principles are introduced, new features are added, and though the superstructure is untouched, there is underneath it an interpretation of the intent of that Constitution which makes it just as much legislative in its character as if it had been so made and decreed. You remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Roman Legislator never changed one single syllable of the law of the Twelve Tables; but by means of edicts successively introduced, the Roman Legislator introduced a new code of laws which, however, left the laws on the Tables intact. The hon. gentleman is following a similar course though with a less laudable object. The vetoing of numerous laws, admittedly within the power of the Provinces to enact, the present attempt to take from the Provinces legislation which belongs to them, and which has judicially been determined to belong to them the new Franchise Bill, which we see looming up in the future, are all attempts in the same direction-in the direction of legislative union-and if all these measures are carried we will be nearer and nearer to a legislative union. If the same course is persisted in, unless it is checked by the members of this House, we shall have by-and by a Confederation in name, but a legislative union in fact; the Local Legisla-tures will be preserved, but they will be simple costly ornaments, and nothing more. As I have said, I am not surprised at the conduct of the hon. Premier; he is consistent; he is true to himself. Whether acting consciously from design, or moved by the unconscious bent of his mind, I cannot say; but the fact is there, that he is all the time gradually approaching towards a legislative union. I am not surprised at his conduct, but I must say I would be surprised at the conduct of any member from the Province of Quebec who would vote for the amendment now before the House. I would venture to say that if the great man who was instrumental in assisting to frame the Confederation, such as it exists, were still in his place, his work would not be demolished as it is now attempted to be; and I venture to say that if the teaching which he instilled into the breasts of his followers remains with them still, this law will be repealed even this evening. It will, perhaps, be vain for me to invoke the testimony of the press. I did it once before, but in vain; but hon. gentlemen from the Province of Quebec are aware that the whole of their press, with one exception, are opposed to this liquor law. They all declare that it is an infringment upon Provincial rights. La Minerre, which is edited by my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Tassé), on the 18th of February, said :

said: "It is certain that the Lords of the Privy Council have declared in the is to gradient that a wrong interpretation had been placed upon the decision which they had rendered in the case of Russell, which had been taken as the basis of the law of 1883. Sir John A, Macdonald him-self declared at the opening of the present Session, that he had gone too far last year, adding, however, that he did not intend to be infalli-ble in matter of constitutional law. The interpretation which was given last year to the judgment rendered in the case of Russell was all the more unfortunate in that it undermined the very basis of our Pro-vincial institutions, and that the new law would have, amongst other results, the result of depriving the Government of Quebec, in particular, that Government already so poor, of a revenue of $100,000, as Mr. Robertson declared at Sherbrocke. Under these circumstances, it is fortunate that the Privy Council now admits either that it had not expressed itself clearly or that its language was wrongly interpreted. This enables us to treat the law of 1883 in consequence." This enables us to treat the law of 1883 in consequence.

Then another Provincial paper, Le Canadien, of the 7th of March, speaks thus :

MARCH, SPEAKS LINE: "When, for example, concerning the license law, an undeniable in-fringement of our powers, we are appealed to on the ground of our party, on the ground of our sentiments of loyalty towards Sir John, we have reason to answer that the most sacred of all ties is the tie which binds us to our Province, and that the want of loyalty would be in those who would persist in taking our rights from us. The License Law and the Franchise Bill, which Sir John has been endeavouring to impose upon us for the last two Sessions, show with too much light the end towards which he aims, to make it possible for those who are opposed to legisla-tive union to longer keep silent."

I could multiply these citations, but I will not do so. These are sufficient to show the tendency of the Conservative party in the Province of Quebec. I do not speak to my own party. I address myself to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I appeal to them to maintain the constitution. In speaking as I now do, I do not want to be sectional. I would not make any sectional appeal on this or on any other occasion. When I ask my colleagues from the Province of Quebec to vote in favour of the motion of my hon. friend from Maskinongé, I make no sectional appeal. It is an appeal in favour of the Constitution, such as it is. All the Provinces are interested in the integrity of the Constitution, but no Province so much as the Province from which I come.

Mr. GIROUARD. I agree with the mover of this resolution that, as a rule, not only in this country, but everywhere, and I may say in all ages, it is the natural tendency of the larger power or body to absorb the smaller one. I do not believe that since the Confederation has been established in this country, we have been an exception to the general rule; but I do not think hon. gentlemen have reason to blame the present Government for that, more than the previous one. The question under consideration is : Does the Licence Act of 1883 encroach upon provincial rights? If that Act is so clearly unconstitutional, as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has endeavored to show, I would not hesitate to vote against the amendment of the hon. Minister of Public Works. The autonomy of the Provinces is as sacred to me as to any other member of this House; and if I had even the slightest hesitation or doubt upon the subject, I would give it in favour of the smaller power, the Provinces. But has it been decided that the regulation of the liquor traffic belongs to the Provincial Legislatures? If it has, it does not belong to this Parliament. Let us look, in the first instance, at the case of the Queen vs. Hodge, for it is well known that the whole question turns upon the decision in that case. If that decision is against the law which we passed last Session, we should repeal it; but if it is not against that law, if it does not affect that law, we should take means of having a decision, and having it as soon as possible, in order to avoid further conflict. Now let us see what was the question at issue in the case of the Queen v. Hodge. Hodge was accused of having unlawfully allowed a billiard table to be used, and a game of billiards to be played in a tavern during the time prohibited by the License Act for the sale of liquor therein. He was, therefore, accused of having kept open after hours his billiard table, which, according to a certain by law of the License Commissioners, was to be closed at seven o'clock at night. That conviction was based upon the following by law of the License Commissioners of Toronto :-

"Nor shall any licensed person, directly or indirectly, as aforesaid, permit, allow or suffer any bowling alley, billiard table or bagatelle table to be used, or any games or amusements of the like description to be played in such tavern or shop, or in or upon any premises connected therewith, during the time prohibited by the Liquor License Act, or by this resolution, for the sale of liquor therein."

This by-law of the License Commissioners was based upon sections 4 and 5 of the Liquor License Act of 1877, of Ontario. Section 4 says:

"The License Commissioner may, at any time before the first day in each year, pass a resolution or resolutions, for regulating and deter-mining the matters following, that is to say: "(1.) For defining the conditions and qualifications requisite to obtain tavern licenses, for the retail, within the municipality, of spirituous, termented or other manufactured liquors, and also shop licenses, for the sale, by retail, within the municipality, of such liquors in shops or places other than taverns, inns, beer-houses, or places of public entertainment. "(2.) For limiting the number of tavern and shop license respectively, and for defining the special respective times and localities within which, and the persons to whom such limited number may be issued within the year, from the first day of May, in the one year, till the thirtieth day of April, inclusive, of the next year. "(3.) For declaring that in cities a number not exceeding ten persons,

 $r_i^{(3)}$ For declaring that in cities a number not exceeding ten persons, and in towns a number not exceeding four persons, qualified to have a tavern license, may be exempted from the necessity of having all the tavern accommodation required by law. "(4.) For regulating the taverns and shops to be licensed. "(5.) For fixing and defining the duties, powers, and privileges of the Inspector of Licenses of their district. "Section 5.—In and by any such resolution of a Board of License Commissioners, the said Board may impose penalties for the infraction thereof.

Now, it is contended that the case of the Queen vs. Hodge has decided the principle that a Province may pass a law to regulate the sale of Liquor. I say it has not; I say it has only decided that, as a matter of police regulation, the License Commissioners or the Provincial Legislature may prevent an inn-keeper from keeping open his billiard table after the hour of seven o'clock, and no more than this has been decided. Let us look at the decision :

"Their Lordships are, therefore, of the opinion that in relation to sections 4 and 5 of the Acts in question (the very sections that I have read), the Legislature of Ontario acted within the powers conferred on it by the Imperial Act of 1867, and that, in this respect, there is no conflict with the Dominion Parliament. Assuming that the Local Legislature had power to legislate to the full extent of the resolutious passed by the License Commissioners, etc."

What is the result? It is that no tavern keeper shall keep his billiard room open after the hour of seven o'clock. This is all that has been decided. If hon, gentlemen opposite have any doubt on this question, that will disappear on reading the following passage from the decision of the Privy Council in the same case:—

"Their Lordships do not think it necessary, in the present case, to lay down any general rule or rules, for the construction of the British North America Act. They are impressed with the justice of an observation by Hagerty, C. J., that in all these questions of ultravires it is the wisest course not to widen the discussion by considerations not necessarily involved in the decision of the point in controversy. They do not forget that in a previous decision on this same Statute (Parsons vs. the Oitizen's Co.) their Lordships recommended that in performing the difficult duty of determining such questions, it will be a wise course for those on whom it is thrown, to decide each case which arises, as best they can, without entering more largely upon the interpretation of the Statutes than is necessary for the decision of the particular question at hand."

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. I hear the hon, member for Bothwell say, "hear, hear." Do you want anything more precise and more definite? Their Lordships say: we intend to decide only the point at issue, the point we have at hand, and nothing more. Were they called upon to decide that the Province had the power to regulate the liquor traffic? Nothing of the kind. The question at issue was whether the by-law or the resolution of the License Commissioners in prohibiting the opening of a billiard table after a certain hour was valid or not; and that is the point they decided I contend, therefore, there was no decision whatever as to the constitutional question raised on the present occasion, to wit, whether it is in the competency of this Parliament to the Provincial Legislatures to regulate the liquor traffic. I presume it would be very immaterial to the decision this House may come to, to know what my private opinion is on this constitutional question. However, I have no hesitation in saying that, after having given to this matter the most serious consideration, I believe the Liquor License Act of this Dominion Parliament, passed last Session, to be constitutional, and I will give you my reason. My reason is because that Act is intended for the good government and order throughout the whole Dominion, and that is a subject given by section 91 of the British North America Act, exclusively to the Dominion Parliament. Section 92 of the same Act, says: The Provincial Legislatures have the right to exact licenses from inn keepers, shop keepers or others; but that same Section adds that this right shall not be for the purpose of regulating the liquor traffic, but for revenue purposes, and nothing else. I would ask whether, under that clause, the Provincial Legislatures have the right to regulate the liquor traffic. Let us look at the shop keeper, from whoma license may also be exacted by a Provincial Legislature. Are we to be told that a merchant from whom a license may be required by a Provincial Legislature may be subject to the regulation of the Provincial Legislature, as far as his commerce is concerned? That he cannot, is a proposition too clear to be contradicted. It is clear that the Local Legislatures have no right to regulate the commerce of merchants, although they have the right to impose licenses on them to carry on their business. I believe the Privy Council has said enough in the case of the Queen vs. Russell, which caused the passing of the License Act of 1883, to anticipate what the decision is going to be on the present occasion. Their Lord-ships, on that occasion, after comparing the Temperance Act with the clause relating to the sale of poisons, observed:

"Laws of this nature, designed for the promotion of public order, safety or morals, and which subject those whe contravene them to Mr. GIROUARD.

criminal procedure and punishment, belong to the subject of public wrongs rather than to that of civil rights. They are of a nature which fall within the general authority of Parliament to make laws for the order and good government of Ganada."

And this is the principle that has been laid down in the very preamble of the Dominion Liquor License Act. I will vote without hesitation for the amendment of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Having no decision before us as to the constitutionality of the Dominion Liquor Act, I think our thanks are due to the Government for preventing more litigation between the Provinces and the citizens living in the different Provinces. Instead of having numerous lawsuits and litigation in the various Provinces, we will have only one; and this litigation will not start by a proceeding before an inferior court and then be carried to a higher court by appeal. We shall proceed immediately before the highest court of the land, the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. How?

Mr. GIROUARD. It is going to be provided by Bill. It cannot be done otherwise. I presume a Bill will be based upon this resolution. I say it will be by Bill, because I do do not know any other proceeding by which it can be done. This principle has been laid down several times during the debates of this Parliament during the previous Sessions. We have decided, on several occasions, that we have no right to decide at the following Session that the law which has been passed by this Parliament is unconstitutional. The hon. gentleman, the member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), has quoted La Minerve and Le Canadien, but I do not think we are going to take La Minerve and Le Canadien, as authorities upon constitutional questions. I am not going even to take the opinion of this Parliament upon constitutional questions as a binding author-ity. I say the tribunals of the land are the only known authority for deciding constitutional questions. Last year, when we had a debate upon the King's County, P.E.I., election case, some Statutes were quoted as unconstitutional, and I then expressed the opinion that they were unconstitutional, but I said we were not the proper authority to decide the constitutionality of these Statutes, and that I, for one, was therefore willing to accept them as the law of the land until the constituted authority, the courts of justice of the country, had decided that they were unconstitutional. That is the reason why, on the present occasion, we have no right to say, in this Parliament, that the Dominion Liquor License Act is unconstitutional. We have no right to do so; courts of justice only have that right; and I approve of the course which has been proposed by the hon. Minister of Public Works, to put a case before the Supreme Court, and to put it in a speedy manner. This case will be put before the Supreme Court, and the Local Legislatures will have the right to be represented there by counsel, and to lay their views before that tribunal, and I hope they will do so, and I hope the whole question of jurisdiction between the Dominion Parliament and the Local Legislature will be discussed. We have an admirable Constitution here. We hear the cry of centralizing powers in the Dominion Parliament, but that centralization is impossible. We have courts of justice to decide where the power lies, whether in the Provincial Legislatures or in the Dominion Parliament. In this case, the Supreme Court, and, I hope, the Privy Council, too, will consider the question ; because, as has been well remarked by the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Bossé), the people of this country have the greatest confidence in the decisions of the Privy Council. There is another reason why this case should be referred to the Privy Council ultimately. If we want to have a final decision, if we want the citizens of this country to submit to the decision of the case, we must have that decision rendered by the Privy Council, otherwise they will not submit to the decision of the Supreme Court and will ultimately appeal, the question now under consideration. For that reason I will vote in favour of the amendment of the hon, the Minister of Public Works, and, I hope, the members for the Province of Quebec, who desire more, perhaps, than the members from the other Provinces, to see their Provincial rights maintained, will vote for that amendment, because in the future, when some rights more sacred to them than the liquor traffic, will be in question -I hope that time will never come, but if it does-the members from the Province of Quebec will have the right to rise in Parliament and say, let us refer this important question concerning our institutions, our religion, or our language, to the decision of the Supreme Court and Privy Council, and I am not afraid that there, before the Privy Council, the Province of Quebec, as well as all the other Provinces, will obtain justice. For these reasons, I will vote for the amendment of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon.gentleman who has just resumed his seat has been consistent in his argument, at any rate. He contends that it is eminently desirable that this Legislature, and this Legislature alone, should possess the right to legislate on the question we are discussing, and that it is undesirable that the power should be vested in the Local Legislatures, and as far as he can do so, by his voice and by his vote, he is determined that that power shall vest in this Legislature and in this Legislature alone. I can therefore understand clearly why he can consistently support the resolution moved by the Minister of Public Works. But I cannot understand how any hon. gentleman in this House, who thinks differently from him on this question, I cannot understand how any hon. gentleman who be-lieves that the right to legislate on the subject of the liquor traffic belongs to the Local Legislature and to the Local Legislature only, any hon. gentleman who believes that the power should belong to them because it can be exercised by them better than it can by this Legis lature—I cannot understand how anyone holding these opinions should vote in favour of the resolution of the Minister of Public Works. Now, I contend that primá facie the Local Legislatures are best fitted to grapple with laws of this kind. The Local Legislatures possess a local knowledge which enables them to judge better what laws are suited to the respective Provinces than this Legislature does. The question is peculiarly a local one. As was well re-marked by an hon. gentleman who spoke in the afternoon, a law which might suit Montreal might be very unsuitable in British Columbia. The times for closing shops, the persons to whom liquor might be sold, the times when liquor might be sold, the persons who are qualified to sell liquor, all these things could be better settled, as regards Quebec, by a Quebec Legislature, composed of gentlemen who know the wants of the people and the wants of the localities, than it can be by a large Legislature, composed mainly of people who do not know anything of these wants and these requirements; and the same argument applies to all the other Provinces. Therefore, prima facie, the right should belong to the Local Legislatures; and, further I say, the right did belong to the Local Legislatures and was exercised by them for nearly sixteen years, and I say the result of the exercise of that right by these different Provinces was that there were laws enacted in each of these Provinces which gave satisfaction to the people of the Provinces. We have had it stated time and again, not only in this debate but during last Session, that the result of many years of legislation on the liquor traffic in Quebec, had been to give them a law suitable to their people and approved by their people. The same remark was made by gentlemen from Nova Scotia, that they had been legislating for fifteen or twenty years, amending and amending their Acts, year after year, and getting their law as near as pos-sible towards perfection. We had it stated from the Province from which I come, that the same process had gone on, | only gives authority to license for the purpose of raising a and from all the Provinces gentlemen expressed their opinion that the local laws regulating this traffic had been so perfected as to give almost general satisfaction to the people of the several Provinces. Had we then litigation on the question whether these local laws were intra vires or ultra vires? Was everything in a mess? Were people undetermined and uncertain as to what was and what was not the law? Nothing of the kind. The law was known, the law was obeyed, the law was being carried out, and peace and good order were reigning throughout the different Provinces of the Dominion, until, in an unfortunate moment, the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government put his hand to legisla. tion on the subject, and determined to carry out the opinion which he alleges he held many years ago, that these Provinces had not the right, but that it belonged to the Dominion. Then, for the first time, we had these great troubles. Now, what have we got to day? What is the result of this? We have two sets of laws in force, we have two sets of licenses, we have two Boards of License Commissioners, we have two sets of rules as to the hours for closing public houses; men engaged in the trade do not know from whom to take their licenses; when they get their licenses and pay for them.they do not know whether those licenses are good or not. And what is the result ? Litigation in almost every Province of the Dominion where these licenses have been granted, Local Legislatures asserting, as they have a right to assert, and as I hope they will successfully assert, their right to maintain a privilege and a power which they have exercised ever since Confederation was consummated, a right which was never questioned until the hon. gentleman laid his hand last year upon this article of the Constitution. Now, to come to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. He has alleged that it is desirable that this House should usurp to itself the sole power of enacting measures in in relation to this subject.

Mr. GIROUARD. I never said that it was desirable, because that would be a question of policy. I said this Parliament alone had jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES. I understood the hon. gentleman to argue that it was eminently desirable there should be one law passed.

Mr. GIROUARD. Never.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's denial, but he will allow me to say what the effect of his argument was, as understood, I think, not only by myself, but by nearly by everybody on this side of the House; I understood the hon. gentleman to argue that it was eminently desirable there should be one law passed by this Parliament which should operate throughout the whole Dominion, so that we might know what the law was. I understood him to go further and express his constitutional opinion that this Parliament was vested with that power.

Mr. GIROUARD. Yes; only that portion.

Mr. DAVIES. I understood him to argue as a reason that this Legislature ought to assume that power, that there would be many suits, many difficulties in all the Provinces arising out of local legislation.

Mr. GIROUARD. No; that is not the reason. I never said that.

Mr. DAVIES. We'l, of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's retraction, if I misunderstood him. Now, what does he say? The hon. gentleman says there has been no decision on this subjec:, that the case of Hodge only decided the point about the legality of playing a game of billiards, and he quoted that judgment to show that he was right. He went further, to show that the British North America Act

Well, the hon. gentleman, I believe, is a good revenue. lawyer and in good practice, and I understand, also, he is a gentleman who gives a good deal of his time to the study of these subjects. I would ask him if he has read the judgments of the highest Courts of Appeal in all the Provinces, or all the larger Provinces of the Dominion upon this subject? Has he read the judgment of the Appeal Court of Ontario wherein it it is determined by the Judges there that the authority given to legislate upon this subject is not derived from the clause in the British North America Act, which gives Local Legis latures power to license shops for the purposes of raising a revenue, that clause being only complementary to the powers vested in them to legislate upon municipal institutions, and that it is not because they have power to license for purposes of revenue, but because they had, at the time of Confederation, municipal institutions which possessed the power to control this liquor traffic, and that it was the intention of the British North America Act to continue to the Local Legislatures those powers, and upon that ground, mainly, it was that they decided that those powers continued up to this time. Now, in the celebrated case of Hodge, to which he refers, I do not think the hon. gentleman has fairly stated the points decided, at all. The hon. gentleman will see, by referring to the case, that when it came up for argument, the appellants, who were acting for Hodge, and who were contending that the Local Legislature had not the power, wished to place before the court the very point we are discussing, namely, whether the power to legislate upon this traffic was vested in the Dominion Parliament or in the Local Legislatures, and the judgment as reported goes on to say:

"Mr. Kerr, Q.C., and Mr. Jeune, in their full and very able argument for the appellant, informed their Lordships that the first and principal question in the cause was whether 'the Liquor License Act of 1876," in its fourth and fifth sections, was ultra vires of the Untario Legislature, and properly said that it was a matter of importance as between the Dominion Parliament and the Legislature of the Province."

Now, there is the very identical question raised expressly for decision, raised explicitly, so that there can be no evasion, and when you turn to the fourth and fifth sections, what do you find? You find these sections appointing License Commissioners for the regulation of this traffic, for defining the conditions necessary to obtain a tavein license, for limiting the number of taverns, for declaring the number that may be licensed in cities, for declaring the number of persons in a city who may be entitled to have licenses granted, for regulating tavern and shop licenses, for fixing and defining those powers, and for the imposition of penalties for the infraction of those laws. Why, every point which we have attempted to legislate upon in the Act we passed last Session, every main point was legislated upon by the Statute which came before the Privy Council, and was raised expressly before that court as to whether the Local Legislature had power to pass it or not. What do their Lordships say

"The appellants contended that the Legislature of Ontario had no power to pass any Act to regulate the liquor traffic, that the whole power to pass such an Act was conferred on the Dominion Parliament, and consequently taken from the Provincial Legislature, by section 91 of the British North America Act, 1861; that it did not come within any of the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the Provincial Legislature by section 82."

So, the hon, gentleman will see that no language could have presented the points more clearly to their Lordships for their decision than was used by the counsel for the appellants in presenting them on this occasion. They had the express point before them; they were asked so decide the express point, and when we come to their decision, what do they say? After explaining the decision in Russell and the Queen, showing how that decision had been misinterpreted and misunderstood, and saying that they never attempted to lay down any such law as the First Minister intimated that they had laid down, they go on to say:

Mr. GIROUARD,

1877, cap. 181, Revised Statutes of Ontario.' That Act is so far confiend in its operations to municipalities in the Province of Ontario, and is entirely local in its character and operation. It authorizes the appoint-ment of Licence Commissioners to act in each municipality, and em-powers them to pass, under the name of resolutions, what we know as by-laws, or rules, to define the conditions and qualifications requisite for obtaining tavern and shop licenses for sale by retail of spirituous liquors within the municipality; for limiting the number of licenses; for declaring that a limited number of persons qualified to have tavern licenses may be exempted from having all the tavern accommodation required by law, and for regulating licensed taverns and shops, for de-fining the duties and powers of licensed inspectors, and to impose pen-alties for infraction of their resolutions. These seem to be all matters of a purely local nature in the Province, and to be similar to, though not identical in all respects with, the powers then belonging to municipal institutions under the previously existing laws passed by the Local institutions under the previously existing laws passed by the Local Parliaments. "Their Lordships consider that the powers intended to be conferred by the Act in question, when properly understood, are to make regula-tions in the nature of police or municipal regulations of a merely local character for the good government of tavers, etc., licenses for the sale of liquors by retail, and such as are calculated to preserve, in the muni-cipality, peace and public decancy, and repress drunkenness and disor-derly and riotous conduct. As such, they cannot be said to interfere with the general regulation of trade and commerce which belongs to the Dominion Parliament, and do not conflict with the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, which does not appear to have as yet been adopted. adopted.

"The subjects of legislation in the Ontario Act of 1877, sections 4 and 5, seem to come within the heads Nos. 8, 15 and 16, of section 92 of Bri-

b, seem to come within the heads NOS. 8, 15 and 16, of section 92 of Bri-tish North America Statute, 1867. "Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that, in relation to sec-tions 4 and 5 of the Act in question, the Legislature of Ontario acted within the powers conferred on it by the Imperial Act of 1867, and that in this respect there is no conflict with the powers of the Dominion Par-liament."

Why, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier has altogether misunderstood and misread this judgment. They declare that the Crooks Act-

Mr. GIROUARD. Read the line immediately after.

Mr. DAVIES. I will read it in a moment, if the hon. gentleman wishes. They declare that the Crooks Act, upon which the Act passed by this Legislature last Session is largely based, was calculated to preserve in the municipality peace and public decency, and repress drunkenness and disorderly and riotous conduct, and that it was directly within the powers conferred by the Act upon the Local Legislature. The question was not evaded by any technicality. It was presented by the counsel for the appellant broadly and squarely. Ilad the Ontario Legislature, under the British North America Act, power to pass this License Law? Their Lordships said they had-they said so expressly. I will read the next line, although I do not see any particular bearing in it.

Mr. GIROUARD. The words are: "The Imperial Parliament had conferred no authority in the Local Legislature to delegate those powers to the License Commissioners or any other persons.

Mr. DAVIES. Has the hon. gentleman read the four or five sections of the Act which declares that the Local Legislatures can delegate to Commissioners the power to deter mine what licenses shall exist in the community, who shall get them, how much they shall pay, and how long the taverns shall be kept open, and all the other rules and regulations which we attempted to incorporate in the License Act of 1883. The courts have declared that this subject, being within the exclusive power of the Local Legislatures, they can delegate their powers to Commissioners. I will read another extract :-

"Assuming that the Local Legislature had power to legislate to the full extent of the resolutions passed by the License Commissioners, and to have enforced the observance of their enactments by penalties and imprisonment, with or without hard labour, it was further contended that the Imperial Parliament had conferred no authority on the Local Legislature to delegate those powers to the License Commissioners or any other persons."

I need not go into the question of delegating powers to Commissioners, as it is notraised here. Their Lordships determined : First, that the Provincial Legislatures had the power "Their Lordships proceed now to consider the subject matter and mined; First, that the Provincial Legislatures had the power legislative character of sections 4 and 5 of The Liquor License Act of to legislate on this question; and second, that inastructs as they possessed that power, they had the right to delegate Regina vs. Hodge, before it went to the Privy Council. it to License Commissioners. They decided both points in Chief Justice Spragg says; the affirmative. If the hon, member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) bases his opinion on his understanding of this decision, I must say that his understanding of it is altogether wrong. But the hon. gentleman says: I will not take the decision of the Prime Minister, or of Parliament, upon this constitutional point, but I appeal to the judgment of the legal tribunals of the land. I will accept his challenge, for no doubt he intends it as such, and consider in what manner those tribunals have considered this question. The hon. gentleman is well aware that in his own Province, in the case of Sulte vs. Three Rivers, a point almost analogous to the one in question was decided. What did the Judges of the Court of Appeal in his own Province say in that case? The decision was given by the eminent Chief Justice and a full court of four or five other Judges. Here is what the Chief Justice said :-

¹¹ But we have still to determine another question, whether sub-section 8 does not cover the exercise of the power assumed by the Legislature of Quebec. It may be at once conceded that the prohibitory liquor law is not essential to the existence of municipal institutions, and that con-sequently, in a very restricted reading of sub-section 8, it would not justify the Local Legislature in passing a prohibitory liquor law. Bit it may fairly be asked, whether it was the intention of the Imperial Parliament, in an enumeration of this sort, to confine 'municipal institu-tions' to those matters only which are of the essence of municipal institutions ? If such was the intention of Parliament, a wide field for speculation was left open, or it was contemplated to restrict municipal insti-tutions within very narrow limits. It would seem, however, we have not to determine what institutions are essential to municipal existence in the abstract, but the meaning of the term at the time of Confederation. We cannot help thinking that this was suffic ent to bring prohibitory liquor laws within the powers of local legislation, as forming part of 'municipal laws within the powers of local legislation, as forming part of 'municipal institutions' within the meaning of the British North America Act. With Ohief Justice Richards, we think that we ought to look 'at the state of thiags existing in the Provinces at the time of passing the British North America Act, and the legislation then in force in the different Provinces on the subject, and the general scope of Confederation then about to take place,' when determining the value of indefinite terms in the Act. But in the case of the City of Fredericton vs. The Queen, it was decided by the Supreme Court that the Dominion Parliament has alone the power to pass a prohibitory liquor law. It is true this decision goes power to pass a prohibitory liquor law. It is true this decision goes somewhat beyond the real issue, which is as to the right of the Dominion Parliament to pass a prohibitory liquor law, which is quite a different thing. Still, we presume the point was fully argued before the court"

Then the learned Judge goes on to argue that it was not the intention of the Imperial Parliament to confine the meaning of the term "municipal institutions" to the technical meaning but that it was their intention to use it in the sense in which the word was used in the Dominion at the time the British North America Act came into force, and the words should have a broader and more general signification than that given to it in England or when applied in a technical sense. Then the Judge goes on to argue the case; and what is the conclusion of the court? It is as follows:

"We hold, ther, that under a proper interpretation of sub-section 8, the right to pass a prohibitory liquor law for the purpose of municipal i :ati-tutions has been reserved to the Local Legislatures by the British North America Act.'

That is the judgment of the highest Court of Appeal in the Province of Quebec, from which the hon. member from Jacques Cartier comes; and this decision was rendered after the case Russell vs. the Queen had been laid before them, with full knowledge as to what the decision of the Privy Council of England was in regard to it. The hon. gentleman says he prefers to appeal to the judgment of the tribunals of the land. I have already shown him that the highest tribunal in his Province has expressly decided that the power to legislate on the subject is vested in the Local Legislatures, and not in the Dominion Parliament. If the hon, gentleman will go to Ontario, he will find a similar judgment delivered there. I will not weary the House by reading it at any length; but I will ask the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) to give me his attention while I read one or two paragraphs from the decision of Chief Justice Spragg and the other Judges who agreed with him the big structure of the structure of him in his judgment. This was rendered in the case of

"Looking at the classes of subjects legislation upon which is com-mitted exclusively to the Provinces, it is very apparent that it was that mitted exclusively to the Provinces, it is very apparent that it was that their legislatures should possess very large and ample powers in relation to all subjects of a local and domestic nature. They had possessed plenary powers upon these subjects before Confederation; and the general scheme of Confederation appears to have been to leave them the plenary control of these subjects. They were, under the Act, Legis-latures, in regard to these subjects, in the true and full sense of the term. This is the more apparent from the use of the words 'exclusive' and 'exclusively' (and they are used repeatedly) in the Imperial Act. Other legislation upon these classes of subjects is excluded. No alteration, no amendment, no perfecting of any measure falling within these classes of subjects can be made by any authority outside of the Provincial Legis-lature. It is therefore necessary that the Provincial Legislature should possess plenary power in relation to all these subjects, to change, amend. possess plenary power in relation to all these subjects, to change, amend, possess prenary power in relation to an these subjects, to enage, ament, repeal, re-enact, and in short to deal with them as thenge of circum-stances or othe- exigencies might render proper; the propriety of changes in any shape made, not to be challenged by any other legisla-tive authority, and the power to make them being limited only by the rule whether the law making the change is within the class of subjects legislated upon which is assigned to Provincial Legislatures."

The Chief Justice lays down the general principle which should govern the courts in construing the British North America Act; and he applies it to this particular case. He savs:

" One other conclusion presents itself, which is, to my mind, conclusive. This matter of licensing, and of the regulation of places and persons licensel, appertains to municipal institutions, and is, moreover, of a local nature. Now, the making of laws in relation to both these sub-jects being committed exclusively to the Provincial Legislatures, and legislation by any other power being thereby excluded, it follows that the British North America Act operates to withdraw from legislative control by, any power or body whatever, the licensing and the regulation of places and persons licensed, powers in regard to which they had heretofore unquestionably exercised The effect in that case would be more and other than a distribution of legislative power; it would be an extinction of legislative power in regard to subjects which, up to Uon-federation, had been subjects of Provincial Legislature."

No language could be stronger, clearer and more explicit, and to my mind the reasoning on which the conclusion is based is good and conclusive reasoning. Further, in that case the same Judge expressed himself with respect to the clause which the hon member cited, sub-section 9 of section 92, giving the Local Legislature power to license for revenue purposes, and the hon. gentleman will see what the court thought on that point. The learned Judge who presided said:

"My interpretation of clause 9 is that it is cumulative to clause 8, and that it was intended to authorize provincial legislation (or at least to settle any doubts that might exist upon the point) in relation to the incenses enumerated for the purpose of raising revenue as well as for the regulation of matters of police. I have hesitated in placing this con-struction upon clause 9, because 30 far as I am aware the more limited construction placed apon it in the earlier cases after Confederation, has been generally accepted as the correct interpretation of the clause ; but am unable, myself, to concur in that construction.

So the hon, gentleman will see that Provincial Legislatures have not the power to issue licenses merely for the sake of revenue, but that the latter was a provision in addition to the power they possessed under the clause respecting municipal institutions. It is cumulative to that clause. The only other Judge who gave a written judgment on the point concurred with the Chief Justice. I will read a single extract from his judgment. Justice Burton said:

"Within its range, then each has an exclusive power; the only case in which a concurrent power is given is in section 95, to make laws in rela-tion to agriculture and immigration, and there it is specially provided that the Provincial legislation may be over-ridden by the Dominion Parliament.

"Reading the powers granted in section 92, with the exceptions where they occur in section 91, the Local Legislature is absolute and supreme over those subject matters, with as ample power to legislate in respect of them as the Imperial Parliament, and without any possibility of in-terference by the Dominion Parliament."

The hon. gentleman has appealed to the constitutional authorities of the land, and I have read them, and I challenge him to produce any judgment from any Court of Appeal in any one of the Provinces, which does not coincide with those I have read. He knows that a case came before the Supreme Court of the Dominion a short time ago-the Poulin case—and that though it was determined on another point, three of the Judges gave their opinion on this particular point we are now discussing, and that judgment was that the Local Legislature had power to enact such legislation as we have attempted to enact; that it does not pertain to both the Local and the Dominion Legislatures, but it is exclusively vested in the Provinces—that they pos-sessing it, we do not possess it. I could not understand the argument of the hon. member for Quebec Centre. He was of opinion, he said, that if it was put to him now whether the power was vested in the Province or in the Dominion, he would rather be inclined to think it was vested in the Provinces; but he went on to argue, that inasmuch as we had passed the Act of last Session, it would not do to repeal it now. He said if we repealed it now it would bring about interminable law-uits. My opinion is, that the refusal to repeal that law will bring about the interminable lawsuits. It is the only way in which they can be brought about, as any hon, gentleman can see by a little reflection; and why so? Because the power of the Local Legislatures to pass the laws they have passed, has been determined, not only by the highest Courts of Appeal in this country, but by the highest judicial tribunal to which we can appeal in the British Empire. That power is conclusively settled, and unless we attempt to interfere here, unless we attempt to usurp to ourselves powers which the courts have decided do not belong to us, it cannot be but that this litigation will ensue. And, therefore, the only way in which litigation and trouble, and confusion can be brought about, is by our proceeding in the face of these judicial decisions, by our keeping on the Statute Book a law for which we have no judicial authority, by our attempting to usurp an authority which, for sixteen years, has been exclusively exercised by the Local Legislatures, and which the courts of law have unanimously decided have been exercised by them strictly within their powers. I say, we are not justified in doing anything of the kind, and that nothing has been produced to justify any hon. gentleman in supporting the retention of that law on the Statute Book. If hon. gentlemen think that Dominion legislation is desirable, that it is preferable to if they think it is desirable to legislation, local that the Local Legislatures should not have that power, then I could understand their carrying out that desire, by persisting to keep this law on the Statute Book, by proceeding to bring about this interminable litigation in the hope that that litigation will result in our finding that we possess that power. But we do not find one hon. gentleman rising in his place and stating that he hopes or believes that it may be ultimately decided that this power is vested in this Parliament; on the contrary, they say that they would rather see this power possessed by the Local Legislatures. I say, if they believe that this power should be in the Local Legislatures, when they find that the courts of the land have determined that it is in the Local Legislature, why insist that it is vested in this Parliament? I cannot understand their course in this respect, and we have not had it explained. We have had an attempted explanation by the Minister of Public Works, but to my mind, and with all deference to that hon. gentleman, it struck me as being a very weak and lame explanation. He says they have no desire to interfere with the autonomy of the Provinces, and that in cases of doubt his disposition is always to lean towards the Provinces, and to leaving the power with the Provinces. If that is his desire, it was a necessity. He finds out now, from the judgment why does he not carry it out? Why is he attempting to in re Holge, that it was not a necessity. The grounds on interfere here? Why is he attempting to over-rule the de-cision of the highest court of his own Province—the unanimous decision of that court? Why is he attempting to over-ride the decision of the Privy Council of England? Why is he attempting to usurp powers which he says himself he desires Minister of Public Works, in his apologetic speech, Mr. DAVIES.

to leave to the Local Legislatures? The hon. gentleman does not explain his position in that respect. He says this License Act which we are called upon, by this resolution, to repeal, was not an Act of the Government, but was an Act brought in by a Committee of this House. In the strictest and narrowest technical sense, the hon. gentleman may be right, but substantially he is wrong. The hon. may be right, but substantially he is wrong. gentleman knows well that the Bill was a Government measure; it was not initiated by a private member, or in obedience to any demand made by a private member, but at the instance of the Prime Minister himself; that it was brought down in the Speech from the Throne, that it was declared by the Government of which he was a member to be not only desirable, but a necessity. The House will excuse me if I quote a sentence from the Speech, which was put in the mouth of the Governor-General, last year :

"I am advised that the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Com-mittee of the Privy Council, delivered last June on appeal of Russell ve. The Queen, goes to show, that in order to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors, and for that purpose to regulate the granting of shop, saloon and tavern licenses, legislation by the Dominion Parlia-ment will be necessary."

The hon. member, in his capacity as a member of the Government, recommended that legislation, he initiated it, and brought it down. And, Sir, at the time I entertained the opinion, and I still entertain the opinion, that it was not creditable to the Government to attempt to shift the responsibility from their own shoulders to the shoulders of a Committee, in a matter of legislation of this kind. His attempt failed, so far as this side of the House was concerned, because it will be recollected that the leader of the party to which I belong, and leading members of that party, expressed themselves clearly as being opposed to the initiation of this legislation by a Committee. We thought the Bill was unconstitutional and improper, but we declared that even if it was constitutional, the Government should themselves assume the responsibility of bringing in the Bill. They had assumed the responsibility of advising Parliament to legislate upon the subject; they told Parliament that it was absolutely necessary to legislate upon it, and when they came to draw the Bill, they asked that a Committee should be appointed to bring it down. The Prime Minister insisted on that occasion that he did not wish to take away this power from the Local Legislature, that he was only driven to it by dire necessity; that nothing but necessity would in luce him to do it; that so highly did he value the privileges which the Provinces had exercised since the time that the Confederation was consummated, up to last year, that he would be the last man to lay his hand upon that power or interfere with it, and he apologized to the House, when he told them that he was only driven to it by dire necessity. He said :

"This is not a matter we can play with. It is not a matter of policy; it is a matter of necessity. If we wish to prevent the unre-strained sale of intoxicating liquor, we must legislate immediately; for I take it, that any man in this city, or in another part of Ontario, can open his saloon and sell liquors, and there is not a court in the world can prevent his doing as." can prevent his doing so.

There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman thought so at the time, or he would not have said so. But he was entirely wrong; he drew an erroneous conclusion from the case of Russell vs. the Queen, and he had the manliness to acknowledge that, this Session, himself. But I want to know, now that he has seen the error of his constitutional opinion, why he does not repeal this legislation. He says that he only passed the law last Session because he thought it was a necessity. He finds out now, from the judgment which he told the House that the Act was necessary, do not exist; the law is not required; and that being the case, he should assent to the proposition of the hon. member who proposes that the Bill should be repealed. The hon.

said that no court has yet decided that this law is ultra vires. Well, perhaps not in the technical and literal sense, because the law has not yet been brought before the courts. But the courts have decided that there is not a concurrent right to legislate on this subject in both Legislatures; that the exclusive power to legislate is vested in the Local Legislatures, and that being the case, it follows that the power does not rest here, and the decision in re Hodge is, practically, a decision that this House has not power to pass a similar law. So the case has been decided. The hon. gentleman has hinted that a Bill is to be introduced, declaring that the penalties imposed by this License Law are not to be executed; yet he thinks it desirable that the opinion of the courts should be taken as to the constitutionality of the Act. I think the House is entitled to an explanation from the hon. gentleman, how the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is to be obtained. If the penalties imposed by the Act are not to be executed; if a law is to be brought in declaring that these penalties are not to be enforced, how is the hon. gentleman going to have a test suit tried? He cannot do it. I can understant i that he has power to refer a case to the Supreme Court of Canada, but he cannot refer one to the Judicial Committee, unless upon some agreement. That ought, at any rate, to be explained. But, Sir, what would be the effect, I would like to ask, of repealing these penalties. By the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Act will be in force while the local Acts will not be in force, and the penalties will be repealed. Therefore, it will be open to any man in the Dominion to sell liquor without being liable to any penalty. If the hon, gentleman's con-stitutional position is good, that the local laws are not worth the paper on which they are written, then there will exist no law, with penalties attached, against the sale of liquors, and the unrestrained and indiscriminate sale of liquors from one end of this Dominion to the other will be the result. Does the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and other hon. gentlemen engaged in the promulgation of temperance principles, desire to see that result? If the penalties are repealed, no man can be punished for selling liquor. Therefore, the hon. gentleman is going to bring about a state of confusion worse than has ever existed, worse than the Prime Minister stated last year, though erroneously, existed in this Dominion. If these penalties are repealed, how will the indiscriminate sale of liquors, whether retail or wholesale, be prevented?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the Provincial law

Mr. DAVIES. The Provincial law, the hon. gentleman says, is not good.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not say so now.

Mr. DAVIES. Then, do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the provincial law is good? If it is good, what does he insist on this law for? If the provincial law is good, then the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution is correct in the statement that this is a deliberate attempt to usurp the rights which the Local Legislatures possess and which they have exercised for sixteen years. There are two horns to the dilemma, and the hon. gentleman can take either, but he is in pain no matter which he takes. For my part, I am of opinion that it is better, in the interest of peace, good government, and good temperance legislation, that the power to legislate on this subject should remain where the British North America Act placed it, where it was intended it should remain, and where the hon. gentleman now says it does exist; and I am opposed to this attempt to over-ride the powers which the Local Legislatures possess, and which, in my humble judgment, they ought to continue to exercise.

Mr. MACMASTER. The hon, member who last addressed the House told us in explicit language that the decision in re Hodge is practically a decision that we have not the power to enact this law. The law to which the hon, gentleman was referring, and which is now occupying the attention of this House, is the Canada License Act of 1883. We have therefore the hon. gentleman committed to the explicit statement that the decision in the Hodge case is a decision that this Parliament had not the power to enact the License Law of 1883. That statement is quite in keeping with the statement of my hon. friend from Bellechasse who, in the able argument he addressed to this House, took the ground that we had already had a decision on this question in the case of Hodge, and that it was therefore a mere subterfuge to appeal a second time to the courts. So, my hon. friend from Bellechasse and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island are in perfect accord that the Hodge case should be taken as deciding the constitutionality of the legislation on this subject. Now, the statements of both hon. gentlemen, I submit, are entirely untenable. In the first place, as the hon. Minister of Public Works pointed out, we have had no direct decision on the constitutionality of the Canada License Act of 1883, and it is only inferentially that they come to the conclusion that the Hodge case affords a binding decision on that subject. The hon. member for Bellechasse also took the ground that we were robbing the Local Legislatures of their powers. Sir, we can do nothing of the kind. We cannot take away from the powers of the Local Legislatures, neither can the Local Legislatures take away from the powers of the Federal Parliament. The last court of resort in the Empire, the Privy Council, will be the final arbiter between the Provinces and the Dominion upon the question of their powers. It is not for us to take away or to give, or, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island said, to have hopes or fears ; but it is our duty here to give a correct interpretation to the laws under which we live, and if we cannot do this, we must refer it, as the hon. Minister desires to refer it, first to the highest court we have in our own country, and after that, to the highest court in the Empire, for supreme and final determination. Now my hon. friend from Quebec East said that the Federal system was the best system under which we could live; he said he preferred it to the legislative system. But it is not a matter of preference to us at this time. The fathers of Confederation, among whom are the right hon. the First Minister, the late Hon. George Brown and many other hon. gentlemen known to public life in this country, on both sides of politics, settled the Constitution of this country, and socured the fiat of the Imperial Legislature to its final enactment in England. So that it is not left to us now to express our preference for a legislative or a federal union. We have a Federal union, and we must endeavour to interpret it and to so work it as to subserve the best interest of the people of this country. I endeavoured to follow closely the argument of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) and I did so with that pleasure with which hon. members of this House, in common with myself, always follow his arguments. But I must say, I regret exceedingly that he relied very much on the case of Sulte vs. Three Rivers, decided by the Court of Queen's Bench of Quebec, and in citing this case, he omitted to state two things: first, that this case is now under appeal in the Supreme Court of Canada, where it runs the chance, not always very uncertain, of being reversed; and secondly, that the hon. gentleman, while putting forth the view of the Court of the Province of Quebec, that prohibition might exist as an incident of municipal institutions, unfairly omitted to inform hon. gentlemen that in a case in the same category, the case of Hodge vs. The Queen, the Privy Council in England, a higher Court than the Court of Queen's Bench of Quebec, seemed to indicate that the Crooks Act of Ontario would have been inoperative if the Canada Temperance Act had been locally adopted in the county of York.

Now, under what circumstances was the Canada License Act of 1883 brought into existence? The decision in the case of Russell vs. The Queen had just been rendered by the Privy Council, and in that case their Lordships said :

"With regard to the first clause, No. 10 (that's with regard to shop licenses) it is to be observed that the power of granting licenses is not assigned to the Provincial Legislature for the purpose of regulating trade, but only for the raising of revenue for provincial, local or municipal purposes.

Now, the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House came to the conclusion, last Session of Parliament, from the statement, that it was necessary to pass an Act which would restrict and regulate the trade in intoxicating liquors. Hon. gentlemen on the other side did not say that Act was unconstitutional. The hon. leader of the Opposition referred to several decisions of the courts upon this subject, but he never ventured to state that the Act then proposed to be enacted was unconstitutional, and during the discussion upon this question at the opening of this Session, when challenged by the right hon. leader of the Government to say whether the Canada License Act of 1883 was constitutional or unconstitutional, he refused to lend the credit of his name and deservedly high reputation to a statement as to whether it was one or the other. In view of the state ment of the Privy Council in the case of Russell vs. The Qneen, this Parliament undertook to pass an Act regulating the liquor traffic throughout the whole Dominion. It did not, however, coincidentally with that legislation, endeavour to rob the Provincial Legislatures of the revenues to which they are entitled, derivable from the graating of licenses; but, on the contrary, the Dominion Act expressly provided that the tax for licenses should go, not to the Dominion Government, for Dominion purposes, as was the case under the Scott Act, passed by hon. gentlemen opposite, but that it should go to support the Exchequers of the Now, we have to consider first whether Provinces. the Canada License Act of 1883 is constitutional or not. In doing that, we can take up first the rule laid down by the Privy Council as a safe course to be followed by those upon whom rest the responsibility of determining such Statutes. In the case of Hodge, the Privy Council said :

"In performing the difficult duty of determining such questions, it will be a wise course for those on whom it is thrown to decide each case which arises as best they can, without entering more largely upon the interpretation of the Statute than is necessary for the decision of the par-ticular question in hand."

In that respect, it will be observed that the Privy Council, as pointed out by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, confined themselves strictly to the proposition they laid down, and determined the question whether it was legal or illegal in the Province of Ontario. I do not deny, because I do not wish to pass over any point in connection with this discussion-and moreover, in discussing a constitutional question, I think it would ill-become members of the legal profession, who are members of this House, to attempt to prostitute argument to political purposes—I do not deny that in the decision of Hodge vs. The Queen, the Privy Council went on to discuss other matters; but, following the rple laid down, which I have just cited as a criterion for their conduct, they did not decide these matters; they merely commented upon them, and seemed to say : when these cases come before us we will decide them under the circumstances under which they arise, but sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof; and, in the meantime, we only decide the question brought before us with respect to the keeping open of billiard saloons after seven o'clock. The in intoxicating liquors. Now, it cannot be doubted that Privy Council put down a rule in the case of Russell vs. The Queen, in regard to the interpretation of the Statute of 1867. It is this:

Mr. MACMASTER,

"The true nature and character of legislation, in the particular instance under discussion, must always be determined, in order to ascer-tain the class of subjects to which it really belongs."

Let us, under the guidance of that rule, take up the Canada License Act of 1883. What is the nature and character of that legislation? Let us look at the preamble. The preamble says :

"It is desirable to regulate the traffic in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and it is expedient that the law in respect to the same should be uniform throughout the Dominion, and that provision should be made in regard thereto for the better preservation of peace and order." The scope and object of the enactment is uniform legislation and regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors throughout all the Provinces of Canada, in the general interest of the whole Dominion. This enactment is simply the complement-I was almost going to say the twin-of the Scott Act or the Temperance Act of 1878. Let us look at the preamble of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878. That states :---

"It is very desirable, to promote temperance in the Dominion, that there should be uniform legislation in all the Provinces respecting the traffic in intexicating liquors."

These are the objects as declared by the two Acts, and I set a good deal of value on these two declarations for the reason that the Canada Temperance Act of 1878 has been declared to be constitutional; and if we find there is an affinity between the two Acts, we may conclude if the one is constitutional, the other must be constitutional, and therefore the proposition of the hon, member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), that the Hodge case determined the constitutionality of the Act now before the House, will completely fall to the ground. In the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, the object is to make uniform legislation in all the Provinces respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, in order to promote the cause of temperance. In the Canada License Act of 1883, the object is to make uniform legislation in all the Provinces throughout the Dominion-for what purpose? In order to preserve peace and good order throughout the whole of Canada. The objects are practically, therefore, the same. But I do not rest upon my own frail interpretation of what the significance of the Act of 1878 may be. The Privy Council, in the decision in which they found the Canada Temperance Act to be constitutional, declared as follows:

"The preamble of the Act in question states that it is very desirable to promote temperance in the Dominion, and that there should be uni-form legislation in all the Provinces in reference to the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Then their Lordships go on, and state as follows :-

"The declared object of the said Act is to have uniform legislation in all the Provinces, in reference to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, with a view to promote temperance in the Dominion. Parliament does not treat the promotion of temperance as desirable in one Province more than another, but as desirable in every Province throughout the Dominion.

Then their Lordships say again:

"Parliament feels that the subject is one of general concern for the Dominion, and upon which uniformity of legislation is desirable, and the Parliament alone can so deal with it There is no ground or pre-tence for saying that the evil or vice struck at by the Act in question is local, or exists only in one Province, and that Parliament, under colour of general legislation, is dealing with a Provincial matter only."

So, with regard to the Canada License Act of 1883, there is no ground or pretence for saying that it is local in its scope or in its objects. Its objects are Dominion in character. They are not of a provincial character. What it has in view is not to make uniform laws with regard to any one-Province upon the subject of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, but its object is to make a uniform and general law applicable to the whole Dominion, upon the trade or traffic this is a subject within the purview of this Parliament. When we refer to the case of Parsons and the Citizens' I Insurance Company-and here I am citing the opinions expressed in cases that have passed under review; I am not citing the decision of cases in which the final decree of the court is yet to be made, but I am citing the final decisions of the highest court in the Empire. We find their Lordships said .

"Construing, therefore, the words 'regulation of trade and commerce upon the various aids to their interpretation above suggested, they would include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the saction of Parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and it may be that they would include the general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion."

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether the making of a uniform law upon the subject of the traffic in intoxicating liquors is not a regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion. T do not see how the contrary can be for a moment successfully. maintained. That the liquor traffic is a trade, that it is a trade existing throughout the Dominion, that it is an influential trade, an extensive trade, cannot be denied ; and I believe that this Legislature has as much right to regulate that trade as it has to regulate any other trade in which the Parliament of this country has jurisdiction. When we see that the scope and objects of the Canada License Act of 1883 are practically co-extensive with those of the Scott Act, and that the constitutionality of the Scott Act has been affirmed by the Privy Council of England, it is easy to come to the conclusion that the Canada License Act of 1883, whether it be advisable or whether it be inadvisable, is constitutional within the meaning of the Constitution of this country. My hon. friend who, with so much ability, moved this resolution, did not contend that it was constitutional or that it was not. His argument was entirely addressed to the question as to whether it was advisable to put that Act in force, or rather to continue it in force. But he has been exceeded in the race. My hon, friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), my hon, friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), have far outstripped him, and have gone far beyond the constitutional position taken up by him, and have come to the conclusion that the Act of 1883 is unconstitutional, on the authority of the Hodge case recently decided in the Privy Council.

Now, I will address myself for a moment or two to the Hodge case. As I stated before, the decision there is not germane to the decision of the question which is now before the House. Their Lordships state what their decision is. These are their words:

"He (Hodge) did permit this billard table to be used as such within the period prohibited by the resolution of the License Commissioners, and it was for that infraction of their rules he was prosecuted and convicted."

These are the words of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Now, when we turn to their Lordships' remarks, what do we find? After setting out what the case is about, their Lordships do not proceed to lay down any general dictum upon the regulation of trade and commerce; they do not proceed to state that the Act that is now before the House or any Act equivalent in terms is unconstitutional; they proceed to discuss the contents of sections 4 and 5 of the License Act of Ontario, of 1877, in the following words :--

"Their Lordships proceed now to consider the subject matter and legislative character of sections 4 and 5 of the Liquor License Act of 1877, cap. 181, Revised Statutes of Untario. That Act is so far confined in its operation to municipalities in the Province of Ontario, and is entirely local in its character and operation."

Now, these words may have a special signification when the constitutionality of this Act is brought into juxtaposition with that of an Act having reference to the whole Dominion :

"It authorizes the appointment of License Commissioners to act in each municipality, and empowers them to pass, under the name of reso-lutions, what we know as by-laws, or rules, to denne the conditions and qualifications requisite for obtaining tavern or shop liceases /or sale by retail of spirituous liquors within the municipality; for limiting the number of licenses; for declaring that a limited number of persons qualified to have tavern licenses may be exempted from having all the tavern accommodation required by law, and for regulating licensed taverns and shops; for defining the duties and powers of License Inspec-tors, and to impose penalties for infraction of their resolutions."

These words are descriptive of the contents of sections 4 and 5 of that License Act. Then their Lordships proceed :

"These seem to be all matters of a merely local nature in the Provinces "These seem to be all matters of a merely local nature in the Province" and to be similar to, though not identical in all respects with, the powers then belonging to municipal institutions under the previously existing laws passed by the Local Parliaments. Their Lordships consider that the powers intended to be conferred by the Act in question, when properly understood, are to make regulations in the nature of police or municipal regulations, of a merely local character, for the good government of taverns, &c., licensed for the sale of liquors by retail, and such as are calculated to preserve, in the municipality, peace and public decency, and repress drunkenness and disorderly and riotous conduct. conduct.

"As such they cannot be said to interfere with the general regulation of trade and commerce which belong to the Dominion Parliament, and do not conflict with the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, which does not appear as yet to have been locally adopted."

Here we find that their Lordships have made an express reference to the powers of the Dominion Parliament to regulate trade and commerce. They say that these powers conferred by the Local Act do not interfere with our right to regulate trade and commerce, and that they " do not conflict " with the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, which does not appear to have been locally adopted." Sir, have these words any signification? Is there any meaning to be attached to the fact that their Lordships, while adjudicating upon the Hodge case, with regard to playing a game of billiards after seven o'clock in the evening, have pointed out that the Canada Temperance Act did not appear to have been locally adopted ? Now, I put it to you, and to every member of this House, whether their Lordships might not have meant to convey by these words that had the Canada Temperance Act, 1878 been "locally adopted," had it been in force in York County at that time, then the provisions of the License Commissioners, made in virtue of the Local Act of the Province of Ontario, would have been submerged and over-borne, and that the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act would have prevailed in their stead? Sir, if the Parliament of Canada has the power to enact the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, if it has power to provide that local prohibition may take place, if this Parliament has the power to enact a Dominion prohibitory liquor law-and no hop, member will doubt that it has that power-who can doubt that the greater power includes the less, and that if we have power to say that liquor shall not be sold at all, we have not also the power, as the supreme Legislature of the country, to say how that trade shall be regulated; to say that it shall be restricted; that it may be restricted to a certain number of licenses in each municipality. I do not say at this time that it may be so, because, as I stated at the outset, I wish to give a correct interpretation to the Constitution. That question has yet to be determined, and that is one reason why the Minister of Public Works has moved to refer this question beyond the whirlpool of partizanship and strife to which it is subjected here, and submit it to the cool judicial decision of the Supreme Court of this country, and, if necessary, to the highest court of the Empire. Now, Sir, if we refer to another portion of the Hodge case, we find a statement that in my humble view, is pregnant with meaning. When their Lordships referred to the misapprehension under which counsel seemed to have laboured, with regard to the true intent and meaning of the case of Russell and the Queen, they said :

"The principle which that case and the case of the Citizens' Insur ance Company illustrates, is that unjects, which in one aspect, and for one purpose, fall within section 92, may, in another aspect, and for another purpose, fall within section 91."

Mr. Speaker, I think within these words we will find

ada. As plain as words could convey it, they there intimate that subjects which, in one view and for one purpose, may fall within the jurisdiction of a Provincial Legislature, may, in another view and for another purpose, fall within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. And if there was a difficulty upon the matter which I have previously discussed, it enables us to come to a conclusion, and to see how, notwithstanding that the Privy Council found that sections 4 and 5 in the Hodge case, were within the jurisdiction of the Legislature of Ontario, the whole of the Canada License Act of 1883 may be, notwithstanding, within the jurisdic-tion of this Parliament. We are as yet, in the interpretation of our Constitution, only groping. During my practice at the Bar, and during my intercourse with gentlemen on both sldes of politics belonging to the legal profession, I have heard many adverse criticisms upon the terms of our Constitutional Act. Sir, I have never shared in these adverse criticisms. The study I have been able to give to the distribution of legislative powers under the British North America Act, has convinced me that that distribution has been most skilfully made; that the sections 92 and 91 are pieces of the most skilful mechanism, and show the care that has been employed in framing these words so as to preserve our Constitution in such form as should be for the public interests of this country. The men who designed that Constitution were the leading men in this country at the time, and some of them are happily now surviving with us to give the aid of their skill and ex-perience to interpret it. Some of them have passed away, but whether they have passed away or whether they re-main with us, I think there is but one sentiment among the people of this country, and that is, that these men were the ablest men of our country at the time, and that they faithfully and patriotically gave their best exertions in order to frame for us, at a time when political rancour was quiet, a Constitution that would survive the attacks of partizanship, and that it would be our guide for many years, if not centuries, to come. Until a short time ago it was the view prevailing in the courts of this country that if the Legislature of a Province had power to do a certain thing, to pass a certain Act, as, for instance, the incorporation of building societies, the Dominion Legislature had not that power. An opinion to that effect was expressed quite recently, within a year or two, in the Court of Appeal in the Province of Quebec, and an appeal was taken from that decision. It was a case in which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was one of the counsel before the Privy Council in England, and in that case their Lordships decided explicitly that this Parliament could give to a corporation the lineaments or essentials necessary to its incorporation, to enable it to carry its operations as a building or construction society, even to the extent of acquiring land throughout the Dominion, in order to fulfil its purposes; but that when it went to the several Provinces, then it became subject to the laws of Mortmain in the several Provinces, and to such other laws as might prevail with regard to the tenure of land. Until quite recently, this view pre-vailed. In the case of Loranger and the Colonial Investment and Building Society, decided in the Privy Council on the 1st of December last, their Lordships said:

"Ohief Justice Dorion appears to be of opinion that inasmuch as the Legislature of the Province had passed Acts relating to such societies defining and limiting their operations, the Dominion Parliament was incompetent to incorporate the present association, having for one of its objects the erection of buildings throughout the Dominion, their Lord-ships at present fail to see how the existence of these Provincial Acts, if competently passed for local objects, can interfere with the power of the Dominion Parliament to incorporate the association in question."

And by analogy of reasoning, perhaps we might, for the sake of argument, grant the premises laid down by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) that the Legislature of a Province might pass an Act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors or providing for the licensing of taverns, Mr. MACMASTER.

but it does not follow-the contrary is established by this decision-that a power may not be vested in the General Parliament whenever the object of the incorporation is matter of general concern. For a moment or two I desire to call attention to sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, under the provisions of which the constitutionality of this Act must be decided, and under which the constitutionality of the Crooks Act was decided in the case of Hodge. Section 91 is as follows :--

"It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, in relation to matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces; and for greater certainty, but not so as to resurict the generality of the foregoing terms of this section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive legis-lative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all matters com-ing within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated."

And twenty-eight subjects are enumerated, among which is "The regulation of Trade and Commerce." The section concludes:

"And any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section shall not be deemed to come within the class of matters of a local or private nature comprised in the enumeration of the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces."

Section 92 contains the subjects exclusively agreed to be legislated on by the Provinces, and the conclusion of subsection 16 says:

"Generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the Province.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) addressed a plausible argument to this House and pressed it very strongly, that if the Local Legislatures had jurisdiction in the matter of the liquor traffic, they had it exclusively, because, under section 92, their powers are assigned to them exclusively. That was a very plausible argument; but the hon. gentleman must remember this, that though sub-section 16 of section 92 assigns all matters of a merely local or private nature in the Province to the jurisdiction of the Province exclusively; yet, notwithstanding that, when any of those matters come under any of the twenty-eight classes of subjects enumerated in Section 91, then the subject matter is taken out of the jurisdiction of the Province by the express terms of the British North America Act, and is placed under section 91 within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament. That may be a conclusion which is fatal to the hon, gentleman's contention; that may be a view much more in keeping with the view of the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde); but whether it may be in accordance with his view or not, such is the proper interpretation of the Act, as propounded in several decisions rendered by the Privy Council in England. I will read a few words from their Lordships' decision in the case of Russell vs. The Queen, with respect to sections 91 and 92. Their Lordships say in that case :

"The general question of the competency of the Dominion Parliament

"The general question of the competency of the Dominion Parliament to pass the Act depends on the construction of the 91st and 92nd sections of the 'British North America Act, 1867,' which are found in Part VI. of the Statute, under the heading 'Distribution of Legislative Powers.' "The 91st section enacts (I have read the section.) "The general scheme of the 'British North America Act,' with regard to the distribution of legislative powers, and the general scope and effect of sections 91 and 92, and their relation to each other, were fally con-sidered and commented on by this Board in the case of the Citizens' In-surance Company v. Parsons (7 L. R Appeal Cases 96). According to the principle of construction there pointed out, and the first question to be determined is, whether the Act now in question falls within any of -the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92, and assigned exclu-sively to the Legislatures of the Provinces. If it does then the further question would arise, viz., whether the subject of the Act does not fall within one of the enumerated classes of subjects in section 91, and so does not still belong to the Dominion Parliament. But if the Act does not fall within any of the classes of subjects in section 92, no further question will remain, for it cannot be contended, and iniced was not contended at their Lordships' Bar, that if the Act does not come within one of the classes of subjects assigned to the Provincial Legislatures one of the classes of subjects assigned to the Provincial Legislatures the Parliament of Canada had not, by its general power 'to make laws for the prace, order, and good government of Canada,' full legislative authority to pass it."

From that pronunciamento it is perfectly plain that in construing an Act the first question is: does the subject matter of it fall within the subjects of section 92? and if it does, that does not decide finally that it belongs to section 92. The further question then arises, whether or not, notwithstanding that it falls within section 92, it belongs to any of the enumerated classes of subjects in section 91, and so belongs to the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament? In the case of Parsons vs. The Queen, their Lordships said:

"The first question to be decided is, whether the Act impeached in the present appeals, falls within any of the classes of subjects enumer-a ed in section 92, and assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the Provinces; for, if it does not, it can be of no validity, and no other question would then arise. It is only when an Act of the Provincial Legislature, primâ facis falls within one of these classes of subjects, that the further question arises, viz., whether notwithstanding that is so, the subject of the Act does not also fall within one of the classes of subjects in section 91, and whether the power of the Provincial Legislature is or is not thereby overcome."

According to the opinions expressed by their Lordships in these two cases, in regard to the distribution of power, under sections 91 and 92, there is first to be considered whether the subject matter of the Act falls within section 92; if so, the further question arises whether it does not fall within 91, and therefore comes under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament; and then there is a third question; if it does, does the legislation passed by virtue of it overbear the legislation passed on the same subject by a Provincial Legislature. So, Sir, I submit that this is a fair question to be considered here. I do not pretend to decide it; I only call attention to it. Does the legislation of the Dominion Parliament, with reference to a matter of personal concern, submerge the legislation upon the same subject passed in a Province as a local and private matter, quoad the Province? The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island did not suggest that we might even have concurrent legislation. He said the Hodge case decided the matter finally, that the jarisdiction was in the Provincial Legislature, and not here, and he did not go so far as to say that it might be concurrent. Now, their Lordships said in the Parsons case:

"It could not have been the intention that a conflict should exist; and in order to prevent such a result the language of the two sections must be read together, and that of one interpreted, and, where neces-sary, modified, by that of the other. In this way, in most cases, it will be found possible to arrive at a reasonable and practical construction of the language of the sections, so as to reconcile the respective powers they contain, and give effect to all of them. In performing this diffi-cult duty, it will be a wise course for those on whom it is thrown to decide in each case which arises, as best they can, without entering more largely upon an interpretation of the Statute than is necessary for the decision of the particular question on hand."

So, we see, according to the declaration of their Lordships that it is not in the contemplation of the Act that there should be a conflict of jurisdiction. That would seem to suggest, and it is practically suggested in the case of Hodge vs. The Queen, that the lesser power of the Local Legislature must give way. I do not say so, but I simply say that it is a fair inference from the reasoning of their Lordships in these cases. Further, I say that the British North America Act seems to imply, by the use of the word exclusively, not merely with reference to local jurisdiction, but with reference to Federal jurisdiction, that there is not a concurrence of jurisdiction, on any subject contained in sections 91 and 92. That view is further strengthened by the fact that in section 95 we find the following. The marginal note is:

"Concurrent powers of legislation respecting agriculture, &c."

The section itself states:

it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to agriculture in all or any of the Prov-inces, and to immigration into all or any of the Provinces; and any law of the Legislature of a Province relative to agriculture or to immigra-tion shall have effect in and for the Province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada."

Here, Sir, we find an expressed stipulation in our Constitution providing for concurrent jurisdiction. The marginal notes styles it concurrent jurisdiction. The provisions of the Statute declare it to be concurrent jurisdiction. It is provided in that clause that in the event of the legislation of the Local Legislature being repugnant to that of the Federal Legislature, the legislation of the Local must give way. This exception seems to support the view that, in the event of a conflict between the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures and the Federal Parliament, the pre-eminence is given in the matter of legislation to the Parliament of Canada. Now, there is a decision which seems to bear out that view. It is a decision rendered in a case about ten years ago in the Privy Council, and several times since has been referred to approvingly by their Lordships. It was an appeal in the case of "L'Union St. Jacques vs. Belisle," which arose in the district of Montreal, under these circumstances. This union was a benevolent or aid society. It provided that certain contributions should be sent in by workingmen to the society, and that certain provision should be made for the benefit of widows and children of deceased workmen. In the course of time the society became embarrassed, and it was necessary for it to obtain legislation in order to provide for the successful carrying out of its affairs. The society did not desire to go into insolvency, but to make such provisions as would enable them to pay less than the ordinary amount of their obligations, under the constitution and rules. They went to the Legislature of Quebec and obtained an Act authorizing the commutation of the claims against the society. Two of the widows having claims refused to accept these commuted amounts, and they brought action against the society, claiming that what the society had done was to go to the Legislature of Quebec for relief, and that the Legislature of Quebec had passed an Act practically dealing with the subject matter of insolvency, which is under the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. The case went to the Privy Council, and Lord Selbourne, who rendered the decision of their Lordships, declared that the subject matter of the Act did not come within the purview of insolvency; that the object of the Act was to avoid those subjects; that it was legal to bring the matter to the Province of Quebec, and that the Dominion had nothing to do with it. They decided that the Act of the Province was constitutional because it dealt with a local and private matter. In delivering judgment their Lordships expressed the following opinion which, in my view, has a strong bearing on this case :-

this case :--"The hypothesis was suggested in argument by Mr. Benjamine, who certainly argued this case with his usual ingenuity and force, of a law having been previously passed by the Dominion Legislature. to the effect that any association of this particular kind, throughout the Dominion, on certain specified conditions, assumed to be exactly those which appear to be on the face of this Statute, should thereupon, ipso facto, rall under the legal administration in bankruptcy or insolvency. Their Lordships are by no means prepared to say thatif any such law as that had been passed by the Dominion Legislature, it would have been beyond their competency; nor, that if it had been so passed, it would have been within the competency of the Provincial Legislatures afterwards to take a particular association out of the scope of a general law of that kind, so competently passed by the authority which had power to deal with bankruptcy and insolvency. But no such law ever has been passed; and to suggest the possibility of such a law, as a reason why the power of the Provincial Legislature, over this local and private association, should be in abeyance or altogether taken away, is to make a suggestion which, if followed up to its consequences, would go far to destroy that power in all cases."

Now, Sir, I understand the meaning of this to be that "In each Province the Legislature may make laws in relation to Now, Sir, 1 understand the meaning of this to be that agriculture in the Province, and to immigration into the Province; and in their Lordships' opinion, if there had been a general law for the whole Dominion, providing for the liquidation of insolvent companies, then in all probability it would not have been in the power of the Legislature of a Province to pass a measure relating to that paricular subject. I also understand its meaning to be, further, that the Local Legislatures may exercise certain powers in the absence of the exercise of the more general powers by the Dominion Parliament; and I go further, and taking that cause side by side with the expression of opinion in the Hodge case, that subjects which, in one aspect and for one purpose, may fall in section 92, may, in another aspect and for another purpose, full in section 91, I think that the conclusion is not difficult to reach, that some powers competently exercised by a Local Legislature may be submerged in the event of a general legislation upon the same subject matter, in the interest of the whole Dominion.

Mr. HOUDE. That is encouraging.

Mr. MACMASTER. Why, Sir, it is no part of my duty to encourage the hon. gentleman; it is no part of my duty to intimidate or alarm the hon. gentleman; it is my duty, as I stated at the outset, as I conceive it is the duty of every hon. member who addresses himself to this subject, to expound the Constitution truly. If we do not expound it truly, we may be sure that in a very short time it will be expounded truly by the courts; and we may as well take time by the forelock, cast aside our prejudices and our predilections and our preferences, and address ourselves to the task of ascertaining, if possible, the true interpretation of our Constitution. A short time ago, when I was in England, I met Mr. Bonjamin who practised so successfully on this continent and afterwards in England; and he said to me: "You appear to have great difficulty in intrepreting your Constitution, which has only been in existence for fifteen years; but I can tell you, after a practice of thirty odd years in the United States, and subsequently in England, where I often had to do with cases relating to the Constitutions of the colonies in the House of Commons and the House of Lords, that these cases are increasing year by year and day by day, and although we thought in the United States that the difficulties of our Constitution would be settled in the first fifteen or twenty years of its existence, the present day has developed difficulties that we never contemplated, and that are ten times as great as any that existed in the first half century of its existence." These are difficulties, let me say to my hon. friend from Maskinonge, that are found in every written Constitution, whether the Constitution of Canada, of the United States, of France, or of Switzerland."

Mr. HOUDE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make a remark? What is the custom in England-to ask the courts to define the meaning of the British Constitution; or is it for the Legislature to create precedents and to establish usages which form part of the Constitution itself?

Mr. MACMASTER. My hon. friend is a man of far too great ability and learning not to understand that the British Constitution is not a written Constitution; and what the Judges in England do is to interpret the common law and the Statutes of the land. But what are the Judges asked to do in this case? They are asked to interpret one of the Statutes passed in England relating to the Government of this great and important colony; and in the interpretation of our Constitution, which is an Imperial Act, they apply the same rules of interpretation as would be applied to the interpretation of a Statute relating to the humblest concern or subject in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he proposes to persist in this policy of submergement, to which he refers?

Mr. MACMASTER My hon. friend is evidently somewhat Mr. MACMASTER.

sees the difficulty of grappling with that consideration. If my hon. friend were less disingenuous than his remark seems to indicate, he would have given me credit for saying that I regarded that as a possible view to be taken of the subject. I did not commit myself to that view; I simply said it was a possible view; and I very much doubt whether it is not the correct view, that the local power is over-borne by the Dominion power, under the terms of our Constitution in the circumstances I have mentioned. That may be right or it may be wrong. This document, the British North America Act, is not so sacramental that it cannot be changed by the same power that brought it into existence; but until the emergency arises, until it is clearly demonstrated that this Constitution works unfairly and unjustly to us, it would be premature and improper on our part, by suggesting possible difficulties, to go to the Imperial Legislature and ask for amendments to that Constitution. The hon. Minister of Public Works asks that it be referred to the Supreme Court and the Privy Council for determination. Hon. gentlemen object to that. We know that for years they objected to submit the great question of the boundary of Ontario to the Privy Council. They sang "Ontario, Ontario!" with that beautiful rhythm that characterizes their warbling throughout the country. They stated that by the refusal of this Government to ratify the award, Ontario was robbed of half its territory; but when the hon. leader of the Government proposed, in 1872, that the whole question should be relegated to the Privy Council, the highest Court in the Empire, and reiterated the proposition, in 1882, before the General Election, what did the hon, member for Bothwell say? He voted that it should not be so referred, in order that the question might be retained as a football to be played with before the electors of Ontario. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends at Toronto are also evidently determined that this question should be made a footfall. I have been discussing this question as a legal and constitutional question, entirely regardless of the political projectiles that may be thrown into My view may be right, or it may be wrong; I have no it. political ambition to serve in taking one view or the other. What I want, and what I take it every hon. gentleman in this House wants, is the correct interpretation of the Con-stitution. If it be found that the true interpretation is unsuitable to the progressive people that inhabit this country, if it be found necessary, in the interests of the Provinces and the whole Confederation, to modify our Constitution, then, I say, let us modify it. The men who were ready to bring this Constitution into action, would certainly be willing to see it modified, if necessary; but let it be clearly demonstrated that that modification is necessary before we risk experiments of that kind. I say further, if on a determination-and I say this not so much for myself as for my genial and intellectual friend from Maskinongé-if on a determination of this kind, it should appear that the jurisdiction of this question lies entirely with the Federal Par-liament, and that it is for the best interests of the Provinces that it should be relegated to the Provinces, and that, in so doing, no injustice will occur to the public peace and order of the whole Dominion, I, for one, would be willing to consider whether it might not be better that this question should be so relegated. In the meantime, be it observed, I have only addressed myself to the constitutional question submitted to this House. Our duty is to give a true interpretation to the Constitution, and on this account, I am favourable to removing this question from the whirlpool of politics to a place where it can be calmly considered, the Supreme Court, and, if necessary, to the Privy Council, the highest Court in the Empire.

Mr. WELDON. My hon, friend entered into a lengthy discussion and quoted very largely from the cases bearing submerged by this consideration of the subject. He evidently on this matter. He said he wished to approach the question in a calm, judicial spirit, but I think, before he got through, he showed he was holding a brief for some one; he showed he was holding a brief for the Government in this case, in endeavouring to gloss over the legislation which is now the subject for discussion. In carrying out the views enunciated by the hon. member for Glengarry, it is clear that eventually the Dominion Government would absorb the whole legislative powers of the local Provinces, and instead of being a Federal union, we will become practically a legislative union. It is the duty of every hon. member to see that the autonomy of the Provinces, granted them under the British North America Act, should be observed; to see that the powers vested in the Provinces should remain intact, and to vigorously oppose any attempt to interfere with them, irrespective of party. The hon. member for Glengarry started with the theory that a conflict exists in the British North America Act, between sections 91 and 92, and that Local Legislatures are inferior to this Federal Legislature. Now, I say both those theories are fallacious. There is no conflict. In the 95th section, which he has quoted, there is a provision for concurrent jurisdiction, and there it is expressly provided that where a conflict does take place, the Federal legislation shall supersede the other; but with regard to the other proposition, I shall show, by the decision of the Privy Council, that that also is not tenable. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of the other. The 95th section shows the Legislature never intended any conflict should arise between the subjects granted to the Federal Parliament and those exclusively granted to the Local Legislatures; but, independent of that, I turn to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Parsons vs. The Citizens' Insurance Company, and I will first call attention to the proposition laid down in this case. The Privy Council decided in that case, that the powers of the Dominion Parliament for the regula tion of trade and commerce include the regulation of trade even in matters of interprovincial concern.

"And it may be that they would include general regulation of trade affecting the whole Dominion, but • • • but its authority to legislate for the regulation of trade and commerce does not comprehend the power to regulate by legislation the contracts of a particular busi-ness or trade, such as the business of fire insurance, in a single Province."

Their Lordships, in the course of that case, used the following language :-

"An endeavour appears to have been made to provide for cases of apparent conflict; and it would seem, that with this object, it was apparent conflict; and it would seem, that with this object, it was declared in the second branch of the Slst section, for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of the section, that (notwithstanding any thing in the Act) the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada should extend to all matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in that section With the same object, apparently, the paragraph at the end of section 91 was introduced, though it may be observed that this paragraph applies, in its grammatical construction, only to No. 16 of section 92. Notwithstanding this endeavour to give pre-guinance to the Dominion Parliament in cases of a conflict of powers, it is obvious that in some cases where this apparent conflict exists, the Legislature could not have intended that the powers exclusively assigned to the Provincial Legis-lature should be absorbed in those given to the Dominion. Parliament.

The proposition was there laid down that the powers exclusive to the Local Legislature should not be absorbed in those Their Lordships given to the Dominion Parliament. assumed there was no real conflict; but even where there was apparent conflict, the two ought to be distinct, and where the powers were exclusively assigned to the Provincial Legislatures, they should not be absorbed by the Dominion Parliament. The hen. member for Glongarry put forward the proposition that if the Local Legislatures had the power and if the Dominion Parliament eventually should assume that power by legislating for the whole Dominion, in contradistinction to the Local legislation of a particular Province, the action of the Dominion Parliament would over ride the inferior Legislature; and he puts forward, though not in express terms, but it is to be found in his argument, the diction to the Dominion Parliament. Now, I will quote from the very case of Hodge vs. The Queen in which, though my hon. friend endeavours to file it down simply to a case as to whether a man had the right to use a billiard room or not, principles of the greatest constitutional importance to the Provinces and the Dominion were laid down :

"It appears to their Lordships, however, that the objection thus raised by the appellants is gounded upon an entire misconception of the true character and position of the Provincial Legislatures. They are in no sense delegates or acting under any man late of the Imperial Parliament. When the British North America Act enacted that there hould be a Legislature for Ontario, and that its Legislative Assembly should have exclusive authority to make laws for the Province and for Provincial purposes, in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92, Provincial purposes, in relation to the matters enumerated in section 92, it conferred powers not in a y sense to be exercised by delegation from or as agents of the Innerial Parliament, but authority as plenery and as ample within the limits prescribed by section 92 as the Imperial Par-liament, in the plentitude of its power, possessed and could bestow. Within those limits of subjects and area, the Local Legislature is supreme, and has the same authority as the Imperial Parliament or the Parliament of the Dominion would have had under like circumstances to confide to a municipal institution or body of its own creation authority to make by-laws or resolutions as to subjects specified in the enactment, and with the object of carrying the enactment into opera-tion and effect."

I say that the two decisions I have quoted, the decision in the case of Parsons, and that in the case of Hodge, entirely contradict the two propositions of my hon. friend with regard to the conflict between the two Legislatures, and also with regard to the in erior position which he claims the Local Parliaments hold in regard to this Federal Parliament. Then it becomes a question of construction, with regard to the point whether this power is in this Dominion Parliament or not, and it is a point which it is important to discuss, under the other aspect of the case, which has been presented to the House, because it has been argued in two points of view: first, with regard to the constitutionality of the Liquor License Act of 1883; and secondly, as to its expediency or necessity, because we must bear in mind that the strong argument put forward for the interference of Federal legislation in this matter was the necessity which it was contended was forced upon this Parliament by the decision in the case of Russell against the Queen. First, as to the constitutional question. Laying down, as I said, the proposition that there is and there should be no conflict, we have a right to see what is the decision of the highest tribunal. It was admitted by my hon. friend from Glen. garry (Mr. Macmaster), and also by my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), that in the technical and literal sense there was no decision on the Licensing Act of 1883; but, if, in arguing cases before the courts, we could bring forward identical cases, there is an end of all argument, because there is a decision; but, when we go into court, as members belonging to my profession know, we have to argue cases by analogy, by deducing principles from the cases before us and the Statute upon which to decide its legality or illegality, its vires or its ultra vires. In arguing this case, I take the first point, that the case of Hodge against the Queen decidedly puts the power of licensing within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. My hon. friend from Glengarry said the principle which their Lordships referred to as laid down in the cases of Russell and the Queen and the Citizens' Insurance Company was that "subjects which, in one aspect and for one purpose, fall within Section 92, may, in another aspect and for another purpose, fall within section 91." Assuming that to be a proper principle, it may be that subjects of that kind may in another aspect and for another purpose fall within the other section, but not in the same aspect and for the same purpose. In dealing with bankruptcy and insolvency, it is necessary that this Parliament, in order to carry out the power given to it, should trench upon property and civil rights, but they deal with it in another aspect and for another purpose than the Local Legislatures deal with it under section 92, and it would not be argued that this Praliament proposition that a Local Legislature is of inferior juris | would be entitled to exercise plenary powers over property and civil rights all over the Dominion; because my hon. friend's argument might be carried to this extent, because this Legislature had the right by virtue of its power to regulate bankruptcy and insolvency, to interfere with property and civil rights, that, while Local Legislatures could exercise within their jurisdictions the power over property and civil rights granted to them in section 92, yet, if this Parliament chose to exc: cise its power over property and civil rights over the whole Dominion, at once the powers of the Local Legislatures would be absorbed in the powers of the Dominion. I contend that the proposition that, in another aspect and for another purpose, this may be, shows that their Lordships never contemplated that, for the same purpose and the same objects, subjects should come under the jurisdiction both of the local and Federal legislation. The case of Hodge against the Queen clearly lays down the principle that the power to regulate belongs to the Ontario Parlia-ment. My hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., has al-ready called attention to the 4th and 5th sections of the Ontario License Act. It is not, as put forward by the hon. member for Glengarry, merely the subject of a billiard room, but it is a quest on as to the powers granted by those 4th and 5th sections of the Ontario Act, whether, in the first instance, the Ontario Legi-lature had the power to make those regulations, and secondly, whether they had the power to delegate that power to Commissioners. What are these powers:

"For defining the condition and qualifications requisite to obtain tavern licenses for the retail, within the municipality, of spirituous, fer-mented or other manufac ured liquors, and also shop licenses for the sale by retail, within the municipality, of such liquors in shops or places other than taverns, inns, ale-houses, beer-houses or places of public entertsinment; for limiting the number of taverns and shop licenses respectively, and for d-fining the respective time and localities within which, and the persons to whom such limited number may be issued; for declaring that i... cities a number not exceeding to have a tayern towns a number not exceeding four persons, qualified to have a tavern license. may be exempted f on the necessity of having all the tavern accommodation required by law; for regulating the taverns and shops to be licensed; for fixing and defining the duties, powers and privileges of the inspector of licenses of their district."

Then Section 5 is as follows:-

"In and by any such resolution of a Board of License Commissioners the said Board may impose penalties for the infraction thereof."

Now, there are, in section 4, five different powers claimed to be exercised by the Ontario Legislature, which also, by that, they transfer to the License Commissioners, and the 5th section gives them the power to inflict penalties. Now, my hon. friend from Glengarry puts forward that the question of the right to regulate these licenses arose from subsection 9 of section 92, "shop, saloon, and other licenses for the purposes of raising a revenue," and if their Lordships had decided upon that sub-section and that these powers referred to that, there might be some force in the argument put forward. He said : what was their decision, what was the question they decided ? That Mr. Hodge permitted a " billiard table to be used as such within the period prohibited by the resolution of the License Commissioners, and it was for that infraction of their rules he was prosecuted and convicted." My hon. and learned friend put it forward that that was the decision of their Lordships. Why, if he looked, he would see that that is a conclusion of the fact set forward as admitted and proved upon the trial of the case, and not the decision or the conclusion which their Lord ships came to. We find that followed by the remark :

"The preceding statement of the facts is sufficient to enable their Lordships to determine the questions raised on the appeal."

Then, they say they are requested by the counsel to ascertain as to the Act being ultra vires of the Ontario Legislature, and then what do we find they decide:

"The subjects of legislation in the Ontario Act of 1877, section: 4 and 5, seem to come within the heads Nos. 8, 15 and 16 of sections 92 of British North America Statute, 1867. Their Lordships are, therefore, of reasons expressed for their judgments in that case." Mr. WELDON.

opinion that, in relation to sections 4 and 5 of the Act in question, the Legislature of Ontario acted within the powers conferred on it by the Imperial Act of 1867, and that in this respect there is no conflict with the powers of the Dominion Parliament."

Now, I want to see under what sections they say this power is granted to the Ontario Legislature. Sub-section 8 is "municipal institutions;" sub section 15 provides for "the imposition of punishment by fine, penalty, or imprisonment for enforcing any law of the Province made in relation to any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section;" and sub-section 16 is "gener-ally all matter of a merely local or private nature in the Province." Then, sub-section 9 is excluded, for they decided, under sub sections 8, 15 and 16, that that power remains in the Provincial Legislature, and, if that power is vested in them, how can concurrent power remain, or even come under section 91, within the Federal Legislature. Now, in this case, the Prime Minister last year said, in referring to Russell against the Queen:

"It is quite, clear to every lawyer; and any man who is not a lawyer who reads that judgment, will see that the very reasons on which the Privy Council decided that this Parliament had the right to deal with the Scott Act are the reasons showing that the Provincial Legislature of Ontario had not a right to deal with that subject, except as a matter of reasons for municipal or provincial purposes?" revenue for municipal or provincial purposes.

That was the statement made by the First Minister in discussing this Act last year. That was the ground upon which he put it that Regina and Russell simply decided, and the only ground on which it could be held that the Provinces had any right to deal with the subject was for the purposes of a revenue for municipal or provincial purposes. And yet we find, since then, that it is not under that section at all, but by virtue of municipal institutions, by virtue of being of a local nature, and by the power to impose penalties, that sections 4 and 5 are within the competency of the Ontario Legislature. Then I see by the principle laid down in the Parsons case and that of the Citizens' Insurance Company, that that power is vested for that purpose in the Provincial Legislatures, and therefore cannot be in this. There can be no conflict of jurisdiction. If once it is found to be with that 92 section, it is taken entirely out of 91 section. Now, the case of the Queen against Russell my hon. friend from Glengarry referred to, but he did not follow up the observations made by their Lordships upon that case, and I wish that the language used by the First Minister in the debate last year should be borne in mind when I read the anguage of their Lordships in the case. The argument put forward then is dealt with by their Lordships and showed to be untenable. They say:

"The appellants contended that the Legislature of Ontario had no "The appellants contended that the Legislature of Ontario had no power to pass any Act to regulate the liquor traffic; that the whole power to pass such an Act was conferred on the Doninion Parliament, and consequently taken from the Provincial Legislature by section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867; and that it did not come within any of the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the Provincial Legis-latures by section 92. The clanse in section 91, which the Liquor License Act, 1877, was said to infringe, was No. 2, 'the regulaton of trade and commerce,' and it was urged that the decision of this board in Russell vs. Regins was conclusive—that the whole subject of the Liquor traffic was given to the Dominon Parliement and conce the liquor traffic was given to the Dominion Parliament, and conse-quently taken away from the Provincial Legislature. It appears to their Lordships, however, that the decision of this tribunal in that case was not the effect supposed, and that when properly considered, it should be taken rather as an authority in support of the judgment of the Court of Appeal."

The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., (Mr. Davies) has referred to that judgment, and he has also cited the language of Chief Justice Spragge and Justice Burton, whose judgment was confirmed by the Privy Council. But they have pointed out that the decision in Russell and the Queen is authority for that decision, and they follow that up and resterate it to show clearly their opinion on that point:

"It appears to their Lordships that Russell vs. The Queen, when pro-

COMMONS DEBATES.

Their decision in Russell vs. The Queen has not had the effect contended for by those who support this License Act of 1883. The questions their Lordships decided were not, as the hon. member for Glengarry has said, the mere use of a billiard table after a certain hour, but they were questions of a constitutional nature. The real question was as to the power of the Ontario Legislature, and having found that power to reside within the Ontario Legislature with regard to licenses and the regulation of this traffic, independent of the general regulations of trade and commerce, they state that this power belongs to the Provincial Parliament, and therefore it does not belong to the Dominion Parliament. With regard to the Scott Act, it has been pointed out that their Lordships put forward that it was a regulation of trade and commerce applying to the whole Dominion, not for the internal carrying on of trade. The hon. member for Glengarry cited the case of the Union S⁴. Jacques against Belisle, which was one of the earliest cases brought before the Privy Council. In all these cases they considered the point before them and did not go into any theoretical discussion or argu ment as to matters that were not before them, but confined themselves strictly to the propositions necessary for the purpose of the case before them. That makes the case in Hodge still stronger, because their Lordships felt it their duty in that case, in order to get at the right construction of the Statute with regard to the License Act of Ontario, to discuss these important questions with regard to the power of the Provincial Legislature, with regard to the construction put upon Russell against the Queen, and with regard to the full and plenary powers of Provincial Legislatures. They have so decided that. In the debate on the Address, the First Minister put forward that decision himself differently from the manner in which my hon. friends opposite have put it forward. He said the Ontario Government, first, could make by laws and regulations for the liquor traffic. That means, they could pass Acts for the regulation of licenses; and secondly, if they could do that for themselves they could give that power to municipalities. That is the proposition put down by the First Minister himself, as the effect of that decision. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in putting that down, the First Minister undertook to say that it was not a decision of any weight in the Privy Council. He said:

"Well, the Hodge case, I have no hesitation in saying, is not the last word of the question. I have no hesitation in saying that the Privy Ocuacil, for some reasons known to those behind the scenes, from the absence of those members of it who usually take up questions under the British North America Act, avoiled a decision."

He thus says that the Privy Council gave a judgment which is not to be relied upon, because some members of it were absent. Now let us see who were the Judges present on that occasion. We find that the decision was given by Lord Fitzgerald, late Irish Lord Chancellor, and there were present besides, Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Robert P. Collier, Sir Richard Couch and Sir Arthur Hobhouse. I find that, with one exception, which was an appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, the court was constituted of the same Judges, in hearing the different cases under the British North America Act. The following is a list of the cases, with the Judges sitting in each:

When the First Minister says that the Privy Council, for some cause or other, behind the scenes, avoided its decision, I say that the cases show that the very men who have construed, since 1874, the British North America Act, are the very Judges who decided the principle on which the case of Hodge was decided. Instead of giving a decision on the billiard table question, they did not shrink from laying down the principles on which provincial rights should be maintained, and by which the autonomy of the Provinces should be preserved from Federal interference and control. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr.Macmaster) cited the prcamble of the Liquor License Act, 1883, and contended that because it was put forward for the purpose of having uniform legislation that therefore the object of the Federal Parliament in passing the Act was to have uniform legislation over the whole Dominion, and he inferred that to a certain extent it would draw the power into the hands of the Federal Parliament. But the first point to ascertain is, whether the Federal Parliament has power over the subject for which to secure uniform laws over the whole Dominion. The Dominion Parliament is just as restricted and confined within the limits of section 91 as Provincial Legislatures are confined within the limits of section 92, and the Federal Parliament has no more right to transcend and encroach on the powers of section 92, than the Provincial Legislatures have to encroach on the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. Then we find that, according to the propositions put forward, the consideration of this subject was forced on this Parliament by the decision in the case of Russell, because it was contended that that judgment placed the whole liquor traffic within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament. That difficulty was swept away by the contrary decision given in the case of Hodge. I therefore argue, as I would argue before a court of law or as a Judge, that if I find the principles laid down in different judgments are analogous, I have a right to apply those principles and draw conclusions, and I maintain that by the cases cited, more particularly the case of Hodge, the principle is laid down that the regulation of taverns, the mode in which they shall be governed, &c., are matters entirely within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature, by virtue of the section respecting municipal institutions and the other two sub-sections to which I have referred. If that is the correct, and as I maintain, the only conclusion to be drawn from the decision in the Hodge case, then the power must remain with the Provincial Legislatures and this Parliament has nothing to do with the matter. But, besides the constitutional question, it was said that if the law of 1883 had not been passed, there would have been unrestrained liquor selling throughout the Dominion. When the Privy Council has decided that the laws in force in the several Provinces are constitutional laws, of what use is this Federal law, except to cause a conflict of jurisdiction? As has been suggested by the hon.

member for Queen's, P. E. I, (Mr. Davies), which law is a man to act and be licensed? under With those two laws in force, standing side by side, and with the matter still unsettled, grave conflicts would arise, which even the submission of the proposed case to the Privy Council would not overcome. But if the necessity has ceased to exist, let us place the matter in the position which it occupied before, and strengthen, if we can, the hands of the Provincial Legislatures to keep the trade within proper bounds, and in so doing we will be guarding provincial rights, which, I fear, there is too much disposition to assail. In that event, no conflict can occur. Under present circumstances, the Act of 1883 is unnecessary, and the ground is covered by the Crooks Act of Ontario, and legislation already passed by the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. We will do more. The city of St. John, in the district I have the honour to represent, founded by Royal charter, has itself possessed for nearly a hundred years, the right to regulate licenses, and the Act of 1883 would sweep away that right. That Act, therefore, was not only an interference with provincial rights, but with rights and privileges granted to that city by its charter. It is for that reason, and because I believe the power is vested in the Provincial Legislatures, and that the necessity for the Act has been shown to have passed away, I support the motion. The only argument put forward last year was, that in order to prevent the traffic running riot through the country, a Dominion Act was necessary. Now, we find by the solemn decision of the highest tribunal of the Empire such is not the case, but that the laws of the Province are sufficient. Then, let us avert they not forced into the position of either acknowledging the conflict which is otherwise inevitable, and let the that the representations made then were not true, or licensing question remain within provincial jurisdiction, and the representations made to-day are not true? hy doing so we will preserve to every Province its indeperdence and its Provincial rights.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Up to this hour, this discussion has been carried on, I believe, exclusively by gentlemen learned in the law. It may not be amiss, even at this late hour, to devote a few moments to considering how this question presents itself to one not learned in the law-to a layman. The proposition to repeal the Dominion License Act naturally raises the question of the circumstances under which that law was enacted, what evil was to be remedied by it, what good was to be accomplished by it, on what ground d.d it rest? Fortunately, Sir, we are not left in any doubt up(n this matter. The reasons for the law and the necessity for it were recorded, officially recorded, and we have them where they may be referred to at all times. Not to go back to the unofficial records of what occurred near Toronto, as recorded in the Mail newspaper, on the 2nd June, 1882, but relying on the records which no man can dispute, which no man can claim to be unfair, we come down, Sir, to a period, not of ancient history, to nothing that is contained in the old books, but a period of only one year ago, and we find a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne claiming that this law was necessary in order to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors. At a very little later period, we are given further information upon this subject; and here, Sir, I am compelled, somewhat reluctantly, to repeat what has been read in parts several times during the debate, but it perhaps is something which will stand repeating two or three times. It occurs to me that some hon. gentlemen do not understand yet. I refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister a year ago, as to the ground upon which this legislation was based. He said :

"That subject was not willingly undertaken by the present Government Tney were quite satisfied that the law, as it obtains in the different Pro-vinces, should be continued They were quite satisfied that each Province should, so fir as the law would allow it to enact such Statutes, deal with the subject of shop, tavern and saloon licenses. Neither the Government nor the Parliament of Canada, I take it, wish to interfere ; and it was only when the decision which was given in June last on the Scott Act, a Dominion Act, and when the subject was forced upon Mr. WELDON.

them, that they thought it their duty to bring it before Parliament. I never had any doubt that when the question was brought before the coarts, it would be decided that the Provincial Legislatures had no right whatever to deal with that subject, except for revenue purposes, for the purpose of imposing taxation for provincial or municipal purposes. * * Now it is quite clear that if the Dominion Parliament had the right to pass the Scott Act, it had the exclusive right, because there is no current jurisdiction in the British North America Act on that sub-ject; and when the constitutionality of that Act was decided sgainst by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, the Dominion Government—I being a member of that Governmeet—in order that the question might be settled, in order that we might get the bighest final decision on that point, we came to Parliament to get a vote of money for the purpose of paying counsel on both sides * * It is quite clear to every lawyer, and any man who is not a lawyer who reads the judgment will see that the very reasons on which the Privy Council decided that this Parliament had the right to deal with the Scott Act are the reasons showing that the Provincial Legislature of Ontario had not a right to deal with that subject under the Crooks Act, except as a matter of revenue for municithem, that they thought it their duty to bring it before Parliament. the Provincial Legislature of Ontario had not a right to deal with that subject under the Crooks Act, except as a matter of revenue for munici-pal o provincial purposes. The hon. gentleman says that we should have allowed the matter to stand over until it was finally decided. Sir, if there be any value in that decision, and there is every value in it, because it is the law of the land, there is no check at this moment in the Province of Ontario against the unlimited, unrestrained sale of intoxi-cating liquors. This is not a matter we can play with. It is not a matter of policy; it is a matter of necessity. If we wish to prevent the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors we must legislate immediately; for i take it that any man in this city or in any other part of Ontario can open his saloon and sell liquors, and there is not a court in the world can prevent his doing it."

Here, Sir, we have the ground of the entire legislation and the necessity for it. Now, was that the true ground or was it not? Is there any hon. gentleman on the opposite side prepared to say it was not truth? If it was the true ground thirteen months ago what is the basis to day? Are From the date of Confederation until that time during a period of sixteen years, the Provinces have exercised this power, and it therefore required strong reasons for changing it. It was contended that the decision did not affect this power, but the Dominion Act which was passed. Before it went into effect another decision was given by the same highest tribunal in the Empire-a decision clear and distinct -that the Provinces have the power to regulate and control the traffic. Therefore, the entire ground was swept from under the Dominion Act. Its entire foundation was destroyed, and I fancy that to-day it might not be improperly designated the balloon Act, because the ground work is all gone. The Crooks Act has been described as not being worth the paper it is written on. Is this true? Is it not decided to be of the same value as the English law, and who can estimate the value of England's laws to the entire Empire, to the world. The question then arises, is there con-current jurisdiction. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) said it was the duty of every member to expound constitutional law. I will not do it, I am not a lawyer, but I will quote a high constitutional lawyer, the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald. He states that there is no concurrent jurisdiction under the British North America Act on this subject, and I hope hon. gentlemen will accept the authority. The Government of the Dominion and the Provinces have not the same power, he states, and I notice that this view was entertained by a gentleman in Ontario who holds the same political views as hon.gentlemen opposite. Recently the leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature moved an amendment in which he stated that the Provinces had the exclusive jurisdiction and his followers all supported it. Under these circumstances, Sir, should not the Dominion Act be considered as dead? May the present motion be not considered as one to give it a decent burial? The authority of the Province has been thoroughly established; is it wise to press the matter further? When the alleged foundation and necessity of the Act is all gone, ought this to be pressed, in the mere hope of creating confusion by establishing a double power? Is there any pride in this matter? Is there any pride in having given an opinion on constitutional law? If there is, what is proposed by the present course? It has been decided that the Provinces have the power; it has been declared that there is no concurrent jurisdiction; therefore, if hon. gentlemen opposite succeed in establishing concurrent jurisdiction, have they not proved two wrong opinions instead of one? Under the circumstances, is it wise, is it prudent, to attempt to force Dominion authority over the Provinces to the utmost extent? Is it wise to strain the Constitution for this purpose ? Is this House prepared to maintain the doctrine that this Parliament is the fountain of all authority? Have the Provinces no authority, no rights? Would it not be well. Sir, to seriously heed the voice of warning that is being raised in the different Provinces? Would it not be well to listen to the notes of discontent that come up from the people down by the sea? Would it not be well to listen to those notes of discontent that come with still stronger force from the Would it not be well to heed the determined far west? opposition to encroachments of this kind that comes from the Province of Ontario? Would it not be well to heed the equally strong though less demonstrative opposition that comes from Quebec? Sir, are there not sufficient difficulties surrounding the Government of this Dominion, owing to its peculiar geographical position, without adding to them a conflict of jurisdiction? We often hear of the friction between the Dominion and the Provinces deplored. What is the casiest way of removing that friction? Let the Central Government ccase to rub the Provinces, and the friction will cease. Is it a sound principle that by weakening the parts you can strengthen the whole? Is this Dominion going to be strengthened by weakening the various Provinces? Sir, I believe there is no solid, abiding foundation for the union of these Provinces except in the contentment and happiness of the people in the various Provinces. It is now many years since Junius wrote, that "While the national honour is firmly maintained abroad, and while justice is impartially administered at home, the submission of the subject will be voluntary, cheerful, and I might almost say, unlimited." That is quite as true to day as it was one hundred years ago. Is this question one confined to any particular section of the Dominion; is it not of equal interest to all of the Provinces? Is it not of equal interest to the far east and the far west, and is there any section with a higher interest in it than the great Province of Quebec? Sir, under our system, it is well known it is exceedingly difficult for men in the open House to oppose the party to which they belong; but there are means still remaining by which, without breaking party lines, members can bring to bear upon their party that pressure to which they are bound to yield. Let us not deceive ourselves, Sir, upon this question of provincial rights. It is a question that cannot be put down by this Parliament; it is The people are jealous impossible to put it down. of their provincial rights, and they will protect sharply drawn Party lines may be so them. . as for a time to conceal them, but they exist, and they will assert themselves. Though this Dominion were bound together by bands of iron, it would not resist the constant encroachments which are made upon it and are tending to its injury. It is well known that when iron is subjected to a constant jar, its texture becomes changed; and if this constant jar is brought upon the Provinces, the texture which binds them together will change. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim to have rocked the cradle of this Dominion; let them take care that they dig not its grave. If it is considered indispensable that the smoke of sacrifice ascend to political ambition, let shall constantly something be selected for the sacrifice that the people value less than their Provincial rights, lest they may arise and quench the fire and throw down the altars. It is stated that, in the beginning of this era, the early Christians were frequently given over to wild beasts, because they o refused to burn incense to Jove. Is the Province of Ontario being similarly treated? The indications are that the beasts are given to the Government and not the Government to the beasts. Some of these beasts I know, for I have met and fought them, not at Ephosus, but at other places.

Mr. OUIMET. It may be very satisfactory to the House to hear me announce that I do not intend to make a speech. I only wish to propose a sub-amendment to the amendment. I base it upon the decisions which we have already, and which I take to be correct decisions. I will not discuss them; but I will take them as they might be interpreted by any hon. member of this House, even if he is not a lawyer. The decision in Russell vs. The Queen says en resume that the power of totally prohibiting the liquor traffic belongs to this Parliament. The power of prohibiting this traffic, as we'l as any other traffic or trade, belongs to this Parliament; bat when it comes to making regulations, in order to ensure the maintenance of order and peace in the different municipalities, the matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. Being convinced that such is the true law, and that it would be useless to go to the Privy Coupcil to have another discussion of five or six hours on the same point, and to hear every one propound a different interprotation of the considerants and the expose of the learned Judges, I believe it would be more simple to define what would be the legislation in this matter. I think there will be no objection to the words of the sub amendment I propo e to move, since they are the very words of the resolutions which were declared, in the case of Hodge vs. The Queen, to to be perfectly constitutional. I beg to move, in amondment to the said proposed amendment :

"That all the words after 'thereof' in the said amendment be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:---'it is expedient to amend the Canada License Act of 1883, so as to strike out from said Act all provisions which do not relate to total prohibition of the liquor trade, and leave to the Provincial Legislature, in passing laws for the raising of a revenue for provincial, local, or municipal purposes, to make enactments regulating and determining the matters following,

"(1.) For defining the conditions and qualifications requisite to obtain tavern licenses for the retail, within the municipality, of spirituous, fermented or other manufactured liquors, and also shop licenses for the sale by retail, within the municipality, of such liquors in shops, or places other than taverns, inns, ale-houses, beer-houses, or in shops, or places other than taverns, inns, ale-houses, beer-houses, or places of public entertainment. "(2.) For limiting the number of tavern and shop licenses respec-tively, and for defining the respective times and localities within which and the person to whom, such limited number may be issued, within the year, from the first day of May of one year, till the thirtieth day of April, inclusive, of the next year. "(3.) For regulating the taverns and shops to be licensed. "'(4.) For fixing and defining the duties, powers and privileges of the Inspectors of Licenses of their district."

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Oaimet) negatived on a division.

Amendment (Sir Hector Langevin) agreed to on the following division :--

On the main motion, as amended, being put,

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the First Minister, in case this motion is carried, as no doubt it will be, what steps the Government propose to take with a view to giving effect to it? Is it proposed to suspend the Act until the matter is decided, as proposed in the motion of the Minister of Public Works?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. According to the announcement of my hon. friend who moved the amendment, the Government will bring down a measure, which the hon. gentleman will see, showing what course the Government intend to take.

Main motion, as amended, agreed to on a division.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:05 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th March, 1881.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. SCRIVER, in moving the adoption of the First Report of the Joint Committee on the Library, said: Perhaps I had better explain that the only important matter contained in this report is a recommendation which was made last year by the Committee, and which was not adopted by this House, that the law books, except those needed for consultation, be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the in this report is a recommendation which was not adopted by this House, that the law books, except those needed for consultation, be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the in this report is a recommendation which was not adopted by this House, that the law books, except those needed for consultation, be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the in this report is a recommendation which was not adopted by this House, that the law books, except those needed for consultation, be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the in the law books is the total parliament to the in this report is a recommendation which was not adopted by this House, that the law books, except those needed for consultation, be transferred from the Library of Parliament to the in the law books is the law books is the total parliament to the in the law books is the law books is the law books is the parliament to the in the law books is the law books

Mr. OUIMET.

1010WS :---"Last Session the Committee recommended that the bulk of the law books be permanently transferred to the Supreme Coart Building, where the series of English and American Law Reports, formerly in the Library, have been sent by order of this House; that the Department of Justice be henceforth responsible for the maintenance and management of this Law Library, that it be no longer regarded as forming part of the Library of Parliament; subject, however, to a right of preferential secess by members of both Houses to these books, whenever and wherever they may require to consult them. Such text-books only to be retained in the Library of Parliament, or, hereafter added thereto, as may be necessary for purposes of legislation The Committee beg leave to renew "their recommendation-their report of last yter, not having been concurred in by Parliament.

"A Sub-Committee has been appointed to determine, along with the Assistant Librarian, what law books should be retained it the Library."

Mr. THOMPSON. Is there anything in the report respecting increase of salarios?

Mr. SCRIVER. Not in this report.

Mr. SPEAKER. The object of this report is to allow the Library Committee more money to expend on the general library.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope that beside the text books and books on law, all Privy Council reports and all digests of reports, be kept in the Library here, because these are of continual use to us.

Mr. SCRIVER. The Sub-Committee charged with the duty of superintending the transference is composed of members, some of whom are perhaps as well prepared as any members of this House to judge what books it will be proper and judicious to retain in the Library here.

Mr. AMYOT. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this motion be allowed to stand over until hon. members are acquainted with the contents of the report. Our time is very much occupied, and it would be very awkward to have to go to the Supreme Court to consult law books. The rights and privileges of Parliament are affected by the motion, and it should be allowed to stand over for a day or two.

Mr. SPEAKER. The report was printed nearly a month ago in our Proceedings.

Mr. LAURIER. The Committee recommend that certain books be selected from the Library of Parliament and transferred to the Supreme Court Library; the Sub-Committee will have to judge what those books shall be, and report to the Library Committee, and that Committee will report to the House.

Mr. MILLS. This subject is a matter of very considerable importance. Take, for instance, the discussion we had in the House yesterday respecting the question of competent jurisdiction. It might be necessary, as it was in that case, not merely to consult text books, which have very little bearing on such a subject, but a number of decisions of the courts. I understand that if these law books are removed from the Library they will be placed in the Supreme Court building, and as that Court rises at four o'clock in the afternoon it would be impossible during the sitting of the House to consult those reports. This might be very inconvenient, and it is a question whether the country would not be better served by adding something to the Library appropriation and allowing us to retain the law books here and provide other books for the Supreme Court, and the use of the Bar. when they require them at the Supreme Court, rather than denude the Library of all the law publications. In my opinion there are reports such as those of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the Federal reports of the necessary to consult as the ordinary text books on ParliaSir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think as several hon. gentlemen have asked this report to stand over, and as attention has been called to the matter, it might be allowed to stand for another day, although it has been on the Votes and Proceedings for some time.

Mr. DAVIES. The object of the Committee was, as I understood, to remove from our Library to the Law Library those books relating to commercial law, common law, real estate, &c., which are now in this Library; but, as the matter stands now the text books are to be found here, and the reports at the other building, so that it is almost impossible for lawyers attending the Supreme Court to work up a case at all. It was understood that the works on constitutional law should remain here, and a Sub-Committee carefully selected was appointed and instructed not to remove to the lower library any works on constitutional law, or other works which might be used by members of the House. But lawyers find that as matters are now arranged they are required to work up part of their case in this Library and then go down to the other building for their reports, and that for that reason it was almost impossible to work at all. I have consulted a good many lawyers from the different Provinces and several have told me that they would prefer working up their cases at home in their own libraries. The suggestion of the Committee should be carried out, but I think the wishes of hon. gentlemen should also be carried out, by allowing those books which are neces sary for us to use here to remain in this Library.

Mr. WELDON. I thick the law reports of the Provinces, the digest of cases, and all works on constitutional or criminal law should be kept here, while text books which are more used for the purpose of litigation, and commercial text books, &c., should be kept where the reports are to be found. The intention of the Committee was that the English reports, the reports published by the Council of the Law Society, and the reports of the various Provinces should remain here, together with the works on constitutional and criminal law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think perhaps that the matter had better stand over until we have an opportunity of considering it. The hon. gentleman can bring it up again at an early day, and now that attention has been called to to it I hope hon. gentlemen who are interested in the matter will consider it carefully and be prepared to express their opinions when the report is again brought up.

Motion allowed to stand.

FORTIFICATIONS AND MILITARY BUILDINGS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) respecting fortifications and military buildings and their maintenance and repair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Bill embraces but one clause, which explains its object. It provides that after the 1st of July, 1884, the management of fortifications and military buildings, &c., and their maintenance and repair, should be in the hands of the Militia Department.

Bill read the first time.

CLAIM OF JOSEPH CHARLES LISLOIS.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to refer to the Dominion Board of Arbitrators the case of Joseph Charles Lislois, in the matter of his claim for the loss of his buildings burnt by the fire from a Government locomotive, and to place that gentleman on the same footing of equality with Mr. Fraser, of the county of Picton? Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not the present intention of the Government to refer this case to the Dominion Board of Arbitrators, as Mr. Lislois is not on the same footing as Mr. Fraser, there being a material difference in the two cases.

PAYMENT OF LABOURERS ON THE P. E I. RAIL-WAY.

Mr. DAVIES, in the absence of Mr. Yeo enquired, Whother, under the contract entered into by Messrs. Gray and Whirtar with the Minister of Railways for the construction of the Cape Traverse Branch of the Prince Edward Island Railway, any provision exists by which the Government can secure the labourers and workmen upon that road, payment for their work and labour actually performed by them in the construction of the road-bed, and whether it is the intention of the Government to take steps to secure those workmen their wages?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a clause in the contract as follows:--

"If the Contractors fail at any time in paying the salaries or wages of any person employed by them upon or in respect of the said works, or any of them, and any part of such salary be one month in arrear, or if there be due to any such person one month's wages or salary, the Engineer may notify the Contractors to pay such salary or wages, and if two days elapse and the same be not paid in full up to the date of payment or to such other date as may be in accordance with the terms of employment of such person, then Her Majesty may pay to such person salary or wages from any date to any date, and to any amount which may be payable, and may charge the same to the Contractors, and the Contractors covenant with Her Majesty to repay at once and any every sum so paid."

It is the intention of the Government to do anything in their power under this clause to protect the labourers.

REPATRIATION OF CANADIANS.

Mr. TASSE enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to afford to Canadians who, having emigrated to the United States, desire to return to their native courtry, proportionate facilities with those to be extended for the transport of European immigrants, from Quebec or New York to Winnipeg?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government already afford facilities to Canadians who have emigrated to the United States and desire to return, proportionate with those extended for the transport of European immigrants.

LAND OR TIMBER SALES ON HUNTER'S ISLAND.

Mr. COCKBURN enquired, Whether any lands or timber have been sold or granted, by license or permits, upon Hunter's Island; and if so, when granted and to whom?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No lands or timber have been sold or granted, by license or permits, upon Hunter's Island as yet.

MARITIME COURT FOR CANADA.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) enquired, Whether there has been any reply to the Address of both Houses passed in the Session of 1882, on the subject of the establishment of a Maritime Court for Canada? If a reply has been received, what is the nature of that reply?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Notwithstanding several applications no answer has yet been received.

EMPLOYMENT OF ALFRED OGDEN.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne), in the absence of Mr. KIRK, enquired, Is Alfred Ogden, or has he within the last two years, been in the receipt of any salary, allowance or payment of any kind from the Government of Canada, or from any officer of the Government? If so, what is the itants of amount thereof, and what services did he perform therefor ? of a post

What service is he now performing ?

Mr. McLELAN. Alfred Ogden was in the employ of the Marine and Fisheries Department for a time collecting specimens for the Fisheries Exhibition and preparing, verifying, and paying bounty claims at a remuneration of $150 a month. 11e is not now performing any work for the Department.

CARLETON POST OFFICE.

Mr. WELDON enquire], From whom was the land upon which the post office in Carleton, city of St. John, N.B., is being erected, purchased, and for what price? What is the amount of contract for building, and who is the contractor? Is the cost of building the foundation included in the contract? If not, what will be the extra cost of foundation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site of that post office was purchased from the mayor and aldermen of the city of St. John for $900. The amount of the contract was $8,951. The contractors are Messrs. Causey, Bond & Milden. The cost of the foundation is included in the contract price. Further information can be found on page 22 of the Annual Report of the Minister of Public Works for 1883.

EMPLOYMENT OF J. A. WILKINSON.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) enquired, Has J. A. Wilkinson been in the employment of the Government during the past three years, or during any portion of that time; if so, during what time; what was his salary or compensation; how much has he received from the Government during the said three years past for services or otherwise? Is he now in the employment of the Government; if so, in what capacity and what salary? If not now employed, when did he cease to be so employed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the 17th of October, 1882, by Order in Council, Mr. J. A. Wilkinson and Mr. A. F. Wood were appointed land valuators on the Murray Canal, to value land to be required at Burleigh, Buckhorn, and Fenelon Falls, at a remuneration of $10 per day each, and travelling and hotel expenses during the time of their employment. Mr. Wilkinson has received as valuator $.,580 as salary, and $1,301.56 for expenses. Mr. Wilkinson is now employed only when his services may be required by the Department, and as occasion may require.

EMPLOYMENT OF A. H. BLACKEBY.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant) enquired, Is A. H. Blackeby, of Galt, Ontario, in the employ of the Government in any capacity? If not, when did he cease to be so employed? What amount has he received up to date for services as Commissioner in connection with the inspection of factories?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Blackeby is not in the employ of the Government, and has not been for a year, I think. The sums that have been paid to him for the services referred to appear in the Public Accounts now before the House.

MR. ACHILLE TALBOT.

Mr. RINFRET enquired, Is Mr. Achille Talbot an employé of the Government? What is his salary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Yes; Mr. Talbot is an employé of the Branch of Correspondence, with a salary of $2 per day.

POST OFFICE AT ST. IIYACINTHE.

Mr. BERNIER enquired, Whether the Government or any of its members has received a petition signed by the inhab-Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne.)

itants of the city of St. Hyacinthe, praying for the erection of a post office in that city? If so, whether the Government proposes to grant this request, and place in the Supplementary Estimates a sum sufficient for the building of such post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Certain docu ments have been received: a letter, bearing date the 8th of October, 1833, from the ex-member, Mr. Tellier, praying that a building be erected; later on, on the 3rd of November, 1883, extracts from the Courrier de St. Hyacinthe, calling attention to the wants of the locality in that respect; then, on the 17th of November, 1883, a letter from the hon. member himself, stating that a petition to that effect was being signed; and on the 14th of November, 1833, another letter from Mr. Tellier, accompanying a petition of the inhabitants of St. Hyacinthe, praying that such a building be crected. I cannot answer the last part of the question, because the Supplementary Estimates are not yet passed. When they are brought down the hon. gentleman will see whether there is anything for him or not, and if there is not anything, he must do like others—he will have to wait.

MONTREAL DRILL SHED.

Mr. BERNIER enquired, What are the names of the contractors who have been given the contract for the rebuilding of the drill hall at Montreal? What is the name of the architect entrusted by the Government with the preparation of the plans and the superintendence of the work while being executed? And what is the name of the inspecting officer of works for the rebuilding of this hall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) The names of the contractors are Messrs. J. B. St. Louis Bros., of Montreal. The name of the contractors for the iron roof is that of a company called "The Hamilton Bridge and Tool Company," from Hamilton. The specifications have been prepared by the Department of Public Works. The name of the architect is Mr. Alphonse Raza, of Montreal. The name of the inspector is Mr. Alphonse Lapierre, also of Montreal.

DOMINION LIQUOR LICENSE ACT.

Mr. AMYOT enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government—if the Dominion Liquor License Act is not repealed—to furnish to the Boards of License Commissioners in the Province of Quebec, the petitions, certificates, and other blank forms in relation to the said licenses, in the French language, especially for use in those counties exclusively French?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Blank forms have been prepared and are being distributed.

WORKS AT ISLEAUX NOIX.

Mr. BOURASSA enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to complete the works for improving access to Ile-aux-Noix? If so, whether they propose to place in the Supplementary Estimates a sum sufficient to perfect the said works.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) There has been no demand to that effect made to the Department of Public Works. The Department does not know that there is any need of improvement there. Nevertheless I shall enquire.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) enquired, Whether the moneys payable upon their enfranchisement to the Wyandotte Band of Indians of the township of Anderdon in the county of Essex, have yet been distributed ? If not, when the distribution may be expected to be made ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The money has not yet been distributed, but the order is now before Council and I hope the distribution will be made in a few days.

CHETICAMP HARBOUR.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to dredge the entrance into Cheticamp Harbour, Inverness, during the ensuing summer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot give a positive answer to-day. This matter is still under the consideration of the Department.

POSTAL ORDERS-FRANCE AND CANADA.

Mr. HOUDE enquired, Whether the Government intend taking any proceedings towards the establishment of a system of interchange of postal orders between France and Canada?

Mr. CARLING. Arrangements have been entered into for the interchange of money orders between Canada and France.

THE COUNTY JUDGE OF ELGIN.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Notices of Motions are called I would beg to state that the hon. member for Elgin has moved several times for papers connected with the petitions for the removal of Judge Hughes. I ascertain from the House that one of the objects of the return was to get copies of papars under the impeachment. The papers were dated as far back as 1862 and diligent search has been made in the Department of Justice and in the Secretary of State's office everywhere but they cannot be found.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Look in the Minister of Interior's pigeon hole.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Secretary of State has written to Toronto to try and get copies of the papers connected with that impeachment. In the Globe of the 18th March, it was stated that the Dominion Government has shown signs of intending to do nothing in the matter of the petition for the removal of Judge Hughes, that the petition has been returned with several small objections, the return being an insult to the people of Elgin, that Judge Hughes is a man after Sir John's own heart who wants the matter to be allowed to drop. The small objections against the petition amounts to this: that there was a paper sent down professing to be a petition, but no signature was attached to it, and it was sent back for the purpose of getting one man at least in Elgin to sign it. It was sent back with the request, first, to get the signatures of the petitioners; secondly, to get the dates when the acts complained of were done, and thirdly and generally, for a more orderly arrangement of the ground, which spread over twenty-five years.

Mr. WILSON. I might ask the hon. First Minister when this supposed petition was returned to Mr. Stanton.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The petition was received in the Department on the 21st January, and the Address was moved on the 28th January, so the hon. gentleman had full notice that that petition was coming down, and he moved immediately after he heard it was sent down. The potition was unsigned, and complained of acts happening a great many years ago. I cannot exactly tell the hon. gentleman, because I do not know, the information was not supplied to me, but I will ascertain when the letter was written back from the Department of Justice asking that a petition might be sent, if it was to be sent.

gentleman will find, if he examines the record, that not only In making this motion, it is not my intention to press this winter but a year ago there were petitions sent down with signatures. I am credibly informed by the County Crown Attorney, who is making the charges, that he did so cond the potition; and, therefore, I think very likely they will find that, prior to this short date mentioned by my hon. friend, there were petitions, and the matter has been placed before the Minister of Justice for over a year's time. As far as any remarks that were made in the Globe, I am not responsible for them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not say you are.

Mr. WILSON. And the hon. the First Minister need not feel so heated over it. The people of Elgin do feel, and feel very strongly in the matter. They feel that there is a gross injustice being done to that county, and that the matter has been some time before the Government. I think there are petitions and that they have been presented here. Not only that, but, having those petitions, the hon. gentleman thought it was right and proper that Judge Hughes should be appointed as the chairman of his License Board. Those charges are preferred by the very man appointed to see that justice be done in the prosecution of offenders in the county of Elgin, the County Crown Attorney. He is no friend of mine, but is a warm political friend of the hon. gentleman, and he is the man who is bringing the charges against Judge Hughes, so that, whether Judge Hughes be a Reformer or a Tory, the charges are being preferred against him not by any of my friends, but by the hon. gontleman's own friends.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not a question of friends at all. If Mr. Stanton had sent the polition down, if he wished to make it, he should have taken the responsibility of signing it. But he did not sign it. He merely says, I beg to send down a petition from a number of the inhabitants of Elgin, but it so happened that no inhabitants of Elgin signed it. The last papers found were some which had come to the present Chief Justice Wilson when he was a member of the Government, and there is no entry in the Department of Justice of any action by him, and there is no entry of any other petition until this blank paper was sent down the other day.

Mr. WILSON. I might ask whether the petition has come yet signed by Mr. Stanton.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it has not; it had not five minutes ago, because I saw the Deputy Minister of Justice and asked him the question.

Mr. WILSON. He said he had the return some time ago and he sent it back to get the ad litional roturn in reference to the count of impeachment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I did not say that. I said the petition, or what professed to be the petition, was sent back with a request to get some signatures and to have the date specified, and there has been no return to that. As to the other branch, the hon. gentleman wanted a return of the proceedings on the impeachment matter; those were searched for, and, as there were none found, there is an enquiry being being made in the Courts upon it.

REGION NORTH OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. DAWSON, in moving for a return of all reports not hitherto published, relating to the character and probable resources in agricultural lands, forests, minerals and oherwise of the country through which the Canadian Pacific Railway is being constructed to the north of Lakes Huron and Superior, embracing all information in possession of the Government in respect to the whole of the region intervening between the Great Mr. WILSON. I might state here that I think the hon. Lakes and the southern coast of Hudson's Bay, said.

for a very voluminous return of papers. Last year I made a motion for certain papers, and explained that what I wanted was a synopsis of the information. Well, that synopsis came down, it was not at all voluminous, and it contained all the actual information required and all in the possession of the Government; whereas, if they had sent down all the papers, they would have filled a volume. I want something of the same kind now. I do not wish to have a voluminous return brought down, but the pith and substance of the reports that have been sent in. The country to which this motion relates embraces a third part of the entire distance across the continent. It has been repre-sented very often as a sterile and barren country, and, if such is the case, if all this is true, then the Pacific Rail way would be a most unfortunate undertaking; but I have information, and I am satisfied from what I have seen myself and from the reports of others, that that country is very far from being a barren country, that throughout its entire extent of 1,000 miles, from the Ottawa through to Rat Portage, to the verge of the prairies, there are immense tracts of very good land, that the whole country is covered with forests and nutritious grasses, cattle that range through it get fat in summer, and the forests of lumber are practically inexhaustible.

there is room for the lumber trade to be carried on there in regions which have not yet been touched by the lumbermen. There are many parts of that country more especially in the valleys among the hills, where the soil is exceptionally rich, and to form an idea of that country I would only ask hon. members to look across the Ottawa, to look to the valley of members to look across the Ottawa, to look to the valley of the Gatineau. The Gatineau runs through a country of the same kind. A country entirely composed, or nearly so, of different forms of Laurentian rock, and the hon. member for Ottawa tells me that he has a popula-tion in his constituency of over 50,000, 30,000 cf whom are in the valley of the Gatineau. The county of Portice is precisely the same the same sort of rock the Pontiac is precisely the same, the same sort of rock, the same sort of country as that north of Lakes Huron and Superior, and in that county there is a very large and have of it, there is an immense tract of level country where thriving population. With regard to the country imme- the soil is good. It extends westward from Abittibi along diately north of Lakes Huron and Superior and extending back to the Pacific Railway, as a proof that it is not unfit for settlement, I may say that we have now 20,000 settlers along the Georgian Bay and up to Sault Ste Marie, all living comfortably, cultivating the soil to the north, and they grow most beautiful wheat. It is an admirable country for growing wheat where the land is good. I do not mean to describe it as a paradise, but I do say there are large tracts of excellent land in it, and the settlements now extend along the Thessalon and back of the Bruce Mines-which, looking from the shore, seems to be the most dreary part of the whole country-40 miles already, and the settlers all express themselves highly pleased with the land. In the valleys of the Mississagua and Thessalon to the east and Goulais River to the west of Sault St. Marie there are sissagua and Thessalon to the east and Goulais River to the west of Sault St. Marie there are also large tracts of good land, tens of thousands of acres, in many places, room for a dozen townships, with sufficiently level land equal to that of the prairies of the west, and with a climate far milder in winter, and I think, just as good in summer. Now, Sir, as you proceed west of Lake Superior you find an equally good country in the valleys of the rivers. Along the coast of the lakes the country is very valleys you find excellent soil. Then as regards the Pays Plat River which flows into Nipigon Bay a gentleman con-nected with the Pacific Railway, and a most intelligent man, told me he had been through it and that there was room enough for at least half-a-dozen townships, of the Mr. DAWSON.

most magnificent land, all level, or nearly so, between the ranges of mountain on each side. The same may be said of the Black Sturgeon River which flows into Black Bay, a large river with very extensive flats at the mouth where there is room for several townships. In the valley of the Kaministiquia, again there is quite a large extent of good land. A thriving settlement has already sprung up there where they grow wheat and cereals of all kinds, and the people are highly pleased and satisfied with their lands. Going further back, away from the immediate coast of the lake, and westward from Lake Nipissing there is a considerable tract of fair land between Lake Nipissing and the west branch of the Great French River. There is some very good land in that sec-tion. In the valley of the Spanish River again, according to the surveyors reports, from the point where the line crosses that river to Lake Huron, there is a considerable tract of good land; and to show that people appreciate the land there I am told that a company is now being organized to form an extensive cattle ranch on the Spanish River where they think the conditions are as favourable as in the North-West. Large sections of the land have been burned over and are almost like prairies. In the valleys of the rivers the soil is very rich and produces all that An hon. MEMBER. Timber limits. Mr. DAWSON. For my part, I possess no limits, but liere is room for the lumber trade to be carried on there in gions which have not yet been touched by the lumbermen. Section where a many worth of the sound of the sou member of this House, a highly accomplished gentleman, and whose statement would not be called in question, a gentleman well qualified to describe the country, visited that region and collected a large amount of information for the Government of Ontario; and I may say that that Government values the timber in that country as worth $150,000,000. Now, Sir, if I may be permitted, I wish to read a few extracts describing the country between the height of land which runs from the neighbourhood of Lake Temiscamingue and the Ottawa River westward, all the way to the vicinity of Thunder Bay and beyond that. Now, in that country, after you pass the height of land, according to the description I the slopes of the Moose for 350 miles, and then on the slopes of the Albany River and along nearly its whole extent, the country is vory little broken by hilly ground. Last year Dr. Bell, describing this country before the Emigration Committee, said :

"Referring to the mineral deposits, Dr. Bell said that iron ore in inexhaustible quantities was found on the east coast of the Bay, and on the islands northward from Cape Jones, the ore being of a very valuable kind, from the great amount of carbonate of manganese it contains, making it available for the manufacture of Bessemer steel. But there appears to be a serious question as to the adequacy of the fuel supply for its manufacture on the spot. Dr. Bell said that he had seen specimens of authracite coal, supposed to exist on Long Island; but, he added, the quantity is not known to be great."

Then with regard to the land north of the waters of the Moose, he says:

raising. It is already used by the Hudson's Bay Company for that purpose, and they have shown that sheep and cattle can be reared there successfully."

Again he says in respect to the timber :

"On the head waters of the Moose River, white pine is abundant and of good size. Red pine also exists and extends rather further north than the white. Then there is 'Jack pine' or 'cypress,' or more properly the Banksian pine, which, though not a timber tree in its southern extension, becomes so in the northern region, which is its home. In the Albany region I have seen large groves of this tree, quite different from the ordinary scrubby variety."

As to climate he says:

"In regard to the climate for agriculture, the country that I have spoken of, south and south-west of James' Bay, lies in the latitude of Cornwall and Devonshire, in England, and southward of that, it is in the same latitude as the northerly parts of France; and while these countries enjoy exceptionally favourable conditions, there is no peculi-arity of climate that would make the district I have referred to, worse than the average of the face of the earth in those latitudes, and, there-fore, I think it is likely to be of value for agriculture, as far as climate is concerned."

As to the dates of the opening of the river he remarks as follows :-

"When I was at Martin's Falls, on the Albany, I collected the dates of the opening and closing of the Albany River for about forty years preceding my visit, and since that I have obtained the dates for over ten for fifty years, so I have an exact record of the opening and closing of the Albany for fifty years, and the average time that it is open is fully six mouths."

In respect to the fishery resources of the Hudson's Bay he says:

"In regard to the whale fishery, the large whales are confined princi-pally to the north-west part of the Bay. The Americans from New Bedford and New London have resorted to the north-west part of the Bay to fish whales for twenty years or upwards, and have generally been very successful. From one to three or four or five vessels go every year, and according to the Report of the United States Commissioner of Fisheries the returns have been wery large " fisheries, the returns have been very large.

Then, in answer to the question. "What is the liability to summer frosts in the country around Hudson's Bay?" he says:

"In the larger area of agricultural land south and south-west of James' Bay, I think not very great. In 1877, on my homeward journey, I left Moose Factory on the 1st October, and at that time all the tender I lett Moose Factory on the 1st October, and at that time all the tender plants—the tobacco plant, castor oil, bean, common beans, cucumbers, balsams and other tender plants, were perfectly green, standing in the open air, and probably remained so for some time after I left, as we had no frost. And at the posts of the Hudson Bay Company, inland, they are not often troubled with early autumn frosts. I think the sowing 1s done on an average at the same time as in corresponding latitudes in Lower Canada." Lower Canada.'

Again, speaking of iron ore, he says :

"Iron ore is very abundant on the east coast of Hud-son's Bay and on the islands northward from Cape Jones. At the of rich and valuable ore—valuable from the fact, that it contains a great amount of carbonate of manganese, making it available for the manufacture of Bessemer steel."

A country with all these resources, with forests and iron ore and lying alongside a great highway, easy of access, surely cannot be called a barren country; and yet not many years ago, not a hundred years ago, an hon. member of this House said :

"That railway north of Lake Superior runs for 700 or 800 or 1,000 miles through the most inhospitable country on the face of the globe—I do not speak now of Manitoba, but north of Lake Superior, from Cal-lander even to Winnipeg. It is questionable in my mind whether there are 19,000 acres adapted for settlement along the whole line of the route acres adapted for settlement along the whole line of the ence 1.0, you acres adapted for settlement along the whole line of the route, and, if you carry on a railway through a country not adapted for settlement, it strikes me forcibly it will be carried on with a very large expense to the country, and will not be remunerative to the contractors. Unless there is some way-freight for a railway, it is atterly impossible for it to be a paying concern."

This wholesale denunciation of an immense region like that described, has a every bad effect when it comes from such a high authority as this did. Sometimes hon. gentlemen in their argument, to carry out a particular view, express themselves without reflection as to the character of a country. I do not know whether that hon. gentleman did so or not, but he spoke as if he did, because I believe he is very much better informed. It is a great pity that such reports | country. In the forests at Lake Abittibi there are pines should go abroad about a very extensive portion of the country. From the ascertained sources of the Moose at Lake Abittibi to the source of its westerly branch north of Lake Superior, the distance is 350 miles, giving over 30,000 square miles of territory on the waters of the Moose where the soil is in great part very good-that is a country as large as Scotland or Ireland-and containing, according to the estimate which I have obtained, upwards of 20,000,000 acres of very fair land. I may be permitted to read from a paper which I have obtained from an officer of the Government appointed to explore that country-some information furnished by Professor Bell. He says :

information furnished by Professor Bell. He says: "As to the position and extent of this basin (of the Moose) which is one of the largest and most important drainage areas in the Dominion. It lies between the parallels of 47° and 51° north latitude and 78° and 851° west longitude. Its outline is approximately circular, measuring 330 miles from east to west, or as far as from Toronto to Montreäl, by 300 miles from north to south. As much misspprehension exists in re-gard to its climate, etc., I may here compare its general position as to latitude with European countries with which we are more familiar. Its most northern parts correspond with the extreme south of Hingland, while the bulk of it is in the latitudes of the northern parts of France, Ξ e southern parts of Germany, the central parts of Austria and the great wheat districts of Southern Russia. It is far removed from the considered to enjoy an average climate for its latitude as compared with the rest of the world. As might have been expected, wheat ripens well in this district as we know from the testimony of those who have tried it, while Indian corn comes to maturity in the southern parts of it. Timothy and all other kinds of hay as well as root crops and vegetables thrive remarkably well. The region seems to be admirably adapted for thrive remarkably well. The region seems to be admirably adapted for stock raising and dairy produce. The abundance of wood and the purest of water are important considerations.

of water are important considerations. "As to soil, elevation, etc., the greater part of the region may be described as a tolerably level plateau with an elevation of less than 1,000 feet above the sea. The southern part is more broken than the northern, and the whole area has a gentle slope towards the north. "The Moose River has upwards of a dozen principal branches, rising near the height of land, flowing often for long distances parallel to each other, but gradually converging towards the head of James' Bay. The western branches unite to form the Moose River proper, which is only about 40 miles in length, and this receives the eastern branches on its way to the sea."

"The late Walter McDuat—a thoroughly reliable authority—in speak-ing of the south-eastern part of the region in question, says in his Geolo-gical Report for 1872: 'The whole region, extending northward from the mouth of the Montreal River, which is about 30 miles south of the head of Lake Temiscamingue, may be pretty correctly described as a level head of Lake Temiscaming ie, may be pretty correctly described as a level clay plain, with a great number of rocky hills and ridges protruding through it. * The height of the clay appears to be pretty uniform throughout the whole region. * Taking the mean of all the heights * we find that the height of the clay plain above the sea level is about 900 feet. * Lake Abittibi is surrounded on all sides by level clay land. * To the north and especially the north-westward, the clay level seems almost unbroken and it is well known that it extends in this direction to the shores of Hudson Bay. Several acres of this clay near the mean's not the fundaon's Bay (Lowmany's nost at Abittibi clay soil are cultivated at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Abitibi and with satisfactory results. The only crop grown at present is pota-toes; but I was informed by the man who has charge of the farming operations (a French Canadian, who has been more than thirty years in Abitibi, but was brought up as a farmer near Sorel, in the Province of Quebec), that several other crops, including wheat, had been tried in former years, and with such results that he is inclined to insist that all the ordinary cereals can be cultivated as successfully at Abitibi as on the St. Lawrence. Such an opinion from a man who has been for so many years practically engaged in the cultivation of the soil, is worth recording and ought to be reliable. Indian corn is grown at more than one locality near the head of Lake Temiscamingue, and is said to ripen well. I am able, personally, to testify to this, as I was shown some good ripe ears which had been grown during the summer of 1872, on the farm of Mr. Angus McBride, st the head of the lake.' Similar testimony might be quoted from the reports of Mr. E. B. Borrow, who has trivelled much through the country drained by the various branches of the Moose clay soil are cultivated at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Abittibi much through the country drained by the various branches of the Moose River.

"In various parts of the district there is a prospect for the dis-covery of several of the more valuable metals. It is especially the case towards the south-east side; while in the northern part. I have case towards the south-east side; while in the northern part, I have found large deposits of iron ore, gypsum and lignite. So little intelligent exploration for mines has yet been done in the vast region northward of the great lakes, that we can hardly form any idea of the rich mineral resources which lie dormant in this part of the Dominion. I am convinced from what I have seen, that there is nothing in the climate of this region which would prevent it being successfully farmed."

A country with all these resources cannot be called a barren

3 feet in diameter, and towards the head of the Albany River, and near Lake St. Joseph, there are forests of pitch pine, which is a valuable wood in that country, with trees averaging nearly 2 feet in diameter, according to the authority of Prof. Bell, who has explored that region. I believe the value of the country is equal to that of any part of the North-West. I believe that the vast region north of the height of land and along the waters of the Moose and Albany is in a great measure valuable for agriculture, and will yet sustain a very large population. It is not alone this great country which will give traffic to railways, but through that country this Parliament has already granted four charters to railways leading down to Hudson's Bay. I believe that great inland sea, with which the Canadian Pacific Railway will be connected, and with which this country will be connected, possesses resources which are not yet dreamt of. I believe the region to be opened will prove very rich in fisheries of every description, and in minerals. I believe we will have a great traffic arising from that bay, and I should not be at all surprised if it were found before long that the section of the line north of Lakes Huron and Superior was the best paying portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, considering the mineral wealth and the resources of that immense region. We know that in a country farther westward, 200 miles north of Lake Superior, wheat grows well; we know that there are rivers there which are navigable for miles, with magnificent forests and excellent land on their banks; we know that cattle thrive throughout that whole region, and why then should it be called a barren country? With regard to its mineral wealth, I should think that the testimony of such a man as Professor Agassiz should have very great weight, and he declared long ago that one of the most important regions of the world—and he had travelled over the whole world, and was considered one of the first scientists of his day-was that country north of Lake Superior, and that it would eventually prove to be one of the richest mineral regions on the face of the earth. The results so far obtained have demonstrated the accuracy of that statement. A few days ago there were no less than $400,000 paid in New York for a mine, covering a few acres in Thunder Bay, within 15 miles of Prince Arthur's Landing. That gives some idea of the resources of this country, and as it is opened up, no doubt its mineral interests will be of very great importance.

Mr. TROW. I have only a few words to say, and I would not have risen but for a remark which has been made by the hon. member for Algoma. Whether inadvertently or not, but certainly not intentionally, in my remarks the other day on the Canadian Pacific Railway Resolutions, I stated that I had travelled over a portion of the intended route of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that I considered that the portion which came under my observation was inhospitable and not adapted to successful settlement. Furthermore, during my travels I fell in with parties whom I presumed were familiar with that portion of the country, and the information which I gathered from them was that the land was not adapted to cultivation; that the climate was not suitable, and from the inaccessible mountains and ravines which were described as abounding in that country, I naturally came to the conclusion that that information was correct, and I wrote to a local paper in my riding at the time to that effect. However, since I made that statement I have taken the precaution to read some reports on the subject, and more particularly the reports of Mr. Borron, a former member of this House, who is employed by the Ontario Government. In that gentleman I have very great confidence, and believing every word he states to be correct, to the best of his knowledge, I have come to a different conclusion with reference to the adaptability of many portions of that Temiscamingue, both in the Province of Ontario and the Mr. DAWSON.

section of the country to settlement. He has made observations on the country, from Lake Superior to James' Bay, and also to Hudson Bay, and down the various rivers and ravincs, and he has travelled there very extensively for several summers. I yield to his judgment, and I believe there are large tracts of land upon and adjoining these rivers which are adapted to settlement. There are very large limits of excellent timber, and there is no doubt there are very valuable minerals. I merely make this statement because the hon. gentleman mentioned my name, and in order to contradict the statement I made the other day. I have no desire to misrepresent or decry the country and would not do it under any circumstances. My object is to see the country settled and aid in its settlement and progress to the best of my ability.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am glad the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) has drawn the attention of the House to the question now under consideration, and I think after the speech which has been delivered by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) the House must admit the value of the motion which has been submitted by the hon. member for Algoma. I was, I confess, considerably surprised on reading the statement made by the hon. member for South Perth in the discussion which took place on the Canadian Pacific Railway Resolutions. I was greatly surprised to learn that that hon. gontleman had stated that there were not, in his opinion, 10,000 acres of cultivable land, between Callander and Winnipeg; because I had known, of my own knowledge, long previous to that time, that in the immediate vicinity of Callander, and between that place and Sudbury Junction, a larger portion of land than the quantity mentioned by the hon. member for Perth was cultivable and was actually in occupation by settlers at the present moment. I think it is to be regretted that statements such as those which fell from the lips of the hon. member for Perth, in the discussion to which I referred, should have been sent to the world on the authority which statements made by hon. members in this House must naturally have in the country, and I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman has to day admitted that the information on which he made that statement was incorrect. I have a statement made by a gentleman on whose opinion, I think I can thoroughly rely, that large portions of the country between Callander and Winnipeg are cultivable and are admirably adapted to settlement. I hold in my hand a letter which was written to me some years ago by Mr. Wm. Bell, D.L.S., who was occupied for some years in surveying limits under the authority of the Ontario Government, on the north shore of Lake Huron, and between that section of country and the Ottawa River. He said :

"Along the Amable Dufond River and several miles west of it, there are extensive flats of rich, loamy soil, thence westward a beautiful undu-lating country extends to Lake Nipissing and South River and a consi-derable distance west of that river. The soil is generally a sandy loam on the higher lands and clay loam on the flats. In some parts the timber is pine, mixed with hardwood, and in many places, hemlock, hardwood and balsam. From Lake Nipissing, the country ascends gra-dually to the south, and at a distance of 15 miles from the Lake in that direction extensive ridges of maple, birch and beech, occur, mixed occasionally with hemlock and balsam, pine being seldom met with. The soil is a sandy loam. The whole country described above is fit for settlement.

"On the north side of Lake Nipissing and Mattawa River a large tract of country extending northerly to Lake Temiscamingue is covered chiefly with hard balsam and spruce. Pine is most abundant near the Ottawa, but a few miles west of that river it becomes scarce. Over a large proportion of this tract, the soil is a clay loam of good quality and nearly all of it is suitable for settlement."

He concludes his letter in these words:

"In my opinion, there is no part of the unoccupied land of the Crown which affords so large an unbroken tract of country suitable for settle-ment as the territory described therein."

I know, as a matter of fact, that on the shores of Lake

Province of Quebec, wheat of the very best quality has been grown; and there is at present a grist mill in the vicinity of that lake which is used for the grinding of wheat grown by the settlers. It is also a well known fact that at the head of Lake Temiscamingue there are great clay flats covered with splendid oak timber. I might go on reading extracts at great length to show the fertility of the soil in the section of country referred to; but I will content myself with reading one statement made by a gentleman who is now a member of this House; I refer to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Sutherland). In 1878 he appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Colonization, and in the course of an examination as to the character of the country lying between the head of Lake Superior and Rat Portage, he was asked the following question :-

"By Mr. McNab-I wish to ask the character of the land along Rainy River, and whether it is likely to be settled? Is that outlay of money likely to be of benefit to the country, assuming our all-rail route is completed?"

The outlay of money hore referred to was for the construction of a system of tramways proposed to connect the waters of Lake Superior with those of the Lake of the Woods. The answer was as follows :---

"I contend that if the railway is not built for four or five yearsand I don't think it is possible to build it in less time than four years-if this route is not opened up, there is no chance of settling the vertile belt here on Rainy River, as there would be no opportunity of settlers seebet here on Kainy Kiver, as there would be no opportunity of settlers see-ing the country, and they would not go. There are sevents on townships surveyed there, with about 23,000 acres in each township. I have talked the matter over with Col. Dennis, and from the field notes of the sur-veyors he estimates that there are at least 150,000 or 200,000 acres of excellent land there. There are about 400,000 acres altogether. I am satisfied he is under the mark, and I have seen a good part of the terri-tory along Rainy River, and have heard a good deal about it from others " others.'

In view of all the statements which have been made as to the fertility of a large portion of that country lying between the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at Callander and Winnipeg, and in view of the great mineral and timber resources in that large extent of territory, I think that my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) must admit that the Government were wise in deciding to push through the road north of Lake Superior as rapidly as possible; and I think it is an advantage to this House and to the country that the hon, member for Algoma has submitted this motion, which I have very much pleasure in seconding.

Mr. COCKBURN. I have been very much interested in the discussion which has taken place on this subject. Some of my remarks have been anticipated by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Haggart). I cannot speak from personal experience, in such glowing terms as the hon. member for Algoma has done, of that portion of country north of Lake Huron and Lake Superior; but I have some personal knowledge of a portion of the country, within 200 or 300 miles of where we now stand, and I know from personal observation that considerable belts of land fit for settlement do exist in the northern part of Ontario, and I suppose the same thing is true of Quebec, though I cannot speak of that from personal knowledge. The great North-West has received so much attention during the last few years that the settlement of the newer portions of the older Provinces is entirely neglected. I cannot claim that the soil in our free grant districts will compare in fertility with the soil of the North-West; but there are other advantages in favour of these free grant districts The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) has already described the country around Lake Temiscamingue better than I can; and hon. gentlemen from Ontario have recently received from the Provincial Commissioner of Crown Lands reports of the country around Lake Nipissing. I hold in my hand a report lately issued, which shows that, though some of the lands surveyed are almost valueless, and transportation, and see the large forests of valuable others are very good indeed. Mr. Niven, a surveyor, who was sent out by the Ontario Government to explore that district, reports regarding one section, as follows :-

"Township No. 17 north of Lake Nipissing is nearly all good hard-wood land, and is by far the best township in the entire area explored. I never saw finer hardwood bush than many parts of it—a few basswood here and there ironwood in many places and a grove of beach on the here and there, ironwood in many places, and a grove of beech on the east boundary, a few miles north of Trout Lake."

Mr. Niven also speaks of the township of Widdifield, in which I have been myself. It is in the very next division from here. Mr. Niven says of it:

"Township of Widdifield is immediately on the north shore of Lake Nipissing and traversed by the Canadian Pacific Railway. About two-thirds of the entire township is fit for settlement."

With a railway running through that township, and a roundhouse there to accommodate sixteen engines, I should think it would offer very good inducements to people who cannot go to the North-West, because there they would find fuel and fencing, as well as the land, for nothing. I cannot say that this is a land flowing with milk and honey, but there are belts of good land, with the advantage of being within easy access, and the expense of reaching there being small, I therefore think it is very important that this discussion should have taken place to day, in order to call the attention of intending settlers to this part of the country. The Canadian Pacific Railway has already been built along the entire length of Lake Nipissing, and with the construction of the proposed railway from Lake Nipissing to Lake Temiscamingue, there is no doubt that a very rich country will be opened up. It is a matter of very great satisfaction to find, on closer examination, that the northern portions of the Province of Ontario are proving to be so valuable.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for Algoma ought to be congratulated on taking this opportunity of bringing such an important subject before this House and the country. When we remember the statements made from time to time in reference to that country and the impressions created upon the public mind, I think we must acknowledge that a great deal of information regarding it that would be profitable to the public is yet hidden from our observation. If we consider the extent of country, a distance of nearly 1,000 miles long in one direction and from 200 to 500 miles wide in another, and if we remember that in Ontario, were there is not perhaps one third as large a territory settled, we have to-day a contented population of 2,000,000, I think we must admit the importance of this question. Again, if we compare the geographical position of the country with other parts of the world, with reference to its latitude and longitude and its altitude from the sea, we find that it compares favourably with other parts of the world that are thickly populated to-day, that sustain a contented and happy people ranging from three to forty people to every square mile. If we think again of its rivers, the length and the number of which are, comparatively speaking, equal to those found in any other part of British North America, if we remember the clearness and pureness of the waters that flow down its fields, we cannot fail to properly estimate its importance. If we look at its mineral resources, we find the deposits there are similar to those found in other parts of the country that have been partially explored and are yielding, as a return for those explorations, some of the greatest sources of wealth to be found in the Dominion, we may, from that direction, too, estimate its importance. If we look at its soils, we find they also compare very favourably with the soils in the richest parts of Ontario, which have been culti-vated for years. If we look at its timber, the want of which is being felt very largely at present, both in this part of the country and the North-West-if we look along its navigable streams, extending hundreds of miles, useful for navigation timber that extend along those streams, which must be very useful at no distant date to this country, we cannot fail to be impressed with its importance. If we remember its lakes, teeming with as fine fish as can be found in any part lest sources of wealth to Ontario and the Dominon. of the country, from that point of view also we must be struck with its importance. Then look at its climate. Hon, gentlemen have been pleased to say in this House that it has a very inhospitable climate, but measuring its climate from the depth of snow, from the length of the summer and the length of the fall, or from the number of months during which its rivers are navigable, we find that it compares very favourably with the climate of many other parts of the country largely populated and wealthy to-day. If we look at its grasses and its plants and vegetables, we find that they are the same as those found in other parts of the country about which we know a great deal more to-day. I saw only a year ago a single potato that was brought down from Port York which lacked only one ounce of two pounds weight, and which being cut through, appeared to be of the very best quality; and the carrots brought down from there, both as regards size and the quality of the root itself, are decidedly much superior to what we find in the best parts of Ontario and Quebec. I say, considering the importance of the subject, no matter in what light you view it, it must be a matter of considerable interest to the people of the Dominion, and the people of Ontario especially, because a large extent of this territory belongs to Ontario, and when we remember of the country, some 400 or 500 miles in length, be broken—to give them the means of obtaining with a railway, we will see the necessity of bringing in what has become to them a matter of necessity. some way prominently before the eyes of the world the [I only say this. not that I have any four but that the the thet the resources of the territory that will be opened up for settle ment there. The hon. member for Muskoka said, that, from his knowledge of the country, he was inclined to believe there was a great deal of broken land in it, but only a few years ago I heard a gentleman, who apparently had opportunities of being conversant with the country, say there was not 10,000 good acres in the Manitoulin Island; that it was a place that could not be settled; that no large number could reside there and support themselves on its products; yet, in travelling through that country, although we must confess there is a large amount of broken soil, that is not an unmixed evil; because it cannot be used directly in the raising of grain, it is very useful for the purpose of grazing, and some of the finest cattle of this country that cost the smallest amount of money has been raised in Manitoulin. From the meagre information that we have, we learn that in every part of it there is found some of the best arable land known in the Dominion. If the soil and climate, if its waters, if its altitude from the sea, if its depth of snow, the length of its winters, the mildness of its summers, are the same as in other parts of the world, well known and amply tested, and found suitable for agricultural purposes, we must admit that it compares favourably with other known parts of this country. It is important that the information asked for should be laid before the country through this House, because any information we have had heretofore has been extremely meagre. I was pleased to find that the hon. member for South Perth was ready to accept the information, coming from a source which he would, perhaps, look upon as more valuable than that coming from any other source-the information given by a representative from the On-tario Government. I am pleased to find that there seems to be every chance of our receiving information which will satisfy those that are skeptical, as the investigation proceeds, as pioneers reach different parts of the country and send back reports, which will only be found to corroborate the reports we have as to the richness of the country. I am glad the hon. member for Algoma has put this notice on the paper. I hope it is only the opening up of a great question which will be ventilated year by year and be construction of the branch railway to St. Charles. On that Mr. SPROULE.

brought home prominently before the attention of the peeple of this and other countries, and I doubt not that at no distant time this rogion will be found to be one of the rich-

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not propose to add anything to what has already been said, in regard to the value of this country for the purposes of settlement, but what I wish to say is, that that value is, so far, merely theoretical, and will be of no avail to the wealth of the Dominion until more extended railway communication is given to it. Not a day passes on which I do not receive letters from those I represent, asking, in almost despairing terms, when are they to have the benefit of railway communication. There are settlers in some parts of that country who are raising large crops of grain, who are entirely dependent upon the lumber interest for their market, who are 50 miles away from any source of obtaining supplies, and who are every day looking most anxiously to see whether the long promised railway is likely to reach them. If ever there was a case in which the interests of the poorer class of settlers deserve consideration, it is the case of those men who, at a time when the North-West was not entering into competition with it and under circumstances of the greatest possible hardship, made homes for themselves in what was then almost an unknown wilderness. I do trust that the Government will, at the very earliest possible moment, take the claims of these people into consideration and carry out the promises made long tations held out will ere long be realized; but, on their behalf, I would take this one opportunity, the last that will probably occur, of impressing upon the Government the great necessity there is, not for action, but for speedy action; and I venture to say that next summer, if the opening of next season does not show that steps have actually been taken for the completion of this work, my place in this House will be a very useless one, for there will be such an emigration from that country that I shall have very few people left to represent. Some have already gone. In many townships there are less people now than when the Census was taken in 1881, and if speedy steps are not taken for the construction of the railway, the population will diminish in a still greater ratio; and I think it is hardly worth while for us, when we are building up Provinces so far from ourselves, to do it at the expense of depopulating a country which will, in many respects, compare favourably with the most fertile portions of the North-West.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICAL ARBITRATORS.

Mr. BLONDEAU moved for a statement giving the names of the Official Arbitrators and Secretaries to Arbitrators, appointed to office since 1st July, 1867, up to the present time, the statement to show the date of appointment, the salary allowed, the duration of tenure of office, and the salary actually paid yearly in each case. In case of appointment having been made by Order in Council, or the salaries having been increased by Order in Council. copies of such Orders in Council in each case to be annexed to the statement.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity, now offered to me by this motion, to draw the attention of the Government to the appointment of these different Official Arbitrators. I think that in appointing these officers the character of the work they have to perform and the surroundings in which they are called upon to discharge the duties of their office should be borne in mind. Quite recently the Arbitrators have had to hear evidence and to decide several cases connected with the occasion it has been found that that the greater number of these Arbitrators do not understand a single word of French, and are called upon to hold investigations in cases where the witnesses who are summoned and the parties themselves do not understand English. This has given rise to great inconveniences; interpreters are needed to translate to the witnesses the questions put by the Arbitrators, and to translate also the answers given by the witnesses; this doubles the cost and the length of the inquests. It seems to me that from a purely economical point of view, and also to do justice to the population of a whole Province, the Govern-ment ought to require that those officials should speak, or at least understand French. I think that the Government ought to require this knowledge in this branch of the Service as well as in the others; for at the present time, with Confederation as it is now constituted, with the exigencies of Civil Service, a perfect knowledge of the English language is required from an employé, who wishes to obtain a position here at Ottawa, and still in several places on lines of railway, on the Intercolonial Railway, and in the organization of the office which is now contemplated, persons who do not know a single word of French, who do not even understand it, are appointed, and our countrymen are obliged to appear before these courts. It is easy to understand, Mr. Speaker, in what a disagreeable and inferior position we are placed in that respect. I call the attention of the Government on this point, and I do hope that they will remedy the evil which I have pointed out. Again, very recently, at a sitting of this court, the President or one of the Arbitrators has had the impudence to tell one of the lawyers that if he did not know how to plead in English he had no business to plead before the Board, and that was said in the city of Quebec, in the capital of the Province of Quebec. I think the least that can be required of these officials, is that, if they do not understand French, at least they should have some idea of good breeding; and that in a country like ours, they should refrain from putting on the overbearing airs of a conqueror: they will not pass in our time. I take this opportunity to call the attention of the Government to a case which came before the Dominion Arbitrators, and for which I have, for the last two or three years, used my best endeavours, but without success, although the cause is perfectly just. The Government owns a railway which is called the Intercolonial Railway. One day, a lecomotive which had left River du Loup for Quebec, set fire to a building belonging to one of the electors of my coupty. The building being burned down, the proprietor naturally asks the Government to make good his loss. The Government sends an Arbitrator; the Arbitrator hears evidence, finds that the fire was set to the building by one of the engines belonging to the Government, finds that the plaintiff's claim is not too high, and comes to the conclusion that in equity the Government is bound to refund to this man the money which he has lost by this fire. But it seems that when the engine left River du Loup for Quebec, the metallic screen placed on top of the chimney of the loco-motive, and which is destined to prevent the sparks from flying out, was in good order. Now, the Government have refused on that ground to give this man the amount of money to which he his entitled for the damage they have caused to him. Well, I fail to see by virtue of what law a Government is not bound to make good the damage caused by them. I fail to see by virtue of what law, either natural or positive, the Government is exempt from paying the amount of the damage they have caused to a party by setting fire to his building. The position taken by the Government in the present case is very strange, inasmuch as we now have two precedents. In the county of Pictou, two individuals were in the same position; their fonces-not their barns-bat their fences and a few cords of wood were burned down by one of the locomotives of the Intercolonial Railway. In Official Arbitrators, and the Arbitrator declared that in equity the Government were bound to pay, but that in law they were not, because the metallic screen covering the chimney of the locomotive was in perfect good order. The member for the county, or somebody else, for all I know, at all events, somebody having more influence than I have, approached the Government and obtained from them tho decision that this cause on which an Arbitrator had made a report should be referred to the whole body of Arbitrators. The Court of Arbitrators, with a full attendance, decided that this individual, not only in equity, but also in justice, had a right to be paid, and he was paid. The case to which I now refer is that of Mr. Fraser. Another individual has also been paid under the same circumstances. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour, to day, of putting a question to the Government on this subject, and I was told that the two men were not at all in the same circumstances. I know very well that they are not in the same circumstances, for one of them has been paid and the other has not; but when they are both paid they will be on the same footing, and it is for that reason I ask the Government to pay this man. If the Government allow themselves the sport of burning down a man's buildings, let them bear the consequences, and let them make good the losses of which they have been the cause. I think that if the case was referred to the whole Board of Arbitrators, as the Pictou case has been, the result would be the same as that which took place in the case of Mr. Fraser, and that justice, which has not been refused to a person who does not belong to onr nationality, will not be refused to a person who speaks our language.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my hon. friend made a mistake or misunderstood the question which is now before the House, because the last part of his speech has reference to a matter altogether different.

Mr. LANDRY. It has reference to the Arbitrators.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I am afraid my hon. friend has forgetten the facts which took place during the interval which elapsed between the time when his question was put and the time when the present motion was made. At all events, I did not wish to interrupt him, because I thought the occasion was favourable for him to press the claims of the individual whose name he has mentioned in this House; but he will have to excuse me if I am not able to answer him as the hon. Minister of Railways, whom it concerns specially, would do. I shall speak to him on this question, and I am convinced that if there is any possibility of doing what the hon. member asks, the hon. Minister of Railways will certainly do it. As to the arbitrators to whom he has referred, there is no doubt it would be desirable that all of them should understand both languages. It would be desirable that all public officials in the Civil Service should understand and even speak both languages. But the hon. member knows that it is an impossibility, under the present circumstances. In the Province of Quebec it is altogether different; nearly all of those who speak the English language, at least most of our educated men, know French as well, and can understand and speak it; but, unfortunately, it is not so in other Provinces, although there are very remarkable exceptions in that respect. As to the facts concerning the St. Charles Branch Railway, I do not think that those who appeared before the Arbitrators have had any reason to complain a great deal, for I think that, taking it all in all, their cause has been well pleaded, since the amount which has been grated by the arbitrators has been quite large, and must have satisfied most of those who had reason to complain, and who had submitted their cause to them. The hon. member has spoken, I believe, of the President of the that case, as in the other, a kind of inquest was held by Arbitrators who, it is said, forgot himself in reference to an advocate, who was pleading before him. If that is the crused by the Intercolonial Railway, is exactly that followed case, th s official has not acted as he should have; he should have remembered that the French language had a perfect right to be used before the court, as before any of the other courts in the Province of Quebec, and before the Federal courts. But I am satisfied that, in his desire to do justice, this Arbitrator has tried to impress on the mind of the advocate that if he pleaded in the language which was the most familiar, and, perhaps, the only language familiar to the President, he would run a better chance of obtaining justice. At any rate, I hope that the advocate who pleaded there will understand it so, and will not believe that the President had any intention of showing any disregard for him, or for the French population of Canada, for I am acquainted with the President of the Board of Arbitrators, and in spite of his exterior, which may be somewhat rough, I know that he is kind hearted, and he is a man who would not deliberately act as he must have acted or else the hon. member would not have said so. Neither is there any doubt, Mr. Speaker, that in the fature choice of the Arbitrators, the remarks just made by the hon, member must be borne in mind, When an appointment is made, if it should be possible for us to find a man who understands and can speak both languages, it will be a geat deal better than to have men who can speak only one language, especially for a court whose services are required in the Province of Quebec as well as in the other Provinces. During recess it may be deemed expedient to enquire into the composition of this Board and to see if means could not be devised to improve the present sy-tem, so as to make it more effective and less expensive. My attention has been called by one of the hon. members of this House to the delays and cost, and I think that there will be a possibility of improving the composition of this Board during our next Session. The question will be taken into consideration, and although I am not prepared to promise a measure on this subject, we will see whether or not there is any means of making improvements.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways on a case which is similar to that which has just been stated by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lundry). I refer to the case of a man named Narcis-e Pelletier, whose tences were burned down by sparks from a locomotive on the Intercolonial Railway. A report was made to the Department, but on a point of law, the question of the responsibility of the Government was suspended-that is to say, the entire responsibility of the Government was not admitted, because the chimney of the locomotive was covered with this metallic screen, which is used as a protection against fire. I make this remark because it is a matter of civil law and of property in the Province of Quebec. Now, according to law, in the Province of Quebec, the Government ought to see that an article of our Civil Code provides that damages caused to others in any way whatever must be paid. All damages must be paid. It may be that in other Provinces, civil law is applied differently, but in the Province of Quebec-and I call particular attention from the hon. Minister on this point-the law is as I have said before. I submit these facts so that the hon. Minister of Public Works may bring them to the knowledge of the Minister of Railways, that he may take them into serious consideration. I believe these indivi-duals have a right to be indemnified, for it is known in fact that the fire was caused by the fire of a locomotive. Only in law the responsibility of the Government has been denied. This question ought to be decided once for all, as decisions have been given for and against this point.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if the House will allow me to answer immediately to the hon. member for l'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), I shall tell him that the rule followed by the Railway Department, and consequently by the Government, with respect to damages ment here, asking relief. The people themselves have peti-Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

by all railway companies throughout the country. When a fire is caused by sparks from a locomotive, the investigation must show whether or not the chimney was covered with the metallic screen referred to by the hon. member, and if it is proved that this metallic screen was fixed on as required by law, the responsibility of the railway company does not exist and the damage is not paid. That is the policy carried out on the Intercolonial Railway with respect to damages caused by fire. Because a railway is operated by the Government that is no reason why the responsibility should be different from what it is when the railway is under the management of a company. And the hon. member may be sure that, although a Government is not more anxious to pay out money than an individual is, it is always more agreeable to them to make up for damages or to show that they are making up for them, than to be obliged to refuse. If in certain cases the Government has paid damages, it must be that it had been proved that the cover had not been properly fixed on the chimney of the locomotive, or that there was other defects and that the railway was at fault. At all events, the Minister of Railways is perfectly willing to examine each case and to decide it according to the evidence made out. If in the case pointed out by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), the case of one Fraser, in one of the Maritime Provinces, the damages were paid, it is because it must have been proved that the Intercolonial Railway was at fault, or that whoever had charge of the locomptive was at fault, and that consequently the Government ought to pay. If the hon. member who has brought this matter before the Minister of Railways has new proofs to give in favour of the man he wishes to protect, he may be sure that the hon. Minister will take the matter into consideration.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) If the House will allow me, I shall state that in the case I have referred to the chimney was in perfect good order; but it must be borne in mind that the fire was not communicated by the chimney; the fireman was building his fire and he threw some on this man's building. The chimney was in perfect order, but the fire came out of the other end.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In that case, the hon. member will have to bring the matter again before the Minister of Railways, in order to see by which end the fire came out.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation.) But I see no end to the delay of the Government in paying my elector.

Motion agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE, in moving that in the opinion of this House it is expedient to enact a law prohibiting the incoming of Chinese to that portion of Canada known as British Columbia, said : This is a question which has been before this House on several occasions, which has been thoroughly discussed, and hence, I intend, for my part, on this occasion, to be brief. No one regrets more than I do myself that the condition of things in British Columbia makes it necessary to enact a law prohibiting any further immigration of Chinese to that Province; but, Sir, it is necessary that such a law should be passed—not only necessary, but, it is, in my opinion, imperative. The peo-ple of that Province have been aware of this fact for years past. They have repeatedly petitioned the Federal Government on this point, asking for some restrictive measure to be passed to restrict the immigration of Chinese to that Province. Orders in Council have been passed by the Provincial Government there to the Federal Governtioned this honourable House on one occasion, but so far their prayers have been fruitless. Various reasons might be given why such a law should be enacted. One is because the Chinese labour is brought into competition with the labour of the white man. The Chinese work for wages that will not support a white labourer's family. They bring with them none of the responsibilities of our civilization. They have no wives or children to support, and hence they come stripped, as it were, to do battle with white labour. The white man has his family to feed, to clothe, to educate, churches and other public institutions to maintain; and in a thousand other ways he is called upon to contribute. The Chinaman, his rival in the labour market, has none of these responsibilities. He has only himself to provide for, and hence he is prepared for the combat; and, however much the Chinaman may desire to get for his labour, he will work for what he can just get. He will not be put on one side on account of the price. The white man, handicapped with the responsibilities of his civilization, the Chinaman prepared to struggle for his solitary existence-the result is inevitable; free white labour gives place to the slaves of the companies, who are prepared to work at a rate for which the white man cannot subsist, with their cheap and dirty mode of living and their capacity for living in swarms, in wretched dens where a white man would drop, if he did not suffocate. The experience on this phase of the question in California and Australia is very significant. It matters not how low a white man may offer his services, a Chinaman is always prepared to offer his at a lower rate; consequently, thousands of white families have been compelled to leave the State of California, because they found it impossible to compete with Chinese labour. In the Province of British Columbia, white men have had to leave on account of the Chinese monopolizing the labour market. It is impossible for white labour to compete with men who work sixteen hours a day, who sleep on shelves in the shop, and who live on a little rice, flavoured with a chunk of pork. Wherever a Chinaman gets a foothold he never lets go, and in whatever branch of labour he comes into competition with the white man, the latter goes to the wall every time. Is it right, then, that we should allow these people to swarm in upon us by thousands and to deprive our people of the labour which this country affords? Certainly not. We require all the labour of this country for our own people. We must remember, also, that China is the great slave market from whence labourers are being drawn to this country. Myriads of them are waiting, myriads of the lowest type of humanity, to come to this country to labour at a rate of wage upon which a white man would starve. We have in that Province at the present time, upwards of 18,000 Chinese. Just imagine for one moment that number of slaves in a Province so thinly populated as British Columbia is at the present time. I know it is argued by some hon. gentlemen that they are a necessity, that their labour is required to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Speaker, I differ entirely from that view. They are not a necessity. I received a letter to day, the contents of which I was very sorry to learn; it is from one of the largest employers of labour in that Province, and he says that there are a great many men there who cannot get employment. Now, that is a very serious fact, and yet we are told, from year to year, that it is necessary to allow these people to swarm in upon us by thousands while our own people there cannot get employment. It is quite time that some action on the part of this House should be taken to prevent such large numbers of Chinese coming into that Province, thus depriving our own people of the employment which they are entitled to in their own country. It is no new thing that we are asking. What we are asking for has been adopted by Australia, in three of the colonies, which been adopted by Australia, in three of the colonies, which have passed restrictive measures The State of California has passed a restrictive or a prohibitory measure. Our own not assert their freedom, knowing full well that should they do so,

Province, during the last year, passed two restrictive measures, and, in addition, we memorialized this Government, asking that this Parliament also should pass some restrictive measure respecting Chinese immigration; but, so far, no action has been taken on the part of this Government or this House. These people, while they offer their services at a low rate, only wait for the opportunity to demand from their employers as high a rate of wages as the white man gets. We have had experience of their doings in this respect in the Province of British Columbia, where, on one occasion, the whole Chinese population of the city of Victoria struck for a higher rate of wage, and they never went to work until their request was granted. Large numbers of these people in any civilized community invariably demoralize and im-poverish that community. They do not come amongst us, as other people do, to settle and make for themselves decent homes. Whilst they are amongst us, they live as meanly as it is possible for human beings to live, and after making a certain amount of money they return to China and their places are filled by another batch of slaves from the Flowery Kingdom. And this has been carried on to such an extent that we have found that fully one half of the total earnings on the railway, in the mines, and in some other branches of labour, has been carried out of the Province by these people, never to be brought back. Hence, they are coming and going and drawing the very life blood out of that Province, and at the same time are depriving our people of their just rights. It is no wonder that the people of that Province have raised their voices against such a monstrous imposition. I am satisfied that if such a state of things existed in the Province of Ontario, or in the Province of Quebec, there would be such a rallying of the forces demanding and insisting upon a remedy, as would be irresistible. I am certain that the hon. members of this House would not allow such a state of things in their midst to exist for forty-eight hours; and those of us who come from that Province, who feel the evils of the influx of these people by thousands, come here and ask the assistance of the members of this House from the other Provinces, so that we may get rid of the imposition to which we are now subjected. Sir, we object to these people also, on account of their slavery. They come to us as slaves, and they are treated as such while they are here. I desire to read a statement made by Mr. Consul Bailey, of Hong Kong, on this point:

"The emigration from China to all parts of the world is an organ ized business, in which men with large capital engage, in which men are bought and sold at so much per head, precisely as a piece of mer-chandise is handled at its market value. The Coolie of China is bought by the rich trader to serve his purchaser at a low rate of wages for a series of years in a foreign country, under a contract for the full performance of which, in many instances, he gives a mortgage on his wife and children."

Sir, I can vouch for the truth of that statement. They do come here and are treated as slaves.' They come to our Province consigned as so much merchandise to the Chinese companies, and afterwards they are sold to the highest bidder. And yet we are told that white men should be in a position to compete with those individuals. Such a statement is an insult to the workingmen and the white people of this country. Let us hear what one of the papers of the Pro-vince of British Columbia said, in a leading article, with respect to this question:

"In this Province, in this very city, Ohinese s'aves, male and female, are constantly arriving; in some cases obtaining their freedom after years of labour; in other cases --those of females, especially-never. Cargoes of Chinese are shipped here at a nominal cost to the Chinese merchant or combination of merchants, and the individuals comprising the living freight become part and parcel of their importers, until enough has been retained from their earnings to enable them to pur-chase their liberty, which generally requires four or five years' servi-tule And so widespread and complete is this system, and so powerful the organizations, that the slaves become. Deforce, voluntary ones in speedy vengeance would be visited upon them—a flead body be dicovered and be called a 'Chinese mystery ;' or a corpse picked up floating in the river and a coroner's verdict of 'found drowned,' and in a few days all would be forgotten. There remains, however, a yet worse phase of Chinese slavery, viz., the introduction from China of young female natives who are brought here and sold for the most base and degraded purposes—purposes with regard to which it were best to be silent, if such silence would not be worse than folly—it would be even criminal,''

That is the statement made by the leading paper of that Province, and I am satisfied the only remedy for the evil is to pass a law for the exclusion or restriction, at least of the Chinese from that Province. They are a dangerous class of people. I desire to refer to an incident which occurred last fall. When the labourers had been discharged from the railway work on the main line, the Chinese gathered at a certain place on Fraser River, where a white man, who had had charge of a gang of Chinese, lived in a cabin by the road side, and during the night this man was shot and left with his throat cut. It was supposed he had money in the cabin. No white man was there, and of course suspicion fell on the Chinese. About the same time a similar occurrence happened lower down the Fraser, where another white man was murdered at a place where there were only Chinese in the vicinity. It appears that this man had tendered for a piece of work which the Chinese wanted to get, and in fact the white man secured it, but lost his life; and, by the way, I wish to inform the hon members from Quebec that he was a native of that Province. These two men, there can be no doubt, were murdered by the Chinese; but those people are so crafty and clever that it is almost impossible for the authorities to secure their conviction. In nine cases out of ten they avoid the law. They have laws and tribunals of their own, and if it is necessary to put one of their own people out of existence, they select the man, the hour, and the place, and the deed is committed. All that is known is that some man is dead; but as to the individual who committed the deed, that is never known to the authorities. The Chinese are, as I have said, a dangerous class, and of course the more numerous they become, the greater the danger to the white people, especially to those on the mainland, many of whom are farmers residing in isolated places. They are a dangerous class to be present in the Province in crowds and gangs of thousands. Not only are the Chinese injuring the white people, but they are demoralizing the Indians of the Province. I ask the House to support the motion and I am sure that such action will be supported, if not unanimously, by a majority of the people, who, if they possessed the knowledge of hon. members on this question, would certainly favour a restrictive measure.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion of my hon. friend from Victoria, I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible. The question of restricting Chinese immigration has been before this House at various times and ably dealt with by different members from British Columbia. I can, therefore, only reaffirm the statements I had the honour to make last year, and confirm the position taken in hostility to Chinese as a class by members from that Province in the preceding Parliaments. I will not again trouble the House with a description of their habits and modes of life nor why I deem them an undesirable class with which to colonize our own country. It ought to be sufficient for hon. gentlemen to know that the Legislature and people of British Columbia have been protesting against their unlimited admission to our territory, not only by unanimous resolutions of our House of Assembly but by Minutes of Council, and petitions from the people. It is not like a question involving the alienation of our public lands, which might cause a division amongst members from that Province. It is a question that affects every portion of the province prejudicially and must ultimately extend its evils to other Provinces. Sir, when reading those resolutions of our Legislative Assembly last Saturday afternoon, my eye fell upon a telegraphic despatch in the Montreal Herald, that for a moment inspired me with hope for the success of our efforts this season. The despatch was as follows:---

"London, March 14.—The Canadian Government has objected to some emigrants recently sent out by Tuke's Committee; and has notified the English Government that many of them are unsuited for colonial life."

Sir, the first thought that occurred to me was whether Mr. Tuke, which has the sound of a celestial name, might not be Ah Take or Kiwong Tuke, or some other Chinese dignitary who had been acting as immigration agent for Mr. Onderdonk, and I thought perhaps the Government were beginning to repent them of the sympathy they had been extending to that disinterested gentleman in his laudable efforts toflood our country with Mongolians. But, Sir, my hopes were soon dispelled when I observed that the telegram was dated, London instead of Hong Kong. It then occurred to me, Sir, that Mr. Tuke must be an Englishman and that our Government had objected to some particular class of immigrants from the United Kingdom. Can it be possible that there are to be found anywhere in Great Britain any class of people equal in degradation to the slaves and criminals of China that are now and have been permitted free entry into our Province. Sir, while permitting one and protesting against the other is casting a slur on our kindred that should not be passed over. Mr. Speaker, there is also another phase of the question which has not before been referred to in this House. As you are aware, our international boundary extends from the Strait of Canso, in the east, to the Strait of Georgia, in the west-along that extended frontier we are on terms of most cordial friendship with our great neighbours to the south of us. Our sympathies are the same, our objects, the development of our respective countries are the same, and we reciprocally recognize our respective Constitutions and our political autonomies built upon them. Along this extended border, Sir, there is peace and good will which I hope may never be disturbed. This Chinese question alone on our western border may cause ill-feeling. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the United States passed a law prohibiting the immigration of Chinese into any part of their States or Territories, and the fact of Chinese having free admission to British Columbia, and their being smuggled across our boundary into their territory, did cause some friction among their people last summer, and will continue to do so until we adopt a law similar to theirs. It, Sir, would be impossible for any territorial Government to keep a sufficient police force to guard our international boundary to exclude that class of people, more especially if we continue to admit them. I most carnestly call the attention of the Government to this phase of the question, in the hope that they will not permit the continuance of a system that will assuredly engender bitterness where friendship now so happily exists. It being now nearly six o'clock, I will only say, in conclusion, that I hope the Government will allow this question to come to a vote by allowing it to come up on Monday next. We wish to hear this Parliament of Canada speak on a matter of the first importance to British Colum-bia, and as the right hon. the Premier said last year, of subsequent importance to the other Provinces.

Mr. BAKER. As it is close to six o'clock, and as I desire to make a few remarks on this question, which is of so much interest to our Province, and as I will occupy at least fifteen or twenty minutes, I beg, with the permission of the House, to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE.

After Recess.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAKER. I rise to a question of privilege, for the purpose of enabling me to set right a little matter which occurred before you left the Chair, at six o'clock. When I moved the adjournment of the debate, my intention was to have it come on after six o'clock, and it was my ignorance of Parliamentary proceedings which led me into the guiltiness, if I may so call it, of a lapsus linguae. I really intended the debate to go on when I made that motion, and inasmuch as I am supporting the motion brought in by my colleague, I think it is due to him and to my constituency that I should make this explanation. I trust to the generosity of the House on this occasion, to correct the error which I made, by allowing the order to remain where it should have appeared on the Orders of the Day as if I had not made the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only way, I think, in which the hon. gentleman can do that, is with the consent of the House, to move to rescind the order that the debate be adjourned; and the only difference it would make is this, that when a debate is in progress when six o'clock arrives, and I leave the Chair, the question is then put at the top of the Public Bills and Orders, and is no longer a notice of motion. Eut if the debate is adjourned, it goes to the bottom of Public Bills and Orders. By moving that the order be rescinded, it will go to the head of the Public Bills and Orders, and would come on next Wednesday evening.

Mr. BAKER. With the permission of the House, I would then move that it be rescinded.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be better that the hon. gentleman should make his motion at some other time. What will happen, if the motion be rescinded now? How will the debate stand adjourned?

Mr. SPEAKER. It will be the same as at six o'clock.

Mr. BLAKE. But it is past six o'clock ; it is eight o'clock

Mr. BAKER. I have no doubt that it makes very little difference in the result, but it makes a good deal of difference to me. I wish to explain to the House that I have committed an error through want of knowledge of Parliamentary practice.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think any person desires to prevent the hon. gentleman having his error rectified-at any rate, I shall be glad to help him, if possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the debate had droped at six o'clock, I suppose the order would have kept its place.

Mr. SPEAKER. It would have been higher on the paper.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest as a more regular wayand I do not think that the House would object, for it is an important question, which I agree should be fully debatedthat the Government should give notice to have this order stand at the head of this class of orders. For my part, I would be willing to assent to such a motion, and then the hon. gentleman's error would be remedied.

HAMILTON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

On the order being called for the House to resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 65) respecting the Hamilton and North-Western Railway Company being read, call the attention of the House to an amendment which I have placed on the paper, and which I intend to move.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member should move it in Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I am aware that we are to go into Committee; but before we do so, I think it is regular for me to make some observations to which I wish to direct the attention of the Government especially. I think there has been an oversight in the manner in which this Bill has been dealt with by the Committee, and it should either go back to the Railway Committee, to be corrected, or it should be corrected here; and I think the Government must take the responsibility, in the end, of seeing that this Bill issues in a manner to the public interest. I do not say that the Government is in the slightest degree to blame, but I wish to fully acquaint the Government and the House with the interests involved.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest to my hon. friend that if he is going to raise important questions on this Bill, it would be better, and I would ask my hon. friend in charge of the Bill to consent, that it should be referred back to the Railway Committee, where it can be examined and considered. It is not usual, after a Bill has passed that Committee by consent, to raise important questions here, and I think it would be more satisfactory if the hon, gentleman would move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Railways and Canals, for the further consideration of those points which have been overlooked.

Mr. MULOCK. I am quite agreeable to the course suggested but, inasmuch as the remarks I wish to make apply both: to the Hamilton and North-Western Kailway and to the Northern Railway, perhaps the mover of the Northern Railway Bill will agree to the same course.

Mr. SMALL. I have no objection.

Mr, MULOCK. Then I move that the Bill be referred back.

Mr. MITCHELL. I entirely agree with the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways. When an important Bill, such as this is, likely to involve an important debate upon the effect of certain clauses, I think it is very desirable that it should be relegated back to the Committee to have the matter discussed there. I only regret that the same course was not pursued with regard to the Grand Trunk Bill. However, circumstances alter cases, a little, it appears. I do not object to the motion of the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to, and order discharged.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on Mr. Curran's proposed motion : That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 21) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be in the recollection of the House that a question was raised by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Cameron) in regard to the legality of the amalgamation which had taken place between the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways; and my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) intimated that it was upon the assurance I had given to the Committee, that the Minister of Justice had very carefully considered that point, that the Bill had passed through Committee without very much investigation in that regard; and he suggested that the Bill should stand over, a suggestion to which weight was given by the objections raised by the hon. leader of the Op-position. The Bill was consequently allowed to stand over. Now, 1 desire to say to the House that I have called the Mr. MULOCK. Before the motion is adopted, I wish to attention of the Minister of Justice again to that point, and he has given a very careful and thorough re-examination of the question; and, in the light of the sot which my hon.

friend from North Victoria thought bore upon the question, he has stated that no doubt exists as to the entire legality of the amalgamation; that there was perfect statutory power on the part of the Great Western and Grand Trunk Railways to amalgamate; that the amalgamation has taken place under that power, and that the Act to which the hon. member for North Victoria referred does not at all affect the previous legislation, as that Act has reference to traffic arrangements and running powers, but not to the question of amalgamation. I may say while I am on my feet that my hon, friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) pressed also the importance of having it provided more specifically in this Act that the first expenditure under this Act should be for the purpose that we all have in view, that of laying a double track between Toronto and Montreal. I have accordingly asked the Minister of Justice to prepare an amendment, which I propose to move when we go into Committee, and which provides specifically for the first application of the funds to that work. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, also drew my attention to a pledge which I had given to the House a year ago, when I introduced the Act amending the Consolidated Railways Act, touching the power of railway companies to deal in the stocks, bonds, and securities of other railway companies in Canada. Certain companies, such as the Grand Trunk Railway Company, were exempt from the operation of the law as we introduced it, because we made an exception in the case of those companies which had specific legislative powers enabling them to act in that manner; and my hon. friend drew my attention to the fact that I had suggested that we would regard that discussion as giving a year's notice, and that this year we would introduce an amendment in the Act to make it apply to all railways. I may say that I remember distinctly having given that pledge to the House, and in conformity with it the Government will introduce an amendment to the Consolidated Railway Act to apply it to the Grand Trunk Railway as well as others.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And other railway companies incorporated during this Session?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Act of last Session will cover all the companies of this Session.

Mr. BLAKE. An Act passed this Session, has expressly given the power.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only in the way the Committee decided the power should be given.

Mr. BLAKE. And that is by specifically naming the lines that may be amalgamated.

Mr. MITCHELL. It affords me great pleasure to find that the Government has decided upon those two very important points. With regard to the first, the power of amalgamation, I do not intend to offer an opinion. It is true, some of the most important lawyers of the House and the hon. Minister of Justice have expressed an opinion adverse to that, but I shall not take up the time of the House in discussing it. It affords me much satisfaction to know that this discussion, which has been raised in the Committee of Railways, and subsequently continued in this House, has had the result of bringing about this security demanded by the country, that the money to be raised on the amalgamated stocks for the purpose of doubling the track will be applied to that purpose. I do think it would be more satisfactory if that Bill was l do included in this one, but I am not disposed to suggest to the Government the action they should take to protect the public interest, as they seem to think this is the best way. accept the conclusion with great satisfaction, knowing that if this agitation has been created, it has led to results profitable to the country. One word more in reference to the fact stated by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs). Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

the other day. He impugned my figures. I am prepared to justify the figures I stated. I will not raise the discussion now, but I will be prepared to defend my figures whenever an opportunity for a discussion comes up, which opportunity may occur, if the hon. gentleman who impugns my figures, desires, on the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

"After 'rails,' in the 35th line, the words: 'first upon the portion of the line between Montreal and Toronto and then;' after the words, in the 38th line, 'purchase of,' the words 'the necessary;' and after, in the 39th line, the words 'rolling stock and,' the words 'lastly to the.'

The clause as amended, will read as follows :---

"And the remainder of the said consolidated debenture stock by this Act authorized to be created and issued, and any sums remaining out of the sums menioned in the preceding paragraphs (a and b) after the said existing charges and debenture stock mentioned therein have been purchased or exchanged for consolidated debenture stock, shall be applied to the putting down of a double track, or second line of rails, first upon the portion of the line between Montreal and Toronto, and then upon such portions of the company's railways as the Directors may, from time to time, determine, with all necessary works, machinery and appliances connected therewith, and also to the purchase of the necessary additional rolling stock; and lastly, to the other general purposes of the Company; and the Company shall render to the Government statements of the application of the proceeds of the additional debenture stock ty this Act authorized."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 19,

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex), moved to add the following words :---

"And nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to confirm or make valid any agreement, fusion, amalgamation, or consolidation heretofore made between the sait The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and the said Great Western Railway Company, except in so far as the same shall have been heretofore authorized by law; nor shall anything herein contained affect any suits now pending."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 1 hope my hon. friend will not press that motion. It has not been considered in Committee.

Amendment negatived, and, Bill as amended, reported, and read the third time.

Mr. CURRAN moved that the Bill do pass.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I wish to move the amendment to the third reading of this Bill, of which I have given notice.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill has been read the third time. I waited some time for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to have an opportunity to move this amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The third reading is passed. I leave it to the House whether I did not wait for some time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I appeal to you to give me an opportunity.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is that the Bill do pass.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move in amendment that the Bill do not now pass, but that it be ——

Mr. SPEAKER. An amendment cannot be moved to this motion. I am afraid you will have to get it in the Senate.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest to the hon. First Minister that he ought to send the hon. member for Essex up to the Senate with the Bill.

Bill passed.

SOURIS AND ROCKY MOUNTAIN RAILWAY.

Mr. WOODWORTH moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 81) further to amend the Act incorporating the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company, and to change the name of the Company to The Battleford and Peace River Railway Company.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ORTON moved that all the words after "Melbourne," in the 26th line of the first clause of the Bill be struck out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof: "and thence by way of Rapid City, along the line of railway as now graded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With reference to the amendment moved by my hon. friend, that point was considered in the Committee very fully, and after full consideration it was decided to leave it as it stands in the Bill. I think it is not necessary for my hon. friend to press his motion, because the point of departure and the route of the railway are left subject to the approval of the Governor-General in Council. If my hon. friend, or any person, shows a good reason why a particular point should be the point of departure, and makes a strong case for it, taking a particular direction, the Governor in Council will have power to insist on that being carried out. I do not think, the matter having been considered in the Committee, and adopted in the present form, that the Committee here will be disposed to change it.

Mr. ORTON. I think there are very important reasons why that amendment should be considered by this House. This railway passes through a section of country that will be rapidly settled up, and if that road now laid down is carried out, it will give a nearer market by at least 12 miles to all farmers who settle along that line for all time to come. There is another very important reason. In the neighbourhood of Rapid City there are water powers which are very important to the whole of that district, and it is of the utmost importance that they should have easy railway access in order to utilize those water privileges for the benefit of the farmers in the neighbourhood. I understand the railway company desire to start from Brandon. There are many difficulties in the way there. They will have to construct another bridge across the Assiniboine River, and there is an immense hill to overcome, and the expenses of constructing the road will be very much increased. The road has already been graded to Rapid City, a distance of 45 miles; and it will be nearer for the market east and for Winnipeg, by about 12 miles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it should hardly be expected that this Committee should alter a Bill in regard to the point of departure of this road, upon motion of any member of this Committee, after the question has been carefully considered and a conclusion arrived at in the Railway Committee. I have nothing whatever to do with the Bill. But I may say this to my hon. friend, that if, under the power which this Bill gives to the Governor in Council to control the route of the railway, to a certain extent, a good case is made out for one particular line much more advantageous than another, it will receive due consideration from the Government.

Mr. WATSON. I think it is very important that this clause should be amended. It is true it was considered in the Railway Committee, but it was rushed through with some haste, and we expected we would have another oppor-City want the road, and it is very important that the Benson, starting point and route should be definitely located. The Bake, people in that section of country have made and the Benson, tunity of considering it in the House. The people of Rapid people in that section of country have made investments in Bryon, the belief that the road would start from Melbourne, and run through Rapid City, and it has been graded from that point to Rapid City. I think, when it is built, it will probably receive some assistance from the Dominion Government. If the road takes this route it will strike the old line laid down by the Government, before reaching Rapid City.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the argument advanced by the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Watson) why the road should start from Melbourne is rather in favour of keeping to the present route, and that is the fact that they have the road already graded for a distance of 45 miles. I apprehend no company will be willing to give up the right of way that is already purchased, and when the road is already graded, without good and substantial reasons for doing so. I think, also, it would be unreasonable to bind them to start at any particular place, because it virtually handicaps the company, and they are endeavouring to secure a line which will be valuable to the people for the smallest possible amount of money. One of the great difficulties to contend with by any railway company is buying the right of way after people know just where the road is going to be located. Speculators always go in advance of the railway surveyors, and, after getting possession of the land, they oblige the railway companies to pay much more for it than they otherwise would if they had the option between two different lines. All the guarantee that is necessary, in the interests of the people, is that the road shall start from any point that will satisfy the Governor in Council. Besides, this route was adopted in the Committee, and after careful consideration, it was decided this was the best route, and I believe it would be unwise to make any change.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed :----

Bill (No. 90) respecting the Great Northern Railway Company.-(Mr. Bossé.) Bill (No. 85) respecting the Erie and Huron Railway.

JOHN GRAHAM RELIEF BILL.

Mr. JAMIESON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 107) for the relief of John Graham -(from the Senate.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would advise hon. members opposed to this Bill to allow this motion to be passed on a division, and to take a division and record the names on the third reading.

Motion agreed to on a division; and Bill considered in Committee, and reported.

Mr. JAMIESON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to on the following division :---

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on Mr. Charlton's proposed motion, that Bill (No. 6) to provide for the punishment of seduction and like offences, be read the third time; and the motion of Mr. Foster in amendment thereto.

Mr. BOSSE moved in amendment to the amendment:

That all the words after "that," be struck out and be replaced by the following: This Bill be read the third time this day six months

Amendment to the amendment negatived on the following division :---

Mr. FOSTER. In advising with some of the friends and promoters of the Bill, it is thought best that I should ask for leave to withdraw the amendment. That is not my opinion, as I believe the amendment is a just one, which should be as much a part of the Bill as any clause in it, but in deference to those who take a great interest in the Bill, I ask leave to withdraw it.

Motion for leave to withdraw amendment negatived.

Amondment negatived on a division; and Bill read the third time and passed on a division.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. FOSTER. When six o'clock came on the day upon which I moved a Resolution, respecting the enactment of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, I had not finished the remarks which I had intended to address to the House. However, as the time of this House is valuable, and as there are quite a number of hon. gentlemen who are disposed to take some part in this debate, I shall with your permission, Sir, waive any remarks which I had intended to make, until the close of the debate, when I believe I shall have the opportunity of making a reply.

Mr. FISHER. In seconding the resolution moved by my hon. friend, I wish to say a few words, especially as the standpoint from which I view this question is a little different from that of my hon. friend, although we arrive at the same conclusion in regard to the principle at issue. Notwithstanding the able and exhaustive argument of the hon. gentleman who made this motion, I find that there are a considerable number of points which have not yet been touched upon; and it is for this reason that I ask the attention of the House for a few minutes, after which any hon. gentleman who wishes to speak in opposition to the principle before us, may have an opportunity to address you. First, Sir, I would like to have it clearly understood that, in treating of this question, I do not consider that the ordinary use of liquor is at all a crime or a sin. I say this because I know that a large number of people who think as I do, that the use, the manufacture and the traffic of intoxicating liquors in this country should be prohibited, do hold that opinion. But, notwithstanding that I differ from them on this premise, I am happy to say that the conclusions which we draw from different premises arrive at the same end. When I say that, I do not in any way wish to endorse the use of liquor, because I believe that is inadvisable, that it is contrary to the public good, and that it is contrary to the physical advantage of those who indulge in that use. Unfortunately, however, we invariably find that the use is attended with abuse; and it is because of this invariable fact inthe world's history, that I am opposed even to the use of intoxicating liquors. In saying this, I do not wish to be understood as saying that I believe that no individual can use intoxicating liquors without abusing them; but I be1884 lieve that if the opportunities are given for using intoxicating liquors, the necessary consequence will be the abuse of them by a very large proportion of those who attempt the use of them. In dealing with this question, I find that the community may be fairly divided into three classes-those who are already temperance people, those who use liquor without abusing it, and those who, unfortunately for themselves and for the community in which they live, abuse it. The first class it is not necessary for me to appeal to, because I believe all temperance people are thoroughly in accord with us in regard to the principle of this resolution, and will gladly and heartily endorse any legislation which it may involve. The last class, those who abuse the liquor, I think we have a perfect right, for the good of the country, to restrain from that abuse. I find, then, that it is necessary for me simply to appeal to those who use liquor without abusing it. In doing so, I shall not only appeal to their generosity and their kindliness towards their fellow beings in this Dominion, in asking them to assist in bringing about what I believe to be a great good to the country, but I think I can appeal to them fairly and justly, as well as successfully, on the ground that it is also to their pecuniary and material advantage that such a resolution as this should pass this House, and that a law should be founded upon it. A great statesman has announced as a principle that it is the duty of a Government to make everything that is right easy for its citizens, and to make everything that is wrong difficult. This perhaps may be considered a self-evident proposition; but I think that we must necessarily include in it the traffic in intoxicating liquors. I would go further and say that not only is it the duty of a Government, but it is the duty of the citizens of a country, to assist in making everything that is right easy, and everything that is wrong difficult. This proposition may be stated in another form : that we should oppose national duty to national selfishness. If the community believe that what I have stated is a duty, they must sacrifice to a certain extent what I acknowledge to be their use of intoxicating liquors to the necessity of restraining the abuse of them by a large number of their fellowcitizens. And I believe, Sir, that this appeal will not be in vain ; because we know, as a matter of fact, that a large number of people among those who to day are total abstainers have not found it necessary, from their fears of the consequences of using liquor in themselves to become total abstainers, but that they have become so owing to what they believe to be the necessary effect that their continuance of the use of liquor would have by way of example upon their fellow citizens. I have seen it stated in some papers, in which the mover of this resolution has been criticised, that he did not touch a vital point in the argument-the abstract right of Parliament or of the country to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors. I wish to discuss this contention for a few moments. Some might say that it is now too late to attempt to make any such argument as that prohibition is abstractly wrong, because we already have parliamentary prohibition; but I find that, even without agreeing in this argument at once, 1 can quote the opinion of one or two well known statesmen in support of my contention that this Parliament has the abstract right to enforce total prohibition. First, I will quote a short extract from Mr. Mill, a great English writer on political economy. He says:

"Even in the best state society has yet reached, it is lamentable to think how a great a proportion of all the efforts and talents in the world are employed in merely neutralizing one another. It is the proper end of Government to reduce this wretched waste to the smallest possible amount, by taking such measure as shall cause the energies now spent by mankind in injuring one another, or in protecting themselves against injury, to be turned to the legitimate employment of the human faculties, that of compelling the powers of nature to be more and more subservient to physical and moral good."

Surely, in limiting or restricting the traffic in intoxicating interfere with the right of the individual to obtain indior liquors, we can fairly say we are compelling the powers of where and when he likes, we should not have passed those nature to be more and more subservient to physical and laws, and the passing of those laws is, I contend, a sum-moral good. I find also that an able writer, a short pamphlet of whose I have in my hand, Mr. Wm. Hoyle, a well known authority in England on political economy and other economical subjects, says:

"True civilization consists, not in the mere amassing of wealth, but in promoting such social and national arrangements as will ensure the physical health, the national development, the social happiness, and the industrial and moral progress of nations."

If, Sir, as was shown very clearly by my hon. friend who proposed this resolution, the physical and moral health of the nation will be promoted by its abstention from the use of intoxicating liquors, we are justified, on this ground alone, in endeavouring to bring to pass the prohibition of the use of these liquors. I will cite also a quotation from Mr. Gladstone, who may, I think, be fairly called one of the greatest statesmen who has ever taken into consideration the internal economy of the greatest nation in the world. He said, in the case of Ireland:

"It was agreed that if the sentiment of the public was in sympathy with the proposal with regard to the Sunday-closing Bill, it ought to be assented to. If people were desirous to set aside this temptation, would it not be a cruel thing to refuse their desire."

From these quotations, I argue that it is a more question of whether the country is really desirous that the law for total prohibition should be enacted. But I will go further. We have other things in which the liberty of the citizen is just as much interfered with as it would be in such a law as this. I believe that on our Statute Books there is an Act against the carrying of concealed firearms. Nobody can pretend that, in it elf, the carrying of firearms in one's pocket or in any other way concealed on the person is nocessarily wrong; but for the public good it has been found necessary, in consequence of the frequency of these firearms being carried for evil purposes, that the carrying of them should be declared wrong, and there is a law against it. We have in our municipal regulations the prohibition of certain trades and certain usages in large communities; we have also, and this is, perhaps, more akin to the present prohibitory law we are advocating, stringent laws against prostitution, against the circulation and the reading of immoral literature, and also against gambling. I think that these are really fair examples of such prohibitory legislation as this for which we are asking, and that since we have in this way interfered with the liberty of the citizen, we have the right to g) further and interfere with it also in the question which is now before us. But even more than this; if we examine the present law we will find that in this and other Acts in regard to the liquor traffic, we have already adopted the principle of prohibition. We find that in England and in Scotland and in Ireland there are laws against the selling of liquor on Sunday; and if it is allowable to prohibit the selling of liquor on Sunday, it is equally allowable to prohibit the selling of it on other days of the week. If it is not interfer-ing with a man's liberty to say he shall not, on a certain day or during certain hours, go into a liquor saloon or shop to obtain liquor, it is perfectly right that we should say that on other days and during other hours, he shall not have that privilege or liberty. In our own Statute Books, there is a series of laws acknowledging the prohibitory principle. We find the Scott Act and the Dankin Act, both of which make local prohibition right in this country. If it is right for the Parliament of this country to prohibit the traffic in liquor in certain localities it must be perfectly legitimate and right that that traffic should be prohibited over the whole country. More than this, we find there are clauses in all these Acts, even in the License Acts we have in the different Provinces, which prohibit the sale of liquor in certain times and seasons and places, and if we are not at all to interfere with the right of the individual to obtain liquor where and when he likes, we should not have passed those cient argument to show that we have the moral as well as the legislative right to pass these enactments we are now asking you to pass. Last year, Sir, this Parliament passed a License Act. By one of the clauses of that Act the people of the municipalities were allowed to prohibit the sale of liquor within their limits, which is giving to the people the right to legislate according to their desire in this matter; but that Act went further. Not only did it give to the people the right to prohibit the sale of liquor within their own limits, but it went so far, in the Province of Quebec, as to give to the representatives of the people in their muni-cipal councils the right to prohibit the traffic in liquor within their municipal limits. If it is allowable to give a small body of men, such as a municipal council, the right to interfere with the liberty of the people to obtain liquor when and where they like, surely it is the right of this Parliament to decide that the people shall not obtain liquor when and where they choose. We also have in this country, in the North-West Territories, an absolutely prohibitory law. That was passed by this Parliament. That was not passed by the representatives of the people who were to be affected by it, but it was passed by the arbitrary power of the Parliament which ruled that country, as it was thought, at the time, for its own good, and as Parliament still, I think, considers it was done for its good, and it has been productive of good. Then, also, on Government works connected with our railroads, the Parliament of this country passed a law prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquors, so that these works might be the better prosecuted. If I asked for any argument, I could not ask for a better than this very Act, to show that it is the opinion of this Parliament, and the opinion of the people of this country, that the liquor traffic in itself is obstructive of good; that it has a tendency to deteriorate the work the people do, and a tendency to inter-fere with that work. I think that, from these things to which I have alluded, these various laws which already hold in this country, and are already in force in regard to the restraint of the liquor traffic, I may fairly conclude that this Parliament has not only the legislative right, but the moral right, to interfere in this way with the liberty of the indiv dual to obtain the liquor whenever he may desire it. There is another question which has agitated the minds of a good many, and is looked upon as a very serious objection to the passage of a prohibitory law. I allude to the loss of revenue to the country in consequence of this. I will not go into the moral question as to whether this revenue is obtained in a legitimate manner, as to whether it is right or wise for this country 10 batten upon the proceeds of this traffic, but I will simply quote the authority of a gentleman whom I am glad to see sitting in his seat opposite to me to-night, a gentleman whom a large majority of this House consider to be a very high authority upon financial matters-I allude to the hon. the Finance Minister, who last summer, on August 9th, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, in London, made a speech upon Canadian liquor legislation, and in that speech he said :

"It has been my misfortune, or fortune, having been a great many years in the Government of my native Province of New Brunswick, and in the Government of the Dominion, to hold the post of Finance Minister in all these Governments, and I have never heard but oce opinion about the revenue question, namely, that it is of quite secondary importance, though it is, I admit, a more difficult matter with you. The revenue we obtain in the Dominion of Canada is probably five or six million of dollars a year, and it costs the people $20,060,000 in providing it for us. No Finance Minister would remain long in office who would, in this day, propose a scheme for raising a revenue of $5,000,000 that would cost $20,000,000 to collect."

Mr. Speaker, I think that coming from such an authority as this, this House will accept the view I have propounded; and I do not believe that there are great many people in this country who would not be prepared for the statement that the hon. Finance Minister there made. There are not a very great many people, I think, who would Mr. Figure .

not fully understand, that although direct receipts from this traffic would certainly be expunged from our revenue, still, the improvement in the general commerce of the country, the improvement in the general welfare and well-being of our community would be so great, that the receipts in all other branches of our revenue would be increased correspondingly, and there would, practically, after the first year or so, not be any diminution whatever in our revenue from our tax payers. There is another point which I now come to, and that is when we ought to prohibit. It is generally said that we should not prohibit until the country is quite prepared for that action; until there is not only an evident desire on the part of the country for prohibition, but also that the country should be prepared to sustain the prohibitory measure and to assist in carrying it out. I believe this is, to a certain extent, true; but I believe also that one of the very hest means of obtaining that happy period in the country's history is to commence by prohibiting. I believe that the very fact that a prohibitory law is in existence is one of the very best educating powers in the community. I believe that, by the legislative action of Parliament, we may have a better iufluence upon the people of the country to bring them to that opinion than we can in any other way whatever. It is true that in years past moral suasion has been tried, and moral suasion has accomplished a great deal. Far be it from me in any way to detract from the noble efforts of those who have spent their time and labour in trying to improve the principles of the community upon this question, but I believe that, in conjunction with moral suasion, as an assistant and a help to moral suasion, it is absolutely necessary that the Government of the country should propose a law and should assist those who are trying this moral suasion to carry out that law and to enforce it. What has been the result in those countries where we have had a prohibitory law? We find universal testimony to the fact that, in those States and countries where the prohibitory law has been in existence, the people have found the education which it exerted upon the community was the very greatest possible to be ima-gined. I find that, in the State of Vermont, where for some twenty years past there has been absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the use of liquor as much as was possible, Governor Peck, who was an ex-Governor of the State, and Judge of the Supreme Court, says :

"In some parts of the State there has been a laxity in enforcing it; but in other parts of the State it has been thoroughly enforced, and there it has driven the traffic out. I think the influence of the law has been salutary in diminishing drunkenness and disorders arising therefrom, and also crimes generally. You cannot change the habits of a people momentarily. The law has had an effect upon our customs, and has done away with that of treating and promiseuous drinking. The law has been aided by moral means, butmoral means have also been wonderfully strengthened by the law. I think the law is educating the people, and that a much 'arger number now support it than when it was adopted; in fact, the opposition is dying out. All the changes in the law have been in the direction of greater stringency. In attending a court for ten years, I do not remember to have seen a drunken man."

This testimony, I think, is very strong in the direction of the argument that the law is the best educator of the people. I also have the testimony of Governor Convers, in the same State. He says:

"The prohibitory law has been in force about twenty two years, the enforcement has been uniform in the State since its enactment, and I consider it a very desirable law. I think the law itself educates and advances public sentiment in favour of temperance. There is no question about the decrease in the consumption of liquor. I speak from personal knowledge, having always lived in the State. I live in Woodstock, 60 miles from here, and there is no man having the least regard for himself would admit selling rum, even though no penalty attached to it."

I have here in my hand another testimony to the educating effects of the law. That is the Convention of the State Temperance Union in Rhode Island. Governor Howard, Governor of that State, said: "I stopped short without recommending particularly the prohibitory law. I did so because I was not fully convinced that it was the best remedy to be found; but the law was adopted. After a long time we succeeded in selecting such a force of men as was needed to execute those laws; and now, ladies and gentlemen, I am here to-night especially for the purpose of saying, not from the standpoint of a temperance man, but as a public man, with a full sense of the responsibility which attaches to me from my representative position, that to-dav the prohibi-tory laws of this State, if not a complete success, are a success beyond the fondest anticipation of any friend of temperance. In my opinion. the fondest anticipation of any friend of temperance. In my opinion, prohibition in Rhode Island is a success, a marvellous success. I felt it incumbent upon me to make that declaration and I desire that it shall go abroad as my sober assertion."

I have here shown you briefly what has been the educating influence of this law in those States where it has been enforced. But there are other instances just as significant though not, perhaps, so well known to the people of this country. I find in a very interesting letter from a certain Mr. Balfour to the right hon. W. E. Gladstone, in which he de-scribes the operation of liquor legislation in Sweden, that many years ago in that country there was absolute free trade in liquors, and that, at the period at which he writes, no less than 175,000 stills were in existence, manufacturing intoxicating liquor of the most ardent description in that country. The letter gives evidence that for a long time the crime, the destitution, the immorality in that country were simply enormous and almost inconceivable. Not long afterwards the Government of that country introduced restrictive measures against the liquor traffic, and we have evidence that almost immediately afterwards not only did the traffic itself diminish, but the crime, and the poverty, and the destitution among the people also decreased. This was not absolute prohibition, but it tended in that direction, and I think the argument is quite clear that, since the people in other respects were just the same during the two periods, that their moral, religious, and secular education was just the same during the two periods, the decrease in the amount of crime was attributable to the decrease in the amount of liquor consumed. I find, in looking over the history of liquor legislation in England, during a great many years indeed, that just in proportion as the traffic was restrained, just in the same proportion did the people benefit by such restrictive legislation; that when the laws were rendered more strict against the traffic in liquor the effects among the people were immediately evident by a decrease in the number of commitments to jail, in the number of crimes of all sorts, and also by a greatly augmented prosperity. I need not say that at no time was this legislation absolutely prohibitive, but my argument is, that just in proportion as the liquor traffic was restricted was there a decrease in its attendant evils. It has often been said that moral suasion in England has accomplished a great deal towards producing a sentiment in favour of prohibition. Sir, I believe moral suasion has done a great deal in that respect, but it is to be noted that it has been constantly attended with increasing legislative restrictions, and I believe that the increased temperance sentiment in England is as much due to the educating influence of this restrictive legislation as it is to moral sussion. But there is another argument which we may fairly adduce. It is very inconsistent for the Government of any country to license people to sell intoxicants and thereby encourage intemperance, while at the same time they pretend to be educating people in favour of Certainly it is a very ineffectual mode of temperance. educating people in favour of temperance by precept, when by practice the Government educate people in favour of intemperance. So long as we may be told that the liquor traffic is perfectly respectable, that it is acknowledged and fostered by the Government, that traffic cannot poseibly be considered disreputable, or immoral, or wrong. It it very difficult for us to preach when we do not practise, and I think, Sir, that it is the duty of the representatives of the respect to this same matter—the enforcement of a prohibi-people to take the first step in practising that which tory law, which I think is one of the most conclusive proofs they are endeavouring to preach to the people. Now there that can possibly be quoted. I allude to what, no doubt, most is another objection very often urged against prohibition, and that is that prohibitory legislation cannot succeed, and must necessarily be ineffective, and conducive rather to evil than to good. I believe we have not to go outside the limits of our own country to see the fallacy of this argument. I come from a county in which a prohibitory liquor law has been in existence for a long time, and I can emphatically say that while it has not accomplished all that we desire it should accomplish, while it has not been absolutely and entirely enforced, still it has accomplished so much good that the vast mass of the people in that county would regret exceedingly to see it repealed —nay more, they would strenuously resist and forbid the repeal of that law, and any agitation in favour of such repeal would meet with a most determined opposition. I think I am justified in saying this when I recall the fact that the other day I presented to this House a petition signed by 1,200 or 1,500 of the electors of my county, asking that this resolution, in favour of which I am now speaking, should be passed by this House. If the Dunkin Act, which has been for many years in existence in my county, had been inoperative, if it had produced more evil than good, if it had not, at all events, accomplished some of the good which was expected of it, it would have been quite impossible that so large a number of the most intelligent electors in my county should have asked for the passage of a resolution in favour of prohibition. Instead of that, they would have sent petitions here asking that this resolution be rejected, pointing out how prohibition had failed in its effect. We know that in a large number of counties in this Dominion the Scott Act also has been in force, and although, no doubt, there are conflicting opinions in regard to its action, still the simple fact remains that in every district I know of where this law is in force, the liquor sellers, and those who wish to obtain liquor, together with the manufacturers of such liquor, are opposed to such law, is to me a convincing argument that that law has done harm to the traffic. I believe if we could obtain evidence from those counties where prohibitory laws are in force, the evidence would be overwhelmingly in favour of prohibition. But, Sir, we have, as I said, a little while ago, prohibitory legislation in the North-West Territories, and I will quote again from the Ministerial benches, a witness in regard to its effective operation. I allude to a speech delivered by Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Ruilways, last summer, on the same occasion as that on which the speech was delivered by the Finance Minister, to which a few moments ago, I alluded. Sir Charles Tupper was reviewing the Act which he had the honour of proposing and carrying through Parliament. He said :

"I may say, in reference to that other Act which I had the honour of proposing and carrying through Parliament when occupying the posi-tion of Minister of Oustoms, in 1872, an Act that, as he says, excluded the sale, manufacture and use of intoxicating liquors from a territory nearly as large as that of all Europe, the difficulty to be encountered was comparatively simple. "Mr. RAPER. Do you say 'use' is in the Act? "Sir CHARLES TOPPER. I say use, because the manufacture and sale being prohibited, it followed that the use was prohibited. The au-thorities appointed Mounted Police to have the law observed. When-ever the smallest portion of int xicating liquors was discovered in the Territory, they had authority to destroy it then and there, and thus the use was completely and entirely prohibited throughout the extent of 250,000,000 acres of ferrile land. Throughont that extent, intoxicating liquors are so completely prohibited, that when the distinguish d Lord biological acres of fermine land. Throughont that extent, intoxicating liquors are so completely prohibited, that when the distinguish d Lord Dufferin was entertained in that Territors on the occasion of his visit, they were compelled to drink His Lordship's health with a mixture of Perry Davis' Pain Killer."

This evidence, Sir, is, I think, conclusive that at all events a prohibitory law can be enforced by the Government, that a Government wishing to enforce it can practically and effect-ually carry it out. But, Sir, I have here another witness in members will very well remember, the fact that the Globe newspaper, in 1851, sent two correspondents into the State of Main, that State which has always been quoted as the best example of a total prohibition of the liquor traffic. Those two gentlemen were, one in favour of total prohibition, the other in favour of the liquor traffic; and I will quote to the House, not the evidence of that gentleman who was in favour of total prohibition, but that of the other one who was against it, and I think the evidence which besums up, is conclusive as to the fact that, although certainly liquor is sold in Maine, liquor no doubt can be obtained there and is drank there, still, on the whole, the Act is really and practically enforced. This gentleman wrote:

"Our work in Maine is now published, and before commencing enquivies in other States it may be well to sum up my conclusions, while the impressions left by our two weeks sojourn are yet fresh and distinct. I realized perfectly well that the results at which t have arrived will not be apt to please either party I do not write with the object of do-ing so, but simply to tell the plain truth as arrived at from personal observat on, interviews with those whose opinions were likely to be of value, and consideration of the question in all its bearings. l shall not attempt a review or reca itulation of details, but present my conclusions in the form of a series of brief propositions, as follows:--"That in the cities the law has been a partial failure so far as up-

"I hat in the cities the law has been a partial failure so far as up-rooting the traffic, or even the suppression of open bars is concerned. "That this failure has been greatly exaggerated by quoting exceptional places or periods as typical of the whole State, and by the ingenious perversion of statistics. "That in the rural portions of the State of Maine, law has suppressed open drinking and re used secret drinking to a minimum and may therefore be considered as effective as any other measure on the Statue

Bo k. "That after thirty years, the opinion of the State is so strongly in fav ur of the law that no poincial party is willing to risk its future by advocating a reversion to license, and that on the contrary the Legisla-ture is continually strengthening the law by more stringent ameniments. "That the class of liquor sellers who defy the law are the same "That the class of liquor sellers who defy the law are the same class of men who, under a license system, would sell liquor without license."

I will not weary the House by reading the whole of his summing up, but I have taken out the salient features, and in omitting the rest I have not left the weaker or poorer paragraphs. I think, Sir, that this evidence is such as will successfully refute the assertion of so many people, that it is obviously futile to try and interfere successfully with the liquor traffic. I have here another quotation which I will not, however, read to the House, a quotation from a book by Hepworth Dixon, on America, in which he alludes to the State of Vermont, and especially to the little town of St. Johnsbury, with which I am myself familiar, and which he there describes as a workingman's paradise. In that little town is the Fairbank's great scale manufactory, and a large portion of the inhabitants are working people, 500 opera-tives having employment in that factory alone. Mr. Dixon says that those working men who are thus employed appear to consider total prohibition as their best friend; that they themselves will be among the last to aid any attempt to have the law repealed. He describes the town as being absolutely and totally a prohibitory one, going so far as to say that when he desired to obtain a glass of beer he had to get a pint bottle from a druggist and secure a medical certificate in order to obtain it. Here is evidence not only that prohibition does prohibit, but also that people are benefited by that prohibition, and that even the working classes, those who are supposed to be the last to approve such a change, are really those who do appear the most de-cided that the law shall not be changed. Mr. Fairbank, manager of those large works, attributed to a great extent, the efficiency of his men to the fact that they could not obtain liquor in the town, and were compelled to abstain. I have also here another quotation, which I will read to the House; it is also in regard to the State of Vermont and the State of Maine. I allude to the report of an English gentle. man, who went out to the United States, Hon. William Fox, an ex-Prime Minister of the Colony of New Zealand, who we have the strongest and mest convincing argument was travelling through the United States, and visited Maine i that the traffic should be done away with. In trying and Vermont for the express purpose of finding out how the prohibitory law worked there. He was, he says. against the principle. He did not believe that such a law could be satisfactorily carried out. But he here says :

"To sum up the whole, and admitting all the facts I could get from Mr. Murray, I believe the conditions of the States of Maine and Vermont to be much a follows :-- If the House of Lords, and the House of Commons, and all the country justices, mayors, and aldermen of Great Britain, and a small number of the lower classes, perhaps 200,000 out of the population of 28,000,000, drank, and all the rest did not, you would have a state of things on allocaus here to what there are in Meine and have a state of things analogous here to what they are in Maine and bave a state of things analogous here to what they are in Maine and Vermout—you would have a very small fraction who would get and use liquor, furnishing those shocking examples which some persons are in the habit of parading before us as existing in those States, but the whole of the rest of the population would be sober. The effect on their general condition is something marvellous—a total absence, externally, at all events, of all those vices and crimes which we meet with amongst drinking populations, which is very agreeable and very surprising. The im-pression left on my mind by my visit to these States was a full confirma-tion of the statements made to you by the hon. Gen. Neal Dow, and the documents which have been put forth—that in Maine and Vermont, on the whole, the prohibitory law has been a great success ; no:withstanding that it has been more difficult to carry out, because of its non-per-missive character."

Here, Sir, I think, is an accumulation of evidence which is quite sufficient to show that in those places where there is total prohibition it has been successfully carried out. But I find, too, that where partial prohibition has been carried out, it has had an extraordinary effect in decreasing the amount of drinking. One of the most curious, and, at the same time, one of the most convincing, evidences of this fact, was found in Scotland in 1854, at the time that what was called the Sunday-closing Bill was passed. We have the evidence of the Provost of Edinburgh to show that at that time, in consequence of the operation of that Bill, which stopped the people from drinking for just one seventh of the time, just one seventh of the liquor drinking was stopped. We find that in that time about six sevenths of the liquor was drunk which was drunk before, showing that by stopping the sale of liquor one day out of seven you stop the use of liquor in about the same proportion. I think it is not an illogical inference to draw that if you stop it for the succeeding six days, it would almost, eventually and absolutely stop the drinking of liquor entirely. There is one more argument which I have to bring before you to night, Sir, and that is, why we should prohibit. I am not going into the argument which the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) so elaborately discussed the other night, as to the physi-cal evils of intemperance. I am fully and firmly convinced that even the ordinary use of intoxicating liquors is bad, physically, for the individual who indulges in it. We were shown the other night a large mass of evidence, which tended to prove that the medical fraternity, throughout the whole country, endorse this view, and that they go further, and say that it is absolutely injurious to the public health that liquor should be allowed to be consumed. There is, it is true, on the other side, a large amount of evidence from medical men, to the effect that the moderate and ordinary use of liquor is not injurious, and however much I believe with the former, and not with the latter, still I am not going to make use of this argument, in consequence of the difficulty of obtaining absolute proof in regard to it; but I wish to view it, as nearly as possible, from a practical, business standpoint. If we can show to the community at large that by reason of this traffic, from day to day, from week to week, and from year to year we are losing an enormous amount of material prosperity, I think we have the most convincing argument to the people of the country that this traffic should be done away with. In a new country like this, we should do everything we can to assist in building up and developing it; and if it can be shown that a large amount of energy is wasted in this traffic, that it contributes to the waste of an enormous amount of our material and vital energy, I think to show you that this is the case, I will only read one or two quetations. The most important, and I think the most conclusive, is that which I shall read from an article written in Fraser's Magazine, in 1875, by the gentleman who founded, and has controlled the extraordinary settlement in the State of New Jersey, called the Vineland Settlement. I dare say many hon. gentlemen are familiar with the place and the name. In establishing this colony and working it out so far as he was able to do so successfully, this gentleman took into account the liquor traffic. What he says with regard to it is as follows:—

"The next important question was in reference to the sale of liquor, a subject I now find greatly agitating the British public, and even the Government. I considered the subject solely as it would affect the industrial success of my settlement. I had witnessed the evil effects of the immense number of taverns which usually planted themselves in new places; I had seen very many towns with every natural advantage to favour them, and which at first were highly prosperous, finally fail, in a manner most unaccountable to the ordinary observer; but when I noticed the abundance of taverns, and considered the number of people they would draw from productive industry to carry them on, and the effects on their customers, I could easily account for such enterprises failing sick and becoming paralyzed. My success depended entirely uoon the success of each individuals who were sober in their habits were usually the successful ones in all pursuits; that those who were intemperate were the unsuccessful ones; that the families, whose heads were sober, were happy families; that where they were intemperate they were unhappy. It was of vital importance to me that a man's means should be economized, that he should be inclined to labour, and have the health to do it, and that his family should be contented, especially his wife. Intemperance is productive of discontent in families, and when the wife is in a new place, away from her relatives, and friends, and the husband grows intemperate, she becomes panic-stricken. Happy, cheerful homes were necessary to the success of Vineland. As the best account of my action in reference to this subject, I will give you an extract from a speech I delivered before the Judiciary Committee of New Jersey, in 1873, which was appointed to examine into the question :--'I am in candor compelled to say that I did not introduce the local option principle into Vineland from any motives of philanthropy. I am not a temperance success of my settlement. If I had seen that liquor had made men more indust

This, Sir, is the cool, dispassionate, business-like statement of a man whose sole energies were devoted towards the business success of his colony. He says himself that he was not a total abstainer, that he did not wish, on general principles, to bring that question before his people, but that because the stern logic of facts was so strong he had to bring it before his people. He felt it was his duty to his people to restrain them from drinking any intoxicating liquors, so as the better to bend their energies and efforts to the advancement of his colony and the success of his undertaking. I have already alluded, Sir, to the quotation from Mr. Hepworth Dixon and others, as to the State of Vermont. I have another very strong testimony to which I am going to allude -that is the testimony of a gentleman in Massachusetts with whom I am personally acquainted, and whose opinion on this question I know from frequent conversations. He is the head of one of the largest manufacturing firms in that State. I mean Mr. Ames, of the Ames Manufacturing Works, in Easton, Mass. There they adopted, for a short time, a totally prohibitory law. But that law was repealed, and this is what Mr. Ames says in regard to its influence on his workpeople, to whose amelioration and increased efficiency his chief efforts have been for a long time directed. What he says is this :

"We have over 400 men at work here. We find that the present liconse law has a very bad effect upon our employees."

I may say that the license law succeeded the prohibitory law in Massachusetts. In 1867, they had total prohibition, and 1868 they had a license law. He goes on to say:

"We find, an comparing our production in May and June of this year (1868) with (1867), that in 1867, with 375 men, we produced 8 per cent more goods than we did in the same months in 1863, with 400 men." 181 That is to say, under total prohibition, Mr. Ames' manufactory produced 8 per cent more than it did with twenty-five men more under a license law. This, I think, is strong evidence, not only that the waste that goes on under the use of liquor is bad for the work people, but also that the manufacturers themselves and the whole community through the length and breadth of the land are deeply interested in the suppression of this traffic. Mr. Ames adds:

"We attribute this falling off entirely to the repeal of the prohibitory law, and the great increase in the use of intoxicating liquors among our men in consequence."

I have met Mr. Ames since that law has been repealed and the licenses issued, and I know that it is one of the dearest wishes of his heart that the licenses should be abolished in his town in Massachusetts. I have several other quotations in regard to the effect of restrictions on the traffic in various places, which, however, I shall not read, as I find that the time has gone much faster than I had any idea it would. But I cannot refrain from alluding to testimony which comes from nearer home in regard to this traffic in our own country. I am not going to quote the statements of temperance people. I have tried as much as possible to take an unbiased view of this question, and to put aside wholly what is called by a great many, though unjustly, the fanaticism of temperance reformers; and I have endeavoured to bring forward the evidence of those opposed to the principle of prohibition rather than the evidence of those in its favour, because I do not wish to be thought to be advocating, without careful thought and consideration, the adoption of the principle proposed to the House. I will read an extract from the report of the Chief of Police of the city of Montreal for last year, in which he says:

"Less crime was committed in Montreal than in any other city comprising as large a population on this continent. This was no doubt greatly cwing to the influence of the clergy, and the good moral character of the majority of the citizens, but most certainly in some degree to the vigilance of the police. The number of criminals arrested during the year was less than last year, the greater part of them being young and illiterate, or addicted to dricking; this fact should stimulate all who have the public morals at heart to use their utmost endeavours to lessen the number of liquor shops in the city. According to the returns of the Revenue Department, there are at present in the city 382 hotels and restaurants, and 448 groceries, where liquor is sold. The amount of money paid annually for licenses for those places, added to what is spent in them for liquor, and recklessly squandered or lost by persons intoxicated, would amount to an almost fabulous amount. Some of our influential citizens had lately been devising a scheme for the suppression of prostitution in the city: if they would use their influence for the restriction or aboltion of the liquor traffic, they would be thereby dealing a death-blow at prostitution, the tavorn being to most young people a stepping-stone to the brothel and all other kinds of vice. It would be a step in the right direction if the Police Committee would get a by-law passed regarding registry offices for servant girls, in order to protect inexperienced girls from the misleading advice of some unprincipled keepers of such places."

This is certainly very strong testimony of the evileffects of the liquor traffic in our very midst, coming from an authority which has been shown not in any way to be biased in favour of prohibition. Now, I have some Canadian manufacturing statistics which, I think, will be suggestive to read. They show the proportionate value of the products which are paid as wages in our different manufactories, that is to say, how much the workpeople get out of the profits of the goods which they manufacture; and they show very clearly that the smallest proportion of any is made by those who work in the establishments where the manufacture of liquor is carried on. In brass founderies the workpeople get 12 per cent; in distilleries, $6\frac{1}{2}$; in founderies, 36; in cordage manufactures, 24; in printing establishments, 28; in cabinet making, 31; in carpentering, 33; in machine shops, 31; in clothing establishments, 21; and in carriage manufactures 34 per cent; showing that the lowest paid workpeople in the country in proportion to the value of their work in the market of the country, are those employed in the manufacture of drink. This does not certainly show that it is for the benefit of our workpeople that these manufactories should be carried on; and I think it is a very potent argument why control over this House and the Government of this country should favour this resolution. Another significant circumstance is that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, one of hope that we may succeed, I take my seat. the great railroad corporations of this country, use their best endeavour- in favour of temperance among their employees; and I think I am right in saying that they have absolutely commanded that they shall not drink. I have no doubt that this great corporation have at heart the wellbeing of their employees. But I do not think I am unjust that their chief reason in enforcing this in saying abstinence from drink is the reason that appeals to their own pocket, in consequence of their finding that it renders the workpeople whom they employ, more efficient Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain you longer. I will merely say, before closing, that although this House may treat this question with comparative indifference, although possibly it may be dismissed with a sneer and a laugh and that a large number of people throughout the country may think that those who have brought this question before the House have been premature and unjustified in so doing, I think there is a sentiment throughout the country which justifies us in the action we have taken. I believe that if not now, at all events at no distant day, that sentiment will press itself so strongly that the representatives of the people in this House will be forced, if they do no do it willingly, to take cognizance of and to discuss and ventilate most thoroughly some such proposition as that which you have now before you. If this discussion does not thoroughly ventilate the question, if the hon. members of this House do not thoroughly believe that it is in the interests of the country that such a resolution should pass, I do not wish them to vote for it; but I think it is time for them to discuss it, I think it is time for them to turn their attention to it, to review it and lay it bare before the whole country, to its very bottom, so that the people throughout the country who have not turned their attention in this direction may be induced to do so, and to judge this question according to its merits. I do not ask, and I do not hope, that we shall obtain any catch vote here to night which might perhaps lead the ccuntry to believe that this proposition was universally ac-cepted. I trust hen, gentlemen in this House will vote upon this question as they think their constituents would wish them to vote. It is only in that way we can obtain some opinion of the real sentiments of the people on this question throughout the country, and I believe that while we have in view the practical enactment of such a law as is pointed to in this resolution, one of the greatest inducements to the mover and myself in bringing this resolation forward, was to test the opinion of this House and the country. If that test is successful, and we find that we carry this resolution, I can promise hon. gentlemen, and the people throughout the country at large, that principle will be put into practice just so soon as we shall be able to carry it through; but, unfortunately, this Session has already advanced so far that probably we may not be able to do anything effective this Session. If, however, we obtain the endorsation of the principle, we shall be well satisfied with our work this year, and trust to a future Session to accomplish the practical part of it. Before closing, I have one more duty to perform which is at the same time a great pleasure, and that is to publicly acknowledge the kindness of those ladies of Ontario who, a few days ago, sent to the mover and myself an evidence of their earnest sympathy and encouragement in the work we are doing. Knowing the principles of the hon. leader of this House, knowing that at no distant day in the future, those ladies will probably have a voice in the election of members to this House and the Government of the country, I think it is a most decided encouragement to my Railway Committee. The Bill'in question, which I had the hon. friend and myself to believe that if the House is not honour to introduce, provided for a time limit in crossing

> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As it is now eleven o'clock and we sat very late this morning and will have to sit most likely very late to-morrow and the next night, it would perbaps be better if the hon. gentleman would not begin his speech now, but move the adjournment of the debate, so that on Wednesday next it will be the first order in Public Bills and he will have the first place in the discussion.

> Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not intend to occupy the House for more than ten minutes at the outside, and do not feel anxious to speak if the hon. gentleman wishes the House to adjourn.

> Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BERGIN. I beg to move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. leader of the Government will promise that the Government will not take next Wednesday, I will be very glad to support this motion ; otherwise, I must oppose it.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETIES AND LCAN AND SAVINGS COMPANIES.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Before the next order is proceeded with, I would ask, with the permission of the House, that the last order on the list of Public Bills and Orders be allowed to have its second reading. The Bill is a matter of very great public importance, affecting building societies' securities, and if not read a second time to night, it cannot be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It is a Bill from the Senate, which has been fully discussed there. I move, with the permission of the House, that Bill (No. 122) to amend the Acts 40 Victoria, chapter 49, and 45 Victoria, chapter 24, being Acts relating to permanent Building Societies and Loan and Savings Companies carrying on business in Ontario, be read the second time.

Bill read the second time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:55 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 20th March, 1884.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MULOCH. I move for leave to withdraw Bill (No. 52) further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. may mention in making this motion that it is made in accordance with an understanding arrived at this morning in the

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, I would like to ask the Minister of Railways if it is his intention to introduce a Bill dealing with that subject separately.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that we have had this subject very fully considered, and have taken a good deal of testimony before the Railway Committee. I stated there, that if the Bill were withdrawn I would submit to my colleagues a measure dealing with this subject, and some others of a good deal of importance, which were found to be inseparably connected with it, and as to which it is thought desirable to amend the Consolidated Railway Act. I expect to be able to submit this Bill at an early day for the consideration of the House, and I think it will cover the Bill which my hon. friend introduced, in such a way as fairly to meet his views.

Motion agreed to.

EASTERN EXTENSION-INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the Resolution adopted in Committee of the Whole respecting the Eastern Extension Railway be read the second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 125) for giving effect to an agreement therein mentioned between the Dominion Government and the Government of Nova Scotia.

Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself in Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

20. Stationery Office, for stationery.. $10,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I perceive that the amount is increased from $7,000 to $10,000. What is the reason for the increase?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is owing to the increased amount of stationery imported for the use of the different Departments throughout the Dominion; and I think it is expected to cover any loss that may arise in connection with the importations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you expect this to be a permanent increase, or for this year only?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The amount usually voted is not required; but owing to the increased importations, the Department suggested that the vote should be increased this year to make the matter safe. It is only for this year and I doubt if it will be required for this year.

21. To meet the possible amount required for new appointments by an extension of the staff or by any other change...... $5,000 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is the usual vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is only for the ordinary staff I suppose.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The ordinary staff.

22. Amount required to provide for contingent expenses of the High Commissioner for Canada in London, and to provide £100 for the salary of the Secretary hitherto charged to unforeseen expenses $4,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see the hon. High Commissioner in his place, but it would be a convenient time to let us know whether we are to lose him or to have him. The hon. First Minister was good enough to say that he could keep the office as long as he liked. Perhaps he will now be in a position to tell us how long he will be likely to keep it, especially as we are asked to vote a little more money for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The High Commissionership is to be a permanent office, and I think that when the hon. gentleman is on this side he will have a High Commissioner in England too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us how soon that event will happen also.

Mr. BLAKE. Originally house rent, fuel and taxes were paid directly by the Government, but subsequently an arrangement was arranged by an Order in Council giving a lump sum of $3,500, in lieu of house rent, fuel and taxes, and since that time we have paid practically the whole amount of $4,000 in a lump sum. Is it intended this amount shall cover those expenses?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The vote is to cover the same services as formerly, and there is no arrangement with reference to any of these services being paid out of any other vote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This covers rent, fuel, and light and secretary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has nothing to do with the item of contingencies for offices at all?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. At the time the office was created the right hon. gentleman told us how important it was that this officer should reside permanently in England, and how greatly inconvenienced the public service would be by not having a permanent officer there. But for several months the High Commissioner has been on this side of the Atlantic, so that the hon. gentleman must have molified the opinion he expressed so strongly to the House two or three years ago. Will the hon. gentleman tell us now whether he has come to the conclusion that it is not so necessary the High Commissioner should reside permanently in England?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The High Commissioner's place of residence and duties must be in England and are in England, but he is not like a barnacle fastened to a rock; he may occasionally come across in order to communicate with the Government, but his permanent residence is in England.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he a barnacle fastened to the office?

Mr. MILLS. Or to the Government?

$ 2,350 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister of Finance answer now the question I put a few evenings ago as to the proportion of expenditure charged to his own Department of Finance which properly belongs to the Savings Bank?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have asked for a memorandum which is being prepared, and which I will give the hon. gentleman before Concurrence.

24. Amount required for salaries of Board of Examiners and other expenses [in connection with the Civil Service Act $4,750 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see the expenditure has risen from $2,500 to nearly $5,000. What is the cause of the increase?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We will be obliged to add $500 or $600 to the amount already asked. Year after year more expenditure is necessarily incurred, on account of examinations being asked in different parts of the Dominion. The number of examiners for the work, and the expenditure, are, I think, very limited, when we consider that for the last examinations over 15,000 different papers had to be examined. There are only three Commissioners, one of whom is secretary and who is certainly doing a work almost im-possible for a human being to perform. From every part of the Dominion people are corresponding with us, and we will probably have to ask an additional grant for this branch of the service. If we compare the expenditure with that of similar Departments in other countries, in the States, for instance, we will find that we are doing the work at a very limited outlay, and that for the good working of this Board more expenditure is required. The addition, probably, of a clerk will have to be made, for whom a salary of $500 or $600 will be asked, and this will be in addition to the amount now required.

Mr. MILLS. I would like very much to have from the Secretary of State information as to the number of persons who have been appointed since this Act has come into operation, and who have passed the required examinations; also the number of persons who have been appointed since then without having been required to undergo the examination called for by the Act. It is important we should know whether there is really foundation for the rumours that have gone abroad through the local press, that a very considerable number of persons have been appointed without examination, on the ground of their special qualifications. I do not think that such appointments are in keeping with the spirit of the Act or the intention of the Legis-lature. It is clear that the elementary examination required is such that no one fit for the service ought to be unable to pass it; and unless in the case of persons holding positions for a long series of years, it seems to me that nowever special the qualifications may be that are required, and however well fitted the particular party may be, this much, at least, is necessary, that he should be able to pass the examination required by the Act. It will be satisfactory to the public to know that this Act has been fairly and fully carried into operation, and that under the pretext of possessing special qualifications, a large number of persons have not been appointed to office without being required to undergo examination.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am very thankful to my hon. friend for the question he is putting and the explanation he is asking, as it affords me the pleasure of stating that I think the Civil Service regulations and the different clauses of the Act have been put into practice by the Government, as far as I know, with the utmost severity, and in a great number of cases I think really with too great severity. The law has been complied with in every point. As the hon. gentleman has referred to rumours, and I have seen some questions put, one of which is still on the Orders of the Day, if it was intended to refer to my own Department, I may state that some, it is said, are notoriously without the qualit no appointment has been otherwise made, though some which are required of persons in the public service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

applications were made by parties, but refused by the Treasury Board and by the Government as not being in compliance with the requirements of the Statute regulating the Civil Service. There is only one instance in the Department of the Secretary of State where a special officer has been appointed, and the establishment of that office is not due to this Government, but to the preceding Government. It was the office of the Keeper of the Records, of the Archives of the Dominion. Everyone knows that the Department of the Secretary of State is the Department in which all State papers should be preserved, and that, during the time of the administration of our predecessors in office, and at the demand, I think, of one of the members of that Government, a large number of the most valuable papers were transferred from the vaults of the Court House in Montreal, where they were kept perishing, to Ottawa and placed in the rooms of the Department of the Secretary of State. I would refer my hon. friend very modestly to the small report of the Secretary of State this year in which there is a special mention of the subject of which I am now speaking. The officer who was first specially appointed to fill the office which was then created was Mr. Henry J. Morgan, a gentleman who was well qualified for that work, which is not at all ordinary office work. It consists of selecting and perusing old documents and classifying them in a certain order, which requires knowledge of the history of the country which an ordinary officer is not supposed to have. That officer was appointed specially to that office. In the course of last year, that gentleman was appointed to the chief clerkship of the correspondence branch of the Department, the vacancy being caused by the transfer of the Under Secretary of State to the Senate and the appointment of the chief clerk of the correspondence branch to the Under Secretaryship. Mr. Morgan was then transferred from the office of Keeper of the Records, and a special officer was appointed there. Still I may say that the officer who succeeded him might be called a Civil Service employé, because he had been for several years in the employment of this House. Beside that—and that was a necessity, we had to do it-there has not been a single appointment made to my knowledge in my Department, or that I know of in any other Department, and I know that the requirements of the Civil Service Act have been very strictly and rigorously carried out. This I am very glad to put before the House, because, if I were to put before the House the correspondence and the reproaches, and the blame about the severity, the utmost severity I may say, which the Depart-ment has shown in that respect, it would perhaps not edify the hon. gentleman in reference to the good will, or the too great good will, which is perhaps supposed to be in theS ecretary of State. In the office of the Civil Service Board no new appointment has been made. The three Commissioners who were appointed are the only Commissioners, and we may ask this year, perhaps, to give them a secretary, but there has been no other officer. They have had assistance, when it was required, among themselves, but no other officer has been appointed.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think the Secretary of State has altogether apprehended my enquiry. His statement, of course, is satisfactory as far as it goes, but what I asked the hon, gentleman was as to the number of persons who had been appointed to offices since this Act has come into operation, and how many of those parties have been appointed to the offices they now hold, since the Act has come into operation, without passing the examination required by the Act? I think it would be very satisfactory if that information could be given, for I understand, on the plea that certain parties have special qualifications, they have been appointed without undergoing the examination which the Act requires, and some, it is said, are notoriously without the qualifications

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think I have answered the hon. gentleman. I have told him to the best of my recollection, as a member of the Government, I do not recollect any instance except the one I have mentioned, which I may say was imperative. My colleagues are here and can speak, as I cannot be supposed to be acquainted with the details of every Department, but I speak to the best of my recollection, and I am sure that the greatest severity has been shown in all the Departments.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, I may say that there have been no appointments made except under the terms of the Act, without passing in the first place a probationary examination and afterwards a qualifying examination, with the exception that is stated in the Act, of those officers who were temporarily employed before and proved valuable officers, and were actually in the service, some of them for years. They were excluded by the express terms of the Act, and some of them have, under the terms of the Act, been made permanent; but, with that exception, I am not aware, as far as my recollection goes, and I have a general knowledge of what is done, that there have been any appointments made.

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gontleman give us before Concurrence the number of persons and the names of the offices to which they were appointed ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was going to ask the hon. the Secretary of State what the Government do now, where they have a large number of qualified parties. Are they introducing to any appreciable extent the competitive system ? I observe that some of these candidates are examined in optional subjects, and, when they are appointed, after having passed in these optional subjects, they get $50 a year additional. That affords a means, I dare say a very tolerable means, of practically enforcing some sort of competition, and obtaining in a moderate degree the benefits of a competitive examination, but I want to know from the Secretary of State what the practice is. I have observed that a large number of people pass these examinations. Are they classified, is a record kept of the number of marks they respectively receive, and are the appointments made with any reference to the number of marks they receive, and to whether they pass in these optional subjects or not? Of course, that is to a large extent a question of policy, but I should like to know what has been done.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. A record is made and kept very carefully not only of the number of points the candidates have gained, but also the optional subjects upon which they have succeeded. Those might be required in some branch of some Departments, and not in others, and it is, of course, for the different Ministers or the chiefs of Departments to recommend the appointment of those whose names they see there. More than that, even after the examination, the examiners give remarks and notes of what is the peculiar fitness of anyone examined, so that the Minister might choose those who might be more fitted for one branch of a Department or another. As to the appointments being strictly made in accordance with that, I am sure that, as far as it conduces to the efficiency of the service, as much as possible they are.

Mr. GAULT. I can testify to the very great stringency with which the Government are appointing those clerks. in Montreal I took a young man out of a situation where he was receiving the same salary as he was to get from the Government. He passed the preliminary examination, and, because he was not capable of passing the qualifying examination, he has received instructions that he will not be required any further. I think the the case is one of great hardship. He left a good situation indeed to take a any experiesce in these matters, that many of the qualities situation in the Montreal Post Office, and now he has been informed that his services were no longer required. It seems to me that in this particular case the Government have been more than stringent in the application of the test.

Mr. BEATY. I would like to call the attention of the Government to matters pertaining to the promotion examinations. It has been largely said throughout the country in connection with the different offices, that the promotion examinations should not be required from those officers who were appointed before the late Act came into force. They think it a great hardship that they should be subjected to them, though they may be entitled to promotion on every other ground, having become acquainted with the work of their offices, and been engaged for five, ten or fifteen years. It has been represented very strongly from my own city, and from various other places, that this is a hardship, and seems to me unreasonable that persons who have been in the service, who have become adapted to their work, and against whom there is no complaint whatever, cannot obtain promotion unless they have passed a school boy's examination, to which, perhaps, they are in no sense adapted. I trust that the Government will give this matter the attention it deserves. I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Government to it, and I trust that particular clause in the Act which requires examination for promotion, may be modified so as to meet the demands of the different officers all over the Province of Ontario, at all events.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The point montioned by the hon. gentleman has already been brought to the attention of the Government, and it will be provided for in the amendments which it was announced the other day were to be introduced in the Civil Service Act. Those amondments will provide for the promotion due to officers who have been long in the service, and whose promotion before the Act was passed was left with the Deputy Minister. It is proposed hereafter that such officers shall not be subjected to an examination that might better apply to literary bachelors than to employés in the Departments.

Mr. HESSON. I am very glad to hear the remarks of the Secretary of State. It has been found that many valuable civil servants were unable to go for their promotion examinations. It is a positive fact that to a large extent the Civil Service is filled by young men coming from the high schools and colleges of the country instead of by experienced men who have been employed in the Department, and who were qualified for the work. It is quite possible that the duties in many of the offices may be better discharged by some gentlemen of long experience in the Departments than by young men who may have a first-class education and possess higher educational qualifications. I am glad that the Government propose making arrangement by which those who have been long in the service may receive the promotion to which the experience and service entitled them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has said. But there are two sides to the question. There is always a danger in our Civil Service of men getting promoted without special merit by mere length of service; but I presume it was the intention of the Government to put a stop to that to some extent, and to see that no man got promotion, as a matter of course, unless he was reasonably qualified for it. At the same time I am bound to say that there are many qualities, and many important ones, which no examination will test; and I would be sorry enough to see a competitive which are the most important in public servants are precisely the ones which no competitive exwill touch. Still, I think the Governamination ment ought to be chary about abolishing qualifying examinations which are totally different from competitive examinations; and I hope the Secretary of State and the Ministers generally, will be firm upon that point and see that no man is promoted, as of course, from one class to another without passing a reasonable qualifying examina-tion. I would like to know from the First Minister, as this is a question of policy, whether he sees his way at all to introduce competitive examinations in the first rank. I admit that after the first appointment competitive examinations ceases to a great extent to be a good test, but I still think that competitive examination, particularly if a number of people are applying, as I see they are, would be a great safeguard, both to the public service and perhaps to the gentlemen themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After the best consideration I have been able to give to the matter, I think it would be very difficult to have a qualifying examination which would satisfy the heads of the Departments. We have found that, in fact, a competitive examination, which allowed the highest number of marks to give a priority or right to the appointment, would result in denuding the common schools of all their schoolmasters. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I can assure him that there is a rush of schoolmasters for appointment in the service, and they, of course, are able to do the most abstruse problems in arithmetic and geometry, qualifications which may be very valuable in a teacher, but which are not, perhaps, so obviously useful in a clerk in an office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would not the age test pretty effectually exclude these ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; there are a great number of them under 35.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Civil Service Act allow them to be examined up to that age?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes, up to 35 If you look over the list of those who have got marks in book-keeping and arithmetic, a majority of them are school-masters, and many of them are farmers' sons who have passed the qualifying examinations. A man may have half-a-dozen cons, and he wants to see one of them in the public service. If a civil servant has good physical health, sufficient education, and has passed the qualifying examination, he thinks he should not be cut out by the man who taught him arithmetic. I do not think it would be right. Some of these special qualifications, of course at once give a claim to consideration. I know both that in the Department of the Interior when I was at the head of it, and in the Indian Department, we have found it neces-sary especially to look out for good accountants. A good accountant is very difficult to get, and we take great care on that point in selecting from those who have passed examinations in book-keeping and arithmetic. We have taken great care about that matter. With that qualifying examination we should be slow in introducing competitive examinations into the service. Of course the moment parties are placed on the list as qualified to hold office, the Minister at the head of the Department makes his own selection, and I dare say hon. gentlemen opposite would not object to the practice that there should be a kindly feeling of preference giving to sons of political supporters-I think whether it were considered objectionable or not it would be practiced by any Administration.

Mr. MILLS. The Committee understands from the First Minister that the system of competitive examinations is one which the Government have declined to adopt and that they are satisfied with the qualifying examination. It seems to cerned, the Ministers have nothing to do with them up to me that the qualifying examination has in many instances been very greatly qualified. I think I can give names of parties in the service who have failed to pass the examination, and with respect to whom the First Minister would find it difficult to say they were specially qualified.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should like to hear thom.

Mr. MILLS. It is perfectly obvious from the statement of the First Minister, that the system of political appointments is to be kept alive; that the Government are resolved to appoint their friends, and that the most the qualifying examination does is to protect them against persons notoriously unfit for the public service being thrown into it. We know that in England one of the principal objects aimed at by the system of examination is that the special fitness of the parties offering themselves as candidates shall determine whether they shall or shall not enter the public service. If they show themselves eminently well qualified then they are appointed, and their political preference is a matter which is never taken into consideration. We know now from the statement of the First Minister that the English rule at all events is not to be the rule here, and that the appointments are as much political to day as they have ever been. What is the result of this particular system? It is that when parties cannot undergo examination, or are not inclined to undergo them, other grounds for the ap-pointment will be sought. I might ask the Minister of Militia, whether Colonel Bacon or Mr. Donaldson, the latter of whom was not in the public service at the time, the Civil Service Act was adopted, passed the examination before they entered the service? I might ask the first Minister whether the son of Mr. Boultbee, who I under-stand is in one of the Departments, has undergone the examination, or whether he is specially qualified for the post which he occupies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure the son of Mr. Boultbee passed the examination, or he is not in the Civil Service.

Mr. MILLS. I think he is in one of the Departments. How far do Ministers supervise the examinations? While the Government may determine generally what the cha-racter of the examination should be, beyond that the exa-mination should never be interfered with by the Administration. If there is any class of men in this country who ought to have nothing to do with the examinations, or interfere in any way with them, it is that of the Ministers of the Crown. The Board of Examiners should be wholly independent and distinct from the Government, and the examinations ought to be conducted in such a way that the public will feel that everyone examined has been fairly dealt with, that there has been no favouritism, and that the standing of each one is fairly indicated by the answers given to the questions and the conclusions arrived at by the examiners. This is a matter of very great importance, and I repeat it is specially important that the examiners should be wholly free and independent of any interference on the part of Ministers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Ministers have nothing to do with the examinations. The examiners, moreover, are perfectly independent. If there has been any interference by the Government it has been only on one or two occasions after the examinations have taken place, when complaint was made that something was done decidedly out of what was intended to be done under the rules. For instance, in one examination for promotion special questions of arithmetic were considered to be of such a complicated character that the number of points was reduced slightly by the examiners themselves. So far as the examinations are conthe moment they have to select from the list of successful candidates persons to fill appointments.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not gainsay the truth of what the First Minister has said—which I did not before understand-that the examinations for the first grades of the service allow men to enter up to 35 years of age. I thought the law fixed a younger age, and at all events, it would be a great improvement if such were done. In England, a candidate could not pass an entrance examination for the Civil Service if he was over twenty-four, unless he happened to be one of those persons brought in, as we bring them in, as possessing special qualifications. It is not desirable to encourage men of anything like the age the First Minister stated to become candidates for third-class clerkships at from $400 to $500 a year. But that particular evil could easily be remedied by making a different age limit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a matter for legislation.

Mr. CARON. The cases of Col. Bacon and Mr. Donaldson, to which the hon. member for Bothwell referred, come under the exceptional cases provided for by the Civil Service Act. Col. Bacon has been placed in charge of all the documents and title deeds relating to ordnance lands, succeeding Col. Walkem, who recently died, Col. Bacon's appointment being made owing to his knowledge of engineering and his ability as a draughtsman. Mr. Donaldson was transferred from "B" Battery at Kingston, where he was almost indispensable, to Ottawa, owing to his special knowledge of stores belonging to the artillery branch of the service, and this knowledge could only be attained by a service extending over a number of years in the British army. No qualifying examination or examination provided by the Civil Service Act would in any way qualify either of those gentlemen for the positions they now hold in the Militia Department.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose in that case that if either of these gentlemen die this particular branch of the public service will need to be abolished, because no person will be found capable of filling the place.

Mr. CARON. We would follow the same system as we did when Mr. Walkem died. If Col. Bacon dies I suppose we will find another gentleman in the service, as we did in his case, who would be transferred from one branch to the other

Mr. BERGIN. It seems to me that this kind of criticism is very unfair, and that hon. gentlemen should know what they are talking about before attacking the Minister. Col. Bacon is one of the oldest officers in the Department, or in the militia service. He has been a Brigade Major for many years, and when he was at Montreal he came from the Grand Trunk to the militia service, and was one of the best engineers in the service of the company who left the Grand Trunk. He has very special qualifications for the office for which he was appointed; and I am only sorry that the Minister has not seen his way to appointing him to a still higher place in the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Secretary of State how he proposes to distribute this sum of $4,750. I see that in last year's account the Civil Service Board are only down for $5000. This, of course, indicates a much more extensive system, and I would like to know who are the gentlemen appointed, and what sums they receive.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The amount voted last year by the House has been found inadequate to the work. The sam of $5 per day for sixty days was what was voted by the House. It was perhaps found that what was given before was too much, and in the hurry of legislation last year the amount voted was too little, as the number of examinations, and that no recommendation is required for entrance into these their length, is not ontirely at the discretion of the examiners, but depends largely upon the number of applications, and consequently the number of places where examinations have to be held. Under the legislation which will be proposed we will ask that $3 a day be given to the chief examiners, and $5 a day-which was the old allowance-to the sub-examiners. This will add a certain sum to the amount voted last year. We have done the best to limit the amount expended as much as possible, as will be found by the report of the examiners.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was the report brought down?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, within fifteen days of the beginning of the Session as required by Statute. The other day I was comparing the cost of the Civil Service Board and staff in the United States with that of Canada, and taking the population into account I found that the comparison appears very advantageous to the Dominion-in fact that it is here about 50 per cent. less, taking population into account, than what is spent there for the same purpose. Of course as we go on perfecting the system new expenditures will necessarily be required; but 1 can assure hon. gentlemen that not a penny more than is required for the work has been asked.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are those examinations partly viva voce, or wholly by papers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Wholly by papers.

Mr. MILLS. Might I ask the Secretary of State if all who choose are at liberty to come before the Board for the purpose of being examined, or if they require to be recommended by some Minister?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I find that the hon. gentleman has not read the Statute and so I will explain it to him. Notice is given in due time of the examinations, and applications are made to the Board by candidates from all parts of the Dominion. The examinations are held at different places, according to the number of applications from each place; that is to say, if there were only two applicants, or a very small number, in a particular place, no examination would be held there. The examination papers are sent to the different places where the examinations are to be held, such as Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Ottawa, London, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Victoria, &c. Three of the examiners each take one of the largest places, and they appoint subexaminers. The sub-examiners distribute the papers to the candidates, and as the answers are given in writing, and as they have all to be re-examined here by the examiners, the hon. gentleman can see the amount of work which is to be done. So far as the examinations for promotion are concerned, they are held in the Department when vacancies occur; the parties make application and they are examined for promotion, and I may say that these examinations are of the character of competitive examinations for the Department. That is to say, every employé below the class where the vacancy occurs is allowed to compete and go for the promotion examination. That examination is more or less superintended, not by the Minister or the Deputy Minister, but according to the fitness of the candidate for the class of work required, by the sub-chief of the Department.

Mr. CASEY. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has scarcely hit the point he aimed at by the question; or clse the Secretary of State has turned the shot aside. By this I do not mean to imply that my hon. friend's question was not properly put, or not well put; but the real evil at which the hon. gentleman wished to get by that question is further on, and deeper down than the working of this Act. I understand quite well, and probably he did, examinations, but the great point remains, one of which we have always complained, that a recommendation is required for the appointment. The most successful of those who may be examined has not the slightest claim whatever for an appointment. The man who comes out at the head has no more claim than the man who comes out at the foot. I fear also that the Secretary of State is under a misapprehension when he states that the promotion examinations are competitive.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say they are in a certain manner, so far as the Dpartment is concerned.

Mr. CASEY. Which Department?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Any Department in which the vacancy occurs.

Mr. CASEY. The Statute does not provide that the examination should be competitive in any Department at all. It provides that a man shall not be promoted unless he passes the examination, but it does not provide that the man who comes out ahead shall be promoted, though there are certain Dopartments in which that practice was carried on long before the passing of this Act. In the Inland Revenue Department the practice of promoting officers for efficiency, proven by examination, was carried on for years, before the passing of this Act, and was shown to have most beneficial results. I was Chairman of a Committee which enquired into the working of the service here in 1877, and which had the most convincing testimony from the officials of the Inland Revenue Department to show that this was a good plan, and that when a vacancy occurred in the higher ranks of that Department they were able to ascertain by means of an examination alone, without taking any other consideration into account, who was the best man for that place. That was the testimony of Mr. Brunel, then the head of that De-partment, and Mr. Miall, his assistant, and all others concorned in the working of the Department. What I complain of, as one who has always advocated Civil Service reform in this country, is that this system has not been applied to other Departments—that the promotions have not been made by competition. The Act provides that a man must pass a qualifying examination on entrance; yet his promotion must depend upon the good will of his superior.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not at all. If the hon. gentleman knows the Act, he knows that it provides for a promotion examination.

Mr. CASEY. I think I know as much about that Act as the hon. Secretary of State, perhaps more. I was here when it passed, before the hon. gentleman was in this House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman knows much, he has forgotten a great deal of it.

Mr. CASEY. I have not forgotten that, at any rate. I do not know but the hon. Secretary of State may have instituted the plan of promotion by competition in his own department, but I know that the Act, as passed, does not require it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no competition provided for in the Act at all.

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will accept this rebuke from his leader if he did not from me.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman should know that there is a promotion examination provided for in the Act, but not a computitive one.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will show the hon. gentleman in a moment that he has forgotten a great deal, if he ever knew much.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister is very new in his place, very new to the legislation which he has to carry out, and much more apt than his older colleagues to take a high Mr. CASEY.

and lofty tone in the House. In this respect I could not recommend a better model for him than his collengue, the hon. Minister of Public Works, who is always master of the details of his Department, always courteous to this side of the House, and always prompt in supplying information. The hon. Secretary of State will do well to follow in the footsteps of his older colleague in these respects. In this particular instance he has maintained that there is competition for promotion under this Act. He would not take my statement as to what was in the Act. He has now to take the statement of his leader, that there is no competition provided in the Act at all.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As a matter of fact, this is misrepresentation. It is a wrong statement.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend the Secretary of State, it appears, now accuses the hon. Premier of misrepresentation. He says his statement is a wrong statement. Well, I think the right hon. Premier and myself will be found to be right against all comers in regard to the interpretation of this Act. I understand that the case of Col. Bacon was brought up as an instance of the point in question. I co not know whether there was any objection or not to Col. Bacon on the ground of fitness. The objection was taken to the mode of appointment, he having been placed over the heads of others who were entitled to promotion. Such cases as this are constantly occurring. Even this Act, which was intended to provide that the higher places should be filled by promotion, is constantly disregarded, and men are taken from other Departments to occupy positions over the heads of those who ought to be promoted. That is what I complain of, and it is only in exceptional and special cases that men should be brought in from other Departments. I do not profess to ray anything about Col. Bacon's fitness for this particular post, but I insist that it would have been quite right and possible, first t) ascertain by competitive examination amongst the officials in that Department whether one of those occupying a lower place there was not fit to fill this position. Until that was done and the incapacity of those in the Department demons. trated, an outsider should not have been appointed. It has been found in England, where they have had real Civil Service reform, carried out by a truly independent commission in a truly independent manner for a quarter of a century, that there is no difficulty of testing men's fitness even for positions requiring special knowledge by competitive examinations. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia tells us that this is a position the qualifications of which could not be decided by an ordinary Civil Service examination. I think that it is quite likely, and it is a very good reason for not trusting to the ordinary examination. But we have a Board of Examiners, and a Minister at the head of that Department, competent to advise togethen and to form a special set of questions to test a man's fitness for this particular office. That is what is done in England. A special examination is held, special papers are prepared, and the appointment depends upon the success of a candidate at that examination. There is another case, in regard to which I put a question to the hon. Secretary of State the other day, on which occasion, however, he refused to be catechised about it; that is in regard to the appointment of one Audet in his Department, who, I am informed by himself, is one of the chief clerks in a sub-department of his Department. I do not profess to know many particulars about this man Audet, and that is why I am asking for information. ΞŦ understand, however, that he was appointed to this position after having been in the service of the House of Commons as a translator, and that he was appointed to a place over the heads of all the other clerks in the sub-Department; and he should have been appointed under the Act by an

not. As I understand the Statute, it provides that when a man is appointed over the heads of others, it should be on the ground of some special fitness, and that ground should be stated in the Order in Council, as is done in England. I hope, for the credit of the Government, the same course has been followed in the case of the special appointments they have been making, and in the case of this Mr. Audet among others. As my motion asking for information is so far down upon the paper, that it is not likely to be reached this Session, I hope my hon. friend the Secretary of State, will waive ceremony and tell me now for what special qualifications Mr. Audet was appointed to a position so much above the positions of others possessing much greater experience in that Department.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman fulfilled his duties to the electors sufficiently to be in his seat at the proper time, he might save the time of this House in asking Ministers to repeat what they have said before. But if the hon. gentleman wishes to remain outside of the House, he may look to morrow in the Hansard for what I have said already to the House, and what I will not repeat. The hon. gentleman said I was new in the House that I did not know much about my position, and that I was taking too high a tone. I do not generally take too high a tone nor too a low tone. I do not think that I have been accused, as somebody in this House might be, of trying too much the patience of the House. The hon, gentleman says I did not know much about my business, being new; but I do know something about it and I am not new in office though I am new in this Government. I generally know what I hit; I do not take a cow for a crow. I am not new in office; I have seen something of a House of Assembly before; I have seen before members in the House talk without knowing at all what they were talking about; I have seen hon. members telling Ministers that they had stated a certain thing when they had not said it, and men who, on being corrected, would not stand corrected but say a certain thing was so when it was not so. I am not new enough not to know those things, and I will tell the hon. gentleman one or two things which he does not know, for if he has been on a Committee concerning the pubic service and learned something then, he has since forgotten a great deal. He did not know, or if he knew, he has forgotten, that a competitive system for entrance to the public service does not exist; but that it exists in a certain manner in the case of I have said that a competitive system promotions. would not work well for entrance to the service, and that a qualifying examination has been found the best With regard to promotions, they are not made system. only on the recommendations of Ministers. There is not a Minister, from the first to the last, the one who is now addressing you, who can make the slightest promotion without having an examination for promotion. Promotion is not made on the recommendation of the Minister alone. It cannot be made except after a promotion examination to which all the officers of the Department holding positions below the one vacant are eligible; all the other employés in the Department, or those in another Department may be chosen from to fill the office. I need not repeat what I have already said about Mr. Audet in the Department of the Secretary of State. My answer has been given and the hon. gentleman can refer to it.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman, in that short skirmish which he had with my hon. colleague the Secretary of State, has thought fit to recur again to the appointment of Col. Bacon, and he has shown, in referring to that appointment, the same lack of knowledge about the Civil Service which the hon. Secretary of State has just proved he possesses. If the hon, member for West Elgin will refer to the Statute of last Session he will see that in a certain given circumstance, it is not only possible but necessary that certain appointments should be made without complying with the examination. If the hon. gentleman will refer to clause 34, section 2, he will see that "when the Deputy Head of a Department in which a vacancy occurs, requires that, for reasons set forth, the qualifications requisite are wholly or in part professional or technical." At any time, I am willing to answer any question put me in reference to my Department, but I think it is taking up uselessly the time of the House in repeating several times what had been already said. I stated to the hon. gentleman, and I say so again, that Col. Bacon was selected, not placed over the head of anyone else in the Department, because in the Department of Militia there was no person who had the qualifications required to fill the position left vacant by the death of Mr. Walkem. He was selected from the outside service; he belonged to the military staff, as brigade major, a position which he filled in a most efficient manner during a number of years, and in the interest of the service he was placed in the position left vacant by the death of Mr. Walkem, being an architect and an engineer possessing all the special qualifications required in the position he now holds. In consequence of these special qualifications he was exempted from the examinations required in ordinary CARER

Mr. CASEY. I repeat that I did not intend to impugn the fitness of Col. Bacon for this office; what I objected to was merely his appointment without examination over the heads of others. The hon. Secretary of State has not taken my criticism as calmly as his military friend, the Minister of War, who is much more peaceable than the Minister of State. The latter, although he has not been very long in the House, has evidently been posting himself in the current humour of the House, but I am afraid that the humour, although it may be fresh to him, is not so very fresh to the rest of us. He referred to an unfortunate incident which occurred in my past shooting experience and to all the shame of which I confess, but I was under the impression that I had killed the cow in question; now, however, I find that I am mistaken, for she comes up smiling every Session, and the last person to resurrect that famous quadruped is my hon. friend the Secretary of State, whom the story has apparently struck with all the force of novelty. On that occasion, I was supposed to have fired at a crow and hit a cow by mistake; but on this occasion it is evident, by the agitated manner of my hon. friend, that my aim has been true, and that he, at all events, has been hit very badly. In regard to the questions put, he tells me that they were answered before I came in. I have to confess that I was unavoidably detained, but I must ask him whether he explained the case of Audet?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did.

Mr. CASEY. Then I will have to wait for Hansard and be content with the answer I find there.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend has put a notice on the paper. He will have his answer then also.

Mr. CASEY. We will not reach that motion this Session, and if the explanation is not given now it will not be given at all. It is well known that this is the time to give such explanations, and the hon. gentleman's colleagues, at all events, have never hesitated to give them when required. If not satisfied with the answer in Hansard I will again refer to this matter, but I will not take up any more time with it now. In regard to the question of competition, I am afraid the hon. Minister and I are misunderstanding each other as to the meaning we attach to the word "competition." I mean that there is no competition in the way in which it is understood in the English Civil Service.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said there was no such competition here.

Mr. CASEY. Then the Minister and I are at one. That is what I mean by no competition. I mean by competition, that a man who comes out ahead gets the highest place, or, if there is only one place, he gets it. That is the meaning of competition in the English sense, and to call anything else competition is apt to mislead the public. To say that, because all the clerks of lower grades are called up to be examined, in order to select one of them for a higher grade, that is competition, is a misnomer. The hon. Minister's understanding of the Act is the same as mine after all, that among those shown to be qualified in this examination, the Government can select the one they wish to promote. That is the understanding of the Act I have always had. It is perhaps not the time now to go into the abstract question of whether we should or should not have competition for admission into the service, but the Minister has shown that there are reasons for introducing competition in regard to promotion which do not exist in the case of competition for first appointments. He can see from the experience of years in the Inland Revenue here, and the experience of a quar-ter of a century in England, that competition has a good effect, and I hope he will commence by introducing it tentatively in his own Department and then recommending its extension. There is no reason why a man's fitness for promotion should not be tested by an examination, except so far as his general character, and fitness to rule others, and assidnity, and industry may interfere with his efficiency.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will give the details. Miscellaneous justice, including North-West Territories, $15,000; that is the same as last year. The Public Accounts will show how that sum was expended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that include examination of titles, and so forth, to any extent? I see quite a lot of suits were put down last year; all manner of suits and miscellaneous charges.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it includes that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does it intend to in clude examination of titles?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should say so. Mr. CHAPLEAU. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because some of the charges that I have heard of on the score of examination of titles struck me as very extraordinary ones indeed.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the examination of titles comes under miscellaneous justice. I think it comes under the department which is concerned in the construction of the buildings.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is so. It is only when the matter arises in the Department of Justice, or there is litigation. Then, travelling expenses of Stipendiary Magistrates in the North-West Territories, $3,000. There is an increase of $500. There was a vacancy last year in the Stipendiary Magistrates. One has been appointed since, and this is to aid in paying his expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Three. Circuit allowances, British Columbia, $6,000, the same as last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWR!GHT. In this North West Territories, does this cover all the territory outside of Manitoba?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The whole of the four Provinces, or whatever they are?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are not Provinces.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Districts?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Divisions. Travelling allowances, Supreme and County Court Judges, Manitoba, $2,500, the same as last year; precis writer of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Exchequer Court, the same; clerk in the office of the registrar, that is the statutory increase; second clerk in the office of the registrar, statutory increase; senior messenger of the Supreme Court, the same; second and third messengers, statutory increase of $30 each. Contingencies and disbursements, judges travelling expenses; also salaries of officers in the Supreme and Exchequer Courts of Canada, and $150—it should be instead of $1,500—for books for judges, $5,000. That is the same. Printing, binding and distributing the Supreme Court Reports, $2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an entirely new item, what is the reason of it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This sum has hitherto been paid out of the $5,000. That amount was exceeded in 1882-83 by $2,172, and in 1881-82 by $477. As a revenue is derived from the sale of the reports, it is thought advisable to make a specific vote for the printing, binding, and distribution of these reports, and to that extent it will relieve the vote for contingencies. In this connection, a letter has been received from Mr. Cassels, the Registrar, which I may as well read. It is addressed to the Deputy Minister:

"DEAR Siz.—Referring to my letter of yesterday's date respecting the reports, since writing it, I have found the Queen's Printer's account, showing how the receipts stood up to the date the publication was placed under my sole control, and, after making what I think will be a very close estimate of the cost of Volume VII, and ascertaining from the Queen's Printer the actual cost to the Government of printing the first six volumes, and deducting also the total amount paid to the publisher, and the various amounts paid out for postage and insurance as closely as those items can be estimated. I find that the Government, on the first seven volumes of the reports, will receive in cash about $1,000 or more over and above the amount disbursed, and have to their credit a large number of volumes, not less, I should think, than 1,500, now in stock, worth at least $3,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like a little further explanation than has bitherto been given of the system upon which these reports are published, and now, as this is made a separate vote, seems to be a good opportunity for the new departure. Is this $2,000 the gross expense of editing, publishing and distributing the reports or is it supposed to be a net balance representing the expected stock on hand after the distribution, and after the receipt of the revenue which is obtained from the sales of the reports? The proper course, as I understand, in all these things-and I am afraid it is a course which has been departed from in this particu. lar thing-is that the whole charge to the country of the service should be voted, and that you should get in as revenue, and put on the revenue side of your account, whatever the country receives in return for the reports sold. If, therefore, the editing of these reports, and the publishing of these reports, and the distribution of these reports costs more than $2,000, inclusive of the stock which is reserved, the surplus of the copies which are always printed for future reference, we ought to vote the whole amount of that, and on the other hand get credit on the revenue side for the receipts from it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the correct statement beyond doubt. I find that in the item concerning contingencies and disbursements, Judges' travelling expenses, also salary of the Sheriff, &c.-$5,000-the vote that has just been considered, there is an omission, and that after "Sheriff" there should be "Registrar as Editor." I understand that ever since the Court was organized and under both Governments, the Registrar has received $400 per annum as editor of each volume-that is, he is paid out of that $5,000.

Mr. BLAKE. So it is proposed to insert "for Registrar as Editor?"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. Then the $2,000 is the gross amount of the expense of printing and distributing the Supreme Court reports, and all the receipts go into the Treasury.

Mr. BLAKE. So that $2,000, plus $400 a volume, will represent the total cost to the country. If there are two be taken into account. volumes a year it will be $2,800 a year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDUNALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state his estimate of the revenue, as I am afraid that from certain circumstances it will not be so high as it has been.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will get an estimate of that.

Mr. WELDON. These reports are getting up to such a high price that very few persons are able to buy them. It is important that they should be published at as cheap a rate as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the cost I do not think it can be objected to. The cost, as I under-stand, is $2 a volume. That is exceedingly cheap, and will no more than pay expenses. A book of reports published in English would cost you $8, I fancy, a volume. A I understand it $2 a volume is the cost to the profession. Certainly I do not think the Government is bound to supply the tools of trade to lawyers more than they are to any body else.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it is a very important object that the Supreme Court reports should be circulated as widely as possible. The Law Society of Ontario some time ago undertock, out of its own funds, to circulate them to all make the courts more valuable. In England the' High of the profession in that Province. That resulted in a large Court of Admiralty has power to order a sale; our Vice-edition being rendered impossible, and a large edition means a cheap price per volume. But the Law Society has been obliged to give up that, and the result will be that there will be a great diminution in the edition, and a corresponding increase in the price per volume to the public. It may be, that under the new regime, the circumstances having been before the authorities for a considerable time, the Government has ascertained the cost at which they expect to be able to issue that volume to the profession. That is dependent, to a considerable extent, upon the number of custom. ers they expect to have. They know, of course, that there is no reason to expect any increase in the demand, at any rate, so far as Ontario is concerned. In Ontario I do not know whether steps are being taken to ascertain what the profession would do; but once again that depends upon the profession. The higher the price the fewer persons will take them. I agree that it is not expected that these volumes should be supplied to the profession at the public cost; but to a certain extent they are supplied at the public cost when the salary of the reporter is paid out of the public funds. But we ought to obtain from those who buy—I will not say the whole expense of printing and publishing the reports—but the expense of printing and publishing all those copies that are sold. It would not be good policy to charge the cost of the surplus copies upon the number of copies that are sold. They will ultimately bring a return and the cheaper you can issue the book the more copies you can circulate. My theory of the case would be that the sum, whatever it may be, $2,400 or $2,800-being the gross cost of printing all the copies, including the reserve copies-that we ought to deduct from that gross cost what would be the cost of getting out the copies that yearly may remain in stock and which may subsequently be sold, and make the remainder of the price, divided amongst the number of copies expected to be sold, the cost of the edition. I am afraid it will be something more than $2; because I think it was $2 to the general public; and to the law society of Ontario who took 1,000 or 1,200 volumes in bulk, a considerably smaller sum was charged. Of course, these are considerations that ought to

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon, gentleman that the volume should be sold to the profession at as low a price as is consistent with the public. I do not think that we are bound to furnish these books at the cost of the Government, but they should be furnished at cost price. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that to the price should not be added the whole cost of the edition, because the reserve copies are certain to be sold some time or other, and the computation should be made at what the copies likely to be sold within the year will cost, and that should regulate the price. I understand the matter is under the consideration of the Department of Justice, and that it may be found necessary to add another dollar to the cost and make it $3 instead of $2. The next item is sundry disbursements connected with the Maritime Court of Ontario -travelling expenses, $100; salary of Registrar of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Quebec, $666; salary of the Marshall, $333; for the purchase of law reports and text books for the Supreme Court of Canada, $1,600. The last named item appeared formerly under the heading of Legislation or Miscellaneous.

Mr. WELDON. With respect to Vice-Admiralty Courts, I may remark that I moved for a return of the despatches with respect to the Vice-Admiralty Courts in the Maritime Provinces. These are Imperial Courts, and a new pro-Provinces. cedure came into operation on 1st January which is much more simple than that formerly in force, and which will Admiralty Courts have not that power. If the Government would call the attention of the Imperial Government to this and other important points in the Act of 1868, it might be so amended as to give our Vice-Admiralty Courts powers equal to those possessed by the High Court of Admiralty in England.

Mr. LISTER. While the hon. member for St. John has called attention to the Vice-Admiralty Courts of the Maritime Provinces, I desire to offer some observations respecting the Maritime Court of Ontario. The Statute creating that Court provided that the rules, regulations and tariff of fees should be prepared by certain officers in Ontario. A tariff of fees, &c., was prepared; but an order was afterwards issued by the late Judge Mackenzie providing that in cases of seamen's wages, where the amount claimed was under $100, only $10 should be allowed as fees. In all other claims, such as for collision, supplies, &c., provided for under the Statute, the usual tariff of fees is allowed for prosecuting the claim; but in the case of seamen's wages, affecting the class of people intended specially to be protected, orly $10 is allowed for fees in cases under $100, as I have already stated. From my own experience for the last two or three years I am aware that seamen have been discharged from vessels with claims for wages, running from $10 to $30, and it was found impossible to engage a lawyer to undertake their collection on account of the low tariff of fees, the disbursements for any suit amounting to more than $10. I call the attention of the Government to the fact that, while in all maritime countries sailors, who are as a rule an improvident class, are carefully looked after by the Government, the Maritime Court of Ontario is of very little benefit to them, because it very seldom happens that a sailor has $100 in wages due him on leaving his ship. The procedure under this Act, which is at present cumbrous and costly, might be very much simplified and cheapened. In the United States they have Maritime Laws which are executed in a very simple and cheap manner; and in the interests of our seamen and others concerned, a like state of things should prevail here. I particularly call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that the Act is of no real benefit or advantage to the sailors.

Mr. BLAKE. We had a discussion on this subject two or three years ago, and I think it was the opinion of both sides of the House-it was certainly expressed very strongly on this side-that the small claims referred to should be placed on an entirely different footing from that which they at present occupy as regards procedure. They are almost identical with Division Court cases. There should be a simple summary procedure; the parties should be heard and the cases at once disposed of at trifling cost. The present procedure, which, I am told, is as simple as can be devised for cases which will bear minute investigation, might be retained for such cases, and for smaller claims a simple and inexpensive procedure might be arranged. The Act was framed so as to leave the whole business in an elastic condition. The rules and practice were made by the Judge and approved by the Governor in Council. If the Government were to call the attention of the Judge to this matter, no doubt the necessary change would be made in the disposal of simple cases.

Mr. GUILLET. In the Session of 1881 an Act was passed providing a process by which sailors are able to obtain the summary collection of their wages. They can proceed against the vessel, and wages are the first lien on the vessel and running gear. The sailors are satisfied with this measure; the Sailors' Union petitioned for it, obtained it, and are now, I say, satisfied. A sailor can go before two magistrates, or a police magistate, demand his wages, and the magistrate has authority to proceed and levy distress on the vessel if the wages are not paid. The magistrate has, moreover, power to seize the vessel for wages. Mr. WELDON.

Mr. LISTER. That is not proceeding under the Maritime Court Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must look at the Act referred to by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Guillet), which seems to provide a summary mode of procedure, where the very name of the court implies something like regularity of proceedings; though it is quite true, as the hon. member for West Darham says, that a summary process like that in Division Courts might well be provided for. I shall call the attention of the Minister of Justice to that matter so that he may communicate with the Judges of the Maritime Courts, in order to see if the necessary regulations may be made. The hon, gentleman says that the process is complicated, and that the expense is very great. Well, providing that there are magistrates in the immediate vicinity it is much more to the advantage of the sailor, who wants his money immediately, who wants the vessel to be liable, to go to a neighbouring magistrate and get a summons returnable immediately, and tried immediately, with a process of attachment or detention in some way.

Mr. LISTER. That would be all right if there was a right to detain her from the first. I do not think, however, that there is any such right.

Mr. BLAKE. One must remember that the poor sailor may be in the wrong, and that it is expedient that while there should be the utmost simplicity of practice, men trained to the law, and trained judging conflicting state-ments, should be, as far as possible, Judges in the case. It may be ruinous to the vessel owner to have his vessel detained, and to have it detained by two magistrates is much more dangerous than to have it detained by a Judge of the Maritime Court. I am not speaking, however, from any-thing which has been done with regard to magistrate's decisions, but inasmuch as there is a jurisdiction in rem I am only assuming that the process should be made practically effective by giving a simple and inexpensive procedure to work it out, irrespective of the Act of which the hon. gentleman speaks.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree with the hon. gentleman in every regard.

Mr. LISTER. In the State of Michigan there is a very simple procedure which might very readily be imitated here.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the remark of the hon. member for St. John, I may say that I suggested an application to the Imperial Government to modify the Act with a view to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Maritime Courts. Now I hope it is not disrespectful to say that they go slow over there. It has been many years since we endeavoured to obtain the change in the practice of these courts which has only lately been obtained. As long ago as 1877, when I was across the water, that subject was deemed ripe for action, but action has only been taken within the last few months, though the subject had been a grievance for at least seven years. The Government took another line, and I think rightly enough, when some years ago, either in the Speech from the Throne or otherwise, it was indicated that they were going to move in the direction of obtaining authority to create Maritime Courts for the seaboard as well as inshore, and if they should prosecute their endeavours in that respect it would be much better, as we could then enlarge or diminish the jurisdiction, and change the practice and procedure of the courts, according to the necessities of our own people. When I say that the practice in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, which prevailed up to the 1st of January, 1884, was the old, obsolete, antiquated practice, which had been in force, I think, for fifty years in England, and was abolished for some 20 or 30 years as being intelerable, I think I point out a good reason why we should ourselves obtain, if we can, power to create these courts, and do away with the abuses, for I do not think the word is too strong, such as those which have subsisted. There was, I believe, in many cases on the seaboard, a denial of justice and the practice was so intricate and slow, and the cost so large, that the court was almost as much of an abuse—though not an abuse of the same character—as in the old days when the judge, being paid out of the fees of his office, was sometimes regarded as a public robber. For that reason I am heartily in favour of the remedy proposed by the hon. gentleman and would reinforce his efforts to get the matter under our own control.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may state that from information obtained in the Department of Justice, I find that correspondence has been going on on this question, and that an answer has been requested again and again, but they have not been able to get one up to this time. The matter is a very important one, and I agree with the hon. member for West Durham that without the regulation of our own courts, the fixing of our own process, and the regulation of our own proceedings and tariff of fees, there will be no satisfaction in connection with these courts. The country will not be satisfied with anything but courts having jurisdiction in maritime cases, Vice-Admiralty cases, in all matters brought before them—all there matters being fixed by our own legislation. The matter has been pressed and will continue to be pressed on Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know of course what line the hon. gentleman has taken in discussing the question with the Imperial authorities, but it has always seemed to me very clear that we have authority to craete these courts under the British North America Act. We have control over the subject of navigation, and we have also power to estab-lish such courts as may be required for the better administration of justice. Maritime laws are part of the laws of the country, and what is really required is that the right which has already been conferred on us by the Imperial Statute should be recognized by the Imperial authority, and that the present court should be withdrawn. It is not a power to create a court which we do not possess, that we should demand, but we should insist on the exercise of a power given to us and that the Imperial Government itself should not persist in the maintenance of an authority which Parliament, under this Imperial Act of 1867, has withdrawn from it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not sure that Her Majesty's Government would agree with the conclusions of the hon. gentleman, but the question might be decided by our passing an Act here, and making it only operative on proclamation. Then it would be submitted to Her Majesty's Government and through them to the legal authorities there. Then the question would arise whether we could have any jurisdiction beyond the three mile limit, which would be a question of some difficulty. If we establish those courts we would have right within the three mile limit and perhaps more, but that might be dubious. However, if we passed a law of that kind, and submitted it to Her Majesty's Government, they might pass an Empowering Act, enabling our courts to have jurisdiction beyond the limit, as if they were a branch of the Imperial Admiralty.

Mr. WELDON. The Admiralty gets its jurisdiction by virtue of the vessel being within the limits, and of the proceeding being taken in rem. No matter whether the collision takes place in the high seas or not, they get jurisdiction in that way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not if the cause of action were beyond.

Mr. WELDON. Yes, we can bring our action in the ordinary courts of the country. Practically, so far as our courts are concerned, the Judges, I understand, are within the appointment of the Dominion Government. The Vice-Admiralty Act was passed in 1863, and the High Court of Admiralty was created in 1861, and my impression is that they are acting under the previous Commission. It appears to me that if their jurisdiction were extended as I propose, there would be a great improvement in the course of justice.

Mr. MILLS. I would call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that among the things which the British North America Act places under the jurisdiction of the Dominion are militia, military service, and naval defence. Let us suppose that the hon. gentlemen should commission a ship for naval defence, and gave the officer in command certain instructions; and suppose the officer took the ship beyond the maritime league; could the hon. gentleman argue that his instructions had ceased to be operative? Suppose the hon. gentlemen were sending a ship to explore Hudson Bay, would that ship while on the high seas be beyond the jurisdiction of Canada? It appears to me that when this provision was inserted in the British North America Act, it was intended that that ancient rule in regard to the marine league should not be held to operate in the case of Canada, and that we have conferred upon us the power to enforce our rules and regulations beyond the limits of the colouy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that any good purpose can be served by entering into a discussion of the constitutional question. The hon. gentleman asks if we had a ship of war, whether or not our jurisdiction would extend beyond the marine league. I think there must be considerable doubt whether it could or not. It was found necessary to pass an Act called the Colonial Defence Act to enable certain Australian Colonics sending out ships of war to use that power when they sailed beyond their own jurisdiction. There was an Imperial Act passed to put that beyond doubt.

Mr. BLAKE. I think my hon. friend has done in this case what he has not always done, carried his views as to the marine league into actual practice, because when he did get a hostile vessel he got one which it was not safe to send beyond our jurisdiction.

Mr. WELDON. The Admiralty Courts formerly only exercised jurisdiction on the high seas; but now their jurisdiction extends to harbours and rivers. I myself have taken cases from rivers into the Vice-Admiralty Courts, and it was held that they had jurisdiction.

Mr. KAULBACH. I observe that the Vice-Admiralty Coart in Quebec receives an amount of money much greater than the courts in the other Provinces—in Nova Scotia, for instance, where the court receives comparatively nothing. In Quebec there are a Judge, a Registrar and a Marshall, all receiving salaries, whilst in Nova Scotia the Registrar receives nothing except the fees he manages to collect, which are quite insufficient for the services he renders.

POLICE.

Sir RIGHARD CARTWRIGHT. 1 may take this opportunity of asking the hon. First Minister if he has any explanations to give as to the mode in which he disposed of the sum of $3,000 which was in the Public Accounts of last year. I have not been able, though I have tried two or three times, to get him before the Committee on Public Accounts, and I would like to get the information now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would rather give it before the Public Accounts Committee.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

PENITENTIARIES.

27. Kingston Penitentiary $98,620 17

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that one part is detailed for an insane asylum.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is simply for an insane ward in the asylum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe only 500 convicts are estimated for against 625 in 1883.84. Is that based on any positive information, or is it mere guess work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On account of the limited cell accommodation in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, it was found necessary on several occasions, during the last few years, to remove a large number of convicts thence to the Kingston Penitentiary, and for this reason pro-vision was made in the latter for 100 convicts, besides its own, a very large number having been discharged, and there being no likelihood of more transfers in consequence of the completion of two new cell wings, the Warden has based his estimate for the year ending 30th June, 1883, on the probable requirements of Ontario alone.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A good deal of attention has been drawn at various times to the somewhat defec-tive drainage in this penitentiary. Several times the 500 convicts are likely to be the normal number for Warden and others connected with it have mentioned to me | Ontario? on my going through the institution, that there was considerable difficulty in this respect, that the original plans of the drains had been lost and there was difficulty in discovering where they all were. Another defect, but one which cannot be altered, is the smallness of the cells which makes it also according to whether we have good or bad times. more difficult to ventilate them than could be desired.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has not been any complaint lately about the drainage, as we have made some improvements in that direction. I do not think there is any great complaint just now or the complaints would have been laid before me. Of course, the cells are built, and they must remain. Any improvement in ventilation would require a special vote, but my attention has not been brought to that lately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the First Minister know anything about that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I have not heard; there have been no complaints made by the inspector or by the warden as to drainage to the Department; but, with reference to the old cells especially, those are far too narrow, and one could not help observing, although the place is scrapulously clean, that there was a little prison smell in the older portion of the building. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works tells me it is now in contemplation to break down the walls of the older cells and join two into one. I dare say the hon. gentleman is right in his supposition that the original plans of the drainage have been lost. That is possibly the case. Some years ago, once or twice, there was something like incipient typhoid, but of late years that has not appeared, possibly in consequence of an improvement in the drainage; at all events, there have been no complaints which have reached the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the Minister of Public Works thinks he can improve the cells by knocking two into one?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, I am sware the thing is a difficult one to remedy, but, living in Kingston, I have occasion sometimes to go over that institution, and I have noticed that some of those cells are not fit to keep people in for fourteen hours together, as they must be often kept. I think in 1882 we had some discussion over this subject, and I think the Minister of Public Works or somebody suggested then shafts in these drains to ventilate them better. The Minister of Public Works has, no doubt, been over the penitentiary?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I have.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is what may be called a large rotunda round which the cells are built, and of course it is doubly necessary in a building constructed in that fashion to see that there is some shaft or other that will completely ventilate it. I do no know if that has been brought to his attention, but I would take this opportunity of doing so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Traps.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would require more. In England they erect a sort of chimney and turn hot air into it in some way. Sometimes they go so far as to keep a fire. That keeps a steady up-draught from the drain, and where a number of human beings are crowded together, something of that kind is very necessary. It may perhaps be difficult to apply that system in this country. I am not prepared to say how that is, but where it can possibly be done, it is a very effective mode, as I think all medical men

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, with an increase of population, there will be an increase of convicts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, and that varies

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, a good deal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see there is a considerable reduction in working expenses, no doubt due to the reduction in the number of convicts. What is that account used for at present? Is that the expense of working the farm?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the quarry, I suppose? What does that $16,629 represent?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The cause of the reduc-tion is on account of saving under the sub-head of repairs to building and maintenance of machinery and light.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the $16,000 spent in, then ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Everything except mere maintenance-working expenses, repairs, maintenance of machinery and light, apparently, and matters of that kind all except maintenance, and salaries of the officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What industries are going on just now? How are the men being employed? How many go to the farm ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only contract is that of making locks. Then the labour is principally employed on the farms and about any buildings that may be wanted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The boot and shoe manufacture has been entirely discontinued.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is discontinued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And furniture sleep is discontinued?

SIT JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So nothing remains but the locks?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many are employed on that, roughly? Do you know?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I must refer the hon. gentleman to the Report attached to the Report of the Minister of Justice. He will find all that there. I cannot turn it up in a minute.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought you had the details in your hand there. Then, practically speaking, with the exception of the lock industry, the bulk of the convicts are employed either at quarry or farm ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quarry or farm.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you know whether the quarry is paying ; that is, whether it is possible to cut stone and sell it at a profit just now?

Sir JOHN A. MAUDONALD. Before Concurrence, I will read the warden's report, and save the hon. gentleman the trouble of doing so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, you are paid for doing it, and I am not. However, I am glad to find you have reduced the industries. There is another point, however, which I suppose is stated in the brief in the hands of the hon. First Minister. These accounts, I suppose, are really the surplus cost, after deducting the proceeds of the produce of the farm which go to the maintenance of the convicts. Apparently the total sum you require for these 500 convicts is very little over $60 per man. I should doubt whether $60 per man would feed the convicts and provide for them, unless a considerable portion of their maintenance is derived, in some shape or other, from the farm.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the whole cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Including vegetables and everything?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not the uniform, not the clothing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would include the clothing of the convicts, apparently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The receipts go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, to the Receiver-General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So the real cost of this is not quite as great as it appears?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. .

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a matter of some moment in comparing the relative cost, and I suggest that it would be no harm if a little memorandum were in future put at the bottom of the Estimates, stating the amount that had been received for the farm products or other earnings of the convicts during each year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure that will be in the report, but it would be well to put it as the hon. gentleman suggests.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be convenient to have it here. I am not in the least degree blaming the hon. gentleman for not having it, but it would be convenient for the whole House, because it is a matter of some little moment, in comparing these expenditures, to see how nearly each penitentiary is going towards supporting itself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will see that is done in the inture.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are three items which the hon. gentleman can take up in their order -capital account, industries, and miscellaneous, which did to St. Vincent de Paul ? Have they got a farm there ?

not appear last year, apparently. What are these for? Before you go to that, I may just enquire whether there is any intention of going on with the walls enclosing that field at the rear of the penitentiary. Immediately behind the Warden's house, there is a large property belonging to the penitentiary, and a wall was begun some years ago. Is it intended to enclose that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman now, but I will answer him when my own estimates come down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The reason I asked was that I notice the wall is only half built. Would the First Minister just mention what the capital account, industries, and miscellaneous items are ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The capital account is $400; the Warden states this amount may not be required. As regards industries, $168, that is for tools in the workshops, and may not be required. Then miscellaneous, $840, is for postage, freight charges, and unforeseen expenses, formerly charged to contingencies.

28. St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary $80,768 48

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a decrease of $700. The amount is about the same as last year, with this exception, which is in consequence of the Clerk of Works being transfered from the Justice to the Public Works Department, as well as all the other officers who were under the Department of Justice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call attention to the fact, that although St. Vincent de Paul has only 325 convicts as against 500 in the other, the relative expense is very much greater. Here we pay $60,768 for 325 convicts, as against $98,000 for 500 in Kingston. When you come to the head of maintenance you find the 325 cost nearly $100 apiece, whereas at Kingston they cost about $65. 1 should be glad to know what is the cause of this extreme difference. Of course, one understands that you may require a few more officers in proportion for the 325.

Sir JOHN A. MAUDONALD. It so happens, the expense of maintenance, as of all the other expenses there, has been out of proportion to those in Kingston. However, the hon. gentleman will see that a very considerable change has been made in the right direction. We know that the contracts are given for supplies at St. Vincent de Paul the same as elsewhere, but for some reason or other they cannot get food so cheaply as at Kingston. One reason may be that the Kingston Penitentiary is close to a town, and for many years there has been a great deal of competition among the people for furnishing supplies, and contractors have frequently lost money. As perhaps the hon. gentleman knows, contractors have suffered severely from the unwholesome competition. St. Vincent de Paul is more isolated than Kingston, and I suppose that the penitentiary is furnished with supplies by contractors from Montreal. However, the Government cannot help that. All they can do is to give the contract to the lowest tenderer. It is certainly a remarkable difference.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman quite sure that he has given the whole cause of this difference? I suggested just now that the Kingston people feed themselves to a great extent. The difference seems altogether too great to be accounted for on a mere supposition of extra prices. It amounts to quite 50 per cent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. As I understand there is a valuation at Kingston of the products of the farm. and it is charged.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is it with respect

MARCH 20,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, a small farm, but they do not raise much.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose the First Minister is better pleased with the condition of things at St. Vincent de Paul than at Kingston. I think he has usually contended in this House that it is a great misfortune to a country where very much is done, and where labour is successfully employed, in penitentiaries, that these scamps, by being confined there at work, come into unfair competition with the honest industries of the country, and there is not the same opportunity of protecting honest labour outside from the competition of those who are thus in the public service, as there is of protecting them against foreign competition. That is a feature of the commercial policy of the Finance Minister that has not yet been fairly worked out. But there is no doubt the condition of things at St. Vincent de Paul, according to the theory hitherto laid down by the First Minister, is much more satisfactory than at Kingston, because there they cost a great deal and do very little. Unless the hon. gentleman has very greatly changed his views in the past two or three years, he must be very much better satisfied with the condition of things at St. Vincent de Paul than at Kingston, and perhaps with a little exertion he might produce the same state of things at Kingston as at the other place.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is an old war between the hon. gentleman and myself. But, Sir, without going into the economical question, it is of great consequence, I think, to the honest workman outside the penitentiary, that he should not feel that he is being injured. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that, rightly or wrongly, the working classes, especially those employed in industries which have usually been introduced into penitentiaries, have constantly protested against convict labour, and it is of considerable importance that they should be satisfied that they were not interfered with, or interfered with as little as possible. I think it is worth while, on higher grounds than mere political economy, that these men should feel that their special trades were not interfered with. At the Kingston Penitentiary there is only one contract given, that for making locks and keys, and as there are but few and very small manufactories of locks and keys in Canada, that contract does not interfere to any considerable extent with the industry of the working classes. But where the convicts make boots and shoes, or furniture, or woollen goods, or anything of that kind, industries in which large numbers of people are employed, there is likely to be a great deal of dissatisfaction. At Kingston, the convicts are employed in farm labour and in raising their own food, and there seems to be no objection to that-at all events, the farming population do not complain of it.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is trying to shift his opinions upon the shoulders of the artisans. That is not fair to the artisans. If those fellows in the penitentiaries were labouring outside, their labour would come into competition with that of people outside, but because they happen to be labouring inside the penitentiary, the hon. gentleman's contention is that they cannot possibly do great mischief. If their labour comes into competition with that of the agriculturist, the agriculturist has as much reason to complain, and upon the same grounds, as any other class of the population. The hon. gentleman has laid down the rule that, instead of it being in the interest of the public to make these institutions self-sustaining the more expensive they become the better the people will be satisfied. The hon. gentleman will not find many artisans disposed to support his views.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHF. With respect to St. Vincent de Paul, a large number of escapes, or attempts to escape, were reported. Was this fact brought specially to the notice of the First Minister?

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was, last year. These attempts to escape were accounted for by the fact that there was no external wall. The external wall has, indeed, not yet been finished, and it is due to greater precaution being exercised and to good fortune that we have had no escapes lately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the works completed ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are not completed. We ask a vote of $30,000 to proceed with them. I will give the details when we come to that item.

29. Dorchester Penitentiary. $44,962 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The salaries are the same. Retiring gratuities, $500—that may not be required. Under the head of uniforms, there is an increase of $1,151; that is in consequence of winter dress being required for a greater number of persons during 1884-85. On maintenance, there is an increase of $1,086, in consequence of the increased number of inmates. Working expenses show a decrease of $381. Industries—$300, to provide tools for the workshop.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe there is a matron and also a deputy matron. How many female convicts are there?

Sir JOHN. A MACDONALD. On 30th June, 1883, there were 120 male and 5 female convicts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The fact is, I suppose, that these matrons represent the two separate penitentiaries or St John and Halifax.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it was thought unfair to dismiss them; they are both very good officers.

Mr. WELDON. Is the external wall round the penitentiary finished? There was an escape last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not a stone wall, but palisades. We are going on with the work of constructing the external wall; $30,000 were voted last year, and we ask for $25,000 more.

SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that Dorchester Penitentiary seems to be very considerably over-officered. There are 42 officers for 140 convicts, as against 59 officers for 325 convicts at St. Vincent de Paul, and 69 officers for 500 convicts at Kingston. I do not know what the peculiar circumstances of the Dorchester Penitentiary may be, but it does seem a very large expenditure for salaries, and a large number of men for the number of convicts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The disproportion is very great. No doubt the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice will be called to this debate, and the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I may say, however, that I am told that the farm at Dorchester is some 600 acres, as against about 150 acres at Kingston, which would require, of course, more guards if the men are scattered over so large a farm. Notwithstanding that, however, I should say that the institution was, to say the least of it, fully officered.

Mr. WELDON. Are there any occupations carried on there other than the making of brooms and brushes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is the sole industry.

30. Manitoba Penitentiary $44,874 26

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here there is a very large increase, as to which I would be glad to hear somewhat fully from the First Minister. In former times, of course, it was necessary to incurvery large expense in Manitoba, but as the hon. gentleman knows, that has been considerably altered of late years. The maintenance of the convicts and many other expenses, I should think, have must act according to his best judgment and discretion in fallen considerably.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is an increase of two officers: one a blacksmith instructor at $900, and the other a guard at $600. The former has been found neces sary in order to teach the Indians, who may be sentenced for long periods, the trade of blacksmithing. It was thought that they might be well employed in learning this trade as well as carpentering. In retiring gratuities there is an increase of $100, which may not be required; then there is $137 for officers' uniforms for winter and fall; and an increase of $5,153 in the maintenance of convicts, the maintenance per capita being $150.71. The increase is on account of increased population and estimated increases in the price of various sub-heads, such as rations, discharged convicts' clothing, discharge allowances, &c. The last item is asked for, but it may not be required. Then there is an increase of $4,685 in working expenses. The Warden states that for heating alone they have to expend at least twice as much as would be expended for a similar institution elsewhere, the winter being a great deal longer and a great deal more severe. They can, he says, always count on six months winter. The prison is so badly built that they have to pay a very large amount for steam heating, and the pumping also requires a great deal of steam, the well which they have to use winter and summer being very deep. The item for light is also large, by reason of the winters being so long and the days so much shorter than in the Eastern Provinces. They have to use a very large quantity of oil, and moreover the breakage of lamps is very great, owing to the cold and other causes. The Warden has also asked for a considerable increase on the farm, as he intends going into farming extensively in 1884-85.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be correct ; but I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in 1883 84, 80 convicts cost only $120 per head, while in 1884-85 they are estimated to cost $150 per head. Now that does appear to me rather unreasonable, unless there be some explanation not yet given, seeing that while everything in Manitoba has apparently fallen in price, the price per head has increased 35 per cent., and that for a larger number of convicts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand that last year's estimate was too low, and in the Supplementary Estimates there will be an item to make up the deficiency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman said something about Indians serving long terms.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; a good many are committed for very serious crimes, such as homicides and horse stealing, for which they have to undergo long sentences. It was thought that these convicts might well be instructed in blacksmithing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With regard to this question of terms it has been brought to my attention by various parties, some of them convicts themselves, that there is a very great discrepancy in the sentences inflicted apparently, for precisely similar offences by different Judges. No doubt this is somewhat delicate ground; but has it occurred to the hon. Minister that the Minister of Justice might, in some way or other, more or less supervise this matter ? I know that in the minds of many men a feeling, and not an unnatural feeling, exists, that there is a good deal of injustice done as between different people in this way. One Judge will sometimes give a man seven or ten years for an offence for which another Judge inflicts only two or three years. A good many such cases have come to my attention.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That question has long attracted the attention of jurists and legislators in England and elsewhere; but no remedy has been found. A Judge the penitentiary about two months ago, and I found 126

the circumstances of each case, taking into account not only the crime itself, but the moral guilt of the criminal Then, again, the Judge may find that a particular kind of crime becomes epidemic, and may have to inflict severe sentences in order to crush it out. There is, it is said, a passion among the criminal classes to imitate and catch the contagion of a particular crime that becomes epidemic, and that attracts public attention, and severe sentences are inflicted to crush out such crimes. Of course the law fixes a maximum and a minimum of punishment; that is all the law can do; it must be left to the discretion of the Judge to fix the sentence. However, it has always been the practice of the Minister of Justice, when a petition is presented, as is frequently the case in favour of a prisoner whose crime is supposed to be rather severely punished, to transmit the petition to the Judge, with a request for a copy of his report and the evidence; and very frequently, if the man has behaved well and is considered to have been punished sufficiently by that time, or likely to be in two or three years more, and the Judge recommends a mitigation of his sentence, the report of the Judge is always acted upon. Then, a well-behaved convict receives a certain number of marks, which very materially diminish his sentence; and these marks roll up very rapidly. So that, on the whole, I think there is no practical severity. There may be individual cases; but there is no means of avoiding the fact that a Judge sometimes takes a rash view of a prisoner's crime. Some Judges are perhaps too lenient, and others too severe. The hon. gentleman, in reading the criminal history of England, will find that one Judge is called a hanging Judge, while in the case of another Judge it is said a man must have strong interest to get a severe judgment from him. These are idio-yncracies which cannot be guarded against. But while I believe there is no undue harshness in this Dominion, the proper administration of the law all over the Dominion is proved by the peace and order which prevail in the country. I think there is as little crime in this country as in most countries in the world. Of course, in times of great distress, crimes of larceny increase a good deal; but on the whole, I think there is very little crime in this country, as the certainty of punishment is so great as to be an effective deterrent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, no doubt, is all true; but it is also true that there is a very great difference in the sentences of different Judges for the same crime. It is a very difficult question, I admit; and I suppose it could only be dealt with by diminishing the maximum and mini-mum in some cases, which might be worth consideration. There is nothing like the amount of violence in our country, I am happy to say, that there is in most countries; but I am afraid there is a good deal of disposition in certain counties to convict offenders, and that has to do with the comparatively small number of penitentiaries.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). Is it the intention of the Government to put anything in the Estimates this year for enlarging the Manitoba Penitentiary and building a prison wall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not prepared to answer the hon. gentleman now. There is nothing in the ordinary Estimates; but the Supplementary Estimates have not come down. I will not forget that the hon. gentleman has mentioned the matter to me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much land is attached to the Manitoba Penitentiary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 160 acres.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). I hope the Government will seriously consider the subject of building a prison wall. In its present condition, the prison is not safe. I visited seventeen prisoners living and sleeping in one corridor, with nothing but a glass door, and thereby eight iron rods between them and the open prairie. If an outbreak were to take place there, I am satisfied that it would result very seriously. Therefore, I hope the Government will consider the necessity of building a prison wall there, or commencing it, at any rate, this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the North-West prisoners are sometimes sent there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; because there is no other prison. There will be a vote asked for two or three lockups over the North-West, not merely to hold persons for trial, but sufficient to hold prisoners for short sentences.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought there were some in the cities.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are a few small prisons attached to the city police stations, but they are overcrowded. To save the great expense of sending prisoners under sentence all the way to Winnipeg, these buildings will be put up and will be a very great saving indeed.

31. British Columbia Penitentiary...... $29,569 29

Sir JOHN A MACDONALD. There is an increase in the salary of the Warden, from $1,400 to $1,750.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that officer reside, as usual, in the prison? I presume he has light and fuel and the rest of it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; he is a very deserving officer; he has less salary than the officers of Manitoba or Dorchester.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is he?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, Mr. McBride. The Warden has $350 of an increase for increased duties, as well as to place him more on an equality with other Wardens; there are two instructors at $750, one for tailoring and the other for shoomaking. It is intended to have all the clothing required for the officers and convicts made in the penitentiary, as this will give employment to the convicts and be a saving in the expenditure. Formerly, this clothing was made in the Kingston Penitentiary and sent west. On account of the increased population, the Warden appointed two addi-tional Guards, at $600 each. There are two instructors at $750 each, which, with the guards, $1,200, and the Warden $350, make a total of $3,050. The miscellaneous items amount to $400 for telegrams, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is besides a large increase, amounting to nearly $8,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The maintenance increase is $3,896, or $113 per capita. There is very likely to be a very considerable increase, owing to the great number of miners coming in from the south; there is great excitement among the mining population of California who believe there is a great find of both gold and silver in the mountains.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not that on the elistern slope ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On both sides.

Mr. CHARLTON. The maintenance per capita shows a. considerable increase-$113 against $83.89.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It must be owing to the increase in the price of bread and supply. All these things are done by contract and the lowest tenderer always get it. We must take the Wardon's estimate.

Mr. MILLS. Is any large number of these convicts Ohinese?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are 21 Chinese. Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk).

Mr. MILLS. Can the hon. gentleman say what proportion they bear to the population?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have heard it estimated at from 12,000 to 18,000 Chinese, but I fancy that is very uncertain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very vague, I fancy.

Mr. CHARLTON. The increase in the working expenses seems to be out of proportion to the number of convicts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The vote for last year was found too small; the Warden has asked for increases under the following heads: light, armory, kitchen, farm and stables. The working expenses have increased $621.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the tailor shop in the Kingston Penitentiary still exist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; there is a tailoring instructor there at $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose they still make for Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; that was done under the late Government, and that system has been continued. The hon. gentleman will see by that note of the Warden from British Columbia, they propose to make their own clothing there, so they must have got their supplies from there up to this time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may state here that the same sum is entered as for the current year; but, in the Supplementary Estimates, which will be brought down in a few days, it will be found necessary to add very considerably to this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The increased expenditure, the number of employees, and the larger volume. When I bring that down, I will state the reasons reported by the Committee.

Mr. CHARLTON. A portion of the increased expenditure will be due to the fact that five copies of the bound Hansard are to be furnished hereafter, in place of two, as heretofore.

37. Salaries and Contingencies, per Sergeant-at-Arms' estimate. $28,482 50 Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say here that there was an item last Session: "to pay to F. Houde, M. P., the amount of his Sessional indemnity." That was under circumstances we all know. There are circumstances which will warrant me in asking the House, in the Supplementary Estimate to make up a deficiency in the indomnity of two hon. members last year, my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail), and my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Robertson).

as that of the O'Callaghan American collection, purchased in New York. That is in the appropriation for the current year. We have no such requirements this year, and so the vote is reduced by $1,260

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no detail of that. It might be well for the Clerk of the House to put that in another time. All the other details are given.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will have that prepared before we close.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By the way, is the First Minister prepared to give any information as to who shall be appointed Librarian? That would be of some interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a matter under consideration just now.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I suppose the system of promotion will be adopted?

Mr. BOWELL. After examination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Qualifying examination or competitive?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are a good many applications, and I am proud to say that it is looked up to as an office of great importance. Gentlemen of the first rank in science and literature in Canada, have thought it worthy of their acceptance if it were offered to them. The question is not literary or scientific attainment. I know a good authority on these matters, Goldwin Smith, who says a Librarian who reads is lost. We want a man who understands books and looking after books. It ought to be a matter of very great care to select the Librarian. He should be a man acquainted with literature, a man of business, a man who knows the trade of book-selling, in fact, who knows how to purchase books at the cheapest rate in the best market. Then he ought to be a sort of walking dictionary

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He must read the books.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He must have read before he is appointed Librarian, and of course he is expected to keep up his reading, to a certain extent; but a man may be a very scientific man or a very literary man, and yet make a bad Librarian.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We shall try, with the assistance of the two Speakers, who will have to be consulted, to get a good man to satisfy all these requirements. I think my hon. friend called the attention of the House to the necessity of carrying out the principle of promotion, which has been advocated so strongly to-day. I think that is a correct principle-if we find in the Department persons who are fit for the work. Whether they are or not, I am not prepared at present to say.

Mr. CHARLTON. We are all united in heartily wishing the First Minister abandant success in filling the position properly. We hope he will get a good man, who will in some measure fill it as well as the gentleman who filled it lately.

Mr. MILLS. To whom have these applications been made? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy some have been made to Mr. Speaker, and some to the Government.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the intention to allow these names to go to the public?

and were rejected, would like the public to know it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The public is interested in knowing the names of these men, and would like to canvass their qualifications.

Mr. MILLS. The public might assist the hon. gentleman in making a selection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But the public cannot take the responsibility.

Mr. CHARLTON. The public, however, can express its opinion, and that is of some value.

40. Printing, binding and distributing the laws. $12,000 00

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I wish to make a remark on this item. There appears to be a good deal of dissatisfaction in the country with reference to the distribution of the Statutes. In the first place, they are very late in coming out. Last year they were not sent out until within a month or two of the present Session ; and when they do come out, they are sparsely distributed, so that it is a very difficult thing for people to get the laws. Now, every man is bound to know the law, and it appears to me that something should be done towards making a larger distribution of the laws. I may mention, in connection with this, that a large sum of money was expended last year in printing the reports of the Agricultural Committee. Each one of these reports is about the size of the Statutes that were passed last Session, and, I suppose, cost nearly as much as those Statutes did; and I venture to say that a more useless work has hardly ever emanated from this House than that report-at least that is my humble opinion. A man taking up that report and reading first one statement and then another, can hardly fail to see who is the author of each one. One man is a Grit, to be sure, and the other is a Tory. After they have made their statement, some of them think it necessary to explain on which side of politics they are. One boasts that he is not Conservative, but just a good Baldwin Reformer. Another man says "I am no Grit, I can assure you, but I believe in the hon. Edward Blake." That is the way they wind up some of their reports. Now, this House went to the expense of publishing that report and distributing a number of copies among the members-some twenty-five or thirty copies; and when we remember that the Statues have been but sparsely distributed, I should hope that the Government would take some means to extend more generally their distribution throughout the country, so that the people can have the laws more freely.

Mr. CHARLTON. I consider that report is perfectly useless, and it certainly was a most unnocessary expense to print it to the extent of twenty-five or thirty copies for each member. So far as I am concerned, I never distributed them at all. The information contained in them was not reliable, and in many cases it was misleading. It was purely an elec-tioneering document, and was issued for electioneering pur-DOSES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is quite evident that my hon. friend (Mr. Robertson) represents a city constituency. I distributed those reports, and I can say that they were read with the greatest interest by those who received them in my constituency. A Committee of Parliament went to considerable expense in getting that evidence, and it does seem to me that the least that can be done is that the public at large should have the bencht of the report. At any rate, the report was published by order of this House, and on the recommendation of a Committee of this House; and I think that the argument in favour of a larger distribution of the Statutes might have been urged without reflecting upon the House itself, and upon one of its Committees.

Mr. MILLS. I am an agriculturist, and I entirely concur Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that it in the views expressed by the hon. member for Hamilton. would be well. I do not think those gentlemen who applied I think a more useless report never emanated from the press. In my opinion, it is discreditable to Parliament to publish such a document. It conveys no information upon any question that it is important the public should be informed upon. Many of the questions are framed in such a way as not to elicit facts but to elicit opinions. Now, I venture to say that in the whole history of Parliamentary Government, no such document can be found. If you look at the old reports that have been collected at various times in England upon the state of agriculture, you find that enquiries were sent out to ascertain what the facts were. Why, Sir, when we wish to investigate any subject we don't want to know what the opinions of even a thousand men are; we know, as the hon. member for Hamilton said, that those men were either Conservatives or Reformers, and we know what their political opinions were; and if you ask any farmer his opinion upon those questions, you will get an answer in accordance with his political bias. But in order to enable us to come to a conclusion, we want the facts from which we may draw our own conclusions. We are not in the slightest degree better informed, after we have received such a report, than we were before, and I think it does no credit to Parliament.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order. He is not discussing the question before the Chair at all. The question is upon the vote for printing, binding and distributing the laws.

Mr. MILLS. I am just following in the wake of the two gentlemen who spoke before me. However, I am not disposed to discuss the matter further at this moment. With regard to the publication of the Statutes, the hon. gentleman from Hamilton says that he received them very late. Well, Sir, I can say I have not received them at all, and I believe I was elected at the same time the hon. gentleman was.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It had not been found out at the time.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, it was; and it was because it was found out that I am here now.

• Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was a matter of opinion, merely; it was not a matter of fact.

Mr. MILLS. It was a matter of fact. There was no doubt as to the fact, but the hon. gentleman appointed a returning officer, who was so devoted to him and his party that, upon the condition that his expenses should be paid, and upon condition that he should be protected against all injury and loss, he returned the gentleman whom the electors refused to return.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite clear the highly favourable account which that report gives—I have not read the report, not a word of it, and, perhaps, I never shall—but the flourishing account it gives of the agricultural condition of the country, renders it very dista-teful to hon. gentlemen opposite, who will not admit that this country can be prosperous or ought to be prosperous.

Mr. KIRK. So far as my own county is concerned, I will tell you what answers to these questions-----

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman from Hamilton says that these Statutes were very sparsely distributed. In this connection I may mention that the free distribution of the Statutes last year amounted to over 20,000 copies. In Ontario alone, 6,000 copies were distributed to Justices of the Peace. The distribution to Judges, to public institutions, to clergymen, to registrars and to all other officers, is as liberal as can be made. Of course it is not the fault of the Government if hon. members of this House wish to provide each one of their constituents with a copy of the Statutes at the public expense; but I do not think the Government are really able to do it. I hope, if the project which is now before a Committee of this House is accepted, for establishing a national printing house, that the cost of the Statutes will become so low as that even a more liberal distribution may be made to the people than is made now. Every member of this House receives, I think, three copies of the Statutes, and if they choose to give them to their friends, they may buy some other copies for themselves.

Mr. MILLS,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it the custom to stereotype these?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think not. I think they are only printed and distributed.

Mr. LISTER. I only received one copy of the Statutes. But the complaint is not so much about the number of copies that are furnished to the members of this House, as about the lateness of their being furnished. I presume it will be several months before the Statutes enacted this Session will be distributed. People who have to obey the law want to know what it is, and the legal profession throughout the country want to know what laws are passed in this House. My hon, friend the Secretary of State spoke of the establishment of a national printing bureau. I trust a Government printing bureau will never be established in this country, if the experience of the United States, as to the benefits to be derived, be any criterion.

Mr. WELDON. Copies of the criminal law have been furnished to only a few libraries, and several applications have been made to myself for the volumes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We hope next Session to lay on the Table the Consolidated Statutes, and these will render the past Statutes comparatively valueless. A liberal edition of the Consolidated Statutes will be issued at once.

41. Printing, printing paper and book-binding $70,000 00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The additional $10,000 is asked by the Printing Committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At the early part of the Session, I called the attention of the House to the question whether we could or could not supply former members of the House with copies of the various Sessional Papers. I should like to know what decision has been arrived at.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is quite right, if any gentleman has sat in Parliament, although he may have retired, either voluntary or compulsory, that he should have these documents. Such gentlemen are not very numerous and the arrangements will not greatly add to the expense. I think that ex-members should have copies of the Bills, papers and documents issued during the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I refer to the Sessional Papers and Journals more particularly. Some gentlemen file them, and would like to keep up the continuity. Of course, there will be some additional expense, but not enough to break us. I have received communications from several retired members, saying that they would be exceedingly glad to receive those documents. The Clerk has also received similar communications.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The matter has been discussed two or three times in the Printing Committee, in regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for South Huron, but on investigation it was found that the proposal would add enormously to the expense. Vcry nearly half the members of the present House are new members, which means that nearly that number are retired members. Such was the case with the previous Parliament, and it we send the Sessional Papers, which are very expensive and are bound volumes, it will be found an exceedingly expensive operation, and increasingly so. To send those papers simply for the succeeding Parliament would not, I fear, meet the view of the hon. member for South Huron, as his suggestion is that many ex-members would like to keep up the continuity of their sets. I had a letter the other day from an ex-Speaker, not of the Dominion Parliament, but of the old Legislature of Canada, and he desired to obtain the Sessional Papers. So far as the discussion has proceeded, it is manife st that the suggestion cannot be carried out, except at a very considerably increased expense. work being carried on with all promptness and regularity. In fact, the printing of the Statutes, which is done by the Government Department, has been found to be a matter of profit. Of course, there the issue of free documents is very limited indeed, and they are sold at a rate a little more than their actual cost, and, as I said, there has been a profit. I do not think, however, we can hope to introduce that here just now. The custom has been from the beginning to make large issues of Statutes, reports, &c., and to Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before I made the suggestion, I entered into a little calculation, from which it appeared that the additional number of Sessional Papers required would not exceed 250 or 300.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). What we thought was this: every member receives two copies of the Sessional Papers and Journals; and as the former member of the county would be a prominent man, he might probably be able to obtain a copy from the member.

Sir BICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Copies might be furnished only to those who applied for them, and a considerable number of ex-members would never apply.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I think it would be advisable that our Mechanics' Institutes and public libraries should be supplied with copies of Hansard.

Mr. BERGIN. Extra copies of Hansard were allowed to members of this House last year for the very purpose suggested now by the member for Leeds, that is, that they might provide the different institutions of this kind in their constituencies with this delightful literature.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). But we did not get them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). You will, this year.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Secretary of State, a few moments ago, informed us that it was contemplated by the Government to establish a Government printing house. I would like to enquire whether a plan has been decided upon by the Government, whether the present mode of printing has been found to be a satisfactory one, and if they have arrived at the conclusion that the work could be done more cheaply and more satisfactorily by another system ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a Committee of the House now enquiring into that matter, and that they will give the House and the Government the result of their enquiries. The Government has not yet come to any decision about the subject, and I think, before doing so, we will make enquiries into the working of the system in the neighbouring Republic; and in any case, it would only be after full enquiry that the Government would make such a change.

Mr. MILLS. Will this practically be a revival of the old Queen's Printer system?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole matter is now under consideration, but I may say that I do not think the present system is very economical, and certainly we do not tind it conducive to speed and regularity. We hear complaints about the issue of the Statutes being postponed for months, when they should be issued a few weeks after Parliament prorogues. We find, as I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite did, that the printing of Bills, reports, &c., are very much delayed, and sometimes these delays are exceed ingly vexatious I believe the experience in Washing-ton has not been favourable to economy in printing, but there they have plenty of money and they are rather inclined in those things to be extravagant. In England, the system of printing under the Queen's Printer, Mr. Spottiswood, and the management of the Stationery Department, under the well-known Mr.W. R. Greg, has proved to be most economical, the paper being procured at a cheaper rate than under a contract, and the in that.

work being carried on with all promptness and regularity. In fact, the printing of the Statutes, which is done by the Government Department, has been found to be a matter of protit. Of course, there the issue of free documents is very limited indeed, and they are sold at a rate a little more than their actual cost, and, as I said, there has been a ning to make large issues of Statutes, reports, &c., and to distribute them freely; and in the case of important Bills or returns, or other important public documents, large extra issues are asked for, and are printed and freely distributed. I do not think public opinion would be satisfied at present with the alteration of that system, by the cutting down the free issue and the selling of the documents, though it might be an economical system. I do not suppose we could hope to attain the same results as in England, though it would greatly conduce to regularity and speed to have the work done in one Department. The hon, gentleman asks if the old system of a Queen's Printer would be re-instituted. The fact is, that the expense of that system was so great that it broke down-it is only in nubibus, and would have to be commenced on a different footing and with a view to the custom in England, rather than that in Washington. However, as we have arrived at no practical conclusion on that subject, it is hardly worth while discussing it farther just now.

Mr. MILLS. The reason I referred to the old Queen's Printer system was, that the present proposal looked almost to me, like a revival of that system, which broke down because it was not satisfactory. I do not know that we can look to the English system, because there, as the hon. gentleman has said, the free distribution is very limited. The documents are printed at a fixed price, and given to those who are ready to pay that amount; whereas, in the American system there is a very large free distribution. In the American system, there has been found to be very great extravagance, as the Government there have taxed the people very highly, and the difficulty is to fin1 objects on which to expend their money, and, as we have noticed they are spending very large amounts in pensions. The pension list has grown so that we should almost imagine that millions of people were engaged in the public service during the Civil War. This has gone on increasing, year after year, until now there are several hundred thousand people on the pension list. The hon, gentleman has the same fiscal system here, the same advantages in the way of high protection -

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Here comes the National Policy again 1

Mr. MILLS. Yes; and so long as those views are dominant and a large public expenditure, the same results will follow as in the United States. If the hon, gentleman is anxious to economize, he should hesitate about keeping up that system.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is one grand dis tinction between Washington and here; there they find great difficulty in expending their surplus, and here I do not think we shall find any difficulty of that sort.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I quite agree with the bon. gentleman. I think there is the strongest probability that that difficulty will not stand in his way.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the Government adopt the new system of printing, I suppose it should stop the system of having the Government rending their printing to Chatham and other outside places, as at present.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; or to St. John or Halifax.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, there is something in that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the suggestion that the Votes and Proceedings should be sent to the Mechanics' Institutes, is worthy of consideration by the House, for I do not know of any means by which so many people could be placed in possession of the reports and proceedings of this House at so little cost. Almost every class of the community belong to the Mechanics' Institutes. You will find in every Mechanics' Institute throughout the country, merchants, mechanics, farmers and all other classes of people, among the members, and if you send these documents to thom, they will have an opportunity of seeing and reading them. A Mechanics' Institute, in fact, without these reports, is not a properly equipped institution. The hon. First Minister says the expense of sending out these reports is considerable. It is true, a very large volume, consisting of the report of the Committee on the operation of the Tariff, was sent out, and there are many people who think that the expenditure upon that was ill-judged and ill advised. I gave some copies of that report to some of the farmers in the riding I represent. I saw one of them afterwards, and asked him how he liked it. He said he found it very useful to light his fire with, and he thought he had enough left to last him all winter. I think the expenditure for sending out that vast edition was uncalled for and unnecessary; but I think the House will see the propriety of sending these sessional papers and reports to the Mechanics' Institutes throughout the country. The expenditure for that purpose will only be a drop in the bucket, and it will place the reports and Debates of this House under the supervision of a large number of people, who will value them very highly, coming from so intelligent, wise, and important an assembly as this. The present system of giving them to this one and that one does not commend itself to my judgment as being so bencficial as the one suggested by the hon. member for South Leeds, which I heartily approve of. Now, I hope this matter will be considered by the Government, and that unnecessary reports may not be printed and the amount thus saved expended in furnishing the Mechanics' Institutes throughout the country with one copy of Hansard as it is issued from day to day, and also with a copy of the various Sessional Papers.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I think the Government must see the propriety of the suggestion I made, that these papers should be sent to the Mechanics' Institutes and to the people of the country as liberally as possible. I hope my constituents will preserve and read them, as they always do. All my constituents can read, and I do not think any of them will convert these reports into fuel purposes.

Mr. KIRK. It has been said that the report of the Select Committee on the operation of the Tariff, which was circulated so liberally throughout the country last year, is That is my opinion also. A list of of very little value questions were sent out to be answered. If these questions had been sent to the proper persons, I dare say the answers would have been valuable; but if they were sent in every county to the same class of people, as they were in my county, I do not think, as a rule, the answers are worth much. This report, I am told, cost $10,000. My opinion is, that if it did, it was $10,000 thrown away. I find that six persons in my county answered these questions: and who are they? The questions were for the purpose of ascertaining the operation of the Tariff on the agricultural interests of the country; and those who answered them in my county were fishermen and mechanics, not one of whom, except one, has ever bought an agricultural implement larger than a hand hoe or a handrake: and yet people are expected to take their information with regard to the operation of the Tariff on the agricultural interests, from these people. Only one farmer answered these questions at all, and that man says that the effect of the operation of the Tariff has been to drive Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

people ont of the country, and that if they go away as fast as they have done for the last year or two, there will be none left to answer the questions, and therefore, they need not send any to be answered. These are the kind of answers we get. One of the questions was, "What changes, if any, are required to make agriculture a more profitable and desirable occupation?" One man, I notice says, "A slight increase of the duty on pork; that is all that is necessary." Another man eays, "The National Policy is a humbug." Another says, "We want free corn, free meal, free flour, free coal, and free salt." Some others say it is only necessary to keep Sir John A. Macdonald in power, as he knows all about it—what he does not know about the Tariff is not worth knowing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Can any hon. gentleman say that that report is valueless?

Mr. KIRK. Another man says, "Our children and our children's children will respect and bless the names of Macdonald, Tupper, and Tilley." Another man says, "All that is necessary to make the agricultural interests prosperous, and to complete the National Policy, is to turn out all the Grit officers and put Conservatives in their places." These are the answers to the qustions, and this book was so valuable that it was necessary to spend $10,000 to furnish the people with the answers given.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the instances given by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), do not fairly show the character of these answers. I know that in my part of the country we were instructed to send these questions to the presidents and vice-presidents of agricultural societies, to reeves and deputy-reeves, to councillors of counties, and to ten of the most important farmers of each municipality. That instruction was fairly carried out, in so far as my constituency is concerned. Neither reeves nor the presidents of agricultural societies are of one political persuasion; and the answers came from a class of people supposed to be acquainted with the agricultural interests of the county. I do not wonder that the hon. member for Guysboro' asserts that the report is of no use, because he says the answers came from a class of men in whom he had no confidence. Well, who, in his opinion, would be the right class? The class of men who gave the opinion, as one man did, that all that was necessary was to turn the present Government out of power. I presume there are agriculturists down there following the mixed pursuits of fishing and farming, and the one in question may have distinguished himself as a farmer by buying some agricultural implements more exponsive than a hoe or a rake. If that be the experience coming from the county of Guysboro', it is not the experience of the agricultural Province of Ontario. We consider the reports from there are very valuable and they come from a source that is respected by most hon. gentlemen of this House who know anything about the Province of Ontario.

Mr. KIRK. So far as Guysboro' is concerned, we have farmers there who would be able to answer very satifactorily questions about farming, but the questions were not sent to farmers but to mechanics and others. But one farmer has answered the questions at all. The answers I repeated are from farmers from Ontario. I gave but one answer from the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. TROW. I think myself that the report is useless expenditure. In the first place, the understanding of the Committee was that the report of the Committee itself, without the evidence, should be made. Being a member of that Committee, I took considerable interest in the examination of witnesses myself, with my hon. friends from Wentworth and Iberville. I disapproved of the action taken by the members of the Opposition at the time, having had no confidence in the Committee. However, a certain series of questions was published and printed for circulation. On examination I considered the questions quite out of place for any ordinary farmers to answer intelligently. The result was, that about twenty lists of questions were given to each member of the House, and I am satisfied that nine-tenths of those given to members of the Opposition were not circulated in their respective counties. The Committee was a purely partisan Committee, and the Conservative members of the House circulated the questions only among their friends, and the questions were of such a nature, respecting Tariff matters, altogether irrelevant to the farming community that very few farmers could answer them. I have received a tew copies of the work, but I have not opened it until a few minutes ago, simply because I have some knowledge of what the work is like, having been a member of the Committee. I attended every meeting of the Committee. I notice an answer given to the first question by a gentleman in Waterloo; he replies to a question in reference to the Tariff: "I know nothing about it, ask Moses Stringer." Many of the questions are answered in the same manner. It was never intended that the evidence should be published, and I disapprove very much of the action of the Printing Committee. It was a Joint Committee, composed of members of this House and the Senate, and the latter disapproved of this printing. It could not pass the Printing Committee until a very large, portion of the members had left for their homes, when a few members of the Committee met in the Tower Room-I think the day before the close of the Session-and passed the motion. Not one member of the Senate and but half the members from this House were in the Committee Room at the time. I was astonished when I saw the work of nearly 800 pages, which is, in my estimation, of very little consequence, and the distribution has been very lavish. Some members tell mo they have fifty copies lying at their homes now, not distributed, having come to the conclusion that the work was not worth distribution.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will remember that Mr. Wark and Mr. McLelan, and one or two others of the the report itself. Senate, were there.

Mr. TROW. Yes; two or three were there and protested against it, and left the room.

Mr. BOWELL. The motion was put, and as they objected to it, they got up and walked out when it was put.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What number of these reports was sent to each hon, member?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is in the records of the House. It was ordered by the House, and is not a Government matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. The manner in which this was distributed was vory irregular. I never got any at all. Perhaps the entire supply for the county of Wellington was sent to the promoter of the Committee, Dr. Orton. I got none of them, and therefore cannot say anything about the value of the production.

Mr. LISTER. I believe I received thirty or forty, and they are lying at the office. The boy uses them occasionally to light fires. In turning up the report and looking at page 84, I see that Mr. E. P. Watson, Reeve of Sarnia, winds up his answers by saying:

"All politic ans here know the above to be correct, but would not, of course, for party sake, admit publicly the facts, or they would be denomced and run out of their party, and many would be rained in their business."

Anotherigentleman, Mr. James H. Bowes says:

"I have assured the doctor's questions; will he be kind enough to answer mine? How is it that the Finance Minister has asked $28,000,000 for the Civil Service of the Government, when he said in the Rink in St. John, in my hearing, that $22,500,000 was more than sufficient for all purposes ?"

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There ought to be some limit to the expenditure incurred for such purposes. It is not denied that $10,000 of the public money has been spent for this. That is really an enormous sum to pay for the distribution of a report of that kind, and the thing should not occur again. I am not going to go into the merits of the concern, which I have not read, any more than the First Minister, but I do say that $10,000 is too much for such a purpose. In all these cases, the Committee, if it chooses, could make a short digest of the evidence and publish that, but should not publish a huge volume of this kind.

Mr. GUILLET. It is within the knowledge of the House that the evidence was ordered to be published last Session, by a motion of this House. The report the hon. member for South Perth speaks of, the publication of the report by the Printing Committee, in the Session of 1882, was brought before the Printing Committee and the usual number of copies were moved for by friends of his own, but a larger number wore ordered to be rublished afterwards. The motion was made, in amendment, that 5,000 copies of the report in French be published, and that was voted down, a majority of his friends of the Committee being present. Afterwards, when a fairer representation of the Committee was present, the motion was brought up again and rccomsidered, and 5,000 in English and 5,000 in French were ordered to be printed. That was the report. Last Session on the motion of an hon. member, it was ordered that 5,000 copies in English and 5,000 in French of the evidence should be published, and this is the report the House is now considering. It was done by order of the House on the motion of an hon. member, and not by the Printing Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. But that could not be, under the rules of the House, except after reference to the Printing Committee and a report from them on it, and I understand the Printing Committee declined to do more than order the printing of An hon. MEMBER. It was a recommendation.

Mr. BLAKE. A suggestion or recommendation is all the worse, because, by the rule, any motion to print is referred to the Printing Committee. That is a Joint Committee of both Houses, and it is that tribunal which we have fixed by our rules as the proper tribunal to decide what documents shall be printed; so that I do not understand how this ovidence, upon the statement of the hon. member, can have been regularly printed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As I understand, there was a reference to the Printing Committee from the House, under the rules of the House, of a motion for the printing of this evidence last Session, because he report had been printed the previous Session. When the matter came before the Committee, I do not remember whether the meeting was large or small, but I do remember that the motion was carried by the Committee; that a larger number than the usual distribution was determined upon; that the ordinary report on the subject was brought into the House, and that it was adopted by the House on the report of the Printing Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. And adopted in the Senate?

Mr. WHITE. I presume it was adopted in the Senate. but I do not know. The S nate is not the body which provides the money; this is the House which does that

Mr. FAIRBANK. The hon. member for Cardwell is kind enough to instruct me as to whom I should ask in regard to this matter, but I would repeat my question through you, Mr. Ohairman, to the Secretary of State, and would ask

No; it is not the value of the evidence. Let me read you the testimony of one gentleman here. He says, in answer to question No. 1-I need not read the questions, for I presume the Chairman knows what they are : " If we can buy an article free from duty, we can buy it far cheaper." In aswer to the second question, he says: "Since the National Policy is in force, he cannot buy corn-not to make it pay. There are very few that is raised in our market." This is his answer to the third question : "Our market is ruled by the Liverpool market; the National Policy cannot rule our market. Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; there are other answers

Mr. PATERSON. He says, in answer to the fourteenth has made a wrong guess. He is wrong this time, as he has been many a time before. He is not from Brant, but he is from a very good county. On the other hand, I could read answers the very opposite of that. I say there is no sense in expending such a vast amount of money in printing 400 pages of directly conflicting testimony. If it was to be of any value at all, it might have been done in this way: that the answers received should have been assorted, and it could have been done in a brief statement of three or four pages instead of 400 or 500 pages. It might have been stated that, out of 600, or 700, or 1,000, or whatever number of answers were received, we find a certain number give testimony in this direction, and a certain other number give testimony in that direction. Then you would have had a summing up, and you would have saved all this money that has been wasted in the printing of this evidence, and would have prevented the thing from being turned into-I might use the expression-almost a farce, as it is, reading one gentleman's statement and, immediately after, the statement of another who gives it an emphatic contradiction. There is where I con-To the sixth: "It will pay to breed horses when there is a good demand in some other country, and the United States has been our best market." Mr. FAIBBANK, or four heads, at most, and would have shown that such a number report in a certain direction, and such a number in another. But the result of all this vast expenditure can only be to excite amusement, if it does not excite indigna-tion at the waste of money. I think all the gentlemen of the House will agree with the remarks I have made in that direction, when they look at the book and read it. The First Minister says he has not read it, but if he looks through it he will agree that it was a waste of money to print it.

Mr. MILLS. I have already pointed out that these questions were not calculated to elicit information which would enable the House to come to an intelligent conclusion. It was, instead, a sort of political catechism addressed to various electors throughout the country to elicit the political opinions which they held on various questions connected with the Tariff. When we look at the character of these questions, they seem to have been drawn up for the purpose of ascertaining the political views and feelings of the party to whom they were addressed. Now, here is question 13:

""Are woollen goods and hardware in common use amongst the farmers increased, or otherwise, in price by the Tariff ?"

In answer to this question, I find one gentleman says :

"No; they are lower than they formerly were. Woollen goods are cheaper."

When I look further, I find in answer to that question that the same gentleman says that wool brings a better price than it did before, on account of the Tariff. You have dearer wool, higher wages, and yet cheaper woollen goods. All those things which make up the price of the article are higher than before, but the article itself is cheaper than before. Then, with regard to the prosperity of the parties, I find that those very parties who were selling their goods at a lower price than before are more prosperous than they were before. Now, are these answers of the slightest value to the House? It seems to me an utter waste of public money to employ it in the publication of a document of this sort, and I say so without any disrespect to the Chairman of this Committee.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). If these questions constitute a political catechism, they possess a strange significance. The hon, member for Perth (Mr. Trow) said a few moments ago that he was on that Committee, and as a representative member of the Opposition he stated distinctly that very few members of the Opposition sent out those questions to their constituents. They either refused to do so, or were afraid to have that catechism answered distinctly.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask the hon. Minister how many copies of the report of the Committee on Interprovincial Trade were printed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government can not tell. That is for the officers of the House.

Mr. LISTER. That is another perfectly uscless report. Hon. gentlemen sometimes come to this House full of projects. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint), as soon as he got here, moved for a Committee on Interprovincial Trade That Committee sat from day to day, and from week to week, and no doubt cost this country a good many thousand dollars. I suppose the report is a second edition of the report of the Committee of my hon. friend from Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton). I would like to know what this report on Interprovincial Trade cost the country.

Mr. PAINT. It was a small report of only 40 or 50 pages, but it contained all the information we could gather in the short time allowed us. I imagine that the cost of it, tain a good library room and fire-proof room, where all 127 including expenses of witnesses and the printing, was not over $1,000.

Mr. CHALRTON. Can the Chairman of that Committee inform us what have been the results of that report?

Mr. PAINT. The result of it was this: That the Quebec flour merchants assured me that they obtained their flour 13 cents cheaper; that the Grand Trunk Railway had 200 cars of freight for the city of Quebec; and they found that the pressure that Committee brought upon them was to their disadvantage. They attached locomotives to 100 cars of freight and took it to Montreal, and started it by the North Shore Railway; and from that time the Lower Provinces have received their freight during the summer at less rates-25 cents less per barrel of flour. The amount saved the country was about $75,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member should move the reappointment of the Committee.

Mr. PAINT. I desire to say that, owing to the opposition offered by the hon. member for West Durham, we were prevented from doing as much good as we might have done.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, gentleman has not informed us how the beneficial results were reached.

Mr. PAINT. The freight rate was lowered from Chicago to Halifax.

46. For binding, newspapers, &c $1,000 00

47. For purchase of works on America...... $1,000 00 Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was done with the amount, $1,000, voted last year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman was not here last Session when the leader of the Opposition pointed out the importance of have a special vote of $1,000 for this service. It was voted last Session, and is continued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What works were bought with the money?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not know. It was placed at the disposal of the Library Committee.

Mr. MILLS. It is very desirable that works relating to America should be obtained, as the Library is very defective in this particular. I should like to ask the First Minister whether any steps are being taken to transfer the Manuscript Department to the Library. I do not say the books should be placed in the Library where they would be exposed to injury and destruction; but it is very inconvenient to have them stored in the basement of the western block. I have had occasion to go there, and hon. members who are anxious to consult those manuscript volumes could do so with greater facility if they were more accessible. I hope steps will be taken to transfer that branch from the Department of Agriculture to the Library, and make it a branch of the Library. I believo Mr. Brymner is a very competent officer, and one who takes great interest in his work, and it is not of advantage to him or to the public that this Department should be placed in a basement, where it is almost inaccessible. There is not sufficient light and ac commodation, and those historical records are rendered almost useless to the public, at the present time, on account of the inconvenient position in which they are placed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is inadvisable to place them in the Library. They will be safer elsewhere. In England, the Archives are under the charge of the Master of the Rolls, and are kept in a separate place, entirely distinct from the Library of the British Museum. The hon. gentleman was quite right in stating that our manuscript volumes are not accessible, because there is not sufficient room; but the new building in course of erection, will conCOMMONS DEBATES.

documents and valuable books will be properly protected, and Mr. Brymner will be there.

Pictou Cattle Disease (revote)			5,000	00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe an item, Picton Cattle Disease (Revote) $5,000. What is the condition of matters in regard to that particular vote?

Mr. McLELAN. That was for the suppression of the disease, which existed in a certain portion of the county of Pictou. Steps were taken to stamp it out, and they have proved very satisfactory, according to the report of the officer in charge. In fact, it has almost ceased to exist. Only twenty-five cases were reported during last year, and only two cases during the last three months. Compensation was given for all cattle compulsorily slaughtered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is a regular staff kept at Point Edward, or is the sum taken to enable the Minister to obtain assistance in case of need ?

Mr. MoLELAN. A staff is maintained during the year at Point Edward, for the examination of cattle passing through the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If these are permanent appointments, details should be given. Now, I should like to know what staff the hon. gentleman rotains at these three points?

Mr. McLELAN. There is not a large staff maintained at any of these points. An inspector is kept at each station, and a permanent caretaker for the building, and if additional help is required, it is supplied.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What salaries do the inspectors receive?

Mr. McLELAN. At Quebec the salary is $1,000; at Point Edward $1,200. The Inspector at Point Edward has some other duties in connection with the office.

Mr. LISTER. Who is the Inspector at Point Edward ?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Orton.

Mr. LISTER. Is there a cattle quarantine at Quebee?

Mr. MoLELAN. There is at Point Lévis.

Mr. LISTER. Is there any restriction upon cattle could from Europe?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; upon cattle coming into the Dominion from any point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a large number of cattle at Quebec, and it is a most interesting place to visit—there being 300 or 400 thorcu₂hbred cattle there at a time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice here the item for the Lazaretto at Tracadie. Was that not introduced last year for the first time?

Sir John A. MACDONALD.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has been there for several years.

Mr. WELDON. How many patients are there in it, and is the number increasing?

Mr. McLELAN. The number is not increasing, I am happy to say. The increase in the item is an increase of $100 to the medical attendant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who used to pay the expenses of this institution?

Mr. McLELAN. The Local Government, until within three years ago.

Mr. WELDON. How many patients are there?

Mr. McLELAN. About twenty-three.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are all the leprosy cases confined there; are they isolated?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; the Government were quite willing to take charge of it, because it is a disease which spreads most insidiously, and the causes why it originated there and continued there are mysterious. The Government thought it better, especially on a strong remonstrance being made by the Local Government that this was certainly a matter connected with the public health, that it should be maintained by the Dominion Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I should like to have the Minister make some explanations with regard to a matter about which I have received soveral letters. There is a difficulty in the minds of many people as to the reasons why the quarantine law is so very strict. Parties desiring to import some highly bred cattle, find them ordered under quarantine, where they remain for three months. And they naturally think that some concession could be made on the assurance they give their members, and which we will give to the Department, as to their respectability, and as to their being positively sure that there is nothing wrong, with the cattle. If I rightly comprehend the matter, the G vernment themselves are not at liberty to relax the regulations in this respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. PATERSON. I believe it is a matter of Treaty with Great Britian, as well as part of the Statute law, if I understand it aright. What I desire is that the Minis'er should give a clear statement upon this point, which would go to the country, so that the people might understand the matter.

Mr. McLELAN. This catt'e trade is, of course, one of great and growing importance. In 1877 the number of cattle exported was 6,940, and this trade has grown to 64,625 in 1883. The number of sheep increased from 9,504, in 1877, to 114,352 last year. This trade is of such great importance to the country that every precaution is necessary in order to preserve and maintain it. The hon. gentleman is aware from what has become public, that it stands in a very critical condition, that cattle coming into England are watched very closely for fear of infection, and if it became known that infected cattle could get into this country, and spread disease amongstour own cattle, it would very greatly injure that trade in England. The hon. gentleman is also aware that there is now a difference in the treatment of Canadian cattle in England, from those coming from the United States, the latter being immediately slaughtered without being taken into the country, in consequence of the cattle disease existing in the United States, while those from Canada are not so treated. So long as it is believed in England that there is no disease existing here, our cattle are allowed to land and are worth $20 or $30 per head more way our vigilance over imported cattle, those who are interested in the home production of cattle would take advantage of that fact, and use their influence to stop the importation of cattle fron Canada, except upon the same conditions as now exist with regard to American cattle. So that I think the hon. gentleman will see the necessity of the utmost vigilance being used with reference to the admission of cattle into the country. Therefore, at Halifar, Lévis, and other points at which they are imported, they undergo a quarantine of three months, so that no disease may be allowed to enter and spread throughout the country; and this fact has its weight and influence on the other side of the Atlantic, in maintaining the advantages which we possiess in our cattle trade there.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I learned myself, from personal enquiry at the Department what the hon. Minister has now stated; and my object in bringing the matter up was that he might state it openly and authoritatively. I think his statement will commend itself to the people of the country. Though there may be some cases of hardship, the people will understand, from the figures he has given of the enormous swelling of our trade in cattle, that the advantage of that trade is so great that personal convenience should not be allowed to stand in the way of its development.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows that in England strong attempts have been made to exclude all cattle, as much as possible, for the sake, it is said, of preventing disease from being introduced into the country; but I dare say there is an arrière pense there, and that the object is to favour English cattle by keeping out all foreign cattle. We know that legislation has been introduced into the House of Lords for this purpose. So we have to take the greatost care not to give any excuse to the authorities in Eogland, especially to those who examine cattle at the port of debarkation, for killing or destroying cattle coming from Canada as being infected. In order to prevent the possibility of that arising, we must take care of the cattle coming from England; because the Americans have learned the great advantage of our system at Point Lévis. It is most interesting for any person, even though he is not an agriculturist, to visit the quarantine ground there. The fortifications built on the south bank of the St. Lawrence at Point Lévis, and the surrounding champaign lands have been devoted to and fitted up for this purpose. The classification is perfect. I visited the quarantine last season, in company with the Minister of Agriculture, and I saw considerable herds of cattle which were brought there for the western States by one of the largest importers of shorthorns in the western States, who preferred to bring the cattle by way of Quebec, and to feed them for three months at Point Lévis at his own expense, to taking them through the United States; where they have the same quarantine, but with greater expense and with less care to the cattle. Our system is so much better that it has got to be a regular branch of business to bring cattle for the western States by the St. Lawrence. The trade, as the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) traty says, is of such importance that no precaution too great can be taken to preserve to us the exclusive market, so far as North America is concerned, of the live cattle trade; and our friends, who may occasionally gramble at their cattle being kept too long at Quebec, must put up with it, for the benefit of the trade concerned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is quite right. It would be a thousand pities if anything were done which would interfere with our live cattle trade, which has grown to such enormous proportions within the last ten years. Have many cases of disease occurred in the quarantine during the last year or two?

Mr. McLELAN. No cases at all have occurred. I may some time, there is no one mention, in connection with this subject, that the Minister There is no one there compet reports that a cargo of Canadian cattle were sont in disease has arisen on the way.

February, through the United States, and became infected in some way. On arriving at the Mersey they were all ordered to be slaughtered; and he points out that this shows the importance to Canadian shippers of shipping their cattle through ports in their own territory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRI(HIT. I think it comes under the authority either of the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Agriculture to see that precautions are taken for the proper treatment of cattle on the railroads. Some short time ago, a good deal of complaint was made of the cruelty with which cattle were treated by neglect to give them water, and so forth. That matter, I think, was brought to the notice of the House, and, if I remember rightly, one or two clauses were put into the Railway Act bearing on the subject. Has the hon. Minister any information as to how far that evil has been remedied? It spens to be a cause of disease.

Mr. McLELAN. Arrangements have been made for the care of cattle on the railways.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals provides that cattle shall not be allowed to travel more than twenty-six hours without stopping for rest and food. I wish to ask if there is any danger of infection to cattle in Canada from American cattle pussing through Canada, from one part of the United States to an other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Every care has been taken to provide against that danger. That subject caused great anxiety to my hon: friend the Minister of Agriculture. On the one hand, he wished to prevent the introduction of disease, and on the other hand, he was very unwilling to deprive our railways of that great source of traffic. But complete arrangements have been perfected, by which these American cattle trains going through Canada are completely isolated; and after the discharge of the cattle, the cars are fumigated and scoured and cleaned; and I understand that there has not been a single case of infection on that account.

Mr. TROW. It is satisfactory to know that the Government have taken such precautions to prevent any disease. This trade has grown to such dimensions and is such a source of profit that it behaves the Government to take every precaution in their power against any injury to it. Our route is much preferable to that of the United States. I have heard from good authority that the cattle get inured to a sea voyage in going down the St. Lawrence, while from New York they are immediately upon the ocean, and the result is, they frequently become sick the first or second day, while ours do not.

Mr. WILSON. Has the Government appointed inspectors at some of the points on the Canada Southern to inspect the cattle when they arrive? Is there an inspector at St. Thomas?

Mr. McLELAN. There are inspectors at three points, Sarnia, Amherstburg and Windsor.

Mr. WILSON. Is there an inspector at St. Thomas? I understand there is a man there, Mr. Smithers, who is officiating in that capacity. I wish to call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that the Government appointed a man at St. Thomas, apparently, who, as far as I can learn, is not competent for the position.

Mr. McLELAN. Ho is there morely as a caretaker. The cattle are inspected before reaching that point.

Mr. WILSON. Should any disease break out among the cattle on arriving at St. Thomas, where they are detained some time, there is no one competent to impect them. There is no one there competent to ascertain whether any disease has arisen on the way. Mr. WILSON. I should like to know what are the dutics of this carotaker at St. Thomas?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To take care of the cattle.

Mr. WILSON. I should suppose the shippers would see to the performance of that duty.

Mr. McLELAN. He has to see that the regulations respecting the transport of cattle are carried out at that point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To see that they get the necessary food, rest and water.

Mr. WILSON. This man has been acting, then, under false pretences. He has assumed the dutios of Government Inspector, and is so regarded.

Mr. McLELAN. He is an inspector of all the regulations. While he may not be a scientific man, with respect to the diseases of cattle, yet he is an inspector of the transport of cattle, to see that the regulations are carried out.

Mr. WILSON. Then he has no duties at all in reference to disease, and if any disease should occur, he has nothing to do with it. He has no right to prohibit cattle being shipped on account of disease.

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I see an amount of $5,000 for public health. That question is exciting attention more and more in our midst. This morning there was a strong deputation of medical men asking for a grant towards a publication that would enlighten the people as to the hygienic measures to be taken for the public health. Unfortunately, the hon. Minister was sick and could not attend to that deputation. I hope, however, the Government will consider the matter, and see what they can do towards extending the attention of the people in that direction.

Mr. BAKER. With regard to the quarantine station at Victoria, there is a reduction of $100, and that at Vancouver Island is erased. Will the hon. Minister explain this?

Mr. McLELAN. The item, $1,700, last year was a supplementary vote for Victoria, where the quarantine was established, and the vote for Vancouver, therefore, is not required. It was changed last year in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to take this opportunity of stating that it has come to my knowledge that, contrary to the representations of my colleague and myself in favour of having this quarantine station at Albert Head, where there is every facility for it and which is within easy distance of Royal Roads, it is the intention to place it at Plumper Bay, Esquimalt Harbour. This appears to me to be anything but the correct thing to do. To get inside Esquimalt Harbour, ycu have to pass a very narrow entrance; you have to thread the needle, so to speak, through all the shipping, passing about a mile and a quarter inside, where all the menof-war are at anchor, to get into Plumper Bay. I would like to know on whose recommendation this decision has been arrived at, and to take this opportunity of placing on record my protest against this selection, as it is not a fit place for the quarantine station, and I wish to be held blameless in the matter.

Mr. BAIN. I would ask the hon. Minister whether the cattle quarantine at Halifax is in active operation, and to what extent it is availed of?

Mr. McLELAN. The cattle imported by way of Halifax are quarantined there the usual time. Mr. Wilson. Mr. BAIN. The reason I ask is, not that I am disposed to find fault with the station, but a gentleman from that station, General Laurio, seemed to be unaware there was a quarantine station there in active operation. I understood him to say they had to import by way of Quebec.

Mr. McLELAN. The facilities for keeping them at Halifax are not yet very good, and they are taken charge of by the quarantine officers and kept separate and guarded until they reach Quebec, where there is every means of caring for a large number.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what precaution has been taken to prevent the importation of diseased cattle into the North-West, for ranching purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been no disease.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been none in the North-West.

Mr. CASEY. It might be well to have some inspection.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I should like if some hon. member of the Government would pay me the courtesy of giving me an answer to the question which I put, as to who gave the recommendation on which the place for the quarantine hospital was changed at Victoria.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be enquired into before Concurrence. The hon. gentleman having asked the question, of course he will get an answer, and before Concurrence he will be informed what are the grounds why this particular place has been selected.

Mr. McLELAN. I understand it was mainly on the recommendation of the Admiral of the fleet, to Sir Alexander Campbell, while he was there. He is supposed to be an authority on such matters.

Mr. BAKER. That gives rise to a very nice point. What has the Admiral to do with my constituency. 1 have made certain recommendations to the Government, and I have taken a good deal of trouble about it. I went down there with my colleague to see if Albert Head would be a place to be approved of, and a recommendation has been made to the Department recommending Albert Head as the most suitable of all places; and then, in face of all this, supported, I believe, by the Dominion Government agent, I find that an alteration has been made, which has caused delay, for the quarantine hospital has not been gone on with, and I am told, forsooth, that it has been done on the recommendation of the Admiral. I should like to know what the Admiral has to do with the district of Victoria. I believe I represent the people in that part of the world, and I should like my recommendation attended to, or some very good reasons given why it is not.

Mr. McLELAN. We will get the explanations for you.

Mr. WILSON. I should like some detailed statement as to the $5,000 which is asked for the public health. I hear an hon. member say it has stood for several years. If that is so, we would like some explanation, we would like to know the results of the expenditure.

Mr. McLELAN. Under the head of public health, there are statistics gathered, mortuary statistics and otherwise. I believe the expenditure has not been very large, but it is considered necessary to take a vote to cover any expenditure which may arise, and the expenses which must necessarily follow the collection of mortuary statistics.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Minister explain to me the method by which those statistics are obtained?

Mr. McLELAN. Agencies have been established at a number of the principal towns, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, St. John, Charlottetown, Winnipeg and Quebec, and it was proposed to establish agencies at all other points to obtain returns from medical gentlemen connected with the medical society during the year, but only a very limited number of returns have been received during the past year. It was expected by the Minister that a public system would be established and maintained throughout the Dominion, but up to the present time he has not been very successful in getting returns from a very large number of medical gontlemen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that the chief object of this vote is the collection of statistics ?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Becau of notice in the Public Accounts of 1883 that, under the head of public health, there is a considerable expenditure, amounting to $14,000, but it appears to have gone mostly to medical men. I do not see any item there for the collection of statistics at all. There is a large grant to the Winnipeg General Hospital, and then, apparently, payments to nine or ten medical men for professional services, such as attendance on sick immigrants, and all that kind of thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is separate from this. This is the $5,000 which has been voted for several years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is for public health.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To meet expenses of precautionary measures for public health.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am looking at the Public Accounts for 1883, in which precisely the self same vote occurred, and immediately after the lazaretto, which is the item preceding, and immediately before the cattle quarantine, which is the item following, I find these items I refer to, and not one syllable is in that referring to the collection of statistics, at all. I think the hon. Minister must be confounding this with some other vote. I am referring to page 143 of the Public Accounts.

Mr. McLELAN. I think the hon. gentleman is naming the salaries of quarantine officers throughout the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; the quarantine officers are quite distinct. The item of public health is under the head of Quarantine Service, between the item for the lazaretto and the item for cattle quarantine. There ean hardly be any possibility, looking at the Estimates, of mistaking it.

Mr. McLELAN. The quarantine officers would come under the head of public health.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But these are not quarantine officers. They are separately charged for. If the Minister will just look at the Public Accounts, he will see that this evidently does refer to the item under discussion.

Mr. McLELAN. This large item of $10,487, forming part of that $14,000, is a special sum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that is a special sum. The minor items, however, refer to the public health.

Mr. McLELAN. The officers at Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, St. John, N.B., Charlottetown, and Quebec have all made returns, and have all been paid for them, but it is not found possible to commence the work of compilation from these returns until September. The information obtained from these cities will be published forthwith, and submitted.

Mr. WILSON. Who are the parties employed in these cities ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are the local Boards of Health.

Mr. McLELAN. They are the local officers in the cities. The system was suggested by the Medical Society, and it was upon their recommendation that the Boards undertook to do something in this respect.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that so far as they can conveniently, they utilize officers appointed by the Provincial Board.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The local Board.

Mr. WILSON. I think they are appointed under local legislation, forming local boards, and empowering municipalities to appoint health officers. I think it would be much better for the Dominion Government to co-operate with the various Local Governments and have a more efficient system of collecting those statistics. Virtually, we are unable to learn from the Minister to-night that any practical results have been obtained for these $5,000. I am not complaining of the amount, but I do complain that the House is not in possession of full information as to the results obtained from the expenditure of this money.

Mr. McLELAN. I think I stated to the hon. gentleman that the reports would be published forthwith.

Mr. CASEY. There is one item here for 400 copies of Dr. Playter's Sanitary Journal. What is done with these copies?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the first vote of this kind was taken last Session, December twelve months. The leading physicians of the Dominion met in Ottawa and had a conference with the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Railways and Canals was present. An arrangement was come to by which these medical gentlemen, on their return to their respective sections of the country, would induce the members of the Boards of Health to co-operate with the Minister of Agriculture in obtaining statistics. It was agreed by the Minister of Agriculture that the Board of Health in each city, where one existed, should nominate their officer, and the Government would pay him a sum in proportion to the population of the city where such board was established; and it was under that arrangement that this vote of last Session was expended in paying these local officers which were recommended by the local Boards of Health to the Government. These porsons were employed and paid for the collection and forwarding to the Minister of Agriculture of statistics from that particular city. To a certain extent, that vote was an experiment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think if the Minister would look a little more carefully at vote No. 8, he will see that the explanations he has been giving has reference to a different vote. There is a vote of $20,000 to meet expenses in connection with health statistics which comes under the head of agricultural statistics. Now, all the explanations that have been given are quite pertinent as regards that vote, and would be quite right if that was under discussion; and I think the Minister will see I am correct. and that this particular vote of $5,000 is intended for a different purpose in statistics, that it is intended, as it was actually used in 1883, for defraying certain expenses in connection with hospitals. $5,000 would go no distance at all collecting health statistics, which is an expensivo subject; the $20,000 which is asked for probably would go some distance.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister has not yet told me what is done with these 400 copies of the Sanitary Journal.

Mr. McLELAN. They are sent to the health officers of the different cities, for distribution.

Mr. CASEY. Besides the expenditure on hospitals-some unnamed hospital, $650-there are four or five parties puthe hon. Minister to be prepared with details; but he can give an idea of the general nature of those services.

Mr. McLELAN. The details of that have not been submitted to me, but they can be given on Concurrence.

Mr. CASEY. Then there are professional services mentioned here, one of them a considerable amount, $1,200.

Mr. McLELAN. That is at Winnipeg, for attendance on emigrants.

Mr. CASEY. I think this discussion has brought out one point of value. Although this vote was taken to promote the public health, nearly nothing of that kind has been done, so far as we can see. No precautionary measures have been taken, so far as we can make out. I think a vote for precautionary measures would be a highly proper one, but very little can be done with $5,000. I hope that a good deal has been done with the vote for statistics, but unless those statistics are supplemented by direct measures of precaution, for which a vote should be taken sufficient to do something effectual, there is no doubt that in cases of the outbreak of epidemics, but very little can be done with so small an amount of money. I think the Government are quite justified in taking a vote large enough to do something substantial. I am aware the Provinces do much for this sort of work, but still there are many districts for which it is the duty of the Dominion Government to provide.

Mr. PLATT. The information given in regard to public health last Session was somewhat indefinite, and it is still more indefinite this Session. I understand from the Minister that several of the health officers have not yet reported. If so, the scheme adopted last year, and which has been carried out at the public expense, has, to a certain extent, at least, proved a failure. Are there any new plans about to be adopted whereby greater efficiency in this service can be secured. We know that deputations are now of frequent occurrence in this city. Various schemes have been proposed to the Government, and I should like to know if some other-plan is to be pursued.

Mr. McLELAN. The Minister has not yet fully decided as to what course he may take in future ; but he has acted, so far, largely under the advice of the medical societies of the Dominion, and has attempted, with their advice and co-operation, to establish a system for gathering statistics in regard to public health, such as will lead to precautionary measures being taken against disease. How far the plan adopted may prove successful, remains to be proved. The best possible plan will be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. I am afraid the Department has relied too much on medical associations and too little on themselves. We know that these associations meet once or twice a year during which the Department obtains information from them, but after those meetings the Department hears very little from them. I know the feeling in all Governments is to rely on the medical profession in all such matters and carry out what they suggest; and if a failure should occur, the medical men are ready to propose some new plan. If any such scheme is to be successful, the Government must take hold of it in a different manner. Some thorough plan must be organized-though I do not think it is yet decided to what extent the Dominion Parliament should extend their measures with respect to public health, and to what extent such duty devolves on Provincial Governments. As I understand it, this Parliament can do little more than gather statistics. and the practical measures are largely left to, the Provincial Governments to carry out. The scheme carried on during the past year for collecting statistics and doing certain work, especially in Ontario, has been simply doing what was, in my opinion, very much betterdone by the Provincial unreliable and unsatisfactory at the present time. It was Mr. CASEY.

authorities. I cannot see that the money expended by this Parliament has done very much to add to the information gathered by the Provincial Board of Health. I hope, before Concurrence, the Minister of Agriculture will tell the Committee how much money will be spent during the coming year and what benefit he expects to derive from it.

Mr. McLELAN. The voto last year of $20,000 has not all been expended, and the Minister proposes to ask for only $15,000. The total amount expended last year is utder $3,000. The Minister was not able to get the system into operation to spend more money, but he hopes to expend a larger sum during the coming year, by having the system extended. The object in attempting to co operate with the Medical Society was merely to restrain exponses. The proposition had been made by the medical societies to do certain work at merely nominal fees, and a scheme was prepared to co-operate with the Department; but how far it will be successful will be a matter of further experiment.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister tells us that the Government are simply carrying out the suggestions of some medical associations. There is no responsibility resting on those gentlemen; it rests with the Administration. While it may be proper and right to consult medical men and avail themselves of their services, they cannot shift the responsibility of the failure of any scheme on the medical gentle-men whose assistance they called in. The statement of the Minister is a very extraordinary one. Hon. gentlemen opposite obtained their present positions under the protence that they were eminently competent and were able to find a solution for every question coming before them. Now, the Minister came forward and admitted that in this matter they were wholly incompetent and perfectly helpless; that they had again to call in medical men to say what they had better do. Then the Minister asked the advice of those gentlemen, acting on the assumption that if the system had not gone right, the medical men were responsible for it. That is not the ground on which hon, gentlemen opposite secured their positions on the Treasury Benches. The statements made to the people were of a different character. We know that the First Minister told the people that he was eminently qualified for the position of First Minister; that if he were just elected to the position of leader, supported by a majority of the people, prosperity would revive, people would become more indus-trious and confident than before. They now say we wast this money set forth in the Estimates, and when they are asked to give some information, we ascertain, with a good deal of difficulty, that they were mistaken in the scheme. They now tell the House they are not responsible for the failure and that it was due to the medical mon and not to them.

Mr. BERGIN. Once again the hon. gentleman opposite has discovered a mare's nest. He tells us that the Government know nothing about the expenditure. What are the facts? $20,000 were voted last year for the collection of statistics and not a dollar has been spent, according to the Public Accounts. $15,000 were voted last year for public health, quarantine and cattle diseases; and of this $15,000, $32,473.82 were spent by the Government, leaving unexpended $12,527.

Mr. SPROULE. I think last year we had merely an initiation of the subject, and the trouble was that insufficient money was given for the purpose. During the present Session there has been a meeting of medical men in this House, and in harmony with them a number of medical men in the country, for the purpose of providing a scheme for more effectually carrying out the object, than these heretefore adopted. I think it must be acknowledged that the statistics as collected by the Provincial Governments are very thought desirable to add this money to the amount given by the Ontario Government and devise a scheme whereby one set of officers could collect the information. I believe, however, that so far that scheme has failed. I think the importance of the subject demands that we should vote some money in this House, and I have no doubt that, now it is under consideration, in a short time a scheme will be devised which will accomplish the object, for not a very large amount of money; and from year to year if necessity require ; and if this amount is added to, at no distant day we will obtain very valuable information for the country for a small sum of money.

Mr. CASEY. I am afraid it is the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) who has found the mare's nest. He says the Government took a vote of $20,000 and did not spend any of it. That is a serious reflection upon the Government, because the money was given them for the purpose of spending it.

Mr. BERGIN. No; because the Government asked the medical men to present to them a well-digested scheme, and took a vote in advance, but the scheme was not presented because it was desired to take the opinion of the different medical societies throughout the country. That has been going on since, but it was decided to wait until the meeting of the Medical Association, in August next, when the scheme would be either approved or rejected by the representative body of the profession.

Mr. CASEY. Then they are voting for a scheme which is not digested, and I hope when they get it it will agree with them. If they have no scheme then they should not spend the money. I find, however, by the Public Accounts, that they did spend $1,713, though they had no scheme to begin with. So the hon. gentleman will find that his first idea was a mistaken one, and that a pretty fair amount has been spent, considering that no scheme had been elaborated. I think the Government should have had a scheme prepared before this time. If they are waiting for the doctors, and the doctors have not come to time, surely a scheme might be devised by themselves. This is not a question particularly for the doctors to consider; they are to cure the sick, but surely laymen could prepare and apply a scheme for obtaining statistics of deaths, &c.

Mr. LANDERKIN. As the Minister has intimated there was a meeting of delegates of the Medical As:o-ciation a year ago, they came as a deputation to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Railways. At that meeting they passed several resolutions. Those resolutions respecting the public health were submitted to the Minister of Railways for consideration, and I will read you what the Minister of Railways said:

"Sir Charles Tupper thought them very good, but suggested they should have gone a step further, and have advised an amendment to the British North America Ac', whereby the Dominion Government should deal with matters connected with the public health."

Have the Government, in the meantime, followed the suggestion made by the Minister of Railways? Have they proposed any amendment to the British North America Act, whereby this Parliament would be enabled to deal with questions affecting the public health? Afterwards, acting on the suggestion of the Minister of Railways, they passed resolutions stating that it was desirable that some steps should be taken whereby the British North America Act should be amended, so as to enable the Dominion Government to take sharge of the public health. According to the Act, as it now stands, the charge of the public health comes purely within the control of the Local Legislatures. It was no doubt thought by the framers of the Act that those subjects belonging to the municipalities, such as drainage, the reclaiming of waste sincere, have any steps been taken by the Government, or gated to them. I presume those were the views of the fathers of the Confederation, of whom we have one or two here. I am surprised that the Minister of Railways says that this Parliament is not competent to deal with this subject, as there is an item in the Estimates, placed there by the Minister of Agriculture, stating that they are prepared to spend a certain amount of money therefor. This seems rather a peculiar position; there must be a division in the Cabinet. We sometimes hear of such divisions, and they are apparently divided on this important question. For it is an important question-one as important as any which has come before this Parliament. If we have not authority to deal with this question they should seek that authority, if it is not competent for the Local Legislatures to deal with it. Any measure tending to lengthen human life and p event human suffering is one which will commend itself to right-think-ing men in the House, and will receive the support of this House if it comes within its purview, though it appeared at the time of Confederation that these questions were relegated to the Local Legislatures. We have in Ontario a Board of Health, and I am prepared to state that they have done a great deal of good, They have given a great deal of information to the people, and wherever epidemics have broken out, they have advised with the local Boards of Health with a view of staying the epidemics, which have abounded in those localities. They have been active and energetic, and I am satisfied, and I believe the community is satisfied, that the Board of Health has been of singular benefit in many instances. Now, if this grant was given to supplement the action of the different Provinces, then it is a proper and legitimate one; but if the Minister of Railways' contention was right, that this House has no power to deal with the subject, and that an amendmont should be made to the Act, so as to enable Parliament to deal with the question, then this grant should be given exclusively on the understanding that it should be divided amongst the Local Legislature, with a view of aiding them in their local appliances for this purpose. The grant is a very little one, if it is for that purpose; it is insignificant compared with the good which will arise by a well devised, well digested, and well-matured scheme. It is well known, that by calling public attention to these ques-tions, a great amount of good can be done. Statistics show they have even shown in this House, on many occasions-that the greatest benefit has been derived by round san tary regulations being enforced. It is an alarming state of things, that so little attention is given to sanitary matters, and so little informatinn is possessed by the people on this question -a question so vital to the welfare and the happiness of the people that it is very important that it should be settled. It is very important that this question should be dealt with in a proper spirit. It would look better if the Minister in charge of this matter were able to give us some information upon it. A good deal of attention has been paid to the subject of cattle disease, but the Government have not thought it worth while to pay any attention at all to the subject of diseases affecting the human family. I claim that no question of greater consequence to the people of this country has been brought before this House this Se sion. It is known, not only to medical men, but to every man of common sense, that by wise and judicious regulations, the public health can be very greatly benefited. But it appears that the Government are trifling with this question, for they do not propose to bring down any scheme or to say what they intend to do in reference to so important a subject. Now, I would like to know if the Minister of Railways was right when he tendored his advice to the medical gentlemen who attended this convention, I believe at the solicitation of the Government; and if he was right and places, ventilation, plumbing, &c., coming within the Local do they still intend to carry out the views of the Fathers of Legislatures, this question of public health should be rele- Confederation, and leave such concerns to the Legislatures of the different Provinces? It is a very important matter, however, and I hope the Government will give us more information upon it than they have vouchsafed up to the present time.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I am glad to see that my hon. friend from Grey has taken such an interest in this question; but there is a strange feature about it. First, he finds fault with the Minister for not having a fully digested policy on this question already. The question has only been before the country for fifteen or sixteen months. How strange is the zcal manifested opposite will be understood, when I say that if my information and observation are correct, two meetings of the Medical Association of the Dominion of Canada have been held in the city of Ottawa, and yet not a single Grit doctor has attended or taken the slightest interest in them.

Mr. SPROULE. I think my hon. friend from South Gray (Mr. Landerkin) mistook the object of the vote. I think it was explained by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and understood at the time, that the vote could not be used for promoting the health of the people, but for collecting health statistics, and that is the reason why the scheme desired by certain medical mon in the House was not elaborated. I believe the hon. Minister of Agriculture went as far in that direction as the law allowed him, and he said he was willing to ask for an amendment to enable him to elaborate a scheme if it was thought desirable.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for Leeds and Grenville has stated in the House that not a Grit doctor attended the convention held here. I attended on several days, but I never saw the hon. member there at all.

Mr. BERGIN. This, I believe, happened with respect to meetings held in this building. There were two deputations to the Government, and the hon. member for South Grey, like the King of France, walked up the hill and then walked down again.

53. To meet the probable amount required for pensions to veterans of war of 1813...... $18,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. Minister of Militia tell me how many of these old gentlemen still survive?

Mr. CARON. Last year we paid 784; this year we have estimated to pay 600 pensions, at $300. Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. WILSON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to one of the veterans who, he led me to understand, was on the roll and receiving pay. I was also in correspondence with him during the recess, when I was given to understand that he was placed upon the roll. Since that time, I have been informed that his name is not on the roll, or if it is, he has not received his pension.

Mr. CARON. I forget altogether to whom the hon. gentleman refers. There are so many applications with reference to veterans in the course of a year, that the hon. gentleman will understand that I may easily have forgotten the particular one he refers to. Of course, whatever I answered the hon. gentleman at the time, was from the information I possessed. If he will send in the name of the veteran he refers to, I will be glad to give him any information I possess.

Mr. WILSON. I did send in the name and an affidavit along with it, and I got an answer from the Deputy Minister stating that his name was on the pension roll. That I thought was satisfactory, and I notified the party, who had written to me. Time went on, and when the time passed when he should have received his pension, I was asked why he did not receive it. Why he has not been paid I cannot understand.

Mr. CARON. As the hon. gentleman knows, it is necessary to carry out the Statute. The requirements imposed upon the Department are provided for in that law. Either, as the hon. gentleman supposes, that veteran was put upon the list—and if he has not received his monoy it must be by some mistake for which I am not able to account—or else he did not make out a case. The affilavits may have been found, in this, as in many cases, not satisfactory. If the hon. gentleman will send in the name of that particular person, I shall be glad to have the matter looked into.

Mr. WILSON. I was informed from the Department that these two men were on the roll. Mr. Richards is one, living in Port Morpeth; the other, whose name I forget, lives in Springfield. I was informed they were on the roll, and receiving pensions, but they told me they never received a cent.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leads and Grenville). I remember when this vote was first placed on the Estimates, it was as a consideration of merit, and of a plea also of necessity in many cases. I know many instances where the widows of these old men are in want of relief and the small amount of gratuity would be very important to them. I urged their cases but was met with the reply that it could not be done this year. I think, if possible, the Statute should be changed as a compliment to the widows of those old men. In many cases the $25 or $39 would be a very important item. They are tottering on the verge of the grave and in poverty.

Mr. CARON. These peasions are authorized by the Consolidated Statutes of Ontario in one case and by the Statutes of Lower Canada in the other instance. It it impossible for me to travel outside the Statutes and grant these pensions to the widows of the men provided for under them. Moreover, this is a part of the debt which has been assumed by the Dominion Government, belonging to the old Provinces, and we could not make any change now without referring the matter again to two Provinces.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the amount to remain at $30 per head?

Mr. CABON. When I came in, it was $20; I increased it to $30, which is fixed as the a nount hereafter to be paid

Mr. PATERSON. As the number die, will the hon. Minister increase the amount?

Mr. CARON. It has been decided to keep the limit at $30 Mr. PATERSON. You estimate 600 are still alive? Mr. CARON. Yes; last year we lal 784.

5

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This was introduced originally by the late Government. We intended, at the time, allowing $50, believing there was only 1,000 entitled to the pension, but it turned out that the air of Canada is so conducive to longevity that there were 3,000 instead of 1,000 as, according to actuary statistics, we thought there would be.

Mr. VAIL. How many have been put on the roll last year?

Mr. CARON. There have been few applications.

Mr. VAIL. It is high time this was stopped. The ex-Minister of Finance has stated we did not suppose that in the first instance there would be more than a thousand persons ; for eight years it has been now going on, yet the amount is still $18,000. A man to be entitled to this must be ninetyyears of age, and it is hardly possible there are six or seven hundred people of that age out of the number engaged in the war of 1812.

Mr. CARON. That is precisely what I told the hon. gentleman last year, when he came then to have a few new names put on the list.

Mr. VAIL. But these men were applicants in 1877, and if they were entitled to it then, surely, if living, they would be entitled to it to-day.

Mr. CARON. That is why I do not want to make any promise. If the hon, gentleman considers these two men should be put on the roll, they will, should proper representation be made, be put on the list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the hon, gentleman give back pay when a claim is entertained?

Mr. CARON. No back pay.

Mr. PATERSON. If a claim is valid it should apply to back years. Because a man did not attend to his claim, he should not lose the pension he would have got in previous years had he attended to it.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. Minister of Militia is quito right with regard to placing of new names on the roll. If the proposition of the hon. member for Digby were carried out, these gentlemen, no matter how much they might be entitled to it, would be ruled out by such a proceeding, and I hope the Minister will not adopt any such hard rule. There may possibly be some old gentlemen who have no friends to direct their attention to the fact that the Government are making these annual payments, and it would be unfair that they should continue to be deprived of them because they have not been in a position to take advantage of them. the hon. member for Digby were correct, these gentlemen who were not fortunate enough to have anyone to present their claims, would be deprived. I think probably my hon. friend from East Elgin is presenting a case which is a deserving one, and I think the Minister should not be placed in a position to draw the rule so straight as to prevent his considering such a case.

Mr. MILLS. No doubt if any parties, who are entitled to pensions and have not hitherto applied for them, can show they are entitled to them, they should receive them; but the fact that eight years have gone by is ground for a strong suspicion that they are not entitled to them, and it will require all the more careful examination in the office to see that the application is genuine. Seventy years have gone by since the war of 1812-15 closed, and the parties must have been more than sixteen years of age at the time, so that they must be now nearly ninety years of age, and it is rather extraordinary that so large a number, looking at the Ganess return of our nonulation, are still alive. We the Census return of our population, are still alive. must take care that the same condition of things does not exist here as exists in the neighbouring Republic, where the reference to these officers. The Brigade Major in the dis-number of those who have been engaged in the military. service increases from year to year instead of diminishing.

54. Compensation to pensioners in lieu of land $5,120 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this about military asylum pensions, put in on the opposite side of the page, for the first time?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is statutory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the nature of it? 1 do not understand it exactly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that was for the Quebec hospital.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHF. What about the super-annuation allowances? $10,000 additional are domanded under the Statute, or supposed to be. That has increased tromendously fast under the hon, gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is statutory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWBIGHT. 1 know, but we usually discuss it under the pensions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is merely an estimate. That is not a vote at all.

Mr. PAINT. I thought, when any hon, member addressed the Ministry, he usually stood up to do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ob. no; the hon. member is the sitting member.

MILITIA.

55. Salaries, military branch and district staff... $19,800 0)

16. Brigade Majors' salaries, transport expenses, &c. 17.500 00

Mr. BERGIN. I would ask the Minister whether it is his intention to increase the pay of the district stiff? There is a very general feeling, not only amongst the members of the active militia, but through the country, that the district staff is not sufficiently paid, and I must say that I was very much struck by an article in the Montreal Star, which has been copied by most of the papers throughout the country, and copied approvingly, which points out the very curious fact that subaltern officers in the new militia schools established last year are receiving a salary almost, if not quite equal to that of the Deputy Adjutants General, and I find that the head of the Artillery School, the Inspector of Artillery, receives $1,800, $600 n.ore than the others, with an allowanco of $300, the same as the Deputy Adjutants General receive. Now, these officers are, many of them, men who have seen service, men who have been wounded in the service of the country; they are skilful men, able men, highly educated men, thoroughly competent for the positions they occupy, and it does seem somewhat anomalous that they should not receive a larger salary than that of subaltorn officers, mon who never wore the uniform of Her Majesty until they were appointed the other day. I am sure this has been an entire oversight on the part of the Minister, and I feel quite satisfied that he will be pleased that we have directed his attention to it, for I am quite sure, if he had noticed it, he would have placed the Deputy Adjutants-General upon a better footing. The salary that is given to them now is the salary that was given to them years ago, and surely, after such lengthened service, with the experience they have had, they ought to get a larger sum than they do now; and it ought not to be overlooked that these gentlemen were removed from their homes a couple of years ago, and put to a great additional expense, and some of them are put. to great expense to keep their homes in good order, so that they may not go to destruction until their return, not being able to rent them to advantage. I hope the Minister will give his attention to this matter.

Mr. HALL. I am able to confirm what has been said in trict I represent was put to a great deal of expense in consequence of the expectation that he would be removed. He was notified that he would be required to remove, and he made his preparations, and sold his furniture, and closed up his house. He was not, however, removed, and he was obliged to live for some months in a hotel, and then to take a house and furnish it again. No allowance has been made to him for that, in which he must have been subjected to a great deal of loss. I can confirm the statement of my hon. friend as to the fact of these Brigade Majors deserving an increase in their pay. They are gentlemen of the highest social position, they are gentlemen of rank in the military profession, and they are obliged to occupy a position as gentlemen in the community and should have a salary commensurate with that position, in order to maintain proper respect from their men. I hope the Minister of Militia will see his way to do something for them and improve their salaries.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I quite concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) and the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), and I think it was a great mis-take when the Minister of Militia adopted the rule of changing these officers, and limiting their period of service to five years. It was following a precedent in the British service which, even if it was justifiable there, there was no reason for adopting here. In the second military district, for instance, it takes the officer a year or two to know the dis-trict. The district is so large that it takes quite that time to thoroughly understand the country, and when he does understand it and knows his duty, he is sent to an-other district and has the whole process to go over again. The system is a bad one, and entails great hardship on these officers, and puts them in far worso position than they occupied before. In fact I have often thought, and under the present regulations, I feel still more strongly, that no men in the public service are worse paid according to their services, than the district staff in the various districts throughout the Dominion. I think the best thing to do would be, in the first place, to repeal that order, and as long as a mon is doing his duty to let him remain where he is. The idea of doing his duty to let him remain where he is. The idea of expecting a Brigade Major, for a salary of $1,200, to be shifted about every five years, or who is liable to be re-moved at the end of that time, I think is putting him in a position altogether unreasonable and altogether different from that of the officers in any other branch of the service. I venture to say there is no department in the service where men are so little paid in proportion to the requirements of their position, in proportion to their duties and to the position which they are required to occupy in society. If this Statute is to be continued, I think it is only fair and reasonable that the salaries should be considerably increased.

Mr. CARON. As far as the staff is concerned, I can bear willing testimony to their efficiency. I think we have a staff which we may well be proud of. But the hon. gentleman will remember that in the Militia Bill of last year the salary of the Deputy Adjutants-General was fixed at $1,200 a year. After discussion the House thought that salary was sufficient, and I am sorry to say that at present it is not the intention of the Government to increase it. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), who has spoken on the matter, has referred to one of the Brigade Majors. I can merely tell that hon. gentleman that that Brigade Major got the same allowance as was granted to other Brigade Majors under the regulation that was passed before I took charge of the Department.

Mr. BERGIN. Perhaps the Minister of Militia would explain why it is that the Commandant of a school, an inferior officer to the Adjutants-General commanding a district, should be paid $2,924, when an Adjutant General of Lieutenants and Captains. A Lieutenant gets $2 a day, Mr. HALL.

gets only $1,700, the First Lieutenant gets $1,350, and the Second Lieutenant, who acts as Adjutant, gets $1,530, though they are inferior officers.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman knows that the officers of the schools are paid according to rank. These officers are kept continually busy at the various schools, and they receive the same pay as any other officer in actual service; whereas, Deputy Adjutants-General have a salary fixed by Statute, and are not paid according to rank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still it does appear unreasonable that a Brigade Major or a Colonel, many of whom are men of considerable experience, should be receiving a smaller salary than inferior officers-an officer, for instance, of the grade of Lieutenant or thereabouts, attached to one of these new schools. It is a state of things which must produce considerable heart-burning, as hon. gentlemen have remarked. Take the case of such officers as we have to-day in the Public Service, officers like Colonels Worsley, Mattice, Maunsell, and Colonel Baker, who is now, I suppose, in the hon. gentleman's own Department, and four or five other gentlemen who are all well known to us, and who are officers of considerable standing and experience, and it does seem an unreasonable thing that such men should be practically worse treated than those who are attached to these schools; particularly if it be true, as I have heard, that two or three of the officers are very young men who have had no experience at all until they received commissions from the present Government. If I am not misinformed, one or two of these persons, who have been appointed to these military, cavalry and infantry schools, have had to be sent to some of the garrisons to be instructed in the rudimonts of their profession before they became instructors of others. I do not think it is a creditable state of things.

Mr. BERGIN. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman's remarks would convey a false impression as to the officers of the military schools. We know that some Deputy Adjutants-Generals who had seen service in the Crimea were sent home to receive instructions before they took charge of these schools, and men who have commanded districts in this country.

Mr. CASEY. I am very glad the hop. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) has called attention to the discrepancy in the salaries. I agree with him in thinking there must be something wrong. Either the Colonels in the schools are paid too high or the Brigade Majors are paid too low. It may be that the Government are satisfied as to the propriety of paying the Commandants of the new schools the salary they do, in which case they are undoubtedly underpaying the Brigade Majors. We must recollect that on the Brigade Major largely devolves the responsibility and the manage-ment of the force for the district. His responsibility is not only higher in rank than a Commandant, but it is usually greater, especially if he should have occasion, unfortunately, to call out the force for active service. We must keep that contingency in view, and we must keep men in those positions who will be qualified to fill them efficiently in case of active service, We cannot expect to retain men qualified to act as Brigade Majors for active service for the present salaries. I believe the gentlemen in question are not disposed to ask anything unreasonable in the way of an increase-I do not know whether they have asked for it at all-but I have reason to suppose that a moderate increase, sufficient to cover the cost of renting a house, and other incidental expenses necessitated by moving about from place to place, will satisfy them and make them well contented with their position. Speaking for myself only, and as a member of the Opposition, I may say I should have no objection to seeing the salary increased.

Mr. CARON. My hon. friend is mistaken about the pay and a Captain in the new schools gets $3. A Commandant gets a higher pay than a Brigade Major. However, the salaries have been fixed by Statute, and I cannot change the law.

Mr. CASEY. It is not so much a question of salary as of allowance, and we have had it made very clear to us lately that these are two very distinct things. I fancy it is possible to increase the allowances for rent, &c, made to these Brigade Majors, without changing the law. In regard to salaries in these schools, the Minister points out that a Lieutenant only gets $3 a day. But I think they get their allowances.

Mr. CARON. They have their rations and barracks.

Mr. CASEY. If they are married, do they not get extra pay for these ?

Mr. CARON. No; they get no extra pay. If a married officer lives outside the barracks, he gets no allowance for rent, and gets no more than if he remained in the barracks. He gets rations over and above his daily pay and barrack accommodation. If he chooses to live in the barracks, he gets that accommodation; if not, he gets no allowance in lieu of barrack accommodation.

Mr. CAMERON (West Middlesex). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia if all the officers appointed to these new schools are graduates of military schools?

Mr. CARON. I will answer that question when we come to the vote for those schools. I desire to strike out one Brigade Major from the item, which will reduce it by $1,200.

Mr. CASEY. Who is the Brigade Major to be struck off?

Mr. CARON. I estimated last year-it was an experiment-to pay a Brigade Major at Kingston. However, we considered it is not necessary to fill the office, and I now strike out the amount.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is that one less?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesox). Have two districts been combined to secure that object?

Mr. CARON. No. In very many instances we combine two or even three districts. Col. Taylor is now in command of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, there being only one Deputy Adjutant-General for the three military districts. In those we considered it necessary to appoint a Brigade Major to each; but in the case of Kingston, with a Deputy Adjutant-General and the district not a large one, we considered it unnecessary to have a Brigade Major.

Item reduced by $1,200 and, as amended, agreed to.

	Clothing and great coats	90,000 00
	Military stores	60,000 00

Mr. CARON. The increase of $10,000 is only an apparent increase. Previous to 1884 we issued out to the militia forces for their private practice, and for the various rifle associations, ammunition upon repayment. This ammunition was taken out of the reserve stores which we possessed. Since the establishment of the cartridge factory at Quebec we manufacture, instead of keeping a reserve store. $10,000 are estimated for the purpose of procuring from the factory from 600,000 to 700,000 rounds of cartridge ball ammunition, which is issued on repayment. Before the ammunition is delivered, the party must pay the question of book-keeping. We do that because we must amount to the credit of the Receiver-General. In receive that amount to pay for the 600,000 or 700,000 rounds 1881-82 the Department raid into the Receiver-General of ammunition which we manufacture. That is what is $11,117, in 1882-83, $10,631. Hence it is that we had to provide for the manufacturing of this ammunition, which is issued out, and the price of which is paid into the credit of the Receiver-General. If the amount which we receive for that ammunition were left to the credit of the Militia Department, it would not have been necessary to place this amount in the vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister inform the Committee what it costs to manufacture such small arm ammunition as is usually used by the volunteers.

At present it is not possible for the Mr. CARON. Department to give the exact cost of the ammunition as manufactured in the cartridge factory. The reason why we cannot give it with absolute accuracy is, that the machinery imported from England was not so perfect as we had hoped it to be; consequently, we had to expend a good deal of money in perfecting the machinery. In manufacturing the cartridges we had to employ new hands who have had no experience whatever in the various branches of the manufacture. A good many of the cartridges so manufactured were spoiled and had to be replaced; and consequently the expense at the present time is a little larger than the price at which they can be imported from England. This is $16 por thousand, and we have been issuing cartridges at that price. The head of the factory, however, Major Provost, who went to England and passed through a course that price. of study at Woolwich to acquire all the information necessary to enable him to preside over that branch of the Department, believes that cartridges will be manufactured here just as cheaply as it costs to import them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that $16 per thousand is the cheapest price at which they can be sold.

Mr. CARON. We have been issuing them at that price. If further experience shows that the cost is more than $16, we shall have to increase the price of the cartridges.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The best way in which our volunteer force can be made efficient is by rendering them good marksmen, especially under the alterations in military discipline. It is a considerable tax on those endeavouring to make themselves good marksmen to be obliged to pay $1.60 for every 100 rounds, and it is worth considering whether, in case of associations, wholly composed of mem. bers of the force, for the purpose of improving themselves as marksmen, it would not be desirable to sell them cartridges at something below cost. There is no way in which a portion of the militia vote can be better employed. Our militiamen take much trouble and devote considerable time in order to become good marksmen, and it might be fairly considered whether it is not desirable to furnish ammunition at half cost, at least. The Minister would contribute much to the efficiency of the force if he were to agree to such a proposition as this.

Mr. CARON. I agree with the hon. gentleman as to the propriety of giving every possible advantage to Canadian marksmen, and if it is possible for the Department to reduce the cost of cartridges, the cost will diminished to those needing them.

Mr. MILLS. It is a Government manufactory?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentloman said this increase of $10,000 was only apparent, but I did not quite understand his explanation?

Mr. CARON. This amount which now appears as an in-crease is paid to the Receiver-General. It is merely a question of book-keeping. We do that because we must required to manufacture it. Previous to this, we had a have none. We manufacture every year as we require reserve store of ammunition, and the amount of money we received was paid into the Receiver General's Office, as it is to-day. The ammunition required is 500,000 rounds of ball cartridge, and 500,000 rounds of blank cartridge per annum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been the cost of the cartridge factory altogether?

Mr. CARON. The amount of money expended came to between $45,000 and $47,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did that cover the buildings?

Mr. CARON. No; buildings were not put up, as the catridge factory is established in the old artillery barracks; but the cost of repairs is over and above the amount I have named, though I do not know the exact amount, as the work was done by the Public Works Department.

Mr. MILLS. What is the entire cost to the country?

Mr. CARON. The machinery cost, as I have stated, between $45,000 and $17,000; the staff, of course, is outside of that. Major Provost is at the head of the establishment, and receives $1,400 a year. He has a person under him who was imported from Woolwich.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has any expenditure been made last year for machinery?

Mr. CARON. Not for new machinery, though some expense has been incurred in perfecting existing machinery.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman stated that $25,000 was the cost of making 1,000,000 rounds of ball cartridge and 500,000 of blank ammunition; does that include salaries?

Mr. CARON. That includes everything.

Mr. CASEY. I think it would have been better to put the salaries separately. What is Major Provost's salary.

Mr. CARON. He receives $2.50 per day. He has his quarters in addition, and is allowed rations.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has he received that salary since the factory was established?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I notice that in a return to the House, he was reported as being an officer of "A" Battery, and as such getting no salary as superintendent of the factory.

Mr. CARON. He was paid in "A" Battery, and was transferred from there to the cartridge factory, after which he did not receive his pay in connection with the latter. But he has been transferred from the battery to the cartridge factory, and he receives $2.50 per day.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has his place in "A" Battery been taken by someone else ?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CALON.

Mr. CASEY. Is he getting any other pay?

Mr. CARON. No other pay.

Mr. CASEY. Does this represent the total cost of running the factory.

Mr. CARON. The total cost.

Mr. CASEY. I confess that I have not yet been able to understand the hop. Minister's explanation of this increase of $10,000.

Mr. CARON. This ammunition is for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the force for their private practice, and to supply the Dominion Rifle Association and the other rifle associations all over the country. Last year we the ammunition.

Mr. VAIL. Will the hon. gentleman explain the vote of $90,000 for clothing and great coats?

Mr. CARON. It is proposed to secure 5,000 sets of uni-form at a cost of $10 per suit, according to the lowest figure I have received, which will make $50,000. Then $10,000 will procure the great coats, at an average cost of $6.60 per coat-about 3,000 for infantry, at $5.89 each; 1,000 cavalry, at $9.60 each; and 2,000 artillery, at $6.54 each. The increase is caused by the fact that the stores got very low. The requirements of the force for the number of men we have, about 37,000, would be one tunic every four years, making 8,000 a year; one pair of trousers every three years, making 12,000 pairs a year; one forage cap every four years, making 8,000 a year; one great coat every five years, making 7,000 great coats a year. In 1880 we had only 5,050 great coats, in 1881 we had 4,896, in 1882 we had none, and in 1883 we got 5,040, consequently, the fact that the stores have got so low and the fact that we have now permanent schools of infantry and cavalry, have obliged me to ask Parliament to increase the vote, so that we shall be able to meet the requirements of the force.

Mr. VAIL. Will the hon. gentleman tell us where the clothing is to come from this year? Is it to be imported or to be made in the country?

Mr. CARON. The intention is to have the clothing made in Canada; and I may say that ever since I have had the honour to preside over the Department of Militia, I have been getting in Canada every article that could pos-sibly be got here. I have formerly explained that some of the clothing could not be manufactured in Canada; but from the experience of last year, I hope that we shall be able to supply every article in the country. The competition is growing keener every year. I hope we shall be able to get Canadian manufactures, made from Canadian material.

Mr. VAIL. Are they furnished by tender?

Mr. CARON. Yes; the lowest tender in every case.

Mr. VAIL. Will it cost more to have them manufactured in Canada, or less?

Mr. CARON. The goods which we are getting in Canada are far superior in quality to the goods which we have so far been importing from England; and although the price may be a little higher, I consider that we get more than value for the extra amount we pay.

Mr. MILLS. I have not been able quite to understand the position taken by the hon. Minister of Milifia. He tells us that these goods are a little higher than the imported goods. The Minister of Finance has been preaching to us for the last five years that each year the goods are cheaper than they ever were before. This is a very extraordinary statement for the hon. Minister to make, for he must see that he is embarrassing the Minister of Finance.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They did not pay any duty when they were imported.

Mr. MILLS. They never did pay any duty. Has not the Minister of Finance been telling us all along, that the consumer did not pay the duty? Certainly the hon. gentleman's statement is not reconcilable with the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance. It is extraordinary that there should be an increase of 50 per cent. in the vote, if the goods are cheaper than they ever were before.

Mr. CARON. The great coats are cheaper than the English imported coats. The other coats are from cloth which had to be specially manufactured for the parpose. had a reserve store from which we drew; but this year we | From what we have been able to ascertain, the expense will be smaller next year, because last year we had to go to a great deal of expense getting dyes and special men from the United States, to manufacture this cloth.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon. member for Bothwell is one of those unfortunate free-traders who can never learn the cases in which the consumer and those in which the producers pays the duty. The other day the hon. gentleman showed remarkable ignorance, for one in his position, on that point, which is essential to the understanding of the Tariff question. With regard to this question of clothing, there is a very great waste in our system of clothing our men; we give our men, on going to camp, the one suit, and in this they do everything—cook, sleep and do fatigue duty. The consequence is, that the suits are worn out in one or two years, and it is almost impossible to get others to use them. One of the great practical difficulties we have in getting men to join the force is, that they are often called on to wear clothing unfit to be worn. The hon. Minister would exercise true economy by providing cheap suits to be used for every duty, except that of parade, and thus the other suits would be kept good for five years.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Is it contemplated to provide the volunteer force with helmets or other head dress suitable to the climate. There is a very serious defect in that direction in the volunteer force, though it has been, to some extent, remedied. The head-dress worn in the old country may answer well in a damp climate, but for our intense sunshine we require gear which will protect the eyes and the base of the head. Volunteers coming out for a few weeks with their present head dress, get their heads blistered and their eyes injured. This defect should be remedied, the more particularly, that the present mode of warfare being conducted with long-range weapons, renders the cycsight of greater importance than in previous years, when the fighting was at close quarters, and the result depended very often on the bayonet.

Mr. CARON. We issue only forage caps, or the price of forage caps, which is given as an allowance and is supplemented by whatever amount is required to purchase these helmets.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). What is the annual cost of the clothing, the number of suits worn each year?

Mr. CARON. The annual cost of the clothing and the great coats is $90,000, according to the item.

Mr. CAMERON. That leaves a sum for storcs?

Mr. CARON. That is not what I require annually, and it does not provide for anything for stores.

Mr. CAMERON. There is $30,000 more this year than last.

Mr. CARON. Every four years we require to issue new clothing. The amount of money I am now asking is the smallest amount required per annum to keep up a force of 37,000.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Is it proposed to introduce the rubber cape?

Mr. CARON. I am afraid I would have to increase my estimate if I gave those luxuries.

Mr. FAIRBANK. It would not necessarily increase the estimate. The matter is worthy of serious attention. In making retreats and making marches, and in all camping work, these capes are very serviceable, and experience has shown they are the last thing a coldier will part with.

Mr. CASEY. It is possible the rabber coats will save the other of the extent that would compensate for their cost. With regard to the forage caps, I can speek feelingly. I have been in the ranks and never got very much further, and I know what torture a young man, who has been accustomed to wearing a soft hat, is submitted to, when he first puts on these forage caps, and worse still, the Scotch caps, which afford no protection against the sun. Then, I think, if the troops are to be called out at all, the Minister ought to face the music and get them proper head-gear, for it is not safe and often leads to illness, and to weakening of men for life, to compel them to go out without proper head-gear.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I feel quite confident that the better soldiers are prepared for going forward the less necessity there will be for them to retreat, and next to the proper arm, the proper head-dress and clothing to protect them from the weather is of the greatest importance. Of those who are disabled in active service, those who are disabled from exposure in camp and field, are something like five to one of those who are disabled from gunshot wounds. The best way to guard against retreat is to provide the infantry with some means of quickly entrenching themselves. With the long range weapons now in use, I believe that, in the first war that occurs among civilized nations, that one will conquer who is the best earth digger.

Mr. McNEILL. There has been a great deal of complaint in reference to the forage cap, and my attention has been called to it in my own riding. The men are very anxious indeed that the Minister should give them helmets instead of forage caps. They complain of the suffering they have to endure from the cap, and are anxious that some better head-gear should be provided for them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand the Minister asks for tenders for clothing. I would ask whether tenders are asked for the cloth by itself and other tenders for the making, or tenders are asked for the garment ready made; and also whether he receives many tenders, and whether he receives them from distant towns and cities or mostly from the city of Ottawa?

Mr. CARON. We called for tenders for a certain quantity of tunics and great coats complete, made up. We advertised in the papers in all the large centres, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, all over the country in fact, and out of the tenders we received we selected the lowest one.

Mr. PATERSON. How many tenders did you receive? Mr. CARON. I could not say exactly.

Mr. PATERSON. From different cities?

Mr. CARON. Yes; from different citics, and we received a large number. Taking the great coats and the clothing, I think we received twenty-five or thirty.

Mr. PATERSON. How is it managed—is there a sample garment?

Mr. CARON. Yes; there is a scaled pattern sent to the various Deputy Adjutants General. The tenderers go to the Brigade Office and inspect the scaled pattern, and make their tenders upon it.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has any of the clothing been supplied?

Mr. CARON. Already? Yes.

Mr. CAMERON. Subject to inspection?

Mr. CARON. Yes; everything is subject to inspection. No single article is accepted in the stores until it is inspected by the inspector appointed by the Government. A quantity of clothing has been received and passed by the inspector; I could not say how much; it is coming in every day.

Mr. CAMERON. How long since these more recent contracts have been awarded?

Mr. CARON. I think about the last days of October, or the beginning of November.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has any one outside of Ottawa been successful in making the lowest tender ?

Mr. CARON. Yes. In Montreal, O'Brien and Co. have had the great coats; and Auclair & Gagré the uniforms, in Ottawa, as the lowest tenderers.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Has the question been considered of supplying some sort of undressed uniform for the volunteers who are called out for partial service?

Mr. CARON. The suggestion is a very good one, and will receive the consideration of the Department.

Mr. CAMERON. I am entirely in sympathy with the suggestion of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) on that subject. I know it would be of service to the country, and it would be a saving to the country as well, if such a course were adopted. Young men come in from the country who are not accustomed to the tight fitting uniform which is usually supplied. Besides, it is much too heavy for service at the time of the year when the volunteers are usually called out.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has made a suggestion which, I think, the Minister will find a difficulty in carrying out. He made use of a nautical expression, and suggested that provision should be made for head-gear. Now that, as I understand it, consists of flying-jib guys and martingales, and all sorts of things. The Minister of Militia will have to refer that to the Minister of Marine, who will be able to speak more definite'y upon that subject.

Mr. CASEY. The late Major General said there were lots of guys of all sorts in the militia.

Mr. VAIL. What about military stores?

Mr. CARON. There is an increase of $10,000. It is required for general services in connection with stores, fuel, gas, transport of stores, arms and ammunition, &c., pay of labourers, repairs to stores, &c., $15,000; for 500 tents, at $18 each, $9,000; 50 sets of suddlery, for cavalry, at $30 each, $1,500; articles required for repairs to harness of field batteries, the harness in many cases being worn out and unfit for service, $2,500; accoutrements, belts, haversacks, squad bags, knapsacks, and general equipment for militia, $22,000; 5,000 blankets, at $2 each, $10,000, making a total of $60,000. The amount placed in the Estimates for military stores is required to enable the Department to replace the articles now worn out and unserviceable. Many of these articles, such as tents, saddlery, harness, accoutrements, &c., &c., having been in use for a number of years, are now completely worn out and must be replaced by new and serviceable articles

Mr. VAIL. The accounts last year show two items, ag-gregating $12,000, for blankets. Were they obtained by public or by private contract?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will remember that this matter came before Parliament last Session, and I told him that from peculiar circumstances, as the militia was going out at a late period in the year, and as the number of blankets we had in store was only sufficient to give each man one blanket, the Department had not sufficient time to call for tenders, and they had to procure these blankets without calling for tenders last year. But since then, tenders have been called for. The whole question came before Parliament last year, and the papers were asked for, and I brought down every letter and document connected with the purchase of these blankets.

Mr. VAIL. I wish to get some information about the price paid for clothing and blankets. In 1875 the Department was obliged to purchase, at Halifax, a number of blankets for Prince Edward Island, and the average price paid per pound was 33[‡] cents. But I find in the items of the blankets for Prince Edward Island, and the average price paid per pound was 333 cents. But I find in the items of the Public Accounts for the year that the hon. gentleman paid same, decided to recommend, that commencing with next Session, the 55 cents per pound for his blankets. Now, that seems to me to be a very important difference, and I do not know how it can be explained except, upon the principle that goods have increased very much in price.

Mr. CARON.

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman could say that the blankets for which he paid 33½ cents per pound, were of exactly the same quality as those for which we paid 55 cents per pound, of course he would be quite right, but I am very certain the hon. gentleman is not right. The blankets which we purchased last year were much superior to any blankets which we ever had before in the Department, even when we were importing them from England. As for the increase in the other items, I may repeat to the hon gentleman that it arose from the fact that the stores which we had were very old and some of them were perfectly useless. Last year we had representations from almost every camp, complaining that the tents did not protect the men against the rain. It was necessary to replace the tents, and I am now providing for that.

Mr. CAMERON (West Middlesex). Have applications been made for knapsacks ?

Mr. CARON. The sum of $22,000 is for the purpose of getting belts, haversacks and other accoutrements which are absolutely required for the force.

Mr. CASEY. Has the hon. gentleman given attention to the modern system of accoutrements?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. He is now aware that in England a much improved method of hanging the knapsacks and side arms now prevails. Is it of that sort that the new ones are to be?

Mr. CARON. Yes. I hope we may be able to get the Oliver pattern, or an improvement upon it.

Resolutions to be reported, Committee to sit again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) from the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the House during the present Session, presented the following as their Third Report :---

The Chi if Reporter having submitted a letter, enclosing an applica-tion from Mr. J. W. Mathewson, (copies of which letter and application are hereto appended), asking that he be remunerated for his services in repairing and keeping in order the caligraph writing machines, used by the Official Reporting Staff—the Committee have carefully considered the same, and would recommend that the application he granted; and that Mr. Mathewson be paid the sum of $130 per Session for that service, such payment to commence with the present Session. The Committee would also recommend that one additional caligraph writing machine be purchased for the use of the House in connection with the Official Reporting.

He also presented the following as the Fourth Report :---- salaries of the members of the Official Reporting Staff be $3,000 per annum.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that on every Monday for the remainder of the Session Government business will take precedence of other business after Routine Procecdings.

Mr. BLAKE. I had hoped that the hon. gentleman did not intend to press this motion at any rate until after next Monday. As I have had occasion to point out already, the hon. gentleman took the private members' days at a very early period this Session, for the purpose of considering the Canadian Pacific measure, which prevented the business in the hands of private members from being proceeded with; and almost immediately after the conclusion of that debate, he took Thursday. The result has been that private members have nover had, within my experience, so little time for their business as this Session. There are now between nincty and one hundred items on the papers, and matters in the hands of private members-between twenty and thirty orders, and between sixty and seventy notices of motion; and I think we ought to have next Monday to clear off the notices of motion. I would suggest, as I have suggested before, that the paper should be gone over, with the view of disposing of undebated actices on that day; and after that I think there would be less objection to the hon. gentleman's motion passing—even so, with this qualification, that I think the hop. gentleman should make the modification that Government business should come after questions. These questions afford the only means we have of making enquiries into the conduct of public affairs, and it is very important that we should have that opportunity, which does not take longer than half an hour. I would ask the hon. gentleman, therefore, to alter the motion by making it inapplicable to next Monday, and by providing that when it does apply, it should apply to the order of business after questions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, I can go half way for the hon. gentleman. I have no objection to insert, "after routine proceedings, other than questions;" but I think I must persist in my motion to take Monday. The hon, gentleman states that there are a great number of notices of motion. Well, Parliamentary practice makes it absolutely necessary that motions in the hands of private members should be made early, in order that they should not interfere with public business, which, according to the practice both here and in England, means, as a rule, meas ures in the hands of the Government. I think it is rather unfortunate that such has been the practice, but we cannot help it. It should therefore be pressed on the minds of members, to move any motion which they have to bring before Parliament as early as possible, because, we all know, for the first three or four weeks of the Session, it is impossible that the Government measures can be ready until after that time, for the consideration of Parliament. We met on the 17th of January, and I find that the first notice of There motion was dated on the 3rd of March. is no reason why the notices of motion should not be made a month sooner than they have been. If the hon, gentleman will look over the notices of motion, he will see there is no reason why they should not be made a month sooner, and if there is one thing that the House has settled more than another, it is that a three months' Session is the utmost extent to which it should run. If we wish to keep within that limit, we must, after giving in the first part of the Session full opportunity to members of the House, not connected with the Government, to introduce measures, take as many days as possible. However, I have no objection that in this motion questions should be of Vancouver Island were greatly excited by the prospect saved. As to the calling over the notices of motion at the of having that harbour made the terminus of the Canadian end of the sitting, and taking up those which are objectionable, I have found, after a good deal of experience, that the moment one motion is opposed, the member interested in that motion would oppose everything else.

Mr. MILLS. It is very unfortunate that the hon. gentleman should persist in this motion. If there is any class of members who should be ready with the business they intend bringing before Parliament, it is the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury Benches. There is no excuse for the practice which has grown up under the leadership of the hon, gentleman of submitting important Government measures at a very late period of the Session. The hon, gentleman will remember that in the early part of the Session, while the question of the loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway was under discussion, the Government took the day at the disposal of private members, so that almost from the beginning the time of Parliament has been wholly in the hands of the Administration. It is well known that many matters come to the knowledge of bon. members after the measures have been here some time, and they take the earliest opportunity of submitting questions to Parliament after the information to them comes into their possession, so that it is important that Government measures should be brought down in good time; and if there is one class of members who ought to have the opportunity of bringing the questions and measures in their hands under the attention of the House, it is the private members. It does seem to me the Government are acting most unfairly towards the members of the House, and are proposing to stifle the voice of Parliament rather than secure the expression of public opinion.

Mr. IIESSON. The hon. gentleman has occupied a good deal of the time of the House in debating many matters of slight importance, and it is the general opinion of the House that we ought to get through business without more loss of tim o.

Motion, as amended, agreed to on a division.

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 67) to make provision for giving effect to the agreement entered into between the Government of Canada and British Columbia. He said: I am very glad to know that the House has been rendered so familiar with this resolution and the proposition contained therein, both through the medium of the press and of the papers already laid on the Table of the House, that it will not be necessary for me, at this late period, to occupy a great deal of the time of the House in stating the grounds upon which we asked the approval of the House to these resolutions. It is well known that in 1871 the terms of union with British Columbia required that the railway should be commenced within two years, and completed within ten years to the coast of that Province; and it is also equally well known that, although due diligence was had by the Government in pushing the surveys, it was found impossible to secure such information as would warrant the location of the line in time to commence the railway within the two years stated in those terms of union. The surveys were pushed with all practicable speed, a very large amount of money was expended in explor-ing and surveying the very difficult and almost im-practicable country, and it was finally decided that a prac-ticable route acad he had to the Bute Inlat ticable route could be had to the Bute Inlet. In 1873, an Order in Council was passed making Esquimalt, in the Island of Vancouver at Victoria, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the expectations of the people

Pacific Railway. It was then expected that the line would go to Bute Inlet, and crossing either by ferry or subsequently by a bridge, that the railway would be extended down from that point through Nanaimo to the harbour of Esquimalt. Subsequent surveys proved that a better route could be found to the coast of British Columbia than that proposed by Bute Inlet. I may say, however, that the people of British Columbia becoming exceedingly restless and dissatisfied at the want of that rapid progress which they had been led to expect, agitated very strongly in favour of some additional measure to be taken for the purpose of advancing that work. The result was that a reference was made to the Colonial Minister, Lord Carnarvon, and after a great deal of negotiation and a great deal of explanation, both on the part of the people of British Columbia, the Government of British Columbia, and the Government of Canada, it was finally decided to adopt the recommendations made by Lord Carnarvon for the solution of this question. I need not remind the House that these recommendations of Lord Carnarvon, which were subsequently adopted by the Government of Canada, required not only the construction of the railway from Nanaimo to Esquimalt, but the immediate construction of that portion of the line, required that it should be proceeded with immediately. I will not detain the House by any lengthened reference to those terms, because it is known that, when the Government submitted a proposal to Parliament for the purpose of providing for the construction of the road from Nanaimo to Esquimalt, that measure was defeated, not in this House but, as will be recollected, by the other branch of the Logislature. Subsequently, the Government, in order to meet the difficulty that had thus been encountered, offered to the people of British Columbia, or rather to the Government of British Columbia, in consequence of the unavoidable delays which had taken place, delays which were held to have been extremely injurious to the development, not only of Vancouver Island but of British Columbia generally, the sum of $750,000 in compensation for these delays. An Order in Council was passed to that effect, but the proposal was not accepted by the Government of British Columbia. Then, the Buto Inlet route was finally abandoned by the Government, the Order in Council locating the terminus at Esquimalt was cancelled by the Government-I now refer to the Government of Mr. Mackenzie-and the terminus wie fixed at Burrard Inlet. After the change of Government, that Order in Council, cancelling the Order in Council which had provided for the terminus at Esquimalt, was also cancelled, and the adoption of the Bate Inlet route was cancelled, and the subject again thrown open in order that there might be further examination and further consideration as to whether any better line could be obtained; and, as will be remembered, the Government investigated a line that had not previously attracted a great deal of attention, and where it was hoped that we could reach a good harbour in British Columbia at a much smaller cost than would be involved in going to Bute Inlet-I mean Port Simpson-and some delay was caused while that in-vestigation was going forward. The Government of my right hon. friend, however, arrived, after full consideration, at the conclusion that our predecessors had adopted a judicious conrse, in selecting the terminus for the Canadian Pacific Railway, when they located that terminus at Barrard Inlet, and it will be remembered that, in 1879, a considerable portion the most difficult and important portion of the line going to Burrard Inlet was placed under contract, notwithstanding that, however, the Government of British Columbia were not satisfied with what was being done, and again, as will be remembered, Mr. De Cosmos was sent by that Government as a representative to the Imperial Government, to agitate the question as to the great injury which had been inflicted upon cate, it was decided, for the purpose of settling the whole Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

British Columbia, by the delay that had taken place in car-rying out the terms of union. The Legislature of British Columbia also cancelled the land grant which had been passed in consequence of the Carnarvon terms, giving a belt of land twenty miles in width on each side of the line from Nanaimo to Esquimalt, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of that portion of the line. They incor-porated a company for the purpose of constructing the line—a private company—and made an appropriation of lands to them for the purpose. They believed that they would be able with these lands to obtain the construction of the line. That belief, however, proved not to be well founded, and their efforts in that direction failed. Difficulties also presented themselves in connection with the question of the land grant which had been originally appropriated under the terms of union for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Legislature of British Columbia had been called upon and had appropriated the lands on the route extending from Tôte Jaune Cache to the Fraser, and so down to Bute Inlet; and a difficulty arose as to whether the Government were entitled, after the change of location down to the Kamloops District, and the pass by the Kick. ing Horse, to change the location of this land which had been appropriated. Other difficulties arose in considering the question of the twenty mile belt to which the Canadian Gov. ernment was entitled on each side of the line for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A considerable portion of land within that belt-some 800,000 acres - had been already appropriated to other purposes, and questions arose as to in what shape the land should be taken. It was found, owing to the location of the land by the gorges of the Fraser, that a question arose as to whether the land was to be horizontal or perpendicular, as in many places you would pass a mile or a long distance from the railway without reaching any land available for cultivation. Those questions were presented and made the subject of discussion between Mr. Trutch, the agent of the Dominion Government, and the Government of British Columbia, and that Government inally made a proposal to the Government of Canada for the solution of these various questions. That was in 1883, and the result of those proposals was that a new Act was passed, again appropriating the land in the twenty mile belt on each side of the line, on a new arrangement, which will be described a little later on, in the Bill which has recently passed in the Legislature of British Columbia, by which it was proposed to appropriate about 1,920,000 acres of land, described with metes and bounds, along the coast from Esquimalt or the neighbourhood of Esquimalt to Na-naimo, and above Nanaimo in the region of Comox. My right hon. friend and myself, to whom that despatch of the Government of British Čolumbia was referred, reported a scheme of adjustment which is the scheme which, I am happy to say, has practically been arrived at, as stated in the resolutions now before the House. I may, in connection with this question, remind the House that, under the first terms of union, we had agreed to pay the interest upon $400,000 to assist in the construction of the graving dock, and subsequently, as the result of negotiations, when it was found not practicable to obtain the construction of the graving dock in that way, it was decided to appropriate $250,000 as a contribution towards the construction of the graving dock as the work proceeded, the Government of British Columbia undertaking to make a contract, and being in a position to receive the aid of £50,000 sterling which was to be contributed by the Imperial Government. A contract under these arrangements was made by the Government of British Columbia for the construction of the work, but difficulties were encountered and it was ultimately found that the amount at their disposal would not be sufficient to secure the completion of the work. Its progress was slow and unsatisfactory, and as these resolutions indi-of these questions, of disposing of all the difficulties in reference to the change of the original alignment to one which would be infinitely more valuable to the Dominion Government, by the present line through the Kamloops District, and for the settlement of the question of the amount that had already been appropriated by the Local Govern-ment out of the twenty mile belt on each side, of their line, for the purpose of meeting the question that had been so long and so strongly agitated by the Government of British Columbia in regard to the injury which that Province had suffered from the delay in carrying out the terms of union, it was decided to offer that Province the sum of $750,000 towards the construction of the railway from Nanaimo to Esquimault, to take over the graving dock, paying the expendi-ture of $250,000 that had been made by the Government of British Columbia, and receiving from that Province a grant of 3,500,000 acres of land lying in the Peace River District, on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains. That in substance is the proposal which is now submitted for the approval of the House. I may say, Sir, that as we were not able by telegraph to arrange in time, and satisfactorily, the legislation required on the part of the Dominion Parliament and the Legislature of British Columbia, my colleague, the Minister of Justice, was deputed to go to British Columbia, and to enter into arrangements with the Province, subject to the approval of the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia, and the approval of this Parliament, carrying out substantially the terms which had been recommended in the report to Council by my right hon. friend, the then Min-ister of the Interior, and myself, as Minister of Railways and Canals. That object, I am happy to say, was attained; the Government of British Columbia and the Minister of Justice were enabled to arrange with a company composed of one of the most influential and able capitalists of the city of Victoria, Mr. Dunsmuir, and a number of associates, some within, and others outside the Province, in the cities of San Francisco and New York, capitalists whom the Government of British Columbia believed to possess undoubtedly the means of vigorously carrying this work to completion. This contract was arranged and a deposit of $250,000 by that Company was made satisfactorily to the Government of British Columbia, for the purpose of securing the prompt carrying out of this work. Under these circumstances the Legislature of British Columbia have passed an Act providing for carrying out the agreement entered into between the Minister of Justice, with the authority of the Government of Canada, and the Government of British Columbia, for the various purposes to which I have referred; and it is believed that if this Parliament assent, as I have no doubt it readily will, to the propositions contained in these resolutions, we shall have disposed once and for ever of all questions in regard to the past that have arisen between the Province of British Columbia and the Government of Canada, and that we shall have provided for the prompt and efficient completion of a graving dock there at not a very great additional cost beyond that which was contemplated by the Government; that we shall have secured by means of the valuable tract of lands given by the Province of British Columbia, and the $750,000 long ago offered by our predecessors to the Government of British Columbia in compensation for delays in connection with the prograss of the Canadian Pacific Railway; I say it will be found that we will not only have secured that, but at the same time we will have acquired a very valuable tract of land lying to the east of the Rocky Mountains, adjacent to, and in connection with, our own prairie country, which can be settled and which can be administered and dealt with more effectively, I believe, by a Government on this side of the mountains than by the Government of British Columbia, on account of the barriers which those mountains interpose to com. have no hesitation in commending these resolutions to the munication between the two sections of the country. acceptance of this House as settling all those vexed ques-129

I believe, Sir, that the proposals which are contained in the resolutions will commend themselves to this House as being wise and just proposals. I am sure we all recognize the great importance of the construction of a railway between Nanaimo and Esquimalt. It is well known that although it is somewhat rocky and precipitous, and, to a considerable extent, barren country, there are valuable coal mines contained within that area; and I have been told by some of our friends from British Columbia that they have objected to the terms of this proposal because it was handing over to a company the development of these mines. But it must not be forgotten that, valuable as are these coal areas in Vancouver Island, they have lain for a long time in a comparatively undeveloped state. With the exception of Mr. Dunsmuir's mine, and another one which has not been very successful, I believe that up to this moment, practically, very little has been done in devel-oping those coal areas. We have reason to believe—in fact I am informed by the able Premier of British Columbia.who is now here, that he has applications for large tracts of coal mining areas believed to possess very valuable coal mines outside of the section that is covered by these resolutions. Under these circumstances, if the result of these proposals is to meet all possible grounds of complaint on the part of our fellow citizens in British Columbia, if at the same time by a contribution of a comparatively small sum it is to secure practically the carrying of the Canadian Pacific Railway down to the harbour of Esquimalt to the city of Victoria; if it is to secure the prompt and successful development of the great coal industries of that country, and if it is to secure the prompt completion of a valuable graving dock at the harbour of Esquimalt, I think the House will agree with me that the arrangements that are made commend themselves to the judgment of this House as they will, I am satisfied, commend themselves to the approval of the people of this country generally. I do not believe, Sir, that it is possible to over-estimate the enormous advantage to Canada, to say nothing of British Columbia alone, of the rapid and prompt completion of the Canidian α_i acific Railway to Burrard Inlet, and railway extension from Nansimo down to the Harbour of Esquimalt, with the corresponding development of that country, and the completion of a great line of interoceanic communication. Although a large portion of British Columbia is of a mountainous character - I will not say a sea of mountains -but although it is somewhat of a mountainous character, we all know that there is a large amount of soil, even on Vancouver Island, of a very rich and valuable description. We all know that British Columbia is possessed of sources of inherent wealth in the minerals of that country that are of incalculable value. We all know that with the delicious climate of British Columbia, I use the term adviselly, not simply the delicious but I might also say the incomparable climate, -- it only requires easy and ready means of access to attract hundreds of thousands of people at an early day to that country, where they will find every attrac-tion which settlers or persons seeking homes in any part of the world can desire. We know that the rivers teem with fish; that the forests, and they are magnificent forests, abound with game; and all that is necessary to open up that country and give to Canada the advantage and benefit of the rapid development of that Province, possessing such great and inherent resources of wealth as it does, is by the terms provided in this resolution to carry down, not only the Canadian Pacific Railway to Burrard Inlet on the main line, as already provided for, but by opening up the island by this railway, to infuse the same amount of energy and enterprise in the development of that section of country as the main land will enjoy from the construction of the Cana-dian Pacific Railway. Under these circumstances, Sir, I tions that have arisen between British Columbia and Canada upon a permanent and secure footing; but, at the same time, provided by a comparatively small expenditure of public money for the development of a most important section of the this Dominion in a mode that which perhaps it would be very difficult to secure it in any other way. I will not detain the House by going minutely into the details that are contained in these propositions, because they are fully stated in the resolutions which every hon, member holds in his hands. But I am quite prepared to give the fullest information with respect to any point in this arrange-ment which may be asked by any hon. member.

Mr. HOMER. It is with regret, Mr. Speaker, that, owing to the conditions contained in the agreement on which the resolution is based, I cannot give it my support. It was supposed, that after twelve months' deliberation on the negotiation between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia, the result would have been some compensation to that Province for the delay which has occurred in carrying out the terms of union. But, Sir, instead of that Province receiving any compensation according to this agreement, it is being relieved of property consisting of lands, timber, coal, and other minerals to the value of $20,000,000, for which the Province is to receive a railway, seventy miles in length, involving a cost of about $2,250,000. It is true that the British Columbia Government have sanctioned this measure; but notwithstanding they have sanctioned it, it is our duty, as representatives of the Province, to consider the agreement arrived at. And let me strip this question of all the superfluous matters with which the of all the superfluous matters with which the Minister of Railways has surrounded it, and come down to the main points, which are three: (1) The grav-ing dock, (2) the railway and coal lands, and (3) the minister of land in the Peace River Country. It 3,500,000 of acres of land in the Peace River Country. It was hoped that during the negotiations between the two Governments, they would have recognized that a very serious error was committed in connection with the terms of union, and that is the locating of the graving dock in its present exposed position in the harbour of Esquimalt. There is but a narrow strip of land lying between that dock and the waters of the Straits of Fuca, by which an enemy's ship could approach within a very short distance and blow the whole structure to atoms. When the Minister of Railways, during his visit to British Columbia, inspected the location chosen for the dock, he must have noticed that it was in a very exposed position, and it is the opinion of competent engineers that the dock should have been located in the harbour of Burnard Inlet, where there are many natural advantages for the construction of a dock, and where it could be located sufficiently distant from the outer water so that neither shot nor shell from an enemy's ship could possibly reach it, and where it could be constructed for a less sum than will be necessary to complete the dock in its present position. There is another reason why the dock should be constructed at Burrard Inlet. That is already one of the principal shipping ports in the Province; it is the port for the shipment of lumber abroad; it is also the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which when completed must make that port the great Dominion commercial emporium on the Pacific, thereby creating sufficient business to make the dock a paying concern. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the consent of the House, I will occupy about five minutes in reading two or three extracts from a paper that was read before the United Service Institution on the 6th April, 1883, by a gentleman with whom many of us are well acquainted,—I refer to Major-General Laurie, who was Deputy Adjutant-General in British Columbia some two years ago, and who while completed. The sum of $341,000 has already been spent there gave his attention to the examination of the harbours Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

on that coast for the purpose of seeing where harbours, docks, ordnance yards, &c., should be constructed. Speaking of Esquimalt navy dock, he said :

"The history of this yard affords an amusing instance of how we drift' in our arrangements. When during the Crimean War the English and French squadrons united for the purpose of making the disastrous attack on Petropaulofski, the then Russian arsenal in the Pacific; our naval authorities obtained the use of a house on a point of land at the entrance of Esquimalt Harbour, and fitted it up as a hospital; land at the entrance of Esquimalt Harbour, and fitted it up as a hospital; from this beginning our naval yard has grown, and in a most unsuitable and exposed place, actually on the spit of land that divides the outside water, the Royal Roads, from the harbour; as if to encourage and invite hostile intentions; and vessels lying in the harbour, instead of in any way being able to cover the dockyard, and protect it with their guns, would have it between them and the assailants, and would actually but at present rate of progress, it will hardly be available for use during the present century." "But even supposing that Esquimalt were satisfactorily occupied and defended, the most important of our requirements would still be at an enemy's mercy. Nanaimo, to which Volonel Lovell's attention was directed as the source of our coal supply, would not be protected from hostile attack unless independent works were provided. An expedition launched against it from the Puget Sound ports, would not have to pass Esquimalt, and, even if notice of appearance of the expedition were sent to the vessels stationed there, they would but arrive in time to witness Esquimalt, and, even if notice of appearance of the expedition were sent to the vessels stationed there, they would but arrive in time to witness the destruction consummated, not to prevent it. With the shipping piers, &c., at Nanaimo destroyed, our vessels would be dependent on sail power—a pleasing condition for our mercantile, as well as our militant, marine Of course, coal could be stored in quantities under the guns at Esquimalt, but the supply could only be limited, considering risk of loss, certainty of deterioration, and enormous increase of expense; it is therefore in all respects desirable to maintain Nanaimo rather than Esquimalt as our coaling depot, where the supply would be cheaper and practically inexhaustible. But it is also important to prevent an enemy not merely stopping our obtaining coal from Nanaimo, but obtaining possession and holding it as a source of supply for his own ships. A garrison shut up in Esquimalt would hardly guard against this, and the vessels there, as stated, could not readily prevent it."

After going into further details he winds up in this manner:

manner: "It is from consideration of all this that I am led to recommend that our naval depot at E-q imalt be abardoned, and that one be established at Burrard Inlet. We are thus enabled to concentrate our available means of defence, making that the centre of our position ; it is placed immediately opposite to Nanamo, and can thus much more readily render assistance to that point than could be given from Esquimalt. In fact, an expedition coming from the south against Nanaimo could be observed, and met on the Straits of Georgia by ships from Burrard Inlet, whilet, as already mentioned, vessels from Esquimalt could only arrive after the mischief was done. Any protecting works considered necessary at Nanaimo could for these reasons before a smaller scale, as assistance could be obtained so much more quickly." "My proposed naval depot will be but thirty hours by rail from the fertile plains and great food-producing districts of the Saskatchewan, with which it will of course be in direct telegraphic communication, and as these territories are being rapidly peopled, they would pour down, not merely supplies, but reinforcements of men to assist in repelling any attack in force, an aid that could not be furnished to Esquimalt if our garrison there were attacked, and we had temporarily lost the command of the scaled ring the absence of our squadron."

These are the views of an independent gentleman, a person who has no private interest to serve, and I think they deserve every consideration at the hands of this Government. The Government are in possession of the reports of Captain Richards, who made the surveys of that coast about twenty-three years ago, Lieutenant Pender, who succeeded that gentleman when he went home, and also of Admiral Farquhar as to the superior advantages of Burrard Inlet; and last, though not least, we have the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways himself made, a few days ago in this House, in the course of his speech on the Canadian Pacific Railway alone :

"Her Majesty's vessels have during the last year surveyed the harbour and their officers have now represented to the Admiralty the propriety of making Port Moody the head-quarters for the Admiralty on the Pacific coast, as being the best location to be found there, and that there is nothing on the Pacific coast superior to it.

I think after all this evidence the Government should hesitate before expending $1,000,000 on that work for it will cost that amount from the time it was begun until it is upon it, and at the lowest calculation it will cost $500,000 more to complete the dock. Under these circumstances I think that a further examination should be made with a view of determining the relative merits of the three harbours of Burrard Inlet, Esquimalt and Nanaimo. With regard to this railway to which we are asked to give 2,000,-000 acres of land on Vancouver Island, including 450 square miles of coal land, it is true that a small portion of these lands have been alienated, but the greater portion of that which has been alienated is owned by one of the members of the present Company, thus creating the greatest coal monopoly in existence. They do not expect to realize their money from the railway, but out of the coal mines; and in addition to the Dominion Government granting this enormous monopoly, they are to receive $750,000, and the effect will be, to create one of the largest coal monopolies that ever existed—a monopoly far greater than that which cxisted in Nova Scotia twenty years ago, and which the people of that Province fought so long and so hard against. I do not think that the people of that portion of the country whose prosperity so largely depends on the opening and development of those mines would like to return to the condition of things which exist-ed before that monopoly was abolished. Why then should the Dominion Government render assistance to fasten on British Columbia, and on the Dominion generally, a far more serious monopoly, one which will eventually prove most disastrous to the country. And to whom is the monopoly granted? It has been tried to be made out that they are British Columbia people, but though there are one or two members of the company who belong to our Province, the parties who really control it, are those who now control the Southern Pacific Railway, the Texas Pacific Railway, and the Central Pacific Railway, and I do not think hon. members of this House would be surprised to hear at any time that the Northern Pacific has passed under the control of this company. If these three trans-continental lines, the Equimalt and Nanaimo Railway, and all the productive coal lands on the East coast of Vancouver Island pass under their control, there would remain only one more Pacific lamb for them to encircle with their serpent-like coil-that is to say the Canadian Pacific Railway-thus creating a state of affairs which, in my opinion, would not be very conducive or healthy to the commercial interests of the United States or Canada. With regard to the 3,500,000 acres of land on the Peace River, according to the terms of the Union, the Government of the Dominion of Canada will receive from the Government of British Columbia a belt of land 20 miles wide on each side of the line, or in all, a belt forty miles wide along the entire line running through British Columbia, and for all the lands which were alienated from that belt previous to its being reserved, they are to receive other lands contiguous thereto. Now, it has been stated by the Minister of Railways that there are 800,000 acres of land alienated, but I think the hon. gentleman is under the mark. I think I am nearer correct when I say, that there are nearly 1,000,000 acres of land alienated, previous to the reserve being placed upon it, so that, as I contend, they are receiving 2,500,000 acres more than they were entitled to under the terms of the Union, thereby enabling them to subsidize this company with $750,000. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government really do not insist on pressing these resolutions, and thereby placing the country in a position which, before five years, will be found to be a most disastrous one to our interests. I move in amendment thereto, that all the words after "that" in the said proposed motion be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof :-

having in view the future importance and safety of the Maritime interests of the Dominion of Cauada on the Pacific Coast, a Commission be appointed to examine the harbours of Esquimalt, Nanaimo and Burrard's Inlet, and report to the Government as to the best location for a Graving Dock.

Dock. "And that a Committee be appointed to take evidence for the purpose of ascertaining more definitely the extent and value of the coal, iron and other minerals, also the timber within the limits of the railway reservation, proposed to be ceded to Messrs. Dunsmuir, Huntington, and others, in aid of the construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, and that the said Committee have power to send for persons and papers, and report to this House on the earliest possible date. and that the said Committee be composed of Messrs. Beaty, Dodd, Weldon, Wood (Westmoreland), Mulock, White (Cardwell), Ross, Woodworth and Amyot."

Mr. GORDON. It is with some regret that I find it incumbent upon me to second the amendment, and when the vote comes, to vote for it. The proposition to convey all the coal within the railway belt on Vancouver Island is one that I know to be decidedly opposed by those whom I have the honour to represent. I can remember twenty years ago, when there was only one coal company on Vancouver Island, how that company domineered over everybody with whom they came in contact, is still fresh in the memory of all the early residents of Nanaimo. I am sure that no one wishes to return to that state of affairs, and if these resolutions are carried, that is the effect that they will have upon the whole coal resources of British Columbia. This Bill, which has been passed by the Local Legislature, unless carefully examined by those conversant with the character of the country, will appear very inno-cent in itself. Unless you look at the geological reports of the Dominion, which I believe to be true and correct, you cannot imagine the value of the property which is being given to a company largely composed of aliens. I regretted, Sir, to hear the hon. Minister of Railways state that these lands had lain so many years undeveloped, when to his own knowledge a reservation was proclaimed by the Canadian Government, preventing any person from obtaining those lands. Mr. Dunsmuir had secured the lands he was mining, prior to the reservation being proclaimed. It is not proper to claim that it requires a large amount of capital to develop these lands. We know that gentlemen have entered into coal mining there with comparatively small amounts of capital, but they had the facility of obtain-ing Crown grants of their land. The statement that lands are being applied for now outside of this belt, taken in connection with the geological reports, is the highest proof of the orrectness of the position we have taken on the question. It will be observed, on reading the geological reports, that from all that was known of the lands outside of this belt, they are considered to be far inferior to the lands lying within the district of Comox. Only a few months ago the Local Legislature—I do not think they did it to prevent development-on the eve of this contract, placed a royalty of 5 cents a ton on all the coal taken outside of this railway belt by any one who endeavoured to open up the inferior measures, thereby making this company a complete monopoly. In order that hon. gentlemen may have some notion of the value of this coal area, which it is proposed to give, I will quote from the report of Mr. Richardson, Geological Surveyor of the Dominion. He states that in the district of Comox the productive coal measures amount to 300 square miles, containing 4,800,000,000 tons; and there are about 10 square miles already alienated, which would leave 290 square miles in that district alone for this company. Then, from the boundaries of Comox southward, there are coal measures extending down to Saanich Inlet, according to the same authority; and it is safe to assume that within that district there are 200 square miles which are going to this company absolutely, forever, without taxation, carrying not the coal alone, and not confined within the boun-daries of the shores. But let me read what they are to

[&]quot;Considering the changes that have taken place within the last twelve years in the commerce of British Columbia, the increased developments in the coal. lumber and fishing interests, and the final location of the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Port Moody, and

"All coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marble, slate, mines, minerals and substances whatsoever in or under the lands so sgreed to be granted to the said contractors as aforesaid, and the foreshore rights in respect of all such lands as aforesaid, which are hereby agreed to be granted to the said contractors as a foresaid, and border on the sea, together with the privilege of mining under the foreshore and sea opposite any such land, and of mining and keeping for their own use all coal and minerals (herein mentioned) under the foreshore or sea opposite any such lands, in so far as such coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marble, slate, mines, minerals and substances whatsoever, and foreshore rights, are owned by the Dominion Government, for which subsidies the construction of the railway and telegrath line from Esquimalt to Nanaimo shall be com-pleted, and the same shall be equipped, maintained and operated."

It struck me, after reading that clause, that their modesty prevented them from asking the Dominion Government for all the fish that swim in the Gulf of Georgia, and all the fowl that gather there in the winter season. They even followed the geologist under the sea, because it is well known that the gentleman who described that country, referred to the strata of coal that underline the sea to the east of Vancouver, and it is well known that the beds of coal do extend under the sea. It may be said that it would be impossible for this Company to become a monopoly, from the fact that there is another company independent of it. Any one acquainted with the character of some of these men, as developed in the courts of the United States, will know that the fact of their controlling San Franscisco, will enable them to squeeze any company to the wall, and get absolute power. This subject is one, the importance of which is so keenly felt by those I have the honour to represent, that a succession of public meetings were held, at which they denounced the measure as soon as they heard of it. We had no opportunity of forming any conclusion up to the time the Local Legislature met, as to the character of the negotiations going on between the two Governments, and it was only within the last four days that a return was brought down to this House, a return asked for by myself last year, in the month of March, giving us any information as to the manner in which these negotiations were conducted, so that it was not possible for us to understand the nature or the extent of the land given away to this company. I certainly understood the right hon. leader of the Government, at the close of last Session, to state that money and lands would be given to this company as the work progressed on the same terms and conditions as had been given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, if I recollect aright, Sir, there would have been no objections to such an arrangement, because it would have provided for alternate sections along the length of the line where the land was suitable. do not think the people would have felt at all displeased with such an arrangement. There is another phase of this question to which I must refer, and that is the fact that the contract had been given to a private company by the Local Legislature, and that company had failed. If we look into this transaction, we find that Mr. Clemens, the head of the organization, was no more nor less than the chief of construction under Mr. Huntington, on the Southern Pacific Railway, and the general impression on the Pacific Coast is that he forfeited his $10,000 in order that his companions. might get a contract that would enable them to build 80 miles less of railway and get a bonus of $750,000 from the Dominion Government. Whether that be true or not, it is not for me to say, but I think there is some truth in it, and I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is a most dangerous thing to place in the hands of these great rival companies the whole coal resources of British Columbia, so far as is known at present. As to the objects these gentle-men have in view, I will read an article from a San Francisco paper, published after this contract was made known:

"The managers of the Central Pacific have completed their preliminary arrangements for building the Vancover Island Railway. The Dominion Government has given them a subsidy of $759,000 cash and the pro-vincial Legislature 2,000,000 acres of land. The road will be 70 miles in length, connecting Nanaimo and Esquimalt. These lands will embrace immense forests of pine, cedar and hemlock, and a vast amount of coal lands not hitherto taken up by speculators. Their expectation Mr. Gopport is to become coal merchants and supply the San Francisco and other markets on the Pacific Coast, and to such an extent do some think this will be carried, that it is feared our shipping interests will be seriously affected, by making it unprofitable for English wheat ships to bring coal in ballast. Should this occur, the number of wheat ships might be greatly diminished and ocean freights rise so high that the farmers might be compelled to send their crops to Europe by way of New Orleans. Another motive is attributed to the builders of the short road on British territorr.' territory.

Now let me call the attention of the House particularly to this threat or proclamation. It is to this effect:

"The straits are so narrow at Nanaimo that they may be crossed by easy ferriage, which would make Victoria the proper terminus of the Canadian Pacific. If, however, the Vancouver Island road were made a link in that scheme, the terminus more properly being fixed at the southern end of the island, the Central Pacific would be in a position to dictate to the Canadian Pacific in respect either to its Asiatic trade or any advantages it might hope to have from trade with San Francisco or other ports of California. The Vancouver line, though so far off and so brief, may therefore, by shrewd management, be made to seriously affect our local interests."—S. F. Chronicle.

I will also read another extract from a New York paper with reference to one of the individuals interested in this contract:

"People who have read the Huntington letters attentively, have made the acquaintance of a shrewd, energetic and cheerful character, totally deficient in the moral sense. There is nothing sham about Mr. totally deficient in the moral sense. There is nothing sham about Mr. C. P. Huntington; not a trace of hypocrisy in his organization. His business was to buy votes in Congress, to bribe public officials, to put up jobs against the Government, to deceive and mislead public opinion, up jobs against the Government, to deceive and mislead public opinion, to get money out of the public Treasury for the benefit of himself and his associates. And he went about that business directly and cheer-fully, and with as little sense of degradation as if it had been the nost honourable business in the world. If he refrained from proclaiming his theories and methods to everybody, as frankly as he confided them to General Colton, it was because that would have defeated his plans, not because he was ashumed of himself. He was not ashamed of himself, and probably he is not to-lay. Railroad ties were for sale, and he bught them; Senators and representatives were for sale, and why should he not buy them, too ? He paid cash to engineers and surveyors for running a line: why should he not pay cash to legislators for young for running a line; why should he not pay cash to legislators for voting him the right o: way?"-New York Sun.

These are the opinions held of one of those great railway contractors who, for building a small section of railway on our Island are to get all these millions of tons of coal. According to the estimate of Mr. Richardson, before alluded to, assuming that there are 400 square miles of coal land within the whole belt conceded to that Company and assuming that the geologist is only correct to one tenth of his statement, it would leave that Company 640,000,000 tons; we can easily make the computation of 16,000,000 tons to the square mile. Ten per cent. of that would be 640,000,000 tons, assuming that the geologist was correct only to the extent of one-tenth of his statement. Ido not know that I can add any more to my remarks on this question. It is one that is likely to se-riously affect the district that I have the honour to represent; it is likely to place every coal miner in that district under the domination of one company; it is likely to place all the coal mines in that distict under the domination of one company; it is likely to place every burner of coal in that Province, every domestic fireside, under the domination of one company; it is likely to place the commerce, not only of British Columbia, but of the Dominion under the domination of one company, so far as that one product is concerned; and so far as the combination of such great monied men is concerned, it is likely to affect our great trans-continental railway terminus. I would con-sider it a dereliction of duty if I did not enter my most solemn protest against any such contract.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I am sure, after the very eloquent and full description of the case given by the Minister of Railways, it will not be necessary for me to offer any lengthened remarks, because I take the same view as the Minister does himself, and I might say at the commencement, that the glowing description which he gave of the Province of British Columbia was not at all exaggerated. With regard to one or two remarks made by my hon friend from New Westminster (Mr. Homer), in regard to the Graving Dock, I have no doubt that if it was decided by the Government to remove the Graving Dock from Esquimalt, which is on Vancouver Island, to the Mainland, my hon. friend would support the balance of the Bill. That has been the great difficulty with the Province of British Columbia, and with its representatives coming to this Parliament. In almost every instance, when any large question has come before this Parliament, if it has been on the Island, the Mainland has opposed it; if it has been on the Mainland the Island has opposed it; and hence I sincerely trust that hon. members of this House will not take notice of any remarks from any member coming from British Columbia, with regard to matters of this kind, but will simply weigh the question upon its own merits. He also spoke in reference to the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway as being "the terminus." Well, I loadily admit that at the present time it is known as the terminus, but the general opinion is that it will not eventually be the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and I feel certain that, when the Manager of that great work pays a visit to Port Moody and soes the location, he will realily come to the conclusion that it is not the place for the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, with regard to this measure, it is well understood by hon. mem bers of this House that between the Provincial Government and the Dominion Government there have been differences. The contract, as we are aware, was entered into by the Provincial and the Dominion Governments. On the part of the Provinical Government, their obligations were carried out to the letter, but not so on the part of the Dominion Government, and hence these differonces have existed, and, as time has passed along, they have increased. A change of Government took place in the Province of British Columbia a year ago. The new Government, immediately after assuming power, took steps to have these difficulties, as far as possible, rectified. The result of that is this Settlement Bill which is before this Parliament to-day. All I can say is, that it is not for me, as a solitary individual, to oppose this Bill simply from a personal standpoint. However much I may be opposed to it, I am here as the representative of the people, and I am prepared to state that nine-tenths of the people of British Columbia are in favour of this proposition.

Mr. HOMER. Not a third of them.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. The district I represent in this Parliament is represented in the Local Parliament by eight members. Six out of the eight voted in the Local Parlia ment for this proposition. I think then, so far as I am concerned, my course is clear to vote for this measure. The people wish a settlement of these differences, and I maintain that the people should rule. If they require that their differences sould be settled, even if it be at a large sacrifice, I say that the wishes of the people should be carried out. A great deal has been said with regard to certain persons forming this company, a portion of them being Americans. I wish to remark on this point that, but for the American capitalists coming into our Province, we would not have been in the prosperous condition that we are to day. Nearly every one of our industries has been started and maintained by American capital, not because we have not men in the Province with money, but I am sorry to say they have not the enterprise. They prefer putting it in the Savings Bank and drawing 4 per cent to putting it into prosperous enterprises which would bring them teu. That is the character of some of our capitalists in British Columbia; I am sorry to say it.

Mr. HOMER. Name the Americans, please.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Opposition also comes for other reasons. In the year 1882, there was a proposition to give the building of this road to a company—Mr. Dansmuir was, I believe, at the head of it. That was in 1882, when the hon. Mr. DeCosmos was a member of this House. The grant which it was proposed to give to Mr. Dunsmuir and his associates at that time was much larger than what is proposed in the present Bill, and yet we find that Mr. DeCosmos, who at present is opposed to this settlement Bill, then said with regard to the proposition of that date, and with regard to the men who formed this company :—

"The associates of Dunsmuir, Diggle, Crocker and Stanford, are a guarantee that the Island Railway will be built, if the Dominion Government agree to the subsidies they may ask. The Central and Southern Pacific Railway can provide a market for coal that will annually increase, and at the same time not diminish the supply for the Canadian Pacific Railway by railway ferry to Burrard Inlet. I know of no combination that can do so much for the development of Island interests and industries as the one proposed, nor do so much for the general interest of the Province."

Now, that is the opinion of that gentleman at that date, but still, strange to say, though there is not so much given in the present proposition as there was at that time, he is opposed to the present one, probably because he did not have a hand in it. We are told that there are 2,000,000 acres of land given to this Company. I think that is a mistake. All there is within the belt, I believe, is 1,500,000 acres. There was in the contract which was given to the Clements Company 2,000,000 acres, reaching from Esquimalt to Seymour Narrows. In the present arrangement, the land does not go to Seymour Narrows, but half way between Comox and Seymour Narrows. There is about 500,000 acres less than there was in the Clements proposition, and yet there was no objection whatever on the part of the people of British Columbia to accept this individual of whom I have just read, and who wanted Mr. Dunsmuir to have it at the time; I say there was no objection whatever on the part of the people of that Province to the Clements Company building the Nanaimo Railway, and who were getting more than this Bill before the House gives to the Dunsmuir Company.

Mr. GORDON. I would merely interpolate the romark that they were also to build 80 miles more railway, and we c not getting $750,000 from the Dominion.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Yes; but 80 miles is but a very small matter compared with the extra amount of land and subsidies that they were to get, beyond what the prosent Company are to get from the Dominion Government. Now, Sir, objection is made to giving this coal land to the Company. I, for one, am opposed to monopolies, I presume, as much as any hon. gentleman in this House, but I know that no large undertaking can be successfully carried out without men of capital being offered inducements to undertake it; and it is only by having men of this character to take hold of it that work of this kind can be successfully accomplished. Now, Sir, it is easy to say that there are all these millions of tons of coal within this belt. Why has no company been found to develope these mines? It has been knows for years that this coal existed there ; and how is it that some individual of enterprise has not taken hold of it? Sir, since the reserve was lifted, not a man nor a company have come forward for that purpose.

Mr. HOMER. The reserve was not lifted.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. 1 beg your pardon, the reserve was lifted; the reserve was lifted by the Provincial Government, and from that day up to the time this arrangement was made, not a man nor a company of men came forward and offered to build the railway. During all these years no one has come forward who was ready to develop these vast beds of coal. Why, we might live there till doomsday, and unless we manifested sufficient enterprise to develop the resources of the country, we would still be as poor as Job's turkey at last.

Mr. BLAKE. You would not want any fuel at doomsday.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Sir, outside of this belt, there are vast beds of coal on Vancouver Island. At Potsina, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, there is at the present an organized company engaged in developing a coal mine there. Also on Queen Charlotte Island we have large seams of anthracite coal, and on Graham Island, there are at least 400,000 acres of the best kind of land fit for settlement, beneath which it is known that an immense coal field exists. On the west coast, in addition to the region I have referred to, there are applications in the land office in Victoria for over 50,000 acres of coal lands, so that to say we are giving all our coal lands to one company is to say that which is not correct. We have large quantities of it there, and I am sorry to see hon. members from that Province rising here in their scats and intimating that the only coal we have We have is contained within this narrow strip of land. large seams on the Island, and we have plenty of it also on the Mainland. Thence we have no cause to fear that we shall ever be in want of coal. In addition to this, one of the greatest advantages we could have for the development of our resources there, is to have American capitalists come in and put their money into enterprises of this nature-especially the men who are associated with Mr. Dunsmuir, who are the largest consumers of coal on the Pacific Coast. Why, Sir, they require themselves, every month, at least 32,000 tons of coal. Now, these gentlemen have to get coal somewhere, and there is no coal on the Pacific parts and there is no coal on the Pacific coast as good as the coal which we have on Vancouver Island. The coal which we are shipping to San Francisco is bringing $2 a ton more than any other coal brought to that market, either from any portion of the United States, from Eagland, or from Australia; and apart altogether from steamboat purposes, the people of San Francisco would prefer to give $5 a ton more for Wellington coal for household purposes, if they could get it, than for coal which comes from any portion of the United States. Therefore, I say that these gentlemen associated with Mr. Dansmuir are not at all likely to purchase their coal from any other Companies so long as they have a vast coal field of their own. The result, Mr. Speaker, of this Company getting control of this coal land, would be that they would open up their mines so as to supply the large demand of their own. Why, Sir, the quantity which they require for themselves is sufficient to warrant them in opening up at least three other mines, in order to supply their wants, to say nothing of the local demand. I think, therefore, it is of a very great advantage for us to have foreign capital come in there, much more so than if a Company was formed of men residing in British Columbia altogether, because these foreign capitalists have interests outside of the Province which they make tributary to the development of our Province. Now, Sir, with regard to the character of Mr. Huntington-I contend that we have nothing at all to do with that question. It matters naught to me whether Mr. Huntington's character is good or not; all I want, as a British Columbian, is to get men to come forward who will put down a sufficient guarantee for the building of that road -no matter whether it is Mr. Huntington or another man, an American or a Britisher. Hence, I think it is no part of my business to throw any slur, or any insinuation, upon any gentleman outside this House. The Government at the present time have numerous applications for prospecting for coal above Nanaimo, outside of the belt which is to be given to this Company. It is well known that coal exists beyond the belt as far as Seymour Narrows, in large quantities. That is the report, and hence the applications which are filed at the present time, and applications were coming in up to the time the Premier left the Province, which is proof-I care not what books may say to the contrary-that the people are satisfied, from their own observations and discoveries, that coal does exist in that part of the country. The settlement of this question not only will develop our coal industry, but by bringing in have been suggested by the observations made from the Mr. SHAKESPEARE.

foreign capital, it will be the means of encouraging other industries. It will bring a large immigration -(Mr. Gordon: Yes, of Chinese) -to our Province; it will open our agricultural lands, which up to the present time have been locked up, and also our mountains. I am happy to say that we have mountains in that wealth in some of them than the whole agricultural land in one of the old Provinces. By bringing in this foreign capital, and building the railway, which will necessitate branch lines, we shall have a chance to develop our resources-not only our coal, but our gold and our silver, and our forests, which are enormous; and we shall be given an opportunity of bringing those products to market Province, and we would not part with some of them for thousands of acres of Ontario farming land. We have more at a cheaper rate than it is possible to do at the present time. The fact is, that for want of roads, British Columbia is undeveloped, and with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Island Railway, I am satisfied there is a bright future for the Province. There will be employment for thous ands of men. I expect, within five years from the time the Canadian Pacific Railway is finished, to see blast furnaces and rolling mills established. Under these circumstances, it is not my business, as a resident of that Province, to interfere with, or put a stumbling block in the way of any project which has for its object the development of the resources of that Province. I am in favour of this measure. The people are in favour of it; I am one of their representatives; I am here to-day representing a portion of that Province, and in voting in favour of this measure, I am carrying out the wishes of my constituents.

Mr. HESSON. Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to read a telegram which has been sent to me from Victoria, B.C. It is as follows :-

"S. R. HESSON, M.P. :

" VICTOBIA, B.C., 15th.

"Support Settlement Bill. Nine-tenths of people here in favour. (Signed) "JAMES ORR."

That gentleman left my own town twenty-seven years ago, and I think he speaks as representing the people of that Province. He is a very intimate friend of mine, and is an intelligent and elever man. I think it is proper to lay this telegram on the Table of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to vote for the motion in amendment made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Homer), though I think some of the observations of the mover require some little attention at our hands, and I dare say they will receive consideration in some further observations from the Minister of Railways. I do not intend to vote for that motion, because I can see that, unless there is the very clearest case, it would be a very unfortunate business to postpone, certainly for a year, and perhaps indefinitely, a settlement, which so far as the interests of British Columbia are concerned, must, I think, be deemed to be satisfactory to the people of that Province. I have always taken the view that, in disputes between the Dominion Government and any of the Provincial Governments, the proper exponents of the views of the Province were the Provincial authorities. I do not believe that the mission of members of Parliament is to settle disputes between the Provinces and the Dominion. We are here, from particular Provinces, it is true, but to act in the interests of the whole country, and it is in that sense we speak, and in negotiations respecting differences, I am always prepared to accept-more particularly when the decision is arrived at by such a preponderating majority as in this case—the decision of the Provincial Legis-lature as conclusive as to what the wishes of the Province are in that particular. But, consistent with that rule of decision, there are one or two points which other side, and one or two to which I alluded before, which I think it will be reasonable that the Minister of Railways, before the question is resolved, should deal with further. Upon the financial question, upon the general results to the Dominion, we are not in a position at this moment to speak intelligently. I moved for correspondence with respect to the dry dock, and also for a statement as to what the cost to the Dominion would be under the new arrangement. I made those motions early in the Session. I pointed out that they were essential to an intelligent decision of what the real merits of the financial terms were. They were promised, as hon. gentlemen opposite always do, gene-rously and courteously enough, but they have not been brought down; and therefore that element in the discussion remains unsettled at this moment. I do not propose, therefore, to touch the financial question; we do not really know what the cost will be without that information. The points to which I think a little attention might properly be directed, are principally two. The question which has attracted so much attention during this Session is that of the country undertaking such enormous obligations as they have undertaken this Session, in order to establish the through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from ocean to ocean, at a very early day. We have been told that a principal reason for establishing that through line at a very early date, was to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, at the earliest practicable moment, and before the trade would be fixed in other channels and grooves, to enter into competition with the Northern Pacific particularly, and of course with other Pacific railway companies. Then the trans.continental trade, the Pacific trade and the Atlantic trade to be land-borne by the Pacific Railway Company has thus, in the view of the Government, a very large and important significance. The one reason for our entering upon those obligations was that that trade might be enjoyed by this country some years earlier than it would be if the original contract were carried out; and that the danger to which the Canadian portion of that trade was to be exposed, from the fixing of the trade in other channels for those three or five years, might be averted. Now, connected with that question of permanence to which some hon, gentlemen have alluded, the hon, member who spoke last gave us very positively a series of negative information. He told us most positively that as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities went over there and looked at the country, they would decide that Port Moody would not be the terminus. He did not tells us where it would be fixed, and I do not know whether he meant Equimalt or Victoria or some other point, but he was satisfied that Port Moody was not to be the terminus. We know that that opinion is shared by the Minister of Public Works-or at least was shared by him when he was responsible for the conduct of that Department, and at a later date when he was in Opposition, and was discussing this subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when the Parliament of which my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was First Minister, was drawing to its close. He has consistently declared, up to the latest utterance I recol lect him making, that the practical terminus of the trade to which I have been referring was Esquimalt. If that be so, -I do not express an opinion-but if it be so, I maintain it is of the greatest consequence that the Island Railway should not be in the control of hostile hands-should not be in the control of those who are identified, not indeed with the Northern, but with the other Pacific Railway, the one which has its terminus at San Francisco. I think some observation on that subject from the Minister of Ruilways, who has doubtless considered this question in all its bearings, would be appropriate on this occasion. What is to be the effect, assuming the views of the Minister of Public Works, which I have referred to, the railway or ships, so as to be cheaply transported? If and which were also originally the views of the whole you had not those conditions, then practically and for the Government, led by the First Minister at that time, of fixing the terminus at Esquimalt. Of course for contract purposes it was not a point, nor to implement our obligations to British Columbia, for I have always contended that the obligations so to do was implemented when we got to the Pacific coast. But, in considering how the Canadian Pacific Railway is to pay, how the trans-continental trade is to be taken, it is of great consequence to the Dominion, irrespective of the contract altogether, that nothing should be done by us to prevent that being the practical means of obtaining the trade. If those views which the hon. gentleman held up to a comparatively late period as to the proper terminus be true, it is enough to say, as has been said from the other side, that as the main corporators in the new Company are the chief proprietors of the American Pacific Railway, that it is not at all likely that anything which would facilitate the trans continental trade arriving vid Esquimalt, would be agreed to by them. One of their objects would be to utilize their possession of the Van-couver coal and timber lands, and the Vancouver railways, with a view of diverting the trade towards San Francisco, and at any rate, throw obstacles in the way of its going to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now the next point which I think is of importance, from a general standpoint is the question of the coal supply. This question did not fail to attract the attention of the Minister of Justice when he was acting for the Government in the negotiations which resulted in the present arrangement, because you find that the 24th clause of the Bill which was agreed to by the Minister of Justice, on behalf of the Government of Canada, and Mr. Smith, the First Minister of Shitish Columbia, is as follows :-

"The Company shall, at all times, sell coals gotten from the lands that may be acquired by them from the Dominion Government to any Canadian railway company having the terminus of its railway on the seaboard of British Columbia, and to the Imperial, Dominion and P ovincial authorities, at the same rates as may be charged to any railway company owning or operating any railway in the United States, or to any foreign customer whatsoever."

Therefore you see, that this question attracted the attention of these two parties. If so, there was a danger of the power over the coal lands of Vancouver Island to be acquired by this railway company being established to the pre-judice of the Canadian Pacific Ruilway Company, the imperial or Provincial authorities. There was that danger, and they proceeded to make an effort to guard against it. Now, the circumstance that these two Governments, who have surveyed the whole situation, who have considered of the whole matter, decided that there was a danger to be guarded against, leads me strongly to the belief that there must have been some danger to be guarded against; and the observation which was made by the hon. gentleman who spoke last, that there was no danger at all to be apprehended in this matter, not because of the 4th clause, but because coal is so abundant everywhere that it is of no consequence, and that in that respect there is no monopoly-I say that observation is not borne out. That observation is not borne out by the circumstance that the two Governments have felt it necessary to try and take care lest there should be a detriment from too high a price being charged for this particular coal. If it were the fact that coal was not nearly so plenty, but was to be found in such available localities that there would be no danger at all of any injurious result from handing over these lands to this corporation, we would not, I think, have found this clause in the Bill. There may be a great deal of coal in Vancouver Island; I have no doubt there is, but that is only half the question to decide. What is important with reference to a commodity so great, a proportion of the cost of which is due to the facility in getting it trans-ported to the market, is not merely—is there coal there? but is it in localities where it can be got cheaply on board the railway or ships, so as to be cheaply transported ? If present purpose there might as well be no coa'. Having pointed out that there is reason to believe that there was a danger to be guarded against in this respect, I simply say-repeating the observation I made in the debate on the Address-that the condition imposed does not furnish such a precaution, and that, for the reason to which the hon. gentleman who last spoke alluded. These American corporators are practically proprietors of the Pacific Railway. We know that there is a method of obtaining what is supposed in some corporations a legitimate profit out of these railways, and that is by selling goods at a very high rate to the company which they also control, and if there is an identity of interests between the corporators of the Vancouver Island Coal Company and the proprietors of the Southern Pacific, it is quite clear that the coal may and probably will be sold at a very high rate by the owners of the coal, who are also the owners of the American railway, to the American railway. Such events have happened in the past and they are not at all unlikely to happen in the future It is of no practical consequence at what price they sell the coal, because they sell it to themselves, and the price goes into their own pockets; and therefore it is of little practical good to this country to obtain this restriction, that they shall charge no more for the coal they sell to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to the Dominion than they do to any railway owned and operated by themselves in the United States. There is no guarantee that they will charge only reasonable rates to their own railway in the United States, so that there is no practical protection, so far as I can see, under this precaution. I do not know whether the paper from which one of the hon. gentlemen read was the San Francisco Chronicle.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; the Chronicle.

Mr. BLAKE. I have a later issue of that paper, which speaks of the present condition of things, and the operations of Mr. Huntington in this connection. It is as late as the 12th of this month, and it says:

"For a good many months it has been common report here that the California railway monoply had secured from the Government of British Columbia certain concessions to aid them in the construction of a railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, on Vanceuver Island. A large land grant is named as a part of the scheme, and this grant is known to coutain the most extensive coal deposits on the Pacific coast, the ceal being of a superior quality. The uses to which the California monopoly intended to turn these coal mines, were explained by U. P. Huntington, in connection with bis boast that the Southern Pacific intends to rob the Cape Horn route of the grain trade between the coast and Europe and drive all sailing vessels employed in that business from this port. Mr. Huntington, Brest, & c, at low rates hitherto, because very many of them came here loaded with coal from England. But this coal freight the Southern Pacific would purchase collier steamers to supply San Francisco with coal from the mines it had secured on Vancouver Island. The supply, he said, is unlimited, and the Company he represents can deliver at our wharves all the coal required here at lower rates than sailing vessels can bring it from England via Cape Horn. Cut off from this resource, the Uape Horn respects are the sation of the railway in the transpointation of grain. "It he Chronicle called the attention of the public to this boast at the

"The Chronicle called the attention of the public to this boast at the time it was made, with the remark that it was evidently a part of the Huntington programme to monopolize the coal as well as the grain transportation of this coast; and that when the Cape Horn and Australian coal ships had been driven out of the trade, the Huntingtonmonopoly would have the coast at the disadvantage which always results from a want of competition, and be able to fix the price of coal here at their own will, as well as the rates of transportation on grain for the European market This warning appears to have reached the directory of the Canadian Pacific Railway who take the same view of Mr. Hunt ington's boast. And now comes the news by way of Montreal that the great Dominion monopoly is exerting its all-powerful influence in the Ottawa Parliament to have the British Columbia concession to Huntington & Co. upset and invalidated. The Canadians have made the important discovery that the Huntington Company is identical with a coal land ing that has possession or control of all the valuable coal lands in Washington Territory and that this Vancouver Island concession means the handing over to this ring of a monopoly of the whole coal tusiness of the Pacific slope.

"This is doubtless an exaggeration, but we hole the Canadian com-"This is doubtless an exaggeration, but we hole the Canadian company will succeed in its endeavors to keep the Huntington monopoly out of Vanconver Island, for if it gets the footing there which it is am-Mr. BLAKE.

ing at, the consumers of coal in this city will be at its mercy as much as the producers of wheat, in the event of the breaking down of the Cape Horn route."

Therefore, some interest, from a local point of view, appears to be excited in San Francisco as to these large operations by which Mr. Huntington, as the President of the American Pacific Railway, proposes to divert across the continent a very large amount of the traffic which has heretofore been sea-borne from the Pacific coast to the old world. The hon. gentleman said, and said rightly-at least I sympathize with his views-that, at this time, and under the circumstances in which we are placed, there is no objection to American capital being employed in Canada. I remember when the Government made the very strongest protestations against the employment of American capital in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That has all g(n)past, however, and the complaint now is, not that Americans get control, but that they won't buy the stock, which we are endeavouring to supplement from our own limited exchequer. Under these circumstances, it would appear to be ridiculous to apply one line of measure to the Vancouver Island Railway and another to the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I think one may fairly speak of the position these corporators occupy with reference to other railways; and it is not because these gentlemen are Americans, but because, as I have pointed out, they must be supposed, in this, to them, very small transaction, to be acting in the interest of a very large enterprise of which they are the controllers and the chief proprietors, that I thought it fitting that the Minister of Railways should make some explanations on this subject. I do not know whether I need say anything further, as to the methods which these gentlemen have adopted in carrying on th ir enterprises in the country to which they belong, beyond what I said in the debate on the Address, except to repeat the hope that, whatever they obtain for their legitimate enterprises, they will not carry into Canadian Legislatures the same methods of success which they have become notorious for in the Congress of their own country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will not require very much time, I think, to reply to the observations and criticisms that have been offered. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition that, in a matter of this kind, it is very important that we should know what are the sentiments of the Province. When I was in British Columbia, three years ago, the Government of Mr. Walkem and Mr. Beaven was in power. I took up this question with them, and practically this very area of land, only a considerably larger area, was settled upon as what the then Government of British Columbia were prepared to give for the purpose of securing the construction of the Vancouver Island Railway. That Government has been defeated, and their opponents, who have taken their places, have agreed to this measure by a very large majority, so that the House will see that this land, with the coal measures, is being given to secure the construction of that railway, not by the Dominion Government, but by the Government of British Columbia, because both parties when in power have been only too ready to offer these terms in order to secure that road. I think that fact disposes effectually of the question whether the public sentiment of British Columbia is in favour of this measure or not. Now, there can be 10 doubt that there are very large and very important coal measures lying altogether outside of the large coal area which is to be given by these resolutions to the Company. The fact that at this moment the Government of British Columbia have applications for no less than 50,000 acres of coal lands; the fact alluded to already, that on the west coast of British Columbia, at this moment, another company are in successful operation upon a very valuable coal area, and the fact that outside of Vancouver Island altogether, on Queen Charlotte Island, there are coal measures probably not inferior to those on Vancouver Island itself, afford the best evidence that there are very large coal fields outside of the field proposed to be given to this Company. In Queen Charlotte Island, there are coal measures not inferior to those of Vancouver Island itself, so that there is really no danger of a monopoly. But I would ask what possible good is it to Canada or to British Columbia to have the most inexhaustible coal fields if they are not operated, if they are to remain for the next fifty years as they have remained for the last fifty years, practically without being operated. They are of no value to any person if they are not operated, and the statement of my hon. friend from New Westminster; that they have not been operated because they have been kept under reservation by the Dominion Government, falls completely to the, ground when we remember how long a period it was before there was any such reservation. I he Government of British Columbia removed that reservation altogether, and yet, with the offer of all these advantages, of all this area - and it is not a very large area of valuable land, except as regards minerals, although large in extent, because its character is so rocky and mountainous as to prevent its having anything like the value that would likely attach to such a large territorial area. The very fact that when that reservation was removed, not only all the land here offered, but a larger quantity, went begging and no person could be induced to take it up; the fact that all these capitalists of San Francisco, all these gentlemen connected with other railways, who were perfectly aware of the advantages offered, would not undertake the construction of the road: the fact that the Government of British Columbia were incapable of constructing it, is the best evidence that there is not much strength in the objections offered to these resolutions. Mr. Clements who had undertaken this work, was obliged to forfeit his deposit because, with a still larger area of land than this, he could not obtain capitalists to go with him into the work. I do not accept the very ingenious suggestion of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. (Jordon), who intimates that was done in the interest of Mr. Huntington. Had it been so done, there would have been somebody else, not in the interests of Mr. Huntington, who would have only been too glad to take Mr.Clements' place, because it was a matter of notoriety that the British Columbia Government were offering all these advantages, and offering them in vain. I quite agree with the opinion expressed, that it is important to know where the capital is to come from, and who are the parties that are going to control the work; and what is the result? The fact that Mr. Crocker is connected with the Southern Pacific Railways, and is in a position to require a large amount of coal for the consumption of those roads, is the greatest possible advantage in our having him interested in the development of these mines. What takes place at present? Mr. Dansmuir furnishes Mr. Crocker now 4,000 tons of coal per month, from Vancouver Island. Mr. Crocker's consumption is 33,000 tons per month, over 1,000 tons per day, and nothing will tend more to the development of our coal industry, than to have a man who requires this great quantity, and has to look elsewhere to get the greater part of it, who has to look to Australia, to England, and of Seattle, from has even to take the inferior coal the adjoining territory of the United States. It is of the greatest advantage to us to have him interested in obtaining his whole supply from our territory, and thus giving employment to miners and expending capital in the development of our coal industry. So far from regarding that as an objection, I regard it as an advantage. I entirely agree in the observation of my hon. friend, that it would have been better if the Canadian Pacific Railway had constructed this line. When I was in British Columbia, three years ago, I took every means to collect all the information I could and to use all the influence I had with the Canadian Pacific Railway, to get them to take this offer of all this land and all are compelled to sell to the Dominion Government, and to this coal, and go into the work of constructing the road. Having examined it most carefully and attentively, they refused to take up this line from Nanaimo to Esquimalt. They did not consider it necessary for their enterprise, for the reason that the Burrard Inlet terminus, whatever may be said by hon. gentlemen in this House, is known, on the most undoubted authority, to be a most admirable terminus and admirable harbour, suitable for the largest ships that cross the ocean from China and Japan, and a terminus that will, in every way, answer the purposes of the road. No doubt, a great many of the passengers coming over the Canadan Pacific Raiway will go down to Nanaimo and avail themselves of that road, and I believe, whoever may have capital invested in its construction will be only too glad to invite all the traffic they can get over the Canadian Pacific Railway, or from any other place, to make their venture a profitable one. The House will hardly believe that the hon. member for New Westminster was serious when he proposed a change in the site of the Graving Dock. I am glad to be able to give to my hon. friend who has taken his soat the information he required as to the expenditure on the Graving Dock, to the 31st Dacember last. It amounted to $187,136.66, and I hardly think any person will seriously propose that, after having made that expenditure upon the site selected by the Government of British Columbia, and after that site has been approved by the Imperial authorities-and the best evidence that they approved of the site was that they agreed to give £50,000 sterling to complete the work on that site-we will hardly be disposed to tear up that Graving Dock and carry it away, even for the purpose of securing such an admirable site as would be found at Burrard Inlet. The whole cost is estimated, as nearly as can be accortained, at about $665,000.

Mr. BLAKE. And the Imperial expenditure?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, from that you deduct the £50,000 to be received from the Imperial Government, or $243,000 in round numbers, and you have about $422,000 as the cost to us of the work, from the beginning to the end. I may say that, as regards the ingenious theory by which Mr. Huntington is going to stop all the traffic from Australia and all the traffic from England, for the purpose of carrying wheat by a trans-continental line of railway from San Francisco to New York, there cannot be any very great danger of that enterprise being undertaken. Why, at this moment the difficulty the coal mining measure of Vancouver Island has had, is the fact that in San Francisco they buy no coal from Vancouver Island; because it is an enormous wheat growing country, the wheat fields require a large amount of shipping from England, and the ships which carry away the wheat bring out coal as ballast and throw it into the market at a very cheap rate. They have there the coal from Australia as well, and I think that the only means by which they can shut out that opposition is to get possession of the coal measures of Vancouver Island, which will furnish so much coal that they will stop all the trade by the Cape and Australia, and will involve the putting down of coal at a sufficiently reasonable rate to sait the Canadian Pacific Railway or anybody else for anything they require. I am glad to know the Canadian Pacific Railway will not be dependent on even Vancouver Island for their coal; that, during the past seasons, every day's exploration of the country has proved the existence of enormous coal measures of the most valuable description, lying in the neighbourhood of the base of the Rocky Mountains, for the operation of railways." I do not think, therefore, that more could have been done, or that more is required, in regard to the protection, that the clause which provides that, whatever they sell coal, for from the coal mines of Vancouver Island to parties outside, they

the local Government, and to the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the same terms. I will not take up the time of the House longer than to say that I am very glad, after listening to hon. gentlemen, to find that the measure so commends itself to the approval and judgment of the House as to elicit no more severe or serious criticisms than have been expressed

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman, in supposing that I referred to the plan of Mr. Huntington as being to carry this traffic down to San Francisco and to New York. It is a much more dangerous one than that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is the plan?

Mr. BLAKE. It takes a much more southern port than New York.

Mr. IVES. I should like to ask the Minister if this clause means the cost at which they sell coal in San Francisco, with the transportation added, or less the transportation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The cost at the mine.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I wish to make a few remarks upon this subject more particularly in reference to the expressions which fell from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Homer). He says the Graving Dock is in a very insecure place. I would remind him of the fact that the Graving Dock is right in the rear of Her Majesty's dockyard. In clause 12 of the Terms of Union, it is provided that :-

"The Dominion Government shall guarantee the interest for ten years from the date of the completion of the works at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, on such sum not exceeding $\pounds 100,000$ sterling, as may be re-quired for the construction of a first-class Graving Dock at Esquimalt."

Now, that being in the Terms of Union, I apprehend that it is not within the power of this Parliament to remove the Graving Dock, however much the hon. member for New Westminster might desire it—and I equally apprehend that he is speaking rather from a sectional than a Dominion point of view in this matter-that he could not induce this Dominion Parliament to remove the Esquimalt Graving Dock to Burrard Inlet without its previously receiving the approbation of the people, and having been sanctioned by the Government of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman also quoted from General Laurie's report. I have also General Laurie's report here, and I would only say, as far as that report goes, that it is simply an individual opinion. I have the very highest respect for General Laurie and for his opinion, but, at the same time, the very best men in this world are liable to err, and I think he has erred in his opinion on that particular point. But, whether he has erred or not, the fact remains the same, that the Esquimalt Graving Dock has been commenced at Esquimalt, in keeping with the Terms of Union, and the construction will be continued by the Dominion Government (to which Government it has now been transferred) until it is brought to a successful completion. As regards the railway lands that are given to this Company, that is a matter, like many other matters that are embodied in this Bill, which has gone before our Local Legislature, and which is composed of twenty-five members; out of those twenty-five members, fifteen voted for the Bill and seven against it. I was present on this occasion and saw the vote taken. There were two gentlemen who did not vote, and very rightly, too. One was Mr. Dunsmuir himself, who thought possibly it would not be the correct thing to vote in a matter in which he had either a direct or an indirect interest, although it was in connection with the Dominion Government, more particularly than with the Local. The other gentleman was the member for Cassiar, who held, to a slight extent, different views upon the measure as a whole, and for these slight differences of opinion he also abstained from voting. The twenty fifth member was, like your honourable self, the (Messrs Bunster and DeCosmos) have repeatedly pressed our

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Speaker in the Chair. Now, fifteen out of twenty two having carried this measure in British Columbia, and in my consti tuency six out of the eight members having voted in favour of the measure, and three out of the four members for the city of Victoria having voted for it, I think, Mr. Speaker, it leaves me very little option in the matter, even supposing I held views diametrically opposed to the members in the Local Legislature. I am sent here, not to speak my views individually, not to vote from my own individual standpoint, but to vote in keeping with, and to express the opinions of the people who sent me here. These people have evinced to the whole of this Parliament exactly what their opinion is upon this particular matter; and, as has already been stated, nine-tenths, certainly in the city of Victoria and its surroundings-and that is the district I represent-are in favour of this measure. The majority of British Columbians are also in favour of this settlement, as has been shown by the vote taken in the House which has been already referred to, and I think, if I felt ever so much disposed to vote against the Bill, it would be my bounden duty, considering that those people who have already given their opinion in the Local Legislature, represent collectively the same number of inhabitants of a Province which we six here represent, at all hazards to vote for the measure brought in by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. I think the principal matter that we have to consider, as a Dominion House of Commons, is whether we are making a good bargain with British Columbia or not. The matter has already been maturely considered over there, and the arguments of the hon. member for New Westminster, as also those of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), go to show that unquestionably the Dominion Government has (as it usually does) made a good bargain with British Columbia. The 3,500,000 acres of land in the Peace River country are of themselves sufficient compensation to the Dominion Government for the small amount of $750,000 embodied in this Bill. In fact, the value of that land is more than that. I have every reason to know that the value of those lands in the Peace River country is at least $1 an acre. I am also in a position to know that there are people at this moment who are willing to make an offer to the Government, in any case, of 50 cents an acre to purchase these lands upon five years' time, paying 10 cents in the first year, 10 cents in the second year, 10 cents in the third year, 10 cents in the fourth year, and so on until the whole amount is paid, upon a colonization scheme; that they will undertake to take lands in alternate sections and further to put so many persons upon these sections. Then, taking the value of those lands at 50 cents an acre for 3,500,000 acres, that will be considerably over the amount $1,750,000-in fact, more than double the amount-of $750,000 which this Parliament is asked to vote for the Island Railway. There is another point which we have to consider, and that is the compensation for delays. I remember, long before I had any idea of entering the political arena, the predecessor of my colleague, Mr. DeCosmos, estimated some three or four years ago, that the Dominion of Canada was indebted to British Columbia in a sum certainly not less than $2,250,000, as compensation for the delays in railway construction. Now, in this Settlement Bill, we are getting rid of that amount, with accrued interest, and possibly an accumu. lation of testimony, as to whether that amount should be augmented or not. We are getting 3,500,000 acres in the Peace River country. The matter of $2,250,000 and the amount to be added to it is to be lost sight of and buried in oblivion, and, in addition to this, we are to get a settlement in full, as I understand, of all existing differences, whatsoever they may be. These differences, of course, are well known to the Government. They are equally well known, I think, to a good many members of this House. The former hon. members for Vancouver and Victoria claims upon the Government in this regard. These two gentlemen, I am perfectly convinced, have spared no pains in promoting the interests of British Columbia, and in laying all matters connected with that Province before this Government in the way which they judged best. Although, individually, they may not have left behind them what might be termed a pleasant or a very gratifying record of themselves, still they left no stone unturned to let the Dominion at large know that there was such a Province as British Columbia, and what its people considered to be their rights. Now, these questions have been pending for a long time. In 1871, when British Columbia came into the Confederation, it was agreed, as has already been stated, that this railway should be commenced in 1873 and finished in 1881; I contend that the Island Railway referred to is a portion (or should be) of the Canadian Pacific Railway, more generally spoken of as the Trans-Continental Railway, although the balance of opinion is against me; certainly the opinion of the Government is against me in that matter. However, it was then agreed that this railway should be commenced within two years, and completed in ten. Now, Sir, we know very well that it not only was not commenced within two years, but cannot be completed under 15, at best.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 88) respecting the Real Estate and Loan Company of Canada, limited.—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 29) to incorporate the Bank of Winnipeg.-(Mr. Ross.)

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Quebec Railway Bridge Company.—(M. Bossé.)

Bill (No. 54) relating to the New Brunswick Railway Company, and to the Railways leased to the said Company. -(Mr. Burpee, Sunbury.)

Bill (No 72) to incorporate the Guelph Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Innes.)

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER. When the House rose at six o'clock, I had arrived at that portion of the history of the railway which was embodied in the Terms of Union. I think it would be well for the House, that inasmuch as there are many new members in it, I should read so ne portions of those Terms of Union, so that hon. members may understand exactly the position of the Dominion in regard to its obligations to the Province of British Columbia:

"The Government of the Dominion undertake to secure the commencement, simultaneously, within two years from the date of Union, of the construction of railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as may be selected east of the Rocky Mountains, towards the Pacific, to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Oanada; and further, to secure the completion of such railway within ten years of the date of the Union. And the Government of British Columbia agree to convey to the Dominion Government, in trust, to be appropriated in such manner as the Dominion Government, in trust, to be appropriated in such manner as the Dominion Government may deem advisable, in furtherance of the construction of the said railway, a similar extent of public lands along the line of railway throughout its entire length in British Columbia, not to exceed, however, 20 miles on each side of said line, as may be appropriated for the same purpose by the Dominion Government from the public lands in the North-West Territories and the Province of Manitoba. Provided, that the quantity of land which may be held under pre-emption right or by Grown grant within the limits of the tract of land in British Columbia to be so conveyed to the Dominion Government, shall be made good to the Dominion from contiguous public lands; and provided further, that until the commencement, within two years, as aforesaid, from the date of the Union, of the construction of the said railway, the Government of British Columbia shall not sell or alienate any further portions of the public lands of British Columbia in any other way than under right of pre-emption, requiring actual residence of the pre-emptor on the land claimed by him In consideration of the land so conveyed in aid of the construction of the said railway, the Dominion Government agree to pay to British Columbia, from the date of the Union, the sum of $100,000 per annum, in half-yearly payments, in advance."

Now, emanating out of these Terms, there are two or three facts to which I desire to call the attention of the House. In furtherance of this agreement, the Dominion Government, on the 7th day of June, 1873, fixed the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Esquimalt, and applied for and obtained from the British Columbian Government, the reservation of a 20-mile belt of land along the eastern coast of Vancouver Island, following the sinuosities of the coast line for railway purposes. Later on, the Dominion Government claimed that a commencement of railway construction was made at Esquimalt, within the term of two years agreed upon in Terms of Union. In the following year, 8th May, 1874, the Dominion Government, that is to say, the Mackenzie Government, through its Agent, Mr. Edgar, proposed to the Government of British Columbia " to proceed with the construction from Esquimalt to Nanaimo immediately," and " to push that portion of the railway on to completion with the utmost vigour and in the shortest practicable time," coupled, however, with conditions relating to the Mainland portion of the railway, which were not enter-tained by the Government of British Columbia, as they conflicted with the Terms of Union, and postponed indefinitely the consolidation of British North America, which was the primary object of Confederation. I refer to these facts principally to show that certain hon.members from British Columbia should not offer any very active opposition to the passing of the Bill which we are now considering. They have railway construction already commenced, and when we have the opportunity which is now presented, we should not look at the matter from a sectional point of view, or to secure sectional objects but should sink every thing of a sectional kind in the main object of securing the true interests of British Columbia. In consequence of the facts I have stated, serious differences arose between the Dominion of Canada and British Columbia, which were referred to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Earl of Carnarvon-and after protracted negotiations, the conditions contained in the despatch of Lord Carnarvon of the 17th November, 1874, to the Governor General of Canada, were accepted as a settlement by the Governments of the Dominion and of British Columbia, the first condition being "that the section of the railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo shall be commenced as soon as possible, and completed with all practicable dispatch." The Privy Council of the Dominion of Canada, on the 25th of March, 1875, decided that "prior to the commencement of any work of construction on the proposed railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, the Province of British Columbia should convey by legislation to the Dominion Government a 20-mile belt of land along the line of railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo," which demand upon British Columbia was immediately complied with, by the Legislative Assembly of the Province passing an Act, 22nd April, 1875, No. 13, entitled: "An Act to authorize the grant of certain public lands to the Government of the Dominion of Canada for railway purposes." On the 5th March, 1875, the Dominion House of Commons, in Committee of Supply, appro-priated $6,250,000 for the Pacific Railway, part of which appropriation was expended in the purchase of steel rails for the railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, and the rails were accordingly purchased and conveyed to Esquimalt and Nanaimo, ready for use. I ask if anything could be plainer than the very fact that money belonging to the Dominion of Canada was expended for the purchase of steel rails and that those steel rails were brought in vessels from the Old Country, and landed at Esquimalt and Nanaimo, I believe, with every intention of constructing that section of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo. Those rails were subsequently taken away; but still the fact remains that the intention of the Government at that time was to build that section as part and parcel of the so-called Trans-Continental Railway. Besides, in the years 1874-75, a construction survey was made of the line between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, but no further step was taken towards its construction. A feeling of intense and widespread dissatisfaction with the Dominion of Canada was created in the Province, which resulted, in 1878, in the election of a Provincial Legislature, the majority of the members of which were pledged to support the construction of that Island Railway, and urged upon the Dominion Government the carrying out of the Carnarvon Terms, or separation. That dissatisfaction has now almost died out; but the fact still remains that there was either a legal, an expressed, or an implied obligation on the part of the Dominion of Canada to build that section of railway. Now, the point I am arriving at is, that the matter of the construction of a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo is not a consideration of today. The belief has existed, not only in the minds of the Dominion Government, but in the hearts of the people of British Columbia, that the Dominion Government would, as soon as practicable, build that railway as part of the Terms of Confederation. The Legislature of British Columbia, before the close of the year 1878, in the full belief that the Carnarvon settlement would be carried out, adjourned without taking any more definite action. All that has transpired lately between the Dominion Government and the Province of British Columbia is embodied in the Report of the Minister of Justice, and the Resolutions now before us, which have been placed in the hands of every member; and, therefore, I need not occupy the time of the House in recapitulating it now. The lands which were to be conveyed by the Settlement Bill to the Company for building this railway are described as:

"Commencing at the southern boundary, and extending to a line running east and west, half way between Comox and Seymour Narrows; and also a further portion of the lands conveyed by the said Act to the nerthward of, and contiguous to, that portion of the said lands last hereinbefore specified, equal in extent to the lands within the limits thereof which may have been alienated from the Orown by Crown grants, pre-emption, or otherwise."

Now, the Minister of Justice, in his Report, with reference to the railway belt on the Mainland, says:

"The change in the route of the Ganadian Pacific Rsilway to the more southerly pass, which it is now intended to occupy, rendered it expecient to effect a change of the location of the railway belt. The Government of British Columbia had not admitted that there was any obligation on their part to assent to such a change, and had contended that they had performed their whole obligation in granting the belt along the line as originally proposed. We were happily able, however, in view of what we were mutually ready to cincede in respect of other parts of the general arrangement, to arrive at an understanding by which the railway belt was transferred to the new line and the grant made absolute in its terms, the Government of the Dominion undertaking, through me, to place the land thus acquired in the market, for sale to actual settlers at an early day."

Now, in view of all these facts, I do not think the hon. member for Westminster (Mr. Homer), or the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), has really any ground of complaint. These lands have remained idle for a very long time, and nobody has offered to build the railway, notwithstanding that the desire to have it built has been pretty well known, although I must say I should have preferred to have seen the Island Railway built by previously calling for tenders. However, the two Governments, in their wisdom, thought that to be unnecessary. Now, there are a few points in this Bill that I do not exactly understand. It says:

"The Government of British Columbia shall obtain the authority of the Legislature to convey to the Government of Canada 3,500,000 acres of land in the Peace River district of British Columbia, in one rectangular block; east of the Booky Mountains and adjoining the North-West Territory of Canada."

Now, I think it will be very difficult to find out exactly where that rectangular block is going to be. The boundaries of British Columbia are, to say the least, hadly undefined; and I should like to know from the hon. Minister of Bailways what kind of rectangular block this is going to be. It may be a Mr. BAKTE.

square, which is a figure having all its sides equal and all its angles right-angles; it may be a parallelogram, with only its opposite sides equal and parallel, and all its angles right angles; or it may be made up of a series of rectangles. I should therefore like to know which of these kinds of rectangular blocks the two Governments have agreed upon, also who has the right of selection, and where is this rectangular block to be? I mention these facts because they may not have occurred to the Government in the light in which I have put them. The eastern boundary of British Columbia is understood to follow the summit or watershed line of the Rocky Mountains from the 49th parallel north westward till it strikes the 120th meridian; then runs north on this meridian to the 60th parallel; then west to the Alaska Line. There is a contention also, and, I believe, a very just one, that the eastern boundary of the Province is, or ought to be, the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains. The northern and western boundary is defined, by the original Treaty with Russia, I believe, to follow the outer or coast range of mountains where this range is not more than 30 nautical miles from the coast, to follow a line parallel to the coast at 30 miles inland. As a matter of fact, the boundary has been assumed at 30 miles from the coast, or thereabouts, being the worst possible interprotation for British Columbia; while, if strictly defined, it might follow the western range to the coast, never more than a mile or two from the shore, in view of these facts, it appears to me that it is rather a puzzle for both Governments to hit upon that eastern boun. dary line, and incident to that decision the precise location of the block, and it is consequently very desirable this should be settled before disputes arise. I will not take up the attention of the House further upon the point, although I have plenty of material here. I think it is desirable that other members from British Columbia-there are two of them yet to speak-should have an opportunity of expressing their opinions on this most important matter to our Province. There are one or two subjects, however, to which I would like to refer before sitting down. In regard to the value of our coal lands, Mr. Richardson, of the Geological Survey, calculated the workable coal underlying a square mile near the Union mining location, at Comox, at 16,000,000 tons. This, of course, was not meant to apply to the whole district, but gi es some idea of what its best parts may be worth. The value, I believe, of Comox coal lands, estimating them at $10 an acre, is $1,920,000, and of Nanaimo coal lands, estimating them at the same figure, $900,000; making a total of $2,880,000. Deducting 25 per cent. from this for the land already granted, would leave a net value of $2,160,000. The value of 2,800 square miles, or 1,794,800 acres of railway settlement grant, as timber lands, at $1 per acre, would amount to $1,794,800, deducting from which 25 per cent, for alienated lands, leaves a net value, as timber lands, of $1,346,100. The value of say 300,000 acres agricultural lands in the settlement belt, at $5 per acre, would amount to $1,500,000; deducting, as before, 25 per cent. for the alienated land, you have a net value of $1,125,000. This, when analysed, gives the following synopsis of the value of land granted to the Bailway Company:

Net va	lue of	coal lands	$2.160.000
- 46		coal lands timber lands	1.346.100
	"	agricultural lands	1,125,000
	Tote		$4,631,100

Estimating the proposed railway at 70 miles long, that gives 40 square miles of territory per mile, or 25,600 acres, included in which, however, is the alienated lands; so that the Railway Company are really getting something in the neighbourhood of $61,000 per mile for building that railway, taking it from their point of view. But it remains to be seen whether the coal which will come out of these very valuable coal lands-I do not wish to undervalue the coal lands, but it remains to be seen whether they will really turn out to be as valuable as those which are now being worked at the East and West Wellington collieries and the Nanaimo collieries. Of course, in estimating the value of coal, we have to take into consideration quality as well as quantity, and also facilities for working, &c. Now, several mines have been opened, but only those previously mentioned, the Wellington and Nanaimo collieries, have proved successful, so that notwithstanding the figures 1 have just given as to the value of these coal lands, and the apparent high price that the Railway Company building that section are going to get, it may, after all, prove very falla. With regard to the position of hon. members from cious. British Columbia in this House, I wish to state a few words. I have previously said this matter has received the sanction of the Local House by two to one majority, and I think there is very little option for any hon. member for British Columbia but to accept the situation. As far as British Columbia is concerned, relying implicitly, as we have done in other matters (when we have been voting millions) on the Government of the day, inasmuch as it is a Government measure, and a measure which is to the advantage of our Province, particularly that section which has been debarred from the enjoyment of those advantages possessed by other sections of the Dominion, I think, after considering it "all in all," in the interest of British Columbia, we should not | tion of Indians and Chinese bringing the total up to someonly vote for this measure, but speak in favour of it.

Mr. READ. I was under the impression that British Columbia had a claim against the Dominion Government for compensation, but looking over these Resolutions, it scems to me that the Dominion have a claim against British Columbia, or rather that those Resolutions would have the tendency to show that we are paying, in place of the Dominion Government granting us any compensation what-ever. In fact, it is the other way. The compensation is coming from British Columbia to the Dominion. We cede 2,500,000 acres of land in the Peace River district, which are very valuable lands, as valuable as any in the North-West or in British Columbia. We cede this to the Dominion, and we also cede all the lands on the Island to the Dominion, for the purpose of building this railroad, and all we get specially is $750,000. It has been said that the Local House have passed these Resolutions by a large majority. That is very true, but I cannot see why this Government have not dealt directly with the Provincial Government in this matter, and offered this $750,000 to the Government, as they have all along strenuously opposed having any responsibility for building the Island Railway at all; and I contend that if this $750,000 had been offered to the Provincial Government and that had been brought before the House there, a different vote altogether would have been taken on this matter to what has been. If they had had that amount of money to expend on works that are needed throughout the country, they would have voted altogether in a different way. Certainly they would not have locked up their valuable mining lands in the manner which is likely to be done now. I do not think that I need expatiate much on this question, as those who have spoken before have said about all that is necessary to be said in regard to it. At the same time, I object to these Resolutions, for one reason, because my dis-trict is paying for it all. Therefore, I shall be obliged to vote against these Resolutions.

Mr. HOMER. If I am in order, I would like to reply to one or two remarks that have been made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is not strigtly in order, but I dare say the House will allow him to do so.

coal lands besides those that are included in this belt. It is a well-known fact that all the mines on Vancouver Island, outside of this belt, contain coal which is supposed to be of a very inferior quality. It is in very detached pieces, and the mines, up to this time, have not shipped one ton of coal. But the hon. gentleman intended to convey the impression to this House that there were other productive mines besides those which are included in this belt granted to the railway. That is not so. That is the only coal which is productive at the present time. Then he says those mines would have been opened long ago if British Columbia had any enterprise, and that the only enterprise in British Columbia is due to the Americans resident in that Province. I deny that in toto. So far as the Americans are concerned, I give them credit for all that is due to them. They are undoubtedly an enterprising people; but, when he says that all the enterprise in British Columbia is due to the Americans residing there, he makes a very serious mistake. Take the tanneries which are established in British Columbia at the present time. There are seventeen, and only two conducted by Americans. There are three coal mines there, all worked by Englishmen. Then you take the lumbering interests there, which does the foreign trade in lumber. That is con-ducted by English capital and English houses. Then, when he speaks of the lack of enterprise of the people, in a coun-try containing a population of 25,000 whites, and a populathing like 60,000, let me point out that we exported last year $4,000,000 worth of the produce of that country, and contributed to the revenue of the Dominion, within a fraction of $1,000,000, more than one-half of that from the whole Province of Nova Scotia. Does that show that there is no enterprise in the Province of British Columbia? I say it shows more enterprise in proportion to the population than any Province in the Union. So I think the best thing the hon. gentleman can do is to apologize for that statement. The senior member for Victoria (Mr. Baker), has stated that this dry dock cannot be moved because it is included in the Terms of Union. What are we doing to night with the Terms of Union? Are we not changing the whole thing?

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). No.

Mr. HOMER. Cannot we change the dry dock as well as anything else? We are handing it over to the Dominion Government; that is breaking the Terms of Union; and, if we go back to the Terms of Union, they have been broken long ago, they have not been fulfilled in any one point by the Dominion Government; but, I believe, that they intend to do the best they can with regard to that now. Another statement the hon. member for Victoria has made, is that the dry dock is in the rear of the dockyard. The dockyard and the dry dock are both on the same strip of land; the dockyard lies west of the dry dock, and there is nothing but this narrow strip of land lying between the dry dock and the Straits of Fuca, and there is nothing to prevent a foreign ship from taking up a position half a mile from that dock, and destroying it at any time. The Minister of Railways says we are not dependent upon the mines in this belt of land, because there are many mines in the Bow River district. That is very true, and I believe there are many between the Bow River and the Kamloops district, but they are hundreds of miles from the sea coast, and the coal cannot be transported as the coal can from those which are included in the belt on Vancouver Island, where a ship can lie alongside the mine at any point and take the coal on board. With regard to the value of this coal, as the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon) stated some time ago, they gave away nine-tenths, reducing it to one-tenth, which makes the value of those mines $32,000,000. That is at 5 cents a ton only. Take the Mr. HOMER. I desire to refer to the remarks of the whole belt at 5 cents a ton, and you have $320,000,000. We member for Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare). He speaks of other gave away nine-tenths, so there remains one-tenth, or $32,000,000, putting it at the very lowest estimate—the lands, mines, timber and all. The hon, gentleman, the member for Victoria, is entirely mistaken in his calculation. As I said before, when I introduced this subject first, the Government should hesitate before they give away all this valuable property, as they will find in five or ten years that the Local Government will have to come back to them for assistance, instead of being able to open up the various resources of the country.

1038

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I think I am entitled to a reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. No; not without the consent of the House.

Amendment (Mr. Homer), negatived on a division.

Mr. REID moved, that all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following inserted :---

In the opinion of this House the proper course to take in the proposed settlement with British Columbia is to pay over to the Government of that Province the sum of $750,000 as proposed by the Resolution, and to leave the Government of the Province to deal with the construction of the Island Railway.

Mr. GORDON. I am sorry to have to trouble the House again for a few minutes, with regard to the value of coal and its present development. I certainly understood from the hon. Minister of Railways that coal was being shipped from the west coast of Vancouver Island. I think that he must have been misinformed on that point. I am satisfied that no coal has yet been shipped from Quatsino Sound, and that is the only point in which prospecting is going on at present, and it has been carried on for several years. As far back as twenty-seven years ago, they were prospecting for coal at Quatsino Sound, and having followed it for a number of years, finally abandoned it. A year and ahalf ago an American company came in and have been prospecting ever since, but up to the latest account that I had from that locality, they had not discovered sufficient to enable them to float their stock on the money market. Now, with regard to the 50,000 acres applied for, it only goes to prove the value of the belt that has been closed up from application for ten or twelve years. These who are applying for these lands outside the belt hope that coal may be discovered beyond the limits of the country which the geologists have explored. But, judging from the early prospecting done by the Hudson Bay Company, it is not at all probable that north of the 50th parallel, on Vancouver Island, coal measures will be met with yielding coal in such paying quantities as has been found within the railway belt now being ceded to this Company. The Hudson Bay Company, twenty or thirty years ago, prospected very extensively at Fort Rupert. They finally abandoned their operations there and removed to Nanaimo, and had been carrying on coal mining up to the time they transferred their interests to the Vancouver Coal Company. Reference has also been made to the failure of coal mining in the Harwood Mine. Now, on this point, I can speak with some knowledge. The Harwood Coal Mine was opened by a gentleman named Buckley, who had very limited means, who began with building an aerial tramway, which did not prove successful, and he became financially embarrassed. Since then the Harwood Mine has not been worked, but I defy any one here to say that it does not contain productive coal measures. An opening of a temporary character was made, and they followed the crop out of the coal for a considerable distance into the mine. I know this, because I have travelled through the mine again and again. Mr. Buckley's experience is no proof whatever that coal mining is not profitable in that section. I have also heard it stated that prospecting had been carried on at Comox, and that the result was not sufficient to justify any one in believing that coal existed. Now, any one who is familiar with the geological map furnished by the Department, and who has a knowledge of the country in that section, would never expect to find coal within 900 feet of the surface where they bored. They bored 600 feet, but as the tenure f theoir land was uncertain, and they failed to get a renewal of the privileges they had from the farmers, they abandoned the enterprise. In the district north of Comox, prospecting has been carried on at different points and the result was such, that upon my own, advice it was kept from the public, because I felt sure that other parties with more capital would get the advantage of the hard labour of these men. There is another point to which I have not alluded, and that is the large quantities of iron ore existing in that region. Only this last summer a gentleman was prospecting nearly the whole season in the northern part of the Comox district, and he assures me that he found in close proximity hematite and magnetic iron ore, and coal at a short distance from the coast. He also found marble in that neighbourhood, and in that northern section he found timber as fine as any on the coast of British Columbia, timber which cannot be excelled in any other part of the Dominion. I would scarcely like to venture on an estimation of the value of the timber within this belt. It certainly surpasses the best timber ou any other part of Vancouver Island. It might be roughly estimated to be worth at least $2,000,000. But with regard to the coal, iron and marble, and all these natural products, we are not to estimate their present value alone, in discussing this question. I disagree with my hon. friends from Victoria in the opinion that because the Legislature of British Columbia sees fit to part with these public lands-doubtless in the best interests of the Province, as they think-it is our duty here to sanction everything that is done in that and every other Local Legislature in the Dominion of Canada. We may find it our duty to disagree with the legislation of some of the Provincial Legislatures during the term that we are sitting here.

Mr. BAKER, I did not say every Province.

Mr. GORDON. If it applies to one it applies to all the Provinces, and if it is understood that the Local Legislatures and the Dominion Government must work in accord, we may find ourselves obliged to sanction everything that is done in all the Provinces. I disagree with the proposition. I am here to judge of the case on its merits. I do not intend to go back even to the long correspondence with respect to the non-fulfilment of the Terms of Union. A great amount of friction, no doubt, did exist from that cause, but as the completion of the railway approached, that feeling began to die away. The people saw that the present Government were determined to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am glad we have had experience this Session to prove that they are resolved to build it, and deducting the five years from the fifteen which were occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite, it will now be completed by the present Government within the time originally agreed upon, namely, ten years. I know, as the causes of the friction are passing away, and as the feeling of disquietude throughout the Province that arose out of the non-fulfilment of the Terms is dying out, I think there was no occasion, in order to revive that feeling, to in-troduce Resolutions of this character and give away those valuable resources which should be of permanent value to the Province and the Dominion in the future. I am sorry I have little hope of seeing the Government modify the position they have taken; I wish I could have induced them to do so. I know they will feel annoyed that I have thus declared my sentiments, which are my true and honest opinions, and which are, I believe, in the best interests of Canada and British Columbia; I can only hope that the bright anticipations of the Minister of Railways in regard to the Province may be more than realized. I know that one of those connected with the Company is a persevering gentleman who has made coal mining in British Columbia what it is to-day; and he did not start with a large capital, but as a poor man, and yet he is able to-day to command his millions. There is, however, a strong feeling throughout British Columbia that poor men are not to have the same privileges which they formerly enjoyed. The senior member for Victoria seems well satisfied with the arrangement. But Victoria district does not contribute one foot of land to the Island Railway. The whole land is taken from the Vancouver district and may be described as follows: — Bounded on the south side by a straight line drawn from the head of Saanich Inlet to Muir Creek, on the Straits of Fuca; on the west, by a straight line drawn from Muir Creek, aforesaid, to Crown Mountain; on the north, by astraight line drawn from Crown Mountain to Seymour Narrows; and on the east, by the coast line of Varcouver Island to the point of commencement; and including all coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marble, slate, mines, minerals and sub-stances whatsoever thereupon, therein, and thereunder. There is excepted out of the tract of land granted by the preceding section all that portion thereof lying to the northward of a line running east and west half way between the mouth of the Courtney River (Comox district) and Seymour Narrows an amount of land equal to the quantity alienated by Crown grant within the belt. The hon. members from Victoria would have changed their tone very much if the Government had come before the House with a proposition to build a railway from Nanaimo to Alberni, which would have saved 180 miles of navigation, and enabled Canadian commerce, in case of necessity, to have gone right out into the Pacific without passing the American shore. It must be remembered that there are 126 squatters on the railway belt. When some of these poor men took up their land, it was with the distinct understanding that they were to have, not only surface rights, but mineral rights. Believing that if the railway was finally located where it has been, that they would have had secured to them their full rights, an appeal was made to the Local Government, but that Government did not acknowledge any equitable right in their case. I remember seeing the correspondence with Sir Alexander Campbell on the subject, and he referred them to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works in the Local Government, but the equity of their claims was not allowed. I think great dissatisfaction will grow out of that fact. Twenty, forty, or 150 dissatisfied settlers will not conduce to the prosperity and harmony of the community, nor yet of the Province in which they live. They feel they have been unjustly dealt with, and that the agricultural portions of their holdings by themselves would scarcely have induced them to have settled there, but it was in the hope that the mining land and agricultural land together would eventually enable them to provide for themselves and their families, which led them to sottle there. This hope has been utterly destroyed by the present Resolu-tions now under consideration. They can have their agri-cultural land at $1 an acre, with payments spread over four years, but they are entirely deprived of the minerals. The proposal is so plain and distinct that it is useless to ask the Government to modify the terms of the Resolution, and to the two Governments I will attribute any injustice that may happen to those poor men. Sir, I will not sanction such injustive, I will vote against the Resolutions of the Government.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to offer a word of explanation. The hon. member for New Westminster, in speaking about the dock and dockyard said they were entirely unprotected. The hon. gentleman forgets entirely that we generally have a navy there, and that in these days of modern warfare, a place has not got to be protected by batteries, though even if it had, we have two batteries, thanks to the Minister of Militia; but there are such weapons as torpedoes. I advise the hon. gentleman to make himself acquainted with the nature of the torpedo. As regards the removal of the dry dock from Esquimault, I adhere to my statement that it could not be removed without legislation being passed in the Local Legislature.

Amendment (Mr. Reid) negatived.

Main motion agreed to; and Resolutions considered in Committee, and ordered to be reported.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE, I wish to make a correction. The hon. member for Westminster (Mr. Homer) has denied my statement that there were 50,000 acres of coal lands. Now, Sir, I am prepared to prove that 50,000 acres of land where coal has been discovered, has been secured by companies on the west coast of Vancouver Island, and I can prove that in less than one hour, if necessary, in writing. With regard, Sir, to the question of American capital, what I said or what I intended to say, was, that the principal portion of our industries had been encouraged by American capital, and that statement was quite right. With regard to the lumbering interest, to which the hon. gentleman referred, one of the largest lumbering mills in British Columbia was commenced with American capital, two of the owners being American citizens. Another lumbering mill is owned by an American citizen, and has been owned by him from the time it started. Other interests in the Province have also been commenced and carried on partially by American capital. With regard to the failures in coal mines, there have been three companies, to my knowledge, who have undertaken to discover and work coal mines, and have failed in the undertaking, so that the enterprises have not been very profitable after all.

Mr. HOMER. With regard to the coal mines, the impression which was sought to be conveyed was, that they were being worked —

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HOMER. I have only to say that none have been worked, except the one I referred to.

Resolutions reported read the second time and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 126) respecting the arrangement with British Columbia.

Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY-THE HIGH COMMISSIONER TO ENGLAND.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS. Before that motion is put, I desire to submit a proposition for the consideration of the House, relating to the appointment of the hon. Minister of Railways, as High Commissioner to England. We all remember, Sir, when the measure was introduced for the consideration of the late Parliament, upon the subject of the appointment of the High Commissioner, was being discussed, the First Minister informed us of the great importance of that office. The right hon. gentleman pointed out to Parliament at that time that the office was one of great consequence, that as Canadians, commercial relations became greatly extended, it was of great consequence to this country to have a representative residing in England, who could speak on behalf of the Government, and speak at once. He said that important negotiations were taking place with a view to establishing more intimato commercial relations with France and Spain, and that it would not be in the interest of this country that the English Government should be called upon to delay the considerations of these important matters until a representative could be sent from Canada; and it was therefore of great consequence that we should have a permanent resident in England, one who would be on the spot, always ready to express the sentiments of the Government and protect the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman pointed out that this officer should not only reside there permanently but should have a quasi-diplomatic position; that, it was of great consequence that he should not be an ordinary official such as those who had previously been charged with the affairs of the country, but he should be one holding a very high position-that he should be a dignified and influential officer, one whose rank should be next to that of a Foreign Ambassador. The hon gentleman told us that it was very important that Canada should secure a fair share of the immigration from the United Kingdom, and that however active, however industrious, those who had previously been the Agents of Canada in Great Britain. they were not able to accomplish, on behalf of the country what might be accomplished by an officer having a higher position. The hon, gentleman declared that Canada had become an auxiliary kingdom, that it was not in the position of an ordinary colony; and for this reason it was of consequence that the representative or agent of the country at the capital of the Empire should be one occupying a high and influential position in the country. The hon. gentleman said :

" It can be well understood that the statements of a mere Agent, with a limited and local jurisdiction, to a certain extent not known or recognized as holding an office for the purpose of expediting and assisting in giving information to intending emigrants—it is found that he is placed at a disadvantage when he is confronted by the active, ceaseless, and energitic exections of the various agents of the railway ceaseless, and energy tic exections of the various agents of the ranway companies in the United States, whose prosperity and future depend altogether in the seduction of the emigrants from Europe—and especially from the United Kingdom—to the United States, and divert-ing them from Canada. It is believed that by having an officer holding a quasi-diplomatic position, in fact holding a diplomatic position, so far as is consistent with our position of a dependency of the kampire, his distances and maximum with our position of a dependency of the kampire, his statements, and actions, and prestige, will be generally accepted by the public, and will assist in giving a direction to emigration from the United Kingdom, and from Europe generally."

The hon, gentleman informed us that this officer was to occupy a position of general utility. He was to be the Agent of the Finance Minister; he was to assist in the negotiation of loans, and in dealing with the financial affairs of the Dominion. The Finance Minister informed the House at that time that such an officer might more than save his salary in negotiating the loans and transaction of the financial business of the country. On that occasion, the Finance Minister said :

"I have received very great assistance from them-"

That is to say, from our old agents-

"especially when floating the last loan. They were the Agents for Canada for many years before the Union. Messrs. Baring Bros. were also the Agents of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick before the Union, and the natural feeling will be, if they will undertake any duty of that kind on as favourable terms as any other party similarly situated, that'it would be highly desirable that they should have it. In the negotiation of the loan of $10,000,000, our representative there will, I trust, be able to save energing libe $50,000. Law conject the the the appointment of this loan of $10,000,000, our representative there will, I trust, be able to mave something like $50,000. I am satisfied that, by the appointment of this official, as now proposed, the sum that will be expended in the mainten-ance of that official, and the assistance it may be necessary to give him in order to perform the work, will be a small expenditure compared with the large saving that may result from it in a financial point of view, apart from the commercial, political and other considerations to which the hon. leader of the Government has referred."

The hon, leader of the Government also informed the House that it was of very great consequence that this official should be always on the spot; and that our interests had grown to such an extent, and were so varied and important, that it would never do that the country should longer remain without a permanent representative in London. It is true, Sir, he informed us that it might occasionally be necessary that this officer should go to Paris or Madrid, or some other capital on the continent, for the purpose of carrying on negotiations on behalf of Canada, that he might occasionally require to return to Canada in order to become more thoroughly conversant with the views of the Administration for the time being; but that these visits to the continent should be in London, and that he should always be ready to act on behalf of the country. Then, Sir, we also learn from the observations which were then made by the First Minister and by the Minister of Finance, that this officer was also to promote immigration and to be subordinate to the Minister of Agriculture. It is also stated in the Act that was passed on that occasion that this officer is to be responsible on the subject of immigration and other cognate matters, to the Minister of Agriculture, and that he is from time to time to report to him. It is certain that the High Commissioner has regarded him. setf as the subordinate of the Minister of Agriculture, and that he has acted as such. Now, Sir, I am not going to discuss the unity of this office. Parliament has already decided that such an officer is necessary, as well as, in a large degree, what his duties are. It has also decided that he shall be a permanent resident in England, and the representative of Canada there, as well as a subordinate, in some respects, of the Department of Finance, and in other respects of the Department of Agriculture. Whether it was necessary that we should have such a representative or not, is not now the question. We must assume that such an officer is necessary, so long as this law remains on the Statute Book, and so long as the policy of Parliament, upon this particular subject, is unchanged. The First Minister, at the time he provided for the appointment of this officer, declared that he should be appointed at a salary of not less, although the Act says not more, than $10,000 a year; that he had consulted many parties in reference to the subject, and the general opinion was that the sum of $10,000 was too small; but that he would begin economically with that amount, and if it was found inadequate, there would be no difficulty in Parliament increasing it. The First Minister, on that occasion, also declared that it was necessary that this officer should be one of very high rank, in order to secure that influence which was necessary to enable him to efficiently serve the country. The hon. gentleman is now, and has been for several months, in this country, having left those duties, which the First Minister said could only be efficiently discharged by an officer of high rank, to be discharged by his Private Secretary or Clerk. We know, Sir, that this is the season of the year when the great political lights of the Empire are assembled in London, when the hon. gentleman would be brought most intimately in contact with the leading statesmen of the Empire; yet, now he is away from there, while in the season of the year when London is deserted, and when the hon. gentleman would be required to put on his shooting coat and go to the Highlands in order to find any English statesmen, he will be domiciled in London. In other words, when he can be most useful as High Commissioner in London, he is here, and when he can be of little service, he proposes to be on the other side of the Atlantic. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman's appointment as High Commissioner, while still holding the position of Minister of Railways, renders it impossible for him to carry out that policy which the First Minister announced, and which is delineated in the Act creating the office. The position he occupies as Minister of Railways is also incompatible with his position as High Commissioner. How is it possible that the Minister of Railways, the head of an important Department, can act properly as the subordinate of another Minister of the Crown. The De-partment of which the hon. gentleman is the official head, is a very important one. It has been especially important during the period that he has held it, that is, during the past five years. We have been carrying on extensive railway enterprises in this country under the charge and direction of the Government; upon these enter-prises the Government has a policy involving a large expenand Canada were to be of a most temporary character; and diture of money; and if there is any office connected with it was of the utmost consequence that his residence the Government to which it is necessary that a Minister of the Crown should devote his attention carefully, I may say exclusively, it is that of Minister of Railways, at the present time. Now, Sir, what is the hon. gentleman's position ? He was appointed on the 1st of June last to the office of High Commissioner; he left during the month for London, and he remained until December. All this time he was a Minister of the Crown. Who discharged his duties as Minister of Railways? It is as Minister of Railways that he holds a statutory office, just as he does in the other case; and in that office there are certain duties devolving upon him. He has received from the Governor General a patent for the discharge of the duties of that office. Under the law, no one else can take charge of those duties. We know, as a matter of practice, however, that one Minister does, in a perfunctory way, undertake the duties of another Minister; but it is impossible to suppose that a Minister having his own duties to discharge can attend to the duties of another Minister, and discharge the duties of his own office at the same time. The Minister of Railways placed the Minister of Agriculture in charge of his office while he was away. I maintain The that he alone could not perform those duties which he was called on to perform under his patent as Minister of Rail-ways. But the hon. gentleman who acted in his place had other duties devolving upon him as Minister of Agricultureduties quite adequate to his ability as a Minister, duties that will require all his time in order that they may be discharged efficiently. There are the subjects of immigration and agriculture and statistics; we know that the volumes of statistics that ought to have been in the possession of the country months ago, are not yet in its possession, and we know that the hon. gentleman has so divided his attention between the duties of his own Department and those of the Minister of Railways, that volumes are submitted to this House, to which I shall call attention on another occasion, which are utterly worthless, which show that the duties have not been properly discharged, and that the subjects have not fairly occupied the attention of the hon. Minister. For if they had, they would not have been presented to Parlia-ment in the way they have. No matter how that may be, it is obvious that the hon. Minister of Agriculture was not in a position properly to discharge the work of the hon. Minister of Railways. Look at the important questions that came up in the absence of the Minister of Railways. One question came up relating to a railway in the Eastern Townships, upon which the acting Minister was called on to make a report, and he did make a report; it was a matter in which he was personally interested. Was he in a position fairly to present that subject to his colleagues? Was he in a position to give his colleagues an impartial report on the subject? Was he in the position in which the hon. Minister of Railways would have been, had he been in the country at the time? Then there was the subject of the railway guarantee. We know how that was bungled. I am not going to enter into a discussion now on that matter, as that was fully discussed at an earlier period, but it is perfectly obvious that it could not have fully occupied the mind of, or have been carefully considered by, the acting Minister of Railways. It is perfectly clear to everyone who has looked at what was done, that if the Minister himself, who is responsible for that Department, had been here, what was done would probably not have been done, under the circumstances. Then there is the question of the general oversight of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman knows he is responsible to the country, he knows that the country holds him responsible for the general oversight of the Canadian Pacific Railway; he knows that he asked Parliament to grant that Company a large amount of money, and a large extent of territory, and it is part of his duty, as a Minister, to see that that subsidy is not misapplied, to see that it is not wasted, to see that the purpose for which it was granted has been fully 131 Minister himself, who is responsible for that Department, carried out. Has the hon. Minister been here for the purpose of looking after the affairs of his Department? Has he undertaken to discharge those duties that Parliament requires at his hands, and that the country looks to him to perform? Not at all; the hon. gentleman has been elsewhere ; he has been looking after affairs connected with the Department of Agriculture; he has been looking after the condition of cattle that were landed at Liverpool, discharging the work that devolves upon an an ordinary veterinary officer and seeking to take credit to himself for duties that could quite as well, perhaps better, have been performed by some cattle doctor occupying a very subordinate position. When we look at the facts, we will see that the hon. Minister of Railways has not discharged his duties. In the first place, he is not a resident High Commissioner; he has not become a permanent resident of London; he has not carried out the policy of the Act providing for a permanent Agent of the Government of Canada at the Capital of the Empire. The hon. gentleman also knows that in taking that position he took an office wholly incompatible with his office as Minister of Railways He knows that as Minister of Railways he stands on a footing of equality with his colleagues, the Ministers of Agriculture and Finance; he knows that as High Commissioner he is subordinate to both—in regarl to some matters with one, and in regard to other matters with the other. He knows that in withdrawing from Canada he has been half his year in London-the half year in which it was of least consequence to the country that he should be there, and during that time he neglected his duty as Minister of Railways. He has not exercised that supervision over the office it was necessary he should exercise, especially when so large an amount of money has been placed by the country at the disposal of the Canadian Pacific Railway and over which he is bound to exercise an official oversight. It is true we are told the whole Government are responsible for the work of each Department, but as a matter of fact that is not the case. We know that each Minister is responsible for the work of his own Department; we do not hold one Minister responsible for the failures and incapacity or negligence of another. In order that we may have a proper and efficient responsibility in this country, where our administrative work is to so largo a degree departmental, it is necessary each Minister should be held individually responsible for the work of his own Department; and it is perfectly obvious that the business of the Department during an important part of the year has not been under the supervision of the Minister who was placed in charge-who has received a patent from the Crown for the purpose of discharging the duties of that office. The hon, gentleman knows that during the six months or more that he was in London, it was utterly impossible that he should exercise over the Department that control it required, and this being the case, I hold that the position which the hon. gentleman has occupied as Minister of Railways is one that is wholly incompatible with the position which he holds as High Commissioner to the United Kingdom. Such being the case, I beg leave to move the following Resolution-to leave out all the words after "That," and insert the following :-

Unarles Tupper went to England as High Commissioner, and he returned to Canada to act as Minister of Railways in December, 1883, and since that time has been in Cana'a; that the tenure of the offices of Minister of Railways and Canals and High Commissioner, simultaneously, is not fitting, and this House disapproves of the continuance of the arrange-ment."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, the subject of Sir Charles Tupper's appointment has been so fully ventilated already during this Session that, even were I able to discuss it, I do not think there would be any great necessity for occupying the time of the House. I have lost my voice, but I will say a few words, and perhaps I can make myself heard, in regard to it. I think, after the explanations that were made to the House, after the state of affairs that was spread upon the Order in Council appointing my hon. friend, this motion might very well have been spared; but I suppose it is moved as a censure on the Government, or as a censure on my hon. friend as High Commissioner, or both. I wish the hon. gentleman joy of his motion; I do not think he will, either in this House or in the country, take anything by it. The circum-stances have been mentioned before, but I shall shortly recapitulate them. Sir Charles Tupper's health-I can speak of him as Sir Charles Tupper, as High Commissioner, if not as a member of the House-it is known, and his friends and the country regretted it, that his health broke down near the end of last Session. His health was so much affected that we feared he might be compelled prematurely to withdraw from his usefulness in the office he performed so well, so faithfully and so satisfactorily to the country. He was desirous to do so himself, but his colleagues, and myself as First Minister, were exceedingly unwilling to lose the advantages of his services, to lose the advantage of his great ability, to lose the advantage of the great power he exhibits in this House, as a member of the Government and as a member of Parliament, and to lose the advantage of his services as Minister of Railways. Then, it so happened that Sir Alexander Galt had, for personal reasons, found it inconvenient to remain longer in England, but with some pressure he remained until the 1st June. The Order in Council explains that that being the case Sir Charles Tupper had kindly consented for the present to accept the office of High Commissioner and to go to England. There was a two fold reason for his doing so. We knew, first, that he would perform the duties in England satisfactorily; and, secondly, we felt that, from the change of scene, and from the every-day work of his duties we might hope to see him restored to his pristine health and vigour; and we are all proud and happy to know that, to a great extent, the effort which was made to get him to go to England has produced that satisfactory result, and I think my hon. friends and the country will acknowledge that this House and the country have been great gainers by the presence of the ability and health and vigour of the hon. gentleman in this House. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman did not go for his own profit or emolument. The salary of the High Commissioner is $10,000 a year. The salary of the Minister is $7,000 a year. My hon. friend preferred, as it was an experiment, a successful experiment, as I have just stated, to draw the modest salary-we are all modest men, Mr. Speaker, we Ministers-of $7,000 rather than the higher, the larger, the more remunerating salary attached to the office of High Commissioner. During his absence in England we are proud of the success which attended his exertions, both as a diplomatist, and as an immigration agent general, and in his capacity as watching over the best interests of the country. In all these several capacities my hon. friend was happily successful, and he has laid, as a diplomatist, the basis of arrangements which I hope will be successful, and in his hands too-they cannot be in better hands-both in France and in Spain; and we all know what large conversion of securities, and have large dealings with he did in the way of saving and rescuing, as he alone the finances of the country. And yet the hon. gentleman could rescue, from the combination of qualities he pos- allowed that to go on in his time, and only now finds out sesses, and the vigour of his character carrying those qualities into effect, the live cattle trade of Canada from utter and absolute ruin and loss. If it had not been, Mr. Speaker, for his acquaintance with the pathology of animals, if he had not taken up the case with vigour, within a few days these cargoes of Canadian cattle would have been destroyed as being affected with Texas fever; Canada would have been scheduled as an infected country by the Privy Council, and it would take more power than Canada can exercise, more power than the United States had been able to exercise in England, to get that verdict altered; because, as it was stated the other day, they are very slow in England on these matters, and the Canadian cattle trade would have been permanently ruined, perhaps, if it had not been for these fortunate circumstances. Providence always helps the Conservatives, it is said, and certainly there was never a more providential incident in the history of Canada than the fact that my hon. friend, with his peculiar knowledge, happened to be in England at that time. The hon. gentleman, however, says that the offices are quite inconsistent, that they are incompatible. I do not admit the incompatibility; I do not see that there is anything incompatible in the two positions. The hon. gontleman says: "Oh, but if he is High Commissioner he should reside in England." So he has. So resident Ambassadors, if they hap-pen to be members of oither Hones of Patienest states pen to be members of either House of Parliament, return on special occasions. If they happen to be Peers, they return, continually, to perform their duties in the House of Lords. Lord Lyons, Lord Cowper, and every other Lord who happens to be an Ambassador, during the Session of Parliament, returns to vote for and with his party. And the hon. gentleman said : "Oh, it is quite inconsistent, because, as High Commissioner, he is subordinate to the Minister of Agriculture, and at the same time he is equal with him as being a colleague and a fellow Minister." The same position is held by Lord Spencer at this moment. He is Lord Licutenant of Ireland; he is a member of the Government, he is a member of the Cabinet this moment in England. 'They never found out in England this new doctrine which the hon. gentleman, with his usual ingenuity has sprung upon us. It is unknown in England, unknown to the English Parliament, unknown to English practice. Lord Spencer is Lord Lieutenant in Ireland, and he is subordinate to the Secretary of State for Ireland; and yet, as Lord Lieutenaut for Ireland, he represents the Queen directly. He is more than Governor General, he is Deputy Sovereign and Viceroy. And yet the point was never raised, even by Mr. Parnell, and he does not like Lord Spencer. And yet we find that even Mr. Parnell has not brought up any such objection, an objection I must say, unknown in England, and unknown here until the hon. gentleman started this hare, and found this mare's nest. But the hon. gentleman said that, at all events, the duties of Milister of Railways ought to have been performed by himself. Well, I fancy that the hon. gentleman, when he was a Minister, found that occasionally some of his colleagues were absent. Some went to England, and their duties were performed by a brother colleague. But he says it is quite wrong; that a commission under the Great Seal of the Dominion was actually issued for Sir Charles Tupper, declaring him Minister of Railways, and no other man, woman, or child, could perform the duties under that commission but Sir Charles Tupper! Why didn't the hon. gentleman find it out before? I dare say that when the hon. gentleman was Minister, the Finance Minister in the Cabinet went home to England and somebody performed his duties. And there were most important duties to be performed; they had to issue, perhaps, debentures, make a

that it was wrong-that he was wrong, that the Premier was wrong, that every gentleman in that Government was wrong, and every Government has been wrong, since 1867; and now the accumulated wrongs, the accumulated breaches of the Constitution, committed by all the Governments since 1867, must be heaped on the devoted head of my hon. friend, who is to be made the scapegoat. That is the argument. However, any stake will do to break a man's head if you want to break his head, and the hon, gentleman has taken a stake, but I am afraid the stake was rotten, and it has broken in his own hands. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I would say. The hon. gentleman made rather an insinuation against the Minister of Agriculture, who performed, and well performed, the duties of the Department of Railways and Canals during the temporary absence of my hon, friend. All those who know that gentleman, know his capacity for business; all those who know him, know that he is perfectly disinterested, and a more disinterested, a more unselfish man I never met than that hon. gentleman. I am proud to bear this testimony in his favour, that a more disinterested, a more unselfish man never existed; and the very insinua-tion, that because he might or might not have been interested in any way whatever in any railway, would actuate him in the performance of those duties, would be considered by those who know him well as a wanton insult. That hon. gentleman is superior to any suspicion of that kind, and I resent it as a taunt thrown out, in the course of the hon. gentleman's speech, that will not in any way injure or diminish the respect that the House and the country have for John Henry Pope. Mr. Speaker, I say this was simply an attempt to attack my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, and the Government through him. The motion, as I understood it from hearing it read, is rather peculiar. It not only passes censure on this temporary arrangement, but it passes censure on what the hon. gentleman supposes is going to happen. You may pass censure on the Government for what has happened, but it is reserved to the hon, gentleman for the first time to pass censure on the Government for what he says is going to happen. He says: "This continuance in such a course." How does he know there is to be a continuance in such a course? He should have ascertained that first, before he offered his resolution.

Mr. MILLS. It is continuing now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Merely a further continuance of this arrangement. Mr. Speaker, the continuance must be established, the continuance must be known, the continuance must be permanent, before there can be a censure. But the hon. gentleman resolves to censure my hon. friend, and I wish him joy of the motion. I do not think that it will take a very long time for the House to dispose of it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman meets this motion and the important questions which it raises in a manner which was not to be expected, having regard for his own statements when, at an early period of the Session, the subject was first broached. I broached the subject at an early period, and the hon. gentleman stated in the debate on the Address, if I remember aright, that no doubt it would be brought up later on. I broached it on a motion for papers. The hon. gentleman said the subject would be discussed, and no doubt, fully discussed, when the papers were brought down, and stated that he would be prepared then to discuss it. I cannot say that the papers have been brought down yet, because I have tired myself and wearied the House with iterated and reiterated demands for them some came this evening; but even yet we have not got the commission laid on the Table. It is true an hon. gentleman has read portions of it; it is true that his supporters have had access to it; it is true then that the Minister of the Interior and the Secretary of State have been able to see it from time to time and to read from it; but although the House, two months ago, lacking four days, ordered that that commission should be brought down, we have not got it into our hands to read it or to have the benefit of seeing what it contains. Now, Sir, even in advance of the production of that document, and not a very long period after the papers were laid upon the Table which the hon. gentleman said would be laid upon the Table, and upon which he supposed a formal discussion would be raised, a discussion is raised, and then the hon. gentleman says : "Oh, there is nothing in it; it is a very inopportune motion to have made." The hon. gentleman's excuses are various. First of all, he pleads ad misericordiam. He says this was an arrangement made, not in the interests of the public so much as in the interest of the health of the incumbent of the two offices. He says Sir Charles Tupper's health, as we regretted to learn, failed considerably and he was desirous of withdrawing from office, but the hon. gentleman prescribed for him, instead of withdrawal from the cares of office, a duplication of those cares. He prescribed that the office of Minister of Railways being too much, Sir Charles Tupper should add to the cares and worry, the care and worry of the office of High Commissioner for Canada, and this tonic, this prescription of the hon. gentleman, has had a wonderful effect-it has produced the result which was expected and hoped for. It was a very strange experiment to try, to tell a broken-down man that the proper mode to get well, was to add to duties which had been found too severe for him, other heavy and important duties. But it seems to me that no one would have objected, any more than they did when the First Minister himself was seized with a very serious illness and took a long and deserved recess-no one would have objected, I say, to such a course, for it is a perfectly proper course to take. If the Minister of Railways, or any other Minister, had broken down in health, no one would object to his obtaining such leave of absence as was necessary for the restoration of his health, and to necessary temporary arrangements being made for the discharge of his duties-not so satisfactory a discharge as if the work were done by the Minister himself, if in perfect health. These are exigencies which, we understand, are to be met, and in regard to which it was no impropriety to meet them in the manner to which I have alluded. But to say it is an oxcuse which is valid for the creation, and, as far we can loarn, the permanent creation, of an arrangement and conjunction of offices which we believe uncalled for and uncon-stitutional, is not a statement which I can accept. I can perfectly understand the appeal ad misericordiam which the hon. gentleman makes; but I cannot accept it as an answer to a criticism of that arrangement. I have shown that precedents existed that the hon. gentleman's own case existed as a precedent, for granting to any Minister whose health had broken down such a period of ease and retirement from the cares of office, without adverse criticism from the other side, as might be necessary for the restoration of that health. That was the proper remedy in this case, and that being the proper remedy, the circumstance to which the hon. gentleman has alluded is no justification of this particular arrangement. It is not a secret that the arrangements which were made on that occasion were not the primary arrangements. It is very well known that, in the first instance, the intention was that the High Commissioner and the Minister of Railways should not be the same person; that Sir Charles Tupper was appointed to occupy the office of High Commissioner and would retire from the office of Minister of Railways. In anticipation of that event, even during the Session of Parliament, a very long account of the past services of Sir Charles Tupper was given to a correspondent of a Conservative newspaper, and produced at very great length, and it was his valedictory,

Then there was a gathering here-a dinner I think, to the then First Minister of Quebec, who is now a Judge in one of the districts of that Province-Mr. Mousseau-at which Sir Charles Tupper said all that could be said during a Session of Parliament when he was still a Minister and had not accepted the office of High Commissioner-he said all that could possibly be said, in view of his existing relations to the Government, to indicate that he was changing entirely his relations to the party. He used words something like what I have now used as to the expected change in his relations to the party and the new sphere which he was about to occupy. This was common talk; it was the subject of discussion in the Ministerial organs, and at about the close of the Session-I think it was after the close of the Session -it was announced that Sir Charles Tupper was about to hold the office of Minister of Railways concurrently with the office of High Commissioner. Why that change? I could understand all that the First Minister has said consistently with his carrying out the first plan-the plan to relieve the hon. gentleman from the worry and care of the position of Minister of Railways, and remove to a country whose climate was considered more salutary for him, and fill the post of High Commissioner, an honourable, I will not say retirement, but change in public service, suitable to the condition of his health, and a position in which he might discharge important public duties, though of a different character from those he had discharged up to that time. But why that change? If it had been arranged that he should occupy the position of High Commissioner and no longer occupy that of Minister of Railways, that would have been another arrangement different from what I conceive to be the highly objectionable arrangement made by which Sir Charles Tupper became High Commissioner and retained the post of Minister of Railways. The hon. First Minister has repeatedly observed that the statement in the Order in Council indicates a temporary character to that arrangement. One might have supposed that some indication would be given as to what that meant, and the hon. gentleman, in his earlier speech on this matter, said the Minister of Railways might expect to hold the office of Minister of Railways permanently, but that the office of High Commissioner was much more temporary; but he gave no indication as to the termination of the arrangement. On the contrary, on various occasions during the Session, on no less than two occasions, has the Minister of Finance alluded to the circumstance that diplomatic negotiations had been entered upon to some extent by the High Commissioner during his residence in England, which were to be renewed by him on his return to that country; and I observe by the papers brought down and laid on the Table, that even he himself speaks of arrangements for his return to England, and the preparation of the mansion, which I presume is to be acquired for the use of the lligh Commis sioner on his return to England. So everything indicates an arrangement intended to be as continuous as the arrangements of offices which are all held during pleasure, and which are dependent on various political contingencies. The hon. First Minister says that during the absence of the Minister of Railways as High Commissionen he discharged his during The Later and the second Commissioner, he discharged his duties well. He says he has done great things as diplomatist. Of course, we have to take that upon trust. We have asked for papers, but they have not been brought down. We are told negotiations are in progress in certain instances, and that we may expect to hear something about them. But we get no report from the High Commissioner on the subject of negotiations. We hear a great deal about his success. The appointment of Sir Alexander Galt was heralded with a great flourish of trumpets, and we were told he was going to do great things for us in the negotiations of commercial treaties. There was on that occasion much cry and little wool. On this occasion, also - I must confess it is for the first time-the cry is loud, fully considered, as to the railway operation and as to the Mr. BLAKE.

the pœans of triumph are sounded; we hear of the great triumphs of this diplomatist. But we have to take the First Minister's word for it. The hon. First Minister also says that Sir Charles Tupper has done great things as an immigration agent; but we do no know what those great things are. I have read the Report of the Minister of Agriculture. I am not now going to criticise what precisely he has done, what good fortune has attended his efforts, what success has attended them up to this time, or whether they are in the future. I do not conceive that any of these points are material. Lastly, it is said that he saved the cattle trade of Canada, that by a peculiar conjunction of the qualities of vigour, energy and special knowledge, he did what probably no other man could have done-saved the cattle trade of Canada. Well, he was not sent there for that particular purpose. He did not conjecture, I presume, that there would be dauger of the trade being suspended, or of some mistake being made on the part of the health officers who were in charge of this subject, in England, or of the hon. gentleman being able to point out, with the assistance of other veterinary surgeons, that they were wrong; nor do I understand any particular merit in these transactions, of which we have heard such great laudations. I cannot conceive that it was anything less than a plain and obvious duty of the High Commissioner, when he learned that there were three cargoes of Canadian cattle in danger, that he should go to the point in the country where the question was in issue, and there call for the assistance of such veterinary surgeons as might be necessary, and take the most vigorous steps. I agree that he did so, but I say that he did neither more nor less than his duty, and I presume that another gentleman in the position that Sir Alexander Galt himself, with his assistance of those veterinary surgeons whom he might have employed-would have been able to accomplish these results. Although the hon. gentleman has renewed the boast, that Providence always favours the Conservative party, still Providence does not grant the hon. gentleman power to absolutely foreknow its decrees; and the hon. gentleman will not pretend that he foreknew that these cargoes were to be landed, that they were to be condemned, and that it was required that a medical man should act as High Commissioner in order to save them. The hon, gentleman in this part of his argument resorted to a common fallacy-a common mode of making good a bad case. It is not because of this success or the non-success of the mission of Sir Charles Tupper, that his appointment is to be either praised or blamed. This motion is not based on any consideration of what his qualifications for the office of High Commissioner are. It is not based on any proposition that he is not fit to be High Commissioner; it is not based on any proposition that he is not fit to be Minister of Railways. It is based on the proposition that the same person should not be at the same time both Minister of Railways and High Commissioner to England. That is the proposition, and no matter how surpassing the qualifications of the man are, as he cannot be in the two places at once, he cannot discharge the divided and incompatible duties of the two offices at the same time. The hon. gentleman says the duties of the office of the Minister of Railways were wearing and worrying, and that the constant wear and worry affected the health of the incumbent. Nobody can doubt that during the anxious period between June and December, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, there would have been a good deal of wear and tear. There was the question of the route through the Rocky Mountains; there was the serious question of the financial condition of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; there was the question of the appeal of the Government for aid by granting their guarantee. There was the whole of that very important question to be considered, to be maturely and and it is not necessary to point out, if under ordinary circumstances, as the hon. gentleman has said, the duties of the Minister of Railways involve constant worry and work. that during this half year they involved exceptional worry and exceptional work. All the more necessary was it that there should be a responsible Minister in charge of the Department, who had not other things to do. The hon. gentleman has said that those duties were discharged by a Minister who had himself an important Department to take charge of-the Minister of Agriculture, who was in charge of a Department, two branches of which were very active, or should have been in very active operation during those six months. There was the question of immigration, in respect of which our expenditure is so enormous-a vote, if I remember aright, of something like $550,000 being asked-a great portion of which is expended in ways which required constant supervision and closeness of attention on the part of the Minister. The practical result of the operations connected with the vote, the mode in which immigrants are brought out, the class of immigrants who are brought out, the arrangements for their being distributed through the country, are generally, and were last year, of particular importance, involving as they did, the coming out of a new class of immigrants, the dealing with the question, not merely of the Manitoba immigration, but the question of the Irish immigration into the country, and other points of that kind. Another branch was the Census Branch, one volume of which we have not received, which has been delayed very unreasonably, as it seems to me, and which should have been attended to much earlier. These things required and demanded the attention of the Minister, and the Minister whose attention they demand and require is charged, in addition to these duties, not for a temporary period, but for a period of six months, with those duties which had been too much for the undivided attention of the Minister of Railways. It was not possible that they should be thoroughly attended to; for I attribute to the want of the attendance of the Minister who had the undivided responsibility and the sole charge of the Department of Railways and Canals, the fiasco in reference to the guarantee and the accession of the Government to that plan which turned out so absurd and abortive a failure, and which necessarily led the country into the great entanglements and enormous engagements into which it has been plunged, by the succession of events which followed the agreement of the Government to endorse the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the extent they did. Now I maintain that there is an incompatibility between the holding of these offices, in point of residence. The hon, gentleman says that the resident Ambassador continually crosses from Paris to London to vote with his party in the House of Lords. He says Lord Lyons and Lord Cowper did so. But I would ask him how long does it take to cross from Paris to London and back again? I do not remember how often, on great party divisions, the English Ambassador does cross, but I know that he has a residence in Paris, that he is generally there, and that if he crosses, it is very exceptional for him to do so; just as the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland may cross once or twice when there is a discussion of Irish affairs in the House, and when he, as a member of the Government, goes over to give the weight of his presence and information to the great council of the country, with reference to the particular functions he has to discharge. But to draw an analogy between the Minister at Paris going over once or twice during the Session to the House of Lords for a particular occasion, and being absent three, or four, or five days from his duties at Paris, and the Minister of Railways going from Canada to England, being away six months, and then going back four or five, or six, months, and then returning six months to England, seems to me perfectly absurd—I do not think another word is suitable financial policy. All these things in turn had to be done, for such an argument as that. The hon. gentleman says that I did not maintain that these offices are incompatible by the same person. I said when the arrangement was made, you want a person with reference to commercial negotiations, to see how the treaties are going on, and it is important that we should have an Agent there. Well, I said, appoint your agent pro hac officio. Oh, no, that would never do; the negotiations are always going on, the hon. gentleman said. It is impossible to tell at any moment when they may not commence; it is a question of moment, a question of hours; it would be quite impossible to assume that the wheels of the negotiations should stop in order that we may send a man over; we require a resident representative agent, and we are choosing a resident agent, who is to reside half the year in Canada and the other half in England—and that, the the less important half. That is the proposal of the hon. gentleman. The office is that of resident representative agent in London, and the duties of the office require him to be there. The arrangements, for instance, at this moment, with reference to the immigration of the approaching season, do not require him to be there; he is residing in Canada just now. These important negotiations, to which reference has been made-the hon. gentleman's diplomatic triumphs still in the bud-must stand; the blossoming of this century plant is deferred because he is out here in the chilly Canadian winter; and we must wait for it until he goes back. The hon. Minister of Finance says the negotiations will be resumed when the representative resident agent becomes the resident agent once more; but how far might they have proceeded if the resident had remained resident? What is the sense of creating an office with a resident agent, so that the negotiations may go on constantly, instead of sending a member of the Government over from time to time? What is the sense of deciding that you must have a man on the spot, and then appointing one whose duties require him to be absent from the spot half the time, leaving behind him your negotiations, the beggarly amount of which, ever since this Government assumed office, may be summed up in the one word-nothing, absolutely nothing. Not one single thing has been accomplished up to this time, in order that the hon. gentleman's plan may be carried out, of having a resident agent in London residing one-half of the year in Canada. But the hon. gentleman says it is quite consistent that he should be Minister of Railways, because some one else can discharge his duties: and he says this has been done in the past. Of course it has been done in the past, temporarily. When illness or some other temporary exigency called a Minister away, his duties have been discharged by a colleague. That is of neces-sity, not of choice. Illness requires a Minister to leave, and noboly says that because he requires to leave for a month, or for two or three months, he should resign. Then what are you to do? Necessity calls for some temporary what are you to do? Necessity cans for some temporary arrangement, however inadequate, for the discharge of the duties of his office in his absence. So if some public necessity calls a Minister as a Min-ister, as a member of the Government, as having the discharge of a great Department in the discharge of a portion of the duties of his office, to go abroad—say to Distribute Columbia say to Kinghard—bay British Columbia, say to Washington, say to England-he is still discharging one part of his duties as Minister and as a member of the Cabinet. The hon. First Minister went to England as First Minister on more than one occasion. While absent, he was discharging a portion of his Ministerial duties. A portion of his Ministerial dutics in Ottawa could not be discharged while he was away, and therefore some one else discharged that portion. The hon. Minister of Railways went abroad as Minister of Railways; there was a portion of his duties to be discharged while he was away, and some one else discharged those duties which re-mained to be discharged at home. But these arrange-ments cannot be compared with the arrangement, not of necessity, in the slightest degree, but of choice, in which you conjoin the office of a Minister whose duties call him to be in Ottawa, with the office of High Commissioner, whose duties call him to be in London. That is an arrangement, not of a necessary and temporary character, but of choice-the permanent conjunction of two inconsistent and incompatible offices. Then, the hon. gentleman says there is nothing at all in the objection that the High Commissioner is under the control of the Minister of Agriculture, quead his duties in regard to immigration. Why, he says Lord Spelcer is under the control of the Chief Secretary for Ireland. Well, we know there has been considerable discussion upon that subject. We know that the Chief Secretary for Ireland has not been, until late years, a member of the Cabinet, and therefore the Lord Lieutenant has been the chief Executive officer. We know that, in consequence of the extraordinary condition of affairs in Ireland, the Chief Secretary for Ireland was made a member of the Cabinet when Mr. Forster was made Chief Secretary; and we know that that condition of things, under which there was something like a co-ordinate authority between the Lord Lieu. tenant having a seat in the Cabinet as well as the Chief Secretary, has been the subject of considerable criticism. Some people have said that the divided authority was not quite the thing, and that there has been a considerable weakening of the Lord Lieutenant's authority. The experiment has been regarded as not altogether successful. But 1 do not think the analogy bears out. Here we have a statutory arrangement, under which the High Commissioner is under the control of the Minister of Agriculture. That is an entirely different thing from the arrangement, indefinite and elastic as it is, between the Lord Lieutenant and the Chief Secretary for Ireland. The High Commissioner is an officer of the Minister of Agriculture. He is bound to obey that Minister's instructions; he is not a Cabinet Minister at all; but he reports to one of the Ministers. I say that the argument of my hon. friend has not been in the slightest degree attacked in that respect. Then the hon. gentleman says you are complaining that this arrangement is continued; but you ought to find out whether it is going to be continued or not before you express an opinion. How could we find out? Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that he would answer the question, if we asked? We know that it is going to be continued; we know that it is continuing to-night; we know that it is to go on to-morrow; we know that it is to go on until the end of the Session; and we know that after the Session is over, the High Commissioner is to return to London, because the hon. Minister of Finance has told us that he is to go and continue his negotiations, and because the papers which have been laid on the Table shows that he is preparing his mansion not a mansion in the skies, of course, but a mansion in the fogs of London. Therefore, all the indices are quite sufficient to show that the arrangement is to be continued. But if the hon. gentleman informs us that it is to be discontinued, I shall advise my hon, friend to withdraw his motion; but if he cannot give us that assurance, I will advise my hon. friend to divide the House on the motion, because this arrangement, which was objectionable from the start, which has been demonstrated from its inception to be a wrong, is a wrong that is about to be continued. and that ought to be discontinued by the vote of this House. 68. Prince Arthur's Landing to Red River $500,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain to us in detail what he proposes to do with this $500,000. I had supposed that, by his arrangement, this had all been finally handed over to the Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but he will understand that it requires the money to be provided to pay all the same, under the contract which has been made with the Company for the construction of the work that remained to be performed, between Prince Arthur's Landing and Red River. There is not only the section "B" to be finished, but there are the works that required to be completed under the previous contracts. This $500,000 is required to settle the section "B" contract," and to provide for the payment to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for completing this section of road, as per the agreement which has been laid upon the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is about 100 miles, I think, is it not? The part that remains-how much is it?

MARCH 21,

Somerville (Brant), Somerville (Bruce), Springer, Sutherland (Oxford), Thompson, Trow, Vail, Watson, Weldon, Wilson,-51.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This $500,000 is to close with the contractors, to settle finally with the contractors, and also to pay the amount on the other various sections for the work required to be done, in order to place the whole line from Prince Arthur's Landing to Red River, in the condition in which the Government were bound, under the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, to hand it over to them.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion is required to settle with Section "B," and what proportion for the Canadian Pacific Railway contract? As I understand it, the hon, gentleman has entered into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself to do all the work that is necessary to complete the line in the condition in which they conceive it ought to have been handed over to them, and embraced in that lump sum is the amount required to finish the Section "B" contract—$970,000, I think, was the original amount.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; that covered the entire work.

Mr. BLAKE. I say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was required to put the whole line in the condition it should have been, and also to perform the work required to be done on Section "B."

Mr. BLAKE. I said so. I spoke of $970,000 as the lump sum, and including the 15 per cent. handed over to these gentlemen, I suppose it was raised to a still higher sum. From $900,000 to $1,000,000 is the whole sum which goes to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is now asking $500,000. What proportion of that is going to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or is it all going to them under this contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not all going to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because a portion of it is to settle finally with the contractors.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion has he assigned in his estimate, in this lump sum, for settlement with the contractors, and what proportion has he assigned to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With the amount that was taken before, it is difficult to say how much of this will be applied for the one and how much for the other. I will give the hon. gentleman more minute information on Concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know from the Minister, as far as his information extends, what is the condition at present of that 400 miles, or thereabouts, from Prince Arthur's Landing to the Red River. A good deal has been said in the newspapers and by persons who have travelled over this road, as to the condition of the road. Of course, I am aware that a large quantity of the trestle-work will, in all probability, have to be replaced, in the nature of the case; but I should be glad to know, and I think the House would be glad to learn, generally, if the hon. gentleman possesses the information, what is the condition, and what is likely to be the condition, of the permanent way and what steps are being taken to fill up the trestles. I have heard it stated by parties, not political friends of mine but political friends of the other side, that a great deal of that trestle-work was in an exceedingly dangerous condition; that it was very badly constructed, and that it would not be safe, but on the contrary very dangerous indeed, to run trains at any considerable speed over it; in short, that the whole of that road required very careful overhauling before it could be made very useful for the purpose of carrying heavy freights, at any rate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the result made, or will be that this road will be a first-class road all the way from Port Arthur to the Red River. The trestles, or a ligently.

considerable portion of the work to which the hon. gentle. man alluded, were temporary trestles. They were intended to carry the trains over, to enable communication to be had between these two points in the first instance, but the filling has been going rapidly on, and will be completed, so that the road will be a first-class road in every respect when the work which has been provided for is completed; and the hon. gentleman could not require much better evidence than the fact that under the contract we were bound to hand over the road to the Canadian Pacific Railway as a first-class road and in very complete order, and provision has been made in the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, satisfactory to them, for this amount, to take it over and complete the road. So we have a pretty good assurance that, when this amount is expended, the road will be in a thoroughly good condition, and with the grades maintained as was originally intended—an exceedingly favourable grade, and adapted for the rapid running of trains.

Mr. BLAKE. As soon as I saw the contract, I quite thought that the observation the hon. Minister has just made was the appropria cone. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has said this is what they think is required to put this road into such order as they are entitled to get it in. It is, of course, their interest to get it in at least as good order as their original contract provided. They have themselves proposed to do the work for the sum of money. The question for consideration, therefore, is not whether the road is not in good condition, but whether we are going to put it in too good condition for them, because their interest might lead them to make exorbitant domands. I say they might. I do not say they have done so; but they certainly must have asked-they ought to have asked-to be allowed to expend as much money as would put it in proper condition. We certainly ought to have more information than is vouchsafed. We are asked for half a million dollars more; we do not know whether that is a final vote or not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I expect this to complete it.

Mr. BLAKE. If this is to complete the whole thing, we would like to know what the whole is going to cost. Of course it does not bind the hon. gentleman or the House in any way, but we would like to know what the hon. gentleman estimates he will require to pay those unfortunate contractors of section "B," who have been so harassed by the Government for a long time, and are now about to reap a tardy return from the arbitration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has just touched a point which shows how improper it would be for me to make any close statement in reference to this. An arbitration was granted which is not now settled. As it is an unknown quantity that may be assigned to them by the arbitrators it would be very injudicious in me to make any estimate which might be a suggestive indication. In fact it would be impossible for me to state, in the absence of the award, what amount they may likely receive. I do not myself expect it will be very much, if anything, in excess of what they have already received.

Mr. BLAKE. We are in an awkward position. We are a-ked to vote an unknown quantity. How much we do not know, because it is in the nature of an unknown quantity to be an unknown quantity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know that it is any thing.

Mr. BLAKE. I maintain that if the hon. gentleman is in such a position that he cannot form any estimate whatever, he ought not to ask this House to vote any sum. It will be time enough for the vote after the award has been made, or when the hon. gentleman is in a position to give this. House information upon which we can vote more intelligently. Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Something will be due to the contractors out of this amount, according to our own estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the only sum the hon. gentleman ought to ask us to vote. If that be so, and the hon. gentleman will state the amount, we will deduct it from the halfmillion dollars. The balance ought to be the sum he expects to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman intend to take a special vote for anything that may be granted under this award?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If there is anything, I will.

Mr. BLAKE. If we are to understand that none of this money now being voted is to be devoted to the payment of the award, if one be made, that is a different thing, and we have nothing to say to it, as far as that is concerned, whatever we may have to say to it in other respects.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This embraces the amount of money that the Department expects to be required to pay for the work performed by the contractors for section "B;" it is what we expect to find due to them and to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the work that, under our agreement with them, they will be entitled to be paid for.

Mr. CASEY. There has been a statement in the papers that the arbitrators had come to a decision as to a part, at least, of the claim. It was stated that the claim consisted of two classes, one in regard to the classification of the work and the remeasuring of what has been done; the other, in regard to claims for damages caused by delay on the part of other contractors in finishing their part of the work. It was stated the first part had been settled and the arbitrators had made an award.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That statement is quite correct, that the arbitration has been divided into two parts. In the first place, the contractors claimed they were entitled to consideration for the change in the character of the work, and the reduction in the amount of work contained in the specifications when they took their contract. That is the point upon which the arbitrators are now sitting.

Mr.CASEY. Because the quantity was reduced after they took the contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They asked for consideration on the ground that a very great change was made in the contract, as undoubtedly there was. They claimed that the work which they expected to be profitable had been reduced, and work that they considered unprofitable had been increased, just as contractors always make changes a basis for reconsideration. It is a question of consequential damages, if I might use the word; and that is the point now being considered. But the point that was referred to, and has been dealt with by the arbitrators, was the claim that the Chief Engineer had not allowed them what they were entitled to under the contract. An award has been made in their favour unanimously by the arbitrators, Judgo Clarke, Mr. Brydges and Mr. Light, giving the contractors $45,000 over and above the amount the Department were willing to pay. I do not anticipate that they will be allowed anything for the portion of the work now being considered.

Mr. BLAKE. I heard the award was $160,000 or $170,000; from the present statement, I presume that embraced a certain sum the Government offered to pay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; $45,000 was paid over what the Chief Engineer was willing to certify to. There was no dispute to pay the $120,000, to the best of my recollection. Mr. BLAKE. Mr. BLAKE. Does this vote include the $120,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It covers the whole amount.

Mr. BLAKE. This is now a final vote. Will the hon. gentleman say what the final cost will be from Prince Arthur's Landing to the Red River should, as he expects, no award be granted against the Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A little over $14,000,000. I gave the exact figures on a former occasion.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no variation ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under any supposeable condition of things, this contract will be closed, and the work will be executed by these contractors at a sum greatly below that originally estimated.

Mr. CASEY. The Chief Engineer was willing to certify to about $120,000, as I understand, more than he had been willing to certify to in the first instance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. CASEY. The $45,000 is the award of the arbitrators ; and what is the $120,000 ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no such sum as $165,000. I said that the amount over and above that which the Department held to be due, was $45,000.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend mentioned that he had seen this sum of $165,000, or thereabouts, mentioned in the newspapers, and I asked if that sum included this $45,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the whole amount that is due is in this.

Mr. CASEY. Is the arbitration now sitting?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand so. There was a long vacation taken. I was extremely anxious to have everything closed up before Parliament rose, and urged it upon the arbitrators in the strongest way. Mr. Brydges was called back to Winnipeg, and as soon as it was possible for him to return he has done so, and I except before the House rises to be able to submit the final result.

Mr. CASEY. I think there was no standard of classification expressed in the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was a great difficulty about the original terms used in the contract.

69. British Columbia (revote $1,000,000)......$2,000,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This sum is required to pay the staff, salaries of engineers and contractors for work done under contracts 60, 61, 62, 63 and 92, also for lands and damages.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the hon. gentleman still of opinion that the estimates he has formerly given, as to the total cost of the British Columbia section, will be verified?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to say, that so far as we have been able to close any of these contracts, the figures are within and not without the estimate formerly submitted. I think the work will be completed within the estimate. Up to the present time, $7,000,000 in round numbers have been spent.

Mr. BLAKE. I received a statement some time ago to the effect that an error had been made with reference to the location of the piers of one of the bridges, I think, across the Fraser River. Has the hon. gentleman heard anything about it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not heard.

Mr. BLAKE. Has be heard of any of the piers being undermined by the high water?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not remember; I will make a note of it.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish the hon. gentleman would, as the information I have received is very specific. It was one of the principal bridges across the Fraser, and it was said it would occasion one year's delay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt it was a mistake, but I will see about it.

70. Station accommodation$ 200,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These stations are on the British Columbia portion of the railway, and cover the whole line. This sum is in addition to the $30,000 spent before, and embraces the total cost.

71. Subsidy $6,000,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, explain whether this calculation of $6,000,000 was predicated upon the altered mode of payment prescribed by the Act in force during the present Session, or upon the mode of payment in force prior thereto?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is predicated upon the altered mode of payment, and is assumed to cover the amount that will be necessary to complete the work within the time stated.

Mr. BLAKE. I observed the statement to be that the expenditure of the Company would be $1,250,000 a month, for the first of the two years which practically remained, and $1,000,000 per month for the latter of the two years, thus indicating that there would be a larger portion in the earlier years, which we are now voting for, than in the latter years. But the whole subsidy is, if I remember aright, $12,710,000, and there is a lesser scale of expenditure in the latter years than in the earlier years. It would appear as if a larger sum than $6,000,000 would be falling into the first year. The hon. gentleman will recollect the statement was made, that the $15,000,000 would be spent in the first year, and 812,000,000 in the second, making $27,000,000 in all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. There does not seem to be an allocation of the subsidy proportionate to that half.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; the early part of the subsidy.

Mr. BLAKE. Bat then much more than that $12,710,000 is to be spent in the year we are now voting for. The proportions are 15 to 12; instead of that, the hon. gentleman is putting it the other way, 12 to 15.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This has nothing to do with the line.

Mr. BLAKE. But now we are paying in proportion to the work done. They are going to do more than half this year, therefore, they get more than half the subsidy this vear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I see the point you are raising.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. Minister would allow me, I would like to ask a question with reference to the station accommodation, an item which is alreay passed. The sum, it strikes me, is a large one for the number of stations to be required on 200 miles. What number of stations do the Government intend to construct?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot say at this moment. Mr. CHARLTON. It is nearly $1,000 a mile.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make a note of that, and give a statement of the number on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman give some further information as to this scale of payment-because I am a little afraid.

182

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I will do that also.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps, at the same time, the hon. gentleman would give us some information as to the amount he expects to expend on the line of these works.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same propertion as 12 to 15.

Intercolonial Railway.

72. Halifax Extension $18,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount is proposed to be appropriated as follows: $3,000 to rebuild a hay shed torn down in rearranging the tracks for the extension into Halifax; $5,000 for filling in portion of water lot acquired from the Imperial Government, at the west end of the dockyard, this work being required by the Imperial authorities; $10,000 for the purchase of water lots at Richmond wharf, additional accommodation for vessels being required. The sum of $18,000 will entirely complete the work at Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. The extension is in connection with the elevator. I understood the Minister to say, on a former occasion, that four cargoes had been shipped.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I am told only one cargo was grain and the other peas?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, pass, which were shipped through the elevator. The hon. gentleman is aware that the short crop of wheat in Ontario has entirely changed the position from what was expected if thore had been the usual supply of grain in Canada.

73. Increased accommodation at St. John $25,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount is required to construct a connecting line between the Intercolonial Rail-way and the St. John Bridge, at St. John. The Company is engaged in constructing a bridge which will connect the Intercolonial with railways on the other side of the harbour, and this amount is required to connect the Intercolonial with the bridge.

74. St. Charles Branch......$40,000 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is required for the purpose of constructing a coal wharf and making connection at Point Lévis. This branch is expected to be opened in June or July.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been the entire cost of the St. Charles Branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has cost a much larger sum than was anticipated. I am afraid that before completicn, the cost will be very little short of $1,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the hon. gentleman's estimate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think about half that amount.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman think if we had had the Minister of Railways in Canada all the time he could have kept the cost down?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I took every possible precaution to ascertain the value of the land and right of way, but those have proved much more costly than I supposed, or the officers in the Department and land valuators estimated, and these charges have swollen the amount out of all proportion to the estimate. The length of the branch is 13 miles.

Mr. CHARLTON. In settling for the right of way, has there been litigation in any case ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been, but the claims have been largely sottled by arbitration.

Mr. BLAKE. Almost all settled by arbitration?

Sir CHARLES TUPER. To a very large extent. Whenover we considered the claim a reasonable one, we preferred to settle it rather than go to arbitration; for I have been very much dissatisfied with the results of the claims brought before the arbitrators.

Mr. WELDON. What saving of distance is effected?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About 12 miles.
