HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY SIXTH PARLIAMENT

13 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1964

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF APRIL, 1964, TO THE NINETEENTH DAY OF MAY, 1964, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1964

20220—145½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 17, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

DRUGS AND PESTICIDES

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

That the special committee on food and drugs appointed March 9, 1964, be composed of Messrs. Armstrong, Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe), Basford, Mrs. Casselman, Cote (Longueuil), Enns, Francis, Gauthier, Harley, Horner (Jasper-Edson), Howe (Hamilton South), Jorgenson, Macaluso, Mackasey, Marcoux, Mitchell, Nesbitt, Orlikow, Prud'homme, Roxburgh, Rynard, Slogan, Willoughby and Whelan.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEDURE

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order:

April 15—Mr. Knowles (Acting for the special committee on procedure and organization):

That the second report of the special committee on procedure and organization, presented on April 15, be now concurred.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there has been a reasonable request that the presentation of this motion be delayed for one more sitting day. Therefore on behalf of the committee I ask that it stand until Monday.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED ACCEPTANCE BY PRIME MINISTER OF DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether he has decided to give his support to a Canadian flag having three maple leaves against a white background or to some other design, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume that my hon. friend's question is based on a press story that appeared this morning. May I say that that story is entirely speculative. I know, and I am sure other hon. members know from their own experience, that there has been a great deal of speculation about the design of a Canadian flag for a good many months.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister would take the house into his confidence as to what is going on about the flag. Is the matter being handled by a committee of cabinet, or by a committee of the Liberal caucus, or is it being left to that government co-ordinator extraordinary, Mr. Tom Kent?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say that there is no committee as stated in the story, which confirms its speculative character. As to what is going on in connection with this matter, that will be announced to the house when a decision has been taken and the house will be asked to take its responsibility in this matter as the government must take its responsibility. The government is pledged to make a recommendation on this matter within two years of coming into office. We have now been in office almost one year.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to hon. members that I have grave doubt whether the question is that pressing. It is an emotional question and a very important one, but it seems to me we should not be extending discussion on it at this time.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, further to the question asked by the hon. member for Three Rivers, I wonder whether the Secretary of State could tell the house how many flag designs or suggestions he has received approximately since his party has been in office. Two thousand, 3,000?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member did not hear my suggestion that this matter could not reasonably be considered that pressing.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he is prepared to make any report with reference to his negotiations with the premiers of the provinces regarding the Canada pension plan; and can he tell the house whether it is the government's intention to introduce a new plan or to proceed with the present plan and make certain amendments in committee of the whole?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in welcoming my hon. friend back from the wars I would tell him I made a statement to the house yesterday in which I said I would be making a report on this matter not later than Monday. It will be made on Monday, and at that time I hope to deal with some of the points he has specifically raised this morning.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is taking part in the discussions now going on between the Quebec and Ottawa authorities with regard to the Canada pension plan?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Of course, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare present the new pension plan or will the Prime Minister introduce the bill next week?

[Text]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us if these negotiations are being held at the present time and where the representatives of the various governments are meeting. Are the meetings taking place in Quebec city or in Ottawa?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, because I made the announcement in the house, that these negotiations have been going on, not necessarily at meetings in Ottawa, by discussions between officials and by correspondence between myself and the premiers of the provinces. I shall be glad to explain on Monday exactly how it has been handled and the happy results which I hope will have been achieved by then.

[Mr. Douglas.]

IMMIGRATION

LONDON, ONT.—REPORTED TRIAL OF GREEK SEAMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It concerns the reported trial in London, Ontario of a Greek seaman by the name of Stylianos Yiannopolous who was held without trial for three months. Could the Minister of Justice and his colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, look into this very serious matter and make a report to the house at their very earliest convenience?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter, though I doubt very much if it is within the realm of my jurisdiction.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REVIEW OF FORMULA TO DETERMINE DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Last November the minister, along with his colleague the Minister of Finance, assured the house that all depressed or designated areas, together with the formulae used, would be reconsidered once they had a little experience of them. Is he now in a position to inform the house whether these formulae are to be changed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have yet had sufficient experience of this program to warrant an announcement of changes at this time.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

During the recent federal-provincial conference in Quebec city, did the premier of Quebec present him with a request from all the municipalities of his province to the effect that the winter works program be extended until the end of May? Has he received an official request from Quebec in that connection?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question specifically but I will be glad to look into it. Meanwhile may I say that the policy of the government on the matter has already been announced.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENITENTIARY SERVICE—EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS OVER 45

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Is he now in a position to reply to the question I posed some time ago relating to age restrictions for non-custodial positions in the penitentiary service?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had the intention of meeting the director of penitentiaries, but he has been away on duty for quite some time recently. He has just returned and I will discuss the matter with him at the earliest possible date.

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman received a request recently from the federal superannuates national association for legislation this session to amend the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act, and can we expect a favourable response to this request during the present session of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I believe within the last few days I have received such a communication, but I should like to check. The matter will be under consideration in the light of that communication, and I shall be glad to report to the house as soon as I can.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—STATEMENT BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week both the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Grey North raised questions concerning the serious low water conditions which presently exist in the great lakes basin. In this connection, if I have the permission of the house, I should like to table a statement recently furnished to the governments of Canada and the United States by the international joint commission, which statement I believe was requested yesterday.

The international joint commission has responsibility with regard to certain regulatory works in the international section of the St. Lawrence river and has stated that these works will continue to be operated under present extraordinary conditions in order to alleviate, to the greatest extent possible, the situation in lake Ontario and downstream. I can assure the house that the government is very much concerned about this matter and will adopt all measures open to it which will help to minimize these extremely low water levels.

The Leader of the Opposition also mentioned the Chicago diversion. Some United States domestic aspects of this problem are now before a special master appointed by the United States supreme court. He is in no doubt about the position the Canadian government takes toward the Chicago diversion. In the past the Canadian government has repeatedly made clear its unalterable opposition to the unilateral diversion of great lakes water. There is no difference on this point between the policy of the present government and that of the government which was headed by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Did I understand that the Prime Minister wished to table some documents?

Mr. Pearson: I should like to table the report of the international joint commission, which I thought was rather too lengthy to read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if this has anything to do with the international joint commission.

Mr. Pearson: It is the report of the international joint commission that I am tabling. I know it will be of special interest to the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ORGANIZATION MEETINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I could direct a question to the hon. member for York Centre in his capacity as chief government whip. Since the standing committees have been constituted as to membership, would the hon. gentleman move with some speed to have these committees meet for organization purposes in order that some of the pressing matters referred to them and uncompleted at the end of last session may be referred to them and dealt with?

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Two of them are being called for Tuesday and five for Thursday. The others will follow very shortly. Notices are going out today.

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING SALES TAX ON DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): This question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I asked the hon. gentleman whether he had received any representations with reference to the sales tax on drugs and medical supplies, and he said he had not. I wonder if he would mind checking his files to see whether there are letters written to a druggist by the name of Irwin and to other druggists by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the former minister of national revenue in reference to this matter. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would let us have a reply at a later date.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): My recollection is that the hon. member for Bow River prefaced his question by asking whether I had received extensive or voluminous correspondence on the subject, or something of that kind. The adjective was part of his question and I replied to it perfectly accurately. No doubt I have received one or two representations on this matter. I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I could put a supplementary question. Did the hon. gentleman receive representations from three of his colleagues in reference to this matter?

Mr. Gordon: That I would have to look into also.

REFUND OF SALES TAX TO CHURCHES, SCHOOLS AND HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the acting minister of national revenue is prepared to answer the question I posed yesterday with relation to the formula for the refund of sales tax as it affects schools, churches and institutions in that category.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, work is being done now to change the method of calculating this tax. While I cannot give the precise time when the new regulations will be ready, I would expect it to be in the very near future.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING CANADIAN CONTROL OF NEWSPAPERS AND BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question based on an interview he gave last night which is reported in the press today. Is it the minister's intention to recommend to the government that legislation be introduced at this session to deal with Canadian control of newspapers and also of banks or will the minister wait until the report of the banking commission is received?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite know how that question could arise from the interview to which my hon. friend has referred. If there is any announcement to be made I can assure him it will be made in the normal way.

HARBOURS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENTS UNDER CONSIDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the wide interest in shipping facilities in Vancouver and the hope of some of us for the eventual establishment of a terminal railroad, will the minister table copies of a report on freight movement through greater Vancouver prepared by the British Columbia research council and tell us what is now being done following this report?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to table the report, but I am sure if I attempted to tell this house all the things that are being done to improve the port of Vancouver I should be at it all day. But my hon. friend does know, I believe, as do the other hon. members from that area, that there have been discussions recently between the harbours board and all the municipalities in the area, discussions which I think are going to be very productive indeed.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the Minister of Transport be able to demonstrate in the near future some interest on behalf of other national harbours?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will recall that about three weeks ago I announced that the Atlantic development board had been asked to make a special study of the port of Saint John and the port of Halifax. So I naturally looked to the east before I looked to the west.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I doubt if you are one of the wise men, though.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question. I pose it to him in this way. Inasmuch as the late Mackenzie King promised that the port of Prince Rupert would be greatly expanded some time in the 1920's, I wonder whether the minister would look into that too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have been making plans to visit the port and I hope I can spread around the kind of sunshine that will please the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the minister tabling his report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): There is nothing like having a modest Minister of Transport.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSTMASTERS ACTING AS AGENTS FOR NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on April 9 the hon. member for Regina City drew attention to a circular letter that had been sent out, a copy of which he said had been received by someone in Regina. He asked the question whether the postmaster there was in fact the agent for the Winnipeg Free Press. I expressed the hope that this was not the case, and assured him I would give him an answer this week.

I have looked into the matter and can now state that the postmaster in Regina is not and never has been an agent for the Winnipeg Free Press. Postmasters in large offices or in city offices are not agents for newspapers, but it is a fact that postmasters in smaller offices, rural offices, so-called revenue offices where they rent space in corner stores, drugstores and other stores, have no restrictions on their acting as agents in this field. How this particular letter came to be sent to a resident of Regina, we do not know. We are communicating with the Winnipeg Free Press on this aspect of the matter. I hope I have fully answered the question of the hon. member, and I thank him for having drawn this matter to my attention.

TRADE

NON-PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN JAPANESE INTERNATIONAL FAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I would ask the minister whether he can give the reasons why Canada is not participating in the international trade fair being held in Japan, when countries such as Australia, Italy and West Germany have sought to participate.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and will endeavour to answer the hon. gentleman on Monday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SHAWINIGAN, QUE.—AMOUNT OF CLOTHING STOLEN FROM ARMOURY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred to an answer to a written question tabled on Wednesday relating to thefts of equipment from national defence property. Specifically he referred to an item quoted as "unknown amount of military clothing" stolen from Shawinigan armoury on February 20, 1964 and said this wording was "a flagrant abuse" of the rules of the house. I took the question as notice and said I would look into the matter. I can now inform the house the facts relating to this matter.

The question asked by the hon. member did not in any way limit the extent of the items stolen or suspected of being stolen and in consequence, following the appearance of this question on the order paper on February 27, it was necessary to send out signals to all military establishments across the country, including ships, asking for a detailed return.

Depending upon circumstances and the manpower available to do the necessary work on the return, replies from various units arrived back at headquarters over a period of time.

In so far as the specific item mentioned by the hon. member is concerned, this was reported from Quebec command at the beginning of March. At that time, although detailed reports had been made to the police on the important military equipment stolen from Shawinigan armoury, stocktaking of individual items of clothing had not been done. However, stocktaking was carried out on March 16 and as a result of the hon. member's complaint I have now obtained a list of clothing stolen at that time. This list includes: 13 blue berets, 16 ponchos, 1 groundsheet, 10 khaki shirts, 5 battledress trousers, 14 olive drab field service trousers, 33 pairs of high black shoes, 16 trouser belts, 86 pairs of gloves, 22 neckties, 4 pairs of mittens and 137 pairs of socks. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that much of this has now been recovered by the police, but again at this date a detailed list is not available.

For the benefit of all hon. members I should like to draw attention to the fact that questions of this nature require a considerable amount of work and result in substantial cost to the public. On occasion when members put questions on the order paper an attempt is made to obtain clarification from the member in order to meet his specific request at the minimum cost. However, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is a former minister of the crown and also was for a time minister of national defence, it was presumed that despite the considerable cost involved he required the information as set out in his question without any of the qualifications which might have resulted not only in an answer being supplied quickly, but also in limiting the amount of work involved in the preparation of that answer.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is not within the jurisdiction of a minister of the crown to lecture any hon. member of this house just because he asked for information and that information was not supplied. I put a written question on the order paper, and the ridiculous answer was given that an unknown quantity of military clothing was stolen. Now the minister is attempting to explain away the inefficiency within his department. Shawinigan armouries was apparently completely stripped of military equipment and the minister was unable to give information to the house. Now he tells us that in March he had this information, yet my written question was answered only on Wednesday, and answered incompletely.

These lectures from ministers of the crown as to how we conduct ourselves in this house are out of place. We are entitled to ask for information from the government and we are entitled to complete answers, which we have not been getting.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the only reason for giving the answer I gave this morning was because of the remark made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he said that the answer given on Wednesday was a flagrant abuse of the rules of this house. We did everything we could to obtain the information for the hon. member as I have mentioned, and I think his intervention this morning is completely ridiculous.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have had sufficient discussion of this important matter.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to rule on whether or not my statement is correct. I said it was a flagrant abuse of the rules of the house to give an incomplete and insufficient answer to a written question. The minister says this is quite proper, and I would ask for a ruling from the chair in regard to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this matter does not require a ruling from the chair. Perhaps it could receive investigation by the committee on procedure and organization. I think we have had sufficient discussion of the matter, and I suggest we move on.

FLOODS

FRASER VALLEY, B.C.—REPORTED DANGER DUE TO HEAVY SNOWFALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of northern affairs. I wonder whether the minister has received reports in connection with the potential flood danger in the Fraser valley as a result of the recent heavy snowfalls in the mountains surrounding the area.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, following the tabling of the Fraser river board report I wrote immediately to Hon. Mr. Williston, ministre of lands and forests in British Columbia, suggesting to him that we had the option of either disregarding the report or acting upon it, and I said I thought we should begin to act upon it. Therefore I asked him to arrange a meeting with me, which was held in Ottawa when he came to the Columbia river treaty meetings.

We have agreed that he and his engineers shall review the situation, and it is rather likely that they will be making an application to us under the Canada Water Conservation Act in respect of the improvement of the dikes in that area. I believe the engineering will take some six months.

With regard to the current snow situation, snow in the Columbia basin area is exceedingly high, some 40 per cent higher than last year. Our current reports in respect of the Fraser valley basin indicate that snow is not much higher than the ten year average.

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO IMPROVE POSITION OF EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture stated on many occasions that he was studying several bills intended to help eastern farmers, can he tell the house if he is through studying one or two of them and could he announce their contents to the farmers while he is completing his study of the others?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister tell the house if the government is ready to give federal subsidies, through the medium of the provincial governments, to eastern farmers so they may purchase seed grain early this spring?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure if the hon. gentleman will put that question on the order paper he will get a very detailed answer.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I have another question which I will put to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. According to a report in the Montreal Gazette this morning a gift of barley has been made to Korea because of a shortage of grain there. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce ready to do something similar for the eastern provinces if the need arises?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware there have been no gifts by the government of barley to Korea.

Mr. Langlois: Then who issued the report that 30,000 pounds of barley have been given to Korea because of a severe shortage of grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member tell the house if he is basing his question on a newspaper report?

Mr. Langlois: A newspaper report, and I am asking whether or not it is a fact.

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the minister does not seem to have any bill to introduce at this time when seeding is about to start, could he assure Canadian farmers that they will not be poorer this year after they have reaped their crops than they are now before seeding?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY OF COMMISSIONER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question of which I gave him notice last year? I hope he will be in a position to give me an answer today.

Has the Prime Minister taken a decision about the salary to be paid to the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner general of the world fair?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This also seems to be a proper question for the order paper.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid the hon. member has not been here in the last day or two when we have had considerable discussion on points of order, questions of privilege and everything else. I suggest that he accept the ruling.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order concerning the statement the Chair has just made with regard to my absence from the house in the last few days, may I say I do not think the Speaker should make such a remark, because my absence was motivated by an illness. Therefore I do not think such a comment should be made by the Chair. My question was directed to the Prime Minister, and I think the Prime Minister should tell the house what salary he is paying to the commissioner general of the world fair.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is disputing the ruling. The Chair tries to make its rulings impartial and fair on every occasion, though perhaps it does not always succeed. I have suggested that this is a question for the order paper, and the matter of what type of questions should be put on the order paper has been under active discussion for the last few days. I suggest that the hon. member leave it there.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it might assist in satisfying the hon. member for St. Mary if I were to inform him that there are questions on the order paper relating to the salary of the commissioner general of the world fair which will be answered on Monday.

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the salary exceed that of the deputy commissioner?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must intervene again. This is an indirect attempt to ask the same question.

CANADA COUNCIL

REPORTED REQUEST FOR $30 MILLION GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Some time ago a question was raised in the house concerning recommendations of the Canada council with respect to its financial structure. I would ask the minister to take this question as notice and give some indication to the house of the government's attitude in this regard some time next week.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

SOCIAL INSURANCE

MANITOBA—TEACHERS STILL REQUIRED TO COMPLETE APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the confusion which has been created with regard to requiring teachers to sign social insurance cards, and is related to an answer given in the house by the Minister of Labour last Monday. At that time the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg asked the minister to make it very clear that it is not an offence for teachers not to complete these cards, and the minister said:

> I have made it clear and I shall be glad to make it clear again.

Information I have from the Manitoba teachers' society indicates that up to last Tuesday several school districts in Manitoba were still requiring their teachers to fill out these cards, and that a check of the unemployment insurance office in Winnipeg was made by the Manitoba teachers' society which indicated that that office had received no new letter from Ottawa nor any instructions to prepare a new letter for the districts explaining the error.

Will the Prime Minister assure the house that a statement or directive will go out that will clear up this matter; because apparently Manitoba teachers are still being asked to sign these cards.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are very anxious to clear up any misunderstanding that may have arisen in this matter. I will bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of the Minister of Labour, and perhaps he will be able to deal with it on Monday or Tuesday.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the answer he gave the hon. member for Churchill, in which he said he would discuss this matter with the Minister of Labour and have him bring in a report on Monday. I wonder if, during his talk with the Minister of Labour, he would discuss the desirability of having the minister send out a letter in the near future to the various unemployment insurance districts to clear up this misunderstanding.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, and since the minister is not here I cannot verify it at the moment, that that has already been done. This is what I should like to look into and report upon on Monday.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice concerning a matter which I believe comes under his department.

Does the government intend to implement the recommendation of the "Conseil de vie française" and appoint a conciliation board to settle school disputes regarding cultural matters between ethnic groups and provincial governments?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, since this is a policy matter which the government will have to decide, it will be announced in due course.

[Text]

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN RESPECTING ROLE OF TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Has Mr. Justice Dryer, the chairman of the three man board of trustees handling the great lakes shipping problem, informed the government that the role of the board as a three man board is near an end?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to check with the Minister of Labour, who is not in the house today. If there is anything I can add I will be glad to do so.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman, etc.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to make a few observations, Mr. Chairman, about the amendment which has been offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In order to recall the background, I would direct the attention of hon. members of the committee to the debate on second reading and to the observations I made in the course of that debate on the subject to which this clause relates. I am afraid I am about to bore the committee by repeating, because I think it is very important that the record should be absolutely accurate, the remarks I made which are recorded on page 741 of Hansard at the bottom of the first column and in the second column. I will try to read this as quickly as I can, because I know it is trying to have these things repeated, and still remain intelligible.

On that occasion, on March 10, I said this:

> Next we came to the very difficult problem of determining the composition of the commissions.

I was assuming there, as the committee agreed last night after some thought, that there would be ten commissions.

> I think I expressed the view, which I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also expressed, although I am speaking from memory, and if I am wrong I should like to be corrected, that the experience in Manitoba with redistribution had been very satisfactory. In Manitoba the chief justice of the province, the president of the university and the chief electoral officer were designated in the legislation by office and not as persons. This produced a commission that commanded universal respect and confidence, and whose report was, I think, only altered with respect to one or two names.

I was referring there to the names of constituencies.

> In every other respect it proved very satisfactory.
> I must say that a good many of us racked our brains to see whether we could find people who, first, this parliament would have the right to designate. It is one thing for the provincial legislature to say that the chief electoral officer of the province should do something, but he is an officer of the province. We might achieve the same thing by getting their consent to it, but the parliament of Canada could not impose that duty upon him by naming his office; at least I would think it would be a very dubious proceeding to try.
> However, I do not think that at all rules out the possibility that with the consent of a provincial government the person who occupies the position of chief electoral officer might serve, and serve very acceptably, on one of these commissions, or as far as that is concerned on all of them.

I did not mean the same chief electoral officer there, but the chief electoral officer in each province in which there is one.

But quite frankly, apart from the chief justice of the province or a judge designated by the chief justice of the province—and here I must say I was very much influenced, as I think were others to, by the Manitoba precedent—it did not seem to us that there were any other persons we could designate who would have the same title and position in all provinces. In any event, what we really wanted was to be assured of impartiality.

After various other possibilities were considered the government finally agreed to put in the bill the suggestion that the chief justice of the province should nominate the chairman from a member of his court; that the leader of the government, the Prime Minister, should nominate one of the members of the commission; and that the Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of parliament, should nominate the other. I say unreservedly that I have every confidence that no matter who occupies those offices, any person who becomes leader of the opposition in the parliament of our country or prime minister in the parliament of our country would take this responsibility seriously and make the kind of nominations that all of us would feel were appropriate under the circumstances.

I repeat that statement unreservedly.

I do not hesitate to say that with respect to this provision or with respect to any other method which commends itself to the house or to a majority of the house and which seems likely to produce as fair and effective a result, the government will be quite prepared in committee to consider on its merits any amendments to this procedure.

Now, that was the position at that time. I do not believe I need to read the next paragraph, which relates to the representation commissioner, but I should like to read the following paragraph on page 742.

Frankly, sir, up to now this is the most satisfactory suggestion we have been able to think of for arriving at the composition of these commissions, but I hasten to say again that if anyone in any quarter of the house can produce a better method we have an open mind. It is, I say once more, not the special responsibility of the government but the responsibility of all of us to do this in the best possible way.

That has been the position that the government has taken throughout about every aspect of this bill, and which it continues to take about every clause in the bill. It is true that last night I expressed quite strongly my personal preference for the ten commissions, but I would not have considered there was any question of confidence involved if the house had decided to take a different position, so long as I felt it would be workable. That is the position I have taken throughout, and which I continue to take with respect to every clause in the bill.

Now, sir, in the course of debate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as recorded at page 762 of Hansard for March 10 last, the same day, took exception—as did members in other parties in the house aside from our party and the party which represents the official opposition—to any of the nominees being the nominees of leaders of political parties. It is apparent to everyone that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are leaders of political parties. I am sure they are not ashamed of that fact, but personally I do not think, in the discharge of the responsibility suggested by this bill, they would act in that capacity. I think they would act as responsible citizens performing duties entrusted to them by parliament, if parliament decided to entrust those duties to them.

But I also recognize that it is not unnatural for members in other parties to feel this way about it, and perhaps I would feel the same way if I had the misfortune to be in one of the smaller parties.

Mr. Knowles: You will be one day.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I had that misfortune I might feel the same way as hon. gentlemen did in all three groups in that corner of the chamber, when they expressed themselves about the suggestion in this bill.

Mr. Woolliams: You mean political misfortune.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Bow River has an engaging way of trying to put me off my argument, but I wish to read what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said. I think he will not disagree with my paraphrasing of it, when I say he did not think this was the most satisfactory way. He suggested that we should follow the course in Manitoba, which I might say parenthetically is precisely the same or as nearly precisely the same as two things can be, as the course followed by Mr. Frost when he had the commission established in Ontario. If my recollection serves me right, in Ontario it is not the chief justice. It is one of the high court judges, with the chief electoral officer, and a professor in the political science department of Queen's University. So in effect the Ontario commission would really conform more precisely than Manitoba to what is suggested in the amendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question? I know he is padding something, and I was wondering if he would now say whether he himself and his party are in agreement with the amendment moved last night.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to make my argument in my own way, as I know the hon.

gentleman would like to make his argument in his own way.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, could you answer that question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Under our rules the hon. gentleman does not have the floor at the moment, and I do not think in the end I will have any difficulty satisfying his curiosity about anything which he has a right to be satisfied about, under our rules.

As recorded at page 762 of Hansard I in fact did exactly what the hon. member for Bow River has just done. I interrupted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and asked him if I could ask him a question.

Mr. Knowles: What did I say?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member said "Gladly." Then I did what I have sometimes been accused of doing. I asked a question almost as bad as some of the questions asked on orders of the day. I will read it.

Mr. Churchill: What page?

Mr. Pickersgill: Page 762, at the bottom of the first column and the top of the second column. I said:

> I agree with what the hon. member is suggesting in principle, —that was, that the commission be appointed of designated persons, not designated by name but by the name of their office—

> as I said earlier this afternoon—

—and as I said also in the last session of parliament when we first debated this. At that time I said I regarded the Manitoba experience as a model but I did not think this parliament could devise a way of following it. I had better repeat exactly what I said:

> I agree with what the hon. member is suggesting in principle, as I said earlier this afternoon, provided it can be done. But I would put this difficulty to him and ask him whether he has an answer to it: How does this parliament compel presidents of universities who are not officers of ours and who have jobs to do, to carry out this business for us? It is a very different thing for a provincial government which provides the main alimentation of a provincial university to ask them to do it—and it is a much smaller job, in any case, at least in some of the provinces. Then, of course, the difficulty seems to be compounded in the case of provincial officers such as the chief electoral officer, because all one of the provincial governments needs to do is say it will not allow him to serve, in which case I do not see how this parliament could compel him to serve.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre intervened and said, in what seems to be a question within a question:

> May I ask the minister whether that same difficulty would not present itself to the Prime Minister or to the Leader of the Opposition, if they sought to name individuals connected with universities or provincial governments?

I replied to that as follows:

> Presumably they would ascertain their ability to act. It would not be done permanently in legislation. That is precisely the problem.

Then the hon. member went on to say this:

> I will agree that the Minister of Transport may have raised a difficulty, but I suggest it is not beyond the wit of members of parliament to find an answer if we are agreed on the basic principle that we should be making the decision here in parliament, not leaving it to two individuals, particularly when each of those two individuals has a party connection, to do a job which we are trying to put on a completely independent basis.
> So I urge very strongly that consideration be given, when we get into committee on the bill, to making this kind of change with respect to the manner in which the members of the commissions are to be appointed.

The two points I want to emphasize at this time are that I had said at the very outset, when introducing the second reading of the bill, that I thought if we could find a method of prescribing precisely by office who should be the members of these commissions, that would be a preferable way to do it, but I did not believe it was possible. I did not believe we could find officials in the provinces that this parliament had the legislative competence to oblige to act.

Judging from the amendment which the hon. member has now produced I think he has indicated he agrees with that view, because he does not seek to prescribe the officials. He merely suggests certain categories of people from which a choice should be made, and he also recognizes the possibility that both those classes, in one province or another, might be exhausted and the chief justice would then have to look for someone else. As a matter of fact the amendment makes provision for the appointment of some other person, not by the chief justice alone but by the chief justice in consultation with the representation commission.

The reason for making that suggestion, I suppose, is that if the chief justice selects them from the categories that might be laid down by parliament, there would be no feeling that there should be any check on his freedom of choice. But if he has to go outside those categories I dare say the hon. member must have felt—and I should not seek to interpret him—that the chief justice alone would not just select anybody he liked, in the hope, I presume, of having some reasonable degree of uniformity.

I must say, and I say quite frankly, that the hon. member came to me some time after this debate and told me he thought he had found a method of doing this. He said that if he had, he intended to bring in an amendment at this time. As I said quite frankly on March 10, I was prepared, and I even went so far as to say the government was prepared—because we had had to take the responsibility for bringing in the bill as originally drafted—if a better method should be found, a method which would be less open to question, to consider it on its merits. That is the position and it is the only position I have ever taken. It is the position I still take with respect to this clause, as with respect to every other aspect of this measure.

I do not think it would be appropriate for me at this stage, until there has been some opportunity, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings rightly suggested last night —since this amendment was presented only shortly before ten o'clock last evening—I do not think it would be appropriate for me to indicate any attitude about this until I have had an opportunity of hearing some debate on it.

Mr. Churchill: Give us your views on this. May I ask the minister a question. If the government intends to support this amendment let us know. If the government is not supporting it, let us vote the amendment down and get on with the business.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is now proposing a course which seems to contradict the suggestion he made earlier, which was that we should give the most careful consideration to all aspects of the bill before us. I would feel I was acting in bad faith, and not in accordance with what I said as recorded on page 742—perhaps I might read what I said then—

Mr. Churchill: You do not need to read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I do not. However, I will not seek to restrain the hon. gentleman when he makes his argument, and I would appreciate it if he would also concede that I have the right to make my own argument in the house in my own way as well.

The most satisfactory suggestion we have been able to think of for arriving at the composition of these commissions is the one before the committee, but I hasten to say again that if anyone in any quarter of the house can produce a better method we have an open mind. It is, I say once more, not the special responsibility of the government but the responsibility of all of us to do this in the best possible way.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

In the light of the clear and unequivocal statement I made I do not think I should get up, without having heard any argument, without even having had an opportunity to confer with my colleagues, and take a definite attitude one way or the other. I think I could be accused of bad faith if I said at this moment that the government will accept the amendment or that it will not accept it. I think we should examine this proposal with an open mind. We should examine it to see whether there are any flaws in it and, if there are, we should reject it. And if, after giving it dispassionate and objective scrutiny such as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre somewhat eloquently, I thought, recommended last night should be given to this measure as a whole, we decide it would be an improvement on the present proposed arrangements, we should accept it.

I must say I have no doubt that if we do accept the bill as it now stands the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition will make the kind of appointments to all these ten commissions which will commend themselves to all reasonable people. That is my opinion, but it is obviously not the opinion of every member of this house. At any rate, some doubts have been expressed about it in certain quarters.

Mr. Starr: Well, let us have a vote on it.

Mr. Pickersgill: If we could have all these doubts resolved in all quarters of the house it would undoubtedly be better, as it would with regard to all aspects of the bill. But before I decide what my own attitude should be I would like to hear the views of some of the other hon. members. I should like to hear them indicate whether they see any defects in this proposal or whether they see any advantages in retaining what is recommended in the original bill.

Mr. Nowlan: I have to leave in a little while and I shall not be here at one o'clock. I hope this matter will not be determined at that time if it comes to a vote, because I have strong feelings in the matter as I suggested last night.

I think the provision now in the bill is a good provision. It is not perfect, of course; nothing in this world is perfect, but it is as good a provision as could be incorporated in any bill dealing with such a contentious matter. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said last night that it savoured, perhaps, of politics which he was trying to avoid. He wanted to avoid political partisanship in these matters. Well, I do not think it is possible to avoid at least the semblance of partisanship when you are dealing with something political—and I am using the word in the best sense now, with a small "p". There has to be some, and it cannot be avoided no matter what semantics are used when framing the legislation.

I think the clause before us is as good as any clause that could be prepared. Like the Minister of Transport, I should be glad to hear any arguments which might be advanced by hon. members generally in favour of a change, other than the wish to avoid politics which, I say frankly, is impossible superficially. I have no doubt that a change would be more pleasing to the feelings of hon. gentlemen in the farther part of the house, and one can understand this wish that either they should be recognized or that somebody else should not. But these are the facts of life, the facts of our political life.

We have a Prime Minister who is an officer of the house and a Leader of the Opposition who is also an officer of the house, and they are the only ones in this category. I agree that whoever occupied the office of prime minister or leader of the opposition would exercise the authority given to them under this provision in a manner which would be entirely creditable both to themselves and to parliament, and we can be entirely confident that they would make the best choice possible in these circumstances, even though the choice might prove disappointing to someone or other. After all, whether right honourable or not, they are both honourable gentlemen. They have the spotlight on them. They have an obligation to the nation as well as to their parties.

This amendment—I spoke of it rather lightly last night—is trying to escape politics as such. But we are not going to escape at least political association or affiliation. There is nothing bad about this. Indeed, I hope everybody in Canada, outside, possibly, the clergy—and I am not so sure even about them—has some political association or affiliation or at least a political interest; and if you are going to choose people who are entirely removed from that you are going to get political noodles or something like that; I was about to use a term which might not have been in keeping with this occasion.

This amendment names certain official categories in the service of provincial governments. I agree with what was said by the minister about the difficulty of ordering them to serve, or even asking them to serve. Which people are listed? There is the provincial chief electoral officer. There is the surveyor general, whoever he may be. There is the registrar of vital statistics, who is sometimes a nurse. Then the proposal speaks of those holding "similar offices". If that does not take in the whole gamut from a caretaker to the president of the council, I do not know what does.

Then you get a greater disparity in the section below; you get college presidents, college teachers, college instructors; and finally, if you cannot get one of those you pick out anyone you like. The load is put on the chief justice of the court. That is one of my chief criticisms of this amendment, and I think the Minister of Justice should express his opinion on this matter. I do not think the chief justice of any superior court, or any inferior court, should be put in the political position where he is ordered by this parliament to make choices within the whole field that is mentioned here.

This provision is not so wide in the bill that we have before us. He makes a choice from his own court or another court, but it has to be a judge, someone who is theoretically and legally under his control. But when you go beyond that and, as I said, take in everybody in the province whatever his political leaning, you may inadvertently make the most partisan appointment.

I think the chief justice is further removed from politics than many of the people mentioned in this amendment. Many of these officers are appointed for political purposes or political award. Perhaps some judges are, too, from time to time; but they have other qualities as well, and they become divorced from politics to a much greater degree than people in provincial governments. I am not speaking of any particular provincial government, but this refers to all provincial governments. I know from my own experience in Nova Scotia that in the past we did not have as strict a standard of civil service appointments as you might have in the national government.

I do not think it is a good thing to include everybody in the employ of the provincial government. It would possibly enable some provinces to get representation which they otherwise might not get; but if the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition made the choices that I know they would make—and I am not speaking of the present occupants of those offices, although I certainly would include them—their choices and selections would commend themselves to the people of Canada and this on the whole would be much better than making appointments from the classes which are prescribed here.

If this amendment were accepted you could go off into the deep blue, go as far as you liked and choose anyone. This is not any improvement; it is not any addition to the bill now before us brought in by the government. I say it is a derogation of it; it is a weakening of it. It is wrong to put the chief justice of any province in the position in which this amendment would put him if the house should see fit to implement it.

I hope the Minister of Justice will give us his views on this matter. I think there has been altogether too great a tendency to impose this kind of load upon the judiciary. They are involved in many things; from time to time they are concerned with labour matters, and so on and so forth. These things, if they do not bring them into disrepute, at least bring our judiciary into critical arenas, and we should lean against this happening as much as possible. Here is one opportunity to do this. We appoint a chief justice or some person designated from his court. I do not think we can avoid that. It guarantees impartiality. But it is not an incursion or excursion into the field of provincial politics, as would be the case if this amendment were accepted.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken longer than I anticipated, but I have expressed my own feelings on this matter and would like to hear the argument as to why this amendment should be adopted in preference to what we now have before us, other than the fact that presumably because you have political officers making the appointments they will be political, partisan appointments, which frankly I do not believe.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings would permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, if I can answer it.

Mr. Barnett: When the hon. member was speaking he expressed confidence in the honourable intentions of the prime minister and the leader of the opposition whoever they might be, I would like, however, to ask the hon. member if he has ever heard of Caesar's wife.

Mr. Nowlan: What was her name?

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for only a moment on this question. It is not an earth shaking question, and I do not think it should occupy too much of our time. However, I think we have had some lengthy speeches on the matter without any arguments being put forward. I do not think we have heard any arguments for the bill as it stands, in reality. The integrity of the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition is not in question in the amendment. What is in question is the image that is given as far as the whole matter of the setting up of these commissions is concerned. As I say, the integrity of either the leader of the government or the leader of the opposition is not in question.

I believe that what we have failed to do here is recognize that it is the people of Canada who will get the image of what is going on in the house and what we are trying to do. I think this is the point. I do not think it is right to talk about the load being carried by the judiciary, because anyone who is given the responsibility of picking these commissioners will have the same problem. The categories are wide enough here so that there should be no problem in obtaining the type of individual who would do the job well.

I say again in closing, Mr. Chairman, that the question is the public image we are trying to protect, and there is no reflection upon the integrity of the leader of the government or the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take advantage of the minister's statement that he has an open mind on this matter, to express very briefly a few of my own personal thoughts on this amendment, and suggest to the committee that we should leave the bill as it is and not accept the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Basford: I appreciate the sentiments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre trying in some respect to remove this whole matter from the area of any political consideration whatsoever or the suspicion of any political consideration. But I suggest that the amendment does not accomplish what I would like to see done in this respect anyway. According to the amendment we are putting on the commission, in addition to the chief justice, the chief returning officer of each province. We already have on this commission Mr. Castonguay, who I suggest is the expert in this matter, who is the technician in this matter, and we do not need on each commission another similar expert or technician in the form of the provincial returning officer.

An alternative to him is the surveyor general. I am not positive as to what exactly a surveyor general does. We do not have one in British Columbia; I presume we have a like officer, but I am not sure. However, I question whether he has any particular knowledge that he could bring to the consideration of redistribution that cannot already be brought to the subject by Mr. Castonguay himself.

In so far as the director of vital statistics is concerned, I really do not know of anything that he could contribute to the work of the commission. He is a civil servant charged with the responsibility of recording births, deaths and marriages, and I do not think he has any particular qualifications whatsoever to sit on such a commission. Then as the third member we have the president or member of a faculty of a university. I have every respect for Canada's university community, but I question what we are doing in this amendment. I suggest that we are possibly buying a pig in a poke and are completely unsure of what we are liable to end up with for a third member of the commission. The presidents themselves are extremely busy men; I suggest they have no time to devote to such a commission and they would appoint in their place, as an alternative, a member of their faculty. The members of their faculty, from my experience, run the whole gamut of abilities, interests and political leanings.

I for one do not think we can abdicate our responsibilities so completely as to leave the matter completely wide open on the question who might be the third member of the commission, which is exactly what we are asked to do. I know many members of university faculties who would fill this position admirably. On the other hand, I know a great many who know nothing at all about this subject or about politics, and who would have very little to contribute of a worth-while nature.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this bill be left as it is, and for a very important reason. While none of us wants to see the practice which used to be resorted to of gerrymandering, I think there is a real need to have someone on the commission with a knowledge of politics and political considerations. I suggest that for the very good reason that the commission will be determining the ridings from which each one of us will come, and it seems to me that in that determination it is important to have somebody who knows something about ridings, who knows something about the work of a member of parliament, so that those ridings can best be worked out in order that the member of parliament once elected can best serve the area.

This is not so much a consideration in the city and urban ridings, where if you take one ten blocks as compared with another ten blocks it makes no real difference whether one member of parliament can serve the first ten blocks better than the second. I suggest, however, that it is a real consideration in the rural ridings and in the far northern ridings, where there must be someone on the commission who knows something about politics and the work of an M.P. In that case, in the drawing of the boundaries this matter is in the forefront of his mind and consideration is given as to how a member of parliament can most effectively serve the particular area or region. Therefore, for that reason I think this amendment should be defeated and the bill should go through as it is.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to say that I appreciate in particular the statement made by the hon. member for Cariboo. In a very few, well chosen words he pinned down the issue very neatly. What we are concerned about in this amendment is not the integrity of the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition, or of any future prime minister or leader of the opposition. What we are concerned about is the image of this legislation in the eyes of the Canadian people. It is not good enough just to have legislation which we think achieves impartiality; there must be the appearance of impartiality to the people of this country.

I am satisfied that it will not appear that way to the people of Canada if they know that two of the members of each of these ten commissions are going to be chosen by persons who happen to be the leader of two of Canada's political parties. I accept and underscore the statements of confidence in the holders of those positions which have been made by the Minister of Transport but as the hon. member for Cariboo said, that is not the issue. What we are doing in this piece of legislation as a whole is commendable; we are trying to take redistribution out of partisan politics and put it as far away from partisan politics as we possibly can. We have not done that if we still provide that two of the commissioners in each of the ten commissions are the nominees of the leaders of Canada's two largest political parties.

I suppose it was fair comment for the Minister of Transport to make, that the view

I expressed is a natural view for one who sits as the member of a smaller party. It is always hard for us to imagine what we in this party would be like if we were members of a larger party, or what the Minister of Transport would be like if his party became a splinter party. This may happen some day, of course. But I submit that we are presenting this proposition not because those of us down in this corner happen to be in parties which have no say in this matter. I submit we are presenting this as a matter of principle because we feel that the whole business of redistribution should be taken as far away from party politics as possible.

I was interested in the comments made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. He does not like my amendment because he says we would be buying a pig in a poke. He does not like it because we would be abdicating our responsibilities. I ask him, what does the present bill do but just that? According to the terms of the bill, if my amendment is not accepted, we have not the slightest notion what persons are going to be chosen to fill these two positions. All we know is that the Leader of the Opposition will pick one of them—and I say to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings that he might pick a nurse, but what is wrong with a nurse?—and the Prime Minister will pick the other. Surely this is buying a pig in a poke and abdicating our responsibilities.

Mr. Woolliams: You have not much respect for one of the officers of the House of Commons if you believe that.

Mr. Knowles: Apparently my hon. friend, owing to the interesting conversation which he is having with his seatmate, has not heard what I said or what was said by the hon. member for Cariboo. May I say again that the issue is not the integrity of the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition. As the Minister of Transport said, there is no question but that they would make choices which would seem to us to be appropriate choices. Our whole point is the image of this procedure in the eyes of the Canadian public. We feel that this image is not the non-partisan image it ought to be if two of the appointments are made by the leader of political parties.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard wonders why in my amendment I have indicated the categories I have set out, and he had some derogatory remarks to make about provincial chief electoral officers, registrars of vital statistics and surveyors general. I suggest that these are people who are versed in the kind of information required for the drawing of the maps which will be needed for the job of redistribution. I suggest that an even stronger argument is that what we are drawing on is experience. The only experience we have had in Canada of boundaries being drawn by impartial commissions is in Manitoba, where that has been done for the entire province, and in Ontario where it has been done for part of the province. In both these cases the people appointed to do this work have been the very kind of people suggested in this amendment. In Manitoba we had the president of the university, the chief justice of the province and the chief electoral officer for Manitoba. In the case of Ontario, as already indicated by the Minister of Transport, they had the chief electoral officer, a judge of one of the high courts and a professor of one of the universities. Surely our experience in this field is a guide that people in these positions can do the job and can do it well.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings seems concerned about putting this kind of responsibility on the chief justice of a province. I find it very difficult to see how he can draw a line and say that it is wrong, that it is something the Minister of Justice should be concerned about when we ask the chief justice of a province to name three members of the commission. Then he says it is perfectly all right for the chief justice to name one of the members, and even to name himself. That is the way the present legislation reads, Mr. Chairman, and that is the way my amendment reads. I submit that if the task of picking the chairman of the commission for a province is a proper responsibility to lay on the chief justice of that province, it is likewise a proper responsibility to ask him to name the other two.

I suggest that this amendment meets the conditions laid down by the Minister of Transport on March 10 when he said that if anyone could come up with a formula which would provide for the appointment of these people on terms that could be set out in the act, such a formula should be considered. I confess that the night he posed the questions to me I found it difficult to answer them at that moment, but I submit that as a result of the discussions we have had since we have come up with a formula that does get away from the appearance of partisanship and does provide categories of people with experience. I submit this is the kind of thing we should do so that we will go all the way in redistribution and make it a completely non-partisan proposition. I hope that before long there will have been enough discussion about the matter so we can make a decision on it, but I suggest that this amendment does meet the points that the Minister of Transport set out on the 10th of March and that it should be adopted.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. gentleman permit one question? Does he suggest that individuals in the categories he has listed in his amendment would be completely devoid of any political feelings at all and that this would therefore ensure that no political considerations would be present if such people were appointed to the commissions?

Mr. Knowles: It has been our experience in this country that people who spend part of their lives in highly partisan activity but who are then appointed to positions such as judges do manage to become impartial in their judgments despite their past partisan political activity. I think it is possible to get people of this type to do this job. In this whole discussion I have cited the Manitoba experience. People like to twit us once in a while about political considerations, but look what I am approving. I am approving of a commission which would have on it the chief justice who, when he was in politics, was a Conservative. With regard to the president of the University of Manitoba, those of us in Manitoba know what his politics happen to be.

An hon. Member: What are they?

Mr. Knowles: He does not belong to our party, and he is not a Conservative. The chief electoral officer of the province has been a civil servant for a long while and I doubt that he has any political connection. Certainly I think the example there answers the hon. member's question, that no matter what political connections people may have had in the past the best chance we have of getting people who will do an impartial job is to choose people in these categories.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the hon. member a question? From his own knowledge can he refer us to any commission or board set up by a government in the past where only the chairman was nominated by the government and the chairman was allowed to select the other members of the commission on his own initiative?

Mr. Knowles: I do not know whether there are any such examples, but I do not think that invalidates this proposition at all. This proposal is that the chief justice name the chairman and that there be a set group from whom he must name the chairman. That set group consists of the judges of the court over which the chief justice presides. Then we give him the authority to name two more commissioners from categories A and B as provided in the amendment. I suggest that this provides sufficient safeguards.

I draw the attention of the hon. member for Ontario to the fact that if it is not possible to make choices from these categories, because people are not available or do not accept, and a choice has to be made outside of these categories, we change the person who shall make the appointments. The appointment is then made by the chief justice of Canada with the concurrence of the representation commissioner. This provision is necessary, of course, because we have to provide for all contingencies.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I would object to the hon. member's amendment on two grounds. First of all, I think it is overcomplicated. It is like the plans for assembling a scale model of the Cutty Sark. We do not need anything as complicated as that. In the second place, in my opinion his categories, which are one of the complexities, do not provide for the choosing of people who are likely to orient themselves toward a task of this kind. It is hard for me to envisage a surveyor withdrawing his eye from the cross hairs of his telescope to take up this task. I think it would be far better to leave it in the hands of the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister to select people whom they know have dealt with the complexities of an election in the past because there is no more complex organization of voluntary persons in the country. I think this is the best way to let it stand.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the debate which has taken place so far this morning, and the indication from members on the government side that they are not fully in accord with the apparent stand taken by the Minister of Transport, who seems to us to be inclined to support this amendment. The Minister of Transport covered the field rather widely a little while ago, and I hope I will have the same latitude from the chair.

I want to express my disappointment with regard to the attitude of the Minister of Transport on this matter. I think members on both sides of the house have been trying to approach this problem without acrimony and in an endeavour to make a serious study of one of the most important pieces of legislation that has been brought before the house in the time that I have been a member. There is general agreement to change the old method and to do the contentious job of redistribution by means of a commission. As I said the other day, having reached agreement on that important matter we should be prepared to go carefully with regard to some of the other matters that are coincident upon having the work done by a commission.

In his speeches at the resolution stage and on second reading the Minister of Transport put on the record some sentences which were very important and which will have some historic significance as time goes on. He drew our attention this morning to something he said on March 10, and I should like to repeat it. As found on page 743 of Hansard he said:

> We do not intend to regard the bills—

He was talking about the two bills at that time.

> —as government measures except technically. Because technically they are government measures ...they are taken up in government time and are introduced by a minister of the crown. However, we feel that the collective wisdom of the house should be brought to bear on this problem and that any good suggestion from any quarter should be incorporated into these measures without any thought of partisan consideration. We will welcome improvements from any quarter of the house.

The minister was quoting at that time from a previous speech he had made and he went on to say:

> I want to reiterate that statement.

Then the Leader of the Opposition said:

> A most commendable statement.

We all thought it was at the time. The minister said he would welcome improvements from any quarter of the house. At different times as the debate has proceeded he has said that these things will be decided by a vote of the house.

What disturbs me with regard to the Minister of Transport is simply this. Yesterday the hon. member for Bow River and I put forward an argument in favour of a central commission which would have supervision over subcommissions in the provinces. Instead of being favoured with a discourse of half an hour such as the minister gave this morning in regard to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we were, I felt, brushed aside. I thought that the points we made and put forward in all seriousness last night should have been dealt with as the minister dealt with the amendment now before us. Why did he not say then "These suggestions deserve earnest consideration; let us take time to have another look at them"? Instead of that procedure he gave a short statement, the chairman put the clause to the house, and the clause passed.

Well, that is not the way I thought this particular bill would be considered by the House of Commons. As soon as we start discussing some of these aspects we see articles in the press to the effect that we have certain motives. If we want something done about the tolerance figure, it is because we have some motive in mind. If we want one commission instead of ten, it is because of some partisan political motive.

I have no partisan political motive in connection with my attitude on this subject. Some of the things I said yesterday were contained in a speech I gave over the radio over 12 years ago; they were reported in the Winnipeg Free Press and the Winnipeg Tribune and can be read there. Unfortunately I did not get a chance to put them on Hansard. I have not changed my position with regard to some of these things in 12 years. This attributing of motives to us is one quick way of arousing partisan feeling.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: I am not saying that the Minister of Transport has done that at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just wanted to make that clear.

Mr. Churchill: No, no; the Minister of Transport has been fair about this. I hope this situation will continue to prevail. However, in my opinion he has been skating on rather thin ice this morning in the inconclusive way in which he dealt with the amendment which is now before us.

I want to say a word or two about what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has recently said. I hope if he replies, and uses the phrase he used yesterday, he will explain what he means by it. According to Hansard for yesterday he said that he understood my motive in suggesting one commission instead of ten. I believe the hon. member should explain a statement like that rather than leaving it unexplained to appear as if there were something sinister about it.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Will he please believe me when I say there was nothing sinister in that suggestion at all? I understood his motive as being one that would tidy things up; I think I used that phrase. I was not suspecting his motive at all when I made that remark.

Mr. Churchill: That was the interpretation I placed upon it, but people reading Hansard might place a different interpretation upon it. I am not lodging any further complaint.

However, in the course of his remarks this morning in support of his amendment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stressed the necessity of presenting an image of impartiality to the Canadian people in connection with this legislation; that we must extract this legislation from partisan politics. He is of the opinion that if the nominations to the commissions are made by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition representing the two major political parties of this country, there will be a suggestion of partisan politics. I hope that very soon somebody will define partisan politics. We are running into a great deal of criticism with regard to parliament from some uninformed people. We hear a lot in this house about partisan politics, but it is time that phrase was defined.

I believe it is quite wrong for members of this house to object to the clause in the bill under which authority will be given to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition to make appointments, and to object on the basis that there might be a suggestion of partisan politics. I believe such suggestions create a wrong image of parliament. The people who are making these suggestions about creating a wrong image of parliament should consider the fact that if it is suggested that because the leaders of the two great political parties are given the privilege of making appointments there will be then something a bit sinister about it, then it follows that there is something wrong with everything and you get down to the position where you need to get rid of all political parties and destroy parliament.

We have heard some of these suggestions by people commenting in the news media. In the final analysis these suggestions come down to getting rid of parliament. What do these people want to substitute for parliament? I think members of parliament have to be careful about this. The Prime Minister of this country, the leader of the Liberal party, has the respect of parliament. The Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the Conservative party in this country, has the respect of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: I did not realize my speech was so earth shaking that it affected the lights of this building.

Mr. Pickersgill: The road to Damascus.

Mr. Churchill: I feel that these gentlemen have the respect of parliament. We differ and differ vigorously with regard to certain matters, and why not? We are not namby-pambies. The great advantage of parliament is that we have an opportunity to reply. If we had the same opportunity elsewhere we would all be very happy. We have people criticizing us, and if we ever get a reply it is buried on page 36 of the newspaper or something like that. Here you have an opportunity to reply and there is vigorous debate. I can differ with the Minister of Transport every day in this house—

Mr. Starr: But you do not.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I do. About once a week I do differ with him, but I can differ with the Minister of Transport in this house and that does not say I do not have respect for him as a parliamentarian and as a gentleman. We are entitled to differ here—

Mr. Knowles: He might use that in the next election.

Mr. Churchill: I do not mind if he uses it. I have invited him to come out and run against me in Winnipeg, but he seems content to remain in Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: I reciprocate the invitation.

Mr. Churchill: Coming back to what I started to say, the members of parliament who criticize what they call partisan political strife are in effect criticizing this institution. They are downgrading it, and they are playing into the hands of the people who want to destroy this institution. I point that out to those who have said things like that in this house.

I disagree quite frequently with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, nevertheless, has a great deal of experience in this institution. I believe this is where the hon. member should take thought about what he is doing when he suggests here, for the consumption of people across this country, that if we give the leader of the Liberal party and the leader of the Conservative party the opportunity to make appointments to this commission we are creating in the minds of the people of Canada an image of partisan politics, and that there is something wrong about it. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should correct his stand on this. What is required in this country is respect for parliament, and that carries with it respect for the leaders of these two great parties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Obviously some people in the left hand corner of the chamber have no respect for the leader of the Liberal party or the leader of the Conservative party, but there are millions of people in the country who have, while their supporters are not very numerous. I suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should revise his thinking on this, rather than lodge the suspicion that if these two gentlemen are given the privilege and the job of appointing people to these commissions, then something underhanded will be done.

I think he is reflecting on our method of government. Even if you do not like the gentlemen concerned, it is better to accept the fact that the people of the country have given them these responsible positions. You support the institution of parliament by so doing, and you support the party system within our parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Why are we taking the drawing of our constituency boundaries out of the hands of a parliamentary committee and putting it in the hands of an independent commission, something we all support including the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre? Is that downgrading the processes of parliament and saying there is something wrong with parliament?

Mr. Churchill: No, I do not think it is by any means. Parliament in the past has found it an extraordinarily difficult task to draw the boundary divisions in this country, and there are historical incidents when advantage was taken by one party over the other in the drawing of those boundaries. It is agreeable to parliament in this day, as has been mentioned on many occasions, to have this onerous job performed by a body outside parliament because we are mixed daily in controversy here, and there is the striving for party advantage at the polls with which I am not in disagreement at all.

As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said, everybody in the country should be interested in politics and should belong to a political party. I do not know why we have so many thousands of people who take no interest in politics. It is here in the House of Commons that their future is determined. This is where the decisions are made with regard to war and peace. This is where the decisions are made with regard to economic progress and economic decline; and how people can say "Oh, I am not interested in politics" escapes me completely.

Everybody in the country should belong to a political party and try to get their views advanced through that political party. To stand on the sidelines, to let others carry on and then complain is not good citizenship. Therefore we must remove this phrase of partisan politics from our dialogue if it carries the connotation that there is something terribly wrong about it. There is nothing wrong with it at all if it is not carried to the extreme. It is a conflict of parties in this state having different philosophies of life, and if the people are content to have one party in power at one time and another at a later time, that has been proven to be a better method of governing a democracy than killing off your leaders at different intervals and putting in somebody else.

Having said that, I wish to say that the amendment is absolutely unnecessary. Once again I draw attention to the experience in this field which Great Britain has had for over 20 years. It established four boundary commissions, headed by the Speaker of the House of Commons, supported by the registrar general for England and the director of ordinance survey. That gives three members and then there are two appointees, one by the secretary of state and one by the minister of health. They are both political appointees. Those boundary commissions were set up by the Labour government in 1944—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the coalition government.

Mr. Churchill: The coalition government, in 1944, and the act was amended in 1947 and consolidated in 1949. The Labour government had control for a certain period and the Conservative party in England has had control for a certain period. They have not changed the basic factors with regard to the boundary commissions, except that in 1958 the government of that day saw fit to remove the registrar general and the director general of ordinance survey from membership on the commissions and make them officers of the commissions, in other words the technical experts. Also in 1958 they named a judge as deputy chairman of each commission.

That is the practice in a country which is politically mature, and both the Labour party and the Conservative party have agreed with that method. They have been content to have members of the boundary commissions appointed by the government of the day. Why do we have to withdraw from a system like that which has proved itself successful in England? Why do we have to get this watered down version that is proposed in the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Pickersgill: So that it will be on record at this point, will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him if he would feel it satisfactory if, by the terms of this bill, the other two members were appointed by the government of the day?

Mr. Churchill: It is not suggested in this bill and I am not suggesting it now. Frankly I do not think it would make a great deal of difference, because most people appointed to responsible positions in this country conduct themselves in a responsible fashion. I know the Minister of Transport just threw that in as a little diversion.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. The hon. gentleman had commended the British practice where two of the commissioners are appointed by ministers of the crown.

Mr. Churchill: My point was not so much that they are appointed by the government as that they are appointed by political parties, which is the objection raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I like the present provision in the bill whereby the prime minister and the leader of the opposition have the power of appointment.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Woolliams: In reference to the debate this morning I wish to make it very clear that I am against the amendment. I am sure the minister expected that I would be against it. I want to tell the committee why I am against it. In the second place I wish to refer to the question I posed to the minister before the recess. He circumvented it so well and expressed himself in so many words that unless I read, tomorrow, what he said I am sure I shall not be able to comprehend him, and neither would anyone else. And even then I doubt whether we shall be able to understand him.

As to the amendment, I should like to congratulate the two supporters of the government, in particular the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard and I should like to incorporate the argument they put forward. First of all, let us remember we are asking the chief justice, under this amendment, to make certain appointments to the commission from among certain classes of people. Now the chief justice of a province is the highest judge in that province. Not only is he head of the courts but he is head of the judiciary in the province. He is appointed to that position not only because he is learned in the law but because he is a man of many parts, able to get along with his brother judges and with people generally; a man with experience of public relations, able to understand humanity and its workings. One of the fundamental things about the judiciary is that it must at all times maintain its independence. It must be completely independent of politics. It must be above prejudice. To ask a chief justice to make certain appointments which are bound to be somewhat political in their nature, whether we like it or not, is to put him in the position of making political appointments. We are shirking our responsibility, if we do so—either our responsibility for setting out clearly in the statute who we want to appoint, or the responsibility for making the appointments ourselves. In Canada the judiciary has been above reproach. The traditions of our bench have no doubt come down the ages from Britain and the common law of the Anglo-Saxons. It is on this basis that I say we should not place the chief justice of any province in the position contemplated by the amendment.

In the second place, we are lucky to have in Canada at this time—and I see him seated in the gallery, now—one of the most able chief electoral officers it would be possible to find.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: In my personal association with him I have always found him very co-operative, whether in correspondence or in personal discussion. But let us remember—and this goes to the root of the amendment and of the bill itself—that if we give too much authority to one person in such a matter as this we could arrive at the rule of people, not the rule of law. As long as we have the services of the gentleman in question we have, probably, built-in safeguards. But I pose this question to the Liberals—and I know they would not want this to happen: Supposing there were a Conservative government in power in the future, and supposing in the near future there was to be a redistribution, and supposing the chief electoral officer was newly appointed, and supposing there was some lobbying between a Conservative minister and that chief electoral officer, what position would they take? I know no Conservative minister would engage in such a thing, but my point remains that we must always remember we are preparing law for the future.

I say that in this bill—and the amendment makes it worse—we are putting too much responsibility on one man. The minister said yesterday that if there were any difficulty we could refer it to the chief electoral officer of Canada. That is how we were to have the same procedure in each of the ten commissions. I am still not satisfied, and the position is only made worse by the amendment. Who is the boss of these ten commissions? I hope the minister keeps an open mind on that, too. Even though a number of sections have been passed very quickly—and the hon. gentleman's supporters said "carried", "carried" let us not hurry too quickly in this regard because we are dealing with something which will affect the future; and once law and precedent have been established they are most difficult to undo, it seems, even through parliament.

I certainly feel we are placing too much responsibility in the hands of the chief justice. As to the categories of people named in the amendment, I have nothing against the staffs of universities. But this proposal forces a chief justice to say: I must choose someone from a particular staff. I think that when we are dealing with a federal redistribution of constituencies we should look for personnel who are on a Canadian, a federal level. We should not now set up a commission on which we have provincial representatives, such as the provincial electoral officer, whoever he may be. To my mind his job is to look after the constituencies in a provincial matter. Why bring him into the picture on a federal redistribution; why make him an officer? We are supposed to be setting up an independent body, and I do not think this gentleman, whoever he may be, could be considered to be independent. There may be cases where it will work very well, but there could be the exception to the rule and, once again, you may be having the rule of people and not the rule of law. The only protection we have in so far as concerns making this an independent body is that we can spell out in the law what we are going to do; otherwise people in the future, or people now, may cause a miscarriage of justice.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said something this morning to the effect that justice must seem to be done. I do not think justice should seem to be done; justice should be done. This is important. You cannot have an independent body unless the law is such that the jurisdiction is spelled out very carefully so there will not be any miscarriage of justice.

The second point I want to deal with is this. I may be getting into a field of some sensitivity here. I do not think I have ever been one of those, and I hope I never will be, to hurl reproaches or recriminations at any one person; but I say frankly to the minister that if he had been really fair this morning—I was going to use the word "honest", but that would probably be unparliamentary because it would impute motives—he would have told us that as early as last night he had made up his mind that he was going to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In fact, I sometimes wonder as I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sparring away with the minister, why they just spar here in the debating chamber, because they are really sleeping in the same bed when it comes to negotiating on this sort of thing.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not so sure that I haven't hit the nail right on the head, because listening to the minister this morning you never heard so much padding in your life. There is only one other minister who can speak like that, and now we have two of them in the house who talk in this way. When I asked a question he said, "You are interrupting and putting me off my remarks". He did everything but answer the question. This morning the minister was padding away, in order to change his mind, and so he could explain to the members of this house, to Canadians at large and to the caucus of his party when it meets that he had changed his mind. The reason he has changed his mind is that he has been sold a bill of goods by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In fact, I do not think they were even sold a bill of goods; they have been in partnership on the whole thing right from the beginning.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody yelled, "Shame", and my answer to that is, it is a shame because it is going to usurp the workings and functions of this house. This is not my personal opinion; I have talked to a great many people about this, as I told you this morning. There is a feeling in this house that there is a great deal of justification for what I have said. If there is, I think the minister should clear up this matter because they have a long session ahead of them; there are some very tedious problems to be debated, and if the minister undermines the confidence of this house, as the person who takes responsibility on that side of the house, because many of us believe he is more powerful on that side of the house than the Prime Minister himself—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question. Do I understand from what the hon. gentleman has just said that his conduct on any other measure before the house would be influenced in any way; that his judgment would be affected in any way by anything that happens with regard to this bill?

Mr. Woolliams: I am very happy to answer that question, Mr. Chairman. No, that is not my point and I am sorry the minister mentioned it. Here is my point.

An hon. Member: Ah.

Mr. Woolliams: You may say "Ah", but because of the conduct of the minister at this moment we will always place him in that category and will feel he is guilty of this type of conduct on every occasion; and this will undermine the very workings of this house—that is my answer to the minister. I would like to read what he said. What is the justification for the charge I have made? Let us read the very words used by the minister himself, which are to be found on page 741 of Hansard, the fourth paragraph of the right hand column, if anybody else wants to follow them:

> After various other possibilities were considered—

This is dealing with this problem:

> —the government—

He did not say himself; he said the government, and that means, if anything, to me, the cabinet.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Woolliams: I continue:

> —the government finally agreed to put in the bill the suggestion that the chief justice of the province should nominate the chairman from a member of his court; that the leader of the government, the Prime Minister, should nominate one of the members of the commission; and that the Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of parliament, should nominate the other.

He said "after they gave it some consideration". After they gave it a year's consideration. He said he has been making studies of what has gone on in Australia, Great Britain and other countries—probably the United States, although I do not know how they work redistribution down there. But after giving it that kind of consideration they came to this conclusion. He no doubt led the cabinet in this regard. I know he cannot disclose what goes on at cabinet meetings, but he as the Minister of Transport is the spokesman, the one they know has the special skill to steer the ship of state and this bill through this parliament. He has been chosen by the grand old Liberal party to do this. He was no doubt steering the cabinet. No doubt he said, "Don't worry about it; Pick will do it"; and Pick was supposed to do it because the government chose him to do the job.

Mr. MacEwan: They got a "Pick" in a poke.

Mr. Woolliams: They then considered the matter. He left it out very carefully at the time of the resolution—

Mr. Pickersgill: Second reading.

Mr. Woolliams: Second reading; I am glad to be corrected in that regard. He left this out, either intentionally or unintentionally. I want to be fair to him but I do not think I will be quite as charitable as was the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Perhaps he is more sophisticated because he has been here longer than I have. Instead of sweeping these things under the table I say to you, sir, that you have to make up your mind. You made the statement this morning that we would have time for consideration in this regard. The consideration you meant was not from this side of the house; it was to worry whether you could get the whip to whip these boys into shape and get them to do something that the government had approved some months ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to say that he wanted to be fair. I wish he would read the sentence that begins at the bottom of the page. I refer to the last sentence on the page beginning, "I do not hesitate to say". That is what I said, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to read those words.

Mr. Woolliams: All right, I will read it all so there will not be any question about it. Mind you, there is always a question when you are reading the words of this distinguished and illustrious minister:

> I say unreservedly that I have every confidence that no matter who occupies those offices, any person who becomes leader of the opposition in the parliament of our country—

That means he has confidence in Mr. Diefenbaker or any other future leader of the opposition, of whichever party—

Mr. Walker: Or yourself.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right; you are absolutely correct. That is the nicest thing that has been said to me all day.

Mr. Churchill: Do you want to withdraw?

Mr. Woolliams: I am quite certain that the same tactics as have been used—I do not want to go off on a tangent—on others will be used on me, and I do not know whether I want to lie on that bed:

> —or prime minister in the parliament of our country would take this responsibility seriously and make the kind of nominations that all of us would feel were appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the next sentence that I should like the hon. member to read.

Mr. Woolliams: I know, and I am coming to that. Don't get excited.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am just getting intoxicated by my own words.

An hon. Member: That is not unusual.

Mr. Woolliams: I read a speech made by this minister four years ago, and when I read it I was drunk.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I continue:

> I do not hesitate to say that with respect to this provision or with respect to any other method which commends itself to the house or to a majority of the house and which seems likely to produce as fair and effective a result, the government will be quite prepared in committee to consider on its merits any amendments—

That is, we were going to consider them in committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is where we are now.

Mr. Woolliams: But they considered it before we reached the committee stage; they had made up their minds. So we might as well talk for days, or stop talking because the minister has made up his mind. If he was wanting to be fair this afternoon he would stand up and say that he had already made up his mind because he is in partnership with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, I mean Winnipeg North Centre. I correct that.

Mr. Hellyer: You do not even know in which direction they are.

Mr. Woolliams: I always have trouble with south centre and north centre, but I certainly meant north centre there.

Now, I know that the minister always puts safeguards in his phrases, and he did that when he said he would do it in committee. He thought that something might happen and that he had better put in one of his safeguards in the last sentence of one of his paragraphs. He intended that the clause in the bill would stand and to lead the Conservative party, the official opposition, to believe that he would support the official opposition and the government throughout on that particular clause, making no change. This may be imputing motives, but I think that there may be some ulterior motives in this respect. Because if we are to have an independent commission I think we will have a better chance to achieve it under the old clause than under the new. I can see why they want it, because to date there is still the provincial government of Saskatchewan to be considered. Whether they call themselves the C.C.F. or the New Democratic party they are the same, because in their ballots they include both. It is a catch-all phrase for the party.

I know that on the national level we do endeavour to get independent people in the civil service. I do not know what goes on in all the provinces, but perhaps there is not quite so much care taken in this regard. We have trouble with our negotiations; and surely we have enough as it is, with the contributory pension plan and various other plans. So let us keep it on a federal level and appoint people to the commissions from the federal level. I re-emphasize once more that a judge is an officer of the court, that a clerk is an officer of the court and that a barrister is an officer of the court. Although we forget this on many occasions, we in the House of Commons are officers of the House of Commons. And above all, owing to our unique parliamentary system which has been adapted from the British system, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are key officers of the House of Commons.

The minister himself says that he has absolute confidence in the men now occupying those places and the men who may occupy them in the future. Keep the judiciary out of politics; but I do not think you will keep politics completely out of any commission. Let us make it an independent commission by law. Instead of making it a rule of people, let us make it a rule of law.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Bow River was creating and then dissolving partnerships between the Minister of Transport and either the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I was wondering about the first question which he put to the committee, as to whether or not the designation of the chief justice of the province was likely to be interpreted as placing the chief justice in a situation to act in a political fashion.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not suggest that he would act in any political fashion.

Mr. Favreau: No, but that it might be interpreted as such.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not even go that far.

Mr. Favreau: I am glad that the hon. member for Bow River admits that he did not go that far and did not intend to go that far, because as far as I am concerned, if this amendment is accepted—and I shall give my views on it in a few moments—the very fact that parliament will have designated the chief justice of a province for the purpose of choosing the officers of these commissions is, in my view, an indication and clear proof of the full confidence of parliament in the objectivity and lack of partisanship, to the judicial sense, of these persons who hold so high an office.

I think it would be a great compliment on the part of people engaged in politics, as we all are here, to rely on the chief justices of the provinces to make appointments which otherwise, even if we attempted to act in the most unpartisan and objective fashion, might be deemed by other people to be tainted with political considerations. It is precisely for this reason that in cases where certain difficulties between, for example, unions and employers have come to the point where they are almost insoluble that very often the confidence in the objectivity of the judiciary which parliament has prompts government to appoint one of our justices to solve the difficulty or controversy in question. I think it is a recognition of the complete independence of the judiciary when we leave it to them to perform such functions. In my view, this measure would remove all politics and political considerations from the appointment of the persons concerned.

A few minutes ago the hon. member for Bow River made reference to the fact that with regard to this amendment the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might have been sleeping in the same bed. But all beds set aside, and duly noting that I was not here yesterday during the discussion and that therefore I am not aware of any position taken on the point, if I were asked my own view on the matter and were asked to choose between the formula which we the government have approved in clause 6 of the bill presented to this house and that which is reflected in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I would choose the amendment.

My view is that this would remove all political connotations from the appointments which are to be made, and in its application would render the act completely objective and free of all controversy.

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister permit a question. May I ask him whether he has lost confidence in the Prime Minister of this country and in the Leader of the Opposition, when he talks of removing all political connotations?

Mr. Favreau: I must say one thing, and that is that my confidence in the Prime Minister of this country has never been greater than it presently is, and the more we go on the more do I find extraordinary and wonderful justification to continue in my confidence.

Mr. Lambert: Why don't you get down to the office of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Favreau: But I must come back to one thing which has been said, namely that to the extent there is any possibility of removing any doubt as to the permanent objectivity of certain decisions, we should act in a way to remove such doubt.

Mr. Churchill: Who is in doubt?

Mr. Favreau: I agree with the words uttered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the effect that not only must justice be done, which we know would be done if the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition appointed those people, but throughout the country it must be apparent and obvious that justice is being done, and this is precisely what this type of amendment will do. Because I am a new politician and still quite earnest in this field, I take this opportunity to note how useful are these discussions in committee. I think it is all to the credit of parliament and our parliamentary institutions that we should be able, in the way that we do, to exchange ideas and suggestions and to agree to accept suggestions emanating from any party on the occasions of these discussions in committee. These discussions go a long way toward asserting what we are trying to assert continuously, the triumph of democracy and the reflection of the deep thinking of all the people of the country in our legislation.

If an amendment such as the one which has been suggested is accepted I think we will have gone a long way in that direction. It does not mean that the government was wrong. The government suggested a formula which it thought was right. One which in my view is better and more flexible is now suggested, and there is no reason why we should refuse it. I know the vote will be completely free. I am speaking for myself at present but these are my views. If the amendment should be accepted I would suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that he might want to introduce certain amendments in it. For instance, instead of limiting the power to appoint or to choose to the chief justice of the province I think it might be appropriate if there were a reference also either to the associate chief justice, a position which exists in certain provinces, or to the acting chief justice so as not to limit the appointment power at any given time. When appointments are to be made the chief justice might be absent or sick or incapacitated for some reason.

Second, may I suggest that if the amendment should be accepted it should also be modified so as to provide for the choice to be made not only from the court over which the chief justice of the province presides, which is usually the court of appeal, but also from any court of superior jurisdiction with authority within the province. For instance, in the province of Quebec, as is the case in Ontario and most other provinces, the chief justice of the province is the chief justice of the court of appeal. The number of judges of these courts is limited to six or seven or eight. If the power to choose were widened to allow the chief justice to choose from among the justices of any court of superior jurisdiction within the province you would have a much broader field from which to choose. There might be a provision in the latter case, of course, for the chief justice of the province to consult with the chief justice of any such court of superior jurisdiction from whom a judge would be chosen. These are my views and they are very respectfully submitted to the committee.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a delightful exercise in tightrope walking by the Minister of Justice in trying to establish some kind of logic in respect of the government's, volte-face in this regard. I say this because we know what their position was, and their stand was such that the Minister of Transport even went to the extent of having the bill printed a second time with these provisions. Now we have certain amendments put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I want to consider them in some detail. I do so because I think there is some defect, particularly in subparagraph (a), in that those named are all provincial officials. How on earth we can direct the chief justice of a province to pick one of a number of judges of his court I do not know.

An hon. Member: Require.

Mr. Lambert: Definitely. It is a named class. Later on we see that there can be no more than one from the class enumerated in paragraph (b), so in the case where a provincial government prohibits any of its officials from assuming the duties under paragraph (a) we then have a direction that the chief justice may pick anyone that he sees fit. Why not say so simply in the first place? To me subparagraph (a), with the restrictions imposed upon it by the proviso in subparagraph (b), is nonsense, and really what you have is a direction that the chief justice may pick anyone.

After all, in some of the provinces the chief electoral officer is the clerk of the legislative assembly and it is quite apparent to me that many provincial governments will not have the clerk of their legislative assembly involved in the determination of the representation in this house. The surveyor general of the registrar of vital statistics are again provincial officials. They may or may not exist under those titles, but there are holders of similar offices. But a further point arises. If a province refuses to let any of these officials act in this regard then the chief justice may pick anyone.

In any event, I come back to the argument put forward so ably by my colleague, the hon. member for Bow River. The Minister of Justice has referred to the chief justice of the province, the associate chief justice—I think he has the province of Quebec in mind —and the acting chief justice. Why pitchfork them into the arena of the representation of the House of Commons? This is not a duty envisaged in the appointment of a chief justice. All too often we have heard that the role of the judges of this country should be limited more and more to the courts. When the Conservatives were in power I recall hearing hon. members on the opposite side saying that we were adding more and more to the duties of justices. It will be interesting to see how they justify this departure from the principle they insisted on before.

In the event that there is inability on the part of the chief justice of the province to complete nominating the representatives of the commission, then we bring in the chief justice of Canada. I must say that I find it somewhat strange that the chief justice, the senior puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, should be ultimately in the position of naming anyone he may wish. This is what is envisaged in this legislation as a possibility, and if you are going to provide for it as a possibility you must accept it as a justifiable one. I suggest to hon. members that this should not be the case.

Turning to the qualifications of the third member I find the clause reads,

> (b) the president or other similar officer of or a member of the faculty of, a university, college—

What is meant by "college"? Is it a junior college?

> —or other educational institutions providing courses at a post-secondary school level in the province;

Does this mean an instructor, an assistant professor or some minor member of the staff? After all, the provision is there. We know very well that a number of people on the staffs of universities do hold strong, vocal political views. This clause of so-called political purity, as advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, therefore falls to the ground if he seeks to justify the amendment he is making by removing any question of partisanship by changing the provisions of the legislation in connection with nomination by the Prime Minister.

I would say to the Minister of Justice that in discussing the qualifications, capabilities or impartiality of the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition, one must not consider the personalities of the right hon. gentlemen who are now occupying those positions. If you do this, you may be merely legislating for the next five years. One must consider the impartiality and responsibility of the holder of the office. I feel, therefore, that his rather passionate exhortation on the responsibility, ability and so forth of the present Prime Minister was not really germane to the discussion we are having today.

I did not have the privilege of hearing the Minister of Transport say why he had now changed his mind. He had been most eloquent, most persuasive. The Minister of Transport seemed to be in a very conciliatory mood during the previous session of parliament when he was discussing the proposed legislation. I thought at the time I might suggest other types of nominees, but there were certain difficulties. I did not agree with the idea of ten provincial commissions because I thought one commission divided into subcommittees could do the job just as well, and we would not have nearly all this difficulty. At that time the minister was in a very conciliatory mood, and I would suggest this is one more proof that when he adopts this attitude we must be more than ever on our guard because we will have a quick reversal of position. Perhaps since he has become Minister of Transport he has learned to shift gears very rapidly and can go into reverse gear very quickly. This is certainly a case where the Minister of Transport, if he now accepts the proposed amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Pickersgill: North Centre.

Mr. Churchill: I see no similarity between the two members.

Mr. Lambert: —North Centre, will have made a quick shift. I do find it extremely difficult to see any logic in the arguments that are said to be advanced by the Minister of Transport when he shifts from one position to the other. After all, the government must take its responsibility, not lightly, when it advances a bill. They should not say, "All right, here is our bill; we will amend it here, there and everywhere." As the minister knows, there are limitations to the amendments to bills. Are we to get into a position where this bill is going to be amended out of any similarity with the bill that was originally introduced? The government must have assumed its responsibilities with due regard for the consequences, and having done so it must stand by the principle it has enunciated in the bill. I am quite interested, therefore, in ascertaining why there is now all this change.

Mr. Brewin: I do want to comment on the remarks we have just heard from the hon. member for Edmonton West. It would seem to me very reasonable for an opposition party to welcome what is called a shift or a volte-face on the part of the government. I, for one, would like to commend the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Transport for being willing to concede it is possible their original ideas could be improved upon. So far as I am concerned, that is the function of the committee. Why they should be castigated for doing what is sensible, doing what is consistent with the privileges of the members of this house, I do not understand.

Furthermore, I want to say to the hon. member for Edmonton West that his remarks illustrated to me the less attractive features of the profession which he and I both grace. In other words, he produced a skein of so-called logic which really had no practical sense in it at all. I know this is part of the function of my profession from time to time, but I only hope that the members of this house—I am sure they are—are sufficiently intelligent not to be taken in by these appeals to this—well, I was going to call it phony legal sort of logic.

Mr. Lambert: Will the hon. member wear his own sack cloth and ashes?

Mr. Brewin: With regard to the objections that were suggested, first of all he said this would be imposing a heavy responsibility on the chief justice. The most famous judges in England, the lord chancellors, have had wide powers of appointment in all sorts of fields.

Those whom we want for these jobs are persons highly qualified by their judicial knowledge, gained through the discharge of their non-partisan duties. Who better are there to do these jobs than the chief justices nominated here?

It is sometimes true, as the hon. member has said, that legislatures impose unreasonable tasks on the courts, but surely no one suggests that the making of this particular appointment is going to tax the faculties of our chief justices beyond endurance. In my own view, knowing some of them, they will probably be very happy to have this incursion into the field of appointment in such an interesting realm.

It is always easy to find difficulties; and instead of worrying too much about the difficulties suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I think the changes suggested by the Minister of Justice, if my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre accepts them, and I suspect he will, should be adopted. The amendment is a definite improvement and I commend the government for its willingness to accept it.

Mr. More: I only wish to take part briefly once more in this debate. I am not going to hold anybody in suspense. I shall tell you right now I will not support the amendment. It will not take me as many words on Hansard to make my position unclear as it did the Minister of Transport this morning, because on whatever he said anyone could draw his own conclusion.

Perhaps that criticism is welcome to him. I am new in this field and I might adopt some of his tactics if I wanted to stay, but I do not feel in that mood today. I speak only for myself and on a non-partisan basis. The amendment has brought forth violent discussion and I cannot agree with it.

In spite of what the Minister of Justice has said I think by adopting the amendment we would put our chief justices into a position where, though acting to the best of their knowledge, judgment and courage, they would be subjected to criticism that might reflect on the judiciary as a whole. I have great respect for our judiciary, as I believe do all the people generally, and we have enough attacks on our institutions of democracy without throwing the members of the judiciary into a position where they might be open to a lot of criticism.

Having regard to the background of the members of the judiciary, I have always felt they were political. Lawyers have a special adaptation to active politics, and in most cases members of the judiciary have been appointed by the governments of the day because they were active in politics, and probably were friendly to the government of the day. However, that does not happen to be the case with regard to the appointment of the chief justice of Saskatchewan. Under the Conservative government a Liberal appointee was elevated to that high position, and I have not heard criticism of that action from anywhere in this party. This man had the ability required, and his associates and the party generally agreed with his appointment.

I will not support the amendment because I see in it a pitfall and an opening for criticism of the judiciary.

Another reason for my opposition to the amendment is that in spite of the good intentions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I have no knowledge of the feelings of the public with regard to the present provisions of the bill, and that they will have doubts if the commission is not removed from politics. The hon. member has produced no evidence to that effect, and I believe this is a figment of his imagination that suits his own purpose.

I decry the innuendo and insinuation contained in what has been said in support of the amendment, and in the amendment itself, that here in the highest tribunal in the land there is an implied reflection that the prime minister and the leader of the opposition, acting in a responsible manner as officers of the house, would not do a proper job. I do not have any of these doubts. They deserve our respect, and we should not do anything that would add to the widespread criticism of the operations of parliament.

I read the speech which the Minister of Transport made outside the house and I say this kindly, that I think he became a party to the widespread criticism of the house. Yet he usually is one who is most busy in the debates, hurling charges back and forth, and appears to take a delight in them. When I came in here as a new member I was surprised to look across the aisle and see mature members of the house acting in a manner which I would not choose to follow. If I did, I do not think I would gain much respect from my constituency, the country and the house.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did I hear correctly that he referred to the Minister of Transport as the spiritual leader of the house?

Mr. More: Well, he puts a lot of spirit into it. He is not always rising to speak, in fact sometimes he is sitting down. He started off rather unkindly in his reply to the hon. member for Bow River, but quickly caught himself, knowing that several times he himself has interrupted much more than the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not as good at it.

Mr. More: You are very good at it; I give you full credit. Nothing should be said in this debate that would reflect on the operations and the officers of the house, and we should do nothing that would leave the way open for criticisms which would do injury to our courts of law. On this basis I am not prepared to support the amendment.

Mr. Pugh: After listening to the hon. member for Regina City I shall begin exactly the same way and say I definitely am not in favour of the amendment. My reasons run parallel to those of other hon. members who have expressed themselves against it. There seems to be a lot of worry about imposing this extra work on the chief justice, but I do not think it is a question of work. It is a straight political matter that should not be put in any chief justice's hand. If he were choosing among his own justices for one appointment, that is all right. I would go so far as to agree with that; but when he is going to step down and choose from other categories of people, that is going too far. No chief justice should be put in that position. Any chief justice could exercise the power properly and do the job admirably, but I still maintain he should not be placed in that position.

The amendment outlines the categories of people and says the choice must be made from:

> (a) the chief electoral officer, the surveyor-general or the registrar of vital statistics of the province or the holder of any similar office in the province;

Then there is an additional category. But why pick out these people? They are no doubt good civil servants, but in every province, as between one province and another, there is bound to be divergence. The point has also been made, and I think it is well taken, that in any of the provinces there might be a restriction imposed. I do not believe any government would really want its people to be placed in the position contemplated by the amendment. Then we have university presidents from among whom the selection may be made and, after that, anyone in a number of positions. It is here, it occurs to me, we would run into real trouble, because in many of the provinces members of the commission would be chosen from that last category. If a chief justice had to pull someone out of a hat he could do it admirably, no doubt, but I do not think he should be put into that position.

It is somewhat extraordinary to me that the Liberals should consider accepting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to change the methods of the appointments. The suggestion behind the amendment is that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are two politicians only. I resent that suggestion and I feel it is misleading. I think the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition of the day are more than political heads. They have a responsibility to the people and to the House of Commons. They have worked their way up, and are responsible men. In addition, there is an overriding factor: They are officers of this house and as such they hold a responsibility which is not lightly assumed. Before we even think of changing the arrangements now contemplated we should ask ourselves what improvement could be brought about by placing the chief justice in the position of naming these two appointees. I believe one would get better appointments from the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. Let us remember that the chief justice is already appointing the chairman from among his own judges. For these reasons I cannot support the amendment.

Mr. Knowles: I shall not yield to the temptation to reply again to some of the arguments which have been put forward, but I think that one or two points made by the Minister of Justice do call for comment.

The hon. gentleman raised two questions of detail concerning my amendment. If I may take the second one first, he said he wondered whether the category from which the chairman of each commission was to be drawn should not be enlarged. May I point out to him and to the other members on the government side that in making the suggestion that—> —the chairman of the commission for a province shall be appointed by the chief justice of the province from among the judges of the court over which he presides—

—the words I used are exactly the opening words of clause 6(1) of the bill which the government has presented to us. In other words, I did not alter in my amendment the arrangements for appointing the chairman. So if the Minister of Justice thinks that this provision should be enlarged I suggest he should do something about it himself.

The hon. member for Edmonton West says he got some inspiration from the hon. member for Bow River. That is good. Maybe we can make an all-party deal out of this, yet. I would be happy to agree to an amendment, or subamendment to my own amendment, along the lines indicated by the hon. gentleman if I could do so by unanimous consent, though it seems to me that since there is not unanimous consent to the amendment it might not be possible to secure agreement for making an alteration. But if an amendment were to be proposed in the first few lines, those lines having been taken from the government bill as it stands, I would be happy to have them changed either by altering my amendment, with unanimous consent, or by the minister proposing a subamendment to which I would be glad to agree.

The other question the minister raised was whether or not authority to make the appointments should be given not only to a chief justice of a province but in some cases to an acting chief justice or an associate chief justice. I cannot see that this is necessary, though I bow to the wisdom of the hon. gentleman in this matter. In the amendment which I have put forward provision is made for the contingency of there not being a chief justice to carry out the functions proposed, so I do not think there is much validity to the objection the minister has raised. As to the other point, it is up to him of course to decide whether or not the government's own plan for the appointment of the chairman should be altered.

Mr. Nugent: I should like to say a few words at this point. At first glance, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre may seem to have a little merit. I am sure that if one does not think deeply about it the suggestion that the matter should be removed still further from politics is one which seems to be in keeping with the general feeling of the committee, that we should as far as possible remove the question of electoral boundaries from political machinations.

However, I wonder whether the hon. member really believes that his method is likely to achieve the desired effect. I should not have thought it would be necessary to remind the hon. member that judges in the provinces are usually political appointments, that when they are promoted to the office of chief justice it is usually a political appointment and that no matter how long they may have been on the bench and no matter how nobly they may strive to become non-partisan, for most of them it is almost impossible to erase their backgrounds from their minds. It would be almost impossible for them to take away from their judgment and experience the fact that many of their friendships have been formed over long years of political partisanship. When their duties involve a question dealing, as it does, with electoral boundaries, it would be humanly impossible not to think that in any appointments which were made the chief justice of a province must, almost certainly, reflect the political background which, as a public official—

Mr. Winch: Is the hon. member questioning the integrity of the justices of Canada?

Mr. Nugent: I am sure that if the hon. member for Vancouver East will hear me out and, indeed, if he had been patient enough to listen to exactly what I was saying rather than try to misread it, or mishear it, he would not be under any such misapprehension. For the education of that hon. member I will try to review briefly what I was just saying.

An hon. Member: Dispense.

Mr. Nugent: I was saying that no matter how well intentioned the chief justice is, no matter how long his experience on the bench, no matter how judicial he may have become in his outlook, and no matter how objective he tries to be, it is a fact that he has a political background. I suggest it is only human, when the chief justice is looking over the possible candidates for such an appointment, that those of his acquaintanceship are likely to be those of the same political background as himself. In fact, I cannot conceive of the type of people, the calibre of people who would be required to serve on these commissions not having had considerable experience in public affairs. Certainly I think all members of this house would judge their competence on the fact that potential candidates had gained some experience in political affairs, had taken at least that much interest in the government of their country that they would likely have affiliated themselves with one political party or another.

This is not suggesting that the judges are unfair or that they are not honest. It is, I submit, no reflection in any way on their character, their integrity or on the manner in which they would attempt to carry out their duties. But I do suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that he has deluded himself if he feels that this method is going to remove completely the political flavour. I suggest that it is impossible, bearing in mind that environment which pervades in most localities and the fact that public spirited, public minded men do take an active interest in politics, to avoid a political flavour being introduced in this respect. Personal knowledge of the qualities of the people who might be available for the job would be a factor which anyone would take into consideration when making an appointment, and an appointment made by the chief justice of the province would likely be someone of the party which originally appointed him; would likely be from among that circle of acquaintances that he knows best and in whom he has the most confidence. I suggest that—

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question at this very point? Is the hon. member suggesting that an appointment to this particular job of redistribution would be more political if made by a chief justice, or a justice, than if made by a prime minister or leader of the opposition?

Mr. Nugent: I will come to that point, Mr. Chairman. I want first to put in perspective the amount of non-partisanship there would be; or, to put it another way, to try to tell the committee why I think that merely because the appointment would be made by a chief justice is no guarantee that it would be entirely devoid of political character. As I say, acting with the utmost honesty, taking his duty as seriously as he could and trying to be as fair and unbiased as he could, the natural factors that would influence him in regard to this appointment would show a political tinge simply because he is going to appoint those people he knows to have the ability; he is going to appoint people he knows to have taken an interested part in the country's affairs. I say this will be so simply because the majority of those people with whom he is most closely acquainted and of whom he has most experience will have the same political background as himself. The odds are going to be that if he is a Conservative chief justice his appointments will most likely be Conservatives, and if he is a Liberal, his appointments will most likely be Liberals.

I say that the pressure will be—not the political pressure but the pressure of his background—his knowledge of people, and his circle of acquaintances will put the odds this way. How the hon. member for Vancouver East can suggest that by pointing out this fact I am in any way making light of judges or impugning their honesty or integrity, I cannot understand. Certainly we all know human behaviour. There are certain psychological pressures; there are certain factors which influence judgment and we must be realistic enough to recognize this fact. I am not saying it would be impossible, by any means, to avoid this. I am sure, from the judges and chief justices I know, that these gentlemen, especially after a few years on the bench, spend most of their years trying to learn to be really judicial, trying to block bias and prejudice from their minds. They have much experience in overcoming friendships with barristers and old acquaintances in cases with which they have to deal.

Also, those people are the first to admit to me that no matter how long they serve, no matter how hard they strive, they find it impossible to overcome completely this tendency.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the chief justice who is going to have to make these appointments will be quite as well aware of these tendencies as I am. I submit that it is going to place him in a very difficult and awkward position. I believe that the natural reaction of the chief justice in selecting his appointments will be, knowing that his circle is limited and knowing that he might be tempted because of his background, etc., to make the error of putting in people who are politically partisan in respect of one party, to attempt as an honest man to overcome this by consciously striving to put on the commission a Liberal and a Conservative. In other words I believe—and I could be in error, but I do have some experience with judges and am acquainted with them and the way in which their minds work—and I have been quite close to some of them for a long time and have had many opportunities to hear them expound the difficulties of trying to keep judicial—I believe that judges are very practical people, and that if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had a little more experience of the courts and our judges he would know, or suspect at least, that in order to make certain they are being fair, to make certain they are not unconsciously prejudiced to one side or the other, would probably admit to themselves that the political pressure is on one side and that the only way to balance it is to make sure that they appoint one whom they know to be a Liberal and another whom they know to be a Conservative.

I suggest this with much sincerity to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In this way I think a judge will believe he has discharged his duty to be neutral by making two such appointments. He would appoint a very capable man from each party, who would have the effect of cancelling each other out, and would create much more confidence in the neutrality of the appointees than would be the case, were they merely selected from the group suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

If my reasoning in this regard is not folly we are faced with the fact that the amendment amounts to this—that we should have a political, partisan appointment made by the chief justice of the province instead of by the leaders of the two parties in this house.

I cannot for the life of me justify this amendment on that ground. While I have said that chief justices, once they are appointed, strive to rise above partisan politics and become judicious in their outlook and neutral in their behaviour, although they do not become completely successful in this regard there is no doubt they do become a little removed from the scene and their contacts become a little old. They become a little out of touch with the people operating on the political scene no matter how much they remember those who in years past were the most influential, most important and perhaps wisest men in matters political in their area. Therefore my objection to substituting the chief justices for the leaders of the parties is that these men are out of touch. They are not so likely to know today's conditions; they are not so likely to know the various problems; they are not so likely to know the growth of communities, etc., as well as the means of communication in electoral districts; and therefore the people they choose are not so likely to be so well chosen or to be the best chosen as would be the case if the appointments were made by our political leaders, who are up to date on the situation.

The next point I want to make is that if this method works the way I think it will work, should we adopt the amendment, it would put the chief justice in the position of making two partisan political appointments, and to that extent he is mixing in politics. He is taking part in political questions in the community in a way which is contrary to his experience and training on the bench ever since his appointment. I do not think we should put the chief justices in that position. I do not think it is a role they would relish, and as I have said I do not think, because of their removal from the political scene, that they would make as good appointments as those who are presently acquainted with it.

With regard to the classes of people suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who might be chosen to fill these three posts, once you start to limit a very small class and give a very small choice to the chief justice you are going to suffer somewhat in quality. I am not sure that at this moment I can outline all of the qualifications which might be thought most suitable for members of these commissions, but certainly no one would question that intelligence would be one. They should also be well acquainted with the province. The fact that they have political experience demonstrates their interest in government, whether on the provincial, municipal or federal level, and this would certainly be an important factor. Do they take their duties seriously? Have they worked hard at them? Once we start to impose qualifications and to seek people who have the most qualifications under each one of these tests, we automatically limit to an ever narrowing degree the choice which a chief justice has in his province.

If we are prepared to accept a group or class of people, such as university presidents, etc., and limit choice to this class, we are going to leave little or no choice. We are going to subordinate all of the qualifications which I think might be most valuable to the commissioner to the qualification of belonging to one particular class. For the life of me I cannot see that being the president of a university is a necessary indication that he has the proper qualifications for this type of job. It may be he is ideal, but it certainly does seem to be putting the cart before the horse in limiting the field in this way, and to say that we should pick from a class of people chosen for some purpose other than their suitability for this particular job. First things come first, and I suggest that the most important qualifications are those I have outlined. It is their fitness to handle the job, not their position in the community. All of this I submit is suggested in the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, because he wants to put on the appearance of less political partisanship. I repeat that I think the objective here is to put on the "appearance" of less political partisanship, not to make it less political.

For the reasons I have outlined I cannot but come to the conclusion that the appointments on either side would cancel out—and all of this for what? I am not sure that I follow that type of reasoning. I think the people of this country are quite used to the fact that matters political are usually handled by the politicians; that when appointments are made by one party or another—especially if appointments are made by one Liberal and one Conservative—we are going to have two people appointed who will be watching very closely that the rules are followed and that things look good as well as are good. Neither one is going to dare press for a political advantage for his party because he knows that the other is going to make sure that this is known to the public. I suggest it is somewhat akin to the argument about outlawing the communist party. Should we outlaw it or have it where we can watch it?

That is what we are doing here. Political partisanship is open and aboveboard. The motives and actions of these people will be in full view. There is no doubt that they are partisan to one side or the other and that they are going to be most carefully watched for that very reason. Their motivation does not have to be sought for because their actions are going to be examined most closely. I suggest that by this method, putting them out in the open instead of erecting an artificial fence around them, we get a realistic approach to the problem.

There is one other possibility, of course. I have not studied the amendment closely enough or perhaps do not know the country well enough to be sure that there are enough possible choices from among the categories listed. It might be that a chief justice would not be able to find the requisite number of candidates in that province who would come within these categories. Before the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre objects too strenuously, I suggest that these people have to be ready, willing and able to serve, so that to say that the number is surely sufficient in each province does not go quite far enough. I suggest that possibly only 10 per cent of those in these categories would even consider accepting an appointment to serve on such a commission. If you are going to restrict the categories unnecessarily from which the choices can be made you are likely to find yourself faced with an unsolvable defect by reason of this amendment.

Let me make one further point about the agreeability of such people to serve. I cannot see that it would make the people appointed any happier to be appointed by the chief justice. If the chief justice is a Liberal and a Liberal is appointed, even though the chief justice is supposed to make non-political appointments I am sure the appointee is going to feel a little uncomfortable about his position on the commission. The same is true of his cohorts on the commission.

I suggest there is nothing that would make a man serving in such a position feel more comfortable than to know that his appointment had been made by a leader of a political party because of his qualifications for the job and that no one was going to expect him to be anything but a Conservative, if he was one. I am not suggesting that because a person appointed is a Liberal or a Conservative he is going to put his party first. I know there are many in all parties who would strive to their utmost to rid themselves as far as possible of any political bias, who would study objectively all the problems that will have to be faced by the commission, who would, I am sure, give of their utmost, and who would try to adopt a judicial attitude. However, for the same reasons I have referred to in regard to the inability of the chief justice to rid himself of any possible bias or prejudice it would be that much more difficult for the man appointed. Certainly if he has never had any experience on the bench in trying to acquire a judicial mind and an objective outlook he is likely to be still highly partisan in his method of approach, no matter how hard he tries to be otherwise. I suggest that any honest man who is appointed is going to be aware that he will be incapable of becoming completely objective and non-partisan.

Mr. Winch: Could the Leader of the Opposition be non-political?

Mr. Nugent: I am afraid the hon. member for Vancouver East is a little slow this afternoon. By that I do not mean to imply that this is unusual but I have noted it particularly today from his questions to me. I have not suggested that an appointment either by the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition would be non-partisan. I am quite sure and have every confidence that these gentlemen would have the good sense to pick people who are party supporters. From their experience over the years I am sure they both believe that in each province they can get the very best people for this kind of job from within their own parties, and do not have to look elsewhere.

I was talking about the viewpoint of the person who is appointed. I have said that the people appointed, no matter how hard they try to be objective, do not have judicial experience and will not be able to rid themselves of some partisan feeling. I suggest it is rather a weight on the conscience of a person who is trying very hard to do a good job to feel that he may not be entirely rid of bias. I suggest he would feel a lot more comfortable if he were appointed by one person and his opposite number had been appointed by the other. He can say to himself: I am trying my best to get rid of prejudice and I have not quite succeeded, but my friend over there who is trying just as hard has not quite succeeded either. So we would hope that the amount of prejudice left would balance out.

I suggest this is a very healthy attitude to take. It is a healthy and honest state of mind. I suggest that we defeat the proposed amendment so that we will have greater scope to place emphasis on appointing those most qualified without restricting ourselves unnecessarily to a small number of people. I suggest we do not put the chief justice in the position of having to make such appointments, which would make him feel uncomfortable and which he would not want to make. I suggest that if we get rid of this amendment the people who are appointed are going to be happier with their appointments. In the eyes of the people of the country the approach will be a more honest one and it will be a more honest approach so far as the appointees are concerned. They will have a healthier attitude toward their job, a healthier atmosphere in which to work and I think we will get the kind of people we want on these commissions. Therefore I hope we will defeat the amendment.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, when I spoke previously I referred to the fact that in my view the scope of the amendment should be broadened, if it is to be accepted, so as to allow the chief justice of the province to choose the members of the commission not only from among the members of his own court but also from among the members of any court of superior jurisdiction appointed for the province concerned. I also referred to the fact that it might be advisable, in the event of the disability, incapacity, absence, sickness or otherwise of the chief justice, to provide for the acting chief justice to act in his stead. In order to cope with this situation and to make the necessary provisions I move the following subamendment:

That the following words be substituted for subsection 2 of section 6 in clause 1 of the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

"2. In the event that there is no judge of the court over which the chief justice of the province presides able or free to act as chairman of the commission the chief justice of the province shall, after consultation with the chief justice of any other superior court in the province, appoint a chairman from among the judges of that other court, but where for any reason no appointment of a chairman or of either or both of the two other members other than the representation commissioner is made within the time provided therefor by this act the Chief Justice of Canada or in the event of his absence or incapacity the senior puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada shall make the appointment or appointments from among such persons resident in the province as he deems suitable.

3. A reference in subsections (1) or (2) to the chief justice of a province, includes a reference to the acting chief justice of the province or any person performing for the time being the duties of chief justice thereof;"

And that clause 2 of said amendment be deleted.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the minister would care to explain what he means by that amendment?

An hon. Member: Do you want it in four letter words?

Mr. Favreau: If I had somewhat less confidence in myself, especially after the speech I made a few minutes ago, I would really work up an inferiority complex after the question put by the hon. member for Bow River. I thought I had explained that the first subparagraph of the amendment to the amendment means that henceforth the chief justice of the province, who normally and in most provinces is the chief justice of the court of appeal, will not in his choice of a chairman be limited to the members of his own court, which is always rather a limited one in number. He will be able, after consultation with the chief justice of any court of superior jurisdiction rendering justice within the territorial boundaries of the province, to choose from among the members of that superior court, whose numbers are always greater than that of a court of appeal.

The third subparagraph of the amendment to the amendment provides that in the absence of the chief justice himself, either the person appointed as acting chief justice or the person acting in the name of the chief justice, will be able to perform the same duties.

The last paragraph of the amendment deletes the second clause of the original amendment because there is no longer any requirement to renumber the paragraphs. Now, we have paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 4 as we had before.

Mr. Woolliams: That was clear.

Mr. More: I do not believe the subamendment improves the situation at all. I think it passing strange that all of a sudden, instead of having the Minister of Transport piloting this bill through the house, his duties seem to have been taken over by the Minister of Justice. Perhaps the reason is that the Minister of Justice has a little more courage now than the Minister of Transport has, because the Minister of Justice was frank enough to state in clear terms his position on the amendment. We have not had any such statement from the Minister of Transport. It would be very interesting to all of us to have a statement as to just what his position is now with regard to the amendment and the subamendment.

The bundling which is evident between the C.C.F. or N.D.P. and the Liberal party is passing strange. I have not a suspicious nature at all but after observing what is happening during this debate there would seem to be some substance to the suggestion made earlier by the hon. member for Bow River. During this debate we had two members of the Liberal party speaking against the amendment. I noticed that when they sat down they both received a round of applause from the other members of their party for the views they had expressed. It seems to me they must be just as confused about the stand the minister is going to take as we are in the official opposition.

As I say, the bundling between these two parties is passing strange.

Mr. Winch: What is wrong if it is right?

Mr. More: Let us bring it out in the open, instead of having all this nonsense. Let the house leader get up and say that after consultation with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre this deal was made. Then we would know exactly where we are. I am talking about the Minister of Transport.

I say this bundling is quite strange and quite interesting because the leader of the C.C.F.-N.D.P. has just returned from Saskatchewan. I am sure he was not out there bundling with Ross Thatcher. If there was any bundling between these two parties, I do not know whether it was with the C.C.F. part of the Saskatchewan group or the N.D.P. part, because there are two groups. In fact, practically speaking, there are three groups. It is a very interesting situation.

In some earlier remarks I made I expressed confidence in the courts of this country and in the personnel of those courts. However, I am quite frank to admit that I believe possibly 100 per cent of these men had an active political background and were appointed under their respective governments not only as a result of their political activity but because of their ability at the bar. However, they have been appointed and have been impartial. In my opinion, the amendment is going to place many of these judges in an awkward position. Even if they fulfil their duties as earnestly as they possibly can and as impartially as they can, they may still be judged for political activity. To me, this is very bad.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. More: When I have finished. This is a very bad precedent for us to set at this time.

This is a federal responsibility and provincial officials should be left out of it. It opens the way for some criticism to be levelled at the members of our courts, and by insinuation and innuendo—I do not know two better words to express it—the adoption of this amendment reflects on the integrity of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. It reflects on them because it is based on the fact that we do not trust them to fulfil properly their functions as officers of the house.

We already have sufficient criticism of this institution, and we should be on guard against helping to extend that criticism. I have been amazed with the stand taken by the two government frontbenchers, and it is apparent that the Minister of Transport is now very quiet, very reserved and has very little to say.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. More: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Knowles: My question is based on the concern of the hon. member for Regina City lest by asking the justices to make these appointments we are involving them in something that is political. How does he square that concern with his acceptance—and I accept it too—of the government's main proposal, namely that the chairman of each of these commissions shall be a judge, perhaps indeed the chief justice of the province, and that he shall be concerned with the actual drawing of the boundary lines?

Mr. More: I do not have any trouble at all in that regard. The mind of the judiciary to analyse and judge propositions is better than that of ordinary persons.

Mr. Knowles: Then does not the hon. member think the mind of a justice is capable of impartially picking people to do a fair job?

Mr. More: I do not suggest that is not so. I said "consciously and impartially to the best of their ability". I am talking about the judgment of the people of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Now, no innuendo against the judges.

Mr. More: There is no innuendo at all, and I make that clear. What I am saying is that if a justice makes an appointment, and the actions of a commission of which his appointee is part are not acceptable to the people of any area, then they are going to point a finger at that justice. This is a logical assumption. So far as the officers of the house are concerned they have a right to be subjected to such criticism if it is necessary, but I do not think it is right, fair or proper that the judges of our courts should be put in this position.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winch: I understand you are talking it out until five o'clock?

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member says we are talking it out until five o'clock. We have just had a long subamendment presented by the Minister of Justice, but just because an arrangement or marriage has been made between the government party and the hon. member's party, there is no reason to point the finger at us.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Yukon has the floor and should not be interrupted.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River took the words right out of my mouth. I was about to say we have witnessed a very curious but entertaining spectacle this afternoon when, having been pressed by the hon. member for Bow River, the Minister of Transport refused to confirm what he had led the house to believe on a previous occasion, when his words were recorded at page 741 of Hansard. But it seems he is somewhat smoked out now by the Minister of Justice, and perhaps this is the minister's way of getting back at the Minister of Transport for his lack of co-operation in assisting the government house leader in properly organizing the business of the house.

I think maybe the Minister of Transport has felt his nose is a little out of joint because of the new role of the junior Minister of Justice, and there is this constant play back and forth between them, with the Minister of Transport sitting back and smiling at the difficulties which the Minister of Justice often finds himself in. But he is in another difficulty now because he has presented the committee with a subamendment which, to use the words of the Minister of Transport when he quoted the house leader of the official opposition, is deserving of the most careful consideration by all members of the committee before we make any decision on this very important matter.

I was very interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, both of whom had the courage to stand up and say they were opposed to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for—I often forget his constituency but I think sometimes we might refer to him as the hon. member from heaven because he is so often referred to as the constitutional conscience of the house, and because so many other references are made to him respecting his knowledge of the rules and procedures of parliament.

An hon. Member: The rule of purity.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, the rule of purity. I want to say something about this for a moment, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has spoken at great length about the appearance we must give to the people of Canada in this legislature. For the moment I forget which great philosopher came out first with the expression, but I am sure the hon. member is familiar with it, that one must not only appear to be pure; he must be pure, because there are so many variations in the arguments he presents from time to time, not only with respect to this measure but with regard to other matters.

Before I was distracted I was speaking about the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. These two hon. gentlemen had the courage to stand up and express their opposition to the amendment. I would like to see the hon. member for York-Scarborough, who has been paying very painful attention to everything said in this debate, state his position. Similarly I would like to hear from the political scientist in the committee, the hon. member for Northumberland.

Mr. Moreau: Did the hon. member suggest that the hon. member for York-Scarborough should get up and state a point of view with which he did not agree? I happen to support the amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, now I know where the hon. member stands. More of those backbenchers should get up and adopt a similar course.

Mr. Knowles: You will know where they stand if you let us have a vote.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member says let us have a vote and we will find out where everybody stands. I would point out that this is the first time I have contributed to the discussion, while he has been on his feet several times. In the words of the Minister of Transport, I would like to tell him that this is a matter which deserves very careful consideration.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Order. Could the hon. member address the Chair? There has been an exchange of conversations and remarks on both sides, which make it very difficult for the Chair to follow the speech of the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not for the moment intend to question the ruling you have just made but perhaps, with great respect, it might have been better directed to other hon. members who are interrupting.

The Chairman: The hon. member should realize I am not objecting to his speaking but to other hon. members interrupting him while he is speaking.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for over-ruling the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who does not appear to want to let me talk. I am glad to see that the democratic safeguards are in capable hands.

I think more of the backbenchers on the other side should be just as courageous as the hon. members I have just mentioned for Vancouver Quadra and Vancouver-Burrard and that inimitable member for York-Scarborough who has also taken a stand on the amendment. I think however that had the Minister of Justice not come in when he did to make his statement, after whipping the rug from under the Minister of Transport, there might have been more of those opinions expressed with that complete field of expression to which the Liberal party is so consecrated from time to time, when it sees fit.

I think one of the reasons why this amendment was put forward is probably that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his friends are probably a little miffed because, under the bill as it stands, it is the prime minister who has to make one of these appointments and the leader of the opposition who has to make the other. I think some personal objection to this system has entered into the sound judgment which the hon. member usually shows with regard to these matters. Perhaps if we could have commissions made up of five members, of which the hon. member's own leader was able to appoint one, the amendment would not have been put forward in its present form.

The hon. member made a great case for the impartiality of the judges who would have to make these appointments. However the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona left the impression that impartiality of this type among our judges could not altogether be expected. As a matter of fact, the legislation itself does not repose that confidence in the judges concerned which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Minister of Justice would have us believe is there.

If we follow carefully the wording of the amendment as it appears on page 2275 of Hansard, we find the following words in (1) (b)—that is, the second (b) about halfway through the paragraph:

—and in the event that within either or both of those classes there is no such person able to act as a member of the commission, the chief justice of the province—

—and here follow the important words which belie the confidence expressed by members such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

—with the approval of the representation commissioner, shall appoint—

And so on.

If we do not trust these judges to make the selection on their own responsibility, why should the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Minister of Justice be making such a great to-do about the impartiality of judges? The fact that those words are there raises the suggestion immediately that we do not trust the judges because we intend they must get the approval of the representation commissioner, first. That is the implication of the words I have just read. Otherwise, why would they be there?

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member like an answer to that question? They are there for the protection of the judge. When a judge is naming a member of a commission from the categories (a) and (b) he has those categories set out before him. Those words are inserted to provide for cases when no one is available in those categories, and the judge has to pick any suitable person in a province. It is my view that this provides protection to the judge in the event he has to roam all over the province, because he has someone else to agree with him.

Mr. Nielsen: That is a most fallacious explanation of the existence of those words. What protection does a judge need? If we are to repose in him confidence that he will make an impartial selection, then surely that confidence must be wholly placed, not subject to the approval of any other officer, whether it be the representation commissioner or not, even when a nominee is not to be found in the first two categories set out in the amendment. Here is where your partisanship creeps in.

Mr. Knowles: Address the Chair.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Nielsen: I do not need the hon. member to lecture me as he is fond of doing so often in this house.

An hon. Member: Address the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: I have been addressing the Chair. I have been doing so throughout my remarks. I do not use personal pronouns. I am speaking metaphorically when I say: "Here is where your political partisanship creeps in". Here is where it does creep in. The hon. member has been making a great to-do about the proposed amendment providing freedom from partisan considerations. But we all know that, as honest and honourable a man as the representation commissioner is, a man of complete integrity as far as I am concerned—and I am personally acquainted with him and have been for several years; I know him to be this—but I do know the procedure which is adopted, for instance, in connection with the selection of returning officers, when he always talks with the government in power at the time before a final selection is made. That is my understanding of it, and if I am wrong—

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is perhaps doing a grave injustice there. The returning officers are appointed under the elections act, which was enacted by the government which he supported a few years ago. The returning officers are appointed by the governor in council. They are not appointed by the chief electoral officer. In other words there is no question of his consulting with anyone, they are selected by the cabinet.

Mr. Nielsen: As I say, my recollection of the procedure followed in this regard may not be accurate, and I invited correction if I was wrong. But I know that in connection with certain procedures under the elections act the chief electoral officer, as he was then, was required from time to time to give opinions, perhaps not under the act; but he did, in fact, give opinions from time to time. I am not suggesting here for a moment anything against the integrity of the representation commissioner. But it is a possibility, whether this government or any other government is in office that a judge, if these words were left in the amendment, would submit his choice to the representation commissioner whose final approval might or might not be given if any interference with that approval was put forward by any government of the day. Therein lies the danger of introducing partisanship.

Mr. Winch: Whom would Diefenbaker submit his recommendations to?

Mr. Nielsen: I wish proper references might be made in this house to the officers of the house. I am sure the hon. member for Vancouver East is referring to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I think he should abide by the rules and refer to him as such.

Mr. Winch: Then may I ask to whom would the right hon. Leader of the Opposition refer his recommendations, so as to make it non-political?

Mr. Nielsen: I had made myself quite clear, I thought, when I was referring to this point. The danger of political partisanship creeping into this is in my view very real in the circumstances which would be brought about by the amendment if it were passed. I do not care whether the present government is in office or whether any other government is in office. The danger would be for the government of the day to influence the giving of that approval or the withholding of that approval. That is the weakness, and it arises out of those particular words used.

Surely we cannot have that impartial selection by a judge if we are going to subject that selection to the approval of someone else. I would suggest to the Minister of Justice and to his colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that they get together again and reconsider this particular subclause, perhaps with a view to removing those words entirely, because I think they present a real danger to the very thing we are trying to achieve.

Another point was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I refer to the question of the federal government's authority or power to clothe a judge of a province with the right to appoint in some cases what might be a provincial official. Perhaps this is a matter which is deserving of the consideration of the premiers of the various provinces, because there may very well be objections raised by the provincial governments to having any of their officials act as a member of such a commission. Certainly we have not been given any assurances by the ministers concerned that such consultation has taken place or that the provincial governments concerned are agreeable to their provincial officials so acting. This is a very real criticism in my view.

Perhaps I might also point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Bow River made a very knowledgeable appeal last night to the government to set up one commission. The great concern that has been expressed here today about the impartiality of judges making these selections and about the other difficulties which confront us if we adopt the amendment or the subamendment is a further argument for setting up one central commission, because if this were done all these difficulties would be avoided entirely. Even though it now seems to be completely out of the minds of those who form the government, this suggestion of one centralized commission might be once again considered with some care.

I think I should also say, Mr. Chairman, that I am sure none of us here argues about the independence of the judiciary. The judiciary have always displayed, when dealing with those matters with which they are charged, that impartiality and judicial capability of which I am sure all of us are proud. I think I said when participating in the debate at the resolution stage that we should not get our courts or judges involved in politics. I suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has also made much of this fact, that by having the judges make these appointments he would be doing just that. All he would be doing would be to transfer the partisanship that the hon. member suggests is going to be displayed if the Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition make the selection. He would just be transferring that partisanship over to a judge. I am sure we all believe that a judge will not display any partisanship when making these appointments, and let us all hope that no judge will display any more partisanship in making these selections than judges have in the past in the case of controverted election cases which have come before them, when some have allowed an examination of the poll books and some have not. Perhaps we are seeking that kind of impartiality.

May I suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that all he is doing by his amendment is involving the judges in the very partisanship that he wishes to avoid. All that is happening is that you are transferring a political decision from officers of this house, who are very able to make that decision because of their background and experience, and laying it in the lap of a judge. It is very, very dangerous and very wrong to involve our judges and courts in political decisions with regard to whatever selection is made, and members of this house and political parties of this house are going to be completely dissatisfied with that decision. If that is not involving our judges in a partisan problem, then I do not know what is.

One point that I touched on briefly and want to enlarge upon before concluding is this business of political experience. I favour the clause as it stands, because you have the chief justice appointing one member, you have the prime minister appointing another member and you have the leader of the official opposition appointing the third member. What men in this country are more fitted, by reason of their background, by reason of their political experience and by reason of their integrity—otherwise they would not find themselves in such positions—to appoint members to such a commission? Surely this counts for something. The prime minister, with his vast experience inside and outside parliament, and likewise the leader of the official opposition, with his own precious store of experience gained over many years of service in public life, are best qualified to make these selections; and surely no one in his right mind would suggest that any person who has attained the office of prime minister or leader of the opposition would exercise anything but the purest motives in selecting the members who are to serve on such a commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I leave it at that, Mr. Chairman, and for those reasons I would again appeal to the ministers to give the lead to their own backbenchers, or to the backbenchers on the government side to rise and freely express their views, throw out this undesirable amendment and support the clause as it was when originally introduced by the government and which we were led to believe was going to be kept intact, as the Minister of Transport seemed to say on page 741 of Hansard.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, since I have been called into question and it has been suggested that I ought to say something about this matter, and I have kept silent all afternoon waiting for an opportunity—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Since many of us in this house have some questions to ask, would the minister prefer to answer all the questions at one time, or answer some now and some later?

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall try to be very brief, so that if there were any questions before five o'clock—we are getting perilously close to it—I would be glad to answer them. But there are one or two points I should like to make clear, because several hon. members seem to know the content of my mind rather better than I do myself. I think I ought to start out by saying that in the whole course, not just of my public life but in the whole course of my life, I have never been paid such a compliment as I have been paid today, having people, starting with the old and experienced hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Churchill: Did I make that mistake?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman even went so far as to call me a gentleman, for which I am pathetically grateful. Every hon. member of what we call the official opposition in this house—and they do not very often do this on my behalf—has praised my authorship; they have suggested that I must have had almost divine guidance in drafting the original clause 6 in the bill, because they are so anxious to preserve it. They have suggested that they suspect my motives. I am not going to say that I suspect theirs, because I do not really believe in that kind of argument; but I do think, as I said when I moved the second reading of this bill on March 10, that this was the best method that so far the government had been able to devise and recommend, and that is why we put it in the bill.

But no one recognized more clearly than I that this method of appointment would be open to question. I knew why it would be open to question. One hon. member during the course of this debate—so many have spoken I am not sure I can recall who—asked what we were doing with this bill anyway. The answer is that we want to take redistribution out of politics. However, it seems to me that, however eminent the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, who are both officers of the house, they are nevertheless—and I honour them both for this—political leaders. Therefore, to give them the power to make these appointments does not completely take the matter out of politics. As I said on second reading, it would achieve impartiality if by impartiality is meant weighing one thing against the other. But that did not necessarily mean that every one of the ten commissioners appointed by each of them would be impartial. I do not care who appoints these commissioners or how they are appointed, you will not remove the human element.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: The only consideration we should have in our minds is to remove any suggestion of political partisanship or partiality as far as we can. That has been my objective and it has been the objective of the government from the beginning.

I must confess I was a little shocked to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre commend the method of appointment used in the United Kingdom, where one of the commissioners is appointed by the home secretary and one by the minister of housing, or whoever it is—his title has been changed since the original act was passed. But the appointments were made by two cabinet ministers. I can just imagine what would have happened had we brought in a bill suggesting that the secretary of state—as I then was—and the Minister of Justice should appoint two of the four commissioners. I can imagine the kind of speeches we would have heard. Yet the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre commended the British practice. I asked him specifically about this at one o'clock, because it did seem to me that we on this side of the house had bent over backwards to try and prevent any political interference, or interference by politicians, at any stage in this process.

A bill brought in by the previous administration had many admirable features, but it had one feature which was criticized very strongly, and that was that appointments were to be made by the governor in council. I used the phrase that we did not want to take redistribution out of parliament and put it in the cabinet, and that we have sought not to do.

I tried various suggestions. As hon. members know, when we first discussed this matter on the representation commissioner bill in 1963 I said that one of the possibilities we would explore was having these appointments made by the Speaker. Then when I looked at the experience of Australia, where they have one judge—or in some states they have one judge—the commonwealth electoral officer, the state chief electoral officer and the surveyor general, and when I looked at the experience of the only two Canadian provinces where this non-partisan process is carried out by three persons all divorced from politics, it seemed to me that if we were to find a method of doing this the weight of experience was in favour of designating the kind of persons who would have the requisite experience and positions in the community which would make them as little likely as any other people to be partisan, and as much likely as possible to be objective. I am sure that is why Mr. Frost, when he recommended the establishment of the commission in Ontario, recommended that there should be a judge, the chief electoral officer and an eminent professor from Queen's University. We know what happened in Manitoba, where the law itself says who these people are to be.

When I spoke on March 10 I did not think that anyone could devise an amendment which would bring about the kind of situation which would enable parliament to prescribe the positions. Frankly I did not think it was possible.

Mr. Woolliams: When did you change your mind?

Mr. Pickersgill: I never changed my mind at all. My mind was made up on March 10 when I said that if we could find people who could be designated to do this task that would be the best way; but I said I did not see how we could do that unless, as the hon. member for Bow River said, we used federal civil servants. However, I knew what would be said if we tried to appoint federal civil servants. It would be said at once that they are under the control of their ministers.

I ask myself, if the bill is accepted in its present form and the Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition make these appointments, what classes of persons are going to be appointed? I have talked to the Prime Minister about this. I have not talked to the Leader of the Opposition about it, but I know that the Prime Minister does not relish the prospect of making these appointments, and I would be very surprised if the Leader of the Opposition would relish it either. I am sure he would do it as a duty, and do it well and conscientiously; and I have no doubt about the Prime Minister on that score. But I do not think it would be a tragedy—in fact, I would be quite content and would think we had done a pretty good job—if we were to pass this clause in its present form. Nevertheless I am bound to say that in my opinion the objections I raised on March 10, as reported at page 742 of Hansard and to which I referred this morning, to the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are in fact met by the proposed amendment, and for that reason I think the proposed amendment does fulfil precisely what I said was required on March 10. Perhaps I can read the words again:

> Frankly, sir, up to now this is the most satisfactory suggestion we have been able to think of for arriving at the composition of these commissions—

That is, what is in the bill now.

—but I hasten to say again that if anyone in any quarter of the house can produce a better method we have an open mind. It is, I say once more, not the special responsibility of the government but the responsibility of all of us to do this in the best possible way.

Now, sir, I have been asked for my opinion, but I thought it would be wrong to give it in light of that statement until I had heard all the arguments. I have been sitting here the whole time and listening most attentively to the arguments made. Some have been very interesting and persuasive, particularly that of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who talked very eloquently, I thought, about parliament in words with which in the main I could not disagree. But I have not been convinced by the arguments that have been made that my authorship is in fact as good as the amendment that is being suggested, although I think it is pretty good.

An hon. Member: We prefer yours.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the house decided to accept the bill in its present form I would not waste any tears on the amendment. In fact, I would have a certain amount of satisfaction, but I really do believe we would have a better act with this amendment. Because all those in the country are not Liberals and Conservatives, because all those in the country perhaps have not got the same highminded view of the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister as those of us in the house have, I think there would be a greater degree of general confidence in the commissions if we were to accept the amendment that has been proposed than if we were to take the bill in its present form. For that reason I am disposed to support the amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask the minister a question in order to keep the historical record correct? He referred to the bill brought in by the preceding government and pointed out that the appointments were to be made by order in council. Was it not stated in the house that on second reading of the bill there would be a statement made as to the nominees proposed to be appointed by the government, so that it would not be a matter of blind appointments by the cabinet but rather a matter of record before the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there was any intention on the part of the previous government to put anything over at all, but I think the hon. gentleman by his contribution has just illustrated the point that I think has been illustrated by the debate this afternoon. Once in a while we have had a little fun, but most of the time it has been as good and as serious a debate as I have heard in the house for quite a long time. I think this illustrates very well what the Minister of Justice said, that we can be proud that when we are in committee on an important question like this we do bend our minds to it, that we do try, if we can, to improve the legislation and that we are not hidebound and we do not think that what we put in a bill is the last word.

Sometimes there are matters of policy on which a government must stand or fall, but I have made it very clear from the beginning and the Leader of the Opposition commended me for it, that the only thing that was sacrosanct to the government in the bill was that we should establish impartial commissions outside of parliament to do this job, but that the detail, the organization, the arrangements, depended on the house and did not and were not going to depend on the government. That is the position I have taken throughout and that is the position I intend to take throughout. I do thank the committee and I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for not seeing the clock.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether I might be permitted one quick question? Since there is an obvious division among all members of the house as to their views on the bill, can the minister say whether the members of his party are going to be permitted a free vote on the matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: We are all free people in a free country and thank God for that.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PROVINCIAL LOTTERIES

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-22, to amend the Criminal Code (provincial lotteries).

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to introduce a bill to amend the Criminal Code so as to allow the provinces that might wish to do so to establish a system of provincial lotteries designed to assist hospitals and social welfare organizations under provincial jurisdiction.

In previous debates, as we know, everything was said about provincial lotteries. The bill I am presenting today is identical in every respect to the one I had the honour to introduce last year. It is a very simple bill, for its sole purpose is to amend section 179 of the Criminal Code in order to authorize the provinces, so desiring, to legislate in matters of provincial lotteries. At this point, I should like to remind the house of the position taken by members of the official opposition when the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien) introduced Bill No. C-2, to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act so that the name "Air Canada" could be officially recognized. On that occasion, you will remember that all members of the opposition co-operated with the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche and readily accepted the amendment.

Now, last year, when I introduced a bill which was substantially the same as this one, all members of the various parties in this house agreed with the intent and purpose of Bill No. C-22.

May I be allowed to read into the record some quotations to that effect, so as to prove that the stand taken by the members of the house seemed quite sympathetic to the bill I was introducing at that time.

As recorded on page 4302 of Hansard for November 1, 1963, the Liberal member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) had this to say:

> No member on this side of the house has any intention of filibustering this bill.

He was speaking of the bill introduced by me.

Further on, he stated:

> I am 100 percent in favour of the bill introduced by the hon. member for St. Mary.

Now, I presume the hon. member for York-Humber spoke on that occasion on behalf of the Liberal party and that this party would therefore be prepared to support the motion I am introducing today.

The hon. member said also, as recorded on page 4305 of Hansard for November 1, 1963:

> I believe that this opportunity also should be given to the Canadian people as well as that of buying lottery tickets which would be legalized by the bill of the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade).

Later on, as recorded on the same page, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), on behalf of his party, introduced a motion requesting the house to decide by a vote of the fate of that bill.

Afterwards, in the course of the debate, I note that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) also introduced a bill identical to the one I am introducing this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as unanimity seems to prevail on this bill, I would invite the house to vote and to take a stand officially and according to the opinions expressed by members of each of the parties on the 1st of November, last year.

I hope the few government members present today in the house will not use their time to unduly delay the passage of this bill, as all of them have expressed their opinion, for or against such a measure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as Bill No. C-22, which I have the honour to introduce today, is identical to Bill No. C-36, which I submitted on November 1, 1963, and as all other parties came out in favour of that bill, I am certain that any further discussion would only have the effect of preventing the passage of this bill.

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Winkler, that the question be now put.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for St. Mary moves that the question be now put. I apologize to the house, the hon. member is moving a previous question on his own motion.

Mr. Valade: I think the Speaker should read the motion I put, just to be clear.

Mr. Winch: Is it not very unusual for a member who moved a motion to sit down and then move the previous question? I think it is completely out of order. I have no objection to it, but I think it is out of order.

Mr. Valade: I think this question is not a debatable one and should be put by the Chair.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member is wrong on both counts. It would be debatable, but he is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I would have to rule that the hon. member for St. Mary already has a motion before the house and therefore is out of order in moving the previous question.

Mr. Valade: I ask that the question be now put.

Mr. Winch: This is my point. I understand that the hon. member has moved the motion which is now before the house and he is therefore, the mover of a substantive motion. As the mover of a motion he cannot, after moving that motion, at the conclusion of his speech move that debate end and that the question be now put. He cannot have two motions before the house at the same time.

Mr. Valade: If I may speak to the point of order I would ask, if the house consents, to withdraw my motion and that the question be put.

Mr. Winch: If the hon. member withdraws his motion, his motion is no longer before the house.

Mr. Valade: I think the hon. member from Vancouver East is confusing things. I withdraw the motion that the matter be discussed and I ask that the question be put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I am not quite clear what the hon. member for St. Mary wants done. He is not able to withdraw the second motion he made because it has not been put. If he wants the previous question moved, he would not be able to move that motion because he already has a motion before the house.

Mr. Valade: If my motion is out of order, then the house does not consider the motion and certainly I have the right to ask that the question be put.

Mr. Knowles: Provided no one else wants to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Mr. Valade: If I may speak to the point of order, I think the Speaker should put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member has moved the previous question. If I understand the hon. member correctly, and this is what he has done, I should point out to him that most authorities state that moving the previous question does not preclude debate on the original motion.

Mr. Valade: I think the ruling is not clear to me. If Your Honour has just made a ruling that my motion is out of order then it is not proceeded with. If it is not proceeded with, I then ask that the question be put. I think the Speaker should ask whether or not the question should be put.

Mr. Winch: I do not want to get confused after all these years in parliament. It is my understanding that the hon. member has moved a motion and spoken to it. His motion has to do with the Criminal Code and provincial lotteries. Surely, sir, in a parliamentary democracy no one can move a motion and then, as soon as he has made his speech, move that the question be now put. Surely the hon. member has one of two alternatives. He may move his motion, allow it to be debated and if nobody wants to speak then it is automatically put. However, if he moves his motion and then, after having made his speech, moves that the question be now put, that is a denial of parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Valade: I am not going to get into a row with the hon. member for Vancouver East who is a specialist on these things. The motion that the question be now put leaves room for discussion as to whether or not the question should be put. On the assumption that the Chair has not accepted my motion, then the Speaker puts the question to the house, shall the question be now put? Some hon. members in this house can then talk about this. There is no dictatorship such as the N.D.P. are used to in this house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I hope I have not misunderstood the hon. member for St. Mary. I should like to begin at the beginning to see if we can get this thing straightened out. The hon. member for St. Mary moved the second reading of his bill and then, if I understand him correctly, he moved the previous question. I do not believe he is permitted to move the previous question since he already has a motion before the house.

However, even if he were permitted to move the previous question, the moving of the previous question does not preclude debate on the original motion. Even though some other member may want to move that motion, other members in the house still have the right to speak, not only on the motion that the question be now put, but also on the motion for second reading of this bill. I would, therefore, have to recognize the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that, for once, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) decided to be brief, in order to enable other hon. members to voice their opinion on a matter which is of interest to quite a few.

On the other hand, because of his many points of order, the hon. member may have taken more time to expound his views, than he would have under ordinary circumstances, and he may be chiefly responsible for the motion for second reading of his bill not being passed this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned a few moments ago the co-operation given by non-members when Bill No. C-2 was introduced—

Mr. Caouette: C-22.

Mr. Laniel: No, no. I am speaking of Bill No. C-2 introduced by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien) with regard to Air Canada.

I should point out to the hon. member that Bill No. C-2 concerned the management of a crown corporation, whereas the bill now before us contains an amendment to the Criminal Code so as to authorize the various provinces to establish lotteries.

Mr. Speaker, I think that before putting the question it is important that this matter be fully examined, and that we consider the possibility of initiating negotiations or continuing consultations with the provinces.

The hon. member for St. Mary often boasts of being a great autonomist. This afternoon, he is standing up for Mr. Lesage, but when he introduced his bill last year—

Mr. Valade: We are not standing up for Mr. Lesage, we are standing up for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Laniel: —he brought up the question of provincial politics. He was then even somewhat scolded by the Speaker. This year, however, he is not saying a word; he wants his motion to be passed without a word being said; in short, he does not want anybody to express an opinion.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I know that the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry would like to get me into an argument; however, when he suggests that I tried to prevent discussion of the bill, I believe that perhaps he did not quite mean what he said.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) is disagreeing with something said by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel). On such an occasion there are two possibilities open to the hon. member for St. Mary. When the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry has completed his remarks he can, of course, ask the unanimous consent of the house to speak again, although that would not be necessary on this occasion since he, having moved the motion for second reading, still has an opportunity to speak when he winds up second reading of the bill.

I would not be able to accept the view that for one hon. member to disagree with what another hon. member is saying constitutes a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: With due regard to Your Honour, I was on a question of privilege. My point was that the hon. member who has the floor has accused me of wanting to foreclose the debate, an allegation which is not true. I question the merit of this accusation, and point out that I do not intend to foreclose the debate. I merely said that I wanted a short debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I said that the hon. member for St. Mary had prevented other members from speaking, let us say that I did not want to suggest that such was his intention, but that he was acting as if it were.

Mr. Caouette: That does not make much sense.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and I am pleased to welcome him in this house, especially as I note that there are very few members of his party, who however, have always been in favour of this bill—

Mr. Choquette: He has been away for two months.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hear the hon. member for Lotbiniere say that I have been away for two months.

An hon. Member: Two weeks.

Mr. Caouette: That was a king-size lie, and for the information of the house, I may say that I was away exactly five days for strictly personal reasons, which do not concern the hon. member in the least.

To refer to the unkind remarks by the hon. member who has the floor now, or rather who had it before I intervened, I may say that the hon. member is neither logical, nor honest in his statements. He said that there are not many of us in this house, but if he counts the hon. members now in their seats on the Liberal side, that is on the government side, he will realize that the proportion is much more substantial on my side than on his.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Villeneuve just made some malignant remarks. The House of Commons standing order No. 12 states that the Chair shall preserve order and decorum. Well, Mr. Speaker, when an hon. member uses words like the ones we just heard, that is:

That was a king-size lie—

And when he charges an hon. member with not being honest, that is unparliamentary language departing from the decorum in this house.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I should like to point out that the proportion—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must point out that both members are out of order. Hon. members should not interrupt the hon. member who now has the floor, and I would hope the house would permit the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry to complete his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: You are a clown.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for St. Mary to repeat what he just said before the house, so that I can hear—

Mr. Valade: I said you were nothing but a clown.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I am sure that hon. members realize this procedure is quite irregular. The hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry has the floor and, under the rules of this chamber, he has the right to make his speech without being interrupted. I would ask the house to observe the rules we normally follow in debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to have the floor again and, as you pointed out, I hope that the interruptions which cut into my time will be taken into consideration. What beautiful things indeed were said during those few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I resume my remarks, or rather I start by saying that I am happy to take part in this debate and to state here publicly that I support the bill presented by the hon. member for St. Mary.

Mr. Valade: Seriously?

Mr. Laniel: In my opinion, the people of Canada are more and more in favour of seeing such a bill adopted. I feel, besides, that it would do justice to all Canadians and that all charitable associations could benefit from it.

Right now, throughout the country, a great number of people buy lottery tickets, a great number—though possibly slightly fewer—get something out of them and win prizes.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that the Criminal Code be amended to legalize something which is already being done throughout the country. Each year, the names of those who win thousands of dollars are even published in the papers and it is obvious that law-enforcing agencies are not doing their duty since they do not interfere and apply the law.

Mr. Speaker, everywhere in Canada there are draws and radio contests which benefit some of the participants. I fail to see why there should be two yardsticks, and why it should be honest, fine and appropriate to encourage parish work by buying tickets for a draw, by attending bingos or by participating in all kinds of contests, while Canadians are denied the right to take part in national or provincial lotteries.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, we must all the same ask ourselves whether such a lottery should be on a national or a provincial scale. Personally, I wholeheartedly support the principle of Bill No. C-22 and I feel that the setting up of such a lottery should be left to the discretion of provincial authorities who would take charge of its organization for the benefit of provincial institutions.

Mr. Valade: Are you ready for the question?

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, several points would have to be considered. First, as I said earlier, after discussing the matter with the provinces—and I ask the hon. member for St. Mary to note that we are going through a transition period at present where a dialogue is actually taking place between the provinces. Monday morning the whole country might be happy to realize that our Prime Minister has understood the problem of every state and province—

Mr. Valade: He was slow on the uptake.

Mr. Girouard: Not too fast, not too fast.

Mr. Laniel: All this would lead to a worthwhile dialogue which would strengthen our confederation.

Speaking about lotteries, I do not see why we should ignore our provincial governments since they would be the first to be involved and since some technicalities would have to be considered.

It would be necessary to determine, for example, whether the winners would be liable to income tax and whether that income tax would be levied by the provincial, or the federal government, or by both?

It will also be necessary to provide—I do not wish to refer to a bill already appearing on the order paper and which bears number C-19—but just the same, from that point of view, I think that Bill No. C-19 goes farther than Bill No. C-22; because legislation should provide for the setting up of such provincial lotteries.

Would the provincial government have full control? Would provinces be free to sell lottery tickets in other provinces which are not interested in organizing one themselves?

In short, Mr. Speaker, it is a quite important question of concern to all Canadians. It has the unrestricted support of 80 to 90 per cent of the associations and people of this country. In my opinion, this government ought to study this matter thoroughly and look for a solution in order to introduce during a coming session legislation which would greatly benefit our charitable institutions and might even extend to universities.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, may I say that the hon. member for St. Mary does not have to worry. I hope that before long we will be able to rejoice together because the Liberal government will adopt legislation along this line, even if on the other side of the house it is called a surrender or a somersault. But we must nevertheless look for the real solution to our problems, and we want all Canadians to work in the same spirit for a greater and stronger Canada.

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Laniel: By all means.

[Text]

Mr. Valade: I asked the hon. member if he would permit me to ask a question and, as his time has not expired, and the hon. member has accepted, I wonder if the Chair would authorize it?

[Translation]

Does the hon. member realize that the bill is quite simple, that it involves no restrictive clauses, nor technicalities? It is only a question of asserting a principle and of allowing provincial lotteries. It is as simple as that. Are you ready to vote in favour of the bill or not?

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member tell us whether he has consulted the various ministers of every province before introducing his bill?

Mr. Valade: I am not sure whether I am allowed to answer, but I must say that during the federal-provincial conference held last year, I sent a letter to the Quebec premier, Mr. Lesage, on this matter—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. gentleman is not permitted to make any reply. He has already made his remarks. I must now recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: I thank the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) for the remarkable courtesy he showed me I shall deal right away with the question asked by the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, that is whether other provinces have been consulted or whether he is ready to vote in favour of a bill such as the one now before the house, Bill No. C-22.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the question of lotteries should have been settled long ago, that the province of Quebec, as well as other Canadian provinces, should have been granted the privilege of setting up lotteries within its territory in order to provide assistance to various organizations, such as hospitals and other social welfare agencies coming under provincial jurisdiction.

In Quebec, as in other provinces bingo games, a kind of lottery, are played in order to assist parish organizations, charitable organizations and organizations set up to help the whole population or for some charitable purpose.

Bill No. C-22 is quite clear, and the hon. member for St. Mary was right to point that out a moment ago.

When we read paragraph 1 of that bill, in fact, there is only one—

Mr. Valade: It is still too difficult for the Grits.

Mr. Caouette: —we find this:

—a lottery organized and operated by a provincial government to provide financial assistance to hospitals or for other social welfare purposes under provincial jurisdiction.

The hon. member for St. Mary deserves congratulations for having introduced such a bill in the house. His bill is logical in all respects.

I do not think that anybody will agree—and the hon. member who just took his seat, the hon. member for Salaberry—

An hon. Member: Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Mr. Caouette: —agrees that the bill, pardon me, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry—will agree that the bill is logical. I am convinced that his colleagues in the Liberal party, on the government side, also accept that point of view.

But the question that immediately comes to mind is this one: Why, a year ago or so, when the Conservatives were in office, sitting on your right, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Mary did not introduce the same bill he would like to have passed today by the Liberal government, blaming that government for not being prepared to go ahead and allow the provinces to provide financial assistance to charitable agencies, provincial hospitals, and so forth? Why did he not take any action at that time?

As I said time and time again it is strange that when they sit in opposition, they feel they have abilities of which they are deprived as soon as they come into office.

Last year, the Liberals found themselves in the same position, the same circumstances. This year, we have the Conservatives in the Liberals' place. The roles are changed.

A while ago, I heard the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry ask himself and ask—

Mr. Valade: He did not say much.

Mr. Caouette: I can see why the hon. member for St. Mary should tell me that the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry did not say much. Be that as it may, last year, it was the hon. member for St. Mary who was not saying much.

Mr. Valade: Have you not read the speeches I made on the subject?

Mr. Caouette: The roles are changed. This year, now that he is in the opposition, he can show more courage.

When he was a member on the government side, he did not say a word about this matter. He kept absolutely quiet on the subject; I know, because I was in the house at that time—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: There certainly is, and the reason I am rising on a question of privilege is this: the member for Villeneuve is again making a false statement in saying that I did not look after this matter when I was a member on the government side; that is not true. He only has to look at the record to find that my name appears more often than his when he was a member of the house—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must again point out to the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) that disagreeing with any statement made by an hon. member is not necessarily a point of privilege. I would again point out that when the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has finished his remarks, if the hon. member for St. Mary wishes to rise and make an explanation, with the consent of the house he is of course permitted to do that.

Mr. Valade: But they will not give me time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): But it is not permitted to interrupt an hon. member who is making his speech. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The interruptions—

Mr. Valade: That is an old trick.

Mr. Caouette: The vitriolic interruptions of the hon. member for St. Mary do not frighten me at all. He says that he was more active than we were when he was on the government side, but we just have to look up the Hansard index or Hansard itself to realize the difference between the numerous interventions of the group I represent in the house and the ones he made.

Mr. Valade: There were none in 1958.

Mr. Caouette: But there were some in 1962, and the hon. member was nearly replaced by a Social Credit member in his own riding—

Mr. Valade: The Social Credit candidate lost his deposit.

Mr. Caouette: —he better sit down quietly if he does not want to be rebuffed, and then everything will be settled to the general satisfaction.

Mr. Valade: He lost his deposit.

Mr. Caouette: As the hon. member will probably lose his own in the next general election.

Mr. Valade: You can come into my riding.

Mr. Caouette: I can go into St. Mary, for we have many friends there, and friends who are more sincere than those he has in his own riding.

Mr. Speaker, I heard earlier the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) ask us how these provincial lotteries would be set up. We simply have to consider the possibility of authorizing the provinces to hold these lotteries in order to assist certain organizations and I do not think that it is necessary at this time for the federal government or any member of this house, to interfere with or to find out how the provinces, Quebec as well as the others, will set up those lotteries within their boundaries. We do not have to be concerned with the way the provinces will sell tickets.

Would Quebec sell tickets in Ontario and would Ontario do the same in Quebec? Those questions do not come under federal jurisdiction. We buy in Canada lottery tickets from Ireland, England and various other countries, and we hear every two or three months that a Canadian won first prize and will get $100,000, $150,000, $50,000 or whatever. It seems to me that is none of our business. If the Irish and the English are selling tickets in our country now, why should not the province of Quebec sell tickets in Ontario, Manitoba or the maritime provinces?

Mr. Speaker, the main question is to find out if the federal government should give the provinces the right to set up lotteries.

We have seen in the province of Quebec—because we are used to it—members of the provincial police interfere in some parishes, some localities, saying that the parish priest or the parish had no right to organize a bingo game. And yet the officials of a hockey club, a branch of the Knights of Columbus, a parish organization or a branch of the St. Jean Baptiste society were allowed to hold a monster bingo night in many parishes of Quebec, although federal legislation expressly forbids it.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the provinces should be free to hold bingos and lotteries so that, in the future, provincial police will have no reason to say that the federal law prohibits gambling.

Let the provinces be free to act according to their conscience, according to their needs, and organize their own business without federal interference.

I fully support the bill introduced by the hon. member for St. Mary from that standpoint and I sincerely hope that it will be put to a vote before six o'clock.

I should like to conclude by saying to present Conservative members that when the provinces, especially the province of Quebec, asked such an authorization four or five years ago, the Conservatives who were then in office should have acceded to their request. Today, the hon. member for St. Mary blames the government for its failure to accept this proposal, whereas his own party took no action along that line when it was in office. Such an attitude seems to me inconsistent with the present situation.

Nevertheless, I support this measure and I congratulate the hon. member for having introduced it. I do not wish to detain the house any longer, as I wish hon. members to be able to vote on this motion, so that the provinces will have the power to organize, within their own jurisdiction and by means of logical and honest methods, the necessary ways to give assistance to hospitals, benevolent and welfare organizations, which would help the people concerned as a whole.

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I very much like to see these private members' resolutions come to a vote and not be talked out, and for that reason I am going to try to compress my remarks into about three or four minutes. I would like to say at the outset that what I have to say is purely my own; in this respect I speak for no party, no church, no other organization. I may be a minority of one, for all I know. I want to speak on this matter and when the opportunity to vote comes, as I hope it will, I intend to vote against the bill that is now before the house.

I do not believe that lotteries are a useful or worth-while means of raising money either for hospitals or any other purpose. I think the prohibition in the Criminal Code was based on a very sound social philosophy.

I am not prepared, Mr. Speaker, to make a reasoned argument on this matter, but I have received material from the Canadian council of churches and other organizations which have given a close and careful study to the question of lotteries. Of course we all want to see hospitals collect the necessary money to run them as successful operations, and to some people lotteries seem a harmless and good way of raising that money. They see nothing wrong with lotteries. But in actual fact lotteries as has been discovered over the years, are thoroughly wasteful from the social point of view. A large amount of money is usually siphoned off to the promoters of the lotteries, and when you try to arouse the cupidity and interest of the people to give money to hospitals, you have to give them large awards which usually do them no good.

If you studied the experience of those who win large amounts in lotteries you would find that most of them thought originally that a wonderful opportunity had come to them, but later found instead that they had become the victims of shady salesmen, were harried to death and did not get any happiness from their win. Quite apart from that it is a redistribution of money which is not based on any logical or sensible foundation.

In the past many valuable institutions have been built from the proceeds of lotteries. For example, the British museum and Harvard University were assisted through moneys from lotteries. In course of time it was found that these lotteries were a means of siphoning off money spent by people who could not afford it but were excited by their expectations of vast gain, and whose contributions to the lottery had actually added to their poverty and misery.

I listened to the, as usual, eloquent remarks of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who has just spoken, and if anyone could persuade me on this I think he could; but I think that he is wrong in suggesting that this is a provincial matter. This is essentially a matter for the Criminal Code of Canada. We may disagree about whether or not we should have lotteries, but it is not a matter for the provinces. This is a decision for us and I hope that when we make it we will decide it on the basis of sound wisdom. I know that many people in my own constituency do not agree with my views, but after all we must all stand up for what we believe in. I accept the view of many other wise people who have studied the matter, and who have suggested that lotteries are not the right method to achieve the good purpose in mind in this bill.

I will sit down now, so that we can either come to a vote or someone other than myself will have the opportunity to talk it out.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I must first register a protest against the hon. members for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), and Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who have just stated that the bill is going to be talked out.

I have been here only one year and never have I had the opportunity to voice my opinion on this question. I am glad to be able to do so at this time, considering that the hon. member for Villeneuve sat in the house in 1946 and again in 1962. As for the hon. member for St. Mary he has been here for years. Consequently, since they have already expressed their feelings on that matter, why did they not refrain from speaking so as to give new members like myself a chance to say what they think?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Considering the nature of the remarks he has just made, why does the hon. member for Lotbiniere not abstain from speaking on the bill now since he accuses others of having taken too much time?

Mr. Valade: Because he wants to talk out the bill.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I will not refrain from speaking, because this is the first opportunity I have to express my opinion on this question.

The hon. member for Villeneuve has been able to do so on many instances and today he had a fine chance to remain seated. However, since he is fond of talking for nothing, he kept right on going. Like the hon. member for St. Mary, he is one of those who are doing some filibustering and who are going to prevent the passage of the bill.

It is also because of the childish points of order raised by the hon. member for St. Mary that the house will be unable to proceed to the vote on this matter.

Now, here is what I want to say, though I have only a few minutes left.

Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the hon. member for St. Mary made a wrong comparison when he suggested that there was an analogy between the matter now under discussion and the bill concerning Air Canada.

If the Air Canada issue was settled most easily and without any opposition through the co-operation of all parties, it was because a higher principle was at stake, endorsed by all Canadian citizens of good will, i.e., the consideration of bilingualism in this country.

For that reason the Air Canada bill was passed extremely quickly and easily.

The hon. member for Villeneuve said a short while ago that, whatever way the provinces will organize their lotteries, it is not up to us federal members to look into the matter.

Now, first of all I would point out to the hon. member for Villeneuve that the Criminal Code is under federal jurisdiction—

Mr. Caouette: Amend it.

Mr. Choquette: When it comes to amending the Criminal Code, any member has not only the right, but the specific and imperative duty to know how it is to be amended. And to answer to the hon. member—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to complete my remarks—

Mr. Caouette: It is six o'clock.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Could we give the last word to the acting house leader: Monday and Tuesday a supply motion?

Mr. MacNaught: On Monday and Tuesday there will be a motion to go into supply.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 20, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING TAX SHARING, PENSION PLAN, ETC.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, in English and in French, the text of a letter which I sent last Thursday to the premiers of all the provinces. I would ask that the text be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard, if that is agreeable to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of letter referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Pearson: Because of the importance of the subjects dealt with in this letter I would like to make a statement summarizing the text of the letter and the government's position in regard to them.

The first subject I would like to mention, and which is dealt with in the letter in question, is our tax sharing arrangements with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, this government came into office sharing the view, which at times has been expressed very emphatically by all provincial governments, that the existing arrangements in this field are inadequate. These arrangements, it will be remembered, were made in 1961, for a five year period which ends in March, 1967.

There were, in our view, two ways in which these arrangements needed improvement. First, we felt they did not provide for a proper degree of equalization of provincial revenues from the shared fields. Such equalization is essential if all the provinces are to have not merely the right but the ability to provide a Canadian standard of services in the matters within their jurisdiction.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, at the conference last November it was arranged that a new equalization formula would come into effect for the current financial year. At the same time, at that conference we increased from 50 per cent to 75 per cent the federal abatement of succession duties, in order to provide some increase in the share of revenues available to all the provinces.

The effect of these two charges was to cut federal revenues this year by some $87 million. We made it plain at that time that this was as large a change as we could regard as practicable during the year 1964-65. We also made it plain, however, that we recognized the increasing burden that is falling on the provinces because of the cost of the services which it is their constitutional duty to provide to their people. This is especially true of education, and we fully agree with those who say that in the disposition of public revenues as a whole the increasing needs of education merit a very high priority indeed.

At the recent conference in Quebec city, therefore we made, as already indicated to the house, a novel proposal. We suggested that the federal-provincial conference as a body—not the governments separately—should authorize a review of the tax structure in relation to the financial responsibilities of governments and the priorities given to their expenditures. I think this has been recognized as a constructive way in which to handle a most difficult problem, a problem which has faced us in one form or another ever since confederation and which, I suggest, is inherent in the federal nature of our constitution. But, of course, we all recognize that such a review will achieve its purpose only if it is thorough and, in particular, if it takes account of the various taxation inquiries which are already under way—and some of them are very near completion—both federally and provincially.

The provincial governments recognize—I would say all of them—the value of this inquiry, but they made it plain that they would like to know how they stand in the meantime pending the completion of this inquiry, and we agreed with that. Therefore, in the light of the discussions in Quebec, the federal cabinet reviewed this matter of tax sharing as we indicated to the conference we would do, and it was decided that we should tell the provinces now what we mean when we say we recognize their increasing needs, especially in the field of education. We mean that under the existing tax sharing arrangements, which have two more years to run after the present fiscal year, we are willing to reduce the federal personal income tax at an accelerated rate.

Arrangements at present provide that the rebate of federal taxes which, of course, creates room for provincial taxes, is 18 per cent this year and will rise by one point to 19 per cent next year and 20 per cent in the final year. My letter to the provinces which has now been tabled announces that this acceleration will be increased to 3 points a year; that is, the rebate will rise next year not to 19 per cent but to 21 per cent, and in 1966 it will rise further to 24 per cent instead of 20 per cent. There will, of course, be a corresponding increase in equalization payments to the provinces, and these payments will be based on the formula proposed for this year; but the level of taxes to which the formula is applied will be bigger, of course, to the extent I have described. On the basis of current tax yields it is estimated that the increased rebate and higher equalization payments will mean next year a reduction of some $60 million in net federal revenue which will have to be recouped from some other source of taxation.

The detailed figures that I give now are estimates subject to some revision on which work is presently in hand. However, in round figures the extra revenue and equalization payments to individual provinces will be as follows. This is for the year in which this change takes place, the next financial year: Newfoundland, $1.5 million; Prince Edward Island, $300,000; Nova Scotia, $2.4 million; New Brunswick, $2 million; Quebec, $17.6 million; Ontario, $21.2 million; Manitoba, $3 million; Saskatchewan, $3 million; Alberta, somewhat under $4 million; and British Columbia, about $5 million.

That, Mr. Speaker, would be the effect of the extra 2 per cent next year. The further 2 per cent the following year will, of course, have a similar and further effect. I do not need to point out that this further sacrifice of federal revenue from these fields is substantial. Indeed, added to the $87 million for this year which we announced in November and which I have already mentioned, it means that by 1966-67 this government will have reduced its taxes, in favour of the provinces, by more than $200 million a year. We are making that reduction because we believe it is in the interests of the Canadian people as a whole. We believe it is the way to serve the priority needs of the country, especially for education.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another subject which is dealt with in some detail in the letter which has been tabled. It is the subject of pensions. This government came to office almost a year ago with a three point pension program. We thought that the basic old age security pension should be raised to $75 at age 70. We wanted to ensure that this pension could be available from age 65, on a graduated basis, for those who need it before age 70. Third, we believed that there should be available, in addition to the flat rate pension, a contributory pension related to earnings and sufficient to provide a reasonable minimum of security for all Canadians, and to provide that minimum as soon as possible.

Pensions, as we know, are a field of jurisdiction shared with the provinces under our constitution. We knew as a government that we could achieve a national standard in pensions, which is obviously desirable, only with the agreement of the provinces. We also knew, however, that we could not make early progress in this matter by talking in generalities. Our predecessors, it will be remembered, had raised with the provinces the question of a further constitutional amendment which is required for a plan providing survivor benefits. The province of Quebec had replied at that time, and reasonably enough, that it would want first to know what the pension plan was; and Ontario had meantime proceeded with legislation of its own regulating private pensions. We therefore decided that the way to get progress was to provide a definite basis for discussion with the provinces. We did that last July, and public discussion of various kinds has been under way ever since.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: We could, of course, have done more of the work confidentially and secretly; "in the back room", to borrow a phrase used last week in the legislature at Queen's park by the premier of Ontario. I was glad to note from these remarks of the premier of Ontario that he shared my view that more open methods are better. They enable public opinion to be better informed on the basis of specifics rather than generalities, and public opinion to be brought more fully to bear on the eventual result.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not apologize at all for the fact that this procedure has involved several changes in the details of our proposals. The fundamentals have never changed. We have adjusted the details in a constant attempt to get the best possible pension arrangement which could work for all Canadians.

Mr. Woolliams: Trial and error.

Mr. Pearson: Better trial and error than no trial at all.

Mr. Nowlan: This is all error and no trial.

Mr. Pearson: Trial and error and eventual success is better than five years of no attempt.

When Quebec decided to set up its own plan we made some adjustments so that our proposals could operate beside Quebec's. That was in September. In subsequent discussions Ontario expressed some fear about the effect of our proposals on private plans. Accordingly, in January, to meet this and certain other preoccupations of the provinces—we had consulted the provinces about this—we revised our proposals in order to meet this fear as fully as we could without compromising the features of a public plan which we regarded as fundamental.

At the Quebec city conference the government of Quebec made known for the first time to the provinces and to ourselves the details of the plan which it had meantime been preparing. We and the provinces found that it was less different from the federal plan than had at one time seemed likely. That fact, Mr. Speaker, revived in the government the hope that after all we could devise a plan which would meet the requirements of all the provinces, especially in the matter of providing funds for provincial investments, a plan which would still be the same for all Canadians from coast to coast. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, immediately after the Quebec conference I undertook discussions with Quebec to see whether, now that the two plans were before us in detail, we could find one plan which would achieve the purposes of both, and I am very happy to report that we have succeeded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: This took a good deal of work, patience, understanding and negotiation. The proposal set out in my letter to all the premiers is a proposal in which the government of Quebec concurs. It has been achieved by finding the best common ground in the only two plans before the country, the federal plan and the Quebec plan. There is no question of Quebec accepting our plan or of the federal government accepting Quebec's plan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Hon. members may laugh, but the fact is that in our negotiations we have found a common ground between the two plans, and this is how we should work at our negotiations with the provinces. We have found a common ground which takes into consideration certain views expressed by other provinces than Quebec, a common ground which we are confident will appeal to all the other provinces as well.

This means, Mr. Speaker, and I am very proud and happy to be able to say this in the House of Commons, that there can now be one pension plan which will be the same in all of Canada. In Quebec, and in any other province which so wishes, the provincial government can collect the contributions, invest the funds, pay the benefits and administer the plan in that province, but they will be the same contributions and the same benefits everywhere throughout the country. The legitimate rights and interests of the provinces will be met, but the Canadian people's interest in a pension system which is the same wherever they live will be fully served.

That is the proposal that we are now able to put to all the provinces. I believe this is a real achievement which would not have been possible so soon and might not have been possible at all if we had not handled this problem in the way we have, if we had not been prepared to bring public opinion to bear on concrete proposals, not by sitting back talking privately to provinces about something that might be done in the future, which was the procedure followed by my hon. friends. And, Mr. Speaker, if this means putting forward a concrete plan for discussion and then making necessary changes as a result of that discussion to make this plan acceptable to very province in this country, I am quite happy to proceed in that direction.

I am not going to take the time now on the details of these pension proposals which are set out in the letter. I should like to express my appreciation of the co-operation there has been, and my belief that the spirit of co-operation among all the provinces will enable us to bring this matter to a conclusion that will greatly serve the whole of Canada.

May I conclude this reference to the pension plan by quoting, because it is very pertinent to this matter, some remarks made by the premier of Ontario in the legislature at Queen's park last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I am glad my hon. friends opposite applaud the reference to the premier of Ontario in this regard because this is what he said, having been twitted in the house that he was changing his mind on these things, that he was not following a set course, that he was chopping and changing and perhaps even making somersaults. Having been twitted on that score he replied in regard to pensions:

> It does not do to take rigid positions. If you do, then you destroy your chance of ever coming up with refinements and changes that in the final analysis will give us a better plan.

Two days earlier, I believe, he also had this to say in the legislature:

> Events in the field of pensions have been fast moving for many months. If this latest development can bring us closer in Canada to achieving a plan national in character, with the best possible benefits for our people containing safeguards to ensure security and a plan which can be approved by all the provinces, then the great efforts and frustrations of the last few months will have been justified.

I commend these very wise words to my hon. friends opposite.

I should like to refer briefly to three other matters that have been dealt with in our recent discussions and which are referred to in the letter which has just been tabled.

The federal government hopes to proceed shortly with legislation providing for the extension of family allowances to children who, either because they are not physically fit to work or because they attend school, remain dependant at the ages of 16 and 17. Because the province of Quebec, which in this respect is unique in our confederation, has an existing program of a similar nature covering the same age categories, these extended allowances will not be paid to Quebec residents. Instead, there will be a compensatory fiscal arrangement similar to that which exists in the case of university grants introduced by my right hon. friends opposite.

In the light of the comments made by provincial governments at the Quebec conference, the federal government intends to propose arrangements whereby guaranteed bank loans for university students would be available in each province up to a defined amount to students designated by such agency as the province authorizes. If any province prefers to rely on its own loan program, it will be able to receive equivalent compensation.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of shared cost programs, the government of Quebec has again indicated that while it wishes to exercise its constitutional jurisdiction, its constitutional right in these fields, it has no intention of dismantling the programs at present provided under cost sharing arrangements. We expect soon to enter into interim arrangements whereby Quebec or any other province—because all the provinces have the same right in this field—may carry out these programs and receive, instead of grants, an equivalent abatement of federal taxes. Longer term arrangements about the programs will be discussed later with the provinces as a whole.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say this. The government of Quebec, in its discussions with us during the past weeks, has made very clear its firm belief that the wishes of all Canadians can best be fulfilled within a federal structure. The government of Quebec has assured us it is resolutely determined that provincial rights should be exercised, not to the disruption but to the enhancement of the unity of Canada. That is also our faith and our determination. I am sure it is the faith and determination of all members in this house, and it is shared by all provincial governments. I believe that its validity is demonstrated in what I have been able to announce today. I hope it is a faith and a determination in which we can all go forward, irrespective of political differences in matters less fundamental to the country we are all here to serve.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Prime Minister when he spoke of the unity of Canada and the contribution that the plans now offered will make to that end, I could not but conclude, as he smiled when he said certain things about the planning in the last few days, "Methinks he doth protest too much". As a matter of fact, it is difficult to recognize the views of today as expressed by the Prime Minister and those expressed during the election campaign of which he spoke last evening, when he indicated that while 60 days of decision had been promised, it was really a meaningless promise engendered by the enthusiasm of the election campaign and never meant to be carried into effect. This frank view on his part was in keeping with so many undertakings that were made by the Liberal party.

The record of the government in connection with the promises it made has been that many of these promises have been lost or have strayed. The government cannot pat itself on the back today for what it is doing, because if press reports mean anything this action on the part of the government is as voluntary as I am told shotgun marriages are. He spoke of the leadership that had been given by this government, yet having regard to what we have learned in the last few days the leadership of the Prime Minister and those associated with him consisted of telling the premiers across Canada "Wait for me, fellows; where'er you lead, I shall follow."

I am going to deal in a very general way with what has been said today. I am going to refer to the questions in the order in which the Prime Minister referred to them, first that of dominion-provincial relations. It may be of no significance, but the absence of the Minister of Finance today does not pass unnoticed by the membership of the house. We have made it clear that we will support any action that will assure the provinces of a greater share of the tax dollar so they can carry out their legislative responsibilities under the constitution.

It is well to go back over the years and recall that in 1957 when we assumed the administration of the government of this country there was a five year agreement in effect with the provinces which provided for the provinces 10 per cent of the personal income tax, 9 per cent of the company income tax and 50 per cent of the succession duties. This agreement had five years to run, but we decided that it represented an injustice to the various provinces. While the agreement still had a lengthy period to run, we introduced legislation to increase the 10 per cent to 13 per cent. Then in 1961 a new agreement was brought into being which provided for a start at 15 per cent, which was to be increased by successive increases of 1 per cent to 20 per cent at the time of the expiry of the agreement.

It is well to review these stages, because it was the Conservative government which took the agreement in existence when we came into office and gave increases which we were in no way required to give to assure that confederation would operate through a proper discharge by the legislatures of their responsibilities.

In so far as the present plan is concerned, it represents a step forward in the direction which we took in two cases, one with an agreement already in effect and thereafter in the new agreement that is now in effect. However, it seems passing strange that all these things have come about in the course of a very few days since the federal-provincial conference, where the premiers not only did not receive hope but many of them left critical of the federal government.

Things have happened during the last few days. We read in the press that the premier of Quebec had expressed himself very definitely as to what he was going to do if the federal government defected. As a matter of interest, I seem to recall that in April 1963, on the Friday just before the general election, the premier of Quebec brought in a budget and at that time stated in effect that unless he got what he expected within a year, things would happen. He is to bring in another budget this Friday.

I would like to have heard these public discussions of which the Prime Minister has spoken in such soulful eloquence. I would like to have been present and to have heard the discussions between them. I am sure if Mr. Lesage could speak with freedom he would be able to tell us of queer sights that have not been seen at any time in the past. It is a strange thing, sir, that only two weeks ago the Prime Minister announced there was going to be an in depth examination by a committee set up by the conference; but now, before the committee has even begun its work, for some reason there is haste and change. The Prime Minister says he does not belong to that school that does not believe in change. Certainly no one has ever charged him with that and, because of the somersaults he and those associated with him have engaged in within the last few months, nobody ever will.

So far as the fiscal arrangements are concerned, there has been no prior consultation. We have always asked for consultation, which is the essence of confederation, before action is taken. We know that the Minister of Transport, and the chief co-ordinator, visited Quebec. Again we do not know what happened there, but it would be of tremendous interest to have a blow by blow account of that meeting which was marked by so much subsequent agreement.

We shall await the legislation. The extra assistance that is being given to the provinces will naturally bring pleasure to the provinces. It is significant that it is brought in only a couple of days before a provincial election in the province of Saskatchewan. That is another coincidence.

Earlier I mentioned that the Minister of Finance is not in his place in the house. I recall the words of the Prime Minister, and I am sure he recalls them too, which he delivered in Toronto on March 14 last to the district Liberal association, when he said:

> But seeing that poor Walter Gordon is going to bring in his budget on Monday, surely we can spare him just a moment of silent prayer.

Now, sir, I pass on to the last matter, and that is the question of pensions. There has been a tremendous metamorphosis in the pensions system. I recall last July 18 when the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced her pension plan. It was something the like of which had never been seen before. It was to be accepted as it was. It represented the quintessence of all the wisdom of all the social welfare people of the country. That was the first edition.

We in this party have stood throughout the years for a contributory, universal pension plan for Canadians. First we raised the old age pensions from the degradatory level at which they stood at $46 a month. We raised them immediately we came into office. We not only raised them, but we also had to pay the $6 which the Liberals so begrudgingly gave in the last hours of the St. Laurent administration. Having raised them to a level that at least assured the old age pensioners of some opportunity in life, we then proceeded with the next step to bring into effect a universal, contributory plan.

The Prime Minister tries to brush that aside by saying that we were not able to say what the plan was, and that therefore the province of Quebec would not consent. Well, sir, the only difference between us and them is this, that we did not present a plan to the provinces. We took the stand that that was our responsibility, but they had a plan which they have had to change, and the one they produced today bears very little resemblance to the one introduced last July, which was subsequently withdrawn, amended and further on reintroduced.

We believe in a plan that is adequate to meet the needs of all Canadians. But what about them? The Prime Minister speaks of consistency. First of all the Minister of National Health and Welfare said all the provinces must participate. Then the Prime Minister said "Well, if Quebec does not come in, we will still go ahead." A little later he said "But if Quebec and Ontario don't come in, it will be very difficult." Then when he concluded that that was to be the case, and he was entirely mistaken so far as Ontario was concerned, he still persisted in the view that even though Ontario and Quebec did not participate we would have a Canada pension plan.

Now, sir, what has happened? Again the veil is drawn. Amidst many luminescent words one thing we have not found out is what happened during the last few days, what happened since the conference, and what discussions took place. The Prime Minister says he believes in open diplomacy. Well, open diplomacy did not apply in connection with the discussions that took place and which resulted in this.

We in the opposition believe that the Quebec plan represented a great advance over the uncertain plan introduced by the federal government. We have taken that stand throughout. It was manifestly superior in many respects, and now the Prime Minister has produced a hybrid plan through the adoption of the Quebec plan, with the necessary modification that must be made of the plan that was previously produced, and that was given to us as though it were the law of the Medes and the Persians.

All we can say of the latest move by the Prime Minister is this. It has brought about the acceptance of principles which the government denied. We said all the provinces should participate. We said it would not be a national plan without such participation. We said Canadian unity would not be served by a plan such as the government had brought in unless changes were made. In this day of the expression "opting out", I can only say that no government in history has ever opted out of more plans and views placed before parliament in this connection in the last few months. A plan is placed before the house and then when there is criticism, with all the strength and unresilience of a reed they produce another. They bend. They opt out of what they previously declared to be essential features of a national plan. We had a plan embodied in the original bill. It was withdrawn and replaced by another; then withdrawn and replaced again. Yet the Prime Minister rises today after such an inept and bungling performance and says "Look at me." Consistency is not a jewel. But what parliament is entitled to have is a government plan, as was placed before parliament, not a series of plans dictated to it following the introduction of the first. There should have been consultation in advance and only then, after consultation, should the measure have been introduced.

As far as this plan is concerned, we have always been in favour of a national contributory plan and we shall continue to be in favour of such a plan. We think the present one, even in its latter form, is a better one than the government produced and placed before the house. We think, however, particularly as the government has said this is a much better plan than the one they previously had, that after this bill is introduced into the house it should have an early transfer to a committee of the house for further investigation, examination and improvement. That is our view. When I said "committee of the house" I meant to say a joint committee of both houses. We feel that such a committee is more necessary now than ever because we have before us a government which has already brought in one plan with fife and trumpet as if it were the greatest thing ever. Now they have retreated. They have retreated from the things they stood for, having tacitly admitted that their plans have been proven ineffective and inoperative and would have been a denial of Canadian unity.

We say that the bill now to be introduced—the summum bonum, as it were, of the collection of monstrosities which have already been before the house—should go before a committee. We shall give our support on the question of principle and we shall do our best to bring about any further changes which are necessary to ensure that Canadians in every part of the country may have the opportunity to benefit from a contributory pension in addition to a fair basic pension which has been adopted as part and parcel of the social security law of our country.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has made a statement to the house on four matters on each of which I should like to comment very briefly.

The first statement had to do with increased revenue to the provinces. I think that announcement will be welcomed by all members of the house and by the provinces of Canada, because the provinces have been facing an increasing demand for services in those fields which come under their jurisdiction. This has been particularly true with reference to education and the need for hospital accommodation, health services, welfare, and municipal services in respect of which municipal governments are looking increasingly to the provincial governments, and the provincial governments have reached the point where they can no longer assist the municipalities in the absence of some further sources of revenue.

Last fall the government made its first move in this direction by allocating an additional $87 million to become effective in this fiscal year, but it should be remembered that about half of that amount was given to one province, so the balance would not amount to a great deal when scattered over the other nine provinces. The Prime Minister announced today that the provinces are to be given an additional 2 per cent in personal income tax abatement commencing January 1, 1965, and another 2 per cent abatement commencing January 1, 1966. This will give the provinces very welcome relief in enabling them to find resources to meet their increasing responsibilities. It will certainly help. But I think we should not delude ourselves into thinking that the basic problem facing the provinces as they try to meet their legitimate responsibilities under our constitution does not still loom very large; a far more fundamental approach will have to be taken in order to solve it.

The second statement which the Prime Minister made has to do with the Canada pension plan and, as hon. members know, this is the third plan which has been outlined in this parliament. I make no mention of the plan outlined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 30, 1962 on a national hook-up, which I take to have been largely Liberal political window dressing not meant seriously as a plan for the people of Canada. But this is the third plan which has been before this house, and I do not quarrel with that. I still think that the plan which was submitted on July 18 last gave the participants greater benefits for the money they were to contribute than any plan which has been submitted since. However, that plan ran into difficulties. Some of the provincial premiers were concerned about the need for investment funds; and well they might, because the provinces have a serious problem in finding adequate funds both for resource development and for social capital.

Personally I do not favour looking to pension funds as a means of finding this capital. I think there are better and more equitable ways of finding investment capital. I think to use pension funds for investment purposes confronts the provinces or a federal government with two problems. The first is that the burden of raising those funds falls on the lower and middle income groups and this is not the place where we ought to be levying money for investment purposes. Second, I think there is a conflict of interest between those who want to use pension funds for industrial development and those who are concerned about protecting the investment of the beneficiaries. The latter have to be cautious and careful, while those who are thinking in terms of economic expansion have to be prepared to take some risks.

This is a conflict of interest which I think would seriously hamper the free use of pension funds for industrial development. I think the answer lies in having the federal government proceed to establish a Canada development fund to supply the necessary capital to industries and to the provinces for resource development. I still express my great regret that this has been dropped into the dustbin of history. The federal government also needs to make available to the provinces large sums of money for social capital. Had these two things been done, then the premiers would not have had to think of the pension fund as a source of investment. But, Mr. Speaker, this house and the people of Canada have to concern themselves, not with the kind of pension plan we want but the kind of pension plan we can get, and the Prime Minister has now put before us a plan that it seems is generally acceptable to all the provinces of Canada.

I would like to know more about the negotiations. I was surprised that the negotiations seem to have been carried on mainly by Mr. Kent of the Prime Minister's office and the Minister of Forestry, and there seems to have been a complete disappearance of both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance, whom I thought would have been generally concerned with this problem. But whatever the discussions back of this plan, we now have a brief outline of a plan which we will have an opportunity of examining in greater detail.

We in this group have insisted all along that a contributory pension plan should have three basic principles; that it should be universal in coverage, that it should have portability, and that it should be on a pay as you go basis so that it would give the greatest possible benefits for the smallest possible contribution. In the plan which the Prime Minister has outlined the first two principles, and by far the most important principles, have been saved and an additional principle has been added; that is, that the federal government has been able to secure from the provinces their acceptance of a constitutional amendment which will enable the government to include in the pension plan survivor benefits.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this plan contains the best features of the Quebec plan and is a great improvement on the plan which is now before the house. I think this proposal which the Prime Minister has outlined very briefly represents a real victory for national unity and for common sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I do not think we should waste the time of the house by trying to take credit on the one hand for all the virtues of the plan that has been evolved, or trying on the other hand to belittle the accomplishment that has been achieved. I think we should take pride in the fact that the federal and provincial governments of Canada have now taken a great step forward, and that this could be a red letter day in the history of social welfare in Canada, if it is the first step toward providing the people of Canada with a universal, portable contributory pension plan.

The Prime Minister has also outlined a proposal for extending family allowances to those in the 16 and 17 year old groups. This will apply to all parts of Canada, but in view of the fact that the province of Quebec already provides this service they will receive financial compensation for whatever outlay they make. I think this is a happy solution, in that it will give to the young people in this age group who are still attending school benefits all across Canada, will continue them in the province of Quebec, and will compensate the province of Quebec for its financial outlay.

With reference to the student loans, the Prime Minister's statement that the provinces will be allowed to administer these if they so choose and receive equivalent compensation seems to me to make sense, in that the provinces are in a good position to administer student loans because they are familiar with the students' problems. It will create some problem with regard to students moving from one part of Canada to another. Also I hope this will be kept in mind when the 10,000 scholarships are granted which the Liberal party promised before the election.

The point I want to make in closing, Mr. Speaker, is that the statements made by the Prime Minister today indicate very clearly that if we want to advance in Canada, if we want to make progress in reaching new social and economic plateaus, we will have to be flexible, we will have to recognize that experiment is the price of growth; and we will have to adjust ourselves and develop new techniques to meet the problems of confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: There is a price which Canada cannot afford to pay for national unity. That price is to emasculate the federal government of all the powers which it needs to promote economic growth and full employment. But, happily, today no such price is being asked, and with regard to the proposals which the Prime Minister has made, I believe that the price is one which we can afford to pay and which we should pay gladly.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable interest that we have followed the reports of the negotiations which have been taking place the last several days, and now to hear the Prime Minister speak as he has spoken regarding the most recent developments relating to the fiscal arrangements between the provinces and the matter of pensions. I think perhaps the outstanding aspect of the decisions and policies which have been announced this afternoon does not relate directly so much to the pension plan, nor to the fiscal arrangements, as it does to the unity of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Somehow I seem to sense that we have passed over what was shaping up to a very serious crisis. Perhaps as in the days ahead we look back at this point, we will see that this is exactly what has happened. Premier Robarts of Ontario foresaw this when he stated at the federal-provincial conference, as is referred to in the letter which the Prime Minister has sent to the provinces, that it is important to the unity of the country that our pension arrangements across the country should not set up obstacles to the movement of the people and therefore must be national in character. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the Prime Minister when he says these decisions will help to unify our country.

The arrangements regarding the relinquishing by the government of further financial concessions is a recognition by the government that the provinces have not been getting their fair share of Canada's tax dollar. The acceleration of the rate of return of the income tax dollar appears to me to be founded upon the Diefenbaker-Sauve arrangements that were established in 1959, and this is good.

This being so, we must not consider it a final solution to the problem. A permanent and definite agreement must be reached for a just and all-inclusive arrangement which defines federal and provincial areas of rights and responsibilities. This very definitely concerns provincial autonomy, and I think this can well be the second step which must be taken to further develop this point of unity which we have just mentioned.

In this regard I think it is good to note that all that comes out of Quebec is not negative. In fact there can be no doubt that if the present pension plan which has been referred to today can go forward to materialization, all the provinces are going to benefit as a result of the lead which has been taken in formulating a specific plan by the province of Quebec.

There is nothing wrong in taking a second look at a problem. I think it is commendable that we can lay down what we believe to be the correct plan at the time and then be able to adjust it as we realize more fully all the implications which are involved. I think as this pension plan and these fiscal arrangements are discussed further by the provinces, in this house and in the committee to which they will be referred, it may be necessary in some minor points to take still further looks at it. But at least we have reached at this point of the development of a national pension plan something which is certainly more hopeful than we have had thus far.

The result of last week's negotiations between the federal and provincial governments has proved without doubt that the position of the provinces is becoming stronger, and that the need for a continuing negotiation organization and consultation body is necessary between our different levels of government. I trust that this will lead very quickly to the setting up of some form of federal-provincial affairs department.

From what we have heard today the federal government is obviously pleased with the arrangements which they have been able to make, and I gather from reports that the provinces are likewise pleased. However, the person I am most concerned with is John Citizen, because during these past weeks of negotiation I do not think he has been consulted too much. Certainly this is a far different plan from what he has heard about before. The original plan was for a pay as you go plan. That plan meant that this generation supported today's senior citizens, and that when today's workers were retired they would be supported in turn by the workers of tomorrow. That would have meant that we could quickly look after one age group in immediate need at the present time, those between the ages of 65 and 70, and do so without waiting very long for the plan to get started. It would also mean that we would avoid the depressing long term effects of accumulating large reserves and plunging the whole country into debt by investing them.

This brings me to the point that a pension plan should be intended basically to provide pensions for the people and to provide the portability which is not available to them at the present time. There is the fact that there is now being added to this pension plan a source of funded capital, although it is being left with the provincial governments for their use, which is doing something beyond which I think a pension plan perhaps should go. I sympathize with the provincial governments because we all know they need money for development, but money for development should not be confused with money for pensions. However, I do not feel that the financial needs of our provinces and of our municipal governments mix too well together in this question of pensions. I just remind the house in this regard that we have our own Bank of Canada, and there is no reason why our needs for capital development within the provinces and municipalities could not be supplied therefrom.

However, this is not the time for debate on the pension plan. I would just point out that there are many matters which will have to be discussed when the proposed legislation is referred to committee, and there will likewise be discussions between the provinces as well. It is also good to note that there are survival benefits being planned. I am a little concerned that the self employed are going to be responsible both for the employer's contribution as well as the employee's contribution. With regard to the latter remarks of the Prime Minister, it is also good to note that all our student bodies across the country will be able to benefit equally. All these matters add up to the sum total that it is our opinion that progress has been made, and we look forward to the continuation of this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that having been told of the new developments at a few minutes' notice, we are unable to delve properly into the matter. Yet, at first sight I shall not hesitate to say that, even if this is not quite satisfactory, the situation as a whole is rather gratifying.

Mr. Speaker, our group has now been sitting in the federal parliament for two years, and this is the first time that we see a government, whether the present or the last one, take concrete action to promote better understanding between the provincial and federal governments, or between the two great nations which make up this country.

Mr. Speaker, I must therefore say that as there had been no action on the part of the governments for the last two years, we began to feel slightly discouraged about future developments in the house. Yet, today's gesture will encourage us to claim twice as loud as before, since we realize that, when we raise our voices to expound what we believe to be our rights, we get some satisfaction. Consequently, we shall clamour twice as loudly, in order to obtain twice as quickly the true confederation of two nations where each will have its recognized rights and responsibilities.

The pension scheme which has been explained today is, I think, a concrete example thereof. Understanding has been reached along general lines; there has also been agreement on the percentages to be levied and on the amounts to be paid to beneficiaries.

However, nothing prevents thereafter everyone from keeping his jurisdiction, from administering and operating his own pension plan; the province of Quebec will keep on administering hers, while the nine other provinces, if they wish, will agree to leave that jurisdiction with Ottawa or they might decide to administer their own pension plan, if they so desire.

In other words, there is agreement on the terms, but everyone is the master of his own fate as far as the pension plan is concerned according to the announcement made today. That is exactly what we understand by a true confederation of two nations, where there is room for agreement, but where everyone continues to guide and work out his own destiny as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to income tax, I must say that it is a little less satisfactory. We asked for 25 per cent, we got 24 per cent; we are short 1 per cent. I admit that the goal has almost been reached. The Prime Minister certainly showed himself a clever diplomat in coming to terms with the premier of Quebec—within 1 per cent.

Mr. Vincent: In two years.

Mr. Gregoire: I wanted to come to that; in two years only, whereas it should have been done before the budget was brought down in the Quebec legislature.

Of course, things will go faster because the income tax rebate granted to the provincial governments will increase by 2 per cent, then 3 per cent each year.

Mr. Speaker, some people may feel that things are not going fast enough considering that it has taken years—in fact, since the war—to get to those 24 per cent, considering also that from year to year or at least every two or three years, the rebate will be multiplied not mathematically but geometrically since it is being increased threefold today. However, I feel that this proportion of 24 instead of 25 per cent will be considered satisfactory by those who wish to find a fair solution through understanding and harmony. However, this is not a final agreement but rather the beginning of negotiations which will end only the day that Quebec has recovered 100 per cent of personal and corporation income taxes and of the estate tax.

In my opinion, this will be possible in 1967, when the provinces will be able to put an end to the agreements and get 100 per cent of the income tax.

As for the pension plan, the federal government has deemed it advisable to change its mind; I do not think it is a mistake. There is a latin proverb which says: Errare humanum est, it is in the nature of man to make mistakes. Well, I believe that the federal government has at least gained a point; the provincial government wanted to increase income tax by 4 per cent for the pension plan, now it will be increased by 3 per cent only. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said a moment ago, I do not think that a pension plan should be used to accumulate savings for reinvestment in industry. In my opinion, a pension plan should serve to give bigger pensions to those who have reached retiring age. Above all, let us not forget that those who will have to subscribe to the pension plan at the rate of 3 per cent later on will borrow their own money so as to be able to develop. It might be better to leave them their money now, so that they might prosper without having to borrow later from the pension fund.

With regard to the $10 paid to students, the young people in the province of Quebec will be passed over without being able to benefit therefrom. On the allegation that they already benefit from this amount, the whole sum will be paid out to the provincial government. Now, there have been some instances in the past where things were not done in that way. For instance, when the old age pensions were increased in Alberta and British Columbia, the amount was larger than in the other provinces, because those two provinces were granting an additional amount to their senior citizens.

When old age pensions were increased, those two provinces did not tell the federal government: "Hand that money over to us, so that our old people will get neither more nor less, but certainly not less, than in the other provinces." Nobody tried to reduce what the provincial government was already paying out, so that the federal increase would be of no use to anybody.

I wonder why the premier of the province of Quebec would not rather undertake to pay those additional $10 to the young people in the province so that they would get $20 as a school allowance. They have great need thereof, as until now education in the province of Quebec has proved almost a failure, and education is certainly not free, because taxes have increased and students have to pay still more than formerly, in order to be able to continue their studies at the university level.

In concluding I should like to refer to a sentence which went by very quickly in the statement made by the Prime Minister. He said that the federal government will have to recover that from other sources of income, in reference to the additional tax rebate of 2 per cent per year. Does this mean that the federal government intends to increase taxes or to do in Ottawa what Mr. Lesage was going to do in Quebec, namely impose double taxation? A warning must be given to this government which shares the tax yields to the benefit of the provinces, that it should not attempt to get more income out of the pockets of the taxpayers already overburdened with taxes.

One last remark, Mr. Speaker, especially as regards the province of Quebec. A year ago, the premier of that province asked for a tax rebate equivalent to $150 million and said that he would need that amount this year. In November, he received an amount of some $43 million. For next year, he will get $17 million more, that is $60 million, while Quebec requirements are of $150 million.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is the crux of the statement made today. In giving back to Quebec the revenues to which it is entitled under the constitution of this country, and also because of its priority requirements, I believe that the federal government does not go far enough and I wish to warn them that if they do not go farther than they did today, there is a risk that the dissatisfaction of the province of Quebec will not die out with the crumbs it got today, but will rather become more pronounced, because Quebec, wishing to be in a position to develop itself and be the master of its own destiny, is eager to have complete restitution of its revenues.

The sentiments prevailing at the present time in the province of Quebec will not be stifled by the few crumbs that have been handed out today. To do it successfully would require the complete return of its income. It may be possible to make the province wait a while longer by gradually giving back to it part of its revenues, but I feel it will have to be done at a much faster pace than the one mentioned today.

That will have to be done, not by handing out a few crumbs now and then, but by proceeding at such a pace that, within a few years at the most, Quebec will have recovered all its sources of income.

Mr. Speaker, for a beginning, perhaps that is not much, but at least it is something. More must be done and at an accelerated pace. Should that be the case, confederation, renovated by the adoption of new principles, will be able to survive and good understanding will prevail between our two great nations, both living in harmony in one great country called Canada, providing we proceed right now, at as fast a pace as the rate of growth and as fast as necessary to give satisfaction to Quebec which, after all, is only claiming the rights granted to her by the constitution of 1867.

PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That the second report of the special committee on procedure and organization, presented on April 15, be now concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my gratitude to the special committee on procedure and organization for according me the honour of moving concurrence in that committee's second report. I am grateful, too, to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for his consent to be the seconder of the motion. Speaking both for the member for Peace River and for myself, I may say that we are doing this on behalf of the special committee on procedure and organization.

Hon. members are aware that the second report, concurrence in which we are now asking, is to be found on pages 211 to 214 of Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, April 15. Hon. members are aware also that in that report it is made clear that the two main recommendations which the committee is now making to the house are made on a trial basis. If this report is concurred in, as we hope it will be, the proposals contained in it will come into effect today and remain in effect for a period of six weeks or until the end of the month of May, at which time it will be for the house to decide whether or not these proposals are to be continued.

The report makes it clear also that although we are today presenting only two main proposals, this is only the beginning of our work. The committee hopes to bring in other changes from time to time pending a final report on behalf of the committee. I draw hon. members' attention to the fact that there are two main sections of the report now before us, concurrence in which is now being sought. The first section relates to the orders of the day question period, and the second section relates to the handling of notices of motions for the production of papers. Because the second of these proposals is the least complicated I should like to deal with these two proposals in reverse order.

With regard to notices of motions for the production of papers, we are making two suggestions. The first one we make by an amendment to a standing order, and it is to the effect that there should be a time limit on the total amount of debate that might take place on a notice of motion for the production of papers that has been transfered for debate on every second Thursday at five o'clock. We propose that when a motion under that order has been debated for a total time of two hours and thirty minutes, the debate shall be interrupted and the minister, whether or not he has already spoken, shall be given five minutes at that point and the mover of the motion five minutes, whereupon the question shall be put.

The other suggestion we make with regard to notices of motions for the production of papers has to do with the way in which they are handled in the first instance, when they are called on Wesdnesdays. We suggest that they be handled in a manner similar to that which is now employed with respect to the printed questions on the order paper. I need not go into details about this. I am sure all hon. members will realize that a good deal of time can be saved in this way and, as a matter of fact, certain annoyances we are now experiencing on Wednesday afternoon, could be avoided. I trust that the proposals we have made with respect to notices of motions for the production of papers will commend themselves to the house and that they will be accepted for this trial period between now and the end of the month of May.

I return to the first of the two main sections of our report, namely the section that has to do with the orders of the day question period. In legal or procedural terms, we have not had any such period up to the present time. There is nothing in the standing orders that provides for questions prior to orders of the day, but tradition has overridden the standing orders and it is the view of the committee that we should now regularize this procedure by a standing order and should make certain provisions regarding it.

We considered very thoroughly and very seriously, the proposals that have been made to put a time limit on the orders of the day question period. We have decided, both as a subcommittee and as a main committee, not to recommend a time limit except for the fact we do recommend trying a 30-minute time limit on Wednesdays only. The reason we do not propose a time limit on the question period is that we feel there are too many complexities. In view of the number of parties there are in the house; in view of the questions of order and points of privilege that arise, we feel we might be asking for more trouble than we would get rid of by applying a time limit. We felt rather that we should approach this orders of the day question period from two points of view. We feel that, on the one hand, there should be some clearcut rules and directions for the orders of the day question period and, on the other hand, there should be a recourse, an escape valve or an alternative that would make it possible for Mr. Speaker with the co-operation and assistance of the house, to apply the rules and directions that we suggest for the orders of the day question period.

Having these two things in mind, we therefore recommend a standing order to regularize the orders of the day question period and to give control over that question period into the hands of Mr. Speaker. In addition to the standing order, we recommend, as our report indicates, that certain guide lines should be followed in allowing questions during this period of time. We hope that this standing order and these guide lines will enable the house, under the direction of Mr. Speaker, to improve the orders of the day question period. We hope it will shorten it, but we want to make it clear that that is not our only concern. We would like to see the period sharpened and made the effective part of our parliamentary procedure that the question period ought to be.

It is our very strong view, Mr. Speaker, that merely to impose restrictions on the orders of the day question period, by itself, would not solve the problem and would not retain the rights that are inherent in the asking of questions. We therefore propose, and members are familiar with it now, that on three nights in the week, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, there be available a possible half hour period during which there might be short submissions on three different subjects on each of these three nights.

Our proposal is that if during the question period a member feels dissatisfied with the answer he gets from the government or if he feels dissatisfied with the direction given him by Mr. Speaker not to proceed with his question, he may give notice that he wishes to raise that matter at the time of adjournment. He can give that notice orally at that moment if he wishes to do so. But whether or not he gives it orally, we direct that he give it in writing to Mr. Speaker by five o'clock and we direct that at six o'clock Mr. Speaker indicate—that is on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays—what matters will be allowed for debate that evening. We lay down certain matters that Mr. Speaker may have regard to. We hope we have covered most of the details to make this a workable operation.

One of the conditions we suggest is that consideration be given to apportioning the opportunities among the various parties in the house. We feel that when the plan is put into operation, we can shorten the time taken for the question period and yet preserve the right of members to have a chance to say something on matters that they feel are not satisfactorily dealt with in the question period.

These three possible statements or debates at night, between ten o'clock and 10.30, will be limited absolutely to a total of ten minutes each, seven minutes for the member who has been given the floor, and three minutes for the minister or parliamentary secretary who may wish to reply. We also provide that if any one of these matters takes less than ten minutes then the house gains, in the sense that it adjourns that much earlier.

As I have indicated to hon. members, the details of this arrangement are spelled out in the report which is to be found in last Wednesday's Votes and Proceedings. We feel if hon. members will give this whole proposal a fair trial and will co-operate with Mr. Speaker, we can perhaps institute a new approach, a new attitude toward the question period, from which we will all benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I make this motion on behalf of the committee. I present it to parliament as a whole on behalf of parliament as a whole, but I do crave a moment to introduce just one personal note, and I shall put it this way. Although I am doing this on behalf of the committee, it is a fact that I sit on the opposition side of the house, as I have all my parliamentary life. Thus I have a built-in desire to protect the rights of the opposition, to protect the rights of individual members in the question period, and yet it is precisely from that point of view that I want to say that I feel this new arrangement that we are proposing not only will help to shorten the question period but will protect those rights by helping to sharpen the question period and make it a more effective instrument in the course of our parliamentary procedure.

We welcome the interest shown in the report by the news coverage given to it during the last several days. We welcome the editorial support we have noted in various newspapers throughout the country. I welcome the support hon. members in all parties have indicated, in speaking to me personally about it.

I hope we can therefore adopt this on a trial basis, and that the house will support Mr. Speaker in applying the rules and suggestions we have laid down so that, all told, we can take a step forward. With respect to the rules and recommendations about the question period I would like to make this one further point. Up to this time, when Mr. Speaker has sought to apply rules and precedents about the question period he has had to rely on what former speakers have said, but these have not been dicta that came from the house itself. If the house today passes this report, Mr. Speaker will have as his authority not just statements from the Chair, statements out of the past, not just his own judgment, but he will have the direction of this very House of Commons which we will have given by supporting this report at this time.

So, Mr. Speaker, believing that this will be a useful step forward in our attempt to improve the procedures of the House of Commons, I express the hope that the house will support the motion for the adoption of this report; that it will support the letter of it, that it will support the spirit of it, and that from this day forward our question period and some of our other procedures in the house may become, even more so than they have been, an expression of the best traditions of parliamentary procedure.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as might be thought at this time I would like to say a few words on this particular subject because I have, shall we say, a built in or vested interest. I think hon. members will realize my own interest in the question period.

In making a few brief comments I would like to say that I too share the views of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which I believe were fairly general in the committee. However, it must be clearly pointed out that the adjournment period that is proposed under standing order 39-A must not be deemed an opportunity for an extension of government business in that at five minutes to ten o'clock, or at ten minutes to ten in the evening it would not be suddenly put to the house: How about waiving the adjournment debate and carrying on with the government business?

We will see how this works, because in many instances I know it is in the interest of the government and in the interest of the house to continue beyond ten o'clock. Therefore it should not become a practice to intrude government business into this period, and it must be recognized that ten o'clock means the hour of adjournment. If ten o'clock is definitely understood to be the hour of adjournment, and that we will not be very literal in the interpretation of ten o'clock, then perhaps some of the difficulties might not arise. Therefore I wish to enter that caveat.

Second, I would have thought the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would have agreed on this point, which is one I do not want to propose as an amendment to the report, but which I hope will meet with his agreement. In paragraph 5, in the first line, I would have preferred to have seen after the word "with" the words "and subject to the limitations of standing order 39(1) as they apply to written questions and answers," so as to indicate clearly that the limitations which we have in our rules with respect to argument, opinion and so forth in regard to written questions should now apply also to oral questions.

I think Your Honour will agree with me that this is the most difficult area for the Chair in ruling as to whether questions are in the proper form and should be admissible or not. The same thing applies to answers. Standing order 39 is completely silent at present with regard to oral questions. It deals only with written questions on the order paper, but by tradition a similar right has grown up to ask oral questions and, by inference, that they should be guided by the rules which apply to written questions.

I would suggest it should be clearly set out that oral questions shall be subject to the same limitations as written questions and the same, of course, will apply to answers. I say this in order to strengthen the hand of the Chair in relying upon the precedents set by Your Honour's and my predecessors as to the nature and content of questions and answers.

The only way we can do it, and I am being legal in this, is by a reference to standing order 39(1), and if standing order 39(1) is not referred to in standing order 39(5), there could be an argument that all of these precedents and so forth had no application to oral questions. Therefore I hope it would be understood in this experimental period that the limitations in standing order 39(1) will apply to standing order 39(5).

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Lambert: If it is permissible at this time, Mr. Speaker, on motions.

Mr. Knowles: This is a debate on a motion of which notice was given. I wonder if the hon. member has noted that in the report of which we are asking concurrence there are recommendations which will be found on page 213 of Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, April 15, and among them is one that suggests that questions asked prior to orders of the day should be governed by the provisions of standing order 39(1), and the spirit of that will include 39(2). If within the next six weeks it does not prove satisfactory, we can word the permanent order to take care of the points which the hon. member is raising.

Mr. Lambert: I was fully aware of these suggestions by the committee, but I think this is a caveat with respect to the drafting of the standing order.

Perhaps I may refer to one other point, that is, the adjournment debate. It is intimated that an hon. member may give notice in writing of a question or a point which has risen during the question period and which he wishes to raise further. That is with respect to oral questions. I would point out that it is of equal importance that an hon. member should be able to raise a point in connection with the answer to a written question. Many of the difficulties which have arisen in the house have arisen out of the nature of a written reply which has led, in turn, to a question of privilege being raised, or ventilation of the subject matter under the guise of privilege. It is not really privilege, in my humble opinion. I feel this suggestion would be an improvement on the present arrangement and I commend it to hon. members. I appreciate that there is to be a six weeks trial period, but I think the house itself might be willing to accept this suggestion, that answers to written questions be included among those matters which can be discussed during the adjournment debate.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In rising to support the motion to adopt this report I should like to express the appreciation of the government for the work of the committee under your chairmanship, sir, the first encouraging results of which we have before us in this report, a report for which we are indebted to a sub-committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre who has introduced it.

I am sure I am speaking for all hon. members when I say we are grateful to him and to his sub-committee for what they have done, and I think we can be glad that we have among us one with so much experience in this field as the hon. gentleman who presided over the sub-committee. We all, I think, appreciate the breadth of his knowledge in this field and the value of his experience. I may say its value would be even greater, of course, if by taking the appropriate action he could acquire some experience of rules and procedures from the vantage point of a place on this side of the house.

Mr. Knowles: I have been trying to get there for half my life.

Some hon. Members: You have made it; you are there now.

Mr. Pearson: However, apart from that limitation of his experience he certainly is an expert in this field. I do not profess to be an expert at all, though over the years I am picking up a bit of experience with regard to rules and procedures here and there. And with another ten or 15 years in the house—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —on one side or the other, I hope to be able to speak with some authority in these matters. It seems to me that the report makes some interesting recommendations which may turn out to be of considerable value. It has been pointed out that if adopted they will be in effect for a trial period only to the end of May. I think this is a sensible way to proceed, because in the light of our experience we shall be able to decide whether to retain them, alter them, or drop them.

I find it very intriguing indeed to note from the report that an effort is being made to shorten the period devoted to questions without putting any time limit on the question period. That may well work out, Mr. Speaker, in the way the committee hopes it will, but I venture to express the hope, on my part, that it will not work out to the extent of our having to sit from 10 to 10.30 every night, because if that happens, and if we have the same length of time devoted to questions in addition to the extra half hour, we shall certainly not have expedited our proceedings. I know this is not in the minds of those who have made the recommendations in this report because it is pointed out with particular emphasis in the recommendation dealing with the shortening of the question period that the proceedings will have to be conducted along the lines indicated in paragraph seven of the report, that is to say oral questions will have to be governed by the rules laid down in subparagraph (c) of paragraph 7, they should only be in respect of questions of such urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer, and so forth, and also that answers to questions shall be as brief as possible to deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate.

I would point out, however, that if an answer is not to provoke debate the question should not be of such a character as to be provocative and call for that kind of answer. If one is asked, for example: "What do you think about the European common market" or "What do you think about the situation in Viet Nam?" it is difficult to be brief and to the point and not to provoke debate. I believe we shall have to practise a good deal of self-denial on both sides of the house. However, I am encouraged to think this may work, because one of the recommendations in the report says there may be no appeal against any ruling which you make, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this subparagraph. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this means that once you have decided that a question is not in order there can be no appeal against your decision and that there can, surely, be no points of order or questions of privilege raised in respect to that decision. I say this because unless the word "appeal" is interpreted in this way we might waste as much time dealing with points of order and questions of privilege arising out of questions which have not been accepted by you, or accepted only for discussion at ten o'clock, as we would conceivably gain in other respects. Unless we interpret the recommendations in that way we might even find we have lost time rather than gained it.

I am interested in the recommendation dealing with a new procedure for handling notices of motion for the production of papers, a recommendation which I think should save time and expedite business. I say this because this is the first time, as far as I know, that a recommendation has been put forward containing the principle of an allocation of time to specific matters. In this case we are allocating a certain amount of time to debate on a particular subject, and that, I think, is of some significance.

On the whole we think these recommendations certainly deserve the trial they are to be given, and if they operate as the subcommittee hopes they will operate, they may be the first of a long series of recommendations from a very important committee which we have set up and which may go a long way toward making our House of Commons more effective in the discharge of the nation's business.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I join with the Prime Minister in the expression of the views he has just placed before the house—that we should endeavour to the limit to bring about, by agreement, measures, through changes in the rules, to make more effective the operation of parliament.

I was impressed when the right hon. gentleman said he had been here for quite a while but he did not know anything about the rules, or did not know too much about them.

Mr. Pearson: I said I was not an expert.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The next time he objects to something I raised in the house I want Your Honour to remember that frank admission on the part of the Prime Minister. It was delightful, that admission, and one with which I am in entire agreement. The Prime Minister has referred to the committee and its operation. We have been trying through the years to bring about worth-while changes in the rules; committees have been set up and changes have been made. Further changes will have to be made. However, I should say this: I think you, Mr. Speaker, are the third or fourth Speaker who has headed a committee in this connection and I know that the house will agree that no one has given more devotion to making this chamber effective and assuring that the prerogative rights of parliament shall be maintained, while at the same time making those necessary alterations in the rules to meet changed and changing conditions. You have made a study of this subject and you have given a fine example in the chair of trying to carry out the embodiment of your views in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to point out, however, that in any changes made we must not deny parliament the fullest right of examination through questions. Some people say too many questions are asked. I read that in some sections of the press. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend to those that hold that view an examination of the British Hansard where, in place of the few thousand questions that are asked here today, some 20,000 and more, as I recall it, are asked there. There one cannot rise and embarrass the government in any way by asking an initial question; the embarrassment always takes place in the subsequent questions, the supplementary questions that are asked.

Questions have their place and there must be no unnecessary interference with the full rights of members to ask such questions as come within the rules. There are many questions which could go on the order paper. However, I find that the order paper would indicate that a degree of celerity in the answering of questions has not always been characteristic of this government. I point out that according to computations made by another there are on the order paper 75 questions at this date that have been on the order paper for more than a month. There is something wrong if these questions cannot be answered. They are simple questions. The answers to some of them may not be as favourable to the government as it would like them to be; but there are more than 75 questions that have been on the order paper for more than a month. I am not going to read them.

Even worse is the fact that there are seven starred questions, questions that should be answered immediately, on the order paper which have been there for more than a month. The purpose of a starred question is to ensure that immediate attention be given to an immediate matter—and seven, as I said a moment ago, have been on the order paper for more than a month. Twenty eight questions have been on the order paper for three weeks and less. In the United Kingdom, when you ask a question it is answered within three days. That makes for an effective parliament. I am not speaking of starred questions now; starred questions are answered at the first opportunity, almost immediately. But other questions are answered within three days. I hope the spirit of co-operation that is apparent in the committee will find its way into the hearts of the ministers of the crown and that they will bring in answers to our questions expeditiously and without that delay that has so often characterized the answering of questions.

I am glad there has been the acceptance of a suggestion that I made, that where questions are not answered in a way that, in the opinion of the questioner, gives the full facts, an opportunity shall be available, within the limitations set out in the recommendation, to carry on beyond ten o'clock. The Prime Minister was a little concerned about this. I took it from his words that he thought it would really mean the house will be sitting from 10 to 10.30. You, Mr. Speaker, have seen the operation of the British parliament. I have seen it in operation, and sometimes when these questions arise, out of the 600 and some members of the House of Commons no more than three, four or five are in the chamber when these disputations take place following the regular adjournment hours of ten o'clock.

I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is one that deserves the consideration of the committee. He pointed out that written questions, too, should be placed in the same category in so far as answers are concerned, so that anyone dissatisfied with such an answer would be able to raise the question, with Your Honour's leave, at the time of the automatic adjournment.

There is one suggestion that I make. It does not come within the purview of the report as it now is, but a reading of Hansard through the years indicates that interruptions from a seated position have become increasingly evident and the custom. When I first came here there were few of those;

one who wished to ask a question rose in his place. Today there are those seated interruptions. We are all guilty of them. It spoils the appearance of Hansard. It gives to readers of Hansard the idea that, to use a vulgarism, horseplay is indulged in by members from time to time. In my opinion, and I think the rules bear me out, no interruptions excepting those that are adopted by the person having the floor should find their way into Hansard. In the United Kingdom the course followed, after their experience of years in the mother of parliaments, is that when interruptions of this kind are made Hansard shows "An interruption", and that is all. The failure of Hansard to designate the member who made the interruption has a most salutary effect on the number of those interruptions. It is perhaps just a coincidence, but it is a fact with regard to an interruption or question asked. If there is no identification of the person making that interruption, it is surprising the degree to which that fact has an ameliorating effect on the enthusiasm of the interrupter.

As one looks at Hansard today one sees it plastered with questions and interruptions both at the time of questions prior to orders of the day and in general debate. One can only conclude that the acceptance of the principle I suggest, as followed in the mother of parliaments, would be beneficial here. That of course does not mean that in committee of the whole, committee of supply and the like, interruptions like that should not take place. They there have their place. But I am referring to the interruptions that consist of gratuitous statements made for no other purpose than to cause disruption, to disseminate humour, or for some other ulterior purpose.

I think the committee has done well in the recommendations already made; I think there is much more to be done. However, all the rules in the world will not bring about an expeditious and effective parliament without the co-operation of all of us, and I am sure that each of us personally will want to advise you of his or her intention to try to the limit to carry out the spirit of this house.

When people speak of the house being disorderly, I can only say to those who have come to that view that they know not Westminster. We had a visitor recently within the last two weeks, a professor of political science from the United States. I do not know the man but he is one of the outstanding political scientists in the eastern United States. He sat here in the gallery, and he said: "I want you to know and to let your fellow members in the House of Commons know that while I read of much criticism of the operation of your House of Commons I have found it a place of great dignity as compared to another representative institution"—which I am not going to identify. I hope that, as the Prime Minister said, we will be able, in that spirit of co-operation which you, sir, brought to parliament, to bring about in your period of office the greatest improvements in parliamentary procedure which have been made in a lifetime.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, because I cannot make any claims to having had years of experience in this house—although I have had some experience in the way of getting things done as far as jobs which have come my way to do are concerned—and also because it is now two hours and 15 minutes since we began today's session and have not yet reached the question period, my remarks will be very brief. I commend the committee for the report they have submitted. I commend it to the house and suggest that we give it a fair trial. If we can all apply a little common sense and self-discipline I am sure that we will have a more effective House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, personally, I have only two years' experience in parliamentary procedure. Like my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I have yet to get the experience of those members who sit on the other side of the house, but I may have to my credit one experience more than he has.

It happened two week ends ago when the secondary school students in my riding asked me, Mr. Speaker—can you imagine that—to act as speaker in their mock parliament.

Mr. Lambert: It must have been quite a task.

Mr. Gregoire: That is exactly why I found the assignment very tough. I could not say a word during the two days that this mock parliament sat. However, it was good experience.

It also makes one realize the difficulties facing the man presiding over the proceedings of the house and what are his responsibilities.

For the suggestion made to us today to be successful, I think that first of all, the question askers should show good will, that those who have a question to ask should abide by the standing order established by the committee on procedure. That is of prime importance. The same goes for the ministers' answers.

Of course, we are doing this on a trial basis. But if all the answers given by the ministers bring about a request from the opposition to put on the agenda of the ten o'clock period the matter on which information is sought, it will not take a month before there are many more questions to discuss during the period from ten to ten thirty on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays than all the questions or measures the government might want to introduce.

So, if the answers given by the ministers are ad hoc answers to the questions posed, there will be less disagreement on the experiment we want to try today.

But I think the greatest responsibility—and that is why at the outset of my remarks I said the Speaker had great responsibilities, for having experienced it myself—in this experiment will rest on the shoulders of the Speaker. It will be quite easy for him to rule that any question is out of order—there will be no point of order, no question of privilege. It will be the easy way.

It will be up to the Speaker also to decide which questions are urgent and which are not. In that connection, I should like to recall personal impressions in order to show that a question may seem urgent to some persons and not to others. When we first came to the house and listened to questions being asked concerning agriculture, all of them were accepted if they referred specifically to wheat; in such a case, they were urgent and important. However, if these questions referred to eastern agriculture, to the culture of potatoes, to stock breeding, to milk production or to something else, then they were ruled not urgent, and that seemed to be taken for granted by all parties in the house.

I will admit that, for a year now, hon. members seem to have taken into account the fact that certain matters which in former years did not seem to be urgent are very much so today.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that the most important point in this new experiment will be to determine which questions are urgent and important.

I should like to add a last point, mentioned earlier by the Leader of the Opposition, and it is this: questions on the order paper will have to be answered much sooner than has been the case till now. In respect of certain questions, we have had to wait a month, sometimes a month and a half, before getting an answer. That is why hon. members ask questions and request information on orders of the day instead of putting their questions on the order paper. If replies were provided sooner to questions put on the order paper, hon. members would be encouraged to use that media since such replies are more elaborate and, therefore, provide better information than those given during the question period. Indeed, that is quite understandable since the minister to whom the question is directed is then in a better position to get the necessary information and he can provide a more satisfactory reply when he has the time to prepare himself than when a question is put to him without notice during the question period.

As far as our group is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we intend to co-operate loyally and sincerely in this new attempt, with a view to shortening the question period and expediting any legislation which might be more urgent. In fact, this constitutes the primary purpose of hon. members' work, that is to pass legislation which will serve the best interests of the Canadian people.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I just take a minute briefly to refer to one or two matters which have been introduced, bearing in mind that I did second this motion. First of all, I agree with what was said by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that this house does not exist entirely for the purpose of permitting the business of government to be proceeded with; it also exists for the benefit of members of parliament to deal with grievances and matters of urgency affecting this country.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the situation in the old country. It so happens that I have before me a book entitled "Questions In Parliament" by Chester and Bowring. In order to emphasize what the Leader of the Opposition said I would point out that I find in the book that in 1945-46 there were 21,135 starred questions asked and a total of 27,313 starred and unstarred questions. In 1959-60 there were 10,161 starred questions asked and a total of 13,471 starred and unstarred questions. This indicates the extreme importance of this issue.

May I say that when the members of the subcommittee met we were as far apart as we could possibly be as to the type of amendments we should propose, and it was only by each accepting a little of the philosophy of the other and by reducing to some extent those things which we thought were essential that we were able to come up with this temporary measure which I think is going to be very effective in its operation. Finally, I should like to refer to the matters which were raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He brought up suggestions which I placed before the subcommittee and the committee. But I put it to you this way, Mr. Speaker. If we concur in this report we will then be saying by a vote of the house, because this will be a resolution passed by the house and it will become a part of the procedure, that we are accepting the guide lines and the suggestions as to questions and answers contained in paragraph 7 of the committee's report. We are thereby saying that this is the view of the members of the house. We are asking you Mr. Speaker, in accordance with these guide lines to interpret what are questions of urgency, to designate the questions which should be asked and, just as important, to designate the type of answer which should be given pursuant to what we have set out in paragraph 7 of our report.

So, Mr. Speaker, while it might have been desirable from the viewpoint of neatness and tidiness to have incorporated this and the reference to standing order 39 (1) as a part of the new standing order, nevertheless by adopting the report we are in effect doing precisely that. We are in effect saying to you, sir, and to all members of the house: These are the rules which we as a body are directing and requesting each individual member to observe. Under those circumstances I feel that this procedure will be just as effective as if we had proceeded in the other way.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.—DISPOSITION OF OLD AIRPORT BASE

Question No. 167—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the government, through the offices of the crown assets disposal corporation, to dispose of the buildings and property at the old airport base, Upper North Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Deschatelets: Disposal of the buildings and property at the old airport base, Upper North Sydney, N.S. through the offices of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is under study. No decision has been reached.

REGULATION RESPECTING COMMUNITY ANTENNAE

Question No. 399—Mr. Leboe:

1. Is there a directive or a regulation prohibiting the reception or distribution by individuals or corporations of a signal or electrical impulse by use of (a) community antennae (b) closed circuit distribution, each recipient holding an individual contract?

2. If so (a) what are the terms of such directive or regulation (b) by whom was it issued, and (c) under what authority was the said directive or regulation promulgated?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1 and 2. Community antenna television systems operated for gain require to be licensed under the provisions of the Radio Act. This requirement does not apply to closed circuit distribution systems unless a radio link of some sort is involved. There is no directive prohibiting reception or distribution, but the Secretary of State and the Minister of Transport announced on December 31, 1963 that pending a report by the board of broadcast governors and subsequent formulation of policy by the government, there would be no additional licensing of these systems under the Radio Act which would involved the bringing in of new signals from outside the country; or where more than 25 per cent ownership was outside the country.

CANADA PENSION PLAN PERSONNEL

Question No. 475—Mr. Coates:

1. How many individuals have been recruited by the civil service commission, or by other means, in connection with the establishment of an administration for the Canada pension plan?

2. What are the names of the individuals recruited and where are they now employed?

Mr. Lamontagne: Civil service commission

1. The civil service commission has not recruited any individuals in connection with the establishment of an administration for the Canada pension plan.

2. See answer to 1. above.

Department of National Health and Welfare

1 and 2. None. Extensive use has been made of the existing staff of the old age security division and the research and statistics divisions of the department.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Question No. 483—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

1. How many post office buildings did the Department of Public Works build during the fiscal year 1963-64 in the province of Ontario, and what was the total cost of those buildings?

2. How many post office buildings did the Department of Public Works build during the fiscal year 1963-64 in the province of Quebec, and what was the total cost of those buildings?

3. What construction is projected in this field for the fiscal year 1964-65, in the province of Quebec?

4. What construction is projected in this field for the fiscal year 1964-65, in the province of Ontario?

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Twenty one buildings at a cost of $497,998.17.

2. Thirty eight buildings at a cost of $1,119,885.75.

3. Chateauguay, Public building; Lachine—Ville La Salle, Postal substation; Montreal—Cote St. Luc, Postal substation (extension and alterations); St. Lambert, Public building; Dorion-Vaudreuil, Public building (extension and alterations).

Questions

BROADCASTING STATIONS, GRAND FALLS, NFLD.

Question No. 537—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How many AM broadcasting stations are in operation in Grand Falls, Newfoundland?
2. Who operates these stations?
3. How many T.V. broadcasting stations are in operation in Grand Falls?
4. Who operates these stations?
5. Did the board of broadcast governors recommend the licensing of another AM station for Grand Falls at one of its recent meetings and, if so, on what grounds was its recommendation made?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Two, CBT and CKCM.

2. CBT, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, CKCM, Colonial Broadcasting System Limited.

3. One, CJCN-TV.

4. Newfoundland Broadcasting Co. Limited.

5. In June 1961, the board recommended the licensing of an AM radio station at Grand Falls, giving the following reasons: "In the opinion of the board, the applicant having made substantial commitments to provide local program service, this station would provide satisfactory service in the area, and would extend radio service in central Newfoundland."

At the same time, it recommended another application for denial. The board has not dealt with any other applications for AM radio stations in Grand Falls since that time.

OLDER WORKERS EMPLOYED, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 541—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Up to the present date, how many workers over the age of 45 have been placed in employment through the offices of the national employment service at (a) Sydney Mines, and (b) North Sydney, as a result of the program by which their salaries are supplemented to a maximum of $75 monthly out of public funds?

Mr. MacEachen: (a) and (b). Figures are available by provinces only. Fifty eight workers were hired under the program in the province of Nova Scotia up to March 31, 1964.

REPAIRS AND REFITS, POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

Question No. 550—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What were the names, classifications and tonnage of ships repaired or refitted at the naval base at Point Edward, Nova Scotia, in each of the years 1961, 1962 and 1963?
2. What was the cost of the repairs or refits to each of the ships repaired or refitted at the naval base at Point Edward in each of the years 1961, 1962 and 1963, and what was the allocation of such cost as to labour, material, administration, etc.?

[Mr. Laing.]

3. After the closing of the naval base at Point Edward, where will the repair and refit work be carried out that was previously done at Point Edward?
4. What is the proposed saving, if any, which will be effected by the closing of the naval base at Point Edward, and how is such saving estimated as to labour costs, material costs, administration, etc., in the future repair or refits of ships formerly repaired or refitted at the said naval base?
5. Since the Minister of National Defence announced the closure of the Point Edward naval base, how many protests have been received and what are the names and addresses of individuals, groups and organizations who have made such protests against this announced closure?

Mr. Cardin: 1 and 2. See attached lists.

3. The work will normally be carried out by commercial shipyards.

4. The net annual saving to the naval appropriation resulting from the close-down of the ship repair facilities at Sydney is estimated at $1,200,000 representing overhead costs and other services that cannot be allocated economically to the ship repair function performed by this naval dockyard due to the low rate of utilization of the refit capacity. The planned retirement of ships which formed the bulk of Point Edward naval base work load would have made the operation of this dockyard even less economical in the years ahead.

Excluding the abovementioned extraordinary overhead costs that are related to the ratio of refit work available compared to the refit capacity of the naval dockyard, and including normal overheads only, the average cost of refitting a frigate, whether by contract with a commercial shipyard or in the Sydney dockyard, runs between $350,000 to $500,000 depending on such variables as the condition of the ship, the extent of defect work to be undertaken, wage rates in the locality and an overhead rate tied into the over-all amount of work in the yard. Further savings beyond the $1,200,000 noted in the preceding paragraph will depend on the reduction indicated above in the number of refits to be undertaken in future rather than on the change of location of refits from dockyard to commercial shipyards.

5. Mayor, town council, Sydney Mines, N.S.; national defence employees association, Point Edward naval base, N.S.; branch 8, Royal Canadian Legion, Sydney Mines, N.S.; branch No. 2, Royal Canadian Legion, P.O. box 41, Reserve Mines, N.S.; town council, New Waterford, N.S.; mayor, town council, North Sydney, N.S.; branch No. 12, Royal Canadian Legion, P.O. box 335, Sydney, N.S.; North Sydney board of trade, North Sydney, N.S.; Cape Breton district command, Royal Canadian Legion, Glace Bay, N.S.; branch

WORLD FAIR SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Question No. 561—Mr. Thompson:

1. Who are the senior executives of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition and what are their respective salaries and expense allowances?
2. Have any persons been transferred from employment with the civil service of Canada to the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition?
3. If so, what are their names, their previous salaries with the civil service, and their present salaries and expense allowances, if any, with the corporation?
4. How many automobiles are at the present time either owned or rented by the corporation, and what is the make and purchase or rental price of each, and from whom have they been obtained?
5. What contracts have been awarded by the corporation for the construction of buildings and other works and at what prices?
6. Were tenders called in respect of each of these contracts?
7. In each case, was the tender accepted the lowest one that was submitted?
8. If not, what were the amounts of the lowest tenders submitted, and why were they not accepted?

Answer: 1. The senior executives of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition are the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner general and their respective salaries and allowances are fixed by the governor in council as follows: commissioner general, salary $22,500 per annum, allowance $7,500 per annum, representation allowance of $10,000 per annum in respect of duties to be performed by Mr. Dupuy outside of Canada as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary.

Deputy commissioner general, salary $35,000.

2. None has been transferred from employment with the civil service of Canada to the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition. Several have been seconded for duty with the corporation, having been granted leave without pay from their respective departments. These employees continue to participate in the public service superannuation plan, their contributions being based on salary before joining the corporation.

3. The following persons have been granted leave without pay from employment with the civil service of Canada to assume duties on behalf of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition; (they are not entitled to expense allowances).

Name	Previous salary	Present salary
Asselin, J.	$ 8,000	$12,000
Baker, J. H.	10,500	15,000

Name	Previous salary	Present salary
Bertrand, G.	9,120	15,500
Bourke, B.	8,500	11,000
Chaballe, F. X.	9,300	10,000
Drew-Brook, A. (Miss)	4,800	5,500
Kniewasser, A. G.	14,100	32,500
Lamarre, R. A.	7,470	9,500
Verner, P. E.	5,400	7,000
Yeats, R. M.	10,300	12,000

4. The corporation rents 12 Fords at a monthly rate of $130, 10 Pontiacs, at $125, one Oldsmobile 88 at $165 and two Cadillacs at $275 from Stanley Fleet Leasing Ltd., the lowest of four bidders. Officials to whom these automobiles are assigned pay to the corporation $30 per month to cover personal use of the automobiles for which they are responsible.

5. Three contracts have been awarded by the corporation for the construction of buildings and other works, namely to Dominion Bridge Co. Ltd. for alterations to the Jacques Cartier bridge ramps for an estimated price of $212,737; to Dufresne Engineering Ltd. for the construction of the substructure of a bridge to link MacKay pier to Ile Verte for a price of $2,362,976.40; to Dominion Bridge Co. Ltd. for the construction of the superstructure of the said bridge for a price of $7,897,500.

6. Yes, with the exception of the contract for the alterations to the ramps of the Jacques Cartier bridge in which case for reasons of urgency the board of directors and the treasury board authorized the awarding of the contract to Dominion Bridge, the original builder of the bridge.

7. Yes, except in the case of the contract for the construction of the substructure of the bridge linking MacKay pier to Ile Verte.

8. The amounts of two lowest tenders submitted for the construction of the substructure of the bridge linking MacKay pier to Ile Verte were $1,443,955 and $1,898,720 respectively. These bids were unacceptable from an engineering standpoint and it was admitted by the tenderers that they had failed to properly assess in their bid the velocity of the river current and that their method of construction entailed a high risk. The contract in this case was awarded to the lowest valid tenderer.

NAPPAN EXPERIMENTAL FARM, N.S.—TENDERS FOR MOTOR VEHICLE SALES AND SERVICE

Question No. 573—Mr. Coates:

1. What firms in Cumberland are invited to tender for the sale of motor vehicles to the Nappan experimental farm and what dealerships do they represent?

2. What firms in Cumberland are invited to tender on the overhaul and repair of motor vehicles owned by the Nappan experimental farm?

Questions

3. From what firms in Cumberland does the Nappan experimental farm purchase oil and gasoline?

4. Are any firms in Cumberland, excluded from the opportunity to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles, repair and overhaul of motor vehicles, and on the sales of oil and gasoline, for Nappan experimental farm, and, if so, what firms?

Mr. Hays: 1. (1) Cumberland Equipment Limited, Amherst, N.S., dealers in G.M.C. trucks, Pontiac and Buick cars. (2) Tantramar Motors Limited, Amherst, N.S., dealers in Chevrolet trucks and Chevrolet and Oldsmobile cars. (3) D. A. Casey Limited, Amherst, N.S., dealers in Ford trucks and cars. (4) Rivers and Dickenson Limited, Amherst, N.S., dealers in International trucks. (5) George M. Harrison, Amherst, N.S., dealer in Fargo trucks and Plymouth and Chrysler cars. (6) Maccan Garage, Maccan, N.S., dealers in Studebaker trucks and cars. (7) Carter's Garage, Springhill, N.S., dealers in Mercury and Meteor trucks and cars. (8) Sargent's Garage, Parrsboro, N.S., dealers in Chevrolet trucks and Chevrolet and Oldsmobile cars. (9) Letcher's Garage, Springhill, N.S., dealers in Chevrolet cars and trucks and Oldsmobile cars.

2. Most repair work is done by staff mechanics. Where tenders are necessary, the above-noted Amherst and Maccan firms and, in addition, Burke Brothers of 18 Crescent avenue, Amherst, Nova Scotia, are normally invited to tender on motor repairs.

3. For many years the experimental farm at Nappan has purchased its gasoline and oil requirements from Imperial Oil Limited under an agreement whereby the company installed and maintained a pump. During 1963 a gasoline pump was purchased and tenders for the supply of gasoline and oil will be called from all oil companies represented in the Amherst area. These include Imperial Oil Limited, Irving Oil Limited, Texaco Oil Limited, White Rose Oil Limited, Fina Oil Limited, British-American Oil Limited.

*WORLD FAIR—SALARIES OF DIRECTORS AND EXECUTIVE

Question No. 577—Mr. Loney:

1. What salaries are paid to the director and the associate director of the 1967 world exhibition?

2. Are there other amenities and, if so, what are they?

3. Has an amount for entertainment expenses been set for each of the officials and, if so, what amount is allowed to each of them?

4. Who are the members of the executive?

5. What salaries are paid to the members of the executive?

6. How many advisory boards or committees have been set up to carry out the objects of the fair?

Questions

7. Who is in charge of awards of building and other work contracts?
8. Are such contracts given to the lowest bidder and, if not, under what circumstances are departures from this principle being made?
9. How many contracts have been let to date and in what amounts?

Mr. Sharp: 1. The salaries and allowances of the commissioner general and the deputy commissioner general of the exhibition are fixed by the governor in council and are as follows:

Commissioner general, salary $22,500 per annum, allowance $7,500 per annum, representation allowance of $10,000 per annum in respect of duties to be performed by Mr. Dupuy outside of Canada as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary. Deputy commissioner general, salary $35,000.

2. The other amenities consist on the other hand of pension benefits provided by the corporation for the officers and employees thereof pursuant to Section 8 of the incorporating act and on the other hand, of group life and accident insurance coverage.

3. No specific amount for entertainment expenses has been set for any of the officials of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition. Accounts are rendered in the same manner and under the same rules as apply to all officials of the corporation.

4. The members of the executive committee are: the commissioner general, the deputy commissioner general, Messrs. Guy Roberge, Andre Rousseau and Lucien Saulnier.

5. The salaries of the members of the executive committee have been fixed at $6,000 per year by decision of the board of directors of the corporation, subject to the approval of the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council as stipulated in subsection 3 of section 5 of the incorporating act.

6. Ten advisory committees have been set up to carry out the objects of the exhibition as listed: customs committee; advisory committee on architecture; advisory committee on fine arts; advisory committee on science and medicine; advisory committee on information and promotion; advisory committee on insurance; service club advisory committee for children; women's advisory committee; performing arts advisory committee; advisory committee on taxation.

7. Section 9 (2) of the incorporating act stipulates that the corporation shall not enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement involving any expenditure in excess of $100,000 or acquire any property, the cost of acquisition of which exceed the sum of $25,000, except with the approval of the governor in council and subject to such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. Contracts which are below these limits are awarded by the corporation.

[Mr. Loney.]

8. All contracts are given to the lowest bidder except when the tender does not conform to the specifications or is otherwise unacceptable.

9. Three contracts have been awarded by the corporation for the construction of buildings and other works, namely to Dominion Bridge Co. Ltd. for alterations to the Jacques Cartier bridge ramps for an estimated price of $212,737; Dufresne Engineering Ltd. for the construction of the sub-structure of a bridge to link MacKay pier to Ile Verte for a price of $2,362,976.40; to Dominion Bridge Co. Ltd. for the construction of the super-structure of the said bridge for a price of $7,897,500.

SALARIES AND CONTRACTS, WORLD FAIR CORPORATION

Question No. 579—Mr. Belanger:

1. Is the 1967 world exhibition corporation a federal government corporation?
2. What salary does the president of this corporation receive, and how much is he allowed for travel, entertainment, and the use of a car?
3. How much of this money is supplied by the federal government and how much by other governments?
4. Are the president's expenses unanimously approved by the corporation and, if not, who is the member of the corporation who approves them?
5. What salaries are paid to the other members of the board of this corporation?
6. Do they receive a car allowance and, if so, how much do they receive?
7. Are they allowed unlimited expense accounts for their trips?
8. Who reviews, and decides on final acceptance or rejection of bridge and building construction contracts?
9. Are tenders called for each contract, and are awards made to the lowest bidder, providing he has the required experience and financial qualifications?
10. Does the act provide for a detailed audit, by government auditors, of all the corporation's expenses?
11. Does the federal government have any way of ensuring that no patronage is engaged in by the two other governments who are members of this corporation?

[Translation]

Mr. Sharp: 1. Section 7 of the organic act passed by the Canadian parliament states the corporation is, for all the purposes of the act, an agent of Her Majesty.

2. The commissioner general of the 1967 Canadian world exhibition corporation earns the following: (1) Salary, $22,500 per annum. (2) Allowance, $7,500 per annum. (3) Representation allowance: $10,000 per annum for the functions Mr. Dupuy has to perform in foreign countries as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary.

No specific amount has been set for travel or entertainment. A car is at the disposal of the commissioner general; it is also used for the trips of other officials of the corporation, when need be. The commissioner pays the corporation $30 per month to use the car for personal purposes and he assumes the responsibility thereof.

3. The corporation funds are paid to him by the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal, in a proportion of 50 per cent, 37½ per cent and 12½ per cent respectively.

4. Directions with regard to travel and travelling costs, based on general instructions applying to government departments and crown corporations, were approved by the board of directors; the president's expenses are indicated in monthly financial statements which are studied and approved by the board.

5. The other members of the board of directors, with the exception of the assistant general commissioner, are not paid for their services, as stipulated in the second paragraph of clause 5 of the incorporating act. The assistant general commissioner receives a salary of $35,000 per year.

6. No motor car allowance is provided.

7. No. The directors are entitled to first class return tickets by air from and to their place of residence, plus $50 a day for each day of absence from their place of residence. That allowance is limited to three days for directors from Vancouver; two days for directors from Halifax; two days for the directors from Toronto, and one day for directors from Quebec.

8. Tenders are revised and examined by the corporation jointly with personnel from Defence Construction (1951) Limited and to each contract is added a resolution of the board of directors and the approval of the governor in council when the contract exceeds $100,000.

9. Tenders are called or prices asked for whenever possible, and contracts are awarded to the lowest acceptable bidder as long as the tender complies with the specifications and is acceptable in all other respects, and provided the bidder is able to fulfil the financial terms and has the required experience.

10. Clause 17 of the incorporating act says that the financial operations of the corporation are checked by the auditor general of Canada and the auditor of the province of Quebec.

11. The by-laws of the corporation give the board of directors all powers allotted to the corporation under the incorporating act, except for powers especially conferred to the general commissioner or to the assistant general commissioner by the act or the regulations. The corporation may:

(a) Acquire by means of purchase, lease or otherwise any property for the construction, maintenance and operation of the exhibition and own, hold, sell or manage such property or deal therewith or therein as the corporation may determine;

(b) make contract with any person, in or outside Canada, respecting the construction of buildings or other works, the showing of exhibits, the provision of services or for the attainment of any of the purposes or the exercise of any of the powers of the corporation;

(c) make arrangements or agreements with any person for the use of any rights, privileges or concessions that the corporation may consider useful for the carrying out of its purposes;

(d) expend any moneys received by the corporation by way of grant pursuant to section 11 or by way of grant from the province of Quebec or from the city of Montreal or borrowed by the corporation pursuant to section 12, or received by the corporation through the conduct of its operations or otherwise;

(e) do all other such things as the corporation may deem conducive to the attainment of any of the purposes or the exercise of any of the powers to the corporation.

Section 8 regulations of the corporation limits in the following way the powers of the board:

Except with the approval of the governor in council and subject to such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, the corporation shall not (a) enter into any contract, agreement or arrangement involving any expenditure in excess of $100,000; (b) acquire any property, the cost of acquisition of which exceed the sum of $25,000.

It is considered the rules quoted above guarantee good administrative methods.

ANCIENNE LORETTE AIRPORT CONCESSIONS

Question No. 629—Mr. Perron:

1. Are the restaurant, bar, newsstand at the Ancienne Lorette airport run by the Department of Transport or by concessionaires?

2. If they are run by concessionaires (a) who are they (b) what are the concession rentals (c) how long have these concessions been operating (d) when will each of the present leases end?

[Translation]

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The restaurant, bar and newsstand are operated as a combined concession by a concessionaire.

2. The concessionaire is Mr. Rene Collard. He pays the department 9.5 per cent with a minimum of $9,000 per annum for rental from the sales from the restaurant and the news stand, and in addition he pays 15 per cent of liquor sales. The concession was awarded to Mr. Collard for a five year period effective October 1, 1962. The concession was awarded to him on the basis of his bid received in a tender call for the concession.

CONSTRUCTION WORK, OBEDJIWAN RESERVE, QUE.

Question No. 632—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since 1960, how many (a) public buildings, and (b) dwellings have been built in the Obedjiwan Indian reservation, in Chapleau county?

2. What was the cost (a) of public buildings (b) dwellings?

Mr. Badanai: 1. (a) Two; (b) Thirteen.

2. (a) $188,101; (b) $58,500.

WORKING CONDITIONS, WEATHER STATION, VANCOUVER AIRPORT

Question No. 654—Mr. Prittie:

1. How many persons are employed at the Department of Transport weather station at the Vancouver international airport?

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. How many hours per week are the employees required to work?

3. Are some employees required to report for work at twelve o'clock midnight after having completed an eight hour shift at 4 p.m. of the same day and, if so, does this practice contravene in any way any federal hours of work legislation?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Seventy eight.

2. Employees work standard working hours of 40 hours per week for operating employees and 37½ hours per week for non-operating employees.

3. Some of the staff at the Vancouver meteorological office work a shift schedule which includes, once each 13 days, a change-over from day shift ending at 4 p.m. to night shift commencing at midnight. The problem of rotating shift arrangements does result in longer than normal periods on duty; however, such employees are compensated by being given longer periods of time off between shift cycles and these arrangements are normal for staff employed on rotational shift duties. This practice does not contravene any federal legislation dealing with hours of work.

FOOD CONCESSION, TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 656—Mr. Scott:

1. What is the name of the organization which handles the food servicing at the Toronto international airport?

2. How long has this organization been in charge of such undertakings?

3. How many people are employed at the present time?

4. What has been the turnover in labour during the period of time in which the said organization has conducted the food servicing at the Toronto international airport?

5. What are the wages being paid to each classification of persons employed by the said organization?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Cara Operations Limited as a result of a public tender call.

2. It is understood that a predecessor company has been in the transportation restaurant business for well over 20 years.

3, 4 and 5. The department merely rents space to the company which reports that it maintains a normal staff complement of 180 employees; that of the staff transferred from the old terminal to the new building there has been practically no turnover in this group, while among new employees hired for increased staff requirements, the company has had the turnover that is normally experienced under similar conditions elsewhere. The company feels that the employee turnover has become stabilized at near normal proportions, at present being about 7 per cent; and that its wages are equal to and in most categories above the average in the Toronto area.

BOMARC BASE, NORTH BAY—SERVICE PERSONNEL EMPLOYED IN BEVERAGE ROOMS

Question No. 657—Mr. Scott:

1. Does the government have information as to the number of service personnel from the Bomarc missile range base near North Bay who are employed in civilian capacities in the beverage rooms of the hotels in North Bay?
2. How many such persons are so employed and how long have they been so employed?
3. Are such persons also in receipt of income from the government of Canada?
4. What are the regulations and instructions under which such people, if any, are permitted to accept outside employment?

Mr. Cardin: 1. No, although it is understood that there are service personnel employed in the beverage rooms of a licensed inn which is situated in the township of Widdifield approximately six miles beyond the city limits of North Bay.

2. Four, one for 18 months, two for six months, and one for two months. The employment is on a casual as required basis and on an average each of the individuals concerned works four evenings per month.

3. Yes.

4. Activities of service personnel in off duty hours is a matter of choice for the individuals concerned provided it does not reflect discredit upon the service or prove detrimental to the interest of the service.

GRANT TO HEALTH LEAGUE

Question No. 658—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government received a request from the directors of the health league of Canada for an increased grant to this organization from the dominion government?
2. When was such request made?
3. What has been the response, if any, of the government to the said request?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Yes.

2. June, 1963.

3. The main estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for 1964-65 include no provision for an increase in this grant.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 668—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Has the government received from the province of Prince Edward Island an offer of land, known as the Horgan property, adjacent to the Stanhope section of the Prince Edward Island national park and, if so, has the government replied to this offer?
2. What is the nature of the reply?
3. What are the government's plans for extending the boundaries of the park?
4. What is the total number of visitors to the Prince Edward Island park for the years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?

Mr. Laing: 1. Yes, for development as a golf course; yes.

2. The offer was declined because other capital projects in national parks must take priority over the establishment of a second golf course in this park for the foreseeable future.

3. Certain key extensions to facilitate park development are under discussion with the provincial government.

4.

Fiscal Year	Number
1957-58	200,748
1958-59	206,245
1959-60	224,781
1960-61	412,463
1961-62	775,583
1962-63	1,009,021
1963-64	1,019,104

COST OF FILL, WORLD FAIR SITE

Question No. 676—Mr. Langlois:

1. What will be the cost of filling the site for the 1967 world fair?
2. How many tenders for the filling contract were submitted?
3. What was the amount of each bid?
4. To whom was the contract awarded?
5. What company or companies are handling the publicity for the 1967 world fair and in respect of each (a) what is the location of the head office (b) is the ownership Canadian (c) how many of the companies are non-Canadian?

Answer: 1. The preparation of the site of the exhibition is the financial responsibility of the city of Montreal. This includes filling operations that are being performed on Ile Verte, Ile Ronde, and Ile Notre Dame. In addition, improvements are being made to the Mackay pier in the Montreal harbour by the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition acting as agent for the national harbours board. Tenders were called for this work as explained in answer to question No. 2.

2. As agent for the national harbours board, the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition called for tenders for the improvement of Mackay pier. For stage 1 four tenders were received and for stage 2 eight tenders were received.

3. For stage 1 bids were as follows: Beaudry Limitee, $1,305,000.00; Chas. Duranceau Ltee., $1,484,600.00; Mt. Dual Mixed Concrete Limited, $1,756,400.00; Miron Co. Ltd., $1,895,-400.00.

For stage 2 bids were as follows: Royal Mount Const. Ltd., $1,217,500.00; Compagnie Miron Ltee., $1,682,750.00; Beauval Inc. Desourdy Const. Ltd., $1,704,500.00; Pine Beach Sand Limited, $1,783,125.00; Beaudry Ltee., $1,865,000.00; Montreal Dual Mixed Concrete, $1,951,250.00; Charles Duranceau Ltee., $1,-959,250.00; A. Billet Ltee., $1,971,250.00.

4. Contract for stage 1 has been awarded to Beaudry Ltee. Montreal, Quebec, being the lowest tender, and contract for stage 2 has not been awarded yet.

The firms having their head office in Canada are Canadian.

JASPER NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 680—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Has the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources evolved a long term plan for the Jasper national park and, if so, when will it be available?

2. What is the government's intention in so far as the development and expenditure for Jasper national park over the next two years?

3. Will Jasper secure the same treatment in development and expansion as Banff national park?

4. When is it expected that the east-west highway through the Jasper park will be completed?

Mr. Laing: 1. Long term planning for all the national parks is a continuing process. In Jasper national park, priority is being given to development of a comprehensive plan for the Maligne lake area which is one of the most outstanding areas in the national park system. This plan is expected to be completed next fall.

2. Major developments planned for the next two years include continuation of work on the Jasper-Edmonton highway, the Banff-Jasper highway and the Medicine-Maligne lake road, together with development work on the Maligne lake visitor area and the Whistlers camp ground. Planned capital expenditures in Jasper in 1964-65 including the trunk highway program are expected to be of the order of $2,000,000. Firm plans have not, of course, been completed for 1965-66.

[Mr. Langlois.]

3. Yes, since the objective is to serve the best interests of the nation by developing each park according to its potentialities as a national park, and thus to build up a first class system of national parks.

4. Completion of the reconstruction of the section of the highway east of Jasper is scheduled for 1967. Scheduling of the section west of Jasper will depend upon the reconstruction of the connecting provincial highway.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY STANDARDS

Question No. 682—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. Does the trans-Canada highway agreement with the provinces contain a clause allowing a reduction in width and/or visibility from the usual standard if deemed advisable through thickly-populated areas in order to avoid serious dislocation and also to make possible the construction of the highway by the most desirable route?

2. If so, is it necessary that provincial governments request such a variation in the standard?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. The general specifications covering the construction of the trans-Canada highway, as covered by schedule "B" of the trans-Canada highway agreement, provides as follows: "The minimum width of the right of way shall be 100 feet. Where the highway runs through densely populated areas thus involving heavy expenditures, a minimum width of 66 feet will be acceptable."

The specifications also provide for a minimum horizontal sight distance and a minimum vertical sight distance of 600 feet.

2. No, unless the variation requested results in a width less than 66 feet or in a sight distance less than 600 feet.

*SALES TAX REDUCTIONS, REBATES ETC.

Question No. 684—Mr. Prittie:

Are any reductions, discounts, allowances, rebates, etc., being given to the sales tax provided for in section 30 of the Excise Tax Act and, if so (a) by what authority are such reductions, discounts, allowances, rebates, etc., granted (b) to whom have such reductions, discounts, allowances, rebates, etc., been granted?

Mr. Sharp (for Mr. McIlraith): No. (a) However, since the inception of the act in 1924 under what are now sections 31, 37 and 38, the minister has been empowered to determine the value for tax and make regulations to remove discrimination arising between manufacturers selling similar taxable products to purchasers at different levels in the marketing process. (b) Such adjustments or determination of taxable value are granted to all manufacturers in such circumstances.

ADVERTISING RESPECTING 1963 INCOME TAX RETURNS

Question No. 686—Mr. Coates:

Did the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, request public service radio announcements from radio stations across Canada related to the filing of 1963 income tax returns, while at the same time placing paid advertisements with newspapers in Canada with the same objective in mind?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, the taxation division did request radio stations, as a public service, to utilize prepared announcements relating to the filing of 1963 income tax returns.

No, newspaper advertising was not used for this purpose but to publicize a particular aspect not suitable to radio communication; a single display advertisement was placed in the four rotogravures: Canadian Weekly/La Presse, issue of March 21 and Weekend/Perspectives, issue of March 28.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION COMMITTEE

Question No. 691—Mr. Dinsdale:

2. Isolation allowances ranging from $684 to $2,100 per annum. The amount of isolation allowance paid will depend upon the individual's marital status and upon the location to which he or she is posted.

AIR CONDITIONING IN CENTRE BLOCK, PARLIAMENT BUILDING

Question No. 712—Mr. McBain:

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to instal air conditioning in the centre block of the parliament buildings and, if so, when will installation commence and what is the date of expected completion?

Mr. Deschatelets: At the present time a preliminary engineering study is being undertaken to ascertain the most satisfactory means of providing air conditioning in the centre block. Until this study has been completed and the engineering principles established it is not possible to say when the work can be commenced and completed.

Questions

ADVERTISING REVENUE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 713—Mr. Cowan:

What was the division of the advertising revenue of radio station CJBC, Toronto, in the month of March, 1964, between advertising in the French language and advertising in the English language?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that all advertising revenue of station CJBC for the month of March 1964 was from advertising in the English language.

TAXES ON BOATS

Question No. 723—Mr. Howard:

What specific taxes are levied against and applicable to boats which are built for or materials which go into boats which are built for (a) purposes of fishing, and (b) purposes other than fishing?

Mr. McIlraith: Under the Excise Tax Act the consumption or sales tax of 11 per cent applies on the sale price of boats or materials which go into boats, that are produced or manufactured in Canada, or in the case of imported boats or materials, on the duty paid value thereof.

Schedule III of the act provides for exemption from sales tax of (a) boats bona fide purchased by fishermen for use in the fisheries, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture, equipment or repair of such boats: (b) ships licensed to engage in the Canadian coasting trade; (c) materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships to be used exclusively for commercial purposes.

SUGAR REFINING COMPANIES

Question No. 730—Mr. Mather:

1. How many sugar refining companies are there in Canada?
2. What was the total capitalization of these companies in 1961, 1962 and 1963?

Answer: 1. At the present time there are five separate enterprises refining sugar in Canada encompassing a total of seven companies. Of the five separate enterprises, two are public corporations, and the remainder are operating under private charters. One of these private companies is owned by the province of Quebec.

I understand a new sugar refining enterprise is planning to begin operations later this year.

2. Financial statements of public companies are available from public records but those of private companies are not made public.

Because of the limited number of private companies reporting, the dominion bureau of statistics under the secrecy clause of the Statistics Act is obliged to withhold information on the financial operations of the sugar industry as a whole.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

COMPLETION OF BREAKWATER, CAPE JOHN, N.S.

Question No. 739—Mr. MacEwan:

Does the completion of the breakwater not quite completed last year at Cape John, Nova Scotia, include the raising of a part of the breakwater which has settled?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, it includes raising of the outer 100 feet of the breakwater.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN NEW YORK WORLD FAIR

Question No. 749—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is Canada participating in the New York world fair and, if so, in what manner?
2. What Canadian companies have informed the government that they wish to exhibit at this fair?
3. How much has the government spent, or how much does it intend to spend on construction, displays, publicity, personnel expenses, etc. in connection with this fair?
4. If no money has been spent or is to be spent, what is the reason for the lack of government participation?
5. Has the government received an official invitation from Mr. Robert Moses, who is in charge of the fair and, if so, has any response yet been made?
6. What are the names of Canadian officials at this fair, and who is responsible to the government for them?

Answer: 1. No.

2. None.

3. Nil.

4. Canada is a signatory to the 1928 convention of the international bureau of expositions. The bureau does not recognize the New York world fair and Canada is therefore precluded from participating.

5. The government received an official invitation through the normal diplomatic channels and on behalf of the principals of the fair. The government's response was made through these same channels.

6. N/A.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

WINTER OLYMPICS—ATTENDANCE BY CANADIAN OFFICIALS

Question No. 210—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. What members of the government and other officials went to Innsbruck, Austria, since January 1964, in connection with the winter Olympic games, there?
2. What was the means of transportation?
3. What was the amount of the expenditures paid by or charged to the government of Canada for each of the said persons?
4. If a government aircraft was used, what is the estimated cost of operating such aircraft, excluding depreciation?

Return tabled.

WORLD FAIR CORPORATION EMPLOYEES

Question No. 424—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the number of the employees of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation?
2. What are the names, duties, salaries, qualifications and date of employment of each of these employees?

Return tabled.

PURCHASES OF FLAGS

Question No. 447—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1958 has the government or any agency or department thereof purchased any flags and, if so, were any of the said flags imported from other countries?
2. If any such flags were so imported what was, in each year, by designation of the flags, the number and value of each such designated flag so imported shown by the name of the country from which they were so imported?

Return tabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker: I should like to make a short statement at this point. It is now five o'clock and so far as the Chair knows or its advisers, this is the first time it has happened that we are still on starred questions. The rules and standing orders are quite definite, it seems to us, and without unanimous consent of the house we must proceed to private members business at this time. If the house would grant me one minute, I should like to put on the record my reason for reaching this conclusion.

Our procedures at five o'clock are governed by a standing order which cannot be varied except by unanimous consent. Section (3) of standing order 15 provides that private members notices of motion must be taken on Mondays at five o'clock. On the other hand, section (4) of the same standing order provides that when a debate on a supply motion is in progress at five o'clock, the order for private members business would be suspended. The principal purpose of standing order 56 in my opinion is that it limits to two days a supply motion, while at the same time, ensuring, if possible, that no other proceedings shall intercept or impose themselves on the proceeding of a supply motion. However, it must be considered that the general ruling governing the proceeding at five o'clock is section (3) of standing order 15, and that section (4) of the standing order provides for a specific exception thereto which, in my opinion, must be so interpreted. Therefore, I have come to the conclusion that unless unanimous consent is granted, the house must proceed with private members business at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Consent.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to proceeding with the ordinary business?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—SUBMISSION OF NEW LEGISLATION TO JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Arising out of the statement the Prime Minister made this afternoon, I should like to ask him whether or not, in view of the changed nature of the pension plan, the new pension plan to which he referred today will, in the ordinary course, be submitted to a joint committee of both houses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the intention of the government, to submit the legislation to a joint committee of both houses.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): May I ask a supplementary question? I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister if he can give us any indication as to when a new resolution and bill will be available?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend will realize that we now have the consent of the provinces, including Quebec, to the constitutional amendment which will make it possible to include provision in the act for survivor's benefits. We are proceeding to secure that constitutional amendment with the least possible delay, and I hope when the legislation is submitted it may be amended to include this important provision.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question? Is it still the intention of the government to have the plan effective on January 1, 1965?

Mr. Pearson: That will depend; my own view is that it will not be possible to put this plan in effect on the original date, which is the date mentioned by my hon. friend, but it will be in effect, it is hoped, some time in the following year.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The Prime Minister tabled the letter to the provincial premiers, and can he indicate if he has had replies from all of them signifying approval?

Mr. Pearson: Not all of them, but some of them, and the replies received have been in accordance with the changes suggested.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house why the Ottawa Citizen, on Saturday, published substantial excerpts from the lengthy telegram or letter he sent to the provincial premiers, when the house was not aware of its contents?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I cannot accept that; so far as I know no newspaper man had a copy of that telegram.

FINANCE

POLICY RESPECTING STOCK MARKET TRANSACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I had intended to put my question to the Minister of Finance, but perhaps in his absence the parliamentary secretary can answer. In view of the chaos that is presently reigning on the stock exchange in Toronto, which the president has described as dangerous, with enthusiasm becoming hysteria and with only one out of ten speculators likely to win, can the minister give us some indication of the government's attitude toward this problem? I think it is a very serious situation.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I believe that a statement in this regard should come from the Minister of Finance himself. In his absence I should like to take the question as notice and refer it to him on his return.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): This was going to be an original question, but the hon. member took the words out of my mouth, so to speak. I wonder if the Prime Minister would consider convening a federal-provincial conference, the objective of which would be to work out a formula for joint policing of stock exchange transactions, based on the securities exchange legislation in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: This gives me my opportunity to apply the rules which the house has accepted. I am going to ask for the full co-operation of all hon. members because I am going to be as strict as possible from this time forward.

It seems to me that while the question is very important, there is no pressing urgency. Furthermore, under subsection (f), it raises a matter of policy rather too large to be dealt with in answering a question at this time.

Mr. Fairweather: Also in accordance with the rules, I am delighted to be part of a precedent and I should like to give notice now that I will ask for this question to be transferred and dealt with in debate tonight.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is after five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with a strict interpretation of the rules, notice should be received by five o'clock.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

IMPORTATION OF POISONOUS BED SHEETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce of which I sent him notice this morning. Are the federal authorities making an investigation of certain imports into Canada that endangered the lives of the purchasers and almost brought death to two boys? I refer to the 600 bed sheets that were brought to Vancouver from Belgium which were found to be contaminated with a highly toxic insecticide known as parathion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): When the hon. gentleman sent this notice to me, I referred it around to the government departments and found it should be answered by the Department of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary to the minister would give the answer now.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. If I may, on behalf of the minister, I would say the reply is as follows: This sort of thing usually is dealt with under provincial law. It does not come squarely under any legislation administered by the department. When an incident like this occurs, it is up to provincial authorities to deal with it in the first instance. If there is any evidence of widespread distribution, we assist by getting in touch with health authorities in other provinces. We are looking into the present case at this moment.

EFFORTS TO REDUCE CANCER DEATHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question notice of which I had given to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her absence perhaps her parliamentary secretary might consider answering it. It relates to the Canadian cancer fund campaign presently in progress across the dominion. Considering the very heavy death toll taken by cancer, and more particularly attributable to lung cancer, much of which is attributed to excessive cigarette smoking, which toll now runs at about 500 lives a week, could the parliamentary secretary bring us up to date on the efforts of the Department of National Health and Welfare to reduce the toll, and especially with reference to new steps which are to be undertaken?

Mr. Speaker: This is a perfect example for the order paper.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I would like to say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mather:—that I entirely agree with the rule.

REPORTED HARMFUL EFFECTS OF DRUG PARNATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Health and Welfare or, in her absence, her parliamentary secretary, has there been any report on the drug parnate, used in the treatment of mental illness, from the committee which was appointed some weeks ago?

Mr. Speaker: I realize the great importance, but surely this is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

JERICHO BEACH, VANCOUVER—DISPOSITION OF R.C.A.F. DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the house whether negotiations are taking place to arrive at a disposition of the premises leased by the R.C.A.F. from the city of Vancouver in 1941 for the R.C.A.F. supply depot at Jericho beach, Vancouver, and if negotiations are taking place can the minister indicate when a solution will be announced?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the hon. member wishes to be the first speaker this evening, but in spite of its importance I do not feel his question is so urgent that it should be answered now.

NEGOTIATIONS TO WITHDRAW FROM NUCLEAR STRIKE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could he inform the house whether any negotiations are under way with Canada's NATO allies to negotiate out of the nuclear strike role?

Mr. Speaker: This is certainly a question for the order paper.

GRAIN

REVISION OF GRADING SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of importance to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. According to news emanating from trading circles a re-examination of the grading system for grain is about to take place for the purpose of bringing it into line with grading methods throughout the world. Can the minister inform the house whether such a revision is contemplated or is already in operation?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to put this question on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and I make it a question of privilege.

Last Monday, as reported on page 2085 of Hansard, I asked the minister whether he had received representations from the province of Quebec in order that the winter works period be extended after April 30. He answered that he had received no official request to that effect. Last Friday I asked the Prime Minister whether he had received a request to that effect from the premier of Quebec. He also answered that he did not know.

During the week end we learned that consultations had taken place between the minister of municipal affairs of the province of Quebec and the federal Minister of Labour in order to extend the winter works program beyond April 30. I read those reports in the press and I should like to know from the Minister of Labour when we were misled, if we have been.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have had no conversations with the minister of municipal affairs for the province of Quebec.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIRPORTS

TIMMINS—PLANS FOR EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and having just returned from the area I can assure the house it is of national importance and of almost frantic urgency. In view of the fact that the airport in Timmins is completely surrounded by private planes and helicopters, could the minister inform the house whether any immediate planes are in effect to expand this airport in order to ensure the normal flights of T.C.A. aircraft?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. This is a question for the order paper, in spite of the potential danger.

TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TRACKS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that a young child had both its legs crushed by a Canadian National train in the east end of Montreal, specifically between Moreau station and Viau street, does the department intend to remove these rail tracks from Moreau station to Viau street, in order to protect the people living in that part of the city of Montreal?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This falls under paragraph 7, which says that questions should "not be of a nature requiring a lengthy and detailed answer". May I suggest that the hon. member place it on the order paper.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order, I think it is of importance—

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member for Megantic that there is no point of order at this time.

Mr. Langlois: I believe there is, Mr. Speaker. According to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member would read the report of the committee as it appears at page 211 of last Wednesday's Votes and Proceedings, in French and English, he would see to what the Chair is referring.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister of northern affairs, and ask whether he has yet received any request from the government of British Columbia for financial assistance to the victims of flooding in the Alberni valley?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have received no report so far.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—REPRESENTATIONS BY QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a statement he made today in connection with the student loan fund. Would the Prime Minister advise the house whether the province of Quebec has now renounced its intention to test this legislation in the courts?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec has announced its intention of accepting the proposal that I gave to the house this afternoon.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

MANITOBA—TEACHERS STILL REQUIRED TO COMPLETE APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether he has anything to report today as to whether a directive has gone out as yet to regional unemployment insurance offices in relation to the confusion which was apparent regarding the compulsion of teachers to fill in social insurance cards?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest this should be placed on the order paper unless—

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In fairness, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member asked this question before the new regulations were in effect, and I said I would take it up with the Minister of Labour and that the Minister of Labour would reply.

Some hon. Members: You are breaking the rules.

Mr. Pearson: I understand I am out of order in raising this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the general interest in this subject and since we had a great many questions on it last week, if the Minister of Labour is prepared to reply it might dispose of the matter now.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise my hon. friend that on April 15 all local office managers of the unemployment insurance commission were instructed to write local school boards and boards of education to the effect that the requirements concerning the renewal of unemployment insurance books do not apply to teachers, since they are not covered by unemployment insurance. Moreover, the registration for social insurance numbers is being carried out on a purely voluntary basis so far as teachers are concerned. These regulations were sent out last week.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DISPOSITION OF TAXATION CASES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and I hope it is in order.

Does the Department of Justice intend to intervene with the authorities concerned so that the false certificates trial, which is always being postponed, may be held soon, in view of the fact that the attorney general of the province of Quebec seems to be deliberately delaying that trial?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I really think this question is one that bears on a subject matter completely beyond the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice.

[Text]

TRADE

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER AT NEW YORK FAIR

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he inform the house whether he has been officially invited to the opening of the New York world fair Wednesday as the representative of the Canadian government?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: One might almost say that this question is an urgent one in view of the date of the opening. But it is, really, a question for the order paper.

SUPPLY

Hon. Guy Favreau (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): This is the first supply motion in a series of six allowed by the rules for this session and we welcome the opportunity to draw some matters to the attention of the government and of the public. May I express the hope that the succeeding supply motions will be spaced out over the session as was the normal practice for many years in this house until last fall when five of them were crowded together for five successive weeks which, in effect, destroyed the value of supply motions to a certain extent.

The opposition is not suffering from any dearth of subjects to bring forward on supply motions, because when you have a government in retreat for a full year there are plenty of questions which need to be discussed, and discussed openly here in the House of Commons. I was impressed by the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) today when he advocated more open methods as being, to use his words, much better than the back room style of carrying on discussions and when he suggested that it is useful for public opinion to be brought more fully to bear on public matters. Here we have an opportunity on a supply motion to have an open discussion and in particular to bring to bear on important questions the weight of public opinion. My hope is that after this debate today and tomorrow the government will again retreat from the position it has taken.

I do not intend to adopt, as the Prime Minister used to do when he was leader of the opposition, a shotgun approach to a supply motion, that is to say, ramble all over the field and then, finally, under pressure, come down to one specific subject. I intend to announce within a few seconds, the subject matter that I have for discussion—a specific problem which I think should be dealt with by the House of Commons. And if the press of the country and the other news media adopt the suggestion of the Minister of Transport recommending analytic reporting of parliamentary proceedings we shall get across to the public of Canada this very important subject, and we shall have their opinion to reinforce the opinions of members of the House of Commons.

In order to relieve members of the cabinet from their worry—each one of them is—

Mr. Pickersgill: Trembling?

Mr. Churchill: —bothered by his conscience, I suppose, by something which has been going on in his department, something which he does not wish to have disclosed—in order to relieve those worried faces across this chamber I will say that the subject matter with which I am about to deal has to do with veterans affairs.

I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) who must have been anticipating I would raise this subject will be pleased to have the support of his colleagues, because collective responsibility is laid upon the members of the cabinet. I am sure all members of the cabinet from the Prime Minister down will give their close attention to this particular subject. Why has this subject come up for discussion? It has come up for discussion because over a period of almost three months we have been asking questions from this side of the house, attempting to get answers on this subject. Unfortunately, those answers have been ambiguous. They have obscured the issue and they have failed to give us the information which we sought. At least 18 questions have been asked on orders of the day in this chamber having to do with this problem, and when that number of questions is asked—and they were questions of urgency which would have been allowed even under the new rule we have adopted—the subject is one which obviously requires the attention of the government. That attention has not been given in a satisfactory way to this problem of veterans affairs.

Let us first consider the situation as far as veterans are concerned so that we may have some of the facts in front of us. I would refer to the committee report for 1962-63 which on page 79 indicates that there are in this country 150,724 disability pensioners—slightly over 40,000 from the first world war and some 106,000 from the second world war. The others are from Korea and the regular forces. So this is not a small problem from the standpoint of the disability pensioners, and the disability pensioners in 99 per cent of the cases are men who have been wounded. There are 150,000 of them in Canada.

Veterans of the first world war number about 40,000 and the disability pensioners are dying off at the rate of 2,000 a year. They belong to a vanishing race and the problem as far as they are concerned will disappear. The 100,000 from the second world war are now in middle age and we hope they will be with us for a good many years to come. Even if there are no more wars, and that is what we hope, the problem of Canada's war veterans is not one to be lightly brushed aside. I have given the house these figures so that hon. members may have an idea of the number of veterans who are being looked after by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Many of these disability pensioners, men with war wounds, are admitted to our veterans hospitals month after month and year after year.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Their cases come up for re-examination. As the years go by, deterioration sets in and a serious injury suffered in wartime many years ago, apparently healed, comes back to trouble the pensioner in later life.

In addition to those who are suffering from war wounds there are those who are on the war veterans allowance roll, and page 94 of the report indicates that there were 79,820 such people at the end of the fiscal year 1962-63. These are people, generally over 60 years of age, who are entitled to hospital treatment under the Department of Veterans Affairs. So that you have over 200,000 veterans of the first and second world wars and the Korean war who are entitled to treatment under the Department of Veterans Affairs, largely in the veterans hospitals. Some of them are looked after in other hospitals, but not very many.

There has been quite a bit of misinformation scattered here and there across the country as to the situation of the veterans hospitals. They are 11 in number. The beds available are roughly between 8,000 and 9,000; I believe 8,623 is the figure given in the departmental report. The occupancy figure is 80 per cent generally across the country, which I have been told is a reasonable occupancy figure. The admissions, people coming in, staying for a while and going out, for the fiscal year 1962-63 reached the total of 75,860, which gives you some idea of the tremendous load that is placed upon our veterans hospitals and the medical staffs which look after them. The average length of stay of those who come and go is slightly over 21 days. Then you have to consider how these people are divided up. In the report of the veterans affairs committee which sat last session, on page 372 you have the statement of the director of medical services for the department, who indicated in the first instance that there had been a decline in the number of hospital beds for our veterans. In 1945 there were 12,000; now it is down to roughly 8,600. So there has been a steady decline there. He divides into four categories, those people who are making use of the hospitals and are using the accommodation in the hospitals; those who are suffering from war wounds—the disability pensioner—15 per cent; those who are in the hospitals because of their entitlement under the War Veterans Allowance Act, 20 per cent. With regard to those who are in the hospitals because they need domiciliary care, I might just read what he says:

> Fifty per cent of our hospital population is made up of people under section 29, this means people who are receiving domiciliary care.

He goes on to say:

> I think that "domiciliary care" is a most unfortunate term because the fact is that these people in our hospitals are sick. They all have some degree of medical reason for being in the hospital and many of them have a very great degree of medical reason. They are bedridden, they need a great deal of chronic nursing care.

The balance of 15 per cent is made up of 6 per cent from the armed forces or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 1 per cent patients receiving care at the request of other federal departments, and the rest are veterans who, although not entitled under the act to receive treatment in veterans hospitals, have been admitted and are paying their way for that treatment.

That gives you an idea of the problem which the Department of Veterans Affairs faces. I will not go into detail with regard to the history of our veterans hospitals, but it is a long and honourable history. It dates right back to the end of the first world war, and Canada has become accustomed now for 40 years to having our veterans looked after in separate institutions. Although at times there is here and there an individual who has some complaint with regard to his treatment in a veterans hospital, by and large the work in those veterans hospitals has been of a very, very high standard and has been satisfactory. Men who have been wounded, men who are on war veterans allowance, the aged and the infirm have been looked after in our veterans hospitals, and their relatives and friends have been very grateful for that assistance.

How has it come about that at this time we are facing an attack on our veterans hospitals? There are people who say, "Oh, well, we do not need to pay so much attention to our veterans". I will deal with this a little later on. There are those who are saying, "Well, some of the veterans should not be in those hospitals". Others say, "There are wards vacant, and they should be filled". This is all part of the general problem of hospital care for our population, and it is rather distressing if anywhere in the country there are wards in hospitals not utilized for the general population. One of the problems that the Department of Veterans Affairs faces, and has faced now for a number of years, is to get adequate staff in order to man completely the hospitals for which it is responsible. If the present Minister of Veterans Affairs can solve that problem, he has my good wishes, because I was faced with it during the time I held that portfolio. I refer to the problem of getting staff in order that no wards remain vacant in any veterans' hospital. But this is not an easy task and I am sure the department is working hard at that job right now.

However, the general public looking at the situation, sometimes getting reports that are not completely factual, has gained the impression in some areas that the veterans do not require the care that they are now getting in the veterans hospitals, so that there is vacant space which should be made available to other members of the population, or something like that. I think any reasonable person would say that as our veteran population declines and vacant space becomes available in the present veterans hospitals, that space of course should be made available to others in the community who require medical attention. I think no one objects to that point of view. Contrary to an editorial in one newspaper, there is no "dog in the manger" attitude on the part of any veteran with regard to the veterans hospitals. As space becomes available, it should be placed at the disposal of others within the community who require hospitalization.

I have pointed out the burden which still weighs upon Canada for her present veteran population, and this cannot just be brushed aside easily. There are 200,000 veterans entitled under the act to receive treatment in our veterans hospitals. We cannot overlook the fact that the second world war veterans now approaching middle age will find increasing difficulties as the years go by. It is unfortunately true that as the years go by you do not just naturally recover from all the problems that affected you in your youth. On page 63 of the annual report there are some paragraphs worthy of note. The paragraph headed "Disabled veterans" reads:

> There is a continuing need for special services to disabled veterans. Eighteen years of experience—

—this is since the second world war—

> —have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the department that the war disabled can meet the challenge of normal peacetime living and make a substantial contribution to the economy of the country. Unfortunately, with the passing of the years, many wartime disabilities are being aggravated by the hazards and stress of modern living... As a result of these situations, there is a small but steady stream of veterans seeking advice and assistance with their problems of health and employment.

Then it goes on to say that during the last year 300 new disabled cases were registered for service. In the same period another 400 closed cases were reopened for service in specific areas of need. So it is not the type of work that can be called to a halt at any given moment.

Then at the bottom of the page there is a paragraph with regard to the older veterans:

> Any consideration of the welfare of older veterans invariably involves the services provided for the rehabilitation of the disabled and for this reason the branch has decided that its programs for assisting disabled and older veterans should be combined in one operational division. As world war II veterans are now of an average age of 45 years, it becomes apparent that all veterans may soon be classed as older veterans and the incidental demands for health and support due to age are bound to increase.

Everyone, of course, knows this.

Unfortunately, the process of ageing brings on many diseases and crippling conditions which force older veterans to retire from the employment market.

The point I am making is that it is a continuing problem. The number of veterans in this country is very large. As they get older the problem does not disappear. The first world war veterans will vanish, they will fade away; but the second world war veterans are here for years to come. Under these circumstances, what do you do with the veterans hospitals? When we had the opportunity of forming the government we asked the Glassco commission, in the midst of its manifold duties, to report on the veterans hospitals. This the Glassco commission did. I will not read at length what they reported, but they did look into the problem and make five recommendations, and I think that these five recommendations should be set out now, because I am laying the groundwork for subsequent speeches by my colleagues who will fill in other aspects of this problem. These are the five recommendations, which appear on page 195 of volume 3.

1. No further hospitals be constructed by the government as active treatment hospitals for war veterans.

2. Progressively, the treatment of veterans with pensionable disabilities be transferred to public hospitals, with the cost borne by the federal government.

3. Veterans with major pensionable disabilities, who require chronic or domiciliary care, continue to be a federal responsibility.

4. Veterans without major pensionable disabilities now receiving chronic and domiciliary care at public expense be progressively transferred to community facilities under such financial arrangements as may be expedient.

5. Active treatment hospitals now operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs, when cleared, be sold and converted into community hospitals under transfer agreements providing preferential admission rights for veterans with pensionable disabilities.

That volume of the report was first brought to our attention in January, 1963. Immediately the prime minister of that day, the present Leader of the Opposition, was asked about it. The Montreal Gazette reports on January 9, 1963 his reaction to that report as follows:

Prime Minister Diefenbaker said pointedly yesterday that he "disagreed" with some features of report No. 3 released on Monday night.

Mr. Diefenbaker singled out the veterans hospitals proposal as one which was "rather more sweeping than I think the government would give acceptance to".

[Mr. Churchill.]

"I don't know how my colleagues feel but I would not agree with that recommendation," he said—

I was in Winnipeg when I was asked for my reaction, which is quoted in the same paper. I was not in consultation with the then prime minister but I issued a statement which is reported in the Gazette as follows:

"No steps will be taken at this time to change in any way the present care and treatment of our veterans", veterans affairs minister Churchill said in Winnipeg.

"Newspaper accounts appear to me to have exaggerated some of the recommendations of the report", Mr. Churchill said.

"I want to assure all veterans in our hospitals, and all others who are interested, that no steps will be taken to change in any way the present care and treatment of our veterans at the present time".

"The distinction between active treatment and chronic care treatment is very well known to the department and has been the subject of very intense study by the department and myself during the last two years. Plans for chronic care and treatment to release active treatment beds are very far advanced, and decisions thereon were deferred pending the report of the Glassco commission.

"The suggestion that a $200,000,000 expenditure on hospital construction has been contemplated for the future is without any foundation to my knowledge".

"The care and treatment of Canada's veterans is a major obligation of this country which has been, and will continue to be, thankfully borne by Canada because of the sacrifices made by Canadian servicemen in wartime, and so long as I am minister of veterans affairs or have any government responsibility for veterans affairs, there will be no change in the care and treatment of our veterans unless it is clearly and unmistakably for their benefit".

In the same issue of the Montreal Gazette Judge C. C. Sparling, president of the Royal Canadian Legion, is reported as follows:

In Winnipeg, Judge C. C. Sparling, president of the Royal Canadian Legion, had described the recommendation that veterans hospitals be closed down as "shocking". He said that he was convinced that the Glassco commission's call for a revision of this and other services offered to Canadian veterans would be received with "grave misgivings" by the nation's 1,500,000 war veterans.

That was our response to the Glassco commission report. We went further than that and said: "Hands off the veterans hospitals". That has been our stand ever since and there has been no interference with the veterans hospitals. Repeatedly I have said to those who have asked me about it that there is no haste in this matter. The problem is very great at the present time. Several years will have to elapse before the burden of looking after war veterans has decreased; and I have given you the figures as of today where there are over 200,000 entitled to treatment in our hospitals, with thousands who may require treatment as the years go by—because there were one million people in uniform in the second world war.

In my opinion the Glassco commission report failed to appreciate the problem of veterans hospitals, although a great part of the report, which was voluminous and comprehensive and extended over five volumes, was acceptable and is being put into effect by the government. But so far as veterans hospitals are concerned I think the Glassco report was wrong. I think those who wrote that particular section of it failed to understand the problem.

I have set these facts before the house and I now want to deal with the attitude of the present government. I have given our stand concerning veterans hospitals and we have not changed our stand. We appreciate the problem. I appreciated it when I was minister of veterans affairs. We were waiting for the Glassco commission report before a final decision was made and it was just after the report was made that I was transferred to another department. Then the government changed and consequently there has perhaps been some delay.

We were quite aware of the fact that our veterans hospitals contain a number of veterans who do not require active treatment. We did not have in mind the building of new and expensive hospitals and running up a bill of $200 million. That is simply ridiculous. I have no idea where the Glassco commission got that figure. We had no such idea at all. One or two hospitals needed renovating. There may perhaps be one new building required but the enlarging of the number of active treatment veterans hospitals was not in contemplation.

We were considering what to do with those people who do not require active treatment accommodation but rather care somewhat similar to what can be had in a nursing home. In that regard there are examples of satisfactory operations which are going on under the Department of Veterans Affairs in Vancouver, Saskatoon and Ottawa where older people who are still mobile are looked after because they require a certain amount of medical supervision and nursing care.

All this information is available to the department. We took the stand that we were not going to swallow the Glassco commission report, hook, line and sinker, without a thorough study of it. I had hoped that the present government would do the same. However, that is not the case. We heard rumours about changes being made and a whole series of questions was put to the Minister of Veterans Affairs earlier in the session. After considerable delay he finally produced a statement on March 16. He wanted to smuggle it into Hansard. He was not going to read it. He wanted it printed as an appendix. But the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) very properly asked him to read it and so it is recorded on page 929 and subsequent pages of Hansard. His statement sets out the policy of the government with regard to veterans hospitals. As found on page 930 he said:

> Consequently the only practical solution to the very real problem we face is to enter into agreements with suitable agencies to take over the operational control of veterans hospitals. These would then become general community hospitals, in which the department could purchase the service it must provide.

As found on page 931 he summed up the matter in these words:

> It is therefore the view of this government that the operational control of veterans hospitals should be transferred to non-federal agencies at times, in places, and under conditions which will best protect the standards of care to which veterans are entitled.

On March 26 I sought an assurance from the minister. As found on page 1497 of Hansard I said:

> Will the minister give an assurance to this house that no hospital under the control of the veterans affairs department will be transferred to other authorities until the matter has been discussed and approved by parliament?

The minister thought that was a very involved question and, after an exchange of questions and answers, he went on to say:

> —as to submitting the matter and debating it before parliament in each instance, I think the hon. gentleman will realize this is an impossible thing to do because it would require or may require 11 or 12 different submissions to cover each instance.

In other words, he was contemplating the transfer of the 11 hospitals. Then I said:

> I take it we now have the assurance of the minister that he intends to transfer the veterans hospitals to other authorities. Is that correct?

The minister replied:

> The statement I made in the house the other day was, I think, quite clear—

The statement made the other day was, I presume, his statement of March 16, the operative sections of which I have just read. Not content with that, in addition to questions asked by other members the hon. member for Middlesex West asked the Prime Minister a question supplementary to one I had asked on March 30 last. As found on page 1544 of Hansard the hon. member used these words:

> Can the Prime Minister assure the house that if arrangements are made to let other interests use some of the hospital beds now under the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the actual control of these hospitals will be left with the Department of Veterans Affairs?

The Prime Minister replied:

> I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker, that the hospitals be left in the control of the department.

I suggest that we pause there to reflect on what those words meant. I took them to mean that in the mind of the Prime Minister there would be no transfer of the hospitals from the control of the department, if words carry the clear meaning that seems to be contained in those words. I subsequently asked him if he had not given a different answer to me than he gave to the hon. member for Middlesex West, but he said I was not using quite the same words I had used in my earlier question.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will continue at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Churchill: At six o'clock I was drawing attention to the statements which were made in the house by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) which were contrary one to the other. I quoted from Hansard of March 16 where the minister made a statement; March 26, when I tried to get assurances from him that there would be no transfer of veterans hospitals; March 30, when the Prime Minister said he thought it would be the intention that the hospitals remain in control of the department. I would have thought when that was said by the Prime Minister the issue would have been settled and the Minister of Veterans Affairs would have immediately informed the house that no change would be made. He remained unconvinced by the Prime Minister's statement and this is what makes it so difficult in this house. Where do we place our reliance? We get one answer from a minister and a different answer from the Prime Minister. Which one do we believe?

Well, for the time being, I guess we have to rely on the Minister of Veterans Affairs, because after that statement by the Prime Minister the Minister of Veterans Affairs was out in Winnipeg during the first week of April. The Winnipeg Tribune of April 4 reports in part as follows:

> He—

This is referring to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

> —admitted there would be some uncertainty and difficulties during the transition period when the hospitals changed control.

Obviously, he had in his mind that the hospitals would change control, and that is the impression that he left with the people of Winnipeg. This is what I have heard with regard to his meeting out there and his interview on CJOB, as well as his interview with the press. On April 8, after his return, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh), as recorded at page 1915 of Hansard, asked this question:

> Is it the intention of this government to turn over the veterans hospitals to the provincial authorities?

The minister answered as follows:

> —if we can be satisfied that we shall be given the necessary safeguards and guarantees so that veterans' rights will definitely be protected, it is our intention to proceed with it.

So there you have the story up to April 8, and the intention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs is to turn over the veterans hospitals to other authorities, either provincial or municipal. He mentioned certain safeguards which should be established. He says that this must be done in order to assure that the standard of treatment is maintained, and various things like that. Obviously, however, he is determined on his course. It has been impossible for the House of Commons to get a clear answer from the government in view of the somewhat evasive statement of the minister himself and in view of the statement of the Prime Minister which was the opposite to that made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the stand of veterans organizations on this question? The Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations have been attempting to get a satisfactory answer from the minister, but have had no success. The standing committee on veterans affairs, when it met last session made the following recommendation, which is recorded on page 430 of the committee minutes, and I quote:

> Your committee is aware that a point has been reached where a decision must be made regarding treatment services in both areas of responsibility and administration. Your committee recommends that fullest consultation be carried out with veterans organizations before any changes are made.

On March 16, when the minister made his statement to the house, he met with representatives of the Royal Canadian Legion afterwards, and not before. The Royal Canadian Legion issued a release the following day from which I will quote two paragraphs:

> "The Royal Canadian Legion is opposed to any change in the D.V.A. treatment arrangements that will alter the present provisions for treatment of veterans under any of the classifications of the veterans treatment regulations" said Fred O'Brecht dominion 1st vice president.
> Mr. O'Brecht was commenting on the statement made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs which outlined the proposed turnover of D.V.A. hospitals to municipalities or provincial governments.

After the representatives of the Legion had met with the minister, they wrote him a letter dated March 20 and they issued a press release so that everybody would know the result of their meeting with the minister. In part, this press release reads as follows:

> The Royal Canadian Legion is not satisfied with answers given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs to its questions on the proposed handover of D.V.A. hospitals. It today urged that action on the handover cease immediately and that the entire matter be reviewed.

The Legion has had no greater success than members of this house. We have not been able to get satisfactory answers. We have asked the minister to cease and desist from his activities, to call a halt to these proposed transfers and changes, which he apparently declines to do. Hence we have this debate.

I do not intend to go into all the details because other hon. members want to speak and I wish to give them the opportunity. In view of the facts I put on the record this afternoon, the situation with regard to the D.V.A. hospitals will be made quite clear to anyone who reads that record. As time goes on, if there is no further war, it is quite obvious the situation will change and the veterans hospitals will have vacant wards available for other purposes, but that time has not yet come.

I drew attention to the report of the Glassco commission, but when I did I omitted to indicate what the director of medical services had reported to the Glassco commission when it was making its investigation in 1962, when I was minister of veterans affairs. As recorded at page 434 of the report of the proceedings in the standing committee on veterans affairs, Dr. Crawford told the committee about the Glassco commission. He said:

> I was interviewed, as were members of my head office staff and, as I was directed to do, I gave them all the information pertinent to their study including a copy of the paper which I had prepared for the minister. When the Glassco commission report appeared it was evident that they had discarded the recommendation I had made in that paper; that is, that we carry on as we were at least for the time being, and had adopted the second proposal I had made; that is, buying care from community hospitals and turning over veterans hospitals.

Mr. Teillet: The hon. gentleman gave the page, but will he give the date of that report?

Mr. Churchill: The page is 434 of the evidence taken on Tuesday, December 10, 1963. Dr. Crawford had advised the Glassco commission to let things stay as they were for the time being. When I was talking to him, before he presented that report to the Glassco commission. I said, "Let things stay as they are for some considerable time; it may be 10 years, it may be 15, and in the interval let us see what we can do to correct some of the problems you have raised with me, the care of the chronic patients and the aged, and those occupying active treatment beds which should be released for more urgent cases."

We were looking into alternative methods of dealing with those problems, but never at any time did Dr. Crawford and I consider together the turning over of veterans hospitals to other authorities. But as a dutiful public servant and a man held in the highest regard, he was under the obligation to put alternative plans before that commission, which he did, and the commission rejected his first submission out of hand and seized upon the alternative. That is how the Glassco commission arrived at the findings I read out this afternoon.

As I see it, the solution is to let things remain as they are, with such modifications in the care and treatment of our veterans as are acceptable to our medical advisers, to the veterans themselves and to the veterans organizations. If this means making provision for those who do not require active treatment right in the D.V.A. hospitals, then let us make that provision; but to seize on this other course of handing these hospitals over to other control is repugnant to me, and is certainly repugnant to the veterans organizations.

This method that we in Canada have of looking after our veterans has been built up over a lifetime of effort. The people who now are hastily devising some new means to look after our veterans do not know the history of our veterans organizations from the time of the first world war. If they knew that history they would make none of their present decisions.

The minister's attention has been drawn to this by the president of the Royal Canadian Legion, who has made public a letter which he wrote to the minister on April 9. He wrote this letter because of the concern of the Legion and other veterans organizations as to the apparent obvious policy of the government, and in the letter he points out some of the difficulties veterans organizations had over the last 40 years in building up the veterans charter and getting recognition of veterans problems.

Throughout those 40 years—and I have said this before, in this house and elsewhere —the veterans of Canada have not made extravagant demands upon the government of the country. Any demands they have made have been on behalf of their comrades who have suffered all their lives as a result of their war experiences. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this attitude of the Royal Canadian Legion should be recognized.

This is what the president of the Legion said, on page 4 of his letter:

> This issue—

He is referring to the veterans hospital issue.

> —may be the crossroads for the Legion and the veteran. To some extent the purpose for which we exist is at stake. If cities and municipalities have been shortsighted in providing facilities for their people, and the shortage of hospital beds requires it, I am very sure the veteran will gladly accede to the use in his hospitals by the public of such beds and space as may be free and available.
> This is the stand of the executive of the Legion and I am very sure it is also the stand of most of the other veterans organizations.

I thoroughly believe that that is what is in the minds of the veterans of this country. To me this episode indicates an attitude of mind which I find very disturbing, an attitude of mind on the part of the government with regard to the veteran population of the country, and particularly with regard to the veteran who is in need of hospital and medical care.

I confess I am astonished that this matter should ever have drifted on the way it has. I am astonished that, in the almost three months which have elapsed since questions were asked in the house, a definitive statement has not been made and the problem has not been closed. I am astonished that the government, and particularly the Prime Minister, are showing a careless attitude towards this problem. I suggest it is a careless attitude because this matter has been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Not so long ago I saw a letter from a Canadian citizen—I will not divulge his name —in which he said, "In my opinion the debt to the veterans of Canada has been paid." Is that the attitude of mind of the present government or may I dismiss that as just the opinion of some crank? The debt to the veteran of this country has of course not yet been paid. How can you pay that debt when the man has been injured in war?

Mr. Moreau: Mr. "X".

Mr. MacEwan: Make your speech and we will listen to you. Get up and show us what you know.

Mr. Churchill: I will end my remarks by drawing attention again to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on March 30 as recorded on page 1544 of Hansard in answer to a question by the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas). The question was, in effect: Will the actual control of these hospitals be left to the Department of Veterans Affairs? And the Prime Minister replied:

> I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker, that the hospitals be left in the control of the department.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Yet we have these repeated statements by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) that it is his intention to proceed with the transfer of these hospitals to provincial or municipal control. This is not good enough. I think we must have from the government now a clear, concise and accurate answer to this question. They have caused disturbance, dismay and confusion among the veterans of this country, among the veterans who are in our hospitals and among their relatives, as well as those who for years have been visiting our veterans hospitals, the auxiliary organizations and all the people who are interested in the welfare of the disabled veterans of this country.

I shall not dwell upon the services that these veterans have rendered. I am simply asking this government to correct immediately the uncertainty concerning this particular matter. The stand our party takes is: Hands off the veterans hospitals; leave them in the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs and make the necessary adjustments which may have to be made as the years pass in order to maintain the standards of treatment, in order to maintain protection for the veterans who require hospitalization, and so on. If and when the hospitals, or part of them, are no longer required for veterans they should, of course, be made available for other purposes. That is our stand. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting therefor:
> This house deplores the announced decision of the government to abandon its responsibilities for the administration of veterans hospitals by assigning and transferring certain veterans hospitals to provincial or municipal control, and further deplores the failure of the government to accept the request of the Royal Canadian Legion and other national veterans organizations that the administration and control of the veterans hospitals remain with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to support the principle of this amendment because though the wording is somewhat different from the wording and approach we would have used had we introduced such an amendment, I believe it is designed with the best intentions to protect the rights and to meet the needs of veterans in Canada.

Throughout the years, when we are dealing with a problem of this type, we have been able in the veterans affairs committee to meet such matters as this in a non-partisan spirit and I trust there will be enough of our colleagues on the government side of the house to make certain that the fears of veterans organizations at the present time are not justified. This question has been one of great concern to veterans organizations generally in Canada at dominion, provincial and branch level. I have heard this matter discussed on a number of occasions. It is of concern to veterans generally and to their dependants, and I think it is of concern to a very large number of Canadians who recognize we have a particular responsibility toward the veterans of this country who defended it in two world wars and in other wars.

This is a subject which is very dear to my heart, personally, as I have a lot of friends among the veteran population in my own constituency and in other parts of Canada. I speak tonight as a member of this house after 19 years of experience on the veterans affairs committee, as the president of the 54th Kootenay battalion C.E.F., which was one of the finest battalions in the Canadian expeditionary force. As a man with a knowledge of veterans needs as a result of long association with them, and with a knowledge of their attitude toward veterans hospitals and their recognition of the services rendered by them to veterans since their inception. Generally speaking, veterans appreciate the high standard of service which has been given by veterans affairs hospitals. There is a certain possessiveness among veterans with regard to these hospitals throughout Canada; they feel they are their own hospitals, and when, unfortunately, they have to enter these hospitals as they grow on in years they meet comrades who, perhaps, fought in the same wars they did, sometimes in the same regiment, or brigade, or division. So there is a lot of sentiment attached to these hospitals as far as the veterans are concerned.

A debate like this revives memories, and when you get to be an old man like me you cannot help living in the past on occasion. When I discuss a subject like this I think of some of the men I knew. I think of the unusual characters. I remember a certain little chap who drove a baker's wagon at Nelson, and that chap had such poor sight that when we were in the front line at Ypres he could not see the rum jars coming over—those were mortar shells. He used to say: "Tell me when to run." But that did not stop him joining up. I think, too, of Herbert Richardson, a Cockney and a half, with a wry sense of humour. On one occasion we had been practically blown out of the Regina trench. I said: "What about it Herbie", and he said it would not have been so bad, if they had started two hours later because he would have had his socks darned by then.

I shall never forget the last time I saw him. I travelled some miles through the woods to visit him in a log cabin. He was very glad to see me, and said, "I have always had a great respect for you. However, I never thought you would sink so low as to become a member of parliament". Then only last week I received a letter from Hon. Howard Green, the former secretary of state for external affairs. I know that members of all parties in this house wish he were still here; many of us miss him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: He told me that he had attended the funeral of a veteran who was in our company that I had written to just two or three weeks before. This veteran had died in Shaughnessy. Howard Green had managed to round up four or five of the men of our battalion to act as pallbearers, and pay their last respects to him. His last days were made more comfortable in Shaughnessy hospital. Only a couple of weeks ago one of my best friends died, a veteran who had just been in Shaughnessy. He used to write me and say how much he appreciated the care he received. He was over 80. That type of care is not provided in many hospitals in this country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when I read the letters from veterans who have been in our veterans hospitals, and talk to them after their return and realize how much these hospitals mean to them, I realize that we have more than ever a great responsibility in this connection.

Veterans hospitals are democratic institutions. I appreciate the veterans hospitals. They have done a bit of mending in my case. I shall never forget the last time I was in Shaughnessy. The chap in the next bed said to me, "Have you done any time?" I said, "No". "Well", he said, "you are almost the double of a chap that was in the next cell to me in the pen for over two years". So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that in democratic institutions there is a spirit of fraternity because of service in war which I wish was more frequently evident in times of peace. I mention this instance to indicate the rather unusual atmosphere and sentiment that surrounds the question of veterans hospitals in this country, and I know a good many other members of this house understand that as well.

In the opinion of this party the veterans of Canada have a particular claim to consideration with respect to this question. I say that without any hesitation whatsoever. There was a strong reaction throughout the country as the result of the recommendations of the Glassco commission. That reaction was not only among veterans, but also among people who realized that we have this responsibility for the care of veterans in Canada. This question was discussed last year in the standing committee on veterans affairs, and we heard from Dr. Crawford, who is a veteran himself with war experience in Hong Kong. He is one of the finest chief medical officers of any group of institutions in Canada. He dealt with the whole question from a medical point of view and reviewed it with regard to efficiency. He told us of the probabilities of the future, and so on.

Then we heard representations from various veterans organizations. We did not hear much on this subject because the matter had not been crystallized, as it were. Then as the result of listening to Dr. Crawford, whom we all respect, and listening to some representations from veterans organizations, the committee in its report to the house recommended:

> Your committee is aware that a point has been reached where a decision must be made regarding treatment services in both areas of responsibility and administration. Your committee recommends that fullest consultation be carried out with veterans organizations before any changes are made.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that was the unanimous opinion of the committee; everyone agreed to the recommendations contained in the report made to this house. We expected to hear of some policy with regard to consultation with veterans organizations on the dominion, on the provincial and on the branch level. I must say that a number of us in this house, veterans organizations and a good many others throughout the country, were rather shocked when the minister announced government policy with regard to these veterans hospitals some time ago. We did think it would have been understood—and this is what we hoped—that the policy would be devised as the result of the closest possible consultation with all the veterans organizations and then, possibly, further reference to the committee with, later, a co-operative drafting of policy to meet the needs of the present and protect the rights of veterans in this country. More than that, the surprising thing was that the veterans organizations were not consulted before the minister made his announcement in the house. Mind you, the minister is quite a likeable person, but we are trying to get him back on the rails again on this question. The very afternoon that he made this announcement there were representatives of veterans organizations in the galleries listening to him, and he met the representatives of these organizations later in the afternoon. We think that the minister certainly should have listened to the representations of these representatives of veterans organizations before making any announcement in the house. In fact it is indicated that this matter is so complicated and surrounded with so many problems that to arrive at a satisfactory solution it is going to require a very thorough consultation with veterans organizations with regard to the circumstances surrounding every one of the large veterans hospitals in Canada.

The minister's announcement created an immediate reaction from veterans organizations. I am certainly not going to repeat what was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill)—but let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that you have heard from the commissioned ranks and now you are hearing from the other ranks, as it were. This is a very democratic section of the house.

There was a strong reaction from veterans organizations; members received letters from these organizations and, in some cases, resolutions. There was also a strong reaction from the ladies auxiliaries. I have always been very fond of ladies auxiliaries of veterans organizations; they have always been very kind to me; I have always been able, so far as ladies auxiliaries are concerned, to arouse their fraternal and maternal instincts. They have me at their meetings and tell me what they think about this and other veterans problems. When you attend these branch meetings of veterans organizations, of Legions in my constituency in southeastern British Columbia, and the ladies auxiliaries meetings, you get a very good idea what the ordinary veteran is thinking on these questions.

Other organizations were concerned also; I received resolutions and letters from them. There were also a good many people concerned. It was quite a topic of conversation shortly after the minister's announcement. It created quite a lot of interest across this country, and since then we have received letters from veterans organizations, from other organizations and from individuals. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have had a long association with veterans organizations and a long association with a large number of veterans. These organizations and these veterans are responsible; they have proven they are responsible throughout the years. The very veterans legislation that we have on the statute books of this country, known as the veterans charter, is the result of the representations made by veterans organizations, consideration by committees and consideration by governments. I am sure that as far as Canada is concerned there have been none of the excesses that have been experienced in the United States on some occasions.

I think throughout the years they can be credited with being very responsible indeed, because they are good Canadians. They have a sensible approach to many of these problems. Throughout the years we have had quite unusual and unexpected problems develop with respect to veterans legislation owing to changing circumstances, changing needs, changing times and all the rest. These problems have all been met in a very sound and satisfactory manner. We found that amendments were necessary from time to time in the principles of legislation, the amounts of pensions, war veterans allowances and so on, and governments have responded to these representations because they knew they were valid.

Our first duty, Mr. Speaker, is to protect the veterans in this respect. Therefore, we insist, first of all, that the service to veterans must be maintained at the present high standard of service, both to veterans suffering from acute illness or from chronic illness. Mind you, we have the veterans of the first world war, many of whom are getting on in years, and in many cases they require treatment for chronic conditions. A few are acute cases. Then we have the veterans of the second world war, and possibly the acute cases will start to rise for some time now and later we will have to provide further care for those who become chronic cases. Then we have the veterans who served in the Korean war, who are few in number but are entitled to the same consideration and treatment; there are those who served in the Congo and Middle East; and now the veterans who are serving in Cyprus.

We urge, in the second place, that the Department of Veterans Affairs keep the ownership and control of the buildings and plant now in its possession. We suggest that where there are empty beds and it is possible to meet local requirements, arrangements be made with local authorities to lease wings or floors of these hospitals which are available so as to provide for such local need. That is an aspect of the subject which warrants consideration by the department, by veterans organizations and by the provincial or municipal authorities particularly interested. Therefore, in the third place, I think that this whole question should be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs so that once again, in view of recent developments, we can hear the opinions of veterans organizations on this question.

Then, fourth, after the committee has met and has made its recommendations we suggest that there should be close consultation between the dominion command of veterans organizations and the Department of Veterans Affairs with regard to the whole problem. Then we will be able to lay down a general policy for the whole of Canada. Then, the department can meet with provincial or local branches to deal with any particular problem related to the area in which the branch is established. I have some experience, Mr. Speaker, of dealing with men in representing my community in various negotiations and so on, and I have found that if a problem is faced frankly and both sides express their opinions a sound, constructive and lasting solution can be produced.

And, last, after consultation between the veterans organizations and the Department of Veterans Affairs and agreement in principle is reached at the federal level with the veterans organizations, and agreement in greater local detail is reached at the provincial level, I am confident that if this question is tackled in the spirit in which we have been conducting the standing committee on veterans affairs throughout the years we can devise a policy, by agreement between the department and the veterans organizations, which will solve this question, protect the rights of veterans, and meet the needs of the future and the needs of changing times and circumstances. It is in that spirit that I appeal to the minister, and I am sure we will all look forward to his reply on a subject which I know concerns everyone in this house.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), I will only say a few words about the organization of veterans' hospitals in Canada and about the government's decision not to relinquish its responsibilities but to entrust to others the duty of providing treatment to veterans.

We have much respect for veterans because most of them fought overseas. They served in the Canadian army and, personally, I remember that at the beginning and during the last war, Canadians were told: "Enlist in the Canadian army, fight for your country and you will never have any more trouble, and the conditions which led to this war will never recur. The government will look after you, your security and your family".

I knew various veterans who, when they came back from overseas or elsewhere, were bitterly disappointed to find out that the war once ended, the government, after having succeeded in obtaining an adequate fighting force, did not seem too interested in their welfare and in their security. Such attitude entailed much hardship for some who wanted to find employment. Indeed, I personally know able veterans who tried to find work in various government departments after the war. Of course, they were ready to give them a priority at the time, as it is still done today. But, on the other hand, the positions offered were so "non-specific", if you will, and the salaries so inadequate, that veterans had practically no protection at all from the federal government.

Therefore, those veterans had to find employment elsewhere and later to launch another campaign, not of a military character, but an economic and industrial campaign to earn their living.

And little by little, physical troubles resulting from action on the battlefields or from their military service began to show, and the veterans who thought that they were in good health realized one day that they were suffering from ailments which they attributed to their military service.

It is quite possible, I admit, that those discomforts might have been caused by their military service or that their ills were aggravated by their participation in combat, or still that this physical condition went unnoticed when they enrolled for military service. But, the result was that veterans started to insist on getting medical care in veterans hospitals because they were unable to have their degree of disability recognized and because the pension they received was not high enough. That is why there are so many veterans hospitals today. As a matter of fact, there was a rather sharp increase in such hospitals after the war because a great number of veterans required medical treatment.

While in theory those veterans could get an increased pension which would enable them to keep staying at home, to use their family life to rehabilitate themselves or even make a greater contribution to civilian life, because of those various reasons they feel they must go to those veterans hospitals to have at least free medical services provided by the government.

That deplorable situation is the result of a system which developed out of various economic and political conditions, so that those veterans have to take advantage of the services offered to them by veterans hospitals.

I do not think the government is justified in maintaining such a large and expensive qualified personnel to take care of a number of veterans which may not be large enough. And personally, I see no objection to the government entrusting someone else with the hospital and medical function, providing it has the assurance that the veterans will lose absolutely nothing in terms of hospital efficiency.

On that score, I should like to quote from the release issued last month by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet). That statement made by the minister indicates very clearly the conditions which will have to be accepted before the federal government gradually withdraws from the administration of veterans' hospitals. Here is what the minister said, and I quote:

[Text]

At this point I would like to make it unequivocally and emphatically clear that no such agreements will be entered into by the government unless certain sine qua non conditions are met. These conditions, three in number, are as follows: First, accommodation for the treatment of service connected disabilities among veterans must be immediately available at all times, and treatment must be provided in accordance with standards prescribed by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Second, community institutions of acceptable standards must be available to look after the work load created by other classes of veterans, which means that such veterans will be able to obtain treatment in their own communities, near their own friends and families. Finally, satisfactory arrangements must be made for the continued employment of professional and other staffs now serving in our institutions.

[Translation]

What do we read, Mr. Speaker, in this statement by the Minister of Veterans Affairs? The veterans themselves, members of medical and hospital staff will not be prejudiced, because the department will make sure that this personnel will be sent where its services will be required. On the other hand, I think that the federal budget, for a definite period, will be relieved accordingly, since it is clear that there is at present a duplication of services which could be supplied somewhere else.

As I said, we must respect the rights of veterans to receive medical services. Also, we should not suggest that the staff was not efficient, on the contrary: the medical, hospital and nursing personnel in veterans hospitals is excellent; diagnostic and research facilities are excellent. However, there is a duplication of functions in most cases.

In my own riding there is a veterans hospital, l'Hôpital des anciens combattants de Sainte-Foy, and in addition there is a hospital section coming under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence so that we have the hospital services of the Canadian Army and those of the veterans administration. In both hospitals, or at least in one, university teaching is carried out, which means that this is an important hospital, fully equipped to render the services expected from it. This means also that the medical students of the area can take advantage of its services. However, I do not think that it is because of the fact that there are veterans in that hospital that students can receive such teaching; it is rather on account of its good organization, good maintenance and because the department heads are qualified.

However, since in the majority of cases we are dealing with chronic patients, or at least with patients requiring indefinite treatment, it turns out, in the long run, even at the teaching level, that the cases found there have lost a lot of their importance for the students and the medical faculty.

That is why as long as the requirements set out by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the government are met in the hospitals, I am personally convinced that the veterans in my constituency will be well looked after and that they will get in a very short space of time and without delay the same treatment as before.

I am convinced also that the members of the medical, hospital, social welfare nursing staff will be able to keep on practising in other fields which will have been accepted by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Personally, I am satisfied with such conditions and I believe that we should accept, in order to ensure greater efficiency, the new policy adopted by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I would not object either if it were submitted to the veterans affairs committee since that group was set up to study that department's problems. Everyone should have the opportunity to express his views, including members of national veterans' organizations and the Canadian Legion, for which we have great respect.

I feel that the main thing is to convince those who have contributed to the defence of our country and others that they can rest assured that we remember them and that, as we promised them before they joined up, we will never forsake them.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have just read the amendment moved by the Conservatives concerning the resolution under consideration.

In my opinion, the Conservatives who were in office not so long ago could have implemented then the measure they are now claiming for veterans.

We know that in the past, soldiers were given numerous tokens of appreciation when they were on the battlefields. We also know that on occasion promises, fairly often astounding, were made to them concerning the treatment they would receive on their return to Canada.

I remember that when members of the Canadian cabinet went to visit European battlefields 20 years ago, they told our soldiers: "Gentlemen, fight bravely. When you come home you will never again go through economic crises, you will never suffer from want in times of prosperity, never again will there be hardship in Canada. When you come back you will get adequate pensions and you will be given special treatment because you are now defending democratic freedom, you are fighting to preserve that freedom."

Mr. Speaker, our soldiers have come home but a large number of them, not to say practically all of them, write to us to protest against the treatment they get in Canada.

I would now like to ask the government to recognize veterans better than they have been since their return to Canada many years ago.

The official opposition moved this amendment, which I quote:

[Text]

This house deplores the announced decision of the government to abandon its responsibilities for the administration of veterans hospitals by assigning and transferring certain veterans hospitals to provincial or municipal control, and further deplores the failure of the government to accept the request of the Royal Canadian Legion and other national veterans organizations that the administration and control of the veterans hospitals remain with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

[Translation]

I believe that if the government decides to decentralize the veterans hospitals' administration, it is understood that it will assist the municipalities or provinces in providing the required treatments to veterans who need them.

In my opinion, veterans who live in a municipality of some kind find it easier to come to some agreement, to be heard, in short to make themselves understood by the authorities that are closer to them than by those which are too remote, such as the central government.

I think that it is right to favour veterans access to hospitals and that these hospitals be assisted by the municipalities as well as by the provinces which will be able at the same time to help the veterans.

Therefore, we agree that this is an excellent initiative on the part of the government, that it will benefit the veterans who, from now on, will get better treatment.

Should abuses be committed, should the veterans feel they are being ill-treated or molested in any way, either by provincial or municipal authorities, the federal government can always intervene through the Department of Veterans Affairs to see that our veterans are respected and are given all facilities for receiving proper treatment whenever the need arises.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the tradition of this parliament to deal with veterans problems and matters affecting the welfare of veterans in a non-partisan manner. Certainly, during the 15 years I have been a member of this house I have never known any want of confidence motion seeking to divide the house on any matter pertaining to the welfare of veterans. I must confess that I am a little disappointed at the departure involved in the amendment which we have before us this evening. I am sure all hon. members subscribe to the philosophy that human beings are the most important things in this world. When we come to that particular class of human beings who have served their country, have fought, bled and sacrificed their limbs, I am sure we all feel that they should be placed in a preferred class. Next to them in preference would be their widows, orphans and dependants.

The objective of policy pertaining to veterans affairs over the years has been to find what is the very best that can be done for the veterans. This has been the objective of policy no matter what party has been in power. I feel sure that that objective remains today the very same as it has been down through the years.

When the first great war produced casualties Canada, as a grateful nation, assumed certain obligations toward her veterans. One of those obligations was treatment services. Those treatment services were, first, to repair as much as possible the ravages of war and, second, to provide medical treatment to the veterans for their disabilities resulting from service as long as they lived. This treatment commitment was written into the law for two specific groups of veterans. One group, of course, was the disability pensioner; the other group was the war veterans allowance recipient.

Now, some may hold the opinion that the disability pensioner has a stronger claim or perhaps a greater entitlement than the war veterans allowance recipient. Today, when we have more advanced knowledge of the effects of stress and tension, that theory may not stand up too well. But be that as it may, under the law both have the same entitlement. The law applies equally to each and imposes the same obligation on the government to provide treatment to each group of veterans.

In discharging these commitments this or any government is faced with certain problems. At present, and looking to the future, the chief problem appears to be the ability to maintain an adequate standard of treatment service. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), who moved the amendment, admitted that this problem exists, so there is no reason why time should be used in belabouring that point.

However, in seeking for a solution to this particular problem we must face certain basic factors as they present themselves to us at present. These factors may change over the years, but at present we must deal with them as we find them and as they are presented to us by our experts. The first of these basic factors is the shortage of doctors. I do not think there will be very much disagreement on that point. There is hardly any province that has an adequate supply of doctors. In fact in my own province the shortage is so great we have to try and induce medical men to come over from Great Britain and European countries.

The second basic factor that cannot be ignored is the class of patients who have to be treated. At present, and for some time past, 70 per cent of the patients being treated in veterans hospitals are war veterans allowance recipients. This situation will continue for a good many years, and the longer it continues the longer it will carry with it another problem, namely the increasing number of veterans requiring chronic care.

The third factor that must be considered is our constitutional position, because health services are really a provincial responsibility, and we know from experience that many provinces do not take kindly to the federal government encroaching on provincial prerogatives. We cannot ignore these three basic factors, and any solution we may find must take them into account.

I know veterans may say, "Why don't we open the doors of our veterans hospitals to civilian patients?" I think most veterans would be happy if that solution could be adopted, but we have advice that it is not quite that easy, and therefore we cannot brush off this constitutional position in which we find ourselves.

These factors I have mentioned vary in different parts of Canada and, not only do they vary, but there are other factors which vary as well. Consequently, as the minister has pointed out on many occasions in the house, there can be no over-all solution. We must take each problem, each situation separately, and work out a separate solution in the light of what can be accomplished under the prevailing circumstances.

The minister has made it clear that in seeking solutions certain guide lines will be followed and certain principles adopted to safeguard the interests of the veterans. He will be dealing with this tomorrow in more detail, and there is no need for me to take time now to develop this particular point.

There seems to be an idea abroad, and it is implied in the amendment before us, that the government intends to turn over all of its hospitals, in a wholesale manner, to non-D.V.A. agencies. Certainly that is not the situation as I understand it. On many occasions the minister has said that we would have to deal with each case on its merits and at no time, to my knowledge, has anyone said that all the hospitals are going to be turned over to non-D.V.A. agencies.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the parliamentary secretary permit a question? Will he name the hospitals that are going to be turned over?

Mr. Carter: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to do that. The minister has told the house on several occasions that we have only one specific case before us at the moment, and that agreement on it has not yet been finalized.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred to the recommendations of the Glassco commission and stated that he did not like the approach which the commission took to this problem. I think we can agree with him there because, fundamentally, the Glassco commission was set up to investigate ways of effecting economies in government departments.

There is no doubt that they approached this problem from that point of view. I began by saying that according to my philosophy human beings are the most important things in the world, and to effect economies at the expense of human beings is repugnant to my personal feelings as it is, I am sure, to other hon. members, particularly when those concerned are veterans. Still, we must face the fact that the problem still remains. We have two possible courses to follow. One is to do nothing about the situation and let it deteriorate to the point where we cannot get the doctors we require to provide the standard of service which we are obliged to provide for veterans—to let things go until it is too late to find an effective remedy. The other alternative is to explore possible solutions in the light of the circumstances and of the various factors which have to be taken into account.

The amendment deplores what it calls the announced decision of the government to abandon its responsibilities in this regard. That is the key phrase of the amendment. I think it should be very clear that, far from abandoning its responsibilities, the government is doing the very opposite. The government has the responsibility, by law, as I pointed out, of providing the best possible service for veterans, disability pensioners and W.V.A. recipients. That is what the government intends to continue to do. It cannot provide that standard of service if it cannot get the doctors who are needed to carry it out. This is what most people tend to overlook today. There is a great tendency to concentrate on the shortage of hospital beds and to think of the solution in terms of providing more and more hospital beds. But hospital beds alone provide no solution; they are of very little use if we cannot get the professional men to provide the required treatment, and that is all the government is trying to do—it is trying to find some means of making sure that the veterans will always get the best standard of treatment available. This is the very opposite of what the amendment implies.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) made a very strange remark. He said he agreed in principle with this amendment. But he did not say he agreed with the substance of the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: I said that if we had worded it, we would have worded it somewhat differently.

Mr. Carter: I am not concerned with that. I am concerned with the fact that the hon. member said he accepted it in principle.

Mr. Herridge: Quite.

Mr. Carter: I find it very difficult to make a distinction. You cannot separate the principle from the wording of this amendment. You cannot isolate the principle, and agree with that, without agreeing with the rest of what the amendment says.

Mr. Herridge: The principle of the best possible care for veterans.

Mr. Carter: We all agree about that. There is no disagreement as to the necessity of providing the best possible care for veterans. If the hon. member is in favour of that, he will vote with the government.

One solution to this problem which seems worth exploring is to work out agreements with non-D.V.A. agencies, and the minister has made it clear on several occasions that such agreements will be worked out only when necessary and that they will only be put into effect if it is certain that the interests of the veterans have been adequately safeguarded. That is an important limitation and it certainly destroys any statement or implication in the amendment that the government is abandoning its responsibilities. In fact, the government is seeking to find ways and means of discharging its responsibilities, and of doing so the best way possible.

I think we realize that this is a highly emotional subject as all matters pertaining to people must be, particularly when they affect the welfare of a group of people such as veterans. I submit that it is not in the best interests of the veterans themselves to make this a matter of partisan controversy.

Mr. Herridge: I did not do that.

Mr. Carter: No, I am not blaming the hon. member. But that is what the amendment does. We are not serving the best interests of the veterans when we take a rigid position, dig in our heels and try to defend it at all costs. Rather, I feel we should seek out together the best solution to this problem, taking into account all the factors that must be considered. I am sure that if the official opposition or any of the veterans organizations could suggest a better solution in the light of all the facts, their representations would not go unheeded.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I rise to support the amendment, representing as I do the constituency of Bow River which embraces part of Calgary. I do so mainly on the grounds of the situation with respect to the Colonel Belcher hospital. May I say I feel certain that a very distinguished soldier who also represents a Calgary riding, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) will probably have something to say with reference to this matter because he, along with myself and others, is among those who have put questions to the minister from time to time without getting information.

I should like first of all to mention something which was said by the previous speaker. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) said it was regrettable that we had moved such an amendment, because we had put the veterans into the realm of politics. I say to him that never before has a government put the veterans in such a position as they now find themselves. We had to put them into the realm of politics. I invite the minister to read the telegrams which I have received on this subject from various Legion branches and their members, asking that we speak up for them on this occasion. They come from Banff, Acme, Bowness, Bassano, Calgary, North Calgary, Calgary west end branch, Calgary Ogden, Calgary T.V.S. branch, Canmore, Carbon, Carstairs, Cochrane, Cremona, Crossfield, Didsbury, and Drumheller. Most of those places are in the constituency of Bow River, although some of the Calgary Legions mentioned are in the constituency of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). You only have to look at the telegrams to see how seriously worried and concerned the veterans are with regard to the decision about to be made by the government in this regard.

I think the first question to ask is, why is this decision being made? The last speaker referred to the Glassco commission. In various debates many hon. members have referred to the Glassco commission, and I think we should clarify one point now. It is that all royal commissions are set up to investigate the facts. Once the facts as presented by a royal commission are before the house governments make decisions from those facts and we are able to obtain the proper facts in a debate of this nature. When the Glassco commission was set up there was no thought that everything Mr. Glassco and his commission said in the three or four volumes prepared by them would be adopted by the Conservative government or any other government. There have been some wonderful recommendations, but some recommendations would not be adopted by any government. This is one recommendation that we say should not have been adopted. Immediately report No. 3 came out the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) outlined the stand our leader took at that time. He stated categorically that was one recommendation that would not be adopted, that there would be no interference with the administration or control of the veterans hospitals. Of course, this also concerned the Colonel Belcher hospital. I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was minister of veterans affairs at that time. So the veterans at that time, immediately the report was prepared and filed in the House of Commons and became a public document, knew where they stood as far as the Conservative government was concerned. Now they are not too sure where they stand with the present government. This is the very reason the matter is now before the house in this debate.

After all, Mr. Speaker, we have only to look at the telegrams to see that the veterans are confused. We have continually asked questions of the minister, "What are you going to do. What negotiations are being made? Are you negotiating? Are you negotiating with the government of Alberta? Are you negotiating with the city of Calgary?" The house will see that the answers are far from clear, and I will read them shortly. The answer was always, "Well, if anything happens we will let you know about it". The Prime Minister today made the statement that they now believe in the system of open diplomacy. If this is open diplomacy, it is a strange kind of open diplomacy because everything so far has been done behind closed doors. Perhaps we will get a statement in the future. This is what the veterans are concerned about. If in this connection the doors are closed in the future and they cannot raise their voices in this regard, it will then be too late to speak up. That is the reason we have this debate this evening, and it will go on tomorrow.

The next question is, why has this situation arisen as far as the Colonel Belcher hospital is concerned? Press reports leave the impression that there are empty beds in the Colonel

Belcher hospital and it is not serving its purpose. But this is the real story in the province of Alberta. We have to face it, and I am very happy to see the hon. member for Calgary North in his place tonight, because he has been so interested throughout in this matter, as I have; but I am disappointed to see that the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Hays) has failed to say a word on this matter and is not in his place, and probably will not be in his place for the whole of this debate. I am sorry he has not shown an interest in this matter, because it affects the city of Calgary and particularly his own riding.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the situation? There is definitely a shortage of beds in the hospitals in the province of Alberta. Let us look at what has happened in the last few years. We heard a great deal today about increasing the amounts of money to the provinces. In fact, that discussion went on for two and a half hours today. Let us look at what the Conservative government did in this regard. I hope the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) is listening to this. In 1958-59 the federal government contributed to the hospitals in Alberta $8,774,575; in 1959-60 that jumped to $15,698,000; in 1960-61 it jumped to $16,905,000; in 1961-62 it jumped to $25,784,000. In other words, the grants to the hospitals in the province of Alberta, under the Conservative government, jumped from $8,700,000 to $25,700,000. You might say we tripled the amount of grants. What took place in that time? Let us look at the contributions in reference to construction during those years. In 1958 the federal government contributed to the province of Alberta $4 million. I shall read these items. This was in reference to crippled children, professional training, hospital construction, mental health, tuberculosis control, general public health, cancer control, laboratory and radiological services, medical rehabilitation, child and maternal health. This all added up to $4 million. In 1959-60 this amount increased to practically $4,200,000. The most important and the largest figure in that regard was in construction, which figure was $1,640,000. So you have there the contributions made in 1960, 1961, and 1962.

What took place? I represent part of the city of Calgary, and part of the problem that faces Calgary in this connection is a shortage of beds. During that time, in order to measure up to its responsibility, the Conservative government in the five or six years it was in office tripled the contributions to the hospitals in Alberta. But I must say, and I say this in a critical way, that the hospital facilities did not triple in that regard. I say this, with respect, to the hon. member for Calgary South. We come from the same city. He was mayor of the city of Calgary; he knew the problems at that time, and certain recommendations were made at the time he was mayor. This is why he should be here tonight, because he failed to heed those recommendations. Therefore in the city of Calgary you have a very chronic situation as far as the shortage of beds is concerned. And with that situation, the pressure goes on. Where does the pressure go on? It has gone on the Minister of Veterans Affairs; he has succumbed to the pressure and it would seem now that they are going to transfer the Colonel Belcher hospital over to the provincial government either in an administrative way, or control all the way, or to the city of Calgary.

Yet when we rise in our place to ask questions or debate the situation, what kind of answers do we get? I will read some of these questions and the answers we received. The questions go back to February 20, 1964, and to this date, two months later, we do not know what the situation is. I say to the minister that it is up to him, in his capacity as minister of this department, and not through one of his members, to get up and clearly state what is the situation; how far the negotiations have gone; what went on behind closed doors; what offer has been made; what is going to happen to the veterans of southern Alberta; what consideration has been given to the representations made in the 20 or so telegrams I have received from Legions in southern Alberta. This is his responsibility. We would not be having this debate in the House of Commons at this time if answers had been given to these questions. I doubt whether we will receive answers to them even now, when we place these facts before the minister and ask for answers to our questions.

Let us see what has happened. Let us look at the wishy-washy answers that have been given to the direct questions we have asked in this regard? One of these questions was, "Is this matter going to be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs?" What did the minister say in answering that question? He said, "Before any decision is made, before the final negotiations are concluded, the committee will have a chance to look into this matter". Is he going to break his word to the members of the House of Commons; is he going to break his word to the committee? This is another case where they have open diplomacy behind closed doors; and when they want to get a big press, they bring it out and call it diplomacy in front of the doors. This is the problem.

Here is the question put by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae).

Mr. Teillet: Would the hon. gentleman give me the page?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes; page 40, February 20, 1964. This question was asked by the hon. member for York-Sunbury:

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs which is based on statements made yesterday by his deputy minister and also his assistant deputy minister, concerning veterans hospitals. Would the minister advise the house, and especially the one million veterans of this country, the intention of the government regarding the transfer of the Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals from federal to provincial or local control?

Now, this is the kind of answer we got:

Mr. Speaker, because of the general shortage of hospital beds throughout the country we have had several proposals from a number of authorities, provincial, municipal and university, to assist in the solution of this problem. I think all hon. members will realize the inherent difficulties in these proposals.

We know the difficulties; we want the facts. Then the minister goes on with the same wish-washy statement. I think we might as well come to grips with the problem. Let us not mess around with the situation. Then I asked the question:

Does this policy apply to the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary?

I asked that question because I had been home to Calgary and had been told that negotiations were going on. But we could not find that out in the House of Commons; we had to find it out on Eighth avenue in Calgary.

Mr. Teillet: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I will read it, and the more I read the worse it gets and the worse you will feel. I continued:

There were some press reports that a decision had already been reached in regard to that hospital.

That is another point. The press had said that a decision had already been taken. This is the minister's answer; it is very clear:

I can assure the hon. member that no decision has been taken. However, we are examining a proposal received from the city of Calgary.

Then the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) asked this question:

In dealing with this question is the minister taking into account the recommendation of the veterans affairs committee that before any decisions are made in this respect the veterans organizations should be consulted?

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is what I like about this answer of the minister; for once he was definite. His answer was "Yes".

Therefore, my first questions to the minister in this debate are: Is he going to refer this matter to the standing committee on veterans affairs before the decision is reached? Is the committee going to be told about the negotiations which have taken place? Is the committee going to be let in on those negotiations? Are the veterans going to know the facts before the minister comes outside the door and says that this is open diplomacy, after we have had the diplomacy behind the closed doors?

Now I move on, Mr. Speaker, to page 625 of Hansard for March 6. This question was put very clearly by the distinguished member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). He said:

I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before any change in policy in regard to the operation of the veterans affairs hospitals is decided upon, will the minister, as I requested some two weeks ago, submit this whole question to the veterans affairs committee of the house for examination and advice?

The reply of the minister was:

Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that into consideration—

He had begun to waffle and wiffle—

—before I can answer my hon. friend.

That reply was given on March 6; but back on February 20, before he started to waffle and wiffle and had had a discussion with some of his colleagues as to what was going to happen, he had replied "Yes, Mr. Speaker". He had given an undertaking at that time to place the matter before the committee. Why did he waffle and wiffle on March 6, 1964?

Mr. Teillet: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker—I am sure my hon. friend does not want to mislead. If the hon. member will read these questions carefully he will find that they deal with two separate matters; one, the veterans organizations, and the other the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. Woolliams: I will re-read page 625; it will take me a little longer but we might as well have the facts. The minister was asked whether the whole question would be referred to the committee before any change in policy in regard to the operation of the veterans affairs hospitals is decided upon, and to me his answer was very clear. The Colonel Belcher hospital is a veterans affairs hospital. The minister answered yes to the question in February, and I say that on March 6 he wiffled and waffled. If he has not, then I hope he will let us into the inner sanctum and let us know what went on in Calgary and what negotiations are going on.

Mr. Teillet: There is no mystery whatever.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us see what the minister said, as reported on page 933, March 16, 1964. Again the hon. member for Calgary North asked this.

Mr. Teillet: What page is this?

Mr. Woolliams: Page 933. I have all the questions and answers and I will send the minister a memorandum when I am through. The hon. member for Calgary North asked:

I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Can the hon. gentleman now answer the question I have asked him two or three times over the past several weeks? Will the government refer the whole question of the operation of veterans hospitals to the veterans affairs committee for an examination by that body and a report on the change of policy?

Now here is the minister's answer; let us now decide whether he wiffled and waffled on this occasion:

Mr. Speaker, this question was considered by the veterans affairs committee. It made a recommendation which I have adopted and followed. There is difficulty in making a statement in general terms at this time, because we will have to deal with each hospital according to its own circumstances, and some of them we may have to retain. I am not at all certain it will be possible to submit each case to the committee. There is one thing I have undertaken to do according to the recommendation of the veterans affairs committee, and that is to engage in consultation with the veterans organizations involved.

Now he has gone one step further. First of all he said that he would submit the question to the committee. On this occasion he says, speaking in general terms, that each hospital must stand on its own feet. He does not know whether he can do it; but one thing he will not do is to make a decision without consulting all the veterans organizations in the country. From the file which I have built up in the last month it is clear he has certainly not consulted any organizations in the city of Calgary or any in southern Alberta.

Mr. Winkler: Or anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, that is absolutely correct. Then the hon. member for Calgary North, as reported at the same page, asked this question:

A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in connection with Colonel Belcher hospital. Is the minister aware that when the matter was referred to the veterans bodies in Calgary they were universally hostile to the idea?

This is the reply of the minister:

Mr. Speaker, my information is that they were not universally hostile to it.

I have not time to read all of this, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned the 20 telegrams I have received, and if that is not hostility which the minister is receiving, I do not know what is. As far as the veterans are concerned, I would say that they are opposed to this transfer of the control of the Belcher hospital to the province or the city of Calgary, and they are against losing their rights to use that hospital when the need arises.

Let me come back to where I started. The fact that we are short of beds in Alberta is not any fault of the veterans. Neither is it the fault of the former Conservative federal government. It is the fault of the provincial government in the province of Alberta or the fault of the city of Calgary, because their grants were so substantial that they should have had enough beds per thousand of population to serve the people in the province. For this reason I expect a little wiffling and waffling from members at the other end of the chamber, because they realize the problem in Alberta is the responsibility of the provincial government; and I say tonight that they have not measured up to that responsibility.

Now let us see what was said on March 26 last, as reported at page 1497 of Hansard. I am missing quite a bit in between and just referring to the highlights—what I would call the tidbits. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) asked the minister this question:

I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he has now given an answer to the Royal Canadian Legion, who requested that he discontinue immediately all action on the proposed handover of D.V.A. treatment facilities to other levels of government.

What is the minister's answer?

I have not yet replied to the letter.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre goes on:

Will the minister give an assurance to this house that no hospital under the control of the veterans affairs department will be transferred to other authorities until the matter has been discussed and approved by parliament?

Then the minister started to talk about things being involved. He said:

This is quite an involved question.

Of course it is involved. I will tell you why it is involved. It is involved because the government is afraid to say to the veterans at this time and was particularly afraid to do so on March 26 that they have already made a deal as far as Colonel Belcher hospital is concerned. They wanted to delay it until a time when they could say: We now have the doors open for this open diplomacy policy, after they were 30 days behind the doors. In the last 24 hours they come out and say: Now we are disclosing it; we have had open discussions.

Mr. Deschatelets: Crocodile tears.

An hon. Member: The same as the pension plan.

Mr. Woolliams: It is the same as the pension plan. I was thinking of that. You took the words right out of my mouth.

Mr. Deschatelets: Read the answer now.

Mr. Woolliams: This was the question:

Will the minister give an assurance to this house that no hospital under the control of the veterans affairs department will be transferred to other authorities until the matter has been discussed and approved by parliament?

The minister replied:

This is quite an involved question. I do not know that I can reply to that directly.

Of course he could not. He was afraid to reply because he had had his officials in Calgary and he himself had been in Calgary and he knew what was going on. The ink was not quite dry. They had not tidied up some of the little points. That is why it was difficult. Why did he not take the House of Commons into his confidence and say: We are trying to make a deal as far as this hospital is concerned; we intend to transfer it to the province or we intend to transfer it to the city of Calgary but we have not closed the deal. Then the veterans would have known where they stood. The big problem today is that they live in fear. They do not know where they stand. I say to the minister: If this debate does nothing else but smoke him out it will have served its purpose.

Mr. Teillet: Read Hansard further.

Mr. Woolliams: Page 1544 on March 30 is interesting. This was when the Prime Minister came into the picture and he certainly wiffled and waffled. He certainly cut down the words of the minister and I suppose that may be a part of the reason why the minister is a little nervous and concerned and finds the question very involved and difficult to answer. He said that a deal had been made, but the Prime Minister said there was no deal made. We do not know what the facts are to this date.

Mr. Teillet: Where did he say that?

Mr. Woolliams: I am going to read from page 1544. This again is a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether radio reports are correct that the government is now in full retreat from its announced intention to transfer the veterans affairs hospitals to other levels of government.

Now the Prime Minister comes into the picture. For three months or more this diplomacy was going on behind doors, but when they want to get a little publicity and make headlines they come out in front of the doors. The Prime Minister said: "No, Mr. Speaker". Then the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said: "Just partially". Then the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) said:

I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to that of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that if arrangements are made to let other interests use some of the hospital beds now under the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the actual control of these hospitals will be left with the Department of Veterans Affairs?

The Prime Minister replied:

I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker—

He does not say it will be the intention; he thinks it would be.

—that the hospitals be left in the control of the department.

I do not know whether the veterans are so concerned about that proposition. If control remains in the Department of Veterans Affairs, but the use of the hospitals for treatment purposes is made available to the provinces, I do not think the veterans are concerned about the word "control" in that sense. They want to retain control of this hospital for the use of veterans in southern Alberta and in the city of Calgary, not control in the sense that the department has title only to the hospital but has leased it to the province for the use of other people for the next 25 years.

There is the confusion, Mr. Speaker. There is the reason that the veterans are sending telegrams to all members of parliament asking them to try to smoke out the minister, find out what he meant by his statement, whether the Prime Minister meant what he said or whether the Minister of Veterans Affairs has contradicted the Prime Minister. We do not know what the policy is; it is so mixed up. The minister will come out with a statement wrapped up in beautiful language. That is what they call open diplomacy.

Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: There is one thing I always like, a good chorus to a well played tune. The Prime Minister said:

I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker, that the hospitals be left in the control of the department.

Then the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre asked this question:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to clarify two conflicting answers he has given this afternoon. He indicated to me that the veterans hospitals would be transferred to other authorities, and he indicated to the hon. member for Middlesex West that it was not the intention of the government to do so. What is the situation?

Now he has smoked out the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has misinterpreted my answer to him, as I think he will find out when he reads Hansard.

I have read Hansard, Mr. Speaker; I have read it aloud in the House of Commons and I challenge anybody to say from that answer of the Prime Minister or from his answers on other occasions what the situation is. What is the policy? Is it to sublease these hospitals, to transfer them to the provinces or, in the case of Calgary, to transfer the hospital to the city of Calgary? The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Hays) should be in his place and should be concerned about the veterans of Calgary tonight. He should be the man to speak for that section of his constituency where the Colonel Belcher hospital is situated.

This is the situation. We have the Prime Minister saying one thing and the Minister of Veterans Affairs saying another thing. The Prime Minister says he does not think we are really going to transfer these hospitals and give title to the provinces. I take it from the answers of the Minister of Veterans Affairs which I have read that, not only are they going to give control to the provinces, but they are going to have the right to use them. What is the situation? This amendment has been moved because we have been asking for answers to our questions and have not received them.

I think the federal government should say to the province of Alberta: If you are in difficulty, like other provinces, with regard to a shortage of beds then it is your responsibility because since 1958 you have received $86 million from the federal government by way of assistance with regard to one category or another of hospitalization. If there is a shortage of beds it is the responsibility of the province. It is particularly their responsibility to complete University hospital in Calgary, where the steel structure has been standing unfinished for several years. Let us exert some pressure on the province to build that hospital. Then the province will not have to take over the veterans hospital.

I see it is now ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, could we be told by the acting house leader what the business will be on Wednesday?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I think that could be made known tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Ottawa, Ontario, 16 April, 1964
CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Premier,

Since the conference in Quebec city at the beginning of the month my colleagues and I have carefully reviewed the problems that were discussed there.

At the conference I reaffirmed what I had said at our previous meeting in November: the federal government fully recognises the increasing burden of provincial responsibilities. This is especially true, as many premiers have emphasized, of education. We all agree that, with our increasing population and with the effect of advancing technology in requiring higher levels of knowledge and skill in more and more jobs, the improvement of educational facilities is a priority need of the country. Our taxation arrangements should recognise such priorities. This means, as I have said, that in order to meet the needs of the people as effectively and economically as possible, the range of tax resources available to the provinces should be increased.

It was in this spirit that, at the November conference, the federal government undertook to make changes in the fiscal arrangements which would otherwise have operated in the current fiscal year, 1964-65. These arrangements resulted in increased revenues to the provinces of $87 millions.

In the same spirit, in spite of our own financial needs, the present government agrees that the arrangements for the following years, which were made in 1961, are inadequate.

I therefore proposed at the Quebec conference that we should jointly undertake a review of the nature and extent of federal and provincial taxes in relation to the financial responsibilities which nowadays have to be carried by Canada and the provinces. This is intended to be a thorough review, which must take into account the findings of the various royal commissions and other inquiries into taxation which are under way at present. It therefore cannot be hurried.

On the other hand, as we said in the communique of the Quebec conference, the tax structure review should not prejudice the early solution of financial problems. After reviewing what was said at the conference, the federal government has come to the conclusion that it would not be in the best interests of the country to wait for the results of the joint review, or for the end of the present five year fiscal arrangement, before indicating to provincial governments the scale of the additional tax abatements and equalization payments which we are prepared to place at the disposal of the provinces in future years.

The scale which the government is prepared to recommend to parliament, in due course, is equivalent to an additional abatement of the federal personal income tax of 2 per cent commencing in January 1965 and a further 2 per cent commencing in January 1966, in addition to the increases at those dates already provided in our law.

The other major topic discussed at the federal-provincial conference was pensions. Two features of this discussion seemed to me especially important.

One was that the Quebec plan, as outlined to the conference and since made public, was in most respects not greatly dissimilar from the federal plan.

The second feature of the discussion was the general sense, expressed particularly clearly by the premier of Ontario, that it is important to the unity of our country that our pension arrangements across the country should not set up obstacles to the movement of people, and therefore should be national in character.

It therefore seemed to me that I would be acting in the spirit of the conference if I explored to the fullest extent whether the two plans which have now been framed—the federal plan and the Quebec plan—could be brought together.

I am very happy to report that discussions with the government of Quebec during the past two weeks have shown that this is possible.

Under the proposal which I now wish to put before you, and in which the government of Quebec concurs, the federal government would propose to parliament legislation which would establish a Canada pension plan and provide that any province which so wishes may take full responsibility for applying the plan to everyone employed in that province. Such a province would pass its own legislation to enable its government to administer the plan in every way, collecting the contributions, investing the funds and paying the benefits.

Alternatively, in provinces wishing the federal government to administer the plan, the legislation would provide that the funds arising from the pension plan should be available to the provincial governments for investment. They would be divided among provinces in ratio to the pension contributions from residents of each province. The provincial government would be required to guarantee to the pension fund a rate of interest at least equal to the rate on long term federal securities.

As part of this plan, the government of Quebec would be willing to support a constitutional amendment, to which other provincial governments have already agreed in principle, enabling the federal plan to provide benefits to widows, irrespective of age, to orphans and to disabled contributors.

The federal proposal, concurred in by Quebec, would provide that pensions should be 25 per cent of earnings up to $5000 a year. This limit would be adjusted, as would the earnings on which benefits are based, in accordance with changes in average earnings averaged over a fairly long period. Benefits in payment would be adjusted to changes in the cost of living, subject to a maximum increase of 2 per cent in any year.

The transition period proposed, before pensions reach their full rate, would be ten years.

Pensions would be paid on retirement from age 65, but up to age 70 would be subject to reduction if earnings exceed specified levels.

Contribution rates would be designed so that the average rate is 1½ per cent each, for employer and employee, at the average level of earnings. This might be achieved by providing that there would be no contribution in respect of earnings up to $600 a year, and a rate of approximately 1.8 per cent would be paid on earnings above that level, up to the $5,000 maximum.

The contribution rate for self employed people would be the combined employer-employee rate.

Coverage would be compulsory for employees with salaries exceeding $600 a year and for self employed people with earnings exceeding $1,000 a year. Self employed people earning between $600 and $1,000 might participate voluntarily.

I believe that these proposals are a satisfactory combination of the two plans which have been worked out in detail. I therefore put them forward for your comment. The federal legislation will then be prepared in the light of the views expressed by you and the other provincial premiers. We are concerned to do this as soon as possible.

The federal government hopes to proceed shortly with legislation providing for the extension of family allowances to children who, either because they are not physically fit to work or because they attend school, remain dependant at the ages of 16 and 17.

Because the province of Quebec has an existing program of a similar nature, these extended allowances will not be paid to Quebec residents. Instead, there will be a compensatory fiscal arrangement similar to that which exists in the case of university grants.

In the light of the comments made by provincial governments at the Quebec conference, the federal government intends to propose arrangements whereby guaranteed bank loans for university students would be available in each province up to a defined amount to students designated by such agency as the province authorizes. If any province prefers to rely on its own loan program, it will be able to receive equivalent compensation.

The various proposals in this letter are made by the federal government in the belief that they will help to unify the country. I know that all provincial governments share my belief that the wishes of all Canadians can best be fulfilled within a federal structure, so that the rights of the provinces are exercised not to the disruption but to the enhancement of the unity of Canada. In that spirit, I hope you will consider these proposals sympathetically and let me have your views at an early date.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 21, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRIME MINISTER OF TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention and the attention of members of the house to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of the right hon. Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, Dr. Williams, members of his cabinet, the high commissioner and staff members.

I am sure all members of this house will wish to give the warmest possible welcome to Dr. Williams and his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: We welcome the Prime Minister, not only as prime minister but as one who has achieved great personal distinction in the fields of scholarship, of education and international service as well as politics. We welcome him as the dynamic leader of a new, dynamic free state in the Caribbean and in the commonwealth of nations. Canada has long had warm and friendly contacts with Trinidad and Tobago and with the British Caribbean colonies, some of which are now independent states in the commonwealth, and it is our policy to strengthen those contacts in every way possible. I believe that the visit of our friends from Trinidad and Tobago will be helpful in that respect.

I hope their stay in Canada, though short, will be a pleasant one. I am confident that it will promote even closer co-operation between our two countries in the commonwealth of nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join the right hon. Prime Minister in welcoming the right hon. Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago. Indeed, it is rather an unusual occasion when two members of Her Majesty's privy council welcome a third member on Her Majesty's birthday. It emphasizes something of the importance, alluded to by the Prime Minister, of the commonwealth relationship.

Indeed, as one who through the years has been an avowed follower of the commonwealth principle, it is well that prime ministers of various parts of the commonwealth should meet together. I was attending the prime ministers' conference when the right hon. Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago made his initial appearance there. He is one who has given outstanding leadership in his country; one who all of us are proud to recognize as a leader of one of the newer members of the commonwealth and one of the older in the old empire. He comes with a mission, one that will receive the support of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. We believe that the commonwealth should be strengthened in every way possible and that every assistance that the older members of the commonwealth can give to the newer members to start them along the road to economic strength will be acceptable to all members of the commonwealth.

I join with the Prime Minister in welcoming not only Dr. Williams but also the members of his cabinet who are with him. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the people of Trinidad and Tobago that the Canadian people are proud to be associated with a nation with so traditionally fine a democratic history.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party wish to associate themselves with the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in extending a word of welcome to the right hon. Dr. Williams, Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, and the party accompanying him here today. We are pleased to have them here in Canada, and we trust that their visit will make for a closer relationship between our respective countries.

We in this party have been urging throughout the years that Canada take a more active part in promoting economic development programs, particularly in less developed areas of the world. Instead of scattering our assistance over a wide area it has often seemed to me that one of the most effective things we could do would be for Canada to adopt the Caribbean area, and particularly that part of the Caribbean area that is in the commonwealth. We have common interests and a common adherence to parliamentary institutions, and we could work closely together to help develop that area. I trust that the visit of the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago will lay the foundation for such a program of mutual help and assistance.

Visitors in Gallery

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine pleasure that we join the entire membership of this house in welcoming the right hon. Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, Dr. Williams, and the members of his party who are with him. As one who is personally familiar with the general Caribbean area I can say that the friendly relationships which are now developing again in a more intensive way between Canada and our sister commonwealth countries in the Caribbean area are not only a challenge but a means of strengthening our dual roles in this western hemisphere. My mind goes back to the days when the "Lady" boats did so much to bring us closer together, and now with air connections established we are within a few hours journey of each other. Certainly the neighbourly responsibilities and friendships which exist between us can be developed in the immediate years ahead to a greater potential than ever before.

Therefore we welcome the presence of our distinguished friends and neighbours with us here this afternoon and trust that their visit will be one of much benefit.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we wish to join with the other members of the house to extend the warmest welcome to the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago.

There is talk about trade between the commonwealth countries. Well, trade relations with that country in particular can be very warm because it is a land of bright sunshine and beautiful waters, especially during those months when snow is plentiful in our own country.

Such trade could benefit our two countries. I feel that today in particular the understanding between the countries of the British commonwealth, which work together to maintain peaceful and friendly relations, can set an example to the other countries and make it easier for the whole world to achieve the understanding and harmony which exist within the commonwealth.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James Forgie (Renfrew North) presented the first report of the standing committee on veterans affairs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Douglas.]

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has reminded us that this is Her Majesty's birthday. In joining as I am sure we all do in good wishes and congratulations on this day and the old desire for many happy returns, it seems appropriate that I should be in a position to make an announcement regarding a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers in London.

Hon. members will recall that after the visit to Ottawa of the British prime minister in mid February I said that we had had some talks about the possibility of a commonwealth prime ministers' meeting some time next summer. On March 30 I informed the house of my understanding that formal invitations for such a meeting were being sent out. It has now been agreed by all concerned—with one exception, Zanzibar, which has not yet replied—that the meeting should take place from July 8 to July 15. An announcement to this effect is also being made today in the British parliament in London.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am very happy to learn that the meeting has now been specifically designated for July. I speak on behalf of all of us in the house when I wish the Prime Minister, as the representative for Canada, every good wish in discharging the great responsibilities that will come to him in that capacity at that conference.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954,

(a) to provide further assistance to provinces and municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the corporation") to make contributions and loans to provinces or municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for this purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

(b) to authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

(c) to authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for constructing or acquiring public housing projects and operating such projects, and to authorize the corporation to contribute a portion of the operating losses on any such projects that provide subsidized housing accommodation to individuals or families of low income;

(d) to permit federal-provincial public housing projects to include existing housing and hostel or dormitory type housing accommodation;

(e) to authorize the corporation to make loans to non-profit organizations to assist in the acquisition or construction of housing accommodation for individuals or families of low income;

(f) to authorize the corporation to make loans to co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families and to increase from one hundred million dollars to one hundred and fifty million dollars the maximum amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund for this purpose;

(g) to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of 25 per cent of the principal and interest on any loans made to provinces or municipalities for this purpose in respect of work completed by March 31, 1967;

(h) to increase from two billion dollars to two and one half billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct loans by the corporation;

(i) to provide for the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund out of which amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars may be advanced to the corporation for the making of loans to the holders of mortgages issued in respect of loans insured under the act and for the purchase by the corporation of mortgages issued to secure such loans;

(j) to increase the loan ratio for insured loans made to home owners and builders; and

(k) to provide for certain changes in the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of press reports to the effect that an attack was made on the commanding officer of the Canadian contingent of the United Nations force in Cyprus. I should like to ask him whether, in view of this, representations have been made to President Makarios, since he represents a nation also within the commonwealth, giving to the president the viewpoint that Canadians are not at all pleased with conduct such as this and asking for his undertaking that so far as possible he will afford protection against further actions of the kind.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As soon as this report appeared the government asked, through the United Nations authorities and particularly the United Nations commander, for a full report on the incident. As soon as that report has been received I will make a further statement in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say whether or not, in view of the fact that Cyprus is a member of the commonwealth, direct representations should be made as well to the president of that country?

Mr. Pearson: I think that would be an appropriate course to follow if the information we receive justifies representations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister whether press reports are correct to the effect Archbishop Makarios has agreed to extend the powers of the United Nations force beyond mere self protection to keep a neutral zone clear, and if so have instructions to the United Nations force been clarified to that effect by the secretary general of the United Nations?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a report has also been requested on that newspaper report. I do not think it would be wise for me to comment on it until we get the exact facts as to what happened; then we will be glad to make a statement.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Has the government, as reported in the press, reached a decision to continue the Canadian force in Cyprus after the three month period, and have negotiations been entered into with the secretary general toward the ultimate financing of the force?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. No decision has been made yet on either of these points but a decision will be made, of course, before the three month period elapses and will be communicated to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Does the minister intend to impress upon the United Nations, at the next assembly, that the cost of Canadian troops stationed in Cyprus should be shared by all U.N. members?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Although the question is obviously very important and also very interesting, nevertheless I think it is a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I gave notice to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I beg your pardon? Did I understand the hon. member to say he gave notice?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you have said that this is a question for the order paper, and I think the matter of whether I should reply must be decided by you. You have said it is not a question that should be answered orally, although it is true that the hon. member did give me notice of his question.

Mr. Speaker: Under the instructions given to me by the house, which I have here and on which I am glad to rely, such questions are (a) to be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer. That was the reasoning behind my suggestion that the question should be put on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice to the house that I shall discuss this matter after ten o'clock tonight.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Labour?

Could the minister give the house a progress report on the investigation and the work carried out by his department concerning the extension of the winter works program after April 30 in designated areas, as he announced one or two weeks ago?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I hope to give a definite answer to that question tomorrow.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, in view of the numerous letters I have received from my constituents, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Could he tell us whether officers from the income tax offices have been instructed to disregard the regulation authorizing taxpayers to claim a deduction not exceeding 10 per cent of their income for charity donations?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must decide that this also is a question for the order paper.

CANADIAN FLAG

PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION BEFORE ADOPTION OF NEW DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that before a new flag design is adopted by the government the said design will be placed before parliament for adoption, and not forced on the Canadian people by order in council?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already dealt with that specific question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Prime Minister would reiterate what he has said previously.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I said that the rights of parliament would be maintained in this important matter.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could give us any assurance with regard to the stories, of which we are all aware, about the trial balloon involving a flag with three maple leaves, and whether or not this was directed by his office.

Mr. Pearson: I have said already, Mr. Speaker, that stories to this effect were speculative.

Mr. Coates: Will the Prime Minister say whether or not the new flag design will be placed before the House of Commons for consideration?

Mr. Douglas: Will the Prime Minister tell the country who is speculating?

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend's friends.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I asked a supplementary question. The Canadian people should know whether the government is willing to place this design before the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In these circumstances it seems to me the Prime Minister has attempted to answer the question this afternoon.

Mr. Coates: Then I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will debate this matter on the adjournment.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, and ask him whether the distinctive badge he is wearing today is being sent out to encourage people to sign up for their social security numbers.

Mr. Speaker: I really cannot see the immediate urgency of this question.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the national pension plan has become a Lesage plan rather than the LaMarsh plan, will the Prime Minister be accepting the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who promised in a speech before the National Press club to resign if her plan were rejected or even altered?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO HOLDING OF BY-ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the widespread interest, is the Prime Minister able to give the dates of the by-elections in Saskatoon and Nipissing?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in order to ensure that this matter will not be put on at 10.20 tonight, I would like to inform my hon. friend that no decision has yet been reached.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the acceptance by the government in its announcement yesterday of the principle that pensions, after they are started, should be increased according to the cost of living index, will the government consider legislation at this session to raise the pensions of retired civil servants?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure on which subsection this decision should rest, but in order to be sure I am going to use every subsection.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of standing order 39(5) I give notice that I will raise this question on the adjournment tonight.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): May I with respect, Mr. Speaker, ask for your guidance in regard to one aspect of this new procedure. When these matters are raised for discussion after ten o'clock, under the new rules is it obligatory for a minister to be present, or can his parliamentary secretary be here?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that if the Prime Minister will read the standing orders for which he expressed approval yesterday, he will find that either a minister or a parliamentary secretary may be present.

AIR TRANSPORT

OBSERVANCE OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN T.C.A. AND TRANSAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I raise a question concerning a promise which the Minister of Transport made a few days ago, that he would look into the matter respecting the deal between TransAir and T.C.A. Can he inform the house what action the government has taken to date to see that TransAir and T.C.A. are in fact living up to the terms of the agreement?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he put this question on the order paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION TO COVER TEACHERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the government yet made a final decision on the recommendation of the Gill commission that teachers and school boards be required to make contributions to the unemployment insurance fund?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been reached with respect to the coverage of any additional class within the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): As a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, does the government propose to introduce other legislation which has to do with the many excellent recommendations of the Gill commission?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately for the hon. member, this comes under subsection (f) which says "not raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with as an answer to a question," and also I might add for greater sufficiency subsection (a); questions to "be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer."

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO ALTERNATIVE MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry I would like to direct this question to the Prime Minister, who has a keen interest in the matter. In view of the announced cut-backs in uranium stockpiling by the governments of the United States and Great Britain, has the government been successful in obtaining alternative markets elsewhere for Canadian uranium, in order to avoid the shut down of Canadian uranium mines?

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper, even though it is a very important one.

FINANCE

TAX ARRANGEMENTS FOLLOWING DOMINION-PROVINCIAL FISCAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. When will the minister have a statement for us on the new tax arrangements, of which we were given a little bit of information yesterday, from the point of view of his department?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was not here yesterday but I read Hansard, and I thought a very complete statement was made by the Prime Minister. I do not know what further details my hon. friend might have in mind, except those that will be incorporated in the necessary legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Finance tell us what will be the amount of the accrued deficit following the changes announced yesterday regarding the new tax arrangements?

[Mr. Hales.]

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not see how the minister could possibly be expected to answer that question on orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, in view of the new procedure, I ask that this question be considered on the adjournment tonight.

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I shall address it to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Now that we are two and a half weeks beyond the date set by the Minister of National Defence for the appointment of the special committee on defence matters, may I ask when we may anticipate the appointment of the committee?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary, since it has taken two and a half weeks to get a definite answer, what does "soon" mean?

ROYAL VISIT

ATTENDANCE AT REVOLUTIONARY MEETING BY FEDERAL M.P.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Should it be found to be out of order, I will not submit it to the house at ten o'clock this evening.

Does a federal member who has taken the oath of allegiance to the Queen have the right to take part in revolutionary caucuses dedicated to the creation of a Quebec state and which has as one of its aims to oppose the Queen's visit to Canada? If not, should such a member be asked to resign?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt. This is asking for a legal opinion and, even if it were not, I must admit I could not understand the purport of the question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS—EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that in 1962 an act was passed by parliament making provision for the building of a railway in Gaspe peninsula, does the government intend to renew this act before it expires on December 31, 1964?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put off that question until after ten o'clock.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I at this point suggest to hon. members that if they wish to debate these questions later on they must give notice by five o'clock today.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the welcome statement the hon. gentleman made to the Canadian Labour Congress convention in Montreal this morning that a labour code would be introduced at this session of parliament, can he say what the date of that introduction will be?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, but we hope to get it on the order paper as quickly as possible.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Favreau (for the Minister of Finance) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Churchill.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): When the house adjourned at ten o'clock last night I was speaking on the amendment to the supply motion with regard to the take-over by provincial or other authorities of the D.V.A. hospitals. I was making three points.

The first was that the minister gave an undertaking that before any change in the control or use of these hospitals was brought about this whole matter would be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs. Second, his undertaking was that before any change was made in this regard he would refer the matter to the veterans associations both provincial and federal.

I now charge the minister with having misled not only the house but the public in this regard, and I say this because in the first place, the matter has not been referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs and, in the second place, he has not consulted with the federal president of the Legion or with other veterans organizations. I hold in my hand an article which appeared in the Calgary Herald of April 16 last stating that the Colonel Belcher hospital auxiliary association has asked the minister for a definite statement of policy on the future use of military hospitals and expressed its alarm, in a letter to the minister over this proposal to reorganize veterans hospital services.

I wish to make our position clear. Our position is hands off these hospitals. The position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite appears to be "Hands on these hospitals but keep the matter secret". We have heard talk lately about the new open diplomacy. Does the government intend to come forward in the last 24 hours and say it has only been negotiating as far as this question is concerned? Is this in accordance with the new point of view about open diplomacy?

I say to the minister that he has an obligation to the House of Commons and to every veteran in Canada to come clean on this subject and tell us where his government stands on this matter. Judging by the answers he has given to questions so far, he knows that during the last two months there have been negotiations under way with reference to transferring control of these hospitals to the provincial or municipal level. I charge him again with having been wishy-washy in his answers and in his decisions with reference to this subject. In fact there is a conflict between the position he took and the position taken by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister assured us that there would be no change in control. If it turns out that this means that the title is to remain with the department though the actual use goes to the provinces, if this is what "no change in control" means, I think we are merely playing with words. The house and the country are entitled to know what is taking place. I charge the minister with deliberately deceiving the veterans in this regard.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my intention this afternoon to engage in a debate the like of which we have just heard. I think this subject is much too important for that, and I have serious doubts about anyone who suggests that any other member of this house would act with any intent to deceive either the House of Commons or the veterans of Canada.

The mover of this amendment yesterday repeatedly stated that a serious problem did exist in the administration of our D.V.A. hospitals. In fact he admitted that as far back as 1959 there was a recognition of this developing problem. I believe he said that when he was minister he decided to wait for the report of the Glassco commission before making a decision. As a result of that report he stated then, as was stated a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Bow River, that the policy was hands off the D.V.A. hospitals. I think that is a clearcut statement, and I do not quarrel with it.

However, all hon. members who are familiar with the hearings before the veterans affairs committee last year and all those who have spoken in this debate recognize that there is a serious problem in the administration of these hospitals. I do not intend to debate that fact, because I believe we can take it that the existence of the problem has been recognized. The mover of the amendment recognized it. The hon. member for Kootenay West recognized it. Perhaps I might also quote from the report which the committee made last year; this is recommendation number 12:

> Your committee is aware that a point has been reached where a decision must be made regarding treatment service in both areas of responsibility and administration.
> Your committee recommends that the fullest consultation be carried out with veterans organizations before any changes are made.

I think it may be useful at this stage to outline what the problem is. It is one which has been developing because of the increasing case load in our hospitals of long term and chronic illness with the result that we are no longer able to bring to bear on the treatment of veterans in our hospitals the kind of medical services which are available to the general community outside. This is aggravated, of course, by the fact that there is a shortage of professional staff throughout the country, and when medical people and nurses have a choice between our hospitals and others they naturally gravitate to those hospitals which can offer the broadest opportunities.

Among other things that have occurred is this. The Royal College of Physicians have downgraded our hospitals in terms of facilities for teaching. Ten years ago a large number of medical people graduated after taking three year courses at our hospitals, but these facilities have now been downgraded because the case load at our hospitals does not supply the kind of cases which are of interest to professionals. Thus we are faced with circumstances which will prevent us, if our hospitals remain as they are, from providing for the veteran population the kind of medical treatment which every one of us would agree our veterans are entitled to receive.

So, facing this problem, what do we do about it? I do not think there is any point in saying that we just carry on. That was one of the alternatives, among many, that we faced. What do we do about this? How do we face this problem? Certainly one of the alternatives is "Do nothing; we will just carry on this way". Another alternative was certainly the recommendation of the Glassco commission. But if we read the recommendation of the Glassco commission, what does it recommend? It recommends that we gradually move our veteran patients from the hospitals, and its final recommendation reads as follows:

> Active treatment hospitals now operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs, when cleared, be sold and converted into community hospitals under transfer agreements providing preferential admission rights for veterans with pensionable disabilities.

I can understand why the previous minister turned that down, because that recommendation is unacceptable; it would be impossible to really do a job of work. In effect it would mean a continuation of the downgrading of our hospitals until we moved our veteran patients elsewhere, and then ridding ourselves of the buildings.

Another alternative has been suggested. It is curious to note, Mr. Speaker, that in all the letters I have received, with the exception of two or three very thoughtful letters, the central problem was ignored. In some of these thoughtful letters it was said—and I have heard others make this recommendation —we could have opened our doors to the general public and therefore have brought into these hospitals the kind of patient case load which would enable us to bring into the hospitals the kind of medical people, professional staff, that would enable us to discharge our responsibilities adequately. That was an alternative that was looked at, but here we were moving into an area where constitutional difficulties would have arisen, because we would be moving into a strictly provincial field. The administration of hospitals is not within the prerogative of the federal government. There is no question about operating our veterans hospitals; that is recognized and accepted, but the operation of hospitals for the general community is a provincial matter. I think we must accept and recognize that, particularly in the climate of today, we would have invited a controversy and difficulties here which would have made the treatment of our veterans even more difficult.

Then, of course, there was another alternative that suggested itself. That was the alternative I spoke of in the statement I made the other day; that where possible, and with adequate safeguards, we might be able to reach agreement with appropriate authorities whereby we would transfer the operation of a hospital into what I will call, for want of a better word, civilian hands; whereby we could have available in that hospital the highest possible standard of medical treatment that was available in the community; and within that hospital guarantee for ourselves enough space and beds to ensure that the department would carry out its responsibilities. In the statement I gave to the house the other day I laid down several conditions. I said:

> At this point I would like to make it unequivocally and emphatically clear that no such agreements will be entered into by the government unless certain sine qua non conditions are met. These conditions...are as follows: First, accommodation for the treatment of service connected disabilities among veterans must be immediately available at all times, and treatment must be provided in accordance with standards prescribed by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

We have some experience in this field. We have a situation in Saskatoon, for instance, where this exists; where the federal government made a grant to the university hospital and where enough beds are reserved with top priority for the Department of Veterans Affairs in order that it may discharge its duties. I do not think anyone will complain about the kind of treatment our veterans are receiving in that hospital. There is space provided for our people within the hospital and this, of course, we would ensure. We would have to have an absolute the premises, in order that the veterans Affairs would decide who should be admitted to the priority beds, when they would be discharged. Our staff would be available on the premises, in order that the veterans would report to the Department of Veterans Affairs staff. In other words we would retain complete and thorough control of the treatment of our veterans.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer a question at this stage?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: The question briefly is this. Supposing that hospital in question had all its beds filled by people other than veterans; what would happen to the veterans?

Mr. Teillet: This is precisely why we must have an iron-clad guarantee. We would decide up to a top number of beds that we would reserve and which would be adequate for our purposes, and we would decide the use to be made of those beds. If such a situation should occur, then the veteran would have a bed even at the risk of moving someone else out of it.

Mr. Churchill: Where would you move them to?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, where would you move them to; the street?

Mr. Teillet: This actually happens in Saskatoon; it works, and we know it works. The agreement is respected. I suggest to the house that in this instance we have the best medical service available to our veterans that is available to the community of Saskatoon. What is being suggested here is that people with whom we enter into an agreement are not responsible enough to respect it. I am sure that is not really a responsible statement, because we have experience of this kind of thing. We are not going to enter into an agreement with any group or body that is unreliable or will not respect the agreement that is entered into.

I would like to recall that when I made the statement the other day I also said this:

> It is therefore the view of this government that the operational control of veterans hospitals should be transferred to non-federal agencies at times, in places, and under conditions which will best protect the standards of care to which veterans are entitled.

I readily admit that one of the difficulties that exists in this area is that the problem is quite different with each of the areas in Canada where hospitals are situated, and it is impossible to prescribe a set series of conditions which would apply in all cases. In this context, Mr. Speaker, may I say this regarding my agreeing to accept and respect the recommendations of the committee with respect to consultation with veterans organizations. It has seemed to me that rather than consulting, say, the dominion command or the veterans affairs committee in Ottawa we would be in a much better position if we were to consult the veterans who best know the area involved. In this instance I suggest we consult the veterans in the provincial command, who would best know the area, the conditions and the circumstances. In that regard I very much doubt whether in all the circumstances it will be possible to consult with the entire groupings, as I suggested previously, but we can certainly talk to the provincial command in the area of the hospital under discussion at the moment. That is a perfectly valid point, and we have undertaken to respect that recommendation. I interpret it in that light because surely that is where we will receive the best advice.

The question of when this consultation will take place is again a pretty difficult one, because until we reach the stage where we have a series of concrete proposals with conditions laid down and a draft document prepared, so that we can answer the questions which will be asked and have something specific to go on, I do not think we are in a position to consult intelligently.

As I indicated when answering questions in the course of my earlier statements, we have had proposals from a number of authorities. These are people who have written to us and suggested that they think they could meet the conditions that we have laid down. Before going further with the matter it would be necessary for my officials to take a look at the situation which these people were proposing. It would be necessary for these authorities to meet and discuss the details of the conditions we would require, so that we would be in a position to discuss more intelligently with the veterans organizations what we proposed to do.

I repeat, because I think it is extremely important, that it is my view that the standard of care to which veterans are entitled must be maintained, and that is the whole objective of this exercise, and we will retain control. In the one instance, that is true, that we have reached the stage where we are preparing the draft of an agreement in order to see whether these people are prepared to meet conditions which will satisfy us.

Mr. Woolliams: What are the terms of that agreement? What are you actually doing? Cannot you disclose that?

Mr. Teillet: I will be in a position to disclose that when the draft is complete.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): That will be too late.

Mr. Teillet: Well, I will not indulge in that argument. Until the draft is completed surely it will be of little practical value to sit down and discuss it. When the draft is completed we will then have something concrete and specific, and will be in a position to discuss the question with these people and make the necessary changes if they are required. I think that is the proper way to proceed. After all, if our conditions cannot be met then we will have to look to other means, and that is going to be extremely difficult. The basis of this entire matter, I repeat, is the quality of medical services provided to our veterans.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the statement of the minister, a statement I have heard repeated and about which there has been some argument on that side of the house, why is it that I repeatedly run into cases—I am speaking of my personal experience in this matter—of veterans who are sent to Shaughnessy from the interior because they are told they can get better treatment for their disability there than they can at the local hospital? I have had one case brought to my attention this week.

Mr. Teillet: That is true in many of our hospitals today, but this is the standard which we want to maintain. Unfortunately this high standard is not true of all our hospitals, but in many of our hospitals today we still have a very high quality medical service. I thank my hon. friend for asking me that question, because it does permit me to underline the fact that we still have excellent staff in our hospitals. But recruiting is becoming more and more difficult, and before we reach the stage where that standard has deteriorated we feel we should take whatever action is necessary in order to put an end to the deterioration which we see coming in the near future.

While I am on that subject perhaps I might remove another misunderstanding with regard to the so-called empty beds in our hospitals. With very minor exceptions—and those exceptions are a result of staff problems—our hospitals are carrying patients at a capacity which is considered normal for a hospital. Our case loads run at an average of 75 per cent to 80 per cent capacity. So it is not a question of empty beds; it is a matter of the kind of patient we have in our hospitals. That is where the difficulty lies. We have a large percentage of chronic, long term care cases; in fact the average across the country of that type of case now runs to about 75 per cent, and therein lies our problem. Before any decision is taken, quite apart from the treatment factor involved, we have to make very sure that the veterans now in those hospitals and others who may come after them—long term, chronic cases—have adequate attention and facilities. That is another complicating factor. We must make sure that these people are looked after. They need medical attention. They do not need active treatment, but they do need medical attention.

Therefore—and this was the second condition in the statement I made the other day—we must assure ourselves that these facilities are both in existence and are available to us. The hon. member who moved this amendment referred to construction programs last year. In Saskatoon we are providing this kind of facilities so as to make sure these people are looked after and removed from the kind of buildings in which they are presently housed; and that program is continuing. If hon. members were to study each case across Canada they would find there are as many variations in conditions as there are hospitals, and in some cases it will be many years before community resources are adequate to meet those conditions. We may have to make temporary arrangements in order to make available a full treatment program in such communities and to provide such facilities in our hospitals. This means that it will not be possible for me or for anybody else to set a specific standard which will apply to all our hospitals. We will have to deal with each one on its merits. We will have to study local circumstances and resources and the kind of arrangement that we should enter into.

There is another factor, which is not a negligible one and which I also mentioned, hon. members will recall, in my statement the other day. We have in these hospitals at the moment dedicated nurses and dedicated medical men, who are dedicated principally because they are veterans themselves. They are doing an excellent job of servicing these hospitals. While it is difficult to replace them, I think the Department of Veterans Affairs owes them some safeguard as well. We must make sure, given these conditions, that these people are adequately looked after.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to come to the amendment itself I find that it reads in part as follows:

> This house deplores the announced decision of the government to abandon its responsibilities for the administration of veterans hospitals—

What we are being asked to do, and most of the letters I have received make the same request, is to ignore the problem; do not do anything. Hands off.

Mr. Herridge: Who said that?

Mr. Teillet: This was the policy laid down by the hon. gentleman a few minutes ago and, in effect, that is what is intended by this amendment. I think, on the contrary, what we have tried to do has been to face the problem. What do we do about it? Do we let our veteran population take second class medical treatment in the years ahead or do we say to ourselves that our first responsibility is not necessarily to maintain buildings for our people, but our first responsibility is to ensure that they get the care which Canadians want them to have?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Winkler: In making such a statement, is the minister not taking the exact opposite view of that put forward by the mover of the amendment?

Mr. Teillet: That is not a question, it is an argument. I read the hon. gentleman's speech very carefully and the policy contained in it was "hands off". I think it was repeated; "hands off".

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must express some regret at this kind of amendment in a want of confidence motion—

Mr. Churchill: You brought it on yourself.

Mr. Teillet: Because I dared to face up to the problem. It would have been very easy for me to sit back and wait for the deterioration to come about. It would have been very easy to avoid controversy. However, there is a responsibility imposed on this department, and that responsibility is to carry out the moral obligations to make sure that treatment is adequate. We have said we are prepared to deal with each of these cases on its merits. We are prepared to make the kind of arrangements that will guarantee the best medical service available in Canada. We are prepared to do this provided we get the necessary safeguards so that we remain in control, so that we decide—that is the departmental officials—upon the admission or non-admission of veterans in any hospital where we may make such arrangements.

The hon. member for Kootenay West had some kind words to say, and I appreciate them very much. However, I think he will agree that a decision to do nothing at this stage will not benefit our veterans, because a decision to do nothing at this stage will only result in our veterans losing. They will lose the kind of treatment which has been available to them. In dealing with this problem we have to face up to the fact that the problem exists. Everybody agrees it exists.

Mr. Winkler: How are they going to lose out?

Mr. Teillet: The problem was recognized and was stated by the mover of the amendment. The problem has been recognized by all and is referred to in the report of the committee. It is a matter of how best to deal with the problem.

I think in conclusion I can do nothing but reiterate what I said a while ago. There were certain alternatives placed before us. One alternative was to open our doors to the general community. I do not need to suggest to hon. members the kind of difficulties that would arise from such a course. Another alternative was to follow the Glassco recommendation and, in effect, let our hospitals run down as the case load goes on decreasing.

Mr. Woolliams: You are not saying the Belcher hospital is run down?

Mr. Teillet: The other alternative is to do nothing; hands off. This is the course proposed by the hon. member who moved this amendment.

Mr. Churchill: Retain control of them in veterans affairs; that is what I am talking about.

Mr. Teillet: Again I thank the hon. member for his intervention. It enables me to repeat what I said a while ago. I want to make this assurance doubly sure, that in anything we do about medical hospital care we will be safeguarding the interests and welfare of the veterans, and advancing those interests and improving that welfare. There will be no changes in respect of any veterans hospitals which do not fulfil these requirements. There will be consultation with veteran organizations. As I have indicated, there will be no change removing control of veterans admissions, and the care required, from the Department of Veterans Affairs. I have given assurance to the house before, and I can reiterate this assurance now, that control of medical services will remain with the department.

I can only suggest that under these circumstances the accusations contained in this amendment are false. We are trying to live up to our responsibilities, but they say "hands off". We say face the problem, deal with it effectively and guarantee the kind of service to which our veterans are entitled.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the argument which the minister has just completed revolved around the possibility of veterans treatment services deteriorating at some time in the future. Mark you, he referred only to the possibility, and adduced no facts to support that argument. I will come back a bit later to the various points he made in regard to medical treatment.

Before doing that I should like to go on and make a few points, particularly one related to something the minister said shortly before he sat down, and something along the same line which was said by the parliamentary secretary to the minister yesterday. They said that the introduction of this motion meant the introduction of partisanship in the consideration of veterans affairs, something which has not been done before. I feel that both the minister and his parliamentary secretary fail to realize that our inability during the past several weeks and the inability of veterans organizations to find out what government policy was in regard to veterans hospitals, to find out what course of action is to be followed by the government, has left those of us concerned with the welfare of veterans and veterans hospitals with no alternative but to bring up this matter in this way.

This is the only means open to us at the present time by which we can have a full discussion of this matter. We would be failing in our responsibility to the veterans and for the veterans if we did not take this means of bringing the whole matter into the open.

I think I should make it clear that the amendment before the house has been moved because of the serious concern that veterans hospital services are to be reduced to the detriment of Canadian veterans. That is the reason the amendment was moved, because of real concern in that regard not only on the part of members of this and other parties in the House of Commons but also very real concern on the part of veterans and veterans organizations throughout Canada.

This fear on the part of veterans and their organizations first arose out of newspaper stories that the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary was to be turned over to civic or provincial authorities for operation. Their fear over what was going to happen to their hospital facilities and the hospital treatment to which they had become accustomed has progressively increased because of the indefinite and evasive answers which the minister has given to questions of all kinds during the past few weeks concerning the policy of the government.

Since the session started a long series of questions has been asked regarding this matter, but throughout the government has refused to say that a change in policy with regard to D.V.A. hospitals has been decided upon. They have refused throughout to admit definitely that they have decided on a change of policy, in spite of specific questions on that very point, put by myself and others to the minister in the house. Nevertheless, discussions with regard to Colonel Belcher hospital have continued, quite evidently with a view to turning it over to the civic and provincial authorities. In addition, civic and provincial authorities have made a succession of statements to the newspapers in Calgary indicating the number of beds they are going to secure by means of this deal, the number of operating rooms which are going to be made available to them and so forth.

All of this, combined with the evasive answers of the minister, has made it clear to most people, I think, that in effect a change in policy was accepted by the government at one time. The replies of the Prime Minister in answer to questions asked him have already been referred to. I will not take the time of the house to repeat them at this moment, but he did give the impression that no change was to be made. In other words he gave the impression that previous statements made by the minister and by civic and provincial authorities in Alberta were not correct, and that the control and operation of Colonel Belcher hospital and other veterans hospitals were going to remain in the hands of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

So strongly was this impression given that I advised several of my correspondents that in view of what the Prime Minister had said I thought our fears with regard to what was going to happen to the Colonel Belcher hospital could be set at rest. Then, of course, subsequent answers given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs were to the exactly opposite effect, with the result that the whole question was up in the air again. We now have a picture of confusion, and the matter can only be cleared up by a definite statement of policy on the part of the government as to the course of action they are going to pursue.

We have not yet had such a statement. In anything the minister has said there has really been nothing definite with regard to what the policy is going to be. He has continued to talk about the situation prevailing in one part of Canada being different from that prevailing in another, but he still refuses to admit that the government, as now appears clear, has made a change in policy and is progressively going to turn over the operation of the D.V.A. hospitals to civilian control.

There has been another very bad result arising from the confusion which has existed and the conflicting statements that have been made. In particular, because of the indefinite and evasive statements of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, a lack of confidence in the minister has developed on the part of veterans and veterans organizations. In the past veterans organizations and veterans generally have looked to the minister of veterans affairs, whoever he may have been, as their representative in the cabinet and the defender of their interests, the person to whom they could turn for general support because as far as the government was concerned the general welfare of veterans was in his hands. This situation has very definitely changed. The result is that at the present time most veterans and veterans organizations have now come to look upon the minister as the leader in a movement to decrease or eliminate their hospital and treatment benefits and guarantees.

Mr. Teillet: Nonsense.

Mr. Harkness: This is the situation. Naturally the minister will not admit this. I suppose he would hate very much to admit it; nevertheless I can assure him that on the basis of my experience that is the situation so far as the veterans organizations with which I am familiar are concerned, including my own branch of the Legion, No. 1 branch, Calgary, one of the biggest in Canada. I think it is most deplorable that the minister should have lost the confidence of veterans and veterans organizations to such a great extent, because it will make it very difficult for veterans affairs generally to be dealt with in a satisfactory way.

Several times during the past few weeks I have asked that the whole matter of future policy with regard to veterans hospitals be referred to the veterans affairs committee. On every occasion the minister has refused to say that this would be done. I ask why. Why does he refuse to say that the matter will be considered by the veterans affairs committee? Surely this is the body best fitted to consider the whole question of veterans hospitals. It is a body where evidence from representatives of the veterans organizations can be heard as well as evidence from departmental officials, medical bodies and so on. In other words, the matter could be thoroughly examined in that committee, and I do not know anywhere else where it can be thoroughly examined publicly and all the facts in connection with the matter brought out.

Surely it is essential that this be done so that members of the house and veterans and veterans organizations may be satisfied that the right course of action is being followed. Again I ask the question, why do the minister and the government refuse to have this matter considered and recommendations made thereon by the veterans affairs committee, the only place where the matter can be thoroughly aired?

The minister and his parliamentary secretary both continue to reiterate that their great concern is to safeguard the interests and welfare of the veterans. Once more I ask, if that is the case why do they not take the obvious step to ensure that this will be done, by referring the matter to the committee rather than refusing to have it thoroughly investigated? I would strongly urge on the minister and the government that they take this action now. The veterans affairs committee has been set up and had its first meeting this morning. It is ready to operate and go ahead. This matter could be referred to it immediately, and I trust that action will be taken.

On various occasions, in answer to questions and otherwise, the minister has stated that veterans organizations would be consulted in regard to this whole matter, and he went on to say that there is no use consulting them until the matter has been brought to a more complete stage than is the case at present. In other words, what he is saying is, "We are going to make a deal with the civic authorities and the provincial authorities, and then we are going to bring it to the veterans and tell them what the deal is." That is not consultation at all.

Mr. Teillet: I am sure my hon. friend would not want to mislead anyone. I would hope the hon. gentleman knows that we had consultations at the beginning, and we are waiting for the final drafting on this thing before we consult them again.

Mr. Harkness: This is the point I have just been making. Before the minister goes ahead to make a deal with the civilian authorities for the takeover of the Colonel Belcher hospital he wants to have the thing all arranged, the "i's" dotted and the "t's" crossed, and then present it to the veterans and say, "This is what we have arranged with the civic and the provincial authorities." But by that time it will be too late for the veterans to have any influence on what is done.

Mr. Teillet: Nonsense.

Mr. Harkness: This is not true consultation. This is merely calling the veterans in after the thing has been done, and saying, "This is what we are going to do." As a matter of fact, the minister has attempted to convey the impression that veterans organizations in Calgary were consulted, and also to convey the impression that they were not unanimously against this proposal to turn over the Colonel Belcher hospital. I see he nods his head up and down to agree that that is the case.

The actual fact is that there was no real consultation whatsoever with the veterans organizations in Calgary, and also that they are unanimously against the proposal to transfer control of the Colonel Belcher hospital.

Mr. Teillet: That is not true.

Mr. Harkness: In order to establish that this is the fact I have only to refer to two or three telegrams and letters which I have received from veterans organizations in Calgary. The first telegram is dated March 17 and states:

> Committee formed in February 1964 composed of all veterans groups in Calgary unanimously oppose veterans hospital takeover. What manner of man can sanction this even as Canadian contingent embarks for Cyprus?
> Frank Potts,
> President No. 1 Branch,
> Royal Canadian Legion.

The second is a letter dated March 19, and deals with the consultation which the minister said took place. It reads:

> Re: Veterans hospitals.
> We note in Hansard of February 25, on page 195, Mr. Teillet, stated in part in answer to questions directed on this subject matter as follows:—
> "I believe I stated yesterday or last week that we had received a proposal from the city of Calgary, that we had had a meeting with that city, their hospital people and some of the veterans organizations in Calgary."
> While it is true that representatives of the veterans organizations did attend, as a result of an invitation from chief commissioner John Steel to this No. 1 branch only, nevertheless all concerned were unanimous that the whole matter was cut and dried before they ever entered the meeting and their observations had no direct bearing on the outcome, as they were in effect told by Dr. Crawford that he would not have been in Calgary were it not for the fact that his minister had approval of the cabinet in the matter.

In other words, the so-called consultation was merely a matter of calling the veterans organizations in and saying, "We are going ahead with this deal." They were being told in effect that the matter was decided and it did not matter what they said.

Mr. Teillet: That is completely wrong.

Mr. Harkness: That again is signed by the president of the No. 1 branch of the Royal Canadian Legion.

Mr. Teillet: That is not an adequate report.

Mr. Harkness: Well, if the minister says it is false I think that, to a man, the veterans in Calgary will believe what Frank Potts says in connection with this matter and not what the minister states in attempting to defend an indefensible policy.

The minister is also aware that a very large number of people in Calgary, and not only members of veterans organizations, have signed petitions urging that this hand-over of the Colonel Belcher hospital do not take place. In other words, there is very wide disapproval of this projected move, and opposition to it. Further the minister is aware of a telegram dated April 14, sent by Mr. Potts to the Prime Minister, which reads as follows:

> No. 1 branch of the Royal Canadian Legion express strongest possible opposition to proposed Belcher hospital solution. Unable to see logic of this policy when veterans are presently being denied treatment.

I could read dozens of such statements, but there is no use in reading them all. There is no question whatever that the veterans were not consulted in any real sense or meaning of the term consultation, in connection with the meetings held in Calgary; and there is absolutely no question that they are unanimously opposed to the handing over of the hospital. That being the situation, surely the minister and the government are not going to try to put over the idea that the veterans are being consulted satisfactorily, and that they are not against this move? There is no question in regard to these two points.

The minister and his parliamentary secretary emphasized in their speeches that everything they are doing is to safeguard the veterans interest, to look after their welfare, to ensure it will continue on the highest possible level and so forth. If this is the case, then I would ask them why are all the veterans organizations so strongly opposed to it? Is the minister going to try and maintain that these veterans organizations do not know what is good for veterans, and that they do not know what they are talking about? I do not think he would maintain that for a moment, yet the veterans organizations are very strongly opposed to the proposed change in policy which he wants to bring about.

I can tell him why they are opposed to it. It is because they see quite clearly that their treatment facilities will be reduced, and because they see quite clearly that there has been no real consultation. It is also because they have a very strong suspicion that the minister is attempting to face them with a fait accompli and say, "There it is. The deal has been made and you have just got to take it and like it." That is why they are so strongly opposed, not only to the general idea but to the method used in trying to put it across.

As I stated at the beginning, the minister made the claim that doctors would not be available at some time in the future, but when he was questioned in regard to this matter by two or three opposition members he said, "Oh, no, no, the doctors are available now all right; the treatment available to the veterans is still excellent; it has not declined."

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, again for the sake of accuracy I think my hon. friend should correct that. What I said is that at the present moment our treatment available in hospitals was of a high quality. I did not deal with the availability of doctors in that sense.

Mr. Harkness: As I wrote down what the minister said, he gave two or three reasons. One was that the service was excellent. In one case they would get better treatment if they went into the Shaughnessy hospital than if they took treatment at home or in some other place. In other words, I do not think the minister is making any claim that treatment given in the veterans hospitals is not good, or that the doctors are not good, or that the staff is not good. His whole argument was based on the fact that at some time in the future the standard might decline and that the service available to veterans would not be as good as it should be. But he produced no proof of that contention whatsoever. He merely made the statement. This is another reason why the whole matter should be gone into thoroughly with the veterans organizations and before the veterans affairs committee. This should be done so that everyone could find out what the picture really is in this regard.

In connection with the Belcher hospital, in particular, a hospital about which I happen to know a considerable amount, and the only one which is to be affected immediately, I do not think the minister will maintain that the staff is not good. I do not think he or anyone else can produce proof that the staff will not continue to be good in the future or that there is any threat to the standard of their services declining in two, three or five years or, indeed, in any particular length of time. I think there is no evidence at all that the treatment which veterans are able to get at this hospital will not continue to be excellent—as good as, if not better than any which they would be able to get elsewhere. From this point of view I think the minister's entire argument falls to the ground. Certainly he has not produced any evidence to support it.

The hon. gentleman talked about the constitutional difficulty which might arise if the general public was admitted to D.V.A. hospitals. Well, I doubt very much whether there would be any difficulty from that point of view. Certainly much more serious constitutional difficulties have been solved and I am sure this one could be overcome, too, without very much trouble. I do not think there would be a great deal of objection on the part of anyone to allowing a certain number of civilians from the general public to enter veterans hospitals.

The minister went on to say that if these hospitals were operated under civilian control—and I presume he meant in Colonel Belcher hospital, because that is where he intends to start—a certain number of beds would be set aside for veterans. I think that is an extremely doubtful proposition. In Calgary there is a serious shortage of hospital beds and operating facilities. It would appear from the talk among the civilian authorities that 150 beds would be reserved for veterans out of a total of 400 being used at the hospital. Who would contend that 150 beds where there were formerly 400 are going to provide adequate facilities for our veterans and an assurance that they will be looked after when they need care? The proposition does not hold water. I do not think any reasonable person would contend that the facilities available for veterans in southern Alberta would not be seriously impaired and reduced if this proposition were to go through.

The minister also stated that the problem is a different one in every part of Canada. But he said nothing to support this contention. He said we cannot lay down a general policy because every one of these veterans hospitals is different and a different situation prevails. I think this is an argument which is hardly worthy of notice. The general policy has been to operate these hospitals by the Department of Veterans Affairs for the use of veterans. The minister is proposing to change that policy and to turn some of them and, eventually, all of them, over to civilian control. That is a change in policy which is going to apply to every part of the country either now or at some time in the future. It is of no use for the minister to try to tell us there is not a general change in policy. I think he should come out openly and say this is the case, if it is the intention of the government to proceed with this plan—and I very much hope it will not.

I mentioned a few minutes ago the serious shortage of hospital beds in Calgary. This situation is, of course, the responsibility of the city and of the province. It is their responsibility to make that shortage good and there should not be any attempt to make it good at the expense of veterans by decreasing the hospital facilities available to veterans. The shortage of beds arises because of a failure to provide the hospital construction which should have been provided in the city of Calgary. In fact, turning over the Belcher hospital, or a large proportion of it, for civilian use would not meet the need. The need there can only be met by extensive new construction. Making use of certain of the facilities of the Belcher hospital would be a palliative; it would help a little at the present time. But it would not solve the problem.

I have said on various occasions when asked about this matter that to the extent that beds and operating rooms are not being fully utilized at the Colonel Belcher hospital or at any other veterans hospitals they should be made available to ordinary civilian patients. I know the Department of Veterans Affairs has never looked with favour on this possible solution. One of the difficulties which the minister mentioned was the constitutional question involved. Well, there might be some difficulties but I do not think any of them are insuperable. I do not even think they are very serious and I believe the solution I have put forward is a reasonable one and that it should be followed. If there are beds and operating rooms available in these veterans hospitals which are not being fully utilized, I can really see no serious reason in the world why they should not be made available for ordinary civilian use. I have talked about this to a number of doctors in Calgary and they see no difficulty about it. The difficulties which have been brought up, or dredged up, in this regard are, I think, entirely on the part of the department itself.

With regard to this whole matter, some allegations have been made that the veterans are trying to be selfish in regard to their hospitals—that they are trying to keep other people out of them, and so on. I have seen no signs or evidence of any such attitude. I do not think there is any desire on the part of any of the veterans organizations or on the part of anyone to deny the general population of this country facilities which are available and which are not fully in use. On the other hand, there is strong opposition to taking away from veterans the facilities which they have enjoyed over a long period, and the full benefits granted to them under the veterans charter. And this, in effect, is the proposal the minister is making.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I did not intend to take part in this debate but I should like to say a few words now on the amendment which has been moved.

I do not like the wording of this amendment. I would prefer to have seen an amendment which deplored the government's failure to make a clearcut statement on its intentions with reference to the administration of veterans hospitals, and criticized the government for failing to refer this matter to the veterans affairs committee. However, after listening to the defence which was put up by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) I have become convinced I ought to vote in favour of this amendment because the minister, it seems to me, has completely failed to give the house any satisfactory statement with respect to the government's intentions regarding veterans hospitals.

The minister says that this is a very serious problem—and nobody doubts that. He says that he has faced up to the problem. That is like the Irishman saying you should take the bull by the horns and look it straight in the face, because it may turn out to be a wolf in sheep's clothing. To look at the problem and face up to the problem is not enough. We need some statement of the government's solution to the problem. When the minister says that my colleague from Kootenay West is simply suggesting that they make a decision to do nothing, that is not in accordance with the facts. We are asking the government what it is going to do; we want to know what the government is going to do. More important, we would like to make sure that the minister knows what he is going to do; and certainly there was nothing in his statement today that would indicate that he has any clear idea of what he intends to do about this problem.

The minister said that there is a serious problem and he has outlined it to the house. I take it, first of all, that the problem is not that the veterans hospitals have empty beds and are unoccupied. The minister says, instead, that bed occupancy is running around 75 per cent to 80 per cent capacity. That is normal occupancy for any hospital; anything much higher than that is too crowded for good administration. So there is no problem that there are empty beds or that space is going to waste. The problem is not the lack of good medical care at the present time. The minister says the problem lies in the fact that veterans hospitals in this country, like veterans hospitals in every other country, are gradually changing their function. This is to be expected. In the years immediately following the war, veterans hospitals were largely active treatment centres providing medical, surgical, nursing care and physiotherapy for veterans who had been badly wounded and were in need of active treatment. With the passage of time these hospitals are increasingly adopting a custodial care program of looking after long-stay cases and the chronically ill.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot brush this aside. The function of these hospitals has changed, but the importance of the problem remains, and I suggest to the minister that it will increase; that in the next 10 or 15 years, when the veterans of the last war are getting into their 50's and 60's, there will be a greatly increased number of applicants for admission to veterans hospitals. These will be burnt-out veterans and men who because of their war service will find in their later years that they require long-stay care.

The minister's argument is that because these hospitals have changed the nature of their function, this creates a problem of staff; that it is difficult to keep medical staff, who are naturally more concerned with active treatment care. This does pose a problem and it may mean a change in the kind of staff provided; because let us not delude ourselves, hospitals providing custodial care for the chronically ill need specially trained staff, as is proved by the geriatric centres that are being built in this country. They need the kind of staff that are specially trained to look after these particular kind of people. But the mere fact that these hospitals are changing their function does not mean they are no longer required.

What the government has to do, it seems to me, is to decide one of two things. Are these hospitals now going to become almost exclusively custodial care institutions to look after long-stay cases and the chronically ill? If they are, then both the staff and the equipment needs to be changed. The other alternative the government has is this. If these hospitals have such large investments for diagnostic equipment and diagnostic procedures that it would be a shame to waste it, then the policy ought to be to build custodial care institutions, move the veterans into those custodial care institutions, and leave in the present hospitals those who need active treatment—they will be a relatively small number and a diminishing number—and make arrangements to either take in civilians or enter into some arrangement with the local authorities so that active treatment centres can be used by both veterans and the general public.

The minister has made mention of the Saskatoon situation. There a very ideal arrangement has been worked out. In the University hospital space has been set aside and beds are reserved for veterans requiring active treatment. But the important point is that at the same time the government is building a hospital to provide custodial care for the chronically ill veterans; and until the latter is done, nothing can be done about the former. What concerns us is that the minister seems to be charging ahead with a program to dispose of veterans hospitals without telling us where the veteran long-stay cases who are there now are going to be cared for. If they are left in the hospitals they are in now, the hospitals are going to be 75 per cent to 80 per cent full, so where are the civilians going to go? If they are going to be moved out of those hospitals, where are they going to be sent?

I want to tell the minister that turning these hospitals back to the municipalities and the provincial governments means that all those veterans who are not receiving active treatment will be denied admission, of necessity, because the provincial governments do not provide under their hospital plans—except in one province—for custodial care for the chronically ill. The veterans who are in these hospitals now have to be assured that there is some place for them to go; and we have to be assured that the increasing numbers of veterans who will require long term care will be provided for.

If the minister were coming before this house to say it is the intention of the government to build hospitals to take care of the chronically ill veterans, hospitals that will cost less per bed because less expensive diagnostic equipment will be installed, and that when these institutions have been built and the chronically ill veterans have been moved into them this will leave room in the active treatment centres—when that day comes the government is prepared to enter into agreements with the provinces and the municipalities so that whatever space is left in these active treatment hospitals can be made available to civilians, that would make sense; that would be a solution to the problem. But I listened very carefully to the minister this afternoon. He talked about dealing with the problem of each hospital on its merits; of the decision in each case being taken in view of the time, the place and the circumstances. This does not answer anything. Let us take the Colonel Belcher hospital as an example. Are the custodial care veterans in that hospital to be moved? If so, where are they going to go? If they are not going to be moved, then all the problems the minister has outlined concerning the difficulty of getting medical personnel who want to look after active treatment cases and not the chronically ill will still remain.

It seems to me that the minister is going at this whole problem the wrong way. It may be that his department has worked out a plan. If it has, the minister certainly has not outlined it to the house this afternoon. This is why I would support the idea which we have advanced several times during this session, namely that the whole question of veterans hospitals be referred to the veterans affairs committee, where the department can put its plans forward, where the veterans organizations can present their views, and where hospital and medical authorities can give us their opinions on this question. Then whatever the government's plan is, if it is going to continue to look after veterans adequately I am sure the house will go along with it.

We are not anxious to retain ownership or control. It does not seem to me that it is important whether an active treatment hospital is run by the Department of Veterans Affairs and civilians are allowed to use it, and the Department of Veterans Affairs gets paid by the hospital insurance branch; or whether it is vice versa and the municipality operates the hospital with the Department of Veterans Affairs being allocated a given number of beds which are reserved for the use of veterans. I do not think we ought to be arguing about this very minor point.

It seems to me that the important point, a point which appears to have escaped the minister entirely, is that you cannot take veterans out of active treatment hospitals unless you have some place to put them. That means building hospitals for the chronically ill; and until they are built it is simply absurd to talk of turning these veterans hospitals over to some other body. The government need not think that they can discharge their responsibility by turning these hospitals over to the provinces and the municipalities and then say: "Well, if there are not enough rooms for the veterans you can put the civilians out". Surely that is not a very satisfactory solution.

I want to emphasize a point which I think needs to be reiterated again and again, and that is that chronically ill veterans as they get older need custodial care. There is no place to equal a veterans institution. In the first place most of the provinces and municipalities do not supply that kind of facility anyway under the hospital insurance plan, so there are no facilities for them to go to. But even if there were it is of great importance that these men in their latter years should be able to spend their time in the companionship of their comrades with whom they served in the services. This is something to which they are entitled. It is bad enough for any man to spend years of his life, particularly the declining years, being a semi-invalid; the least we can do is to make those years happy so that he can have the companionship and association of men who have common memories and have had the common experience of serving together in Her Majesty's forces. This is why, before the government talks of getting rid of active treatment hospitals, it seems to me it has to embark upon a program of building hospitals for chronically ill veterans. When those hospitals have been established, if it is found that the number of veterans who need active treatment is relatively small, then the government has the choice either of reserving wings in general hospitals and providing for the care of veterans in those wings, or of turning over the veterans active treatment hospitals to the municipalities and reserving sufficient rooms so that those veterans who need active treatment care can be assured of getting it.

Mr. Teillet: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question. He is aware, of course, that I have stated that one of the conditions required would be that adequate facilities for chronic and long term care patients are to be made available.

Mr. Douglas: The minister said this in general terms, Mr. Speaker, but I have heard of no program, for instance, to build hospitals for the chronically ill veterans in, say, Calgary, where right now the minister's department is negotiating to turn over the Colonel Belcher hospital to the municipality. It is no use putting the cart before the horse. It is no use arranging to get rid of a hospital unless you have some place to take these veterans.

If the minister does not plan to place these patients in hospitals for the chronically ill, he will be leaving them in the Colonel Belcher hospital. If the number of beds in the Colonel Belcher hospital is reduced to 150, who will take care of the veterans who do not need active treatment but who do need custodial care in the years ahead? If the minister tells us that there are adequate facilities to take care of all these veterans and that all we need is to provide space for those requiring active treatment, then as far as I am concerned I am prepared to go along with whatever adjustments are necessary. But I am saying to the minister that he has not yet given us a clearcut statement of policy. The government has not brought down a program. I am not talking about words; I am talking about votes and expenditures which will make this program a reality.

Before the government goes any further I think it should refer this whole question to the veterans affairs committee, where the matter can be thoroughly investigated, where the minister and his officials can lay out the whole problem and their suggested solutions to it and where the veterans organizations and those most vitally concerned can make their views known to the members of the house. It has always been true that two heads are better than one, and in this case half a dozen heads and the experience of different organizations and people would very greatly aid in working out a suitable policy. Because after all, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, as the minister himself has said; and I think he understands why the members of this house are concerned. It will be too late to do anything after the minister gets up on the orders of the day and announces that he has just turned over three or four hospitals to municipalities. The door will be closed and we will have embarked upon a policy from which it will be difficult to retreat. Once these hospitals have been turned over it will not be easy for the minister to retrace his steps. Therefore I urge him, before we start down a path that may have an uncertain and an unfortunate ending, to submit this whole question to the veterans affairs committee so that the policy which will emanate from that committee will be carefully considered, will be well thought out, and will be in the best interests of the veterans of this country.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I would think that if there were an admonition that we should bear in mind as we approach this very important matter it is contained in the words of Francis Bacon, when he said:

> He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator.

It seems to me that this poses the problem which is before this house today—the fact that time is the greatest innovator and that time does effect serious changes which require a government to be responsible and to face new problems as they arise. I am interested in this problem. I did not know I would be participating in this debate when yesterday I had a conversation with an amputee who had served with the Hastings-Prince Edward regiment. We had lunch at the Tri-Service hospital where we were both receiving treatment. He had his amputation effected after being wounded on the island of Sicily. Apparently at one time we were together in Ste. Anne de Bellevue military hospital. I speak on this subject with real interest because in Canada alone I have been in the following hospitals as a D.V.A. patient: Quebec military hospital; Montreal neurological institute, the veterans ward; Ste. Anne de Bellevue; the veterans wing of Kingston General; Kingston D.V.A. hospital; Christie st. hospital; Sunnybrook hospital, and the Tri-Service hospital on Alta Vista road here in Ottawa. I have been at some of these hospitals on several occasions. I have some dear friends who are still in these institutions.

I believe all hon. members will agree that conditions do change very radically. In the course of our conversation yesterday at lunch this veteran, who incidentally is carrying on a very good business in the Cornwall area, indicated some of the changes he had seen in the Tri-Service hospital even during the time he had been accepting medical care there. I am sure the veterans across this country are very much indebted to the Department of Veterans Affairs for the extraordinarily high quality, and personal interest, of the service given. I have been very much obligated for the care, for instance, of the prosthetic services branch wherever I have used these facilities across Canada. It seems to me these services are so good that before very long this parliament should consider whether or not they might be available to many more people than the small group of veterans who can presently use them.

There are very real problems with regard to the care of veterans. I do not believe in this debate we are being quite frank. It seems to me that, in some respects, services have already changed and the character and care in these hospitals has changed. There has been a reference to the veterans affairs committee. This committee has, over the years, attained the reputation of being non-partisan. In every part of the house there have been people who have made very valuable contributions to that committee.

I should like to refer hon. members to some of the evidence given in that committee on Tuesday, December 10, 1963. On that occasion Dr. J. N. B. Crawford, the director general of treatment services was called and was subjected to a line of examination, in the first instance, by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Let me just read these questions and answers into the record. Dr. Crawford said:

In June of 1960, I called a conference in Montreal of all chiefs of medical service in all the D.V.A. hospitals. We met here for one or two days and threshed out this problem.

This was a problem in June of 1960.

The consensus at that time was that the high proportion of older men in our hospitals certainly did have an effect on the quality of care which could be given in a hospital that was trying to be a general hospital.

Later, he told the committee:

I then wrote a paper or report for my minister in which I outlined the problem and proposed three possible solutions as I saw them at that time.

This, remember, is June, 1960.

The first was that we would admit to our hospitals a younger patient load.

Some hon. members suggested this as a possible solution.

The second possibility was that we would buy the services we required in the federal government from community hospitals, and in this way there was a possibility that D.V.A. hospitals which were potentially active treatment hospitals might be turned over to suitable agencies.

The third possibility was that we would carry on as we were doing, accepting the fact that we would thereby more and more come to be hospitals for the care of chronic diseases and for the provision of domiciliary care.

He stressed the fact that this meeting took place in the early summer of 1960. Since that time, we have had a number of ministers of veterans affairs. They were Hon. Alfred J. Brooks; Hon. Gordon Churchill and Hon. Marcel Lambert. I think perhaps hon. members of this house would be interested in the rather penetrating comments and questions that were put to the director of treatment services by the last Conservative minister of veterans affairs. Incidentally this hon. gentleman has made a singularly high contribution to this house, certainly in matters of national defence, as speaker and as a man with a good military record of his own; who went through the Dieppe campaign and who was a prisoner of war. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is reported as follows on page 441 of the committee report:

On the other hand the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary being a modern grade A hospital has a great deal of its hospital population either chronically ill or domiciliary because you have no other facilities. Do you feel that this is the most economical use of such facilities that you have at the Colonel Belcher hospital and, undoubtedly, in some other parts of the country?

Mr. Crawford: The answer to that question Mr. Lambert, depends on one's breadth of vision. If in my vision I encompass the hospital needs of the entire community, then the answer is clearly no, this is not an efficient way of using hospital beds. If on the other hand I narrow my vision and say I am interested only in the treatment of veterans, then I can justify the use of beds in the Colonel Belcher by saying that we are using them for the kind of care that veterans need.

Taking the broader view, knowing that Calgary at the moment in respect of active treatment hospitals is very short, then I must admit that this is not an economical or efficient way of using the active treatment hospital beds.

I do not know what the real considerations behind the hon. member's questions were. Certainly, this appealed to me as being the most penetrating examination we can find in the committee of the director of treatment services. I continue to quote from the committee report:

Mr. Lambert: I had in mind the operating theatres and modern facilities which you do have at the Colonel Belcher hospital.

Mr. Crawford: This is what makes an active treatment bed, Mr. Lambert. A hospital bed is a hospital bed. The thing that is different in an active treatment hospital is the existence of these very costly and efficient ancillary services, such as X-ray, laboratories, operating room theatres and so forth.

Mr. Lambert: Have you any comment to make in respect of the situation where you are able to use general hospitals for disability treatment patients who are there, for instance, for a matter of surgery and can be treated in a surgical ward or surgical wing of a modern community hospital operated either by the municipality or some religious order or hospital board? I feel those individuals would receive better medical treatment under those circumstances than in a veterans hospital—

I just interject at this point that having been at Ste. Anne de Bellevue for many months—that is where I met my wife, who was on staff there—I can assure you that most veterans who have been in this hospital would agree with this view, that they cannot expect to get the same level of special nursing services and other services.

Mr. Crawford: In our veterans hospitals at the moment we have these specialist wards and we have the highly qualified treatment teams that are required to provide this excellent care. At the moment the sort of surgery that we do in veterans hospitals is as good as surgery done any place else. My concern has to do with my ability to continue this state of affairs.

Mr. Lambert: I am also concerned, Dr. Crawford, whether you can maintain that standard and whether you can continue to maintain that high specialized staff to provide this service, because you are in a very competitive market. I am wondering whether we can realistically view the future and decide that we can continue this program.

Mr. Crawford: That is exactly the theme of my discourse, Mr. Lambert.

I have served for some years as a governor of a hospital and as a member of the board of trustees of a university. As such I have been interested in medical facilities and in the operation of a medical school. As a matter of fact, the dean of the Queen's medical school at this time is Dr. Harry Botterell who cared for me at Basingstoke military hospital in England. I know the record of this man's performance as one of the top ranking neurosurgeons in Canada. After that I was cared for by Colonel Botterell for a time at Christie street and later at Sunnybrook and now it is my good fortune to be able to refer to him again because he is at a university training hospital, Kingston general hospital. He has pointed out repeatedly to the board of trustees of Queen's University the importance of integration of university and hospital facilities. Training and service go together.

What is the real problem we are facing today? Our veterans hospitals are more and more becoming institutions for the treatment or accommodation of the chronically ill. We have been told that 70 per cent of our patient population is now in this category and that the median age of the patient population is 67 years in spite of the 6 per cent of the population made up of young patients drawn from the armed services. What would the situation be, for instance, if it was not policy to send these young soldiers to the D.V.A. hospitals in order to provide some element of active treatment care? Seventy seven per cent of all patients in D.V.A. hospitals now are over 50 years of age.

I think it was the last speaker who commented that there is no place to equal a veterans institution for the care of these people. I want to say, with great respect, that I do not entirely agree with that proposition. One of my dear and respected friends, and a great friend of my father, was Colonel Fred Kemp. I remember going to visit this man many times before 1939. He was seriously wounded in world war I and he had three gallantry awards, including the D.S.O. and bar. This man lived for many years under D.V.A. care before he died. I want to tell the house that I always left that hospital shocked that a man who had been acclaimed as a distinguished hero of the first world war should be living in such circumstances.

The fact is that conditions for the care of veterans did not continue between the wars as we would have liked them to. It is true that we did our best. Often there was paint on the wall but in many cases there was a hunger on the part of veterans to be treated like other people and to have some of the benefit of the good facilities that go with a progressive active service hospital.

I emphasize again the importance of teaching. The fact is that there must be some sort of teaching facilities related to these hospitals. The best doctors want to teach medicine and the success of veterans treatment in the past has been largely due to close integration with medical teaching and the resultant ability to attract the best doctors and internes to the staff. Veterans hospitals are beginning to lose their attraction as teaching centres.

I might point out this fact because it is of some importance to people who care about hospitals generally. Ten years ago a young doctor seeking a higher specialist qualification such as F.R.C.S. could take all his required training in a veterans hospital. That is not so today. Today most of our hospitals are approved for only one year of required training. Therefore the tendency is for the candidate to apply in the first instance to a hospital where he can do his complete training.

It has become increasingly difficult to maintain the interest of treatment staff, especially to recruit new medical and nursing staff. Interest can only be maintained, even on the part of physiotherapists, if some way can be found to combine the treatment of veterans with the treatment of a younger age group. In saying this I am in no way suggesting that there is not very great importance attached to domiciliary care. I am simply pointing out the fact that there is a change, and a dynamic and useful ministry of veterans affairs has got to have the courage, notwithstanding the criticisms that will be bound to come to it, to adjust to change and to prepare for change.

As I see it, these changes are not going to occur overnight. I think this debate is a useful one because it is preparing the way, we hope, for a more serious and responsible examination of these problems by the veterans affairs committee in due course. The Brockville Recorder and Times of March 23 last had this to say:

> This consternation on the part of the organizations representing veterans is not likely to last, however, when closer scrutiny is given the reasons behind the government's move and just what such a move will mean to veterans.
> Veterans affairs minister Teillet and the government are merely following the recommendations of the Glassco commission, a commission authorized by the former Progressive Conservative government. Neither Mr. Teillet, nor the federal Liberal government, are about to betray the veterans as suggested by Gordon Churchill, former Conservative veterans affairs minister. Mr. Churchill must have overlooked the reasons behind the Glassco recommendations. This commission was of the opinion that in the gradual merging of veterans hospital services—

I stress the word "gradual".

> —and those of the general community lay greater hope of obtaining high standards of care for veterans over the long term.

The government is not proposing this move merely to save money—

If that were the case I would be opposed to it.

—but that beds in veterans hospitals, now empty, could be utilized by communities across the country. And unless this is done, the Glassco commission felt, the quality of medical care will fall from its high standard originally achieved.

With regard to emptiness of beds in veterans hospitals I would point out that we have the problem of Sunnybrook hospital where two wards cannot be staffed with nurses. With an establishment of 302 nurses there are only 206 employed and 48 of these are casuals not on the permanent staff. As a result it has been necessary to close two wards completely due to lack of staff.

Mr. Lambert: What capacity have those two wards?

Mr. Matheson: I cannot say what those wards were used for, but I remember Sunnybrook hospital as being one of the finest institutions in the mid-forties for surgery, internal medicine and almost everything else. Sunnybrook was the pride of the medical fraternity in Toronto. But now Sunnybrook hospital, although the salaries paid by D.V.A. to nurses are reasonably competitive with salaries paid elsewhere, just cannot get nurses because of the nature of the patient load.

Mr. Douglas: Where does the solution lie?

Mr. Matheson: When we look for a solution I think we have got to look deeply at the problem. I assure the hon. member I am not one to believe everything recommended by the Glassco commission. There are parts of the Glassco commission report with which I certainly do not agree. But let me touch on a few of the skeletal conclusions on which the Glassco recommendations are based. They point out that the Canadian expeditionary force in the first world war suffered heavy casualties and accordingly in world war II the government had every reason to expect that the volume of casualties would be larger. The result was that the government undertook a very busy program of renovation and construction so that we now have 11 D.V.A. hospitals scattered across Canada.

It was expected that the casualties of world war II would be substantially more than in the earlier conflict and this assumption proved to be false. However, a program of new hospital construction was undertaken on a large scale and since the end of the war older hospitals have either been replaced or in the main rebuilt. Therefore we now have these 11 veterans institutions with a total capacity of 8,408 beds.

[Mr. Matheson.]

The Glassco commission points out that in the past standards of medical care in these hospitals have been high. They state that the original aim of these hospitals was to provide for the grievously wounded—this touches on the point raised by the hon. member from the N.D.P.—and that therefore many of these hospitals were constructed with specialized surgical facilities and specialized neurosurgical and X-ray facilities. They certainly were not planned as domiciliary in character. If we are to continue simply according to the terms of the amendment with a policy of hands off the veterans hospitals, let things carry on pretty well as they are—

Mr. Churchill: No, make changes as time goes on. That is what I have said.

Mr. Matheson: Let me refer to the language of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre as found on page 2374 of Hansard. He said:

The stand our party takes is: Hands off the veterans hospitals—

Not only that, but we heard the same thing a few minutes ago from the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). He echoed almost exactly the same thing. His words were, "Our policy is hands off the hospitals." Let us take a look at what hands off the hospitals really means.

Mr. Churchill: Why don't you read from the second paragraph on page 2373, if you want to be fair?

Mr. Matheson: Perhaps the hon. member would be gracious enough to allow me to continue because I am rather rushed in trying to get my point across. What I am indicating—

Mr. Churchill: You do not want to be fair.

Mr. Matheson: —is that, right or wrong, the Glassco commission, set up by the former government, says that costs, if we carry on this way will rise materially and that the standard of care is bound to decline. As matters now stand the prospect is that by 1980, if no other war intervenes, if there are no casualties from Cyprus or from any other trouble we are going to have to spend an additional $200 million simply to double the present bed capacity.

We are going to have an increased operating budget for expenses alone of over $100 million annually. Further, the hospitals will be almost wholly occupied by patients requiring domiciliary care, and the quality of medical care will have fallen from the high standards originally achieved. Therefore the Glassco commission recommends that no further hospitals be constructed by the government as active treatment hospitals for war veterans; progressively, the treatment of veterans with pensionable disabilities be transferred to public hospitals, with the cost borne by the federal government; that veterans with major pensionable disabilities who require chronic or domiciliary care continue to be a federal responsibility; that veterans without major pensionable disabilities now receiving chronic and domiciliary care at public expense be progressively transferred to community facilities under such financial arrangements as may be expedient and, finally, that active treatment hospitals now operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs, when cleared, be sold and converted into community hospitals under transfer agreements providing preferential admission rights for veterans with pensionable disabilities.

I am not agreeable to all these recommendations, and I am perfectly sure the government which I have the honour to support is not agreeable to all of them either. But I think it is only reasonable that a government that follows in succession, that follows the former administration, has to take a look at its Glassco commission recommendations and has to be guided by our director of treatment services, Brigadier Crawford, who apparently thought enough about this problem to have a conference in June, 1960, and apparently brought it to the attention of the responsible ministers Messrs. A. G. Brooks, Gordon Churchill and Marcel Lambert.

What about a little straight talk on this? I happen to have had the distinct honour to have got to know one veteran, and I think this is something that is germane to our discussion. He enlisted on August 21, 1939. He went overseas as an observer-navigator. He flew on 21 missions as navigator in Halifax bombers before being given the special assignment of pathfinder, which as we remember, represented an elite classification in bomber command. He was shot down on his third pathfinder flight between Reims and Chalons-Sur-Marne, not far from the Argonne wood. He was on the loose for two weeks, walking by night and hiding by day.

He passed through Paris on the underground, and was captured by the gestapo as he was about to swim across the river marking the boundary to unoccupied France. He was turned over to the German luftwaffe, spent two nights in jail in France, and was then sent to the infamous Stalag Luft III. He spent the balance of the war there, except for the final stages when he, along with many other prisoners, was put on forced marches in the month of January, when his nazi captors were retreating many hundreds of miles in the face of allied advances. I believe, because I lived with him for a year in the twenty fifth parliament, that Flight Lieutenant Teillet, who now adorns the office of Minister of Veterans Affairs, cares as much about the veterans of this country as anybody else, and I want to say how bitterly disappointed I am that any member of the house would suggest that this man has lost the confidence of veterans.

He is not the most diplomatic man in the world. Sometimes he was difficult to live with in the house, but he is one of the most honest and direct men I have ever met, a man with the blood of Louis Riel in his veins. I wish to say that I believe we are going to face this problem very honestly, and I do not think the government is going to move rapidly in any direction. I do not believe there can be a formula, a Glassco commission formula or any other, that can actually apply to all these institutions. When I think of Sunnybrook hospital, of which I am very fond, the Ste. Anne de Bellevue hospital or Kingston hospital, I am perfectly satisfied there should be an adjustment for some in one way, and for others some other arrangement.

This is an intricate and complex problem, which calls for the best and most sophisticated analysis possible, and I hope this matter will not be placed before the veterans affairs committee until a good body of material has been gathered for serious study. I believe we have done some fairly good work in committees in this twenty sixth parliament. I have seen the kind of work which the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), as vice chairman of the defence committee, has done, with other hon. members, on the very difficult matter of defence, and the reason for the good work of that committee was because a lot of serious preparation had been undertaken and much material gathered before members of the committee began to meet.

It is in that spirit that we have to approach this matter of D.V.A. hospitals. The idea of veterans being sold down the river is ridiculous. We have presiding over this government as Prime Minister the first veteran of Canada who actually served in active service in war, a man who had a year and a half in the Gallipoli campaign and saw more people mangled, twisted and broken up than any other member in this house.

I suggest that the idea that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is going to treat this matter in a cavalier or casual manner is completely dishonest and unfair. I would ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam who is a fair and very humanitarian person—I agree with many of the things he said—to believe the proposition, and perhaps I am speaking more personally than is in good taste because

I know the Minister of Veterans Affairs intimately, that for a period of some weeks and months he has been deeply concerned about this problem.

I am satisfied that the fears expressed by some members are groundless, and that what will ultimately develop will be to the credit of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and will be to the everlasting good and happiness of those people who are entitled in any way to D.V.A. assistance.

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I feel I must make a few remarks on this subject. I assure you I will not make many, and first I want to commend the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) upon his very fair and cogent address this afternoon. He put forward the matter of the Colonel Belcher hospital and the feelings of the veterans in a reasonable and precise manner.

I fail to see how veterans on the government side of the house can support the projected turnover of D.V.A. hospitals to other authorities. To hand over any of the facilities that the government of Canada is supposed to maintain for veterans, is definitely giving up their duty and responsibility to the veterans who made it possible for the country to survive even this long.

I speak as a representative of a constituency which contains at least 20 branches of the Canadian Legion, some of which hold numbers as early as 26, 33 and 35. I have had many telegrams from these branches of the Royal Canadian Legion and every one of them demands that the proposed hand-over of veterans hospitals to other organizations be not proceeded with and that everything possible be done to stop it. It may be that in the course of time it may be necessary to hand over certain parts of the responsibility of the government of Canada in this regard to other organizations, but I believe this must be gone into very carefully and very slowly. I just want to quote at this time from the address made yesterday by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) in which he stated our outlook on this question. He said, as reported on page 2373 of Hansard:

> As I see it, the solution is to let things remain as they are, with such modifications in the care and treatment of our veterans as are acceptable to our medical advisers, to the veterans themselves and to the veterans organizations. If this means making provision for those who do not require active treatment right in the D.V.A. hospitals, then let us make that provision; but to seize on this other course of handing these hospitals over to other control is repugnant to me and is certainly repugnant to the veterans organizations.

That is the paragraph which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) would not read into the record. He chose to latch on to some other statement which he said my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre had made.

[Mr. Matheson.]

In this proposed hand-over of D.V.A. hospitals I wonder why the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) did not choose as a guinea pig Deer Lodge military hospital in Winnipeg, in the province from which he himself comes. Why did he choose the province of Alberta and, especially, the Colonel Belcher military hospital in Calgary? While I live some 300 miles away from the city of Calgary, now, my personal interest in the Colonel Belcher hospital is very great. I was one of the earliest patients in that hospital after it was organized and before that I was on the staff of the district depot in Calgary which was the forerunner of the present regional office of the D.V.A. in Alberta. I was there when this hospital was being organized. When the hospital was organized I was a patient and then I was on the staff of that hospital. So my interest in the Colonel Belcher hospital is very great. It was not the hospital then that it is now, because a new building has been provided. But it was the Colonel Belcher military hospital at that time. Even at that time the service there was the very best and I do believe that the idea of turning such hospitals over to other organizations is very wrong, because, as the minister said, even at present beds available in military hospitals are from 75 per cent to 80 per cent occupied.

The trouble seems to be that there is difficulty in getting sufficient staff. Well, as has been pointed out by the minister, the staff of military hospitals receive the same remuneration and have the same working conditions as, or perhaps better working conditions than those in many hospitals which are not D.V.A. hospitals. For the life of me I cannot see why it should be so difficult to recruit medical staff, that is, doctors and nurses, for these hospitals. The minister mentioned something about second class medical treatment which might be available later on. That is something I fail to understand, because the doctors and the nurses who enlist for work in military hospitals are dedicated people. They dedicate their lives to this great service, and people whose lives are dedicated do not provide second class service for anybody.

The minister also maintained that the situation is different in every part of Canada. I do not agree with that statement at all. Wherever you have a veteran in Canada, that veteran is in practically every case a man who had volunteered for service. This service was rendered without any idea of reward and it is the duty of the government of Canada to look after such people when they need treatment. There can be no question about that. Handing over the medical services and the hospitals available to our veterans is just no good, because you cannot expect those who are looking after sick people to give the same consideration to everybody as they do to operative cases; and so many of these veterans are not now operative cases.

The veterans who will require hospital treatment are likely to increase in numbers in the next few years for the simple reason that the veterans of the second world war are now reaching middle age, and the results of their active service will begin to show, whether they were wounded or not; the results of the privations they suffered will begin to show. As for the veterans of the first world war, there are not as many of us left as there were. A great many will require treatment. This is not likely to be operative treatment, and where and how is this care to be arranged if we do not retain our D.V.A. hospitals?

There is no provision for the domiciliary care of veterans who are disabled, except in some places. The area which I represent is contiguous to the city of Edmonton. In that city there is not a veterans hospital. The veterans at the university hospital receive treatment in the Mewburn pavilion, and that pavilion is staffed by D.V.A. doctors. All the arrangements with regard to hospitalization are made and provided by the University of Alberta hospital, which is a child of the provincial government of Alberta. I have received a great many complaints about the provisions for hospitalization in that hospital, but I have yet to receive even one complaint about the medical or nursing attention. The complaint is with regard to the arrangements of the hospital and the lack of attention to veterans who are perhaps not operative cases. This is something that I believe could happen in all hospitals which may not be operated by the D.V.A.

I think that in the proposed turnover of these hospitals at this time the government is just trying to run before it walks. It is not making any provision for what is going to happen in the future, and the veterans would just be forced to take their chance on being looked after properly. I therefore am wholly in support of the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and I think every veteran in this house should also be in accord with that amendment.

I remarked when I began my speech, Mr. Speaker, that I would only say a few words. I have been longer than I intended to be, but I have said things that I believe must be said, and must be said by a person who is a long time veteran.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to speak in this debate. I would like to say right away that, as a veteran, although I agree with some of the things that have been said during this debate from the other side of the house, I am not in favour of this amendment and I plan to vote against it. I will outline my reasons as I proceed, although I do not expect to speak for very long because I know there are others who have important things to say. However, Mr. Speaker, there are a few points that I wish to make.

First of all, I am a member of the veterans affairs committee and am concerned, having had the experience in that committee of a great deal of good will and free exchange of opinion, that this amendment will prejudice that good will by making this a political issue, that it most certainly is not. I think all of us on this side of the house, as well as those on the other side, are trying to do our utmost to look after the best interests of our veterans. I for one am satisfied from what the minister has said that our policy is to provide the best possible care for veterans even if this means making changes. I am also convinced that part of our policy is to consult with the veterans when the right time arrives.

My particular concern in this matter, apart from being a member of the veterans affairs committee, is that I have a veterans hospital in my riding, the Victoria veterans hospital. I can say from various studies I have made of this hospital that in my part of the country we are going to be in the veterans business for a long, long time to come, I would say probably longer than any other part of the nation, because the statistics show that, for one reason or another—and I believe it is because of the temperate climate which we enjoy out there—veterans from other parts of Canada gravitate towards Victoria in their later years. The census taken in 1961 shows that of all the male veteran population over 30 years of age, those living in the Victoria riding represent the highest percentage of anywhere in Canada; 42 per cent of all the male population over the age of 30 in the vicinity of Victoria are veterans. When we break this down even further, we see in the higher age groups, those of 65 years of age or over, once again we have the highest percentage in Canada. From age 60 to 64, 46 per cent are veterans; from 65 to 69, 53 per cent are veterans. This compares with a nationwide average of about 25 per cent to 28 per cent. So I am very, very concerned, Mr. Speaker, with the matter of veterans hospitals and their future.

In view of the figures which I have just given to the house, I would like to say that I agree with many of the points raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), particularly with respect to the chronically ill or domiciliary care patients. We have a great number of them in our riding. For some time past we have been getting together with the other hospital agencies in my part of the country and trying to work out means of using joint facilities. I think our experience in this regard has been very successful and I hope it will be copied in other parts of the country. I am not trying to claim that anything we do in my riding regarding the veterans hospital in Victoria can be duplicated exactly in ridings in other parts of the country, because I agree wholeheartedly with the minister when he says that the arrangements for the various hospitals have to be different because they have different circumstances. For example, we have the circumstances that I have just outlined; that is, a higher percentage of veterans than in other parts of the country. In some parts of the country this figures is as low as 8 per cent. However, it is not in every part of the country that the veterans hospital is fortunate enough to have a large public hospital immediately adjacent to it. We do. We have for some time been sharing some of our facilities between the veterans hospital and the public hospital, and to our mutual advantage. It is this sort of thing that I would like to see investigated, to see whether there is not some further advantage to be gained for the veterans by more of this type of co-operation. For example, the D.V.A. hospital in Victoria already uses the facilities of the Royal Jubilee hospital for the treatment of cancer. We use their psychiatric clinic, and they provide emergency services and share their laboratory facilities.

This is the sort of thing I should like to investigate in my riding to the benefit of all the veterans. It has been explained to me that there is all sorts of room for this type of co-operation. I am told that new techniques are being developed in medicine which require not only expensive equipment but also, and much more importantly, highly skilled and trained teams of doctors and nurses to operate the equipment. I fully realize there is no one in this house who would wish to deny the veterans the full advantage of the use of this type of equipment in an emergency. I know we would all vote the money to acquire such equipment, but we cannot vote the experience that these teams require. These teams have to be put together, and having been introduced to the equipment have to use the equipment and use it frequently so that they know how to use it properly when the time comes. I think that most doctors will agree with me when I say that these teams cannot be duplicated in every hospital across the country. It is much better to have a highly skilled team in one central position and to make it available to veterans when the time comes. This is the sort of thing I am looking for in any revision of our plans for veterans hospitals.

I do not want to take up too much time this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to make two or three other points. An attempt has been made today to show that all veterans are against any change in policy. I do not think this is so. However, I must confess I have sympathy with the veterans who are not aware of what changes the government have in mind. I am also in sympathy with the minister, who cannot possibly approach the veterans with the changes which he has in mind until he has been able to consult with all the individual hospitals and work out solutions for each individual case so that he can present his plans to the veterans.

When I have explained this matter to the veterans groups in my riding they have accepted it in the way I would have expected. I have received over 1,300 cards from veterans as well as a number of letters from veterans organizations in my riding. These cards read:

I, the undersigned, a veteran, protest the handing over of the Victoria veterans hospital to any other administration.

I think hon. members will agree with me that 1,300 cards all worded exactly alike are some sign of an organized protest, and it is the kind of protest I welcome because it is the type of information which a member of parliament needs to show how the people are thinking. It is interesting to note that of the 1,300 letters I have received there are signs that perhaps this highly organized campaign is being a little over-organized. A number of these protests have been duplicated. Some people have sent in two or three protests bearing the same name and address, and I have had over 50 of my replies returned marked "Not known at this address". I tried to reply to these letters straight away when they first came in at the rate of some 200 or 300 a day, and I think I have replied to over 1,000 of them.

I might also point out that a number of these cards have been sent to me with the word "protest" crossed out and the word "favour" inserted instead, so that the card would read:

I, the undersigned, a veteran, favour the handing over of the Victoria veterans hospital to any other administration.

Or it might read:

I, the undersigned, a veteran, applaud the handing over of the Victoria veterans hospital to any other administration.

However, I do not attach any particular significance to this sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, other than that it goes to show that this objection is not a unanimous one. I have had letters from veterans who take the sane and sensible view, which I think is shared by many hon. members of this house on both sides, that it is time that at least a study was made of this problem so as to find out whether some changes should be made which would be of advantage to the veterans in some parts of the country. That is all we are looking for; at least that is all I am looking for. I want better care for our veterans, and I know of no one who will disagree with me on that.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we can provide better care. One of the complaints that a veteran makes at the moment is that when he arrives at a veterans hospital he cannot always have his own doctor because the doctor concerned is not an accredited doctor at that hospital. It is surely better for a patient undergoing surgery in a hospital to have his own doctor who is well acquainted with the case. Then there is also the question of equipment to which I have referred. This new, highly technical equipment could be made available on a joint basis at a number of hospitals.

I should like to come back to the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, because I said that I agreed with a great deal of what he said. He was talking about domiciliary care. This is care which is in the main given to the older veterans, who comprise primarily the world war I group. All of these men have our profound sympathy. However, what I should like to see as a result of this debate is some clarification of the position of those undergoing domiciliary care. There is the suspicion that they are being treated only on sufferance, and I think that this suspicion must be removed. In particular, I think of the case of world war I veterans who fought under really awful, almost inconceivable conditions for months and months on end. There is no doubt, whether or not they were wounded, that this country owes them all a debt which we can never repay; and I for one wish to see them looked after in their old age even if it means that we have to provide domiciliary quarters for them under the operation of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I have been making investigations in Victoria with the local groups to see whether or not this can be done. As has been pointed out on more than one occasion, the veterans are a very understanding group. They know perfectly well that it would be better for everyone concerned if, instead of occupying beds in a hospital each of which costs somewhere around $25,000 a year to maintain, they were occupying beds much more suitable for their circumstances, namely those designed for domiciliary-type care. Although I cannot say I have achieved any result yet, I am exploring the possibility of taking the lead and attempting to establish the groundwork for the provision of this type of domiciliary accommodation in Victoria. What a fine thing this would be for the veterans. What a fine thing this would be for the community, and for Canada. It would be wonderful if this type of accommodation were made possible through the three various levels of government.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the difficult position the minister is facing has been amply demonstrated here by the various suggestions that have been put forward by the various members from both sides of the house as to how he should accomplish his purpose. This demonstrates to me the extent of the problem. I should like to reiterate, however, that I am in complete sympathy with the minister in his search for a solution to the problem which unquestionably faces us. I want to say again that I am satisfied our policy is to provide the best possible care for veterans, even if this means making changes. I do not believe there are any members in this house who will disagree with that policy.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we have had a very interesting debate occasioned by the introduction of the amendment with regard to the possible transfer of veterans hospitals to provincial and municipal control. I say it has been an interesting debate, and I think it is understandable that varied feelings and convictions should be indicated in the discussion of a subject such as this one. I have followed with special interest the statements and interventions of those who have served in the armed forces. Some of us were not in that particular role, but possibly in roles that the national government considered essential to the successful prosecution of the war effort. Since we are dealing with veterans, as I say, I have been especially interested in listening to those who have served and who have expressed their views with regard to the matter now before us.

Possibly the first indication we had that something was moving in this regard was the report of the Glassco commission. This has been brought to our attention also and the various sections of it have been placed on the record for public information. I believe, as was pointed out, that we must remember this was a task that was committed to the Glassco commission based almost wholly upon economic considerations. We are called upon to temper a report based purely upon economic considerations with the human elements that are involved in a situation such as the one now before us. Mention has been made of the announced policy or lack of policy indicated by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I believe possibly he has to be blamed for not making forthright statements in this house in answer to the many questions that have been asked and the many submissions that have been made.

We waited for a long time before any statement was made outlining government policy. When that statement was made I fear that in many respects it was rather inconclusive, rather indefinite and left us very much in the dark regarding the policy the government intended to put into effect. When the minister made his statement on March 16, he outlined three main considerations that were to be kept in mind in relation to this important matter. As reported at page 930 of Hansard for March 16, the minister said:

> These conditions, three in number, are as follows: First, accommodation for the treatment of service connected disabilities among veterans must be immediately available at all times, and treatment must be provided in accordance with standards prescribed by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Second, community institutions of acceptable standards must be available to look after the work load created by other classes of veterans, which means that such veterans will be able to obtain treatment in their own communities, near their own friends and families. Finally, satisfactory arrangements must be made for the continued employment of professional and other staffs now serving in our institutions.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these considerations are very commendable, but as pointed out this afternoon, it would seem to me that specific steps must be indicated to ensure that these safeguards can be implemented and our veterans will continue to receive the high standard of service and treatment that they have received up to this time. We have all received communications with regard to this matter. I, personally, have received communications from various branches urging that we oppose any attempt to make this transfer of D.V.A. hospitals to other agencies.

A letter appeared in the April issue of The Legionary and it was directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs by Mr. D. M. Thompson, dominion secretary of the Royal Canadian Legion. He had been instructed to convey to the minister certain requests. I am not going to read the letter, but I am going to read the requests that are made.

> (1) That no action be taken by the government in regard to the handing over of D.V.A. hospitals until the Royal Canadian Legion has had an opportunity to discuss this problem further with you;
> (2) That you give a definite statement on government policy regarding these hospitals and the provision for future treatment for Canadian veterans;
> (3) That this statement indicate clearly the government's future policy as it will apply to treatment provided under each of the general classification sections of the veterans treatment regulations;
> (4) That when this statement has been received and studied, the dominion president and elected officers of the Royal Canadian Legion be given an opportunity to meet with you and discuss this entire matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the dangers that are inherent in such proposals as have been advanced. We can understand very well the fears of the veterans and those who are responsible for the welfare of the veterans. We can appreciate their fears. We would urge the minister, therefore, to go slowly in the implementation of these proposals which he has outlined or on the proposals that have been outlined by the Glassco commission. As I pointed out, the Glassco commission was operating from the point of view of economic considerations. I am sure the minister recognizes the fact, as does every member in this house, that the human element must be taken into consideration in the issue which is currently before us.

I suggest, therefore, that the government and the minister move very slowly in the implementation of this policy. Above all, I believe discussions should continue with the veterans organizations. We should try to reconcile their problems, dispel their fears and allay their suspicions that when the matter is finally proceeded with it will be with the knowledge that the veterans organizations have a clear understanding of what the minister has in mind, and the veterans will be assured that the treatment they may require in the future will be available at the time it is required.

As I have said, we have listened to veterans on both sides of the house and, as was pointed out today, the minister himself has a very laudable service record. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) also spoke, as well as members of the official opposition and others on this side of the house. All of these hon. members have laudable service records. Yet we see how widely divergent their views are with respect to this problem.

I do not think we can charge the government with being oblivious to the needs of the veterans. I do not think we can charge members of the opposition with making this matter purely a political football. I think we must credit each and every member with a sincere motivation so far as this question is concerned.

I simply wish to point out the fact that the veterans themselves hold widely divergent views with respect to this problem.

I think this points up very clearly the importance of further negotiations and discussions in an endeavour to resolve the problem and find some common ground of understanding before we proceed in this fashion. Once again I urge, as I did on a previous occasion when this matter was first broached by the minister, that the committee on veterans affairs be seized with this problem. The committee can then call before it members of veterans organizations and others who want to present opinions, suggestions and proposals. I believe that in this way we can resolve the problems involved and find a satisfactory solution to them.

I do not believe that this matter should involve a want of confidence motion so far as the government is concerned. I think this is a rather radical and drastic step because I believe that through co-operation and the pooling of the suggestions, knowledge and understanding of those who are vitally concerned we can arrive at a satisfactory solution, one which will, as I have said, allay the fears of the veterans and still provide for any change in the administrative field that is considered vital and important at this time.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I am prompted to do so for three reasons, first, because of my medical training, second, because of the great number of veterans who have written me and sent me telegrams as well as communications even from civilians and, third, because I believe the veterans hospitals across Canada are serving a very useful function in looking after our veterans and are also doing great work in the field of research.

We have in Canada today over 200,000 veterans who are entitled to treatment. There are approximately 8,500 beds in the 11 veterans hospitals across Canada and when we look at the record we find that there were approximately 75,000 admissions last year which produced a case load of approximately 80 per cent usage of available hospital beds. This is a reasonable average considering that the length of stay of the veterans was approximately three weeks.

I also want to emphasize that the veterans hospitals are well equipped. On the basis of knowledge I can refer to Sunnybrook, and on the basis of advice received to Shaughnessy. They not only have the finest of equipment, but in the case of Sunnybrook members of the staff are associated with the University of Toronto. Their staffs are the finest in Canada. These hospitals are doing a tremendous job not only in the work they are carrying on but in the training of young doctors who go forth with excellent training to treat people across the country.

The veterans in these hospitals make ideal cases for study and treatment. They can be given the most modern medical and surgical treatment in these hospitals but, above all, their cases can be followed up over the years to see what the results of the treatment may be, which may be very difficult in respect of the civilian population. The veterans are also unique in relation to the civilian population in that most of them have suffered the stresses and strains of war. Many of them have hidden injuries that do not appear until years later. They are a special group of people because the civilian population has not undergone the hidden stresses and strains of war. Only a veterans hospital with a veterans outlook and staffed by people such as work in these institutions will have the proper perspective to look after these people and give them the best treatment.

I want to refer for a few minutes to the general hospitals. General hospitals are active treatment hospitals. Their patients stay from 10 to 12 days, I suppose, but they are active treatment hospitals in that the cases they deal with involve people who are acutely ill medically or who need emergency operations or who have been involved in accidents. I would remind the house that 12 per cent of all the beds in general hospitals today are occupied by accident cases. Today most of our veterans are over 35 years of age.

I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we call it six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows: First, the proposed renewal of the law dealing with the construction of a railroad in Gaspe, raised by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm; second, the question of the adoption of a new flag for Canada and the placing of such design before parliament, raised by the hon. member for Cumberland: third, the question of raising pensions of superannuated civil servants in accordance with increases in the cost of living index, raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members would permit me, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) had submitted two questions for discussion at ten o'clock, and at six o'clock, due to inadvertence, one of them was selected whereas he preferred the other one to be discussed. I have spoken to him since, and to the minister concerned, and instead of discussing the railroad in Gaspe I have decided that the subject of Cyprus should be discussed. There is no change in the member and no change in the minister. It was due entirely to confusion existing at six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I might say I am bitterly disappointed.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Favreau (for the Minister of Finance) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Churchill.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, before the house adjourned at six o'clock I had stated that veterans hospitals were well equipped and that they were well staffed. For example, the Sunnybrook hospital has many excellently trained men, and I had stated its consulting staff was of the highest professional skill and training, that the hospital carried on with well kept records, a great deal of scientific research, that young graduates in medicine received a splendid internship there, and that the veterans received the most modern treatment they could have anywhere in Canada in an environment suitable to them.

I might have added further that many teaching postgraduate courses have been held there, which have brought in doctors from many hundreds of miles away, and all the doctors I have talked to have stated these were fine teaching courses and were of great benefit to them in their practices.

Now, having said this, I want to draw a distinction again between active treatment hospitals, as general hospitals are, that deal with the acutely ill both medically and surgically, and 12 per cent of whose beds are taken by accident cases and, on the other hand, treatment hospitals for those chronically ill, either surgically, medically or mentally. Mr. Speaker, I would like you to consider that between the ages of five to 35 years the biggest cause of illness and death is accidents.

After the age of 35 the picture changes and we find that people suffer cardio-vascular diseases, cancer, and rheumatic disorders, and other chronic disease. In Canada today we have 1,400,000 people with heart conditions, 350,000 of whom are seriously handicapped, and 72,000 of whom die annually from this disease. Cancer is the next biggest killer, claiming 50 per cent of all its victims. It is not good enough, to write off half of all its victims. Rheumatism and arthritic diseases affect over another one million people, 285,000 of whom are handicapped and 63,000 of whom are hopelessly crippled.

I could go on to state that custodial care is not good enough or adequate enough for a record like this, when we have those great killers striking people after the age of 35 years. We have a population including veterans that is gradually getting older and we must funnel our research and efforts into those cases we are likely going to get anyway.

There must be a constant struggle to achieve the best methods of treatment. Custodial care should be reserved only for those who have no hope of cure. General hospitals have recognized this and have constructed their own arthritic, physiotherapy and mental units close to or as part of the hospital. We require more and more chronic disease beds, and more active treatment going on all the time, if we are to control disease in a population that is constantly getting older, with more people moving into the age group above 35 years.

Veterans hospitals play a very important role in this phase of research and treatment. Let us keep the veterans in their own hospitals, within their own environment. Surely those who went into the army, navy or air force and took the chance of giving their all, and who bear the scars of their adventures, should get the best treatment possible in the best environment it is possible to give them. This will give them the best chance of recovery, by providing them with a happy environment among their old pals who understand them and who fought with them.

This is their right. This is their due, and all of us will not only feel that justice is being done but that some research carried out in those institutions may in the long run save the lives of many human beings. The veterans are entitled to have consideration. In the troubled world of today, the world of the cold wars, we have Canadian troops in quite a few places overseas. Just recently we sent troops to Cyprus, and on more than one occasion it has been suggested that Canadian troops adopt a greater police role. This means, in the event of the outbreak of conflict, that we may need more and more hospital beds.

Therefore I appeal to hon. members, regardless of their political affiliations, for a reconsideration of the rights of veterans across Canada. It is not true to say that we have lots of beds available for them in general hospitals. This is evident right across the country, and it is a complete hoax to say otherwise. The veterans must be treated in their own hospitals and given the best treatment possible.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in the two or three minutes available to me I would like to add my voice to the veterans organizations urging the support and maintenance of our veterans hospitals. The minister may not be aware of why we have these hospitals, but each veteran is, because he figures that the hospitals operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs are ones that were promised to him. These are not hospitals in the true sense of some civic administration, and civic authorities are not capable of operating them.

At one time I was in the old Christie street hospital and I know some people who spent their lifetime in it. They felt it was not a hospital but a home to them. The minister may be a separatist; he may be one of these Liberals who believe in dividing everything up, but I am not.

I believe that as long as we are Canadians we have a responsibility toward those who served us in two world wars and who may be asked to serve again in the future. We have to honour our commitments. Everybody knows that commitments which were undertaken by the previous government were honoured by the minister who was in office at that time. But the hon. gentleman who now holds office is not honouring them; he is entering into arrangements with the provinces and municipalities rather than face up to the task. He has an obligation in terms of the unity of this nation and of the veterans charter, to bring his proposal before the veterans affairs committee. I venture to suggest he has done more thinking about this problem in the last two days than he has done in all the time previous to this debate.

I know some people are committed in this house to voting with a particular object in mind, such as whether to sustain the government. But I believe anyone who gives any thought to this matter will consider this issue to be a major part of the veterans charter and will feel obliged to vote for the amendment before us tonight.

Mr. Speaker: It being 8.15 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I was paired; otherwise I would have voted against the amendment.

[Text]

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I not been paired I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan). Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Clancy: In the interest of all, could we have the result of the vote announced in French?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; an hon. member wishes to have the result of the vote announced in English and French.

En français: en faveur, 94; contre, 123.

In English: Yeas, 94; nays, 123.

Mr. Clancy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

TRANSPORT—AIR SERVICE, FERRY SERVICE, RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a grievance concerning this evening a most important minister on the treasury benches, the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). It concerns, sir, what we feel to be a complete lack of any co-ordination in national transportation policy, involving transportation by air, by rail and the marine services in this country. There are others on this side who will be dealing with the question of rail transportation, and also with national policy concerning the marine. I intend to deal very briefly with our national air policies.

I may say, sir, at the outset that the reason which prompted the raising of this grievance is the complete lack of any clear answers to questions which members over on this side of the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could implore for the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a little silence in the house so that the few of us who would like to hear him will have the opportunity of hearing him; perhaps the other hon. members may enjoy themselves more in the lobbies. While I am on my feet perhaps I can implore the hon. gentleman to state precisely what his grievance is so that I will be able to make a good rebuttal.

Mr. Lambert: Don't be so sanctimonious.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May we have order in the house.

Mr. Nielsen: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his intervention. I often wish I had the ability of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) to make myself heard in this house, but unfortunately I am not endowed as graciously as he is with such attribute. The other thing I should like to say to the minister is that I intend to raise these issues this evening on a sufficiently broad basis that all hon. members will be able to participate in the discussion of the minister's responsibilities. I shall do so in a fashion with which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) is extremely familiar. There should be, therefore, no lack of opportunity for hon. members to participate in this grievance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question? Does the hon. gentleman not think that in ranging so far afield he would be anticipating the debate on my estimates, and thus ruining it?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not think that will be the result at all, Mr. Speaker, because there have been innumerable questions asked in this house concerning the abandonment of rail line facilities, for instance, and this piecemeal attack on a national problem which is of great concern to almost every area in Canada. I believe this is a grievance which should be raised and should be dealt with at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: It should be dealt with tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has already given us a hint as to which estimates will be considered tomorrow and the end of the week. In so far as marine services are concerned, again there have been sufficient inquiries on orders of the day about ferry systems in this country and the lack of other marine services to warrant these questions being dealt with now.

In so far as air services are concerned, there has been question after question directed to the minister with regard to air services across Canada to which no answer was received, or an evasive answer was given. This period will provide the minister with an opportunity of satisfying all the concern that is felt in the country with regard to these various transportation problems.

Mr. Woolliams: Do you not think it would have been a good idea if the Minister of Agriculture had been here because he looks after rail abandonment?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is anticipating legislation, and that is against the rules.

Mr. Nielsen: Before allowing this tangential debate to develop, I think perhaps I should direct my attention to the specific subject with which I am going to be dealing in the next five or six minutes, and that is the lack of any co-ordinated national air policy in the country. I am sure the minister has received innumerable representations from aviation organizations across the country dealing with all sorts of problems which confront not only the air lines but general aviation in Canada today.

I think we are lagging far behind some of the more forward looking nations of the world in the development of a national air policy. I know the minister has been extremely busy in looking after such matters as redistribution, but I feel it is essential that immediate attention be directed to the establishment of a national aviation policy which will be directed toward the growth rather than the retardation of aviation in Canada. At one time Canada was one of the leaders in this field. I feel we are rapidly dropping into the position of a second-rate nation in the field of general aviation.

One of the matters to which I believe the minister should give consideration is the subject of a national air organization similar to those international air organizations in which Canada participates. I am thinking specifically now of ICAO and IATA. On the civilian side, we have the international council of aircraft owners and pilots, the international federation of air line pilots, and the like. I am thinking also of the federal aeronautical international association. What appears to be happening, and I am sure the minister is aware of this—

An hon. Member: He is not even listening.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know whether or not the minister is listening. You know, he refuses these briefs from the associations, he does not appear to be listening to them, and likewise he does not appear to be listening this evening. I suggest to the minister these are matters that are of sufficient importance that they would call for all his concentrated attention, because they are of international concern.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was following the hon. gentleman very closely.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure that the minister will be interested in one or two very brief points I shall be making. As I was saying at the time when perhaps the minister's attention was distracted, the establishment of a national organization should be considered for the purpose of considering general aviation matters in this country, in the same way that ICAO and IATA have been set up. We have all sorts of international representation from the civil side of aviation in this country, but we do not have any national association or national body upon which representation of general aviation in Canada can be heard. All we have is this assistant deputy minister for air and the air transport board. There is no representative within any of these organizations for the airing of opinions and views of general aviation in Canada. Of the approximately 6,500 aircraft registered in Canada, some 90 per cent are owned and operated by private individuals and organizations. However, these people are not represented on any association set up for the purpose of presenting views to the government.

If the minister does not agree with setting up a Canadian aviation council or aeronautics commission of Canadian origin upon which would be represented the views of general aviation in the country, perhaps he would consider representation on the air transport board of the views of general aviation by including in the composition of that board representatives from the charter operators, and from the Canadian owners and pilots association within Canada. The air transport board has done a marvellous job in the contribution they have made to the organizing and orderly development of aviation in this country. At the same time it is still an exclusively government body. We recall that Hon. George Hees established a Canadian airworthiness council on which there were representatives from de Havilland, from insurance companies, from T.C.A., from the maintenance people, parts and supply people, and so on. However, there was not a representative from the 6,500 odd private aircraft owners in the country. I am going to leave that suggestion with the minister, that he give immediate and serious consideration to the setting up of a Canadian aviation council as a first step toward the development of a national air policy in this country which would be truly representative of the views not only of the air line companies but of general aviation.

In so far as rail line abandonments are concerned, I may say that I have no problems of that nature in my own constituency. I have problems, rather, with the construction of railroads themselves. However, I have heard members on several occasions bring this matter to the attention of the minister, and particularly the piecemeal disintegration of the railroad system in this country. I feel this matter is sufficiently important for the minister to stand up and declare some sort of cohesive integrated policy which will not only satisfy the innumerable questions that have been put to him but will reassure the house that we are not abandoning the very essential services which the railways provide, particularly to the grain growing part of our country.

The other matter which I want to include in this grievance has to do with an over-all marine policy for the country, perhaps along the lines—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize that for a while the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has been speaking on policy or rather on the general principles of the government policy about transport matters. Well, I wonder if this is a grievance matter, or rather a gap to be filled as far as government policy is concerned.

To my mind, a grievance is a complaint not against general principles of administration, but against any damage suffered or against some very dangerous thing. And the dictionary will confirm this definition.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Now today there are some complaints, not on specific grounds with regard to something damaging or very dangerous, but about the general principles of government policy. Consequently, I wonder if this is a true grievance, because we, in this corner of the house, would have real grievances to submit to the house, and since the beginning of the period set apart for grievances, we have heard the hon. member from the Yukon advance fine arguments and resort to great flights of oratory. Yet, I do not think that he raised a grievance, but rather that he is discussing the general government policy in matters of transportation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this short period of time should not be left to those who have real grievances, more particularly in view of the fact that the official opposition may have criticized this government's policy with regard to veterans' hospitalization, and that we did not have the opportunity of airing our grievances in the house during the two days set aside for discussing the first item of the subsidies.

Mr. Speaker, we would like to take advantage of the few minutes which are left to air our grievances. We think that the hon. member for the Yukon should submit a real grievance to the house or that Your Honour should declare the grievance raised by the hon. member irregular, and enable us to put well-founded grievances before the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I listened attentively and with interest to the argument that the hon. member for Lapointe has just put forward.

I also followed with attention the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon, with respect to the grievance he raised in the house. Right from the start, the hon. member said that his grievance was related to a lack of co-ordination in the government policy in the field of air transportation and, in my opinion, such grievance can be considered during the period specially allowed for that purpose. In fact, I suggest that the hon. member for Lapointe refer to the first paragraph of citation 234 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, which reads as follows:

[Text]

When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance.

[Translation]

As the hon. member can see, it provides a rather wide scope for debate, and I am of the opinion that the hon. member for Yukon is within the rules in submitting his grievance to the house.

[Text]

Mr. Moreau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Then, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the sake of good order perhaps we might allow the hon. member for Lapointe to speak. From the way he introduced his remarks I understand he has just one word to say.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask the hon. member for Yukon if he would allow me a question.

[Translation]

Could the hon. member tell me whether the transport situation is worse today than it was just a year ago, when the Conservative party was in power?

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: Before answering the facetious question of the hon. member for Lapointe, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that there seems to be a misunderstanding of the nature of the grievance I have raised. I have not raised a grievance relating specifically to the lack of national air policy but rather to the complete lack of any transportation policy including not only an air policy but a rail policy and a marine policy. I want to make that quite clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might say that when the point was raised by the Minister of Transport at the outset of the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon that his grievance should be specific the hon. member did say in reply to the point raised by the minister that specifically he was dealing with air transportation policy. If the hon. member is the only one who has this particular grievance I might say that this will not preclude other members from raising another grievance with reference to another aspect of transportation policy.

Mr. Nielsen: Like the Minister of Transport, I want at all times, of course, to be strictly within the rules of the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: You are learning.

Mr. Nielsen: —but I must say that when the minister raised the point first I replied that I intended to discuss as a grievance the complete lack of any integrated or co-ordinated national transport policy, air, rail and marine. I made it quite clear that this was the specific nature of the grievance. I went on to say that several members on this side of the house had raised questions concerning rail line abandonment. I dealt with that question first. Then I went on to deal with matters concerning ferries and other marine matters that have arisen in the past several weeks in the house to which no satisfactory answers or evasive answers have been given. I dealt lastly with the question of air transportation. So I feel there should be the widest possible latitude allowed to all members in discussing these three aspects of the complete lack of a national transportation policy, air, rail and marine.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question. Is the hon. gentleman entirely satisfied with the telegraphic and telephonic communications in the country? He seems to have left something out.

Mr. Nielsen: Hardly, Mr. Speaker. I just did not want to throw in the kitchen sink, even though questions I have asked on the order paper with respect to telecommunication systems in the country have received absolutely no answers. I refer specifically to the program "Telepol". If the minister will refer to that question I think he will know what I mean. I could have dragged in two hotels that come under the minister but I did not do that.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the meteorological services?

Mr. Nielsen: All I want to do, and in the least possible time, is to draw the attention of the minister and members of the house generally to the fact that the transportation situation in Canada today is an absolute and complete mess and I think the minister is largely responsible for it. He said he was going to bring in a national transportation policy.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the hon. member for Yukon is going to answer my question. He told me he would answer it.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not think the hon. member was serious in his question but if he wants an answer in the nature of his question I can only say that more was done in six years with regard to transport matters under the Conservative administration than was done by the Liberals in 20 years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not mind questions but I know that other members want to take part in this debate and if I may be allowed to complete my remarks as quickly as possible I can do so in two or three minutes. I have already drawn the attention of the minister to my suggestion that he set up, as part of the government complex that governs air policy in this country, a Canadian aviation council or aeronautics commission upon which there would be representatives of the owners and operators who do 90 per cent of the flying in this country. This is a demand that has been made over and over again, and the minister would be well advised to allow his deputies and assistant deputies to devote themselves to other specific problems and, by the establishment of such a commission, allow some consultation to be had on the problem of the growth of general aviation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with rail line abandonment. I had been disturbed by the number of questions asked in the house about the piecemeal disintegration of our national railroads in areas which will be seriously affected economically if a halt is not called to the indiscriminate abandonment of these rail lines. I think there are other hon. members more qualified to deal with this subject than I.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would think so.

Mr. Nielsen: But I raise it as a grievance so that it can be dealt with, and I would remind the minister it is still part of my concern because it is a national transportation matter.

Similarly, I have heard questions asked of the minister with regard to the ferry systems throughout the country. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) has a motion on the order paper calling for the reviving of the Canadian merchant marine, and questions have been asked of the government along these lines, questions which have not been answered or, if answered, the answers have been evasive. I know it is extremely difficult for the minister to be specific in answering these questions, but I hope he will be as generous in his answers to hon. members who will follow me on this particular grievance as he would have expected of those answers given to him when he was sitting on this side of the house, when he became so indignant when he did not receive the type of answer to which he felt he was entitled.

Perhaps it would help the minister in the transport problems that beset him if another Kent were hired for him, in order to coordinate the efforts of his department. Maybe the responsibilities placed upon the minister are too much for him to handle, or perhaps in his new role as the acting Prime Minister he has too many other responsibilities to deal with, and it is difficult for him to give full attention to the responsibilities of his department. Whatever the trouble may be, I suggest some immediate solution is required, and I urge upon him the specific suggestions I have made with regard to air transport. I am sure those who follow will deal more adequately with railway and marine problems.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite has raised the whole field—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

According to the citation from Beauchesne's which you read very well in English a short while ago—I congratulate you for being perfectly bilingual—after the question has been put, it is time to set forth grievances and not to reply to them. No rule says that it is the proper time to reply to grievances as the hon. member is going to do.

Mr. Speaker, I very humbly submit that this period is reserved for opposition members who have grievances to make against the government, and not to government members who want to defend themselves against some grievances.

Mr. Dupuis: Let him speak to see what he has to say.

[Text]

Mr. Hahn: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, how come the hon. member knows that I am replying to a grievance when he has yet to hear what I have to say?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the custom of the house, the grievances period is not reserved for one particular hon. member or one side of the house to the exclusion of others. I think the hon. member for Broadview is entitled to answer, if he so wishes, to grievances expressed by others or to state his own grievances.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, must I conclude that, according to standing orders, the hon. member is allowed to speak only if he wants to raise a grievance? That is what the standing orders say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, as is customary the debate on a grievance must be carried on till the subject has been exhausted. There is nothing in the standing orders or in precedents in the house which prevents an hon. member on the government side to speak during the debate on a particular grievance.

[Text]

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, before I was slightly rudely interrupted I had started to say that the hon. member opposite had raised as his grievance what he called the mess in transportation and in transportation policy.

The first thing I would like to state, and this is not the general gist of my remarks, is that at this stage we are essentially carrying forward policies that were in existence when we came to power. Therefore, if there is a mess, who created it?

It is not my intention to deal with the whole field of transportation policy. The hon. member opposite wears a pair of wings and is obviously some sort of junior birdman. I too have wound up a pair of rubber bands and propelled myself through space at 30 miles an hour, and so I would like to discuss the portion of his grievance that dealt with air policy.

As I deciphered and distilled his remarks on air policy, and if we cut the verbiage down by about two thirds, his first point is lack of aviation policy and, second, a lack of aviation organization. Aviation really splits itself in this country into two fundamental parts. One is the scheduled air transport carrier. The second is general aviation, which I believe is the thing the hon. member is interested in; and certainly that part of it which I am interested in is general aviation.

In 1957 the government supported by the hon. member opposite came to power. At that time we had one national air line across Canada, and general aviation composed of a relatively small group of operators who had to prove need before they could get charters. Then, when the Tory party came to power, it established two air carriers across the country. I am not going to discuss the pros and cons of that, but they also changed the regulations so that anybody could get a charter to operate a public but non-scheduled air line business.

The result a vast increase in the number of non-schedule operators. The result of that is that most of those who were in the business were rapidly going broke, and the standards of maintenance that applied to this sort of service were forced to go by the board because these people could not afford to carry them out. There was too much competition. People jumped in without any need and without adequate equipment, and before the general election of last year, when the Conservative party was still in power, anybody who subscribed to the aviation press read in it, time and time again, a plea by the aviation industry that for heaven's sake let us—

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Clancy: That is right. I have not seen him in the house for two months.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I feel it has been established by precedent over a long period that the hour for grievances is for that purpose, and not for a debate on the pros and cons of a particular subject.

These are grievances concerning the transportation problems of Canada. Surely any justification of what one government is now doing or discussion of what another government did previously should not be forthcoming from a private member, and I think we shall defeat the whole purpose of this grievance procedure if the government is allowed to have a member rise and protect its interest.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I suggest that every member of this house is equal in any debate, and the idea that because certain hon. members on this side choose to exercise their God-given right in a free assembly and a free country to speak is no excuse for hon. members on the other side trying to throttle their freedom to take part in our discussions.

Mr. Clancy: The house leader was accusing me. I was just indicating the member, that is all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Timmins rising on a point of order?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It appears to me that the reason we have a grievance procedure is to enable members of the opposition to raise grievances. Surely, if a member on the government side has a grievance to raise, if it is against a previous government it is out of order and if it is against the present government he should raise it in caucus, not in this house. Otherwise this procedure means nothing at all.

Mr. Herridge: Is the speaker a member of the house? A number of us down here do not recognize him. He is a stranger to us.

[Translation]

Mr. Habel: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that points of order should be raised as was done tonight, when one considers that during the last six years, on many occasions once the question was put, it was precisely government members who raised grievances. Therefore, I do not understand at all the attitude of the opposition tonight.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Further to this point of order, I agree with the Minister of Transport that all members have an equal right to speak. My point of order is this: The hon. member should raise a grievance in the true sense, not make comparisons between one government and another government and attempt to answer the grievance which has been raised. I do not say he has no right, as a supporter of the government, to speak.

Mr. Enns: I wish to raise a point of order, and it is this. Our procedure now seems to be moving toward a debate. If the hon. member wishes to enter the discussion let him state a grievance rather than defend the government against the charges made by my hon. friend from Yukon.

Mr. Olson: I agree almost completely with the Minister of Transport that every member of this house is equal and that, generally speaking, we all have an equal right to raise grievances during supply motions. But I have followed the remarks which the hon. member has made up to this point and it seems to me he has not raised any grievance. What he is attempting to do is substitute himself for someone on the treasury benches who has been told by the Speaker that he does not have the right to reply to these grievances. He is not, in fact, raising a grievance but he is trying to do, as it were, by the left hand what the right hand may not do in these circumstances.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word about the serious point raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I think it misconceives the whole idea of debate. Debate, if it means anything, means the presentation of both sides of a question and surely it is not being argued that the only person in the house who is allowed to present one particular side of a question is a minister of the crown and that every other person to speak during this period must speak against the government.

Surely, if an hon. member gets up and raises a grievance which any other member regards as being utterly phony it is perfectly competent for that other member to reply, and there is no reason why he should be denied the right to do so, any more than the hon. member who brought up the grievance should be denied his right to do that. If it were otherwise, the situation would be this: We would not have debate; we would have attack and no right of reply and it seems to me that to think along these lines is utterly to misconceive the purpose of our procedure. The period during which grievances may be raised is no different, in essence, from the period before the vote is taken. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) raised a grievance then, and I hope it is never argued in this house that once that grievance was made and a question of non-confidence had been raised nobody could defend the government except a member of the government. I have never heard that argument put forward before. It seems to me that the standing order and the citation from Beauchesne apply equally to the period before and after the vote is taken, and that there is no monopoly given to either side of the house in this matter; all hon. members have an equal right to deal with the subject which is brought up, provided of course that they do not introduce a new subject. As long as they do not introduce a new subject, they have a perfect right to differ from one another. I suggest this is the purpose of debate and that this doctrine that no one can deal with opposition attacks is a denial of free speech which cannot be tolerated in a free assembly.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): On this point of order and the interesting intervention by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) may I say this: the grievances which are raised at this time are grievances against the actions, or lack of action, of the government. There is only one authority which can satisfy those who raise grievances, namely, a member of the government—a spokesman for the government, for those who create government policy and take responsibility for that policy. We do not wish to hear the government's apologists. We want to hear the government itself, through its official spokesmen, and those who raise matters of grievance on this side of the house are only interested, if they have legitimate grievances, as we believe in this case we have, in hearing the government's reply, not the reply of someone who has no responsibility.

Mr. Hahn: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I do not suggest that the hon. member who has been giving the response on behalf of the government is not an expert on the subject, but he is not necessarily a person who has responsibility for the policy of the government. What we want to know when we raise grievances here is whether those who respond speak for the government or whether they only speak for the sake of speaking. We shall not be satisfied with apologists. We want to hear from those who make policy and accept responsibility for that policy. We want to hear from them and from no others.

Mr. Hahn: On a question of privilege. I believe that as a member of this house I have the same right to discuss a grievance as any other member.

An hon. Member: What is your grievance?

Mr. Hahn: As I understood it, the grievance fell into two parts. I was refuting one part so that I could deal with the second and I believe I have a right to get to the next point in my argument.

Mr. Pigeon: You have no power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would kindly resume his seat. I have heard many interesting arguments, most of them against the position which I felt should be adopted by the Chair in this regard. I have already explained my view, when the point was raised originally by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). My reading of Beauchesne and standing orders since this discussion started has not altered my view in the slightest. There is nothing at all in the precedents of this house or in the practice of this house to prevent an hon. member on the government side giving his views on a grievance, even though he is not himself expressing a grievance.

I am advised that there is a clear decision following this line by Mr. Speaker Michener. Unfortunately I do not have it before me, but I am advised that there is such a decision, which supports my ruling. I feel that in the circumstances we should allow the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn) to reply to the specific grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, before the points of order, and so on, were raised—and I hope that all these do not come out of my time, although I need very few seconds to complete my arguments—we were tied somewhere up on cloud nine discussing aviation policy. To wind that portion up, all I would like to say is that prior to the assuming of office by this government there was a great, crying need, as expressed by the operators in the industry, for a change in aviation policy. The policies that had been instituted by the previous government had not worked, had caused great economic hardship in the industry and were due for an overhaul. We are in the process now, as I understand it, of announcing new aviation policies. I recently noticed a statement by the minister indicating that class 7 were going to have to prove, temporarily, need before new charters would be issued. I think these are steps in the right direction and I think if we are patient we will see that a proper policy is brought forward.

The second point raised by the hon. member for Yukon dealt with the need or the desire to have an aviation organization. Private aviation in this country needs encouragement, and I agree with the hon. member opposite that this is a crying need. It is necessary that we have good navigational facilities across the country. We need facilities with which to land our aircraft. We need encouragement in terms of low cost operation and minimum cost facilities or private aviation cannot exist. I believe that the use of small and medium sized aircraft is a very efficient way in which to travel from one part of the country to another. It is a method of transportation that has a great economic business use as well as a private one, and I am anxious to see it encouraged. In the private segment there are private organizations. The hon. member opposite mentioned, I think, C.O.P.A., the Canadian owners and pilots association. This is largely a pressure group that collects the ideas of aviation and then tries to stop legislation that the government is bringing forward that might be detrimental. It tries to work with government. I would like to see a closer liaison here. I would like to see an organization set up and sponsored by government to which representatives of general aviation could come, so that we would have a real forum for the airing of the views of people who are interested in aviation. In this way we might create in this country a climate that is suitable for the development of this segment of aviation. So that in the sense that the hon. member opposite wished to see an organization created, that would serve as a proper forum for the development of aviation, I support that portion of his grievance. I refute the rest of the things that he said.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hahn: I will answer a brief question, but I think we should allow other hon. members to speak.

Mr. Rheaume: It is just a question on the statement made by the hon. member, who said that because of the former policy many operators were entering the business without adequate safeguards and were going broke, and so on. I wonder whether the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn) could give the house a few examples of these cases of which he is so sure.

Mr. Nielsen: Just one.

Mr. Rheaume: Yes, just one.

Mr. Hahn: I unfortunately do not have the figures here, because I did not know this debate was coming up; but if you look at the number of charters in existence in 1957, and the number of charters in existence in 1963 in the private segment, the answer is very obvious. If my memory serves me well, something like four or five times the number of operators were in business after the change in government policy in 1957 or 1958.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member perhaps did not understand my question. I am interested in whether he could give the house even a single example of an aircraft company which entered the business and did not maintain the safety rules, which is the charge he levelled, and went broke because of the policy. Can he name one single company?

Mr. Hahn: I can, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think the House of Commons is the place to mention or indicate the names of private, commercial operators who have had trouble in private business. I would be very glad to discuss this matter with the hon. member and give him the names of companies that I know.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take this opportunity to deal briefly with certain aspects of the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I would like to deal a little more specifically with not only the lack of an over-all transportation policy but also with some of the factors of the present policy, or at least the present practice, that has neither common sense nor any fairness. I would hasten to say that this is not a brand new condition that has cropped up in the last year in the tenure of office of this particular government. I recall first bringing this condition to the attention of Hon. George Hees when he was minister of transport, and then to the attention of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) when he was minister of transport. I also brought it to the attention of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) when he was minister of transport. We are now going through our fourth minister of transport. Apparently this is a very bad office for ministers, because we do not seem to get any that last too long in the job.

To give the house a proper picture of this situation I think I should give a little of the background. The constituency of Timmins consists of approximately 50 per cent French Canadian people and 50 per cent of all others put together. The area serviced by the Timmins airport also takes in part of the riding of Cochrane, which is about 70 per cent French Canadian, and parts of the ridings of Timiskaming and Nickel Belt, which are also quite heavily populated by French Canadians. It would seem that the natural link of these people would be with Montreal rather than Toronto. I would like to give the house the situation as it exists and as it has existed for some time. In fact, it has got worse instead of better. The distance by highway from Timmins to Toronto is only 12 miles different from the distance to Ottawa, but the cost of T.C.A. travel is almost double to Ottawa, and of course on to Montreal, as it is to Toronto. At the time this condition was arising we found there was a general deterioration in transportation facilities; that is, with regard to the rail service connecting this part of the country with the south and particularly the Ottawa and Montreal regions. These services have deteriorated at a very rapid rate. I recall that when I first came down here in 1957, if you were travelling to Ottawa you could get your berth in Timmins. About a year later you had to go down to Porquis Junction, and the next year you had to travel down to Englehart. Then the following year it was North Bay—and finally they took the sleepers off that train altogether. My point is that while the service on the railroad was deteriorating year after year, the cost by air was increasing rather than being reduced to compensate for the deterioration in this other form of transportation.

This situation has been greatly aggravated owing to the recent tremendous strike in the Timmins area. Last week end when I was home in my constituency I found the airport completely ringed with private planes and helicopters. Prospectors, geologists, international finance people and heaven knows who else are making use of the Timmins airport at the present time and are certainly putting great stress and strain on its facilities, even to the extent that I would say that there could quite possibly be some danger with all these planes flying around and with the limited facilities presently at the airport. In fact, if one can believe all of the stories which fly around at an excitable time like this I am given to understand that someone has staked the airport at Timmins, so that the minister had better be careful to check into this or he might find a shafthouse in the middle of the runway one of these days which I am sure would further interfere with the air traffic.

However, I do wish to stress that the present situation is completely inadequate to cope not only with the traffic using the airport but with what appears will be the traffic over the next few months and years. This is one particular aspect which should receive immediate attention.

There is another point with regard to rail transportation which again makes no sense whatsoever. I refer to the apparent agreement which has been worked out between the C.N.R. and the O.N.R. to discontinue one of the daily trains which run into Timmins. It was bad enough prior to these new developments in the Porcupine camp, but about six months ago it seemed that for the first time in possibly 20 years the C.N.R. had realized that if they want to get passengers they should do something to attract passengers. Therefore they adopted a new policy with regard to passengers on the railways.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member after the difficulties we have had in connection with the application of the rules at this particular time. I may not have understood correctly the grievance which was raised originally by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), but I did say earlier it was my understanding of his grievance that it related to air transportation. If it does, and that is my understanding, the hon. member would be out of order. If his grievance has a broader application and includes transportation in general I would then assume that the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order which Your Honour has raised, with regard to railroad transport policy in the country my specific grievance was rail line abondonment. So far as marine policy was concerned it was ferry services, merchant marine and general marine policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might just say a word, I think the hon. gentleman on the one occasion when he really defined his grievance said that it was against the lack of any national transportation policies, so I would think the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) is completely in order in what he is saying.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, that would be my opinion too, but I wanted to have the matter cleared up right at this point. I recognize, therefore, that the hon. member for Timmins is in order at this time.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I thank the house for this opportunity. The grievance was a little fuzzy at first but I thought this matter would come within its ambit. However, I will only take a few minutes to complete the grievance I am raising.

As I was saying, some six months ago a very real effort was made on the part of the C.N.R. to attract passengers. This effort had astonishing effects, and I am sure that anyone who has ridden on a train in the last few months has realized these effects, because all of a sudden rail travel has become very popular again, and to ride on a train nowadays almost takes one back to the war years when it was very difficult to find a seat aboard a train. However in spite of this tremendous increase in traffic we find that an agreement has been worked out between the C.N.R. and the O.N.R. to discontinue one of the two daily trains which are going into the Porcupine camp.

I fail to understand how there can be any common sense in this move. After years of a slowly deteriorating volume of passenger traffic all of a sudden one train is going to be discontinued at a time when traffic has increased at a tremendous rate over the last few months. Particularly in view of the recent developments in the Porcupine area I am sure that the minister will use his influence, in conjunction with the Ontario Northland Railway, or the provincial government who are in charge of that particular section of the railway at least to postpone the plans which have been made to cut off one train into the Timmins area at the end of this month. This is a problem which is very real and which has been building up over the years. It has now reached a climax with these new developments in the area. I am sure the minister will give it his closest attention and will correct the situation before it causes any more difficulty.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on this grievance for only a very few minutes. The reasons I do so is because a few days ago I related some of the background respecting the southern prairie air service. The reason I now avail myself of this opportunity is because there have been some changes during the last few days, which have not been good changes, with respect to what has happened to the deal made between TransAir and Trans-Canada Air Lines.

As I pointed out a few days ago, an application was made by Trans-Canada Air Lines in November 1962 to be relieved of the obligation to provide an air service on the southern prairie air run. They were granted the right to withdraw from this service and a number of air lines from western Canada applied to the air transport board for the franchise. However, at that time the Department of Transport did not indicate that any subsidies would be available to any of the applicants in providing this service on the southern prairie air run. TransAir was granted the franchise to provide a service from Winnipeg to Brandon to Dauphin to Yorkton and into Regina, and also from Regina to Swift Current to Medicine Hat and into Calgary.

Several months after the franchise was granted to TransAir, on the basis of a submission which they made at the air transport board hearings in Regina, Trans-Canada Air Lines gave TransAir $500,000 worth of aircraft and airline equipment, such as communication facilities, etc., provided that they would maintain a reasonably good service, or the service they were required to set up, for a period of three years.

My grievance this evening is that TransAir in fact discontinued the service on a large part of the southern prairie air run before one full year of operation, and as far as I know they are retaining this $500,000 of equipment, which includes one Viscount aircraft, two DC-3 aircraft and a multitude of other pieces of airport and communications equipment. According to a Canadian Press report dated Winnipeg, April 10, this appears:

> TransAir Limited said today a United States group has bought into the Winnipeg-based air line. A spokesman said two Minneapolis businessmen have been added to the board of directors to represent the American group.

It seems to me that we have to ask the Minister of Transport to look very deeply into this matter. Apparently the balance sheet of TransAir for the past year has been attractive enough to induce certain United States interests to buy into that company. This has happened in spite of the fact they claimed they lost so much money they were justified in withdrawing from the service they undertook to provide in the southern prairies. In fact, according to information that was provided at the hearings, TransAir lost $114,000 during the period from April 1963 to January 11, 1964 when they suspended the service they had undertaken to provide. I am not sure of the exact starting date, but it was April, 1963 and the final date was January 11, 1964. The company claimed it lost $114,000 during that period. If that is so, then they have profited from this deal with Trans-Canada Air Lines to the tune of something like $386,000 in ten months.

We have an obligation to see that TransAir does not get away with this amount of public property. I will not accept the contention that has been put forward by more than one minister of transport that the dealings of Trans-Canada Air Lines with other corporations are really beyond the sphere of the minister's activities. This is public property. The people of Canada, through the federal government, own all the shares in Trans-Canada Air Lines. Mr. McGregor, the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines, has absolutely no right to give away half a million dollars worth of the assets of this country.

I do not want to take any more time because one or two other members may wish to speak on this subject. In closing, I want to say to the Minister of Transport that we have no intention of allowing TransAir to get away with this. We find ourselves in a position where there is now no air line service at all for the southern part of the prairies. While we accept the minister's statement that his department is studying the matter of feeder lines, and perhaps this is something to which he cannot find an answer quickly, we still believe there is some kind of policy that should be enunciated very quickly, because there are airports in this part of the country and there is a need for freight service to transport greenhouse products and other things that require fast transport. I believe it should be part of the government's general transportation policy to have Trans-Canada provide these regional and feeder services in all parts of Canada, including the southern prairies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the house for a moment to put on the record a statement by Mr. Speaker Michener to which I referred a moment ago when rendering judgment in connection with a point of order discussed by a number of hon. members. I am quoting from Hansard for May 3, 1960, page 3528:

> The practice in dealing with grievances after the amendments have been disposed of has been to speak to one grievance at a time, and I would not deny any member in the house the right to speak to the matter before the house. In recognizing an hon. member I do not know whether he is going to speak for or against the proposition. However, if he keeps on the same subject it seems to me he is within the rules and that a member who disagrees with the point of view raised by a member speaking to a grievance is just as much entitled to speak as any member who wants to support a grievance.

This was the point of view which I expressed a moment ago and this is the quotation to which I had reference.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to participate in this debate briefly this evening since the problems created by a lack of transportation facilities have been of major concern to Nova Scotia for many years. Due to Nova Scotia's slow but certain economic growth, these problems have been further aggravated in recent years and it is now evident that further steps must be taken to provide additional transportation links for our expanding fishing industry, secondary manufacturing industry and our tourist industry.

My grievance tonight, therefore, deals with marine transportation problems which face our genial minister who represents one of the maritime constituencies. As many of you are aware, Nova Scotia is almost an island. When the Chignecto canal and power complex is built, we will be actually surrounded by water. However, despite our geographical handicaps, Nova Scotia is going forward.

In 1963 the province's crown corporation negotiated the establishment of 11 new industries, three of which were from outside Canada. Our province became the first one on the continent to produce European motor vehicles when Volvo of Sweden announced its decision to locate an assembly plant at Dartmouth; a British company chose Truro as its home for a new carpet manufacturing plant and the Canada Cement Company began construction of a new plant at Brookfield near Truro. We have a heavy water plant to be built near Glace Bay and new fish processing plants are under way at Lunenburg and Canso. Mineral explorations have been intensified and there has been an increasing awareness of the annual value of between $75 million and $100 million of the province's forest resources. All these projects represent additions to our regional capacity in the primary and secondary industries, but despite this progress we still have a high unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces which indicate we cannot rest on our oars, and still more must be done if we are to reach the level of prosperity enjoyed by other parts of Canada.

Two things in my opinion must be done to bring this about. First, an immense effort is necessary on the part of industry in cooperation with our provincial and federal governments if our economic lag is to be overcome. Only money, huge amounts of investment capital, can do this. Massive investments over the next decade is the prime requirement. Of course, money alone is not enough. Many human qualities must be added, qualities of judgment, industry, ambition and enterprise. We have these qualities to a great degree in our people but they cannot succeed without investment capital. Here is where the federal government can enter the picture, by improving the transportation needs of our provinces.

We need a second ferry between Nova Scotia and New England to bring us closer to the vast market to the south of us. There is every economic justification for this second ferry at the present time. Here we are in Nova Scotia with average incomes lower by one third than those of the rest of Canada, with double the unemployment and half the capital investment per capita for the remainder of Canada. We have a growing labour force and everywhere mechanization tends to reduce the number of jobs available. In order to substantiate my remarks I need only quote from a recent editorial under date of April 20 in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

Figures released last week by the department of labour and the dominion bureau of statistics show that unemployment during March represented 6.8 per cent of the labour force, compared with 8.4 per cent a year earlier and 8.7 per cent in March of 1962—

This is the national picture. What of the regional story? When the over-all statistics are broken down, a different tale is told—

But on the negative side, Quebec had unemployment of 8.9 per cent during March while a full 13 per cent of the labour force in the Atlantic provinces was jobless. And while these figures represent a considerable improvement over March, 1963, when the unemployment rates were 11 per cent in Quebec and 15.3 per cent in this region, they are still too high to be tolerated.

It is perhaps significant that the rate of 13 per cent in the Atlantic provinces is almost the same as that prevailing in that area of the United States which has come to be known as Appalachia, and which is a focal point of President Johnson's "war on poverty".

The despondency which has infected the Appalachian mountain region is not present here; quite the opposite. A new air of optimism permeates Atlantic Canada. Where once we looked ahead with unrelieved despair, there is now a faith in the future.

But the fact that things are getting better, and will continue to do so, must not blind us to the realization that we still have a long way to go to reach the level of prosperity of the rest of the country.

This then, Mr. Speaker, is the challenge. The next question is—

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did the hon. gentleman understand that we were discussing the lack of a transportation policy or did he think the grievance had to do with employment?

Mr. Crouse: I was laying the groundwork. I should possibly explain, Mr. Speaker, that for 22 years we in Nova Scotia lived under a Liberal government and our economic growth during that period was very slow. Our biggest export was brains. We sent them to Upper Canada and to the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was a form of transport.

Mr. Crouse: That was a form of transport. But since 1956 the province made progress under a Conservative government, and I wanted to lay the groundwork to show the minister the progress being made in Nova Scotia and the need to have further transportation links between our province and the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not for the kind of transportation the hon. gentleman is suggesting though.

Mr. Crouse: To substantiate my remarks further I should like to quote from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of April 20. The article is headed, "Extra Trip For M.V. Bluenose", and reads as follows:

In order to accommodate the many truck transports bound for the U.S. the M.V. Bluenose made an extra trip to Bar Harbor Sunday. The ferry's truck deck will take 17 large vehicles and port agent K. M. Beazley said besides the load taken over Sunday there were already 14 on the list for Monday when the ship resumes its normal run. Lobster and fresh fish was the main cargo.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a definite need for a second ferry. This article will give the house some idea of the value of the present ferry, Bluenose, to our secondary industries, especially our expanding fishing industry. While it is true that the ferry now in existence operates at a small deficit yearly, I believe the expanding fishing industry will eventually take care of the deficit by reason of the increased amount of freight shipped to the United States.

I know the government is interested in assisting the Atlantic provinces and, having pointed out the value of the existing service, I cannot help but wonder what would happen to our fresh fish industry if the present ferry broke down and became inoperative over an extended period. If this happened during July and August it would spell disaster for literally hundreds of Nova Scotians who are dependant upon the tourist industry for a livelihood. Ten years ago the tourist industry was not considered a vital economic factor in Nova Scotia but today it is big business, with the number of persons visiting our province almost double the figure of 1953. Last year over 700,000 tourists visited the province leaving revenue there of some $55 million.

We are not the only ones interested in the provision of a second ferry. The city fathers of Gloucester, Massachusetts, have been eagerly campaigning for a number of years for a second ferry. They have prepared a brief. I will not read it into the record because of the late hour but among other things it indicates that the area surrounding Gloucester, that is, Boston and New York, has a population of approximately 30 million to 35 million people and this vast area could be tapped if a second ferry was in service between the province of Nova Scotia and the New England states.

The Nova Scotia government is vitally interested in this matter. The provincial department of trade and industry in June of 1963 made a formal submission to the federal government for additional ferry service between western Nova Scotia and New England. Specifically, the proposal advanced was for a second vessel to supplement the service now being provided. In support of this proposal a traffic study was presented to the minister. I cannot help but wonder what happened to this proposal. We have heard nothing from the minister and nothing from the government regarding the action they propose taking.

[Mr. Crouse.]

In view of the interest in this matter and the benefits that would accrue to Nova Scotia I sincerely hope that the government will take steps in the near future to strengthen the transportation link between our province and New England through the provision of a second ferry.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in three minutes, which seems to be the new magic time given to ministers to reply, it will be very difficult for me to reply to the many and detailed specific grievances set out by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), most of whose speech, I thought, was in the air. But there have been one or two serious points raised by some other hon. members about which I will attempt to say a word or two.

I am a little surprised that the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) did not mention the fact that his distinguished predecessor was largely responsible for the Bluenose which he praised so highly. We are very proud of that and we only wish that the hon. member was able to be proud of a second ferry that he had been able to get in the six years when he supported a government that did nothing about the problem. It is a problem and it is getting a lot more attention than it got under the previous government. As soon as a conclusion is reached as a result of the studies that are being carried on at the present time it will be announced to the house.

With respect to the problem at Timmins there is no doubt that if things develop in Timmins in the way that seems likely to happen now the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) was not exaggerating in any way in what he said, and I intend to see that everything that can be done is done as quickly as possible to meet this problem which has suddenly come upon us.

The hon. member for Yukon talked about the haphazard policy of rail abandonment. There have been no railway lines abandoned in western Canada, of course, because there is a moratorium on the abandonment of railway lines which was established by the previous government, and although the hon. gentleman did not seem to be aware of what was going on it is still in effect.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: It will continue in effect until new legislation is adopted and until an orderly method of dealing with these problems is set up under an authority which I hope parliament will authorize which will be under my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), and which will ensure that no lines are abandoned that are essential either on economic or social grounds. That is the position.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Despite the demands that I speak of, hon. gentlemen do not seem to want my answers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 (f) of standing order 56, to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith the question on the motion now before the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including payment of remuneration, subject to the approval of the governor in council and notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, in connection with the assignment by the Canadian government of Canadians to the staffs of the international organizations detailed in the estimates (part recoverable from those organizations) and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amounts of the shares of those organizations of such expenses, and authority, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, for the appointment and fixing of salaries of commissioners (international commissions for supervision and control in Indo-China), secretaries and staff by the governor in council; official hospitality; relief and repatriation of distressed Canadian citizens abroad and their dependents and reimbursement of the United Kingdom for relief expenditures incurred by its diplomatic and consular posts on Canadian account (part recoverable); Canadian representation at international conferences; expenses of the third commonwealth education conference; a cultural relations and academic exchange program with the French community, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $10,826,300.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including federal share of the expenses of the secretariat for the Canadian council of resource ministers and $120,000 for grants for northern research and for northern scientific research expeditions, $1,591,500.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $1,130,500.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates; the expenses of the international labour conferences; the promotion of labour-management co-operation; the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker; the promotion of a program for combating seasonal unemployment; the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries; and the manpower consultative service, $4,243,100.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $12,114,500.

Proceedings reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion.)

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, do the new rules permit a question with regard to the business of the house? Although I might be very much interested in the half hour debate, on the other hand I might wish to leave when the ministers get up to speak.

Mr. Speaker: The broadest interpretation of the answer to that question is yes, either now or at the end of the half hour.

Mr. Churchill: Then may I ask the house leader what is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I understand any time I may take will not be taken off the adjournment debate period, but I will be very brief. Tomorrow we hope to be able to finish the debate in committee on the electoral boundaries bill, and tomorrow evening I hope to be able to announce the business of the house for quite a few days ahead.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CYPRUS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for being present in the house to answer the important question I put to him on the orders of the day and which Your Honour did not accept on the grounds that it was not urgent.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has sent 1,150 men to Cyprus for a three month period on a peace keeping mission. That period will expire on June 27. I should like the minister to tell me if the government intends to ask the house to extend the term of the Canadian forces in Cyprus, should circumstances warrant it.

What astonishes me, Mr. Speaker, is that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed to send a Canadian peacekeeping force in Cyprus, under the control of the United Nations, he did not insist that the expenses of the Canadian force in Cyprus be borne by the United Nations, that is by all member countries of the United Nations.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the authority of the United Nations has been destroyed when Canada was allowed to support alone the costs resulting from the posting of a Canadian peace keeping force. The United Nations must exercise a joint action and not a unilateral one. It seems to me that such a situation jeopardizes the future of the United Nations, because it creates a precedent which compels a country to spend large sums of money to restore peace in that part of the world while member countries of that international organization refuse to accept their responsibilities by sharing those expenses.

[Text]

Mr. Moreau: Yould the hon. member permit a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to make a speech, he will have the opportunity to do so when we discuss the external affairs estimates—

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Pigeon: If it is refused, he will have the opportunity to discuss it after ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why the Canadian government, or the United Nations, did not demand from Archbishop Makarios, before sending Canadian forces, or others, to Cyprus, that Turkish or Greek Cypriots be disarmed.

At this time, the Cypriots, whether Turkish or Greek, are armed and killing each other; every day we read in the papers that some accidents have happened.

I wonder why the Canadian government has not, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asked the secretary general of the United Nations to demand from Archbishop Makarios, that the United Nations forces have the privilege and the responsibility to disarm Cypriots, whether Turkish or Greek.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has done more than its share to help the United Nations. Not only do we pay our share as a member country, but we also have to pay considerable amounts for those countries, which refuse to meet their obligations. Those countries, Mr. Speaker, have the same voting right as those who honour their responsibilities. To my mind, such a situation is abnormal and the existence of the United Nations is endangered if its member countries refuse to do their duty from a financial point of view.

At the next general assembly of the United Nations, the Secretary of State for External Affairs should be firm and even make a speech to the effect that, if necessary, Canada would withdraw from the United Nations, if the member countries refused to honour their financial obligations.

The Canadian government authorized the Canadian force to stay in Cyprus until June 27, but some people suggest that it will have to stay there for three years because the conflict will not be settled.

Furthermore, until the next sitting of the United Nations, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) will be able to ask the member countries of that organization to share the expenses of the Canadian force in Cyprus, the Canadian government will spend over $8 million, because the next UN sitting scheduled for September, will be postponed until the American election, that is in November.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, Canada—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

Mr. Pigeon: May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I give the floor to the hon. member for Cumberland.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: No question of privilege can be allowed at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: You do not know my question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: There can be no question of privilege.

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. gentleman has anything to say, let him stand up.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to resume his seat. We are limited as to time.

CANADIAN FLAG—PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION BEFORE ADOPTION OF NEW DESIGN

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): This afternoon I directed a question to the Prime Minister. In effect I asked him to assure this house that before a new flag design was adopted by the government it would be submitted to parliament for consideration and approval, should parliament desire to give such approval. I regret very much that the Prime Minister has not found it possible to be in his seat tonight to listen to my explanation of why I feel such an assurance is necessary.

The reason for my question is that I know of no explanation given to date in which the Prime Minister or the government has given an unequivocal assurance that the new flag design which they propose to provide to the Canadian people, which is to be representative of our history and traditions, will be submitted to parliament for its approval. I should like to quote from page 2279 of Hansard of April 17, where the Prime Minister is reported as having said:

> As to what is going on in connection with this matter—

He was referring to the flag:

> —that will be announced to the house when a decision has been taken and the house will be asked to take its responsibility in this matter as the government must take its responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you, what could that mean? It could mean almost anything to anyone who might read it, but in effect it means nothing to everyone. I would like an assurance from the Prime Minister in this regard. It only takes a yes or no; it is very simple.

Mr. Nesbitt: You will never get it out of him.

Mr. Coates: I agree with you. We want to know what is this new flag design which they hope will appease certain groups in this country who apparently do not appreciate all the things that the red ensign represents in this great Canadian nation of ours. They want to force upon the Canadian public a flag which represents nothing to everyone. All I have asked the Prime Minister to do is provide us with the assurance that we will have something to say about this flag and its design whenever it is produced. That is a very simple statement for the Prime Minister to give to the people he is supposed to represent about a question as important as this.

There are Canadians writing me from all across this country who are terribly concerned about what this government intends to do with our flag. I am most anxious that they should have the assurance that this new design which is proposed will be placed before this house, so that their representatives can say how they feel about the flag we now fly, the flag that flies from our peace tower. I would like to know which representatives of the Canadian people sitting in this House of Commons are prepared to stand on their feet and vote the red ensign out of existence. I am as interested in that as anything going on and being proposed by this government at the present time.

To date we are without this assurance. We need, and must demand, this assurance. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who is the senior government official sitting in the front benches this evening, to stand in his place when I resume my seat and inform this house that we have no need to be concerned about this, and that the flag design which they propose will be brought before the house and we will be given an opportunity to speak on it and to vote on it. This assurance should be given to the 100,000 people who have already indicated that they wish to have the red ensign continue as our national flag. A million people or more will indicate that to this government before two years in office are up. They will have the assurance that their representatives in Ottawa will be able to say what they wish about our flag, about our heritage, about our tradition and about the fact that the red ensign will continue to fly from the peace tower of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat.

Mr. Clancy: O.K., you decide it.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as most hon. members know, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is unavoidably absent from the house tonight. He is acting as host at a state dinner for the prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago, and therefore he has asked me to reply to this question from the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates).

This question, or questions similar to it, has been asked on many occasions and I think the answer has been very clear and quite categorical. It has been to this effect, that within two years of the government taking office it will submit to parliament a design for a flag which cannot be mistaken for the flag of any other country. This should not come as any surprise because, for example, in the campaign literature of 1962, referring to a document headed "The Liberal program, general election, 1962", the following statement appears at page 21:

> Within two years of taking office a new Liberal government will submit to parliament a design for a flag which cannot be mistaken for the emblem of any other country. When adopted this will be the flag of Canada. "O Canada" will be proclaimed as our official anthem.

Mr. Pigeon: We want action.

Mr. Dupuis: What did you do for six years?

Mr. Davis: The position of the government on the procedure for the adoption of a flag so far as this concerns parliament is also perfectly straightforward. The government makes a recommendation to parliament in an appropriate form and parliament, representing all the people of Canada, accepts or rejects that recommendation. The Prime Minister has said this more than once. On February 24 of this year, for example, in answer to a question in this house he said that parliament should certainly be put in a position to decide for or against a particular flag. I believe that that specifically answers the question put by the member for Cumberland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No further questions are allowed at this time under the provisional standing order 39-A. I now give the floor to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who will discuss the question of raising the pensions of superannuated civil servants in accordance with the increase in the cost of living index.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I asked my question on the orders of the day this afternoon on behalf of superannuated civil servants I did so on the basis of one sentence which appears at page 2389 of yesterday's Hansard. At that point there is recorded in Hansard the Prime Minister's telegram of April 16 to the premiers of the provinces concerning the revised Canada pension plan. One of the additions to the Canada pension plan in its new form, and a welcome addition, is spelled out in this sentence:

> Benefits in payment would be adjusted to changes in the cost of living, subject to a maximum increase of 2 per cent in any year.

My question therefore this afternoon, and my question tonight is quite straightforward. In view of the fact that the government has now accepted the principle that pensions that have been put in payment should subsequently be increased if the cost of living goes up, will the government apply this principle to its own superannuated civil servants? As the government knows, this is a question I have raised in this house a good many times during the past two decades. The answers have a certain monotony about them. The answer generally is that the matter is under consideration. On March 6 of this year the Minister of Finance put it this way:

> As I have said on other occasions, the matter is under consideration all the time.

A few days ago I asked the Prime Minister if he had received a letter from the federal superannuates national association asking for legislation in this session to amend the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act. The Prime Minister replied that he thought he had received this letter, and he said that the matter would be given consideration and that a report would be made to the house as soon as possible. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of answer has been made month in and month out for a great many years.

The only time there has ever been any increase in the pensions of civil servants already retired was during the regime of the last Conservative government which put on the statute books the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act. The Liberals in their previous incarnation, and the Liberals in this incarnation, have never done anything to improve the pensions of civil servants already retired. They have improved the civil service pension legislation for persons still employed, and they have made other pension improvements. However, so far as civil servants already retired are concerned, there has been nothing done for them.

We have been told to wait for the Canada pension plan. We are glad to see it being improved. We know, however, that the Canada pension plan, even in its best form, will not provide any increase in the pensions of persons already retired. This goes for superannuated civil servants, because no provision has yet been made for these people.

Will the government, having now accepted the principle that pensions that have been started should subsequently be increased if the cost of living goes up, be consistent? When is the government going to play fair with these retired civil servants? When is it going to quit asking these people to wait and wait? When is it going to apply this principle and increase the pensions of retired civil servants, which it can do by amending the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act or in any other way it deems fit?

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): First of all, I should like to apologize to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on behalf of the Minister of Finance, who is at a dinner in honour of the prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago.

The government reviews from time to time the question of whether any special action needs to be taken to revise the pensions being paid to superannuated civil servants. It will be recalled that some increases were authorized under an appropriation act in 1958 and under the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act of 1959. These were not an integral part of the superannuation plan and were not a contractual obligation of the government to its employees or former employees as are benefits payable under the Superannuation Act.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to be congratulated for raising this question so quickly after the Prime Minister's announcement concerning the Canada pension plan.

It will be realized that retired civil servants, as others, have benefited from the several increases in the old age security pension that have been made in recent years. This has to be taken into account in considering the effect on their pension position of the increases in the cost of living in the past decade. In the short space of time available tonight I cannot give a full analysis of the situation. I can say, however, that the government has had no opportunity to consider the situation with respect to retired civil servants in view of the proposed Canada pension plan legislation.

I should add that the acceptance of the principle of adjustment for the pensions to be payable under a general pension plan for all Canadians does not necessarily imply that the same principle will be applied in respect of other benefits paid by the government of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: It ought to.

Mr. Benson: In particular, it cannot be held as necessarily implying that the benefits paid under the superannuation act, which are broadly speaking much more generous than the pensions received by most retired employees in Canada, will be adjusted in this way when those retired under other pension plans cannot anticipate any such comparable adjustment. When the Canada pension plan is passed by this parliament and one can appraise the situation of those who will come under it, the situation of retired civil servants will be reviewed again and we will see whether a legitimate case can be made on the grounds I have mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the provisions of standing order 39A this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Pigeon: Can we have extended time to permit the Secretary of State for External Affairs to reply to my question?

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 22, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—CRITICISM OF PUBLIC SERVANTS BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My point of privilege is based on the fact that in my opinion certain statements made by one H. L. Keenleyside in the press are a challenge to the ancient rights and privileges of members of parliament. When Mr. Keenleyside was giving evidence before the external affairs committee on the Columbia river treaty, he stated in his closing remarks as follows:

> I believe I am justified in objecting most strongly to the sneering attacks that have been made on these senior officials and highly competent technical advisers, attacks which are, in my opinion, as unjust in substance and as deplorable in taste as they are constitutionally improper.

My question of privilege is based on a letter appearing in the Ottawa Citizen on Tuesday, April 21, 1964, written by one H. L. Keenleyside and entitled "Attacks on public servants in the house are deplored", in which he restated at much greater length the substance of the statement made before the external affairs committee.

It is obvious that H. L. Keenleyside's remarks are directed at me. That is of little consequence to me, as I am quite capable of defending myself against such a charge. However, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and in the opinion of a good number of other members, this is a challenge to the rights of all members of this house, and I feel duty bound to bring it to the attention of the house.

Now, I understand that in rising on a question of privilege it is proper for a member to state his point of privilege. I have done that. Then the member must produce prima facie evidence to support his point of privilege, and I shall do that. Then it is customary for the member to move a motion. Therefore I now proceed to produce my evidence in support of my point of privilege, which is based on Dr. H. L. Keenleyside's letter in the Ottawa Citizen of April 21, 1964.

The questions at issue, Mr. Speaker, are first, whether a member of the Commons may freely and constitutionally comment, in the house or in a committee thereof, on the conduct of any person in the public service in so far as that conduct relates to such person's official duties. Second, whether any person may criticize a member for so commenting and not be in contempt of the house. The answers to these questions are fully contained in certain resolutions unanimously confirmed by the United Kingdom House of Commons on February 26, 1701. The relevant extract from the orders of the House of Commons, second edition, 1756, is as follows:

> Colonel Granvil reported from the committee of the whole house, to consider further of the rights, liberties, and privileges of the House of Commons, that they had come to several resolutions, which they had directed him to report, when the house will please to receive the same.
> The report ordered to be read immediately, and he reported, viz.
> First, resolved, that it is the opinion of this committee, that to assert that the House of Commons is not the only representative of the Commons of England, tends to the subversion of the rights and privileges of the House of Commons, and the fundamental constitution of the government of this kingdom.
> Second, resolved, that it is the opinion of this committee, that to assert, that the House of Commons have no power of commitment, but of their own members, tends to the subversion of the constitution of the House of Commons.
> Third, resolved, that it is the opinion of this committee, that to print or publish any books or libels reflecting on the proceedings of the House of Commons, or any member thereof, for, or relating to, his service therein, is a high violation of the rights and privileges of the House of Commons.
> Fourth, resolved, that it is, and ever hath been the undoubted right of the subjects of England, to petition the King for the calling and sitting of parliaments, and redressing of grievances. That to traduce such petitioning, as a violation of duty, and to represent it to his Majesty, as seditious and tumultuous, is to betray the liberty of the subject, and contributes to the designs of subverting the ancient legal constitution of this kingdom, and introducing arbitrary power.
> Fifth, resolved, that it is the opinion of this committee, that it is the undoubted right of every subject of England, under any accusation, either by impeachment or otherwise, to be brought to a speedy trial, in order to be acquitted or condemned.
> The said resolutions being severally read a second time, were, upon the question severally put thereupon, agreed to by the house.

Under the protection of the privileges, Mr. Speaker, a member can properly criticize a member of the public service in the performance of his public duties and is protected when he does so. Further, upon a criticism made, the House of Commons had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the charge so made and to administer punishment upon conviction.

A complaint is made under the fourth resolution as a grievance. This right is that of every subject. The grievance can originate with the member himself in his capacity as a subject or, under the first resolution, as a representative of the commoners or subjects of England. Under the fifth resolution, the subject so accused is entitled to a speedy trial —by the house if it assumes jurisdiction—to be acquitted or condemned. And, if condemned, then under the second resolution he can be committed by the house to prison although he is not a member of the house.

I am not going to read at length from the very interesting precedent here, but there is another interesting precedent to be found in Gray's debates of the House of Commons for 1667 to 1694, volume VI, at page 153. Now, Mr. Speaker, this precedent I have just referred to illustrates the constitutional position. Every citizen, member of the house or not, by petition under our standing order 70, or orally by or through a member in a proper proceeding, as on supply, can charge a crown employee before the house with misconduct or negligence in office. The house may investigate the charge, adjudicate the charge, and acquit or condemn the employee.

In 1964 the constitutional position is the same in the Canadian House of Commons as it was in England in 1701. Certain of these privileges have been delegated but can be repossessed at any time by parliamentary action.

The present day procedural position is that by section 18 of the British North America Act and section 4 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, this House of Commons and the members thereof have the privileges of the United Kingdom House of Commons as of 1867. These privileges can be cut down, varied, but not increased by Canadian statute. Two Canadian statutes vary the privileges of the house as to investigation, adjudication and consequent acquittal or condemnation. The criminal aspects of abuse of office are not here dealt with. The two statutes are an act respecting public and department inquiries, 1952 revised statutes, chapter 154, and the Civil Service Act, 1960-61 acts, chapter 57.

Section 6 of the Inquiries Act provides:

> The minister presiding over any department of the civil service of Canada may appoint at any time, under the authority of the governor in council, a commissioner or commissioners to investigate and report upon the state—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Herridge:

> —and management of the business, or any part of the business—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I very much appreciate the endeavour of the hon. member to assist the Chair, especially when the matter is so fundamental, or appears to be so fundamental, but the hon. member is almost arguing his case. I think he should leave a little discretion to the Chair, and the Chair is quite capable of doing some research itself. If the hon. member cares to send me a note of these authorities it would, of course, be very much appreciated, but could I suggest at this stage that he state his question of privilege so that we may get on with the business before the house.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was just trying to be helpful. I have a number of precedents here which have been given to me as evidence of what has happened in the House of Commons with respect to previous cases. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall send you the complete text of my argument and, in conclusion, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena:

> That this house reaffirms the constitutional practice and validity of the privilege, right and obligation of its members to fully discuss or debate the actions or statements of any public servant of Canada, where, in the discretion of any member of this house, such a course is determined by such member which constitutional privilege and obligation has been established over centuries of British parliamentary custom.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that on a matter which appears to be so important and so fundamental he would not expect to get an off-hand opinion from the Chair. Therefore, with the consent of the house, I would like to take this matter into consideration and bring in a decision later.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, are you accepting my motion?

Mr. Speaker: Not before I have had a chance to consider your authorities thoroughly.

Mr. Herridge: You are not ruling it out, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No, I simply said the Chair needed time to study the voluminous authorities cited by the hon. member for Kootenay West and would bring in a decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Herridge: I judge, Mr. Speaker, that will be by tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is only human, like the hon. member, and it might even be longer.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of the house I should like to give notice of the fact that the report of the royal commission on banking and finance will be made public late Friday afternoon, April 24. Copies will be made available for sale to the public from 5.30 Friday at all retail outlets of the queen's printer. Arrangements are being made for these stores to remain open until 7 p.m., eastern standard time, that evening.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that by order in council P.C. 1964-556 of April 22, by-elections will be held to fill the vacancies in the two federal constituencies of Nipissing, Ontario, and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, on June 22, 1964.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ALBERTA VETERANS HOSPITALS

Question No. 336—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has the province of Alberta made any proposals to the government of Canada to integrate veterans hospitals, pavilions, domiciliary care institutions in Alberta into that province's hospital plan and, if so, as indicated in the Edmonton Journal of Wednesday, March 4, what are the full terms of such proposals?

2. After study of the said proposals, have any counter proposals been made and, if so, what is the nature of any such counter proposals?

3. If any decision with respect to such proposals has been reached, what is the nature of such decision and, if not, when is it expected that such decision will be reached?

4. Do the above proposals include the re-sale to the province of Alberta of the Government House site in Edmonton and, at what price and under what conditions?

Mr. Teillet: 1. The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part of the question is that such information is contained in a confidential letter and can only be provided properly by the province of Alberta.

2. These proposals are currently under study.

3. No decision has yet been reached in this matter. When such a decision is reached, it will be made fully known to the house.

4. Yes, see second part of 1, above.

EXPENDITURES, POINTE BLEUE INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 377—Mr. Gauthier:

1. What expenditures were made by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in the year 1961-62 for the Pointe Bleue agency on (a) operation (b) maintenance (c) work on other than federal property?

2. For the same year, what expenditures were made for the welfare of Indians at Pointe Bleue chargeable to (a) operations (b) maintenance?

3. What expenditures have been made for the improvement of the economic status of Indians at Pointe Bleue chargeable to (a) operation (b) maintenance?

4. What expenditures have been made on the education of Indians at Pointe Bleue, chargeable to (a) administration (b) operation (c) maintenance?

5. How much does the Pointe Bleue reserve cost the federal government annually?

Mr. Badanai: Hereunder is a report showing the branch expenditures at Pointe Bleue agency for the fiscal year 1961-62:

(a) Operation and maintenance of buildings and works	$ 56,241.37
(b) Construction of buildings and works,	45,366.12

Total	$1,093,446.44

NEW FARE PROGRAM ON C.N.R.

Question No. 388—Mr. Peters:

1. On the Canadian National Railway, what percentage increase in passenger service resulted from the new fare program currently known as the red, white and blue plan?

2. What percentage increase has resulted in each area?

3. What extra costs are necessary to handle the increased passenger traffic?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises that it is not possible to answer the question categorically in the form asked. The following information is supplied:

The first test of the red, white and blue fare plan was carried out on lines east of Montreal to the maritimes, commencing May 1, 1962. The reaction to the fare changes was very encouraging and significant increases in traffic and revenues were achieved in 1962 compared with the previous year, despite less passenger train miles being operated in 1962 than in 1961.

On May 1, 1963, some slight revisions were made to the original plan as a result of experience and the fares were extended indefinitely in the maritime territory; at the same time they were offered in Newfoundland. On June 23, 1963, the new rates were introduced between Toronto and North Bay and in conjunction with the Ontario Northland Railway to points in northern Ontario. The new fare system was brought into effect on the transcontinental route, on local services in western Canada and in southwestern Ontario, effective October 27, 1963.

As shown in the 1963 annual report, the downward trends in traffic and revenues of recent years were halted in 1962 and reversed in 1963. During 1963 the total number of revenue passengers carried increased 9.3 per cent from 12.4 million to 13.6 million. The number of passengers carried one mile, or revenue passenger miles, increased by 13.9 per cent from 1.0 billion to 1.2 billion. Total rail revenue derived from the transportation of passengers (fare, accommodation, meals and miscellaneous) increased by almost $1,000,000 from 1961 to 1963, a two year period when total passenger train miles operated were decreased by slightly in excess of 13 per cent.

By and large, increases in traffic and in revenues have occurred whenever and wherever the new fares have been introduced. They have also increased traffic in adjoining or non-red, white and blue territories by encouraging through or connecting traffic.

The level of charges under red, white and blue is such as to encourage the largest increase in passenger travel, relative to the cost of providing the service. The relation of revenues to expenses of operation is expected to be more favourable under this fare plan than under others.

Detailed results obtaining in any given territory and other similar data have not been released publicly, for competitive reasons.

APPEARANCES OF MARCEL CHAPUT ON C.B.C.

Question No. 389—Mr. Matheson:

1. On what date or dates was Marcel Chaput, the author of "Why I am a separatist" a guest of C.B.C. radio or television and in each case for what length of time?
2. What radio or television stations carried such broadcasts and where are they situated?
3. What was the purpose of the C.B.C. in extending this radio or television time to Chaput?

SLEEPING CAR SERVICE, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 453—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have discussions been held with the C.N.R. relative to restoring sleeping car service to and from Charlottetown at least during centennial year 1964?

2. What has been the outcome of any such discussions?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1 and 2. No. However, the question of train service to and from Prince Edward Island has been given special attention, particularly in view of the centennial celebrations this year. Consideration is currently being given to improvements in available transportation services which would benefit the majority of rail travellers to and from Prince Edward Island.

BROADCASTS TO STRENGTHEN NATIONAL UNITY

Question No. 456—Mr. Matheson:

1. What C.B.C. radio or television programs were produced in 1963 designed to foster and strengthen national unity?

2. What radio or television stations carried such broadcasts and where are they situated?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The attached list is representative of programs of various types presented during 1963 on C.B.C. radio and television which had in their content many of the elements that would contribute to the fostering and strengthening of national unity.

2. In addition to C.B.C. stations, these programs were also available to the affiliated private stations of the C.B.C. radio and/or television networks. It would be necessary to examine each station log, for each occasion, to determine whether or not a particular program was transmitted.

Questions

ACCESS ROADS CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Question No. 616—Mr. Stefanson:

1. What is the total value of roads constructed under the forest access roads construction program and what is the federal government's share to date?

2. What are the figures for each province, giving total mileage of roads, total cost and federal government's share of cost?

3. Does the federal government share in the cost of maintenance of these roads, if so, what has been their share listed by provinces?

4. During the 1964-65 fiscal year what roads are planned under this program, listing by provinces, with estimated cost of same?

Answer: 1. The total cost of forest access road construction carried out to date is approximately $31,197,000 and the federal government contribution is $15,289,287.

2. The following table shows for each province the approximate mileage of right of way clearing, grade construction, gravelling, total cost of the work, and the federal share.

Progress and cost of forest access road construction

Province	Clearing	Grading	Gravelling	Cost ($) Total	Federal Share
British Columbia	456	434	240	8,333,701	4,115,944
Alberta	726	435	194	3,607,167	1,770,826
Saskatchewan	410	198	83	2,146,153	1,057,855
Manitoba	401	289	251	2,757,250	1,338,691
Ontario	401	324	120	6,545,272	3,142,644
Quebec	619	652	442	6,545,192	3,232,314
New Brunswick	114	98	80	532,170	266,085
Nova Scotia	91	63	22	483,500	241,697
Newfoundland	90	103	—	244,506	122,253
Prince Edward Island	—	2	—	2,026	978
Totals	3,308	2,598	1,432	31,196,937	15,289,287

3. The federal government does not share in the cost of maintenance of forest access roads.

4. The information requested is not available because programs for the fiscal year 1964-65 have not been completed.

ACCESS ROADS PROGRAM, MANITOBA

Question No. 617—Mr. Stefanson:

1. When was the forest access roads construction program brought into being?

2. What roads were constructed in the province of Manitoba under this program, listing location of road, approximate mileage of each and cost of same, also showing how cost was shared?

3. Does the federal government share in maintenance of these roads or is this cost borne entirely by the provincial government?

4. During the 1964-65 fiscal year what roads are planned for the province of Manitoba under this program?

5. What is the estimated cost of same?

Answer: 1. The first federal-provincial forest access road construction agreement was in effect from January 2, 1958 to June 30, 1958.

2. (a) Complete details are not available for all projects carried out in Manitoba prior to June 30, 1959. However, about 207 miles of right of way were cleared, 44 miles of grade were constructed and 34 miles were gravelled. The total cost was $985,714 and the federal government share was $452,923. (b) For the period from December 1, 1960 to the present, the following table shows the progress and the total expenditure made on each forest access road construction project carried out in Manitoba:

Summary of progress and expenditures in Manitoba under forest access road construction agreements, Dec. 1, 1960 to March 31, 1964.

3. The federal government does not share in the cost of maintenance of these roads.

4. and 5. The information requested is not available as yet because Manitoba's program for the fiscal year 1964-65 has not been received.

PRINTING BUREAU CONTRACTS WITH PRIVATE FIRMS

Question No. 630—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. What percentage of printing by the printing bureau is "farmed" out to private printing firms?
2. What is the dollar value of contracts let in (a) western Canada (b) Ontario (c) Quebec (d) the maritimes, in the last fiscal year?
3. Are contracts let by public tender and, if not, who are invited to tender?

Mr. Drury: 1. Approximately 50 per cent of printing is contracted out by the printing bureau.

2. In the 1963-64 fiscal year the following is the dollar value of contracts in: western Canada, $198,226.00; Ontario, $3,970,210.00; Quebec, $1,547,269; maritimes, $75,972.

3. Contracts are not issued as a result of paid advertisements to tender. Tenders are invited from firms who have indicated that they wish to tender on government business and who are considered to have the proper facilities for the particular printing jobs.

COST OF ISSUING SOCIAL INSURANCE CARDS

Question No. 670—Mr. Laprise:

What will be the cost (advertising, radio, television, newspapers, etc.) of issuing the new social insurance cards which are being distributed by the unemployment insurance commission for the government?

Mr. MacEachen: The estimated ultimate cost of advertising, including radio, television and other advertising media to publicize the new social insurance cards is:

Newspapers	$159,606
Publications	17,156
Radio	59,488
Television	47,400
Billboard advertising	33,400
Production costs	14,950
	$332,000

Question No. 671—Mr. Basford:

What are the names or designations of the decorations or medals available from the Queen to Canadian citizens on the recommendation of the government of Canada in recognition of acts of bravery performed at the risk of death or serious personal injury?

Mr. Lamontagne: In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned the following are names and designations of sovereign's awards which may be awarded, in peacetime, to members of the Canadian armed forces for acts of bravery at risk of death or serious personal injury: George Cross, G.C.; Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, C.B.E.; Officer of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, O.B.E.; Member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, M.B.E.; Albert Medal in Gold, A.M. (posthumously only); Albert Medal, A.M. (posthumously only); George Medal, G.M.; Air Force Cross, A.F.C.; Air Force Medal, A.F.M.; British Empire Medal for Gallantry, B.E.M.; Queen's Commendation for Brave Conduct; Queen's Commendation for Valuable Service in the Air.

In addition, the following are available only to members of the nursing service displaying exceptional bravery on duty: Royal Red Cross, Class I, R.R.C.; Royal Red Cross, Class II, A.R.R.C.

In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned:

The names or designations of decorations or medals available from the Queen to Canadian civilians on the recommendation of the government of Canada in recognition of acts of bravery performed at the risk of death or serious personal injury are: George Cross, G.C.; Officer of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, O.B.E.; Member of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, M.B.E.; Albert Medal in Gold, A.M. (posthumously only); Albert Medal, A.M. C.B.C. NEWS REPORTERS AND COMMENTATORS

Question No. 692—Mr. Lambert:

Are full-time news reporters and commentators in the employ of the C.B.C. permitted to act as news reporters and commentators for newspapers, magazines and publications under their own by-line and, if so, what are the restrictions, if any, imposed upon such activities?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the C.B.C. that staff reporters and correspondents under contract may engage in outside writing or other activities upon receiving permission to do so, provided it is not in direct competition with the news service of the corporation, and that the outside employment shall not interfere with the worker's employment with the C.B.C., or be of a nature that is likely to embarrass the corporation.

COST OF OBTAINING UNIVERSITY DEGREES

Question No. 696—Mr. Orlikow:

What is the approximate total cost, at the present time, of educating the following qualified persons up to (i) bachelor's (ii) master's, and (iii) doctor's levels (a) engineers (b) mathematicians (c) physicists (d) scientists (e) physicians and surgeons?

Answer: The cost of education used in these calculations is the estimated cost for the current year, i.e. the school year 1963-64. Thus the costs of university education to the bachelor's level are four times the cost of one year of undergraduate education in 1963-64.

Cost to university is the current operating cost only. It does not include: (a) implicit rent, i.e. depreciation, wear and tear of buildings and capital equipment; (b) tax exemptions.

Cost to the student is limited to educational expenditures only, including tuition and other fees, textbooks, school supplies and equipment and transportation (other than local). It does not include (a) living costs; (b) possible earnings foregone.

Approximate costs have been calculated for mathematicians, engineers and physicians and surgeons. It is not possible to estimate figures for physicists and other scientists but it may be assumed that they will fall between the costs for mathematicians and for engineers, probably closer to engineers.

Estimated Total Cost of Educating Engineers, Mathematicians and Physicians and Surgeons

Engineers	Cost to student $	Cost to community $	Total $
Elementary and secondary	300	6,600	6,900
University to bachelor's level (4 years)	3,000	7,200	10,200
Total to bachelor's level	3,300	13,800	17,100
Postgraduate to master's level (1 year)	600	2,500	3,100
Total to master's level	3,900	16,300	20,200
Postgraduate to doctor's level (2 years)	1,100	4,000	5,100
Total to doctor's level	5,000	20,300	25,300

Questions

Mathematicians	Cost to student	Cost to community	Total
Elementary and secondary	300	6,600	6,900
University to bachelor's level (4 years)	2,200	4,900	7,100
Total to bachelor's level	2,500	11,500	14,000
Postgraduate to master's level (1 year)	600	1,300	1,900
Total to master's level	3,100	12,800	15,900
Postgraduate to doctor's level (2 years)	1,100	2,500	3,600
Total to doctor's level	4,200	15,300	19,500
Physicians and surgeons
Elementary and secondary	300	6,600	6,900
University-pre-medical (2 years)[1]	1,100	2,500	3,600
University-medical course (4 years)	4,100	7,800	11,900
Total to doctor of medicine[2]	5,500	16,900	22,400

[1]In medical schools where three years of post-medical training is required total cost to the student would be $6,100, and to the community $18,200 making a total of $24,300.

[2]Before a physician or surgeon may enter public practice one additional year of internship is required.

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY, LAKE WINNIPEG

Question No. 705—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How much money will be spent during 1964 on the survey being carried out on lake Winnipeg, Manitoba, by the Canadian hydrographic service?
2. On what part of the lake will this work be carried out and approximately how many persons will be employed?
3. When is it expected that the survey will be completed and when will the charts be available?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

3. It will take about 12 years to complete the survey of lake Winnipeg, once work is restarted. The charts will be available about two years after each section of the lake is completed.

*APPOINTMENT OF CARETAKER, FEDERAL BUILDING, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 706—Mr. Coates:

1. Does the Department of Public Works plan to appoint a non-veteran as caretaker of the new federal building in Springhill without notifying the Royal Canadian Legion in Springhill that the vacancy is in existence and is to be filled?
2. Did the department follow the same procedure when the last position was filled at this federal building?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. No. There is no vacancy for a caretaker in the new federal building at Springhill. The present caretaker is on extended sick leave. Should he not return to work, the position would be filled either by promotion or by the civil service commission after a public competition.

2. This was done by the civil service commission after a public competition.

LETTER CARRIER SURVEY, SELKIRK, MAN.

Question No. 714—Mr. Stefanson:

1. When was a survey last made in the town of Selkirk by the Post Office Department with a view to implementing letter carrier service?
2. What was the result of that service?
3. When is it expected that letter carrier service will be commenced?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. The last survey was made in Selkirk, Manitoba, in June 1963.

2. It indicated that there were 2,050 calls available for letter carrier delivery service.

3. When the town has developed to the extent that there are 2,500 available calls in a compact area.

RESTRICTIONS ON DUMPING OF WASTE INTO GREAT LAKES

Question No. 718—Mr. McMillan:

Is there any restriction to ships dumping raw sewage, oil and other wastes into the great lakes system or into any of its confined waters?

Mr. Pickersgill: The oil pollution prevention regulations provide that no person shall discharge or allow to escape from a ship into the inland, minor or other waters of Canada any oil or oily mixture that foul the surface of the water, and oil includes crude oil, fuel oil, heavy diesel oil, lubricating oil, vegetable oil, fish or other fatty oils.

The Navigable Waters Protection Act provides that no person shall throw material or rubbish liable to sink to the bottom into any navigable water or into navigable non-tidal water of Canada where there are not at all times at least eight fathoms of water.

RED CROSS HOSPITAL, MASSET, B.C.

Question No. 719—Mr. Howard:

Does the Department of National Health and Welfare have any plans to occupy, by lease, purchase or otherwise, the Red Cross hospital at Masset, B.C. and, if so, what are the details of any such plans?

Miss LaMarsh: No.

Questions

EXPATRIATED RECIPIENTS OF WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Question No. 725—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many veterans of allied countries in receipt of war veterans allowances resided outside of Canada in 1963?

2. By countries, how much was paid to such veterans in 1963?

3. By countries, what system of supervision is in effect to ascertain the current income of such expatriated W.V.A. recipients?

Mr. Teillet: 1. One hundred and eleven.

2. Australia, $1,008; Belgium, $336; France, $5,477.93; India, $636; Italy, $35,839.40; New Zealand, $1,754.22; Poland, $1,644; United Kingdom, $37,460.42; U.S.A., $20,136.56.

3. Each year a form is sent to all those who are receiving war veterans allowance outside Canada. The form contains questions, the answers to which provide a full report of the veteran's financial and domestic circumstances. The information on this form must be supported by a declaration made before a magistrate, notary public or other authorized official as to its truthfulness. The supervision of recipients outside Canada comes under the foreign countries district authority at Ottawa which obtains reports of the veterans' circumstances in all countries through the medium of the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other agencies.

SITE OF OCEANOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 728—Mr. Groos:

Has the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys received a telegram from the president and the immediate past president of the Alma Mater Society of Victoria University relative to the siting of the proposed institute of oceanography in Victoria and, if so, has a decision been made to transfer the site of this institute from the campus of Victoria University to a waterfront site in the Victoria area?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes. No decision was ever made with Victoria University to locate a western institute of oceanography on the university campus. Among the sites considered was one on the campus.

Careful study over three years has indicated definite advantages in a seaside site in association with the Canadian coastguard service of Department of Transport.

NAVIGATION AIDS, LAKE WINNIPEG

Question No. 731—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How much money is allocated for the aids to navigation program for lake Winnipeg and adjoining rivers and lakes for 1964?

2. What are the locations and types of projects planned for this area under this program for 1964?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The estimates for 1964-65 would provide $108,920 for aids to navigation, administration, operation, maintenance and construction at the Selkirk Manitoba subagency.

2. In addition to ordinary maintenance, minor repairs and operation of existing equipment, the following projects are provided for in the estimates: (a) Department of Transport's share in providing office, workshop and stores building; (b) Lightkeeper's dwelling at Warren's Landing; (c) Repairs to range beacons Winnipeg river; (d) Relocate one pair of range beacons and instal additional pair of range beacons at Bloodvein river; (e) Take over and improve system of aids to navigation maintained by Selkirk Navigation Company, between Warren's Landing and Norway House, Nelson river; (f) Installation of range lights Papoose channel, lake Winnipegosis.

COST OF DAWSON CITY FESTIVAL

Question No. 733—Mr. McMillan:

1. What was the total cost of the Dawson city festival in 1962?

2. What amounts were contributed by the Canadian taxpayer through federal funds and through the council of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Laing: 1. Not available, since the department has no full record of private expenditures for this purpose.

2. Government of Canada

As reported in return tabled December 19, 1962	$343,954.99
Payments to creditors of the Dawson city festival foundation to be made from vote 106e, supplementary estimates "E" 1963-64, and not included in the above	87,500.00
Total	$431,454.99

Northwest Territories: The commissioner of the Northwest Territories advises that the government of the Northwest Territories incurred no expenditure in connection with the Dawson city festival.

C.B.C. TELEVISION STATION, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 736—Mr. Marcoux:

1. When will the C.B.C. open a television station in the city of Quebec?

2. Where will the studios and the transmitter be located?

3. Will the C.B.C. operate an English language television station in the city of Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: The C.B.C. informs me as follows:

1. Next September.

2. The studios will be at Ste. Foy and the transmitter on Orleans island.

3. The C.B.C. has no such project at present. CKMI-TV, a private affiliated station, provides approximately 55 hours a week of C.B.C. programs in English.

[Text]

*COST OF ALTERATIONS, VALCARTIER ARSENAL

Question No. 743—Mr. Beaule:

1. What is the total cost of the alterations being performed at present at the Valcartier arsenal?
2. For whom or for what purpose are those works being undertaken?
3. If the government has decided to sell part of Canadian Arsenals Ltd., why are new works being undertaken?
4. Will the cost of these alterations be included in the sale price of the corporation when it is sold?

[Translation]

Mr. Drury: 1. Some $83,000.

2. Since the Cote du Palais plant will soon be closed down in Quebec city, it will be necessary to provide room at the Valcartier arsenal for certain facilities which are essential to the production of light weapons ammunition. We will thus reduce total operating costs and at the same time retain production facilities for light weapons ammunition.

3. See No. 2 above.

4. Yes.

[Text]

LIFT LOCK AND DAM, TRENT WATERWAY

Question No. 752—Mr. Stenson:

1. Will the work on the hydraulic lift lock at Peterborough, Ontario be completed in time to coincide with the opening of the Trent waterway?
2. Will the construction of the dam at Burleigh falls, Ontario interfere with the water levels in the lakes adjacent to the dam?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The Trent canal in general is scheduled to be open for navigation on May 15; the Peterborough lift lock, due to contract work, is not scheduled to be open until June 1, 1964. This information was published in a notice to mariners dated March 20, 1964.

2. Details of the method of constructing the proposed new dam at Burleigh falls have not as yet been finalized. However, it is not expected that the levels in the lakes adjacent to the proposed new dam will be affected by its construction.

REQUEST FOR MEDIUM TERM EXPORT FINANCING

Question No. 760—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Has the government received a submission from the Canadian export association for extension of export financing into the medium term field so as to cover periods under five years for industrial machinery and equipment and, if so, what decision has been reached on the matter?
2. If no decision has been reached, when can a decision be expected?

Answer: 1. The Minister of Trade and Commerce received the submission. It is presently being studied by officials.

2. Answered by 1.

*ORDERS FOR ENAMEL AND HEATING PRODUCTS LTD., AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 770—Mr. Coates:

Has the Minister of Industry taken any action to increase the overhaul and repair work for Enamel and Heating Products Limited at Amherst, N.S., and, if so, what steps have been taken?

Mr. Drury: The problem of work load at Enamel and Heating Products Limited is one shared, to some degree, by the whole aircraft repair and overhaul industry. Due to the phasing out of older types of aircraft, the requirements on industry for repair and overhaul have declined significantly in terms of manhours.

My officers are, however, currently discussing with Enamel and Heating Products the possibility of further component overhaul and repair work for the company's aircraft division at Amherst. It is hoped that these discussions will be fruitful.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

OFFSET AND LETTERPRESS CONTRACTS, P.P. AND S.

Question No. 366—Mr. Rideout:

1. For the 1962-63 fiscal year, what are the names, with postal addresses, of private printing firms which received contracts, or orders, from the department of public printing and stationery for offset printing, showing amounts in each case?
2. For the 1962-63 fiscal year, what are the names, with postal addresses, of private printing firms which received contracts, or orders, from the department of public printing and stationery for letterpress printing, showing amounts in each case?

Return tabled.

12. How long have these Canadians been in Gaza?
13. What is the nature of their mission in Gaza?
14. How much has Canada spent on the Gaza mission since it began?
15. When will the Gaza mission's work end?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND HEALTH AND WELFARE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 37—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the deputy ministers or any officials of that department, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE STUDY OF PENSION PLAN

Motion No. 101—Mr. Aiken:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters written, or telegrams sent, by the Prime Minister between February 17 and March 20, 1964, relating to the proposed functions of a parliamentary committee to study the Canada pension plan.

Motion agreed to, subject to usual reservations.

GOVERNMENT DOCK, HAILEYBURY, ONT.

Motion No. 103—Mr. Peters:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any person, group or organization relating to the government docks at Haileybury, Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR INDIANS AND ESKIMOS IN LABRADOR

Motion No. 106—Mr. Granger:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between June 21, 1957, and April 22, 1963, between any member of the government of Newfoundland and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources regarding additional federal assistance for Indians and Eskimos in Labrador.

Motion agreed to, subject to usual reservations.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Motion No. 36—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Solicitor General, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 46—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Fisheries or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

ANNUAL LEAVE, PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES, TERRACE, B.C.

Motion No. 57—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all regulations, or letters or communications relating to, or directed to, employees in the public service of Canada who are employed at Terrace, B.C. and relating to the question of seniority being or no longer being the determining factor in the scheduling of annual leave.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could say a word about this motion. So far as we can discover the only department to which this motion would relate is the Department of Transport. While there is some doubt whether the house would really wish to make an order to have the documents produced in this particular instance, there is no question about the government's willingness to do it voluntarily. I believe the hon. member would be willing to drop the motion if I tabled the document on my responsibility as minister.

Mr. Howard: Yes, it is arguable as to whether any particular document should or should not be produced upon an order of the house. However, in the light of the amicability of the genial minister I will gladly agree with him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I table it herewith.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

SALES TAX ON RETREAD TIRES

Motion No. 97—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents received by the government of Canada with respect to the implementation of the 11 per cent sales tax on retread tires.

Mr. Benson: This motion is acceptable provided that where such correspondence contains business information of a confidential nature, only the name of the writer and not the document itself will be made available. I believe the hon. member has agreed to this.

Mr. Dinsdale: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INTERFERENCE WITH CANADIAN MEMBERS OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has the Prime Minister received any word regarding the request he made for information touching on the interference with or acts of violence against the Canadian representatives in the United Nations force on Cyprus?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I understand no report has been received yet. I hope one will be in during the day.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to ask the secretary general of the United Nations to demand from Archbishop Makarios that the United Nations troops in Cyprus be allowed to seize arms belonging to Cypriot civilians?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: The government, is, of course, in continuous touch with the secretary general of the United Nations and makes its requests to the government of Cyprus in respect of matters of this kind through the secretary general.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MR. WESTON RESPECTING APARTHEID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by Mr. W. Garfield Weston of George Weston and Company Limited of Toronto in defence of apartheid in South Africa and in view of this country's attitude toward that policy, will the government consider the question of government purchases from that company?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, isn't that just the sort of question that the hon. gentleman usually complains of when others ask them?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING 12 MILE FISHING LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. It is a question of some urgency to those engaged in the fishing industry on the east coast. Does the minister intend to introduce legislation within a week to impose a 12 mile fishing limit off the coast of Canada? If so, would he indicate whether ships belonging to countries which traditionally fished waters close to Canada would be allowed to operate between the three mile and nine mile boundaries?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Crouse: May I say, supplementary to the question I addressed to the Minister of Fisheries, that I understand this announcement is to be made by May 1. That is the reason I raised the matter on the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: I quite understand the importance of the question and the desire to have an early answer, but it seems to me that there is still ample time in which to get a detailed reply to an important question of this sort. Of course the hon. member has two alternatives; he can place the question on the order paper or raise it by way of the adjournment debate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR YORK-HUMBER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the right hon. Prime Minister a very important question concerning a statement made by the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) to a reporter of Maclean's magazine. The hon. member was asked why parliament was quiet at times and he answered as follows:

[Text]

"I'll tell you why it's quiet. It's quiet because Pearson's giving the Frenchmen every blank-blank thing they want." His voice was rising. "They go home at night and dream it up." And still rising. "They ask for it in the morning and, in the afternoon, Pearson gives it to them."

[Translation]

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether he approves that statement made by the hon. member for York-Humber?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If you consider that question to be in order under the rules, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that this is the type of question which should not be asked on orders of the day. If it is in order at all it should be placed on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that in his last budget the Minister of Finance seemed to consider regional unemployment as Canada's most pressing problem, could the Minister of Labour tell us whether he intends to extend the winter works program after April 30, so that it would cover the whole month of May, in designated areas, especially where regional unemployment is perhaps at its highest level?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It appears to me that this is not the type of question which should be asked at this time. May I suggest that it be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he received a formal request from the province of Quebec concerning the extension of the winter works period?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received a communication from the minister of municipal affairs of Quebec which is marked personal and confidential, and I would hesitate to give the details of this letter until I have cleared the matter with the gentleman in question.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Labour intend to make today the statement he promised yesterday respecting the extension of the winter works period in designated areas?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the government has considered very carefully the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Lapointe, with respect to the extension of the municipal winter works program in designated areas and areas of high winter unemployment, and after considering the circumstances it has been decided not to extend any part of the program beyond April 30.

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Now that within the last day or so 37 employees of the Point Edward naval base have received their dismissal notice, the first of some 350 who will be discharged, would the Prime Minister advise what measures are being taken to provide employment for these workers who will be thrown out of work as a result of this government's action?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—RELEASE OF INFORMATION TO PRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question in relation to the release of information to the press in connection with the new pension arrangements last Thursday and Friday. I want to ask the Prime Minister if the way in which the information was released on that occasion is likely to become a precedent in making government policy known through one of his private advisers.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's assumptions. Not being able to accept them, I cannot answer his question.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the Prime Minister has seen the allegation by Mr. Pierre O'Neil to the effect that only certain newspapermen were privy to this information, and that they were called directly by Mr. Kent.

Mr. Pearson: No, I have not seen that report.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Would the Prime Minister inform us to which minister we should direct our questions with regard to the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Pearson: Hon. members will be glad to know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is back in the house. I hope she is feeling better, and I am sure she will be quite capable of taking care of any questions which the hon. member may wish to ask.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, whom I am glad to see back in the house. Would the minister consider a request to supply at an early date a revised white paper on the Canada pension plan, to help promote a fuller understanding of the changes which are proposed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can she assure the house that the new national pension plan will be brought forward at this session?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think the purport of this question is too large for the minister to answer without very careful consideration, and would fall under the category "Questions should not be of a nature requiring a lengthy and detailed answer; and should not raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with as an answer to a question".

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give you notice that I intend to raise this subject on adjournment of the house tomorrow night at ten o'clock.

[Text]

PUBLICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to delay or indefinitely shelve the proposed legislation on magazine publications?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Forty days ago today I placed a question on the order paper addressed to the Minister of Justice. It is No. 417. I wonder when I can expect an answer.

An hon. Member: Twenty more days of action.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): My memory may be short. Could the hon. member refer to the subject matter?

Mr. Fairweather: I do not want any implications to be drawn, but I asked what was the total by provinces as of March 13 of inmates of the prison for women at Kingston.

Mr. Favreau: I must admit to a certain amount of delinquency as far as answering questions is concerned and I am glad to advise the house through you, Mr. Speaker, that I am in the process of initialling and authorizing a group of answers to questions.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I so agree with you when you say that questions should go on the order paper. However, when one looks over the order paper and finds—

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that there are—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacEwan: This is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is about to ask a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre is always pretty fast on the draw, but of course there must be a preliminary to a question. I therefore direct the question to the Secretary of State. What about the answers to these questions? In regard to questions placed on the order paper there has been a scandalous delay in replying. What is going to be done about bringing down the returns and bringing in the answers to questions going back as far as February 18, questions that should have been answered a long while ago?

Mr. Grafftey: They have been too busy making speeches.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. Leader of the Opposition should compare our record with that of his government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Same old bunch.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize the centralizing capacity of the hon. gentleman, but I ask him, when are we going to get answers to these questions that are placed on the order paper?

Mr. Lamontagne: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I try to satisfy the curiosity of the right hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pearson: —by a supplementary answer, and tell him that 600 questions have been answered so far this session, which is more answers than were given in a whole session of parliament under his leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I realize the Prime Minister recognized that the Secretary of State needed help. I ask him now, will he get answers to these questions, answers that are obviously being held back because the government would be embarrassed by some of them?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will do our best to avoid the very bad example set for us by my right hon. friend, and answer the questions as quickly as possible though we realize that more questions are already on the order paper than were on the order paper in whole sessions of previous parliaments.

Mr. Starr: Answer the question like a prime minister should.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I should like you to know that I made it a point to rise from my seat right after the question period, that is to say, when you called for the orders of the day and the clerk assistant started calling them. Therefore, when I stood up, standing order 39A no longer applied.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

That is why, on the strength of standing order 17 respecting questions of privilege and, now that we are through with orders of the day, I rise on a question of privilege.

When the new procedure was established the members adopted certain rules in respect of the question period.

I think it would now be appropriate for the Speaker of the house to tell us exactly what he considers to be an urgent and an important question. Will the same rule apply all the time?

I asked today the very same question I asked yesterday. Yesterday the question was ruled to be in order and the minister replied that he would supply me with a precise answer today. I ask the same question today and it is ruled out of order.

From day to day, is there one law for one's friends and another for one's foes? Because the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), as reported in the first column on page 2394 of Hansard, made the following promise:

> Mr. Speaker, I hope to give a definite answer to that question tomorrow.

The minister was unable to give an answer today.

Second, if standing orders must apply to members on this side of the house they should apply likewise to those on the other side of the house.

I think that the remarks made by the Prime Minister after the question period were as much out of order as the questions asked on this side of the house, and yet he was not called to order as the others were.

I immediately resumed my seat, and that is why I feel bound now to raise this matter.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member for Lapointe is under a misapprehension. The question period is not over and under the new rules it does not end, unless there are no more questions, until 3.31; so the hon. member has ample opportunity to ask any question he desires which is in order.

TRANSLATION OF PROCEEDINGS OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

As the last sitting of the standing committee on agriculture took place on December 21, 1963, the English report was published a few days after and we did not receive the French report until four months later, could the Secretary of State see to it that the French reports of these special committees are published sooner in the future?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will see to it, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

CONSUMER CREDIT

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a question to ask the leader of the house. In view of the importance of the subject of consumer credit, and in view of the fact that we have now been meeting for about six weeks without the joint committee being convened, can the hon. gentleman tell us when the government intends to convene the joint committee of the Commons and the Senate on consumer credit so we can get on with our work in connection with this important subject?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): This is, as the hon. member says, a joint committee, and I understand that the Senate has yet to complete its own part of the staffing of the committee.

Mr. Scott: Would it be proper to ask these busy gentlemen if they can supply the names so we could get on with this work?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MARITIMES—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REVISION OF MAINTENANCE OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister request the management of the C.N.R. to delay their announced plans to revise maintenance operations on that railway at least until the railway committee has a chance to study this matter, or until the estimates come before this house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the management of the C.N.R.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

NOTIFICATION TO OFFICERS TO BE RETIRED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence in the absence of the Minister of National Defence. It relates to a question I asked a few days ago about the intended lay-off of some 500 air force personnel. Can the minister inform the house whether the officers concerned have been advised about these lay-offs and about the pension benefits which the government is planning?

Mr. Speaker: If I am not mistaken this question was asked last week. In any event, this is the type of question which requires a very careful reply. May I suggest that the hon. member put it on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: If I might take a moment to explain why the question of urgency arises—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to use the hon. member as an example, but perhaps he is a good choice at the moment. He has, of course, the advantage of being able to give notice that he intends to raise the matter on the adjournment debate.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: A question, sir, for the Associate Minister of National Defence. When does the government intend to end the anxiety of defence force personnel by announcing the names of the officers concerned in the lay-offs?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence answered that question just a few days ago.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question to the associate minister. Since the Minister of National Defence said that he did not know whether the officers concerned had been notified, I wonder if the minister would inform the house whether any action has been taken.

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the officers have been notified.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING KILLING OF SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Would I be in order if I asked the Minister of Fisheries whether he has taken any immediate action to stop the inhumane slaughter of baby seals?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this question has been brought to the attention of the house on many occasions. As I have said before in the house, action is being taken to prepare legislation which will, I hope, be satisfactory in this regard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Next year. It will be a lot of good next year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Labelle.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Prime Minister but it has already been asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). At any rate, I am sure I would no more get a reply than he did.

[Text]

TRADE

NON-PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN JAPANESE INTERNATIONAL FAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question relating to the international trade fair in Japan. I wonder whether he can now tell the house why Canada is not participating in this fair.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but this question should really be put on the order paper.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO MODIFICATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the disapproval expressed by the attorney general of the United States with respect to Canadian trade with Cuba, could the minister tell the house whether that Canadian policy will be changed?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REGINA—CLOSING OF R.C.E.M.E. WORKSHOP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him when the employees of the R.C.E.M.E. workshop in Regina will be advised that the government intends to close this workshop on July 1. As of yesterday the employees knew nothing about it.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

WORLD FAIR

COMPLETION OF ORGANIZATION OF STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of reports which indicate that there are some 290 employees of the Montreal world fair organization receiving over $10,000 per year, does the Secretary of State feel that the organization is now adequately staffed?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the World Fair Corporation is one of the responsibilities of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is no. Staff is still being gathered together and the establishment will be larger than its present level.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to ask whether he is now in a position to answer the repeated questions I have posed to him and to the Minister of Justice with regard to the government's intentions about calling on the province of British Columbia to abide by the law, as set out in the Navigable Waters Protection Act, in connection with the Peace river.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member that I expect to be in a position to answer his question on Monday.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—RECOMMENDATION BY COUNSEL RESPECTING PROSECUTION OF MCLAUGHLIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. In the report prepared by counsel with regard to the investigation of certain officers of the S.I.U., was there a recommendation made with regard to McLaughlin, who is about to ascend to the presidency of the S.I.U., that he too be prosecuted as was Mr. Banks?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the report obviously speaks for itself.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question. Has the report the minister refers to been tabled in the House of Commons; and when he says it speaks for itself, is he speaking about a report which has been tabled in this house?

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I misunderstood the hon. member. If he was referring to the report of counsel I will make a second check into this and then decide whether I should suggest to Your Honour that his question is or is not in order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I did not hear the answer of the Minister of Justice because he seemed to stutter and stammer in his answer and I felt he was not quite sure of himself.

Mr. Favreau: Without stammering or stuttering, Mr. Speaker, let me say I shall first decide whether the question is in order for me to answer it, and if it is in order I will look into the report.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS, QUEBEC—CONSULTATIVE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in view of the sceret meetings which seem to be the policy between the federal government and the government of Quebec, I wonder whether the Minister of Justice could inform the house if the commission has yet been set up by the federal and Quebec governments with respect to the handing over of the Quebec Eskimo people.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest, first of all, that the preamble to that question was obviously out of order, as the hon. member must know. The importance of the question remains, but to get a detailed answer the hon. member should put it on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: It requires a yes or no answer. May I rephrase the question. Has the commission to be formed by the federal and Quebec governments relating to the handover of the Eskimos in Quebec yet been set up?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there has never been any commission provided for to hand over the Eskimos of Quebec.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Friday, April 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman, etc.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose on April 17 last it was considering clause 6 of the bill, with an amendment thereto by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and an amendment in amendment thereto by the Minister of Justice. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in order to improve the decorum of the house I would appreciate it if hon. members who have stood during the time you were on your feet would take cognizance of the rules in this regard, and I suggest that when the committee is called to order, it should come to order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the other day I had the occasion to make some remarks on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Since that time I have had a further opportunity of considering the amendment, and more questions of doubt have come to my mind which make the proposed amendment that much more dubious.

First of all, I want to reiterate the point that has been made previously, that this amendment, in derogating from the formula proposed by the government in the bill, is a derogation from parliament in that it places in a secondary or inferior position—

The Chairman: Order. May we please have some order in the committee. It is very difficult for the hon. member who has the floor to make himself heard when we have conversations going on, on both sides of the house.

Mr. Lambert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This places the office of prime minister—I am not talking about the personalities—the office of the prime minister and the office of the leader of the opposition in a somewhat inferior position to what has traditionally been recognized, which offices I submit should be incontestable and invariable. It seems to me that the amendment gives a greater recognition to other groups within the house.

We are doing a disservice to parliament and to our parliamentary system by downgrading the offices of prime minister and leader of the opposition. I find this thoroughly repugnant and, if only for that reason alone, I would be against the amendment. But, going further than that, it would be interesting if the committee could have confirmation of some of the rumours I have heard, that the representation commissioner already has a somewhat extensive staff at work drawing up the new boundaries.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I interrupt the hon. gentleman on that very point and draw his attention to clause 6 of the act that was passed in the last session of parliament which, as the hon. gentleman will recall, not only authorized but directed the commissioner to engage the staff and to carry on this preparatory work. I understand the commissioner has been doing precisely what parliament authorized.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the ubiquitous Minister of Transport has misconstrued the remarks I made. I said there were rumours that this was happening, but I am not suggesting it was illegal or in contravention of the act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Neither did I.

Mr. Lambert: All right. I am making a point, and if the representation commissioner has been at work as authorized and directed by parliament, then that is fine. I am not questioning that. What I am saying is that there are rumours or reports that the maps have already been prepared, and what I am questioning is, by whom? Who are the people doing this and what are their qualifications for the preparation of these maps?

If this be the case, under these circumstances whether it be the commission set up under the proposed amendment or even under the act, are we not authorizing some sort of a blank cheque and suggesting that these provincial commissions shall be rubber stamps? If the thing is going to be all cut and dried for them beforehand, then why set them up? At least, why set them up with this sort of aura of independence, or independence from any political implication. Why suggest there is anything wrong with political connections in regard to bodies set up by parliament? After all, everything we do is political. The administration of this country is political. This is the science of government and the active carrying out of it. So, why is there all this sanctimonious clap-trap we sometimes read in comments about this house, that the people here are somehow second rate persons because they are politicians?

Who on earth can set himself up at that level to downgrade persons who take an interest in public affairs in this house, in provincial legislatures and in municipal government? If the people making these comments had the courage of their convictions, why don't they get out into this business of politics and find out for themselves? I apologize, Mr. Chairman, for these perhaps intemperate remarks, but I think we have had enough of such comments.

It is true enough that this body must be subject to criticism, but let us not have it from high and mighty towers. The people who have served this country in public life in the past, who are serving it in the present and who will serve it in the future, without assuming any mantle or halo of self-justification, have been, are, and will be discharging their duties as citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Unless anyone can point the finger and come up with proof of venality with regard to participation in public life, then I would say to him, in the very crude phrase, "either put up or shut up."

Now, having said that, I have asked the question, who is preparing these maps, what are their qualifications, and is there any means of examining them before we give this blank cheque? After all, the purport of the amendment is to remove this entirely from parliament and, if we look at the bill, there is but a tenuous connection with parliament thereafter.

There is no obligation for public hearings. Clause 17 is only permissive and, if I may be permitted to make a little further reference to clause 17, by the provisions of subsections 2 and 4 of that clause only five days are allowed for a person or body to make up their mind to study the report of the commission and to file their objections, provided the commission has deemed that it shall hold public hearings.

I shall have a lot more to say about clause 17, which provides that notice be published in the Canada Gazette 15 days prior to the hearings, with the further requirement that the secretary of the commission shall have ten days' notice before the hearings. The gist and purport of this is that there will only be five days for anyone in any province to make representations against the decisions of a commission. In effect this is almost tantamount to a denial of review.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. He started out by referring to rumours. Has he by any chance heard a rumour that I was going to propose an amendment to this very clause?

Mr. Lambert: Well, I am glad to see that the minister is giving us a tip, but I do not know whether it is a Pandora's box from which he has tried to lift just a corner of the lid, or whether it has been like holding out a paper bag to children and saying maybe there is some candy in it. I have not heard the rumour, but we have now got it from the horse's mouth.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the hon. member that I raised that point, on clause 1 of the bill, regarding the five days allotted for those who would like to make recommendations, and at that time the Minister of Transport gave us the tip that he would move an amendment later.

Mr. Lambert: I am glad the hon. member has made a speech because it gives me 30 minutes from now in which to speak, but I fail to see how this is a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I should like to support the right of the hon. member for Edmonton West to speak for 30 minutes from now, provided he is on clause 6.

Mr. Lambert: I am coming to clause 6. I have indicated the difficulties involved in the hearings and I beg the indulgence of the house in order to do so. If these maps and so forth are ready, let us know what they are at this time. What are the objections if the work is already done? It would give an indication to hon. members how the composition of the house may be affected, and members are no less entitled than anyone else to this information since it affects their rights as citizens and as well as members of the house who may be adversely affected within their constituencies. Is there not a danger under the present set-up of the commission actually being almost in the nature of a rubber stamp?

Mr. Woolliams: That is right.

Mr. Lambert: I raise this as a danger signal. In what I am saying I do not wish for one moment to reflect upon the person or qualifications of the gentleman who is occupying the position of representation commissioner, but having appointed him to be representation commissioner we have not granted him immortality and he may be followed by persons in whose objectivity members may not have so much confidence. What I am concerned about is the framework that has been set up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could raise a point of order? I would not raise it perhaps against any other member of the house, but the hon. member for Edmonton West is a former Speaker of the house and as a former Speaker perhaps he should set the rest of us an example in obeying the rules. At the last session of parliament we did establish a position. It was established by parliament and certain duties were laid down in clause 8 of the statute. I made a mistake in the clause before because I had picked up the act quickly. But it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that when parliament has laid down the conditions under which the job is to be done it is surely a reflection upon parliament itself to suggest that the person doing the job is doing something that is in some way improper. I do not believe the hon. member for Edmonton West recollects what clause 8 of the act contains, and I wonder whether I might permitted to read it so that we will be talking—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order? Otherwise the minister is out of order in standing up.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order, very briefly, is that we are dealing with clause 6 of the present bill, and instead of dealing with clause 6 of the bill the hon. gentleman is debating a matter which relates to an act of parliament already passed. I suggest that in doing so he is going beyond the scope of clause 6 and is giving the impression that something which parliament ordered an officer of parliament to do he should not be doing.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to the point of order. It seems to me that what the minister is really saying is that we have got to confine our arguments solely to clause 6. I do not see how we can confine our arguments strictly to the wording of clause 6 because clause 6 cannot be read separately and apart without considering many other sections of the bill and the other act involved. I would say that the member who has the floor has been absolutely in order and the debate should continue.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the argument raised on the point of order, if the Minister of Transport would tame his impatience he would see that within the framework of the amendment there is a reference to the representation commissioner and I am reviewing the position of the representation commissioner under the act appointing him. Nowhere can the minister detect any objection on my part to the representation commissioner and the work he has done so far. What I am concerned about is the amendment.

I am advancing my argument somewhat, but if you look at paragraph (b) of subclause (b) of the amendment you will see that the chief justice of the province is directed to appoint certain persons in the alternative after consultation with the representation commissioner. So far as the designated persons are concerned the chief justice has authority to act without reference to the representation commissioner, but when he has to go beyond that category he must refer to the representation commissioner. I suggest to hon. members that that provision is repugnant. I do not see why there should be this provision for reference to the representation commissioner.

It seems to me we are blithely building up a framework in which there is not that check and counterbalance that there should be. Frankly, we are setting up almost an autocratic organization under the representation commissioner. First of all, we have the act setting up the office and directing the representation commissioner to do certain work. He goes ahead with his staff to do that work. We do not know the qualifications of the members of his staff, whether they are geographers or political scientists or what. Who are they? We would like to know that.

This framework is set up and then the chief justice of the province is to appoint the commissioners for the province from among certain individuals. But in default of a province agreeing that certain employees of the province shall act on the federal commission the chief justice is directed to appoint alternates after consultation with the representation commissioner. I do not believe that such a requirement is satisfactory. If the chief justice is a satisfactory person to make these appointments otherwise, then why should there be provision for the consent or approval of the representation commissioner with regard to nominations to the commission in certain circumstances?

Mr. Woolliams: That allows the minister to get his hand in.

Mr. Lambert: After all, this means that the representation commissioner has the right to say who shall sit on a commission with him, because actually he is a member of every provincial commission. I do not believe that framework is right in this regard. After all, the chief justice is not authorized to name himself on the commission. The provision indicates that he shall name someone from among the judges under his jurisdiction. I find it rather difficult to understand otherwise under this type of legislation whereby the chief justice does say: I name you.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I do too.

Mr. Lambert: This, under the ordinary interpretation of language would be a direction to pick from amongst the members of his court or, under the subamendment, from any of the superior courts. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would distinctly understand the composition of our superior courts, he would know that there is a trial division and an appellate division. The trial division has a chief justice and as a result the chief justice of the province has a limited jurisdiction over all judges. Is he able to say, also, that he will name himself? I do not think so. He is therefore going to name another justice who is a member of a court under his jurisdiction.

So, we have this disqualification of the chief justice and the provision saying that he cannot name outright all the commissioners. I believe this would be right because otherwise we would be telling the chief justice: "You name the people that you want", and if you do that you set up in fact, if not in theory, a one-man representation commission. This could be a possibility; but the act, as I say, does provide against that.

Now, on the other hand, if a province denies the right of its public officials to membership on the representation commission, the chief justice must then come back to the representation commissioner, who is a member of the commission under this act, for the approval of the appointment of another member to the commission. I do not believe that is logical.

I come to my third point. In view of the work that has been done by the representation commissioner and his staff, under the act authorizing them to do it, and the plans that are prepared for submission to the representation commissioner, I would put it to hon. members that the tolerance formula may become quite academic. I do say that I would much rather see some more independent persons named by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, who may work as a check and countercheck. Somebody has said we are trying to divorce this from politics. I do not believe there is a man in public life who is entirely divorced from politics, even with all the intentions to be so. I would say that, in my opinion, there is an important factor in the check and countercheck, and that greater justice will not only be done but will appear to be done under the formula provided for in the bill.

The government did not come to this conclusion hastily. I am sure that the then secretary of state was not flying trial balloons to sound out the opinion of the house and of the public when he advanced such suggestions. He must have received a pretty good echo of the provision which he recommended to his cabinet colleagues. Knowing the Minister of Transport, I know the care he would take in advising his colleagues on this particular key provision of the bill. His cabinet colleagues have accepted this, and they must be fixed with the responsibility therefor. It was not something that had been suggested very lightly. It was not a suggestion that was made within the famous 60 days of decision. This has been very carefully considered legislation, with the exception of what I will have to say later on about clause 17. There is always the possibility that it only takes one word to change and greatly improve legislation.

I say this is not the way, by making this complete change, to get away from partisan political action. I would say that the danger of having a more partisan commission might arise under the formula devised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I say that when we get into the academic staffs of the universities, there are some gentlemen there who will fight to the death for the right to assert their partisan political views. They do so on every occasion. We see them day after day on television and radio. Some of them also have taken charge of the political activities in certain of these provinces. I know this is so in the province of Saskatchewan, and their federal campaign was pretty well in the hands of academics.

Mr. Woolliams: Was that the reason the results were so good?

Mr. Lambert: The fact that they are at the academic level does not detract from their political activity, and I would not want it to. Let us not say we are making these political academics into political eunuchs by any means.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would allow me to ask him a question? Does he think the people who might be recommended by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister or by his right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition would be political eunuchs?

Mr. Lambert: No, because I do not think there are such people. I said it was not the extension of this aura of political purity that is improper. This amendment that we are considering is not going to create political eunuchs; I do not think you can find one. There is no such political purity. There is no advantage gained by the acceptance of such an amendment. There is a far better chance of justice under the original provision. These are the further criticisms that I have. This is what concerned me. There would be this particular body erected under a framework which could result in a rubber stamp set-up because of the illogical structure. After all, the commission could dispense with a hearing. I think this is one danger and I am hoping the Minister of Transport may bring forward a viable amendment to clause 17 which would perhaps remove this disability. In any event, I think the original proposal in the bill is a far better formula than that proposed in the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that with many of the things said by the hon. member for Edmonton West I cannot disagree very much. As to the idea that we must try to get political eunuchs, whatever they are—I suppose, in a sense, since the hon. gentleman imported that term, judges are, because they are not allowed to vote. But I think there is a great deal of difference between politics, as the hon. gentleman used the word in the beginning of his statement, and politics in a more partisan sense. After all, the reason we want to have a commission to carry out redistribution is not to get it away from politics, in the broad sense of that word, but to get it away from party politics. If we think this job could be better done by politicians, we should scrap this legislation entirely and do it in the old-fashioned way, the way that Sir John Macdonald, that great purist, used in the past.

An hon. Member: And Mackenzie King.

Mr. Pickersgill: But I do not think anybody in the committee has seriously suggested we should do that. We feel we have made a lot of progress in this matter. It seems to me there is a very narrow point of difference in the committee at this time. I, myself, am in a difficult position because, since I indicated that I have a slight preference—and it is not very great, as I said on Friday—for the amendment, I am expected to try to find some fault with my own drafting. This puts me in a very awkward and embarrassing position, particularly when the hon. gentleman is so complimentary to me as he was this afternoon when he said that after great thought and after an exercise of great wisdom I had produced something upon which no one could improve—that clause 6, as it now stands was, indeed, all but divinely inspired. Yet it was just the best thing, up to that time, that I had been able to recommend, and that is why I recommended it.

Some hon. Members: It still is.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hon. gentlemen opposite say: "It still is" and I thank them for the compliment. But I was not quite so proud of my handiwork at the time when I produced the bill originally, and with regard to this very clause, when exception was taken on second reading I said, as I have said at every stage, that if anyone could suggest an improvement, and if I thought it was an improvement, I would vote for it. That goes for every clause in this bill. Indeed, there are at least three other clauses including clause 17, to which I myself wish to propose amendments; I hope other hon. members may also have suggestions for improvements and I can assure them that in such a case they will not face any stonewalling on this side of the house. But I do not think this particular clause is perfect, by any means. It was just the best one I could figure out. I notice that the hon. member for Edmonton West said that while clause 6 was perfect some of the other clauses were open to question. Apparently, if he agrees with a clause it is wise, and if he does not agree with it it is not so wise.

In order to remove any doubt, in the light of what has been said in this discussion, I think I should be permitted to read section 8 of the act respecting the office of representation commissioner which lays down clearly what the representation commissioner was instructed by this parliament to do. I think we ought to have this clearly in our minds. It reads as follows:

As soon as possible after the completion of any decennial census—

That, of course, really applies to the future.

—or in the case of the census taken in 1961 as soon as possible after the coming into force of this act, the commissioner shall prepare maps showing the distribution of population in each province and setting out alternative proposals—

And I stress that word "alternative"— —respecting the boundaries of electoral districts in each province and shall thereupon supply such maps to the appropriate electoral boundaries commission.

I understand that as far as it is possible for the representation commissioner to carry out that instruction—and it is not entirely possible, for the good reason that until parliament decides what the tolerance will be, any maps which may be drawn can only be drawn up very tentatively—

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question? He appears to lay a good deal of stress on this matter of the tolerance. Does he not agree that though the figure in the bill may be 20 per cent the actual tolerance might be as low as 1 per cent or as high as 19 per cent, and that this tolerance provision is not as effective in protecting rural constituencies as the hon. gentleman would lead the committee to believe. It is an academic thing and it does not mean anything when you get down to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I agree with that. If I did agree with it I would wonder why the hon. gentleman and his friends have spent such a long time talking about it. It seems to me that the tolerance ought to be high enough—and in my opinion it ought to be higher at this time than may eventually be desirable when the pattern has been more or less established after one or two redistributions—for the express purpose of enabling these commissions to take the proper account of municipal boundaries, the distribution of urban and rural populations, of traditional considerations and other such factors. The hon. member for Bow River seems impatient to rise. Perhaps he would allow me to answer one question before he asks another. If we were doing all this in a mechanistic way, as the reformers did it during the French revolution, we would simply take a map and draw lines on it without any regard to whether there were human beings involved or not. But since we have chosen to approach this question in an entirely different way we must have a tolerance large enough to take account of our history and geography as well as of certain traditional factors. Quite frankly, though we had to put some figure in the bill to start with, that, like other aspects of this measure is something upon which our minds are not closed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I may ask a further question. We may get a tolerance of 20 per cent, or whatever is decided on. But is it not a fact that there is no safeguard written into the law to provide that the commissioners, or the people doing the work of these commissions must have regard to a 20 per cent tolerance in certain areas. It could be less than 2 per cent. So this tolerance figure becomes extremely academic. That is my question.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a question; that is an assertion, as the hon. gentleman will find out if he looks at it later. It is an assertion that the commissions are not going to pay any attention to parliament and I do not believe that if parliament were to change the figure from the figure presently in this bill to another figure, that the decision of parliament in this respect would be ignored. I am sure the change would be an indication that the majority in this parliament felt there are cases where the higher tolerance should be regarded. Otherwise, what would be the sense of putting it there?

I am quite sure that the men who are going to be appointed to these commissions, no matter which of the two methods now under discussion may be followed, are the kind of men who are not going to try to disregard the will of parliament but are going to try to carry it out. But surely the hon. member is not suggesting that this parliament should direct the commissions that they must have one constituency at the bottom of the scale of the tolerance and another at the top. Surely if we are going to have a non-partisan redistribution, we are not going to try by the back door to prevent a non-partisan redistribution. It seems to me that the implication of the hon. gentleman's assertion was that he has a secret hankering after doing the job himself, instead of leaving it to the commissions.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, that is not very fair, and I am sure the minister wants to be fair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I want to be very fair.

Mr. Woolliams: My question was this. I still believe in every safeguard for human rights or any other rights, whether under this act or any other act. That is something that is spelled out in the law. That differentiates our democratic system of the rule of law from the rule of people. What the minister is saying this afternoon is briefly this, that he has a great respect for these men, whoever they may be. No matter how high your ideals are about it, they may be subject to some elusiveness when given such wide discretion. I say that the best safeguard is to spell out a thing in the law. You can promise us or anybody else the sky, but the fact is that this protection should be given under the law and not by people, with the greatest respect to the people doing the work today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I completely agree with that, and that is why in this bill, unlike the bill introduced by the right hon. gentleman in the last parliament, we have a definite figure for the tolerance and we do not say that the commissions can disregard the figure and take any tolerance they like. That would certainly be disregarding the law and making the commissions completely arbitrary. I am not prepared to support the abolition of the tolerance altogether. I agree with the hon. gentleman for Bow River that what the tolerance is to be should be in the law. Whatever figure the house may agree upon, it should be a definite figure beyond which the commissions cannot go; otherwise we are just handing the thing over to these commissions without any rule at all.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow a question in this regard?

The Chairman: Order, please. Before the hon. member poses his question, I wonder whether I could bring to the attention of the committee that we seem to be getting away from clause 6. For the last 10 or 15 minutes we have been discussing the question of tolerance, and my understanding of the procedure to be followed in the committee was that this particular clause would be set aside until the end. I would suggest that hon. members revert to the consideration of clause 6.

Mr. Winkler: I agree, Mr. Chairman, and I was going to take the argument back to clause 6, in conjunction with what the minister has now said, after consideration of the tolerance. Would it not be in the interests of parliament itself, under the jurisdiction of the chief electoral officer, who is the chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: The representation commissioner.

Mr. Winkler: Yes, the representation commissioner—to safeguard this particular interest in clause 6 by reverting to the initial clause in the act? This we are prepared to support, and I think the minister now realizes this. He is in a flexible mood this afternoon, and if he will return to this position I am sure he will get full agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: On that point, Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I should indicate, as I indicated and as I think my colleague the Minister of Justice also indicated on Friday, that no one on this side of the house is going to try to suggest to any other hon. member what decision he should make about this matter. We do not regard this as a question of confidence at all. As I have pointed out from the beginning, it may well turn out—in fact I think it is pretty evident already—that some of us feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has produced a better method than the one I produced. I happen to be one of those who think so. I think, in conscience, I should support that; I think it would be an improper thing for me to support anything else. I have at no time sought to suggest to any of my friends—I refer to my political friends in the house—that they should accept my judgment; I hope they will exercise their own judgment. I even hope there may be some broadminded people on the other side of the house who will not necessarily agree with the views that have been expressed this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton West. But it does seem to me that we must do this one way or the other. Either we are sincere when we say that every hon. member should make up his own mind without any fear or hope of favour as to which is the best way to do this, or alternatively we have to say that this is a government measure and the government is going to use all the discipline it knows how to get this done in a certain way.

I said on Friday, and I say again, that if the bill as originally drafted is acceptable to the house, I am not going to shed any tears over it or this clause. After all, I drafted it and I would not have brought it before the house had I thought it was bad. I do not think it is bad; I think it would work reasonably well.

Mr. Crouse: Then why are you forsaking it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because I think the other method would be better. I know there are people in the house, and a lot of people out of the house, who do not like the idea, when we are trying to take redistribution out of politics, of having the commissions appointed, or any of the commissioners appointed, by the leaders of political parties. I do not object to that myself, but I know many, many Canadians who do; who will say that this is a second best way. I did not think we could find a better way, but I do quite honestly and genuinely feel that the amendment that has been suggested is a better way. However, I am not asking anyone else to share my view at all, and I am perfectly happy to have the committee decide this question by a vote at any time.

As for the subamendment, I feel a little differently about that. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could say just a word about that at this moment. I think the subamendment is essential either to the amendment or to the main motion, because otherwise we might create an unworkable situation; in other words, we might have a case where the chief justice of the province was incapacitated or ill, or where there was a vacancy and there would be nobody to make the appointment within the statutory time. We do not want this to happen. I also think it would be better for trial judges, as well as appeal judges, to be eligible for the chairmanship of commissions. That is all the subamendment does; it ensures that whoever for the time being is fulfilling the functions of the chief justice of the province shall be able to exercise the powers given to the chief justice, and he will be able to choose, not just from the appeal court in the case where there are two courts, but from the appeal court or the trial court. I think we could put that in the bill, whichever way it goes. But as far as the amendment is concerned, I say again that personally I feel it is somewhat better and somewhat more acceptable; but I cannot deny that I think the other method would work pretty well, too. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to have the matter voted upon at any time and to accept very cheerfully indeed the decision which the house, in its wisdom, makes.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. He did not deal with what I—

The Chairman: Order, please. I have been wanting to give an opportunity to other hon. members to join in this debate. Some hon. members at the other end of the chamber have been rising repeatedly, and I would like to be given an opportunity to recognize them. Did the hon. member for Edmonton West wish to direct a brief question to the minister?

Mr. Lambert: I wanted to know, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister was going to deal with the point I raised about the reference back, in the alternative, to the representation commissioner, and the illogicality that I feel exists in this position where the chief justice cannot name himself on the commission, yet the representation commissioner, who is a member, has the right of approval of the alternative appointment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentleman say that the chief justice could not name himself?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not so interpret the clause in either form. I would think the chief justice could appoint himself or any other member of his court. He is a member of his court, after all. This point never occurred to me. I am not a legal draftsman, but my understanding from the legal draftsman was that this would include the capacity of the chief justice to appoint himself.

I hope in many cases that that is precisely who would be the chairman of the commission, as is the case of the provincial commission in Manitoba. As for the other point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, should, for example, the amendment be accepted, if the hon. member felt this was a defect it would still be capable of further amendment.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the Minister of Transport stated that the amendment to the amendment, or the subamendment, should possibly be withdrawn. I do not know how we can consider the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre properly until the subamendment is withdrawn. Now that we are told that in the wisdom of the Minister of Transport the subamendment will apply in any event whether or not the amendment is carried, the subamendment should be incorporated in the bill. To clear this matter up, if we are going to consider the two tied together we are heading for confusion worse confounded. If the two are separate and the subamendment is to be incorporated in the legislation in any event, or if it is desired to be incorporated in the legislation, then it should certainly be removed at this time so that we can consider the amendment itself on its merits, and not have the two amendments confused.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the Minister of Transport aright, I think he meant that the principle of the subamendment ought to apply to whatever clause is voted upon—that is, either the amendment or the original clause 6 as proposed in the bill. If the amendment were voted on without the subamendment, then if I were of the opinion that I should vote for the amendment I could propose an amendment to the clause which would have already been voted on. Therefore, I think the procedure would be to put the subamendment to the vote; and depending on the fate of the amendment I would then rise and propose another amendment to clause 6.

The Chairman: I think that is the correct procedure. There should in due course be a vote on the subamendment; and if the amendment as amended does not carry it would be the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to introduce a new amendment to amend the original clause itself. I am sure there will be no difficulty about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to talk at length about the matter under consideration.

The choice lies between two types of electoral boundaries commissions. On the one hand, their members could be appointed by the leaders of the political parties, that is by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker); on the other, they could be appointed by politically independent people, that is, of course, if the provisions of clause 6 remain as they are now. However, if the amendment is not taken into account, we would like changes to be made to the said clause.

We think that members of the provincial boundaries commissions for the various ridings should not necessarily be appointed by the Prime Minister and the leader of the official opposition, but rather by the leaders of the two parties who have obtained the most votes in a province during the previous election, just as it is now the case, under the Canada Elections Act, in our various constituencies.

As a matter of fact, when city enumerators are appointed, they are chosen by the candidates of the two political parties who obtained the greatest number of votes in the previous elections. For instance, in my riding, if any political party obtained only 200 votes, whereas the Ralliement Creditiste received 16,000 and the candidate of the Conservative party, for instance, did not even get 2,000, then the Conservative party does not represent public opinion, and I do not see why that party rather than the Ralliement Creditiste should appoint the enumerators.

To my mind, we should proceed in the same way, with regard to the appointment of provincial commissions members, and maintain that procedure for instance, in certain places, in the province of Quebec, where the Conservative party is practically nonexistent according to the latest results—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I hear applause from both sides of the house. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it is true that there are some left, and they are rare animals, but you know that most of the time they are confined in museums. Consequently, next time we shall send them to the Quebec city provincial museum.

In the circumstances, I do not see why the leader of the official opposition would appoint the members of the commission for the province of Quebec, when his party practically no longer exists there, for the two parties that received the greatest number of votes are the Liberal party and the Ralliement Creditiste.

On the other hand, in Alberta, the Liberal party was third best, far behind other parties. As a matter of fact, it is practically extinct in that province. Since the two parties that received the greatest number of votes are the Conservative party and the party of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), it would be in order that those two leaders appoint the members of the commission for that province.

This procedure should be applied in the various provinces, which would enable the party leaders with the greatest number of votes to appoint the commissioners for the province.

In other respects, I support the new method advocated in the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), which is an effort to take redistribution completely out of politics and appoint in each province three commissioners who would be as far removed from politics as possible. I am not saying we would thereby achieve perfection, for mistakes would certainly be made. Nevertheless, it seems to me such mistakes would not be more serious than those which could be made if the commissioners were to be appointed by party leaders. In any case, there would not be as many, because a very high standard would be sought in setting up electoral boundaries commissions which were politically independent.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), such is the object of the proposed amendment. In my opinion, however, even the amendment would have to be changed, but the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) and the Minister of Transport are no doubt better qualified than I am in that respect. It is a matter of terminology more than anything else.

I see, for instance, that section 6 (1a) provides: "The chief electoral officer, the surveyor general or the registrar of vital statistics of the province or the holder of any similar office in the province of Quebec".

I think that we have not seen many pieces of legislation voted by this parliament using such vague and broad terms as those: "or the holder of any similar office in the province." Now, reference is made to:

1—the chief electoral officer;
2—the surveyor general.

Those offices are far from being similar. The chief electoral officer does not do any surveying and the surveyor general does not deal with voting on election days.

And here is a third category: "the registrar of vital statistics of the province". That is another office altogether different.

And finally, another one is added: "or the holder of any similar office in the province", while three different offices were just lined up:

1—the chief electoral officer;
2—the surveyor general;
3—the registrar of vital statistics.

In my parish the parish priest is a registrar of vital statistics.

Reference is made to "the holder of any similar office". Similar to what category, Mr. Chairman? Similar to the surveyor general, to the parish priest or to the chief electoral officer?

You will recognize that it is quite vague and indefinite. I am amazed to see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who has an acute sense—as he has showed in the past—of precision in procedure and legislation should bring forward such vague terms.

But that is not all. We can also read: "The president or other similar officer of a university"—I should like to know what other officer is similar to the president of a university. There is the president and then the officers under him. He is president because he manages the whole business; now there are no such officials at a university.

We also read therein: "or other similar officer of, or a member of the faculty of a university, college, or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level in the province." That is compared to the president. Now, the secretary of the law faculty is certainly an officer of the university.

I hear the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) reminding me that, in our time, there was an apparitor, or beadle; the apparitor took the roll call of the students and was a university officer. Now, I can hardly imagine such an officer as a member of such a commission.

There are some rather vague terms here. For instance, how far will the powers of the chief justice extend? How is he going to choose his commissioners?

I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay), who was a professor at a social science faculty. I shall render him this tribute: He was very efficient in his teaching field, but not with regard to the innovations he wants to bring about now. He is even secretary of the Quebec liberal federation. That means that the chief justice might have appointed him a member of the boundaries commission.

I am in favour of the principles laid down here, but I do not approve of the terms of this amendment which, to my mind, has been written in a hurry without any effort being made to use explicit terms in order to avoid the danger of partisan politics.

Another member of this government was once a university professor: the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne). Does that mean that he would have been a commissioner really aloof from politics, when during all the time he spent at the university he was head over heels in politics?

I think that the Minister of Transport will agree that the terms of this amendment are not precise enough. The bill should say only: the university president. For the University of Montreal, it is Mgr. Moreau; for Laval University, in Quebec city, it is Mgr. Vachon. Are university presidents going to quit their functions in order to look after redistribution?

Mr. Pigeon: There is also Mgr. Lusier.

Mr. Gregoire: He is with the University of Montreal.

For instance, it says here: the chief electoral officer of the province. This is something, Mr.

Chairman, that can be taken into consideration and can even bring advantages. Then provincial counties and constituencies in some provinces might be roughly similar to those of other provinces, and four or five provincial ridings might be included in a federal constituency. There will probably be a greater tendency to unity in some provinces if the chief electoral officer of the province is at the same time a commissioner, that is a member of the federal commission.

Hence, I want to ask the Minister of Transport, the mover of the bill, to retain the idea of the amendment—I am in favour and I approve of it—but before the question is put on that matter, let him give a more precise definition of the terms than is the case at present. The wording is too vague, too indefinite to be adopted as is.

I should like to bring another point to the attention of the Minister of Transport. The article states: "selected by the chief justice of the province". But, in the province of Quebec, you have the chief justice of the court of appeal, the chief justice of the superior court and, finally, you have a district superior court in Quebec city, a district superior court in Three Rivers and a district superior court in Montreal. Therefore, there are three chief justices. Furthermore the magistate's court has a chief justice and the court of the sessions of the peace also has a chief justice.

Mr. Choquette: There is the municipal court.

Mr. Gregoire: It is not a provincial one.

Which one of those judges is concerned? There again, some explanation is called for.

There are several such points, Mr. Chairman, and I feel that the Minister of Transport should be asked not to withdraw the amendment, but to allow it to stand for a 24-hour period. In the meantime, we could go on to the other sections, and the Minister of Transport could ask his departmental officials, those of the Department of Justice or those responsible for the administration of the Canada Elections Act, to define those terms, so as to prevent any future misunderstanding or any mistake from being made, not in bad faith, but through failure to consider the terms of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I support this amendment because I feel that the more we keep clear of politics, the better it is.

I think that I have successfully proved that the terms of the said amendment are indefinite and vague, and I would like to move that the said section 6 be allowed to stand for now and that we could go on to consider other sections. We could ask the Minister of Transport to have more precise terms used in that section. We should not use terms such as "any similar office" or "a member of the faculty or other educational establishment", but precise terms. Then the members of our party would readily agree to section 6.

The Chairman: May I mention that we are now considering the subamendment and that we are not yet ready to vote on the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Text]

I am wondering if the committee is prepared at this time to vote on the subamendment. Also I am wondering, for the sake of orderly conduct in the committee, whether it would not be wise to try and dispose of the subamendment which, in a way, is of a minor character. The subamendment is to clarify the question of the position of chief justice as mentioned in clause 6 (1) of the original bill. If we could dispose of the subamendment we could go on to debate or vote on the amendment itself.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think even the subamendment still shows a lack of precision. I have only the English text but, for instance, when it says:

—of any superior court.

—the word "superior" is written with a small "s". Would it not be a good thing to define what is meant by "any other"?

There are no superior courts in the province of Quebec, "Superior" with a capital "S", that is.

When one considers that we have the court of appeal, I would like to know, from a terminology standpoint, what the word "superior" means. Is it restricted to the court of sessions of the peace or to magistrates courts? Does it mean that the superior court of Montreal is a superior court? There are even courts which are presided by two justices of the peace.

That is where we should be more specific, to eliminate the vagueness of the amendment and subamendment put together.

We ask that the sponsor of the bill be given time to make his terms more explicit, so that he may succeed not only in expressing a precise idea, but in using clearly defined terms which will not eventually give rise to misinterpretations, misunderstandings or even mistakes which we would all have cause to regret.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the subamendment?

Mr. Aiken: No, no. Speaking first on the point you have just raised, Mr. Chairman,

I think it is eminently clear from the subamendment that if we accept it, then we are accepting the premise of the amendment.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Aiken: Well—

The Chairman: Order. If I may have one word, and I do not want to enter the debate of course, possibly I might refer to the statement I made a moment ago, that even if we accepted the subamendment and then the amendment itself was defeated the Minister of Justice could still introduce an amendment to the main clause.

Mr. Aiken: With all respect, the subamendment reads as follows:

That the following words be substituted for subsection 2 of section 6 in clause 1 of the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I merely say I am opposed to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I would not want to vote on the subamendment until we had fully discussed the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could make a practical suggestion, that the house consent to allowing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to incorporate the subamendment in his amendment and then there will be no confusion.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: When we voted on it we would then be voting on his amendment.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just thought it might be simpler for the committee.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might make an appeal to the hon. member for Bow River to consider that the suggestion the Minister of Transport has just made is a rather practical one. If it were permitted that the subamendment be incorporated in my amendment I would be glad to agree to that.

Mr. Woolliams: No.

Mr. Knowles: I am appealing through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for Bow River, a very eminent counsel. If my amendment in the terms I would then be putting it were carried, that would be the judgment of the committee. On the other hand, if it were defeated it would still be clearly in order for the Minister of Justice or anyone else to move an amendment to the main clause to incorporate the parts of my amendment that the house generally seems to favour. It does seem to me that it would simplify matters a bit if I were allowed to accept the words of the Minister of Justice and make them part of my amendment, but obviously it would require unanimous consent.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the reason I moved the subamendment was precisely a procedural one. Personally I would much prefer if it were possible, assuming we had unanimous consent of the house, to integrate it in the main amendment so that we would have one amendment to vote on. Then we would know clearly that what we were voting on by way of an amendment was the principle submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If it were defeated then I could move to amend clause 6 so as to incorporate what is merely an explanation of the scope of the persons from whom the choice can be made. If the committee would agree to incorporate the subamendment in the amendment I would be ready to withdraw my subamendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, assuming for the sake of argument that the subamendment moved by the Minister of Justice had such merit that it would appeal to the house, what would be the procedural situation if his subamendment were included in the amendment and the amendment as modified by the subamendment were defeated? Would it not be correct that the committee would then have rejected each and every principle appearing in the amendment, which would include the subamendment? With the house having come to a decision, would the Minister of Justice then be able to come back and move an amendment which the house had already rejected? I offer that for your consideration, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, if I may come back to the point I raised a few minutes ago I think it would clear up the matter more satisfactorily if the subamendment were removed from the amendment. If the house by unanimous consent can incorporate the subamendment in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, then I do not see why the house by unanimous consent cannot remove the subamendment from the amendment and let us deal with the amendment itself on its merits. I would so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: There can be no other motion at the moment.

Mr. Knowles: May I say that I agree with what the hon. member for Middlesex West has said. I think either course would arrive at what we are trying to do. We are trying to get a vote on these two questions separately without their being tied together. Either the subamendment could be incorporated in my amendment or the Minister of Justice could be given unanimous consent to withdraw his subamendment on the understanding that if my amendment were defeated he would move the subamendment later as an amendment to the original clause. Naturally my main interest is in my amendment but I am also interested in our making some progress.

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order raised, I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Peace River. Once the house rejects, if that happens, the composite amendment, how in the world can we vote on it a second time after it has been reintroduced?

Mr. Favreau: It would not be in the same form.

Mr. Woolliams: It seems to me we have three things. We have the clause of the bill, we have an amendment and we have a subamendment. With the greatest respect, it seems to me what we have got to clear up is the amendment and then the subamendment. If the amendment is carried we then have the question whether the subamendment becomes part of the amendment or part of the clause of the bill. It is very clear. The question now before us is whether we are going to adopt the amendment. That is what is being debated, and the subamendment will form part of the amendment. It seems very clear to me.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the way to get out of the difficulty with which we are confronted is for the Minister of Justice to obtain unanimous consent to withdraw his subamendment. I say that because a very real problem has been raised by the hon. member for Peace River. If we do in fact reject the wording of the subamendment now we may run into difficulty in reintroducing an amendment where a vote of the house has already been taken. The Minister of Transport has said that the wording of the subamendment is required in clause 6, whether the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is accepted or whether we revert to the wording now in the bill. Therefore as far as we are concerned, and I see I almost have unanimous consent, we think this would be the most practical way to deal with the problem because some members have voiced some objection to supporting the subamendment in that it may imply they are in favour of the amendment. We know of cases where this has been true. Therefore it seems to me the most practical thing to do would be to withdraw the subamendment so that each of us will know exactly where he stands.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, in view of the feeling of the committee on the matter, which seems to be relatively general, I would be ready to withdraw the subamendment provided I have agreement of the committee in advance, of course, that I may move it again if the amendment is accepted or rejected.

Mr. Nielsen: Withdraw them both and you will get unanimous consent.

Mr. Favreau: There is no problem.

The Chairman: I do not know if there are other members who want to take part in this discussion further. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, we have one further difficulty. I think we have a motion by the hon. member for Lapointe.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Churchill: It is out of order.

Mr. Aiken: In that case I have to admit that—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, it is true that I have asked the Minister of Transport to let clause 6 stand for a 24-hour period in order to give him time to consider the wording of the amendment because, in my opinion, I have fully established that it is ambiguous. In so doing, we would give the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Transport time to check the terms and replace them by others more precise and less vague.

That is the proposal I made a few minutes ago and I have not had any answer. I should like to know whether he would be prepared to reconsider the wording of this amendment.

Mr. Favreau: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think the only question which was asked concerning the subamendment had to do with the meaning of the words "high court" and the answer is that they apply to the supreme court in all provinces. Those Quebec courts have the same jurisdiction and the same rights as the equivalent tribunals in the other provinces.

Quebec has a superior court, the Queen's bench (criminal jurisdiction) and the Queen's bench (appeals division).

In each province the jurisdiction of the high courts is clearly established as is that of the tribunals mentioned earlier such as the court of the sessions of the peace, the magistrates court and other courts of so-called lower jurisdiction.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I had also mentioned the boundaries and I think that, at that time, the Minister of Justice recognized that all such offices were not filled in other provinces whereas he had mentioned three of them previously, that is the chief electoral officer, the surveyor general and the registrar of vital statistics. Three people are appointed to three different offices in the province—I see that the minister is talking —but I said a little earlier that those terms were vague and the same thing is true with regard to paragraph (b): "the president or other similar officer of a university". What is meant by officer of a university? Is it a professor, an employee of the university? Those terms are vague and not precise. They are the ones we would like to see explained before the vote.

The Chairman: Those remarks deal mainly with the amendment rather than with the subamendment and the suggestion made a moment ago is to the effect that the Minister of Justice be given the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw his amendment.

[Text]

I would ask this committee whether it gives the Minister of Justice unanimous consent to withdraw this subamendment?

Mr. Aiken: I had not completed the remarks I was making before I was interrupted by the hon. member for Lapointe. We have been asked to give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of this subamendment. I may be a little slow in my mental process, but I should like to ask the Minister of Justice why he needs to have an understanding or an agreement that he can reintroduce it? I am a little slow about this. If he withdraws it unconditionally, I see no objection.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can perhaps throw a little light on that. If the committee voted on the hon. member's subamendment, there might be some argument. If he is given consent to withdraw it, then the committee has not passed upon it and there is no reason why, at a later stage, if it is in order he could not introduce it. This would enable us to deal clearly with what hon. members want to deal with, that is the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I would, therefore, hope we could agree, without any condition, to the withdrawal of this subamendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment to the amendment withdrawn.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment. The hon. member for Muskoka-Parry Sound.

Mr. Aiken: I have some remarks, and for the benefit of hon. members who are making the noise across the way, I may say that they are extended remarks. The Minister of Transport has said he agrees with the original clause, but perhaps the amendment may make it a little better. All the members of the committee are entitled to their own opinions, and I want to express mine. I am hoping that in so doing I might persuade some of my colleagues that the original draft of this bill is the right one.

I think someone should say what I am about to say. Most members have skated around this, but let us be honest about the whole situation. What are the dangers of redistribution? Why do we find ourselves in a position where we are arguing about redistribution? Is it not simply that redistribution is a political matter?

An hon. Member: It is a geographical matter.

Mr. Aiken: Surely no one in this house is so naïve or so dishonest with himself as to say that redistribution is not a political matter. It is so darned political that we are arguing about it and probably will continue to argue about it ad infinitum. Let us not fool ourselves. If it were not a political matter, why should we be trying our best to get it outside of the bounds of partisan politics? So it is a political matter. On political matters there must be two sides—I limit it to two sides, but there are sometimes three, four or five. Basically, however, there are two sides.

If the boundaries of a constituency are drawn one way it is going to benefit one party. If they are drawn another way it is going to benefit another party. I do not say which party, and I do not say who is going to benefit. However I say this is a political matter, and let us not try to say we will be putting this into the hands of judges and others and they will not be accused of partisan politics. They cannot avoid it.

It is nearly five o'clock, but I want to say if the judges are going to be given any break at all under this legislation there must be two parties on this commission, one appointed by the Prime Minister and one appointed by the Leader of the Opposition, who will be able to put forward the opposing views in connection with redistribution. It will be necessary then for the whole commission to decide what is fair, but we cannot cripple them before they even start by not having both sides of the story laid before them. You are allowing two sides to participate in that commission, and for that reason alone we must follow the original draft of the bill.

May I call it five o'clock?

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

INCOME TAX ACT

EXEMPTION FOR SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, section (10), subsection (3) so that elected trustees of "larger school units" be entitled to the same exemptions of their regular indemnities for income tax purposes as those presently allowed to elected members of municipal corporations.

He said: I welcome this opportunity to direct the attention of the house to what I consider to be a defect in the income tax laws of our country. For the enlightenment of hon. members and for the sake of the record I should like to read the section to which my observations will refer. I am now holding a revised copy, office consolidation, of the Income Tax Act which at page 14, section 10(3) reads as follows—this refers to municipal officers expense allowance:

Where an elected officer of an incorporated municipality has been paid by the municipal corporation an amount as an allowance in a taxation year for expenses incident to the discharge of his duties as an elected officer of the corporation, the allowance shall not be included in computing his income for the year unless it exceeds one half of the amount that was paid to him in the year by the municipal corporation as salary or other remuneration as an elected officer of the corporation, in which event there shall be included in computing his income for the year only the amount by which the allowance exceeds one half of the amount so paid to him by way of salary or remuneration.

I think that is a clearcut enunciation of the position and I believe the problem I intend to raise will become apparent to hon. members as I continue to make a few further remarks. It is a problem which affects particularly the province of Saskatchewan inasmuch as we have there larger school units than those which exist in some of the other provinces. Back in 1905, when Saskatchewan came into confederation, we set up school districts which were very small in area; the municipal units were also relatively small. School districts in those days were four, six, or eight square miles in area. However as time went on and communications improved the areas became larger, and in 1945 the provincial government saw fit to give school districts the option of amalgamating into larger units. Thus today we have school units which comprise 30 or 40 square miles of area.

In consequence, the elected officials of these larger school units have to take possibly a whole day off from their other work in order to look after the obligations imposed on them. In order to get round these large districts they have to leave their businesses or vocations in charge of someone else, often at considerable expense. We believe it is time the Income Tax Act was amended in this respect so as to provide for these officials the same benefits as municipal officers now enjoy. I might say that in Saskatchewan we have some 398 municipalities the officials of which presently enjoy these benefits. Under the present legislation governing our schools we have approximately 65 of these larger school units where the duties of these officers are even greater in scope than they would normally be. In my opinion, the present provision as it affects these people is discriminatory and reflects a defect in the act.

I do not think I need take up the time of the house any further. The point I wish to make is a very simple one and I would ask members of the government to look at the act as it is drawn up at the present time, to examine the problem as far as these officials of the larger school units are concerned, and to propose an amendment of the legislation which would give them the benefits to which I think they are entitled as far as income tax is concerned. Other hon. members of this house have indicated their support for the present motion. I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Watson) who seconded the motion has some observations to make on it and no doubt others will find it worthy of their support.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) for having brought up this interesting question, one which has of course been considered over the years by the officials who are dealing with these matters and by the government in its position of responsibility for proposing changes to the Income Tax Act.

I was very interested in the outline the hon. member gave of the important developments in Saskatchewan leading to the amalgamation of school units. As I understand it, a similar situation applies in other provinces of Canada; it certainly applies in my own province of Ontario. In his resolution the hon. member speaks of larger school units. This phrase might be difficult to define in terms of legislation and I think it might be made a little more clear later on. He also quoted in detail section 10 (3) of the Income Tax Act which is the relevant section when we are dealing with this matter. This section provides:

Where an elected officer of an incorporated municipality has been paid by the municipal corporation an amount as an allowance in a taxation year for expenses incident to the discharge of his duties as an elected officer of the corporation, the allowance shall not be included in computing his income for the year unless it exceeds one half of the amount that was paid to him in the year by the municipal corporation as salary or other remuneration as an elected officer of the corporation—

In other words, not more than one third of the aggregate of the official's salary and his allowance may be excluded from his income. For example, if his salary is $1,500 the allowance should not exceed $500 to escape taxation. If, on the other hand, of a total of $1,500, the amount of $600 was regarded as an allowance and $900 as salary, only $450 could be excluded from the recipient's income under the terms of the section and the balance of $150 would have to be brought into income. It should be noted that the expenditures in section 10 (3) apply only to elected officers and not to appointed officers or employees. In many parts of Canada, even if this were extended to include members of school boards, some school board members would be excluded because they are appointed rather than elected.

This section was introduced into the act in 1953 and made applicable to 1946 and subsequent taxation years. It was made retroactive at that time so that the new deduction for expense allowances of elected members of the governing bodies of incorporated municipalities would date from the time a corresponding deduction was introduced for members of provincial legislatures.

The legislation that was placed in the income tax law in 1946 provided that——where an elected member of a provincial legislative assembly is, under an act of the provincial legislature, paid an allowance for expenses incidental to the discharge of his duties as a member, either

(a) the allowance paid in the taxation year, if it does not exceed one half of the maximum fixed amount provided by law as payable to the member by way of salary, indemnity or other remuneration as a member in respect of attendance at a session of the legislature, or

(b) a portion of the allowance equal to one-half of the said maximum fixed amount, whichever is less, shall, notwithstanding anything in this act, not be taxable as income for the purposes of this act.

This provision for a deduction of expense allowances of members of provincial legislatures is still in the act as section 10(2). The extension of this provision for excluding expense allowances of a member of a provincial legislature to include expense allowances of elected officers of municipalities was urged upon the government in 1953 by the association of Ontario mayors and reeves. It had also been urged for several years by mayors and other representatives of municipal bodies.

The mayor of Sherbrooke took a case involving the taxation of expense allowances to the tax appeal board, but the tax assessment was upheld. At that time a number of allowances were paid without any occounting on the part of recipients and there was a great lack of uniformity in the kind of allowances paid. In 1953 the government of the day introduced the legislation which is the same as now found in section 10(3) of the act, to clarify the situation and provide a fair exemption for the allowances paid to elected members of municipal governments. It is interesting, I think, to note in this connection some comments in the C.C.H. tax service, and I quote from page 689 of such tax service as follows:

The exemption provided for by section 10(3) is available where an expense allowance is specifically voted or appropriated. It is understood that the authorities administering the act consider that a specific vote or appropriation cannot be made retroactively. On this basis it would not be possible for a municipal council to provide in 1953 that a payment of $750 made to a municipal officer in 1952 or a prior year was to the extent of $500 remuneration and to the extent of $250 an allowance for expenses incidental to the discharge of municipal duties.

The Minister of National Revenue stated in parliament (Hansard, volume 95, No. 83, page 3697) when the 1953 amending act was introduced, that it was not intended that the exemptions provided for in section 10(3) should be available to members of school boards.

I should like to quote further from the tax service as follows:

It would appear, however, that the provision may be wide enough to apply to them.

This was the opinion expressed by this eminent tax service. However, in a recent case, Thompson Estate v. The Minister of National Revenue, a decision of the tax appeal board reported in 64 Dominion Tax Cases, 142, the decision was as follows:

A school board trustee excluded from his income amounts stated to be an allowance for expenses incident to the discharge of his duties. The provisions of section 10(3) were not available to the trustee. The school board was a corporation and municipal in nature. However it would be giving the commonly accepted meaning of the term "municipal corporation" a stilted or strained connotation to apply it to a school board.

Since 1953, suggestions have been made—that is, since the time the section was extended to include municipal officers—from time to time this exclusion from income should be extended to school trustees. These representations have been scattered and few in number and have not provided the government with adequate information concerning the kind of allowances that are paid, which I am sure varies greatly across the country. As a matter of fact, all of us know that many school board members receive no pay whatsoever.

It is important to note that section 10(3) does not allow members of municipal councils the right to deduct the expenses they incur. The law provides that certain allowances paid by a municipal corporation to its elected officers incident to the discharge of their duties may be omitted when computing their income. Thus, for this section of the law to be operative there must be an allowance of a stipulated amount authorized and paid by the municipal government. That part of such an allowance that does not exceed one half the officer's salary or other remuneration need not be included in computing an elected officer's income. An extension of section 10(3) to school trustees would be of benefit only where school trustees are elected, where they are paid a salary and where they are paid a specific expense allowance.

Since not all school trustees or members of school boards are elected, and by no means all receive a salary, and fewer still receive specific expense allowances, there have been few representations, as I mentioned previously, to amend this particular section of the act to include members of school boards. The provisions in section 10(2) and 10(3) were introduced because the payment of expense allowances to members of provincial legislatures and elected officers of municipal governments were well established and paid under existing legislation. These allowances were regarded by the governing bodies making the payments and by the recipients as compensation for expenses and not as remuneration. It therefore seemed appropriate at that time to authorize this treatment for income tax purposes.

If the proposal before the house is accepted, there may be considerable pressure upon school boards to pay trustees both a salary and an expense allowance and, where there is only a salary paid at present, to classify part of that remuneration as an expense allowance. Thus, the proposal, instead of recognizing an existing form of payment which has developed to meet particular needs over the years, might provide an artificial stimulus to pay expense allowances and to classify payment as allowances without regard to the actual expenses or needs of school trustees.

I would like to assure the hon. member for Moose Mountain that his representations in this regard, as contained in the resolution, are worthy of consideration and I can also assure him that, provided I am in a position to do so, this matter will be brought before those who will consider tax changes in the coming year. I believe, as I mentioned earlier, that it would be very useful to the government to have more information as to exactly how expense allowances are being paid and what expense allowances are being paid to school trustees throughout the country. In this regard I would urge persons who are interested in this matter to submit representations to the government so that the government may consider this particular problem with the same kind of full knowledge that it had when it was considering the problem of members of provincial legislatures back in 1946, and mayors, councils and municipalities in the year 1953.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I have no hesitation or reservation at all in supporting the proposal made this afternoon by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). I want to state at the outset that in Alberta, where I think the setting up of what have been termed school units was pioneered, there does not appear to me to be any significant difference between the service provided by a school board or school unit trustees and that provided by municipal trustees. This is particularly true in the rural areas.

The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has just stated that he would welcome some information as to how expenses are now being paid to the elected representatives of school divisions. I would like to tell him one or two things about this matter as it applies in Alberta. I speak specifically of southern Alberta, but I think it is true for the whole province, because at this stage all the rural areas of Alberta are in what we call school divisions and I think we can put exactly the same connotation on that as you can on the words "larger school units" in the resolution. There is provision for the payment of something like $15 a day, I believe, for each one of the trustees for the days they actually spend in school board meetings, plus an allowance of something like 12 cents per mile, I believe it is at the present time, for travelling to the meetings and back to their homes. In addition to that there are special payments for occasions when a school board member is required to visit a school within his subdivision but which is many miles from his home. In these cases exactly the same allowances are paid; $15 a day for the time he must spend away from home plus 12 cents a mile travelling to and from his residence.

There is one other point I should like to bring up to show the injustice and anomaly created by section 10(3). Commencing in 1936 or 1937 Alberta set up these larger school units for the more efficient operation of schools in the rural areas. This has worked so satisfactorily that from time to time other provinces have adopted the same method.

Now we have moved to another phase and we are setting up counties. We have well over 20 counties now and these county councils administer the affairs of all the schools within their boundaries through what they call the school committee of the county council. From my interpretation of what is now provided in subsection (3) I would presume that those members who are in fact elected to the county council, even though they may be subsequently appointed by the county council to the school committee, would be able to claim under this section expenses they incur for doing exactly the same thing which the school trustees do in units which are not counties.

This is completely unfair because, as I said, they are doing exactly the same thing. I know that in some of the county councils, while the members appointed to the school committee do have a vote on the council when the council is in what might be called plenary session, they spend all or almost all of their time on school affairs. The chairmanship of the school committee is a full-time job within that time devoted to county and school business. The chairman is completely or almost completely concerned with school affairs in the same way as the chairman of the school board. Therefore there is an injustice created here which could be corrected by accepting the recommendation which has been made by the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

In many cases the amount of the budget and the amount of the detailed work and general responsibilities of school trustees within a given area is substantially higher than that of the municipal councillors within the same area. I think it speaks for itself that there is therefore real justification for making some changes. In fact, at the present time if we had to choose between whether the school trustee or the county councillor should receive some consideration by way of expenses incurred, there are many places where the school trustee would be given priority because of the larger amount of money which he would be handling, and the greater responsibility he has to attend to the details of school administration.

I do not wish to say more because other hon. members would like to participate in this debate, but I am pleased to hear that the parliamentary secretary is going to take this matter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and his officials when they are considering amendments to the Income Tax Act because, as I said, a serious injustice prevails here which could and should be corrected.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of this motion moved by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). I believe this is a question of the income tax laws not keeping up with progress in some of the provinces. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) illustrated this when he referred to what happened in Alberta in 1936 or 1937. The larger school unit act came into effect in Saskatchewan in 1945. I believe the motion speaks for itself when it says the government should consider—> —the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, section (10) subsection (3) so that elected trustees of "larger school units" be entitled to the same exemptions of their regular indemnities for income tax purposes as those presently allowed to elected members of municipal corporations.

When we speak in the rural part of Saskatchewan of municipal corporations, we are naturally thinking of the rural municipalities which were set up in 1905 when the province was established. These areas are 18 miles square and have six board members and one reeve. Under the larger school unit act of Saskatchewan these boards also have a chairman elected from the six members, and these people represent an area which would be possibly six or seven times the size of a rural municipality. One way to compare this would be that an assessment in a rural municipality would be anywhere from $2 million to $4 or $5 million. An assessment in a larger school unit would run anywhere from $20 million to $25 million. These board members have to travel—and I have had the pleasure of serving on both types of board—anywhere from 30, 40 and up to 50 miles to one meeting. When I served on a local municipal council I had to travel only ten miles to qualify for expenses, yet under the larger school unit act, or under the Alberta county system, I would have to travel a great many miles but would not be entitled to this exemption. I think this is merely a matter of the government's sitting down and taking a look at section 10(3) and bringing it up to date so as to cover, as was originally intended by the act, municipal corporations.

The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson) gave the house a little more information, but I can tell him that in the larger school units in Saskatchewan the members of the board receive in the neighbourhood of $300 to $400 in a year—and I have had more than $500—as their indemnity and mileage combined. This is arrived at on the basis of a per diem of $15 a day for a maximum of 15 or 16 meetings, plus the mileage expenses of the individual member concerned. Our mileage rate is 11 cents a mile, and that also can be figured out on the same basis. As I mentioned before, this is merely a case of the government sitting down and bringing the Income Tax Act up to date so as to keep abreast of the progress which has been made, in this particular case, in Saskatchewan under their larger school unit act. However, I feel it is an injustice to the members who serve on these boards.

In the same way as the hon. member for Medicine Hat has mentioned, we in the province of Saskatchewan were in the midst of setting up counties a year or two ago, and my interpretation would be that if these counties had been set up the members of the school boards would not be entitled to an exemption because they would come under the larger school units. In closing, I would like to say I hope the government and members of the house will support this notice of motion. If it would be of any assistance to the parliamentary secretary or to the minister, I would be only too happy to sit down and talk the matter over with them. Again I urge all members to support the motion.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I think one could almost say in one sentence all that needs to be said regarding the principle of this private member's notice of motion. We agree that there should be uniformity in the matter of exemptions to taxpayers in similar circumstances. However, when you stop to take a look at the drafting of an appropriate statute, and you take a look at the wide variety of arrangements that exist throughout Canada, you quickly see it is extremely important that some homework be done in the Department of Finance. I believe this homework will be done, as was suggested by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance a few moments ago.

I share the gratification expressed by other members of the house that this will be done, and I shall be watching the progress made in that direction. However, it is apparent it will be necessary to have some conversations with provincial departments of education. Further, before we come to formal passage of a motion of this kind, we must inquire whether the royal commission on taxation has undertaken studies with respect to exemptions. I believe hon. members will find that the commission has been looking with some interest at all exemptions.

It finally comes back to what I said at the outset, that there is a great deal of homework to be done because of the variety of arrangements between elected boards and appointed boards. In the city of Halifax we have one school board, yet within our school system we have a tradition whereby we have a parochial system, rather loosely put together but nevertheless very satisfactory to all concerned.

This system has been in operation for some hundred years, but there is only the one tax source. The city pays 85 per cent of the school budget and the remaining 15 per cent is paid in the form of provincial grants. Half of the members of the board are appointed by the province, and the other half by the city council of Halifax.

Those members of the school board who are elected members of the city council do not receive any remuneration from the school board, but those who are appointed by the province receive an honorarium of something like $300 per annum. Some people who are quite happy and anxious to serve on these large school units are not anxious to engage in the elective processes to either school boards, city councils, or county councils, and many of them even resent being paid for this kind of duty.

There is no doubt many of them are people in the higher income brackets, who feel they can afford to do this sort of thing, but they do not want to engage in other political activities. There is no doubt that because they are in the higher income tax brackets an exemption would be more valuable to them, but we have to take a look at the number of arrangements throughout Canada which would be involved in an extension of this particular exemption.

There are 12,000 school areas in Canada. One hon. member referred to Saskatchewan. I understand it has a more complex scheme, with large units divided into five or six sub-units, and the representatives to the large units are elected by the ratepayers of the sub-units. As in Alberta, there are also separate school boards.

Manitoba has a mixed system of large and small units, and the Atlantic provinces have been moving for some years toward a system of larger units. In the western provinces election of school trustees by ratepayers is the rule, whereas in the Atlantic provinces appointment of trustees by municipal councils or the lieutenant governors is more general.

Then we come to Quebec where we find that the Roman Catholic school administration is based on the parish, except in large centres, and the Roman Catholic school boards number about 1,500. Up to the present, and I understand this is subject to change under Quebec's bill No. 60, Protestant schools have local elected representative administration in rural areas, but larger units are also being organized. Trustees are locally elected, except in Montreal and Quebec city where the school trustees are appointed, the Protestant trustees being appointed by the lieutenant governor and the city, and the Roman Catholic trustees by the lieutenant governor and the archbishops.

Ontario has 4,200 local school boards, including 700 separate school boards and 300 secondary school boards. There are also boards of education which look after both the public and the secondary schools. Most local rural school boards are elected by ratepayers. Rural district high school area boards are appointed by councils in participating areas, and secondary school boards are appointed. Now it becomes a nice question—

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lloyd: Yes.

Mr. Olson: Is there really any difference between school board trustees being elected or appointed? Whether they belong to separate school boards or public school boards they all have some expense involved in the performance of their public duties, and should there not be some provision in the Income Tax Act to take care of these expenses?

Mr. Lloyd: I agree generally in principle, but if you look at the notice of motion it says:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act, section (10) subsection (3) so that elected trustees of "larger school units" be entitled to the same exemptions of their regular indemnities for income tax purposes as those presently allowed to elected members of municipal corporations.

It specifically deals with elected members, and I was pointing out that because of the variety of methods by which trustees are elected and appointed, one should do some homework on the very point which the hon. gentleman raises. It may very well be that if you receive an honorarium from a school board, and if some portion is to be designated, the same as applies to municipal councillors, it should be generally applied regardless of whether you are elected or appointed.

Some will argue that the elected representative is under expense by virtue of the process through which he gets on the board, and because of this fact he should be granted an exemption. Some will argue this. Others will contend, as the hon. member has just done, that it really does not make much difference. But I think there is a difference between the situation confronting the person seeking election to a public office and that of one who does not have any expense by reason of being appointed by the governor in council or by some regional board, depending upon the arrangements in each province.

I can only conclude, Mr. Speaker, that there is an inconsistency in regard to the matter set out in the motion. Certainly the matter needs attention. We should not allow the situation to continue without investigating to see whether we can arrive at a uniform policy. I am glad, as I said earlier, that the parliamentary secretary proposes to undertake the essential homework to bring about a method more appropriate and more in keeping with the views expressed by hon. members today than would be the case if we passed this motion, because if we did so the impression might be given that it was the wish of the house that any such exemptions should be restricted solely to elected trustees of larger school units.

I have mentioned that perhaps there should be some consultation with the provincial authorities. If there is any field in which there seems to be great sensitivity, and with justification, it is that which involves the provision of educational facilities within a province. Certainly anything that has to do with inducing people to undertake duties by virtue of federal income tax exemptions in the performance of such duties is a matter which should be the subject of consultation with the provinces. It should not be a difficult matter to resolve, but I should like to see that done. I share the feelings of hon. members who have so expressed themselves that it would be a good thing for the parliamentary secretary to undertake the proper homework and bring in appropriate amendments. I do not think the royal commission needs to deal with such a matter unless it has been the subject of special reference to them.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question that those of us who have served in the past on municipal councils or school boards, where most of us started our humble careers, are sympathetic with the subject matter and the understanding envisaged in the general tenor of this motion. In my view, if our free society is to work effectively, and possibly even to survive in the competitive world of today from the point of view of modes of government and modes of people determining their destinies, there is no question but that we certainly need a high level of participation by our people in our system of government, whether in the parliamentary field, local political associations or bodies such as school boards and municipal councils.

I believe the late President Kennedy put this premise better than any of us can when he said that a free society cannot survive if those who believe in that free society sit on the sidelines and merely watch the game. If there is any need today, not only in this country but throughout the free world, it is the need for participation in various aspects of the public weal by the very best people we can possibly entice to undertake such efforts.

Far from the least of our needs is that in the realm of education. I do not know about the situation in other provinces. Our constitutional system being what it is, I am not too well versed in the manner in which education is administered in other provinces. In the province of Ontario the principle of local autonomy has been maintained to a very large degree throughout the years. However, in the province of Ontario we find that centralization is creeping into education more and more, be it for better or for worse, and that the principles of local autonomy, which have been the very basis of our education system since the days of Ryerson, are gradually being whittled away, with the result that in the not too distant future education may have a far more centralized focal point than has been the case in the past.

But so long as local autonomy is maintained to any degree in the educational system of Ontario, so long will there be a need to induce the very best and most capable people we can find to enter the field of education at the local level. This, of course, involves several spheres. Certainly from both a moral and an economic point of view we need to encourage the very best people we can to enter the teaching profession, on which rests to the largest degree the education of our young people. But at the administrative level also we need to do all we can to encourage the best people to take part as school trustees and in other fields of school administration, so that our schools will be well administered and so that the dollars and cents aspect of education will be adequately looked after.

So far as the teaching profession is concerned, which is essential to the future of education, I think there may be some troubles ahead. The teaching profession appears to be very disturbed today with regard to its future. The other day we heard the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), who speaks so often and so loudly in the house, take umbrage over the fact that the teaching profession was disturbed at the present time because its members had been requested by the Department of Labour to fill out the cards associated with the coming pension plan. Apparently the Ontario teachers federation has taken a strong lobbyist stand in this regard. The hon. member felt that this was improper and that it was a tragic thing that the teaching profession should be taking this view.

I suggest that in taking this view the teaching profession was objecting to only one thing. As a profession I do not think its members have ever been loath to carry their weight or to fulfil their responsibilities to society in general. However, I believe that they are objecting to being treated differently from other professions. I think they are right in this stand. I do not believe there is any more noble calling or loftier profession than that of teaching, whereby the aspirations of tomorrow will be fulfilled if they are to be fulfilled.

I certainly disagree most emphatically with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) in this regard. There should be no distinction or no differentiation between the medical profession, the legal profession and the teaching profession in so far as the laws of this country are concerned, be they income tax, unemployment insurance or any other laws.

I think possibly the criticism of the hon. member was justified to some degree, but only in this regard—

Mr. Olson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the member has been directing his remarks during the last five or six minutes to a point which has no relevancy whatever to the notice of motion moved by the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

Mr. Greene: Speaking to the point of order, I would point out that the relevancy of my remarks is in this vein: I maintain I am attempting to establish the point that there are two facets to the question of education, the trustees on the one hand—that is the administration—and on the other hand the teaching profession. I am attempting to establish the point that on these two aspects of the problem of education, particularly teaching, rest the future effectiveness of education.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I am merely saying that in so far as the teaching profession is concerned, which is one aspect, I think it should be pointed out that contrary to some opinion there has been no attempt made by this house under the unemployment insurance regulations to include the teachers. There was a suggestion of this type made in the Gill report, but any qualms the teaching profession may have in this regard are unfounded. In so far as this government or this house is concerned, we have not treated them in any way differently from any other profession. I do not believe the day will come when this government or this house will see fit to do so, even though the Gill report may have suggested it. I do suggest that in so far as the teaching profession is concerned, this house has maintained its respect for the profession and has legislated in no way that would diminish the honour of that profession.

Now, in so far as the trustees are concerned, if I may be permitted to turn to that specific aspect of my hon. friend's motion,

I would say that apparently he is concerned about the trustees of the larger school units. I look somewhat askance at my hon. friend because normally I would have thought he would have been somewhat concerned with the larger and bigger, but also with the smaller and humble. I do believe this party professes to speak not so much for Bay street as for the little man. I am somewhat surprised to see that his motion refers only to the larger school units and, in particular, to those trustees who are apparently elected to school units rather than appointed, as is the case in the smaller areas.

In the part of the country from which I come, school boards are of two types. Some boards are elected and some of them are appointed. District schools, which today I think are generally accepted as important throughout Ontario, are the trend today. I have recently had occasion to see something of the school question in Manitoba. In that province I think the trend is to centralize the district schools and bring the boy or girl from the country into the larger school units in those areas. In Ontario, certainly in eastern Ontario, the area school trustees are appointed by the local council and by the local school boards, separate and public, to serve on this area school board.

The problems of these area school boards I assure you, Mr. Speaker, are certainly not less, and in fact in a very large measure are far greater than those of the elected school boards. Where urban and rural areas are concerned, the problems are different. Frequently there is difficulty with the problem of equalization of assessment in these areas. I know of no more difficult area of public service than service on one of these area school boards. I know these men sit many nights during the month into the small hours, and they have all the problems connected with running very large business entities, because these school boards are big business.

In my own town of Arnprior, which is a town of some 5,500 people, the high school has an enrolment of nearly 1,000 boys and girls. I think this points up the fact that those who serve on these school boards, and who serve as teachers, have very important work, and that those who serve on these appointed school boards have work that is just as important as those who are elected representatives. While I agree most wholeheartedly with the general principle of this resolution, I should be most remiss in my duty to those people who serve on the school boards in my area if I did not insist that if any consideration is to be given in respect of income tax deductions, as suggested by the resolution, it should be given not only to those who are elected but also to those who are appointed to serve on school boards. It may be that if our energies are directed toward this problem, we should see that all school boards will be treated equally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I should advise the house that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader what the government proposes for tomorrow, Friday and Monday.

Mr. Favreau: Tomorrow we hope to complete the study in committee of the electoral boundaries bill, and if there is time left, as I hope there will be, we will take the resolution introducing the Post Office Act amendment. On Friday, we will have a study of estimates, and agriculture is the proposed subject.

As I have not seen the house leaders of the parties about Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, I can give them notice that for the moment, subject to further discussion, it would be our intention to take budget resolutions, beginning with customs, then income tax and estate taxes on Monday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 23, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOOD WISHES TO PRIME MINISTER ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while the rules may not allow me to rise at this time I hope that the house as a whole will permit me on behalf, I am sure, of all hon. members to extend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) warmest good wishes on the occasion of his sixty seventh birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With it I couple the hope that he will have many more years of health and happiness.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may add to the words of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition by saying that the members of this party join with him and his party and with all members of the house in extending to the right hon. Prime Minister our best wishes on his birthday. We hope he will have the good health to enjoy many more such days. May I say that this occasion is rather significant because today is also the birthday of Shakespeare, St. George and the Governor General of Canada, which ought to make it a very auspicious day for Canada.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): It is a pleasure for me on behalf of this party to offer our very best wishes to the Prime Minister on this, his birthday. I suppose many of us remember the day more specifically because it is St. George's day, when goodness traditionally triumphed over evil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: I think in the events that are taking place today my birthday list has become mixed. Thus my gift has gone to the leader of the official opposition instead.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our group I should like to extend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) our best wishes on the occasion of his birthday.

I want to take this opportunity to underline the important achievements of the Prime Minister as far as recognition of the groups which make up our country is concerned. Never in the history of Canada, in my opinion, has a Prime Minister so efficiently and effectively taken a stand on the recognition of the two main ethnic groups of our country, the French Canadians and the English Canadians.

Our opinion may differ from that of the Prime Minister on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, but that does not prevent us from seeing in him a great Canadian. I hope he will be with us for a long time.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like very sincerely to acknowledge with gratitude the kind words of the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other parties. Those words remind us that there are personal friendships and personal good will which know no party boundaries. I am, as I believe each of us is, a beneficiary of this spirit of parliament. Political life is difficult, but it would be infinitely more difficult if we did not have these amenities, and I am grateful for the kind words which have been said to me on my birthday. But, Mr. Speaker, I confess that the last birthday seems an awfully long time back.

PRIVILEGE

TRANSFER OF MEMBERS FROM SOCIAL CREDIT TO CONSERVATIVE PARTIES

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which will, I am sure, interest the entire house.

Following some pressures by the organizers and electors of my constituency who, as I did, had put their faith in the Social Credit party which has fallen to pieces on account of its internal quarrels and its hopeless strife; following the hesitations, the reversal of policies, the weakness of the Liberal party in the face of vital problems such as the survival of confederation, unemployment and agriculture; following the Lesage-Pearson deal which clearly proves that the provincial claims have been pushed aside for a political bargaining meant to save the Grits in Ottawa and in Quebec; following the trust put by his party in the hon. member for Three Rivers

(Mr. Balcer) whom I have learned to respect for a long time for his courage as well as for his restraint, I have offered my services and my co-operation to the Conservative party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Girouard: —and I ask Your Honour for permission to change seats in this house as soon as possible.

Mr. Gerard Ouellet (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I find myself in the same political situation as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and, for the same reasons put forth by my colleague, I am asking for the same privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: —but before I go into the detailed subject matter I too should like to extend to the Prime Minister my sincere felicitations on his birthday. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the following members be recognized in accordance with the changes that have been made today: Mr. Danforth, M.P. for Kent, Ontario, at desk No. 180; Mr. Slogan, M.P. for Springfield, at desk No. 235; Mr. Webb, M.P. for Hastings-Frontenac, at desk No. 236; Mr. Girouard, M.P. for Labelle, at desk No. 237 and Mr. Ouellet, M.P. for Rimouski, at desk No. 238.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the request of the hon. member I would ask the Clerk to take note of the seat changes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the two questions of privilege raised. I would ask that the statement made by both members be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. Following the assertions made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) at the time of the split within the Social Credit party, he had stated that a member cannot cast off his allegiance to a political party unless has has been elected as such in an election. I am asking therefore that the subject of the two questions of privilege be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

[Later:]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very important personal question of privilege. For the same reasons given by the hon. members for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and Rimouski (Mr. Ouellet), I should like to ask Your Honour for the privilege of not joining the ranks of the Conservative party.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Naturally I have only been advised very recently of the suggested changes, but I have had an opportunity of looking into the precedents very quickly. There are two precedents which I need not discuss but simply mention the names. Mr. Argue was one and Mr. Thatcher was another. In both cases no discussion took place after the announcement of the change of venue, so to speak. Therefore in the present case I suggest that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe is not a point of order, and consent has already been given to the suggested changes in the seating.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 26 I move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the extension of the winter works program in designated areas.

Mr. Speaker, standing order 26 states that in order to move the adjournment of the house, a definite matter of urgent public importance must be involved. The matter I wish to have discussed today is extremely definite and restricted, namely the extension of the winter works program in designated areas.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in his budget speech, which is the most important speech of the year, stated—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is very difficult for the Chair to hear the arguments. Could we have a little more order?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: The Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech—that is the most important speech—as reported in Hansard, at page 970, left hand column:

> Our first goal is high level employment.

And at page 972, left hand column, at the top of the page:

> Our plans and policies are designed to meet the special needs of areas of the country or groups of the population confronted with special difficulties and problems.

The situation itself proves that the matter is important, since the Minister of Finance himself recognizes that this is the primary objective of the Canadian government, and duty of the opposition is to help the government achieve this objective.

Third, the matter is national in scope and of general interest, since it concerns 35 designated areas and will also help to balance the situation for the areas and for the people, along the lines advocated by the Prime Minister and the present government, who have always hoped for it and who have devoted their energies toward a greater unity and a better national understanding. In addition, that will put an end to the discrimination that prevails in various regions of the country because weather conditions differ. The most beautiful regions, with the best weather conditions have the highest employment rate, whereas the regions where the weather conditions are harsher in winter have the highest unemployment rate. Those are the regions where unemployment is most severe and they are precisely the areas designated by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen).

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it is a very urgent matter since today is the 23rd of April and the winter works period is supposed to end on April 30, which means that there are only seven days left to solve that problem.

Furthermore, we will have no other opportunity to discuss the matter prior to April 30, and after that date it will be too late.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this motion meets all the requirements of standing order 26, for it deals with a definite matter, the most important we have to discuss. Furthermore, and the Minister of Finance admitted it in his budget speech, it is of general interest, national in scope and extremely urgent, since the winter works period will expire soon and we will have no other opportunity of discussing this matter.

This motion also meets all the requirements of paragraph 6 of standing order 26. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), that the proceedings of the house be adjourned in order to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the extension of the winter works period beyond April 30 in designated areas.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to decide whether the general proceedings of the house should be adjourned in order that an urgent matter may be discussed under standing order 26. I may say right at the beginning that the hon. member has presented a very interesting case, but what was contemplated by standing order 26 was the occurrence of a sudden emergency. In this connection I would refer the hon. member to Beauchesne's fourth edition, paragraph 8, citation 100 at page 91.

This is a problem which was existing last Monday and Tuesday, when a supply motion was before the house, and it seems to me an opportunity was given then to discuss the matter at length.

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, I must decide according to my best judgment that the house should not be adjourned under standing order 26 at this time, and that in consequence the motion moved by the hon. member for Lapointe and seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve should not be received.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are most respectful of the ruling you have just made; nevertheless, we consider that the situation is urgent, and as you have stated, it has been in existence for the last week, during the present week and it will still exist in a year or two. Hence, the hon. member for Lapointe introduced a resolution that you declared out of order, and it is my duty to appeal against Your Honour's ruling because I consider the situation is an absolutely urgent one since the winter works program will be terminated within a week in sections that have been designated as underdeveloped areas throughout Canada.

I, therefore, appeal against Your Honour's ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In answer to the hon. member I must recall the following to his attention, and I shall read it very slowly so that all hon. members, I hope, will agree.

Hon. members will recall that on April 7, 1964, at page 1845 of Hansard, the house sustained a ruling of the Chair to the effect that there was no appeal from a decision made by the Speaker under standing order 26. The house having already taken a decision on this matter, it is my view that it cannot be questioned again during the current session and must stand as the judgment of the house. In this regard I wish to refer hon. members to May's sixteenth edition at page 400, Bourinot's fourth edition at page 328 and Beauchesne's fourth edition citation 200(1). For the above reason I cannot permit this appeal.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to another precedent and bring in several other quotations in support of my right to appeal against your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the standing orders given to me by all hon. members of the house, I must exercise my jurisdiction and say there is no appeal from that decision.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, we appeal on the right to appeal against Your Honour's ruling. Such a right has always been recognized, since Your Honour has even taken the vote of those who—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I would like to call to the hon. member's attention Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 200, paragraph (1).

An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house".

It seems to me that the Chair has given a full and detailed explanation, and I must ask the hon. member to accept the decision of the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept that. If the unanimous consent of the house is required for this, such consent does not exist. I appeal against your ruling on the ruling you have just made, no matter what the parliamentary jurisprudence may have been in the past.

The winter works problem is urgent and we want the question to be put to the vote. We appeal against your ruling on this specific point.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not appealing my decision, as stated in that way; he is appealing the decision rendered by all members in this house on a matter which has been put to the vote and decided by the members in the house. That decision I am applying this afternoon, and that decision I am not going to change.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning our right to appeal against your rulings. In this regard I should like to quote the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin)—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has heard the reasons given, which are good, logical reasons adopted and accepted by members in this house. That is the decision of the house. I am sure the hon. member is not going to force me to take action which I do not want to take. I am going to call orders of the day. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher).

TRADE

U.S. EXPORT CONTROLS ON TECHNICAL DATA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. It is based upon the fact that the United States government, through the department of commerce, has issued an order adding specifications and drawings to their export control list. I want to ask the minister whether he has had any indication that this is going to cause concern to Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies; and if so, what action is his department taking in the matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman has said, there has recently been a change in the United States regulations with respect to export controls on technical data. We are concerned about this matter. We have not had any representations from industry as such, but we are concerned as a government and we intend to discuss this with the United States cabinet secretaries when we meet them next week.

REDISTRIBUTION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONSTITUENCY MAPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Is the minister prepared to table any maps prepared by the representation commissioner under section 8 of the Representation Commissioner Act, for reference during the debate on the redistribution bill?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Transport, who has been responsible for the legislation which is now before the house, to deal with this question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give some consideration to the question raised before making an answer. I am sure the hon. gentleman would consider that reasonable.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, if the minister has time to consider this matter before ten o'clock tonight, I would give notice that I intend to raise this question at that time.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister answers that question, would he be kind enough to disclose how many maps are in existence and whether the maps under this act are actually maps drawn of constituency boundaries?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since this act was passed I have studiously refrained from discussing this question of the existence of maps with the representation commissioner. I have seen none, but I will inquire of him during the day—I am sure there is no secret about it—and I will be glad also to answer that question at ten o'clock.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister suggest that there has been no communication, in reference to a number of maps drawing constituency boundaries in this country, between himself and the chief electoral officer of Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been none, because unhappily that office is vacant. The hon. gentleman means the representation commissioner.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, the representation commissioner.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will answer the question the hon. gentleman intended to ask. I am quite well aware—so is the hon. member and so are a great many other hon. members on the other side of the house—that the representation commissioner has been diligently doing what under section 8 of the act passed by this parliament he was charged to do, and the representation commissioner told me that he was making progress with these matters. But since the day that act was passed I have made no inquiries on my own as to what maps there were. I have seen none of them. I thought it was none of my business; it was the business of the representation commissioner, and I have had plenty of other things to concern myself with, without trying to do other people's work.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Transport agree that the production of such maps, if they exist, would be of great assistance to hon. members in debating this redistribution matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a matter, sir, on which I do not think I have to agree or disagree. Each hon. member has his own intelligence and is capable of making up his own mind as to what assistance he needs in debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Secretary of State tell the house whether he has seen the cards in question?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he assure the house that the new national pension plan will be brought forward during this session?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We expect that to be the case, Mr. Speaker. As soon as we can get the constitutional amendment through—and we are going to proceed with that matter without delay—and the changes that will be required in the bill as it is drafted at present, we will go ahead with that matter.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is consulting with civil service organizations concerning the integration of the Canada pension plan with civil service pensions in such a way as to prevent civil servants from getting the full benefits of the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Pearson: There have been discussions with representatives of the civil service.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the agreement reached between Ottawa and Quebec respecting the Canada pension plan contains a provision allowing a province to change the contributions or the benefits without obtaining beforehand the consent of Ottawa and the other provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: The agreement is that there will be a universal pension scheme the provisions of which will be applicable to all Canadians.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether there has been any consultation with other pension plan holders with a view to integrating the pension plans that they have. Take, for instance, the railway employees; they are quite seriously aroused over this plan, and they and the holders of pensions under many private plans are very anxious to know what is the position with regard to integration, and generally whether the new plan will in any way place them in an invidious position.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can give my right hon. friend the assurance that the new plan will not place the private pension plans in an invidious position; and there will be discussions with private plan organizations, with a view to integration, as soon as that can be done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister what he has in mind in that connection to assure the fullest discussion and consultation with those who are in receipt of or who expect to receive pensions under private plans.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can give the right hon. gentleman the assurance that there will be full discussion, and also that this matter can be discussed by the parliamentary committee. Those who are worried about the relationship of private plans to the federal legislation can appear before the committee, and will, I hope, receive assurances from that committee.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the provisions of section 94(a) of the British North America Act, which emphasize the dominant position of the provinces in the field of old age pensions, the constitutional amendment referred to last Monday by the Prime Minister will include a provision to shift supremacy to the federal government so as to prevent any province or provinces from legislating their people out of any national pension plan at any time in the future.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a reply to that specific constitutional question, except to say that the amendment will be made after consultation with the provinces, and I think will meet all the points required.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Has he had sufficient replies from the provinces to indicate that there will be unanimous support for the plan which he outlined to the house last Monday?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have not had replies from all provinces. I am not sure whether we have had one from Saskatchewan, as well as one or two other provinces; but so far as the replies have been received, they have all been favourable to the arrangement and we are continuing discussions with the provinces on the details.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO THIRD MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question relating to the third meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission which is scheduled to take place here in Ottawa among Canada, the United States and Japan. I wonder whether the minister will tell us when this meeting will be taking place.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, no final date has been set but the matter is under discussion now, and has been for some time, with the two countries involved, the United States and Japan, with a view to having this meeting at the earliest possible date.

HOUSING

DATE OF PAYMENT OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I wonder if the minister could advise the house when those who are entitled to the $500 winter house building bonus may expect to receive their cheques.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, these persons are eligible to receive their cheques just as soon as the certification inspections have been completed and application forms have been sent to the Department of Labour following that certification.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—PERIOD OF SERVICE OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should even say it is a question of privilege since it concerns Quebec wives and mothers.

Have our soldiers been sent to Cyprus for a determined period of three months, ten months or a year, or will they remain on the island for an indefinite period of time?

In their letters, mothers and wives want to know exactly how long their husbands or sons, as the case may be, will remain in Cyprus.

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the stand-by force which was sent to Cyprus consisted of members of the regular armed forces of Canada. They were sent there for an initial three month period with the clear understanding from the government that they will remain there and serve as long as required during the emergency.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of National Defence tell us whether he intends to replace the men presently stationed in Cyprus after a period of three months?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a practical suggestion. Besides, I have infinite confidence in the Royal 22nd regiment and in the excellent job they are doing there.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence.

When our Canadian soldiers were sent to Cyprus, was it understood that they were going for a three month period or did they know whether, following a decision made subsequently, they would stay there as long as necessary?

Could the minister advise us on this matter?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: In that sense, Mr. Speaker, there was no definite period. It was well understood that they would remain as long as they were required to be there for the emergency.

Mr. Caouette: Before they left Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes.

CYPRUS—INTERFERENCE WITH CANADIAN MEMBERS OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition inquired yesterday whether a report had been received from the United Nations on an incident in Cyprus to which he referred. I may say that the secretary general's office has now received a brief interim report on the situation; it confirms only that some shots were fired but that no casualties or damage was suffered. The secretary general's office anticipates receiving within 24 hours a full report after the investigation has been completed, and I will give that information to the house as soon as it is received.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): As we now have an acting high commissioner in Cyprus in the person of the ambassador to Israel, has any direction been given to him to communicate with President Makarios in this regard so that assurances may be obtained from the president?

Mr. Pearson: This is, of course, a somewhat complicated question in that the Canadian contingent is a part, and only a part, of the United Nations force, and for this reason we make our communications concerning our part in that force to the United Nations and through the United Nations to the commander of the force, and through the commander of the force to the government of the country in which the force is operating. That is the correct procedure. We do have a diplomatic representative in Cyprus, however, and on appropriate occasions I agree that we should not hesitate to use that channel of communication with the government of Cyprus, subject to our obligation to the force and to the United Nations and its channels of communication.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Subject to our obligation to the United Nations, does the Prime Minister not agree, in the circumstances, Cyprus being a commonwealth country, that our high commissioner there should be in a position to communicate, and should communicate, with President Makarios; because after all it is Canadians who have been subjected to injustice, if not worse.

Mr. Pearson: I would not like to accept that suggestion without evidence, that Canadians in the force are subject to any other kind of treatment than are other members of the United Nations force on the island. But I do agree that as Cyprus is a country within the commonwealth, and its government is a commonwealth government, our representative there should keep in close touch with that government.

AGRICULTURE

ARDA—DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the appropriate minister in connection with ARDA, but I am a little foggy as to which minister I should address the question. My question is: As a result of the administrative seesawing with respect to ARDA, has there been any delay in the development of programs and the study of proposals presented to the government, or in the processing of agreements?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that this question be put on the order paper for a detailed reply.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I give notice that this question will be taken up at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GREY AND SIMCOE FORESTERS—CONTINUATION AS MILITIA UNIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question of the Minister of National Defence; I have given him notice. Will the minister assure this house that the Grey and Simcoe Foresters will continue as a militia unit in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the minister is prepared to answer that question.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to give any specific assurance until after the Suttie commission has reported its findings and we have had an opportunity to study its report.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENSION BENEFITS TO OFFICERS TO BE RETIRED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can he inform the house when he intends to announce the details of pension settlement benefits with respect to the 500 officers in the air force who are being laid off?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Just as soon as they are agreed upon, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question concerning the great lakes trusteeship. In view of the interviews given yesterday by Mr. Millard to newspapermen, I wonder whether the minister would consider approaching the trustees again to see whether they would be willing to give the same kind of access to their views to the House of Commons committee on labour relations.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to raise the question again with the trustees.

AIRPORTS

ST. HUBERT, QUE.—USE BY CIVILIAN AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): I am putting my question to the Minister of Transport —Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but the minister did not hear me at all and yet he understands French well.

Could the minister tell us if private aircraft will have access to St. Hubert airport and if talks are going on in this connection between the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is surely one for the order paper.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SOUTHERN RHODESIA—INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Is the Canadian government being consulted concerning the request by Southern Rhodesia for an invitation to attend the commonwealth prime ministers' conference, and can the right hon. gentleman give us the government's view on this matter?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I did not hear the whole of that question; therefore I must leave it to the Prime Minister whether he wishes to answer or not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Did the Prime Minister hear it, or would he like me to ask the question again?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I heard it. We have not been approached by the government of the United Kingdom in connection with this matter as yet.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the general practice for other members of the commonwealth to be consulted on matters of this kind?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, and I assume they will be consulted in connection with this matter.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE OF ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the trans-Canada highway construction.

Could he tell the house whether the trans-Canada highway route will be changed in eastern Montreal to satisfy more particularly the people of Maisonneuve-Hochelaga?

Mr. Gregoire: Order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that my question be transferred for debate at ten o'clock tonight.

[Text]

It is a very urgent question, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO OPEN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could the minister advise the house whether the Canadian wheat board will be able to provide an open quota for wheat, oats and barley by the end of the present crop year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should think the wheat board will not be in a position yet to answer that question, but I will make inquiries.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he has yet received any further information with respect to the intentions of the government of British Columbia in connection with the tidal wave disaster on the west coast of that province.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): We have received no request from the government of the province of British Columbia, but I am informed that Mr. Wallace, who is the deputy minister of welfare, is now on the way to Ottawa with some figures, though I believe they will be incomplete.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 22, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman, etc.

Mr. Aiken: Yesterday, when the committee rose, I was pointing out that redistribution has definite political results and that no one can prevent such results occurring.

Since Governor Elbridge Gerry became famous for it some 150 years ago, the only real danger in redistribution has been the danger of favouritism toward the government in power. I think that so-called gerrymandering over the years has always been the case of a government in power facing accusations, often well founded, of adjusting the boundaries of a riding for its own benefit. I think the danger we have to face is this danger, and I believe that is why the government in the present bill has attempted, as did the previous government in the course of a somewhat similar proposal, to remove the question of redistribution from politics.

I ask why it is that having proposed a method of appointing commissioners which seemed fair at the time, and which was acceptable to the official opposition, the government should now favour another method. Is it simply because the official opposition favours it, or is it because the government has discovered an advantage in the new proposal? With all due credit to the Minister of Transport, who accepts paternity for drawing up this bill, I do not believe he would have drawn up one of the most basic clauses in this measure without consulting with the Prime Minister and his colleagues. I ask him—and this is a rhetorical question—why the change? It certainly is enough to make an opposition party very suspicious.

The object of the bill is to have a fair and equitable redistribution without favouring the government party. Furthermore, we want to accomplish this political task, which parliament apparently finds too difficult to handle itself, without leaving the smear of partisanship on those who do it. This is the whole point of my argument today, and this is the whole reason I support the original draft. I hope I can express my reasons clearly.

Every boundary change has political results due to traditional voting patterns. To say otherwise, of course, is incorrect. This is more than merely changing the geography; it is political. It is just so much nonsense to say that the commission can be or ought to be insensitive to the political results of their decisions. In my view the whole point is that they must not be insensitive to the results of their decisions.

If the commissions were given clear directions, a precise formula or tolerance they were bound to follow in changing riding boundaries, perhaps they could operate within this pure vacuum of a mathematical or similar formula that we might create for them. We do not give them this formula, and I do not know how we could. We give them very broad directions that they are to take into account geographical locations and so forth. They will have to do the best they can, and they have an outside tolerance beyond which they should not go. How can they avoid trouble? I do not believe they can. The very first thing that a commission has to decide, for example, is how many seats the province they are concerned with is entitled to under the British North America Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: They do not decide that.

Mr. Aiken: The Minister of Transport says they do not decide that. I should like to know who does.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman will read the act passed at the last session of parliament he will see it is set out right in that act.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept that statement, because the B.N.A. Act is capable of interpretation in several ways. I am advised that one or two cases it is capable of different interpretations. However, I am not making this a point. I am just saying this is an example. Suppose the commissions in each of the 10 provinces decide on a somewhat different basis as to what should be the total number of seats in the particular province. Where are we then? I think this is a difficulty, but it is not the main difficulty on which I base my argument.

It is logical that we must do three things. First, we must remove any lingering suspicion that the fine hand of the government is behind decisions on boundaries. We must remove this suspicion regardless of whether or not any such fine hand is involved. Second, we must remove any suspicion that the commissions will be mere rubber stamps for plans prepared under government supervision or at least under supervision of an official. We must remove suspicion that there will be a closed door behind which these commissions will work, and we should require that a member be admitted who is adverse to the interests of the government with respect to redistribution in order to see what is going on in these commissions.

I am not raising any question about the propriety of the actions these commissions will take. I know they will start out to do a good job. But we must not only see that redistribution is fair; it must appear to be fair, and it must be accepted as such or we will put these public officials, particularly the judges, in a difficult position.

I should like to look for a moment at the two proposals before us regarding the composition of the commissions. In both cases the chairman will be a superior court judge and the second member will be the representation commissioner. With this I entirely agree, but I ask this question. Why do we all agree on the choice of a judge? The answer is that judges are accustomed to hearing evidence and coming to a logical and fair conclusion after hearing the various views. Second, we favour a judge because he, being appointed for life, has no political interest to serve. He is able and trained to act without fear or favour in the result. But how can a judge decide without having opposing views to consider or any views to consider?

The representation commissioner, like the judge, is going to be objective and impartial. This has to be his job. Is it up to the representation commissioner to point out to the judge chairing the commission the political consequences of every riding change and the political consequences of the whole plan? Surely this is not the job of the representation commissioner. He is not political, and surely it should not be the representation commissioner who should go to the chairman of the commission and say "If you move this one over, there is a big group of Conservatives there and they will benefit; or if you move that line farther north there is a group of Liberals there who will benefit". Surely this is not the job of the representation commissioner. Certainly it is not the job of the judge.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or of anybody else.

Mr. Aiken: He is supposed to be impartial and I am sure he will be. So I say that the representation commissioner cannot put forward any political views to the commission. The Minister of Transport has just said that nobody should consider the political consequences of these changes. I agree with him that nobody should, but it is impossible to do this job without considering the political consequences. It is impossible to do so. They are tied as closely to the job of redistribution as the peel is to the orange, and cannot be separated from it. That is why we are divesting ourselves of the job. Anybody with a mathematical mind could draw lines on a map. Anybody with a mathematical mind could take the riding boundaries and say "We will take a little off here and make the riding square; it will look better square". This would be the result. Therefore we cannot accept that no politics are involved. We cannot accept that redistribution must be done in a vacuum. We are giving the job to a judge, the representation commissioner and two other people. When we give it to them we expect them to consider the facts and they have got to consider the political consequences.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit a question.

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman saying that the other two commissioners should not be just as non-partisan and independent as the judge and the representation commissioner?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I am saying that one of them must represent a political viewpoint opposed to that of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Aiken: May I finish this point. I hear a great chorus of objections. I cannot believe and I do not know of anyone here who can believe that this job can be done in a vacuum, who can say that political consequences have nothing to do with the matter and they must not be considered. The commissioners are going to be made aware of the political factor surreptitiously. Let us be honest about it. Somebody is going to whisper. The judge, the representation commissioner and the other two members are going to wonder about it themselves. They are going to wonder what the result is going to be of changing a boundary. They will say to themselves "Somebody has told us it would be a good idea to move this boundary this way. Now, we know it is going to take in 1,000 more people and it is going to bring that constituency up to the limit. What is the result going to be? Will it scuttle a Conservative member or a Liberal member?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: It is impossible to deal with it otherwise.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Conservative government of Ontario has established a commission, which is in existence now, consisting of a high court judge, the chief electoral officer of that province and a professor from Queen's University. It was established under the aegis of Mr. Frost who I thought, at one time, was rather admired over there. I should like to ask the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka which one of these three commissioners represented the Tories and which one represented the Liberals, if I follow his argument correctly.

Mr. Aiken: The answer is none. There is quite a difference between provincial redistribution and federal redistribution. Let us not be naïve, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps the hon. member who is asking all the questions is one of the principal reasons we are concerned.

I come to another point, and that is the method of appointment of the two other commissioners. We have a judge and the representation commissioner. Under the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the judge appoints the other two from a specific group of persons. Now, what is the judge supposed to do? Is he supposed to pick members with different political views? Is he supposed to pick one with a right wing view and one with a left wing view? I do not believe this is his job. He is not supposed to know. He is not supposed to be concerned with the political views of the other commissioners.

Is he supposed to pick members with no political views? If you can find a university person who is interested in redistribution and who has no political views or political ties, I will be very surprised. You cannot find them. If they are at all interested in politics, then they have views and we have heard many of them on radio and television. They are the greatest proponents of political views, and I have no objection to this. If people with no political views were appointed to serve with the judge, what help would they be in assisting him in deciding upon the political consequences of redistribution on an individual riding or on the whole plan? They would be of no help to him, if such people could be found.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the answer is to have the leaders of the two principal parties in the house nominate people who could represent the opposing political views. I refuse to believe that this is not the reason we have an impartial member on the commission, an impartial judge as chairman. If there is a division, two and two, what is the impartial chairman there for if not to make the decision? However, he has to be told what the political consequences are. I am sure of this. I do not believe anyone would suggest they could operate in a vacuum. If the commissioners do not know, they will find out. For example, are they going to blindly cast a map of the province of Ontario favouring the Liberal party all across the board? I would not think so. I do not think they would do that if they knew. Are they going to cast a map rewriting the boundaries favouring the Conservative party, the New Democrats or the Social Credit party in Ontario, purposely giving them an advantage? I do not think so.

I believe the desire is that the members have the whole picture, have all the facts and know what they are doing before they redraw the electoral boundaries of the provinces concerned. They must know all the facts. They must have the political facts openly. There must be members on the commission who will open the door and prevent secrecy. As I said in the beginning, this suspicion must be removed that there is a behind the doors transaction, that there is a closed door deal and that nobody can look into it. We must remove the suspicion that no one will know exactly what is happening until the plans are laid on the table of the House of Commons. At that time we know it is valueless to object because the house has no authority to change those plans. I personally do not agree with that particular provision in the bill, but I am prepared to accept it. We have no power to change the plan here.

I say therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the best proposition for handling this gigantic job across Canada is to have two political persons, not political figures but political appointments to the commission. I want to echo what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West yesterday. I do not believe, myself, that being a politician is anything very terrible. I do not believe that the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of the Opposition cannot make reasonable and fair nominations for this job. I do not believe there is any question but that these nominations could be made openly and aboveboard, so that everyone could see. Do not hide politics under the rug.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question.

Mr. Aiken: Just a minute; we hear various people around the country, and some members in the press gallery, saying we are doing a good job or the members are not doing a job and parliament is going to pieces. Whether or not this is true, I am not going to apologize for myself or any other member of the house who has expressed an opinion; I am not saying for one minute that we should be modest or embarrassed about having political appointments. These political appointments will not have the decision, but they will be able to round out the full commission so that all the facts will be known.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask one question.

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman talked about these appointments being open and aboveboard. He talked in general terms about that. Would he then tell us, so that we will know, what kind of appointments he thinks should be made; what kind of persons he believes should be appointed by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition if the original clause were approved?

Mr. Aiken: Well, I will be glad to do that. I think the appointees should be persons who have knowledge of the general political situation in their own area, who have a general knowledge of representation and who have a good measure of intelligence and judgment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those qualifications are rather general in character. Does the hon. gentleman exclude the chief electoral officer? To put it bluntly, does the hon. gentleman mean that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition should appoint party politicians or party organizers? Is that what he means?

Mr. Aiken: I would not go that far; I would not like the hon. member to put words in my mouth. I said nothing of the kind. I said university people in general who had political ideas were allied to, connected with, or favourable toward a political party, and I did not think it was the job of a chief justice to pick out these people. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition or the Prime Minister would select such persons. In that case I think they are excellent, but this should not be the responsibility of a chief justice.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we had hoped we would not have to make any more contributions to this debate, but some contributions have been made with which we disagree. One might almost come to the conclusion that we should go back and take second reading again because, as I understand second reading, it was to give approval in principle to a bill that would create an impartial means of handling redistribution.

Now it seems that in effect we are getting a very strong argument from the official opposition, which approved second reading, that we should have a partisan approach to this particular subject.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Fisher: No. I will give the hon. member an opportunity to ask questions later, but now I would like to make the point to him that there are other people to be considered. I want to touch on one nonsensical point—

Mr. Aiken: But this is the original bill. This is what we approved in principle.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur has the floor.

Mr. Fisher: I want to deal with this nonsensical argument about university professors. I do not know where hon. members have got their information that somehow the university professors of this country are all lined up in political camps, and you can press a button and so many will line up in each individual camp. I have taken a particular interest in this and I would say to hon. members who put forward this argument that knowing university faculties as I do, you could not identify on any university, by any kind of political activity of a partisan nature, more than 25 per cent of the professors.

I am quite willing to concede that very few of those who are out in the open are Conservative party supporters, but that happens to be occasioned by something completely different, something inherent in the philosophies and attitudes of that party. To get up and suggest that the university professors of this country are a partisan group is nonsensical. I know the hon. member for Carleton could possibly say a lot on this subject.

I can remember speaking to a group of professors at Carleton University a few years ago, when all the professors were gathered together, and at this particular consultation I made the argument, which was supported by one other hon. member of the house, that university professors should take a more active part in party politics, but the response of the meeting was overwhelmingly against that. Repeatedly the professors got up and said they would much sooner deal directly with civil servants than with politicians. Therefore this particular argument that university professors are politically partisan is silly. One can go to Queen's University and look at the social science faculties there. Aside from four or five people, I think you would find some 25 have no connection with any political party and have never taken part in partisan activity. It is a nonsense argument.

Now I want to touch on another phase of this argument. We are concerned in any kind or manner of redistribution with what the Americans call malapportionment. We want to get one vote equalling another vote in another part of the country, and the traditional fear of politicians is gerrymandering when redistribution takes place. That is the thing about which I am so much worried. I want to give a hypothetical case in connection with the constituency of Port Arthur. It is going to be chopped severely in the coming redistribution.

Mr. Woolliams: How do you know until the commission is set up? Would you answer that?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I can answer that question because we are away above the median in terms of population, even if we have a 30 per cent tolerance, so obviously the constituency is going to be altered. On one side there is Fort William, and adjacent to Fort William there is a section of the constituency that traditionally has voted overwhelmingly C.C.F. or N.D.P. Down at the other end of the constituency there is a section which has traditionally more overwhelmingly voted Liberal, and in another corner there is an area that has consistently voted Conservative.

The obvious fear in all members' minds is about what redistribution will do. We are going to be worried about the decisions as to where cuts and changes will be made, and I as an individual member will feel much more confident if I have the knowledge that the appointments to the commission will come out of the categories specified in the amendment and will be made by the chief justice of a province. I shall have much more confidence in that than if, for example, the leader of the government appointed Keith Davey to be his representative on the commission in Ontario, or if the Leader of the Opposition appointed somebody like Dick Thrasher.

I wonder if the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka can see the logic of this argument. He says it is all political. Of course it is all political as far as members of the house are concerned. I see the hon. member for Renfrew South in the chamber, and I can just imagine the worries that enter his mind about the boundaries of his constituency with Renfrew North and the adjoining constituencies. He is probably lying awake nights concerned about the way in which the splits and adjustments are to be made.

The hon. member for Northumberland almost destroyed our faith in her academic detachment when she sort of turned her back on an academic approach to this problem and came out in favour of good old rural voters and the sturdy yeomen of the county of Northumberland. My point is that every member of the house will be concerned and worried. Even the Prime Minister can be expected to worry, because there is a chunk of his constituency which is not so favourable to him.

I see he shakes his head. I am glad to note he is so confident or else so detached, perhaps more detached than the hon. member for Northumberland, but each member of the house has a fear of gerrymandering. My hon. friend from Timmins represents a constituency that is small geographically and has a population well below the median. Obviously there will be some great changes in that constituency, and anybody looking at the voting patterns of that area, from the Quebec boundary over to Kapuskasing and down to the nickel belt, must know it would be quite possible for the hon. member for Timmins to be hived, to use Sir John A. Macdonald's term, if there was an element of the political consideration which the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is advocating.

I believe that a chief justice will make good appointments. With the fact that on each of these commissions we will have the representation commissioner, and with the fact that choices will be made from categories of men who have some knowledge in various fields, we will get the kind of detachment that will destroy, or gradually cause to fall away, the fears I am sure almost every one of us has.

I spent a couple of hours yesterday going over the constituencies that will be affected because their population differences are above or below the median that is to be applied. It is very apparent that there is not a constituency in Canada that is likely to escape some change. Almost every seat, for example, in metropolitan Toronto is going to have an adjustment of its boundaries; it is just inescapable.

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member says "Yes". He will be one of those whose riding will be adjusted and changed considerably; and the constituency of the hon. member for Bow River falls into the same category.

Mr. Woolliams: Why do you say that?

Mr. Fisher: Because of the population change.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the population of Bow River?

Mr. Fisher: I haven't the exact figure.

Mr. Woolliams: Then how can you make that statement? You know why you are making that statement; you have seen maps.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Fisher: That is the funniest thing I have heard, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member thinks I have seen maps, would he also not think I would be holding them right up here? If we want to get a fair and honest approach that all the parties and all the people in this country can trust, we should be putting our faith in the approach embodied in this amendment. When I say this I do not mean to knock, or to suggest that the appointments that might be made by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition would necessarily be bad; but the very fact that they would be making the appointments would lead to some doubts and some fears. I want to be perfectly frank.

Mr. Woolliams: You have been.

Mr. Fisher: In my own constituency I have always found that if you set a Grit to watch a Tory they will watch each other pretty closely, and as someone else is involved I never worry about having a scrutineer in a poll as long as I know I have a good, suspicious Conservative watching a good, suspicious Liberal.

I have thought of this in connection with the proposal originally embodied in the bill, but the whole point of the matter is that I know from experience you can never arrange to have that suspicious Grit watching the suspicious Tory. I would much sooner go for the possibility of someone who is much more detached in his political affiliations and sympathies, someone who will deliberately take an objective and non-partisan approach.

I am sure every hon. member will want to make some appeals or suggestions or representations to this commission, when it gets going on the constituencies. I would suggest to hon. members that if they stop and think about it, it will be much easier for each one of us to approach that commission if we are not looking at it as having a sort of Tory or Grit side. I think this is a point all hon. members should remember. Almost every one of us is going to be approaching the commissioners to find out more about the thing and, if possible, to give them some advice or suggestions. I think we will find it a great deal easier to do this if we can be sure that the people on the board are as non-partisan as possible, as will be the case if they are appointed under this amendment.

It is for this reason that I hope, in view of all the discussion we have had, we can move to a consideration of this amendment. I think my hon. friends who have objected to it realize that this is going to be settled by a vote, that there have been no strings put on the particular vote, and I think it is about time they took their chances on the will of the house in committee.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would answer a question?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, gladly.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member said, as I understood him, that he had absolute confidence in the chief justice of the province. With that I have no argument. If that is his argument, why does he then, in support of the amendment, categorize the kind and class of person that the chief justice can appoint? Why does he not make it wide open and say that the chief justice shall appoint these people? Why do they have to be of a certain class? I think I might tell him that I have some suspicion of something very unusual getting into the act.

Mr. Fisher: I like it as it is, but if any change is suggested I would still prefer to go back to the original proposal. But I think by opening up the categories suggested we are going to get some men on the boards who have a knowledge that is relevant, in the field of demography or geography, to the problem being considered. For example, the chief electoral officer of Ontario is Mr. Lewis. He is also the clerk of the legislative assembly. I do not think anyone here who knows Mr. Lewis and knows his association with the Frost government and the Robarts government will have any doubt about his political sympathies. But I want to make this point clear: Mr. Lewis has proven in the work he has done on the redistribution in Ontario, that has been carried out in the last couple of years, that because of his background of knowledge and work in this field he can approach it, and knows he must approach it, with detachment. I think he would be an ideal person to have on this commission, despite the fact that I happen to know he is an Ontario Conservative. I make that point in rebuttal of what the hon. member said. He would make a valuable member of this commission.

I would also point out that a surveyor general, or someone familiar with the geography of a province, is a particularly useful person to have when you are drawing up boundaries, at least in a province like Ontario or in the northern portions of it. He has some idea of the various hinterlands, of influence, of the traffic flow, the roads, and all the rest of it. I think he can bring to this problem, again, a knowledge. I heard someone ridicule the other day—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? It is germane to the question he is answering now, although he has not finished. If he has that confidence in the amendment that he expresses—and my hon. friend from Bow River has drawn to his attention the first two categories—and if he has that confidence in the choice of these judges, does he not agree that the third part of the amendment, which after exhausting the first two categories makes the judge's choice subject to the approval of the representation commissioner, is not necessary? If he says he has confidence in the judge's choice, why should the choice be made subject to the approval of the representation commissioner?

Mr. Fisher: I have not any complaint with the third category. I assume that the reason, or the explanation, as to why this particular provision has been put in there is as an escape provision in case there are difficulties, in an ad hoc situation, of getting people to do the job. That is what I look upon the provision as being required for. But I would certainly assume that a serious attempt would be made to select from these other people. In a province like Ontario—and I would not want to speak for the other provinces—where you have now somewhere around 12 or 15 universities, you have for example a magnificent geographer at the University of Western Ontario. I know nothing about his politics, but it is a good department. He would be an excellent man to do something like this. I know from the books he has produced that he has an intimate knowledge of the geography, resources, character and make-up of the towns and cities of Ontario. There would be no difficulty in finding people, at least in the province I know best; and there is a great range of people to choose from whose party affiliations would not mean anything.

I may be going beyond the questions that have been put to me, but I just want to say that I hope we can have the question put so we can settle the question now. We are prepared to accept the will of the house—we have to, anyway—and we do think the official opposition has certainly had time and opportunity to parade its objections and criticisms to the amendment before the committee.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question? It may appear to be facetious, but it is not. I was very interested in his argument. I did not arrive at the same conclusion, although I agree with what he said in some respects. I think the hon. member said he was quite content to have a suspicious Grit and a suspicious Tory sitting across the table acting as scrutineers; he would be quite prepared to accept the decision they arrived at because he was not a follower of either party and would therefore get a square deal. But the hon. member said he would look for someone without any partisan influence or leaning at all. I wonder how many such people he could find to act as scrutineers? I think the answer would be none. Therefore the hon. member must accept the decision of the suspicious Grit or the suspicious Tory—and that is the very thing we are arguing about today.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat?

Mr. Aiken: I can do it by way of a question, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Because there are other hon. members who wish to participate in the debate.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member for Port Arthur this question. He stated when he commenced his remarks that he thought we had settled this matter when we voted on the principle of the bill. Would he not agree that what we are now proposing is what we agreed to in principle on second reading of the bill; and what is now proposed by his colleague from Winnipeg North Centre is a change from the original principle?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member knows that on second reading we were debating the general principle of the bill rather than the details. It seems to me that the hon. member is now suggesting that the official opposition had its eye on clause 6—

Mr. Aiken: No.

Mr. Fisher: —and that this determined their particular view. I assumed, in accepting and voting for the bill on second reading, which as far as I know we all did, that we were going to set up an impartial method to handle redistribution. All I was putting as an argument was that the very length and detail of the case being put by the official opposition would lead one to believe that they feel this would be impossible, and that therefore you have to have some kind of political entry into the whole set-up. That is my whole point.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, this debate on Bill C-72 leads me to think that clause 6 should remain as it is, with the addition of a certain minor amendment proposed by the Minister of Justice. I think that the Minister of Transport has drafted a bill which is better than he thought. I know that over the years the politicians have made the decisions on redistribution and there has been much criticism of this. But no matter who makes these decisions on boundaries I think there will always be a lot of criticism.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gives the major decision to our chief justices and their appointees. Following redistribution I am sure there would be much criticism directed towards them, and I do not think we should put our chief justices in that position on a matter so highly political as this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McMillan: Following the reports of the ten commissions a bill will have to be presented to this house. If I know this house correctly, and I think I do, there will be a lot of debate and wrangling here, and there will be criticism directed against our chief justices by hon. members—there is bound to be. If my own riding, for example, was unduly cut up, and I thought it was unduly severe, I would have to rise in this house and say that I thought the chief justice of Ontario and his appointees had made stupid decisions. I would rather be in the position of blaming some political appointees whose job would be to see that this did not happen, or did not happen to any marked degree.

I think this is a political question and that it should be settled in a political fashion. I think the final bill will have smoother sailing through this house if the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition make these appointments. Then I would say that the two major parties would have less reason for complaint when the final bill is presented to the house. If these two appointees are going to look after the two senior parties, I think the other three parties will also be looked after as well.

If these ten commissions were to pay attention only to mathematical numbers it would not be difficult to draw the lines between the different ridings consistent with the tolerance allowance. I think all hon. members in this committee have agreed that we should pay attention to municipal boundaries, to traditional boundaries between ridings, etc. I know of no one better qualified than a political appointee to undertake this duty; I think he would be more aware of these things than anybody else. Such people would bring about a better redistribution bill which I think would meet the desires of most hon. members in this house.

I think the chief justices should act more as referees. This amendment is putting the whole onus of redistribution on the chief justices, which I think should not be the case because there will be much criticism not only from members of this house but from many outside the house. This will not add anything to the prestige and dignity of our judiciary.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some remarks regarding this bill. I do not want to go into the technical aspects; rather I wish to deal with what I might term the logical side. As a matter of fact, it was not my intention to make any remarks with respect to this bill because I believe in the principle upon which it is launched, which is to take redistribution out of the hands of the House of Commons, from which it has had previous experience, resulting in charges of gerrymandering being made. I would rather put it into an area wherein it would be handled by other than members of the House of Commons.

With this happy thought I read Bill No. C-72 when it was first drafted, and on reading the clauses in that bill I must say that I felt it was very fair; so much so that I could not see much wrong with the bill except for one point, and that was with regard to the provision of tolerance. The reason I took exception to that matter and thought it should be higher in percentage points was because I felt that the low percentage points of tolerance would create a parochial type of member of parliament.

At the moment we have members of parliament who represent urban constituencies and portions of agricultural areas. As a result they have a broader view and feel inclined as a matter of responsibility to take into consideration the agricultural side of life in Canada as well as the urban side. A smaller tolerance would have a tendency to create, as I say, parochial members of parliament in that a member will be representing an urban area only while another will be representing an agricultural area only. I am taking exception to this and I hope that when we reach this clause the government will see the light and see fit to make some adjustments in this connection.

The hon. member for Port Arthur said a few moments ago that we gave second reading to this bill, but we are now disagreeing with it. We gave this bill second reading based on the way it was drafted originally, and then when we went into committee on the bill we found that a major alteration was contemplated in the form of the amendment now before us. This is now a bill to which we did not give second reading.

That is an amendment. It was new. We had no idea that it would be included. Charges have been made that the proposal which first appeared would be political. What is wrong with politics. I have heard so much to the effect that there should not be partisanship in parliament. I must say I am in accord with the Minister of Transport, because he is one of those realistic persons who has said that this is the place for politics.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman would not wish to misrepresent my position. I say the House of Commons is the place for partisanship. I say also that an independent redistribution commission is not the place for partisanship.

Mr. Woolliams: Address the Chair.

Mr. Starr: I ran for parliament on a political platform representing a political party and I believe my duty in the House of Commons as a member of the opposition is to provide an alternative to the present government. That is the way in which to conduct the business of this house. Too many people say we should be non-partisan here and that we should all work for the good of the country. We are all working for the good of the country. I had experience, during the setting up of a committee this morning, of the lip service that is given to non-partisanship. A chairman was elected from the government side, as is right, and after election he proceeded to thank the committee and to express the hope that the committee would carry on its work in a non-partisan way for the good of Canada. Very good. Then the name of the vice-chairman came up for nomination, and he was a member from the Liberal side, too. That is a good example of a non-partisan attitude. They say: Let us be non-partisan but we are all going to be Liberals on this committee.

Today we have writers who are naïve enough to suggest that there should be no partisanship even in the House of Commons. What are they proposing—a one party system which would eventually end in a dictatorship? No. Parliament is a place of politics and partisanship. We have a tendency, in paying lip service to the non-partisan idea, to create the same atmosphere outside, and people then look on parliament as an institution which has downgraded itself. Well, parliament is not downgraded. It is the same now as it was in 1952 when I came here. There was partisanship and politics then. That is the way I like it. That is the way it should be. That is why the democratic system works, and when we end this system we will be on the road to dictatorship in this country.

Mr. Woolliams: Attaboy.

An hon. Member: What about the amendment?

Mr. Starr: This is all part of the amendment. I looked this bill over, and the longer I listened to the debate in this committee the more I felt there was some sort of set-up. The minister, introducing this bill, said this work would not be completed for one year.

Mr. Pickersgill: The bill says it.

Mr. Starr: I understand that this whole redistribution will be completed after six months ready for an election in this country? Is that right?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is speaking on a particular clause of this bill, but I assume he has read the whole bill. If he has done so he will know that it is altogether impossible for the provisions in it to be completed in six months or, for that matter, in a year.

Mr. Starr: We will go into that and see whether it will be possible or not.

The act which we passed last December provides that the representation commissioner shall draw up maps with boundary lines in accordance with the census of 1961. These maps are already drawn up. But here is the sticker: They are drawn up on the basis of a tolerance of 20 per cent above or below. Where is that figure contained? It is contained in a provision of the present bill which has not yet been passed, namely clause 13 (b).

The Chairman: Order. I am wondering whether the hon. member is not getting away from clause 6. He has referred to clause 13.

Mr. Starr: I submit that when discussing this clause we are considering arrangements for setting up a commission which would carry out the provisions of every one of these clauses. What authority was given for drawing up the boundary lines on these maps with a tolerance of 20 per cent? The clause making provision for that figure has not yet been passed by parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might ask the hon. gentleman a question. He has made a serious assertion that he knows about some maps which are drawn up on the basis of the tolerance of 20 per cent. I should like to ask him how he knows.

Mr. Starr: Certain members of the house have seen these maps.

An hon. Member: Have you?

Mr. Starr: I have not, and many of the hon. members on the other side have not. But I do not think it is right, and before I am through I intend to ask some questions about it. I intend to ask the minister whether he is prepared to table these maps so that we may study them.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, a decision of the house was made on this point. Perhaps the hon. member for Ontario was not here on orders of the day.

Mr. Starr: I was here.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka asked this question. I said I thought I should like to consider the matter, and he put it down for debate at ten o'clock. And tonight, at ten o'clock, I intend to make an answer.

An hon. Member: That is not a decision of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rose on a point of order, and I have not yet—

The Chairman: Order. The Minister of Transport is on a point of order and I think we should hear him out.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is that there was a decision of the house made one day this week with respect to questions and with respect to debate after questions had been raised. This was an inquiry which, in accordance with that order of the house, I undertook to answer tonight in the adjournment debate after ten o'clock. I intend, of course, to keep my promise to do that. But it does not seem to me that it has anything at all to do with the clause which is now before us, and I suggest that after the kind of debate we have had for the last couple of days we might enforce the ordinary rules and discuss the clause itself.

Mr. Starr: I have pointed out in the past, Mr. Chairman, and you have agreed with me, that it is permissible to discuss other aspects of this bill because of the fact that we are now considering the formation of the commissions. These are the people who would be called on to make all these decisions. I maintain that the decisions have already been made and the question which arises in my mind is this: Why in the world are we discussing the setting up of commissions if they are to be given nothing to do, because the work is all done? It seems most unlikely to us that the commissions are going to take these maps, which have already been drawn up, and make new lines on them. That is nonsense. These maps have been prepared, and I think that is wrong. I believe the minister should table the maps so that we can look at them to ascertain whether the work has been done on the basis upon which I have said it has been done, or whether lines have been drawn on a population basis only. I think it would be only fair to members of this committee if we were to have an opportunity of studying these maps. I am therefore about to give the minister that opportunity by moving, at this time:

That this committee rise and report progress.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member submit his motion in writing?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. Starr) negatived: Yeas, 42; nays, 43.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with certain points. If hon. members are not interested in carrying on the debate and would rather have the vote I would be quite happy to have the vote right now.

Mr. Starr: We want to see the maps. Show us the maps.

An hon. Member: Vote on what?

Mr. Pickersgill: You know what we will be voting on. Surely you have read the amendment by this time.

Mr. Starr: Show us the maps.

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. members do not want to have the vote right now I hope I may have a certain amount of reasonable attention while I deal with one or two of the points raised by the hon. member for Ontario. In the first place, the hon. member for Ontario made an argument which I thought was extraordinary and which certainly indicated that he had not paid any attention to the debate on second reading. At the very end of my speech in closing the debate on second reading I used certain words and I want to put them on the record again. They will be found on page 2216 of Hansard for April 15. I pointed out there that I would not be prepared to vote for an amendment to the bill to establish one single commission for the whole country but, and I went on to say:

> Apart from that, any other suggestions for amendment to any other section of the bill will be considered on their merits. I am speaking for myself, as sponsor of the bill, and I do not feel I should attempt to speak for anyone else in the house.

At no time at any stage of the debate have I attempted to speak for anyone else in the house except with regard to one point, the principle of the bill itself. On that I said, and I was authorized to speak for my colleagues, that the government was committed to a non-partisan redistribution by a commission. That is the only point of principle that there is in the bill and when we voted on second reading that was the only point on which we voted. On that occasion I went on to say:

> I intend to look at these things dispassionately and if I think any amendment is an improvement I am going to say I would vote for the amendment.

That is the position I have taken. I have never sought at any stage of the debate, except by the arguments I have made publicly in the house, to influence any hon. member in his vote, and I do not intend to. I should like to think that there was one member in the official opposition with—I was going to use the word "guts" and I will use it—the guts of the hon. member for Welland to get up and express himself honestly as to the way he really feels, because I simply do not believe that every member of the official opposition agrees with the stand that was taken—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The minister has suggested that members of this house are not honest in the expression of their opinions or in their actions and he must withdraw that statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Knowles: Please.

Mr. Pickersgill: —having quarrelled with nearly everyone in the house, is now seeking to quarrel with me but he is not going to succeed. I should have said "Winnipeg South Centre". I beg the hon. member's pardon. I have no intention of quarrelling with him. I made no imputation against any member of the house. I put my proposition in the negative. I said I could not believe there was that degree of unanimity in the official opposition that has appeared so far in this debate. I am proud to say that I belong to a party in which, when we say there is going to be a free vote on a matter, our members are not afraid to express their views, even if they disagree with those on the front benches.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I raised a point of order and the minister is now evading the entire issue. I ask for the Chair's ruling.

The Chairman: To my mind the minister is not evading the issue. I believe the minister has the right to explain the words he has used and I understood that was what he was doing. I am prepared to accept the minister's explanation of his words. He said he was not imputing motives. Certainly I am in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that no one can impute motives. The minister said he was not doing that, but posing a theoretical question.

Mr. Churchill: It was not motives; it was honesty.

The Chairman: Since the minister is not imputing motives I do not think there is anything he has said specifically that he should be required to withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Perhaps I could interrupt again if I may be allowed to do so. I should like to remind the committee that according to the standing orders discussion in committee must be specifically relevant to the clause before the committee. We are on clause 6 and I would invite all hon. members to limit their speeches to that clause.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour to do that to the best of my ability but I am sure that Your Honour, having permitted the hon. member for Ontario to make certain statements on which he invited me to comment, would not preclude me from making a specific reply. I do not intend to introduce any new or extraneous matter and I will try to keep my reply as brief as possible, but I feel I should reply to these specific points. On the question of the imputation of motives, I am not so sensitive as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre perhaps because I have no—

Mr. Knowles: Please.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I am flattering the hon. member. I am not so sensitive perhaps as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre because I have no feeling of guilt whatsoever in this matter.

Mr. Churchill: I haven't. Are you suggesting we have?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not at all.

Mr. Churchill: You are treading on dangerous ground. Let us have no accusations of dishonesty on this side of the house. I am protecting every member of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has a great sword and buckler, and I am sure they are all well protected. What I do rather resent a little, sir, in a mild sort of way, is the fact that while I sit here listening politely to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, when I attempt to debate, even with half the warmth they do, I am constantly interrupted in the fashion we have just seen. I remember the right hon. gentleman, who now sits over there, when he was over here was very sensitive about this denial to members on the treasury benches of the right to speak in the house without interruption. I hope that is not going to happen on this occasion.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Surely, this has nothing to do with the bill before us at the present time. The minister has made a complaint, so let him now answer the arguments that have been raised by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: If you let me do it.

Mr. Woolliams: He is wandering all over the place and I suggest, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, that you bring the minister to order.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, you will not have to do that; I will do it myself. The hon. member for Ontario made a very serious imputation. I believe the phrase he used was that there was some sort of set-up. I do not know precisely what he meant by "some sort of set-up". I hope before this debate is completed he will say, in plain unvarnished language, what he does mean. If there has been any imputation made, it was precisely in that particular phrase.

Mr. Starr: If the minister would permit, I will explain what I meant.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the hon. gentleman do it in one sentence? Otherwise it is quite obvious I will not be able to complete my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. Starr: I meant to say that the lines have been drawn marking out the new constituencies based, I believe, on the 20 per cent tolerance. The whole thing is set up and the commission has not anything to perform.

An hon. Member: That is what you say.

Mr. Starr: What have they to perform?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member for Ontario would allow me to complete my speech, instead of continuing to make remarks while he is seated.

The hon. gentleman says that redistribution has already been completed because some maps have been drawn. Everybody must realize that no map can have any validity whatever, it can be nothing but an exercise, until such time as this bill or some other bill has been passed and the rules have been laid down. It is quite obvious, therefore, that any maps which may have been prepared—I know there have been maps prepared because I have been told so—have no validity. I have not sought in any way to look at these maps because I knew they could not be anything except tentative and I did not want to have anything to do with redistribution—

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, and any hon. member who did and voted for this bill would not be giving a sincere and honest vote because the purpose of this bill is to keep politicians out of this redistribution. If that is not its purpose, then it has no purpose at all. I took the trouble to read some of the things that were said by the right hon. gentleman over there when he was speaking about this matter from this side of the house. There was no one more eloquent about keeping politicians out of it and yet now the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka seeks to bring them in by the back door.

Mr. Aiken: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I never mentioned anything about politicians being involved in this redistribution. If he wants to categorize the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in this way as making such appointments, I accept that. I made no suggestion that any politician would be on these commissions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked him to give the categories. After he had spent a long time saying you must have people who understand politics and know all about these things, am I to take it from what he says that they would not be politicians?

The plain fact is that if it had ever occurred to me for one minute that clause 6 would be interpreted in the way the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has interpreted it, I would never have introduced it into this house. I assumed that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition would appoint the kind of people that Mr. Douglas Campbell appointed in Manitoba with the approval of the whole legislature, namely the chief justice, the chief electoral officer and the president of the university of that province. I expected the Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition would appoint people of that type. If I had thought they were going to appoint party hacks, party organizers or politicians of any sort—if that thought had ever entered my mind I would have never made such a proposal. I assumed, and I still assume, that the two right hon. gentlemen would not make appointments of people who would be too concerned about whether in the last election people voted Liberal, Conservative, C.C.F. or whatever.

This is not what the commission should do. It should see that Canadians are represented fairly. It should see that municipal boundaries are recognized; that historical factors are recognized and that we take account of geographical and topographical factors so that it will be possible for a member to represent a constituency reasonably. This is the reason we have to have a tolerance. If it were not for that, if this country were homogeneous, if it were all like Scarborough, for example, we could just divide it up mathematically and have no tolerance at all, or virtually none. It is precisely because of the vast geographical differences between the various parts of Canada, because of the topographical differences, that there has to be a tolerance.

As I understand it, and obviously a good many hon. members are much better informed about this than I am, the representation commissioner has carried out such of his duties as he could carry out under section 8 of the act that we all passed unanimously in this parliament. These maps that may have been drawn are merely exercises until such time as we lay down the rules.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question? If these maps are drawn under the act, is there anything in that act that mentions any tolerance? If there is not, why is the tolerance being looked at in drafting the maps in question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I assume the representation commissioner can read. I assume that he has read the bill that is before us.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, all right; that is the point.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would not appear to me that it would be time lost at all. I do not know; the hon. member for Bow River may never have drawn any maps. However, it would not appear to me that it would be time lost to have drawn maps with a tolerance of 20 per cent, 30 per cent or even 10 per cent. One would at any rate have some of the basic work done. The maps could not have any validity in respect of redistribution itself until this bill is passed. This is one of the reasons it does seem to me we should compose our differences here. If we cannot compose them, then we should vote and let the majority decide which way it should be done.

As I have said before in the house, and I say again, I have a preference for the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, I do not believe my original draft is a bad one at all. I do not think quite so well of it as I did before the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka spoke. He raised doubts in my mind that were not there before. I still believe that whichever way we do it, I would be quite satisfied that we would have a workable act. I say let us stop having these rather childish suspicions. Let us get on with it. The very people over there who are so sensitive about the imputation of motives in their case, are constantly imputing motives to others. Does anyone think that the chief justice of Ontario and the chief justice of Quebec, both of whom were appointed on the recommendation of the right hon. gentleman opposite—and that embraces two thirds of the country—think they are going to appoint C.C.F.'ers or C.C.F. professors.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, why would they? I would think those chief justices would be just as careful to make the kind of appointments that we would regard as proper as would the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be terribly afraid of a few C.C.F.'ers who are professors. Personally I do not think they have a ghost of a chance of getting on any of these commissions. If I did, perhaps I would not be so enthusiastic about the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; but there is not a chief justice in any province who was appointed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I would think we are unduly sensitive about this.

The serious point that several members have raised is that giving the right of appointment to these judges we would be dragging them into politics. Personally I do not think it would. I think there would be more charges of political partisanship from people who are neither Liberals nor Conservatives if appointments were made by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, and if I were foolish enough to belong to the N.D.P. I am not sure if I might have a little suspicion of that kind.

To come back to the serious point in this clause, so far as I am concerned I believe that no commission which will be appointed in either manner, by the chief justices of the ten provinces or by the Prime Minister or Leader of the Opposition, will be pushed around by any official and will have to do what he says. I do not think so little of them. I am sure the kind of people who will be appointed by either method will be independent people, with prestige in their communities, people who will be concerned about their own reputations and about doing this job properly as parliament intended it to be done.

So far as I am concerned, I repeat what I said last night, that I would like to get the verdict of the committee on this amendment and, whichever way it went, I would be perfectly happy to move on to the next clause.

Mr. Nugent: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the speech just made by the minister has been the best argument we have heard against the amendment. The minister has advised us before that he was not stuck on one idea or the other, that he was wavering, and that he could move easily back and forth. I am sure it has become apparent, following the debate in the committee, that there are some of us who feel very strongly that accepting this amendment is a slap in the face to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, and that it is an insult to parliament.

The Minister of Transport says that he does not feel very strongly about that. He has emphasized that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are not going to appoint political hacks. I do not think any member of the house will seriously suggest that either of those right hon. gentlemen will do anything other than what the chief justices would do, in other words that they will pick the best men possible to see that the job is done right.

If the Minister of Transport reflects on this I am sure he will realize that the right hon. gentlemen, as suggested originally in the clause, are certainly better qualified, are in closer touch with affairs across the nation, have a little more awareness of the problems and have more ability to pick those people to do the job right. If that is not the kernel of the matter, then I do not know what is.

Instead of relying on these two right hon. gentlemen, as he proposed originally, the Minister of Transport wants to make a change to the chief justices, and then tries to hobble the chief justices by defining the categories of people from which they must choose and, second, providing that their choices must be subject to the approval of the commissioner. To me his argument is redundant. He has answered himself, and I wonder whether he would not like to take a few minutes for quiet reflection on this.

He has indicated that he is not firm in his resolve, that he is quite flexible, and I am sure if he would just pause to consider the few points he himself has made he will realize why the original clause is better than the amendment.

I would like to answer some of the questions raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur, who said he failed to appreciate the advantages of the adversary system. He apparently has something in his mind to the effect that if a person is appointed by a political party and if there is a belief that that person might have a bias—and he probably would have—then in this manner it is impossible to get fairness, and he believes there is a better chance of getting fairness through adoption of the amendment.

The hon. member apparently does not understand our legal system, and the purpose of the adversary system to make sure that you have neutral ground. Through this system you make sure you have an argument on one side and an argument on the other, that each would point out any political advantages that might be gained, and then the chief justice in this manner would be warned, would be able to be guided by political considerations and, because he is aware of them, would make sure that any decision arrived at was truly fair.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

The Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers).

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. ON EATON-KAYE CASE

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of National Revenue and the American authorities under the tax agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to the Eaton-Kaye case and any opinions which may have been obtained from the American authorities on the position of the securities and investment involved in the estate of the late Mrs. Eaton-Kaye since January 1, 1961.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to show the house that this request for papers is a fair and legitimate one despite the point made by the President of the Privy Council a week ago yesterday, when he invoked section 55 of the Succession Duties Act to indicate that this required secrecy. This section does require secrecy on the part of any servant of Her Majesty in connection with the details of anything to do with the Succession Duties Act.

I wanted first of all, Mr. Speaker, in order to put this matter in context, to put on the record a letter I received from the minister's office on April 17, 1964. It is not marked "Personal and confidential" and I know the minister will not mind my putting it on the record:

Dear Mr. Fisher:

Mr. McIlraith has asked me to bring to your attention the following information regarding the Eaton-Kaye estate, further to his conversation with you of yesterday.

Representations were made by Mr. Cyrus Eaton to the successive ministers of national revenue in an attempt to enlist their support and the active support of the Canadian government in resisting the claim for income tax registered against him personally by the United States tax authorities. The successive ministers—

I suppose he is here referring to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) and the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming):

—were sympathetic to Mr. Eaton but it was concluded that the Canadian government could not interfere in the action taken by the United States tax authorities applying the United States income tax law to a citizen and resident of the United States. The tax conventions were not applicable in these circumstances.

Being vested with the responsibility of collecting the taxes imposed by the Dominion Succession Duty Act, the taxation divison could no longer permit the postponement of the payment of the duties owed in connection with this estate when they became five years overdue and a writ was placed in the hands of the sheriff in the latter part of 1963.

It should be noted that the value of the estate of Mrs. Eaton-Kaye would permit the payment of the duties and still leave more than sufficient to pay the amount which is said to be pledged to the Pugwash park commissioners. The minister has been advised that there is nothing in the laws of Canada or the United States which would prevent the orderly settlement of this estate, including the payment of the duties to the Canadian government and the contribution to the Pugwash park commissioners.

Yours sincerely,

The letter is signed by Robert H. Belanger.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to make the point that if you look at the notice of motion it says:

—a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of National Revenue and the American authorities under the tax agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to the Eaton-Kaye case and any opinions which may have been obtained from the American authorities on the position of the securities and investment involved in the estate of the late Mrs. Eaton-Kaye since January 1, 1961.

My first point is that I am requesting the information and exchange of correspondence that has taken place between the Canadian government, particularly a department of the Canadian government, and the United States authorities in connection with this matter, and this letter that I read into the record indicates that indeed some kind of exchange almost certainly did take place, because the letter says:

The successive ministers were sympathetic to Mr. Eaton but it was concluded that the Canadian government could not interfere in the action taken by the United States tax authorities applying the United States income tax law—

Then the letter says that the tax conventions were not applicable in the circumstances. Obviously in determining that the tax conventions were not applicable it was necessary for the Canadian government to have some kind of interchange of information, of which I assume they would have a written record, with the United States government.

I wanted to refer at this time to something that I think is a bit of a precedent, in that the House of Commons records of 1959 show that sessional papers Nos. 189a and 189 were produced; 189 was produced on Thursday, February 5, 1959, and on Thursday, March 12, 1959, 189a was added. At that time what I had asked for—and it was requested in a motion of mine—was a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged by the federal government and officials of the United States concerning the Consolidated Premium Iron Ore Company, the Premium Iron Ore Company, Cyrus Eaton, and F. Daley, from June 1, 1958.

I am not arguing that this is on all fours with the present motion, but what I am arguing is that there was no hesitation on the part of the minister at that time, who is now the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, in providing me with the information in connection with correspondence between J. Gear McEntyre, deputy minister, taxation, and the acting commissioner of internal revenue in the United States. I wanted to suggest that what I had been asking for in connection with these papers is really only secondary or ancillary to any question of succession duties, and the fact that successive ministers gave a hearing to Mr. Eaton when he made representations that this particular matter be held over or postponed until the whole question of the ownership of the securities involved in the estate of Mrs. Eaton-Kaye were cleared up.

Mr. Cyrus Eaton is well known to most Canadians. He is one of our more famed expatriates and is well known as a patron and sponsor of the Pugwash park commission and the whole idea of the Pugwash conferences. Mrs. Eaton-Kaye was his sister and, as the point is made in the letter which I put on the record, she died some years ago. In her bequeathing, as I understand it, she made a pledge of some $100,000 to the Pugwash park commission and some $35,000 to McGill University. Obviously when someone dies that many years ago the action in so far as the succession duties is concerned drags out over this period of years, there has been a view within the Department of National Revenue that it is prepared to accept the contention of the executor of the estate, Mr. Cyrus Eaton. Then the question arises as to why in the fall of last year this contention, whatever it was, was changed or altered. Of course, it was this change that brought me to place on the order paper my motion for the production of papers, in order to get this situation opened up so that I could understand it.

I have had representations from Mr. Eaton, as I know other members of this house have. I make no bones about the fact that I have always been an admirer of Mr. Eaton, not least for his courage in expressing in the United States some views on world and international affairs that cannot help but bring him a certain kind of unpopularity and yet reflect a certain courage in outlook. I wanted to indicate, in order to put the situation as fairly as possible to the minister, that the executor in this case, Mr. Eaton, made an offer in writing last October, as I understand it, and it was made before that either orally or in writing by his solicitor. He made this offer to the department that he was prepared to provide government securities or any other type of security that would be required or asked for by the Department of National Revenue and was prepared to put these, I think the technical term is "in escrow", or in some kind of place where they would be a perfect cover, including interest, for the obligations in connection with the estate, if the government would be prepared to delay action on the particular succession duties until this case in the United States was cleared up.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. The matter before the house is the motion for the production of certain papers. What the hon. member is now discussing is the detail of some tax matters of a particular individual, who happens to be involved indirectly in the case for which he is asking for papers. The hon. member is discussing the merits of that tax position, and the two matters are not related at all. What is at issue now and what should be debated is the question of whether the papers indicated in the notice of motion on the order paper should be produced. The wider question as to the merit of Mr. Eaton's philanthropies or lack of philanthropies, or the question of certain gifts which he has given or is proposing to give, is surely irrelevant to the point.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to gild the lily: I just wanted to identify the matter and I will give the minister an undertaking that I will not go off on to any other point of that kind. However, I do want an opportunity of presenting the reason why I am interested in this case and the information I request.

According to the information which I have from the executor, the largest holding in the estate is a block of Investors Trust Limited common stock. When the U.S. internal revenue service made known its intention to attempt to establish Mrs. Eaton-Kaye's brother, Cyrus Eaton, a Canadian-born American citizen, as the owner of these shares, the problem of double taxation by Canada and the United States arose. The argument, Mr. Speaker, is simply this. If the shares which are supposedly in this estate belonged to Mr. Eaton and they are being taxed by United States authorities, obviously the question arises as to double taxation or even as to the ownership or validity of the shares which are held in the Eaton-Kaye estate.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, then minister of national revenue, thereupon agreed that Canada would withhold collection of succession duties on the Eaton-Kaye estate until the conflicting legal question between Canada and the United States could be resolved. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), when he succeeded to the office of minister, naturally honoured the agreement that had been made by his predecessor, and also undertook to initiate a conference between the appropriate Canadian and American tax authorities as provided by the tax treaty between the two countries.

Subsequently, in 1963, the Department of National Revenue instituted proceedings in the probate court in Halifax to force settlement of the estate and, failing that, to remove Cyrus Eaton as executor. A hearing in the probate court is scheduled for April 24, 1964. Meanwhile the United States internal revenue service is in full swing in its attack on Investors Trust Limited with the intention not only of collecting taxes from Cyrus Eaton on the shares owned by his late sister, but also from American minority shareholders not in any way related to the Eaton family. The minority shareholder phase is in an advanced stage in the United States tax court in Indianapolis, Indiana, in a case involving the Irwin Miller family, prominent Indianians whose principal interests are with two companies, both with important operations in Canada. The Miller case raises questions of violation of both the United States constitution and the Canadian-American tax treaty.

For the purposes of the Miller case, the United States internal revenue service temporarily bypasses its attempt to establish Cyrus Eaton as the owner of Mrs. Eaton-Kaye's Investors Trust shares, and tries to develop a new interpretation of "attribution". Even if majority ownership of Investors Trust was lodged in the late Mrs. Eaton-Kaye and her sister Mrs. Eva R. Webb, a Canadian citizen and resident, the internal revenue service contends that because their brother is an American citizen and resident, Investors Trust becomes a foreign personal holding company under American tax law, and unrelated American minority stockholders are therefore to be subjected to punitive taxation on undistributed earnings and capital gains of Investors Trust, in addition to customary taxation on dividends actually received.

Counsel for the Millers has pointed out that, if this "unreasonable, unjust and absurd" contention should be sustained, every United States citizen who happens to have made an investment in a foreign corporation that is controlled by foreign citizens with United States relatives will nevertheless be subjected to taxation upon undistributed earnings of the foreign corporation, even though the United States citizens who are subjected to the tax would have no control whatsoever over the distribution of such earnings. Compounding the absurdity and injustice of such a result is the fact that the United States minority shareholders would in virtually every case be wholly unaware whether such foreign owners had relatives who were citizens or residents of the United States. It would follow that any United States citizen investing in a bona fide Canadian enterprise would do so at great peril, and this would undoubtedly go a long way toward foreclosing American investment in Canadian enterprises.

This highlights the fact that there is a case before the United States courts brought by the United States internal revenue service dealing with this whole question of the ownership, control and status of this holding company, Investors Trust Limited. As I understand it, the contention of Mr. Eaton, the executor of the estate of Mrs. Eaton-Kaye which falls within the ambit of the Department of National Revenue, is that he has offered to cover the amount which will be levied against the estate if it stands until the time that the United States court case is settled. When the United States case is settled and the whole question of ownership is cleared up, then Eaton is prepared to proceed on the whole matter with the Department of National Revenue, and as an example of his good faith is prepared to cover the obligation which has been assigned by the Department of National Revenue.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in asking for the information contained in this motion I am asking for something that is relevant to this whole question of the tax agreement between Canada and the United States. This is not a simple, clearcut matter of succession duties or of something under the Succession Duty Act. Something much larger is involved. In my previous experience as a member of this house I have been able to obtain information from the interchange of information between the Canadian and United States tax authorities. It is only fair to put fairly bluntly the reasons why I think this information is relevant to me and other members who may be interested.

It seems to me unusual that a person having died some six years ago and some kind of arrangement—I do not know how definite or how tentative it was—is made, in light of what was developing in the United States whereby the case would not be proceeded with, and then suddenly last year, while the case was still going forward, and an offer being made to cover the amount of tax which has been levied and to place it in the form of a bond, or an escrow, or whatever the term is, that this was not accepted or taken up by the government.

I realize that it is not the real purpose of debate on motions such as this to ask the minister for a whole range of answers to everything in connection with such a complicated matter, but the reason I wish to persist with my motion and to ask for this information is because I think that if someone who does business in this country and is executor for an estate which affects a couple of institutions in this country of a very worthwhile kind has made some kind of request, which is usually honoured or agreed to, and has been turned down, and the government is proceeding with its action despite these representations or the previous consideration which had been given, then the government should be called upon to explain.

I know there are one or two other members in the house who wish to make some comments on this matter, and I see that I have exhausted my time, but I would plead with the minister to give us this information, and if he cannot to explain, in view of the information he has given me in this letter, why the particular material for which I ask would not be relevant to section 55 of the Succession Duty Act.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I rather regret we have reached this point in debate on this question because I feel that had the government been willing to co-operate with Mr. Eaton in the proposals he has made about this matter—a very serious matter for my constituents in particular—we would not be forced into this debate and into the difficult decision which the government must make when involved in personal taxation and the divulgence of information associated with it.

At the same time, when I read the notice of motion proposed by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) I find that it would be quite possible for the government to provide the type of information he desires without at the same time divulging any personal details about the tax position of the individual concerned. What the hon. member for Port Arthur appears to be concerned with is what happened all of a sudden between the government of Canada and the government of the United States in relation to this subject. For many years there had been an indication of co-operation between the Department of National Revenue in Canada and the bureau of internal revenue in the United States. One of the results of action taken in both Canada and the United States in connection with the Eaton estate is that very large sums of money presently in the estate will be swallowed up by legal fees and costs.

In this regard I should like to put on record a few comments from the chairman of the Pugwash park commission who informed me in a letter dated November 4, 1963, as follows:

> As presently constituted, the park commission is playing an important part in local development, much of the money being channelled toward educational endeavours, and I know that this sum, if made available, would be of tremendous value locally. We are fearful that the estate may be absorbed by the tax collectors in Ottawa and Washington.

I can well appreciate the concern of the Pugwash park commission in this regard. There is $100,000 involved here which would go to this commission, and though the estate is substantially larger than that, succession duties, which, I understand amount to about $111,000 on a $356,000 estate, will make considerable inroads on this money. Associated with this we must face the fact that there is no way of knowing what the net result of the court action in the United States is likely to be or what amounts the revenue bureau of the United States intends to demand. In addition, there are the court costs and the legal fees involved as a result of actions taken in the courts in the United States and in Canada.

I feel that the proposal put forward by Mr. Eaton that he would, in effect, guarantee the succession duties involved to the Canadian government if it did transpire that the Canadian government was entitled to them was one which should have been given very serious consideration. Indeed, I believe it should have been acted upon by the present government when the proposal was made. It seems to me that the correspondence which the hon. member for Port Arthur desired might well provide us with the information we need in this regard. Unless we are given access to this correspondence we are obliged to make an assumption of some sort—an assumption which comes to my mind and which I should like to have removed. That is, it may well be, if one goes back a short time in history to the Premium Iron Ore case and the many developments related to it, that officials in the Department of National Revenue in Canada and their counterparts in the United States might well have reached the point of persecuting this man because he was successful in proving that the contentions he made in the Premium Iron Ore case were correct. Here again we see this man being badgered by tax collectors both in Canada and in the United States, and should it develop that once again the position he takes is proven to be correct, then indeed the type of motion which the hon. member has brought forward will bring the facts to light and provide us with information by which we can judge what action should be taken in this regard.

As I say, I regret we have to reach the point at which the government must undertake some soul searching as to whether or not certain information should be made public. At the same time, the hon. member for Port Arthur has indicated that a former minister of national revenue, now the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) was willing to set a precedent in this respect and make information available to the public in the Premium Iron Ore case. I hope the government will take the same attitude in this case and make available the information which is now requested, or at least that portion of the information desired which will in no way involve the personal aspect of an individual's tax submissions.

I do not know what more I can say to the Acting Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McIlraith). I hope he will agree to the request of the hon. member for Port Arthur and try to do something which will eliminate the very heavy legal burden which is now being imposed on this estate. I should like to reiterate what the hon. member for Port Arthur has said about the man who is involved in this matter. Although he is presently a citizen of the United States, Cyrus Eaton, as I think the minister is aware, has a close association with Canada and especially with my constituency and with the village of Pugwash.

His efforts, while debatable in the minds of many, have been very significant from an international peace keeping point of view. The attention he has brought to Nova Scotia through the Pugwash conferences and his interest in agriculture in our province has been most significant. As the minister is considering this matter I hope he will consider it from the point of view of Mr. Eaton not being a citizen of the United States alone but rather a citizen of the world, a particular type of individual who has made a most significant contribution to the present state of world peace and an individual who has been very generous in his efforts to promote peace and an interest in Pugwash that will be lasting and of value to the people of my constituency.

We have a high regard for Cyrus Eaton in Cumberland county. We do not take kindly to the fact that while a former government agreed to co-operate with him to bring about the least amount of damage possible this estate is now faced with the particularly heavy burden of a lawsuit in the Canadian courts that does not need to be there. It would not be there if the government had been willing to go along with the proposal made by Mr. Eaton, but it is there because of some reason about which we have not been informed.

We would like to know why the government is taking this action. If the request for information that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has made will provide this knowledge then I as a member of parliament am most anxious to see the information tabled. I am pleased that the hon. member for Port Arthur has brought this motion forward, although I regret that it was necessary for him to have to do so. I also appreciate the problem that the minister faces in reaching a decision whether or not this information should be made public. But I must indicate to him that in view of the surrounding circumstances I have no alternative but to support the hon. member for Port Arthur in his efforts to have this information tabled and I hope the minister will also support the hon. member in this regard.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few comments to make on this motion and they are brought about because of the fact that I had some connection with the Department of National Revenue at a time when the gentleman who is indirectly referred to in the motion had some difficulty, with which I became familiar. At that time, and in view of the circumstances which he related to me, I had no hesitation whatsoever in carrying out the suggestion made to my predecessor that the Canadian tax authorities might very properly use their influence with the American authorities with a view to implementing the very thing for which tax conventions are supposed to provide, the avoidance of double taxation. So the opinion which I expressed to the officials of the department was that an effort should be made to settle the matter with their American counterparts so that it might be settled once and for all.

I was assured by Dr. Eaton that as far as the succession duties owing to Canada were concerned they would be absolutely guaranteed, and it was on that basis that I became convinced that we should use our good offices to bring about a settlement of this matter.

With regard to the production of papers, I have some quite strong views on the production of papers relating to taxation with respect to an individual and as between countries. I think that such correspondence should be very carefully guarded. At the same time I suggest to the minister that I believe he should use his influence with the American authorities to bring about a settlement so as to avoid double taxation. I think it is possible to get this matter settled.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) had to bring the matter before the house. I think it should have been settled without a motion for papers being necessary, but it has not been settled. I cannot vote for the production of such papers but I strongly urge the minister to use his influence and the good offices of his department with their American counterparts to bring about a settlement of this difficulty.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am somewhat surprised at the tenor of the discussion on this motion. I want to read the motion before the house. It is in these words:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of National Revenue and the American authorities under the tax agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to the Eaton-Kaye case and any opinions which may have been obtained from the American authorities on the position of the securities and investment involved in the estate of the late Mrs. Eaton-Kaye since January 1, 1961.

It will be seen that the motion is so drafted as to ask for information with relation to a particular tax return, and is specifically limited to a particular tax return and the information in connection therewith. The discussion has ranged much wider and covered a very much broader field.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) read a section of a brief pertaining to a certain subject. I do not know who prepared it or whence it came but in any event it dealt with a much wider area than the motion does. Then the hon. member proceeded to make certain statements of fact with regard to particular things having been done in respect of this tax matter.

The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) said some things in his remarks about Pugwash park and so on with which I found myself in agreement, but the point I am seeking to make here, with deference, is that those remarks, however much we may agree with them, are irrelevant to the motion before the house.

Then, the former minister started to say what he had recommended in this particular case, and then he drew back from that and went on to deal with the larger question of the problems that arise in the double taxation field under the tax agreements between the two countries. This of course is a subject of great concern and very much open for discussion, but any discussion of it is not related to the particular case. I understood his remarks to indicate that that was what was involved in this case. Whether it is or is not, I find myself not in a position to say.

Here is the difficulty, as I see it. As a matter of public policy, surely the answer to this motion must be that since compliance with the motion would involve a disclosure with regard to the affairs of a particular person or a particular tax return, then surely we must adhere to the position that such information cannot be disclosed. In a moment I am going to read the relevant sections of the act that seem to support that general doctrine. This doctrine has been asserted for years by succeeding governments in connection with all questions of this kind requesting information about particular returns—

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

Mr. Fisher: Will the minister let me ask a question?

Mr. McIlraith: In a minute—or whether the information is requested in a notice of motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Fisher: Since the minister has narrowed this down to the particular Eaton-Kaye case, would he give me his opinion on a request for information exchanged between, let us say the government of the United States and the tax authorities on the question of the ownership of shares in Investors Trust Limited? I know that is not an easy question to answer, but I am trying to find out if it would be possible for me to so adjust or alter the motion as to obtain what I want and also meet the minister's objections.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to answer that question offhand. If the hon. member wants to deal with another question on behalf of the particular person who seems to have become the subject matter of this debate, although for the life of me I do not know why, if he wants to ask any questions of the other government, then that may be looked at. I would want to consider that rather carefully because that is quite a different thing from what is before us today.

In his remarks the hon. member made reference to sessional paper No. 189A dated March 12, 1959. I took the trouble to send to the Journal's office to get that return, but I find it does not in any way vary what I have just said. It does not violate, in any way, the position taken by myself as to giving the information asked for in this connection, nor the position stated by the former minister of national revenue on this same point. I do not want to read the return into the record because that would eat into the time available. However I invite hon. members to look at that return, and they will see it does not give any information relating to a particular tax return.

In support of the principle I have outlined, about its being contrary to public policy to give information about a particular return, I would draw the attention of hon. members to the succession duty act, which has since been repealed, but which governed the returns made in the earlier years in this particular case. Section 55 imposes an obligation of secrecy, and it reads as follows:

> No person employed in the service of Her Majesty shall communicate or allow to be communicated to any person not legally entitled thereto, any information obtained under the provisions of this act, or allow any such person to inspect or have access to any written statement furnished under the provisions of this act.

This was the provision contained in the old succession duty act. The provision in the Estates Tax Act is in slightly different form and says that, except as authorized by this section, no official or authorized person shall knowingly communicate or knowingly allow to be communicated to any person any information obtained for or on behalf of the minister for the purpose of this act. I merely cite these sections in support of the principle I have asserted.

It seems to me that the best case that could have been made from the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur in putting forward this motion is that he is seeking papers in a particular case in order to make a general argument concerning Canadian-United States tax relations. I am sorry to have expressed it this way, but that is the best I can take out of his case. However desirable it may be, surely that general proposition cannot be used as an argument for disclosing the information in a particular case and to get the returns made in a particular case. It seems to me that is something nobody would question. Otherwise, any member in this House of Commons could come forward, and if he were skilled as the hon. member in making his argument on a general proposition that he wanted to discuss, obtain any tax return or any information on any tax return by relating it to a general proposition which is, properly the subject of the House of Commons. There is a method by which persons who are concerned with particular tax returns can get information, but it is very strict and very difficult and they must assume certain responsibilities when they obtain it in that way. Surely, they should not be able to come into the House of Commons and obtain not only the returns of taxpayers—

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if I could ask the minister if he would define "tax returns" in the sense he is using the term? I had not thought that what I was asking for was a tax return in any sense. I thought it was material relevant to a particular question in connection with a tax case.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I used the words loosely, but I have been accustomed to using them that way for many years. In estate work, you file the return on the prescribed form and it is invariably followed by a great deal of supplementary information by way of correspondence, company statements and other supplementary material. I have always used the term "tax return", when referring to that kind of correspondence, including all the documentation because, except in very small estates, the information is rarely embodied in the first document filed.

In income tax cases that would not be true; but that is the practice in estate tax work, and I had used the income tax term rather in the sense of embracing all the information that is obtained in order to enable the tax authorities to make the assessment and to determine the amount of tax payable.

Now, there was one other assumption and I hope the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) will not mind my checking him on it. It was his assertion of his assumption of officials persecuting the taxpayers. In discussing a motion for the production of papers I definitely suggest it is going pretty far to make such assertions about what was done or not done in the particular case, because I am not in a position where I can come forward and agree or disagree. I am not going to agree with the figures he has given because that would be giving the information about the taxpayers returns by one device or another, and I do not propose to do that. I would hope it would not become the practice to make that kind of charge on these motions.

He referred to the generosity proposed by a former minister to Mr. Eaton. Surely that is not the basis of our handling of tax cases. To me it is absolutely essential that there be great strictness in applying the tax laws equally under the statutes, and I would hope there was nothing implied by any deviation from that policy, however worthy or unworthy the individual person concerned may be.

The point I want to make is that his worthiness or unworthiness is surely irrelevant, and reference to generosity of a taxpayer cannot be the basis of dealing with these matters. The obligation of a government must be to apply the taxes equally to all persons in precise accordance with the law, and I would take it that it was not intended to deviate from that.

I see it is getting on and my time has almost expired, but I would like to get a determination of this motion. For the reasons that I have given I have no alternative but to refuse the motion because I believe it means giving tax return information about an individual taxpayer's affairs.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask one question before the minister sits down?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Fisher: In the communication which the minister was kind enough to send me, and I appreciate the fact that he did give me some information, he indicated that representations were made by Mr. Eaton to successive ministers, and one minister in the previous administration agrees with this. That has raised the possibility that there is another element involved in this, apart merely from the succession duties aspect of it.

I would ask the minister whether in view of the, let us say, very high wall which he has now built up against giving any information of any kind, could I or any other member get information on this other question which is related to the estate but involves another principle?

Mr. McIlraith: I must say, about the letter, that it was not written by me. I had not seen it until this afternoon, but I must take responsibility for it. However, had it been seen by me I can assure you it would not have been sent out. In any event, coming to the narrow point raised by the hon. member, I would be willing to look at the possibility of examining what he has now raised in debate, to see if there is any information that could properly be given without violating the principle I have asserted. I cannot give a categorical answer on it now, as I should like to study it pretty carefully.

Mr. Fisher: I would be prepared to withdraw the motion if the minister would give me the assurance that he is willing to sit down with the hon. member for Cumberland and myself, and just talk over the possibilities of giving us information on the general questions we have raised in connection with this other aspect of the estate.

Mr. McIlraith: If that is limited to the public part, the general question, I would be very glad to discuss it with the hon. member to see if there is anything that can be given.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge upon the minister, if it is at all feasible, that he accept the proposal of the hon. member who has just offered to withdraw his motion. In view of the things said today I think we would be derelict in our duty if such a conference was not held before we proceed with any other technical procedures that may be involved.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to make it clear that I would not give any information about the individual return.

Mr. Lloyd: It has been suggested that an offer has been made by a taxpayer to lodge securities in settlement of an obligation to the crown. In the light of what assets are available for the crown to attach, which so far as I know are limited, if anything, I would suggest this matter is of great urgency for such a discussion.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Fisher: If I understand the minister correctly, then I am prepared to withdraw the motion. I then look forward to having the opportunity to discuss with him, together with the hon. members who have taken an interest in this, what information it may be possible to give us, always having regard to the fact that under the rights of the house I can come back and frame my motion in another way to get more properly at what I have been asking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member for Port Arthur to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business is now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows: First: the hon. member for Kootenay West:

As a result of the administrative seesawing with respect to ARDA, has there been any delay in the development of programs and the study of proposals presented to the government, or in the processing of agreements?

[Translation]

Then, question No. 2:

In view of the fact that in 1962 an act was passed by parliament making provision for the building of a railway in Gaspe peninsula, does the government intend to renew this act before it expires on December 31, 1964?

[Text]

Question No. 3: the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka:

Is the minister prepared to table any maps prepared by the representation commissioner under section 8 of the Representation Commissioners Act, for reference during the debate on the redistribution bill?

The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five p.m.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman, etc.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-72, an act to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions. When the committee rose at five o'clock we were considering clause 6 of the bill and an amendment thereto by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, we heard before the supper adjournment a few innuendoes cast at members of the opposition for taking what I conceive to be a proper stand and being critical of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, particularly with regard to the composition of the commissions which must be set up. I noticed that when we were debating this question for a good portion of the afternoon the Prime Minister was in his seat. This to me indicates a proper interest in the amendment that was proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am sure he was here to hear the remarks of hon. members in so far as they concerned the integrity of the leaders of the two main political parties in this country with respect to the appointment of members who would be comprising the commission that is to be set up.

I want to say a word or two about the comments of the hon. member for Port Arthur, when he was being so vehement about the integrity of the judges and the impartiality of the judges who would appoint the other two members of the committee. There were questions that we put to the hon. member which I do not think he answered satisfactorily and which I do not think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has yet answered in any satisfactory fashion. I am therefore going to put them again. Questions that occur to my mind are these. Here we have a member of the party to which the hon. member who proposed the amendment belongs saying that we should trust implicitly the judgment of the judges who are to appoint the other two members. They say this on the one hand, and yet on the other hand they say: We are not going to trust them absolutely, because we are going to subject them, in the third classification of these selections which they may make, to the approval of the representation commissioner. It seems to me, sir, that you either have implicit confidence in the choice of the judges, or you do not have that implicit confidence. The very words of the third section of the amendment suggest that the member who proposed the amendment does not have that confidence which he says he has.

If you subject the selection of the judges to the approval of the representation commissioner, surely this erodes at the very foundation of the confidence of those members who support the member for Winnipeg North Centre in the amendment he proposes. It seems to me that if the hon. member asks the members of this committee to appear to be pure, he must also go the full circle and be pure himself. We have heard many words spoken in committee this afternoon about the lip service that is paid to impartiality and purity in the commission that is to deal with the selection of the members who are to serve on these commissions. I cannot think of any better provision than that which now appears in the bill to assure the impartiality that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre desires to be present in the commission which is to be considering the boundaries that are to be revised.

We have heard of the existence of certain maps. I have not seen any maps that have been drawn by the representation commissioner or his staff, but I think if such maps have been prepared we, as members who are vitally concerned with the composition of the commission, are entitled to see them; for surely if the representation commissioner and his staff have gone so far as to prepare these maps, I submit it suggests, sir, that a decision has already been made. I think the hon. member for Ontario raised a very important point. The point he raised was that the maps that have been prepared, have been prepared on the basis of a 20 per cent tolerance. If this is so, there surely has been a bypassing of the very responsibility that this committee is charged with, namely whether the tolerance is going to be 20 per cent; because if the maps as they exist have been prepared on the basis of a 20 per cent tolerance, it seems to suggest that the assumption has been made by those in power that this is going to be the tolerance regardless of the views of this committee and regardless of the views of parliament, and whether or not parliament passes this provision in the bill, the maps have been produced and these are to be presented to the representation commissioners.

This places the commission in the position of being a rubber stamp. This suggestion has been made before and it is one that has not yet been answered by the Minister of Transport or by the member who has proposed the amendment. Many innuendoes have been made by the Minister of Transport as to the motives of this committee in advancing criticism of the various provisions of this bill. Every hon. member who has risen so far to speak on the bill has, I am sure, advanced constructive criticism on clause 6 and on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have said before, and I say again, that there can be no question about the Prime Minister of this country and the right hon. leader of the official opposition making selections on a basis that will be acceptable to all Canadians wherever they may be. In this amendment we have the proposal that we are going to take away from those gentlemen, who are most familiar with and most experienced in the problems involved, the matter of reconstructing the constituency boundaries of this country and place it in the hands of people who know nothing about it. Surely we must have consideration of the fact that the Prime Minister and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition have some small knowledge of the political considerations that should go into the reconstruction of constituency boundaries. It seems to me that we are degrading the very foundation of our parliamentary institution in the country by even suggesting that anybody other than the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition would be most capable and most suited to make the selections of those who are to serve on the commission.

The Minister of Transport also suggested that there was some question as to the honesty of the motivation of hon. members on this side of the house when they were advancing criticism of this bill. He made mention to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre strapping on his sword and buckler in order to defend the virtues of the criticisms of members of the opposition. I suggest to him that we on this side have every reason to be suspicious in view of the obvious deal which has been made between the Liberal party and the New Democratic party with respect to this particular amendment, of anything that is advanced by the Minister of Transport or members of the treasury benches.

Mr. Woolliams: You mean, they are married.

Mr. Nielsen: I think, as the hon. member for Bow River has suggested before, there has been an obvious bundling under the bedclothes here with respect to this amendment—and if the minister were honest with himself, he would agree.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

There is one other matter for which the Minister of Transport must be brought to task, and that is that, according to page 741 of Hansard, he led us to believe that this bill would advance through the committee stage —and this was the reason it was passed with such facility on second reading—without any question of an amendment to clause 6. Then all of a sudden we are confronted with an amendment which has been the product of the deal which has been arranged between the Liberal party and the New Democratic party.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I find the remarks of the hon. member very repugnant, as I am sure do all hon. members on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): What is the point of order?

Mr. Macaluso: Perhaps hon. members will allow me to get to it. The hon. member for Yukon referred to members on this side of the house making deals with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Many hon. members on this side of the house have expressed their disagreement—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Macaluso: Perhaps I am wrong and there should be a point of privilege. The hon. member for Yukon made remarks directed against members on this side of the house; he said that they were making deals. Many of the members on this side have spoken against the amendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, so I do not think there has been any deal or bundling under the bed clothes. The hon. member is making remarks in his usual manner, not based on the facts at all. I think that before the hon. member says that there have been any deals or bundling he should give us his facts for that statement. As far as I am concerned and as far as many other hon. members are concerned on this side of the house, we know of no such deals, and the hon. member, in his usual, ineffectual—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member agrees that no question of privilege arises there. This is a matter for debate.

Mr. Nielsen: I have used the words of the Minister of Transport himself. I have heard only three speakers on the opposite side who have had the guts to get up and say what they think of this bill. They are the hon. member for Welland, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, and I should also include the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member not realize that there are many members on this side of the house who were prepared to support the original bill until hon. members on the other side of the house started speaking?

Mr. Nielsen: First of all, Mr. Chairman, may I welcome the hon. member back to the house. Second, may I say to him that we are not included in these deals which are made between the N.D.P. and the Liberals, so how are we to know whether hon. members opposite are prepared to support the original bill? However, I am glad to hear it because I think the Minister of Transport led hon. members on the government side to believe that they should support the original bill, and it was not until the Minister of Justice, with that way he has of often contradicting the Minister of Transport, came into the house and intimated the opposite that there seemed to be some difference of opinion among the government members. If that support that the hon. member who raised a question of privilege indicated exists does in fact exist, then I am exceedingly happy because I for one have faith in the judgment of the Prime Minister of this country and the Leader of the Opposition to make these selections.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I am amazed at the Minister of Transport and at the way he is trying to pilot through the house this particular piece of legislation. I want to say to him that if he, in turn, would stick to his original thinking, which was sound—and often times first thoughts are a lot better than second thoughts; not always, but in this case they are—then this house could get on with the business in front of it.

Just think what it would mean if we had a commission appointed by the chief justice of a province who, in turn, would appoint a member of the bench of that province as chairman, and who had the task of appointing two other people to the commission. These appointees would sit down with the commissioner and they would make the decisions. They in turn would owe allegiance to the people who made the appointments. One might try to comfort his mind by thinking that it was something which would be far above partisan politics, but other elements enter into the making of these appointments which throw the whole thing into the wrong perspective. The hon. member for Welland put his finger on the point when he said that he would not want to criticize the judge who made those appointments. Neither would I, nor would any other hon. member of this house. Therefore, let us think twice about passing any legislation which draws the judiciary into, and makes them part of, political controversy.

I think such a step as that would be a mistake, and that the Minister of Transport is not helping to get this legislation through by sitting there in his pilot's position, smiling, but doing nothing about it. He is just sitting there. If he wants this legislation to go through he had better start thinking.

Some hon. members have suggested that the commissioner should make these appointments or that they should be submitted to the commissioner for approval. If my guess is right there are plenty of functions and headaches in front of the commissioner without loading him up with this particular problem, and I hope that we in this house will have some sense and make the work of the commissioner possible instead of submitting him to any such task as this.

That brings me back to the question how the job should be done. The original suggestion was that the Prime Minister would make one appointment and that the Leader of the Opposition would make the other. I have talked about this to a great many members. We have thought about it and discussed it from every angle, but there is no way that I see to improve the wording of the original bill.

I have nothing to say against appointing other officials to this commission, university professors, for example. There are many fine, upstanding and intelligent university professors. But I think it would be an imposition on them to ask them to do this work. Their minds are attuned to a particular field which is not a political field, and in order to think intelligently about constituency boundaries one is immediately brought into a political arena. Why should we expect a professor of history or a lecturer in law to sit with a judge and produce a wise final decision with regard to constituency boundaries? Even with the help of the commissioner, how could these people put their minds to it and come up with the right answer? This is purely a political matter. The suggestion which was originally made might be open to criticism, but I can assure the minister that the amendment, if it were to be accepted, would be subjected to even stronger criticism. The original proposal put forward by this government has the greatest merit of any which have so far been placed before the committee.

When it comes to the question of confidence, I believe the men appointed to these committees must be good men, sound men, men not placed on those commissions because of any political feeling. Lord knows, there are plenty of those. If the Leader of the Opposition had the power of appointment there would be no problem in the Conservative party about getting good men appointed and I believe just as strongly that with all the men he has to choose from in the Liberal party the Prime Minister would be able to appoint men who would do a good job, men who would work with others on the commissions and produce results which would be acceptable to all.

I am interested in how these commissions would carry out the work assigned to them. It is true they will get guidance literature. Some of this has already been published in various articles and released to the public. Much of the information I have comes from these sources. I have done some study and research in connection with the system in Australia as well as with the system followed in Britain. I have had the benefit of talks with others interested in this subject and the big problem concerns the tolerance; is there to be a 20 per cent or a 30 per cent tolerance? Or is the figure to be still greater?

The Chairman: Order. May I remind the hon. member that we are trying to consider clause 6 which has to do with the appointment of the chairman and other members of the committee. By agreement some time ago it was decided that the question of tolerance be left until we reach clause 13.

Mr. Kindt: I was trying to establish the fact that these commissions will have to do a certain amount of work with figures in order to decide what the boundaries should be. I am concerned with how this work will be done. These are details about which the minister knows but with which, apparently, he is not concerned. This is where the fly in the ointment is. This is where the nigger in the woodpile is. The minister has this information, but he will not tell us how it is being figured. What is happening is this: They start with the cities and then work out to the country, and in making their calculations what is left over from the country is the residual. The commission then decides what the tolerance is to be and how much is to be given to the country. The percentage may range from 1 per cent to 20 per cent or from 1 per cent to 30 per cent, depending on whether you start with the rural areas and go into the cities or whether you start with the cities and go out into the country. There is a feeling that there should be representation by population. There is all too much of that thinking in the minds of those who may be doing this figuring and I think we should consider the matter carefully before we pass this legislation.

[Mr. Kindt.]

As to what may have already been done, I do not think that any maps which have been worked out or printed should necessarily be spread on the table where they could be published in the newspapers or elsewhere. I think it would be altogether premature to do that. I do not think any of these maps are final. But if they could be examined behind the scenes in some way so that everyone could see the method which is being followed I think it would be of advantage to this committee. That could be done as long as the information was not published in newspapers across Canada—and as long as the Minister of Justice, who is smiling, would not see his constituency on the map at the present time, because these maps are bound to be only tentative and no one would want copies of half a dozen tentative maps published all over Canada.

The commissioner was appointed under an act of parliament to do the job he is now doing, and undoubtedly he has been working on it for six or eight months, following a process of trial and error, and comparing different systems to find out whether this or that particular method would work or not. I imagine he has these things pretty well worked out, or at least I have heard this suggestion by other hon. members. I still think a committee of the house might go and examine these maps and then come back and report to the house if it wishes. However I do not think the information should be published in the newspapers far and wide at this stage. I do not think anybody would want that done. But since this is public information I think it should be made available in some way to members of this house or to a committee representing members of this house.

An hon. Member: What about clause 6?

Mr. Kindt: I want to say something about how these commissions are going to do their work. Therefore I am on clause 6; I am right on the bill. I am just about through. There is another factor about the way these commissions are going to do their work. They are going to be faced with the problem of making decisions on things about which they do not know anything. They will have to be arbitrary and operate in the dark unless somebody is invited to give them suggestions. Therefore I think there has got to be some sort of mandatory public hearing to give members and others a chance to offer suggestions. In my view this should be embedded in the legislation for the guidance of the commissioners so they can properly discharge their function, in order that when the job is done everyone will feel that he has had something to say about the moulding of the decisions. Then you would have agreement. You will never get 100 per cent agreement but you will come closer to it by proceeding in that way than by leaving the matter to arbitrary decision.

I do not see how any commission that is set up is going to be able to operate and do this job without some opportunity being provided for members to offer suggestions as to what changes should be made when the new boundaries of their constituencies are being drawn.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pigeon: A real filibuster.

Mr. Carter: —I should like to take a few minutes to say why I think we should adopt this amendment. My first reason is that in my opinion it is more in keeping with the general principle of the bill than the present clause. I say that because the general principle of the bill, which was adopted by the house, is that we should have some impartial method of revising the electoral boundaries. The more impartial we can be the more we will be keeping to the general principle of the bill.

The reason we are taking this step is that in the past we have been criticized for following the old method of redistribution. That method was to set up a parliamentary committee whose members were chosen, if you like, by the prime minister, the leader of the opposition and the leaders of the other parties. The present clause in the bill retains part of that principle. It is not quite as fair as the amendment because it retains the principle for only two political parties and not for the others. The amendment takes care of that, and I think that is all to the good. Either we want to get away from the old method of redistribution or we do not; and if we do not, let us be honest about it. But if we do want to get away from it and be as impartial as we can be, then I think the amendment offers a better way of doing it.

I should like to say a few words in reply to the arguments that have been presented by way of objecting to judges appointing the commissioners. To my mind these arguments overlook several very important factors. Perhaps the most important factor of all is that a judge has a reputation for impartiality to maintain.

Mr. Clancy: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Carter: I will answer when I am finished, but I do not want to be interrupted now. I do not think any man who has the prestige and integrity to be appointed to the high office of judge is going to jeopardize his reputation by making political appointments to a commission of this kind.

The arguments we have been listening to overlook another very important point. They seem to create the impression that once a judge appoints the members of a commission he in some way controls the commission. Nothing could be further from the truth. That argument overlooks the very important fact that whoever the members of the commission may be, they do not have a free hand. They are bound by certain rules that are laid down in the legislation and they must conform to those rules.

Another important fact which has been overlooked is that in addition there will be a third party on each commission, the representation commissioner, who is to oversee and supervise the work of the commissions and to make sure that the rules are observed. The fourth point that has been overlooked is that if any member is not satisfied with the recommendations of the commission there is a remedy provided in clause 20 whereby he can object. I do not see very much room to criticize the giving to judges of the power to appoint the members of these commissions, but I must say I do not like the idea, once a judge has been selected, of restricting the group from which he may make appointments. In some respects I think this is a contradiction in that it reflects on our confidence in the judge. If we have so much confidence in him that we are prepared to give him the authority to make appointments I think we should have sufficient confidence to believe that he will select the best and most competent people. I should like to see that done.

Mr. Nielsen: How about confidence in the Prime Minister?

Mr. Carter: With regard to the general principle, I do not think there is any reflection implied with respect either to the office of prime minister or the office of leader of the opposition by taking these appointments out of their hands, and I think this is what the majority of the people of Canada would prefer. That is why I support the amendment.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have not taken part in the discussion since last fall when this matter was first before the house at the last session. I enter the debate at this time in the hope that I can be of some assistance to the Minister of Transport who, in the several interventions he has made in this debate, has indicated that he is uncertain and undecided as to the merits of the provisions in clause 6 of the bill, or the amendment.

As I listened to him speak this afternoon I thought there was still a possibility that if we could emphasize some of the important points that have been brought out in the discussion the minister would go back to his original decision and withdraw his support of the amendment before the house. I am sure that before the government presented the bill to the house it received long and careful consideration. As a matter of fact, at the resolution stage there was an indication on the part of the Minister of Transport that he was openminded and flexible, and was searching for the right answers. I am sure that the advice he received at the resolution stage—

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no resolution stage of this bill.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am referring to the bill that preceded this and is very closely related to the bill that is under discussion. On top of that, Mr. Chairman, this subject is one that has been discussed in the house almost from time immemorial. As a result of the obvious abuses of the old system—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: To whom does he attribute what he is pleased to call the abuses of the old system?

Mr. Dinsdale: As a member of parliament with the background of the minister, I am sure he is asking a rhetorical question. He is an historian, and if he is typical of Canadian historians, in discussing our political and parliamentary processes he must have been one of those who has described the partisanism and the raw and brutal one-party gerrymandering that has gone on in this process of redistribution since the beginning of this country as a nation as something which has applied to all generations and to all governments.

Mr. Pickersgill: And does he not place the blame, in each case, on the government of the day?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes; this is precisely my point.

Mr. Pickersgill: And upon the prime minister who would be the head of the government, each time?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am coming to this point in a minute. Since I sit opposite the Minister of Transport, I am subjected to his bad influence in this house when he is constantly breaking the rules, but I do not believe he can point to one instance where I have ever interrupted him. He is deliberately interrupting me at this stage and trying to get me off my stride as I begin my comments. I think from the standpoint of fair play he should let me follow the line of argument that I shall endeavour to pursue, and I will deal with the particular he has raised in due course. I am not going to rush into it without my preliminary observations because it is my conviction, having followed this subject over the years and having listened very carefully to the discussion, that he is confused. He admitted this himself yesterday. He said he was in an awkward position, that he was embarrassed, because of the obvious about-face he is making with regard to clause 6 of the bill.

Before this bill was introduced, it had been very carefully considered by the cabinet. Certainly, a provision such as is contained in clause 6 must have been considered with great care because as the minister has indicated, and as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated in moving his amendment, it seems there is a violation of the principle of non-partisanism that we are trying to avoid in bringing this legislation before the house. A great deal of attention has been given to this matter. This subject was not presented to this house without a detailed examination at various times, and particularly in recent months.

What is the purpose of the bill? Here is the point I want to make, as the major point in my argument tonight. We are trying to do away with the raw, brutal process of gerrymandering by one party, which is the government of the day, the party in power, which has always been the process whereby redistribution in this country has been carried out. In other words, we are trying to get this procedure out of partisan politics. Now, I take very violent exception to the statement of several members that they are trying to get this matter out of politics. This point has been made on several occasions. How can you get the important item of redistribution of the electoral districts of this country out of politics, since it is one of the vital aspects of political life in this nation? As the Minister of Transport has asked, who was responsible for the raw, brutal partisan gerrymandering that has occurred in the past? It has been the government of the day, and the prime minister who has been the head of the government.

The purpose of the bill is to remove this process from partisan politics and make it possible for all members of the house, as well as disinterested and qualified Canadians outside the house, to have a role in carrying out this procedure. I am surprised also that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in moving this amendment, has indicated he wants to get this matter of redistribution out of politics. As the hon. member for Edmonton West said last night, politics is the science of government. I was especially surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur this afternoon because he was rather critical of politicians participating in this process. When the hon. member first came into the House of Commons, he was critical of politicians. He thought they were a rather dull, stupid group of people.

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I never said that, and I do not want it left on the record without challenge.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the hon. member will agree that when he first came into this chamber he was rather critical of the level of performance of members.

Mr. Fisher: And I still am.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have seen comments made by the hon. gentleman in the newspaper, particularly in discussion with another distinguished journalist who writes for the Toronto Telegram, and has stoutly defended the quality of the performance of the members of this house.

Let us be absolutely certain what we are trying to do. We are not trying to get this out of politics: We are trying to get this out of partisan politics. I believe the bill we have before us is designed for just that purpose. I am sure after listening to the Minister of Transport, the sponsor of the bill in this house, that he himself feels the provisions of the bill as they stand adequately serve this purpose. We all recognize, of course, that as well as politics being a science, it is an art. I think one of the reasons among many that it is desirable for the officials of this house at the highest level, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, to have a role in designating the personnel who shall make up the membership of these redistribution commissions, is the fact they have demonstrated in their long careers in public life and in their many services to Canada in various capacities, that they have the necessary artistic talents and qualifications to carry out this responsibility in the redistribution of the boundaries in a way that will take into consideration the political considerations.

How can anyone, who has not the insight of long experience in the political life of this nation, carry out these responsibilities? I do not see anyone who is better qualified; yet the members of the government are supporting an amendment which would remove this function entirely from the realm of politics. I am afraid this is something that could not be realized, no matter who chooses the personnel and no matter how scientific the choices might be. There has to be a sense of artistry about this matter that only the experienced and skilled politician is capable of giving.

Mr. Teillet: May I ask a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly.

Mr. Teillet: Just following his recent remark, perhaps I did not hear the hon. member properly, but I thought there was an implication in his remarks that non-partisanship had not been achieved in the province of Manitoba in the method used there.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I have not mentioned Manitoba but I will, in just a few moments. The hon. gentleman opposite is anticipating my speech. Both the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Veterans Affairs are Manitobans, and no doubt all Manitobans think alike on these matters. Perhaps that is the explanation for their anticipation.

Why should we downgrade and publicly criticize the Prime Minister of Canada and the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition? We can go back in history, and I would say without exception, regardless of the party stripe, the successive prime ministers we have had with responsibility for the government of the nation, and the successive leaders of the opposition have been men of outstanding capabilities. Indeed people do not come to these positions without being men of character and integrity. For the government publicly to downgrade their qualifications for participating indirectly in this innovation, in this pioneering effort in the political life of the nation, is certainly not in the best interests of parliament.

There is another strange anomaly that appears to me. The government and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are quite happy to cast the responsibility for the selection of personnel on to the chief justices and the representation commissioner. Now both these gentlemen, a group in the case of the justices, and a single gentleman in the case of the representation commissioner, are appointees of the governor in council. And who is the governor in council?

Mr. Knowles: I am sure the hon. member would like to keep the record straight. The representation commissioner is not an appointee of the governor in council; he is an appointee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is fine. If that is the case, and if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre approves of this principle of the house appointing officials of this kind, why not extend it to the appointment of the other personnel who will be serving on these commissions?

Mr. Knowles: May I ask another question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Just let me finish my sentence.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am in the middle of a sentence.

Mr. Knowles: Fine.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member has almost interrupted my train of thought. Perhaps that is what he wanted to do. You ask the question, and I will come back to my argument in a moment.

Mr. Knowles: Does the hon. member not realize that if there were any way in the bill itself to name the actual persons or the actual offices of the persons to fill these positions, we would do so? We have suggested this from time to time, and it was because it was not possible that we produced this formula.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, the thought has returned to me. One of the complaints we have heard from hon. members was to the effect that members of parliament, who are most concerned and most knowledgeable in constituency redistribution, were not going to have the opportunity to have any say. This is one of the weaknesses of the legislation as it stands. I would now like to ask a question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Does he not think that during the process of debates here—and we all have free access to these discussions—it is possible to get recommendations placed before the Prime Minister and the government which would have a strong influence on determining the choice of personnel that he would select for these commissions? This is one of the ways in which members of parliament can participate more directly.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member like me to answer that question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: My answer is that I do not think members of parliament should have any say in the matter of the persons who will be on these commissions if we believe, as we agreed in our vote on second reading, that we want them to be completely impartial and independent.

Mr. Dinsdale: Impartiality from a human being is impossible, and the hon. member knows that. The Minister of Justice holds up his hands in horror.

Mr. Favreau: Yes I do.

Mr. Dinsdale: The only man alive today who is completely impartial is the man suffering from a mental vacuum.

Mr. Knowles: Does that hold for the judges throughout the country?

Mr. Dinsdale: Surely, as members of parliament, we have convictions? Surely we know the position we take? I am sure you will agree that impartiality is not a part of the substance of human relations. Now, let me carry this one step further.

Mr. Sharp: What about judges?

Mr. Dinsdale: The Minister of Trade and Commerce asks what about judges?

Mr. Sharp: That is what they are appointed for—impartiality.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, it all depends what you mean by impartiality. Justices have viewpoints. They have opinions. They do not operate in a vacuum, any more than do members of parliament.

Clause 6 as it stands is the only way to overcome another major objection that has been raised regarding this legislation. There are strong suggestions that it would be much more desirable to have a single commission rather than ten, one for each province. The Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition represent the national viewpoint, and it is only through these men, who are the leaders of parties of national perspective, that we have any hope of bringing about some degree of uniformity between the regional areas and between the provincial areas of the country. I am sure this is one of the reasons why the Minister of Transport included this clause in the bill.

It is significant that it is a member of the N.D.P. who has put forward the initial amendment. That group is suspicious of members of other parties; and well they might be, because we all, as I have indicated, have a partisan frame of reference. But if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre hopes to overcome any disability in this regard, he had those hopes rudely shattered this afternoon. I think he was in the house when the Minister of Transport said quite specifically that there was no hope of any N.D.P.'er being appointed to these commissions. If that is not political bias, I do not know what is. I do not know on what grounds the Minister of Transport said this, but he said there was absolutely no possibility of an N.D.P.'er being appointed to these commissions. I do not know why he said it, but it does indicate the bias that is present in the minds—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. member does not want to denature my remarks. I said I did not really think the chief justice of Ontario, the chief justice of Quebec, or indeed the chief justice of any Canadian province would be likely to appoint a professor who was a notorious member of the N.D.P., and I do not think the chief justices would appoint anyone who was a notorious member or organizer of the Tory party or the Liberal party either; and if I thought they would, I would not want to trust them with these appointments.

Mr. Woolliams: That doesn't make it right.

Mr. Dinsdale: I did not intend to denature the minister's remarks at all, but as I recall it he went even further than that, now that he brings the subject to my mind; he said that anybody who was foolish enough to belong to the New Democratic movement would expect such a situation to prevail, and I do not think I am misquoting him in that respect. He referred to the N.D.P. members being foolish. They are putting forward this amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I think I am entitled to have my words quoted by the hon. gentleman, and not misquoted. I said I would not be so foolish as to be a member of the N.D.P. I never said that anybody was foolish in being a member of the N.D.P. And as a matter of fact, if I had to choose between the N.D.P. and the kind of exhibition we have had from immediately opposite today, it would not be hard to choose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of privilege, my answer to the minister would be that I have never heard anything so foolish since I came to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let me move along in this discussion, Mr. Chairman. Particular categories are referred to in the amendment, and especially representatives of the educational community. Some reference has been made to the qualifications of the commission that has been operating in the province of Manitoba. Largely because the president of the University of Manitoba is one of the members of that commission, I would say that Dr. Saunderson is the exception rather than the rule in these matters.

An hon. Member: Is he impartial?

Mr. Dinsdale: He is as impartial as it is possible for any human being to be.

An hon. Member: Then that is your answer.

Mr. Dinsdale: I come from the ivory tower myself and I know that the essential qualification for anyone engaged in education is to be rigidly disciplined in a certain specialized field of knowledge. In fact, the stereotype of the absent-minded professor is universally recognized; the man who is so preoccupied in one field of study that he is not aware of what is going on around and about him. It would be the exceptional academician who would function adequately, from the standpoint of experience, on a commission of this nature.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I think for the clarity of the record my hon. friend—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member has the floor and should not be interrupted unless he accepts a question. Would the hon. minister kindly resume his seat. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris has the floor, and I do not think he should be interrupted unless he accepts a question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you very kindly, Mr. Chairman. It is obvious that these remarks are disturbing the ministry in particular. The ministry are having pangs of conscience, because they were the men who brought this legislation before the house and they are now disavowing this important point, this clause 6, to which they must have given great consideration. I can understand that they are disturbed and agitated. I think I can bring these remarks to a conclusion without any further interruption, Mr. Chairman.

Let me make this fundamental point. I know there are some who will say that this matter is being filibustered, that there has been unusual delay. This is the vicious propaganda that is being purveyed across the country by members of this house as well as people outside the house.

Mr. Churchill: Members of the Liberal party.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Minister of Transport made a speech in Quebec in which he downgraded this parliament in these terms. I do not think it is in the best interests of parliamentary democracy for people in positions of responsibility to do this to parliament. Let me say that clause 6 is designed to protect and preserve the integrity of the members of this house, particularly the position of responsibility that devolves upon the chief officials of this house, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. If they had never been put in the legislation, the matter would not have become such an urgent issue; but to remove them deliberately by accepting the suggestion from the N.D.P. that these men are not responsible leaders of the nation is, I think, doing a great disservice to parliamentary democracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: We have to hammer this point home. They said we were delaying the Canada pension plan. Thank goodness we did, because it was an awful mess when it first came into the house. We will continue to discuss this matter until the Minister of Transport returns to his original position and decides to protect the reputation of the chief officials of this house and of this parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question with regard to the last sentence he uttered? Is the hon. gentleman saying that he is not going to allow the members of the house to decide this question; he is going to have it decided by one member of the house? Is that his conception of democracy?

Mr. Mandziuk: He never said that.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, that is a slightly Machiavellian twist of what I said, and I would say in reply that I want this House of Commons to decide.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly, so do I.

Mr. Dinsdale: And I want this House of Commons to preserve the reputation of its chief officials, and I am sure there are sufficient members in this house who will do just that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit this question? I think this matter should be clarified, for the record. I am sure the hon. gentleman did not intend to say what he actually said with regard to Dr. Saunderson. I am sure the hon. member knows that he was not appointed to this commission. Actually it was the office of president of the university, and I thought the hon. member would want that made clear.

Mr. Dinsdale: If I might reply to the minister, Dr. Saunderson is serving on the Manitoba committee, and I did make the point that he was exceptionally capable. Most academicians are narrow men and have little practical experience; but he was a very broad person. He was associated for a while with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and I am sure that that was a broadening experience.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I entered this debate opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Clancy: Are you for it now?

Mr. Deachman: No, I am going to continue to oppose it, but I want to say that that is not because of anything hon. gentlemen opposite have said but, indeed, in spite of anything they have said. We have been whooping it up around this single clause for three days, and like the little boy in "Good King Wenceslas" I am finding the snow pretty deep; so I hope this matter will soon be brought to a vote.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, after that moving contribution to the debate I should like to make one or two remarks.

Mr. Roxborough: It is better than anything you could say.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let us hear something from you then.

Mr. Fairweather: The asses can bray all they like but I am going to have the floor. A study of this subject is really a study of the great members who have occupied either the treasury benches or the benches on this side of the house back to the time this country was founded. I am not surprised by the fact that a fair amount of emotion is attached to representation in parliament. I am also not surprised that some people here are making a genuine effort to be objective. I do not think that we should be ashamed that we wish to discuss a proposal which was first made in this parliament, as far as I am aware, in 1952 by a distinguished member of the treasury benches, the Hon. C. G. Power. I think I will cite Mr. Power because of the distinction he has brought to this house and the objectivity with which he has considered all aspects of redistribution.

In the 1952 volume of the House of Commons bills appears Bill No. 144, which was an act respecting the constitution and duties of the redistribution commission, a private member's bill by a very distinguished private member. Clause 3 of that bill might well have been adopted by the government, and if it had perhaps we would not be in the mess we are tonight. Clause 3 says:

> For the purpose of preparing and reporting a plan for the division of the provinces of Canada into electoral districts in accordance with the provisions of section 51 of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1951, as enacted by the British North America Act, 1946, there shall be appointed a redistribution commission to consist of three members, one of whom shall be the surveyor general of Canada who shall be the chairman of the commission, another the person appointed on the recommendation of the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons after consultation—

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might be interested in this phrase—> —with the various groups normally considered to be in opposition to the government at the date, and the third person to be recommended to counsel by the Leader of the party for the time being holding the majority in the House of Commons.

If I had no other reason for thinking that clause 6 was a good clause I would be persuaded by that extract from a bill presented by a man of the distinction of Hon. Mr. Power.

The second aspect I should like to discuss shortly is the matter of the appointment of judges. I should have thought that, long since, the Minister of Justice would have spoken to this point, and perhaps the bill would not have included the judiciary had he made the point clearly. I am going to cite Mr. Hackett, the former member for Stanstead, in a speech he made in 1947 as reported at page 5652 of Hansard. Mr. Hackett said:

> I have understood from the prime minister that it is not the intention of the government to yield to the suggestion that has been made to it that redistribution be done over by what it pleases some to call an impartial body. That being the case, it is probably futile to discuss the constitution of any such body.

May I say that apparently it is futile to discuss the constitution of any such body because we are not getting much helpful assistance from the treasury benches. He continues:

> If that discussion ever becomes pertinent I shall place before the house my own reasons against the appointment of judges to such a commission. The right hon. gentleman who leads the house has indicated in no uncertain terms that he does not share my views as to the impropriety of appointing judges for the solution of quasi-political problems.

Surely this is a political problem and cannot be anything else but a political problem.

> I think he must concede that the appointment of judges to draw an electoral map of Canada, especially where three of the judges would be of one political stripe and three of another, would be a great misfortune and a great folly. It would be dragging these gentlemen back into the dust of an arena which they had long since escaped, and it would be possibly a reason—a reason at least in the minds of some evil minded people—for appointing a man to the bench, that he might at some later time be used for a task of this description.
> I will satisfy myself by saying that if such a proposal ever comes before the house and I happen to be a member I shall resist it, as I know all lawyers and judges will resist it, and as I believe everyone who thinks well of our legal institutions, especially of our judiciary, will be bound to resist it.

By the way, in 1952 much more time was taken than the three days we have been occupying. I have not gone through the debates on each redistribution, but this is a matter that occurs only once in ten years and I think that three or four days of debate on a matter of such fundamental importance automatically justifies the time devoted to it.

In my catalogue of greats I want to include Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, who in the 1952 debate on redistribution said that redistribution is not a matter of executive policy but a matter and a responsibility for the house as a whole.

Then there is an interpolation from Dr. Norman Ward, who wrote a fairly interesting article on redistribution in 1952, and also included a chapter on the matter in his volume called "The Canadian House of Commons", published I think, in 1948. Dr. Ward said that the government pays lip service to this dictum, and to that I say "hear, hear". Then Dr. Ward goes on to say this:

> This doctrine, resting as it does on the premise that ministers can forget they are ministers whenever redistribution comes up, and that their supporters can forget it too, put an increasing strain on the credulity of opposition members as the debates wore on.

I could not agree with Dr. Ward more. I would hope, first of all, that the minister might be persuaded to revert to the existing clause 6. I would hope, too, that he would see fit to prepare an amendment of his own which would omit the employment of the judges of this country in, as was said by Mr. John Hackett, M.P., a quasi-political job.

Mr. Favreau: I am impressed by the remarks made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat with regard to the respect one should have for the judiciary and the feeling that they should not be called upon to act concerning political matters. He spoke in a tone which most hon. members opposite have been using in their speeches. One might think it was almost scandalous for one even to think of dragging judges into activities of this type.

I think the highest authority which the learned and hon. member must have is his leader. I think now that the highest authority I can find in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the author of the bill proposed when he was, not leader of the opposition, but prime minister—the bill which received first reading on April 17, 1962. The right hon. gentleman then proposed a bill the short title of which was to be "The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act". This was intended to create a commission to determine electoral boundaries. Under clause 5, the commission was to be composed of five members, the head of whom was to be the person for the time being holding the office of chief electoral officer of Canada. The remainder—and I am quoting now— "will be named in the proclamation establishing the commission". I wish to quote now from the second subparagraph of clause 5 of that bill introduced by the present Leader of the Opposition:

> The proclamation establishing the commission shall name as members of that commission at least two persons who are judges of a superior court.

If the function of those who are to appoint members of the commission is so political that a judge should not be called upon to appoint members in the objective use of his discretion, how could one even think of placing those same judges on the commission itself? I think the very fact that the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister should have suggested to the House of Commons the appointment of judges of the superior court as members of his commission, is proof of the soundness of the principle embodied in the amendment, to the effect that a judge should at least be able to appoint members to the now proposed commission.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if the minister would permit a question. I see he is sitting beside the Minister of Transport. Is he aware that when that particular clause was being discussed the Minister of Transport was so leery of the provision that he wanted those judges named before he would give his consent to it?

Mr. Favreau: As a citizen of Canada who in the course of the last election proudly became a member of this house I am aware of one thing—that in clause 5 of that public document which was Bill C-87 the then prime minister presently leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, made such a proposal.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Transport could, surely, rise and assist his colleague. The fact remains that when that provision was under discussion the hon. gentleman took the clearest objection to any such proposal. This suggests that the Minister of Transport was very leery about accepting the political unbias of judges.

Mr. Winkler: I rise on this particular amendment for the purpose of making a brief interjection. I do not think the point just raised by the Minister of Justice has as much bearing on this clause as have the words used by the Minister of Transport on a previous occasion —words which, I believe, have been repeated since. I quote from Hansard of March 10, page 741. The minister uttered these words:

> After various other possibilities were considered the government finally agreed to put in the bill the suggestion that the chief justice of the province should nominate the chairman from a member of his court; that the leader of the government, the Prime Minister, should nominate one of the members of the commission; and that the Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of parliament, should nominate the other. I say unreservedly that I have every confidence that no matter who occupies those offices, any person who becomes leader of the opposition in the parliament of our country or prime minister in the parliament of our country would take this responsibility seriously and make the kind of nominations that all of us would feel were appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. Knowles: Read the next sentence.

Mr. Winkler: The hon. member may make his own speech later, if he desires. If the Minister of Transport wishes to stand by the words he used on March 10 we are prepared to support him any time he wishes to change his attitude.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am prepared to stand by them and I am prepared to read the rest of them. This old and not very creditable parliamentary dodge of taking half a paragraph as if it were the whole thing is not going to be imposed on the committee on this occasion. I will read the words again. I said—and I stand by what I said:

> After various other possibilities were considered the government finally agreed to put in the bill the suggestion that the chief justice of the province should nominate the chairman from a member of his court; that the leader of the government, the Prime Minister, should nominate one of the members of the commission; and that the Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of parliament, should nominate the other. I say unreservedly—

—and I continue to say unreservedly, despite the partisan utterances that we have heard today—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and despite the imputation that there is partisanship on this side of the house and none on the other, which I find a little hard to take, I say unreservedly—> —that I have every confidence that no matter who occupies those offices, any person who becomes leader of the opposition in the parliament of our country or prime minister in the parliament of our country would take this responsibility serously and make the kind of nominations that all of us would feel were appropriate under the circumstances.

> I do not hesitate to say that with respect to this provision or with respect to any other method which commends itself to the house or to a majority of the house and which seems likely to produce as fair and effective a result, the government will be quite prepared in committee to consider on its merits any amendments to this procedure.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce is one of the most amiable and normally one of the fairest members of the house, and I do not imagine that on his own motion he would deliberately quote half a paragraph and leave out the other half of the paragraph.

Mr. Woolliams: We had that the other day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nothing could be plainer from that whole paragraph than that when I said we finally came to this conclusion we were very far from being completely happy about the suggestion, but it was the best one, as I have said about a dozen times in this debate already, up to then that we could think of, and that showed any prospect of working.

Mr. Bigg: It still is.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is entitled to his opinion and to his vote, and I wish he had the courage to get up and vote on it and let the rest of us get up and vote on it.

Mr. Bigg: Don't talk to me about courage.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether the minister would permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I yielded to the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member for Grey-Bruce a question.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Greenwood can now make his contribution but he cannot ask a question of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Brewin: I will make my contribution by suggesting that if the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is going to make any further contribution to this debate he should tell us whether or not he thinks the right hon. and learned Leader of the Opposition is not, in a matter of this sort—the question of appropriate tasks for the judiciary—an even more persuasive authority than the Minister of Transport. May I suggest to the hon. members who form Her Majesty's loyal opposition that in this matter at least they should pay great heed to the good advice put forward by the Leader of the Opposition when he introduced the bill to which reference has been made.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, as I stated earlier my position is a very simple one. So far as what has been said is concerned, I am prepared to accept the clause in the bill originally submitted to the house by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Vote on it.

Some hon. Members: Let us vote on it.

Mr. Winkler: When the Minister of Transport says in the house that he and the government are prepared to accept amendments which he feels are an improvement, may I point out that he himself has expressed some doubt in regard to this amendment—

Mr. Pickersgill: I have expressed no doubt that his amendment is better.

Mr. Winkler: —as have supporters of his party. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that my main objection is to the way in which this amendment has been brought forward.

Mr. Nielsen: Since the Minister of Transport has risen to participate and inasmuch as the hon. member for Royal has put forward an argument which I think had a good deal of force, and to which the Minister of Justice attempted to reply and in doing so brought up the bill that was introduced during the last session when the Progressive Conservative government was in power, would the Minister of Transport now explain to the house why he took such a violent position during that session with regard to the partiality of judges? In essence, that was the nature of his argument because he would not have anything to do with that provision in our bill until the names of the judges were before the house. Now he purports to reassure members of the committee that he has every faith and confidence in judges so far as the appointment of the personnel to form these commissions is concerned. I think the committee deserves an explanation with regard to the obviously wide variance between the position he now takes and the position he took when he was on this side of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: That has nothing whatever to do with clause 6 of this bill.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, last Friday morning I took part in this debate, at which time I supported the clause as introduced and opposed the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. When I spoke then I had, as I think a great many members of the house had and still have, reservations with regard to which is the best method of trying to correct the abuses that have taken place in the past in connection with redistribution. On Friday morning I expressed my reservations about the method proposed in the amendment and urged that clause 6 be adopted as it appears in the bill.

At the time I spoke on Friday morning I had complete confidence in the type of people the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition would appoint to the 10 provincial redistribution commissions. I had confidence that my leader and the Leader of the Opposition would appoint the sort of people who could make an honourable and honest contribution to the work of these commissions.

I have sat in the house and listened to the debate all last Friday, all yesterday afternoon and all of today. In particular I listened today to the speeches of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, the hon. member for Yukon and the learned contribution tonight by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I must say that listening to hon. members opposite for the last three days of debate has raised in my mind the greatest possible reservations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: You have been out in the woodshed.

An hon. Member: You have been brainwashed.

An hon. Member: Three cheers for the whip.

Mr. Basford: —with regard to the type of people that the Conservatives opposite would insist on their leader appointing.

Mr. Dinsdale: The trained seal. "His master's voice."

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka made it quite obvious to me today that he is going to insist that the Leader of the Opposition appoint persons to these provincial commissions who will give their party a partisan, political pipe line to the redistribution commissions. I think this is not what hon. members wish. All of us, at least those on this side, have endeavoured to approach this matter in a non-political way in an effort to work out what we regard as the best possible way to deal with the difficult question of redistribution and redrawing the boundaries. I expressed reservations the other day about the method proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Nielsen: Vancouver Quadra next.

Mr. Basford: —but after having listened to hon. gentlemen opposite for three solid days, they have raised far greater reservations in my mind about—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pugh: You have read your speech twice now.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Basford: Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to object and become quite worried when they are told that in effect they have been talking unadulterated nonsense for three days. The fact is that they have talked so much nonsense that a great many members on this side of the house who originally had reservations about the amendment now support it.

Mr. Nielsen: Are we not going to hear from Welland and Vancouver Quadra?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am reminded by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Royal, that we are dealing with a most important matter. We are not only dealing with it for the present, but we are dealing with it in connection with its application to every 10 year census we will have over a long period of time. I agree with him thoroughly when he states to this house that a few days of consideration on a bill with the implications that I have just mentioned is something which is completely justified, and for which I make no apology.

[Mr. Churchill.]

I have in my hand Bill No. C-72 with which all hon. members are familiar. It is the bill that is now under discussion. Having had some experience in public life on the government side of a legislature, I think I can speak with some knowledge and some authority as to what takes place in the preparation of bills, or what should take place in the preparation of bills. My friend and seatmate, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, has mentioned that undoubtedly the government gave the preparation of this bill very careful consideration. I hope that is the case because it is a most important bill. We have the bill presented to us and there has been a great deal of debate in this chamber in the last few days in connection with it. The bill was introduced in the name of the Prime Minister of Canada and was presented on his behalf by the Minister of Transport. This, in my opinion, comes within the category of public bills. I believe the Minister of Transport would be the first one to acknowledge that it answers that description.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course it does.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Of course it does, he says. Now, I am going to proceed a little farther. Having said it answers the general description of a public bill, then I say that amendments to this bill should be made by the government itself, if they expect the government members to support it. Before I complete these remarks I expect to convince any member, regardless of where he sits in this house, that he should not be voting for this amendment, and I include the New Democratic party.

At the moment, I am going to deal with this matter of public bills. Let us give the government full marks for having carefully considered this bill. They introduce it and it goes through the various readings. Now we have it before us in committee. While debate was taking place on this measure, the Minister of Transport who was sponsoring it said that he found something wrong with clause 6. It did not suit him, and he was sort of looking to someone to suggest something better. This was the implication in his remarks. We finally come to clause 6 and, in my opinion, if the Minister of Transport speaking on behalf of the government was in favour of the amendment, then he should have asked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to send the amendment over to the government because they would like to have a look at it.

Mr. Nielsen: Why should he; he drafted it

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Instead of that, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. May I say to my hon. friend it is not in respect of the hon. member who has the floor but it relates to an interjection by the hon. member for Yukon; and in case it is on the record it should be denied. If it is on the record from the mouth of the hon. member for Yukon that the government drafted this amendment, I want to deny that categorically. It was my amendment and my idea. I made all the initial drafts. A law officer of the crown did the final drafting for me, but it was my amendment.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I have not any particular fault to find in respect of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for having suggested the amendment. No doubt it is his privilege to do that in this house. The criticism I am making is that of the Minister of Transport accepting the amendment to a public bill on behalf of the government. In my opinion, that should not be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent this thing. He has always been very careful about getting the facts. I have never accepted this amendment on behalf of the government or on behalf of anyone except myself. I said I would vote for this. I said I would vote for any other amendment from any quarter of the house that would improve the bill. I have said that about 20 times at every stage of this legislation, and I say it again tonight.

I know there are one or two hon. gentlemen opposite, including the hon. member for Bow River, who have said they want to suggest amendments. If they can improve the bill, I would be only to happy to have them improve it and I will accept their amendments right off.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I want to make this observation in connection with the remarks just made by the Minister of Transport. Being a practical politician he must know that the attitude he takes, as sponsor of the bill, has tremendous influence on the members on his side of the house. It cannot help but have; it is only natural it would have. When he says he will accept the amendment, I say the government is making another retreat, for which they are now famous. They cannot get away from it, Mr. Chairman: This is another retreat. They introduce a bill, someone suggests an amendment and instead of saying we would like to look it over, they say yes, we will take it holus-bolus; they reach out and grab for it. I say this is just another retreat for which they are now becoming more and more famous.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Knowles: If when we get to clause 13 a member of the Progressive Conservative party were to suggest an amendment changing the tolerance factor and the government were to accept it, would that be called a retreat?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If the Minister of Transport gets any satisfaction out of that question, he is entitled to it. Actually, it is hypothetical; it does not apply at the present time and neither do I propose to answer it.

What do we do? We get to clause 6, and I have mentioned the amendment that was proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I say that the Minister of Transport, who acted as the minister sponsoring the bill, should not have accepted it. Let us consider, for a moment, the matter of the amendment itself. I say to the government that they have retreated again when they accepted this amendment and announced their support for it. I know the Minister of Transport is going to say that he was talking for himself. However, for all practical purposes that binds every member across the way. Oh, I agree, there are some who will have courage enough to stand up and vote against this amendment when the vote is called, but there will not be many. In my opinion, the Minister of Transport knows the amendment will carry before he supports it, because he is that kind of a practical politician—and I intend that to be somewhat complimentary.

Mr. Basford: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware of the fact that this afternoon there was a vote, that the difference was only one, and that there were more people on this side of the house who were opposed to the amendment?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): As I remember it, they were mostly out behind the curtains, or else they would have been placed in a very embarrassing position. I know one who did not get in—the hon. member from Hamilton; but he tried, and he is entitled to some credit for that.

Mr. Robichaud: When the hon. member introduced the Atlantic development board bill in the house, how many retreats did he make when it was before the committee?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If my hon. friend will look back at the record of the passing of the Atlantic development board bill in its first stages, and then subsequently when it was being sponsored by the present Minister of Transport, he will find that the amendments proposed by the opposition on both those occasions were sent over to the government benches, and the government incorporated them as amendments coming from the government.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce looks so pained, but he has to acknowledge the facts. Now, there is another principle involved which is most important.

An hon. Member: What was the first principle?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I outlined the first principle. If you were not so dumb you would know.

Mr. Knowles: Is that addressed to the Chair?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I apologize, Mr. Chairman, for not addressing you, but you must be aware the provocation was substantial. In my opinion elected members of parliament should not delegate their responsibility to any officials anywhere, without specifically naming them. The amendment proposed delegates responsibility to someone else to do something which parliament was elected to do. That is the reason I said I would convince even members of the New Democratic party that they should not support the amendment, because this is a delegation of responsibility which they have no right to sanction. They and we were not elected to delegate responsibility. We were elected to do the business of the country and to make decisions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. gentleman forgotten—

The Chairman: Is the minister rising to ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: To ask a question, and I think I have the consent of the hon. member. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten he was a member of the late and unlamented Diefenbaker government which introduced the bill that my hon. friend has referred to, in 1962, and which delegated the power to the governor in council to make these appointments? Now he is objecting to the delegation of power which he recommended to the house when he took collective responsibility for that measure.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The Minister of Transport speaks about that delegation to the governor in council as a delegation from parliament. I suppose, strictly speaking, perhaps it is.

An hon. Member: I guess it is.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Just a minute, Mr. Smart Aleck. I submit that it is the usual thing for this committee of parliament known as the cabinet and the governor in council to make appointments, because they are the committee of parliament occupying these positions of responsibility, but answerable to parliament. It is the delegation to people outside parliament to which I object.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman—

The Chairman: Order. Is the minister rising to ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

The Chairman: Does he have the consent of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman be willing, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre withdrew his amendment, to accept an amendment from me to delegate the power to the governor in council to make all these appointments, because that is what hon. gentlemen opposite recommended only two years ago? Would the hon. gentleman now be content with that method?

Mr. Knowles: I won't withdraw it, anyway.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): According to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre it is a hypothetical question, but I will answer it—

Mr. Pickersgill: Good.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): —and say that, so far as the principle of delegation of public responsibility for public bills is concerned, that would answer it; but that does not answer my objection to the amendment itself, which I am trying to express in spite of a few interruptions from hon. gentlemen opposite. The members of the cabinet, the governor in council, are members of parliament, and a delegation to them is altogether different from a delegation to the chief justice of any province.

Now, in the two minutes that are left I am going to go a little further. I do not think we should accept the amendment because it excludes too many people from the opportunity to serve on these commissions. The amendment says they must be college professors, presidents, members of faculties or surveyor general. Perhaps I have left one or two out, as I have not time to read the full list; but the point is that it disqualifies every county court judge, every warden of every municipality, every mayor of every town and city. It takes out every industrialist in New Brunswick. No industrialist could serve because he is specifically excluded by this amendment. School teachers are disqualified.

Mr. Robichaud: What about Brigadier Wardell, would he be disqualified?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): That is a more stupid remark than the minister usually makes.

The Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May we have the business of the house, for the record?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and since it seems obvious that there is not much use in again taking up the debate in committee on the electoral boundaries, on Monday we will proceed with the three budget resolutions. We shall take first the resolution concerning the income tax bill, then the resolution with respect to customs, and finally the resolution concerning estate taxes.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the house leader if we can anticipate that the electoral boundaries bill will be brought back before the house reasonably soon?

Mr. Favreau: Well, we still have hope that hon. members opposite will have thought the matter over and will be in a better mood then.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—ALLEGED CURTAILMENT IN RINGING OF HOUSE BELLS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, before the house adjourns I would like to raise one small question of privilege which affects most members, particularly those in the west block.

I think it is the first time this has happened, but tonight following the dinner recess, although there was an important debate in progress in this house, the bell rang for only a few seconds, and even if we had run as fast as we could we could not have been in the chamber when the debate commenced. And it was a strange thing that there were so many government supporters here during that time. I say it is a question of privilege, because surely, with regard to the notification by the bell, we should have time to come from the west block.

Mr. Favreau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Woolliams: May I make my point, please?

Mr. Favreau: —there is no question of privilege here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a point of order before the house. Would the hon. member allow the Minister of Justice to make his point of order.

Mr. Favreau: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no question of privilege arises here with respect to what is being stated by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams).

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to finish, Mr. Speaker. I still believe that the facilities which are in another building in which our offices are situated should be such that when we wish to be in the chamber after being summoned by the bell, we should be able to get here before the debate commences. Surely the bell should ring long enough so that the members of the House of Commons can assume their responsibilities in this house.

Mr. Robichaud: Have you got a watch?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order that has been raised, I just want to say that I have never heard a more arrogant statement than the one just made by the Minister of Justice. I am on the sixth floor of the House of Commons, and I did not have time, after the bell rang, to get down here for the commencement of the debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has heard the various complaints and will certainly look into them.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion)

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

AGRICULTURE—ARDA—DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been moved and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that this house do now adjourn.

The first question this evening is to be discussed by the hon. member for Kootenay West, and it is:

As a result of the administrative seesawing with respect to ARDA, has there been any delay in the development of programs and the study of proposals presented to the government, or in the processing of agreements?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have always had a particularly keen interest in the progress of the ARDA programs, which I consider offer an excellent opportunity for co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and community organizations to promote the planning of rural rehabilitation, which is a very necessary thing in Canada at this time. A good many constituencies are interested in the ARDA program and are concerned because of the administrative seesawing that they have read about in recent days. They are concerned about the local application of this very excellent legislation and are hoping that it will not be affected by any administrative difficulties in the days ahead.

I understand that the minister in charge of the administration of this act is active and is very interested in it, but the public at large do not know this and they are concerned at the present time. That was my reason for asking the question that I asked on orders of the day today. In addition to seeking an answer to that question, I would ask the minister if, in order to clear the air, to provide the persons interested with information, and the members of this house, he would make a full statement on the progress that has been made to date under the ARDA program, future plans for the initiation of projects in co-operation with the provincial governments and community organizations, and what he intends to do in the days ahead. Perhaps the minister would make such a statement when he is speaking on his estimates.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member may I say that no provincial ARDA projects submitted to the federal ARDA administration have been held up as a result of a change of administrative responsibilities. All projects are given the same study in Ottawa after submission by the provinces, and this may take some time.

In connection with British Columbia, in which I am sure the hon. member is particularly interested, all British Columbia projects submitted have been approved after study, and again no projects have been held up. In fact, no British Columbia project proposals were received between February 3 and February 20; but to date 16 ARDA projects in British Columbia have been approved, with a federal cost share of some $508,000 and a total cost of over $1 million. I might add that the ARDA projects are in the Department of Agriculture estimates. We will be discussing those tomorrow and I am sure that at that time we will satisfy the hon. member for Kootenay West that this government is doing an excellent job with ARDA.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS—EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION AUTHORIZING CONSTRUCTION

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the house, are surprised to see that the government intends to drop the legislation which was passed on March 23, 1962, with only one dissenting vote, that of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher).

I feel that such action on the part of the present government is undemocratic and constitutes an insult to parliament since at the time—the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) will surely remember—all hon. members voted in favour of that legislation to promote the economic development of the Gaspe area.

I know that the government intends to spend $16 million to develop that district, especially seaports, but I do not think that will solve the problem and reactivate the economy of the area, since ships sail only five or six months a year while a railroad through the Gaspe peninsula would be essential for the development of mining claims.

At any rate, the president of East Sullivan gold mine, Mr. Pierre Beauchemin, holds a mining claim known as Federal Metals in the Gaspe peninsula, near Ste. Anne des Monts. He also has a prospecting licence valid in Gaspe peninsula's national park, which was granted to him by the provincial government following the decision taken by the Conservative government in Ottawa to build a railroad between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts.

This is very important, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the minister to tell us whether it is his intention to extend he period provided in the bill, because if he does not see to it, it will be the end of the whole project, since the bill expires on December 31, 1964.

That bill is important and essential to the development of the Gaspe economy, and the minister knows that, for nearly 30 years, his party promised to build a railway in the Gaspe peninsula. The Conservative government adopted a bill to make good that promise to promote the economic expansion not only of Gaspe but of Canada as a whole.

It must be remembered also that the province of Quebec has only 11 per cent of the railway lines in Canada, and that part of our country needs such a railway to develop its mineral wealth. The businessmen as well as the chamber of commerce of the lower St. Lawrence region are desperate.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), speaking before the Reform club in Montreal recently said that $7 million out of an amount of $16 million would be allocated for the construction of the Riviere du Loup wharf.

According to Le Soleil of last April 21, the chamber of commerce of north Gaspe did not like that statement made by the Secretary of State.

I would ask the minister to assure the people and the chamber of commerce of Gaspe that this bill, which has been accepted by all members, except the hon. member for Port Arthur, will be implemented. Even the minister, at the time, approved the bill.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman recalls to our minds that five years after the government which he supported came to office, on the eve of an election, they rushed through this house a bill to build a railway from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts. It is quite true, as the hon. member said, that we assumed the government of the day had paid some attention to this matter before they did this, and we did not oppose it because we wished to see development of that region, which we knew needed development.

But when we took responsibility for office —and the hon. gentleman's friends had done nothing about the railway in that year; they had been too busy passing orders in council to tax the people without any authority from parliament; a year later they had done nothing about this—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: When we came to office we examined the project and found there was no sound economic foundation for this railway. What was needed was improved transportation which would better serve the needs of the region. Let me point out that this parliament did not order the government to build the railway; it gave the governor in council permission to do so. We felt that before we spent $16 million of the taxpayers' money we should be satisfied it was being spent to the best possible advantage of the people of this region. We are engaged at the present time—it is no secret—in discussions with the government of the province of Quebec. There is a great need for the improvement of the highway from Mont Joli a little beyond Ste. Anne. From there to Gaspe the road is in good condition, I am informed, but that section is rather out of date and unsuited to modern needs. We are considering, with the government of Quebec, a contribution in order to speed up the construction of that road so that the people of Gaspe north will have communications which are worth the money that is to be spent on them. This will really help the region.

We also intend to recommend to the house that some of this money be spent on the improvement of other communications, airfields and harbours in order to speed up the development of the area about which hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in office, did absolutely nothing until just before the election.

REDISTRIBUTION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONSTITUENCY MAPS

Mr. Speaker: Question No. 3 is the following:

> Is the minister prepared to table any maps prepared by the representation commissioner under section 8 of the Representation Commissioners Act, for reference during the debate on the redistribution bill?

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Section 8 of the Representation Commissioners Act which is to be found in the statutes of 1963 chapter 40, and which received royal assent on December 21, 1963, provided that the commissioner shall prepare maps showing the distribution of population in each province, and setting out proposals respecting the boundaries of the electoral districts in each province. I assume that the representation commissioner, with his usual dispatch, is proceeding with the preparation of those maps.

I have neither seen them nor inquired about them. However, I have heard rumours about them and the rumours I have heard are quite startling. I do not wish to go into those rumours but I think hon. members will understand that there is a good deal of concern about these basic proposals and the alternatives. I know that these are merely proposals, but I believe that the maps would give hon. members a fair idea of what is likely to result from the passage of the redistribution bill we have now been labouring with for so long.

I want to ask the Minister of Transport if he can now answer the question I raised this morning, and tell us whether in the opinion of the government these maps can be made available to the house. I cannot find anything in the act which says they are confidential, and there is at the present time no commission to which they can be submitted. Perhaps the minister could tell us whether it would require an order of the house for the production of these maps.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for the government as a government to express any view on this matter. The representation commissioner, like the Clerk of the house and the Auditor General, is an officer of parliament, not an officer of the government. Therefore I would not presume to make a decision myself on a matter of this kind.

That is precisely why I asked the hon. gentleman for time to answer the question. I wanted to consult the representation commissioner who, though he is an officer of the house, cannot respond for himself in the house. I have ascertained from him, since the question was asked this morning, that he has prepared or caused to be prepared by his staff—I do not think it is right to say he has prepared them himself because it is a technical job that he probably could not do—sketch maps of all provinces, on the assumption that there would be a tolerance of 10 per cent. He has also had produced sketch maps on the assumption that there would be a tolerance of 20 per cent, and he is in the course of having prepared another set of sketch maps on the assumption that there would be a tolerance of 25 per cent. None of them is completed.

They are only sketches, and in his opinion the publication of them would be rather apt to create the impression, because we all know that people look at things and do not even read the big print, much less the fine print, that this was the finished product. It certainly is not, because the representation commissioner said to me that he himself could point to dozens of objections in every one of these maps as they are now drawn.

He did make a suggestion which I am very happy to pass on to the house. He suggested that each party or group in the house might like to delegate three or four members to visit his office. I do not think we could reasonably expect him to be prepared to have every member of the house visit his office, because it would paralyse the work of the office and I do not think that would be right. However, he suggested that if three or four members selected by the caucus or by the leader would like to come and meet him and his staff and have the whole process explained fully to them he would be very happy indeed to do that.

I pass on that suggestion to the house as an eminently reasonable one. But I must say that personally I agree with the view he expressed that if these maps—as I have said there is more than one series of them—were published they would create an impression, which apparently has been created even in the minds of some sophisticated people like members of the house, that this is done when it is not done at all. All these sketches represent are exercises, as I called them earlier today, that were prescribed by parliament in the act that we passed unanimously at the last session.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of provisional standing order 39A this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 24, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FOOD AND DRUGS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) presented the first report of the special committee on food and drugs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough) presented the first report of the standing committee on privileges and elections, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent to revert to motions in order to make a short announcement.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the Prime Minister to revert to motions to make an announcement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce at this time that I am depositing with the Clerk for tabling at 5.30 this afternoon copies in English and French of the report of the royal commission on banking and finance. Copies will be made available to all hon. members at that time, and they will go on sale to the public. The press summary prepared by the royal commission will also be released at 5.30 and will be distributed to hon. members.

Perhaps I might take advantage of this opportunity to say a word of sincere appreciation to the chairman of the royal commission, Hon. Dana Porter, chief justice of Ontario, and the other members of the commission, their staff and all who have assisted in the preparation of this report. This is, I believe, the most comprehensive study of Canada's financial system that has ever been undertaken. The government will give immediate and thorough consideration to the conclusions of the report and the recommendations made by the commission.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I simply rise for the purpose of underlining the Prime Minister's words of appreciation for the contribution made by Chief Justice Porter and the other members of the commission. They undertook a very difficult and trying responsibility. From information that is available at the present time, though only by way of suggestion as to possibilities, we know that the commission has met a problem that needed to be faced, and all Canadians will be pleased to honour the members of the commission for having undertaken this heavy responsibility.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he anything to report regarding Leonard McLaughlin, and is he in a position to say that the government has brought to the attention of the board of trustees the total unacceptability of this man as president of the S.I.U.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to what I have already said on this matter in the house. I have not indicated to the trustees any course of action that they should follow in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the government consider that Leonard McLaughlin is a fit and proper person to be president of the S.I.U?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman knows, the government has no authority to direct or restrain the trustees in any way. That authority has been granted by parliament to the trustees themselves. In that way, it is quite impossible for the government to take any part in this particular matter.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I ask a supplementary question. A few days ago I asked the Minister of Justice if the report prepared by counsel in reference to Banks did not recommend prosecution not only against Banks but prosecution against McLaughlin. At that time the Minister of Justice said he would consider the situation and let us have a report. Is he ready to give that report now?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): If two days ago may be termed a few days ago, that is when the question was put. It is true I told the hon. gentleman I would ask for a report. I received it this morning, a few minutes ago, and I shall be in a position to answer the question on Monday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REPORTED REQUEST FOR HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The President of the United States has called for intervention by other nations in the conflict in Viet Nam. It has been suggested that Canada might contribute hospital and medical care because of the fact we are a member of the truce team. May I ask if any such request has been made to the Canadian government, and have we his assurance that such a request will be refused?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No such request has been made to the Canadian government.

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF DIRECTIVES TO PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the state of virtual anarchy and open revolt existing in Cyprus, can the government give us some indication of what the United Nations peace keeping force is supposed to be doing in order to keep the peace; and is any consideration being given to requesting the secretary general of the United Nations to give permission to release some of the details of the instructions to Canadian troops in that area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I saw the secretary general of the United Nations last night, and from the report he made it is clear that the situation in Cyprus does not warrant the description just given by the hon. gentleman. With regard to disclosure of the directives, the answer continues to be no. I suggest to my hon. friend that he examine carefully the documents already tabled in this house.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask a supplementary question. I may tell the minister that I have examined all the documents. Has the British government recently requested the secretary general to release the details of the instructions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The answer is no.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I asked a question of the Prime Minister the other day, and perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs could give me an answer. I asked whether the instructions of the secretary general to the United Nations forces have been altered in compliance with the expressed willingness of Archbishop Makarios to extend the role of the United Nations forces from a purely defensive one to enable it to keep the green line clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The situation with regard to that matter has not changed. I am satisfied, after talking to the secretary general—and this is one of the reasons I went to see him last night—that the course taken by him and the force commander is the correct one under the circumstances.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following his conversation with the secretary general of the United Nations, is he now able to report any hopeful developments in that gentleman's efforts to enlarge the number of U.N. members participating in the hazardous Cyprus operation now being carried out by so few members?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there is some reason for thinking that there may be an improvement with regard to the number of countries participating in the force.

PROPOSED FEDERATION OF ZANZIBAR AND TANGANYIKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announcement the press carried in the last day or two relating to the federation of Zanzibar and Tanganyika, and in view of his visit to the United Nations yesterday, does the minister have anything to report to the house on just what has taken place?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Nothing beyond what my friend already knows and the announcement made by President Nyerere as to the union of these two countries. If this means a step toward continental unity in Africa, it will be a welcome step.

PROVISION OF BILINGUAL STAFF AT EMBASSIES ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister who is perfectly bilingual, tell the house whether all steps have been taken since he has been appointed minister of the above-mentioned department, to ensure that the bicultural image of Canada is being reflected in our embassies abroad by hiring a bilingual staff?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

IMMIGRATION

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN BOYS ATTEMPTING TO ENTER ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he protested on behalf of Canada to the British immigration authorities in connection with their off-hand treatment of two young Canadians who went to England recently to visit their grandparents with the intention apparently, of working there? Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs also intend to ask the British authorities for a financial indemnity for the inconveniences which they caused to the parents of these young Canadians?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that this is a question for the order paper, in spite of the persons involved.

TRANSPORT

REGULATIONS RESPECTING USE OF WHARVES BY FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the regulations relating to government wharves, and ask the minister if he could indicate to the house how these regulations are to apply. I understand they are to apply in a different way to fishermen on the east coast and fishermen on the west coast, and can he say what money the department expects to realize from the rates charged to the fishermen on the east and west coasts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the powers given to me by the house, this would fall under subsection (e) which states that a question should not be of a nature requiring a lengthy and detailed answer. I wonder if the hon. member would care to put it on the order paper.

Mr. Howard: Under the powers given to me by the house, Mr. Speaker, I would like it set down for some debate later at ten o'clock.

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTIONS FOR CHILDREN 16 AND 17 YEARS OLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, and I am sorry I have not had the opportunity to give him notice of it. Is it a fact that the income tax exemptions for parents of children 16 to 17 years of age in all provinces but Quebec will be reduced from $550 to $300, while tax paying Quebec parents will continue to receive the $550 exemption?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper?

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, it just requires a yes or no answer.

HIGHWAYS

QUEBEC—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF GASPE ROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It arises out of a statement made in the adjournment debate last night, but not on the subject I raised myself. Under what federal-provincial program is the contribution to the Gaspe highway in Quebec being made? Is it under the roads to resources program, or is this a new program which the province has?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, no contribution is being made. We are having a discussion with the government of Quebec—perhaps I should say I am having discussions with the minister of highways of Quebec—the possibility of this, but no final decision will be made until we reach some understanding about how it might be done.

Mr. Aiken: Under what authority is this being considered? Is it under the roads to resources program?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not being considered under any authority. We would have to come to parliament to ask for authority to do it, just as in the case of the Gaspe railroad.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State which I hope he will answer. It is about the statements he made recently at the Reform club in Montreal.

Why does the government intend to divert an amount of $7 million to Rimouski from the $16 million earmarked for the Gaspe peninsula?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would be well advised to consult the notes I used in making my speech and to refer also to the retraction the Canadian Press sent to all newspapers about the report of that speech.

What I said then, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is undertaking a program, which will cost approximately $16 million, for the Gaspe peninsula and, moreover, that it intends to include in the supplementary estimates for 1964-65 a sum of approximately $3 million to start the construction of a deep-water wharf near Riviere du Loup.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the numerous protests made by the chambers of commerce in the Gaspe peninsula and by the businessmen of that region, does the government intend to reconsider its decision and build the proposed railway to promote the economic expansion of Gaspe and, therefore of Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: I wish to raise this matter after ten o'clock next Tuesday.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. On February 5 a delegation from the city of Toronto met with the minister and other cabinet members to discuss an alternative site for the C.B.C. rather than the site already acquired in York-Scarborough. In view of the fact that the city of Toronto was given six weeks to prepare a proposal for consideration by the government, and as the time has now expired, has any such proposal been received and, if not, will the C.B.C. now proceed with the Don Mills site?

Mr. Speaker: It is quite evident this is a question for the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MONTREAL—REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING REVOCATIONS OF PAROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to a speech by Judge Claude Wagner in which he stated that Montreal judges last year had revoked 200 paroles in that city because the parolees had committed crimes, including murder? Could the minister have the department check the actual records and report to the house, since these figures seem so greatly different from reports made by the department on previous occasions.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would in future put this type of question on the order paper, because if he does not expect an answer today the question is obviously not especially urgent and important.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GIROUARD—REPORTED ATTEMPT TO JOIN LIBERAL PARTY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has been reported by all information media that Mr. Keith Davie, chief Liberal organizer, has stated that I had been rejected by the Liberal party.

I am asking the Prime Minister whether, to his knowledge, I have ever offered my services to the Liberal party?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I suggest that this has nothing to do with the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question does not relate to public affairs at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Girouard: Under the new standing order, I give notice that I shall deal with this question at the earliest opportunity after ten o'clock.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that his question is completely out of order, and if the question is out of order it cannot be raised after ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the last statement was, shall we say, inconclusive. Standing order 39(5) provides:

> A member who is not satisfied with the answer given to a question asked on any day at this stage, or a member who has been told by Mr. Speaker that his question is not urgent, may give notice that he intends to raise the subject matter of his question on the adjournment of the house, as provided——and so on. This question I have ruled out of order because it does not deal with a public matter, that is with a matter which concerns the house. The private goings on and comings and goings of private members with regard to their own affairs are not matters of public interest. I do not think the question was in order. In fact I think it was definitely out of order.

Mr. Knowles: May I draw Your Honour's attention to the first words you read: "A member who is not satisfied with the answer given to a question—". The hon. member was not satisfied with the answer given to his question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite right in drawing my attention to those words, but I would point out that the question itself is out of order. Perhaps I could recall to the hon. member's attention the words of standing order 39(1):

> Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from ministers of the crown relating to public affairs—

That is the ground on which the Chair is relying at this time. In my opinion the question is not in order and does not relate to public affairs in the strict sense of this subsection.

[Translation]

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to tell the house that if, by Monday morning, the Prime Minister has not answered my question in a satisfactory way, I shall have very interesting information to give the house on a question of privilege following this.

[Text]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, may I say that the question of an adjournment debate is quite academic because there is not an opportunity provided until Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I think a good many hon. members are interested in the rights which they have under the new rule. It was my understanding, and certainly this procedure has been followed thus far in the few days we have been operating under this new rule, that if Your Honour rules a question out of order we may still appeal and have the question discussed between ten and ten thirty. That course has been followed with several questions from hon. members thus far. I hope the understanding is that where an hon. member is not satisfied with the answer given to his question, or where Your Honour rules his question out of order, it is still within the power of the member concerned to transfer the matter for debate between ten and ten thirty.

Mr. Speaker: The interpretation of any new statute is not an easy task, as the hon. member well knows. The distinction that the Chair is trying to make this morning is that private matters should be kept free and clear of this house unless they are matters affecting the house. It does not seem to me that this matter is of such a public nature that it should be raised at this time. However, in order to have some time for reflection, if hon. members will permit me I shall go over the matter at the week end and try to reach a very considered conclusion.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour considers it over the week end may I say that it is surely a fundamental rule of this house that the only questions which can be entertained, either on the order paper or on the orders of the day, are questions of the government relating to the conduct of the public business of this country. The private affairs of political parties, while we debate such matters a good deal in the house during our debates, are not matters under the jurisdiction of the government. Therefore it seems to me that this is the kind of question which is not even entertainable in any conceivable circumstances if we abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. J. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, just on this point may I say I agree with what has been said by the Minister of Transport, but surely it is not for the government to say what is and what is not a matter of private business. If there is an opportunity for an hon. member to raise the matter, and if the minister in reply says it is not the kind of question he chooses to answer, then that is an answer which I submit entitles the member concerned to bring the question up again on the adjournment debate.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I would draw to Your Honour's attention and also to the attention of hon. members generally the words of the Minister of Transport. It is unfortunate that both he himself as well as his colleagues did not in the past address themselves to the same line of conduct which he is now advocating to the house, because on many occasions in past years the hon. member and his colleagues were extremely active in this particular field of questioning.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has stated that sometimes these matters are not easy to decide on the spur of the moment. In order to ensure complete consideration and impartiality I should like to have the week end to study the matter. Therefore I would hope that we can end the discussion at this point.

Mr. Bechard: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, despite what the Minister of Transport has just said I think this question should be dealt with by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I may say so I think the Chair has received sufficient advice to keep it busy well beyond the week end.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, in giving consideration to this point will you also give consideration to the rights of the electors in the constituency of Labelle?

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—STATEMENT AS TO OPEN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce, not of "political trades and commerce", may I reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, when he asked me whether the wheat board will be able to provide an open quota for wheat, oats and barley by the end of the present crop year. I said yesterday in reply to his question that I did not think the wheat board would yet be in a position to answer this question, and I now have an answer from the wheat board.

The exact level of quotas which will be reached by the end of the crop year cannot be determined at the present time. There are two reasons for this. First, the wheat board does not know how much of the grain farmers now hold will actually be delivered. From past experience, as the hon. member knows, this depends a good deal on crop prospects at the time the crop is being delivered. Second, the board does not know the volume of sales, particularly of oats and barley, that will be made between now and the end of the crop year. However, it is known that producers will be able to market more grain this year than last year, and far more than they have delivered on the average in the past ten years.

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister on behalf of the Prime Minister and the government prepared to recommend an increase in the initial price for oats and barley?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when a decision is made as to the initial payments for wheat, oats and barley, it will be conveyed to the house.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government of Canada received the urgent request of the government of the province of Alberta that immediate negotiations commence between the government of Canada and the government of the United States for the joint cost sharing of the paving of the Alaska highway?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will have to look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF DIRECTOR OF INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question concerning the 1967 world fair and of which I gave him notice?

Could the minister tell the house the reason why Mr. Guy Beaudry, director of public relations, information and promotion for the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation, has resigned?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Interesting though this question obviously is, it seems to me that it should be on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my question to the minister and he is ready to answer it.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does not seem to me that this question falls under the rule of urgency requiring an immediate answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

R.C.A.F. STATION EDGAR—CLOSING OF SWIMMING POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would it be possible to delay the closing of the swimming pool at R.C.A.F. station Edgar until June 30, when the classes that are now being held there will finish? They will then have time to complete their swimming program.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, representations have been made on this subject by the mayor of Barrie and by the local Liberal association.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of the local Liberal association a matter of public business?

Mr. Cardin: The Liberal association is certainly a legal organization.

Mr. Grafftey: You are getting in deep water.

Mr. Cardin: I think the hon. member will understand that the closing out of the defence establishments affected by announced changes in defence programs must follow the established schedules as closely as possible, otherwise costly delays are likely to occur. Nevertheless, recognizing the importance of the swimming pool at R.C.A.F. station Edgar to certain community groups that have been conducting life saving programs, I am investigating the possibility of keeping the Edgar swimming pool in operation until June 30, when these life saving programs will have been completed.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In his answer to the hon. member for Simcoe East he said that closing down had to follow the schedule set out. I ask the minister whether the government has a schedule for closing down establishments across the country; and if so, would they table it or have it printed in Hansard so that communities and staffs will know what the schedule is?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, there is not a determined schedule for all establishments across the country, but we are working on a program for the phasing out of all these establishments. That program has not yet been completed.

Mr. More: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the staff of the R.C.E.M.E. workshop in Regina been consulted or advised yet of the shut-down scheduled for July 1?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question to the Associate Minister of National Defence in reference to the reply he gave the hon. member for Simcoe East regarding a swimming pool. I wonder whether he could give the same serious consideration to the position of the employees of the Point Edward naval base, who will not only not have a swimming pool but will not have any jobs?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to advise the house that the Department of National Defence has done everything it can in order to phase out as slowly as possible the work at the Point Edward naval base. A ship which was not scheduled to go into the Point Edward naval base has now been directed to go there in order to be refitted, so that work will be provided for a longer period and we will then be able to phase out more slowly the work at Point Edward naval base.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): So they should get down on their knees and thank you?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the associate minister received any representations from the Liberal association in that area regarding this matter?

PENITENTIARIES

DRUMHELLER, ALTA.—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this is a question directed to the Minister of Public Works, of which I gave him notice. It arises out of a question I put on the order paper. The question I put on the order paper was in reference to the commencement of construction of the penitentiary at Drumheller. The answer to that question—and I am not saying that the minister deliberately misled the house—was contrary to a news report given by one of the staff of the Department of Justice. I wonder whether he would like to clarify the situation in this respect. Can the minister say when this construction is going to commence; because the answer he gave is certainly in contrast to the information given in the news report.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if there is any confusion I am afraid it exists in the mind of my hon. friend. I have nothing to add to the answer I have given and I do not wish to amend it. I read the article in the Drumheller newspaper, and when the commissioner of penitentiaries mentioned that the architects are now working on the plans and specifications he meant that we have some basic plans that we can use for institutions of this kind. It is now a matter for our consulting architect—who was appointed yesterday, by the way—to adapt these plans to the Drumheller project. We expect tenders to be called in the fall. If my hon. friend would like to compare the answer I am giving today with the answer I gave a few days ago, he will see there is no discrepancy.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING SECOND ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. On April 9, as reported in Hansard at page 1946, the minister promised a statement in regard to the co-ordination with the provinces for a second trans-Canada highway. He said the statement would be made within one week. Can he make that statement today?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I promised the hon. member for Skeena that I would make a statement yesterday. Yesterday morning, before the orders of the day, I got in touch with the hon. member for Skeena and told him I was not in a position to make that statement. It will be made in the very near future.

Mr. Grafftey: Mañana, mañana; government by mañana.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his department has completed—

Mr. Grafftey: Perhaps you would stop making speeches and run your departments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONTAMINATED WHEAT SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether his department has completed the inquiry into the contamination of wheat shipped to Great Britain and Russia; and if that inquiry is completed, can he make the final report to the house at this time?

Mr. Speaker: This is an important question, of course, and if the minister can answer it very quickly so we can get rid of it, fine; but really it is the type of question that should be on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I wonder whether he would inform me when he intends to answer question No.

109 which I placed on the order paper on February 20, 63 days ago.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I will try to answer this question as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

COMMUNITY ANTENNA SYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR POLICY CLARIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Transport or the Secretary of State. How much longer must we wait before we get an indication of government policy on community antenna systems?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon the Secretary of State and I received a delegation from the television community antenna association, which asked us not to make any statement of policy until they had had an opportunity of making representations. Now that they have made representations it is our intention to give as urgent consideration to this matter as we can consistent with the other obligations we have to the country.

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before the government makes a decision on the matter will the minister cause this question to be referred to the standing committee on broadcasting?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no standing committee on broadcasting, so that would be a miracle I could not accomplish.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

The Chairman: This item in the main estimates may be found on page 8 of the blue book and the details are on page 11. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Winch: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, the amount shown in the main estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1964-65 is $140,124,800, of which approximately $140 million is to be voted by parliament and $70,000 is authorized by statute.

Included in this total are amounts required for three functions which have been transferred to the Minister of Forestry. These are the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act and the program respecting freight assistance and storage costs on western feed grains. The amounts required for these operations were included in the Department of Agriculture estimates prior to the functions being transferred to the Minister of Forestry. Where functions are transferred pursuant to the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act the appropriations relating to them are treated as appropriations of the department to which they are transferred. Thus while these three items appear in the Department of Agriculture estimates, they will actually be appropriations of the Department of Forestry. The total of these amounts is $31,359,600.

This leaves a balance of $108,695,200 required for the Department of Agriculture for 1964-65. This compares with $105,096,545 for the same functions in the estimates for 1963-64. I might mention here that this is the gross amount, and it is rather complicated to find out what the net amount is. However, there was something over $13 million on the revenue side which would reduce the $105 million by that amount.

There has been one recent development in connection with departmental operations which I think might be of interest to the committee. This has to do with our research work. We have a very strong and capable research organization within the department. I think the importance of research and its contribution to agriculture are widely understood and much appreciated. It is important, though, that this be brought as closely as possible to the farming community which it is designed to serve. In many of our research stations there is a close and intimate association between the stations and agricultural interests in the area. This, of course, is highly desirable as a means of directing our research work toward matters of primary interest to producers. We are moving to strengthen these contacts.

We made a start in this direction at a meeting which I and officials held in Lethbridge two weeks ago with an advisory committee which I have had set up to advise us on the operations of our range experimental station at Manyberries. The committee consists of five prominent ranchers and farmers in southern Alberta. We reviewed our work at Manyberries and received several valuable suggestions from the committee as to the direction that work should take. Both the committee and I and the departmental officers were convinced of the value of this type of arrangement, and we plan to extend it gradually.

The total cash income from the sale of farm products in 1963, $3,220 million, was the largest on record, being 2.2 per cent above the previous record in 1962 of $3,154 million. The net income of farmers in 1963 was $1,716 million as against $1,679 million in 1962. The net income is made up of gross income, including cash income, income in kind and government payments, minus operating expenses and depreciation charges and with an adjustment for inventory changes. Operating expenses and depreciation charges were again higher in 1963, being $2,180 million compared with $2,080 million in 1962. The net income in 1963 was exceeded only in the years 1951 and 1952.

While the net income in 1963 was higher than in 1962, the realized net income was slightly lower at $1,410 million compared with $1,491 million in 1962. The realized net income does not take inventory changes into account. The increase in the inventory value of products on the farm at the end of 1963, compared with 1962, was $307 million.

Another matter which I might mention has to do with agricultural exhibitions. If the exhibitions are to be of the best possible service to agriculture it is important that the classes and prize lists in livestock and other classes be related closely to utility values and encourage widespread participation by breeders. I have had extensive discussions with exhibition people and some of the breed associations about this matter, and I find them very much in accord with our thinking. We are arranging this year at some of the major exhibitions to have some pilot classes as a start toward this objective, and the department will be assisting in the prize money for these exhibitions.

Possibly I should enlarge on exactly what we propose to do with exhibitions, because I am sure hon. members will be interested as will livestock breeders right across Canada. We have some 35 research centres in Canada, along with enough substations to make up a total of 56. There are 128 exhibitions in Canada, and these exhibitions are held in nearly all the important towns or towns of sufficient size to sustain exhibitions.

[Mr. Hays.]

One group of exhibitions is known as class A because they provide $6,000 or more in prize money for agricultural purposes. Those in class B have to provide $3,000 or more to be eligible for inclusion in class B fairs.

Throughout the years the Canadian government has provided capital grants for these exhibitions to help them to erect buildings of a capital nature to be used for agricultural purposes. These grants were suspended in July of 1962, and for the most part they have not been reinstated. I discussed this matter with the provincial ministers of agriculture last June and again last December, and they were also of the opinion that we should take a whole new look at the exhibition set-up because it does play a very important part in research so far as Canada is concerned. I think we should relate this back to a form of research which we have lost in recent years due to the nature of the animals that are being shown. As I mention the vegetables, fruits and all the commodities that are shown at exhibitions, I will explain our program in relation to them.

This year we thought we would like to tie up this group of people who are the best breeders of livestock in Canada and who provide all the seed stock for our commercial enterprises. I believe they also do a great deal of work in so far as seed is concerned, and I am referring to corn and such things, and all the various activities that take place on the farm in connection with seed.

As a result of our geographical position we have always had a very high cost agricultural economy, but we have a very vigorous group of farmers. I think we have in Canada the best farmers in the world. This is probably a result of our geographical position, because they have to fight against great odds in connection with weather and that sort of thing. When you think of the 12 months pasture they enjoy in the Argentine or the 12 months pasture they enjoy in New Zealand, and when you think that Canada is covered with snow from coast to coast a great deal of the time, you begin to realize the problems the farmers have in competing with other countries of the world.

Concerning exhibitions, we felt we should take a new look at these exhibitions to see if we could not catch up on some of the work upon which our research centres are not moving fast enough. We thought we would tie in this program with the group of farmers raising these high class animals and thus make every exhibition a research centre for the betterment of agriculture in Canada.

We decided to do this first with beef cattle. We chose the Hereford to start with and we hope to extend the program to cover all the things that are exhibited. We chose Herefords because for the most part the breeders of these animals have abandoned exhibitions in Canada. The reason they have abandoned the shows is that fittings are so expensive, the cost of transportation so high and the prize money so small that even if they won all the first awards it was not worth while to exhibit these cattle. These breeders just stayed at home.

We have decided to revise the classifications for Herefords. I can best explain the program by relating it to the one breed and then you will see the direction in which we wish to move. Our breeders readily admit that during the last 10 or 15 years they have not been producing as efficient an animal as is possible. When I say "efficient" I am talking in terms of feed conversion and that sort of thing. It takes about five pounds of grain to make one pound of beef today on the hoof. If you realize that it now requires only two and a half pounds of feed to make one pound of chicken, you will acknowledge the job the chicken people have done in the last few years and you can see the objective that the beef breeders have in Canada.

Even though the production of beef was up this year we thought we would like to make these animals more efficient. We have therefore devised six classes and one steer class instead of the 15 or 20 classes we had before. We will have two classes for yearling bulls. They will have to be born in the spring, at the time when beef cattle should be born, and not in the fall when they are expensive to look after. We say he must be born at this time.

The first class will consist of yearlings at the time of the exhibition; this will give the people of the country an opportunity to see this animal. The next class will be the two year old class. We use this class because this is the time you would purchase a bull if you were going to turn him out and use him as a herd sire. These would be the only two classes you would have as compared with the numerous classes we used to have. We would put all the money on these two classes for bulls.

Then we would have four female classes. We would have the yearling class, and this animal would have to be born in the spring and would be comparable to the animal we would ordinarily slaughter at this time. It would weigh around 1,000 pounds. Then we would take the two year old female, and there would be two more classes. There would be a three year old cow with a heifer calf afoot, and the next one must be a cow, three years or over, with a male calf afoot. These would be all the classes we would have in this category.

Then we would have a steer class common to all of these classes. This steer would also have to be born in the spring. Anyone who showed in the herd class would have to show in this steer class. The steer would be shown and then slaughtered. He would be cut in half and half would go into the cooler so people could see him. The other half would be judged on cutability, not on the basis of wholesale cuts so much as getting right down to the hamburg, the steaks and all of the other cuts. He would be judged 50 per cent on the hoof and 50 per cent on cutability, in terms of dollars and cents. Suppose, for example, he weighed 1,000 pounds, he would probably yield $271 on the basis of cutability. Another steer of exactly the same weight may bring only $250 on the basis of cutability. As I say, the steer would be judged 50 per cent on the hoof and 50 per cent on the basis of cutability. We would have a weight for it, conversion rates and all this sort of thing.

We feel this is a move in the right direction. I have discussed this with the directors of the Canadian Hereford association, with the directors of A exhibitions and the provincial ministers of agriculture. They all feel it is worth a try. I am happy to start this year with the western fairs, the A circuit. There will be a pilot project in so far as this program is concerned, and the federal government will be contributing half the prize money.

The people concerned with the London exhibition were down here. I feel that around London we have, in so far as Ontario is concerned, some of our very best breeders and some of our very best thinkers They feel we should go one step further and use their exhibition to go ahead with a dairy cattle program. We have suggested that we do away with the young classes and that we start out milkers two, milkers three, milkers four and milkers five. These are the categories that the people from the 30 or 40 different countries who attend these fairs come to this country to buy. In this way we would move toward efficiency in relation to the 128 exhibitions in Canada. It would give us a great deal more research than the people, who are doing a good job, could possibly give us today.

In so far as wheat is concerned, we would say that one bushel of wheat must be backed up by 50 acres. We would not be selecting wheat on the basis of making a world wheat king. We would do the same thing with corn and so on through the whole list of items. I thought you might be interested in what we planned by way of getting more and better research in connection with producing seed stock.

In our research station at Manyberries we have 41,000 acres, on which we have 13 projects. I believe the cattle project has been completed for some time. We have also done some work there in crossing Highland cattle. We have selected the five top people around this station, and the people at the station would say, "Well, what do you want us to do; what is needed in this particular area?" This is something whereby the producers will be able to bring their work much closer to the job these research centres are doing. We hope to expand this as soon as we are able to and, as I say, we have 37 of these institutions.

I am sure hon. members will agree with me that when they stop and think of some of the great problems we have or are going to have in agriculture, there is a job which we must do in order to keep up with other countries in the world if our own people are to be able to compete in agricultural products right here in Canada. I mentioned hogs. We have seen our hogs go down in quality while other countries are producing a 10 to 15 per cent more profitable hog on feed conversion. It takes us about 3½ lbs, of feed to make a pound of pork. We are speaking now about $4 a pig. I have brought this to the attention of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which is holding a hog conference in Montreal toward the end of this month, and the members of that organization hope we can work toward getting this job accomplished in a hurry.

I sent a hog mission to Denmark last year and on their return asked them how long it would take to produce a hog to compete with the Danish hog. They replied about 10 years, but at the end of that time the Danes might still be 10 years ahead of us. Therefore we propose to put testing stations right across Canada so we can select these animals that have a feed conversion rate of 2.1 or 2.5 per pound of pork. By doing this we can follow the example we set with our dairy cattle. At one time, out of the 40 recognized world records, Canadian dairy cattle held 38, but today that figure has dropped to about 15.

The Canadian farmer can do this job because he is the best thinking farmer in the world and has proven himself so in many fields. I will give another example of what we can do. Last year we raised about 6 million acres of barley. Most of this barley, particularly in western Canada, was grown for malting purposes, yet only 10 per cent of it was used for malting. Our export markets were down because they wanted a white barley instead of a blue barley, and if the Canadian farmer had grown feed barley we would have had a market for a great deal of it in Japan and possibly China, because it is the sort of barley they want there.

If you stop to think of this 6 million acres of barley and the different varieties, Parkland and Montcalm as compared with Husky and Jubilee, you are talking about 10 bushels to the acre on 6 million acres, which is worth $30 million or $40 million to the farmer. When we speak about hogs of 10 or 15 per cent more efficiency we are speaking about an increase of $35 million, and when we speak of seed wheat we are talking about an increase of 90 million bushels.

If we in Canada do a proper job of research we can produce another $100 or $200 million worth of produce from exactly the same farms and the same land, provided we give the farmers the tools to do the job. To illustrate the kind of job the farmer is doing, in 1936 it took 27 cents of the workingman's dollar to feed his family, while in 1963 it took him only 19 cents. If you take subsidies into account you will find that the Canadian farmer feeds the Canadian workingman, living in an urban district, cheaper than the workingman is fed in any other country in the world. Therefore we have to give the farmers the tools to work with if they are to be the efficient sort of people they can be, producing the finest feed grains, wheat and livestock in the world.

Due to our geographical position we are not plagued with the sort of diseases which tropical countries cannot eradicate. We have high health standards, good farm land and a good group of farmers. But our farmers' image has been tarnished, and I do not know why. The other day I drove into a parking lot in Ottawa where a chap asked me "Are you from western Canada"? When I told him I was he asked, "How do you like all that money we send you to keep you on your farm"? We have to change this attitude. It is not helpful. When you stop and think about the amount of money we use from our budget on agriculture it is not much more than the C.B.C. uses. We know we like culture and that sort of thing, but you cannot watch it with an empty stomach.

Mr. Hamilton: My first word, Mr. Chairman, must be of congratulation to the minister. I do not think anyone can deny the tremendous interest that he aroused on this side of the chamber, and I hope on his own side, with his views on research and bringing research closer to the people. Having made that observation I would like to go on and, if I may, preach a political moral.

One of the chief responsibilities of a minister is to try to see the whole picture. I can illustrate this not only by the old story of not being able to see the forest for the trees but also by a much more cogent political anecdote. Once a very experienced politician was talking to a group of new politicians and he wanted to assess their political judgment. He asked them, "If you were put into a closed field and in that field there was a wild bull and a wild bear, and you had a rifle with one round of ammunition, which animal would you shoot"? Of course the bright politician came back with the answer "I would shoot the bear. A politician can always shoot the bull."

I tell this story to illustrate my theme. What we heard this morning was a very fine statement on how we should use our research institutions to carry the knowledge and know how of our scientists right down on to the farms. This is very important, and I agree with the minister that it is long overdue. Each one of us who has gone through the farm areas of the country has seen some farmers using all the knowledge of the technician and the scientist and doing very well, but in the very same areas other farmers are not using the knowledge which is available. This is something to challenge any minister of agriculture, and the minister should be complimented for taking on this task.

Now I have to go on and say that I hope, in chopping away at this tree in the forest, he does not forget the over-all picture because from the statements that have been made by the minister and others in the last year one begins to wonder if in the Liberal government there is this over-all comprehension of the basic and fundamental needs of agriculture. Once or twice during his speech today the minister indicated that he had a little glimmer of what these needs were.

There has been a tremendous concentration by the Department of Agriculture on the techniques of increasing production, making two seeds grow where one grew before, putting more pounds of beef on cattle, on poultry meat and hog meat, side by side with a lower grain input. What has been missing over the long years of the department's history has been the concept that it is of no use getting farmers to produce things and then leading them into a blind alley because there are no markets at the end of the road. The minister should be praised for grappling with this problem of lack of contact between the work done in the scientific and technical fields of his department and the farmers in general. He realizes that this knowledge has to get to the farmer, and I think he should be congratulated for the remarks he has made today. This is not the end of course, and a great deal remains to be done, but the hon. gentleman will find us ready to support him in the efforts he is making in this direction, as the applause he heard at the end of this part of his observations indicates.

This is not to say the minister should lose sight of the whole picture. I have been collecting the hon. gentleman's speeches made over the past few months, and some of them do indicate that he realizes the nature of the problems which are facing us. I should like to remind the hon. gentleman of what he said last October—it was on October 14—speaking on a supply motion, and again speaking on the estimates on December 12. In his speeches since then he has indicated also that there are three legislative acts which he wishes to bring forward. One has something to do with crop re-insurance. We have heard this since last October, and speeches touching on it were made on March 18 out in Regina intimating that these measures were ready. Then the minister went on to make a statement about two weeks ago to the effect that he was being delayed, that these things were being held up and that he could not get his proposed legislation on the order paper.

Mr. Hays: I should like to correct one statement. I did not say I could not get it on the order paper. That is not correct. I said the house was so slow in getting legislation through that we lacked time to deal with some of these very important measures. I did not say we had trouble in getting it on the order paper.

Mr. Hamilton: Of course we shall accept the minister's word for it. I know the difficulty we have at times. But I wish he would consult the Lethbridge Herald and ask the editor to correct the absolute nonsense which was printed on that occasion. Here is an editorial from the Lethbridge Herald dated April 11 and entitled "The Farmers Wait".

The need for new parliamentary rules has been graphically illustrated by remarks of Canada's Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Harry Hays, during his recent visit to Lethbridge.

He has three important measures waiting to be brought before the House of Commons, but he can't get them there. The government's legislative program is bogged down by an opposition filibuster, and under the present rules nothing can be done about it except invoke closure. And the Liberal party is still licking its wounds from the last time, eight years ago, that it tried that.

Would the hon. gentleman please write to the editor of the Lethbridge Herald telling him to take out this arrant nonsense and that the minister can, at any time he wishes, put something on the order paper so we would at least know there was something tangible ready. We would give it first reading so we could consider it. We would look at it. I think the statement to which I have just referred is one which should be corrected. If the minister has this legislation ready he should put it on the order paper—

Mr. Douglas: Providing there is something to put there.

Mr. Hamilton: —and not go around letting innocent editors think this house is holding up any legislation for agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: The next point I should like to make has to do with the cost of farm machinery, a question about which we have heard a great deal. I have the experience of an investigation which was carried out in Saskatchewan over the years, and I have participated in investigations which took place here in Ottawa. As a matter of record, an investigation into the cost of farm machinery was being carried on by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization at the time the government changed. I understand that the present standing committee on agriculture and colonization has so far only held an organization meeting and, if my information is correct, nothing has been referred to it.

Here we have an incomplete study of the cost of farm machinery carried out in the 1962-63 session. Also, up to the end of the last session the same standing committee was working on a major item of cost to eastern farmers, that is the cost of eastern feed grain. We had brought in all these witnesses to give evidence. The committee, composed of Liberals, Conservatives and representatives of the Social Credit group, the Creditistes and the New Democratic party, were all working closely together to try to find effective ways of reducing the cost of eastern feed grain. I suggest to the minister that rather than going out to the west and saying that the opposition is delaying these things, we should make use of the machinery which is available in parliament under the present rules. Some of the most able men in this country would be glad to sit on this committee, to forget party differences and see whether they could not get at the factors responsible for this situation in which feed grain represents the major item of cost to eastern farmers.

I was hoping to hear from the minister an indication that agriculture is confronted with other problems in addition to the one respecting research. The biggest item of cost to eastern farmers is the cost of feed grain. In this regard the minister seems content with the action he took last summer, hoping that this will achieve the results he desires in stabilizing the price of grain to eastern farmers. At that time I indicated we had grave doubts that the action taken by the minister would get to the root of the trouble, and if hon. members would read the findings of the standing committee I think they would agree that my observations were well founded. So my proposal today is that the minister get on with his work to trying to bring the research done in the department closer to the people, but that he should not neglect these other aspects to which I have referred.

I hope he will look at another tree in the forest. Eastern farmers find themselves in most desperate need. I put on record last October that farm income had moved upward in the western provinces and that it was holding fairly steady in Ontario, but the rise in Ontario was held down by the fact that many of the areas were not as productive as they should be. In Quebec and the maritimes, however, we were facing one of the greatest challenges in the whole field of agriculture.

During the last election campaign—the last two, as a matter of fact—I asked the Conservative party to back me in a program concentrated on raising the farm income of eastern farmers, and by "eastern farmers" I have always meant to include those of British Columbia. I was opposed by the western Liberals, one of whom was elected to the legislature in Regina the other day, on the ground that I was going out to help eastern farmers and should be defeated. I carried this campaign into every constituency in the west and the western farmers supported me; they supported this program of having the federal government concentrate its interest for a few years on lifting up the eastern farmers as we have done in the west. We did not do anything against the eastern farmer as a government. Indeed, our policy of finding world markets for western grain not only led to an immediate rise in income of western farmers but also caused an updraft which was of benefit to eastern farmers.

This was not enough. There had to be concentrated planning on several of their problems, and I outlined a six point program to meet those problems. We have been waiting for a long time to see what government policy would be.

During the election campaign the national Liberal program was first of all to get at this problem by naming two ministers of agriculture and thus raising the importance to agriculture of the departments of the two ministers. Since that time what have they done? They have decimated the department and made it look like a skeleton; and you know, Mr. Chairman, what a skeleton looks like out on the open street. They have taken the Department of Agriculture, and instead of being one of the two or three top departments of the government they have put it down to No. 20 or No. 23 on the list. First of all they took away the wheat board, which was the marketing arm of the department, and emasculated the whole idea of bringing agriculture into a co-ordinated and cohesive policy making machine.

No sooner had they done that—and we had a second minister of agriculture sitting in the wings for almost a year—then they began to cut the department to shreds and scatter it all over the place. I am not opposed to the moving of any sections of a department if greater good can be accomplished, but I think what has actually happened is that the Department of Agriculture has now become diversified.

During the course of his estimates I should like to ask the minister to answer some questions as to what these statements which have been made recently mean. I have not had much chance to go over what has been happening in Canada recently. For example, this is a headline in the Manitoba Co-Operator of April 2, 1964:

> Sauve says new department independent.
> The federal government's proposed new department of forestry and rural development is going to operate as an independent unit free of agriculture department controls—

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not the way to get at our agricultural industry. We have been working for years to bring to agriculture all possible uses of the land which we have such as forestry, for recreation, for any use whatsoever which will increase the income of farmers on that land, as one of the techniques of trying to lift the incomes of farmers on marginal land. Yet we now have a minister saying in a farming paper that this new department is going to be independent, and that is what I am concerned about.

Here we have a government trumpeting that they are centralizing the military services after many years of discussion to get efficiency, co-ordination and cohesion into the military operations in this country, yet at the same time the government are diversifying agriculture. Who is going to finance the military if the farmers are not in good shape? Agriculture is still the basic force for building up the economy of the whole country, and when agriculture is doing well every workingman in the cities of Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal and all across the industrial country does well. If you ever reverse the tide with regard to agriculture, then in two or three years you will find the workingman out of work again.

Yet we have agriculture, which we fought like anything to get moving again, all of a sudden being divided up.

There have been words spoken about two or three ministers working together; the Minister of Trade and Commerce looking after wheat, the Minister of Forestry looking after redevelopment and the Minister of Agriculture looking after railway line abandonment, and out of this triumvirate we would get a co-ordinated policy. When I was minister of northern affairs and national resources and responsible under the laws of this country for the planning of all the uses of resources of the country, both in co-operation with other departments of the federal government and with provincial governments and private business, we were working out plans for agricultural redevelopment and plans for the Department of Forestry.

At that time I made no secret, either privately or publicly, of the fact that the job of the minister of northern affairs and national resources was simply planning the operations, but that the Department of Agriculture would be the operating arm because they had the tremendous experience and ability in their department and the staff to co-ordinate the work of all these departments in order to bring the help of all the experts in forestry, recreation, wildlife and all the rest of it to bear on bringing more income to the land. But in the planning which we carried out in our national development program and in its component part, the national agricultural program, the agriculture department was looked on as the heart and muscles for the carrying out of the programs worked out by the various departments concentrating on the problem in their particular segments, because in that agriculture department we had the machinery. This government has reversed the whole thinking of the previous national agricultural program, and the test is going to be whether this diversification of a once great department and its relegation down to a subsidiary position in the over-all scale of things in the new regime will lift up farm incomes.

I am going to suggest to the minister in all seriousness that the real challenge before any agriculture minister today must be not just the individual problems of agriculture but that of seeing the situation as a whole. I will let him tell us what he is going to do about his program for cutting down the cost of farm machinery, about his crop reinsurance program and the changes in the Farm Credit Corporation; and we are sitting here ready and willing to help that legislation through the house if there is going to be anything in it to help agriculture. Therefore we would ask for a statement from the minister in this regard.

Now, basically these are the big problems. The big problems in Canada are traced by the research into the income which comes to the farmer. The minister mentioned that in 1963, which was one of the greatest years in the agricultural history of the country, the net income of the farmer was slightly higher. Gross income was up 2 per cent. He went on to confess that costs had also gone up, and then he mentioned the key matter, that the realized net income was down.

Mr. Chairman, the farmer does not give a hoot for any net income figures, and I hope that the minister throws those out of his lexicon. All these net income figures represent bookkeeper's figures. Whenever a farmer grows a big crop the bookkeeper adds the inventory on to his income, but he does not get any cash. Then when he sells his big crop the inventory value is taken off his net income they say his pockets are full. So that net income is meaningless. What one should look at is realized income. The minister said this was down in 1963. It certainly was not down in western Canada in 1963. Therefore it must have been down in eastern Canada.

This is the problem, Mr. Chairman. You have one segment of the industry going up much faster than another sector, so that any program which does not concentrate on the needs of the eastern farmers today is missing the main target. On the minister's estimates last year I asked him, where is this national dairy policy? We had been grappling with that over the last two years of our term of office and had finally got the industry to sit down with us at a conference in February, 1963, where the late Dr. Hannam made his last great effort. He was chairman of the conference.

Last October I asked what was being done. We did get an announcement about a year ago, just before May 1, relating to price supports. We are still waiting for the price supports for this year even though May 1 is very close. As I pointed out last year in my statement on the estimates, price supports are only a short term policy for one year. What the dairy farmers are concerned with, as well as the great bulk of the dairy industry in eastern Canada, is when we are going to get a national dairy policy. These farmers knew that we were working on it and that it was a very difficult matter. They knew that we had to get co-operation from the provincial governments. We got that co-operation from Quebec and Ontario, and they knew that the others would follow. But what has this government done to grapple with the long range problem of the dairy industry?

Mr. Vincent: We do not know yet.

Mr. Hamilton: No, we do not know. I suggest that is what we want to hear about. What has happened to the income of the eastern farmers? The minister skipped over that point when he said it is down for the whole of Canada; but since it was up for the west last year it must be down for the east. We want to know what he is going to do with this legislation; but above all we want to know what is going to happen with regard to a national dairy policy. That is the greatest blistering sore on the whole agricultural industry today. I know the problem is tough and it will be difficult to get the co-operation of the provinces and the farm organizations.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Hays: Is it not true that this is a record year for the dairy farmers, and that they have received more in Quebec than they have ever received since confederation?

Mr. Hamilton: I am very glad the minister asked that question, Mr. Chairman, because it makes me despair of any hope for him in the future. It is no use worshipping these little figures that are published and show an increase of a percentage point. I will let some of the members from Quebec answer that question in detail. It is no good taking comfort from an increase of a percentage point; you cannot get away from the basic fact that the minister is pinning all his faith on the hope that the present system will work its way out of the difficulties. I am pointing out to the minister something I am sure is right; that unless there is radical action in connection with the dairy industry, they will never be out of trouble. Because cheese, or some other product, is up a percentage point the minister says "We will get out of the trouble"; but he will not get out of the trouble, because the trouble is fundamental.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Hamilton: I should like to finish my remarks, Mr. Chairman. The minister will have to face up to the fact that the dairy industry is now national and is not centered around some city. The products are marketed all across the country, and the problems are exactly the same in the United States and 20 or more countries in Europe. Unless this question is faced in a national way in order to get at the basic, fundamental problems involved, the minister will not find a solution.

I suggest that the first fundamental is marketing. We will not be able to market these products in countries where there is a surplus of dairy products. Going over the GATT conferences and spending all your time talking about what you are going to do, and trying to sell dairy products to countries which have a surplus of such products is like milking a dried-out cow. That is what the minister is doing.

The minister must get at the fundamentals of the dairy program; he must work with the farm organizations, bring them together and get the support of the provincial governments. I know that the minister of agriculture of Quebec and the minister of agriculture of Ontario are willing to work together, but there is no leadership from Ottawa. We waited to hear something about that today, but we did not. Did the minister have a question?

Mr. Hays: No.

An hon. Member: He forgot.

Mr. Hamilton: Yes, he forgot. I think I have said enough, Mr. Chairman, to make my point. In going after the individual trees in the forest—

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? Why didn't he do more about it?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think this indicates the bankruptcy of policy or ideas of the minister. After holding office for a year, with the most pressing problem facing agriculture as a whole, that of the dairy industry, he asks what could we do about it. I know that when I was in the department there were at least 15 different alternatives, and at least one or two showed signs of promise. We pulled in representatives of farm organizations and set up a committee. How many times has that committee met? What leadership has been given by the minister? He has available in the department all these alternatives, but the real task is to get down and choose the alternative that in his judgment is best and try to take some action on it. It will not be done quickly, but he will have a great deal of co-operation from the minister of agriculture in Quebec and the minister of agriculture in Ontario.

An hon. Member: He cannot get any from his colleagues, though.

Mr. Hamilton: That is right. I have made my points as well as I can, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the tremendous challenge of the declining farm income in eastern Canada. I like to think that the two hon. members from rural Quebec who came over to support us did so because they came to this house as a protest against the poor agricultural conditions in their part of the country, and the government has done nothing about this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: They have heard the debates in this house. They heard the debate during the supply motion last October, in which I indicated in statistical form the sliding income of Quebec and the maritimes in particular. I suggested several directions in which the government could go. Then they heard the minister's answer, that statistics are for losers and that all this was a pile of junk. I do not think it is a pile of junk to put before the house statistics which indicate that there is a pressing problem in certain parts of Canada.

Last December during my remarks on the estimates I asked the minister whether he had knowledge of the farm survey we conducted in 22 districts of eastern Canada in January, 1963. I said at that time that I would not ask him to produce the document, because much of that document is shocking in its significance and if the rest of the people of Canada found out just how poor were the farmers and how low was their standard of living in a great part of our farm population, mostly in northern and eastern Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, there would be a demand on any government, Conservative or Liberal, to take action; because we cannot let 25 per cent of our people live in what can only be described, in city parlance, as slum conditions.

This problem is not new. With regard to this survey, I am coming to the conclusion, since I cannot get the government to take any action in regard to it, that we should ask the minister to publish it and let the people of Canada see what it is like to live in certain counties not very far from here, and counties through Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. We did not even make a survey of Newfoundland because we knew what it was like without making a survey. We should let the people of Canada see just how their fellow Canadians live in this country. Let that survey be published and let us begin to draw the conclusions that must be drawn from the survey and take action against these problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: I am quite content, Mr. Chairman, to stay within my limit of 30 minutes.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member please continue. He has unanimous consent.

Mr. Hamilton: I have just about finished my remarks anyway. I say with all the force at my command that all parties in this house will stand behind the minister in any courses of action which are constructive and which move forward. I think the two basic problems are, first, the dairy industry—which is a national problem but is mostly concentrated in the east—and second the low income of eastern farmers. We from the west, with almost every seat represented by Conservatives at the present time, will stand behind the minister in any program that will help lift up our fellow Canadians.

Mr. Peters: That may be more support than he has from the Liberal party.

Mr. Hamilton: If I may impose on the committee for a moment or two longer, Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a whole mass of promises made by the Prime Minister. I do not want to take up too much time, but I will quote just a few:

[Mr. Hamilton.]

A new Liberal government will take the initiative in formulating, in co-operation with the provinces, with farmers and milk distributors, a system of free milk for children in school.

This will only help the dairy industry to the extent of 1 per cent, but it is a little help and we will support it. Then with respect to dairy cattle the Prime Minister said this:

With respect to dairy cattle, the objectives will be to have at least 25 per cent of dairy cows on test within ten years.

I do not know how much the candidate concerned knew about the dairy cattle industry, but I would like to know what is happening with regard to these matters. Then the Prime Minister spoke about eastern agriculture, about which nothing has been done to solve the problems. He said:

Under no circumstances will a new Liberal government allow the Crowsnest rates to be eroded or abandoned by any branch line abandonment policy.

Well, they put the minister in charge of branch line abandonment, and he would not tell us what the policy was before the Saskatchewan election, so I do not think it bodes too well for us in this regard:

Would immediately provide for a floor price of $2 a bushel for No. 1 northern wheat and appropriate differentials for other grades to apply over the life of the present international wheat agreement.

Here is another promise in respect of a two price system for wheat:

This policy will be accompanied by a consumer subsidy so that there will be no rise in the price of bread.

Bread has gone up in price but there is no consumer subsidy. Here is another statement made in Regina by the Prime Minister:

Tonight I pledge that we will move immediately to increase the funds available under the Export Credits Insurance Act for financing farm exports.

I have not heard a peep about amending the Export Credits Insurance Act. I can go right through this whole long list, page after page of such promises. Here is another one:

A Liberal government will promptly seek agreement with the provinces on a plan which will enable marketing boards to operate on a national scale—

What is happening there? And so on. I am not suggesting that all these things outlined by the Prime Minister are going to be done. He has gone 60 days in one direction and then 300 days in the other direction. He now says there is a change in policy. He goes one way for 60 days and another way for the other 300 days. All this confusion is bad enough in the case of other ministers who are new at their jobs and do not know much about Canada, but the Minister of Agriculture has, I am sure, the solid support of every member of every party for any move that will help agriculture. We know that the problems are difficult but I say to him now, bring in the legislation. Put some evidence before us that you have a national dairy policy. Bring some evidence before us that you really want to tackle the problem of the low income of eastern farmers. If you do these things you will get our support.

The Chairman: I see the Minister of Justice rising at the same time as the hon. member for Vancouver East. It has been the custom on the first item to have a statement of policy or in any event a general statement from a representative of each party. I suggest that we should follow the same procedure; therefore I call on the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether an electrician can throw any light on agricultural policies, but I should like to make an approach to agricultural problems without going into details with regard to the various phases of the agricultural economy.

I was most interested in the remarks of the previous speaker. Time after time he spoke about the need to get down to fundamentals. Time after time he spoke about the need for a national agricultural policy. I do not know of any man or woman who stands for election in Canada or who has been elected to any of the legislative chambers of Canada who would not make exactly the same kind of statement, the same kind of speech and utter the same kind of platitudes and generalities. Platitudes and generalities are not the important thing. The important thing is, when is somebody going to have the courage to tell governments and agriculturists that they have got to face up to the problem and perhaps accept things that go against their grain?

We are not going to solve the problems of agriculture with policies based on bits and pieces. We have got to get down to the groundwork of doing the thinking for a national agricultural policy that will cover all phases of agriculture and will tie in agriculture from the west to the east, from the Pacific to the Atlantic. If we are going to approach the major problems of agriculture in that manner then government members, official opposition members and others are going to have to face up to an analysis of the Canadian economy and the principles that govern that economy.

We have heard a great deal said about the fact that in Canada we live under a private enterprise system and are proud of it. But, Mr. Chairman, you cannot separate the agricultural economy from the over-all economy, and if you honestly analyse our over-all economy today you will see that so far as the federal authority is concerned, we are rapidly getting away from a free enterprise system to a subsidized economy system.

Let us face the facts. So far as the federal government is concerned it is already subsidizing many aspects of the over-all economy. We subsidize the gold mines, we subsidize the coal mines; we subsidize the railways; we subsidize the shipping industry.

Mr. Douglas: The manufacturers, through the tariff.

Mr. Winch: Through tariff procedures we subsidize the vast majority of manufacturers in Canada. We have a subsidized economy not only generally but in agriculture as well. May I make it very clear that in the 11 years I have been a member of the House of Commons I have always supported agricultural subsidies because of need and emergency, but we have passed the stage where such subsidies are granted only for a year, three years or five years. They have now become a part of the agricultural economy, a part of the subsidized economy of Canada, and we are not going to get down to a basic understanding of the problems and how to meet them unless we face that fact.

Just before I call it one o'clock I should like to say something so that it will appear in this portion of my remarks. If Canada does not have a secure agricultural economy, with those engaged in agriculture receiving incomes comparable with the incomes of other workers, this country is in trouble. If agriculture fails we do not eat, and if we do not eat we die. This is fundamental and basic, so let us start with this premise.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: When we adjourned for lunch at one o'clock the hon. member for Vancouver East had the floor. I understand the Minister of Justice has a short contribution to make to the debate and, since he has another obligation later this afternoon it has been suggested that he be allowed to make his contribution now and the hon. member for Vancouver East would reserve his right to continue and terminate his speech later. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I first thank the hon. member for Vancouver East for his co-operation in agreeing to suspend his interesting speech to allow me to fulfil an undertaking which I had given to the house on March 31 last. At that time, at the request of the Minister of Transport, I told the house I would, along with my officers, analyse the events which took place between February 3 and February 20, 1964, that is between the time the first order in council was passed, which purported to transfer from the Minister of Agriculture to the Minister of Forestry certain of the powers of the Minister of Agriculture, and another order in council of February 20 by which the first order in council was annulled and rescinded. I could have limited myself to making a statement on motions, but in view of the opinions which I have given to the cabinet on all the facts involved, I thought it would be fairer to the members of the house if I made a statement in committee, thereby enabling hon. members to question me on any aspect of the statement.

I wish to inform the committee of several actions taken by the government in response to certain questions raised when the transfer of duties between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Forestry was discussed in committee of supply. In the debate that took place in committee of supply on this matter, following the statement of the Minister of Transport on March 26, hon. members opposite raised certain questions and it is important that these be dealt with. First of all, there is clearly some uncertainty in the minds of some hon. members concerning the actual effect of the three orders in council, No. 157 of February 3, 1964; No. 295 of February 20, 1964 and No. 360 of March 5, 1964. Questions were raised about the status of actions which may have been taken by or in the name of the ministers concerned, particularly during the period between the first two orders.

The committee will recall that on March 31 I undertook to have the officers of my department look at the actions in the period between February 3 and February 20 which might have been affected by the orders in question. This has been done, and a copy of a letter addressed by me to the Prime Minister on April 20, which reports my findings, has now been tabled. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that under the rules of this house, even as Minister of Justice, I am not entitled formally to give an opinion to the house. However, since I am the legal adviser to the crown and the cabinet, to all the ministers, I thought the way to obviate the difficulty would be for me to advise the cabinet by way of letter, which I have to do anyway, signed by me under my own responsibility. This letter has been tabled by way of a report to the house as to what I may have advised the cabinet. This may be a little technical, but I think it puts my position properly in relation to the constitution and will enable me to answer questions put by hon. gentlemen.

As is suggested in that letter, an order in council has been passed in the interim to remove any uncertainty that might still exist. The number of this order in council is P.C. 1964/600, dated April 23, and it has already been tabled. I would draw the attention of the committee to three particular aspects of it. First of all, the order recites that certain powers, duties or functions which had, by an order of February 3, been transferred from the Minister of Agriculture to the Minister of Forestry were retransferred to the Minister of Agriculture by the order of February 20. The effect of these words is to remove any possible doubt about what is referred to by the Leader of the Opposition as the effect of that second order.

Second, the last paragraph of the order of April 23 confirms all things done since February 3 by or in the name of the two ministers concerned under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, the Farm Credit Act, the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act and the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

Third, the new order makes one slight addition to the provisions of P.C. 1964/360 of March 5, relating to the administration of the programs respecting freight assistance and grain storage costs on western feed grains. Unlike the other matters transferred to the Minister of Forestry, these programs have no specific legislative basis other than items in annual appropriation acts.

Words have therefore been added to make it clear that the transfer of these powers, functions and duties is to have continuing effect in the new fiscal year and future years as the programs are extended by subsequent appropriation acts.

While there appears to be no legal necessity whatever, we will make assurance doubly sure by having the eight ARDA agreements, signed by the Minister of Agriculture during the period February 3 to February 20, re-executed by the Minister of Forestry.

The second principal aspect of this matter which was called into question in committee of supply concerned publication. We have considered very carefully the arguments presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and we have done two things. First, we have decided that in the future copies of all orders passed under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer Duties Act will be tabled. As an earnest of this decision I have today tabled a copy of an order, P.C. 477, passed on April 6 for the transfer to the departments of public works, transport, and northern affairs and national resources of the principal responsibilities of the Department of National Defence relating to Fort Churchill.

There remains the question whether or not orders passed under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act require publication under the terms of the Regulations Act. This, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be the first to recognize, is not a question of policy but of legal interpretation. The practice in the past was, I think, clearly stated by the Minister of Transport on March 26, and it will be seen from my letter that I am of the opinion that such orders are of an administrative character and not an exercise of a legislative power. However, we share the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as to the public interest in these orders.

I am authorized by the Prime Minister to state that henceforth, so long as this government is in office, we will alter the previous practice. Any orders made under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act will be published in the Canada Gazette. They will also, as I have already said, be tabled in the house, and they will therefore have in substance the treatment they would be required to have if they were regulations within the meaning of the Regulations Act.

I think that points raised by hon. gentlemen opposite, on the occasion of the discussion of these particular estimates, in relation to the effect of the two first orders in council and with respect to the possible application of the publication provision in the Regulations Act, have had the advantage of making the government reconsider a practice which, in my opinion, was a valid one, and at the same time has enabled the government to modify that practice so that in the future these orders in council, which are of interest to the public, will henceforth be published and brought more directly to the knowledge of all members of the public.

Mr. Douglas: On this point, before the hon. member for Vancouver East continues his speech, I would like to say we are glad that the minister and the government have agreed henceforth to table these orders in council. This will be of great assistance to hon. members and the people of the country.

Did I understand the minister to say that an order in council of April 23 has validated any agreements that were signed by the Minister of Agriculture and they will now be considered to have been signed by the Minister of Forestry?

Mr. Favreau: There is, if the hon. member allows me to so state, a slight distinction to be made. As I said, they have been confirmed, which I think is different from being validated. This is my opinion, and I have advised the government very specifically in this matter. I have tried to place myself back 13 months ago, when I was practising law on Dorchester street in Montreal and advising a client in the most practical possible fashion. It is my opinion, and I have so advised the government, that the effect of the order in council has not been to invalidate any of the administrative acts which had been passed in the interval, but in order to avoid any doubt henceforth, the order in council of April 23 purports to confirm, that is to sanction and recognize, whatever has been done.

The principle that we have invoked and applied is that of agency. There is no doubt that the minister, on the occasion of a rearrangement of powers or a transfer of powers, becomes the agent of the government to that extent, and it is always the power of a principal to confirm whatever has been done in an imprecise period by an agent. But this has been done exclusively as a precautionary measure, and so as to make sure in the public interest that none of these acts may be brought into question at any time.

But I have this to say at the present moment. There are two types of acts which have been performed by the ministers concerned in the interval, or rather by the employees or officers of the two departments, and these are administrative acts. The acts of pure administration have been performed by the employees of the crown in their respective capacities in the name of the crown, and I am quite sure that each of them has purported to effect these acts in his respective capacity. So long as they were acts of pure administration they were done on behalf of the crown, and they are not to be put into question.

But there were two types of acts with respects to which I must admit that some doubts have been raised in my mind. The first of these concerns the signing by the Minister of Agriculture of eight agreements with the provinces under ARDA between February 3 and February 20—around February 10 or February 15. So far as those are concerned, it is my view that the cancellation of the order in council of February 3 by the order in council of February 20 has had the effect of restoring the complete application of these statutes which vest these powers with the Minister of Agriculture. But for the sake of more precaution I have advised that the minister charged with the administration of ARDA should now sign these agreements so as to eliminate any possible doubt. On February 10, I believe it was, the minister appointed one person to act in connection with a program, jurisdiction over which had been transferred to the Minister of Forestry. There was doubt in my mind that he was entitled to make the appointment at that time, but the appointment was reconfirmed after February 20, that is after the order rescinding the first one had been made. So now there is no doubt that the reappointment now by the Minister of Agriculture was validly made.

One other question may arise and it concerns the validity of the acts performed by that appointed official between February 10 and February 20. I have not checked as to the number of functions performed but it is my opinion, as appears from the letter I have sent to the Prime Minister, that the application of the doctrine which is well known in law and which is called the de facto doctrine has the effect of confirming those acts. This doctrine means that when a person is appointed to discharge certain public functions, a judicial function, for instance if say, for certain technical reasons, the appointment was invalid, so long as the person concerned purported to perform acts which would normally have been within his jurisdiction, then he acted de facto as the person who might otherwise have carried out such acts, and from the standpoint of the public those acts are confirmed. There are a number of decisions in the case of minor judicial appointments cases where the original appointment has been declared to be invalid but where the decisions rendered by the person holding the office have been declared to be valid. Why should this be so? It is because the public may not suffer as a result of the invalidity of an appointment so long as the person appointed purported to carry out duties which would normally come within the jurisdiction he would have acquired had he been validly appointed. Anyhow, it is my view that the order in council of April 23 has the effect of removing all doubts as to the validity of what was done previously.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask the minister a question? Would he say with regard to the order in council of April 23 whether this order in council in fact indicates that an error or a breach of the law was committed in the month of February?

Mr. Favreau: No. It is the case that a legal adviser, whether he be the Minister of Justice or anyone else is not only entitled to his own view, but has the responsibility of forming one. On the other hand, no single legal adviser in a situation like this one which is, to a certain extent, complex, can be conceited enough to believe definitely that there is no possible doubt as to the complete validity of what has been done. We have wonderful judges in the superior court, but there are occasions when their judgments have to be reconsidered by the court of appeal. Even in the supreme court one may find four judges holding one view on a point of law and the other holding a different view. So my conclusion was that in the public interest, for the purpose of better continuity of the administration of the affairs of Canada, a way should be found of removing all doubt as to what has been done in the past, and confirming whatever has been done in case there may be some question as to its validity.

I think it is the obligation of the government to pass whatever measures are likely to achieve such a purpose. The opinion I gave to the Prime Minister represents my opinion in accordance with my full responsibility as Minister of Justice, and my recommendation for the passing of the additional order in council and for the re-execution of the ARDA agreement is one which ought not to be interpreted as a declaration of the invalidity of or in condemnation of what was done in the past. Rather, it was a recommendation made in accordance with my responsibility as a minister of the crown, so that a double measure of assurance might be given to the people of this country.

Mr. Douglas: It seems to me that the minister is being very gentle when he says the order in council of April 23 was merely to confirm those eight agreements with the provinces, rather than to validate them. It seems to me that from February 3 until February 20 the right to sign those agreements was not in abeyance—it had been vested in the Minister of Forestry under order in council 157 which was passed on February 3. It seems perfectly plain that the Minister of Agriculture had no legal authority at all to sign those orders. So to say that the order in council of April 23 was passed merely to confirm what had been done, or remove any doubt, is in my view stretching things quite a bit.

The minister has drawn an analogy with judicial procedures, but it would seem to me this hardly applies to the case of a minister or agent of the crown when authority has been transferred from one department to another. In this case the minister from whom the powers had been transferred proceeded to sign eight agreements with the provinces, despite the fact that not only did he have no authority to do so, but that authority had been distinctly vested in another minister. The fact that the agreements had to be rescinded and confirmed by the order in council of April 23 seems to me to be something much more than mere confirmation. Indeed, it appears to me that this is tacit acknowledgement on the part of the government that the minister erred in signing these agreements when he had no legal authority to do so—that he was in error when he exercised functions which were vested for those 17 days in the Minister of Forestry.

I do not think there is any value in labouring the matter further. The Minister of Justice has done his best to deal with the situation, but I think we should not deceive ourselves that the order in council of April 23 was merely intended to confirm what had been done and clear up any doubt. I think there can be no doubt at all that the Minister of Agriculture who signed these agreements had no authority to do so. In these circumstances the Minister of Justice was right in insisting that a new order in council be passed and that the agreements be signed again.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask one question. I am wondering whether there is still some confusion. Yesterday on orders of the day I asked the Minister of Forestry a question relating to the ARDA program. That question was referred to the ten o'clock adjournment period. At ten o'clock yesterday evening the Minister of Agriculture replied to my question on ARDA. Can the Minister of Justice inform the house why the Minister of Agriculture, after the explanation he has given, replied to my question last evening?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, in reply to this question, the question of the hon. member seemed to us one which was dealing with some of the ARDA projects. Inasmuch as those projects were included in the agriculture estimates and we indicated, as I did also this morning, that this was the way they would be handled, I replied to the question yesterday.

Mr. Herridge: Then are we to discuss the ARDA estimates as included in the estimates of the minister and not refer them to the Minister of Forestry?

Mr. Hays: The hon. member realizes, of course, that the Minister of Forestry is ill and that these projects do happen to be in my estimates, and have been for some time prior to this. I am quite prepared to answer any questions about them, or if the minister is back he will answer them.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I do not think there is any point now in labouring this particular issue, but I think we should leave very clear on the record and in the minds of members of the committee that in this warfare which was going on during the month of February between the ministers dividing up the various parts of the corpus delicti, the Department of Agriculture, certain things were done which the Minister of Justice now confesses did create grave doubts in his mind, both with regard to the signing of the eight ARDA agreements by a minister who had no power to sign them, and second with regard to the transfer of one of the senior officials of the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Forestry who carried on certain functions during this interregnum.

I notice that the Leader of the Opposition asked the government when these discussions took place earlier if they would not pass an order in council ratifying all these acts which have taken place in order to make legal what the ministers had done in error, and whether the shifting of one member from one department to another had not created a very doubtful situation. All of these acts should be ratified by order in council. I think that what the minister is telling us is that in the actions which were taken, and in the April 23 order in council which followed those doubtful acts of the minister namely signing certain documents which he had no power to sign, and all of the actions of the official to whom we are referring during the interregnum, have now been ratified by that order in council.

In bringing this matter before the house as the Leader of the Opposition requested, the minister is now following the suggestion which has been made, which I think adds up to this. In the haste to make these adjustments between the departments, and in pushing certain sections of the Department of Agriculture one way and then pushing them back the other way, the government has stumbled into a very serious mistake. In their haste they have made these mistakes and now they have to backtrack. I think we should make it clear to the committee and on the record that the government have now put themselves into a mess on a subject they did not know very much about, as a result of which this order in council had to be passed to rectify the situation, and in so doing they accepted the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member goes on with his speech one point which arises from what the Minister of Agriculture said in answer to a question a moment ago. While it is true that the ARDA estimates are in the Department of Agriculture—because I presume this transfer had not been made prior to the estimates being drafted—I think the committee ought to insist that those estimates which deal with ARDA be held until the minister responsible for them is here. I think we have a right to hear his statement and to question him regarding the programs he is proposing for the coming year.

Mr. Hays: I am sure there will be no objection to this.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, in order that there will be no misunderstanding may I say that I was happy to grant the courtesy to the Minister of Justice to interrupt my speech on the agriculture estimates so that he could make a very important statement; and in the event that the Leader of the Opposition should ask the same co-operation I would be most happy to grant him a similar courtesy.

In the seven minutes for which I held the floor prior to the luncheon recess I was drawing to the attention of hon. members my view that we were not going to be able to resolve agricultural problems in Canada until we had a general national agricultural policy. In arriving at the same it had to be considered in relationship to the economic system as it now operates in Canada.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

In those seven minutes I made reference very briefly to the previous speaker who was not so long ago a minister of agriculture when the Conservatives were in power. I do not believe in discrimination, so I would not like to make reference to a previous agricultural minister without making reference to the present one. It may seem unusual and strange that I, as a private member on the opposition side of the house, should like to ask a favour of the present Minister of Agriculture. My favour is that before the first item of his estimates carries he does what he did not do when he opened his remarks this morning, and inform the members of this committee from his vast store of knowledge on agriculture, under his responsibility as Minister of Agriculture, of his views on a Canadian agricultural policy and what he hopes to do to bring this policy into being.

In the few minutes prior to the luncheon adjournment I was introducing my remarks by pointing out that emergency measures will not solve the problem of our economy in general and of agriculture in particular. I pointed out that we were rapidly moving, and have been for a number of years, from what is normally known as a private enterprise economy towards a subsidized economy. I outlined very briefly a few points of general economy and then I said that I should like to speak about subsidized agriculture. I submit that this government and the preceding government failed to bring about a national agriculture policy and to face up to the real issues.

If hon. members will refer to the estimates in front of them, which are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, they will find there are agricultural subsidies in the estimates. In brief what are they? There are hog quality premiums amounting to $7,599,300; lamb quality premiums, $753,360; cheese quality premiums, $1,083,000; miscellaneous livestock improvement assistance, $16,000; lime assistance, $1,608,900; freight assistance, western feed grains, $18,500,000. These are the direct subsidies in the estimates, but that is only a very small part of the agricultural assistance program. It is not possible to get any figure as to what this assistance will be in the present fiscal year because the majority of agricultural subsidies are not in the estimates; they are covered by statutory authority. It is my understanding—and this information was received only today from the Department of Agriculture—that it is hoped it will not be too high on eggs and hogs because the selling price may be above what is known, I believe, as the support price.

Let us examine the situation and take, for example, butter. I believe my information is correct, that on May 1 the government will announce what its butter policy is going to be in regard to deficiency payments and support price. Last year it was 12 cents per pound. Butter production last year amounted to 345 million pounds; so by statutory payment the butter subsidy cost the federal government in the neighbourhood of $42 million. I do not believe that the majority of members understand that because of a bits and pieces agricultural policy over the years we now have a subsidized agricultural policy in Canada. I base that remark on the Agricultural Stabilization Act, chapter 22, Statutes of Canada 1957-58. How many people realize that private enterprise does not seem to work very much more in agriculture, and this is a basic and absolutely vital and fundamental part of our economy.

May I very, very briefly, for the information of hon. members, deal with this matter. I cannot give what might be estimated for 1964-65, but I refer to the fiscal year 1963-64. How many hon. members know how much the federal government, through its taxation, is tied up in the maintenance of agriculture? During the fiscal year 1963-64 the prices of the following commodities were stabilized under the act: creamery butter; cheddar cheese; cattle; oats—not under the Canadian wheat board; barley—not under the Canadian wheat board. Those commodities were stabilized by purchase. Then by deficiency payment: eggs; hogs; sheep, lamb; sheep, wool; honey; soybeans; sunflower seed; sugar beets; wheat—not under the Canadian wheat board. By subsidy payments: milk for cheese—this is statutory, by the way—milk for butter and butterfat content; cream, butterfat content; dried casein and caseinates, and tobacco. The total amount involved was $122,235,000—and that is statutory.

I ask hon. members to consider these items and the amount involved. This is no longer an emergency policy, but subsidies paid year by year on a continuing basis. How can we be honest in saying we are tackling the problems of agriculture in view of the figures I have given, and what is contained in the estimates with regard to the amount paid by way of subsidy. The problem of agriculture is not going to be solved by a subsidy policy; we have to get down to the basic and fundamental problem. If I had unlimited time, which I have not, I would point out what the statutory and estimates payments actually mean, because in agriculture we have a complete conflict in policy. Last year we subsidized butter, at the rate of 12 cents per pound, to the extent of $42 million. That is understandable; I voted for it on the original bill. But at the same time we subsidize soybeans, which are used in the production of margarine. Therefore our subsidy on butter is a persecution of the soybean industry concerned with the production of margarine. We are subsidizing both, and to my mind that is a bunch of damned nonsense.

An hon. Member: How would you do it?

Mr. Winch: I would have a real understanding of agricultural policy in Canada, tying in all agricultural aspects in all phases from the Pacific ocean to the Atlantic. Let us have a national agricultural policy. I think it is nonsense that within Canada we are in conflict agriculturally. We subsidize soybeans and we subsidize the dairy industry in regard to production of a similar product. We have in British Columbia the most marvellous fruit growing area. We grow apples, and they grow apples in Ontario and Nova Scotia. Why do we have this competition? Why do we not have understanding and a Canadian agricultural plan whereby we produce the right things in the places best suited to producing them. In that way we would have unity, efficiency, and the most competitive price possible with which to face the markets of the world.

This basically is my presentation, Mr. Chairman. But you can carry it on. I wonder how many million eggs or how many pounds of powdered eggs we have in Canada now that the taxpayers are paying for by way of support prices. We have so many million pounds of butter that they cannot even hold it in cold storage and have to make butter oil. What can we do with it? We cannot even give it away unless we supply the steamship bottoms in which to send it. In the hungry thirties they burned coffee in the South American states. I should like to know why we are spending millions and millions of dollars for no basic beneficial result. If we tried to give it away, what would be the answer? This government and previous governments have tried to give away some of our surplus produce for which the Canadian taxpayers are paying. What happened immediately this government or previous governments tried to do this? It was said, "You are interfering with our normal market". So you're damned if you do, and you're damned if you don't.

Surely, sir, it is time we got down to some serious thinking, some serious planning. If I may be a bit crude, it is not going to take just straight courage; it is going to take a lot of political, governmental and agricultural guts to face up to this problem. It is going to mean governmental control so that uneconomic farms are not established or the operators are moved into economic areas, and so that we do not pay subsidies and deficiency payments only to destroy food. Surely to God we do not have to destroy or waste our butter, powdered milk or canned pork when hundreds of millions of people in the world are starving today. Surely we have got enough sense—

Mr. Greene: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: In one moment, please. Surely we have enough sense, or should have as members of parliament, as farmers and as citizens of Canada to try to work out a logical solution to our problems in order to obtain the greatest efficiency so that we can compete in world markets and so that if we have surpluses we will not waste them but use them to feed the hungry people of the world.

I am not necessarily recommending a royal commission. Sometimes I think that royal commissions are a form of escapism for governments. If you have a problem, appoint a royal commission. It will take two, three or four years to complete its work and you will be safe. It will take a year to consider its report and you will be safe. It will take another year to move on one or two or three or four recommendations. Royal commissions are a method of escape. I know the problem cannot be solved in a month or even in a year or two years. But I say to members of the house on this first item of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture that a permanent system of subsidies is no answer to the problems of our economy or to the problems of agriculture.

The other place has been having a holiday while we have not. They do not have enough work to do, but I can think of four times when committees of the other place have done a marvellous job of investigation and study. I suggest that consideration might be given to setting up of a committee of the other place or a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate. Let that committee be given all the technical assistance and money they need and instruct them to make a study of all the various phases of agriculture in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the position of agriculture in relation to the rest of the economy. Let them then make a report to both houses of parliament and the government in office as to how we can find a permanent solution, a national agricultural policy for Canada that will really mean something and will place our agriculturalists, whether they are engaged in mixed farming or are dairy farmers, soybean growers or growers of any other crop, in their proper relationship to the economy of Canada generally. In this way we will be able to guarantee our farmers security and comparability of income with professional people in Canada on a basis of completely efficient operation from production to marketing. In this way Canada would be able to compete in world markets as one of the greatest and finest agricultural countries in the universe.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Greene: Will the hon. member permit a question? I wonder whether he is speaking for the New Democratic party or merely for himself when he advises, as he has, that agricultural subsidies should be done away with.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but apparently the hon. member has either not been here or has not listened to what I said in the seven minutes I spoke before one o'clock, and what I have said since. Not once but three times I have stated that in my 11 years as a member of this house I have on every occasion supported subsidies for every aspect of agriculture. I have also said that I support them now. But my point is that subsidies are not the answer to the problems of agriculture in our country. I say that we should get down to real study and planning for a national agricultural policy, so that in the long run we can get away from subsidies for agriculture. Let us plan so that agriculture can take its rightful place in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Greene: Would the hon. member tell the committee how his party would suggest that the farmers be coerced into growing what his all-brainy and all-knowing planners would decide they should grow in a particular region of Canada?

Mr. Douglas: Oh, come, come; you are having a pipe dream.

Mr. Winch: I have been asked a question so I shall answer it. May I tell my hon. friend he may have a different idea of himself but my name is Winch, not Moses. I do not know all the problems; I do not know all the answers. I very rarely speak in this way, but may I say that I had the honour of being elected a member of the legislature of British Columbia for 20 years. I have been here for 11 years and, by God, there are not very many who have had 31 years in parliament undefeated. I put forward the problem as I see it and I make recommendations as to how I think we might tackle the problem.

Nobody in Canada can be coerced as long as we have a parliamentary democracy, because if the electors are not satisfied they can throw you out at the next election. They have not thrown me out yet.

Mr. Greene: Does the hon. member suggest he is the right man to lead his party into the promised land?

Mr. Winch: I am a follower, not a leader.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two about the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. First, however, I should like to join with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in expressing my congratulations to the Minister of Agriculture for the change that has taken place in the thinking of the department with respect to research, the end results of money which is spent on exhibitions and so on.

I think that some of the things that the hon. member for Vancouver East has suggested are very worth while. I agree with him when he says that we should have a policy that will allow agriculture in Canada to reach what might be termed the optimum of production, that will allow us to distribute food to the hungry people of the world wherever it is needed, and that we should do away with the conflict or what appears to be conflict in subsidies for the production of certain products. When he calls for a study of the problem I agree with him, but may I also say that it is probably the most perplexing problem in the world and one which is not confined to Canada.

We know, for example, that just a few months ago agricultural policy as it relates to trade between nations, particularly in Europe, almost caused the European economic community to dissolve. So the problem of distributing agricultural products and foodstuffs is a very large one and it has created far greater ramifications in other parts of the world than it has in Canada.

I should like also to remind him, and I do not do this to take anything away from the objectives he outlined, that the government of the United States has spent several billions of dollars over the last two years to support the price of farm products. After large quantities of food products were in a surplus supply position, the United States tried many ways of distributing it throughout the world. They tried selling it at reduced prices. They tried long term credits. They even came to the position where they sold large quantities of it and took what was called soft currencies in return, but left those currencies in the countries in which the food was sold for development purposes. I am not sure of the reason for this, but it does not seem to me the United States has made a large number of friends by following this kind of policy. There may be other implications. I mention these things only to point out this is a very complex problems. While we may agree with the objectives, I am sure there is going to be a lot of disagreement on how to reach those objectives.

Mr. Douglas: We have not had any suggestions from the minister on how to reach them.

Mr. Olson: I agree. I was going to say that I congratulate the minister upon some of the things he said with regard to some changes he proposed in connection with research exhibitions and so on. However, I was a little disappointed in the lack of some evidence of new policy with regard to what he was going to do about the depressed condition of agriculture in eastern Canada, and what he was going to do about moving some of the surpluses we have of butter, eggs and a few other things.

There is one very important change, Mr. Chairman, in what the Minister of Agriculture had to say today, and that is the attitude of the Liberal party toward the percentage of the national income farmers receive. I was very pleased indeed to hear the minister say that the Department of Agriculture now only takes about 3 per cent of the total national budget, and this was a very small amount indeed when compared to the contribution agriculture makes to the economy and to the well being of Canadians. I was pleased also to hear him say that there is a false impression in the minds of many Canadians that farmers are getting more than their fair share of the national income and of the federal government's budget. I suggest that if he has made this change in his own thinking, he should inform some of his colleagues, particularly those from the urban areas of Ontario, that this is now government policy.

During the last two election campaigns at least, these people did go about the province of Ontario telling the electors that when a new Liberal government came to power they would see the farmers did not get too much from the federal government. I think the minister should tell the Prime Minister that this is the policy. I recall very vividly not long ago that in a speech in Ontario the Prime Minister said one of the things his government would do would be to see that the $200 acreage bonus was no longer paid. I am not going to argue the merits or demerits of that bonus, but I do say that the statement probably was made for the political impact it would have, and that impact was to alienate some of the urban electors from the government of the day. I am sure it had that effect because the results of the election in 1962 clearly indicated there was a disenchantment with the previous government and perhaps a large portion of it was the result of the charge that the Conservative government was paying far too much attention to the rural areas.

I agree with what the Minister of Agriculture said today, because 3 per cent of the national budget is a very small amount for the farmers to receive when one thinks of the contribution the farmers make in producing foodstuffs for the country. As the minister has said, we do have a very high standard of living. I should like to point out also that it is true there were some cash payments out of the national budget during those years from 1957 or 1958 to 1962. I do not want to go over a lot of history, but I say that from 1946 until 1953 or 1954, the farmers producing grain in the western provinces certainly had a lot of consideration coming to them from the people of Canada for having accepted substantially less for their products than those products were selling on the world market. This is an old story that has been told many times, but it is still valid today.

To get back to this matter of research, I may say I am pleased the minister is now going to put more emphasis on the utility and practical value that can come from the research stations across Canada. I know he has appointed an advisory committee to sit in at meetings with the officials of the Manyberries range station. I agree that this is a good idea. I should like to offer some suggestions to him and to this committee because the Manyberries range station happens to be in my constituency. I know this station has, in fact, developed many new methods for range management using some new varieties of seed, and that is very beneficial to all areas of the prairie provinces. One of the problems is that there has been a tendency on the part of farmers and ranchers not to make use of this information and actually apply it to their own operation.

I have a number of reports here from the Manyberries range station. This station has proven conclusively that the use of tame grasses such as crested wheatgrass, wild Russian ryegrass and Rambler alfalfa, in conjunction with native grasses actually increases productivity of the land. For example, I have in front of me a publication that was printed at the Manyberries range station in the summer of 1962, which contains a table indicating the total digestive nutrients in three different types of fodder. In so far as native grass is concerned the table shows the amount consumed contained 69 pounds of total digestible nutrients per acre; the crested wheatgrass contained 144 pounds of total disgestible nutrients, and the Russian wild rye contained 150 pounds of total digestible nutrients per acre. These grasses were grown in exactly the same area, with the same amount of rainfall and with the same fertility so far as the soil is concerned.

In addition to that, Dr. R. W. Lodge, who conducted a number of experiments, states that as a result of seven years of grazing trials they have shown that complementary grazing—a combination of native and tame pastures—will increase annual beef production by at least 50 per cent. They found that 1½ acres of crested wheatgrass, plus eight acres of native grass, carried a yearling for five months of grazing. Where native grass was used alone, it took 16 acres to carry a yearling steer. The complementary grazing produced 35 pounds of beef per acre, as compared to only 20 pounds per acre where only native grass was used.

I wish to point out that the research station at Manyberries has already found out how to double the carrying capacity and how to increase, from 20 pounds to 35 pounds, the production of beef per acre. But unfortunately, in the areas where farmers could make use of this advice, they are not doing that. I suggest that some kind of program be undertaken to make the farmers aware of the results of this test. There is no greater incentive for a farmer to change his method than to let him realize it is profitable to do so.

We have to face some pretty disturbing developments respecting the production of beef in other parts of the world. For example, the United States had had to try to enter into import agreements with Australia, New Zealand and Ireland because these countries have a far lower cost of production per pound of beef and their competition with the United States producer is becoming very severe.

Just a few months ago quite a number of cattlemen in western Canada attended a meeting in Memphis, Tennessee, sponsored by the beef growing organizations in the United States. Many of the, shall I say, cow and calf operators who raised beef on the open range, thought they were pretty efficient producers and could compete with anybody anywhere in the world. But the United States organizations had sent a team to Australia to see what they were doing there, and even the most efficient of the producers on the North American continent became concerned with the reports that came back. For example, on an actuarial cost calculation it is possible for Australian producers to raise a steer from the time it is born until it is two years old, for $6.80. No one in Canada or the United States can come anywhere near that cost factor.

The Australian steer may not be of the same quality and as big as the Canadian steer, but with modern transportation it is possible for the Australians to send their beef to the North American continent and sell it here for less than half the cost of home production of North American beef.

We know a great deal about how to increase the efficiency of our beef production, but there has been a missing link in getting the farmers to adopt the new procedures and new methods which have been tested and proven satisfactory. I do not want to labour this point any more, except to say that along with the new facilities for research something should be done to encourage ranchers and farmers to make use of the knowledge that has been discovered.

The minister mentioned exhibitions and the change which would be made in government grants for agricultural exhibitions. I agree with him that there should be more emphasis on utility than has been the case in the past. In so far as the prize winners in beef classes are concerned, I suppose the prettiest animal gets the prize, but that does not necessarily mean it is the most efficient, in terms of the feed conversion factor. However, I would suggest that the minister move rather slowly in making changes because we have a long tradition respecting the kind of classes that are judged in these shows, and the people who breed and prepare animals for them will not be able suddenly to change over to a whole new classification.

For this reason I am glad the minister is starting out with a pilot project for Hereford beef cattle, and perhaps by next year something can be done with respect to hogs and sheep.

I did not quite follow the remarks of the minister when he talked about trying to tie research and exhibition policies together. I hope that some time during this debate he will be able to give more explanation of that. Of course I understand that the prizes which will be offered in exhibitions will have the purpose of enhancing and upgrading the practical value of animals developed in Canada, but I did not quite follow his remarks as to how this was to be related to research. I was very interested in his comments that there would be only two classes of bulls, four classes of females, and a completely new concept in the classification of the factors that will determine the winners in the steer classes. I shall not go into the detail of these now, but there is a great deal of merit in what the minister said.

With respect to grain, whether it be wheat, oats, barley or any other type, I am pleased the minister will insist that a large quantity of grain be produced to back up the sample that is actually shown to the judges. In many cases the prizes have been given to those persons who have carefully gone through a large amount of grain and picked a select sample from it. If exhibitors were required to show a reasonable, commercial amount of grain to back up their samples, it would be impossible for them to get away with their previous practices, where probably only 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the grower's grain actually looked the same as the samples presented to the judges. Surely, it is only reasonable to expect that what the judges inspect should be representative.

I am glad the minister is supporting and intends to participate in the conference to be held in Montreal later this month to reclassify hogs and try to improve their food conversion rate along with their "cutability"—I think that was the word he used.

There is another point I wish to raise. It was brought up by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and is a very valid point when we are considering agriculture. It is that, perhaps even more important than production, is the question of distribution and marketing. I have long contended that in western Canada, where I know the agricultural establishment best, if at any time there is a guaranteed substantial market for any particular product, whether it be beef, or wheat or barley or anything else, at a price level which will enable the producers to make some money, the farmers, who are very resourceful, will be able to supply the product. We know that in the past three years there has been a substantial and expanding market for wheat. It is true there have been better than average crops and that the good harvests may to a large extent have been due to favourable weather; but at the same time I can assure the minister that if there is a continuing market on the long term basis over say, five years or ten years, the farmers of western Canada could increase the output of wheat still further. Last year it was 720 million bushels. They could easily produce a billion bushels or even more as long as they could sell it at a profit. I believe this is also true of beef.

Not very long ago the present minister and, indeed, the former minister of agriculture were advocating that people should devote part of their operation to the production of beef. I was concerned at the time that if this movement went too far there would be surpluses and the price of beef would fall, resulting in an unfortunate position for the one commodity which has been helping to maintain the stability of our agricultural economy. That has not happened yet, but there has certainly been a lowering of the price of beef and it is to some extent due to the fact that more and more people are getting into beef production after being encouraged to do so by the minister and by his predecessor in office. So, as I have said, this question of distribution is one of great importance.

Something should be said about the problem of farmers in eastern Canada. As far as we in this party are concerned, we are prepared to support some kind of program which would improve the position of these farmers. We should like to hear some statement on dairy policies. We think this new approach to hog classification and selection is a good move. We have stated on several occasions that we support a policy of getting feed grain into eastern Canada at least at a stabilized price—whether it is higher or lower is something else. But at least these farmers and feeders in eastern Canada should know from one month to the next how much they will have to pay for their feed.

It is easy to say that there are too many farms in eastern Canada which are too small to be efficient, but I know there is an attachment to the land and to the family home which has been built up there over the generations. This is also true of western Canada, but not to the same extent. While understanding this we must face the fact that our farms are becoming larger and that larger farms are more efficient. Perhaps some kind of program could be undertaken to encourage an increase in the acreage of farms in eastern Canada in order to improve the efficiency of their operation. I was pleased to note a few days ago a release from the department informing us that 44 new soil and water conservation projects had been approved for Quebec under the ARDA program. That release was dated April 15. We support this, but we believe the minister should be moving a little faster in some of the other areas. I know that the minister of agriculture for the province of Alberta said only a few days ago that the federal government had acted a little less than fast in approving some of the cost-sharing programs under ARDA. I do not know why the government has, apparently, not moved as rapidly as the provinces are ready to move. It may be that the federal government has not worked out all the details as to what they intend to include in the projects they would be prepared to approve. In any event, I think the government is moving far too slowly in this matter, though some progress is being made.

In my own constituency there is one project which, I believe, has already been submitted to the federal Department of Agriculture. I suppose, now, it is in the hands of the Department of Forestry. It concerns the establishment of ground water reserves in the southern part of the prairie. We have just gone through a winter during which very little snow has fallen. Consequently there has been very little run-off and the surplus water available for stock watering purposes particularly is at a very low level. I know that the local ARDA committee did recommend that a fairly large program be undertaken to delineate the ground water resources in order that wells could be drilled and stock water brought to the surface.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Olson: I still have half a minute left—

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: I must urge the minister to do what he can to get this project approved at once and to reintroduce the program which will allow some assistance through P.F.R.A. in respect to the drilling of water wells for stock watering purposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, allow me first of all to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for the rather interesting statement he made a while ago.

It is gratifying for us to see him so often in the house because it is always pleasant to see that a minister is interested in our work and discussions. I must say that we did deplore the frequent absences of the minister from the house.

But I am still wondering which personage I should admire in our Minister of Agriculture: the minister or the businessman? This afternoon, I am convinced that the Minister of Agriculture is an outstanding businessman. He is also very good at stock farming, especially at beef cattle breeding.

Therefore, his speech was very good as far as his knowledge is concerned, but not quite so good as far as his responsibilities as minister are concerned.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, we were expecting this afternoon to be presented with a general statement on the Liberal party farm policy for the whole of Canada. We, from the province of Quebec, expected something to raise our hopes for some improvement in the status of our agriculture which is now at its lowest level. In fact, if we consider statistics for the last 20 years, we find that, as far as farming is concerned, the western provinces have continually bettered their position while the province of Quebec saw its situation deteriorating more and more, to the point that nowadays, it is on the verge of bankruptcy.

I made those few observations to draw the minister's attention on the real problems facing the province of Quebec. Far be it from me to criticize without rhyme or reason. I simply wish to draw the minister's attention to that situation and tell him that people in my riding and farmers all across the province of Quebec are expecting some action from the federal government. I think that if this government does not take positive steps in 1964, the loss suffered by agriculture in the province of Quebec could not be repaired.

As I said, we were very disappointed this afternoon to hear about cattle trade, beef breeding, international exhibitions and fairs, and finally wheat, and that last point did not surprise us too much. Since I have been in this house, every time agriculture is discussed, in 95 per cent of cases, the discussion has to do with wheat: will farmers be able to sow it, is there going to be enough rain, will they be able to harvest wheat, and finally will it be possible to sell it? All the efforts of the minister are for the wheat business and the products of the other provinces are not discussed in this house.

I would ask the minister—if he has found markets for our cattle as the Minister of Trade and Commerce found some for our wheat, well and good—to devote some of his efforts to try and find markets for the dairy products of the province of Quebec. And let them stop telling us, when we have production surpluses in some fields: cease production, you have too much produce.

If we were going to say that for wheat, Mr. Chairman, what would happen to Canada?

No, we never have too much wheat; we must always have more. The ministers concerned have the responsibility of finding markets for that product. In the province of Quebec we have too much milk and we are told: stop production. We have too much cheese and we are told: throw it away. We have too many eggs, and we are told: let them go bad. Such are the answers we are given. It is necessary—

Mr. Asselin: Who says that?

Mr. Choquette: Who said that?

Mr. Gauthier: I am not talking about the present government, but of what I have been hearing for 50 years.

What strikes me—and you are well aware of the fact—is that we have not had a single minister of agriculture from eastern Canada in the last 50 years. In all fairness we should at least be given one from the east from time to time. You people from the west have had them all for the last 50 years, while we did not even have one. We are asking for a minister from the east, and we are a bit disappointed at not getting one.

The minister does not seem to realize what serious problems eastern farmers are up against, and especially those in Quebec. He acts as if only western Canada existed and he is quite shocked when he is asked, and I am quoting him: "What do you do with the money we send you in the west?"

That is what the minister said this afternoon. In my opinion, that question, which he put to the house, is the most interesting part of his speech.

I admit that if western Canada is very prosperous today it is due to the joint programs. But it must be remembered that all those joint programs are paid for by taxes on a pro rata basis according to the population of each province. Forty years ago the country's two largest provinces, that is Quebec and Ontario, agreed to take part in these programs to help economically weak provinces. They were happy to do it, sure that their sacrifices would benefit them later.

Today, things are different; the poorer provinces have become prosperous, at least they have means of subsistence. Therefore, it is no longer urgent to assist them. That is why we maintain that a number of joint programs should be done away with. Besides, that was a promise made by the Liberal party.

I should like to call every hon. member's attention on this matter of joint programs in order to readjust this assistance according to present needs. To prove my point, I would ask the minister to look at the latest publication about federal-provincial conditional grants under joint programs. I received this publication recently and I was greatly interested in it. I urge all those interested in agriculture, as well as all those interested in joint programs in general, to read it. You will see that, very often, the claims of the province of Quebec are well founded if you study calmly the distribution of those joint programs. Just to mention a few lines, I will simply take the Department of Agriculture, at page 11, the part dealing with manpower: joint program on manpower.

In 1961-62, total benefits for the province of Quebec were $21,000.

This is what agricultural joint programs yielded under the agreements; Prince Edward Island, $21,000; Nova Scotia, $130,000; New Brunswick, $61,659; Quebec, $287,560; Ontario, $1,213,982; Manitoba, $290,697; Alberta, $837,442; and British Columbia, $390,899.

If you take into account the population figures for each province or if you figure those grants on a pro rata basis, you will see that they are not advantageous for Quebec.

Another joint program concerns the federal government contribution toward the transportation cost of cattle to the Royal Winter Fair, and the Minister of Agriculture is familiar with that. In that field, the federal government reimburses 75 per cent of the cost borne by the provinces; there again, western Canada gets the highest grants.

Grants are somewhat to the advantage of Quebec in one field and that is in the assistance provided in the case of agricultural lime.

I am quoting those figures in order to kill two birds with one stone; I want to prove that compared to the other provinces, Quebec needs more assistance in this regard. Federal grants are distributed as follows: Newfoundland, $18,313; Prince Edward Island, $71,457; Nova Scotia, $115,526; New Brunswick, $106,487; Quebec, $2,236,648; Ontario, $436,536; British Columbia, $74,500.

This clearly shows the poor quality of Quebec farms. As a matter of fact, there are no payments for the western provinces which have been built up, so to speak, thanks to these joint programs. If I quote these figures, it is simply to prove that there should not be any joint programs for provinces that do not need them in the least, now.

During 1961-62, the federal government paid a subsidy of $217,040 to the province of Manitoba for damming and drainage works in the Riding and Duck Mountain basin.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

As far as Saskatchewan is concerned, the federal government spent there until March 31, 1961, the sum of $2,208,853 for the development of the Pasquia area along the Saskatchewan river.

Mr. Chairman, it should be noted that those are all joint programs for the sole benefit of the western provinces; Quebec gets nothing.

In the same province again, and until March 31, 1962, the federal government spent $30,165,796 for irrigation and power works with respect to the South Saskatchewan river.

Now to revert to the maritime provinces, it was found that the federal government spent a total amount of $311,305 under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act.

Still in the field of joint programs, we come now to ARDA. In my opinion, it is the plan which might have been of the greatest benefit to the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, it has finally been realized that the few possibilities we had were not used. Last year, an amount of $111,000 was spent, and, this year, about $1,500,000 will be spent for land drainage alone.

In answer to the question I asked last year, I was told that the western provinces had received $179,000. At last we are going to receive this year an amount of $1 million under joint programs.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to criticize the western provinces, but I merely want to set the record straight, so that the value of ARDA might be judged.

Recently, the Department of Forestry issued a release in which one could read:

"Four different programs under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act (ARDA) provide for the extension and development of pastures along the forest line in northern Saskatchewan", says a joint announcement by federal Minister of Forestry Maurice Sauve, and Saskatchewan Minister of Agriculture I. C. Nollet. A fifth project which has been approved for the province of Saskatchewan provides for the continuation of a drainage and flood control program.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the advantages which have been granted to the western provinces.

Quebec might have more particularly last year, benefited from ARDA to a greater extent if the farmers had been offered greater advantages with regard to agriculture.

But what did actually happen? To get the right picture we only need to look up the list or the number of farm credit counsellors who advise the farmers in each area. Those advisors on farm credit might have made us benefit to a greater extent from ARDA, in connection with our land.

And how are the farm counsellors distributed? In British Columbia there are six, in Alberta 32, in Saskatchewan 36, in Manitoba 12, in Ontario 35, and only four in Quebec. The same situation prevails in almost every field. But, even considering only the agricultural sector, I think that I have quoted enough figures to indicate to this government that if it does not wake up and straighten out things soon, it is useless for the taxpayers of Quebec to pay taxes, just to starve on their land.

The federal government paid $58,856 to the western provinces in premiums for pedigreed breeding stock.

The federal government even subsidizes sow breeding contests. It is true that the subsidy is not very high but New Brunswick and Manitoba did receive $1,705.

In 1961-62, the federal government spent $203,269, that is $140,745 in Manitoba, $37,864 in Saskatchewan and $24,600 in British Columbia, to encourage the construction of storage facilities for potatoes. On the other hand, Quebec did not get a cent. However, at last a little money is going to be spent there in 1964.

As far as crop insurance is concerned, I do not remember exactly the statistics, since I asked for such data last year. As Quebec is not participating in this scheme it did not receive anything, but the Quebec taxpayers pay federal taxes just the same.

For the fiscal year 1961-62, the federal government spent the sum of $193,932 for crop insurance in Manitoba.

As for the drilling of community wells under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, the federal government pays 35 per cent of the cost.

Considering the grants paid as indemnity for losses caused by disease, it is found that during 1961-62, the federal government paid $12,814, but that Quebec did not receive a cent.

Now let us speak about the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.

Up to March 31, 1962, the federal government paid $23,550,036 for the St. Mary river irrigation project. As for the Bow river project, the federal government spent $30,577,-445, of which $2,400,000 was to purchase the assets of the company that had undertook this project.

The eastern irrigation district, that is the former Brooks district, in Alberta, received a federal contribution of $35,793 in 1959-60 and of $83,449 in 1960-61.

Let us take a closer look at the situation with regard to the feed grain transportation assistance. In 1958-59, Saskatchewan and Alberta received $183,623 and $46,976 in 1959-60, for a grand total of $230,599, while the province of Quebec got nothing at all.

Now, let us consider another project. In 1959-60 and 1960-61, in view of the poor harvesting conditions which prevailed in the prairie provinces, the federal government spent $316,972.

On June 27, 1961, in view of the extreme drought of that year, the federal government offered the prairie provinces to pay half the amounts they had spent and then disbursed the sum of $1,091,604.

Let us consider now the matter of transportation of seed grain in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The government agreed to pay back 75 per cent of the freight charges.

Under the heading of emergency assistance with regard to unharvested crops, we learn that the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba received a total amount of $6,182,452. And so forth, Mr. Chairman.

We could give enough proof to put an end to the contention that we, Quebeckers, are always criticizing or speaking without rhyme or reason. We do not speak without rhyme or reason; we make claims in order to balance the position of the province of Quebec with regard to that of other provinces. In my opinion, this can only be done by establishing a department of agriculture for the east, and this is what I want to deal with.

The project of establishing a department of agriculture for the east has been given up, but I believe that we should reconsider it. I then ask the Minister of Agriculture to examine this question because it is the only way we can solve the agricultural problem in the east.

We need a department that will try to improve agricultural conditions so that our farmers may know a certain degree of prosperity after giving so much in taxes over the last 35 years to the western provinces. Now that their agriculture is well organized, we should get the opportunity to reorganize ours.

Right now we are a little like the father who has given too much to his children. We gave too much and we are still giving a lot to the western provinces in taxes of all kinds. That is why we ask you, with regard to joint programs, to give us back our taxing powers, so that we may give a new lease on life to our agriculture, after contributing to the development of agriculture throughout Canada and giving it that impetus about which we boast everywhere.

Let us give Quebec farmers a chance to rebuild their economy and regain the control of their own business. That is why it is urgent to give them competent men and especially financial means. Let us put an end to the programs which benefit Quebec only in a proportion of 32 per cent whereas our province's share of taxes is paid on the basis of its population.

That is why I advocate the repeal of such taxes. If the Minister of Agriculture, being the businessman he is, took the trouble of treating eastern farmers not as farmers but as businessmen, if he prefers, I am sure he would be aware of the pitiful condition of agriculture in our part of the country. If he is sincere and responsible, he will strive to make Canada a place where it is good to live because for the past 30 years we from Quebec have done our share to make this country the bread basket of the world as far as wheat is concerned.

Let us have the opportunity to recover the little that is left to us, to rebuild our strength and to take our place among the other provinces so that Quebec may once again be for Canada the asset it was 30 or 35 years ago.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): The hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe.

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Not now, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to intervene in the debate at this point but I am prompted to do so by some of the interruptions that have been made by members opposite. I noticed that when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was speaking and when the hon. member for Vancouver East was speaking members across the way kept interrupting and saying, "What would you do"? It seems to me somebody ought to tell the government members that a year ago the people of Canada elected them to office on their promise that they knew what to do about agricultural problems. They went about the length and breadth of this country telling people in the rural constituencies particularly what they were going to do about farm credit, what they going to do about crop insurance, what they were going to do about national marketing boards, what they were going to do about the price of farm machinery and other farm costs, and now we deserve something better than to have from government members the question, "What would you do"? It seems to me that we are entitled—

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Douglas: —to an answer from them as to what they intend to do.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Byrne: —I am sure the hon. member would not want to misinterpret what was said. I was in the house when some of these interruptions were made and they were not "what would you do" but "what did you do"? That was the question that was asked.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was not here most of the time.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of clarification, is it Liberal time which has been given to the N.D.P. now?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): I recognized the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe and he indicated he was passing at that point, so I recognized the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Vincent: Is the time being taken from the time of the Liberal party?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): The Chair recognized the only member who was on his feet at that point.

Mr. Vincent: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I went to the Chair and asked if I would be next and was told I would be. I was told that a Liberal member would be the next speaker and that I would have the floor after him.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): Unfortunately I had to recognize the hon. member who was on his feet at that time. I believe that is the practice of the house.

Mr. Douglas: I was saying to the committee that I think the government has a responsibility to tell us what they propose to do, not ask what the opposition proposes to do. As far as the hon. member for Kootenay East is concerned, he was not in the house when the hon. member for Vancouver East was speaking.

Mr. Byrne: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Douglas: There is no member of the house who pops up more often to talk about things he does not know anything about than the hon. member for Kootenay East.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): I ask the hon. member to sit down. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has the floor.

Mr. Byrne: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said I was not in the house. I can tell the hon. member and you, Mr. Chairman, that I was in the house and left the house only a few moments ago to return almost immediately.

Mr. Douglas: If the hon. member had let me finish he would have heard me say that he was not in the house when the hon. member for Vaucouver East was interrupted by a member who wanted to know what he would do. He could not have been asking, "What did you do" because the hon. member for Vancouver East was never the head of a government nor the member of a government.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has the floor.

Mr. Byrne: —the member for Kootenay East was in the house all the time while the hon. member for Vancouver East was speaking.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Francis): Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has the floor and other members will have an opportunity to speak in the course of the debate.

Mr. Douglas: If the hon. member for Kootenay East was in the house that proves my point, that although he was listening he did not understand anything of what was going on. This is characteristic of most of his conduct in the house. He seldom understands what anybody else is saying and most of the time nobody understands what he is trying to say.

An hon. Member: Raise another question of privilege.

Mr. Byrne: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Douglas: Before I was unnecessarily interrupted I was about to say that I would have expected the Minister of Agriculture, in opening the debate on his estimates, to tell the committee, and through the committee the farmers of Canada, what he intends to do to meet some of their most pressing problems, particularly what he intends to do to implement some of the pledges which the government made to the farmers of Canada last year in the election campaign. The minister made a very excellent speech, if it were being delivered to a fair board, on how to raise better livestock, how to improve certain varieties of grain and how to get better production on certain kinds of soil, all of which is very useful, and I compliment him on his knowledge in these fields. But the minister has not told the committee or the farmers what he proposes to do about their most pressing problem, the problem of farm income. If the farmers could get a price that is commensurate with their costs of production, the minister would not have any trouble about getting farmers to co-operate in producing a better class of livestock, in experimenting with new varieties of grain, new types of fertilizer and increasing their production. The farmers of the prairie provinces have proven that. As soon as the wheat board was able to sell wheat, the farmers soon demonstrated they could grow wheat. As soon as this government demonstrates they can help the farmer rectify his income problem, there will be no problem about getting farmers to increase their production. I say the central problem facing farmers in all parts of Canada today is the problem of farm income.

The dominion bureau of statistics figures show that real income per farm in 1951 was $2,641; in 1952, it was $2,656. From then on, it was below that and considerably below that. In 1954, it went down to $1,890 and only exceeded the 1952 figures in 1961 when it rose to $2,755. In 1962 it was $3,144, which is an all time high. This was the cash income per farm. The dominion bureau of statistics shows that when these figures are adjusted into constant 1951 dollars, the farm income in 1951 was $2,641 and stayed below that, every year until 1962 when it was $2,487. In other words, we have never since 1951 reached, in constant dollars, the per farm income of 1951, namely, $2,641. In terms of what a dollar will buy, farm income is lower now than it was in 1951. The last figures which were published for 1963 show that total farm cash income is up by 2.2 per cent, but that the net income for the farmer is only up in two provinces and is down in every other province.

The real measurement of the farmer's prosperity cannot be measured by looking at his income, either his net income or his cash income. At the same time you have to look at what it costs him to produce. If one takes a look at the index commodity figure for the things which the farmers has to buy in order to produce, one finds that in 1951 it was 230 and in 1962 it had climbed to 290. This is a fabulous increase in price of the things the farmer buys. The dominion bureau of statistics shows that the index commodity figure for the things a farmer had to sell in 1951 was 296 and in 1962 it had dropped to 264.

The real problem, therefore, facing agriculture is that while the prices which the farmer receives for the products he produces have gone down, the prices of the things which he must buy in order to produce have gone up at an amazing rate. This is why agriculture faces a serious problem. I say that before we pass this item the committee should insist that we have some statement from the minister referring to the matters which he outlined to us last year. He said the government was going to take some action to reduce the price of farm machinery. I remember asking him some questions last year: What was the government going to do to reduce these prices; was there going to be an investigation by an agriculture committee of the house; what steps had the government in mind to bring prices down because agricultural implements constitute for farmers, the most important item in their cost of production?

This is not only true of farm implements, it is equally true of other things which the farmer must buy, such as his pesticides and fertilizers. A great many of the commodities which the farmer buys have gone up in price, while the price he receives for his products in constant dollars has gone down. The minister, it seems to me, ought to tell the committee what he is going to do about farm costs.

The minister told us also last session that he was going to introduce some legislation to help farmers get credit. As everyone recognizes, agriculture now is highly capitalized and it requires larger amounts of capital for equipment, for land, for buildings, for mechanization and for many of the materials that are necessary for production. This means the average farmer is suffering from the problem of under-capitalization. When the minister talked today about improving stock and improving farming methods, what ought to be kept in mind is that all of this costs money. A farmer cannot improve his production, he cannot improve his farm methods unless he is able to get the necessary capital to carry out such a program.

I think we should have a statement from the minister as to what the government's plans are with reference to farm credit. I believe we should have a statement also with reference to crop insurance. Last year during the election campaign the Liberal party referred often to reinsurance in connection with crop insurance plans. It is undoubtedly true that too large a share of the responsibility has been left with the few provincial governments who have co-operated with the federal government in setting up crop insurance plans. Reinsurance would be a partial solution. Is the minister going to bring in legislation for reinsurance under the crop insurance plan? If he is, I think we should be told about it, or he should put it on the order paper so we could know before these estimates are passed whether the government was merely talking last year during the election or whether it intends to carry out the promises it made.

Most important of all, I think we need to know something about the government's intention with regard to setting up national marketing boards, about which it talked a great deal during the last federal election. One of the very specific promises that was made was uttered by the Prime Minister on March 7, 1963 in the city of Saskatoon when he told the farmers of western Canada that in lieu of acreage payments, which the Liberal party were going to discontinue, it was the intention of the Liberal party if elected to compensate the farmer in two ways: First of all, to institute the two price system for wheat and, second, by guaranteeing to the farmers by means of deficiency payments, $2 per bushel for No. 1 wheat, basis Fort William. We have not had a single word as to whether the government intends to proceed with this very specific commitment made by the Prime Minister, and echoed and re-echoed by the Liberal candidates all over western Canada.

The indications are that the price of wheat is declining. For the last crop year the average price for all grain worked out at about $1.65 a bushel as compared with $1.68 a bushel for the previous crop year. On the basis of the sales to the Soviet union and China, which have been around the market price, it looks as though the average price for No. 1 will not be much better than $1.95 a bushel, basis Fort William. If this is true, then under the Liberal commitment there ought to be at least a deficiency payment of five cents a bushel on No. 1 wheat in this crop year, and whatever adjusted price there would be for the other grades.

Are we going to have this commitment carried out? If the government has decided to repudiate it, surely in all honesty the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Prime Minister ought to tell us that the government was just kidding when it made this promise to the wheat growers of western Canada, that it was just a political platform that is used like a railway platform—you use it to get in on, and then forget about it when you are in. If that is what the government has decided, let them say so honestly, but let us not evade the issue by pretending the promise was never made.

We would like to know something about the national marketing boards for hogs and cattle. The farmers are very perturbed about fluctuations in cattle and hog prices, and it would do a great deal to help the minister's problem of production if the farmers knew in advance that there was to be a guaranteed price, and that there would be deficiency payments adequate to meet the farmers' cost of production when they produce these commodities.

All I am asking is that the minister do not treat this committee to just a lecture on livestock and crop diversification. Before this first item of the estimates is passed I hope he will use this occasion to tell the farmers what the government intends to do about the basic problems facing agriculture, and to tell this committee what he intends to do about the specific promises he made—whether he intends to carry them out, how he intends to carry them out, and how soon the legislation to implement those commitments will be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: In the short time left to me this afternoon I do not intend to discuss the agricultural problems that exist in my riding. I shall wait until I have a little more time to place these problems fully before the minister, but I thought I would bring a little joy into the minister's life this afternoon by raising a particular matter which came to my attention during my travels across the country.

The minister is probably aware of R.C.A.F. station Namao at Edmonton. I travel through Edmonton quite a good deal, and as recently as April 5 and April 6 I had occasion to be at R.C.A.F. station Namao, where I talked with some people and received a good deal of very interesting information.

I have been informed that there was a contract concerning the supply of milk and ice cream to this R.C.A.F. station, and I believe the contractor under the same contract also supplied the same products to the army station Griesbach at Edmonton. This contract ran from October 1963 until March 1964. I see I have the minister's rapt attention, and I know the recollection he must have of this contract.

The contractor was a certain Purity Dairy Company in Edmonton, and a very strange sequence of events transpired recently, which cause some doubt as to the integrity of the department itself, its officials and the minister. My information is that the company was managed by a Mr. Trach, Jacob Trach, and he was called up by the minister's representative in Edmonton and requested to cut this six month contract in half. Naturally, having signed the contract for the supply of these goods to the Namao and Griesbach stations, he was somewhat reluctant because he was in possession of an executed contract between himself and the government, and he felt he should fulfil the full provisions of it. He objected to this and he requested to have a personal discussion—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but there is nothing he has said until now that I can see relates to item 1 of the Department of Agriculture. It may be a fact that the Minister of Agriculture has done something, or has failed to do something else, but that does not necessarily place the matter within the boundaries of the item before us. It has to be something which has to do with the Department of Agriculture itself, and it seems to me that the complaint, which might be a very legitimate one, might come possibly under the items of the Department of National Defence. It may be that the hon. member wants to relate this to the Department of Agriculture, and I would ask him to do so, if he thinks it can be done.

Mr. Nielsen: Well now, sir, I cannot see anything that would be more relevant to item 1 in the discussion of the minister's estimates than a discussion of the minister's actions or of the actions of officials in his department. If the minister's own personal actions are involved, or those of any of his officials, in the matter I am raising, then this would be relevant to the item under discussion. I make that submission with the greatest respect to you, sir.

I want to provide the minister with this information in the short time left, so that he will have the whole week end and all of next week to get all the facts and bring them back to the committee and inform us fully. I of course abide by your decision, Mr. Chairman, but I submit on that basis the discussion is relevant.

The Chairman: I must say with all due respect to the hon. member that the last thing in the world I want to do is try to limit the discussion, but I do feel there is nothing at all in what the hon. member has said until now that relates to the specific item before the committee. As he knows, what we are trying to do all the time is limit the discussion in committee specifically to the item under discussion. This could be the type of thing that might come under grievances, or under another department, but I am afraid I have to rule that the point which has been raised by the hon. member is not relevant to the item now before the committee.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not for a moment question the ruling you have made, sir, but allow me if you will to submit that under the general item in the estimates, item No. 1, we are being asked to pass certain salaries involving officials of the Department of Agriculture and the minister himself. Now then, if we as members of the committee have any remarks concerning the activities of the officials of his department, or the activities of the minister himself, which activities relate directly to the question of salaries and which activities relate directly to the administration of the department, this I submit with the greatest respect is the time to raise this matter; and if Your Honour will allow me to make one further point—Your Honour has not yet heard my fully developed argument in this respect and I would, with great respect, suggest that you permit me to develop it before you come to any firm conclusion—

The Chairman: As I have already said twice, nothing which the hon. member has said until now brings this particular point within the framework of the item. If the hon. member wishes to show me and the other members of the committee that this is really a matter which comes under the item before us I would certainly be prepared to hear him.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure Your Honour will realize the relevancy as I go along. The information I have leads me to believe, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, that the minister has personally interfered with the full term of a contract for the supply of milk and ice cream to an R.C.A.F. station—

Mr. Hays: I know absolutely nothing of what the hon. member is insinuating. I will be glad to look into it, but as far as I am concerned I can categorically deny any of these insinuations he has made.

Mr. Nielsen: I have simply made the suggestion that the minister has interfered in the present contract. I am sure that because of the hon. gentleman's interest he will want to have the details of the information in my possession so as to allow him to make a complete investigation of the circumstances I am about to place before him. An official of the department in Edmonton, one Mr. McKay, had a personal discussion with the sales manager of the Purity Dairy Company, Mr. Trach, according to my information, and out of that discussion came the suggestion on the part of his official that the six months contract be cut in half. The civil servant involved, Mr. McKay, inferred, or said, he was acting under the direction of the minister, or under the direction of officials in Ottawa. He went even further—

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Francis: Is it in order to bring such accusations against civil servants in the course of debate, when they cannot reply to this kind of irresponsible charge?

Mr. Nielsen: The minister represents them here. I am making no direct accusation against any civil servant. I am saying that when information such as this comes to my attention it should be investigated and the minister has a responsibility for investigating this type of situation because it concerns his department.

Mr. Deachman: Is it not the proper procedure, when a matter of this kind arises, to put it in the form of a question to the minister? Then when a reply is available the matter can be debated. Surely it is pointless, when the minister has no information before him, to put this kind of question.

Mr. Nielsen: That is precisely what I am seeking to do now—to pass on to the minister all the information which is in my possession so that he can make the kind of investigation which will produce the answers, and allow him to come back and make an explanation to this committee. If the information I have is inaccurate, that is fine; I shall be very happy. But I am concerned that it may not be inaccurate.

In the conversations to which I have referred, not only was the suggestion made to Mr. Trach that the contract be halved but he was informed that unless he was tractable in this regard some method would be found to have his product declared below the standard acceptable at the stations. I want to ask the minister this: Did any of his officials in Edmonton make any approach to the manager or other personnel of the Purity Dairy Company to suggest that this contract be cut in half and, if such an approach was made, did any of his officials, either here or in Edmonton, or did he himself, authorize a suggestion to be made to the Purity Dairy Company or any of its employees that the government could in accordance with instructions from Ottawa find something wrong with the milk and ice cream supplied by the company?

Mr. Hays: On a point of order, I think the hon. member is making a lot of insinuations. I know nothing about this. I should like to investigate. As to the smears he has made, let me say we have between 10,000 and 12,000 employees; we have the responsibility for spending in the neighbourhood of $1 million a day on working days. I assure the hon. member we will investigate this matter and give him a reply. He has not come out with anything definite; he has just been beating about the bush.

Mr. Stewart: No sources.

Mr. Nielsen: I heard an intervention; I could not identify the hon. member who spoke because he did not rise. He said there were no sources. But I am giving the minister the name of the official concerned, according to the best of my information, in Edmonton—Mr. McKay. I hope his investigations will completely exonerate Mr. McKay. I hope they will completely exonerate himself and any of his officials in Ottawa. But I am sure the minister will wish to have full particulars of the information in my possession so as to enable him to make the complete investigation he says he is willing to make and to supply this committee with an explanation when he returns next week to deal further with his estimates.

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

CANADA FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF AGE

The house resumed from Friday, April 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mather for the second reading of Bill No. C-28, to amend the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act (age discrimination).

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, George Bernard Shaw is reputed to have said that youth is a wonderful thing, but it is too bad it is wasted on young people. The qualities of youth which were so attractive to George Bernard Shaw are qualities which do not apply only to young people. Our conception of age, longevity of life—all these things are changes, and we have to adjust our view to the changing worries and facts of our society. One of the stark realities of life in twentieth century Canada is that for people 65 years and over two chief factors, are poverty and loneliness.

We are dealing today, Mr. Speaker, with a bill to assist the absorption of older people into the labour market. I think we should look at the composition of the population of Canada today. Half of the Canadian population is under 25 years of age; 7.8 per cent or 7.9 per cent are over 65 years of age. One half of the population supports the other half. An analysis of the trends in population reveals that by 1971 the percentage of persons in the 30 to 40 age group will have shrunk.

The essential needs of old people are not any different from those of any other age group, except in degree. As of March 31, 1963, the percentage of recipients of old age assistance to the population in the 65 to 69 years of age group ranged from 13.12 per cent in a relatively prosperous province like Ontario to 52.93 per cent in Newfoundland. That is from roughly one in eight to better than one in two of that age group. A very considerable number of the aged live in inadequate housing, are ill-fed, insufficiently cared for medically, and deprived of opportunities for normal social intercourse and recreation. The problem of absorbing older people in the employment stream is a reflection of the general level of employment in Canada. When there are enough jobs to go around, then the problem of the aged is less acute. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the entire problem of older people must be viewed in terms of the rate of economic growth of our country.

There are a number of illusions about older workers. I believe that this bill is a palliative but that the illusions are much more serious and are matters with which we must deal if we really want to tackle this problem. About 33 per cent of the unemployed persons in Canada at any given time are over 40 years of age. Many experience long periods of unemployment. Many older persons are refused interviews for jobs because company policy restricts hiring of personnel over the age of 35 or even as low as 30. In a study made of 950 classified advertisements in a group of newspapers, it was found that 490 or more than 51 per cent stated age restrictions. Only 18 of those advertising were willing to accept applicants up to 50 years of age.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are some of these illusions about older workers? One of them is that among older people you have a higher frequency of illness and therefore greater absenteeism. Another illusion is that physical deterioration is synonymous with age and therefore older people are more accident prone. Another illusion is that age has a direct bearing on insurance rates, and therefore the costs of pension plans mount successively with each new participant over 40 years of age. It is said—and this is a very serious matter—that as people grow older their ability to learn decreases, and it is therefore more difficult to train older people in new industrial methods and techniques. There is a myth that a man over 40 is not as productive as he was at 20. The myth of the older worker has no firm basis in truth. Chronological age is not a sound foundation on which to build hiring policies. It gives no indication of a man's ability or his skills and knowledge, the important elements to be considered when people are hired.

A study was undertaken by the economics and research branch of the Department of Labour covering 1,018 employees in two large department stores in two Canadian cities, and this study was the first of its kind in the field. It was found, Mr. Speaker, that those qualities which make for good salesmanship are not exclusively the property of any age group. Flexibility, adaptability and other traits which make a person a preferred employee and which bring a profit to a firm exist in all age groups. Further, the report showed that sales performance improves somewhere between the ages of 51 and 55 and declines slowly in the ensuing years. The record of performance of people past 40 is as good as that of other employees, if not better. The sales clerk employed after age 40 attained a higher performance rating within a shorter period of service than a younger employee. Workers hired after the age of 40 tend to outperform those hired below the age of 30. The older workers attained a higher performance rating within a shorter period of time. This represents savings for companies which would otherwise have spent money on training. In all cases the average score for employees over the age of 60 compared favourably with that of employees below the age of 51.

Performance was below average in the case of employees under 31 years of age, and about average in the case of employees between 31 and 40. The best average in the case of employees was over 46 years of age. The best performance in store A related to employees in the age group 51 to 55; in store B, to those in the late 50's.

Mr. Speaker, there is also the question of labour turnover, which involves an enormous cost for industry. It has been found that there is less turnover in more mature workers than in younger workers. The worker of 45 and over quits his job less than one half as often as the younger worker. Similarly but to a less marked degree, the older worker is fired from his job less often than the younger worker. A 12-month survey in seven cities in the United States covering establishments employing 3.9 million workers showed that if an older worker obtains a regular job lasting at least one year, he is more likely than a younger person to stay with the firm up to the age of normal retirement. The annual separation rate for all groups was 54 for each 100 workers employed at the end of the pediod under study. The rate was 62 per 100 for those persons under 45 years of age. In contrast, the rate for those over 45 was 38 separations per 100 employees. This indicates that older employees are better employment risks than younger employees.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is the myth about learning ability. A scientific study was undertaken in the United States concerning the intellectual ability to absorb. The army alpha intelligence test was administered to 127 male freshmen at Iowa State College during 1918-1919. It was readministered to the same group after an interval of 31 years, during 1949-50. In analysing the results, psychologists took into consideration the effects of social background, experience and the other factors which might have a bearing on the better scores attained in the 1950 tests. The net result was that it was found that the group was intellectually more able at 50 than they were in 1919.

Dr. Margaret Mead, the famous sociologist has said that "to put all the learning into childhood, all the work into middle age and all the regrets into old age" is one of the illusions of our society. It is time that society accepted the fact that it is possible to learn at any age and that learning ability is not the exclusive property of any age group. A program of education, based on the findings that older workers are flexible, can adapt themselves to new techniques and new ideas, should be highly successful in bringing about the reduction of age prejudice and the end of hiring restrictions.

Another factor, Mr. Speaker, is the question of pensions. We all know that the Canada pension plan, which this parliament will surely enact and which will give to all workers a portable pension, will destroy this one further obstacle to the employment of older workers. It seems to me that what we have to do in dealing with this problem is to educate industry, to educate employers, to educate the public into the idea that the illusions we have about older workers being costly, are harmful and are inequitable in terms of the growing group of older workers in our society.

A program undertaken by the national employment service advisory group in Toronto, which has been widely quoted and is quoted by the international labour office, showed that by interviewing older workers not only were some opportunities found for these workers but the self-respect of the workers was built up and many went out and got jobs themselves, when prior to that they were depressed by the social mores which condemned them to the industrial heap.

With regard to this problem we have to change our attitude; we have to change the attitude not only of industry, not only of employers but we have to change the attitude of our society. We are providing benefits for older people and for younger people, and we must not assume that we are the only social welfare society that the world has ever seen. Our particular problem is an aspect of industrial society; it is an aspect of the decline of patriarchal society. Patriarchal society looked after older people; rural society absorbed to some extent older people. We live in a largely individualistic and industrial society and the welfare state is our answer to that hiatus which has been created in our society by the growth of this highly individualized and industrialized economy. We have to change our attitudes; we must carry on a large program of education, and we must show to employers the great waste consequent in the attitudes they have towards the employment of older workers.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we who are the colleagues of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) in this house appreciate the fact that an opportunity was made for this bill to be discussed again today. This arose from the fact that on April 3 the time allowed was something less than an hour and it seemed only fair that it should retain its position in the list of public bills. We feel, however, that the matter is of such sufficient interest and importance that the discussion should not be limited even to the further time it is getting today, but that the subject matter of this bill should at any rate be discussed in the industrial relations committee. It of course would be our preference that the bill itself come to a vote and be approved on second reading; but since the indications are that this might not happen between now and six o'clock, we would like to suggest to the house that it take its time in this private members' hour to discuss this matter, but that it agree that the subject matter of the bill is of sufficient importance that it should be discussed in the industrial relations committee.

We note with interest that those who have spoken on this measure thus far, both on April 3 and today, are sympathetic with the principles and purposes of the legislation proposed by my colleague the hon. member for New Westminster. I hope, therefore, that the motion which I should now like to make will be welcomed by the house. As hon. members will be aware, it is not a motion that closes off debate; it is a motion that can itself be debated. I hope there will not be any feeling that this motion needs to be talked out, but rather that some time just before six o'clock hon. members will let my motion carry so that the subject matter of this bill can go to the industrial relations committee for discussion. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without further ado I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

> That Bill C-28 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on industrial relations.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion just moved, that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the standing committee on industrial relations I am assuming I am in order if I discuss the subject matter of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to add to the act now on the statute books a provision that extends the field of discrimination against which we are trying to guard in our employment practices. It would ensure that age is not used in a purely prejudicial manner against a prospective employee.

The act now on the statute books which this bill seeks to amend ensures that certain factors cannot be used as a means of barring employment. It ensures that prejudice and bigotry will not prevent people from getting a job and it specifically enumerates the factors of race, national origin, colour or religion.

I do not think there is any question in anybody's mind that these factors already in the act have any bearing on a person's capability in carrying out an employment function. I do not think that any member of the house feels that race, national origin, colour or religion matter in terms of a person's ability to carry out his function. The amendment would add age to these factors.

To my mind the factor of age is one of several grey areas. I am very much against, as we all are, prejudice on the ground of any of the factors already listed; but what about linguistic ability? What about a provision that would state that an employer cannot discriminate because of somebody's ability to speak a certain language? You might have a situation where a person of foreign birth is applying for a job and has a very heavy accent. The prospective employer might, because he had a prejudice against people of that person's racial background, discriminate against him and because of his linguistic ability say: I will not take you.

On the other hand, there may be quite valid reasons for not employing a person with a very heavy accent. He might be applying for the type of job where his communicative ability was a key factor, in which case the employer would be justified in disqualifying this person for employment. This to me is a grey area. How do you know? It is very difficult to decide whether or not in the case I have just outlined the person is being discriminated against because of his linguistic ability or because of prejudice in the mind of the prospective employer.

Mr. Winch: I rise on a point of order, although I do not want to do so. I have listened very carefully to what the hon. member has been saying. I would point out that the bill has to do with only one thing, discrimination on the ground of age, but my hon. friend is discussing everything else except age discrimination. I would ask that the debate be confined to the subject matter of the bill now before us, age discrimination, and not whether a person speaks with an accent or anything else.

Mr. Hahn: If the hon. member will be patient, I was trying to indicate that there are certain categories of discrimination now in the act which are very clearcut, and that there are others where there can be some doubt; but I am coming now to the one specifically mentioned in the bill before us, age. I wanted to indicate that age also is one of those factors that can sometimes matter and at other times does not matter in terms of a person's ability to carry out a job. There are times when, for obvious reasons, the age of the person is important. There are times when it does not matter. There are several examples.

Some years ago when I was establishing a business I engaged a person for a function that normally would be a function that a young person would perform. It involved physical activity out of doors in all sorts of weather. I did not take a young man; I took an older man. This person has been with me for a number of years and has carried out the work extremely well. In the normal course of events one would have thought I would have been quite justified in saying to this person: No, you are too old for this job. It is very difficult indeed to tell.

At the same time I engaged this man I employed another man. His type of work was different and I hired a very young man, a man who according to the normal rules of the game might not have had enough experience. I could have discriminated against him by saying: You are too young—but I did not. It is very difficult in these cases to draw hard and fast rules. How do you know specifically whether age is or is not a factor in regard to a person's capability to carry out a job? It is extremely difficult to define.

There is a third kind of grey area of this type. A company may want to engage a person for a function for which age does not matter, but let us assume for a moment they want to engage a man to act as understudy to a senior person already in the organization. The age of the understudy does not matter in terms of his ability to carry out the job; but in terms of the long term development plans of the company age is a factor, if the company is looking forward to providing a replacement against the retirement of the more senior person. Is that company discriminating or not discriminating if they say that they would like a younger man for this particular function?

It seems to me that the major problem we face in this proposed legislation is that we are going to set out an area of discrimination and are going to say that an employer cannot discriminate against somebody because of age, and unless age is a bona fide occupational qualification he should disregard it in his hiring practices. It is exceedingly difficult, if not almost impossible at times, to determine whether age is a bona fide occupational qualification, because a person's capability to carry out the work is not the only factor. I think we must assume that the organization doing the hiring must have some plans for the future and must be able to carry out those plans, and if this involves selecting people in a certain age bracket the company should be allowed to do so.

This is not to say that I support, condone or agree with rank discrimination on the ground of age, because I feel that to discriminate only because of age, to turn a man down only because of age, is wrong. I should like to try to find an answer to the problem but I do not think this legislation is the right answer. I am afraid it could lead to all sorts of litigation. Indeed, if the bill is put on the statute books and is to mean anything it must lead to all sorts of litigation, and I think there would be great difficulty in establishing objective yardsticks to use. So I think we would wind up with an enactment on the statute books that would be unworkable. I do not think that this is the sort of thing we should do in this parliament. I think we should be very careful to try to put on the statute books acts that will work.

What is the answer to this problem of the older worker? As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber) pointed out, and as I heartily agree, in many respects the older workers are superior workers. There are prejudices in the minds of many people against hiring older people. The approach suggested by the hon. member for York South appears to me a much more logical approach, that is to try a fundamental educational program on the employers. This, in my opinion, would produce far better results than putting unworkable legislation on the statute books. I believe that if this bill is passed it is not going to solve the problem. Again, without going through all the ramifications of the problem, I think the hon. member for York South covered a number of the reasons why older people have difficulty in getting jobs.

This particular measure does not answer many of these problems. On the other hand, it is going to create problems in terms of litigation. I think it will create problems on the one hand without, on the other hand, achieving the objective we seek to achieve. I feel it will, in fact, do more harm than good. It has been moved that the subject matter of this piece of legislation go to a committee for study. I feel that, obviously, study is the answer to this problem. I do not believe we have an answer yet. However, I believe there is a committee of the other place that is studying the problem of aging. This is certainly an important part of the problem of aging. Is it, then, sensible or wise for us to establish another little study group working on a segment of essentially the same problem as the committee of the other place in tackling? I do not think it is. I feel that we should allow the committee of the other place to do its work and then, having the results of that committee before us, we could try to draft legislation if such legislation were deemed to be useful. For these reasons, I reject the suggestion that we refer the subject matter of this bill to the standing committee on industrial relations.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I intend to be very brief in speaking on this matter. I am glad that this piece of legislation has been introduced into this house. It has been a subject of great interest to me over the years, and on a number of occasions I have introduced resolutions designed to assist the employment of older workers in industry. I am glad to see a bill of this nature produced to help those who are employed by the federal government.

When this bill was previously before the house my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) requested support for it and requested that it be referred to a committee for further study. The hon. member's speech is recorded in Hansard for this session at page 1,783. Having heard the last speaker, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn) and the previous speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber), I am glad to note that the members of the government at least have some sympathy for this type of legislation even if they are not interested in having it passed or considered by a committee. We all realize this matter is complex and that there are difficulties of administration and enforcement in this type of legislation. This is exactly why it should be referred to the committee on industrial relations.

I am astonished to hear the hon. member for Broadview say that this type of legislation should not be introduced or even studied at this time, because the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) introduced just this kind of legislation, in a related way.

Mr. Hahn: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I did not say that at all. If the hon. member for Oxford was listening, he will know I stated the reason I did not believe this legislation should go to a committee was that there was a committee of the other place currently studying the problems of aging. I made no reference at all to actions on the part of the government.

Mr. Nesbitt: This committee has been studying the problem for quite a while, and probably will continue to do so for quite awhile, just like the sixth committee of the United Nations has been studying the definition of "aggression" for a number of years and has not decided on that as yet.

The Minister of Labour introduced legislation to assist the employment of older workers in industry. I really fail to understand the logic which says that type of legislation is all right, even if it does not work very well, and yet the hon. member for Broadview gets up and says this type of legislation should not be studied by a committee. I certainly hope the viewpoint he is expressing is not common to all the other members of his party. I certainly hope this bill is referred to the committee on industrial relations for study this afternoon. If the committee ascertains it is not possible to enforce or administer this type of legislation, then we will know that is so. However, I cannot possibly understand how anyone could get up in this house and attempt to prevent this bill going to a committee for study.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I spoke on this matter when it was raised first some time ago on the basis of information I had just received that day from a civilian employee of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; is the hon. member speaking to the amendment? I assume that is why he is speaking now.

Mr. Knowles: That is what is before the house.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, I spoke on the main motion, but we are considering the amendment now.

This civilian employee of the Department of National Defence received a communication from the civilian personnel officer advising him of a recommendation for his release due to age. Those words were used in a letter which had been forwarded by the higher authorities. I put a question on the order paper which will be found on page 2195 of Hansard for April 15, 1964. It is question No. 640, and reads as follows:

Are civilian employees of the Department of National Defence dismissed from employment on the grounds of age before reaching 65 years?

The answer by the associate minister reads as follows:

The normal retiring age for civilian employees of the Department of National Defence is 65. There is provision in the Public Service Superannuation Act and regulations whereby a deputy head, with the concurrence of the civil service commission, may at any time, for reason only of age, terminate the employment of a contributor who has attained 60 years of age. It is the policy of the Department of National Defence to retire persons between age 60 and 65 years, by reason of age, only in unusual cases where continued employment involves a serious problem.

The answer is not completely clear, but it does admit that whereas the normal retiring age is 65, the department does retire people at an earlier age, on the grounds of age, and that is precisely the case which has been drawn to my attention, the release of an employee "due to age". To have the subject matter of this bill considered by a committee would throw some light on the policy of the government with regard to the problem of employment, and the release from employment, of people by reason of age.

I would think a committee would want to investigate very thoroughly this particular question, and see what the grounds are on which government departments release people simply on the grounds of age when it is normal, as the answer to my question indicated, to continue people until—

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he realize that the clause in the Civil Service Act, referred to in the answer he has just read, was put in that act by the government of which he was a member?

Mr. Churchill: Well, that is irrelevant. If it is a bad provision I don't care what government put it in; I would say throw it out. This has not come to my attention before, and if our government made a mistake we are quite prepared to admit it. The present government spends all its time apologizing for the mistakes it is making.

My point is that in this period, when we have become more sympathetic towards the question of employment and the age factor, when we have been attempting to deal with the employment of people over the age of 45 years, when we have been attempting to continue employment throughout the sixties—and in various circumstances suggesting that people should carry on until they are 70—surely we must look at any rules, regulations or provisions within the government service which permit retirement before the age of 65, simply on the grounds of age and, if there are arbitrary decisions being made, then some modification of these provisions should be entered into.

The reason I support the proposal that the subject matter be referred to a committee is that it is impossible under these circumstances to discuss the subject fully or to get the necessary answers that one would require. Whereas, a committee of the house is admirably suited to get the information, to have witnesses brought before it, to have the officials summoned, to study the matter and clear it up by suggesting modifications to some of our statutes or to the regulations of the civil service commission, modifications which would bring to an end the release of people from employment simply on the grounds of age.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak only a short while. First I would like to say I think the subject matter of the bill is worthy of close examination and should be placed before a committee for study, but the other thing I would like to say is that I doubt the practicability of the bill itself. I think it one of those cases where we sort of give lip service to something, and there are so many loopholes that nobody can catch up with one who is actually transgressing in the situation.

One of the things that has caused this legislation to appear on the books has been the fact that pensions have been the criterion so far as hiring older people is concerned. The fact that people are getting on towards the pension age has worked against their securing employment; but now, if we get a universal pension plan with portability, this will have a great effect on the chances of the older workers becoming employed.

I look forward to our getting a pension plan suitable for all Canadians, with the portability that will make it possible for the individual who finds himself out of employment to take his pension with him, so that his prospective new employer will not look askance at him because of the pension situation.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, if I may revert for a moment to the few remarks made by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt)—by the way they were not nearly as good as the cheese his country produces—he did say one thing about which I should like to comment. He drew attention to the fact that the government, through the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), introduced a measure to encourage industry to employ persons over 45 years of age who had been unemployed for six of the previous nine months.

While, as he said, this measure has not been taken up by employers on as wide a scale as we would have hoped, nevertheless it has provided a very substantial financial incentive for them to employ older workers. To my knowledge this is the first effort on the part of any government to set an example by actual legislation to encourage industry to employ older workers.

The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) has just pointed out that we are now hoping to have a comprehensive, portable pension plan, again devised by this government, and this too will provide an enormous incentive to the employment of older workers. Indeed, as I was sitting here listening to some of the speeches, particularly from the official opposition, I could not help recalling that these two measures this government has taken have been by far the most substantial strides ever taken to encourage the employment of persons who are getting on in years and who have such great difficulty getting jobs.

When this matter was debated three years ago, to be exact on May 5, 1961, speaker after speaker on the opposite side got up and talked about it. Presumably the government of the day spent a good deal of time talking about it, just as it spent a good deal of time talking about how wonderful it would be to have a portable, national, contributory pension scheme; but nothing was done about it. Neither was anything done on the score of encouraging industry to employ older workers, or getting the kind of pension scheme going that would make for the encouragement of the employment of older workers.

Therefore since this government has, in a very short time, taken these two steps which were talked about since 1961, and earlier, by the previous government, and since it is quite clear that the matter of the older worker is one that has been of very great concern to this government, in particular to the Minister of Labour, and in the case of the pension plan to the other ministers as well, we can pretty well rely on the interest and concern on this side of the house in this problem, an interest and concern which are sufficient to make us want to do something about it.

I see that the bill which it is proposed to amend, the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act, contains no provision for preventing discrimination on the ground of sex which, it seems to me, is an extraordinary omission and I hope the hon. member will—

Mr. Mather: You look after the sex and I look after the age.

Miss Jewett: If I were the hon. member, I would not like that at all. Perhaps we could be offered an amendment which would prevent discrimination against women workers, because such discrimination is widespread in many places.

What puzzles me about the amendment is the phrase "unless age is a bona fide occupational qualification". I have found it difficult to understand what this really means and how it would be interpreted. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) in his speech on April 3 really did not tell us what that means and I feel there is a danger it would mean all things to all men. If an employer were to say: "I am sorry, but this particular job is one which requires people under the age of 45", his word would be taken, there being no arbitrary way of judging whether the job was, indeed, one which could be done only by people in certain age groups.

This is a particular weakness. If we are to include this reference to age it would seem to me better to do so without making any qualification at all, except of course that obviously one would not include child labour.

It is interesting that we should have spent so many years in this country in the past fighting to get some degree of age discrimination, namely to prevent child labour, only to discover that there is discrimination at the other end against older workers.

The bill should be examined very closely before an age factor is introduced into the act. I agree that the act is not complete. As I have indicated, there is no clause in it to help women, and there is nothing about age in it at the moment. But the government it seems to me is already seized with this problem, as indeed is the other place right now. The interest being taken in it is greater than for a number of years. The government has already taken two important steps to encourage the employment of older workers, and undoubtedly further steps will be taken, steps which I suggest will be in the end more effective than the clauses which the hon. member wishes to introduce into the act.

For my part I am prepared to see a continuation of the progress we have made in this field over the past several months. I am not sure that the industrial relations standing committee would have much further to contribute on this subject. I believe additional progress can be made by other means. I was interested to notice that in one branch of the government service, the Canadian penitentiaries service, an attempt has been made recently to employ older workers in occupations other than those of guards.

An hon. Member: Just the opposite.

Miss Jewett: Someone says: "Just the opposite". I have heard about the case of a man older than 45 whose application was turned down several months ago. I wrote to the commissioner about this and in reply he stated that while there may have been in the past some tendency to prefer to employ a younger person, they were not now discriminating on account of age and that this man would be sent an application form.

Mr. Winch: Talk it out. You have two minutes to go.

Mr. Howard: I thought you had a mind of your own.

Miss Jewett: So they were not discouraging the employment of older workers in those categories, other than custodial officers.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. Member: No, do not help her talk it out.

Mr. Knowles: In view of her statement that the terms of this bill should be inquired into further, does she not think it would be a good idea to let this motion go through so that the subject matter could be examined in a committee of private members?

Miss Jewett: To be quite honest, the reason is that this is obviously a problem which is already under consideration by the government. I am not saying the standing committee could not do an excellent job. Private members can do a lot of things, but in the light of the steps the government has taken recently I think we could look forward to better results by continuing as we have done over the past several months, bearing in mind the additional encouragement which is being given within the civil service itself to the employment of older workers wherever possible.

I do not think hon. members opposite realize what has been accomplished, by comparison with previous years. If they look more closely at what has been done I think they will agree with me that it is a very good record.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we call it six o'clock may I say that a point of procedure has been brought to the attention of the Chair. It appears that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who moved the amendment proposed this afternoon was the seconder of the original motion. Perhaps the hon. member would allow someone else—the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—to be the mover of the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business is now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: The business for Monday has been announced. I presume that it holds, and that we will carry on with it on Tuesday and Wednesday if it is unfinished.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not able to give the business of the house beyond Monday. On Monday we shall be dealing with the three budget resolutions—the income tax resolution, the customs tariff resolution and the estate tax resolution. I am sorry I am not able to go beyond that.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 27, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAYS—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR YUKON

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of personal privilege concerning unfounded statements made about me and my department by the hon. member for Yukon on Friday last. I want to state as follows. There is no Mr. McKay who works in the Department of Agriculture in Edmonton. No official of the Department of Agriculture approached any member of Purity Dairies concerning any contract.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the minister's question of privilege, I feel he should have raised it on his estimates. It does not seem to me to be a question of privilege, but quite apart from that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are debating this matter. Has the hon. member any material matter to contribute? It seems to me that questions of privilege should be quite restrictively interpreted.

Mr. Nielsen: I submit that Your Honour should rule whether or not the matter raised by the minister is a question of privilege. The point I wish to submit is that the minister has not heard all the representations I wish to make about this matter, and it may very well prove to be the case that Mr. McKay was an employee of the department between the dates that I intend to submit to the minister when his estimates come up again. I would ask Your Honour to rule whether or not the minister has raised a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this is opening up a field for argument and complaint. The minister made a statement which has not been contradicted in the house, and I am therefore prepared to accept that statement unless there is other evidence produced which has not been produced today. I suggest to the hon. member for Yukon that at another time, on another occasion, on estimates or when some other opportunity is presented, he can make his case if he has one.

Mr. Nielsen: May I raise a question of order?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would do that later.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I now rise on a question of order with respect to the so-called question of privilege raised by the Minister of Agriculture, and refer Your Honour to page 2125 of Hansard for Tuesday, April 14 last, where Your Honour handed down a ruling with respect to a question of privilege I raised on April 13. On April 14, as recorded at that page, Your Honour said:

> The hon. member, who is a student of parliamentary procedure, when he rose to speak yesterday had just heard a statement from the Chair to the effect that members should not raise so-called questions of privilege on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house, and that questions of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament.

I request Your Honour to apply the rules, as I am sure Your Honour will in all fairness, to all members of the house, and rule on the so-called question of privilege that the minister purported to raise just a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances I have not had the opportunity of studying the matter. After due consultation it has been brought to my notice that Beauchesne, citation 127(3), reads as follows:

> When a statement is made affecting an hon. member, which he denies, Mr. Speaker thinks that the house will feel that the hon. member has a right to make an explanation on a personal matter. He will not exceed an explanation of the particular matter.

It seems to me the minister made such a statement today, and I do not see that any question of privilege arises at this time.

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON QUESTION OF MEMBER FOR KOOTENAY WEST

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will give me a few minutes I have a statement to make. Unfortunately it is rather lengthy, but I have to make it; the question raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West was rather long and required detailed investigation.

On Wednesday, April 22, the hon. member for Kootenay West rose on a question of privilege based on the fact that in his opinion certain statements made by one H. L. Keenleyside in the press were a challenge to the ancient rights and privileges of members of parliament. He referred to the fact that Mr.

Keenleyside had objected to attacks made on senior officials, and he added that his point of privilege was based on a letter appearing in the Ottawa Citizen on Tuesday, April 21, 1964 entitled "Attacks on Public Servants in the House are Deplored", in which the writer restated at much greater length the substance of the statement made before the external affairs committee. The hon. member then said "It is obvious that H. L. Keenleyside's remarks are directed at me".

Having stated his point of privilege, the hon. member for Kootenay West proceeded to produce evidence in support of it. According to the hon. member the questions at issue are:

1. Whether a member of the Commons may freely and constitutionally comment, in the house or in a committee thereof, upon the conduct of any person in the public service in so far as that conduct relates to such person's official duties; and

2. Whether any person may criticize a member for so commenting and not be in contempt of the house.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has furnished me with a long memorandum giving the answers to these questions as contained in certain resolutions of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom on the 26th February, 1701. He also refers to the B.N.A. Act, the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Inquiries Act and the Civil Service Act.

As stated by the hon. member earlier, he ended his argument by moving a motion which reads as follows:

> That this house reaffirms the constitutional practice and validity of the privilege, right and obligation of its members to fully discuss or debate the actions or statements of any public servant of Canada, where, in the discretion of any member of this house, such a course is determined by such member, which constitutional privilege and obligation has been established over centuries of British parliamentary custom.

It will be noted that the hon. member does not ask the house to decide whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege. Neither does he ask that the subject matter of the prima facie case of privilege, if there is one, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. Nor does he, after tabling the newspaper, ask that the editor thereof and the author of the letter, Mr. Keenleyside, be cited at the bar of the house to be subsequently imprisoned, punished by admonition or reprimanded, as has happened in the United Kingdom and in Canada.

There are certain precedents in Canada which I might simply mention for the record, amongst them the Elie Tassé case in 1873, the Cinq-Mars case in 1906 and the Miller case in 1913. I suppose the typical case is that of Cinq-Mars who, having been heard at the bar, was censored by Mr. Speaker, as will be found on page 377 of the Journals of the House of Commons of 1906.

The motion moved by the member for Kootenay West reaffirming that the constitutional privilege of the house of discussing or debating the actions or statements of public servants has been established over centuries of parliamentary custom will be agreed to by all hon. members, but it does not appear to be the proper motion to make as it is simply a declaration of opinion.

That it is contrary to the privileges of the house to publish any libels reflecting on the members has always been recognized, although the procedures as late as 1760 were certainly quite different from the procedures of the twentieth century. For instance, in England the earlier reporters were positively prohibited from reporting speeches made in parliament. A number of prohibitions were set out during the seventeenth century, a typical one being the resolution of March 22, 1642, proclaiming that "whatsoever person shall print any act or passage of this house, without the particular licence of this house, shall be reputed a high contemner and breaker of the privilege of parliament, and be punished accordingly."

Even 85 years later, that is in 1727, Edward Cave and Robert Raikes were, by order of the house, committed to prison for publishing reports in the Gloucester Journal and were kept in custody for several days, only being released after expressing contrition for their offence and paying heavy fines. This, however, is only to show that there have been certain changes which have taken place since the numerous precedents of the year 1701 quoted in the hon. member's memorandum.

Coming back now to the questions at issue and the motion at the end of the question of privilege, there does not seem to me to be a direct and logical sequence. For instance, the second question asked is whether any person may criticize a member for so commenting and not be in contempt of the house, and the motion which the house is asked to adopt is simply in very general terms affirming certain privileges which are declared to exist.

In a book entitled "An Encyclopaedia of Parliament" by Norman Wilding and Philip Laundy, I find the following at pages 455-56, under the heading "Breach of Privilege":

> Both houses of parliament claim the right to punish offences which violate their privileges, whether committed by a member or an outsider, and whether directed against an individual or against the house collectively. Certain other offences against the authority and dignity of parliament, whilst not breaches of specific privileges, are also punishable and, more correctly called contempts. It has become the custom, however, to refer to all such offences as breaches of privilege.

The acts which constitute breaches of privilege are many and are dealt with exhaustively in Erskine May (chap. 8). Anson summarizes them as disrespect to any members of the house, as such, by a person not being a member; disrespect to the house collectively, whether committed by a member or any other...Disrespect to a member includes attempts to threaten or intimidate him, any libel concerning his conduct in the house and the offering of a bribe...

Here are four cases from Hansard which may have a certain bearing on the present case:

(1) 1914, February 2, page 343:

Mr. Speaker: That is scarcely to be regarded as a question of privilege, because it does not refer to the hon. gentleman's conduct, nor to his rights and privileges in the house.

(2) 1915, April 8, page 2189:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose to a question of privilege on statements in a leaflet published by the Federal Press Agency, Ottawa, and said the statements in it were false and a malignant libel and slander.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to say from the Chair that, while I would not regard this as a matter of privilege according to my understanding of privilege, it is quite proper that the right hon. gentleman should draw attention to this leaflet as he has done and deny it if he wishes to do so.

(3) 1915, April 15, p. 2461: Question of privilege over newspaper statement denied by Mr. Glass.

Mr. Speaker: With reference to the practice which seems to be somewhat prevalent of late, of reading newspaper articles in the House as a question of privilege, I wish to say that it is not a question of privilege, and cannot by any stretch of the imagination be properly regarded as privilege. All the same, it is the right of an hon. member to refer to such statements and to contradict them.

(4) 1916, Feb. 3, p. 555: In this case, Mr. Burnham complained of an article in the Toronto Star as incorrectly reporting him:

Mr. Speaker: I may inform the hon. member and the house that my attention was called this morning to the article referred to, and I can only say that it is certainly unjust; I need not say more to the hon. member for Peterborough. If this report was sent to the paper in question by a member of the press gallery, I think it is his duty to apologize, and to do justice to the hon. member for Peterborough.

To end this statement I would have to say that either the newspaper article refers to the hon. member's conduct and is a libel thereon, or it is not such a libel. If this newspaper article is a libel on the conduct of the hon. gentleman, the motion now before the house does not appear to me as if it would bring a remedy. On the other hand, if there is no libel on the hon. gentleman then it is not a question of privilege. It is, therefore, evident from what I have said that the proposition of the hon. gentleman cannot be recognized as a question of privilege.

The motion that he has asked the house to adopt is in the nature of a substantive motion which would have to appear on the orders of the day after 48 hours' notice under the heading private members' notices of motion to be dealt with when called, in its proper turn and at the proper time. There is no rule or precedent that would justify the adoption of such a motion following the publication of an article or a letter in a newspaper.

However, there is no doubt that it was quite proper for the hon. gentleman to bring this matter to the attention of the house and to reaffirm the privileges, rights and obligations of its members, and by doing so, he has served the purpose that he had in mind.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the statement you have made and I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That the statement made this day by Mr. Speaker, and the subject matter of the question of privilege on which it was based, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: If I may recall to the attention of the hon. member for Kootenay West, I devoted several minutes and at least five pages of text trying to prove or at least to render the decision that there was no point of privilege. That being so, it is impossible for me to receive this motion at this time.

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON QUESTION OF MEMBER FOR LABELLE

Mr. Speaker: Before calling for orders of the day I should like to give an opinion. Last Friday, April 24, 1964, as recorded at page 2660 of the French edition of Hansard, and at page 2536 of the English edition, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) asked the following question:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has been reported by all information media that Mr. Keith Davey, chief Liberal organizer, has stated that I had been rejected by the Liberal party.

I am asking the Prime Minister whether, to his knowledge, I have ever offered my services to the Liberal party?

[Text]

On the two subsequent pages of Hansard it will be seen that the Chair expressed the view that the foregoing question was not relating to public affairs and, since it was completely out of order, could not be raised after ten o'clock on the adjournment of the house. Interventions were made by certain members, more particularly with regard to the interpretation of provisional standing order 39, subsection 5, in relation to the admissibility of a notice given by a member to raise during adjournment proceedings the subject matter of a question ruled out of order. The Chair then stated that in order to ensure complete consideration and impartiality the matter would be studied during the week end.

My view on this point is as follows:

1. Provisional standing order 39 (5) authorizes a member to give notice of his intention to raise the subject matter of his question on two occasions; (a) when he is not satisfied with the answer given; and (b) when he is told by the Speaker that his question is not urgent.

2. It seems obvious to me that a question must be in order on the two occasions where notice may be given pursuant to provisional standing order 39 (5). In the first instance, I fail to see how a minister may answer any question at all unless the Chair is of the opinion that the question is in order and may be asked. In the second instance, when a member is told by the Speaker that his question is not urgent it is to be assumed that the question is in order but not sufficiently urgent to be asked before the orders of the day are proceeded with.

3. Looking at the broader aspect of the problem it has been taken into consideration that, not knowing beforehand the gist of the question, it is only after the question has been asked that the Speaker is in a position to decide whether or not it is in order. It has also to be taken into consideration that to debate the subject matter of some of the questions ruled out of order would come into conflict with our rules of debate, as, for instance, when a question is asked on a matter which is not within the purview of our parliament or is sub judice, or reflects upon a vote of the house. I do not think it is reasonable to conclude that a member may ask questions on any matter under the sun, and when told by the Chair that a specific one is out of order he be permitted, merely by giving notice, to discuss after ten o'clock a subject matter which may not be permitted by our rules of debate. This in my view would lead to the conclusion that we are establishing two sets of rules of debate, one applicable before and the other after ten o'clock.

4. With regard to the question asked last Friday by the hon. member for Labelle, reference must be made to subparagraph 1 of paragraph 7 of the report of the committee on procedure and organization, presented on April 15 last and concurred in by the house. It reads as follows:

> Questions asked prior to orders of the day should be governed by the provisions of standing order 39 (1).

Under standing order 39 (1) questions seeking information from ministers of the crown are permitted when relating to public affairs. Our practice in this regard is similar to that of the British house and has many times been stated by prior Speakers when intervening during the question periods. I wish to refer here to May's sixteenth edition as to the meaning of the words "public affairs" in relation to questions addressed to ministers. It is stated as follows at page 356:

> Questions addressed to ministers should relate to public affairs with which they are officially concerned, to proceedings pending in parliament or to matters of administration for which they are responsible.

5. In the light of what I have just said I see no good reason for modifying my decision of last Friday concerning the question asked by the hon. member for Labelle as to the question being out of order, and I must come to the conclusion that a notice of intention to raise after ten o'clock the subject matter of a question ruled out of order is therefore inadmissable.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Last Friday, as reported on page 2538 of Hansard, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) interrupted the debate to insinuate that my recent decision was due to political bargaining on my part.

The remark of the hon. member for Bonaventure could have passed for a joke, but the hon. member forgot that wit is the mother of humour.

I shall therefore take a few minutes in order to clear myself of the charge made against my integrity by the hon. member for Bonaventure. At the risk of disappointing members of the press gallery, I have decided not to mention the dates, places and names of certain Liberal members involved, because I refuse to become an accomplice of the chief Liberal organizer who would have allowed me to reflect on the political reputation of certain friends whose only mistake was to show their sincerity in this matter.

About two months ago I met publicly four Liberal members in Hull. In reply to one of their questions concerning my political future, I replied that I was quite decided to join the ranks of the Conservative party. At that very moment a Liberal member got up to make a phone call. When he returned to our table, he strongly insisted that I take no decision without having met Keith Davey, the chief Liberal organizer.

I replied that my decision was final, that the organizers of my riding wanted me to be a Conservative and that such a meeting would probably be useless.

However, urged by my colleagues I agreed to receive in my office—you understand, in my office—the power behind the Liberal party. Another telephone call from a member of parliament and the meeting was set for the next morning. At eleven o'clock the next morning I received a telephone call asking me to go to the office of a Liberal member because it would have been embarrassing for Mr. Davey to be seen entering my office.

I went to that office but my first words to Mr. Davey were to confirm my intention of joining the Conservative party. I told him that if I had come to the meeting, it was only to please my friends.

Mr. Davey was rather suggesting at that moment that I join the ranks of the Liberal party. He said he would take care of the defeated Liberal candidate and as for unsatisfied Liberal organizers, I would only have to change them.

The benefits: a party in power and a fat electoral fund for the next election.

Mr. Davey suggested that I ponder those proposals.

A week later a Liberal member of parliament belonging to that same group approached me to tell me that he was very sorry but the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had asked his chief organizer to cease all pressure because he, the Prime Minister, was afraid to lose the regular support of the Social Credit party if he ever stole members from that party.

Mr. Speaker, I have never asked to join the ranks of the Liberal party and, as far as I know, none of my former colleagues have ever made such a request either.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement of privilege made by the hon. member for Labelle. Would the Prime Minister consider making a motion to have this matter referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections in view of the seriousness of the charge implicit in the statement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any useful purpose would be served in following that course.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to enter a caveat, because after we have had a chance to read what was contained in the statement made by the hon. member for Labelle, some of us may want to raise a question of privilege tomorrow and move the kind of motion that was just suggested.

WATER RESOURCES

TABLING OF APPENDIX TO REPORT OF FRASER RIVER BOARD

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like permission of the house to table the appendix volume to the final report of the Fraser river board on flood control and hydroelectric development in the Fraser river basin. Hon. members will recall that I tabled the final report of this board on March 10, but at that time the appendix volume was not available.

TRADE

TABLING OF TEXT OF SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH U.K. RESPECTING CANADIAN FLOUR

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On April 16 I made available to the house details of an exchange of letters between the Canadian government and the British government relating to the new British production and import policy for cereals. I now ask leave of the house to table the text of the special arrangements for Canadian wheat flour to which I referred at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house grant leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT—PERCENTAGE COLLECTED IN TAXES

Question No. 118—Mr. Coates:

Is the figure, 25.8 per cent of the gross national product, the correct percentage of total taxes collected by all levels of the government in Canada in 1961, as stated by Hon. Walter L. Gordon to a meeting in Edmonton of January 28, 1964?

Mr. Benson: This was the figure calculated by the organization for economic co-operation and development on a basis comparable with figures for the United States, the United Kingdom, and other member countries. This basis differs in some details from that normally used by the dominion bureau of statistics in regard to Canada, but is considered better for the purposes of international comparison such as that made in the statement mentioned.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION

Question No. 228—Mr. Brewin:

1. What steps are contemplated by the government in regard to vesting in Canada the power to amend the Canadian constitution?
2. Is it proposed to reconvene the conference of attorneys general to consider this question?
3. Is it proposed to call any other conference or conferences to deal with this question?

4. Is it proposed to consult experts in constitutional law as suggested by the association of Canadian law teachers?

5. Is it proposed to invite representations from interested persons in respect to proposed changes in the Canadian constitution?

6. Is it proposed to hold public hearings at which submissions and representations in respect to the amending procedure and changes in the constitution might be offered?

Mr. Favreau: The intentions of the government will be made known in due course.

CONSTITUTIONAL BILL OF RIGHTS

Question No. 229—Mr. Brewin:

1. Has the government given consideration to incorporating in the Canadian constitution (The British North America Act) a bill of rights or statement of fundamental principles and individual rights upon which Canadian confederation is based and which would be binding upon both parliament and the legislatures?

2. If so, what steps does the government contemplate by way of preliminary conferences or consultations in order to prepare for such a constitutional bill of rights?

Mr. Favreau: The intentions of the government will be made known in due course.

INDIAN ACT REVISION

Question No. 292—Mr. Aiken:

1. When was work commenced on the revision of the Indian Act?

2. What progress has been made thereon?

3. Will consultations be held with Indian bands before the revision is completed and, if so, what will be the nature of such consultations and when will they be held?

4. Was it the intention of the government to introduce the revised act as a bill at the 1963 session of parliament and hold the consultations in the summer and autumn of 1963 and if so, why was this intention departed from?

Mr. Badanai: 1, 2, 3 and 4. The Indian Act has been under continuous review since 1951 and amendments were made in 1953, 1956, 1958, 1960 and 1961. Following the tabling and the final report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs, July 8, 1961, which contained many recommendations with legislative implications, a more detailed review was carried out. This review indicated that notwithstanding the amendments made in the years above mentioned the conditions and requirements of the Indians were changing to such an extent that a further revision of the Indian Act would be desirable and preliminary drafting of possible amendments was commenced.

In addition to suggesting certain legislative changes another major recommendation of the joint committee on Indian affairs was the holding of a federal-provincial conference in respect to the extension of services to Indians. At the federal-provincial conference held last November it was decided that a ministerial conference on Indian affairs should be held. A ministerial conference is now being planned and may well give rise to changes in both federal and provincial legislation. The changes that might be required, however, will not become apparent until after the conference and discussions have been developed further. In the meantime, review of the Indian Act is proceeding as quickly as sound and thorough consideration will permit with the objective of proceeding with such amendments as may be required. As announced in the house on December 14, 1963, it is the intention to follow the procedure adopted in 1951 and repeated in 1955 of consulting fully with the Indians before the legislation is passed. The exact nature or time of the consultations has not yet been determined.

PREVENTIVE DETENTION SENTENCES

Question No. 299—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1963, has any application for a sentence of preventive detention been made under section 660 of the Criminal Code and, if so, for each month since that time what was, by province (a) the age of each individual (b) the number known to be narcotic addicts (c) the total number (d) the number of sentences so imposed (e) the number of applications still pending (f) the number of dismissals?

2. With respect to each individual, what were the three separate and independent occasions upon which he had been convicted of an indictable offence, and for which he was liable to imprisonment for five years or more?

3. By provinces, how many persons are presently serving a sentence of preventive detention, and how many of these have been so detained for (a) one year (b) two years (c) three years (d) four years (e) five years (f) six years (g) seven years (h) eight years (i) nine years (j) ten years (k) 11 years (l) 12 years (m) 13 years (n) 14 years (o) 15 years?

4. How many persons who have been sentenced to preventive detention have been paroled after serving of that sentence (a) one year (b) two years (c) three years (d) four years (e) five years (f) six years (g) seven years (h) eight years (i) nine years (j) ten years (k) 11 years (l) 12 years (m) 13 years (n) 14 years (o) 15 years and, how many have violated that parole?

Mr. Favreau: 1 and 2. The administration of justice is the responsibility of the provinces. Therefore the information requested is not available.

3.

APPOINTMENT OF COUNTY COURT JUDGE, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 360—Mr. MacEwan:

When can an announcement be expected as to the appointment of a county court judge for the Pictou-Cumberland areas of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Favreau: The appointment is under consideration and will be announced shortly.

IMMIGRANTS FROM ALGERIA

Question No. 393—Mr. Coates:

How many applications from Algerian repatriates have been approved and how many have entered Canada since Algeria became an independent nation?

Mr. Badanai: No statistics were kept prior to January, 1963, showing the number of visas issued to French citizens who previously lived in Algeria. Since that time there is a record of 114 visas having been granted to such persons. It is probable that many who applied for admission just before or following Algerian independence received visas before the department began to record such figures. They would therefore be in addition to the 114 recorded.

Regarding the numbers who have actually come forward to Canada I would first like to explain that French citizens with previous residence in Algeria have not been set apart or distinguished from other citizens of France in the department's statistics on immigrant arrivals. However it has been determined that during 1962 and 1963, 114 French citizens who claimed Algeria to be their country of last permanent residence, were landed in Canada. Most of these people could likely be classified as falling within the group in which the hon. member is interested. This does not mean that others have not come forward. Any former resident of Algeria of French nationality who returned to France and lived there for more than one year prior to migration would be included with other French citizens who claimed France as their country of last permanent residence. There is no way of identifying how many of these people might be involved.

WOMEN'S PRISON INMATES

Question No. 417—Mr. Fairweather:

What was the total, by provinces, as at March 13, 1964, of inmates of the prison for women at Kingston?

Mr. Favreau: The total, by provinces, as at March 13, 1964, of inmates of the prison for women at Kingston is:

	Questions
Northwest Territories	1
Yukon	1
British Columbia	45
Alberta	12
Saskatchewan	2
Manitoba	4
Ontario	46
Quebec	5
New Brunswick	2

SUPREME COURT REFERENCE RESPECTING INDIANS

Question No. 420—Mr. Matheson:

Has the government given consideration to the expediency of submitting a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on the following question, namely:

"Does the power of the federal government over Indians as stated in item 24 of section 91 of the British North America Act extend to such ancillary matters as education and welfare"?

Mr. Favreau: So far as the Department of Justice is concerned, no.

REVIEW OF CHARLES HEATHMAN CASE

Question No. 435—Mr. Marcoux:

Has the Minister of Justice reviewed the case of Charles Heathman of British Columbia and, if so, does he intend to take any action in the matter?

Mr. Favreau: The Minister of Justice has not reviewed this case because the matter does not come within the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice.

P.F.A.A. AND P.F.R.A. EXPENDITURES—C.B.C. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 469—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. How much money has been spent under P.F.A.A. in the past ten years?
2. How much money has been spent under P.F.A.A. in Alberta in the past ten years, and how much in special areas districts Nos. 2 and 3?
3. How much money has been spent under P.F.R.A. in special areas districts Nos. 2 and 3 over the past ten years?
4. What assistance on feed grain was given to residents in special areas districts 2 and 3 over the past ten years?
5. When was the most recent study of the Red Deer diversion scheme by P.F.R.A.?
6. What was the total number employed by the C.B.C. in 1958 and 1963, what number of these are employed with administration and what number for the production of programs?
7. What was the total number of programming hours on radio and television for 1958 and 1963?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Department of Agriculture as follows:

1. For the ten crop years ending July 31, 1963 total P.F.A.A. payments amounted to $186,875,834.85.

2. For the ten crop years ending July 31, 1963, P.F.A.A. payments were as follows: Alberta, $50,428,941; special area No. 1, $2,590,154.13; special area No. 2, $3,367,341.20.

[Mr. Favreau.]

3. Expenditures under P.F.R.A. in special areas districts Nos. 2 and 3, over the past ten years have amounted to $492,179.72.

4. Federal financial assistance on feed has covered fodder and not feed grain. The federal contribution to these shared-cost programs in Alberta has been $167,061 over the past ten years with no details available as to expenditures by area within the province.

5. The most recent study conducted by P.F.R.A. on the Red Deer diversion scheme was in 1958.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

6. Staff statistics as at March 31, 1958 were 6,262 and at March 31, 1963, were 7,520. Breakdowns of these figures are not maintained identifying those employed in administration opposed to those engaged in the production of programs.

Perhaps one means of providing this requested breakdown would be found from an analysis of the financial information in the appropriate annual reports of the corporation. As shown in the 1958-59 and 1962-63 reports, administrative and general services plus management and central services amount to 8.1 per cent and 9.2 per cent of the total expenditures in the respective years. The staff in these areas will closely approximate these financial allocations.

7. The total number of programming hours on C.B.C. owned stations were:

	Radio	Television
1958	161,116	29,752
1963	236,197	58,766

N.B. Hours of program transmission of low power radio transmitters, and unattended television rebroadcasting stations not included in these calculations.

* PENITENTIARY CONSTRUCTION, ST. PIE DE BAGOT, QUE.

Question No. 509—Mr. Ricard:

At about what date will the construction of the penitentiary be undertaken on the site purchased for this purpose in the parish of St. Pie de Bagot?

Mr. Macdonald: There are no immediate plans for the construction of a penitentiary to be undertaken on this site.

REPLICA OF SILVER DART PLANE

Question No. 548—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is the replica of the Silver Dart now on display at the national aviation museum and, if not (a) for what reason (b) where is the replica of the Silver Dart?

Mr. Lamontagne: No. (a) In accordance with established policy, the aircraft displays at the aviation museum are rotated periodically; the Silver Dart was on display for a period of two years ending in early July, 1963, (b) it is now in storage at the aviation museum storage depot on Industrial avenue in south Ottawa.

ALGERIAN IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 580—Mr. Caouette:

1. Since Algeria obtained independence, has the Department of Citizenship and Immigration or any other federal department received application from Algerians wishing to settle in Canada?

2. If so, how many applications have been approved and how many Algerian immigrants have settled in Canada since that date or will come to Canada?

3. In what areas will these immigrants settle or have they settled?

4. What is the occupation of these immigrants?

5. Have these immigrants received special assistance to establish themselves in Canada and, if so, what is the nature of the assistance provided them by (a) the government of France (b) the federal government (c) crown agencies (d) the provincial governments?

6. Was any help given in the form of gifts, loans or advances of any kind, and on what conditions?

7. If no such assistance is given, is the government negotiating with other governmental authorities in the matter of the coming of these immigrants and, if so, what is the nature of these negotiations, who is taking part in them and what progress has been made?

Mr. Badanai: In providing information in response to the hon. member's question, it has been assumed from the text of his question as a whole that by using the term Algerians in part 1, he is referring to citizens of France who were formerly residents of Algeria as opposed to citizens of Algeria. Also it should be explained that French citizens who previously lived in Algeria, but who have now returned to France, have not been set apart or distinguished from other French citizens in the department's statistics on immigrant arrivals. With these two observations the following are the answers to the hon. member's question.

1. Yes.

2. No statistics were kept prior to January, 1963, showing the number of visas issued to French citizens who formerly resided in Algeria. Since that time, there is a record of 114 visas having been granted to such persons. It is probable that many who applied for admission just before or following Algerian independence received visas before the department began to record such figures. They would therefore be in addition to the 114 recorded.

Regarding arrivals, as indicated in my preliminary remarks the department has no way of determining precisely how many of these people have come to Canada. However it has been determined that during 1962 and 1963, 114 French citizens who claimed Algeria to be their country of last permanent residence were admitted as landed immigrants. Most of these people could likely be classified as falling within the group in which the hon. member is interested. This does not mean that others have not come forward. Any former resident of Algeria of French nationality who returned to France and lived there for more than one year prior to migration would be included with other French citizens who came from France. There is no way of identifying how many of these people might be involved. There is also no way of determining how many more may eventually come to Canada.

3 and 4. For the reasons already mentioned, no figures are available to indicate the destinations or occupations of those who have already come to Canada. In line with the department's normal policy, these immigrants would be free to choose their own destination in Canada having regard to opportunities for their successful establishment in their particular vocations or professions. As far as occupations are concerned, there is every indication that these people represent a fairly wide cross section of skills, trades and professions.

5, 6 and 7. As far as the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is aware, no special assistance, gifts, loans or advances have been extended to any of these people who have already arrived in Canada. Those measures of assistance provided by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration have been the same as those offered to any other newcomer to Canada and would consist of such things as help in locating employment and accommodation where necessary, counsel and advice as to their establishment here and so forth. However some discussions have been held by Caandian federal and provincial officials and representatives of the French government concerning the possible movement to Canada of a group of French farmers who previously resided in Algeria. These discussions are still continuing and it is too early as yet to say just when and if a group of these people may come to Canada and under what arrangements. Undoubtedly the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will make an appropriate announcement if and when final arrangements are completed.

HIGHEST PAID CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 621—Mr. Mather:

What are the salaries of the 13 highest paid federal government civil service officials?

Mr. Benson: Three receive $27,000; 11 receive $25,000.

CONVERSION TO FRENCH OF RADIO STATION CJBC

Question No. 642—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. What procedure was decided upon by the consultative committee composed of five members from the board of broadcast governors and five C.B.C. officials who were to meet in the month of January in connection with the proposed changeover of Toronto radio station CJBC into a French language outlet?

2. When was this change over to be completed?

3. What will be the cost to the C.B.C. for this conversion of CJBC from an English to a French speaking station?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the board of broadcast governors and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. No procedures were decided upon.

2. October 1, 1964.

3. The conversion of CJBC to a French language station will require no additional operating or capital funds.

*CREATION OF MONEY BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 653—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Do chartered banks create money on the basis of bank notes they receive directly from the Bank of Canada or on the basis of bank notes which are deposited by individuals?

2. With what money do the chartered banks buy their notes from the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Benson: When a customer deposits Bank of Canada notes for credit to his account in a chartered bank, there is an increase in the total deposit liabilities of that bank and, on the asset side, a corresponding increase in its cash reserves, which consist of its holdings of Bank of Canada notes and its deposit at the Bank of Canada. When a chartered bank obtains Bank of Canada notes from the Bank of Canada, payment is made for them by drawing on its deposit account at the Bank of Canada so that this transaction does not produce any increase in the chartered bank's cash reserves or in its deposit liabilities.

MUNICIPAL LOAN APPLICATIONS, MANITOBA

Question No. 660—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How many applications have been received under the municipal loan fund up to the present time in the province of Manitoba?

2. How many of these have been approved?

3. What is the total amount of these loans?

4. What municipal corporations have had loans approved and what is the amount of each loan?

Mr. Benson: 1. Three as at April 7, 1964.

2. Three.

3. $323,973.

4. City of Brandon, $136,640; city of Portage la Prairie, $87,333; rural municipality of Fort Garry, $100,000.

FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT, WILLOW AND STIMSON CREEKS, ALBERTA

Question No. 674—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. When was the agreement signed by the Minister of Agriculture for the construction of the $700,000 project for the chain of lakes to control flooding of the Willow and Stimson creeks?

[Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron).]

2. Under what branch of the Department of Agriculture would this project come (a) ARDA or (b) P.F.R.A.?

3. Was the project requested by the provincial government or the municipal government, and will either the provincial or municipal governments make any financial contribution towards the project?

4. When were the initial investigation and feasibility studies of the project first commenced?

5. What land area will this project provide stock watering facilities for, and what is the approximate number of livestock in the area?

Mr. Hays: 1. There has been no special agreement signed for the construction of the chain of lakes project. The construction will be carried out under the terms of the 1963 agreement with the province of Alberta respecting P.F.R.A. projects in this province.

2. P.F.R.A.

3. The government of Alberta requested the construction of the project, and there is no sharing of costs with either the provincial or municipal governments.

4. 1941.

5. An area of approximately 80 square miles, having a total livestock population at present of 10,300 cattle, 230 horses and 935 sheep, will benefit from the construction of this project. In addition to providing an assured water supply for livestock, it will also increase the carrying capacity of ranches along Willow creek and Stimson creek by providing an additional 2,000 acres on Willow creek and 250 acres on Stimson creek for irrigation for forage. The reservoir will also protect against flooding along both creeks, which has been serious in periods of heavy rainfall and assure adequate supplies of water for the towns of Nanton, Claresholm, Stavely, Granum and Nolan.

REQUEST FOR P.F.R.A. OFFICE, PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE, MAN.

Question No. 678—Mr. Enns:

Will the Department of Agriculture give consideration toward establishing a P.F.R.A. regional office in Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, to better meet the increasing need for service under P.F.R.A. in the central Manitoba area?

Mr. Hays: Yes. This matter is now under consideration.

*COMMITTEE STUDY OF TIED SALES TO SERVICE STATIONS

Question No. 685—Mr. Prittie:

1. Is an interdepartmental committee studying the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission concerning amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to control the practice of tied sales imposed upon service stations by petroleum companies and, if so, when did this study by the committee begin?

2. Does the government plan to introduce legislation on this subject at this session?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. My predecessor has already informed the house that this matter was under study by an interdepartmental committee. It commenced its work in March, 1963 and has now provided me with its views of the matters that we referred to it.

2. I am at present discussing the whole matter with my officials and any decision as to legislation will be made known in the proper way.

MENTAL HOSPITAL GRANTS TO QUEBEC

Question No. 688—Mr. Langlois:

1. What grants in respect of mental hospitals were made by the federal government to the province of Quebec in 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963?
2. What control does the federal government have over the use of these grants?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Under the national health grants, the following funds were made available for mental hospitals in the province of Quebec during the fiscal years 1960-64: 1960-61, $1,411,814; 1961-62, $2,206,271; 1962-63, $1,738,213; 1963-64, $1,576,599 (estimated).

2. Under the terms of the annual order in council, the latest of which is P.C. 1963-15/428, the provinces submit projects for federal assistance on behalf of health programs planned and operated under provincial supervision and control. Federal treasury officers receive auditable statements of expenditures which are reimbursed by federal assistance paid to the provinces.

PAROLE OFFICERS EMPLOYED BY JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 699—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice, and what is their jurisdiction?
2. How many of these are trained social workers?
3. How many are university graduates in the social sciences?
4. Does the department make provisions for bursaries for the training of more parole officers and, if so, how many bursaries and for how much?

Mr. Favreau: 1. Forty seven. The jurisdiction of those employed in the field offices is geographically limited to specified areas and the duties include the direct interviewing of applicants for parole; the direct or indirect supervision of persons on parole and the maintenance of liaison with crown authorities.

Generally speaking, the jurisdiction of parole officers employed at headquarters is geographically limited to a specified area and their duties include the assembly of data necessary to the study of parole cases; the preparation of summaries, based on the data assembled, for consideration by the national parole board and the performance of incidental duties.

2. Eighteen.

3. Thirteen.

4. No.

TRAINING GRANTS FOR SOCIAL WORK

Question No. 703—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money has been allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work?
2. How many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants?
3. What are the amounts of the bursaries provided?
4. Has any money been allocated for research projects in the field of social service?
5. Have any plans been developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Of the $500,000 made available under the program in 1963-64, $130,-648 was provided in awards to persons taking graduate social work training in schools of social work.

2. 126.

3. Awards are made in four ways.

Bursaries and training grants are paid through the provinces, with the province making the award in the amount it considers suitable and the federal government sharing, in the case of bursaries, up to a maximum of $1,500 plus $500 dependant's allowance yearly, and in the case of training grants up to $4,000 plus $500 dependant's allowance yearly. Necessary travel costs are also paid. Bursaries are provided to assist students who wish to take graduate training in social work, and training grants to assist persons employed in welfare who have been granted educational leave to take similar training.

Scholarships are awarded by the federal government to students of outstanding ability entering social work, and are in the amount of $2,000 annually. Fellowships are awarded by the federal government to persons accepted for doctoral studies and are in the amount of $4,000 plus a $500 dependant allowance annually. Necessary travel costs are also paid.

4. In 1963-64 $74,979 was provided for welfare research projects. In 1964-65 $100,000 will be made available for the same purpose.

5. In 1963-64 $25,676 was made available to the commission on education and personnel of the Canadian welfare council for a research project on the utilization of personnel. The purpose of this study is to determine how needed welfare manpower resources, both professional and non-professional, can be more effectively classified, developed, and deployed to provide needed social services within existing and future organizational patterns of welfare services. A renewal request has been received for 1964-65.

Questions

CONSTRUCTION OF PENITENTIARY, NORTHUMBERLAND CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 711—Mr. Stenson:

1. Is the Department of Justice contemplating the construction of a penitentiary in the constituency of Northumberland and, if so (a) what is the estimated cost (b) when will tenders be out for bid (c) how many buildings will the penitentiary comprise?

2. Would the Department of Justice look into the possibility of breaking this tender down into four or five individual contracts or tenders so that local contractors or subcontractors could see their way clear to bidding?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes, (a) $6,500,000. (b) It is hoped to call tenders in July 1964. (c) Twenty.

2. The Department of Public Works will call tenders and it would not be possible to break a tender down into separate contracts and still maintain the required co-ordination of construction. The water treatment plant will likely be tendered separately.

HELICOPTER OPERATION, PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Question No. 722—Mr. Howard:

1. With respect to the helicopter at Prince Rupert, B.C. what percentage of time has it been operational since being stationed there?

2. In an emergency such as that occasioned by an air-sea rescue operation, what notice is required before the said helicopter can be airborne?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The helicopter has been operational in excess of 50 per cent of time.

2. (a) Should the emergency arise during normal working hours the helicopter could be airborne within minutes. (b) For emergencies arising during holidays or week ends approximately one hour's notice would be required.

*SUPPLEMENTARY AND SPECIAL ALLOWANCES, ARMED FORCES OVERSEAS

Question No. 729—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the schedule of supplementary allowances and United Nations special allowances available to military personnel serving in Cyprus?

2. What is the schedule of supplementary allowances and United Nations special allowances available to military personnel serving in the Congo, Gaza strip, New Guinea, Indo-China and Pakistan?

3. What is the schedule of supplementary allowances available to military personnel serving in Soest, Germany?

Mr. Cardin: The answer to this question is as follows:

1. A special allowance of $69 per month is paid to all ranks serving in Cyprus. Foreign allowance is the same as that paid to all members of the armed forces while serving outside of Canada for a period in excess of 30 days, namely, brigadier (or equivalent), $49.50; colonel, $37.50; lieutenant colonel, $27; major, $24; captain, $18; lieutenant, $16.50; warrant officer I, $16.50; warrant officer II, $15; staff sergeant, $15; sergeant, $12; corporal, $9; private, $9.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

2 and 3. There has been no change in the schedule of allowances available to military personnel serving in the areas designated from that which appears in volume II of the public accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, section 20, pages 23-25.

FEDERAL BUILDING, NEW GLASGOW, N.S.—LANDSCAPING

Question No. 737—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the government to carry out landscaping and improvements to the area surrounding the new federal building at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, during the year 1964-65 and, if so, what are the details of these improvements?

Mr. Deschatelets: No landscaping or improvements are planned at this location during the 1964-65 fiscal year.

RAIL INSTALLATIONS, PIER "C", PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 738—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the government to carry out rail installations on new pier "C" at Pictou, Nova Scotia, during the year 1964-65?

Mr. Deschatelets: It is not the intention of the Department of Public Works to carry out rail installations on new pier "C" at Pictou, Nova Scotia, during the year 1964-65.

The question of installation of rail lines on pier "C" at Pictou, Nova Scotia, is the responsibility of the Canadian National Railway. In considering the design for the construction of the wharf, the Department of Public Works made provision for installation of single lines on each side of the structure by leaving indentations in the concrete deck.

The railway company have placed rails on the south side, extending just past the outer end of the warehouse. The remaining indentations have been filled with oiled sand topped with asphalt to remove the hazard of open indentations to vehicular traffic on the structure. This filler material can be easily removed should additional rails be provided.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

Question No. 755—Mr. Thompson:

Does the government plan to construct a new headquarters building for the most important Department of External Affairs in time to mark the centennial of our nationhood and, if so (a) will attention be given to the necessity of selecting a site in a convenient and central area in uptown Ottawa at least as accessible as the new British high commission building (b) has consideration been given to the design of a structure containing the most up to date facilities and of a nature not less impressive than the building occupied by the British government in Canada?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, (a) yes; (b) yes.

METEOROLOGICAL STATION, CHICOUTIMI DISTRICT, QUEBEC

Question No. 756—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Is there a meteorological station with full-time personnel in the Chicoutimi district and, if so, where is it situated?
2. What is the cost of operating the station?
3. Are there any unremunerated meteorological observers?

[Translation]

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Yes, there is a meteorological station with full-time personnel at R.C.A.F. station Bagotville. The professional staff at this meteorological station is provided by the Department of Transport and the observing staff by the Royal Canadian Air Force.

2. The portion of operating costs paid by Department of Transport is approximately $22,000 annually.

3. The meteorological observers are service personnel.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RECIPIENTS

Question No. 761—Mr. Ricard:

How many Canadians were receiving unemployment insurance benefits on March 21, 1964?

Mr. Byrne: There is no figure available of the number of persons receiving unemployment insurance benefits on any particular date or in any month. The number of active claimants, that is the number of persons claiming benefit in Canada at 31 March, 1964 was 597,250. These figures are available on a monthly basis only and those for March are the latest.

HOSPITAL TREATMENT OF VETERANS

Question No. 774—Mr. Harley:

What proportion of patients in D.V.A. hospitals could be treated in other than active-treatment hospitals?

Mr. Teillet: Approximately 70 per cent.

*ESKIMOS AT CHURCHILL, MAN.

Question No. 781—Mr. Granger:

1. Are there any Eskimos living at Churchill, Manitoba?
2. Are these Eskimos deemed to be Indians and therefore under federal jurisdiction?
3. Do the Eskimo children attend school?
4. If so, who established the school and under what legislative authority?
5. Is the school subject to the laws of Canada or the laws of Manitoba?

Mr. Turner: 1. Yes.

2. This question as worded requests a legal opinion. Services for Eskimos are provided by the federal government under section 5 (b) of the Northern Affairs and National Resources Act and the relevant parliamentary appropriations.

3. Yes.

4. Department of National Defence in co-operation with the government of Manitoba; the Manitoba schools act.

5. The school was established and is administered in compliance with provisions of the Manitoba schools act.

*ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR ESKIMOS AND INDIANS IN LABRADOR

Question No. 782—Mr. Granger:

1. Between June 21, 1957, and April 22, 1963, did the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources receive any communication requesting additional federal assistance for the Indians and/or Eskimos in Labrador and, if so, on what dates?
2. What reply was given to any such request for assistance?

Mr. Turner: 1. Yes. Departmental files contain copies of letters dated March 26, 1959, January 20, 1960, April 28, 1960, December 29, 1960 and January 31, 1961.

2. The replies indicated that this matter was under consideration.

WATER LEVEL, LAKE NIPISSING

Question No. 810—Mr. Aiken:

1. Who controls the dam at the outlet of lake Nipissing in the province of Ontario?
2. What policy is followed in determining the water level of this lake?
3. What is the present water level as compared to 1963 and 1962?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Department of Public Works.

2. The department is responsible for the control of the level of the lake between elevation 642.0 and 642.5 during the navigation season. This, however, depends largely on the amount of water entering the lake. During the late fall and winter the lake is partially emptied in order to receive the increased inflow during the following spring freshet.

3. The water level on April 23, 1964, was 641.3. On the same date in 1963 it was 640.5 and, on the same date in 1962 it was 639.9.

TENDERS FOR BUOYS, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 819—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Were tenders called for buoys for the Department of Transport under tender No. B-12284 and B-12285?
2. If so, what were the amounts of the tenders for each contract and the names of the tenderers?
3. To whom were the individual contracts awarded?
4. Was each contract awarded to the lowest tenderer and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Tender for buoys for marine services in the maritimes was called by the Department of Transport under tender No. 8B-6029 (references B-12284 and B-12285 refer rather to Department of Transport purchase orders).

Questions

2. Tender amount	Firm	Remarks
$56,678	Steel and Engine Products Ltd., Liverpool, N.S.	Quoted on all 16 items
55,550	Northern Machine Works Ltd., Bathurst, N.B.	Quoted on only 14 items, other 2 items estimated total $7,580.
69,177	Ocean Steel & Construction Ltd., Saint John, N.B.	Quoted on all items
7,580	H. K. Morrison & Sons Ltd., Mount Uniacke, N.S.	Quoted on only 2 items
17,061	Ferguson Industries Ltd., Pictou, N.S.	Quoted on only 3 items.

3. Individual contracts were awarded to: Steel and Engine Products Ltd., Liverpool, N.S.; Ocean Steel and Construction Ltd., Saint John, N.B.

4. Each contract was awarded to the lowest over-all tenderer.

*SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS FOR M.P.'S

Question No. 825—Mr. Knowles:

Is it possible for members of the House of Commons to apply for social insurance numbers and, if so, how?

Mr. Byrne: Yes. The unemployment insurance commission has made arrangements with the Clerk of the House of Commons which will permit members of parliament to fill out an application form for a social insurance number.

Members will receive an application form in the mail from the Clerk which they may fill out and return to his office. A social insurance number will be issued in due course.

*PRESS CONFERENCE, PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE, APRIL 17

Question No. 830—Mr. Lambert:

1. Was a press conference convened for Friday evening April 17 at the Prime Minister's office or at the office of any official on the Prime Minister's staff?

2. Did the Prime Minister attend this press conference and, if not, who did on his behalf?

3. Was attendance by reporters and commentators at this press conference by limited invitations or was there a general invitation extended to the members of the parliamentary press gallery to attend the press conference?

4. If invitations were of a limited number, what was this number and what were the criteria used to determine what reporters should be invited?

5. What was the nature of the press conference and what principal subjects were disclosed or discussed?

Mr. Davis: 1. There was no press conference, but Mr. R. O'Hagan, of the Prime Minister's staff, invited some newspaper reporters to his office for an informal meeting.

2. The meeting was also attended by Mr. T. Kent of the Prime Minister's office.

3 and 4. The number of reporters attending, by invitation, was ten. They were reporters who had previously asked Mr. O'Hagan a good many background questions about the pension negotiations; these questions had not been answered because the negotiations were in progress.

5. The topic discussed was the speculation which had been published in the press while the negotiations were in progress. No information was given which had not already appeared in speculative form.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Davis: The officials indicated which speculations it would be misleading for the reporters to pursue in the two days remaining before the Prime Minister's announcement of April 20.

TWELVE MILE FISHING LIMIT

Question No. 833—Mr. Crouse:

Does the Minister of Fisheries intend to introduce legislation within a week to impose a twelve mile fishing limit off the coast of Canada, and, if so, would he indicate whether ships belonging to countries which traditionally fished waters close to Canada would be allowed to operate between the three mile and nine mile boundaries?

Answer: Legislation to establish a twelve mile fishing limit is expected to be introduced within a few days.

As indicated in the Prime Minister's statement on June 4, 1963, full account is being taken of the interests of the countries affected and discussions are now proceeding with such countries with the view of reaching mutually satisfactory arrangements.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INTERFERENCE WITH CANADIAN MEMBERS OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in the last few days there has been an acceleration of the guerrilla attacks or interference with members of the United Nations force, with particular reference to the Canadian contingent. Also, what representations were made by the secretary general of the United Nations in regard to these attacks? Furthermore, would the Prime Minister say what is the result, if any, of any representations that have been made by our acting high commissioner in Cyprus to President Makarios?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has been in close touch with these matters, to deal with my right hon. friend's question.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian high commissioner accredited to Cyprus has been in touch with the government of Cyprus, including the vice president of that country. The military activity between the two groups over the past few days has been discussed between the Canadian ambassador at the United Nations and officers of the secretariat. The secretary general is in Paris today, and I believe that the mediator will be in touch with him before too long. I saw the secretary general on Friday last when some of these matters were discussed.

The United Nations force commander reports that the situation has now been steadied somewhat. General Gyani has on behalf of the force made strenuous representations to both sides to take immediate action to stop the fighting. The United Nations force has of course, not been involved in these incidents except for the patrol activities of the United Nations force.

The co-operation of both sides is being assiduously sought, and that co-operation is essential for the kind of stability we all would like to see on this strife torn island. But I may say that, in spite of the current difficulty, the presence of the United Nations force has prevented wholesale civil war on the island. It has prevented, up until this time, outside intervention, and it has made it possible for the United Nations mediator to begin his search for a solution. The commander of the force has been criticized by sections of the population on the island, but I want to say that the Canadian government and the other governments participating in the force have great confidence in General Gyani in the very difficult operation which he has the responsibility for directing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to answer the question I asked earlier. Has there not been an acceleration of interference in the last few days? The minister said in the course of his remarks that as a result of the United Nations force, external intervention had been prevented. Whose intervention did he have in mind in that connection?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows what I had in mind. This is a very difficult operation and one has got to choose one's words carefully unless one wants to add to the turmoil and the difficulty. When I say that, I am not suggesting that the right hon. gentleman does not share my concern and caution, but I am sure he will not mind if I remind him of the need for care.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would also remind the hon. gentleman of something else, in question form. Does he not consider that the statement he has continually repeated with regard to what the United Nations force has done to date has not been borne out completely by the facts?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, if it were not for the fact that my right hon. friend has had very considerable experience in these matters, particularly with regard to the Congo, I would not in my reply make the appeal I am now making to him. I am sure he will recognize that if it were not for the United Nations intervention the situation at this time on the island would be much more difficult, and it is my duty to remind the house of this fact.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure all hon. members recognize the difficulty of the situation that obtains in Cyprus, and we have no desire at all to make it more difficult. I should like to ask the minister about the report to the effect that a Canadian armoured car was fired upon by certain Cypriots. The story is that the firing ceased as soon as those responsible were informed of the fact that it was occupied by United Nations troops.

I should like to ask the minister first of all if the report is accurate. If it is, what is the reason that the armoured car was not properly and clearly marked? Is the minister taking any steps to see that in future vehicles used will be clearly marked so that someone will not be killed merely because of the absence of proper markings on these vehicles?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have more precise information on which I can rely, I shall be glad to give it to the house and to my hon. friend. I hope that will be tomorrow.

CYPRUS—PERIOD OF SERVICE OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question in French to the deputy prime minister.

[Translation]

I should have liked to know whether the secretary general of the United Nations has asked Canada to extend the stay in Cyprus of its troops beyond three months, and whether it is the minister's intention to consult again the Canadian parliament in order to authorize that extension?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question I would say that, under our parliamentary government in Canada there is no deputy prime minister. In the particular situation, Canada seems to be very happy and secure in the office and in the person of the present Prime Minister.

[Translation]

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, I must inform my hon. friend that I answered that question a few days ago.

[Text]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): May I ask a supplementary question; and before I pose my supplementary question I should like to make it clear that I am asking the question only as it relates to public business and government affairs. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would inform this house specifically what is entailed in the new position of the Minister of Justice, and how it affects government and public business.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter that affects the Liberal party, and I am delighted to announce to the house that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is now the leader of the Liberal caucus in our party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I should have said for the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: It makes a difference.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the new position given to the Minister of Justice, will the Prime Minister be making him his seatmate in this house?

Mr. Pearson: He is already as close to me as he can get.

Mr. Howard: Well, it is good to know that somebody is trying to lead the Liberal party.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE RESULT OF U.S. POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made by Senator Morse of the United States Senate that the United States, under the leadership of defence secretary McNamara, is fighting an illegal and unwise war in Viet Nam, and the growing criticism of the actions of the United States in that area, has the government of Canada expressed its concern to the government of the United States as to the possibility of their actions provoking greater conflict in the Far East as a consequence of recent reported developments?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In spite of the great interest in and importance of this question, would the hon. gentleman put it on the order paper; because it probably requires a detailed and certainly a lengthy answer.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to place it on the order paper for debate at ten o'clock.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—CONSIDERATION BY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the apparent delay in the implementation of the Canada pension plan, will he refer the details of the plan to the national economic council for their study and their views on what further improvements can be made in it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, subject to further consideration which I will be glad to give to my hon. friend's question, my first reaction is that such a course would not be helpful and that it might delay implementation of the plan for too great a time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Did the minister receive, during the week end, a request from the Quebec minister of municipal affairs and the association of mayors and municipalities of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area for an extension of the winter works program past April 30?

[Text]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour may I say that I will bring this question to his attention for consideration tomorrow.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT "EMPLOYMENT AND MANPOWER UTILIZATION IN NEW BRUNSWICK"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. Will the report entitled "Employment and Manpower Utilization in New Brunswick" be made available to those interested here in Ottawa and, at the same time, will the government state what it plans to do about this very revealing document which shows the urgent need for jobs in New Brunswick?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I will bring this important question to the attention of the minister when he arrives this afternoon.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DISCREPANCY IN NUMBERS OF RECIPIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some 597,000 people are drawing benefits from the unemployment insurance fund while the dominion bureau of statistics lists some 475,000 people as unemployed, will the Prime Minister investigate this matter and inform the house if some 125,000 people are drawing benefits while fully employed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO THIRD MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On Thursday last I asked the Minister of Fisheries about a proposed third meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission. At that time the minister indicated the date had not been set and, if I could paraphrase the minister's remarks, he indicated that it would be held at the earliest possible moment. Over the week end I received a copy of The Fisherman for April 17, in which the deputy minister, Dr. Needler, is reported as having told a committee of the fishermen's union that north Pacific fisheries treaty negotiations would likely take place next summer, possibly in July. I wonder if the minister can indicate whether that is the earliest date possible to which he referred the other day.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I want to assure the hon. member we are just as anxious as he is to have this third meeting of the parties involved in the north Pacific treaty so that we can arrive at a final and decisive agreement. No definite date has yet been set, although we are trying to have the Japanese government accept a date in July.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGAL STATUS OF COMMUNIST PARTY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Would the minister inform the house if the communist party is legally recognized as such in Canada, in view of the fact that it submitted a brief to the royal commission on banking?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the answer to that question is known by all and I wonder if, by answering it, I would not be giving once again a legal opinion. On the other hand, if I had to give such an opinion, I would say no, it is not a legal party.

[Later:]

[Text]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I would like to ask the Minister of Justice to clarify his previous answer to the hon. member for Chicoutimi. I think the translator may have misinterpreted him by saying the communist party is illegal.

Mr. Favreau: It is not an illegal party.

FINANCE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him if it is the intention of the government to introduce measures to implement some or all of the recommendations contained in the report of the royal commission on banking and finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe hon. members would wish me to comment in any way on the very detailed and extensive report that was tabled in the house on Friday. It will be given the most careful consideration by the government, and those sections of it or all of it that the government may wish to recommend to the house in the form of legislation will be brought forward at the proper time.

PROCEDURE RESPECTING REFUNDS OF SALES TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Revenue. I have here a letter from a constituent complaining about the difficult procedure involved in applying for a refund of the 8 per cent tax on building materials in cases where such a refund is allowable. Has the minister received similar complaints and, if he has, is his department considering revising the method of refund application to make it less difficult for small contractors to supply the necessary information?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I presume the hon. member's question has reference to the refunds obtainable in connection with educational institutions?

Mr. Pascoe: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: If that is so I have not received any complaints that I can recall, but we have been looking into this subject and the procedures for obtaining refunds have been changed. New procedures either have been announced in the last day or so or will be announced in a very short time.

DEVELOPMENT OF UNIFORM STANDARDS OF SECURITIES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I wonder whether the minister would consider convening a conference of appropriate provincial ministers to assist—and here I quote the royal commission on banking and finance:

> —to encourage the development of high and uniform standards of security legislation and regulation in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this of course is a matter of government policy, but I would be pleased to consider the hon. member's question.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

POLICY RESPECTING U.S. INVESTMENT IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does he intend to change the Canadian policy respecting American investments despite the opinion and the warnings given Saturday by Mr. George Ball, under secretary of state of the United States?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would put this question on the order paper. It is very important, but it would probably require a long and detailed answer.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question which does not require detail. Is the Minister of Finance asking for clarification of the statement made by Mr. Ball, as to whether it reflects the opinion of the United States government?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Ball did use some expressions which I would describe as being on the vigorous side, but I think perhaps hon. members would be interested in a sentence in his speech which was used to introduce the subject. He said:

> Canadian policy is firmly committed to the preservation of an independent and separate national economy. As far as the United States is concerned this is a decision of the Canadian government and of the Canadian people. It is a decision we respect.

I do not think I need add anything to that.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that the minister has chosen to read from a document which is, apparently, the speech in question, would he not now table that document so the rest of us can see whether the context actually accords with the particular selective portion which the hon. gentleman has drawn to the attention of the house?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. minister table the document from which he was reading?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: May I still ask the Minister of Finance to reply to my supplementary question. Are any representations being made to the United States government to see whether the criticism of this policy which Mr. Ball embarked upon represents the views of the United States government?

Mr. Gordon: We are having a meeting on Wednesday and I, for one, would be most surprised if this subject were not given a good airing.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to raise a question with regard to the procedure we are now following. The question asked by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency was ruled out of order, or at least he was requested to put it on the order paper. Now supplementary questions are being answered on the same subject.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to say that I was a little surprised, but pleased, that the Minister of Finance had a short statement to make. I felt I had done a slight injustice to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency. In reparation for the damage done, if he has any supplementary question he would like to ask, now is the time to put it.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: I wish to repeat the question I asked him a few minutes ago.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: If I have not made it clear I would like to do so. There is no thought or intention of changing Canadian policy on this matter.

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF BANK ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Finance supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Now that the report of the royal commission on banking and finance has been filed, is the government still of a mind to proceed with a one year extension of the existing Bank Act rather than consider the decennial revision which normally would come into effect this year?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The government intends to proceed with the reference which is on the order paper relating to a one year extension. Otherwise the Bank Act would have to be revised and the whole proceedings completed before June 30. In view of the importance of this royal commission report I think all interested parties should have an opportunity to study it and make their representations before the revision of the Bank Act is completed.

Mr. Baldwin: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that there is to be this delay in making the decennial revision, is the government of the view that the applications for new bank charters now pending should await the decennial revision?

Mr. Gordon: Some of these applications are presently before the Senate committee on banking and commerce and I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment on how that committee should operate.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF LONG TERM CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that three sugar refineries in Montreal have just announced an increase of 30 cents per hundred pounds in the price of sugar, is the minister prepared to review his consideration concerning the negotiating of long term agreements on sugar imported into this country for the protection of the Canadian consumer?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put this question on the order paper? It requires a rather lengthy and detailed answer, it seems to me.

Mr. Douglas: Then may I ask the Minister of Justice a question which is of more pressing importance. In view of the fact that three refineries have simultaneously announced this increase, is the restrictive trade practices branch looking into the matter to see if there is collusion in the matter of raising prices simultaneously?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question involves the principle concerning all questions relating to investigations being made or work under way by the restrictive trade practices commission or the director of investigation and research. The policy has been stated in this house in the past, and it is to the effect that it is not the practice to state whether, in a given case with regard to given individuals or corporations, any investigation is or is not under way. I believe public policy would dictate that the same answer be given at the moment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—RECOMMENDATION BY COUNSEL RESPECTING PROSECUTION OF MCLAUGHLIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I should like now to answer a question put to me on April 22 by the hon. member for Bow River. The question was:

> In the report prepared by counsel with regard to the investigation of certain officers of the S.I.U., was there a recommendation made with regard to McLaughlin, who is about to ascend to the presidency of the S.I.U., that he too be prosecuted as was Mr. Banks?

The answer is as follows. No recommendation was made by counsel to prosecute McLaughlin for any offence, except that of conspiring with Banks and others to persuade seamen to absent themselves from their duties on their ships, contrary to section 268 of the Canada Shipping Act. The action relates to the occasion of a demonstration in Ottawa in October, 1963. Mr. McLaughlin has been so charged.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would mind disclosing to the house on what date McLaughlin was charged?

Mr. Favreau: This, including the contents of the charge referred to, is a matter which is presently sub judice. I do not believe, under paragraph 2(d) of the new order regulating the procedure of the house, any further comment would be in order. But if it is only the actual date of the charge that my hon. friend is looking for, I do not believe this would be comment, and in respect to this I will undertake to give it.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport on the same subject. Can the minister advise us when he expects to bring in amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and the St. Lawrence Seaway Act, as recommended by Mr. Justice Norris?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir, I cannot advise the house of that because the matter is still under consideration by an interdepartmental committee and, as the former minister of labour would of course surmise, the primary interest in this matter is in the Department of Labour and not in my department.

Mr. Starr: As a further supplementary question, when does the minister anticipate the work of the interdepartmental committee will be finished to the point where amendments can be introduced to both acts?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not being a lawyer, like the hon. gentleman, I would hate to predict how long it would take the lawyers to say what kind of legislation would be appropriate in the circumstances.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. After careful consideration of the words used by the Minister of Transport concerning his and my professions in life, I must immediately set the record straight; and if there is any indication that the Minister of Transport said that I was a lawyer I must categorically deny that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I was seeking to imply that neither of us was.

[Mr. Favreau.]

SHIPPING

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question of the low water levels on the great lakes is causing continuing concern which has become greater in the last two or three days. Some three weeks ago I endeavoured to ascertain what was being done and whether communications had taken place between Canada and the United States. I now ask the Prime Minister what communications have passed between the two countries in this regard as to action to be taken; has the international joint commission been in session in this regard in the last few days; and what recommendations has it made to meet this matter of transcendent importance to navigation and also to tourist camps and the like on the great lakes?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there have been any developments on this very important matter since my reply a few days ago, when I tabled the report of the international joint commission, but I will look into the matter and see if there have been such developments. This is something we should take up, and will take up, at the Canada-United States ministerial meeting which opens on Wednesday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that connection, while the Prime Minister will not indicate in detail what he intends to do, is it his purpose to bring about a joint effort between the United States and Canada to meet this problem, which is a most serious one and one that requires immediate attention?

Mr. Pearson: It is certainly most serious, Mr. Speaker, and it does require international co-operation. We hope we can secure that kind of co-operation to deal with it.

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTIONS FOR CHILDREN 16 AND 17 YEARS OLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Does the minister propose to amend the Income Tax Act to clear up the apparent anomaly that exists in the school allowance tax exemption as between Quebec and the other nine provinces, with respect to the parents of children aged 16 to 17 years?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that being a matter having to do with the legislation, it would not come within the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask the minister when I might expect answers to questions 205, 206 and 207 of February 26? This is the 61st day of decision for these questions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Secretary of State): As soon as the answers are ready, sir.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Speaker, I realize that, as you have stated, one cannot rise on a question of privilege excepting within limitations, but the record shows questions going back to February 20, questions Nos. 109, 118, 135 and so on, questions that can be answered and should be answered. In addition, starred questions that have not been answered for days constitute a matter that deserves the attention of the house. I do not know who is acting as Secretary of State today—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but I would ask him to look over these questions because the delay has gone beyond what could be achieved except by inattention.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will be done, sir; and I think, as was said by the Secretary of State the other day, if the right hon. gentleman would compare our record in answering questions with that when he was in office, he would find it has been a much better record and, what is more, this government does not make questions orders for returns merely to get them off the order paper so they may be buried for months and years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise immediately to answer that and point out that there are ten questions from last session not answered, passed as orders for returns, because one or two of them will be embarrassing to the government.

AIR TRANSPORT

RENEGOTIATION OF BILATERAL AGREEMENTS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the government now have a policy with respect to air travel between Canada and the United States? If so, will this policy be presented to parliament at an early date?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should explain that the question is not asking for details of policy.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think the matter is very clear. It was announced in the newspapers, and I believe also in the house, that negotiations for certain changes in the bilateral arrangements are going on. They started today.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): As a supplementary question, can the minister announce the regional air carriers' policy which we have been waiting for, for months?

Mr. Pickersgill: Whenever the policy has been devised.

Mr. Knowles: My question to the minister was when will he announce any policy of this nature in the house. It is not good enough to see it in the newspapers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would say the hon. gentleman is rather mixed up in his terms. There is no question of a policy. The policy on which we are operating in our negotiations with the United States is to get the maximum advantage for Canada. What we are seeking to do is renegotiate these bilaterals in a fashion that we hope will be more equitable to Canada. When any agreement is reached it will be announced in the house, but I would hate to anticipate the agreement before it is reached.

EDUCATION

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SCHOLARSHIPS— LOANS TO STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Because of the deep interest felt by many thousands of young Canadians in the student loan plan, and in view of the promised ten thousand scholarships and the urgency of legislation in this field, would the Prime Minister indicate whether we can expect that this measure will be brought up for consideration in the immediate future?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The first part of the question will be dealt with very shortly, I hope, as soon as the arrangements have been completed with the provinces so they can carry out their part of the policy. As to the second part of the question, legislation is not likely to be possible this session, but this is still part of our platform for action.

TRADE

BREAD—PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF IMPORT INTO NEW YORK STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): At the beginning of March I was asked some questions about legislation in New York state which would have had the effect of prohibiting sales of Canadian bread in that state. In order to clear the record I wish to inform the house that Governor Rockefeller has vetoed the bill.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER FROM TRURO, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works in reference to the announcement made over the week end of appointments to the national capital commission. I note that the minister is not present, and in his absence may I direct the question to the acting minister. Would the hon. gentleman advise us whether the appointment of Mrs. Margaret F. Norris of Truro was made on the basis of qualifications or whether it was because of the fact that she was president of the Nova Scotia Liberal association from 1959 to 1962, according to the Ottawa Journal, and that she is also a defeated Liberal candidate?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does strike me that this question, though interesting, certainly is not exactly urgent.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he confirm the statement he made yesterday to the effect that he would be the government's chief spokesman to federal members from Quebec and not the spokesman for Quebec federal members within his government? Is that what he said in the presence of newspapermen, as reported here, in Le Devoir?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): The Prime Minister answered that question a while ago in reply to one put to him by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau).

[Mr. Pearson.]

LOTTERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice to see whether he has any influence.

Considering the distinct promise made by several Liberal candidates from the province of Quebec during the last election campaign, does the minister intend to amend the criminal code to allow the provinces who want to, to have lotteries or sweepstakes?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper?

Mr. Pigeon: I want to discuss this at ten o'clock next Thursday.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the deduction from income granted in respect of certain tuition fees be extended to include tuition fees paid by a taxpayer who is a student, whether or not he is a full time student, to an educational institution in Canada

(a) that is a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level,

(b) that is a school operated by or on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, a municipality in Canada, or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(c) that is a high school or secondary school providing courses leading to a secondary school certificate or diploma that is a requirement for entrance to a college or university, or

(d) that is certified by the Minister of Labour to be an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualification of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession, if the tuition fees paid by the taxpayer for the year exceed $25.

2. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a dependant in respect of whom a taxpayer may deduct an amount not exceeding $550 in computing his taxable income shall include a taxpayer's brother or sister who was 21 years of age or over and in full time attendance at a school or university.

3. That the period commencing on December 5, 1963 within which a new manufacturing or processing business must have commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities in a designated area in order to obtain a certificate for the purposes of section 71A of the act be extended to March 31, 1967.

4. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years in determining whether 95 per cent of the assets used in a business were new and situated in a designated area, for purposes of establishing under section 71A of the act that a person was carrying on the business in a designated area, the value of the assets shall be their fair market value notwithstanding that such value may be different from their capital cost.

5. That where at a time when an area was a designated area a business has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business, or an application has been made in writing to the Minister of Industry by a taxpayer in respect of a business that upon the fulfilment of specified conditions would be certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business in the designated area, that area, notwithstanding that it may no longer be a designated area, shall for the purpose of the application of section 71A of the act to that particular business continue to be a designated area.

6. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income all expenditures of a current nature for scientific research carried on outside Canada that are expenditures made in the year

(a) for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer, or

(b) to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business.

7. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income amounts expended by him in relation to an objection to an assessment or an appeal from an assessment and shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof.

8. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income an amount paid in the year or in a previous year since 1962 as a contribution to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was a contributor even if he also deducts an amount as a contribution in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was not a contributor, but the maximum amount deductible in a year in respect of past services while he was a contributor shall not exceed $1,500 minus the aggregate of the amounts deducted in the year in respect of services rendered by him in the year and in respect of services rendered by him previous to the year while he was not a contributor.

9. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the period of 60 days from the end of a year within which an employer may pay an amount to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by his employees be increased to 120 days.

10. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years it be made clear that any amount received by an employer upon the winding up or reorganization of a pension fund or plan shall be included in his income.

11. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years subsection (3) of section 12 of the act, which provides rules concerning an outlay or expenses payable by a taxpayer to a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length, be amended so that a taxpayer who at the end of his taxation year has a liability that

(a) arose in respect of a non-arm's length transaction,

(b) was deductible in computing his income, and

(c) has been outstanding for two years following the end of the taxation year in which it accrued must include in income for the third year after it accrued an amount equal to the liability, unless the debtor and creditor sign and file an agreement in which they elect to have their taxes computed as though the debt had been paid and replaced by a loan on the first day of that third year.

12. That the 20 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him after 1964 by a corporation resident in Canada that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be reduced to 15 per cent, and that in consequence thereof:

(a) Part IID of the act imposing a tax equal to 5 per cent of certain dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be repealed;

(b) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed by part IIIA of the act on income earned after 1964 by a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be reduced to 15 per cent; and

(c) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed on the taxable income earned after 1964 by a non-resident-owned investment corporation be reduced to 15 per cent.

13. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years, where a taxpayer has disposed of his interest in a partnership, such part of the consideration as is reasonable in the circumstances shall be deemed to be proceeds of disposition of depreciable property of the taxpayer used in the partnership business.

14. That for the 1964 taxation year the amount deductible in computing taxable income in respect of a dependant child who was over 15 and under 18 years of age at the end of the year shall not exceed $470 if an allowance was paid under the Family Allowances Act in respect of the child for any month after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

15. That for the 1965 and subsequent taxation years, a child shall be regarded as a child qualified for family allowance for any year at the end of which he was over 15 and under 18 years of age, if an allowance under the Family Allowances Act was paid in the year in respect of that child after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

16. That with regard to the definition of degree of Canadian ownership in section 139A of the said act, the said measure provide as follows:

"(1) Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, and equity shares representing in the aggregate not less than 25 per cent of that part of the paid-up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada, or a combination thereof, or

(B) a class or classes of shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned more than 75 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and a class or classes of equity shares of the corporation representing in the aggregate not less than 50 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned equity shares representing in the aggregate more than 75 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was presented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and"

(2) Subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) thereof, by repealing paragraph (b) thereof and by substituting therefor the following paragraphs:

"(b) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (c); or

(c) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary controlled corporation

(i) having issued and outstanding equity shares none of which were owned by a person other than

(A) the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(B) a non-resident person not related to the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(C) an individual resident in Canada, or

(D) a corporation controlled in Canada, and

(ii) subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (b)."

(3) Paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) a corporation that has share capital is not controlled in Canada at a particular time unless at that time the corporation is resident in Canada, and more than 50 per cent of its issued and outstanding shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of its paid up capital are owned by

(i) individuals resident in Canada,

(ii) corporations resident in Canada with respect to each of which (A) more than 50 per cent of the issued shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and

(B) shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of the paid up capital

are owned by individuals resident in Canada, or

(iii) any combination of individuals or corporations described in subparagraph (i) or (ii);

(b) where

(i) a non-resident person,

(ii) a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, or

(iii) a corporation that is related to a non-resident person within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139

has a right under a contract in equity or otherwise either immediately or in the future and either absolutely or contingently, to, or to acquire, equity shares in a corporation, those shares shall

[Mr. Pigeon.]

(iv) unless the right is contingent upon an event that it is not reasonable to expect to occur within a reasonable time, or

(v) unless the right is such that a reasonable man concerned only with the value of the shares would not exercise it,

be deemed

(vi) to be owned by the person who has the right,

(vii) to be owned by a non-resident person, where the person who has the right is a corporation described in subparagraph (ii) or (iii) and

(viii) where the shares are unissued,

(A) to be issued and outstanding, and

(B) to have a paid up capital value, with respect to each share, equal to

1. the par value, where the shares have a par value,

2. the amount that would be paid with respect to each share to exercise the right under the terms of the contract, where the shares have no par value and amount is specified in the contract, or

3. the market value at the end of the relevant sixty day period of a share of the class of shares of that corporation that is most closely similar to that share, where the shares have no par value and no amount is specified in the contract, and any other person who actually owns the shares in respect of which that right exists shall be deemed not to own those shares."

(4) Subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(e) "equity share" means

(i) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding up of the corporation, as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid up capital value of the share to which the right relates, and

(ii) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, after a dividend at a rate not in excess of 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding up of the corporation, after a payment of a part of the surplus at a rate not in excess of 10 per cent has been made to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based, on the paid up capital value of the share to which the right relates; and

(f) "paid up capital value" with reference to a share, means

(i) in the case of an unissued share that is deemed by paragraph (b) to be issued and outstanding, the amount determined under clause (B) of subparagraph (viii) of that paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, an amount equal to the paid up capital of the corporation that is represented by the shares of the class to which that share belongs divided by the number of shares of that class that are in fact issued and outstanding."

(5) In the case of a taaxtion year commencing before January 1, 1965, of a corporation that would have had a degree of Canadian ownership in the 1964 taxation year if section 139A of the said act had not been amended by this act, that portion of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act, as amended by this act, that precedes paragraph (a) thereof shall, if the corporation elects in prescribed manner before January 1, 1965, be read as follows:

"139A. (1) For the purposes of this act, a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership in a taxation year if throughout any sixty day period commencing after March 16, 1964 and ending before January 1, 1965"

(6) This section is applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years."

and for the purpose of determining whether a corporation had a degree of Canadian ownership for the purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (1a) of section 106 the the said act, section 139A of the said act shall

(a) in relation to any dividend declared on or before March 16, 1964 be read as if it had not been amended by the said measure, and

(b) in relation to any dividend declared after March 16, 1964 be read as amended by the said measure.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Before the committee begins to consider the income tax resolution in detail I think it might be helpful if I were to give an outline of the proposals before us. It may be helpful if I do so in some detail in order to provide members of the committee with a general understanding of what is involved. I shall, of course, be glad to go into more extended detail on any particular item when the time comes. However, as much of this resolution is highly technical, a broad, general description at the beginning may be helpful.

Although there is only one income tax resolution, it is divided into 16 paragraphs, and it has been customary in the past for the committee to consider each paragraph in turn. Of the 16 paragraphs, nine propose relieving amendments, one is partly relieving, four propose legislation to correct the law where it has been found to have unintended results, and two paragraphs might be described as consequential since they relate to the proposed extension of the payment of family allowances.

Under the proposed new arrangement with the provinces announced by the Prime Minister on April 20, the room made available for the provinces to impose their own income tax on individuals without increasing the total tax load from that source will be increased for the 1965 and the 1966 taxation years. Provision for this should be made in this year's amendments to the Income Tax Act. Therefore when the committee reaches the end of paragraph 16 I shall propose an amendment to add a paragraph 17 to the resolution to increase the relevant deduction from federal individual income tax otherwise payable, from 19 per cent to 21 per cent for 1965, and from 20 per cent to 24 per cent for 1966. The bill to be introduced after this resolution has been considered by the committee will, as usual, contain a number of additional amendments most of which will be of a technical or drafting nature.

I should perhaps mention one relieving amendment of some general interest which is planned for the bill but which is not described in the resolution. This is an amendment to provide that payments made by the Federal Republic of Germany as compensation to victims of nazi persecution who are now living in Canada shall be exempt from Canadian income tax. The payments referred to are those which are also exempt from tax by Germany. The details of this exemption will be provided when the bill is introduced.

The first paragraph of the resolution proposes that the deduction in computing income now allowed for tuition fees paid by full time students be extended to allow part time students to deduct tuition fees paid to an educational institution in Canada. A large number of people in Canada take classes at night to obtain a matriculation certificate or a university degree. Many of the teachers in our schools take courses during the summer vacation period to improve their teaching qualifications. A large number of our young people take courses in business colleges or in vocational training schools to equip themselves for employment. Tuition fees must be paid for this instruction, but these courses are not usually of sufficient duration to qualify the participant as a full time student. It is hoped that the proposed change to allow a deduction for tuition fees paid by part time students will encourage and help more Canadians to acquire the training and skills which are more and more demanded in our increasingly complex economy.

The second paragraph of the resolution is also related to the pursuit of education. It proposes that a taxpayer be allowed to claim his brother or sister as a dependant for income tax purposes, even when the brother or sister is 21 years of age or over, if he or she is in full time attendance at school or university. At present a taxpayer may claim his adult brother or sister as a dependant only if he or she is dependent by reason of mental or physical infirmity.

The third, fourth and fifth paragraphs of the resolution deal with the program of tax incentives for new manufacturing or processing businesses in designated areas of slower growth. The act now provides an exemption from income tax for the income earned by a new manufacturing or processing business in a designated area during the first 36 months after it commences commercial operations. At present such businesses have to commence commercial operations within the 24 month period that started on December 5, 1963. It is proposed to amend the act to extend this period so that it will run from December 5, 1963 to March 31, 1967. This extension will give larger developments in designated areas a more reasonable chance to complete their capital construction programs and to commence commercial operations within the time limit. I may say to hon. members of the committee that I was impressed with representations made to the effect that the previous time limit of 24 months was too short. With the proposed change the government is very hopeful that these incentives will result in some important developments being undertaken in designated areas; that is, in places where they can do the most good in providing needed jobs.

It was also announced in the budget speech that the privilege of writing off new manufacturing machinery acquired for use by a new manufacturing or processing business in a designated area at the accelerated rate of 50 per cent will be continued with respect to machinery acquired up until April 1, 1967. The accelerated rate of 20 per cent for writing off new buildings will also continue to apply to new buildings acquired in designated areas until April 1, 1967. This extension of the capital cost allowance provisions will be made by changes in the income tax regulations and does not require amendments to the act.

On the subject of capital cost allowance regulations, it will be recalled that the budget speech also announced an increase in the rate of allowance for heavy mobile machinery used to excavate or move earth or rock for use in compacting road building materials. The amendment to the income tax regulations to increase the rate of capital cost allowance on such machinery from 30 per cent to 50 per cent has now been passed. The change in the legislation concerning designated areas, proposed by paragraph 4 of the resolution, is a technical amendment to the rules for determining if a new business is being carried on in a designated area.

The change proposed by paragraph 5 is intended to deal with the situation which would arise if an area which is now a designated area should cease to become designated because it no longer needs the benefit of special tax concessions. The proposed amendment will provide that where a taxpayer has commenced, or made plans to commence, a new manufacturing or processing business in an area during the time when it was designated, that area shall be deemed to continue to be a designated area for purposes of the application of the act to that particular business. The purpose of this amendment is to make sure that taxpayers who have taken steps to avail themselves of the tax benefits offered in designated areas shall not lose any of those benefits if an area should cease to be designated.

In paragraph 6 a change is proposed concerning scientific research. It is proposed that the act be amended to make it clear that expenditures of a current nature for scientific research carried on outside Canada shall be deductible if the research is related to the taxpayer's business. This amendment is intended to restore a deduction which existed before 1962, but which was removed by a change in the wording of the law in that year. For many years companies in Canada have made payments to their parent companies abroad, or to other non-residents, for the right to share in the results of research and development programs carried on outside Canada. These long-standing arrangements under which Canadian companies have obtained the results of research carried on abroad have provided Canadian industry with valuable processes, techniques and know-how, and denial of the right to deduct payments for this information would restrict this flow of information with detrimental results for the Canadian economy. The proposed amendment will not change the incentive provided in the act for increased research in Canada. Taxpayers will continue to be allowed to deduct 150 per cent of the amount by which their research expenditures in Canada exceed their expenditures in a base period.

Paragraph 7 proposes legislation to allow a taxpayer to deduct amounts spent by him in connection with preparing a notice of objection to a tax assessment or in appealing a tax assessment to the tax appeal board or a court.

Paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 propose changes concerning registered pension plans. The first of these is a somewhat technical amendment to the rules concerning the deduction of amounts contributed into registered pension plans. The purpose of this amendment is to cover situations where members of a pension plan who were contributors under the plan for some past years, and were not contributors in some other past years, now want to make lump sum or annual contributions into the plan in respect of those past years.

Under the amendment proposed in paragraph 9 an employer will have 120 days instead of the present 60 days after the end of his taxation year to make his payment to a pension plan for his employees. This is intended to give employers who base part of their contributions upon yearly profits a longer time in which to ascertain those profits. The amendment to pension plan legislation proposed under paragraph 10 is to close a possible loophole. It has been made necessary because it was held in a recent court decision that a refund of contributions from a pension plan to an employer did not constitute income in his hands.

Paragraph 11 will not be of wide general interest because it refers to a special situation which sometimes arises between a taxpayer and another person with whom he is not dealing at arm's length. A new set of rules is proposed to deal with the case where such a taxpayer, who keeps his accounts on an accrual basis, owes an amount, such as interest, but has not actually paid this amount in the year he deducts it for income tax purposes. The amendment will prevent unintended advantages being received by some taxpayers but it will also be relieving in certain other cases.

The amendment proposed by paragraph 12 will result in the rate of non-resident withholding tax on certain dividends paid after December 31, 1964, remaining at 15 per cent. Other changes which are consequential upon retaining the 15 per cent rate of tax on dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership are also proposed.

In paragraph 13 an amendment is proposed to make clear that where a partner sells his interest in a partnership and this interest includes depreciable property the appropriate part of the amount he receives as selling price shall be deemed to be received on account of the disposal of the depreciable property. This amendment will make it possible to apply to usual rules related to capital cost allowances in such circumstances.

Paragraphs 14 and 15 are consequential upon the plan to continue family allowances to children who are 16 and 17 years of age and who are continuing their education. The Income Tax Act provides that the amount of $300 is deductible for dependant children qualified for family allowances and $550 for dependants not qualified for family allowances. The budget speech announced the government's plan to amend the Family Allowances Act so that children aged 16 and 17 may be registered to receive family allowances starting in 1964; but since it will take some time to introduce this legislation and establish the administrative machinery the allowances are not likely to be available before the end of the summer. Since only three or four payments are likely to be available in 1964 it is not planned to make the full reduction from $550 to $300 in the amount that may be deducted for children aged 16 or 17 in respect of whom family allowances are paid in 1964. The reduction proposed is only about one third of the difference between $550 and $300, or $80. This leaves a deduction of $470 for dependent children aged 16 or 17 in respect of whom new allowances are received in 1964.

For 1965 and subsequent years the definition of a child qualified for family allowance is to be amended to include a child who is 16 or 17 years of age at the end of the year if an allowance under the Family Allowances Act is paid in respect of the child in the year for any month after the month in which the child becomes 16 years of age.

Paragraph 16, which is long and complicated, is designed to tighten section 139A of the act which defines when a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership. As usually happens with legislation that breaks new ground, loopholes were discovered in the definition contained in the amendments that were passed last fall. A great deal of time and effort has gone into the drafting of the revised definition with the object of plugging the existing loopholes and making it quite clear that the incentives offered will be available only to those foreign-controlled companies that make equity shares available to Canadians.

Since March 16 when the resolution was made public I have had conversations with a number of tax practitioners, both accountants and lawyers, who have made a number of helpful suggestions for further changes of a minor character. These will be incorporated in the bill.

I have already mentioned that a paragraph 17 will be proposed, when we reach that point, to provide increased abatements of the federal income tax on individuals in accordance with the recently announced arrangements with the provinces.

All of these proposed amendments are recommended to the committee to assist education, to extend incentives for the development of designated areas, to carry out announced policies and to improve the provisions of the act. I shall be glad to explain each paragraph in more detail as the committee considers each in turn.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee has listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the minister, in which he reviewed very briefly the individual sections comprising the group which we have before us. I am not sure what should be our procedure. I remember a year ago we were held strictly to dealing with each resolution in turn. Frankly, that is all I propose to do in discussing any of them this afternoon, but I presume that it is open to us to wander somewhat over the whole field because of the fact that some of them are interrelated, as the minister stated. Some of them deal with education, others with various facets which are actually quite closely connected, and I think it would enable full discussion in committee and would probably shorten the proceedings if we were to refer to more than one at any one time. As far as I am concerned, at the moment I intend only to deal with the first section which is before us.

I wonder if I might make a suggestion to the minister. The minister has said—as a matter of fact, he mentioned it to me casually on Friday evening—that he is proposing to bring in an amendment to one of the existing sections dealing with abatement. I quite realize he does not want to move it at this time but when we come to the proposed paragraph 17 I think it will facilitate discussion to have had the amendment placed before us now, so that we can give consideration to it in the interim rather than having to deal with it for the first time when we come to the last paragraph, and perhaps having to hold up the passage of the resolution until we have had a chance to consider the amendment. I suggest to the minister that perhaps he should do that.

As the minister has said, the first paragraph deals with assistance to education, and I am quite sure the committee will welcome any move in this direction. This broadens the policy which was introduced into the Income Tax Act in 1961, I think, by which we provided for the deduction of tuition fees of university students. This provision goes further and covers the four classes set out in the four subsections here, all of which I think are highly desirable.

As the minister said, these deductions will be particularly beneficial to part time students, to students taking courses in the now greatly enlarged technical and vocational training schools which have been established and are growing so rapidly, to students who are attending night school and to students who are attending summer school. I was interested in reading in one of the Toronto papers, after the minister brought forward the resolution, the fact that in the schools of Toronto, a city in which the minister has more than an academic interest I presume, there were 4,700 students taking part time courses in the wintertime and 7,700 students taking summer school courses at the University of Toronto and York University, I assume. This is a very substantial number and they will receive some measure of assistance through the proposal now before us.

There are so many facets of the educational problem which one could discuss, but this is not the time to discuss them in detail. However, I have noticed statements issued by some of the school and university authorities in Toronto referring to summer training and the assistance given to teachers and college graduates in better preparing themselves for the teaching profession. This is certainly something that is highly desirable. All of these things are good. We have been told about extended family allowances. There has been talk about a student loan fund. This matter is not before us now but I presume it will be at some future date. There are various procedures suggested for the assistance of education and the assistance of students, and this is all to the good in so far as the individual is concerned.

But the problem goes much deeper than that, of course. We not only have to provide assistance to students who wish to go to university or other schools. The problem, of course is more acute in the case of universities. We also have to provide teachers and accommodation for the students and teachers. In looking at a national magazine over the week end I was intrigued to read that at one university in the United States, not one of the largest by a long shot, there were 5,900 applications for entrance into university in the past year and the university was only able to accept 1,100 out of 5,900 applications. This shows something of the pressure on universities and schools not only in the United States but also in Canada.

As I said, the time to discuss these matters is not on this particular resolution, but when the minister's estimates are before the house later this session and we are dealing with university grants and methods of assistance to universities I give the minister fair notice that I hope he will be prepared to discuss these matters at some length. I think this is one of the most pressing problems with which the minister and the nation are confronted, and as much as we approve of the individual items of assistance which are before us, they are really only scratching the surface—except for their help to individuals—of the problem in the nation as a whole and a great deal more attention has to be given to the educational problem in the immediate future.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure I speak for the whole committee, no one could help but agree that the steps proposed in paragraph 1 are helpful and desirable and ones which I think will commend themselves to the favourable consideration of the committee. I notice that the deduction for tuition fees only applies if the amount is over $25. If the amount is $26 does that mean that the student will be able to deduct the full $26 or only the excess over $25? Although it is not exactly relevant to this paragraph it is relevant to the problem of assistance to students, and I wonder whether the minister could tell the committee now when he proposes to deal with the matter of university student loans, a measure which was mentioned in the speech from the throne and has been forecast by the Prime Minister and the minister himself. Perhaps he could advise us of that when he is dealing with this paragraph.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to answer those two questions now if that is agreeable.

The Chairman: Order. To give effect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and in view of the fact that the minister has referred to a proposed amendment, and considering also that the amendment can only refer to the resolution itself rather than to a specific paragraph, perhaps it might be a good idea to have the proposed amendment moved now.

Mr. McIlraith: I move the following amendment:

That the Income Tax Act resolution be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"17. That the income tax otherwise payable by an individual in respect of income earned in a province of Canada be reduced by

(a) 21 per cent for the 1965 taxation year, rather than 19 per cent, and

(b) 24 per cent for the 1966 taxation year, rather than 20 per cent."

Mr. Gordon: With regard to the two specific questions, Mr. Chairman, may I say there is always a problem, I suppose, in working out any amendments to the Income Tax Act as to how far you go for complete equity and precision and what you do about an excess of complexity in the administration of the law. It is proposed that any fees of $25 or less be disallowed and any fees of $26 or over be allowed in full. I quite agree that this is not perfection, but I am sure that if we reach that perfection we will arrive at a tax law that the ordinary person cannot understand. One of my colleagues said today —I hope I will not be pressed to divulge the name—that the preparation of his income tax return was beyond him and he called upon me for help as an ex-practitioner in this field. However, I was never able to make out my own so I cannot help other people.

An hon. Member: It is a simpler form this year.

Mr. Gordon: Well, with every amendment the forms become less simple. The other question my hon. friend asked was when the legislation would be introduced respecting student loans. This will be introduced separately and obviously will not be a part of these proposed amendments. We are working on that legislation. I cannot promise a particular date, but I certainly think they should be introduced as early as possible.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I certainly am in agreement with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings in his expression of satisfaction with regard to these student allowances. However, they do seem to me to be rather meagre. There is one point on which I had hoped the minister might have some new ideas and that is with regard to the provision of an allowance for textbooks. They constitute a very heavy burden on students in the course of their education. While the deduction on account of fees is certainly to be commended, it would seem to me it should include all the costs of their educational courses.

I find it difficult to understand why the minister should confine this sort of allowance to students, when there are other sections of the community that suffer from the same sort of disability for which they get no compensation at all. I have in mind, for instance, the heavy expenses some groups of workers have to incur in order to earn their livelihood. I have in mind particularly those engaged in the logging industry in my own constituency, where they have to buy extremely expensive clothing and footwear for which they get no allowance whatever in connection with income tax. This seems to me to be a legitimate expense incurred by the necessity of the way they earn their livelihood. I should like to see some idea of that type going all through the income tax provisions.

In so far as the allowance for students is concerned, I was disturbed not long ago to note a comment in the newspapers, whether correct or not I do not know, from the premier of Quebec to the effect that these allowances were an invasion of provincial rights. I have no means of knowing whether or not the federal government is taking any note of this view, but I would suggest to the government this provision is an arrangement being made between the government of Canada and Canadian citizens wherever they may live. It is no business of any provincial government. I hope the government will not accept the position taken by the premier of Quebec because I think it would be another dangerous step toward the disintegration of our central, national authority.

I should like to turn for a few moments, Mr. Chairman, to some of the other paragraphs in the resolution, namely paragraph 4.

I should like the minister to give some explanation of the method that will be used to determine effectively when a new business started.

Mr. Grafftey: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman; perhaps you could clarify now whether this is the procedure we are going to follow or whether we are going to take the resolution paragraph by paragraph?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It was my understanding the whole of the resolution was before us, but I am subject to correction.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is correct. At the moment, the whole resolution is before the committee and if later, in the course of discussion, there were unanimous consent to study the resolution paragraph by paragraph, we could do it. At the moment, we are considering the whole resolution.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This was my understanding, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the minister could explain to us later just how he is going to distinguish between a genuine new enterprise starting in a designated area and a wholly owned subsidiary of a well established company which is starting business in this area?

I should like some elaboration of section 5 with regard to the provisions for particular companies making application for tax exemption in federally designated areas, and being in a position to take advantage of the tax exemption at a later date after the designation has been removed. I should like to know, in the first place, how long a period is to be allowed for such an application before a person commences operation in the designated area? If he is permitted to wait perhaps for several years until there is a proper economic climate in that area to determine whether it is going to be profitable for him to start a particular business, it seems to me we are defeating the intention of this amendment, in that companies may very well take advantage of this provision unless there is some rather clearly defined limit. There may be some time elapse before they start a new enterprise.

In so far as section 6 is concerned, I am sure most people will welcome this encouragement to research in Canada. Again, I have a question to raise. What is the particular definition of research that is to be used? Is it to be basic research or is a company to be permitted to have a deduction for what would be classed as technical or specific research designed to produce some development that later may be patented, thereby reserving to this particular company all the benefits of this research for which it had received this tax exemption. It would seem to be most important that we should know that. I would suspect a large part of industrial research that is undertaken would fall into the category of development or process that could later be patented, and the returns from it be channelled into the coffers of one company. I believe the purpose of such an amendment would be to encourage research from which the whole community could benefit.

Under section 12, Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to know exactly what was the cause of the reduction from 20 per cent to 15 per cent? What was the purpose that was sought to be served by that action? Perhaps later on the minister will be able to enlighten us.

In the following sections we have a provision to the effect that where a taxpayer has disposed of his interest in a partnership, such part of the consideration as is reasonable in the circumstances shall be deemed to be proceeds of disposition—I am always a little bit uneasy when I see such terms as "reasonable" or "adequate" in legislation. I wonder if the minister would be able to tell us what yardstick, what consideration, is to be used to determine whether or not such a proportion is reasonable? These are some of the questions that should arise now, Mr. Chairman. While one could discuss the whole basis of our income tax policies under this resolution, I do not propose to do so today, except to put in again a little plug for the consideration of a capital gains tax in Canada. Beyond that, Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to wait until we discuss the items in greater detail under the minister's estimates.

Mr. Olson: I agree, Mr. Chairman, with the suggestion of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, that while the whole resolution is before us it would probably expedite our discussion if we took it one paragraph at a time. For that reason, I only want to spend three or four minutes to draw to the minister's attention one or two things about which he may wish to move amendments when we come to the particular paragraph concerned.

So far as paragraph 1 is concerned, I just wish to say we add our support to this matter of being able to deduct the cost of tuition fees from income tax. It is something that is justified, but we believe it is only a step in the right direction because there are still some very serious injustices concerning things that are actually deductible from taxable income. This is particularly true when applied to people who have spent a lot of time to acquire an education, which becomes the tool by which they earn their income. So far as postgraduate studies are concerned, we think there would be every justification for including as deductions from taxable income some of the other expenses involved when a person must go away from home, in addition to the actual amount paid for tuition fees.

I am not clear what will happen under paragraphs 14 and 15 in the event that Premier Lesage manages to make arrangements with the federal government to take a cash consideration instead of having these family allowances paid direct by the federal government to children aged 16 and 17 years in the province of Quebec. We do not know whether Premier Lesage is going to refuse these payments. We know there have been some negotiations between the federal government and the Quebec provincial government, and it would be reasonably safe to say these negotiations covered the matter of family allowances.

If these discussions culminate in an agreement whereby there is a payment to the Quebec provincial government, in lieu of making these payments direct to the children, then it would be necessary to have another amendment to the Income Tax Act to equate the final results of this kind of arrangement for the people in the other provinces. I am sure the minister would agree it would be an injustice if a deduction of $550 were allowed for children age 16 and 17 years in the province of Quebec and only $300 for children in the same age group in the other provinces of Canada, while at the same time there was a payment out of the federal treasury to the Quebec provincial government matching the aggregate amount of these allowances.

Perhaps the minister intends to move an appropriate amendment, or it may be a stage has not been reached in the negotiations so that an announcement can be made regarding the final arrangements. Other than that, we are willing to follow the course outlined by the speakers on behalf of the two other parties, to take each paragraph in turn and confine our remarks to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, when I rise to discuss taxes, I am always reminded of that story of the seven year old boy who got lost in the Quebec income tax offices and the tax inspectors, looking for that child's mother, were shouting all over the place: whose $300 deduction is this? That is to show you a little Mr. Chairman, the turn of mind of those tax inspectors, of those people who only think in terms of an act, in terms of the greatest zeal they can display.

Last year, when the same budget resolutions came before us, I remember very clearly mentioning to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that the drafters of that legislation—in the first place, let us consider it, if you will, from the literary point of view—that the drafting of that legislation especially the one coming from the Department of Finance, was complicated and exceedingly long, and most of the time incomprehensible, even for those who are responsible for the administration of the Income Tax Act. They just cannot make it out, so we can expect they will administer it somewhat at random.

For instance, if we take paragraph 16, we have a whole page, commencing on page 6 and ending on page 7, a whole page where there is not even one period. In short, there is only one sentence covering a whole page.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest it is almost a world record to be able to write a one-page sentence. When we start reading it, we come across right and left incidentals and once we have read it—imagine—we wonder how that amendment to the act can be fully understood by the officials of the various income tax offices all across the country.

The act itself is complicated in its wording, its subject matter, its sources of reference and its numbering.

Is it any wonder then that it is misinterpreted in various income tax offices throughout Canada? Is it any wonder also that it brings about unfair treatment for taxpayers and that they often have good cause to complain about income tax inspectors or assessors?

There is one office in particular about which I would like to talk this afternoon. It is located in the Quebec district. I am singling it out because it is probably the one with which I deal most often, since I get a great number of complaints about it.

My constituency comes within the purview of the Quebec income tax office. In that office discriminatory and arbitrary decisions are taken, dictatorial decisions are taken without any inquiries or examination of any kind, and when the taxpayer is not satisfied, he is told: Put in a complaint, put in an appeal, or come and see us in Quebec city.

The Quebec district office is 135 miles away from my constituency, so you can well imagine how difficult it is for an ordinary worker who earns his living by the day, to go to the Quebec city office during business hours.

I would like to mention one of those cases to illustrate how this act we are voting today can be outrageously applied in the province of Quebec.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I fear the hon. gentleman is moving away from the resolution before the committee. I think he is discussing the administration of the Income Tax Act rather than the terms of the resolution now before us. I would prefer it if he would remain with the resolution that is before the committee.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, on this point of order, we are now on an income tax resolution, and it was stated before Your Honour took the chair that the resolution was in a general way before the committee. Its wording starts:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things—certain specific things. It is the whole gist of the resolution and of the amendment of the Income Tax Act that is before the committee, and I would therefore submit it is strictly pertinent to the discussion to mention the way the act is administered; and that is what the hon. member for Lapointe is doing. I would respectfully submit he is within the rules in bringing up these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I should like to point out that I only made preliminary remarks on the wording of the act, on the manner in which it is written, on the manner in which it is divided into paragraphs, and in regard to its phraseology. It is to illustrate how badly this text is worded that I speak of the doings of the income tax inspectors which are ridiculous and arbitrary, because the very act we wish to pass is badly written. For example I can quote a sentence, that is section 16, which I would challenge you to read and tell me, within an hour, its exact meaning.

You will realize, then, that tax inspectors are unable to understand—that is the point I wish to make—and why it is that their interpretation is wrong. It is precisely because the legislation is poorly written. This is, in addition to the arguments put forth by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), another point I want to make before we approve such poorly written legislation and I want to show you the disastrous effects of this poorly written text which does not make sense.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I must agree with the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue that since the resolution before us deals with amendments to the Income Tax Act the hon. member who has the floor has a right to make some suggestions about the administration of the act, both as it stands and also, perhaps, in anticipation of certain problems which he thinks are likely to arise with respect to the administration of some of these amendments which are before us, now—and, of course, the whole of the resolution is before us, not just parts of it.

The Deputy Chairman: I should like to point out to hon. members on this point of order that we have a resolution before us from the Department of Finance and that the administration of the Income Tax Act is a responsibility of the Department of National Revenue. While hon. members are free to make any comments they wish regarding the Income Tax Act, these will only be in order provided they are related to the resolution before us. I have no intention in the world of restricting debate but I think it would be wise if, in our remarks, we were to relate those observations to the resolution which is now before us even though they might concern the administration of the act.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall right away relate remarks to the resolution before us by saying that the doings of the officials of the tax department depend on the way this text is drafted, which makes it hard to understand.

For instance, I have here a rather incomprehensible case namely the case of charity receipts. In the case I have here, the department wrote to the taxpayer after his tax return had been accepted: Your charity receipts have been cut by such an amount. No investigation was made, despite the fact that the legislation we want to pass provides that if the person supplied charity receipts—that is written into the act—the amount can be deducted from the tax, provided the total receipts do not exceed 10 per cent of the salary. But inspectors do not understand that or they want to make a show of zeal to get a promotion, and that to the prejudice of taxpayers.

Inspectors write to the taxpayer and say: After investigation, we have decided to cut from $400 to $300 the amount you claim as charitable donations. The taxpayer wonders why and says: Well, I supplied the charity receipts, I am entitled to that under the act and you refuse it to me. The inspector replies: An investigation was made and we are not going to change our minds.

That is where the taxpayer writes to us and puts the matter in our hands. I have a briefcase full of problems like that, but I should like to state only a few.

Then we write to the Quebec income tax office and ask: Why did you cut down the allowance for charitable donations of this taxpayer? The taxation division replies a little more intelligently and decently, saying: After inquiry, it has been deemed advisable to cut the allowance for charitable donations; however, if the taxpayer can account for his receipts, they will be accepted. But the taxpayer has already accounted for his receipts, since they were duly signed, in most cases by the parish priest, who is an honourable and respected person. They are signed by the parish priest who is told to warrant them. Then the parish priest has to write to the taxation division officials and tell them: I am surprised that you question the receipt I gave for income tax purposes. Especially, when this happens in such a whimsical way.

The parish priest often has to send two letters to the income tax officials, who then reply: All right, since you have accounted for your receipts, we shall accept them.

But then, consider all the steps that were required: a letter from the taxpayer to the income tax division, a letter from the taxpayer to his member of parliament, a letter of the member to the taxpayer, a letter of the member to the income tax division, another visit of the taxpayer to the parish priest, and then, another letter from the parish priest to the income tax division, and the department's reply to the taxpayer informing him that his receipts were justified, and all this for a $9.25 difference in the income tax assessment. This must have cost the government from $100 to $125, because the receipts for charitable donations were not accepted.

Why not accept these receipts if they are in due form? We have received a pile of letters from taxpayers who were dissatisfied.

I then decided to meet the income tax director. I was very well received but afterwards he did exactly the opposite of what he had promised me he would do. I said to the income tax director: When, in your opinion, charitable donation receipts are too high and you decide on an investigation, at least make a complete one. That is a legal requirement. Investigations by the income tax division cannot be complete as long as the investigators have not paid a visit to the taxpayer.

Some parish priests have told me that such visits are made no more than an hour before the evening rosary at the church, because the officials come from Quebec city and wish their stay in the Lake St. John area to be as short as possible. They arrive at any hour of the morning, afternoon or evening and say "We have prepared a list; give us the following information." The vicar is thus forced to do the investigation for the income tax officials. If he has signed a receipt for such and such a person he must give the information on the spot and say: I do not know—

To allow people to act in such a way under that legislation is paramount to discrimination against the general public.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member again but it seems to me he is discussing the administration of the Income Tax Act, which is a responsibility of the Department of National Revenue. Up to this point he has not related his remarks to the resolution which is before us. I hope the hon. member will do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, once again I shall relate my remarks to the resolution. The relation between what I have to say and the resolution under consideration at this time is that the legislation before us is incomplete, that it lacks simplicity and is very difficult to understand for income tax inspectors and assessors. As a matter of fact, it is because they do not understand the act that such cases as those I have mentioned can happen.

By submitting specific cases to the Ministers of Finance and National Revenue, I hope to prove that they should introduce better prepared pieces of legislation than the one this house is discussing today if they want auditors to understand the provisions of the act.

That is the relevancy between what I say and the cases I quoted. I suggest those cases are so clear that they deserve consideration because it is a very important matter.

As a matter of fact, when legislation is passed and its provisions are ill applied or misinterpreted, we have a responsibility to see to it that justice is done to our electors who are the victims of the legislation we pass in this house.

This is, in my view, the relation between my remarks and the legislation we are called upon to vote.

It is a fine thing to ask us to pass legislation, but if they are improperly drafted and if most taxpayers complain about it because they cannot understand such legislation or make anything out of the intricacies of the law, we have a responsibility to say: do not bring forward any more budget resolutions or legislation with respect to income tax which are so drafted but see to it that the officials and the taxpayers can understand them.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that I have related my observations to the matter now before us and that I may go on.

Mr. Chairman, in the cases I mentioned, justice was finally rendered to certain individuals but only after a lengthy exchange of correspondence between the income tax department and the taxpayer, the parish priest and the member of parliament.

But if the inspector or the assessor had considered only what was asked for, if we had passed simpler, easier to understand, more explicit legislation, then we would not have faced such problems.

I have another case to illustrate very well what I am saying. It is the case of a taxpayer who said he was not allowed to deduct 75 per cent of his car expenditures because it was alleged that he did not have to use his car in his work. In the letter, the name of the assessor is mentioned. He is a Mr. Gingras. That man's name is often referred to in the letters received.

The taxpayer wrote to me as follows: I was a little tired after travelling more than 160 miles the day the inspector came in to my office. He came from Quebec city, and, as I said a while ago, he tried to get his work done as fast as possible.

And the taxpayer went on: although my day's work was done, and I had travelled 160 miles and seen several customers, the inspector barged into my office very rudely, asking me a thousand and one questions, accusing me of all kinds of things. I spoke to him a bit harshly, and then the inspector said to the secretary, and I have the name here, Mr. Gingras, that he would make me pay dearly for this lack of respect for a tax assessor.

Mr. Chairman, if we do not pass a law to bring those people to their senses, what is the use of our present legislation, apart from getting taxpayers into trouble?

Mr. Chairman, it is intended to have paid dearly any lack of respect for a tax assessor with whom it is impossible to discuss problems, who considers that we are all thieves and treats everyone accordingly.

Such are the legislative measures that we are being asked to pass in this house. The taxpayer also tells me: As I knew that my tax returns were legal, I did not worry much about this investigator who, in order to have his revenge gave me a new assessment for two years, and claimed $245.91 from me.

Mr. Chairman, this taxpayer unfortunately came to see me much too late, because had I known about that, I might have been able to put this Mr. Gingras in his place before today. The taxpayer handed me the letter so that I might use it.

He also tells me that when he received that $245.91 claim, instead of seeing a lawyer, which would probably have cost him twice as much, he offered to pay this amount at the rate of $25 per month. But Mr. Gingras was up to his tricks again, and told the taxpayer that he had to pay the amount within a certain period of time.

That is another example showing how Quebec income tax officers act.

And I think that we are right when we ask for an investigation on the actions of these little dictators.

Another taxpayer writes me to ask where he stands. As a matter of fact, he is wondering if he will have to go to the income tax office in Quebec to swear that he actually gave so much to charities.

Mr. Chairman, those are somewhat extraordinary things. When it is said that an investigation was made, in most cases, there was none. In my opinion, there should be an investigation about the actions of those inspectors.

We ask only that an investigation be made when it is intended to reduce the amounts claimed by the taxpayers for charitable donations. The least they can do is for the officers and assessors to call on the taxpayers. In so doing, they may see both sides of the picture, they may obtain both versions. We also ask that they behave politely and not by saying: "We are above you, you are a gang of thieves."

Let them conduct their investigation politely when they refuse to accept the statements submitted. The investigation is not to be made in the income tax office; what we ask for is that the assessors or auditors visit the taxpayers themselves, instead of asking the taxpayers to go to the office. The Quebec district taxation office is located 135 miles from Jonquière and 175 miles from Mistassini, which is in the constituency of my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). In most cases, the officers tell the taxpayers: "If you are not satisfied, come to see us in Quebec city or lodge an appeal against our decision."

Mr. Chairman, I think if it is intended to pass legislation with respect to income tax, it must be drafted clearly and precisely, so that everybody may understand it. It is already hard enough to have to pay income tax. In fact, I believe the government grabs a sufficient share of the taxpayers' salary, it already digs deep enough into our pockets without entrusting the job to a bunch of rude and impertinent employees. Indeed, taxpayers have reason to complain, because their word always seems to be questioned with regard to receipts for charitable donations.

That is the situation in which everybody finds himself. We should keep in mind that a priest's or minister's task is not to give receipts. That is hardly his function. But if the taxpayer has no receipt from his parish priest, he has to pay taxes, even on the money he gave charitable institutions. It seems that the parish priest is expected to do the work of a civil servant. When he signs a receipt, it seems that he sets everybody against himself: the taxpayer, the income tax department, everybody.

Mr. Chairman, the act is ill-conceived, and especially, the provision relating to receipts for charitable donations.

And today, we are asked to approve further income tax legislation. I think that if the minister wants to amend the Income Tax Act, he should amend the provision with regard to charitable donations, which is a source of trouble for each and every one of us. At least, we, in our district, receive a great number of complaints, and I suggest that the act be amended, instead of putting everybody in a difficult situation and abetting an existing trend, which is to incite people to cheat on their income tax return. I admit that there are some people who cheat, or try to cheat, but it is precisely that clause concerning charitable donation receipts, which encourages people to cheat or to obtain as many charitable donations receipts as possible from their parish priest, who is unwilling to make enemies. It may happen that a parish priest gives a receipt for an amount higher than the taxpayer's charities. But he does not have to squabble with his parishioners just to please the director of the income tax office or the inspector. Therefore, let us change the act. We have already made a suggestion along that line. I repeat it today and I ask the minister to move that amendment himself. In view of the fact that we are dealing with budget resolutions, I am ready to help him draft an amendment for which he will have all the merit and credit in Quebec. Let him move an amendment to the effect that—

SUGGESTED REVIVAL OF MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine.

Merchant Marine

He said: Mr. Speaker, this subject of a merchant marine has come before parliament on numerous occasions since world war II. I hope to submit this afternoon that there are even more compelling reasons now for the government to revive, in the words of my motion, the Canadian merchant marine. In going over the previous debates one will find that perhaps the greatest champion of this cause in the house was the former minister of external affairs, Mr. Howard Green. When I came into the house it was my pleasure and honour to support a plea which he made on May 13, 1954, for the merchant marine. The reasons that we made that plea at that time still hold true today, and as I say I think are even more compelling. The ironical twist, Mr. Speaker, is that at that time, 1954, there were over 100 merchant ships. Today we have one Canadian-registered, deep sea vessel.

The arguments for this proposal were four in number. First of all there was the matter of defence; second, shipbuilding; then that of trained seamen; and fourth, the question of trade. I should like to deal with these four matters in light of present-day circumstances.

As far as defence is concerned, Mr. Speaker, while our commitments have changed somewhat we are still in the business of naval escorting. If we have no merchant ships to escort, then what will our navy do in time of war? I seriously suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the experience of the last war when we pooled our merchant ships should be a lesson to us at the present time. We sat down at the bargaining table, but those who had the ships could of course bargain the best and have their say. The piper plays the tune, as it were, and those who do not have a merchant fleet to back up their words at the conference table lose out.

Another argument made quite frequently is that today we need more air transport than naval transport. I suggest that this may be true in the first instance, but a recent article in the magazine "Crowsnest", April issue, demonstrates very clearly that while air transport may be required for our combat-readied troops, we have to follow up with naval transport immediately afterwards to supply materials and even fuel for the aircraft. So I think from a military prestige standpoint we can still justify the need for a merchant marine.

Then reference was made in the previous debate, as I said, to shipbuilding. A very interesting brief was presented to the federal cabinet recently by the shipyard workers of Canada, in which they pointed out in clearcut fashion the present need for a merchant marine. They said that if we did not need our own ships, then we should not be in the shipbuilding business. Canadian ownership would assist the shipbuilding yards to a degree unprecedented in our history. They further pointed out that with the scrapping of the frigate program the yards are in a serious transformation stage, and the $400 or $500 million which was released by the cut in naval expenditures could be used to assist the construction of a Canadian merchant marine.

Then there is the question of trained seamen. We all know the difficulties which we encountered during the last war through the lack of trained seamen. I suggest that we in this nation need to look to the future. We had over 7,000 trained seamen in 1945; now there are less than 100. The sea would be a worthwhile occupation for Canadian youth to follow. They would know where they fit into the future, and this could be part of a naval or merchant marine program. We do train seamen for the Canadian coastguard service and for Department of Transport vessels on the northern service, and this training could be tied in with that for a privately-owned merchant marine.

The last point of significance which was made in the debate ten years ago still has validity today, and I suggest it is even more convincing. It concerns the matter of trade. We are trading to an increasing extent. Our exports are going up all the time. Recently we saw an example of our need for a merchant marine in that our wheat has been shipped both to China and Russia in the bottoms of ships of other countries. This is why it is imperative that we move now to establish a merchant marine, because there is a great demand for the movement of bulk cargoes.

Two tables numbered I and IX which appeared in the brief submitted by the shipyard workers show, first of all, world and Canadian export trade as a percentage, as extracted from the marine engineering log, and second, the extent of foreign ships participating in the handling of Canadian overseas trade. These tables are in both French and English, but I would ask permission, Mr. Speaker, to have both these short tables which are extracted from official government records printed in Hansard in English at this point in the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to have these tables printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: Another example, Mr. Speaker, to illustrate the need for a Canadian merchant marine in the sphere of trade, is illustrated by recommendations made at the United Nations conference on trade and development. This was an extensive conference held in Geneva on March 25. One of the recommendations has particular significance, and it is as follows:

> 5. Ocean transport costs being so important to the trade of developing countries, they should be encouraged where feasible to set up their own merchant marines—when they do, it must be understood that they will have to indulge in the practice of "flag discrimination" to protect these fledgling enterprises.

Having examined the reasons for having a merchant marine it might be worth while to take a moment merely to outline what has taken place since 1945 to show where Canada has fallen down. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that after the second world war it was the policy of many of the smaller countries and states, such as Liberia and Panama, to provide a "flag of convenience", or to become what are called flag countries. This is a method of registration of a ship by a shipowner so as to escape tax liability in his country of origin. In many countries these shipowners suffered such a tax burden that they were forced to register their ships in countries like Panama or Liberia. As a consequence most countries took steps, through various methods such as tax concessions, subsidies or mortgages, to make it possible for their own shipowners to register ships at home and compete with these smaller nations. In other words, they placed their own shipowners in a competitive position. But Canada failed to do this, and for the life of me I cannot understand why we allowed our merchant fleet to dwindle since 1945 almost to the point of non-existence.

There is no sense in reviewing the history of the matter. Various proposals have been put forward from time to time. I am sure there are many recommendations and briefs which have been put before the Department of Transport and other departments which are worth while, and could form the basis of any shipbuilding scheme. I know from personal experience some of the difficulties of a fully socialized plan of ship operation, and I for one would have no part in any state ownership scheme which might be put forward. We all know the difficulties experienced by Canadian National Steamships, who were running ships to the West Indies.

I should first like to make the suggestion that whatever is done should be done now. There is enough authority and power in the Canadian Maritime Commission Act and regulations for us to carry out any method we may have in mind to deal with this important matter. It is only necessary, as I suggested, to put our shipping industry in a position to be able to compete with those of other countries.

The second important thing to remember is that, whether this is done by government mortgage, by tax concessions or other forms of assistance, it must be long term to be fair to all—shipowners, seamen, shipyard workers and even the Canadian people. It may be necessary to go even further and to restrict our exports and imports, if possible, to Canadian bottoms as has been done by the United States. But let us be fair to everyone. Let us be long term in our suggestions and recommendations and let us not have a tragic abandonment of our merchant marine as we had in 1945.

I do not wish to speak long. I suggest that these are the advantages of a revived Canadian owned, operated and manned deep sea merchant marine. First of all, it would give new opportunities to thousands of young Canadians who would follow the sea as a lifetime profession. Second, it would stimulate Canadian shipbuilding in the tough, competitive world of today. Third, it would bring new dollars to our economy and reduce our balance of payments problems. Instead of sharing present shipowners' revenues outside of Canada, the earnings would all be distributed within our own economy. Fourth, it would give Canada greater control over import and export traffic. It would stabilize our shipping costs and bring us into the picture in chartering, insurance and even the direction of shipping. Fifth, it would provide greater prestige and bargaining power in trade negotiations with the newly developing countries. Last, it would mean that we would have available, having in mind present defence commitments, a merchant fleet for both the supply and transport of troops.

Canada is a vast and complex country. Because of our geography we have found it necessary from time to time to subsidize many of our services in the transportation field. Because of our sparse population we have also found it necessary to come forward with assistance on occasion to agriculture and some of our other basic industries. We have one of the longest and most rugged coastlines in the world, and it certainly is not wrong to think that we should assist in some way a Canadian owned merchant fleet that would bring us closer to the sea.

It would have a very healthy effect on our people. In my opinion we have become too insular in Canada. We are controlled from central Canada, and we seem to forget the wholesome sea is at our gates. We are, to put it bluntly, a nation of landlubbers. A small investment such as I suggest, which would only amount to $3 million a year for about 25 ships, would once and for all enable us to take our place as a great trading nation with our own ships, our own seamen and the other supporting industrial services.

Let us have a decision now instead of waiting another 25 years. I do not know whether this matter should be referred to a committee. Possibly the railways and shipping committee could gather information that could be of great assistance in helping the government to make a decision. It might be that the matter could be referred to the banking and commerce committee. I think everybody agrees on the need of reviving our merchant marine. It is a matter of deciding the best financial method of doing so. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has many duties. His portfolio is a most diverse one. He cannot hope to cope with all his problems overnight, but he should try to direct his attention to one matter at a time. The former minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), in a commendably statesmanlike fashion dealt with shipbuilding. He brought forward the subsidy plan which enabled us to build our coastal ships, and this helped the industry for a considerable period. I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he should act at once by taking the matter of reviving our merchant marine under immediate consideration, and come forward with a program that will benefit the entire economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Reynald Guay (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have this opportunity to take part in the present debate, especially to deal with the establishment of a merchant marine, a project which I think would be feasible and economical in a country such as ours.

Many people today talk about small industries and say that, in Canada, we should establish and promote the establishment of small industries. That is true, but before doing that, we should keep and try to improve those we already have. I feel the time has come to examine the possibility of establishing a merchant marine. There are several good reasons for such a project, and here are the main ones: 1. Canada is one of the largest exporters in the world, but its exports to countries other than the United States are carried in ships of foreign registry.

2. A Canadian merchant marine would open many markets to Canadian shipyards, both for shipbuilding and repairs, and at the same time it would put our Canadian labour force to work on the equipment required for those ships.

3. Canadian shipyards having no merchant marine to supply and serve in Canada labour under a serious handicap.

4. The earnings of the Canadian merchant marine would reduce our balance of payments.

Present conditions, although quite unfavourable to the development of a Canadian ocean-going fleet, are not necessarily permanent, and this matter should be examined from time to time, as technical changes occur.

The application of automation to shipping is increasing from day to day. This could lessen the dispute about the wages of Canadian seamen abroad and enable to diversify our operations in the future.

I now take the liberty, Mr. Speaker, of referring to the brief submitted by the national trade union and the Canadian Congress of Labour to the cabinet; there are very few countries which have a more direct interest in shipping than Canada. Almost 16 per cent of our gross national product of $40.4 billion, that is $6.4 billion, is derived from exports. From 1957 to 1962, our exports accounted for 5 per cent of total world exports. Except for the world trade in oil, considering only the shipping trade of solid goods, Canada's share is even higher: 9.6 per cent in 1961.

In the face of such a situation, the condition of our merchant marine is disastrous: we only have one trading ship under Canadian registry the SS Federal Pioneer, of 10,000 tons built during the war. Such a situation cannot prevail without definitely being prejudicial to our commercial position in the world.

This is more pitiful since Canada has a shipping tradition of which it can be proud. After 1867, our country ranked fourth among the countries having a merchant marine. As shipbuilders, we ranked third during the second world war, immediately after the United States and Great Britain.

A modern merchant marine would guarantee to our country the development of our external trade and actively contribute to increase our exports.

It would provide jobs for thousands of Canadians. It would bring about the technical development of an important segment of our heavy industry. It would bring additional revenue to several related industries and to various localities. Finally, it would soon contribute to solve one of our main economic problems: The chronic imbalance of our international payments. We have the required capital, as well as the human and material resources available. At this stage, the federal government should reach a prompt decision.

Canadian shipments to foreign countries have reached 60.3 million tons in 1962, or a 12 per cent increase compared to the previous year. This rising trend is being maintained.

For the first five months of 1963, there is a 6 per cent increase, compared to the corresponding period in 1962.

Iron ore comes first with 24.3 million tons, followed by wheat (9 million tons), gypsum (4.1 million tons), lumber and timber (3 million tons).

Those three types of shipments totalled 22.1 million tons. The transportation of those three products alone required a fleet of 40 ships of 25,000 tons each, at the rate of two trips a month.

During 1963, the total volume of shipments handled in Canadian ports was higher than in any previous year and exceeded by 8 per cent the record reached in 1961.

According to 28th annual report of the national harbours board tabled in parliament by the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, Minister of Transport, who is responsible for the board, those ports have known an unprecedented activity as well as a record operating income.

Such increased activity prevailed in all the harbours coming under the board which administers the Halifax, St. John's, Chicoutimi, Quebec, Three Rivers, Montreal, Churchill and Vancouver harbours as well as the grain elevators in Prescott and Port Colborne.

Mr. Speaker, shipping has topped all previous records. The Canadian national harbours have handled a surplus of 66 million tons of freight, namely a 10 per cent increase above the 1962 volume.

Exports have increased by nearly 24 per cent compared to last year, when imports remained about the same as in 1962. Domestic traffic, upon arrival, increased by 12 per cent and domestic traffic, upon departure, by nearly 1 per cent.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker:

1. It is not surprising that shipyards are specialized plants which must rely on the skills patiently acquired by steelworkers, welders, coppersmiths, electricians, carpenters, cabinet-makers, modelmakers, riggers, tinsmiths and others.

Such skills must be kept continuously occupied in shipbuilding, if we want to avoid that such a mine of talents be wasted and scattered. Shipyards are tottering when such skills remain idle. They make headway and spread economic development throughout the country when farsighted maritime nations see to it that their expert teams work at their main job, building and repairing ships.

2. In the near future, a steel industry will be established in Quebec, which will increase considerably our needs with regard to water transportation.

3. There was a considerable increase in winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river, according to the report published in March 1964 by the board of industry and commerce of Metropolitan Quebec Inc., whose main object is to supply the industry and trade of the economic region of Quebec with a supplementary service that might contribute to their development.

I take the liberty of quoting a few figures from the newspaper Le Soleil:

> Statistics on shipbuilding up to 1961 have just been released. The number of shipyard workers dropped from 18,577 in 1957 to 14,848 in 1961. Quebec had the largest labour force, that is 8,005 in 1957 and 6,168 in 1961, next came British Columbia with employment figures of 5,001 and 2,946 workers, respectively...
> In 1961, the gross value of production amounted to $136,629,459, Quebec getting $61,262,965 of it. Most orders are placed by the federal government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say that the government should take steps to stabilize employment in our shipyards and I think that it could do it best by setting up a merchant marine as soon as possible. I suggest, therefore, that the motion be referred to a committee for study.

In short, here are a few most urgent recommendations that I wish to submit to the government.

1. That jurisdiction over the coastal trade be extended to the Belle Isle strait, Newfoundland being a Canadian province.

2. That the ships be built, repaired and registered in Canada and have their home ports here.

3. That the 33½ per cent subsidies be covered by permanent legislation and not by orders in council, as at the present time.

4. That shipyards be regulated by federal legislation, mainly for the following reasons:

(a) 60 per cent of shipbuilding involve contracts with the federal government.

(b) The inspection is carried out by the federal government.

(c) Shipbuilding is a national industry.

(d) The abovementioned subsidies are granted by the federal government. Hence shipping will be covered by federal legislation on coastal trade and licences will be delivered by the Department of Transport.

5. That a shipbuilding commission be set up to regulate Canadian shipyards. The commission could establish equitable plans for each area. In brief, for such a study, I respectfully suggest that the government should set up a parliamentary committee on coastal shipping in order that the recommendations made in the 1957 report be implemented.

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, as member for a riding bordering on the majestic Saguenay, one of the most beautiful rivers in the world, it is natural that I should be keenly interested in the establishment of a merchant marine and harbour improvements.

Our area is fortunate in that private undertakings have been able to organize themselves and establish their own shipping industry, because we would have been deprived altogether along that line. There is, for instance the Saguenay Terminal, which has its home port in Port Alfred and owns a sizeable fleet, that is about 100 ships which bring in raw materials from South America and Africa and export products manufactured in the Saguenay area, especially paper and aluminium.

That is not enough, however, and it does not meet present needs not only in my district but throughout the country. It must be remembered that shipbuilding was the first industry of its kind in Canada. If you read the economic history of our country you will see that the first industry established here was a shipyard. We have the advantage of being almost surrounded by water; we have oceans at the north, east and west and the majestic St. Lawrence and the great lakes to the south. However, we have no merchant marine to ply those waters. That is truly amazing on the part of a country with a population of nearly 20 million people.

We have shipyards and I know that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay) is keenly interested in this matter. He may have strong arguments but I should like to stress one point, the financial element. In spite of the numerous arguments he invoked, the member failed to show the need for shipbuilding. Indeed, the saddest point of all is that the government does not have the funds at present to build ships.

It is faced with the following problem: the people are overtaxed and still we are being asked for money for shipbuilding.

Here, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) for having raised this question of major importance for the Canadian economy. However, if concrete proposals enabling us to build ships are not brought down, all efforts will be of no avail. In fact, we have the necessary materials and labour, and we have well organized shipyards, but the funniest part of it all is that we lack the money. By the way, what is money? In itself, it is merely a means of acquiring property. Some economists call it a certificate to get goods.

As potential, we have the Bank of Canada, which is the people's bank, the nation's bank, and we are not using that potential, that power which could capitalize this country's assets. We could, considering that point of view, create thousands of new jobs in this country, we could train our young people and we would become much more interested, as our economy would be more prosperous.

On the other hand, if we consider the way money is being spent on social assistance—millions are being spent annually on social assistance of some kind—we cannot but conclude that instead of distributing money for nothing, it would be better to use it to build ships in which to carry our products to other countries and to bring back those products we need.

When we look upon small countries, such as Norway and Sweden and many others that have large fleets, we surely have cause for reflection. I often see in Chicoutimi harbour ships which come all the way from Sweden or Norway. As a matter of fact, it is on account of these ships coming in from far away countries that we benefit from a number of Canadians of foreign origin who are now assimilated to the French Canadians but whose origin is Norwegian, Swedish, even Finnish. These sailors discovered that we have a magnificent country, liked it, and have remained with us.

It has been established that shipping by waterway from Canada to foreign countries has increased considerably in 1962, that is, by 12 per cent.

Now that we want to extend Canada's export markets, perspectives seem tremendous. In the course of this week, and according to what I was told, I will probably have the opportunity, of introducing my Bill No. C-24, an Act to amend the Bank of Canada Act. If the house sees fit to pass that bill, we will then be able to increase our exports considerably and we will have to build a fleet of ships to sail the seven seas; we will then be able to do business with all those countries enjoying a relatively stable economy, a relatively stable government, from whom we could accept non convertible currencies. We may then also be able to increase our exports considerably.

Keeping all those countries in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in conclusion that Canada, after all, is an exporting country. The same can be said of my own Saguenay region, because if it were not for our exports nobody could earn a living there. All the industries of my region export 90, 95 and even 98 per cent of their production.

It is also the case with most of our large Canadian industries. Therefore, shipbuilding is of the utmost importance, but let us, by all means, open our eyes and see where we can obtain capital. A merchant marine will not be built by overtaxing people, but by tapping available sources of funds. We have the advantage of having the report of the royal commission on banking and finance. I did not have the time to look it over personally to see whether it contained concrete solutions to boost our economy. However, let us not forget that conditions now are not what they were 50 or 100 years ago. Times have changed and we have to take that evolution into account. When we can monetize our own improvements, we will be able to monetize the Canadian potential, to monetize, in the long run, our national resources, but, in order to do that, it is imperative that we build a merchant marine.

The financial system has changed and we can consider ourselves in a position to benefit from our wealth; from Canada's potential and from our natural resources. To achieve this goal, we must without fail set up a merchant marine of which Canada would be proud and which would allow the country to assert itself when we have a flag worthy of our country.

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration is a very important one. It is a pity that it was not introduced by the member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) when his party was on the other side of the house. When the hon. members belong to the party in power, they seem to remain idle, but when they are in the opposition, they become very aggressive.

In 1962, in connection with coastal shipping in Canada, the volume of goods carried in the inland waters of the St. Lawrence including the great lakes reached 43,375,648 tons. Ninety seven English ships not registered in Canada and three foreign ones engaged in coastal shipping with a temporary licence issued by the Minister of Transport were in operation in 1962.

Five million, 8 hundred and 99 thousand, 9 hundred tons, that is 13.6 per cent of the total coasting trade for 1962, have been shipped on vessels registered outside Canada. During the same year, such vessels carried: all British Columbia timber to harbours of eastern Canada; 94 per cent of limestone from Colborne to Clarkson; 90 per cent of ilmenite from Havre St-Pierre to Sorel; about 87 per cent of gypsum from Little Narrows to Montreal; over 50 per cent of iron ore from Wabana to Sydney; 65 per cent of the coal shipped from Sydney; 44 per cent of the iron ore shipped from Seven Islands.

That gives you an idea of the importance for our merchant marine, namely ships registered and built in Canada, to see that they possess the exclusive right of an inshore freight service or at least in the St. Lawrence inland waters.

It would also assist greatly the Canadian shipyards which, this way, could get contracts for the construction of boats which undertake exclusively that inshore service.

Our shipyards play a great part in the economic life of the Quebec area. They are among the most important employers, giving work to a great number of workers and specialized technicians who all receive salaries ranging among the highest in the Quebec area.

In addition, shipbuilding benefits the entire Canadian economy. The greater part of the materials used in shipbuilding are manufactured and processed in Canada. Steel, engines, electrical equipment and interior decorating materials are mostly manufactured in Canada and their manufacture provides jobs to a great number of Canadian workers whose earnings benefit the whole of our economy.

The hon. member for Three Rivers, minister of transport in the previous government, announced on May 12, 1961 that the Canadian government intended to introduce a legislation which would restrict coastal shipping to ships registered in Canada. On November 12, 1962, the hon. member reaffirmed his government's intention to amend the legislation so as to give effect to that proposal from May 12, 1961.

On June 13, 1963, the President of the Privy Council, who was minister of transport during the last session, has stated anew that the present government still intends to amend the legislation in order to reserve the coastal trade for Canadian ships.

Many foreign ships, including those of the United States, Australia, Italy, France, Greece and Western Germany reserve the coastal trade for ships flying the flag of their respective country.

Canada is fully justified to pass such a measure, for is could help greatly the economy and give employment to workers that could build ships as well as to crews of ships flying the Canadian flag.

About 15 days ago, the national federation of metallurgy submitted to the federal cabinet a brief asking that a Canadian merchant marine be set up. That brief contained a letter from the late Hon. Ian A. Mackenzie, former minister of veterans affairs—it goes back to June 4, 1945, that is 20 years ago—addressed to the Vancouver shipyard workers:

> On behalf of the Canadian government, I wish to express to you Canada's appreciation for your contribution to victory. The workers of British Columbia, using new techniques acquired since the beginning of the war, built ships totalling three million tons: 53 warships, 231 transport ships—for a total cost of $500 million, half of which was paid in salaries locally; 65 ships are under construction. When you started, 90 per cent of the materials were imported. At the present time, 90 per cent are Canadian made, and this ensures the continued existence of our shipbuilding industry.
> Thanks to your competence, your zeal and your energy, in other words, thanks to you, workers, Vancouver's maritime industry is unparalleled from the point of view both of equality and production

Canada is grateful to you and assure you that your competence and your skills will be necessary for future tasks—

And here, Mr. Speaker, is the most important part of the letter written 20 years ago:

Let us not repeat past mistakes. The present government believes that Canada's shipbuilding industry is here to stay.

The navy and the merchant marine you have built up will be retained and developed. The ships you have built will transport Canadian products to the four corners of the world thus creating employment and opportunities for Canadian workers.

The present government has set forth and is now carrying out policies to ensure employment and to expand our trade in the post-war era. Your skill will be needed in the shipyards and in the new industries which will be set up through our expanding trade.

The government which has prepared and launched this vast shipbuilding program in Vancouver requests your help to carry out the projects it has devised to ensure that you are employed in the trades in which you have become so highly skilled.

Sincerely yours,
Ian A. Mackenzie,
Minister of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, that letter was written 20 years ago. It is being said that the present government has prepared plans which it is now carrying out, but I believe that those plans were put aboard a destroyer and that they sank to the bottom of the ocean.

Now, on page 6 of that brief, one can find the following lines:

That state of affairs is all the more distressing since Canada has a maritime tradition she can be rightly proud of. During the years following 1867, this country came fourth among the countries having a merchant marine. We came third as shipbuilders during the last war, next to the United States and Great Britain.

What is possible during war time is also feasible during peacetime for constructive purposes. The setting up of a modern merchant marine would guarantee the expansion of our foreign trade and would contribute actively to the increase of our exports. It would provide employment to thousands of Canadians and bring about the technical renovation of a major sector of our heavy industry. It would provide additional revenue to several related industries and to various localities. Finally, it would provide a prompt solution to one of our major economic problems, that is the chronic deficit of our balance of international payments.

And the same brief continues as follows:

We have at our disposal the capital and the human and material resources we need. At this stage, the federal government must make a decision, and it must act right now.

A while ago, I noticed that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay) mentioned goods such as iron ore, wheat and lumber, whose shipping alone would keep going a fleet of 40 ships.

[Mr. Beaulé.]

And again, in the same brief, the shipping of iron ore, wheat and lumber is mentioned. Here is what it says:

These three types of shiploads make a total of 22.1 million tons. The shipping alone of these three kinds of goods would require a fleet of 40 ships of 25,000 tons each, at the rate of two trips monthly.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an area which should not be disregarded by hon. members.

I also congratulate the hon. member for Levis for having supported the resolution. I think that the time has come for the government to act.

Mr. Speaker, putting the merchant marine back into service in Canada is a necessity for our Canadian economy. The coastal trade for instance should be more important in Canada than in any other country, considering our geographical position, and the great extent of our coastal and interior waters.

The great lakes, are, after all, inland seas. The coastal trade helps to train sailors and shipowners. If the existing legislation is maintained, which tolerates an almost disloyal competition, and forces our shipowners, whose vessels engage in the coastal trade, to struggle under exceptionally difficult conditions, they will be unable to stand up to that competition, and a crisis will ensue which will be difficult for Canada to overcome.

Our coastal waters could very well be invaded by ships registered anywhere in the commonwealth, except in Canada.

That is why it is high time for Canada to have her own merchant navy. This could also keep that shipping revenue in Canada, which would help maintain a favourable balance of payments in our international trade.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Over the years I have always been in favour of Canada having a merchant marine. I am therefore very much in support of the principle of the motion which is now before us.

However, this is one of the most complicated matters with which we could be asked to deal. A great many of us remember the time when Canada did have a merchant marine, and a good one. Because of government policy, or perhaps because of competition, we lost our merchant fleet. Therefore, when we consider in principle building another one we should take into consideration the reasons why we lost our merchant marine, and the difficulties which would face the establishment of a new one. There is the question of the cost of the ships and of the existence of a profitable contractual basis for shipowners, shipbuilders and the union. There is the question of the standardization of costs in the operation. There are so many imponderables that this is a matter which could not be discussed in one hour in this house.

My only purpose in rising is to say that I have always been in favour of the re-establishment of a Canadian merchant marine. I believe that as an export nation and with the shore line we have on the Atlantic, the Pacific and the great lakes, we are required to have a merchant marine; but I also believe that in order to make certain that we bring into being a new merchant marine of the most modern, efficient and functional nature, it requires a great deal of study and will require commitments by those who build and those who operate. Therefore, sir, I most certainly hope that in the furtherance of the principle and the belief that we should have a merchant marine, this motion will be referred to a committee of the House of Commons for a full and continuing study, with a report being brought back to the house.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, with the wording of the notice of motion before us, one cannot quarrel in any respect, depending of course on how one may interpret it. It says:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine.

In a general sense I say that Canada needs to keep itself informed in any field of economic activity, whether it be in the production of goods, the production of services or in the utilization of its skills in the production of ships for the carrier trade of the world. Canada lives today in a state of international economic circumstances that challenges our imagination as to what course we should choose for the future. Indeed, there is very little in the past to guide us except to remind us of events that may have been happy ones, or sometimes unhappy ones. Our shipbuilders learned their skills in the past. We have inherited this ability to construct ships in Canada that were much needed, sorely needed indeed, a few years ago during world war II, as they were also needed in world war I. So that when you approach the reasons why a nation should undertake to promote a particular economic activity, you find very often reasons for undertaking such proposals that do not appear on the surface when you first examine the question. I have heard some say quickly, and with apparent good reason and common sense, that if we build a merchant fleet, man it and endeavour to develop cargoes for these ships to the international ports of the world, we may very well lose some of our export trade because those foreign countries who derive foreign exchange from the carrier trade will not have the wherewithal with which to purchase our particular goods. This is a superficial argument and I think that when very close examination is given to it, it will not stand up in this age of multilateral trade and great strivings to bring nations of the world into freer relationships in trading, the production of their goods and services with each other.

What we are looking for throughout the world, with the exploding population that we have, is an expansion of production to meet the total world needs, and no longer can we hide our heads in the sand, like the ostrich, and hope that world events will not touch us. It is inevitable that they will. It seems to me that in our pursuit of national economic goals, which we are told by those who are skilful in these fields are full employment, price stability, maximum multilateral trade and steady growth of our national production—these are the standard words that are used—surely we must, through education and experience, also remember that a great asset which we have is the skill of our people in the production of goods, and one of those great skills is the production of ships. I think that Canada would indeed suffer greatly, if it has not already suffered, by its unwillingness to at least make some degree of investment in the maintenance of a merchant marine.

There is no doubt whatsoever that to all of us in the Atlantic provinces and many others it seems that Canada should not exist without ships of this nation traversing the oceans of the world. We have long believed this was part of our development in the first place. Sir Samuel Cunard thought so many years ago, and he was able to meet the competition in those days. Surely to goodness we can find for ourselves some share of the carrier service internationally in this year 1964, and carrying on in the future. I subscribe to the view that a Canadian merchant navy will provide a splendid opportunity for young Canadians to have a career in the trading services, as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) pointed out a short time ago.

I believe that the maintenance of our skills in shipbuilding will be required by Canada to hold its place in the changing pattern of international trade and commerce. I believe, also, that we need to utilize all our capabilities in the field of production and should be ready to meet with a very flexible capability any changes that are bound to occur. In the past decade the rebuilt and modernized economies of other countries have become increasingly vigorous and imaginative. Those countries I believe have managed to obtain for themselves a share of the international carrier trade, and even without it they would still have maintained their trading patterns with Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the following questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: Mr. Howard (Skeena), the regulations respecting government wharves; Mr. Herridge (Kootenay West), activities of the United States in Viet Nam; Mr. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam), increase in the price of sugar.

The house will resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

'Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the deduction from income granted in respect of certain tuition fees be extended to include tuition fees paid by a taxpayer who is a student, whether or not he is a full time student, to an educational institution in Canada

(a) that is a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level,

(b) that is a school operated by or on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, a municipality in Canada, or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(c) that is a high school or secondary school providing courses leading to a secondary school certificate or diploma that is a requirement for entrance to a college or university, or

(d) that is certified by the Minister of Labour to be an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualifications of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession, if the tuition fees paid by the taxpayer for the year exceed $25.

2. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a dependant in respect of whom a taxpayer may deduct an amount not exceeding $550 in computing his taxable income shall include a taxpayer's brother or sister who was 21 years of age or over and in full time attendance at a school or university.

3. That the period commencing on December 5, 1963 within which a new manufacturing or processing business must have commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities in a designated area in order to obtain a certificate for the purposes of section 71A of the act be extended to March 31, 1967.

4. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years in determining whether 95 per cent of the assets used in a business were new and situated in a designated area, for purposes of establishing under section 71A of the act that a person was carrying on the business in a designated area, the value of the assets shall be their fair market value notwithstanding that such value may be different from their capital cost.

5. That where at a time when an area was a designated area a business has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business, or an application has been made in writing to the Minister of Industry by a taxpayer in respect of a business that upon the fulfilment of specified conditions would be certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business in the designated area, that area, notwithstanding that it may no longer be a designated area, shall for the purpose of the application of section 71A of the act to that particular business continue to be a designated area.

6. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income all expenditures of a current nature for scientific research carried on outside Canada that are expenditures made in the year

(a) for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer, or

(b) to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business.

7. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income amounts expended by him in relation to an objection to an assessment or an appeal from an assessment and shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof.

8. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income an amount paid in the year or in a previous year since 1962 as a contribution to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was a contributor even if he also deducts an amount as a contribution in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was not a contributor, but the maximum amount deductible in a year in respect of past services while he was a contributor shall not exceed $1,500 minus the aggregate of the amounts deducted in the year in respect of services rendered by him in the year and in respect of services rendered by him previous to the year while he was not a contributor.

9. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the period of 60 days from the end of a year within which an employer may pay an amount to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by his employees be increased to 120 days.

10. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years it be made clear that any amount received by an employer upon the winding up or reorganization of a pension fund or plan shall be included in his income.

11. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years subsection (3) of section 12 of the act, which provides rules concerning an outlay or expense payable by a taxpayer to a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length, be amended so that a taxpayer who at the end of his taxation year has a liability that

(a) arose in respect of a non-arm's length transaction,

(b) was deductible in computing his income, and

(c) has been outstanding for two years following the end of the taxation year in which it accrued must include in income for the third year after it accrued an amount equal to the liability, unless the debtor and creditor sign and file an agreement in which they elect to have their taxes computed as though the debt had been paid and replaced by a loan on the first day of that third year.

12. That the 20 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him after 1964 by a corporation resident in Canada that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be reduced to 15 per cent, and that in consequence thereof:

(a) Part IID of the act imposing a tax equal to 5 per cent of certain dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be repealed;

(b) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed by Part IIIA of the act on income earned after 1964 by a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be reduced to 15 per cent; and

(c) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed on the taxable income earned after 1964 by a non-resident-owned investment corporation be reduced to 15 per cent.

13. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years, where a taxpayer has disposed of his interest in a partnership, such part of the consideration as is reasonable in the circumstances shall be deemed to be proceeds of disposition of depreciable property of the taxpayer used in the partnership business.

14. That for the 1964 taxation year the amount deductible in computing taxable income in respect of a dependant child who was over 15 and under 18 years of age at the end of the year shall not exceed $470 if an allowance was paid under the Family Allowances Act in respect of the child for any month after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

15. That for the 1965 and subsequent taxation years, a child shall be regarded as a child qualified for family allowance for any year at the end of which he was over 15 and under 18 years of age, if an allowance under the Family Allowances Act was paid in the year in respect of that child after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

16. That with regard to the definition of degree of Canadian ownership in section 139A of the said Act, the said measure provide as follows:

"(1) Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, and equity shares representing in the aggregate not less than 25 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada, or a combination thereof, or

(B) a class or classes of shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned more than 75 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and a class or classes of equity shares of the corporation representing in the aggregate not less than 50 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned equity shares representing in the aggregate more than 75 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and"

(2) Subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) thereof, by repealing paragraph (b) thereof and by substituting therefor the following paragraphs:

"(b) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (c); or

(c) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary controlled corporation

(i) having issued and outstanding equity shares none of which were owned by a person other than

(A) the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(B) a non-resident person not related to the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(C) an individual resident in Canada, or

(D) a corporation controlled in Canada, and

(ii) subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty-day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (b)."

(3) Paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) a corporation that has share capital is not controlled in Canada at a particular time unless at that time the corporation is resident in Canada, and more than 50 per cent of its issued and outstanding shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of its paid up capital are owned by

(i) individuals resident in Canada,

(ii) corporations resident in Canada with respect to each of which

(A) more than 50 per cent of the issued shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and

(B) shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of the paid up capital

are owned by individuals resident in Canada, or

(iii) any combination of individuals or corporations described in subparagraph (i) or (ii);

(b) where

(i) a non-resident person,

(ii) a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, or

(iii) a corporation that is related to a non-resident person within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139

has a right under a contract in equity or otherwise either immediately or in the future and either absolutely or contingently, to, or to acquire, equity shares in a corporation, those shares shall

(iv) unless the right is contingent upon an event that it is not reasonable to expect to occur within a reasonable time, or

(v) unless the right is such that a reasonable man concerned only with the value of the shares would not exercise it.

be deemed

(vi) to be owned by the person who has the right.

(vii) to be owned by a non-resident person, where the person who has the right is a corporation described in subparagraph (ii) or (iii), and

(viii) where the shares are unissued,

(A) to be issued and outstanding, and

(B) to have a paid-up capital value, with respect to each share, equal to

1. the par value, where the shares have a par value,

2. the amount that would be paid with respect to each share to exercise the right under the terms of the contract, where the shares have no par value and an amount is specified in the contract, or

3. the market value at the end of the relevant sixty day period of a share of the class of shares of that corporation that is most closely similar to that share, where the shares have no par value and no amount is specified in the contract,

and any other person who actually owns the shares in respect of which that right exists shall be deemed not to own those shares."

(4) Subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(e) "equity share" means

(i) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the coroporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding-up of the corporation, as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid-up capital value of the share to which the right relates, and

(ii) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, after a dividend at a rate not in excess of 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding-up of the corporation, after a payment of a part of the surplus at a rate not in excess of 10 per cent has been made to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs,

as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid-up capital value of the share to which the right relates; and

(f) "paid-up capital value" with reference to a share, means

(i) in the case of an unissued share that is deemed by paragraph (b) to be issued and outstanding, the amount determined under clause (B) of subparagraph (viii) of that paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, an amount equal to the paid-up capital of the corporation that is represented by the shares of the class to which that share belongs divided by the number of shares of that class that are in fact issued and outstanding."

(5) In the case of a taxation year commencing before January 1, 1965, of a corporation that would have had a degree of Canadian ownership in the 1964 taxation years if section 139A of the said act had not been amended by this act, that portion of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act, as amended by this act, that precedes paragraph (a) thereof shall, if the corporation elects in prescribed manner before January 1, 1965, be read as follows:

"139A. (1) For the purposes of this act, a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership in a taxation year if throughout any sixty-day period commencing after March 16, 1964 and ending before January 1, 1965"

(6) This section is applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years."

and for the purpose of determining whether a corporation had a degree of Canadian ownership for the purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (1a) of section 106 of the said act, section 139A of the said act shall

(a) in relation to any dividend declared on or before March 16, 1964 be read as if it had not been amended by the said measure, and

(b) in relation to any dividend declared after March 16, 1964 be read as amended by the said measure.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, in starting my remarks tonight perhaps you will allow me to offer congratulations to the hon. member for York West (Mr. Kelly), who made a great effort and played so well to assist his team in winning the Stanley cup. I think he deserves to be congratulated because he is a gentleman on the ice, as well as a very good player.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, at the close of my remarks this afternoon, I referred to a necessary change in the Income Tax Act, especially with regard to receipts for charitable donations, which may be included in the income tax return for deduction purposes.

This act needs to be changed and I believe everybody here will agree. Efforts must be made to amend this part of the Income Tax Act, but until the said act is amended, it seems to me rather strict recommendations should be made to the Quebec taxation officers in order that they themselves may be the first to respect the legislation we voted in this house, and that they stop harassing the taxpayers as they do at the present time.

We already have a suggestion to amend this legislation and it should be included in the budget resolutions. Here is this suggestion: For the first $3,000 taxable income, there should be an automatic deduction of 10 per cent for charitable donations, without receipts being required; for the next $2,000 or $3,000, the percentage may be 7½ per cent, and for the next $1,000 or $2,000, it may be reduced to 5 per cent.

In the case of the companies, this measure would not be as necessary since unit payments of each company are higher than those of individuals and these companies are in a better position—they have accountants, a bookkeeping service specializing in taxation settlements—to meet these Income Tax Act provisions.

But in the case of individuals, it is urgent to amend the act. We must put an end to the violation of the law, as I have shown this afternoon by striking and typical cases, by officials of the tax department and especially to unsatisfactory investigations, where the taxpayers are not consulted and are often treated with scorn.

Mr. Chairman, we are ready to pass amendments to the tax act, especially in order to cut taxes. But we think that those amendments are also needed and we ask the minister to deal with them as soon as possible.

After the study in committee of those resolutions, a bill will be put before us in order that we may pass it. In my opinion, the minister should make an effort so that when the bill on budget resolutions is introduced this year, the Income Tax Act will be amended in order to allow a standard reduction for charity purposes for all taxpayers, without having to supply receipts. We would thus eliminate the continuous complaints that we now receive. May I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that we receive every week dozens of complaints from taxpayers about the discriminatory and dictatorial ways of tax inspectors and assessors.

May the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue make an effort as soon as possible to improve this legislation accordingly.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I might clear up one or two points which have been raised, mainly on paragraph 1, because I think it would be easier to answer some of the other questions relating to the following paragraphs when we come to them. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, in discussing the proposed exemption for students' fees, raised the question of textbooks, and also various other items of expense incurred by certain individuals in the process of earning their income. This is one of the questions which I have no doubt—in fact I am sure—is being studied carefully by the royal commission on taxation. It is a very difficult and complicated question, and it seemed to me that as the report of the commission will be available some time this fall we should wait until we receive it, before reaching a conclusion on that particular point.

The hon. member for Lapointe has dealt with a question which is not covered by these resolutions, but with the indulgence of the committee perhaps I might be allowed to make a brief comment with regard to it. He has talked about the difficult question of deductions for charitable donations and the difficulties which the administration of this problem has caused both in his province and in other provinces of Canada. This matter was raised at some length and in some detail by various hon. members last fall, and I can assure all hon. members that since then I have given considerable thought and consideration to this problem. I discussed it on many occasions with our late colleague, the then minister of national revenue, who was very concerned to see that this difficulty is resolved. However, as I said in my budget speech, we came to the conclusion that with the resources at our disposal and with the time available I was not prepared to make a recommendation which I felt would meet all of the difficulties which had been raised.

Therefore the matter was referred specifically and directly to the royal commission on taxation, and the chairman was asked, with the advantages of his not inconsiderable research staff and the special qualifications of the members of his commission, whether he would address himself to this particular problem and give us his commission's best judgment on how to resolve it. As I said when the budget was brought down, that is where the matter stands. It has certainly not been ignored by the government; we are taking it seriously, but we think we should take advantage of the machinery which is now available and which will not always be available—because the commission expects to wind up its operations this fall—to make a careful study of this question.

I can assure the hon. member for Lapointe that his point concerning the administration of individual income tax offices was one which was carefully noted by the previous minister of national revenue, and I can assure him that his remarks will be equally noted and seriously considered by the present minister. Further than that I do not think I should go; it would be straying away from the resolution which is before us. I think I have answered the questions that have been raised so far with regard to paragraph 1, and perhaps I might deal with the others when we come to the respective paragraphs.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, before getting into the crux of the subject I should like to follow the example of the hon. member for Lapointe and congratulate the hon. member for York West upon his fine performance on Saturday night. I am sure you will not rule me out of order, Mr. Chairman, because we are on the income tax resolution, and as I understand the hon. member is getting some kind of subsidy amounting to about $4,000 it might be interesting to know whether this sum is taxable. I do not know whether the minister would care to comment on that. Regardless of whether or not it is taxable, I think the hon. member deserves to be congratulated. He earned all he got and a lot more, and in making these remarks I believe I am reflecting the sentiments of the whole house.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, since we are discussing the budget resolution concerning the Income Tax Act, it is in order to make certain comments on taxation. The resolution was set forth in the following terms:

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act—

To legislate some specific things, among others.

I feel I must urge the minister at this time to consider the pressing need for a reduction of taxes in general and especially personal income tax which, in the opinion of many of our country's economists, has reached a level which is beyond all reason and might be called confiscatory.

I know that the minister may answer me as he did before. He will say that he cannot, at this stage, consider reducing taxes because a commission is now studying the whole Canadian taxation system and nothing can be changed in the system until that commission has submitted its report.

It may well be, Mr. Chairman, that after the commission has presented its report, the minister will then take that opportunity, in order to continue to temporize, to say that the report must now be fully considered.

You can see where that will lead us. It will lead us to a long period of inaction and stagnation. For it is a recognized fact that the fiscal and taxation structure in our country is precluding those very results the minister is hoping for, that is, an expansion of the economy and the economic activity in this country.

The Minister of Finance might say that the members on this side of the House do not seem to agree on the advisability of reducing taxes. As a matter of fact, the minister did say that—he even attempted to make me contradict my colleague, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), by saying that he was against a reduction of taxes while others like myself, had spoken in favour of a certain reduction.

[Mr. Martineau.]

Well, I think that the Minister of Finance is attempting to spread confusion unduly as regards this question, which is however very clear. The former minister of finance, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, did say at a certain time, during one of our party's conventions, that he was against a particular reduction, that is to a resolution which would compel our party, once it would become the government, for it will soon be in power again, to reduce taxes in a particular sector and by a certain amount.

Such a stand is logical, of course, as we cannot—and the Minister of Finance will agree—impose specific measures on a minister of finance, who should be entirely free to determine what taxes that should be reduced, which ones should be maintained and which ones should be repealed. We all agree on that point but we, on this side of the house, sincerely feel that in general taxes should be reduced immediately.

If we take that attitude it is because we believe in fiscal responsibility. The minister may claim that, regardless of what some people say, American taxpayers are more heavily assessed than their Canadian counterparts. Such a contention must be examined closely and distinctions have to be made. A Canadian financial paper, the Financial Post of Toronto has made a proper comparison between American and Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, I hope you will not call me to order because, as I said at the outset of my remarks, we are considering the Income Tax Act and the amendments to be made to it. And we say that these amendments must tend to reduce taxes, so as to make it possible for the Canadian industry to shake off its shackles, which is impossible as long as the government will not assume energetically its responsibilities in that field.

As I was saying, the United States did not wait for the findings of a commission of inquiry or a similar commission to cut taxes substantially. That cut will range between $11 and $12 billion. You must admit that a cut of $11.5 billion is quite extraordinary. Such a step was taken because the United States realized that it was the only way to step up the economic expansion and, if need be, to free the capital needed to increase consumption and the industrial, commercial and financial activity of the country in general.

It could be done, because they knew at the same time how to take strong measures in order to reduce government expenditures. That is the reason why, and the minister is quite aware of it, in the current United States budget, a $3 billion cut in government expenditures has been forecast. But here, what do we do? It is stated with an emotion which

I do not think is genuine or certainly with an obvious lack of logic, that economic activity must be stepped up.

However, taxation deprives the taxpayers of gains they could have reinvested in production. In fact, it is like an octopus reaching with its arms in every direction and devouring anything that gets in its way. The government increases its control over everybody's income by its fiscal policy. Thus, the Minister of Finance has to collect the necessary revenue in order to pay the increasing governmental expenditures. His attitude is surely inconsistent. If he does not believe me, he only has to consider the financial reports throughout the country and the editorials in newspapers such as the Financial Post and the Financial Times. Every responsible paper in the country does not hesitate to show in very strong terms the inconsistency of the minister's attitude and, at the same time, of the government's position.

I shall refer again to the example of two average taxpayers, one living in Canada, and the other in the United States, both earning a salary of $10,000 a year. What is the situation of both taxpayers in the federal taxation field? The American will pay $1,799 in federal income tax while the Canadian taxpayer will pay $1,664. This means that mathematically, as far as figures are concerned the American wage earner has a net income of $8,201 and the Canadian wage earner a net income of $8,336, that is the Canadian will get about $135 more than the American wage earner, after deduction of the federal income tax.

But such is not the real situation. It must be remembered that in general, wages in United States are much higher than in Canada for similar jobs or trades. When the average American wage earner gets $10,000 per year to perform a certain type of work, his Canadian counterpart who does the same work, according to the data compiled by the Financial Post of March 21, 1964, gets only $7,500. So there is a wide difference between the salary of the American taxpayer, whether he is a plumber, an electrician or an unskilled labourer, and that of the Canadian taxpayer. Before income tax deductions, there is already a difference of $2,500 in salary and, after tax deduction, the average American still has $8,201 but the Canadian only has $6,462 left. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian taxpayer doing the same kind of work as the American taxpayer gets about $2,000 less than his counterpart.

And the disparity is still wider because the American is paid in American dollars, which is normal; while the Canadian is paid in Canadian dollars which are at a discount; therefore when the American taxpayer receives $8,857, the Canadian taxpayer receives only $6,462. Then the gap is about $2,400. And one must also consider that American dollars have more purchasing power than Canadian dollars. It is generally agreed that the American taxpayer pays less for consumer goods than the Canadian taxpayer.

Therefore, Canadian taxpayers are clearly at a disadvantage compared with the Americans. And yet, the minister draws a comparison with the American taxpayer to deprive the poor Canadian taxpayers of the income tax cut they clearly need. In so doing he does not seem to consider the greater need we have in Canada for capital, that is, for savings. How could the Canadian taxpayer save money when every dollar he could normally put aside is taken or confiscated so to speak, by income tax? What does such a situation lead to?

As a result, the economic and industrial development of Canada is seriously set back because Canadians simply cannot afford to save the capital required for investment.

It is all very well for the minister to travel across the country and deliver great speeches on the need for Canada to control its industry. Those are fine statements of intent but it would be much more important for the minister to give the Canadian people the financial means to save and invest those savings in Canadian productive industries. Otherwise, we will unavoidably have complete foreign control over our industry. Unfortunately, there is no other outcome for the stand taken by the minister on that matter.

That is where the minister will lead us, and this would be a result we would all deplore.

At this stage where this budget resolution respecting Income Tax Act is being discussed, I believe the Minister of Finance, who is the high priest of finance in Canada, should not try to find excuses—it is too late now that he has assumed the duties of Minister of Finance—but legislate or at least introduce in this parliament legislation to follow through or make possible the objectives which he said were his and which seemed to him so easy to reach when he sat on the opposition side.

Mr. Chairman, I shall have the opportunity, when we consider the various articles of this last resolution to ask pertinent questions of the minister.

For instance, as regards article No. 1, I wish the minister would tell us how much this provision would cost the federal treasury.

Moreover, I would like the minister to give us, if he has them at hand, the figures indicating the total number of persons to be affected by this reduction granted for tuition fees. We support this measure for we believe it is a means through which the federal government can, without interfering in the field of teaching and education, a strictly provincial field, help by an abatement the person who wishes to improve his education. However, we wish we knew how much this will cost the Canadian treasury. We would also like to know how many persons will benefit.

Another question which comes to my mind is which body or agency will decide whether such and such a course will benefit from the deduction. In fact, the clause states:

> —the deduction from income granted in respect of certain tuition fees be extended to include tuition fees paid by a taxpayer who is a student, whether or not he is a full time student, to an educational institution in Canada.

I, therefore, ask the minister to tell us who, in the federal government will define what he means by "an educational institution in Canada"?

I also find that paragraph (d) of clause 1 defines an educational institution in Canada as follows:

> —that is certified by the Minister of Labour to be an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualifications of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession.

That is, to my mind, giving up to a point the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) some control over education. If we look more closely at the situation, it will be realized that practically any course may be described as providing or improving the qualifications of a person for employment. Indeed, even a classical course, in the terms devoted to literature or the humanities, or similar things, may very well be put forward as helping people improve their knowledge and general training, and increase their chances of securing more remunerative and responsible employment.

Therefore, I would say that the provision should be extended not only to courses recognized by the Minister of Labour, but also to courses which could be recognized by agencies coming under the provincial departments of public education or the secretary of the province which has no department of public education; I think the provisions of section 1(d) are on the one hand too restrictive and on the other they are not restrictive enough if the Minister of Labour can decide what courses are eligible under the special provisions of that section.

No doubt the Minister of Finance will clear up the matter and assure us that the federal government has no underlying intention of interfering in a strictly provincial field.

As far as the $25 limit concerning the deduction for tuition fees is concerned, I feel that it is not appropriate; providing that a taxpayer has paid tuition fees, he should be entitled to a full deduction for income tax purposes.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make concerning the Income Tax Act in general and more particularly with regard to paragraph 1. I would be pleased if the minister would give me the proper answers as I am particularly anxious to get them.

[Text]

Mr. Cardiff: I wonder if the minister could tell us why it is that changes are made each year in the income tax return forms? Each year they have different wording that has the same meaning, but it confuses a lot of people. Surely it is not necessary to change forms each year.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member has a good point and possibly the Department of National Revenue, when it is striving for perfection, strives a little hard on occasion. The trouble is that as we change the law from year to year in parliament we complicate the lives of people who draw up these forms, as well as the lives of the people who have to pay the taxes. On behalf of the Acting Minister of National Revenue I can assure my hon. friend that his officials do the best they can. Perhaps it would be better if the form were not changed every year, and I will put the suggestion to the minister.

Mr. Cardiff: The forms should be in the simplest language possible, so that people may understand it. It may be all very well for people with good education; but a lot of people who have to make out these forms and pay income tax do not have much education, and the result is that they have to get the services of a chartered accountant to assist them in completing the forms.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on paragraph 1 with regard to education. I think the minister has recognized that education is a very important thing in Canada today, and we have only to look at a few figures to realize how expensive it is.

Automation has made education a national necessity for our survival. Over the past three years our elementary and secondary school population have more than doubled, while our total population only increased by a little over 14 per cent. During the same period our educational expenses increased by 382 per cent. Very careful note should be taken of this, and also of the fact that during the same period of time these expenses represented an increase from 2.5 per cent to almost 5 per cent of our gross national product.

In a period of five years enrolment in universities increased from 86,000 to over 141,000, and this pace will increase more and more.

I feel that education must be national in scope. Indeed, this was recognized by the federal government when we built vocational schools, or rather when we assisted provinces to build vocational schools and paid three-quarters of the cost of building and equipping them. As a matter of fact, the previous Conservative government spent over $300 million on a crash program to train young men and women in readiness for automation. I should like to say to the minister that education imposes a very heavy burden on the municipalities. Around 50 per cent of the municipal tax dollar today goes into education and I should like to suggest to the minister that this 50 per cent should be allowed as an exemption. I think this is important because 70 per cent of the taxpayers in municipalities have incomes of $4,000 or less.

I know that part time and full time students are to be allowed exemptions if the fee is $25 or over. I am a little puzzled about paragraph 2, which reads:

> That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a dependant in respect of whom a taxpayer may deduct an amount not exceeding $550 in computing his taxable income shall include a taxpayer's brother or sister who was 21 years of age or over and in full time attendance at a school or university.

I should like to ask the minister why this does not apply to a father or a mother of those dependants—or does it? I am not clear of the amounts. It would look as it if did not apply to a father, a mother, or even a widow—would the minister state present exemptions.

Then I should like to go on to another clause, and ask if the minister intends to allow professional people such as lawyers, dentists and doctors exemptions in respect of postgraduate courses which do not lead to a degree. I should like to ask the minister another question: What is the position of those who are taking agricultural courses, sometimes of short duration, which do not lead to a degree. Are they to be allowed the same exemption? Then I am wondering about equipment. Does this apply to a trade school and, if it does, will the students be allowed exemptions in respect of the tools and equipment it may be necessary for them to buy to take the courses. This is an important point. I am also wondering whether any provision has been made for those in the rural areas who have to travel 20 or 30 miles to take this training. Is this travelling to be allowed as an exemption? It is much harder for a fellow who has to get transportation in order to attend a night school to take his course.

Another thing I wish to comment on is the baby bonus. I want to congratulate the minister on paying this up to the ages of 16 and 17 but I am wondering why he quit before they got out of high school. If these two ages of 16 and 17 are sound, and I agree with the minister it is certainly sound to allow a boy or girl to continue his or her education for those years, it is equally sound to help them finish their course because their earning power will be much higher and they will become a much greater asset to the country. I should like the minister to explain this or reconsider it in the future so that we may carry them over high school, because it does increase their earning power and it comes back as an asset to the country.

Mr. Hales: Before making a few observations on paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of the resolution I wish to say that we seem to be getting into a more confused and complicated state of taxation all the time. Each year it is becoming more and more difficult to make out our income tax, and it has even got to the position where we have to hire auditors to do the work. I think all one can say of the amendments which the minister brought up last year and is bringing up this year is that they have provided a great deal of work for auditors throughout the country, and we shall have to hire more auditors if we are going to keep up with this. There is nothing in this resolution offering any hope of lower taxes. It is a resolution to a coat-tail budget. The United States introduced reductions in taxation. Any economic upsurge there will spill over into this country and the minister will reap some of the benefit. Therefore, he felt, it was not necessary for him to make those reductions.

Last fall he increased our income tax by 1 per cent in the old age pension section and stepped it up to a maximum of $120. So we see no reduction. We see increases. This is the situation we are confronted with. I propose to confine my remarks to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 which have to do with changes in the regulations appertaining to the designated areas. I can only surmise that these changes were brought in because it has been a flop. I am speaking of the proposals as far as bringing industries to these areas is concerned. A question appeared on the order paper the other day asking how many industries have been attracted by the designated areas legislation brought in by the Liberal government, and we were told there were some 34. I think there were 35 areas designated in the whole of Canada, so we have less than one per designated area established under this new legislation of the Liberal government.

I should be ruled out of order, I am sure, if I were to attempt to deal with the question of designated areas. I certainly hope that at some time when the estimates of the Department of Industry come before the committee we shall be able to debate the designation of these areas. We have legislation. It was brought about under that act last fall and now we are asked in paragraph 3 to extend the benefits to industries locating in designated areas. We are asked to extend these for four years from December 5, 1963 to March 31, 1967. As I said at the beginning, this seems to be put in here to attract these industries because the former provisions were not palatable enough. So they are saying: Let us extend this for another four years and see if we cannot attract more industries into these areas. Therefore, the country as a whole is being asked to extend this for four years. I would say we would approve this in principle, but we would not approve the basis upon which these areas are designated.

So we go on to paragraph 4. In paragraph 4 the government is asking us to change section 71A of the act whereby, as I understand it—and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong—the machinery that is used by a company located in a designated area, under the act as it now stands, has to be 95 per cent new equipment. Now they are asking us to change the act so that this machinery shall be valued at the fair market value; in other words, they are going to make it possible to use second hand machinery. This makes it possible for an industry to move from a town into a designated area and use second hand machinery. They would be able to remove the machinery they are using, start up in one of these areas and reap the benefits of the incentives set up in the act.

I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Finance what they had to say about this matter on November 7 last. At that time there was some discussion as to the value of such machinery and whether it should be new or second hand. As reported at page 4496 of Hansard, the Minister of Industry said:

> I suggest this is what is most likely to happen if the present legislation is amended so as to allow the advantages of accelerated depreciation and income tax incentives in respect of second hand or used machinery. It is precisely to avoid the likelihood of businesses which, rather than expanding and creating new operations, merely shift their scene of operation from one area to another that we need this provision.

That is why this provision was put in, as I see it, that the machinery should be 95 per cent new if you are going into one of these designated areas. Now they are asking us to put on it a fair market value. What is a fair market value? I presume they mean that if a machine is listed in a company's books as having an actual cash value of, say $15,000, if it was sold on the market that day and brought $5,000, that would be its fair market value and they would be able to use this machinery in moving into a designated area. The Minister of Finance was down in Windsor last November and was asked a question down there concerning this matter. The gentleman asking him the question said:

> Could you give me a quick clarification of the significance of "new" in this context? If I just change the name of my business but I continue to do the same as before, does this mean it is new?

Mr. Gordon replied:

> No, but if you form a subsidiary and you build a great big plant next door, it is new.

That question and answer, quoted to the Minister of Finance by an hon. member, drew from the minister the answer:

> With new equipment.

As I understand it, this very situation exists at the present time in the city of Galt. I am sorry the hon. member for Waterloo South is not here. As the house knows, he has been sick for some time, and I am sure we wish him a speedy recovery. In the city of Galt an industry has been operating for a few years; they are going to pack up and move over to Brantford, and as I understand it they can now take the second hand machinery they have and qualify for the incentives outlined in paragraph 4.

Paragraph 5 is just a matter of continuity. As the minister explained earlier, an area that is now in existence as a designated area, should it cease to be a designated area the plants or industries situated there can continue and reap the benefits under which they went into that area. So they are asking us, under paragraph 5, to grant continuity of the act respecting incentives for operating in designated areas.

Mr. Chairman, I think this covers what I wanted to say on these three paragraphs, 3, 4 and 5. I say again in conclusion what I said at the beginning. It would appear to me that this legislation concerning designated areas has not been successful, and so these changes are brought about in order to make it work a little better and in the hope that it might be successful. I am sorry that we cannot talk about the way in which these areas are designated, but this we will have a chance to do when the industry act is before us for consideration, or perhaps the estimates of the Department of Industry.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in paragraph No. 2, under which in respect of a brother or sister a taxpayer is allowed to deduct an amount not exceeding $550 if his brother or sister is a student. I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that $550 deductible from your income tax in respect of a student who lives in the city where the institution or university is situated, is fair and the amount is reasonable; but when a student from the country has to attend school or university in a city his expenses are much higher. These expenses have to cover board and lodging and travelling. I think those who supply the money for this education should be able to deduct at least double that amount; that is, $1,100.

Another thing that I think should be taken into consideration is this. When students have finished their college education and continue their training in hospitals as interns, their parents are not allowed any greater deduction in tax, although this internship is part of their training and involves extra expenses. It is true that some of these students are receiving a certain amount of remuneration, but this far from covers their expenses while they are interns in hospital. I think the minister should take this matter into consideration because, as I said, many students have finished their studies and have received their degrees, but they must serve a period of internship in hospital before they are granted their certificate to practise medicine. I think this is a hardship which many, many parents have to bear in regard to such tuition fees and expenses. Although, as I said before, they are granted a certain allowance which is deductible from income tax, nevertheless this is much less than the cost involved during the period of internship. I would like to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and would ask him to give it his serious consideration.

Mr. Grafftey: On paragraph 2, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the minister whether this paragraph would include legally adopted individuals, legally adopted brothers or sisters, or children in general.

Mr. Gordon: I am sure it would include a legally adopted child, but I do not think you can legally adopt a brother.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, just one or two points on paragraph 1 before it is passed. This paragraph deals with aid to those who are taxable and are receiving higher education. I am thinking particularly of a person who is not earning a taxable income but who is still having his education paid for by his parents. I believe his parents cannot claim the cost of his tuition as an exemption. I suggest that the minister and his department give serious consideration to making such a provision in the case of parents who are bearing the cost of their children's education, their children in turn, for one reason or another, not earning a taxable income.

In the past few years we have made great strides with the establishment of vocational schools. Efforts have been made to raise the standards of education, as well as the standards of labour generally throughout the country. I think provision should also be made in this clause for students who are going to these vocational schools to cover the cost of the tools of their trade, which are really part and parcel of their tuition. Such has long been the case for farmers and people in other professions, who can write off as a capital cost allowance the tools which help them to derive their income. While we are making provision for students to acquire tools to attend vocational school, we should also make similar provision for mechanics, who after they graduate from vocational school go out and earn their living, to write off their tools as a capital cost allowance. In a world which is fast automating and becoming highly mechanized we must be prepared to make provision for these people training in our vocational schools prior to their entry into society. We must give them an equal footing with the other professions. In some cases, such as mechanics, X-ray technicians, and so on, costly tools are required.

The minister should give, however, some thought to the suggestion that parents be allowed to write off their children's tuition fees, and also that vocational school students and mechanics should likewise be able to write off the cost of their tools as an expense incurred in the earning of their income.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions for the Minister of Finance concerning paragraph 2 which mentions a $550 yearly deduction for a brother or a sister who attends university Would the same deduction be allowed in the case of a brother-in-law or a sister-in-law, that is the brother or the sister of the taxpayer's spouse? Let us say that my wife's brother or sister attends university and stays at my place. Would I be entitled to a deduction, even though they are not my own brother and sister?

I ask that question because such cases are not uncommon and are bound to occur again. It would be most interesting to know whether the deduction would be allowed in such instances.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I can just answer that question.

Under section 139(9)(b) and (c) a brother includes a brother-in-law, and a sister includes a sister-in-law.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I have a second question about designated areas.

Could a plant now located and operating in a designated area, which would like to expand by adding a new building and would keep on producing along the same lines, but would invest $10 or $12 million in a new plant, benefit from the tax incentives offered by the act?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Well, I think this has more to do with some legislation which was taken up last year; but if they form a new subsidiary the answer would be yes.

Mr. Nasserden: There is one question I should like to ask with regard to subparagraph (c). Does this include private schools, or tuition fees paid to private schools?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, in my remarks relating to adopted children I think I was a little vague. I fully realize you cannot adopt a brother or that you cannot adopt a sister; what I really meant, and I hope I will make myself clear this time, is this. If my parents adopted a child with whom I was brought up, this provision would apply in the case of such legally adopted child adopted by my blood parents, so to speak, whether the child were a boy or a girl. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. Gordon: This question would require a legal opinion from an accountant, Mr. Chairman, which would be quite improper. I just do not know the answer to that question.

Paragraph agreed to.

Paragraph 2 agreed to.

On paragraph 3.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, we are running a little rapidly here and there are one or two matters to be discussed with regard to incentives, although I do not think we need take too much time at the moment. Some of these sections are very much interrelated and others are not; but paragraph 3, as the minister said this afternoon, extends the time in which an application can be made, which I think is a very desirable step to take. I wonder whether the minister has any information as to the number of applications there are, not before him but before the Minister of Industry? Are we extending the time because there are so many applications that we need more time to process them, or are we extending the time in order to get more applications? Perhaps the minister can tell us how many applications have been considered up to the present time.

Mr. Gordon: My information is that there are about 40 up to the present time. I had a number of representations in the weeks before the budget on behalf of fairly large companies to the effect that they were considering proceeding with new mills or other operations in some of these areas, but because they were such large projects it was impossible to get them into operation within a period of 24 months. Therefore they felt they would not be able to proceed with them. Although I was not given a promise, I was certainly given to understand that if this committee or this house felt that this incentive could be extended to give these larger concerns a little more time, we would see some pretty interesting results.

Mr. Nowlan: Do I understand then that we have had 40 applications under the type of incentives which the minister brought in last year in this budget; and if so, how many of these 40 have been processed, and what is the situation at the moment?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I might make a somewhat more extensive answer. I am informed that 150 proposals for new businesses have been discussed with the area development agency. Of these over 40 companies have formally indicated they are going ahead with projects to be located in 14 of the 35 designated areas. Capital investments of over $90 million creating 5,000 new jobs are involved. I see that the Minister of Industry is here so if what I am about to say is incorrect I hope he will check me. Indications are that the Minister of Industry will shortly be asked to certify new businesses representing well over $100 million in further capital investment and providing for over 3,000 new manufacturing and processing jobs at the outset.

If my hon. friend is interested, these applications cover the following fields of industry: Food and beverages, rubber, textiles, clothing, wood products, pulp and paper, primary metals, metal fabrication, machinery, transportation equipment, electrical apparatus, non-metallic minerals and chemicals.

Mr. Nowlan: Could the minister give us the geographical areas involved in these applications? I do not want them by counties but how many are there, for instance, in the Atlantic provinces and how many in Ontario, Quebec and the west?

Mr. Gordon: The Minister of Industry informs me that an answer was given today and will appear in Hansard for today. I do not have the answer before me.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to ask one other question. The figures that the minister has given us are estimates of what might be spent if all of these projects are approved and the industries go ahead. As I recall it, the minister said that at the moment there are 40 which have actually been processed. In that 40 how much is involved?

Mr. Drury: Perhaps I might make clear that the terms "application" and "processed" really do not have too much validity. A company or firm which establishes a new enterprise in a designated area and comes into commercial operations within the required period is entitled, provided it meets certain conditions in respect of unused machinery to the value of 95 per cent and getting into operation within the required period, to the income tax incentive, and it does not depend on the approval of an application to the Department of Industry. So it is quite possible that there are a number of firms which have undertaken the establishment of new industries and have not yet informed the department. I can think of one by way of example, a very large textile operation which is being established in St. Jean, Quebec. The company had a sod turning ceremony and made an announcement of what they were going to do, and when, but prior to this taking place no information was furnished to the Department of Industry. No application was made because they do not have to apply. They merely have to enter into commercial operation, have the requisite amount of new machinery and get a certificate from the minister to this effect and they qualify.

Mr. Nowlan: Did that textile industry move from some area to a designated area, or was it a new industry created in that area?

Mr. Drury: This is brand new.

Mr. Starr: I think the minister has been most vague in this respect. At least I am unable to get from his remarks the information that I think we are all desirous of obtaining. We want to know how successful the incentive program has been in the establishment of new industries in designated areas. Surely the minister must know how many of these industries have now commenced operations in these areas and have applied for the incentive benefits. I think the minister could be more precise. Surely he can tell us if there are four or five industries, where they have settled and whether they have already applied and will be receiving the benefits of the incentives. This is the information we would like to have. I realize that many industries may be writing and asking for more particulars in the hope that they may be able to do this, but surely the minister can tell us that there are so many industries which have now established themselves in designated areas and have applied for the incentives, and will be receiving them when that time arrives.

Mr. Drury: May I point out to the hon. member that this program was only broached last July and became effective last November. Therefore it is perhaps a little unreasonable to assume that very many substantial industries would have established themselves in this short time. As the Minister of Finance has just indicated, some 40 companies have formally indicated that they intend to comply with the law and avail themselves of the benefits. These 40 industries in 14 of the 35 designated areas are planning capital investments in excess of $90 million and will involve in excess of 5,000 new jobs when in operation. They have not yet completed this and will not, indeed, for some time.

Mr. Starr: I realize the minister has repeated that possibly at least 40 industries have asked for information on this matter, but they have not established themselves.

Mr. Drury: I said that 40 have formally signified their intention of establishing. They have not been asking for information. They have formally signified their intention of establishing.

Mr. Starr: In an answer last week, I think, to a written question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Peterborough the minister replied if I am correct, and I stand to be corrected, that there were 34 industries. Will the minister tell us now how many have been actually established? Has there been one, have there been four or has there been none?

Mr. Drury: I do not think that there is one that has come into commercial operations yet.

Mr. Hales: Will the minister not say that Magnetic Metals situated in Brantford is one?

Mr. Drury: I do not think Magnetic Metals is in commercial operation.

Mr. MacEwan: With relation to the order paper question of the hon. member for Wellington-Huron, which was answered by the Minister of Industry, I note that the minister sets out that in New Brunswick there are two and in Nova Scotia three of these 34 industries. As this is a high unemployment area I wonder whether the minister could now tell us the areas of Nova Scotia and the areas of New Brunswick where these five out of the 34 industries are going to be located?

Mr. Drury: I have not got that information here. I will be glad to get it and provide it tomorrow.

Mr. More: I should like to ask the minister if he has had any complaints from Saskatchewan that this legislation is discriminatory and is seriously handicapping the efforts of the province to diversify by bringing more industry into the province?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have had complaints from Saskatchewan, or for that matter from any other province.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister enlarge on paragraph 4 a little more with regard to what is meant by fair market value?

The Chairman: Do I take it we have completed discussion of paragraph 3?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Minister of Industry said he would be providing the answers to some questions tomorrow and I think there was an order paper question answered, but we have not got the answer before us. Subject to being able to review these answers I think it would be perfectly agreeable to the committee to proceed, provided we can ask for further information with respect to the details as to paragraph 3 and, in fact, paragraphs 4 and 5 as well.

The Chairman: I am wondering if the committee might not get into difficulty. I do not know what the intention of hon. members is and how many paragraphs will be passed tonight but perhaps we can—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could let paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 stand until we get further information. I do not think it will take us very long to dispose of them tomorrow, but we understand that a question on the order paper was answered today and we do not have the answer in front of us. The Minister of Industry has told us he will have definite information tomorrow afternoon. I am sure hon. members of the committee would like to know the areas in which these industries have been established. I think we might make more progress if we allowed these matters to stand.

I should like the minister's comment also with regard to the effect of this incentive. I do not want to get into an argument but it has been reported in the press I believe that the Minister of Transport, speaking about the Atlantic provinces development board, stated there had been an application made by the Nova Scotia government for grants from the Atlantic provinces development board for direct capital assistance to industry. This is not the place to argue the matter, Mr. Chairman, but I am prepared to enter into an argument at any time with the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Industry that these direct grants are much more useful than the incentives which we have before us. I hope we can allow these matters to stand and discuss them tomorrow. If the committee is prepared to move on, speaking only for the official opposition, then we are prepared to move to other items and get the information on these items tomorrow.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 stand.

On paragraph 6.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to make some very general remarks on paragraph 6, Mr. Chairman. Did the Minister of Finance receive any representations relating to this paragraph in so far as it may affect or accelerate the so-called brain drain from Canada? Did bodies like the national research council make any representations relating to the paragraph and the adverse effect it might have in creating a situation whereby Canadian scientists would go to the United States? Could the minister assure us that we recognize that companies are allowed, as he explained this provision, to write off 150 per cent of the expenses relating to research done in Canada?

We are told this paragraph is going to permit a write-off for research done outside of Canada. Will this lessen the attractiveness for companies doing research in Canada? Does the minister feel this will in any way discourage Canadian companies from doing a fair amount of their research within this country?

Mr. Gordon: This will not affect the incentive of the 150 per cent write-off in any way at all. There were a number of companies who made the complaint, not about the high level of brain drain, but the low level of taxes they would have to pay. They thought perhaps when the 150 per cent write-off provision was drafted and introduced a year or two ago, it had been drafted in such a way that people who had normal expenses in connection with research they had been carrying on outside the country for many years, and which could not be translated into Canada, were being discriminated against. They made a good case. It is recommended that they should be able to carry on as before and claim their expenses, just as they are entitled to claim any other expenses if, as it says here, they are of a nature related to scientific research which is related to the taxpayer's business.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister is quite certain that expenditures made outside the country were deductible prior to the amendment of 1962?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nowlan: I have not checked the authorities, and I accept the statement of the minister with regard to that. My understanding was that was not the case, but possibly it was changed when we brought in the incentives, and deductions for expenditures made outside the country were disallowed. My understanding of the thing was that they were not allowed unless they were made in Canada.

As I have said before, there was a very good reason for the government giving those incentives. I know there were some who took a rather dim view of it, but the government took the responsibility for this action and I think the government was right, despite the criticism of some people who had to deal with the matter. We were faced with a situation, as the minister well knows, of a continuous drain of our experts and our professional people who were attracted to the south. It was felt at that time by giving this inducement, this incentive, industry would build up a body of technical people here in Canada, who would, otherwise, be attracted to the United States or elsewhere. How successful we were, I do not know, but certainly an effort was made in that direction.

I certainly understand the feelings of some people with regard to this matter. After I spoke about it during the budget debate, and criticized it, I received one or two letters from good friends of mine pointing out very forcibly the fact that I was being unfair in the attitude I took, and that certainly they should be allowed this deduction. I am not going to debate that too strenuously tonight. We are torn between two desires, to build up a scientific and technical organization within Canada, and at the same time be fair to corporations which have, for one reason or another, to go outside of this country to have their research work done. It is a matter of choice, and the minister has decided that the act should be amended to provide for these expenditures. He has taken us back to 1962, apparently, when this was first changed. I am not quarrelling with it, but I register a caveat because I am not quite sure if we have the technical organization here. Except in special circumstances, I think the research work should be done here. The very thing we were trying to avoid was having the research work done outside of Canada when it could be done here.

As I have said, it is a technical problem, and one which is involved. I am not going to spend more time discussing it. I am glad to see the incentive is still being kept. I think that really is worth while. I hope that Canadian corporations will continue to take advantage of that rather than have research work done somewhere else, in view of the fact these expenses are deductible.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member who has just spoken, Mr. Chairman, has only too well underlined the real need in Canada today to build up scientific research, to engage in scientific research within our own borders. I should like to make this remark especially, that all hon. members consider to what a great degree our manufacturing establishments in Canada are owned by parent firms across the border. If we do not insist on policing this provision very well, that this write-off can only be granted for scientific research done in Canada, I think we are going to get into serious trouble. I should like an assurance from the minister that this provision is going to be very closely policed to make sure that 100 per cent of these write-offs will apply to research activity which obviously cannot be carried out within Canada at the present time or the foreseeable future. Otherwise, I think we would be running into serious danger of encouraging an exodus of our scientific brains to the United States, something which I think all hon. members recognize is highly undesirable.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On paragraph 6, I am not sure whether this means research by an institute for a group of individuals, or for an individual. Could it be research by an individual on behalf of himself?

Mr. Gordon: These are expenditures which, in the main, have been made by Canadian subsidiary companies to their parent companies or to research organizations in other countries. It is mainly corporations that are concerned. In the past they were just treated as expenditures and, as I understand it, allowed as expenditures. Nobody raised a question as to what kind of expenditures they were.

Mr. Nowlan: Would they be subject to withholding tax?

Mr. Gordon: I doubt it very much. There was not a withholding tax in those days. When the amendment came in and there was particular reference to scientific research, they started to get disallowed, and understandably complained as they were in the nature of expenditures which bring pretty valuable information and know-how to Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am thinking of a medical clinic, or group of doctors working together. Could they send one doctor to university or an institute to do research, and write this off as an expense?

Mr. Gordon: If a clinic or group of doctors in partnership are paying one of their number, in some form or another, a salary or something like it, and they decide it is in their collective interest to send him off some place to do research, and he comes back and they get the benefit of it, I think that would be considered an expense in the earning of the income. But when you get down to this sort of question, they involve legal opinions of a very technical kind. I think this would be the case, but I hope the lawyers in the committee will not think I am moving in on their territory, because that is a very dangerous thing for an accountant to do.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Could one doctor do it—undertake research to improve himself when it is particularly related to the taxpayer's business? Could he improve himself with a postgraduate course and charge that off as research expense?

Mr. Gordon: I would think that unlikely, because if he were away long enough he would not have income here to pay tax on.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is not a good enough excuse. We will leave it to the doctor's patients to decide whether or not he has a practice to come back to. It cannot be slid off that easily. The paragraph says:

—in computing income all expenditures of a current nature...

(b) to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business.

This is a serious question and I do not want it sloughed off lightly by saying he will not have any patients left. I am thinking particularly of a medical man.

An hon. Member: Or a lawyer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, a medical man is what I am thinking of right now. There are many fields of research in medicine, and doctors must keep abreast of them. The minister has referred to a group of doctors who form a clinic and work as a unit, but I am asking whether a doctor can take a month's leave of absence, or two months from his practice, to do research on a given subject, such as the heart, cancer or leukemia, and write that off as a research expense?

Mr. Gordon: We are getting into a distinction between a capital expenditure and a current expenditure. This is very difficult, and I am not going to be able to give a yes or no answer. If there are a group of doctors who send one man off, and they are continuing to receive income so that there is something to deduct it from, I should think they could deduct that expenditure from their collective income. However, if one doctor does it, and even if he went for a couple of months and he has income to deduct it from, I would think there is a good chance the department would rule this was a capital expenditure on his part. I cannot give a definitive answer on that. Perhaps we could call on the ex-minister of national revenue, who held that position for many years, and possibly his opinion would be as good as any.

Mr. Nowlan: We are dealing with a general resolution here. There will be a bill before us shortly, an income tax bill, in which the details will be spelled out, and I would suggest at that time that the minister be prepared to answer these questions so far as he can, bearing in mind the fact that the Department of National Revenue always takes a very dim view of anybody making a ruling in advance. My colleague from Queens-Lunenburg wants to know if he sends a trawler out scouting for new fishing grounds, and if that can be described as scientific research, could he deduct that expense? The hon. member for Acadia and others will have many more questions to ask when the bill is before us, and I suggest that the minister be prepared to deal with their questions then.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member has demonstrated very well how he was such a success as minister of national revenue.

Mr. Grafftey: When the bill comes before us I hope there will be something in it to indicate that a company, let us say company X, controlled in the United States and doing business in Canada, and which is now carrying on research activities in Canada, will not transfer those activities to the United States just to take advantage of this provision, particularly when these research activities can be undertaken in Canada.

The minister was quite right in saying this law is the same as it was before. I shall certainly take his word for that, but I believe it is immaterial because today we are faced with the problem of keeping our scientific research institutions and our better scientific brains in Canada. I would like to see some indication that the advantage which is being given will not make it attractive to carry on research activities in the United States which can now be carried on in Canada.

However, where it is patently obvious that a research activity is of such a scale that it could only be carried on in the United States, then there should be such a beneficial clause. Without taking any more time of the committee I would like to point out what could be a very serious problem in closing this gap, and I hope it will not make it too attractive for companies to move research establishments over the border.

Mr. Hales: I think the government is asking us to pass a resolution here that we will regret the day we pass it. As I understand it, a United States subsidiary operating in Canada and doing research work here in Canada would now have a great temptation to cease that research and do it in the parent office in the United States.

Mr. Gordon: May I try to explain that, and also to answer the question put by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Under the law at present, any Canadian company has a great incentive to do its research work in Canada. If it does its research work in Canada it is allowed to charge off against its income for tax purposes 150 per cent of the expense of research—not just 100 per cent, but 150 per cent; that is, 150 per cent of the increase. If it continues to do what has been done over the years—pay someone in the United States or in Britain or in some other country for access to the kind of research it could not get anywhere else; I cannot imagine that it would be making the payments otherwise—then over the years it has been allowed to deduct those expenditures for tax purposes. This stopped in 1962 because of the wording of the amendment at that time and the way in which it was interpreted by the tax officers.

The purpose of this amendment is to put things back where they were prior to 1962, as far as the regular, historical, traditional expenditures for technical services and so on are concerned. We did not change in any way the special incentive which was introduced in 1962 to encourage people to do more research in Canada. The incentive is there. It is merely being suggested that the penalty should be removed.

Paragraph 6 agreed to.

On paragraph 7.

Mr. Martineau: Paragraph 7, I think in the terms in which it is couched, is an amazing disposition. I think probably as a lawyer I should not attack this provision at all because if ever I move out of this place and go back into practice I may be able to make a few dollars out of it.

An hon. Member: You won't need to, with your majority.

Mr. Martineau: That is a wise observation. If I was not afraid of being ruled out of order I would say I have excellent prospects of at least doubling my majority.

In any event this is the provision which is of interest to a number of us around here and I think the minister should give us some details of the manner in which it will operate. Of course, the gist of it is that if a taxpayer appeals an assessment he may in the following taxation year, I imagine, deduct any expenditures that he has incurred either in filing the opposition or in registering an appeal from an assessment. But what comes to my mind is this: Does the minister intend to put a ceiling on the amount of expenditure which may be incurred in filing an opposition or making an appeal.

Seeing the provision of this section, if a taxpayer is in a position where he must file an appeal or oppose an assessment, because of the very generous disposition of the minister he will engage the best legal lights in the country to take up his case. That is understandable. But as the minister, no doubt, knows, not all lawyers charge the same fees. The services of some are expensive and in other cases their services are more expensive; so it can be expected that the taxpayer might resort to the best legal talent and therefore the highest fees of the land. They might run into thousands of dollars. In such a case will the department foot the taxpayer's bill? If so, I think the lawyers are going to have a field day. Will these costs that are being allowed be on a client-solicitor basis or will they be costs to be taxed according to a tariff? I think this paragraph is lacking in the way it is drafted, because there is no mention at all as to the nature of the costs that may be deductible or whether a tariff will be established or not—if a bill of costs will be submitted to a taxation authority or if taxation by the board of appeal clerk, or some officer in the board of appeal, will be conclusive evidence of the real cost incurred by the taxpayer and, if so, whether the Minister of National Revenue will have any discretion at all in allowing or disallowing the claim for deductions because of legal costs to fight an assessment.

Another thought that comes to my mind is that this provision will certainly give rise in my opinion to a considerable interest in the number of formal oppositions and appeals, and this may throw an extra burden on the board of appeals. I think this is a good moment to think of the functions which that board fulfils and to renew a request which has been made by others on this side of the house on various occasions to make this board a fully fledged court, with permanency of tenure and so on. If you are going to give to that board the responsibility that it exercises at present and also the added burden with which it will be faced, the government might well consider the feasibility of converting the board into a court. That, I think, would also result perhaps in a better administration of this board and in better results from the important functions it is performing.

Another question I should like to ask in regard to this paragraph is whether or not the minister envisages the payment of the cost of filing an appeal from the formal opposition. Does it include legal costs which may have been incurred by the taxpayer for advice as to whether or not an appeal should be undertaken, and does it also include costs that may be incurred after the judgment, for instance, with regard to services rendered in connection with making arrangements for the service of a debt for tax? Will it also apply to expenses incurred by the taxpayer at higher levels, in the exchequer court and the supreme court? This is new law and as such it certainly opens a door to a large number of questions and possibilities and maybe even loopholes. This present paragraph is very incomplete and, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said a few minutes ago in regard to paragraph 6, we will be anticipating the bill with a great deal of interest; and also, I imagine, the amendments to the Income Tax Act that are foreseen by paragraph 7 will be looked at very closely to ascertain just how far the minister intends to go with this new and rather revolutionary policy that he is introducing at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies I would like to support what the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has said. I cannot for the life of me understand this paragraph, because we are not only dealing with appeals, as the hon. member said, on which possibly there is a tariff. There is, certainly, when you get to the exchequer court. I am not sure whether there is a tariff before the income tax appeal board; I do not think there is, but there could be. But when it comes to filing an objection, without becoming overemphatic I can say that one files an objection almost every time from any assessment. Sometimes it is simply a matter of scribbling out a letter of some kind; sometimes it is a very involved objection. There is no tariff, there is no provision in the act, as I understand, to provide for this.

Far be it from me to prevent lawyers or accountants earning by the sweat of their brow, as they always have, their fees. They are underpaid all the time, of course, as both the minister and I would agree with respect to both professions; but I cannot for the life of me see how you are going to provide for reductions for the filing of objections. The assessment may be for $1 million and you may come from Wolfville, Vancouver or Toronto, as I am sure the minister did in the days when he was practicing, and go into the office of the deputy minister and discuss the matter. There is all this matter of solicitor and client, or you may have an objection to a farmer's income tax, or anybody else's income tax, as far as that is concerned, for $100, $500 or whatever it may be.

On what basis are you going to be able to charge for filing this objection? I will tell the minister what in my opinion this is going to do. Every lawyer in the country and every chartered accountant who happens to have a spare five minutes on his hands is going to sit down and draft a notice of objection, and the income tax appeal board—which is swamped now by appeals; at least, it was; there were appointments made and they may be more up to date, but I am quite sure they are not caught up—will have to deal with these objections. This is going to encourage the filing of appeals, and I am sure that if the minister by any chance happened to be attending a reception one night—I will not say a cocktail party, because that language is hardly acceptable in the House of Commons—or one of these gatherings, say an embassy function somewhere, at which members of the income tax appeal board happened to be gathered, if he could hear their language with respect to what this paragraph might do—this is only guesswork on my part, you will understand, Mr. Chairman—and their opinion as to what they think this paragraph might do in increasing the appeal load, he might have different views on this subject. I do not know whether this has been recommended by the barristers association or by a joint committee of chartered accountants and lawyers—if it is, it is remarkably well sponsored—but I would suggest to the minister that he should take a very, very careful look at this paragraph. Certainly when the act is brought down it will have to be dealt with very, very carefully.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, just before the minister answers that question, perhaps he would also take note of the last part of this paragraph:

> —shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof.

It seems to me that by adding that provision they are robbing Peter to pay Paul, or vice versa, because on the one hand they say the costs are deductible and on the other hand they say that if costs are recovered they must be added to income. That leaves the taxpayer right in the middle, and nothing is given.

Another point I should like to raise is that with regard to any costs recovered, generally the costs are taxable, not in regard to the client or the party involved in the litigation, but they are taxable costs that go directly to the lawyer who has been employed in the case, and that is an attorney of record. Therefore I cannot see how it can be that the taxpayer can recover costs on his own. Perhaps the minister would elucidate that particular point, together with the others that were raised.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, in his first statement on this point the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue seemed to be fearful that as a result of this provision various clients, not of his, would transfer all their work to what he called—I do not remember the expression, but the first class lawyers.

Mr. Martineau: Legal lights.

Mr. Gordon: Legal lights, yes. I would not be so brave as to suggest that there was such a thing as a second class lawyer.

Mr. Nowlan: Sometimes our light is hidden under a bushel.

Mr. Gordon: I am quite confident that if the hon. member does not double his vote in the next election, he will find he has plenty of business of this type. I would remind him that section 12(2) of the act provides:

> In computing income, no deduction shall be made in respect of an outlay or expense otherwise deductible except to the extent that the outlay or expense was reasonable in the circumstances.

If any professional man should charge a fee that was unreasonable—and I would hope this would not happen—then it would remain with the Department of National Revenue to disallow it.

Mr. Nowlan: Who is going to act as taxing master?

Mr. Gordon: In practice, as I suspect hon. members know, the real check on anybody charging too much is the company or the client. I cannot believe that any reasonable client would allow his tax consultant to charge him twice as much as he should because he only has to pay half of it. But this was a submission made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and I believe others, over a period of years. I do not feel very strongly about it; I am not in professional practice. I think it is something, though, that is reasonable; and we should remember that whoever receives these fees will have to pay tax on them, so as far as the crown is concerned it is about six of one and half a dozen of the other.

The Chairman: Shall we go to paragraph 8?

Mr. Nowlan: No, Mr. Chairman. We are not going through paragraph 8 tonight. We will go to paragraph 9 and hold 8. Some of us want to be here tomorrow for paragraph 8, but we are prepared to go to paragraph 9.

The Chairman: Shall we proceed to paragraph 9?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Martineau: With regard to paragraph 7, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister could overnight look at some of the questions asked, because I do not think his answer was quite complete. Therefore I would call it ten o'clock on paragraph 7.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, before you go on may I ask what is the business for the rest of the week?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I regret I am unable to announce the business for the rest of the week. Tomorrow we shall continue with the discussion on this resolution, and if it is finished we will go on with the Customs Tariff resolution and then the Estate Tax Act resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion)

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that this house do now adjourn.

TRANSPORT—REGULATIONS RESPECTING USE OF WHARVES BY FISHERMEN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question is from the hon. member for Skeena regarding regulations respecting government wharves.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my concern with these particular regulations, which are promulgated under the Government Harbours and Piers Act, is the manner in which charges are levied and their effect on fishermen. I refer in particular to the different effect of those regulations on fishermen on the east coast of Canada as compared with fishermen on the west coast. What I hope to accomplish is to pose to the minister the thought that they apply inequitably; that charges will be levied against fishermen on the west coast for the use of wharves and floats which will not be levied against fishermen on the east coast.

The reason for this is both with respect to the wording of the regulations themselves and also with respect to the past attitude of the Department of Public Works in providing facilities for fishermen. The regulations prior to their change in January of this year used to read as follows. Rather than quote the regulations I should like to quote an extract from a copy of a letter written by Mr. J. H. W. Cavey, who is chief of the harbours and property division, to a Mr. G. W. Nickerson of the city of Prince Rupert. In his letter there is this quotation:

"No side wharfage is payable in respect to (a) Canadian fishing vessels during the first 48 hours at any wharf, (b) Canadian fishing vessels at any time at wharves other than those specified by the minister".

That is the end of the quotation from the regulations.

Then Mr. Cavey indicates the effect of these regulations was as follows:

Under these regulations fishing vessels were exempted at practically all public wharves and floats.

Then the amended regulations came into effect. I do not intend to read in any detail from a press release which I have before me, except to say that one of the reasons for bringing the new changes into effect was aimed at improving the regulations and providing for more efficient wharf administration. The fact of the matter is that under the new regulations as well as under the old—particularly now because charges will be levied for the use of wharves—the Department of Public Works has not provided what we call floats on the east coast but they have on the west coast. As a consequence charges for side wharfage will not be applied to fishermen on the east coast, because they only use wharves on the east coast for the purpose of unloading fish or for loading supplies. Fishermen on the west coast do that as well, but in addition floats have been built at which the fishermen tie up.

Usually because of the insistence of the Department of Fisheries with regard to the curtailment of the fishing week, fishermen find themselves tied up at floats for periods of two, three or four days a week. Perhaps in this coming fishing season it will be for as long as five days a week that fishermen will have to tie up at floats, rather than be out fishing for salmon, owing to the stringent restrictions imposed by the Department of Fisheries. As a consequence fishermen on the west coast will have to pay under the regulations side wharfage rates for the use of the floats, whereas the fishermen on the east coast will not. This, of course, raises the hackles of any bona fide fisherman or even the fisherman who fishes one or two days a week, because it does smack of discrimination of a sort. Fishermen are going to have a difficult enough time on the west coast without having to pay charges for the use of floats.

In the second instance, while the press release stated that the regulations were to provide for more efficient wharf administration I submit they will not, because in the city of Prince Rupert there is a plan under way for the federal government to lease the float facilities to somebody else. In all likelihood this will be the city of Prince Rupert which will operate the floats. All that will happen will be that the city of Prince Rupert will be charging fishermen for the use of these floats and will be spending the money in two ways, first to pay the fee to the federal government under the lease agreement and, second, to employ up to eight watchmen who will in fact be toll collectors. Nothing will be accomplished in the way of providing any additional services to the fishermen or in providing efficient wharf administration, as the press release accompanying the regulations stated would be the case.

There are so many implications involved in this action and objections to it that time does not permit me to go into them in great detail, but I would point out one simple thing to the minister. At many of these floats boats tie up one beside the other, three or four or maybe five deep. Let us say for the sake of argument that some Friday night the watchman or toll collector comes down to these floats. If that watchman expects to extract the same side wharfage fee from the fishermen who ties up alongside the float as from the fisherman who has to tie up fourth or fifth boat out, he has got another think coming; and in the process of collecting the fees he may very well wind up in the water. The fishermen at home are disturbed and upset about this system.

Second, do the regulations mean that if a fisherman pays side wharfage fees for, say, a period of a month he is then permitted to tie up his boat to any float anywhere in British Columbia? I notice you are rising, Mr. Speaker, so my time must be nearing an end. I appreciate the opportunity of placing this very important matter before the house and the minister and I say sincerely to the minister: Will you please amend the regulations and put them back the way they were prior to the change in January of this year? The fishermen will be happy and they will have more money in their pockets.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should start out by saying that while I can understand the feeling of a fisherman or indeed of anyone else who did not have to pay a service charge before and is asked to pay one, there is in fact no discrimination whatsoever in the regulations, and I think the hon. member himself indicated that. They apply absolutely equally on the east coast and on the west coast. The appearance of discrimination is because of the entirely different conditions, which I think the hon. member outlined pretty fairly.

I must say I do not have any great familiarity with these floats on the west coast. I have never examined them. However, it is quite true that either on the east coast or the west coast there are no side wharfage charges for commercial fishermen provided they are simply unloading or loading their vessels, and are not tied up for more than a certain length of time. On the east coast there are no floats provided at all, to the best of my knowledge, for fishermen to park their boats, if one may put it that way, or to tie them up, whereas on the west coast apparently the taxpayers have provided very considerable facilities which have been used partly by commercial fishermen.

Information has been given to me which is perhaps not as true of Prince Rupert as it may be of some other places on the west coast, and this may perhaps be the reason why it is that the main complaint so far has come from Prince Rupert.

I am told that many of these floats are used by sports fishermen or by the owners of pleasure craft. I do not believe there would be many hon. members who would argue that taxpayers should be expected to provide wharfage for that kind of vessel at public expense. If these wharves had been used exclusively by commercial fishermen, I am quite sure there would have been no thought whatever that it would not have been worth while.

I cannot go into much detail on this matter because I only have three minutes. I cannot go into much detail for another reason, namely that these regulations were made at a time when I was not the minister, nor was I here to discuss them. However, I shall look into them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VIET NAM—POSSIBLE RESULT OF U.S. POLICY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I asked the question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the situation in Viet Nam because there is great concern over the possibility of very early and dangerous developments there which may involve us and others as well. There has been a proposal by the United States to increase its forces and to increase its direct participation in what Senator Morse has described as an illegal and unwise war. Some years ago we were told the United States had observers there. Then, they had advisers, but here we have a senator of the United States admitting that this is a war.

The second reason we are concerned at the invitation on the part of the United States to other countries to participate in these forces outside the United Nations, is that we take the strongest objection to this unilateral action on the part of the United States or any other countries associated with them. Then again, we were most dissatisfied with the brief, uninforming and unsatisfactory answer given to a question asked by our leader a day or so ago by the Prime Minister with regard to this problem. He said, in brief, that no request had been made. Surely, Mr. Speaker, a serious situation like this developing in that part of the world would warrant the Prime Minister of this country at least giving the house some statement as to the government's policy or attitude toward this unfortunate development. We believe that the government should make a clear and definite statement of policy with regard to its attitude toward the Viet Nam situation and recent developments.

This is a very serious question which has a great potential for danger to the rest of the world and should be referred to the United Nations. We most definitely oppose this unilateral action by the United States and other countries, as suggested. We believe that this situation should be handled as a result of a reference to the United Nations for a peace keeping force under the United Nations, under the rule of law that we are doing so much to try and develop in the world today. I hope the parliamentary secretary will deal with this question and leave us more satisfied with his answer than we were with the Prime Minister's answer to our leader a day or so ago.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to apologize to the hon. member for Kootenay West because the Secretary of State for External Affairs is unavoidably absent from Ottawa tonight.

I am sure he would have welcomed the opportunity to answer the hon. member, had it been possible to do so. I am also sure that the hon. member for Kootenay West understands my position, and that for this reason I am unable to take a stand different from the one which my minister took earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Herridge: Could I ask the parliamentary secretary a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think that the amended order under which we operate at this time allows for additional questions, supplementary questions, or debate of any kind.

SUGAR—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF LONG TERM CONTRACTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this afternoon three sugar refineries in the city of Montreal announced they were increasing the price of sugar by 30 cents per 100 pounds. This is not a new situation. For over a year the members of this group have been objecting to the steady increase in the price of sugar by the sugar companies of Canada. We have never been given any reasonable, satisfactory answer as to why this price was being increased, in view of the very large stocks of sugar which these companies had on hand prior to the price increases.

During last year there were 90 changes in the price of sugar. The price virtually doubled during the calendar year. At the peak of the price increase housewives in Canada were paying 97 cents for a 5 lb. bag of sugar which could be purchased in the United States for 49 cents.

We have already given some indication of the profits made by the sugar companies. My reason for raising the matter this afternoon was to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce what the government intends to do about it. We urged him in the last session of parliament to consider the feasibility of entering into long term agreements for the purchase of sugar from sugar exporting countries, as has been done in the United States and in Great Britain with great benefit to the consumers in those countries.

In a statement made in the house on February 19 last the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> —the conclusion we have come to is that this is not an opportune time to enter into any long term arrangements for the supply of sugar to Canada from overseas producers.

He gave as his reason the fact that there had been some decline in the price of sugar. He pointed out that the London daily cash price had ranged from £77 to £80½ per long ton, and for December delivery per long ton the price ranged from £51¾ to £59½.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know at what price the exporting countries offered to sell their sugar. I am told it is about £49 per long ton. That would certainly involve a very considerable saving for the Canadian housewife.

In the short time I have it is not up to me to outline the policy for the minister but I would like to know, first of all, in view of this very substantial increase in the price of sugar, is the minister prepared to reexamine the feasibility of entering into long term agreements for the purchase of sugar so that the Canadian housewife can escape these drastic and periodic fluctuations in price?

Is the minister prepared to look into the possibility of removing the tariff behind which the sugar industry enjoys great protection in Canada, and the removal of which would compel it to look again at these price increases? Also, although it does not come under the minister, I think the government has a duty to tell us whether or not it is concerned about the fact that three companies, on the same day, all announce they are going to increase the price by 30 cents per 100 pounds. If this does not look like collusion and agreement, I do not know what does. These are the three main sugar companies.

I do not need to remind the house that on June 15, 1963, three sugar companies were found guilty in the courts after a prosecution initiated by the restrictive trade practices branch, and on March 8, 1963, I believe it was, they were fined $25,000 each for entering into agreements harmful to the consumers of Canada. I think we have a right to know whether the government is concerned about this matter and whether they are looking into it. I think the housewives of Canada would like to know from the minister whether he is prepared to do something and what he is prepared to do. They want to know if he will continue to do what he has done for the last 12 months namely, nothing, or whether he has at last formulated some policy to deal with this problem.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me before the opening of the sitting if I had heard that the price of sugar had risen $3 and I must say it did cause me some concern. Of course, in a subsequent question in the house he referred to a 30 cent increase and at least, I thought, this was likely to cause less alarm.

The hon. member has reviewed the course of sugar prices. I must repeat what I said on an earlier occasion about the trend of prices. At its peak, on the London market, the price of sugar reached £105 a ton. When I held the discussions with the commonwealth exporters to which the hon. gentleman referred, the price had come down to £90. When I reported to the house on February 19 it had gone down to £80. It subsequently came down to £62 and it has fluctuated in the last few days; today's quotation was almost £70, the highest point for the last few days. The hon.

member may have seen in the paper today some reports of purchases by Cuba of sugar in the United Kingdom market—a somewhat unusual development.

I gave those figures to illustrate what I think was the wisdom of our policy in not rushing into negotiations at the time the hon. member urged us to do so. I may recall the words of the national president of the consumers association in Canada. Mrs. Plumptre, when she said her association was concerned that some such action might be taken at that time of high sugar prices.

Mr. Douglas: She was earning the grant the government gives her.

Mr. Sharp: I really think that is most unfair to the lady. I am sure she spoke with the full authority of all those fine women who form her association.

May I answer specifically the questions put to me. The hon. member asked: "Is the minister prepared to re-examine the feasibility—" and so on. Well, I am of the opinion that it would be unwise at the moment to enter into long term agreements with commonwealth suppliers or any other suppliers. If one looks at the futures prices to which the hon. gentleman referred, they still show a steep decline in price between now and December. I may say, parenthetically to the hon. member, that when we were holding the discussions with the commonwealth suppliers earlier it was clear that no contract we might enter into could become effective for some months, so I did not think then it would be wise to embark on such arrangements and I still feel it would be better to wait until the market has settled down before we commit ourselves to any long term contract which would oblige Canadian consumers to pay higher prices in the long run.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

Under the provisions of provisional standing order 39A this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 28, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR LABELLE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege relates to the fact that this house has been insulted in one way or another, if not in two ways. The basis for my statement is to be found in the remarks, under a question of privilege, that were made yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle. There are two aspects of that statement on which I found my question of privilege today. I shall come to each of them in a moment.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to standing order 79, which reads as follows:

> The offer of any money or other advantage to any member of this house for the promoting of any matter whatsoever depending or to be transacted in parliament, is a high crime and misdemeanor, and tends to the subversion of the constitution.

I should like also to draw Your Honour's attention to citation 108, paragraph 5 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> The offer of a bribe in order to influence a member in any of the proceedings of the house, or of a committee, has been treated as a breach of privilege, being an insult not only to the member himself, but to the house.

It is the language of that citation that prompted me, in my opening words, to say it is the house that has been insulted. I should like also to draw your attention to section 100 of the Criminal Code of Canada. I shall not read all the section because all of it is not relevant, but I shall read the relevant portion:

> Everyone who gives or offers corruptly to a person who holds a judicial office, or is a member of the parliament of Canada or of a legislature, any money, valuable consideration, office, place or employment in respect of anything done or omitted to be done or omitted by him in his official capacity for himself or another person, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for 14 years.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Labelle, as reported at page 2583 of the English version of Hansard said this:

> Mr. Davey was rather suggesting at that moment that I join the ranks of the Liberal party. He said he would take care of the defeated Liberal candidate and as for unsatisfied Liberal organizers, I only would have to change them.
> The benefits: a party in power and a fat electoral fund for the next election.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: The member continued:

> Mr. Davey suggested that I ponder those proposals.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Labelle has alleged in this house that he was offered a bribe, that he was offered certain advantages if he would take a certain position in this House of Commons. If that fact is true it is contrary to standing order 79 which I read, to citation 108, paragraph 5 and to section 100 of the Criminal Code.

If this has happened I say it is an insult not just to the hon. member for Labelle but it is an insult to this House of Commons. It is a breach of the privileges of this House of Commons, and the matter certainly ought to be investigated by this house through its committee on privileges and elections.

However, Mr. Speaker, if what the hon. member for Labelle said about things that happened outside this chamber is not true, or even if what he said is true, there is something else in what the hon. member said yesterday which gives offence to this house. It is an insult to one of the members of the house, and therefore is an insult to the house itself. I refer to the very next paragraph in the hon. member's statement, right after the ones I read a moment ago. That next paragraph reads as follows, on the same page 2583 of the English version of yesterday's Hansard:

> A week later, a Liberal member of parliament belonging to that same group approached me to tell me that he was very sorry but the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had asked his chief organizer to cease all pressure because he, the Prime Minister, was sure to lose the regular support of the Social Credit party if he ever stole members from that party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old gang.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that the catcalls that are coming are necessarily any help, but I suggest that those remarks of the hon. member for Labelle, if there is no foundation for them, are an insult to and a calumny upon one of the members of the house, and that member happens to be the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister, as a member of the House of Commons, has been insulted, again the house itself has been insulted. This was my reason for saying at the outset that the events which have transpired within the last few days have provided one if not two insults to the House of Commons.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in support of my contention that the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle about the Prime Minister are as serious as his allegations with respect to someone outside the house, may I direct your attention to two or three more citations.

First of all, if Your Honour would please look at citation 112 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, you will find it says:

> Parliament is not concerned whether or not a libel uttered against it is liable to be tried by a court of law, either of civil or criminal jurisdiction May says: "Both houses will punish not only contempts arising out of facts which the ordinary courts will take cognizance, but those of which they cannot, such as contemptuous insults, gross calumny or foul epithets by word of mouth not within the category of actionable slander or threat of body injury."

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the allegations that have been made are not true, the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle about the Prime Minister come within the terms of that citation.

I also draw your attention to citation 113 in the same volume. This is the citation having to do with questions of privilege, which Your Honour has frequent occasion to read to the house. It is a bit of a text Your Honour uses, and I draw your attention to a sentence in about the middle:

> Libels upon members and aspersions upon them in relation to parliament and interference of any kind with their official duties, are breaches of the privileges of the members.

I am relying in particular on the first part of that sentence, which says "Libels upon members and aspersions upon them in relation to parliament" are breaches of the privileges of members. If the statement made by the hon. member for Labelle about the Prime Minister is not true it is a libel upon him in connection with his relationship to parliament, and therefore is a breach of the privileges of parliament.

In the same vein I should like to direct Your Honour's attention to citation 104(5), and in particular to the last sentence in it, at the bottom of page 95 and the top of page 96:

> The right of making complaint of a breach of privilege is open to any member of the house, and, even if an individual member alone is affected, is not confined to that member.

In other words, it seems to me that if we look at this as objectively as we can in the light of the concern there is about it, two members of this house have been insulted. The hon. member for Labelle has been insulted by the alleged offer of a bribe. The Prime Minister has been insulted by what the hon. member for Labelle said about him yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I am referring to the statement the hon. member for Labelle made to the effect that the Prime Minister stopped the activities of Mr. Keith Davey, not because those activities were wrong but because they interfered with his efforts to retain the support of the Social Credit party. Such a remark, unless it can be substantiated, is an insult and a calumny against the Prime Minister. But my concern is that an insult to any member of the House of Commons is an insult to the house as a whole. That is why I feel this whole matter should be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for a thorough investigation. Such a committee can call witnesses, call those concerned, examine people under oath and get to the bottom of this whole incident.

In a moment or two I will make the appropriate motion which I believe follows from this question of privilege. I have it typed and ready. I have my own name on it as the mover, and my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam is prepared to second it. However, if the Prime Minister himself recognizes the seriousness of this matter, as I am sure he does, and would like to second my motion, my leader would be glad to make way for him.

As regards the whole question of what the house ought to do about this matter, may I direct Your Honour's attention to citation 104(2), which is extremely relevant to the whole question of what is to happen in the next few minutes:

> It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege does not extend to deciding the question of substance whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the house itself.

I submit that it would not be using the time of the house properly if we were to debate this type of incident here in this chamber, but we have a committee of this house which could consider the matter and reach a decision. So I hope hon. members will be unanimous in their support of the contention that this matter is so serious that we should not let it drop but should refer it to the appropriate committee. When the dignity of the House of Commons is insulted, as it has been by these developments, we cannot take the matter lightly. Therefore I move:

That the matters raised by the hon. member for Labelle in his question of privilege as reported in Hansard for Monday, April 27, 1964, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration and report.

Mr. Girouard: I should be delighted to second that motion, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In relation to the motion which has just been moved, I have now had an opportunity to read the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle as reported in Hansard. In view of those remarks and the allegations made, and in view of the flat denial of those allegations —I repeat, the flat denial—

Some hon. Members: By whom?

Mr. Pearson: And in view of the reference to myself yesterday and the reference to myself in a morning paper to the effect that I had contact with the leader of the Social Credit party on this matter, which I also flatly deny—in view of all these things I think it is not only desirable but essential, now, that this question be sent to the committee—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —so that the facts can be examined. As far as I am concerned I would be glad to move this motion, to second this motion or, certainly, to support it.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by Mr. Knowles, seconded by the right hon. Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: No; by the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the hon. member who seconded this motion to stand up and tell me that he did second it, so there is no doubt about it.

Mr. Girouard: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I said I would be glad to second it.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Knowles, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard):

That the matters raised by the hon. member for Labelle in his question of privilege as reported in Hansard for Monday, April 27, 1964, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration and report.

Motion agreed to.

HIGHWAYS

DECISION NOT TO HOLD CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, immediately preceding the federal-provincial conference recently held in Quebec, and subsequent to it, a number of hon. members, and particularly the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), requested information as to the possibility of a conference with the provincial highways ministers to formulate a national highways policy.

In this regard I would advise the house that the federal government has given consideration to holding a conference with the provincial highways ministers and, as I reported to the house on July 17, 1963, I had made arrangements for certain information to be collected from the provinces on possible programs and expenditures, and in particular to gain a picture of provincial thinking at that stage.

While the federal government has been willing to accept some responsibility in this field, our responsibility has to be examined in relation to the broader division of fiscal responsibility between the federal government and the provinces. The desirability of a federal-provincial conference on highways has therefore to be assessed in relation to the general conference between the federal and provincial governments of last November and the recent one in Quebec.

In the light of the substantial increases in tax transfers to the provincial governments which will result from these conferences, the federal government does not feel it should consider adding at the present time, on a nation-wide basis, to the already very substantial federal contribution to provincial highways. In the circumstances the holding of a federal-provincial conference in the near future would be likely to raise expectations that could not be realized.

The federal government is at present contributing to the cost of highway construction under the Trans-Canada Highway Act until December 31, 1967 and to the roads to resources program. In these programs there is still a substantial and expensive undertaking on the part of the federal government, estimated at this stage to be in the neighbourhood of $240 million.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED ESPIONAGE ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him to give the house a report on certain rumoured espionage allegedly discovered recently in this country.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, anticipating a question on this matter, was prepared to answer it but has been called out of the chamber. Perhaps I could say in reply to the question of my right hon. friend that Mr. V. V. Tarasov, correspondent for Izvestia, was taken into custody by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police last night.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Within limitations of security, of course, and I limit my question to that, is it anticipated that further arrests will be made?

Mr. Pearson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but we will be anxious to make a statement on the whole matter at the earliest possible date.

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION FOLLOWING PERJURY TRIAL IN TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister read the evidence in the Farris trial as yet, and is he considering any action regarding Mr. Justice Landreville?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the order paper once more.

Mr. Nielsen: I give notice now that I shall give written notice at five o'clock, for debate tonight.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

PROPOSED TRIP ABROAD BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would he intervene in the proposed plan of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism to launch a world junket during the summer months and stop this wasteful use of the taxpayers' money?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRIES AS TO ACTIVITIES OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he any report to give the house with respect to operations in Cyprus? It would appear that a full scale Greek Cypriot offensive is now under way in the Kyrenia pass headed by the minister of the interior. It would also appear that this has taken place after the Canadian contingent of the United Nations force was unable to get the Turkish Cypriots to vacate their position. Does this mean that this offensive is being undertaken by the Greek Cypriots on behalf of the United Nations, or is the United Nations being ignored in this regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend may be assured that no offensive is being taken by the United Nations. The United Nations force is not in Cyprus as an occupational force, nor is it there to further the political purposes or objectives of any one of the groups indigenous to the island.

The fighting to which my hon. friend directs our attention is a new outburst. Over the last week end, fighting was arrested partly as a result of the representations made by the commander of the force to the Cypriot authorities. With regard to the latest incident, I was in touch with the United Nations shortly before coming into the house but I have not got the final details. Until they are in my possession I prefer to make no comment.

In answer to the question my hon. friend asked yesterday, I might say that the Canadian armoured car which, according to reports, was fired upon last week end by Greek Cypriots, was clearly identified by United Nations insignia.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Were Canadian forces operating under the United Nations in the area of the Kyrenia pass, and have the United Nations forces merely been ignored by the Greek Cypriot forces being led by a member of the Cypriot government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday there was a United Nations air patrol by helicopters in which Canadians participated. That was the extent of Canadian participation. The Canadian forces are not being ignored. In the complicated and difficult situation that prevails, they are doing everything they can to comply with the provisions of the security council resolution of March 4.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question. Is the minister telling the house that the reports that the Canadian forces sought to persuade the Turkish Cypriots to withdraw from the Kyrenia pass are not correct and that they are actually not in the area as he suggested a few moments ago?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The representations that were made were not made by the Canadians as such but by the force commander.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has authority been secured for the United Nations forces and in particular the Canadian contingent to disarm those who are engaged in internecine strife on that island, or is the position of the United Nations forces and particularly the Canadian contingent to be that of mere vulnerable spectators of strife within that island?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I regret the comment that has accompanied the interrogation of the right hon. gentleman. The situation in this regard is not dissimilar to the difficult circumstances that attended the Congo operation in which a Canadian contingent participated in the United Nations peace keeping force as the result of policies properly recommended to the house by the government of which my right hon. friend was the head. This is a situation of the greatest delicacy, and I suggest to my right hon. friend that he should appreciate the situation, as indeed he said he did and as indeed the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam did, and quite properly, when this matter was discussed in this house on March 13. We knew when we went into this enterprise, in pursuance of our obligations under the United Nations charter, that we were undertaking a very difficult assignment. The incidents of the last few days have confirmed the difficulties of this assignment. But that is no reason for putting questions that add to the difficulties of the United Nations force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the latter part of the hon. gentleman's observations demands an observation on my part. I say to the minister that in the statement he made yesterday and on every other occasion he hides behind that smokescreen and fails to give parliament the facts. We want to know whether the statement he made yesterday that all is well over there, and similar statements during the last week or so, are in fact simply a series of statements which have no foundation, particularly in view of what happened yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to engage in a debate with the right hon. gentleman on a subject of this importance. I can only repeat that I am surprised that a man with his experience should indulge in this kind of crossfire.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say yesterday that all was well. What I did say yesterday was that the situation had subsided as a result in part of the representations of General Gyani. I did go on to say that as a result of the presence of the United Nations force, the situation in the island of Cyprus was much less serious than it would have been, as my hon. friend knows, but for the intervention of the United Nations peace keeping force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the minister, who does not usually lose his temper this way, that a little less boasting on his part and a little more action in this regard would be beneficial.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, so that my hon. friend and I can both be brought back to our normal impulses may I say to him that I was not speaking angrily or short-temperedly. I was just speaking with force about the right hon. gentleman's indiscretions yesterday and today.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has implied that questions are being raised simply to embarrass the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I rise at once to say that I was not referring in any way to my hon. friend.

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the statement, to whomever it refers, stands on Hansard. I want to make it perfectly clear that a recognition of the difficult situation which the government faces does not absolve members of the house from their responsibility, which is to ask the government why, with a United Nations force in Cyprus, a minister of the crown in Cyprus is leading an attack in complete violation of the peace keeping role the United Nations is seeking to carry out in Cyprus.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman has made this intervention. I have no official information at the moment that would warrant the statement that a Greek Cypriot minister is leading a group of guerrillas or other armed individuals in connection with the situation which my hon. friend has described. When I have that information I shall not hesitate to give it to the house. I am not quarrelling with the interrogations by hon. gentlemen; that is their right and indeed their duty. What I was quarrelling with were questions the answers to which could only be embarrassing and make difficult an operation which, in its very nature is certainly of the greatest delicacy. My remarks were not intended in any way to apply to the hon. gentleman. Thus far he has been the epitome of correctness in the questions he has put.

Mr. Douglas: If the minister discovers that the press reports are accurate to the effect that a minister of the interior of the Cypriot government is leading forces in the Kyrenia pass, will representations be made to the Greek government to ask them to comply with the orders of the United Nations so as not to endanger the lives of Canadian members of the U.N. force?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend just referred to the Greek government but I believe he intended to refer to the Cypriot government. When the facts are known, and when they are clear, we will make representations through our representative in Cyprus. We will make our representations as we have been doing, to the United Nations secretary general and to his colleagues who in turn, I know, will make their representations. I might say that at this moment the secretary general and officials of the United Nations are engaged in very important acts in this very context.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a further supplementary question. Most of the information we are getting is through the press. Has there been a breakdown in liaison between the hon. gentleman and the officials?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The only liaison that has broken down is between the right hon. gentleman and myself.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has told us this afternoon that the Canadian troops in the United Nations unit are not there to take the offensive or to disarm people; they are not there to take sides politically, and in spite of what the minister said last week there is obvious anarchy—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nesbitt: The question will be put just as soon as I have less interruption from the government benches. Can the minister give us some idea of what the purpose of the Canadian troops is? They are not there to do this or that, so would he give us some idea, without going into detail, of the purpose for which the Canadian troops are there?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the house will sympathize with me since my hon. friend has asked me for details, and then in the next breath says he hopes I will not go into details.

The United Nations force in Cyprus is in that island for the same reason the United Nations peace keeping force was in the Congo. We will all recall the almost daily tragic events of the Congo. I would ask my hon. friend, who has had some experience in external affairs, to recall the way in which the opposition of that day dealt with the situation then and the way some hon. gentlemen in this house in seeking to embarrass the administration, might have the effect of making difficult the operations of the United Nations peace keeping force. This house felt the force should be established and that pursuant to the charter of the United Nations, that Canada, as a member of that body, should unhesitatingly join in the formation of that force which is doing a very important and vital job on the island of Cyprus right now.

Mr. Nesbitt: Since the minister made some clearly personal allusions in his remarks I think I am entitled to make a reply. The Congo operation was totally different. We have 1,100 troops here. The only question I asked the minister was, since certain things are not to be done by the Canadian troops could he give us some idea, in general terms, what they are supposed to be doing? The minister then opened up again and made some offensive personal allusions—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to ask the minister if he is aware that in the Congo the United Nations troops took military action against many dissident elements, and actually fought them and disarmed them. You had a totally different situation than exists in Cyprus. I wonder why the minister is trying to give the impression to the house that the United Nations troops in Cyprus are carrying on exactly as those in the Congo did, when there is no similarity whatever.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is a serious question by the former minister of national defence which deserves a serious answer and I will attempt to give one. He must know that the terms of reference under which the United Nations force in the Congo operated, are the same as the terms of reference under which the peace keeping force in Cyprus is now operating. My hon. friend will recall that for a number of months during the time the peace keeping was becoming operational in the Congo, there was no act of disarming the nationals of the Congo by the United Nations force. That eventuated long after the establishment of the force. What the future will be in Cyprus in this regard, will depend upon an assessment to be made by the force commander and those to whom he is responsible. Undoubtedly, the situation is difficult; but since the United Nations force was sent there to preserve peace and order, it should not prematurely take action that is calculated to add to the disorder that already exists on that island.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask another supplementary question. May I ask the minister to read the history of the operation in the Congo. I think he will find the remark he has just made, that no action was taken to disarm the native troops in the Congo, will prove to be incorrect. I should like to ask him also, just by way of elaboration, what is being asked of the United Nations troops in the Congo in order to keep this conflict from spreading if they do not take action to disarm people?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend said the Congo, when I am sure he meant Cyprus. I ask my hon. friend to read the documentation that has already been tabled in the house dealing with the terms of reference, the aide mémoire that was circulated by the secretary general, and the status of forces agreement.

SOUTH AFRICA—EXPENDITURES FOR MILITARY PURPOSES BY WEST GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to make a change in the locale of the operations. Has the minister received any protest from any African nations at the West German government's increasing share in rocket production in South Africa, and its rapidly increasing expenditures for military purposes in the South African nation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this is the type of question that could very well be placed on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY—CANADIAN MOTHER OF THE YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to draw your attention and the attention of all hon. members in the house to the fact that we are honoured today in having in the Speaker's gallery the Canadian mother of the year, Mrs. Gottfriedsen. She is a native of the Shuswap tribe, is the mother of 12 children and has adopted one. She is the foster mother of over 20 children as well. This is an accomplishment in itself, but she is equally well known for her great work among the Indian people, especially the young people, in connection with the development of their artistic and educational advancement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SHIPPING

REPORTED U.S. ACTION TO CONTROL LAKE HURON WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter F. Foy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. This question has great urgency. I would like to know if the minister can say whether an agreement has been made with the United States to build a weir or dam on the St. Clair river at Sarnia, to control the water levels in lake Huron.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member place this on the order paper? It is important, but I do not think it is that urgent.

Mr. Foy: This is indeed a question of great urgency—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the question is urgent and important and I know the minister would like to reply; nevertheless under the rules which the house has given me I think it should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister which I know is of vital importance to him. Is the Canadian government going to participate in the study of the control of the water levels in lake Huron now being planned by the United States army engineering survey corps?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a question was asked on this just a moment ago and you ruled that it should be put on the order paper. I presume you will do the same with this one.

[Later:]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question. I feel it will be out of order, but I must ask it in order to be given the opportunity to debate it. It is a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the government aware of experiments being conducted by the United States corps of engineers directed toward cutting down the outflow of water from lake Huron at Sarnia.

Mr. Speaker: I am glad to inform the hon. member that his opportunity is at hand.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest to Your Honour that if the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy), who first raised this question, should wish to debate it this evening he should have a prior claim over another hon. member who asked the question, which he said he knew was out of order, in order to take advantage of the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think we need waste any time of the house in deciding this matter. If the house cares to leave it in my hands I will do the best I can.

Mr. Aiken: Nevertheless I wish to give notice, in order that I will be the first hon. member who has given notice.

Mr. Foy: I have already said I am giving notice.

Mr. Speaker: In order to settle the matter I shall check the blues.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MONTREAL—REPORTED INTENTION TO PRODUCE LEUKEMIA SERUM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Is the minister aware of the fact that Mr. Naessens, a French biochemist whose serum against leukemia has been rejected by the French medical bureau, has announced his intention of building a laboratory in the Montreal area for the production and distribution of his serum?

In the interest of public health in Canada, will the hon. lady order an investigation concerning the intentions and activities of that person?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question.

I checked that situation this morning. If a person comes to Canada with a drug or a particular serum and uses it to treat the sick, that person is practising medicine. The case would then come under the jurisdiction of the Quebec college of practicians and surgeons, which is responsible for the issuing of licences to practise medicine in that province.

On the other hand, anyone who undertakes to manufacture or offer for sale a drug or medicine automatically comes under the Food and Drugs Act, which, naturally, is my department's responsibility. My department is keeping an eye on those developments.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OTTAWA—ALLEGED EXCLUSIVE USE OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AT HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence?

In view of the numerous complaints originating from his department, particularly from the building on Elgin street in Ottawa, is the minister aware that only English is used there, that even French Canadian employees must hold a card made out in English only, and that this situation has been going on as long as one can remember?

Could the minister inquire from his officials if that is the case and can he assure us that the situation will change?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GASPE—REPORTED INTENTION TO CONDUCT ECONOMIC SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

In a talk delivered recently, the Secretary of State announced that the Economic Council of Canada would investigate, at a cost of $800,000, the economic possibilities of the Gaspé peninsula and lower St. Lawrence regions. Could the minister inform the house whether similar investigations are planned for other regions of Canada, for example the Lake St. John and Saguenay regions?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has misinterpreted what I have said, i.e. that the federal government decided to participate, under ARDA, in such an investigation for the lower St. Lawrence region.

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

When the minister speaks about the lower St. Lawrence valley does he include the area of Charlevoix?

Mr. Lamontagne: The investigation now being carried out does not include that area of the province of Quebec.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ABITIBI, QUE.—REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General?

Since 1964 will be the fiftieth anniversary of Abitibi, which will be commemorated by important celebrations, does the Postmaster General intend to issue a commemorative stamp to emphasize this jubilee more particularly?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

COST OF SENDING NEWSPAPERS TO TROOPS OVERSEAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, some two weeks ago the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac asked if I would look into the matter of mailing charges for newspapers being sent to troops serving overseas, and I assured him I would look into the matter. I have done so, and the Post Office Department will be issuing a press release within the next day or two so that people in all parts of Canada who have newspapers and periodicals which they would like to send to the troops will know the regulations and the ground rules. As a matter of courtesy to the hon. member I am mentioning it now.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL MUSEUM

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Could he inform the house when legislation will be introduced to implement the plans for Canada's national museum, referred to in Charlottetown over the week end?

Mr. Speaker: Is there any special urgency in that? I know the question is important, but if it is not really pressing I think it should be on the order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, the urgency arises from the fact that a resolution to this effect was on the order paper in January 1963, and the delay indicates the matter has now become urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put it on the order paper?

BROADCASTING

COMMUNITY ANTENNA SYSTEMS—REFERENCE OF LEGISLATION TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the house does he intend to refer cable television and the legislation proposed therefor to the special committee of the house on broadcasting?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has not decided yet whether there will be any legislation.

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. When will the minister be prepared to inform the house as to the composition and personnel of the special committee on broadcasting?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to make a statement at the beginning of May.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY ORGANIZATION MEETINGS OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the chief government whip and ask him if he is in a position to make any announcement about meetings of committees which have not yet been set up, particularly the joint House of Commons-Senate committee on consumer credit.

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): The consumer credit committee is being organized tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock. There are five other standing committees being organized on Thursday starting at 9.30 in the morning. That makes 14 or 15 in all.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—POSSIBLE REVISION FOLLOWING REPORT OF BANKING COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Canada pension plan to be revised once again in view of the criticism contained in the report of the royal commission on banking and finance?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether the forthcoming pension plan will be the only one throughout Canada, or whether some provinces will have distinct and entirely independent plans?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems that this question is very wide and would demand a very careful answer. I do not think it should be asked at this time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Last week I asked a question of the Prime Minister with respect to a request from the Alberta legislature concerning legislation unanimously passed by that legislature. The Prime Minister indicated he would look into the matter and reply later. I wonder if he is now in a position to do so.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not have that answer with me; I hope I will have it tomorrow.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GENEVA CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question of which I gave him notice.

Can the minister give the house a progress report on the international trade conference at Geneva and tell us where Canada stands.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I hope the minister will not make it just at the moment. May I suggest that the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REFORM OF POLICY TO COMBAT POVERTY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Following the statement made by President Johnson, who intends to combat extreme poverty in his country, may we hope that a financial reform policy will be introduced in this house in order to do away with poverty and to fight enemies of economic stability in this country?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question is far too wide, and that it should be placed on the order paper.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the government intends to refer to a special committee or to the committee on banking and commerce the report on banking and finance which was tabled last Friday?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I should like to take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and consider it.

WATER RESOURCES

FRASER RIVER—AVAILABILITY OF BOARD REPORT AND APPENDIX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I want to have some information from the minister of northern affairs. Do I understand that yesterday he tabled appendices to the report of the Fraser river development board; and will copies of that report and the appendices be available to members of this house?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): We are obtaining copies of the original report and of the appendix volume as well for all those members of parliament—I think probably from the province of British Columbia in the first place—who are interested in the project.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister, in view of the fact that the information given to us by the sessional papers office is that members have to write to British Columbia for this report or appendix volume, whether he would make the appropriate correction so that this matter can be taken care of?

Mr. Laing: It has been so made. The volumes are here.

HARBOURS

RIVIÈRE DU LOUP, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF DEEP WATER PORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it true, as reported in a statement made by the Minister without Portfolio, that he intends to carry out the project of building an ocean port at Rivière du Loup, at a cost of $7 million. If so, is the minister aware that this port could hardly be used in winter, according to experienced sailors, on account of ice which accumulates almost invariably on the south side?

Could the minister consider at the same time Baie St. Paul or Pointe au Pic as more suitable sites for the establishment of such a port?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Bélanger: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that I shall raise this matter this evening, under the adjournment motion.

[Text]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in order to clear up a point.

As the Minister of Justice was chosen by the Prime Minister as lieutenant of the Quebec's Liberals, could the Prime Minister tell the house what will from now on be the exact duties of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) in that field?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I have grave doubts whether the question is in order, but, giving the hon. member the benefit of the doubt, may I suggest the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: After ten o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the deduction from income granted in respect of certain tuition fees be extended to include tuition fees paid by a taxpayer who is a student, whether or not he is a full time student, to an educational institution in Canada

(a) that is a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level,

(b) that is a school operated by or on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, a municipality in Canada, or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(c) that is a high school or secondary school providing courses leading to a secondary school certificate or diploma that is a requirement for entrance to a college or university, or

(d) that is certified by the Minister of Labour to be an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualifications of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession, if the tuition fees paid by the taxpayer for the year exceed $25.

2. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a dependant in respect of whom a taxpayer may deduct an amount not exceeding $550 in computing his taxable income shall include a taxpayer's brother or sister who was 21 years of age or over and in full time attendance at a school or university.

3. That the period commencing on December 5, 1963 within which a new manufacturing or processing business must have commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities in a designated area in order to obtain a certificate for the purposes of section 71A of the act be extended to March 31, 1967.

4. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years in determining whether 95 per cent of the assets used in a business were new and situated in a designated area, for purposes of establishing under section 71A of the act that a person was carrying on the business in a designated area, the value of the assets shall be their fair market value notwithstanding that such value may be different from their capital cost.

5. That where at a time when an area was a designated area a business has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business, or an application has been made in writing to the Minister of Industry by a taxpayer in respect of a business that upon the fulfilment of specified conditions would be certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business in the designated area, that area, notwithstanding that it may no longer be a designated area, shall for the purpose of the application of section 71A of the act to that particular business continue to be a designated area.

6. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income all expenditures of a current nature for scientific research carried on outside Canada that are expenditures made in the year

(a) for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer, or

(b) to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business.

7. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income amounts expended by him in relation to an objection to an assessment or an appeal from an assessment and shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof.

8. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income an amount paid in the year or in a previous year since 1962 as a contribution to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was a contributor even if he also deducts an amount as a contribution in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was not a contributor, but the maximum amount deductible in a year in respect of past services while he was a contributor shall not exceed $1,500 minus the aggregate of the amounts deducted in the year in respect of services rendered by him in the year and in respect of services rendered by him previous to the year while he was not a contributor.

9. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the period of 60 days from the end of a year within which an employer may pay an amount to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by his employees be increased to 120 days.

10. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years it be made clear that any amount received by an employer upon the winding up or reorganization of a pension fund or plan shall be included in his income.

11. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years subsection (3) of section 12 of the act, which provides rules concerning an outlay or expense payable by a taxpayer to a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length, be amended so that a taxpayer who at the end of his taxation year has a liability that

(a) arose in respect of a non-arm's length transaction,

(b) was deductible in computing his income, and

(c) has been outstanding for two years following the end of the taxation year in which it accrued

must include in income for the third year after it accrued an amount equal to the liability, unless the debtor and creditor sign and file an agreement in which they elect to have their taxes computed as though the debt had been paid and replaced by a loan on the first day of that third year.

12. That the 20 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him after 1964 by a corporation resident in Canada that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be reduced to 15 per cent, and that in consequence thereof:

(a) Part IID of the act imposing a tax equal to 5 per cent of certain dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be repealed;

(b) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed by Part IIIA of the act on income earned after 1964 by a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be reduced to 15 per cent; and

(c) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed on the taxable income earned after 1964 by a non-resident-owned investment corporation be reduced to 15 per cent.

13. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years, where a taxpayer has disposed of his interest in a partnership, such part of the consideration as is reasonable in the circumstances shall be deemed to be proceeds of disposition of depreciable property of the taxpayer used in the partnership business.

14. That for the 1964 taxation year the amount deductible in computing taxable income in respect of a dependant child who was over 15 and under 18 years of age at the end of the year shall not exceed $470 if an allowance was paid under the Family Allowances Act in respect of the child for any month after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

15. That for the 1965 and subsequent taxation years, a child shall be regarded as a child qualified for family allowance for any year at the end of which he was over 15 and under 18 years of age, if an allowance under the Family Allowances Act was paid in the year in respect of that child after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

16. That with regard to the definition of degree of Canadian ownership in section 139A of the said Act, the said measure provide as follows:

"(1) Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of the issued and oustanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, and equity shares representing in the aggregate not less than 25 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and oustanding equity shares of the corporation were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada, or a combination thereof, or

(B) a class or classes of shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned more than 75 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and a class or classes of equity shares of the corporation representing in the aggregate not less than 50 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned equity shares representing in the aggregate more than 75 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and"

(2) Subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) thereof, by repealing paragraph (b) thereof and by substituting therefor the following paragraphs:

"(b) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty-day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (c); or

(c) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary controlled corporation

(i) having issued and outstanding equity shares none of which were owned by a person other than

(A) the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(B) a non-resident person not related to the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(C) an individual resident in Canada, or

(D) a corporation controlled in Canada, and

(ii) subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty-day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (b)."

(3) Paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) a corporation that has share capital is not controlled in Canada at a particular time unless at that time the corporation is resident in Canada, and more than 50 per cent of its issued and outstanding shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of its paid up capital are owned by

(i) individuals resident in Canada,

(ii) corporations resident in Canada with respect to each of which

(A) more than 50 per cent of the issued shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and

(B) shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of the paid up capital

are owned by individuals resident in Canada, or

(iii) any combination of individuals or corporations described in subparagraph (i) or (ii);

(b) where

(i) a non-resident person,

(ii) a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, or

(iii) a corporation that is related to a non-resident person within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139

has a right under a contract in equity or otherwise either immediately or in the future and either absolutely or contingently, to, or to acquire, equity shares in a corporation, those shares shall

(iv) unless the right is contingent upon an event that it is not reasonable to expect to occur within a reasonable time, or

(v) unless the right is such that a reasonable man concerned only with the value of the shares would not exercise it,

be deemed

(vi) to be owned by the person who has the right,

(vii) to be owned by a non-resident person, where the person who has the right is a corporation described in subparagraph (ii) or (iii) and

(viii) where the shares are unissued,

(A) to be issued and outstanding, and

(B) to have a paid up capital value, with respect to each share, equal to

1. the par value, where the shares have a par value,

2. the amount that would be paid with respect to each share to exercise the right under the terms of the contract, where the shares have no par value and amount is specified in the contract, or

3. the market value at the end of the relevant sixty day period of a share of the class of shares of that corporation that is most closely similar to that share, where the shares have no par value and no amount is specified in the contract,

and any other person who actually owns the shares in respect of which that right exists shall be deemed not to own those shares."

(4) Subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(e) "equity share" means

(i) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding up of the corporation, as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid up capital value of the share to which the right relates, and

(ii) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, after a dividend at a rate not in excess of 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding up of the corporation, after a payment of a part of the surplus at a rate not in excess of 10 per cent has been made to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based, on the paid up capital value of the share to which the right relates; and

(f) "paid up capital value" with reference to a share, means

(i) in the case of an unissued share that is deemed by paragraph (b) to be issued and outstanding, the amount determined under clause (B) of subparagraph (viii) of that paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, an amount equal to the paid up capital of the corporation that is represented by the shares of the class to which that share belongs divided by the number of shares of that class that are in fact issued and outstanding."

(5) In the case of a taxation year commencing before January 1, 1965, of a corporation that would have had a degree of Canadian ownership in the 1964 taxation year if section 139A of the said act had not been amended by this act, that portion of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act, as amended by this act, that precedes paragraph (a) thereof shall, if the corporation elects in prescribed manner before January 1, 1965, be read as follows:

"139A. (1) For the purposes of this act, a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership in a taxation year if throughout any sixty day period commencing after March 16, 1964 and ending before January 1, 1965"

(6) This section is applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years."

and for the purpose of determining whether a corporation had a degree of Canadian ownership for the purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (1a) of section 106 the said act, section 139A of the said act shall

(a) in relation to any dividend declared on or before March 16, 1964 be read as if it had not been amended by the said measure, and

(b) in relation to any dividend declared after March 16, 1964 be read as amended by the said measure.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last night we were considering paragraph 7 of the resolution.

Mr. Martineau: Before we go on, I wonder whether the minister has any answers to some of the questions which were put to him on this paragraph last night.

Mr. Gordon: I think what I have said on this paragraph is reasonably clear. At the moment certain fees charged by lawyers, accountants and others in connection with appeals are not allowed as a deductible expense for tax purposes. This provision proposes that they should be allowed as deductible expenses in the same way that similar expenditures by corporations and others are allowed.

The amounts paid will, of course, be included in the income of recipients and tax will be collected on that, so that except in the very few unusual cases, perhaps, where a taxpayer's income is less than the top rates of income of the practitioner, the tax which will be collected from the practitioner will be higher than the amount of the allowance.

I think last night I answered most of the questions raised by the hon. member. I will be glad to go into this matter again, if he thinks that is necessary.

Mr. Nowlan: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, having raised this objection I would be perfectly prepared to now wait and see the wording of the section in the act; then we could deal with it more fully. We do not know at the moment how the section itself is worded. If it is agreeable to the other members of the committee, I would be perfectly agreeable to moving on. Last night we held paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 in order to obtain further information. Perhaps it would be more orderly if we returned to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 and proceeded from there.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that we return to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 to obtain more information from the minister, and return to paragraph 7 later?

Mr. Hales: Before we leave paragraph 7, Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question in order to save time when this legislation is drafted. Paragraph 7 refers to "any costs". This is not spelled out. Does this refer to lawyers' costs, travelling expenses, and so on; or what does "any costs" mean? Perhaps this will be cleared up in the legislation. There is also nothing in this paragraph which lays down a ceiling; the costs can be as high as they like and there is no ceiling on them. I hope these things will be taken care of in the legislation that is coming forth.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the costs referred to here are the legal costs that might be awarded by the court to the taxpayer, and in that event he would have to include those reimbursements as part of his income.

The Chairman: Does this conclude the discussion on paragraph 7?

Mr. Olson: Before we pass from paragraph 7, Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise this matter. The minister has just raised a very interesting point. Is he now suggesting that the only way a taxpayer will be able to recover any of these costs is if they are awarded by a court?

Mr. Gordon: If a taxpayer launches an appeal and loses the appeal, it is pretty difficult to think of any other way in which he can recover his costs. By that I mean the amounts he pays out by way of fees. He cannot get them back if he has paid them out and lost his case. If the court finds in his favour and awards him costs at the expense of the crown, then to that extent he gets part of them back.

Mr. Nowlan: I said I was satisfied, Mr. Chairman, but I should just like to clarify that one point. I have no particular quarrel with the part of the paragraph dealing with appeals. When we get the section in front of us we can perhaps deal with this matter with greater understanding. I have some real doubts as to the filing of an objection, because this is not an appeal before the court; it is something that is perhaps dealt with in the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, or in the office of the director in Halifax or Vancouver. It is to that point I think the minister should direct his attention very carefully when he sees the section brought in in the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the last two or three remarks of the minister have thrown an altogether different light on the interpretation of what is in paragraph 7. As a matter of fact I think his latest interpretation of how this paragraph will be applied is far superior to the wide range or scope of the interpretation that may have been put on it in the case, for example, of a taxpayer making an appeal against an assessment. I believe that is included in this paragraph, as well as an objection to an assessment. If the minister is now saying that the application of this paragraph will be confined to costs that are awarded by the court in a case where an appeal is granted, that is considerably different than the interpretation we took from his remarks yesterday.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, can the minister assure us that these costs will only be costs that might be awarded by a court?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman; the proposal is that the amount of the fees paid, which may be in excess of the amount of costs settled by the court, should be allowed as a deductible expense. But I think last night I referred to the particular section of the act, section 12 (2), which permits the department to disallow anything that might be unreasonable.

Mr. Olson: I have one other point. Will the income tax appeal board be granted the authority to assess costs in cases of this nature?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, according to clause 7, I appreciate that the taxpayer can deduct from his income the amounts he had to pay in order to appeal against a judgment or a decision by an income tax assessor.

Now, when a taxpayer is faced with court action by officials of the Department of Finance or the Department of National Revenue, sometimes it costs him a lot of money to pay his lawyers. Does the government intend to assume such expenses when the taxpayer wins his case, which would prove that the government employees were completely wrong?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: They have not thought of anything that goes that far, although if it went so far as to get before the exchequer court or the supreme court and that court saw fit to award costs to the taxpayer, then he would recoup them to that extent; but not in an appeal to an official of the department or to the tax appeal board.

Mr. Olson: I do not want to belabour this matter, Mr. Chairman, but I just want to clarify one point. Then there is no possibility of a taxpayer being able to claim any part of the costs involved in objecting to an appeal—that is, for accountants' or lawyers' fees, or anything of that nature—in a case that went only as far as one of the officials of the department or even the tax appeal board? It would have to go beyond that, to the exchequer court or the Supreme Court of Canada, before he would be able to make any claim from his taxable income with respect to the costs of so doing?

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that we have become a little mixed up with this word "costs". The kind of costs that my hon. friend referred to I would like to call expenses. Those legal expenses or other expenses, under this section, will be allowed as deductions from the taxpayer's income whether or not he wins the case. If, however, he goes further, to the exchequer court or the supreme court, wins his case and the judgment includes what are known as costs, this paragraph means he is reimbursed for his legal fees. Then, if having been allowed to deduct the legal fees in the first place, he gets them paid back to him by the crown, he has to include what he receives as income. In other words he cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, there still seems to be some confusion about this. Let us take the case of a constituent of mine who objects to his assessment. He goes as far as he can with the local officials; then he comes to Ottawa and spends a week here, possibly with counsel, and debates the matter with the officials of the Department of National Revenue. Can he deduct the cost to which he has been put? Is it a deductible item in the preparation of his income tax?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, absolutely. The last phrase refers to something else altogether. But in the example given by the hon. member he would be entitled to deduct from his taxable income his total expenses in connection with his representations to the department. That is the point about which my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings has some doubt, I think, but according to the resolution all the expenses incurred by a constituent from London going to Ottawa, with counsel or anybody else he might like to take with him, will be allowed as a deduction from his taxable income.

Mr. Thomas: Does that apply whether or not he wins his point?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, whether or not he wins.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, as an example, a taxpayer files his income tax return in which he claims, let us say, a sum of $700 as charitable donations. The department decides to cut down this sum and reduce it to $200, and does so arbitrarily as usual. The taxpayer then asks the services of a lawyer to plead his case and substantiate the amount claimed as charitable donations. Will all the expenses thus incurred by the taxpayer be deductible for income tax purposes, whether he wins or loses his case?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, all these expenses are deductible from his income; not from his tax but from his income. If he is arguing about an amount of $300 and his lawyer charges him $500, he can deduct the $500 from his income but he still has to pay the lawyer $500. So there is a pretty good check on this.

Mr. Caouette: Does the minister not think that the crown should pay him back if he wins his case?

Mr. Gordon: That is an entirely different subject, Mr. Chairman, and is one which has come up. Various people have suggested this. It has been considered by the department and I am sure it is being considered by the royal commission on taxation; but in this particular resolution this is not proposed.

Paragraph agreed to.

The Chairman: We will return to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5, which were stood aside last night.

On paragraphs 3, 4 and 5.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, for a number of weeks now we have been endeavouring to get some correct information from the ministry with respect to industries which have established themselves in designated areas for the purpose of availing themselves of the incentives proposed by the government. In all these efforts we have not as yet been able to get anything definite either from the Minister of Industry or from the Minister of Finance; all we get is a conglomeration of words and answers which are not directly related to the questions asked.

As an example of this, Mr. Chairman, a written question put by the hon. member for Peterborough was replied to on April 13. The hon. member asked five questions and I will refer only to the first, which is reported at page 2078 of Hansard. It is as follows:

> 1. How many industries have settled in the designated areas since these areas were set up?

This is a question which is quite simple and understandable. It is asking how many industries have settled. Let us take a look at the reply which the hon. member received from the Minister of Industry:

> 1. Thirty four new businesses are being established in Canada—

The question asked how many have settled, and the answer is that 34 are being established in Canada. The answer is not in conformity with the question put. Then yesterday the Minister of Finance, as reported at page 2632 of Hansard, made this statement:

> I am informed that 150 proposals for new businesses have been discussed with the area development agency. Of these over 40 companies have formally indicated they are going ahead with projects to be located in 14 of the 35 designated areas.

Then at the conclusion of his remarks the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings asked the minister:

> Could the minister give us the geographical areas involved in these applications? I do not want them by counties but how many are there, for instance, in the Atlantic provinces and how many in Ontario, Quebec and the west?

There is nothing difficult to answer there. The minister replied as follows:

> The Minister of Industry informs me that an answer was given today and will appear in Hansard for today. I do not have the answer before me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have searched vainly in Hansard of yesterday's date to which the minister referred, but no answer appears to have been given. This is just an indication either of evasiveness on the part of ministers or a lack of knowledge as to what is happening. As I say, we have searched Hansard without success, failing to find the answer which according to the minister was given.

Then the Minister of Industry got into the act a little later on, and amongst other things he said, as reported at page 2633 of Hansard:

> These 40 industries in 14 of the 35 designated areas are planning capital investments—

Then he went on to give the amounts. Surely the government, through the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Industry, can tell us in fairly wide terms where these 40 industries are establishing, or have established, themselves. I do not think any industries have established themselves in Canada yet in any of these designated areas, because I followed this matter up and asked this question of the Minister of Industry yesterday, as reported at the same page of Hansard:

> Will the minister tell us now how many have been actually established? Has there been one, have there been four or has there been none?

I am sure that yesterday the Minister of Industry said there were none, yet in Hansard this answer appears:

> Mr. Drury: I do not think that there is one that has come into commercial operations yet.

That is the sort of answer, Mr. Chairman, which we get to a specific question. I asked the minister whether he would tell us how many industries have been actually established. Again I got an evasive answer, although I do not think the minister uttered the words which appear in Hansard because I am fairly certain he said none. But according to Hansard he said:

I do not think that there is one that has come into commercial operations yet.

In view of all this confusion and evasiveness—and all we in this committee are trying to do is find out the facts—surely if none has been established yet the government ought to be honest and aboveboard and say so. Several industries have made inquiries, and I understand that naturally they would, but in fact no industries have been established as yet. That is my understanding. I suggest that we stop all this beating about the bush with words, because I think we would get on much more quickly if the answers were direct and to the point.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of beating about the bush with words. the legislation became effective, I think, on December 5 of last year. It provides that if a new manufacturing or processing business—I forget whether the word is "establishes" but I will use that word—establishes itself in a designated area and gets into production on a commercial scale within a certain period it then qualifies for these tax concessions. Most of these businesses are large ones.

Mr. Starr: Would the minister put on record the period in which they must qualify?

Mr. Gordon: The period was 24 months from December 5, 1963. It is now proposed that it be extended to March 31, 1967. This is an example of what happens. In the first place, the businesses concerned will decide that this is a good thing for them to do and they may or may not come and discuss the matter with the department. There is no need for them to do so. Therefore the department is only aware of the ones that actually come to it. There is no obligation to come and they do not lose anything if they do not come. These businesses then have to build a plant or—

Mr. Starr: Or rent one.

Mr. Gordon: —rent one or buy equipment and get into commercial production. So far none have done that to my knowledge. The Minister of Industry said that a certain question had been answered yesterday and he did so because he had sent the answer to the office of the Secretary of State. However, it did not reach that office in time to be included in the answers that were tabled yesterday and appear in yesterday's Hansard. But the question is as follows:

Of the 34 manufacturing businesses that have been established in Canada in designated areas, how many have established in (a) each province, (b) Windsor, Ontario, (c) Brantford, Ontario?

The answer, which will presumably appear in tomorrow's Hansard, is as follows:

"Of the 34 new businesses which are being established"—

As I said a moment ago, none are actually in commercial production yet.

—"in Canada with the declared intention of benefiting from the designated area tax incentive program the breakdown is as follows: Alberta and British Columbia, 1"—

I do not know which province it is in.

—"New Brunswick, 2; Nova Scotia, 3; Ontario, 17; Quebec, 11, a total of 34".

The answer to the (b) part of the question is "Windsor, 2" and to the (c) part, "Brantford, 10".

Another question which I was asked yesterday had to do with the location—

Mr. Starr: May I interrupt at this point? Is there any definite commitment of any kind, any definite declared intention on the part of any industry to carry through such a project, or is it possible that some of them may change their minds and not establish?

Mr. Gordon: There is no reason at all why they cannot change their minds, run out of money, go bankrupt. Any of these things may happen.

Mr. Starr: In other words, there is nothing definite.

Mr. Gordon: I feel that the hon. member for Ontario really should be a lawyer.

Mr. Starr: I just want to get at the truth.

Mr. Gordon: The fact is, as I have said before, that none of these businesses has yet got into full production. To that extent I suppose you might say there is nothing definite, but the indications are pretty attractive.

Mr. Starr: May I interrupt again? How many have started construction?

Mr. Gordon: I have not got that answer, but at the time this question was asked there were 34 and now there are 40 that have stated to the department that they are going ahead. There are also a number of others that certainly are going ahead but have not put it in categorical terms. If I may answer the question of my hon. friend about the breakdown in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, one of these businesses is in the process of establishing in Amherst, two in New Glasgow, one in Campbellton and one in Sussex.

Mr. MacEwan: Would the minister have the names of the businesses to be established in New Glasgow?

Mr. Gordon: I have not got the names with me but I will be glad to ask the Minister of Industry to send them to my hon. friend, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. Stenson: Could I ask the minister for the names of the ones establishing in Brantford?

Mr. Gordon: I have just been cautioned by my advisers that I had better be careful about the promises I make and I may have to retract the one I have just made. Some of these businesses may not wish it to be known ahead of time that they plan to locate in these areas, but if they have no objection I will be glad to supply the information.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Could the minister advise us what information these firms have to give to the government before being issued a permit to go ahead?

Mr. Gordon: They do not have to give any information and they do not have to receive any permit. They have to establish the fact that between these various dates they went into business in one of these areas. They have to receive a certificate from the Department of Industry that within the specified time they commenced the business of manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities. Those are the phrases that were used last year and that are in the act now.

Mr. Stenson: Will the names of all industries that receive income tax deductions be available?

Mr. Gordon: I see no reason why that information should not be supplied, and I think it should be. So that we can button this up, inasmuch as I do not have the information myself I wonder whether the hon. member would be kind enough to drop a line to the Minister of Industry asking for the names of the businesses in the areas in which he is interested, and I will twist his arm and see if I can get as much of the information as possible for the hon. member.

The Chairman: Does this conclude discussion of paragraphs 3, 4 and 5?

Mr. Starr: I just want to make one observation with reference to a question I asked the Minister of Industry yesterday. I am sorry he is not in the house but I would make the same observation if he were. I asked him this specific question, as found on page 2633 of Hansard.

> Will the minister tell us now how many have been actually established? Has there been one, have there been four or has there been none?

According to my recollection the minister said "none" and sat down. Yet in today's Hansard the following answer appears:

> Mr. Drury: I do not think that there is one that has come into commercial operations yet.

[Mr. Gordon.]

I am certain the Minister of Industry did not say that at all. All he said was "none" and sat down. That indicates that even when a direct answer is given it is eliminated and an evasive one is put in its place.

The Chairman: Does this conclude the discussion of paragraphs 3, 4 and 5?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if he has now departed from his previously stated views in the Gordon report that the Atlantic provinces are a land in which there is a lack of potential, etc., and would he use his good offices in conjunction with the Minister of Industry to coax, coerce, encourage, beg, if you wish, some of these industries that are interested in locating in such areas to look at Cape Breton Island and see if they may be able to assist that area, because we are facing a lot of unemployment?

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member realizes that when he asks the Minister of Finance to do something which should be done by the Minister of Industry he is getting away from the item now before the committee.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I, of course, bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I would think that possibly the Minister of Finance is on good terms with the Minister of Industry.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before we proceed to the next item, may I ask if I correctly understood the minister's answer that there were no designated depressed areas in western Canada at all?

Mr. Gordon: No, you were not correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I might say that the west has long been seeking industry because the farmers in the west have felt that they have danced to the tune of the eastern manufacturers long enough. I should like this government, as I know the previous government did, to pay particular attention to the development of the west by trying to get new industries in that part of Canada. I should like to see the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry take a greater interest in that part of Canada in relation to this section of the Income Tax Act.

The Chairman: Does this conclude the discussion on paragraphs 3, 4 and 5?

Mr. Hales: No, I should like to speak on paragraph 4. Will the minister explain to the committee this reference to the fair market value? Does this mean that a manufacturer can use second hand machinery now, whereas before he had to use new machinery?

Mr. Gordon: The purpose of the proposal in the resolution is precisely the opposite. As the law now stands the use of capital goods for used machinery can be manipulated and a large quantity of second hand equipment could be bought from a parent company at a very slight capital cost, and a business may qualify by equipping with very little new machinery. There would be no advantage to this. In order to prevent this manipulation, the resolution proposes to substitute fair market value of assets in place of the written down value of capital cost in the application which is now found under section 71A(3). In this test it is provided that a company does not qualify unless 95 per cent of the machinery, equipment and buildings owned or leased and used in the business are situated in the designated area. It can be got around by a little ingenuity, and I think that is the kindest word I could use at the moment. This section is designed to prevent that.

Paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall we go to paragraph 8?

On paragraph 8.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to ask the minister to give us an explanation of paragraph 8, which is a very technical one. It is one, I am sure, for which he can give us an adequate explanation so that we can understand the technical language.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this proposes a broadening of the rules concerning the deduction of amounts contributed by employees into a registered pension plan. It proposes an amendment to allow an employee to deduct an amount contributed in respect of services in past years while he was a contributor to a plan, even though he may also claim a deduction for the same years in respect of services in past years while he was not a contributor. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to cover a situation where a member of a pension plan wants to make a lump sum or annual contribution in respect of services for previous years, during some of which he was a contributor and during some of which he was not a contributor. The intention is to smooth out or to clarify the situation where some individuals are being discriminated against.

Mr. Monteith: I did not understand what the minister meant when he referred to past years. Before I come to that, I gather that the reference to any previous year since 1962 means that in computing his income an amount may be deducted in 1963 or subsequent years; am I right in that? If a taxpayer were to file a claim against 1963, which presumably has been filed, this would be taken into consideration. The minister said, "During past years while he was a contributor and while he was not a contributor." I presume he is going to make a lump sum payment to cover the period while he was not a contributor, or distributed over a period of time, related to that period when he was not a contributor. Is he presumed to be making that payment on that period now, or increasing the payments for that period?

Mr. Gordon: It has been suggested to me that instead of trying to give a short and snappy answer to that question I should explain what the present law is. The law at present permits an employee to claim a deduction for a contribution into a registered pension plan under three principal subparagraphs. The first deals with current services, not exceeding $1,500 a year in respect of such current services; the second is for past services, not exceeding $1,500 a year in respect of services in past years while he was not a contributor. If an amount in excess of $1,500 is contributed under this subparagraph in a year, the excess may be carried forward and deducted in subsequent years.

Now, the third provision also has to do with past services. It applies if an employee has not made a deduction under the second provision. He may deduct an amount in respect of services in past years while he was a contributor; and the amount deducted in a year under this subparagraph, plus the amount deducted under the first subparagraph for current services may not exceed $1,500. This means an employee may deduct a maximum of $3,000 under these various provisions. The deduction under the second one is intended to cover the employee who did not join a pension plan of his employer at the commencement of his employment, but in later years wants to make a contribution for those years of employment while he was not a contributor. The deduction under subparagraph (3) is intended to cover an employee who wishes to increase the contributions he made in previous years. The proposed change would permit an employee to make a deduction in respect of services in past years while he was not a contributor, even though he also deducts an amount in the year in respect of services in past years while he was not a contributor. The maximum amount deductible in respect of past years while he was a contributor shall not exceed $1,500, minus the amount deductible in a year, (a) on account of current services and (b) on account of services in past years while he was not a contributor—

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister repeat that last line, minus the amount—

Mr. Gordon: Minus the amount deducted in a year (a) on account of current services in past years while he was not a contributor.

Now, I thoroughly agree with other members of the committee that this is a rather complicated subject. The purpose is to allow people to pay up their past contributions if they so wish, and not to hinder them in the process.

Mr. Monteith: Is the total amount that he may deduct in any one year still $3,000?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is correct. It can never be more than $3,000.

Mr. Monteith: But he may distribute it in different categories?

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Mr. Nowlan: This was intended to be a relieving section?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Nowlan: I might say, if it has any bearing on the situation, that there is a member of the committee who is not here today who comes into a category described by the minister, being in the employment of one of the very large corporations of this country, and he was told by his personnel officer that he would be penalized by the passing of this paragraph. The hon. member is not here today, but presumably he will be present when the bill comes before the house. At that stage he may have some questions concerning his own personal status, but the minister says this is a relieving section and in no way penalizes those within any of these categories.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings would be kind enough to speak to his friend so that I might have an opportunity of having a word with him before the bill comes forward.

Mr. Nowlan: I will do that.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 9.

Mr. Crouse: This is an interesting paragraph, especially in view of the fact that the Department of National Revenue has been endeavouring to encourage Canadians to pay their taxes as early as possible following the end of the calendar year. If further payments are to be made into a registered pension plan over a period of 120 days from the end of the year, it is only natural that taxpayers will wait for receipts from a pension fund, and this will further crowd the filing of returns into the last 30 days before returns are generally due. Will an individual, who may be paying into a pension plan, be allowed 120 days along with employers, or will he just be cut off at the end of the 60 day period? At present this paragraph states specifically that the extension to 120 days applies only to employers.

Mr. Gordon: The intention is that this would only be extended to employers because the individual has a fixed amount he has to pay, and he knows what it is. In some of the corporation pension plans the amount a corporation pays in is dependant to some extent on its profits for the year. It may pay a certain amount plus a percentage of its profits, and in some cases it has been said that corporations do not know what their profits are 60 days after the end of the year.

There are some companies which take a little longer than others in closing their books, and it has proven to be impossible for them to determine what they owe to a pension plan within a period of two months. So they need longer in order to ascertain the exact amount.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the minister for that explanation, but it is equally true that some commercial salesmen for insurance companies, and other individuals working for large corporations, are not aware of the amount of commission or bonus that may be forwarded to them. If their bonus is late in arriving they may wish to lower their own income tax by making a heavier contribution to a pension plan, and it would be only fair that this provision, if it is extended to large corporations, should also be extended to all Canadians so that there would be no discrimination.

Mr. Gordon: There may be something in what the hon. gentleman says, although I am informed that there have been no representations and no complaints on this point. I would prefer to inquire into it to see if there is a real difficulty before taking it into account. I must say I am sympathetic with the point that has been made, and it is the sort of thing we might look into next year. However, I would like to be sure that there is some substance to it.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 10.

Mr. Monteith: I am assuming that actually the intent now is that any amount received by an employer upon the winding up or reorganization of a pension fund or plan shall be included in his income in the year it is received. I understand there has apparently been some weakness discovered in the present bill, and that this amendment is purely to make sure that this is so.

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. In one court case, which I think brought hope to the hearts of others, it was ruled that when a pension plan was wound up and there was a surplus in it which came back to the corporation, the corporation did not have to pay tax on the amount it received in this fashion. This was a windfall and the corporation got off scot free. It was brought to the attention of the government and it was decided that this was something that should not be allowed to continue.

Mr. Nowlan: I am wondering about the wording of the paragraph. I can understand that on the winding up of any pension plan the amount left should be taken into income, but I can conceive where in the reorganization of a pension fund this would not be fair or advisable. I was wondering whether it should not be worded to read "shall be" on the winding up and "may be" on the reorganization of a pension plan, in order to permit some discrimination to the officials administering the act, rather than to make it mandatory.

Mr. Gordon: It would only be taxable if the corporation received the money. After all, the corporation would have been allowed this as a deduction in earlier years when the amounts were paid into the pension fund. If, at any time, it gets that money back it should pay tax on it, and I think it would apply to reorganization as well as winding up.

Mr. Nowlan: I could imagine a reorganization where it would be just a transfer, where it really does not become vested in the corporation.

Mr. Gordon: This would only apply if it became vested in the corporation.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 11.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister give us an explanation of this paragraph? I think he said yesterday that it is a technical one to clarify the act. I would like to have the explanation again.

Mr. Gordon: Under the proposed change an expense that becomes owing in a year will be deductible in that year, but if the amount is not actually paid within two years from the end of the year in question—the end of the year in which it becomes owing —the taxpayer who has taken the deduction must add the amount back into his income in the third year unless he, and the person to whom the amount is owing, file a certain election.

In this election the debtor and creditor must agree that the taxes should be computed as though the debt had been repaid and replaced by a loan. If such an election is filed, the amount owing shall be deemed to be paid in the third year and returned to the debtor as a loan.

I would like to give an illustration of this. If the taxpayer claims a deduction for interest which is payable to somebody else, the "somebody else" does not pay any tax on the interest until he receives it. The first taxpayer can claim a deduction at present even though he does not pay it.

It is suggested there are cases where the crown is short-changed, if I may use that expression, in this way, and if that particular interest charge is not actually paid within three years it has to be brought back into the income of the original taxpayer who obtained a deduction in the first year. I do not suggest this is a major loophole, but it is certainly a mousehole.

Mr. Monteith: What if the taxpayer pays it in a subsequent year?

Mr. Gordon: Then he gets the credit for it. He gets the reduction once, not twice.

Mr. Monteith: Yes, but if he takes it back into income he is paying tax on it.

Mr. Gordon: Then when he gets around to paying it he is allowed to deduct it.

Mr. Monteith: He gets it back at that time.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 12.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are a few references I intend to make regarding this matter and, of course, I intend to seek information from the minister respecting some observations made very recently by United States under secretary George Ball who spoke on United States-Canada economic relations last Saturday night.

I should like to find out from the minister what his views are on the speech which was delivered—a speech which he tabled following a request on my part that he do so yesterday.

I begin by referring to the transcript of the program "Conversation with the Prime Minister" on Sunday, April 19, wherein the Prime Minister, speaking with political modesty, referred to a clipping from a newspaper correspondent in Washington which said that Canadian-United States relations are better today than they have been in years—

Mr. Gordon: Good.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The finance minister applauds. I merely direct attention to that. I take it that, in keeping with the attitude adopted by all ministers of this government, any statement made by the Prime Minister, regardless of whether they agree with it or not, is the object of approbation and loud applause.

Now I intend to refer, first, to the Canadian Press dispatch in which Mr. Ball is reported as referring to key economic policies of the Canadian government—I refer to the dispatch in the narrative form.

> He said that in a situation such as that of Canada and the U.S., with closely intertwined economic affairs and large trade, "any change in the existing ground rules can have immediate and substantial repercussions".

Then he went on to list the various things which could cause what he called repercussions:

> Measures designed to induce a change in the character of foreign investment from equity to debt.
> Measures designed to "refuse national treatment to capital that had earlier been welcomed."

There is no indirectness about those two criticisms or statements. They have to do with action taken by the present government. The third is:

> Measures to bring about the transfer of production from one country to another.

That criticism, too, is levelled directly against the present government which, when in opposition paraded itself as the friend of good relations with the United States and criticized us for what we had done in order to maintain Canada's individuality. At that time hon. gentlemen now sitting opposite condemned us for endeavouring to assure that our resources in the north, controlled by the Canadian government, should as far as possible be available for investment by Canadians. Having made those criticisms, the very first action taken by the present government was the threat of the 30 per cent tax—about which I do not intend to say more—and the subsequent retreat, and then the further action which Mr. Ball criticizes in his remarks. Then the article goes on to say:

> Canadian finance minister Walter Gordon, in a speech before the New York Economic Club last Monday, said Canada would like to see an increasing proportion of foreign investment in Canada "in the form of loans which can be paid off."

And it continues:

> Ball's second point, about refusal of national treatment to capital that had earlier been welcomed, appeared to refer to Canadian action to increase Canadian financial participation in U.S.-owned subsidiaries.
>
> The third point on transfer of production ran counter to statements by Gordon in New York that Canada would have to increase its exports of manufactured goods to the U.S. to cope with its current account deficit.

Then the report describes this speech as having a "rough and tough quality"—

Mr. Gordon: That was not my speech.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, not the speech of the hon. gentleman, whose suavity can never be described in those terms. He believes in saccharine words, and then he withdraws. Not so, Mr. Ball. Mr. Ball's speech had a rough and ready quality—in the words of the article, it was "a reminder of what America could or could not do to help Canada". Then he went on to deal with Canada's general attitude, and he dealt, also, with some bitterness—never does the Minister of Finance, and I pause to say this, allow any of his words to be saturated with bitterness; I am speaking of the Canadian Press description of Mr. Ball's berating of the government of Canada—he spoke with bitterness of "Ottawa proposals to discourage Canadian companies from advertising in American magazines which circulate in Canada, as a form of protection". Then he added:

> I would hope that however the Canadian government may ultimately resolve this question it will not act in such a manner as to inhibit the free flow of thought across our borders.

His observations in this direction were, of course, entirely motivated by a commendable desire to ensure that Canadians should not deny themselves the opportunity of a full and complete education in world matters. Then the report says:

> Mr. Ball's speech reflected a Washington apprehension that in its century-old desire to maintain a Canadian identity and amidst a growing tension among French Canadians in Quebec seeking greater autonomy or even separatism, Ottawa may adopt policies to counter what the state department regards as the inevitable spread of "economic interdependence" between the two countries.

There is something here with which we are all of us in agreement. In a concluding report, the American assembly, to which this speech was delivered "decided the United States should not try to bind Canadian foreign policies into a pattern of conformity with United States policies". That was tried in connection with the trade and commerce of this country in non-strategic materials during the days when we were in office—and tried unsuccessfully.

What I wish to find out from the minister is this: Has he made any representations as yet, to Mr. Ball? It is going to be difficult for him to do so, because when there was that great interference by the state department with political issues in Canada in January of 1963 it was those hon. members who sit opposite, now on the treasury benches, who approved of gross interference in matters of Canadian domestic concern. I am interested to know whether there has been any change in the viewpoint of the government in this connection. Does the minister accept this stark, harsh criticism even described by the Canadian Press as rough and tough? Does he accept this? We would like to be let in on some of the representations the Canadian government is making in this regard. It is said, "Sharp issue has been taken with this government's fiscal and economic policies". The opposition has taken sharp issue with some of these policies which were entirely ill-digested, ill-conceived and had to be withdrawn by the Minister of Finance and those associated with him.

We ask, what is the approach, because it was quite a remarkable speech that was delivered. It dealt with cultural infiltration. He holds out some hope for Canada in this regard, because he says:

I am aware of the apprehensions in some circles that Canada risks being culturally overwhelmed by the United States. We Americans are a vocal, sometimes a rather noisy, people, and the development of radio and television has extended exposure to American cultural influence beyond the written to the spoken word.

Then he is disturbed about the press—I have referred to that already—being interfered with in any way, as he said. Then he referred to the areas of complexity and said:

The areas of greatest complexity and difficulty between our two nations lie in the range of our commercial and economic policies.

He pointed out that there is really no criticism that the United States has tariffs high enough to keep our products out of the United States, while our tariffs practically render available competition from any part of the world. He says this:

But what is often forgotten is that on a per capita basis Canadians have invested almost twice as much in the United States as Americans have in Canada.

That is just one of the old dodges regarding the use of statistics, which is not applicable in any way to the situation that prevails. He said:

From the point of view of economic principles, there is no doubt that Canada and the United States could employ the resources of North America most efficiently by developing the continent as a single great market.

Indeed, he goes so far as to suggest that we should get together. He would not be much concerned with divisions between our countries. We have resources that they need, and therefore everything should be done, as he said, to move toward commercial liberalization. He said it is hopeful that we will move even farther in that direction, although some of us have drawn back, for political reasons, from the ultimate logic of the single market. Then he deals with the minister and he really gives him the works. It was obvious yesterday that the minister realized he had got the full treatment. The minister does not always smile when he gets the full treatment, but he is smiling on this occasion because he cannot do otherwise; he is going to meet Mr. Ball tomorrow. Mr. Ball said:

But difficulties necessarily arise when the anxiety to avoid economic interdependence leads to policies that are discriminatory and inequitable.

That is his description of the economic policies of this government:

This is particularly the case with close neighbours such as the United States and Canada—

Then he goes on to say this:

—any change in existing ground rules can have immediate and substantial repercussions. Measures by governments designed to induce a change in the character of investment from equity to debt—

That was the minister's own suggestion only a day or so before:

—for example, or to refuse national treatment to capital that had earlier been welcomed, or to bring about the transfer of production from one country to another can be seriously disruptive.

The minister cannot accept that, if he remains true to the ever nescient policies that he enunciated in June and July last, and since. I want to hear what his reaction is to this. I know that someone said some of his policies were pre-Keynesian. Some of them are pre-Cambrian. Mr. Ball takes it upon himself to teach the Canadian government a lesson. He said:

The desire of our Canadian friends to safeguard the identity of their national market apparently stems from the belief that the nation and people may lose something of their national political independence if their economy is too closely meshed with that of other nations and particularly the United States.

I do not think we have ever got a more complete lesson from the administration of the United States on what Canada should do than Mr. Ball gave vent to the other day. Then he said:

Certainly, neither Canada nor the United States is interested in yielding or compromising its own freedom of political decision... I do not believe, therefore, that as between Canada and the United States there is any basis for assuming an automatic and parallel relation between increased economic interdependence and a loss of independence in political life.

Now, sir, I want to hear from the minister what is his reaction to this. Does he share the fulsome terms that were used in criticism by him and his associates, when in January and February, 1963 the state department of the United States chose to issue a document giving information such as the one in question here issued by the United States information service? Will the minister tell the committee what is the attitude of the government in this connection? When we were in office we were criticized regarding our attitude toward preserving Canada's right to declare her policies within Canada, while maintaining the fullest co-operation with the other legions of freedom and the other nations of freedom. We were criticized by the Liberal party and they said we were anti-American. I want to know from the minister now, has he in the course of one year turned a somersault, too, in the views regarding the matters that he expressed a year ago—because it will not be unusual. He will not be alone if he admits he has turned a somersault; he will have company all down the front bench. I want to know, has he changed his views in this regard?

Do you remember, Mr. Chairman, how they criticized us with regard to American investment. Will the minister tell us what American investment came into Canada between last October and December, those three months, and during January, February and March of this year. We would like to get the figures; we have never had the official figures for the last three months of 1963. We know that when we were in office American investment in Canada, in the last two three-month periods, amounted to $400 million. We know that in that third quarter of 1963 that amount had fallen, under this government, with its tinkering, its economic nonsense in the manner in which it brought these policies into effect. We wanted to bring about Canadian strength, not through the club but through incentives, and that is what we did. That is the reason we were able to assure a continuance of investment.

Four hundred million dollars was the average for the last two three-month periods of our tenure of office. In the third quarter of 1963 it was down to $98 million. That is my understanding, on the basis of the figures that I have, although I do not say they are correct. It is a matter of computation that we have not been able to get. The amount is down to something like $60 million, I understand. I ask the minister before this item is passed to give us the figures of American investment in Canada in the last three months of 1963 and the first three months of 1964. If he cannot give us the first three months, he can give us the first two months, which will show that as a result of the economic fallacy that was his and those associated with him they have destroyed or reduced almost to a trickle the investment in our country.

Why? Simply because of the uncertainty of investors in Canada. They do not know what will be the next tinkering in which the Minister of Finance will indulge himself. Nobody knows. The minister started by chopping away, decided that he would discontinue his chopping and changed to a smaller axe. But the effect is just the same. We want to know what is his attitude in this regard. Why is it that there has not been on his part greater emphasis on incentives, rather than on pressure and the infliction of what we described as discriminatory reactions on the part of this government? We want to know whether, if paragraph 12 is passed, this will be the last tinkering which will be done. Countries everywhere want to invest in Canada.

When the Conservative government was in office the Liberal party of that day said that we had discouraged investment. However, since they have been in power investment has gone down and down, and more than one minister has gone on bended knee to Washington in order to engage in dialogue with Washington to implore, as it were, an increase in the amount of investment. The minister even admitted the other day that foreign investment must continue. If we require foreign investment, then what is going to be done to encourage it? We believe in foreign investment. We never altered our view in that regard. But we stated that while investment was welcomed, investment in Canada should be used by the corporations for the benefit of Canada generally rather than be put at the direction of a country elsewhere, however friendly. That was our view and our stand, and we maintained that United States investment in Canada should become Canadianized.

What has happened today? First, the government brought in a series of experiments. Bold and imaginative, was the expression of the Prime Minister. They were bold, but they were so unimaginative that the government had to withdraw them one by one. Now the latest retreat is in this particular piece of legislation. How the government rushed to increase the percentage from 15 to 20. This was the salvation, said the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. Now after a few months they come back to parliament and say: "It is just another mistake which we made". No; they do not admit that: It is the result of dialogue. That is the expression today.

We want to hear something of this dialogue between the Minister of Finance and other ministers with United States cabinet secretaries. What has happened? What representation has been made? What is the general attitude of the government? Is it a protectionist attitude? How the Liberal party used to condemn us for a protectionist attitude. I would point out that no longer are we condemned for that. Instead the present government's own press gives it almost universal condemnation for its uncertain, irregular, ill-conceived policies which have been effective in one respect only, and that is in having parliament pass these measures, only to be asked a few months later to reverse their decision.

We want to know, why this reversal. Why are they swallowing themselves on that side of the house? The "medicine" which was prescribed eight, nine or ten months ago was not mixed hurriedly. It was all set out in the pharmacopoeia of "Troubled Canada". When was it discovered that the beneficial medicine which was so effective when it was first prescribed in that masterful work has turned out to be poison? These are matters about which we should like to know. I realize the minister is just waiting for the opportunity to furnish this information, and I want to give him a full opportunity.

I mentioned a moment ago that even the minister's best friends are criticizing him. You would not think, Mr. Chairman, that even they would tell him. "Even your best friends won't tell you", is how one ad reads. But the minister's best friends are telling him today. This is what the Winnipeg Free Press said on March 28:

> Canada's attitude toward trading relationships between the industrialized and the underdeveloped countries of the world was outlined to the United Nations world trade and development conference in Geneva this week by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Paul Martin.

Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs is given praise, although we are told that he may indeed be considering leaving us shortly to assume a very high position; at least that is the rumour which is going around in the international field. The article continues:

> Mr. Martin was moderate and cautious in tone—

He does not always show it in the house, but apparently he was on this occasion.

> —but his remarks were sufficiently liberal to take some of the curse off the restrictionist, defensive approach implicit in Mr. Gordon's 1964 budget speech.

The Free Press have always worshipped at the throne of Liberalism and been intense admirers of both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. Yet the policies of this government were described as restrictionist and defensive approaches. Then the article continues in these words:

> Canadians who believe that their prosperity depends on greatly expanded international trade have been disturbed at the lukewarm approach to trade shown by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. Mr. Martin's contribution to the U.N. conference must give rise to hopes that Mr. Gordon is not the voice of the government at Ottawa, but only of a small minority. Whether these hopes are justified will be answered——and so on. The general conclusion is that this government, pretending that it is following one policy, has become a restrictive, and I would add discriminatory, government. We want to know why the change. What has happened? Is it actually redemption that has been bought by this government? Last year they said that these things had to be done. They told us that this section raising the percentage from 15 to 20 represented a tremendous step forward. Now the government say: "We are going to depart from it". Mr. Chairman, my time is up.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO AUTHORIZE PROVINCIAL SWEEPSTAKES FOR HOSPITALS AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-19, with respect to hospital and university sweepstakes.

He said: I have only a few remarks, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have been introducing this bill in the house for the past few years in order to amend the Criminal Code so that the provinces that wish to do so may hold lotteries to subsidize hospitals and universities.

I am asking for the government's co-operation during this hour to have the bill accepted, since, throughout the last election campaign, according to La Presse of March 4, 1963, they were saying for all to hear:

> A Liberal government would authorize provincial lotteries (Mr. Rouleau).
> Malartic: The Liberals are quite decided to let the provinces act as they see fit in a field of endeavour which could certainly be important to several of them: that of provincial lotteries.

Now is the time to put to the test the influence of the Minister of Justice, the Quebec Liberals' new lieutenant. We shall see whether he had enough influence to convince the cabinet in such a way that the bill can be passed before six o'clock, because if the Minister of Justice is himself convinced that this measure should be passed, he has advised the government accordingly, and this bill which would enable any provincial government to establish lotteries will be passed.

Besides, the Quebec government has taken a strong stand on the matter, not only through the former Duplessis administration but also through that of Mr. Lesage. Indeed, in Le Devoir of May 6, 1963, here is what I find:

One always thought that, to establish a lottery in Quebec, the Criminal Code had first to be amended.

In his recent budget speech, on April 5, Mr. Lesage advocated the establishment of a provincial lottery.

Mr. Speaker, as there is a complete agreement between the Quebec government and this federal government, I would be very surprised if the government did not adopt the bill this very day, in order especially to enable the provinces to set up their own lotteries.

I am asking Mr. Lesage—

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Pigeon: —if the bill is rejected because the government refuses to fulfil its promises, its formal promises made during the last election campaign, and if Mr. Lesage is really a man of action, he will prove it to the province of Quebec—

An hon. Member: He has proved it.

Mr. Pigeon: —by compelling the federal government by means of another ultimatum to amend the Criminal Code to authorize provincial lotteries.

Moreover, the newspaper La Presse, two years ago, I believe, conducted a survey in the province of Quebec where 98 per cent of those people interviewed professed to be in favour.

Mr. Grégoire: Name them.

Mr. Pigeon: —And this not only in the province of Quebec, but also throughout Canada, as reported in the press.

For example, if I refer to the newspaper Le Droit of August 24, 1962, I read the following:

Winnipeg—In favour of a national sweepstake—The oldest veterans' organization of Canada asked the federal government to establish a national sweepstake in compliance with the people's wishes.

Many organizations throughout Canada are making the same request. For instance, in its brief to the Parent commission, the seminary of Chicoutimi recommended the establishment of a provincial lottery, the receipts of which would be used to subsidize education.

It is common knowledge that New Hampshire recently passed an act to allow the establishment of a state lottery. Listen to this:

Governor John W. King announced in the New Hampshire legislature yesterday that he had approved a bill for the establishment of a state lottery, which had been a controversial issue for many months.

Mr. King asked the legislators to help him to establish "the first lottery to be operated by an American state, a lottery which will be administered honestly, efficiently and in compliance with the laws of the U.S. government."

Mr. King, a Democrat Governor in a state controlled by the Republicans, said that Mr. Joseph Millinet, a legal adviser, after discussing the lottery with lawyers of the U.S. Department of Justice, was satisfied that New Hampshire was not violating any federal law.

He said that tickets of that lottery, the first to be legalized in the United States in 70 years, would be sold to any person, whether a resident of New Hampshire or not.

"Our neighbours have certainly the right to spend their holidays here, to buy lottery tickets and to collect their prize if they win," said the Governor.

He added that the federal legislation only applies in the case of traffic between states and not to lotteries operated within a state.

The Governor was speaking before members of the Congress and the Senate at a joint conference.

I have here a copy of La Presse newspaper, dated Friday March 13, 1964; there is a picture under which is written:

The crowd gathers at counters where vending machines distribute lottery tickets for $3 each, at Rockingham Park. That first American lottery has been in operation since yesterday, once the New Hampshire electorate voted for it by a strong majority. The first draw will take place on September 12 next.

The legalization of lotteries by an American state adjoining Canada should encourage the Canadian people to buy lottery tickets from that American state, just as they buy them from foreign countries.

It is time for the government to be consistent with itself and fulfil its promise in order to stop that loss of millions of dollars that benefit foreigners.

In New Zealand, where each year $4.5 million was spent on foreign lottery tickets, they set up a national lottery which brings in so much money that the government is wondering how to spend it all.

I am convinced that if the provinces, including Quebec, had the right to set up a lottery, Mr. Lesage would know right away how to spend the money accruing from it since he is piling up deficit upon deficit, whereas taxes are increasing at a fantastic rate, so that the citizens, in Quebec, are now more heavily taxed than those in all the other provinces of confederation.

And that, Mr. Speaker, in addition to taxes imposed by the federal government, such as the 11 per cent tax which discriminates against the municipalities, school boards, crown corporations and provinces—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I invite the hon. member to limit his remarks to the bill now under consideration?

Mr. Pigeon: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to point out the importance of having a provincial lottery in Quebec, in view of the appalling deficit and heavy taxes that the people have to bear now. No one knows where Quebec is going.

Mr. Speaker, I beg you to convince the house to agree to amend the Criminal Code so that lotteries may be set up to help not only the people of Quebec but also the other provinces which could use such additional revenue.

If this took place in Canada, and in the province of Quebec in particular, it would be possible to reduce taxes, improve certain social services, in brief, improve the conditions of life of the people. And for that there is only too much to choose from.

According to Israel's Information dated March 6, 1962, consideration is given to the possibility of setting up in Israel a lottery to finance the building of new schools. Most countries in the world have a lottery. This is the reason why—

An hon. Member: Which ones?

Mr. Pigeon: —we wonder why the government procrastinates and does not carry out the promise it made to amend the Criminal Code of Canada accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is on the road to ruin. We have an inefficient government which accumulates astronomical deficits; taxes are increasing at an alarming rate and, as I said, the people in some provinces, including the province of Quebec, are downhearted. Industries are considering leaving the province of Quebec because its government is short of sources of income. The provinces need their sources of income. If the federal government were willing to amend the Criminal Code, so as to enable the provinces, including Quebec, to hold lotteries, it would help the provinces to recover these sources of revenue.

I repeat what I said: If Mr. Lesage is really honest with himself, he will not be afraid to give an ultimatum and compel his friends to keep the promises they made during the last election campaign.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very closely to the remarks of my hon. friend opposite. It is unfortunate indeed that he should have introduced a note of partisanship in his explanation of such an important principle, which we endorse.

Mr. Grégoire: If you are in favour of the principle, sit down.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the remarks of my hon. friend from Villeneuve are rather incongruous and vulgar.

I could not help being surprised when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm so strongly urged the house to pass this bill without delay, because his party did nothing about that during the five years it was in power and also because the hon. member himself never could convince the leader to amend the Criminal Code.

It is most remarkable that the opposition should be so anxious now to have this house recognize a principle to which I personally adhere. Indeed, I am in favour of provincial lotteries but as far as the procedure to be followed—

Mr. Grégoire: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Choquette: Certainly.

Mr. Grégoire: Does he approve of the principle of a lottery or the income deriving from such lotteries?

Mr. Choquette: In my opinion, the two are indivisible.

The problem is to find additional revenue. Remember the appalling deficits piled up by the Conservative government? Because of them, Canada needs additional revenue, as well as the provinces, in short, all governments. But that does not mean at all that the Social Credit philosophy is a cure-all.

However, if it is possible to find additional revenue that way, that is by setting up a lottery—

An hon. Member: What logic.

Mr. Choquette: —as requested by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, whereas his colleague, the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) is requesting that the Criminal Code be amended, why not do it?

To hear the hon. member for St. Mary call for the amendment of the Criminal Code seemed logical. But I think it rather inconsistent and strange for the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to ask for an amendment to the Criminal Code, as he did a while ago, when the purpose of the bill he is moving is precisely to recognize the principle of the setting up of a provincial sweepstake without having to amend the Criminal Code.

The hon. member said so a while ago. The Criminal Code must be amended. I should like the hon. member to be a little more logical. Does he wish his bill to be passed or would he rather that we put it aside in favour of the bill moved by his colleague from St. Mary and that we call for an amendment to the Criminal Code?

I find his attitude contradictory and I feel he has not given this problem the mature consideration it received from the attorneys general of the provinces and from the federal Minister of Justice. In fact, the latter has fully examined the effects of recognizing such a principle and, following the federal-provincial conference of last November, a press release was issued. In order that the friends of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm be able to better understand it, I will read it in English:

[Text]

Some provincial governments explained the difficulties they have in enforcing the provisions of the Criminal Code in respect of lotteries and gambling.

[Translation]

Quebec may be in favour but since the Criminal Code applies to the whole of Canada, we must find out whether the other provinces would agree to recognize that principle.

The press release continues as follows:

[Text]

Suggestions were made that the institution of provincial lotteries would alleviate the situation. Other provinces, however, opposed this suggestion. The federal government indicated that it had no interest in instituting a federal lottery but undertook to consider the amendment of the Criminal Code in the light of the views put forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what the federal government wants to do is to seek an agreement with the various provincial governments to find out in what way the Criminal Code may be amended.

Quebec might agree to it, but if, however, other provinces were opposed to the sale of Quebec lottery tickets in Ontario; if the western provinces were forbidding their citizens to purchase lottery tickets issued in another province, a jurisdictional problem would arise then. Would provincial authorities have the right to forbid the sale, within their province, of lottery tickets issued in another province, namely in Quebec? A conflict, an imbroglio might arise out of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, there is a jurisdictional point involved as well as a problem of law enforcement on the national scale. I agree with the principle of instituting a lottery, but that legislation would nevertheless require an amendment to the federal legislation called the Criminal Code. The Criminal Code needs to be amended in such a way that the legislation will be enforced all over Canada, because it is federal legislation. This is what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is unable to understand.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Choquette: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member tell the house why, during the last election campaign, the hon. member for Dollard promised in Malartic, on behalf of his party—

Mr. Choquette: On what date?

Mr. Pigeon: On April 5. At that time, the hon. member promised that if his party were elected, it would amend the Criminal Code to authorize the provinces to set up lotteries if they wanted to.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Dollard spoke with much objectivity.

The federal government is not opposed to amending the Criminal Code. The hon. member is trying to make us believe the opposite, and by doing so, he is distorting this whole discussion.

The federal government would like to know how the provinces will react to such an amendment and how it will be possible to apply the Criminal Code, as amended. That raises a problem.

If the problem were such an easy one, or if it could be solved that quickly, why then, when the Conservatives were in power at Ottawa and the Union Nationale at Quebec, did the hon. member not succeed in having the Criminal Code amended? Those two governments were on friendly terms. Everybody knew that the Duplessis and Diefenbaker governments constituted a firm axis and that they were working hand in hand. Everybody knew they co-operated with one another. How is it then that when those two governments were in power, they did not succeed in amending the Criminal Code? It is because there were difficulties. And it is those difficulties which the Minister of Justice wants to remove with the consent of the provinces, so that as smooth an agreement as possible may be reached and so that the principle may be recognized, provided it is applicable under law and order.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member one question. Is it not a fact that members of the Liberal government went about the country promising there would be more decisions in 60 days, that they had the answers to some of the problems which the Conservatives found very difficult, and were prepared to implement these solutions at once?

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I think the question might be put to my hon. friend. Does he consider the matter of provincial lotteries as a problem of the utmost urgency, or rather as a very important one which might, however, be solved in time, so as not to create any unnecessary conflict?

An hon. Member: In 60 days.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the achievement promised in 60 days was to settle the most pressing matters which our friends opposite had been unable to solve, as their policy was leading Canada straight to bankruptcy. We stated that, in 60 days, we would avoid the failure—the bankruptcy—they were bringing about.

[Text]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words in favour of the proposal before us, I must make it clear at the outset that I speak for myself and not for my party. I personally regret this. In the New Democratic party we have a lot of very high principles and admirable moral and ethical ideals which I certainly share, but sometimes I feel members of the New Democratic party, like the members of labour movements, and perhaps socialist movements in other countries, are at times apt to be in the order of the old Roundheads of Puritan days, and are apt to take a rather Puritan point of view as to some of the facts of life.

This is in contrast to some of those around about us, those who belong to the older parties, and who are much more like the Cavalier types than the Puritan Roundheads. Having this in mind I think it is possible for me, on my own behalf, to say a word or two in favour of the principle of legalizing sweepstakes, in the same way as it was possible for some of the sober Roundheads to cast an admiring glance at Nell Gwyn, and who were none the worse for it. Speaking as one who favours public control and public operation of sweepstakes provincially as in the public interest, I want to put forward five facts which underline what seems to me the need for this legislation.

First, the question today is actually not whether we want sweepstakes. We have sweepstakes. It is estimated that no less than 28 sweepstake operations of a major nature are functioning in Canada at this time. Gambling and drinking are two of the oldest human frailties of which we have record. Drawing by lot, which is a form of gambling, is favourably recorded in the Old Testament, in Joshua chapter 18 verse 10. In the case of drinking, the public long ago gave up the idea that it could, through prohibition, be legislated out of existence.

We have public control of drinking, with the public contributing to the government, through taxation, a considerable amount of the public drinking money. My contention is that the time has come, indeed it is long overdue, to apply the same general principle to the control of sweepstakes in Canada, just as we have done earlier with gambling at the race tracks.

My second point is that at present, as previous speakers have mentioned, millions of dollars leave this country every year to subsidize the private or public sweepstake promoters in other countries. Legislation permitting a provincial or national sweepstake would reduce this toll, and keep a good deal of this money in Canada.

My third fact is that the most modest estimate of sweepstake revenue on a provincial basis indicates that a province, say the size of British Columbia with the population of British Columbia, would net over $1 million a year. This in effect would be a do-it-yourself tax paid by the sweepstake participants. In time to come, United States tourists would add their money to a British Columbia sweepstake, at no cost to our taxpayers. The proceeds would be sufficient, I estimate, to build at least one chronic hospital every 12 months in British Columbia, something which hon. members will agree is very badly needed there.

My fourth point is that Canada is one of the dwindling number of countries which do not already have some form of national, provincial, or government lottery. Countries with as divergent policies as Great Britain and the Soviet union have, if not a sweepstake in the terms of the Irish sweepstake, at least a government bond lottery through which—and I may say I have one here—a person may buy a non-interest bearing bond and thereby be a participant in a draw which distributes a number of prizes to lucky ticket holders. The public is thereby, as it is also in the U.S.S.R., encouraged to invest in state enterprises and the state saves the interest it would otherwise have to pay. A side beneficial effect of this policy is a reduction in inflationary tendencies by the siphoning off of this amount of money into government enterprises.

There are now 30 countries which have sweepstakes or lotteries of one type or another, including New Zealand which has already been mentioned, where the popularity of these enterprises is now so great that they have several every year.

Fifth, I would urge action to regularize sweeps on a basis of respect for the law. Our present anti-sweepstake law is flouted daily by thousands of Canadians, and has been for many years. It is time to make a law that conforms to public usage in this matter rather than to strive vainly to make the public conform to this outdated and unworkable law.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a lawyer's qualifications to determine the most efficient way to operate lotteries in the various Canadian provinces. Neither do I intend to discuss the legal aspects thereof, nor suggest the legal procedure best suited for amending the Criminal Code to authorize the operation of provincial lotteries. But I want to express my humble opinion on the subject matter of Bill No. C-19.

Like the hon. member who preceded me, I want to say that I am only expressing my personal opinion and do not want to commit anybody in my group. Though we are but few, it might happen that one or the other would disagree with me.

I therefore want to say that I am in favour of the principle that the Criminal Code be amended so as to enable the provinces which want to do so, to operate the lotteries as considered necessary within their respective territories.

I would even go further than the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), the mover of Bill No. C-19, by not limiting provincial governments as to quantity or method of disposing of the funds thus collected.

When the matter of lotteries is considered, a moral problem is encountered and many people cut short any discussion of the subject by putting up a screen of ethics. But, meanwhile, lottery tickets of all kinds are sold and bought at an ever-increasing rate.

Besides, those lotteries, unfortunately, are organized most of the time by people whose honesty and integrity are more than questionable. No control is possible on the way prizes are drawn, and most of the sums of money collected in this way go into the already full pockets of certain professional parasites.

In my opinion, the question has already been sufficiently considered, at least enough to enlighten us, the legislators, on the urgency of revising our stand on that matter and protecting, as far as possible, the interests of those who elected us.

The newspapers, throughout the country, conducted thorough investigations on lotteries, obtaining in the process opinions from hundreds of thousands of readers who, in over 90 per cent of the cases, said they were in favour of the organization of such lotteries and of amending the Criminal Code, in order to allow provincial governments to establish their own lotteries.

I am sure a great proportion of the people would be glad to take part in lotteries, which they would know in advance to be organized by responsible people, with everything aboveboard and with the proceeds payable to charitable organizations.

In certain quarters, they state it is bad, and even immoral to participate in lotteries, but they do nothing to put an end to it. I believe that with provincial lotteries an end would be put to lots of small organizations, unfortunately controlled by people whose only aim is to exploit a simple-minded public. I do not say that all present organizations are actually in the hands of dishonest people, for there are sweepstakes the philanthropic aim of which is well recognized and the administration of which is perfectly honest.

If we allowed the establishment of such provincial lotteries, we could make use at home, for purposes equally noble, of large amounts of dollars we are presently exporting.

For those reasons, I say it is urgent to legislate in order to stop this hemorrhage of funds which go to help foreign organizations and which could serve right purposes.

In my opinion, it is time the government took its own responsibilities to meet the situation and legislated accordingly. There exists also an evil which should be recognized, I admit. It is perhaps not an argument to put forward, but I know many people have not got the means to buy these lottery tickets but, in view of the existing evil, of two evils should we not choose the lesser.

That is why I believe it is urgent for our legislation to be directed in such a way as to serve the well-being of the population.

Is it not our duty as representatives of the people to pass the pieces of legislation that they want? Is it not our responsibility to reflect here the opinion of our constituents? I believe that is our most definite mandate. That is why, even if I do not completely agree with the provisions of Bill No. C-19, I must nevertheless support it, considering that it is a first step in the right direction.

If I wanted to take this opportunity to play politics, like the hon. members for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), and Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), I would say that if the government is now trying by every possible means to get the necessary revenues in order to meet all its objectives, if governments at all levels are faced with many financial problems they cannot solve, they should apply the monetary policies that we advocate. In brief, they would find them a much more effective remedy than the setting up of lotteries.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, only a few words to express an opinion on the matter.

A while ago, I asked the hon. member for Lotbinière whether he supported the principle of lotteries or the principle of finding sources of income.

Mr. Choquette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member told me: If you are in favour of the principle, sit down. Now, you can realize the inconsistency in his stand.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have much admiration for the hon. member for Lotbinière, but I shall not attempt to act like him. Rather, I shall simply try to express some opinions during the few minutes at my disposal.

Mr. Choquette: That will be something new.

Mr. Grégoire: It would be something new for the hon. member for Lotbinière and I suggest he should give it a try.

Mr. Speaker, we are therefore called upon to discuss the principle of finding sources of income. Of course, it is more pleasant to buy a sweepstake ticket than to see the income tax inspector take our shirts off our backs. At least, lotteries are voluntary and you buy tickets only if you wish to.

But the principle is always the same, that is to find sources of income for the benefit of hospitals and universities. At this stage, we could ask ourselves how far it could go. Will we have raffles, bingos, all kinds of games to find revenues to support hospitals and universities?

I think it would be better to amend our monetary system in order to find, within the framework of logical and sensible systems, sources of revenue to meet government expenditures instead of doing it on the basis of lotteries such as what we are discussing today. As long as the Minister of Finance will not agree to amend the monetary system, lotteries are a last resource and since there are already some operating illegally in the province, why not organize lotteries and put them in the hands of qualified people who would see to it that the profits serve useful purposes?

That is a middle term on which we could agree if we are in favour of the development of hospitals and universities today.

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly.

Mr. Choquette: What would be the nature of the monetary reforms he is suggesting to take the place of revenue that would be derived from lotteries?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, that is quite easy; make financially possible what is physically possible. If it is physically possible to build universities and hospitals with the proceeds from lotteries, I say that it is always financially possible to make financially possible what is physically possible.

If it is possible to build a hospital because we have the bricks, plaster, nails, workmen, technicians, engineers and architects and, if the one thing still to be done, Mr. Speaker, is to bring back to their senses economists like some Laval University professors sitting in this house—indeed, we have two of them —well, then, it is easier to establish lotteries.

If it is physically possible to develop hospitals and universities, let it be made financially possible through legislation put forward by the Minister of Finance. It is as simple as that.

I realize that one has to be able to grasp those things in order to accept them. Indeed, for some people who are too blinded by political partisanship or by the various studies of the present system they may have undertaken, new ideas are difficult to conceive.

In closing my remarks, I would like to say this: if there is no lottery yet in the province of Quebec, I think the leaders of the province are responsible. They argue that they have the right to organize lotteries in that province. Therefore let them exercise their rights, stop their kneeling and bootlicking with regard to the federal government and exert their right.

On television and over the radio, we hear competitions being announced where prizes in money are given out when a purchase is proved, and where the law is bypassed through asking and answering a question. Let the provincial government do likewise.

Let the C.B.C., which is a crown corporation, organize its own lotteries: let them select the winner, and when he presents himself, ask him who is the premier of Quebec, or the Prime Minister of Canada, or some such question, as simple to answer as those we hear on the radio. When such a question is asked, the whole thing becomes legal.

So why should the government of the province of Quebec not organize its own lottery? Let it take its responsibilities and stop crawling on all fours before the federal government. If you win and answer correctly when asked a very simple question, you are handed out $10, $20, $30 or $50,000.

Why does the government of the province of Quebec not do so? Because it has neither the energy nor the courage to act at the proper time, and prefers handing over its responsibilities to others.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very well to talk out legislation here because I am sure that if I do not have the floor, someone else, on the Liberal side, will rise to discuss the matter now before us. I am convinced of that and besides, that is the way it always works out.

But will the government of Quebec always be the victim of such speeches going on until six o'clock? Will the government always wait for the good will of certain backbenchers who had instructions to rise and talk until six o'clock so that the question will not be put? The hon. member for Lotbinière is one of them. Some others will rise. I can assure you that if, on the Liberal side, there is no one prepared to discuss the matter, someone will nevertheless rise to carry on the debate until six o'clock and talk out the bill now before the house.

Let the government of the province of Quebec take its responsibilities in that matter, let it decide to organize its own lottery and to ask that question to evade the law as C.B.C. has been doing for years. You will see that the lottery will work out very well.

If that is the only way, under our present system, to finance hospitals and universities—

Mr. Choquette: That is sedition.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbinière says it is sedition. If that is so, the example comes from higher up, since it comes from a crown corporation, from the C.B.C.

Then, let the Quebec government take its responsibilities, organize a lottery and take the same means as the C.B.C. On a proof of purchase, you will be asked a minor question and should you give the proper answer, you will be given a prize which may amount up to $5,000, as can be seen on T.V. program "La poule aux œufs d'or".

This is the advice I am giving. I am sure that should the Quebec government apply it, the federal government would not react, simply because the C.B.C., a crown corporation, is doing that.

The hon. member for Lotbinière and other hon. members have been told for a long time that the present system is a crazy system administered by the craziest people. Well, they do not want to alter the system. They would rather vegetate. Well, if we have to live under such a system, at least let Quebec take its responsibilities in that field and establish its own lottery.

I see another member rising. Let him rise and speak until six o'clock, for if it is not he, it will be another one.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the low demagogy of the hon. members for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon)—and those who might be in doubt about it have only to read tomorrow's Hansard to realize how far the hon. member for Lapointe can go in contradicting himself in less than half an hour—I shall make a few remarks—

Mr. Grégoire: Quote one inconsistency.

Mr. Prud'homme: —and I shall remain—

Mr. Grégoire: Go ahead.

Mr. Prud'homme: —within the subject of the debate, in following the general outlines and without lingering needlessly as I said before, on the vulgar demagogy of some members.

There is no doubt that the federal government would be prepared to accept lotteries, I mean to accept the amendment to the Criminal Code.

But the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has not yet understood, just as the hon. member for Lapointe, that this is a matter which would come under an interprovincial agreement.

In reply to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm I would tell him that I have great confidence, for my part, in the tact and diplomacy of the Quebec premier. I am sure that during a federal-provincial conference, he would use the right arguments to convince—

Mr. Grégoire: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would rather complete my remarks, since the hon. member for Lapointe has suggested that we wished to kill the bill, I do not want to—

Mr. Grégoire: I should just like to direct a question to the hon. member so as to know whether he is reading the speech of the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette)?

Mr. Prud'homme: I believe that the hon. member for Lapointe is an expert on that.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that, if we have not yet come to an agreement, it is because there has not been any agreement between the provinces in that respect.

I call immediately the attention of the house to Bills C-22 and C-19 which deal with lotteries. Upon consideration of those two bills, it is possible to have an idea about the personality of the hon. member for St. Mary and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Bill No. C-22 is brief, as brief as the member himself. As for Bill No. C-19, presented by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, it is long and complicated.

Having examined the bill carefully, I notice that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has forgotten only one thing; he has failed to tell the attorney general in the various provinces where the lottery tickets should be printed. If he goes over his bill once again, he will see that this is absolutely true.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the Criminal Code by the federal government without the provinces' agreement might lead to a very painful situation.

I can imagine the province of Manitoba taking advantage of such an amendment to the Criminal Code and organizing a lottery, while the government of Saskatchewan, its neighbour, would prohibit it. The Manitoba government could then sell lottery tickets in a province which does not want to take advantage of this amendment authorizing the selling of sweepstake tickets.

Can you imagine the mobilization of a national police force to prevent the sale in one province of tickets printed in another following the amendment we would have brought to the Criminal Code, because the former would not want to prevail itself of the amendment. It would be ridiculous.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have already told another hon. member that I would not answer any question of his before I am through with my remarks.

Mr. Pigeon: In the United States, New Hampshire is the only state which has established a lottery, and there has been no opposition from the other states.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, as pointed out by my good friend the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Frenette), some people are opposed to such a bill on moral grounds, others on religious grounds. I suggest that before amending the Criminal Code—which the government is prepared to do—there should first be agreement among the provinces. That is what we understand by respecting the rights of the provinces.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm can be the earnest upholder of a negative autonomy, such as he has experienced during the years prior to 1960, but I say that this central government would rather consult the provinces in order to obtain their approval.

I conclude by pointing out that the present government is certainly in favour of such a project. If the provinces, at their interprovincial meeting, express that wish, you will see how promptly it will be carried out by the federal government.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, now that the hon. member has concluded his remarks, would he allow me a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for St. Denis said earlier that if the Criminal Code were amended so that one province might set up lotteries, it would be discriminatory toward the other provinces.

How is it that New Hampshire, the only American state to have a lottery, did not receive any complaints from other American states?

Mr. Prud'homme: If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will take the trouble to read the question he just asked, not only will he find the answer, but he will note the contradiction in it.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I trust that before I finish my remarks on this bill the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) will recognize that, while I agree in principle that something should be done about this problem of lotteries in Canada, I have the common sense to oppose with every justification the passage of this particular bill on the subject. During the debate the hon. and distinguished gentleman from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) included some gratuitous observations about the state of this government. He referred in rather extravagant terms, without any foundation whatsoever, to the fact that we in this country were heading for bankruptcy. He very smoothly passed over the deficit spending of prior years, and as is sometimes the case with narrow-minded people he was looking through a keyhole with both of his eyes. I am sure that he was not serious when he made these gratuitous additions to what was otherwise a reasoned debate in favour of an amendment to the Criminal Code to permit lottery operations.

During the course of the debate another hon. member referred to the extensive volume of dollars which are exported from Canada to other countries to purchase sweepstakes tickets. Indeed, apart from the moral question the export of Canadian dollars to other countries by this means is certainly a matter which should occupy the attention of the finance department of any government; there is no doubt about that whatsoever.

On the other side of the coin, if we permitted one province or two provinces to engage in this type of operation without general agreement that all are going to compete with each other in the field, we would be exporting dollars into those provinces from the non-participating provinces in Canada, which again would lead to difficulties.

It seems to me that the principle of this bill, which is to examine the whole question of sweepstakes and lotteries and to find ways and means of obtaining from the Canadian people investment in such undertakings, with the reward of a higher return than might otherwise be obtained, is perfectly all right. On the other hand, before we begin to pass a bill of this kind I think we must examine the experience of other countries.

It is true that in the United States recently the state of New Hampshire passed this very controversial measure and set up a state lottery. It came into being amid a very stormy debate over the moral issue, with anxiety being expressed about possible reaction from neighbouring states and from the federal government—in some respects similar to the situation I attempted to describe a minute ago. The proceeds of this undertaking were to be used for school needs.

I think that one scheme which exploits, and for good, the desire of people to have a chance to make some extra money is that represented by the British system of lottery bonds. I think this scheme should certainly be examined by the Canadian government most carefully because it seems to me to have a great deal of merit. For example, in Great Britain bonds can be purchased, up to maximum blocks, of course. The investors do not receive any interest; instead, drawings are made and something equivalent to 4 per cent interest on the total amount of bonds sold over a specified period is distributed in the way of prizes.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORT ON ALLEGED ESPIONAGE ACTIVITIES

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt for a moment. I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of the house to make a statement, which I would otherwise have to make outside the house. I believe the house would want me to make it here at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: We on this side agree, Mr. Speaker, if the government accepts my sweepstakes bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that Mr. Vasily Vasilievich Tarasov, Izvestia correspondent in Canada, had been engaged in activities which were wholly incompatible with his status in Canada as a newspaper reporter. Mr. Tarasov's visa has been cancelled and he has been told to leave the country at once.

[Mr. Lloyd.]

Mr. Tarasov attempted to obtain classified information relating to industrial processes of importance to Canada from a Canadian government employee after carefully cultivating his friendship for nearly a year. The government employee concerned reported this matter to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as soon as it was clear that he had been asked to engage in a highly improper enterprise in return for payment. This led to Mr. Tarasov's confrontation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police immediately after he had accepted a number of documents.

Today the Soviet ambassador was informed of the government's action, since a correspondent of Izvestia was admitted to Canada as a result of pressing requests of the government of the Soviet union. Fortunately Canadian interests were not harmed because the Canadian civil servant at once reported to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the approaches made to him by the Soviet correspondent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy), whether agreement has been made with the United States to build a weir or dam on the St. Clair river at Sarnia to control the level of the waters in lake Huron; the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), experiments being conducted by the United States corps of engineers directed toward cutting down the outflow of water from lake Huron at Sarnia;

[Translation]

Mr. Bélanger (Charlevoix), the construction of harbour facilities at Rivière du Loup.

The house will now resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the deduction from income granted in respect of certain tuition fees be extended to include tuition fees paid by a taxpayer who is a student whether or not he is a full time student, to an educational institution in Canada

(a) that is a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level,

(b) that is a school operated by or on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province, a municipality in Canada, or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(c) that is a high school or secondary school providing courses leading to a secondary school certificate or diploma that is a requirement for entrance to a college or university, or

(d) that is certified by the Minister of Labour to be an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualifications of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession, if the tuition fees paid by the taxpayer for the year exceed $25.

2. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a dependant in respect of whom a taxpayer may deduct an amount not exceeding $550 in computing his taxable income shall include a taxpayer's brother or sister who was 21 years of age or over and in full time attendance at a school or university.

3. That the period commencing on December 5, 1963 within which a new manufacturing or processing business must have commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities in a designated area in order to obtain a certificate for the purposes of section 71A of the act be extended to March 31, 1967.

4. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years in determining whether 95 per cent of the assets used in a business were new and situated in a designated area, for purposes of establishing under section 71A of the act that a person was carrying on the business in a designated area, the value of the assets shall be their fair market value notwithstanding that such value may be different from their capital cost.

5. That where at a time when an area was a designated area a business has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business, or an application has been made in writing to the Minister of Industry by a taxpayer in respect of a business that upon the fulfilment of specified conditions would be certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business in the designated area, that area, notwithstanding that it may no longer be a designated area, shall for the purpose of the application of section 71A of the act to that particular business continue to be a designated area.

6. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income all expenditures of a current nature for scientific research carried on outside Canada that are expenditures made in the year

(a) for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer, or

(b) to an approved association, university, college, research institute or other similar institution to be used for scientific research related to the taxpayer's business.

7. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income amounts expended by him in relation to an objection to an assessment or an appeal from an assessment and shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof.

8. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years a taxpayer may deduct in computing income an amount paid in the year or in a previous year since 1962 as a contribution to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was a contributor even if he also deducts an amount as a contribution in respect of services rendered by him in past years while he was not a contributor, but the maximum amount deductible in a year in respect of past services while he was a contributor shall not exceed $1,500 minus the aggregate of the amounts deducted in the year in respect of services rendered by him in the year and in respect of services rendered by him previous to the year while he was not a contributor.

9. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years the period of 60 days from the end of a year within which an employer may pay an amount to or under a registered pension fund or plan in respect of services rendered by his employees be increased to 120 days.

10. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years it be made clear that any amount received by an employer upon the winding up or reorganization of a pension fund or plan shall be included in his income.

11. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years subsection (3) of section 12 of the act, which provides rules concerning an outlay or expense payable by a taxpayer to a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length, be amended so that a taxpayer who at the end of his taxation year has a liability that

(a) arose in respect of a non-arm's length transaction,

(b) was deductible in computing his income, and

(c) has been outstanding for two years following the end of the taxation year in which it accrued

must include in income for the third year after it accrued an amount equal to the liability, unless the debtor and creditor sign and file an agreement in which they elect to have their taxes computed as though the debt had been paid and replaced by a loan on the first day of that third year.

12. That the 20 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him after 1964 by a corporation resident in Canada that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be reduced to 15 per cent, and that in consequence thereof:

(a) Part IID of the act imposing a tax equal to 5 per cent of certain dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be repealed;

(b) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed by Part IIIA of the act on income earned after 1964 by a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be reduced to 15 per cent; and

(c) the 20 per cent rate of tax imposed on the taxable income earned after 1964 by a non-resident-owned investment corporation be reduced to 15 per cent.

13. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years, where a taxpayer has disposed of his interest in a partnership, such part of the consideration as is reasonable in the circumstances shall be deemed to be proceeds of disposition of depreciable property of the taxpayer used in the partnership business.

14. That for the 1964 taxation year the amount deductible in computing taxable income in respect of a dependant child who was over 15 and under 18 years of age at the end of the year shall not exceed $470 if an allowance was paid under the Family Allowances Act in respect of the child for any month after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

15. That for the 1965 and subsequent taxation years, a child shall be regarded as a child qualified for family allowance for any year at the end of which he was over 15 and under 18 years of age, if an allowance under the Family Allowances Act was paid in the year in respect of that child after the month in which he attained the age of 16 years.

16. That with regard to the definition of degree of Canadian ownership in section 139A of the said Act, the said measure provide as follows:

"(1) Subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporation controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, and equity shares representing in the aggregate not less than 25 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada, or a combination thereof, or

(B) a class or classes of shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned more than 75 per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the corporation having full voting rights under all circumstances, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and a class or classes of equity shares of the corporation representing in the aggregate not less than 50 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation were listed on a prescribed stock exchange in Canada, and it is established in prescribed manner that no one non-resident person and no one corporation that did not comply with clause (A) of this subparagraph owned equity shares representing in the aggregate more than 75 per cent of that part of the paid up capital of the corporation that was represented by all the issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation, alone or in combination with any other person related to such non-resident person or such corporation at any time within the period within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139, and"

(2) Subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) thereof, by repealing paragraph (b) thereof and by substituting therefor the following paragraphs:

"(b) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty-day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (c); or

(c) the corporation complied with the conditions specified in subparagraphs (i) and (iii) of paragraph (a) and was a subsidiary controlled corporation

(i) having issued and outstanding equity shares none of which were owned by a person other than

(A) the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(B) a non-resident person not related to the corporation to which it was subsidiary,

(C) an individual resident in Canada, or

(D) a corporation controlled in Canada, and [Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

(ii) subsidiary to a corporation that throughout the sixty-day period complied with the conditions specified in paragraph (a) or (b)."

(3) Paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) a corporation that has share capital is not controlled in Canada at a particular time unless at that time the corporation is resident in Canada, and more than 50 per cent of its issued and outstanding shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of its paid up capital are owned by

(i) individuals resident in Canada,

(ii) corporations resident in Canada with respect to each of which

(A) more than 50 per cent of the issued shares having full voting rights under all circumstances, and

(B) shares representing in the aggregate more than 50 per cent of the paid up capital

are owned by individuals resident in Canada, or

(iii) any combination of individuals or corporations described in subparagraph (i) or (ii);

(b) where

(i) a non-resident person,

(ii) a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, or

(iii) a corporation that is related to a non-resident person within the meaning of subsection (5a) or (5b) of section 139

has a right under a contract in equity or otherwise either immediately or in the future and either absolutely or contingently, to, or to acquire, equity shares in a corporation, those shares shall

(iv) unless the right is contingent upon an event that it is not reasonable to expect to occur within a reasonable time, or

(v) unless the right is such that a reasonable man concerned only with the value of the shares would not exercise it.

be deemed

(vi) to be owned by the person who has the right.

(vii) to be owned by a non-resident person, where the person who has the right is a corporation described in subparagraph (ii) or (iii), and

(viii) where the shares are unissued,

(A) to be issued and outstanding, and

(B) to have a paid-up capital value, with respect to each share, equal to

1. the par value, where the shares have a par value,

2. the amount that would be paid with respect to each share to exercise the right under the terms of the contract, where the shares have no par value and an amount is specified in the contract, or

3. the market value at the end of the relevant sixty-day period of a share of the class of shares of that corporation that is most closely similar to that share, where the shares have no par value and no amount is specified in the contract, and any other person who actually owns the shares in respect of which that right exists shall be deemed not to own those shares."

(4) Subsection (2) of section 139A of the said act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"(e) "equity share" means

(i) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding-up of the corporation,

as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid-up capital value of the share to which the right relates, and

(ii) a share, the owner of which has, as owner thereof, a right

(A) to a dividend, after a dividend at a rate not in excess of 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs, and

(B) to a part of the surplus of the corporation after repayment of capital, upon the redemption of the share, a reduction of the capital of the corporation or the winding-up of the corporation, after a payment of a part of the surplus at a rate not in excess of 10 per cent has been made to the owners of shares of a class other than the class to which that share belongs,

as great as the right of the owner of any other share of the corporation, when the magnitude of the right in each case is expressed as a rate based on the paid-up capital value of the share to which the right relates; and

(f) "paid-up capital value" with reference to a share, means

(i) in the case of an unissued share that is deemed by paragraph (b) to be issued and outstanding, the amount determined under clause (B) of subparagraph (viii) of that paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, an amount equal to the paid-up capital of the corporation that is represented by the shares of the class to which that share belongs divided by the number of shares of that class that are in fact issued and oustanding."

(5) In the case of a taxation year commencing before January 1, 1965, of a corporation that would have had a degree of Canadian ownership in the 1964 taxation year if section 139A of the said act had not been amended by this act, that portion of subsection (1) of section 139A of the said act, as amended by this act, that precedes paragraph (a) thereof shall, if the corporation elects in prescribed manner before January 1, 1965, be read as follows:

"139A. (1) For the purposes of this act, a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership in a taxation year if throughout any sixty day period commencing after March 16, 1964 and ending before January 1, 1965"

(6) This section is applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years."

and for the purpose of determining whether a corporation had a degree of Canadian ownership for the purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (1a) of section 106 of the said act, section 139A of the said act shall

(a) in relation to any dividend declared on or before March 16, 1964 be read as if it had not been amended by the said measure, and

(b) in relation to any dividend declared after March 16, 1964 be read as amended by the said measure.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Has the committee completed consideration of paragraph 12?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to paragraph 12 very briefly. I think many of the initial remarks made by the Minister of Finance during his budget address in relation to the changes he proposes to bring about in the withholding tax were most plausible but, without adopting any holier than thou attitude, I think most of us recognize that if the minister had consulted his departmental officials over a year ago with regard to the proposals he introduced in his first budget he would not have found it necessary to propose the amendment in paragraph 12 that confronts hon. members at the present time. In fact, I feel that the approach of the minister and the government to the problem of the withholding tax has initially been a negative one.

While hon. members of all parties in the house recognize that the Canadian people and the Canadian economy are faced with a real problem, in that many of our secondary and primary industries are controlled by forces outside of the country, and are familiar with the problem in its basic form, I think we in Canada also recognize that at this time we need outside capital to develop our country. If we were able to go back to 1867 and live our economic lives over again I am not so sure we would not profit from some of the experiences we have had, but the objective economic facts are that at this time in 1964 we need capital from outside to develop our resources.

I am not one of those who want to hang the blame on the minister all the time, but certainly the fact is that the approach of the minister and the government to the problem of the withholding tax has been a negative one which has been damaging to Canada from the point of view of dealing with the problem of outside control of our resources. Indeed, it has been most damaging for Canada when we consider that we must have foreign capital to develop our resources.

I should like to state most emphatically that I hope the minister and the government will take a positive attitude from now on in relation to the problem of investment in and control of the economic resources of Canada. I hope that as soon as possible the government will implement those recommendations in the report of the royal commission on banking and finance which will encourage more Canadians and Canadian institutions to invest in both primary and secondary industries within Canada's economy.

I am not going to take the time of the committee by putting forward too much data, but I have always been one of those who have felt that far too many Canadians are keeping their money in a sock. This being so, rather than penalizing investors from outside of Canada who want to invest in our future because they really believe that Canada has a bright economic future, I believe it is the responsibility of the minister in particular and the government in general not to engage in tinkering and wasting the time of the house and the country by experimenting—I am sure the minister would be the first to admit that the experiment has been an unhappy one—but rather to devote their thinking to implementing those measures which will encourage Canadians and Canadian institutions to invest in Canadian enterprises.

I should simply like to say that I do not believe the government alone can do this, but rather the government in co-operation with our stock exchanges and stock commissions will have to devise ways and means of encouraging not only those people in the high income brackets to invest in the Canadian economy but also those Canadians in the population generally who I believe have savings that can be devoted to this end. Again I repeat the proposition that I think far too many of our people, because of hidebound tradition, are keeping their money in a great big sock, and I think it is time that the minister and the government took positive measures to do something about this situation. These positive measures should be measures of the government's choice, and the positive measures that are to be found in the report of the royal commission on banking and finance, such as permitting broader scope for the investment of moneys to be found in pension funds and the like.

I do not know how much time it is going to take for the government to do these things but I think there is an immediate need for the government to do some serious thinking about policing stock transactions and the introduction of rules and regulations such as the rules and regulations of the securities and exchange commission in the United States. In sum and substance I am simply attempting to urge the minister to get away from the negative attitude which seems to have characterized the government in relation to its tinkering with the withholding tax and to adopt a positive attitude. I am sure that the opposition, realizing that this problem is much more important than party considerations, will support any government that forgets past activities and lets foreign investors know that their capital is welcome in Canada. I know we are living in difficult times and both the government of the day and the former government may have made particular and general mistakes which unfortunately may have had the result of discouraging foreign investors from coming into Canada.

Let us all regard this as a bipartisan proposition. Let the people outside of Canada know that their capital is welcome in Canada and that we need it. Let the minister and the government—I repeat this because it is something that needs repeating time and time again—try to encourage Canadians to take this money out of the sock and invest it in good Canadian securities.

Mr. Otto: If we may continue in that very reasonable vein the hon. member just started in this discussion, I wonder if we can get down to some very basic facts? The first one is that we have been in the habit of legislating for angels only to find that mortals inhabit this earth. We seem to be greatly shocked and surprised when we find that people behave like human beings. We have known for some time that more and more Canadian industry, Canadian mining and power are held by foreign investors. This is a situation which we realize now and for which we want an instant solution. Of course, there is no instant solution.

We talk about investment, but just what is the purpose of paragraph 12? I believe we are trying to repatriate the investment in Canadian companies. What we are really talking about is an element of risk. What we are saying is, if you put a little money into a new venture, 20 per cent of the people will lose and 80 per cent will make a fantastic amount. We know that in years gone by billions of dollars in profit have gone to people in the United States or Europe. We do not have this money. We must recognize that this is a gamble and that we are asking Canadians to invest.

If we may generalize for a moment we may say that the Canadian is very kind, considerate, and brave. He is a person who will never hurt your feelings. As hon. gentlemen here know, it is very difficult to find anyone who will admit a political affiliation because he may hurt your feelings. We are considerate and kind people, but we are also very apprehensive. We do not gamble. We are, therefore, going to require some incentive if we are going to gamble.

The second point I wish to mention is that the hon. member who has resumed his seat said Canadians have a lot of money. We do have a lot of money. I believe the minister will acknowledge that there is somewhere in the vicinity of $14 billion in savings in this country. We do not know how much money is hidden away in the socks of the Canadian people. If we can judge from the reports of the Brockville robbery, the safety deposit boxes of this country probably contain another $10 billion which is not being used. Possibly we have more in savings in this country for every man, woman and child than anywhere else. However, this is not the kind of money you gamble. This is money which you scrimped to save and which was difficult to acquire. You do not play the market or gamble with this money. Most businessmen will acknowledge that the money with which people gamble or invest is the easy money, that is the money returned in the form of dividends or profits which people did not expect or which amounted to more than they expected. This is the kind of money that has not remained in this country.

I believe the minister has acknowledged the problem and tried to approach it in a reasonable way. We will have to provide an incentive if we are to find a solution to this problem. We have to consider that the Canadian is apprehensive. We will find it will be a great help in this problem when the Canadian is satisfied he will not starve in his old age. It will be a help when he realizes he has a good pension plan, good medical care and a good unemployment insurance scheme. This will remove that fear of what is going to happen in his old age. Even then, we are not going to get a bunch of Canadian investors.

I dare say you could have the stock market floor covered with shares and even then Canadians are not going to pick them up. We are not shares buyers. A program of education will have to be introduced, therefore, to let Canadians know what we are talking about when we urge them to invest in equity shares. We have to clean up the stock market. I think the minister will acknowledge, as will most members who have had any business dealings, that about 40 per cent of the equity money collected by a company is used in promotional sales. In so far as mining companies are concerned, this may amount to 80 per cent or 90 per cent. We cannot afford these promotional costs. There should be legislation governing this, perhaps by having all companies public companies, or some other method of controlling promotional sales.

I doubt if even this will induce Canadians to invest in shares because Canadians like the kind of risk that is 100 per cent sure. It is a curious thing that when we want Canadians to invest in equity shares we pass legislation which helps the Canadians put all their money in bricks and mortar. I am referring to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We do have legislation which invites Canadians to put money in mortgages. Surely, if our problem is connected with the share structure of companies, our real problem is specifically who is entitled to the dividends? We want the dividend money to stay here so it will be reinvested. So far as control of the company is concerned, that makes very little difference. Business is in business to make money, and will invest money in the manner that is most profitable to business. It is true that in some instances United States companies do control Canadian subsidiaries in a way that interferes with these companies doing business in Canada. However, our main problem is to get the money from dividends to stay in Canada. Surely, there should be some thought given to legislation similar to the National Housing Act by which approved stock—

The Chairman: Order; I am sorry I have to interrupt the hon. member, but I am wondering if at this time he is not getting away from paragraph 12 to a very substantial degree.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, we do not think so.

The Chairman: Well, the Chair is expressing an opinion. At this point may I say that I have tried to be as lenient as possible in the course of this discussion. Perhaps the hon. member would resume his seat for a moment. We must recognize the rules of the committee which require that discussion in committee should be strictly relevant to the item under study. We have been considering paragraph 12 of this resolution, and it has nothing to do, so far as I can see, with the National Housing Act or several other things which have just been mentioned by the hon. member for York East.

Mr. Pigeon: We are ready to give unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Otto: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I was commenting on how legislation had been passed in other fields and yet we did not legislate in the same way in connection with the ownership of shares. Now, just to carry on, surely we could find a method of insuring shares, losses of shares, which would help and which would have some effect on Canadian investors. In another way possibly tax incentives, losses sustained in share purchase or sale, could be applied against profits and earnings; but an individual purchaser cannot do these things.

I have a great admiration for the minister. If you will recall, some time ago I said he was one of the reform ministers, and I believe he is. His ideas are very good, but I would like to think that certain thoughts are good in other fields other than the penalty section. I do not think penalties are going to do very much at all. We need someone to buy the shares if we expect the people who own them outside this country to sell them to us.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, if I might say a word or two about paragraph 12, this paragraph proposes that the 20 per cent rate of withholding tax on dividends paid after December 31, 1964, by a company that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, be reduced to 15 per cent. This will leave a rate of 15 per cent on dividends paid by companies that do not have a degree of Canadian ownership, and a rate of 10 per cent on Canadian companies that have a degree of Canadian ownership.

The purpose of subclause (a) is that the special tax of 5 per cent on increased dividends paid in the period between June 13, 1963 and January 1, 1965, by a company that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership, be repealed. This special tax was necessary to cover increased dividends paid before 1965 in anticipation of the 20 per cent rate scheduled to become payable on dividends after 1964. If there is not to be a rate of 20 per cent of dividends, this special tax is not necessary. We propose to repeal this tax with effect from the date of its enactment in 1963.

Consequential amendment (b) proposes that the increase from 15 per cent to 20 per cent in the tax on branch profits in Canada of non-resident companies shall not come into effect. The 1963 legislation provided for such an increase in tax after 1964, so that the tax on branches in Canada of non-resident companies would conform with the rate on dividends paid by companies that have not a degree of Canadian ownership.

Consequential amendment (c) proposes that the increase from 15 per cent to 20 per cent in the rate of tax on non-resident owned investment corporations, scheduled for 1964, shall not come into effect. If the rate of tax paid by companies without a degree of Canadian ownership had been increased to 20 per cent, it would have been necessary to impose the same rate of tax on the special kind of companies known as non-resident owned investment companies.

I presume from the tenor of the remarks so far that these changes will command the respect and the acceptance of all hon. members of the committee.

Mr. Nowlan: I can assure the Minister of Finance that these amendments will command the respect, attention and approbation of the official opposition because we have been urging them for the last year and we are very glad to see the minister is bringing them in now. I must say that I agree very much with what the hon. member for York East had to say in his comments about penalties themselves not being sufficient to accomplish the ends the minister has in mind.

Whatever we may think of the desirability. from the philosophical point, of the idea he has, as the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi said a few moments ago if we were starting out to negotiate confederation all over again, and if the minister happened to be minister of finance, we could have accomplished something that we may have missed in the intervening years.

Mr. Gordon: I wasn't there then.

Mr. Nowlan: If the minister were there then we would not have the pleasure of having him here in front of us now. We are very glad he was not there because—and of course I would not say this myself—if he did not do better then than he did in his first budget, we would not have a Canadian parliament here at this time.

I am not going to repeat what has been said before. I think the best object lesson we have had was the speech given the other day by Mr. Ball, the United States under secretary of state. I suggested to the minister a year ago that in my opinion it was obviously necessary—and this the minister admitted—to get a treaty through the United States senate, to renegotiate a treaty if we were going to accomplish what he had in mind; and with the pressure on the United States senate, an election year being in the offing, and with the important legislation it had in front of it, it would be impossible for that body to renegotiate a treaty this year.

When you get the state under secretary in the United States making a speech such as he did on Saturday, attacking this policy hip and thigh, in shall we say polite but stern terms—I have forgotten how the minister described it—you can imagine what hope there would be of the United States senate passing such legislation this year.

The minister has said that the tax reductions in the United States have enabled him to retreat from the position he took when he brought this measure in a year ago. He is fortunate to have some justification for his retreat, but I do not think that is at all the material one. The material one is that he could not have got the legislation through and, if there had not been a tax treaty renegotiated, we would have been faced with a 30 per cent withholding tax on Canadian corporations in the United States, and this would be an absolutely impossible situation.

It is a very good thing that the minister has withdrawn from that position and that we are going back to the 15 per cent. The club has been withdrawn and there is now this small carrot held out. There should be more carrots. There should be a more positive approach. Obviously the banking commission, which reported the other day, felt that way, and there have been various briefs presented to it by the bankers' associations, making recommendations to deal with estate tax and other matters by which this end could be accomplished. We are well away from this legislation on which we embarked, and from the clubs inherent in it in dealing with investment from outside.

There has been a great deal of controversy as to how much the investment of funds has dried up in this country. I know there are various aspects to that. I know the equalization tax in the United States played an important part, as well as the minister's first budget. I am not sure how far he can go in trying to delimit which had the greater effect, but I hope when the bill is before the house that he will be able to give us more information on that score. As it is, I am simply saying that we of the opposition appreciate the fact that this legislation is being amended, and this move certainly has our full hearted support.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has said that apparently the provisions of paragraph 12 commend themselves to the committee. Lest silence appear to give consent, I want to express very briefly my point of view on this paragraph. Last year when the minister presented his budget he very properly expressed great concern about the growing control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors and he proposed some measures to rectify this situation. I do not think the measures he proposed at that time were very far reaching or likely to be effective, but at least they were a timid move in the right direction. I wish to express my regret that the minister has now completely retreated from the position he took last year and that he has not so far suggested any positive means of coping with the serious problem of the extensive control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors, particularly by the tremendous United States corporations.

I think it goes much further than this question of the withholding tax. When one finds under secretary George W. Ball, in the speech he made at Harrington, New York, warning the Canadian government that a very dim view will be taken of measures designed to make a change in the character of investment from equity to debt, it seems to me a serious point has been reached. If we are to get out of the dilemma in which we find ourselves there must, in my view, be a gradual change from equity control to loan capital and if Mr. Ball's words imply a warning to the Canadian government that any attempt to transfer indebtedness from an equity position to a loan capital position means there will be restrictions or retaliations, then, indeed, we have become an economic satellite and not a nation at all. While I do not intend to fight for the retention of these trifling provisions which are designed to move some of the indebtedness from an equity position to a debt position, I think this is symptomatic of the fact that the Canadian government is now in retreat as far as any serious attempt to grapple with the problem of foreign control is concerned.

If the minister were simply removing these minor provisions in order to introduce some constructive and dynamic program, I would agree these would be no loss. But I see no signs of any such proposal. We in this party have a number of proposals which we have put forward from time to time and which I should like to make again. However, I am sure Your Honour would not permit me to discuss them under this paragraph and I therefore do not intend to seek to do so. But I think I should say to the minister that we are disappointed the government has apparently completely capitulated on this question of attempting to deal with foreign control of our economy; and in the absence of any proposals in the minister's budget speech and in the absence of any announced legislation, we can only assume that the government is giving up the battle after a very small and feeble effort.

Mr. Lloyd: Some brief references have been made to the royal commission on banking, and the previous speaker for the opposition observed that perhaps now was not the time to look back; that we should look ahead and recognize mistakes. The royal commission report made it clear that in its judgment there may have been mistakes on the part of the present administration as well as past administrations, and I think it might help us if we were to remember that the royal commission declared that it rejected the use of direct controls on international capital flows as disrupting to the efficient working of economic incentives and as having harmful long term effects. Then the report went on:

> The country will no doubt continue to draw in resources from abroad at some times but on balance the economy need not be a large net user of foreign funds if soundly managed at home.

In this connection, the report points out that much of the capital inflow from 1958 to 1961 stemmed from inappropriate domestic credit policies.

Perhaps I might turn now to the observations made by the previous speaker. The leader of the New Democratic party spoke of the need for a challenging and positive program. Anybody who has been associated with the advanced training of young Canadians in commerce and law over the last two decades will readily recognize that there has been a tremendous improvement in management skills among Canadians during that period. Any legislation which draws attention to the fact that foreign investors may obtain important advantages by making use of these skills will prove worth while both to ourselves and to the companies concerned. If those companies, in addition to taking advantage of Canadian skills, adjust their policies so as to be more in line with Canadian objectives, not only would their capital yield more, but the legislation under debate, instead of constituting a deterrent will constitute in my judgment both an incentive and an advantage.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this paragraph 12 will change the present situation very little and will not contribute anything towards creating a single new industry in Canada.

In this regard, I completely support the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) to the effect that it is urgent for the government to take positive action and to make a forceful gesture in order to favour an economy controlled by Canadians.

In paragraph 12, we read the following:

> That the 20 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person... be reduced to 15 per cent, and that in consequence thereof:
> (a) Part IID of the act imposing a tax equal to 5 per cent of certain dividends paid by a corporation that does not have a degree of Canadian ownership be repealed;

On the one hand, the 5 per cent exemption is reduced and, on the other, the 5 per cent tax now payable is removed. This means that we are running around in a circle with this paragraph 12, or this amendment to the Income Tax Act.

It was suggested a while ago that Canadians who have money or securities hidden away in wool stockings, etc., should be encouraged to take a gamble in order to help our secondary industries. We agree. However, it is not with the money hidden away nowadays in wool stockings that new secondary industries will be set up in Canada. Government action is absolutely necessary. The government must take its responsibilities. To suggest such solutions will not prevent Americans from continuing their control of the whole economy of the country. The government must assume its responsibilities, not in the face of the American people or the other peoples of the world, but in the face of Canadians themselves who are ready to work for the development of the natural resources of their country.

To that end, the government's co-operation is imperative. We have the necessary physical means in Canada, we have the talents, we have the brains, we have everything that is necessary to develop our natural resources and to turn them to the advantage of the whole population. The only element we do not have is credit, to finance the launching of an economic development program. The Minister of Finance does not make such a suggestion. He forgets his responsibilities in that respect. He tries to make the Canadian people believe that a 5 per cent tax increase, levied on American companies will prevent Americans from continuing to exercise their control in Canada; but this will not allow Canadians to control their own economy.

Mr. Chairman, that clause was discussed earlier this afternoon and we have not made much progress. We are at a standstill. The Minister of Finance will not change his opinion or his attitude. Nevertheless, he should know that only concrete action will enable us to establish in our country an economic balance, the majority of which would be controlled by our fellow citizens. Then, secondary industries will pop up all over the country.

Some of our citizens have inventions to offer, things to present to the country which could be useful to the general welfare of our people.

The government listens but with half an ear.

It seems to me that we must regain our sense of responsibility; we must get back within the bounds of logic and common sense; we must stop erecting or spreading smoke screens before the public eye on the pretence that the government is helping greatly the Canadian people by imposing a 5 per cent tax on American companies operating businesses in Canada. In my opinion, it is to laugh in our people's face, to consider them as ignorant people who know nothing of what is happening in their country and who believe that the Minister of Finance actually is assisting them in gratifying a little less the American people, while still leaving to them the control of our Canadian economy, as they have it at the present time.

If we want to keep and help our Canadian industries, the Minister of Finance only has to ask the industrial expansion bank to provide an amount of credit proportionate to our physical capability of setting up secondary industries which, in turn, will create jobs and increase our national production. Then, it would no longer be necessary to deal with odd questions like the one covered by paragraph 12 of this amendment to the Income Tax Act.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 13.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister spoke about this matter the other day. This is a question concerning the sale of a partnership, to provide a basis for capital cost allowance. Would the minister like to say something on this paragraph?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this paragraph proposes that where a partner sells his interest, the appropriate part of the amount he receives as the selling price shall be deemed to be received on account of the disposition of depreciable property. This will make it possible to recapture depreciation which the partners claimed in recent years, or to allow a terminal loss in respect of the depreciable property, depending upon the circumstances.

It is just as if a corporation sells some depreciable assets at a profit. The amount of capital cost allowance that it has claimed in earlier years is recouped by the crown as a charge against the corporation's profits, and this provision is intended to apply the same principle when a partner retires.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 14.

Mr. Nowlan: On paragraph 14, Mr. Chairman, I think there is raised a question which the minister should explain carefully to the committee at this time. This is the paragraph which provides that family allowances will be paid in respect of children who otherwise would not be qualified; that is, children over the age of 16. The parents of such children will receive for this year a deduction of $470. Ordinarily, if they were dependants and not in receipt of family allowance, they would receive a deduction from income of $550. If they were in receipt of family allowance for the year, they would only receive a deduction of $300, I think.

In this case I think the minister is splitting the difference, shall we say, and assuming that the legislation will not come into effect until some time this year, possibly not until next fall; therefore they will receive $470 and then, presumably, the family allowance for the balance of the year. That raises the question of the payment of family allowances under this paragraph and the deductibility therefrom. The whole field has yet to be dealt with, I quite appreciate that; but this is a situation which should be clarified now as far as the minister is concerned.

As I understand it from newspaper reports and, I think, from the statement of the Prime Minister as well, and possibly from the statement of the Minister of Finance—I am not sure about that—the situation is as follows. The Prime Minister spoke on this when dealing with the arrangements that were made between the province of Quebec and the government of Canada and said that the province of Quebec had, of course, been paying for some years an educational grant to children over the family allowance age. I think the province certainly deserves a great deal of commendation for so doing. It has been an educational grant for those who stayed in school and has been paid out of provincial revenues. Now we are going to pay family allowance in respect of all children who remain in school over the ages of 16 and 17. But in the province of Quebec, this being an educational grant, as I gather from what the Prime Minister said the other day, the province will continue to make that payment in respect of the children and there will be an abatement from the federal treasury to the province of the amount, roughly, that has been paid to the parents of the children in Quebec. In Ontario and the rest of Canada the family allowance will be paid.

It may be—and this is a situation which I think the minister should clarify now—that a parent living on the other side of the river here with one dependant 16 years of age will be receiving $10 a month from the province of Quebec in respect of this educational grant and at the same time will be receiving the deduction in so far as the dependant is concerned, because he will not be receiving family allowance. On the other hand, with regard to the parent living on this side of the river and receiving a family allowance, the dependancy will only result in a deduction of $300 a year instead of $550. That is an anomalous situation which has caused some discussion in the press and elsewhere in Canada. Therefore I think that with regard to this paragraph the minister should clarify the situation as it will be when the legislation is completed.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this particular paragraph of the resolution, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings pointed out, deals only with the difference between the $550 that is normally allowed for a dependant and the $300 that is allowed for a dependant in respect of whom family allowance is being paid to the parents for a period. The difference between those two amounts is $250. It is expected that these payments will apply for the months of September to December, inclusive, this year—that is to say, four months—and a third of $250 is roughly $80. This explains why the figure is $470.

In the application of this new proposal to the province of Quebec certain difficulties arose. As the hon. member pointed out, the province of Quebec has been paying an educational grant for some years. This went back either to 1960, or it began in 1961. In the case of the province of Quebec the amounts are paid to the children, or in the right of the children, rather than to the parents. Because of this, and because I suppose it was a payment by a provincial government, there has been no change in the income tax deductions allowable to the parents. They are not reduced because the payments are made, as I say, to the children.

I would remind the members of this committee that under the Quebec plan this educational grant applies for ten months only, not for 12, so the payment in respect of a 16 or 17 year old child to continue at school amounts to $100 a year. Under the proposed federal plan which will be presented to the house as soon as the legislation has been drafted the amount will be $10 a month and will apply for 12 months, and it will be paid, as are the family allowances, to the parents. I suppose that theoretically the federal plan could apply to everyone in Canada, but in that case the additional $10 per month per child in the case of Quebec would be superimposed upon an existing plan under which the province is already paying $10 per month by way of educational grants. I think most people would agree that although it would be nice for the people of Quebec to get it twice, it would not be a reasonable thing to do.

The government of the province of Quebec has pointed out that they have a plan which has been in existence for three or four years. It has been well accepted. It meets their requirements and understandably they do not wish to change it. On the other hand, in extending the principle of family allowances the federal government certainly would not wish to pay something which could be interpreted as an educational grant. After all, there are certain sensitivities in these matters as well as certain constitutional rights and responsibilities, and I not think that the members of this committee would agree that this would be a wise course for the federal government to embark upon. And, of course, the federal government has no intention of doing so.

Therefore, the problem has been to find a workable and reasonable compromise. It is proposed—and I am now answering my hon. friend's question, although this will doubtless be discussed again when the legislation is before the house—that an amount be paid to the province of Quebec which will be calculated at the net amount which would have been paid in respect of children remaining at school in the province of Quebec, less the reduction in the allowances in the rest of the country in the case of parents in the higher income brackets. This deduction is quite substantial and this is the proposal which will be presented to the house when this legislation is ready for consideration.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to let this occasion go by without rectifying one statement made by the minister. In his remarks he said that allowances were paid to the children, which is not the case. In fact, they are paid directly to the mother of the child.

Mr. Gordon: May I just correct that. They are paid in the right of the children; but the children are a little young so probably the money goes to the mother.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Only a few short remarks, Mr. Chairman.

When Mr. Lesage was a federal minister, he never considered as an interference by the federal government in the field of education the fact that this government paid family allowances to children of a certain age and to those who are still studying. That is why I am surprised that Mr. Lesage objects to the decision of the federal government to grant a further amount and extend the period during which family allowances are paid.

I understand that the Quebec government pays family allowances to children at a more advanced age than the federal government but, in my opinion, the basic reason why Mr. Lesage objects to an extension of those family allowances by the federal government, is not so much because provincial autonomy is jeopardized, but because the provincial government is already paying a school allowance, and Mr. Lesage prefers to get those sums of money back and use them for other purposes.

Consequently, I believe that it would be more normal for Mr. Lesage to receive those sums of money and to give them to children who continue their studies.

That is my personal opinion.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I might just clear up any misunderstanding on this last point. As I said earlier, there was some discussion as to whether the very fortunate children—or perhaps the very fortunate mothers—of the province of Quebec should get two $10 per month payments, one from the province and one from the federal government.

Mr. Rondeau: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Gordon: Well, that is a very natural comment and I can quite understand it. I dare say that that is a comment which would be made by many of the mothers in the province of Quebec. However, I would remind my hon. friend that payments are made to the mothers and not to the fathers. The fact is that there are those who feel there are a lot of demands which are made upon the relatively meagre resources of governments, both federal and provincial, and that this problem having been looked after in the province of Quebec in 1960 or 1961 it would not make sense to duplicate it. It was for that reason and because their plan has been in existence for some time and is working well—and no one wants to abandon a plan which has been successful—that it is proposed to handle the matter in the way I have described.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, what I meant is that Mr. Lesage reminds me of a magician.

The federal government wants to pass that legislation, vote those sums of money which in the other provinces, will normally be going to the children attending school, whereas Mr. Lesage will get that money and will be able to do what he pleases with it. In other words, the money he will receive from the federal government will not go to the children of Quebec still attending school. He will be able to do what he pleases with it.

Everyone knows that Mr. Lesage once was a cabinet minister in Ottawa and that he is now premier of Quebec. I feel that his attitude has changed completely; he is not the same man, in short, he does not have the same political conscience. That is what I wanted to draw to the attention of the house.

I understand why Mr. Lesage so rightly objects to the federal government's intrusion in the field of education, but whatever means the latter might have taken to satisfy the Quebec premier, I would have wished that, upon receipt of that money, Mr. Lesage would have been compelled to distribute it to children who still attend school, even if the provincial government already provides a certain amount in that connection. In fact, I feel such a course of action would have been more normal.

[Text]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I did not follow the minister's explanation too clearly and I would ask him to explain the matter in a little more detail. Will the exemption that parents of children 16 and 17 in the nine provinces can claim be reduced to $300 and will the parents of children of the same age in Quebec continue to get an exemption of $550? Would the minister take a family just across the river, let us say, with one child going to school and a similar family in Ontario, compare the two and explain the matter so that we may follow it?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, there is a difference now between a family in Quebec and a family in Ontario which I will explain in a moment. That difference will be narrowed. At the moment a family in Quebec receives $550 in respect of or on behalf of—I forget the legal phrase—a child who continues in school up to the age of 18. I am informed that the age is higher than that. This is something that the people of the province of Quebec get from their provincial government, and that the people of no other province receive. Therefore parents in the province of Quebec now have a decided advantage in this respect over people in the other nine provinces. That is the way it is now.

Under the proposed plan the present arrangement in the province of Quebec will, as far as I know, continue without change. That is the intention of the government of Quebec. In all the other provinces, however, the federal government will extend the present family allowances at the rate of $10 per month for 12 months, whereas in Quebec it is only 10 months, and apply exactly the same formula that now applies up to the age of 15 in so far as allowances are concerned.

Therefore if you take somebody on one side of the river and compare her with somebody on the other side of the river I think you will be able to show that there is a difference in the net amount they will receive and that difference will be reduced in the future. Because the Quebec plan was introduced some time ago, because it is an established plan and because, understandably, I think, the government there feels it would be unacceptable to change it, the net amount after the deduction of the statutory allowances for children that would have been payable in the province of Quebec to mothers in the province of Quebec under the federal scheme will be paid to the government of that province. I do not know whether I should comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Assomption-Montcalm.

An hon. Member: Joliette.

Mr. Gordon: Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. These triple constituencies bother me sometimes. At the beginning of his remarks he said that Premier Lesage had worked a miracle or was something of a miracle man or something like that. There are times when I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend opposite, but in this case I think this is not the logical conclusion.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I want to get some further clarification from the minister. I tried to follow him very closely. Briefly, do I understand the situation to be this? First of all, may I say that I agree with the minister, of course, that as Quebec already has its plan there is no reason why the federal government should ask them to discard it, and there ought to be some accommodation. All I am trying to find out is whether this is an equitable arrangement.

Do I understand what the minister is now telling us is something like this? In the province of Quebec the provincial government will continue to pay $100 a year per child. I am putting it on an annual basis. In other parts of Canada the federal government will pay to each family $120 per year for 16 and 17 year-olds. Will the financial equivalent which is to be paid to the province of Quebec be on the basis of $100 per child or on the basis of $120 per child. My second question is: Do I understand that the exemption for parents in Quebec will continue to be $550 whereas in the rest of Canada it will be reduced to $300? Will the minister answer those questions?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, but in calculating the financial equivalent to be paid to the province of Quebec it will be worked out at $120 less the difference between the allowances of $550 and $300, which makes quite a difference in the total tax paid by any individual. Therefore it will not be the gross amount of $120. Let me take my hon. friend as an example, although as he is roughly my age perhaps I had better pick somebody younger. I do not know whether the hon. member has teenage children. If a member of this house has two teenage children his wife will receive—

Mr. Douglas: In Quebec?

Mr. Gordon: In the rest of Canada—$240, but the amount of the deduction that the member can claim for those two children will only be $600 because his wife gets this extra amount instead of being $550 times two or a total of $1,100. So his tax will go up and the amount that the tax goes up is obviously an offset to the total that is paid. Exactly the same calculation will be made in arriving at the fiscal equivalent that is due to the province of Quebec. Therefore the province of Quebec, taking the province as representing all the people of Quebec, will be in exactly the same position as any other province.

Mr. Douglas: May I clarify one point? I think I understand the minister now, but am I correct that parents in the province of Quebec will get $100 instead of $120, but they will save almost the equivalent amount on income tax, so it works out reasonably fairly? The province of Quebec will collect on the basis of $120 even though it is only paying $100, but there will be deducted from the fiscal equivalent paid to them the amount of income tax which the federal government would have collected if the exemption had been only $300 in Quebec instead of $550. Is that correct?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Fairweather: May I ask the minister at this stage, for the sake of consistency—and that is apparently the approach—why did the government not adopt the Quebec formula or the Quebec plan? Then we would not be spending all evening on this thing?

Mr. Gordon: I can assure my hon. friend that the members of the government spent many evenings in trying to arrive at the best solution of this very complicated problem.

Mr. Fairweather: Is this the best solution? I doubt it.

Mr. Gordon: The government thinks it is. Perhaps the hon. member may think so too when I have finished my explanation.

If the government had proposed to this house or, when the time comes if it did propose to this house, that we just adopt the Quebec plan holus-bolus we would not be extending the family allowance procedure at all. We would be doing something different. The family allowance procedure has been in force, I think, for 20 years. There has been no question about it. No one, to my knowledge, has ever challenged its constitutionality. If we were to adopt an entirely new approach for people in the 16 and 17 year old brackets, then I would have to go to the Minister of Justice and ask him if he was quite sure this would be acceptable.

The intention has always been in connection with this legislation that it should represent an extension of the family allowance scheme to apply to people at 16 and 17 years, because times have changed in 20 years and people no longer leave school, or we hope they no longer leave school at 15. This was the purpose and the intention. Apart from that, the problem has been to find a fair, reasonable and equitable basis for compensating the government of Quebec who, understandably, do not want to withdraw or change their system which has been in effect for three or four years.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance, but I feel he was ill informed by his adviser when he told the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) that school allowances were paid even after the age of 18 in the province of Quebec.

The granting of those school allowances ends at 18. But what I feel is unfair is that the Minister of Finance seems to consider as a dependant child one who attends an institution or a school, and that is the basis of his argument. Consequently, a 16 or 17 year old youth who does not attend school in Quebec would be deprived of the family allowance from 16 to 18 years of age, while in the other provinces, such a child would get it.

Therefore, the word "dependant" should not be limited to those who go to school, because it may happen that a sick or crippled child remains dependant on his parents without going to school.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: May I interrupt the hon. member? I am afraid that when I attempted to explain this I simplified it too greatly. I can assure my hon. friend this allowance will apply to children who are sick or invalids.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: I thank the minister for clearing up that point, but here again it seems to me that the basic exemption will vary in the province of Quebec as compared to the other provinces. The minister stated that in Quebec the deductibility will reach a maximum of $470. But what about poor or large families? The individual who does not pay income tax for lack of sufficient income will not be able to benefit by this basic exemption of $470 and he will lose his monthly allowance of $20 compared to children of other provinces.

I believe the minister should, in the bill which he will submit to the house later, provide a special allowance based on 12 rather than ten months per year.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, all I can say in reply to that is the people in Quebec will be treated in exactly the same way as they always have been. So far as the compensation that will be paid to Quebec is concerned, I can say with some assurance that I have every confidence in the government of Quebec being able to check the arithmetic very carefully.

Mr. Rhéaume: I am wondering too, Mr. Chairman, about the grants that are going to be made to Quebec in lieu of this program. These family allowances are rigidly controlled by the Department of National Health and Welfare and in certain cases children would not be eligible under the program. For instance, a person over 16 not attending school would not qualify for the additional allowance. It seems to me the allowance regulations are going to differ between the federal family allowance scheme operative in all other provinces except Quebec, and the Quebec scheme. We are going to get serious discrepancies.

I can conceive of a situation whereby a mother in Quebec would receive the $100 a year allowance from the provincial authorities for income tax purposes and would be able to deduct the full $550 exemption for youngsters between 16 and 17, whereas a family in a province other than Quebec in the identical situation would not receive the extra family allowance and would still be allowed only the same deduction for income tax purposes. The question I have for the minister is, at the time these negotiations were being conducted did the federal government examine the kind of controls that were going to be imposed on this program to ensure there would not be a discrepancy here?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps questions of this kind could be dealt with better when the legislation is before the house. I can assure my hon. friend that this problem has been gone into very thoroughly. I think it might perhaps becloud a very interesting and a very good discussion on this resolution if we get into a discussion of another piece of legislation that will be presented very shortly.

Mr. Hales: I understood the minister to say the exemption for parents in the nine provinces will be $300 and in Quebec it will be $550 for children aged 16 or 17 years going to school. Now, how do we know whether or not a child is at school? How is this arrived at? I think I understand the Ontario situation; is Quebec operated the same way?

Mr. Gordon: The same tests will apply in the future as apply now, and family allowances are not paid now unless children go to school.

Mr. Hales: The question is, how do we know the child is at school? What controls have we?

Mr. Gordon: This is something I would prefer to discuss when the legislation is before the house. I do not know whether that will be next week or next month, but it will certainly have to be soon. I will be properly briefed then and I hope I will be in a position to answer my hon. friend's question. My understanding is that the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have an inspection service, and they check up with the schools.

Mr. Hales: Maybe we can hold over paragraph 14 until we have this information that the minister speaks of.

Mr. Grafftey: On this clause—and at first glance one might think I was getting off the subject—I would like to point out that often, both in this chamber and outside it, I have proposed closer liaison between the federal government and the provincial governments. I proposed the establishment of a secretariat or other body for federal-provincial affairs, and if any example demonstrates the necessity for such a body it is the debate in this committee tonight.

I am not blaming the minister for this. I know we are still a young country and are still evolving our procedures, but my proposal to this effect was talked out the other day during private members' hour. What is going on here tonight indicates the immediate need for the government to sit down with the provinces, not tomorrow but almost tonight. I have spoken about this to my colleagues, to my friends in the press gallery and to my friends on both sides of the chamber. There has been far too much postponement about it.

There is an immediate need for the establishment of more sophisticated bodies, call them secretariats or what you will. Tonight's debate indicates the type of misunderstandings and disagreements that can take place when we lack this liaison or these sophisticated bodies for federal-provincial affairs. I should think the minister would be getting pretty tired of having ultimatums issued to him by the premier of Quebec, but I congratulate the minister.

Every sincere Canadian, no matter what party he belongs to, is happy about the type of arrangement the minister and the government have been able to make with Quebec in the last few days. I congratulate the minister and the government upon it, and we are putting party after country when we say that.

However, I remember just before that the federal government was threatened by the premier of Quebec that this whole question was going to be brought immediately before the supreme court. Within the short space of one year we have had a Liberal premier telling a Liberal government at Ottawa that he is going to have his way, or else.

The Chairman: Order. The standing order is well known to the hon. member, which requires that discussion in committee be strictly relevant to the resolution before us, and I would ask him to keep that in mind.

Mr. Grafftey: I bow to that ruling, but I would point out that before the arrangement was made with the province of Quebec, the premier of Quebec stated that this whole matter was going to be brought by his government before the supreme court, and I think that is relevant. That being the case I would like to ask the minister, before this arrangement was made with the province of Quebec, did any of the government's advisers advise it that this whole proposal was unconstitutional?

Before taking my seat I offer this idea in all sincerity to the committee, because I think it is a very appropriate time to do it. The debate taking place tonight, and what has happened outside the committee in relation to this whole problem, indicates that there is a pressing need for more sophisticated bodies to deal with liaison between the federal government and the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I have only a few words to say about paragraph 14.

I feel that the reference to exemptions which must not exceed $470 if an allowance is paid under the Family Allowances Act causes confusion more than anything else.

Many people think that the province of Quebec will benefit more than the other provinces and will get a preferential treatment under this paragraph 14.

I wonder whether the minister intends to introduce legislation in this field in the near future? The minister and the government should have granted a general increase in family allowances for children 17 and 18 years old, under the same conditions now applying to children getting allowances since 1945—if a child stops going to school, as the minister knows, the payment of those family allowances is stopped. It has always been so. Now, to avoid this confusion which exists at the present time between Quebec legislation and federal legislation which is interpreted in Quebec as a federal intrusion in a provincial field, why not increase family allowances now granted to other children?

If Quebec decides to pay school allowance in addition to family allowances, that would be its own business. If Ontario wants to do likewise that is also Ontario's own business and if that province does not want to do so, it does not have to. I think that it would justify the federal point of view, if we had standard legislation throughout Canada. It is useless to divide. There has not been any division in the case of family allowances since 1945.

All the provinces and all the mothers have accepted it, like the minister said a moment ago. But since the minister does not see any objection to the mothers of our children receiving an allowance $10 larger, why does he not introduce general legislation to continue family allowances up to 18 years of age. Then, let the province of Quebec administer its own educational system, and let Mr. Jean Lesage continue, I hope, to pay $10 a month to the children of the province of Quebec. And that will free the federal government.

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: I realize the minister is in a difficult position. He is trying to explain what, prima facie, is a very simple question. Unfortunately for him it is complicated by the fact that the Prime Minister, in making his statement, indicated that instead of this family allowance being extended into the province of Quebec there would be an equivalent provided. Consequently, when we look at paragraph 14 we must look at it in the light of what the Prime Minister said in his announcement.

What the minister has been attempting to do is to indicate what type of regulations there will be in the future, so that in the view of the government there will be equity done between the parents of 16 and 17 year old children in Quebec and the parents of 16 and 17 year old children outside Quebec. This is how I understand his proposition. We must take these two statements together, and the fact that the government of Quebec has stated it wants this allowance in another form.

What puzzles me is how we can reconcile that with the fact that for 20 years family allowances have been paid into every province with a stipulation that if a child ceases to attend school the allowance ceases to be paid. I realize in making this comment the minister may be driven to consider what may be the type of legislation to be introduced in the future, but for the last 20 years family allowances have been paid under the provisions of the legislation which provides, under section 4, that the allowance ceases to be payable if the child does not regularly attend school as required by the laws of the province where he resides. I realize this is not the time when the minister can give a complete answer, but nevertheless we are being asked to approve paragraph 14, and we must keep this in mind. How do we reconcile this provision which has been in the Family Allowances Act for 20 years with the distinction which we are now asked to make with respect to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a perfectly clear question and I will try to answer it. In the normal course I would have expected that if it were decided that family allowances should be continued in respect of children in school after the age of 15, that is while they are 16 and 17, there would just be an extension and we would go along in exactly the same way as before. That is what will happen, except in the province of Quebec. Why should there be a different formula for Quebec? The answer is that Quebec is already in this field. The province is already paying an educational grant to children who are 16 and 17 years of age.

Theoretically, I suppose, if the federal government wanted to extend the present family allowance arrangements up to the age of 18 they could do so and this would apply everywhere in Canada, including Quebec; and the government of Quebec could in that event do one of two things: It could either continue to pay its present education grants, which would mean there would be roughly twice as much paid in the province of Quebec in respect to children aged 16 and 17 as would be paid elsewhere in Canada, or, alternatively, it could say: The federal government is now paying these sums; we shall stop our payments. Either of these decisions would be perfectly logical, I suggest. However, the government of the province of Quebec says: We have been in this field for three or four years; we are doing it in a way which seems to us reasonable; a way which seems acceptable to our people, one which is well established; and we want to go on doing it that way; we would prefer it if you would pay to us the equivalent of what would have been paid by the federal government net, after income tax and so on, and if it were paid directly in respect of the children.

Anyone could argue whether or not this was a good way of doing it. As I say, the federal government could charge right ahead, ignore the fact that this is an established program in Quebec and insist on paying the amounts directly to the mothers despite the fact that the government of the province does not want this done. Or the government of Canada could say: We recognize the fact that you have been in this field for three or four years. We are not going to pay any more than the citizens of Quebec would have got under our new scheme, but instead of paying them double and embarrassing everybody we shall pay the net equivalent to the government of Quebec. And this is what will be proposed when the legislation is presented in this house.

Mr. Enns: I believe this extended discussion would not have taken place if the minister had been able to say right at the outset that there would be no difference in the income tax deductions applicable to the mothers in the province of Quebec and those in the rest of Canada. He said there would be a financial equivalent but it would not be the same.

Is it fair to assume that the education grant being paid to the people in Quebec is possible because of the tax-sharing arrangement by the federal government—in other words, because there is an element of federal assistance in those payments? If so, it seems unfair that there should be this difference.

Mr. Gordon: I cannot say the situation would be exactly the same, because it has not been exactly the same for the last three or four years. It has been very different.

Amounts paid by the province of Quebec in respect of children in that province have not had any effect on deductions. They have been treated as though they were made to the child, not to the mother.

Mr. Enns: My point is that if there is an element of federal assistance in the provincial scheme for paying education grants there must be some way of working this out so that for income tax purposes there would be no difference as between parents in Quebec and parents in other parts of the country.

Mr. Gordon: I appreciate the hon. member's suggestion and his feelings in the matter but I do not know of any way in which this could be done.

Mr. Rhéaume: When I addressed a question to the minister earlier on the subject—admittedly it was not in such clear terms as were used by my hon. friend from Portage-Neepawa—the hon. gentleman suggested we should wait until the legislation was before the house, at which time, he said, it would be possible to go into the details of this program. I do not quarrel with that position, but I do not necessarily want details of this program. I want an assurance that the controls which have been placed on this program, be it administered in Quebec or in any other part of the country under the authority of the federal government, are going to be equally effective. Arrangements for deductions should be the same for all Canadians, especially if the programs are to be similar. Surely if we enter into this bargain with the people of Quebec—and it is a bargain for those who live in Quebec—Canadians who live in other provinces should not be subjected to rules and regulations, under the family allowances program, which people in Quebec will not be obliged to keep. If the minister can give me this assurance I shall be prepared to wait for the details on a later occasion.

Mr. Gordon: I am perfectly prepared to give that assurance to the best of my knowledge and belief. If anything, I think the checking up process will be more complete in the province of Quebec than elsewhere in Canada. I do not wish to go into details but I think I am safe in assuring the hon. member that there is nothing to worry about on that score.

Mr. Thomas: There seems to be a fundamental matter here which should be taken into consideration. As I understand the minister's explanation, the people of Quebec are to be treated differently from people in other parts of Canada. I think that is unfortunate. I know there is to be a compensatory payment made to the province of Quebec, but I understand that the mothers in Quebec are to receive $10 for ten months of the year whereas parents in other parts of Canada are to receive $10 per month for 12 months of the year. I would have to put myself on record as favouring a program whereby all mothers across Canada would be treated alike—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thomas: —and the children paid $10 for 12 months of the year. I think it is up to any provincial government to accommodate its arrangements in such a field as this to an over-all scheme, and in this I agree with the hon. member for Peace River. In effect we are simply extending family allowance at the rate of $10 per month from the age of 16 to the age of 18. That is what we are doing. Why not come right out and do it openly without any of these confusing arrangements which seem to enter into this question? Why not simply extend family allowances from age 16 to age 18 and have done with it? The present act takes care of school attendants and children who are dependant. The children who are ill or cannot attend school are taken care of. The children who are healthy and do not attend school come under the same regulations and the same conditions as do other children at the present time.

I feel we are on the wrong track. There is a fundamental point which this committee should take into consideration and I do not think we can pass it over as lightly as has been suggested. I think we should increase family allowances to the age of 18, leave it at that and let the different provinces deal with it as they will.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member who said a few words a while ago. I felt like him, but coming from the province of Quebec I thought I would give the opportunity to somebody else to speak for me, and I want to thank the member very warmly.

It seems to me, after taking into consideration everything we have heard tonight, that there is only one aim in the mind of the minister, and it is to save the face of his friend the premier of the province of Quebec. I think the mothers of the province of Quebec owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Middlesex West, and I would like the minister to take into consideration the recommendation he has just made, and forget the petty politics that seem to be underneath this matter and governing all the acts and movements of the minister. Please put us on the same level as everybody, and try to forget your friend the premier of the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, at the present time the government of the province of Quebec pays the children attending school $10 a month during a period of ten months, that is during the school year, whereas the federal government pays $10 a month during 12 months.

Under the circumstances, I am of the opinion that this situation discriminates against the mothers and children of Quebec. I feel that if the federal government reached an agreement with the province of Quebec about that sum of $10, it would have been very important to make Mr. Lesage and his government pay that $10 during 12 months instead of ten, as they do in the other provinces where mothers will receive $10 during 12 months. That is discrimination against mothers and, consequently, I should like to know whether the minister intends to intervene with the Quebec premier to remedy the situation.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Is the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm aware of the fact that the Quebec premier has announced that his province will pay $10 a month over a 12 month period just the same as the federal government?

I will have a few words to say on that point later on.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank my hon. friend. I was just about to say that I am quite certain the premier of the province of Quebec will do right by the mothers of that province.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am not intervening in this debate, which is very interesting and, I hope, helpful, but I would just like to say a few words. This is a very involved and complicated matter that we have been discussing tonight. Therefore I think it is desirable that we should read the record and the explanations the minister has given so we may obtain a proper understanding of exactly what has been done. It is rather difficult during the course of debate to follow this matter in the detail that I think is required.

We are now told that the payments are exactly the same in all provinces, and that at least is one step on the road to uniformity. There is still the problem of the income tax deductions under the Income Tax Act, and I think this is perhaps more serious than the minister was inclined to recognize or admit when he referred to it a short while ago. Previously there was a lesser payment made to the province of Quebec; now it is a larger one. With regard to the deduction which the minister mentioned, if you get a deduction of $300 a year for a dependancy in one case, and $550 in another case, it depends entirely on the taxable income as to how much deduction that may be worth. There is no point at all in saying it is equalized because of this, that and the other. We can all imagine a good many cases where a deduction of $550 would be infinitely more valuable than the compensating factors which the minister mentioned. I think we have to study this question. As I said, we will have the bill before us, I presume, in the reasonably near future and we will be able to discuss it then in all its details.

I want to impress upon the minister that we want—this has been said on this side of the chamber—absolute equality, and no one wants there to be any interference whatsoever with the Quebec scheme. As the minister said, they started their scheme some time ago, no one wants to interfere with it and no one wants to impose a tax on it, because we realize the constitutional complications that would arise immediately if you had an educational grant there and it was treated in a different way than we would have to treat it in regard to the other provinces. But I think we have to go some way yet in order to achieve uniformity among provinces in this matter. That is highly desirable, of course. We cannot have a family on one side of the river here treated in one way, and a family on the other side of the river treated in a different way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: That certainly would not be co-operative federalism; it would be the disruption of federalism, the disruption of federation, and we do not want to see that happen. As far as I am concerned—and I think most of us are concerned about this—there has been a fairly long discussion on this matter and I believe the minister appreciates the viewpoint that has been put forward. I can imagine that he has discussed this matter at length on various occasions and in a far different place from this, and has heard every argument which has been advanced tonight—and possibly he has raised some of them himself.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 15.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether under this paragraph students who go to trade school, business college, or even take an apprenticeship in a factory where they are learning a trade or receiving technical training, qualify for this allowance.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this is now being worked out and will be incorporated in the legislation that deals with this subject. I am afraid I am just not able to give a direct answer to my hon. friend at this moment. It does not have any bearing on this particular section of the resolution, but it will be explained fully when the next piece of legislation is presented.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether you can opt out on this 16, 17 and 18 year old deal.

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 16.

Mr. Nowlan: I have only one comment with respect to paragraph 16. If I were to make a comment which is as long as the paragraph itself we would have to ask leave to sit much later than ten o'clock tonight, but the best comment I think I could make on this legislation which the minister has fought so hard to achieve with regard to the control of Canadian corporations is to be found by anybody who wants to look at the regulations which are in front of us. If they do so they will find the definition of Canadian ownership, which should be a fairly simple term to define. For the sake of those who may read Hansard may I say that I am looking at a text in form roughly the size of Hansard, and this simple little definition of Canadian ownership starts half way down page 6, runs all the way down page 7, runs all the way down page 8, and runs almost to the end of page 9. Never were so many words used to express so little, as has been the case here. I think this is the only comment which needs to be made at this time.
