Some time ago, the minister announced some rather drastic reforms concerning the Canadian armed forces. He informed the house that General Walsh had been appointed chief of the general staff. In this connection, I would like to ask the minister if he is considering giving a special status to General Allard, whose services are highly appreciated within the Canadian armed forces. General Allard could definitely assume greater responsibilities than those he now has, and he would have a part to play if he were associated with General Walsh and jointly in charge of the Canadian armed forces general staff.

Mr. Speaker, I think my suggestion is constructive since it is very difficult for only one man to have complete responsibility over the general staff of Canadian forces. I think that if the minister and the government placed their reliance in General Allard, he could work in co-operation with General Walsh. In fact, those two highly qualified men could do a better job in the interest of the canadian armed forces.

On many occasions we heard the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), now Minister without Portfolio, discuss before us the Collège Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean. Several hon. members on this side of the house also spoke on that matter and if I refer to pages 249 and 250 of Hansard of January 22, 1960, I find a plea made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville asking that the Collège Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean be put on the same footing as the Kingston Royal Military College and asking that it be given a complete four-year course.

Mr. Speaker, the present government has now been in office over a year. That pledge to establish a four-year course was made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville specially during the last election, and I am wondering what the government is doing in that field.

I wonder what the government proposes to do, if it intends to ignore the oft-repeated request made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. Besides, as I said a little earlier, the hon. member spoke about that during the last election campaign. I wonder what the minister proposes to do. Why did he not tell the house that the course would be complete and on the same footing as the one in Kingston? Has the minister lost faith in the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, Minister without Portfolio? Does the minister want us, on this side of the house, to rise every day to alert public opinion and indirectly force the government to act?

In my opinion, it is important that the minister tell us what he proposes to do and if he intends to put that college on the same footing as the one in Kingston. Besides, the government has received numerous requests from members belonging to our group, from Saint-Jean-Baptiste societies and organizations in the province of Quebec, and even in other provinces, to the effect that the course given at the St. Johns Royal Military College should be complete like the one given in Kingston.

This would not exclude the possibility of exchanging students, that is French speaking students could go to Kingston and English speaking students could continue their course at the St. Johns Royal Military College. I believe such a policy would contribute greatly towards national unity.

Mr. Speaker, according to newspaper reports published recently, many Canadian servicemen have made requests to appear before the Laurendeau-Dunton commission in order to state their grievances. The minister announced that he would allow military personnel to submit briefs to the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism provided that it be done behind closed doors so as to avoid political controversy.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that according to the press Professor Arsene Lauziere, of the Royal Military College in Kingston, stated that there exists some discrimination against French Canadians at present with respect to promotions within the Canadian army. I feel that such a charge on the part of a professor at the college in Kingston is very serious, because it raises doubts in the minds of Canadians and contributes to disunity in our country.

It is all very well to allow servicemen to explain their grievances to the royal commission on biculturalism, but this does not settle the problem in my opinion, since this investigation may last a year or two and the government will not in the least be bound by the commission's recommendations.

In view of the serious charges made by an official of Kingston Military College and others, I ask the minister whether an investigation could be made within the armed forces, so as to clear up the situation and check whether this professor's statements are true. The minister cannot overlook the serious charges which have been raised. It seems to me that even if the government allows servicemen to explain their grievances to the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, it will not be bound to take action. The only way would be a royal commission which would call witnesses and take action to correct the situation, if there is really discrimination in the armed forces. That is the only way—and there is no other, Mr. Speaker—to remove any doubt in the minds of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to have the opinion of the minister on that matter.

On the other hand, I have always been concerned about something which has respect to the Canadian forces in NATO. I should like to know whether food and material for the Canadian forces in NATO come from Canada or are supplied by the United States and England. I was told that it was very difficult, in view of the small number of Canadian soldiers now in Europe, as compared to American and English forces, to organize a system to supply the Canadian armed forces with provisions coming from Canada. But I wonder if it would not be possible for the Canadian government to come to an agreement with the United States and England in order to get some compensation. For instance, we might have a special quota; Canada might sell to the United States and England a certain amount of farm products.

The minister knows that we have farm surpluses in Canada at the present time. Canadian farmers—especially those in eastern Canada—are faced with a serious crisis which jeopardizes the Canadian economy because if the citizens of a part of Canada do not have an adequate yearly income, by the same token, the other part of Canada suffers therefrom.

I wonder if it would not be possible to review our agreements completely, so that we Canadians will not be left holding the bag, and so that we will obtain some compensation on the part of the American and British governments.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are presently worried about the situation now developing in Cyprus and about the fate of their troops. We do not know whether Canadian troops will remain three months, three years or five years in Cyprus; the way things are going, these troops will likely have to stay there at least five years. We hope the government will ask authorization from parliament, after the three months' period has expired, to see whether it will agree to extend the stay of Canadian troops in Cyprus.

There appears to be some confusion at this time. What is most unfair, in my opinion, and what completely destroys the authority of the United Nations, is that the Canadian people are obliged to pay the entire cost of their troops' stay in Cyprus. Normally, this expense should be divided among all the member countries of the United Nations. There are some countries, for instance, France and Russia, which, in the past, refused to pay their contribution to the United Nations.

Those same countries have exactly the same right to vote as those who carry out their commitments, such as Canada and the United States.

It is absolutely necessary, at the very next session of the United Nations, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) call upon the secretary general of the United Nations to urge the United Nations, that the cost of the Canadian troops on Cyprus should be paid by them and not only by the Canadian people.

The Canadian people are prepared to do their share for peace, but they do not want, in other words, to be taken in as regards every conflict throughout the world. We have done more than our share to assist the United Nations financially. It is only fair and reasonable that the government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, should take a definite stand at the next session of the United Nations.

Normally, the next session of the United Nations should begin in September, but because of the American elections, it will be postponed until November. I hope that the Canadian government will take a definite position in that matter. We are prepared to do our share but we do not want to bleed ourselves white only to be laughed at. We have obligations at home. Unemployment here is startling. In Canada we have 600,000 unemployed. We are prepared to co-operate for peace, but with logic and common sense.

I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a few questions concerning our Canadian troops on Cyprus. I have it on good authority, from a trustworthy informant, as it was given to me by the very friends of the minister.

I ask the minister the following question.

The most alarming rumours are circulating in Cyprus and in well-informed diplomatic and military circles, with regard to the relations, between General Gyani and a Greek personality in the Cypriot cabinet on the one hand, and Mr. Tuomioja and his assistant, Mr. Millar, on the other hand, which might, according to some reports, in the long run compromise the success of the peace operation and more particularly the position of the force. Those rumours, of which I was informed by a reliable source, left me in the deepest state of alarm. Yet, I would hesitate to give full particulars—though my information is rather specific—before the minister tells us whether my authority is authentic and reliable.

I would like to know, for instance, whether the rumours with regard to the personal relations of General Gyani are well-founded. What is the background of Mr. Millar, and in what way does he assist Mr. Tuomioja? Are the U.N. authorities and the Canadian government fully aware of the situation and of the possible influence the Canadian contingent might wield to make peace prevail?

Second, could I be told whether the Turkish-Cypriot authorities were warned by the U.N. command, according to the terms of reference conferred by Mr. U Thant, of the large scale operations launched by Greek Cypriots against the fort of St. Hilarion? Because, according to other well-founded rumours, the Turkish authorities had not been advised as they should have been, and, knowing that those operations could not have escaped the supervision of the Canadian military personnel, they are said to have tried to shift the blame onto the Canadian soldiers.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these allegations are quite serious. It would be most important for the minister to examine this situation and obtain the required information, in order to clear this up before the house and to reassure the people of this country who, as I said, have accepted to send a Canadian contingent to Cyprus and, furthermore, who are paying the full cost thereof.

In closing my remarks, I am asking the minister again: How is the Canadian contingent in Cyprus supplied with food and equipment? It would be most important that the Canadian farmers should not be the losers, and I would be very happy if the minister could consider these suggestions in order to make a report to the house, in the interest of the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I am very sorry I was not able to be here last Friday when an introductory statement was made on the second reading of this bill. But I am certain, Mr. Speaker, you will realize that when a member of this house is 3,000 miles away from his home city and only takes some two days off in three months to revisit his family and constituents, he is not abusing his position as a member of the House of Commons. Unfortunately, it would be just in those days I took to return to the city of Vancouver that the questions as to the reappointment of the defence committee and second reading of this particular bill came up.

I have only had a few moments in which to glance over the introductory statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) and other statements last Friday, but even so I feel I would like to take a few minutes in which to make some comments.

First, I should like to express my bitter disappointment at the long delay in reappointing the special committee on defence. When this committee brought in its report at the close of the last session there were some 13 important matters which were taken to be of such major seriousness that the committee felt it should be reappointed at an early date in order to deal with them. Had the committee been reappointed early in the present session it could have been investigating these most important matters. We have lost two valuable months. In addition, had the committee been reappointed earlier, the white paper brought down by the Minister of National Defence could have been referred to it immediately for consideration, and by now it could have been the subject of a month's study. I do not know why the committee was not reappointed immediately, especially in view of the importance attached last session to its early establishment. I can only express the hope that the delay was not due to a deliberate act of government policy. I do not think it was the deliberate intention of the Minister of National Defence to delay it. But somebody did, and I only hope that whoever held it up did not do so with the intent of preventing the committee from having sufficient time in which to do the necessary job of studying Canada's defence policy now and in the future. I may say, though, that I am a little suspicious.

I am also disappointed, in view of the agreement that the appointment of the committee last Friday would go without debate but that there would be opportunity during the discussion of this bill for a broad and comprehensive debate on any aspect of defence, that the Minister of National Defence did not give more information to the house than he did last Friday. It appears he did what is normally the correct thing to do, that is, he stayed strictly within the principles of the bill before us. But because of the understanding that there would be an opportunity for a broad discussion on defence I had hoped he would have gone into greater detail about some of the most important questions which face us. First, I think he should have given the house an explanation for changes made in government policy since the end of last session. This was not done and I think it was unfair to members of the House of Commons, who should not have to rely upon what appears in newspapers when they see explanations of these matters. Surely, the house should be told in detail the reasons for any changes in government policy made between the end of last session and the time the minister made his speech the other day. I will return to this in a moment.

I wish now to make mention of the bill before us and the statement by the minister, which I read in the newspapers, about the proposals being made on behalf of those who will be leaving the service because of integration of staff or other changes in policy. As I read the statement of the minister it was based wholly on the making of a cash payment the extent of which was to depend upon the period of service—ten months, and so on—

Mr. Hellyer: Plus a waiving of the pension penalty.

Mr. Winch: Plus certain waivers. I wish to express my extreme regret that this was the only plan considered, or at least that it was the only one proposed. I am in receipt of communications from men in the forces who may be affected. I have heard from one air force base in particular. I am told that after consideration of this matter those who think they might be affected are not so much concerned with receiving a settlement of perhaps ten months' pay on discharge as they are with being readapted into civilian life. In other words, Mr. Speaker, according to the letters sent to me by those in the forces at the present time, they would have preferred an option to this effect, that on their discharge the Department of National Defence or any other department that might be brought into it would see that they receive training in order to readapt them into civilian life, as well as being compensated, of course, on being discharged from the forces for their maintenance during training.

This point in particular was brought to my attention, that the taxpayers of Canada have over the years paid thousands of dollars to train men in individual trades in the navy, the air force and the army. Therefore they have a basic understanding and a thorough knowledge of those trades for military purposes. They say, "Why could we not, then, have the department give us on discharge, or pay for us to undertake, the additional training so we may adapt to civilian occupations what Canada has paid for us to learn for military purposes?" If I had received only one letter on this subject, Mr. Speaker, I would not have raised it, but I have received a number of letters from two of the bases which think they will be affected. According to my information, the majority of men would prefer this kind of treatment on discharge to the $3,000, $4,000, $5,000 or $8,000 they will receive by way of gratuity.

As this information comes from the armed services perhaps there is still time for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to give consideration to this additional approach to caring for those in our armed forces whose services may no longer be required in June, at the end of the year, or next year. I think it is a suggestion that is most worthy of consideration by the minister, and is most worthy, Mr. Speaker, coming from these men in the armed forces who say this is what they would prefer; that is, being retrained instead of getting something which may last them for a year or, as was pointed out to me, they may invest it stupidly in a small business, go broke and have nothing. Therefore I hope the minister will consider this proposition put forward by the men themselves, of training for readaptation from military service into civilian occupation.

Now, sir, may I spend a little time on the general principles of defence. I will not deal with this subject in detail because, as I said, I have not had time to go through everything that was said last Friday. I believe the Minister of National Defence did a disservice to this House of Commons in his statement of Friday in not bringing us up to date on the Canadian position, in view of the dissertations and discussions of recent weeks relative to NATO, particularly in regard to Canada's position in NATO relating to all the conflict which, if the newspapers are correct, is now developing. I refer in particular to the position of France toward NATO in view of the de Gaulle policy. If the newspapers are correct, the position taken in the past two or three weeks due to the de Gaulle policy is this: He has pulled out his naval officers because he is not satisfied, and we read of the additional emphasis he is putting on his being the power—this is the only basis upon which you can put his policy—in Europe. In view of this, the house was entitled to know last Friday, not in the future, what the position is, in view of the discussions and dissertations in Europe of the last few weeks, particularly with regard to NATO. We are entitled to know what is the view of the Minister of National Defence and the government on this matter. In particular I think we should have had a detailed answer as to why we are still maintaining air force squadrons in France.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is—I have said it before and I repeat it—absolutely and positively ridiculous and asinine to have a government policy whereby France has its air force to some extent in Germany so they can have nuclear warheads, while we maintain squadrons in France that cannot be similarly equipped. I am against nuclear weapons, but on this facet of the question I cannot understand the stupidity of government thinking, and I cannot understand why the Canadian taxpayer should have to pay to maintain those squadrons in France when France is challenging the very basis of NATO and the co-operative influence and control of NATO. To my mind this just does not make sense. It has not yet been explained; perhaps it will be explained in the defence committee when it meets.

Also, Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks in particular statements have been made by statesmen of the world to the effect that if there is a war in the future—and thank heavens there seems to be a diminution of that possibility—manned bombers are going to play a smaller and smaller part and have a lesser degree of impact. Almost everything I read suggests that the only threat would be from I.C.B.M.'s. That being the case, why does the government continue its present policy? Why does the Minister of National Defence outline in his white paper the policies that are outlined about the expenditures of money by the Canadian taxpayer for his department on something that is utterly useless in the event of war? From all I have read they are still a long way from getting a defence against the I.C.B.M.; but even if the United States is successful in the breakthrough, it is a matter that involves billions of dollars, not only in the breakthrough but in setting up the defensive apparatus. This is something completely out of the field of operation of Canada in any way whatsoever now or in the future. Is there not a better way in which Canadian money could be spent on peace, rather than spending it on our Bomarcs and Voodoos? Is there not an explanation due, not only with regard to present expenditures but also past expenditures? Many of us are still waiting and are intrigued to find out why it was that the former government bought the planes we now have for our squadrons in France and Germany. I understand that we were the only country which bought them to be equipped with nuclear warheads. Now that the CF-104's are in France we have to put in the dual system.

Not long ago I asked a question as to what was the cost of making the change-over, but I could not get this information from the associate minister. Who is paying for this? Who is responsible for the stupidity of ordering planes to be equipped in this fashion, in view of the policy of the French government at that time? Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the Conservatives, who knew about it at that time. I think the house should have been told about this.

The important matter now is what the policy of this government is today. In my estimation the white paper does not disclose basic, fundamental, futuristic government defence policy. The government is still living in the world of the past, perhaps a little bit of the present, but not at all of the future. That is why it is interesting to us at this time to note that since the last election we have not heard any more of the previous Liberal policy, and more particularly the policy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Under his interpretation of that policy the government had a commitment to fulfil, because of past Conservative policy; but he promised to renegotiate the Canadian position with regard to nuclear warheads. The Minister of National Defence shakes his head. Does the Minister of National Defence deny that that was the statement and the challenge that was made in the last election by the Liberal party and the Prime Minister? It was broadcast across Canada that there would be such a renegotiation, and that it was his desire to negotiate Canada out of the nuclear business. I have not read or heard of any move by the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Defence to renegotiate themselves out of the nuclear business or to renegotiate our position in NATO. I cannot remember seeing or hearing anything to that effect.

I understand from the press that when the defence committee filed its report at the end of the last session there was only one major point on which the minister disagreed with the committee, and that concerned our brigade in Europe and the Honest John nuclear rocket. I have seen no explanation yet of the minister's disagreement on that point. No statement has been made by the minister as to exactly what is the position of our brigade in Europe. Is it a mobile brigade with conventional weapons and high mobility, or is it to be concentrated around poor Honest John? The Minister of National Defence must know that the tactics of conventional warfare are concentration and mobility. The tactics of nuclear warfare are those of dispersal. Yet our brigade in Europe is concentrated around Honest John, which the defence committee had an opportunity of seeing last fall.

Surely Canada is not going to take the initiative in starting a nuclear war. Therefore, in a conventional war we are concentrating on Honest John, which of course would not be used. If an enemy were to start a nuclear war, then instead of the tactic of dispersal we have the tactic of concentration. These are some of the questions which we think should have been answered by this time.

Quite apart from our brigade in Europe, our squadrons in France and the position Canada is now taking with regard to NATO, with what could lead to a breakup, there is also the question of our naval policy. I have not heard one word yet about our naval policy, except with regard to the building of three submarines. Just what the three submarines are going to do, I do not know. These are some of the matters about which I think we should have heard. I doubt whether we will hear about them for a long time, because this will most likely be the last opportunity for some time to have a discussion in the house on defence matters. We can only express the hope that when the committee meets, and meets three months or at the least two months late, there can be the fullest possible information made available, that witnesses and experts will be called and that the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence will have time to sit in on the deliberations of the committee—because I do not see how these matters can be discussed unless we know the government's views and policies, and are told how they reached their decisions.

At risk of repeating some of the matters which might have been raised on Friday, I should like to close my remarks by expressing my disappointment that our defence committee has lost two months of opportunity. I regret very much that we have not heard more of the fundamental and future policy of the government, especially with regard to what I consider, and what I think the people of Canada consider, the commitment made by the government to get out of the nuclear role. Because it has no place for Canada at all.

The place for Canada is that outlined by our party years ago, and I am mighty glad to see that the Prime Minister is now moving towards it, namely that of a United Nations peace force. There again, sir, I am disappointed. For the past three years two Scandinavian countries have been working on this matter and have reached the point where their legislation is ready. I was very happy to read in the press that the Prime Minister is going to invite countries to a conference to discuss this matter. But we, Mr. Speaker, should have been in the lead, and we would have been in the lead had this government and the previous one listened to the good advice it received from this party in years past.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I notice that the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) has a few comments to make. I do not know if the hon. member for Lake St. John would give him the floor but, if he does, I will recognize the minister.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the debate this afternoon—I know that most members want to see the defence committee set up as soon as possible—but, during the debate, I heard several comments to which I should like to reply, and I must say that the points brought up were rather disappointing. I was particularly surprised at the stand taken by my colleagues, especially the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), when they dealt with the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism in relation to the armed forces. In my opinion, there was quite a bit of misunderstanding about that question. It is a fact established by custom and tradition that members of the armed forces do not take part in debates on public or political matters. As a matter of fact, there was only in the house—

Mr. Martineau: May I put a question in order to clear up the matter? Is it not rather a question of prohibiting members of the armed forces from taking part in discussions on political matters?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker. Under the regulations, members of the armed forces are prohibited from taking part in public discussions on controversial matters. Besides, in the house itself, some members of the armed forces were rather strongly criticized for having expressed their personal opinion at a certain time of their career on controversial public matters.

When the royal commission on bilingualism decided to investigate in the Department of National Defence, we saw fit to maintain this tradition, while allowing members of the armed forces to appear before the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, but behind closed doors. Certain persons seem to think that members of the armed forces are being denied a right and that they are considered as second class citizens. I do not see it that way. In my opinion, they are granted a privilege in being able to give evidence in that manner. Many members of the armed forces are given the opportunity to appear freely before a royal commission, secure from any reprisals; they can thus state exactly their problems, as regards bilingualism and biculturalism, in the Department of National Defence. The Laurendeau-Dunton commission will thus be in a position to hear members of the armed forces on this important subject.

Now, I think that it would be absolutely illogical and premature to conduct another investigation as it has been suggested. I think that the Laurendeau-Dunton commission should necessarily be given the opportunity to hear all representations on bilingualism within the Department of National Defence.

My hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm referred, a while ago, to what he had read in a newspaper. I am not ready to confirm or accept the newspaper report according to which Mr. Lauziere freely suggested that discrimination existed within the armed forces, and even if he said it, I would not dare justify nor set up a new inquiry into that question of discrimination. If there is any, it certainly did not start this year, it must date back to some time already. The Laurendeau-Dunton commission is making a serious effort, and so is the government, to study the question of bilingualism not only in the country but also within the Department of National Defence. We in the department want to help as much as possible our members to testify freely; we want to give the Laurendeau-Dunton commission all the information and help it needs to reach the proper conclusions.

Mr. Pigeon: I would like to direct only one question to the minister; after that, I shall ask him no more questions.

Since the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism only plays a passive role—it hears only grievances—and the government does not have to implement its recommendations—that commission may sit for one or two years—and in view of the serious charges made, could the minister, in the public interest, ask the officials of the Department of National Defence to conduct an inquiry in order to verify the accuracy of those statements?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I have been explaining that for the last few minutes. It is true, as stated by the hon. member, that the government does not have to implement the recommendations of the royal commission. I can say this, however. The government fully intends to see that there is no discrimination within the armed forces or the Department of National Defence. Still, I do not feel it is necessary to carry out another investigation, which would be premature and might prejudice the work of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission.

I should like to point out to my hon. friend that what we are trying to do within the Department of National Defence, has not been done for a long time and is a conscientious effort. We want all Canadians, both English speaking and French speaking, to be treated equally. I admit that there may be certain difficulties within the department but it would not necessarily be intentional discrimination. It may be, for instance, that French Canadian servicemen, because they do not feel quite at home in an English environment or community, cannot be fully efficient. There may be problems of that nature, and we evidently have the intention of getting to the core of the matter so as to correct the situation.

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to direct a last question to the minister. According to statistics, a mere 2 per cent of high-ranking navy, air force or army officers, who earn $7,000 or more, are French Canadians.

Could the minister say whether that is due to the French Canadians themselves or whether that can be explained by other factors?

For instance, in view of General Allard's competence, could he not hold rank higher than or at least equal to General Walsh?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, these questions are exactly those which are to be studied by the Laurendeau-Dunton commission. That is why I maintain that it is useless to carry an investigation within an investigation. This is precisely the point.

Now my hon. friend speaks of General Allard and General Walsh. There is also General Bernatchez. My hon. friend has only mentioned two French Canadian generals but there are others. Even if I do not have the particulars before me, I am convinced that the percentage of French Canadians with senior ranks is much higher than the 2 per cent mentioned by my hon. friend. I think that it is exactly the type of question which will be looked into by the Laurendeau-Dunton commission. Therefore, I see no point in our carrying out another investigation.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) mentioned the establishment of a four year course at the St. Johns Royal Military College. I must say it is not the first time he or I speak of that. It is true that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville is particularly anxious to have a four year course set up at that institution. Indeed, many other members are also interested in that question.

Moreover, I told my hon. friend some time ago that a thorough study is being carried out in that connection following representations made by the Knights of Columbus, and various other people and organizations. A rather thorough study is being conducted within the Department of National Defence. I was given to understand that this study should be completed in about ten days.

There would no doubt be certain advantages in extending to four years the course given at the St. Johns Royal Military College. However, there are also some disadvantages. According to the experience I was able to acquire in the past year, I feel that the present system involves a decided advantage, since it allows our future officers to get acquainted with their English speaking colleagues so as to get to know each other much better, because after all, those young men will be called upon to work together in the future.

Under the present system, after two years at St. Johns Royal Military College, junior officers are sent to Kingston where they meet their colleagues from other parts of the country. At that time, a state of mind is created which I feel is most useful. Besides, I went personally to the Royal Military College at Kingston where I spoke to young cadet officers who had come there from the military college at St. Johns. I noticed then that they were absolutely delighted to acquire that new experience.

As a matter of fact, I think that it is quite normal, because these young cadet officers during their career might come in contact with one another, and it is important that this may start as soon as possible during their military training. It is a great advantage to be able to exchange cadet officers between military colleges.

Now, as I said to my hon. friend, a report will be submitted very shortly as to whether or not there should be a full four year course at the military college at St. Johns.

[Text]

Some question has been raised about the militia, and the reasons why we did not wait for the defence committee to sit before making decisions with regard to the militia. As hon. members know, the department had arranged a certain schedule and under that schedule it was decided that we should try to arrive at a reorganized militia in which the numbers would be somewhere around 30,000. It was after taking that decision that the Suttie commission was instituted, and I can report to the house that the results of the Suttie commission's efforts so far have been most gratifying. They have been able to travel throughout the length and breadth of the country to all areas where militia units have been established. They have made a very thorough and complete study of the problems involved in the militia and, according to schedule, I understand they are to bring down a report by the middle or end of June.

Mr. Smith: Would the minister permit a question on the point he is dealing with before five o'clock? Why did we not wait for Brigadier Suttie's report before a decision was made as to the size of the militia?

Mr. Cardin: Because the size of the militia has a lot to do, as has the rest of the departmental reorganization, with measures of economy, the question of budgeting and the requirements that will be needed, and it is on this basis that the number was established. We wanted to effect savings, and we also kept in mind what would be required in the field of the militia, and as a fairly rounded number that particular number was chosen.

The Suttie commission will be making its report by the end of June and I feel very confident that it will be most helpful.

The members of the special national defence committee can even now look into the question of the militia. They can come up with suggestions of their own, and I can assure hon. members that these will be seriously considered along with the recommendations made by the Suttie commission. However, I think hon. members realize that if we are going to make some headway there has to be some time limit, and if the committee intends to study this particular question we would hope that it would be able to bring forward a report or suggestions as soon as possible.

There is also the question of the committee not having been set up earlier. I can assure hon. members that if the committee was not set up it was not because national defence was reluctant in any way, shape or form with regard to setting up the defence committee again. On the contrary, both the minister and myself were rather pleased with the way the committee worked last year and we were happy to have it sit again this year. If it was not possible to set it up sooner I want to inform the house it was not because of any reluctance on the part of national defence.

I wonder whether I might call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

WATER RESOURCES

GRAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO ENGINEERING AND ECONOMIC FEASIBILITIES

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the undertaking of adequate and complete studies to determine the engineering and economic feasibilities of the grand canal proposal and to initiating such negotiations as may be necessary with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and with the government of the United States to ensure their fullest co-operation in this project and that in particular the government consider:

(1) The problems concerned with the regulation and conservation of the water levels, water flow and water quality on the great lakes, the St. Lawrence river, the Ottawa river, lake Nipissing and the French river which are a matter of increasingly serious and frequently expressed international, national and provincial concern, particularly with regard to the prevailing low water levels on the great lakes and on the Ottawa river, making as one result only the practical extension of new navigation facilities on the Ottawa difficult to accomplish.

(2) The hazards to some of these waters created by increasing industrialization and the resulting increasing demands for withdrawals and consumptive use, particularly on the great lakes-St. Lawrence system.

(3) The effect upon the standard of living of the many and increasing millions of people involved in one way or another with the above bodies of water and the corrective measures of a positive nature that can be undertaken.

(4) The proposal that certain substantial and renewable sources of fresh water be collected by cross channels on the James bay watershed and then be diverted southward by the Ottawa and great lakes by step-pumping developed in economic stages as needs increased making use of the large potential of unharnessed hydro power in that area.

(6) Ways and means to derive the largest possible benefits of a long term nature that may result from the implementation of the Grand canal proposal, such benefits including the revenue from the sale of water to those who would withdraw or consumptively use it, revenue from new hydro power development for the proposed Canadian power grid, new opportunities for northern forest development, new low cost navigation facilities from Montreal to James bay.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us has been moved for the purpose of requesting and, in fact, imploring the government to take the necessary action at this time to alleviate a serious and continually deteriorating situation. I have spoken about the low level of water in our great reservoirs of fresh water, the great lakes, and perhaps to a lesser extent in the St. Lawrence river system. The present motion asks for three things. I have been turning them over in my mind and I cannot see one valid reason why the government should hesitate a single second to accept the motion.

One of the things I am asking is that the government initiate a feasibility survey on a project known as the diversion project. The second request is that the government institute talks and consultations with the other governments concerned. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that once again the federal government has abdicated its responsibility in a matter which is crucial to the Canadian people. These consultations are so urgently needed that it has taken another jurisdiction, the government of Ontario, to initiate action that the federal government has failed to take.

I am asking for consultations first of all with the jurisdictions that are masters of the resource in question, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and for consultations with the United States government, whose country is vitally interested in this question.

Finally, the motion asks that the whole matter of water levels on the great lakes, and one project in particular, be referred to the international joint commission. These are simple enough requests. The need is apparent enough, and the negligence of the government has been too apparent. This is an appeal to the government to study the problem of water—water required for increased consumption by the increasing millions of people who are directly interested, living on the shores of the great lakes and within a radius of some hundreds of miles of those bodies of water.

It is also an appeal to the government to show its interest in the development of our natural resources, in the development of cheap, abundant, hydroelectric power which is necessary for expanding our industrial society, and which is also necessary to service the pumping stations that are envisaged by the program the motion outlines. Finally, it is an appeal to the government to look into the existing needs in Canada for more navigable routes to make cheap methods of transportation available to the government and the people of Canada, which would come from an intelligent interest on the part of the government and then action, if action is warranted, to put this plan into execution. I may add that it is also an appeal to the government to aid northern development by favouring the project which is the subject of my motion.

The era of inexhaustible water supplies is fast fading. When I was thinking today of the low water levels on the great lakes I was reminded of the story which I read not very long ago concerning a situation which had developed on the Missouri river in the United States. It is a story told by Mark Twain, the story of an old riverboat captain navigating down the Missouri when the water levels were very low and he was being continually trapped in the sand. At one stage of his journey he saw an old cabin on the side of the river, and someone was outside it dipping water out of the river for his own private uses. The captain excitedly yelled to him, "Put that drop of water back into the river. We need it to navigate." The situation has not reached that stage yet, but the story illustrates in a practical way what the need is and what the need will be as time goes on.

I cannot accept the theory of the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) who has said, "Well, why worry about low water levels today when perhaps next year the levels will be much higher"? Over the long term the story has been one of fast fading water resources, because of mismanagement in the past and of the present tremendously increasing consumption of water. We shall never again live in an era when we will have too much water, and it behoves us to share it on an acceptable basis with others who perhaps have a greater need of it.

President Eisenhower made a statement with respect to water supplies in 1955, and if it was true then it is much truer today. He said:

> If we are to continue to advance agriculturally and industrially, we must make the best use of every drop of water which falls on our soil or can be extracted from the oceans.

Even by 1955 those who had studied the situation saw we would have to convert water into a manageable resource. Today the situation has become more dramatic. Day after day the government is asked to provide some relief, but all it can say is, "Let us pray for rain." That kind of statement denotes a sorry lack of planning, and the absence of a serious approach to a serious situation.

But if the government has done nothing about this situation, fortunately others have. In the forefront of those who have given some study to the problem I would place Mr. Thomas Kierans of Sudbury, who has engineered and fathered a very comprehensive plan known as the Grand canal proposition which, to the minds of more and more informed people, is becoming a practical way of solving the chronic problem of low water levels on the great lakes and providing many other benefits as well.

I have in front of me a model, prepared by Mr. Kierans, showing an outline of the Grand canal proposal, and I may explain that the word "Grand" is an abbreviation of the words "great replenishment and northern development" canal. This is the project which I am asking the government to consider. Some people may say that it is an utopian project and cannot be accomplished in our day.

Even if that were so—and I think I can prove it is not so—the essence of government is, surely, planning and the administration should at least not refuse to consider the proposal. They say it is utopian. But what alternative method is there of providing a benefit which is indispensible to millions of people. In the United States, consideration has been given to the project. We have read of the request made by Senator Hart that the government of the United States should institute talks on this subject—a request which brought out in a dramatic way the great need that exists. Only last week the government of the province of Ontario took action in this regard and increasingly this project is coming to the fore. It has been described as a challenging and an imaginative plan. Moreover, I can add, it is a realistic one. Yet the government throws up its hands and assumes that what we are facing today is an act of God with which we cannot interfere. This has been made clear many times by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) as well as by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) who admitted that at the joint ministerial meeting held recently no constructive proposal was put forward to deal with this problem.

I should like in the few minutes which remain to me to outline some of the elements of the plan. First, the need for replenishment concerns not only the great lakes but the Ottawa river system and the St. Lawrence river system. This plan envisages making available new run-off water from a suitable portion of the James bay watershed. It is a multiple purpose plan, controllable and expandable, providing a substantial new inflow of water. Depending how far it is completed, it can provide an inflow into the great lakes of between 4,000 and 75,000 cubic feet of water per second. If we consider the benefits which derive from the plan, the cost is relatively modest and from an engineering point of view it has already been accepted by experts in the fields of engineering, hydro-electric development, navigation and so on. Rigid specifications provide long term benefits for large sections of northern Ontario and Quebec. The plan would also provide cheap hydro power by means of a reversible pumped water storage reservoir system. The specification also includes provision for a new, positive international and interstate joint policy in order to manage the level, flow and quality of the water entering the great lakes. It provides for new inflows from the James bay watershed. It provides for a self-liquidating project as a result of payments made by those who will most benefit from the diversion. It means stepped-up development in northern Ontario and Quebec. It means recovered water, not head water run-off—in other words, the water resource affected is one which today serves no useful purpose and which is unlikely to serve any useful purpose in the foreseeable future. The route follows the shortest and lowest elevation to the great lakes, with low cost cut-throughs throughout.

With regard to the administrative authority to be set up—and this is important, because we know that the resource itself comes under provincial jurisdiction—the establishment of an international authority between Canada and the United States is envisaged, as well as a federal-provincial authority including Quebec and Ontario. It has already been stated that the feasibility of the project is established from an engineering point of view. From an economic viewpoint, the cost, as I have mentioned, is not likely to be excessive in relation to the benefits brought about as a result of the increased availability of water. Part of the cost will be recovered out of revenues resulting from increased hydro-electric power. A further element of the cost will be recovered from royalty payments by those using the water. Finally, revenue will accrue from the new navigational possibilities which are envisaged. Further—and this is one of the most attractive features of the whole plan—it provides an effective and plausible means of making the Ottawa river a navigable stream open to deep sea shipping throughout its entire length. I say this because the increased flow of water will raise the level of the Ottawa river to a point at which the amount of dredging and canal work necessary to make the river navigational would be greatly decreased.

These are some of the reasons why I urge the government to give this project the consideration I believe it deserves. I should like, if I may, to table with the consent of the house the specifications which relate to it. These specifications contain an outline of the proposal and a map showing where the diversion will actually take place, traversing as it does the Abitibi region, the Harricanaw, the Timiskaming region, the whole of the Ottawa river system, lake Nipissing, the Mattawa river, French river and, finally, Georgian bay. It also includes definite engineering specifications with regard to some of the problems of a physical nature which are created by the project. Second, the cost of the project is dealt with and, third, the benefits to be obtained are outlined.

I should like to table these documents, the outline and specifications of the Grand canal proposal, as an exhibit. I think the government can still redeem itself. It is not too late. It is never too late. It can redeem itself by accepting this motion and getting busy—by getting its officials to study this plan and meet with those who have already given it the best of their thought and energy, thereby evolving a long term project which would provide immense benefit to all Canadians, particularly those who live in eastern Canada, including northern Ontario and Quebec, and to residents of the Ottawa valley who have for generations been asking that something be done with this majestic river which flows through the very heart of the capital and which now remains unused.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the hon. member if the papers to which he refers are official documents?

Mr. Martineau: I would not say they are official. They were prepared by Mr. Thomas Kierans. They are official inasmuch as they relate to this grand canal proposal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then the hon. member may table them with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): I am intrigued by the motion put forward by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau). One of the questions which appeared shortly after the Christmas recess in my name was question No. 20, which asked:

> What studies have been conducted of the proposals authored by Thomas W. Kierans and O.K.H. Kierans for a great replenishment and northern development canal?

As appears on page 512 of Hansard of March 4, 1964, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) gave this answer:

> This proposal, often referred to as the grand canal, was described by Mr. T. W. Kierans before the standing committee on mines, forests and waters on 11 April, 1960. While no detailed studies were undertaken, preliminary examination indicated that it was physically possible but not now economically feasible.
> As the water resources of each province are administered by and belong to that province, subject to certain federal responsibilities, e.g. regarding international waters, fisheries and navigation, any feasibility study of a diversion scheme such as this should be undertaken in co-operation with the provinces concerned.

This answer is general in its nature. I have been interested in this subject because of the constituency which I represent, and I was able to obtain certain further information.

Hon. members will remember I have had questions on the order paper such as the one which was answered on April 15, 1964, question No. 623, relating to water levels in lake Ontario and specifically asking the government what have been the causes of the present low water level of lake Ontario. This is a matter of some concern to anybody living in the Thousand islands area. Indeed, we speak of the city where I reside as the Thousand islands city, and I have heard it suggested by some of the people—

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Matheson: The city of Brockville. The concern of some of the residents, in the sense of their interest in the water, is that if water levels continue to decline as has been experienced this past year, we might be the city of three thousand islands. This is a real possibility, because we have many shoals and rocks throughout this St. Lawrence system which, of course, could seriously impede navigation.

I have a personal interest in water levels. I live in a house that is a good deal older than 100 years, and the eight of us in our house are serviced by a well. It might interest hon. members to know that the principal well driller, Ralph Miller of Hallecks, told me that 100-foot wells are no longer adequate now and that there is a fear that many existing wells may have to be constructed 60 feet deeper because of a sharply lowering water table. This year we have had a poor year because we did not have snow and we have not had sufficient rain. I have observed in my own farm pond, which is stocked with bullheads, that the water level at the present time is about two feet lower than it was a year ago. A series of articles have been published in the principal newspaper in our area regarding this question. The Recorder and Times of March 25, 1964 describes the situation in these words:

> Water levels of the St. Lawrence river are at their lowest ebb in 30 years and the situation is causing concern to municipal officials from Iroquois to Gananoque, as well as to shoreline residents whose boathouses and docks are being affected.

When we look at the over-all picture, the situation is becoming rather serious. We have docks that are now many feet above normal position. We have seen a drop in water level of four feet to six feet, and in some areas it has been even more than this. Prescott has been complaining for three weeks of dirty water in the town water supplies; this was on March 25. The situation has been drawn to my attention by Thomas C. Cossitt in letters, and a series of letters have been written to our press; and then, commencing in the month of April we see there has been a steady improvement. The Recorder and Times of April 6 tells us:

> Fears had been expressed that navigation might be hindered by the low water now prevailing in the St. Lawrence system. Water levels up and down the stream are two to four feet below normal, but seaway experts said the usual April rains now due should do much to alleviate the situation.

We have not yet had enough rain, but we find the low water problem is substantially easing. In regard to this motion, Mr. Speaker, I point out that there has been a good deal of debate recently on the subject of water. This is helpful and it is an emphasis that certainly, as a representative of Leeds, I am very happy to see. On the south my riding is bounded by the St. Lawrence river in the area between Kingston and Prescott, and on the north it is bounded by the Rideau system. I have had the opportunity on two occasions to navigate in my boat the Rideau canal from Kingston to Ottawa, Ottawa to Montreal and on to Beauharnois and back again, so I am familiar with the points raised by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue when he referred to particular navigation problems as they relate to the Ottawa river.

I think there is a good deal of logic and sense in what was said by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Turner) when he spoke on May 4, as reported at page 2912 of Hansard. He said:

> —given the engineering feasibility, at any point in time, any kind of engineering solution can become economically practicable—

I know, sir, that when I first travelled the Rideau I was amazed at what Colonel By had done 150 years or so ago with respect to these waters. He was able to provide navigation from the Ottawa river to the St. Lawrence river. More particularly, when you ascend or descend the magnificent Carillon locks on the Ottawa you appreciate what really can be done by modern engineering. In the standing committee on external affairs we have had the chance to listen to experts talking about the relative merits of power sites such as Mica, Downie, Luxor, Bull river, Dorr, and we see whether it is in Montana, Washington or British Columbia we can do almost anything we set our minds to do, in an engineering way. Almost anything can be done; the real test is, does it make sense at a particular time? Of course, in determining this we have to recognize this other fact, that no great scheme, engineering or economic, can possibly come to fruition unless there has been a great deal of research and thoughtful consideration given to it long years in advance.

I take considerable satisfaction in the fact that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on May 5 said that he intends to refer the whole matter of water levels to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. I ask hon. members of the house to consider whether the hon. member's motion is not too specific in its content. After all, what he is asking us to do is follow six specific recommendations. I think we should have been happier had these recommendations been much more general in character. In particular, he would have the water flowing into the Ottawa river in preference to Georgian bay.

When we look at this gigantic scheme we realize how many different considerations are involved. I must say I have been very much impressed by the presentations of Mr. Tom Kierans and the conversations I have had with him. I think he has made a real impression on any hon. member who has taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the James bay diversion scheme.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Speaker, I should like hon. members to have some idea of the chronology of these Kierans presentations to the government. I ask the hon. member to note that on January 25, 1960, Mr. Tom Kierans of Sudbury outlined to the then minister of northern affairs and national resources a proposal for the transfer of James bay water to the great lakes via the Harricanaw, Ottawa and French rivers.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Matheson: Certainly.

Mr. Martineau: If this project has already been referred to and studied by the committee on mines, forests and waters, why does the hon. member now propose that it be studied again?

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that the proposal put forward to the preceding government in the correspondence was given cursory consideration by the government of the day, of which the hon. member had the honour to be a minister and apparently the scheme presented by Mr. Kierans was considered to be physically possible but economically unpractical. This is the answer given by the hon. member's own government to the specific proposal presented. They said that James bay water must be lifted more than 1,100 feet vertically to enter the Ottawa river headwaters. I am not going to go into detail, Mr. Speaker, because there are other hon. members who would like to participate in this debate, but second, they pointed out that:

> Imported water must be virtually free of salines.

Imported water is water which would be used for consumptive purposes elsewhere.

> This would require salinity reduction equipment or construction of barrier dams in James bay to create freshwater areas. Any barrier dam near the Moose river outlet must incorporate navigation locks for entry to the port of Moosonee.

Then they came to the third conclusion, that > —the Harricanaw river lies almost entirely within Quebec, which would have to give its consent to such proposed use.

We have had recent experience with another province to appreciate how jealous it can be of its primary jurisdiction over national resources. Then they determined, fourth, that:

> Additional storage may be required to avoid waste of diverted water under high natural great lakes inflow conditions.

They came to the conclusion that:

> Sale of water to the United States is unlikely to be continuous—as I believe was envisaged in the proposal by Mr. Kierans——particularly during cycles of high natural inflow.

Then, sixth, they came to the conclusion that:

Navigation benefits are limited by the short open season on James bay and in Hudson strait.

Then they decided that:

A diversion of 25,000 cubic feet per second would increase present lake Ontario inflow only by perhaps 12 per cent—

—and that this 12 per cent figure would not appear to be adequate to improve materially pollution conditions which have been existing at Toronto for some time. Then finally the Conservative government of the day came to the conclusion that——any water sold to the United States would not be available for use on lakes Erie and Ontario and on the Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers.

These were the conclusions respecting the first proposal. Subsequently, Mr. Speaker, the same Mr. Kierans, under date of March 21, 1960, submitted an amended plan which proposed the collection of the water from the several rivers and its transportation to the Harricanaw river by a series of dams and canals, rather than the use of James bay water for diversion. That proposal was studied, and I will not take up the time of the house with it because any hon. member can acquaint himself with the conclusions arrived at by the former government. However, I must say that notwithstanding these adverse conclusions I have much sympathy for the general ideas set out in this project and I think it is absolutely necessary that we now start to think carefully in this general direction.

I am sorry that the hon. member has brought before this house a motion so specific and detailed that it is almost impossible for many of us to agree with it. If not—

Mr. Fisher: Oh, come on.

Mr. Matheson: I hear an interjection from the head of the lakes, but if we take the six specific recommendations contained in this motion, we find general agreement on some and disagreement on others. I find it difficult to understand for example why the fourth proposal, that certain substantial and renewable sources of fresh water be collected by cross channels on the James bay watershed and then be diverted southward by the Ottawa and great lakes by step-pumping developed in economic stages as needs increased, making use of the large potential of unharnessed hydro power in that area, is made with specific preference to the Georgion bay route.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Matheson: Yes of course.

Mr. Martineau: If I were willing to withdraw the objectionable parts of the motion, would the hon. member, speaking for the government, be prepared to accept those he finds acceptable?

Mr. Matheson: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I cannot presume to speak for the government; I am simply giving a few views of my own.

Mr. Martineau: Give us your own opinion then.

Mr. Matheson: I do not want to prevent other people from contributing to the debate, but even after the extensive debate which we have had on the subject of water in recent days I am pleased that the hon. member has had the foresight to bring this resource problem to the attention of the house. I am glad we are focusing attention on what these two Kierans brothers have been thinking and worrying about these many years.

I care a great deal about this matter, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me that we have a tremendous resource in our system of waters. As we listen in the standing committee on external affairs, to the tremendous projects which are envisaged for the west coast, I think we have to think again about the grand canal. This is inevitably going to come to pass in time. I do not fully comprehend the exact recommendations contained in the motion of the hon. member nor do I know precisely what is desirable, but the government must certainly apply its mind to the problem. In this regard I rejoice in the fact that the minister of northern affairs has had the courage and the wisdom to send this to the committee for study. I hope this is only the beginning, because from what I can discover the examination by the former government has been rather casual.

I think it would be selfish towards other members, Mr. Speaker, to continue my remarks for long. This amazing recommendation takes a watershed away from its original course to James bay and redirects it to the great lakes and it really matters little whether it goes into Georgian bay via lake Nipissing and the French river or whether, as is now suggested, it goes into the Ottawa river, because these are mere details. The scheme—and it is a gigantic one—is to change the course of a mighty watershed.

In this regard I was impressed by an editorial by Richard J. Needham which comments upon a statement made by the minister of northern affairs in the house a few days ago, to the effect that we had better pray for rain. That is not such a silly suggestion as one may think. I was reminded by the brilliant dialogue between God and Job, which is to be found in the thirty eighth chapter. God speaks down from the heavens and says to Job:

> Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?...Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth... > and here shall thy proud waves to stayed?

And further on, not viewing a reply, God said to Job:

> Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail,
> Which I have reserved against the time of trouble—

Even in my county of Leeds this spring we have discovered that we need snow as well as a good deal of frost and rain, and the people in my part of the country are praying for water because we feel no one else can raise the level of the waters.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to pray for the government.

Mr. Matheson: The minister of northern affairs apparently believes in the efficacy of prayer. Then God said to Job:

> Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters...or a way for the lightning of thunder;...
> —Who can number the clouds in wisdom? or who can stay the bottles of heaven—

The likelihood is that we are going to be doing generally what has been outlined by the hon. member, if not right away then certainly before very long. We have to do it. It is perfectly clear that we cannot simply hold for ourselves the rich resources of water. After all, it cannot be regarded on a local or even a national basis; broader considerations arise. In a sense it is a case of making ourselves partners of the Creator himself, and the changing of a watershed is an exciting challenge which I think lies ahead.

We all have much sympathy for the proposition that the government of Canada has now to think in terms of broad, bold schemes. There are great difficulties in the Kierans plan. What are we going to do about salt water? If that problem is solved, then what are we going to do about navigation? Certainly the cost at the moment is prohibitive judging from every government study undertaken heretofore, but as the parliamentary secretary indicated what is prohibitive now may not be prohibitive two or perhaps 20 years from now. I hope that the government will be stimulated and encouraged in this matter by the committee to which this question will be referred, thus providing the necessary impetus to sound and enlightened policy with respect to our rich resource of water.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we support this motion. It is very easy to cavil and make the kind of petty qualifications made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), but I do not think that in this sense the detail is significant in relation to the wonderful scope of the plan. We seem to need physically big projects in Canada to capture the imagination. I can think of the South Saskatchewan dam, the Passamaquoddy project and the Chignecto project, the latter two still being in the visionary stage. The St. Lawrence seaway certainly aroused support, agitation and irritation for almost a century before it was brought to completion. The disappointment with the results of the St. Lawrence seaway, I suggest, should not make us hesitate about finding out more about this great scheme of Mr. Kierans'. I have had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Kierans and talking to him in Ottawa, as I recall some time when the former government was in power. I remember meeting him in a committee room. It is not fair to say that this is a bold, new idea. It is a bold idea, but he has been pushing it very strongly and getting increasing support.

Some of the questions I should like to ask about this project really do not relate so much to the details of the motion. The last part of the motion indicates great navigational possibilities, particularly in the Ottawa river. This has never appealed to me as much as the idea of the waterpower to come. In my own riding there is a diversion, for example, from the Hudson bay watershed into the great lakes watershed. I refer to the Ogoki diversion, which attracted me. I have tried to find out if there were any drawbacks to the Ogoki diversion. The difficulty is that there are few people living up in that area. The Indians to whom I have talked really have had no complaints. The fringe of civilization and exploitation has not really moved much over that watershed, in so far as the lake Superior littoral is concerned. It is not quite the same when you get into Cochrane, Timmins and Timiskaming areas. Even there, it seems to me we need to think a bit about what will be the final consequences of the program when it is finally achieved in terms of the effect on the watershed itself. Surely, there will be consequences for the Hudson bay littoral.

When you get a distance—the distance changes—from 150 to 300 miles north of the actual height of land from the great lakes into the Hudson bay system, you begin to run out of forested areas that are worth while. Any member who has flown over the James bay-Hudson bay regions knows that as you get towards the coast you fly over a low, swamp, muskeg-kind of spruceland. One thing I should like to know in connection with this scheme, if it has an effect upon the actual amount of water available, is whether there is any possibility—this may be a century ahead—of resurrecting or converting some of the muskeg land by means of drainage into something that will be more productive.

If I go over to the lake side of the watershed, I find we are talking about water tables. How much are the water tables down because of bad conservation practices, bad forestry practices? We have denuded so much of the land and have done so little about putting the land back into forest cover. This is something we do not know, but it seems to me it is tied into the motion presented by the hon. member and it is quite relevant. One of the things of which we do not have a picture at the moment, although it comes out very strongly and particularly from the Chicago area, is the need for water to handle pollution possibilities. It is not only the human needs, the direct human needs and industrial needs, but it is almost the need to have an extra flushing in these heavily concentrated areas where population and industry is so great.

In the last decade the inhabitants of the central United States have come more and more to make northern Ontario and, increasingly northern Quebec, into their summer recreational dormitory. This has increased the interest and led to the building of more roads. It is something else that needs to be looked at. What will be the effect of a great project like this upon the recreational use of this land that lies north of the height of land? In the main, I think we can only count basically, and I do not mean this as any insult to the claybelt, in terms of natural resources from this great area affected by this scheme, on minerals and on forests. In so far as the minerals are concerned, that is in the lap of the prospectors and science. I suggest that nothing this project does is likely to have any ill effect upon mineral development. I would think that potentially it would have a good effect upon the forest development and forest improvement in that part of the country.

One of the matters that seems to me needs to be taken into account is the approach to this basis of a cost-benefit analysis. I suppose the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) would probably make a good contribution to any such discussion, since he is co-author of one of the synoptic works in that field. It is quite apparent that this scheme will not be undertaken unless there are social benefits of such a magnitude that they cannot fail to be overriding of what must be a staggering capital expenditure in order to develop something that is at least once, and in many cases twice, removed from really creating jobs or creating industry. I think one of the things we need is such a cost-benefit analysis.

The question of how this idea should be treated from now on is getting complicated by the water shortage that is so much in people's minds now. If we have a bad summer like we had back in 1956 and 1936, where we had forest fires raging over much of this whole watershed and to the south, the sense of urgency will be increased and complicated even more. One of the difficulties comes when you get this sense of urgency. Politicians begin to blame each other and they put a bit of forced draft under their arguments. We are already having a bit of this welling up from those people in the Ontario legislature, as to water level talks, navigation and the whole question of dredging. It seems to me that in such a situation there might be an unnaturalness to any committee hearing, at least in this house at the present time, given the information we have. This is one of the reasons I would appreciate and my colleagues would appreciate, seeing the working of this even more. We would appreciate some kind of crash program by the government to look at this plan as quickly and as urgently as possible, then get on to the question of whether or not it is feasible.

It will not do any good at all to make the Kierans plan a club to beat the Liberal government on the head, or the Robarts government at Queen's park. There may be a tendency to do this. I am sceptical about it. I wonder whether it is worth while developing an interprovincial plan like this when, by the time we get around to it they will probably have confederation in a state where it will be a case of having negotiations between the sovereign state of Ontario and the sovereign state of Quebec. I tend to be pessimistic about the tendencies and capabilities of this particular government in that particular field. But there is no reason at all why they should not come up with something fairly quickly in the form of a good analysis that we can examine.

The answer that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) got does not surprise or shock me. I refer to that dreary thing he read out. He asked the question whether the matter had been examined and he got all the usual civil service jargon. As every member of the house who has been around at all knows, every department is loaded with capable civil servants, that is, they are capable at knocking down something imaginative. They always talk about the staggering costs, the fantastic costs.

The hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) is not asking for anything that involves staggering costs. He is asking for a thorough consideration and survey. I think we should have it immediately, and the sooner we have it under the initiative of the government the sooner we will get away from what is rapidly developing into a situation where politicians are blaming each other for the low water levels, and we even have the rather fantastic invocation of the deity by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) and the hon. member for Leeds.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes of the time of the house to second the motion moved by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau). I agree with the hon. member to ask the government to make the studies needed to carry out that project which these days becomes more and more important and takes up a lot of space in the newspapers, in view of the fact that the water level in the great lakes is becoming more and more alarming and that there is, so it seems, a way to solve that problem.

In view of the fact that I had the opportunity to discuss that matter for a few minutes last Thursday night, I will say no more about it today in order to enable the government to accept the hon. member's motion.

Mr. Speaker, I learned that, in 1960, Mr. Thomas Kierans, an engineer, made a special survey of a canal in connection with the Harricanaw river to feed fresh water into the great lakes. In fact, he appeared before the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, to which he submitted a very fine piece of work. I wish to commend him for undertaking such a survey, to which he has given much time, in spite of his limited financial means. Such an undertaking involves expenses that only governments can afford.

That is why I support this motion calling on the government to consider this project, in order to remedy the present situation.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote the conclusion drawn in 1960 by the standing committee on mines, forests and waters. Here it is:

> The committee heard with interest from witnesses of the proposed Harricanaw river development project, but it feels that there has been insufficient basic engineering evidence presented to come to any conclusion on this matter.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Speaker, the evidence may have been insufficient. The evidence presented by Mr. Kierans may have been incomplete, but I think it rather strange that the government should not have undertaken at that time, that is in 1960, the necessary work that would have enabled them to come to conclusive evidence in that respect.

Everybody knows that the problem of water, from all points of view, in the great lakes and along the St. Lawrence river is becoming increasingly alarming. Personally, I have no doubt whatsoever as to the physical possibility to build the required works so as to solve this problem very quickly.

Therefore, like the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue, I ask the government to undertake the studies required for the implementation of that project as soon as possible.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, the first time I ever came across the Harricanaw river was on a blue goose hunting expedition to Hannah bay at the south end of James bay which is the mouth of the Harricanaw, and while it is known the world over that the mouths of the Harricanaw and Moose rivers at the south end of James bay are the centre of wild goose hunting for the entire world, I never expected to find the Harricanaw river a wild goose in this House of Commons. I have travelled the length of the Harricanaw river and the Turgeon river which is its main tributary to the west. I have crossed the Abitibi lakes more than once. I have been from the headwaters of the Ottawa down to Mattawa, across to lake Nipissing and down the French river frequently.

But to come into the house and advance the suggestion that we should divert the Harricanaw river in order to raise the level of the great lakes is similar to a man with a leaking garden hose who goes down to city hall and screams that the water mains underneath the streets should be ripped up and replaced by larger pipes in order to put more water into the hose so he will be able to water his lawn, despite the fact that he has a leak in the hose. There is plenty of water in the great lakes now if man did not squander it; and if man would plug the leak that exists at Sarnia at the present time there would be no need to go into a multimillion dollar wild goose chase such as the diversion of the Harricanaw and Turgeon rivers, using the Abitibi lakes as a storage basin, and diverting some of the flow out of the Ottawa river into the Mattawa and lake Nipissing.

The great lakes are now at an all time low level for many reasons, the chief of which is lack of precipitation in the last two years.

We all know that the Lord has blessed this continent with many things and certainly one of them is fresh water in abundance; but it is ridiculous that we are allowing fresh water to run wild without checking it for the needs of mankind.

We noticed the other day that the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), in commenting on the water levels of the great lakes, remarked that the water level in lake Superior is regulated by a control dam. I would point out that the control dam at lake Superior was built after negotiations between a Liberal government of Canada and the United States government, and it has kept lake Superior waters in check and under control for more than 50 years. It was a Liberal government that initiated with the United States and made possible the erection of dams at Cornwall and Iroquois, Ontario, to control the waters of lake Ontario, and it will be a Liberal government that will be able to negotiate satisfactory arrangements with the United States to control the levels of lakes Huron and Michigan at Sarnia.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no need of the government wasting manpower and millions of dollars in research studies and investigation of the Harricanaw diversion plan when it can spend much less money and perfect an earth filled dam at Sarnia to control the water levels of the great lakes year after year. A government which has found it possible to erect these dams—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Churchill, allowances and isolation pay of civil servants; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, application of the availability test for unemployment insurance benefits; the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, delay in changes in maintenance of way operations in the maritimes by Canadian National Railways.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

National Defence Act

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPLACEMENT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hellyer for the second reading of Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate and during the question period today reference was made to the special benefits that the government is contemplating paying to servicemen who are to be retired before reaching the normal retirement age, and I thought perhaps it might be useful to say a few words on that subject this evening.

As hon. members will recall, in the process of integrating the armed forces it is estimated that we would have to cut back the number of servicemen by about 10,000, and we estimate that it would be possible to effect this reduction in a period of two years.

In order to do this most effectively and to achieve the objective that we have set ourselves in national defence, it is contemplated that this retirement should be made compulsory and through selection. I would like to make it quite clear to the house that this is in no way any reflection whatever on the personnel who are to be retired. On the contrary, all of the people who will eventually be retired compulsorily are people who have served the services with devotion and loyalty for many years, and it would be wrong for the house or the country to read into these releases any other meaning than that which is true, and that is that it is in order to reorganize our national defence.

The reason for the release of such a large number is because there will no longer be employment under the new career structure of a reorganized national defence for the people who are being released. It is because of the good services that have been rendered by these people, and because the government fully appreciates the difficulties these servicemen will encounter in trying to readjust to civilian occupation, and in order to help them to rehabilitate themselves in civilian life, that the government has decided to pay them a special cash benefit, which would be paid in one lump sum.

This special cash benefit is of course in addition to any normal leave that may have been accumulated and, as hon. members know, this leave is paid in the form of cash. It is also in addition to the pension to which a serviceman would normally be entitled, and in addition to any transportation benefits which he would normally receive.

It is important to realize that the special benefit envisaged here is not applicable to people who are released for misconduct, or inefficiency, nor would it be made available to people who want voluntarily to leave the service. It was suggested during the course of the debate that what we should do is pay this special benefit to those who would willingly and voluntarily leave the service, but I do not think I have to expand very much on the reasons why this is not being done. There are obvious reasons, but the main one is that what we are trying to do is to select the people we feel will be necessary within the services, and also select those who unfortunately will no longer have employment under the reorganized department.

As hon. members know, this special cash benefit will increase with the length of service, up to a maximum of the equivalent of 10 months pay for those with 15½ and more years of service, and it will be reduced progressively as normal retirement age is approached. I believe hon. members will realize the reason for this. Someone who is about a year from the normal retirement age would already have some idea of what he is going to do once he is retired. His plans are firmer than those of the man who is about five years from retirement age, and it is for this reason that the special benefit is progressively reduced as normal retirement age is approached.

Further, as hon. members know, this cash benefit is subject to income tax. During the question period this afternoon a question was asked as to whether representations were made by the servicemen with reference to the imposition of income tax on this benefit. I have not had any official representations by the servicemen in this respect, but I, like other hon. members, have seen the reports in the press and it is not impossible that the press is reflecting the thinking of the servicemen. However, it might be useful to remind the house that this cash benefit is indeed a revenue and, according to our principles of taxation, it is taxable. Another point is that the serviceman, if he had remained in the service until his retirement age, would have been obliged to pay the full tax on the amount of money he would have received. Under these arrangements the tax is calculated on the basis of 85 per cent of the tax rate established by reference to normal service income. So a man compulsorily retired will pay a lower tax rate for the benefit than he would have paid had he stayed in the services.

I appreciate this is a delicate problem. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in the answer he gave this afternoon said the matter would be looked into and that the suggestion having to do with staging payments over a period of time would also be examined. I presume a statement will be made on this subject in due course. Included in the plan, there is also as hon. members know, the waiving of the present provision in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act which provides for a 5 per cent reduction in annuities for those servicemen who have less than 20 years of service but more than 10, with a maximum of 30 per cent. This penalty was imposed on servicemen in order to encourage them to stay in the services until their normal retirement age was attained and it was felt by the department that it would be most unfair to continue the penalty in circumstances where a man was compulsorily retired. The other provision in the benefit plan is that an unreduced gratuity would be paid to officers holding short service commissions. This is, in essence, what is contemplated.

We have seen in the papers some references to the special benefit plan being as a kind of "golden bowler". There are not many references of that kind. Others started calling it a silver stetson, and recently these particular benefits have been described as a straw hat. I rather like to think of this benefit plan as being just an ordinary fedora. While it is more substantial than a straw hat it is less spectacular than a golden bowler. It is adequate and it does only what it is meant to do, that is, to try to help servicemen who will be compulsorily retired rehabilitate themselves in civilian life.

Mr. Smith: Before the minister leaves that point, may I ask him whether any consideration has been given to allowing service personnel who are likely to be affected by these reductions to take advantage of the Veterans Land Act? In other words, has consideration been given to allowing them to buying their homes earlier in anticipation of retirement. There is a limit at the present time.

Mr. Cardin: In the Department of National Defence we did not look into this particular aspect of the matter. However, I will be happy to look into the suggestion, which appears to be a very good one.

In his speech this afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) referred to letters he had received from members of the services and suggested that perhaps the government itself might train service people before sending them out into civilian life. It is an interesting suggestion. He continued to say, if I understood him correctly, that it would appear as though servicemen would prefer training of this type to the cash benefits which are contemplated.

Mr. Winch: Those who wrote to me—and they come from two service stations—said that after discussion among themselves they would prefer such training. But I speak only of those who wrote to me.

Mr. Cardin: I think the suggestion is an interesting one, but I am not sure what would have happened if instead of paying a cash benefit the government had decided to organize instead a training plan for the servicemen who are to be retired. I do not think it would be easy for the government to enter into this field. We feel that if the government provides cash benefits, the decision as to the best utilization of the money is left to the individuals concerned. If a man wished to receive training he might use part of the money to obtain tuition at a university or other place where training could be obtained or, if he preferred, he might invest the money in a business of some kind. I know the hon. member for Vancouver East does not seem to think much of the judgment of servicemen in the field of business. However, I think these people are old enough, now, to decide just what they wish to do with their money and we feel we have chosen the most equitable way of dealing with the situation.

I do not think I can resume my seat without making reference to the observations of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). In his speech the other day the hon. member referred to me, I think, as "part of the gold dust twins". I was going to say "half" but that would not be strictly accurate. He said that as part of the gold dust twins I would inevitably pay my compliments to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). I am happy to see that the hon. gentleman has noticed how well the minister and I get along, and in order that the prediction of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre might prove to have been well founded, I am happy to tell him that I honestly and truly feel that my colleague the Minister of National Defence is doing a wonderful job both for the government and for the country, and I am happy to be able to help him.

Mr. MacRae: May I ask the minister a question at this point? He mentioned there would be a 10 per cent reduction in the establishment of the forces over the next two years. How many of these will be compulsory retirements and how many will be as a result of normal attrition?

Mr. Cardin: It is difficult, if not impossible, to say just now how many men would be compulsorily retired, but I imagine it will be a relatively small number. The majority of the reduction would be done by normal attrition.

Mr. MacRae: Will the retirement provisions apply to all ranks, in the case of the army, say, right from private to lieutenant colonel or colonel, and correspondingly in the case of the other services? Will that be the situation?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, the retirement provisions would be right across the board.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have only one question to direct to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin), following a question I put to him this afternoon. In which way does the Canadian government intend to supply with provisions and material the Canadian forces now in Cyprus? I appreciate that it is difficult to supply them with provisions directly from Canada, but is there any agreement between Great Britain and the United States or any formula to make possible a compensation to our Canadian farmers, some agreement between Great Britain and the United States which would be to the advantage of the farmer in this field?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the NATO procedure for supplies in Cyprus is mainly through Great Britain where there is a system beneficial to us, because it is less expensive to take in supplies over there than if we ourselves had to ship all our goods to Europe or Cyprus. Now, as far as the whole system of exchange is concerned, whether for food or other things, we try to maintain a financial balance. The hon. member suggested that we should include Canadian supplies. I can assure him that if it is possible, we shall try to do that.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has any estimate as to the number of civilian personnel who will be affected by this reorganization, and what provision is being made for them?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I have no definite figure in mind as to the number of civilians who will be released. However, the number is not comparable to what is estimated to be the reduction in the military field.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, could I have permission to ask a question? In view of the fact that the associate minister mentioned my proposal of this afternoon with regard to training, and raised certain difficulties in connection with that proposal, could I ask him whether he has considered the fact that the proposal I put forward, at the request of a number of men in the armed services, deals with exactly the same provision made by Canada for our veterans on their discharge at the end of the second world war and the Korean war. The principle put into effect then is the same as that contained in the suggestion which I asked him to consider. Has the associate minister thought of that fact?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker, I had not thought of that fact. However, I did tell the hon. member that we would look into the possibility of utilizing his suggestion.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Will the members of the women's army corps also be forced to go on retirement or will they be asked to resign in some cases? For instance, in the case of the St. Sylvester radar station, where the members of the of the women's corps are no longer needed, will they be allowed to get transferred to another branch or will they be forced to retire?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the members of the women's corps are subject, I believe, to the same regulations as the men.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has been kind enough to answer all the questions put to him, I should like to take part in the debate and make a few remarks.

First of all, I should like to congratulate the minister on the positive aspect of his aim in military matters. Having said this, I must warn him that my further remarks will not necessarily be flattering, because unfortunately, I found in his white paper some negative points that I shall attempt to denounce in a few minutes.

With regard to the military policy he intends to apply in Canada, the minister, in his white paper, stated his intention to carry out several recommendations submitted by the defence committee in its report tabled a few days before the end of the session last year, that is in December 1963.

The integration of armed forces under a single command seems to have been the main concern of the department. That decision is probably the one which has received up to now and will receive the greatest support from all hon. members, even if a few have expressed certain doubts as to the timing of this integration.

I think that most of us agree that this integration of armed forces is essential. I also think that this integration is supported by most Canadians and more especially by the members of the armed forces concerned.

It is evident that this development was essential to avoid a waste of manpower and of the huge sums required for the administration of the national defence.

One of the main reasons for integrating the armed forces is to prevent military leaders from exerting too great an influence on the minister who must answer to the country for the phenomenal amounts voted each year for that purpose.

I do not think such integration creates a precedent since recently, England, which is often quoted here as an example to follow, has broken with century old traditions to bring all the armed forces under the authority of a single minister. Mr. Speaker, efficiency dictated such action.

It would seem that, left to themselves, the military have or at least had, with the best intentions in the world, the tendency to build up an empire and try to impose their views on the various governments which follow each other at the head of the country.

It is therefore urgent, in the light of developments, that civil authorities regain control of expenses this government has to make or justify before the Canadian people.

Bill No. C-90 suggests the establishment of a chief of the defence staff position. I believe that, after this bill is passed by the house, the man entrusted with this responsibility will have a very important part to play in the future of Canadian military forces.

It is therefore most necessary that he should submit to general instructions to be given to him by the government through the minister who, for his part, is held responsible to the people by the bill he submits every year at the time of the budget.

Mr. Speaker, the integration of armed forces will not occur without any trouble. Some people's toes will have to be trod on and we must expect, from some parts of the country, criticism against this measure. However, I believe that it is necessary for us Canadians to support this measure, which was moved almost unanimously by the house and has the support of a great majority of Canadians.

In the past, and especially since the end of the war, the forces have had perhaps somewhat exaggerated appropriations of public funds. I believe that when the minister decided, as proposed in the white paper, to freeze for a few years the expenses of the military budget, he definitely took a step in the direction intended by the majority among us, and I think he will necessarily have to go further.

The minister claims that such a decision will bring a reduction in the budget generally voted for the country's defence. Of course, such a reduction will be in proportion to the development which will take place in the other sectors; it will amount to almost $1.5 billion, but it will not be a reduction on present expenditures. A study of the budget shows that the Canadian people will not benefit by a reduction in the amount of taxes levied during the year, because the estimated expenditures will be the same for that military defence, or rather that so-called defence, since, after all, being realistic, all of us in this house, must vote a more than reasonable portion of the national budget for a defence against aggressors that seem to be rather hypothetical.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we really wish to come back to reality, we will have to reduce further the percentage of the amounts appropriated annually for national defence. In fact, if we analyse the amounts spent annually by countries similar to our own in the world, we realize that most of them, even the members of NATO, that alliance to which we belong, spend an amount representing some 8 per cent of the national budget. Now, if we consider that, in our case, the amount provided represents some 25 per cent, that is one quarter of the national budget, it is clear that we have much to do before we come closer to the standards now used by other countries that do not have the ambition to pass themselves off as something they are not.

I think that at present the Canadian people have to pay a bill imposed on them by governments which did not take into account the fact that Canada has a population of only 19 million, and that accordingly it could not afford to spend more than it was justified to, in a field which is not necessarily related to progress or to the Canadian economy.

The integration of the armed forces is apparently something which will mean a saving for the country, but unfortunately, it will bring about a reduction of our military personnel.

When the minister announced last fall that he might close certain radar stations, certain army or air force bases, certain radar bases in the north, some hon. members protested that decision which affected them personally in their riding.

I was thus able to realize to what extent we, in Canada, just like the people of the United States, but in a larger proportion, had an economy based on military industries. If we consider all the reductions now being made in the various governments throughout the world, we see that all sensible people are worried about the present trend to disarmament. People wonder what will happen when we stop looking after the needs of the thousands of men now in the forces, which contributed to the employment of thousands of industrial workers who produced their equipment.

We are led to ask on what basis exactly we have built our economy.

When we think of the war years 1939-45, we realize that we, in Canada, did build up an industrial economy resting on the needs created by a war waged on the European continent. When, from 1939 to 1945, we used part of our potential in the construction field for destructive purposes, we failed to consider that after that war we would have to build up and erect a system which would enable us to live and create a peacetime economy.

When we refer to the figures prevailing in post-war period, we realize that until 1950, the annual amount voted by the government to cover military expenditures was more or less the same until 1950-52.

At the time, expenditures in the defence budget stood at around $350 million annually. Suddenly, due to certain fears, we deemed it advisable to increase that amount to $1.5 billion from 1955 on. And each year, almost without fail, we made the mistake of voting that sum of $1.5, because we had to make an impression, through such an expenditure which was way beyond our means, and play a role which did not suit us on the international scene. I do not think anybody was impressed.

We were thereby proving to other countries which were older than we were that, to a certain extent, we were irresponsible in the circumstances since we were mortgaging the future of a country which has such a tremendous need of its credit, its potential.

When we consider Canada's share in the cost of international organizations, we realize that the part we play is always out of proportion to our capabilities. We have tremendous potentialities, but they are still undeveloped. They will remain so for some time to come, probably for decades. I feel, therefore, that it would be wise at this time to determine our position and to ask ourselves what amount we Canadians should reasonably appropriate for those peace keeping operations in which our role is very minor. Up to now Canada has never been called upon to decide whether or not there would be a war.

The only part it has played was to decide whether it would participate or not. Unfortunately too often, certain authorities have decided that we would participate without previously asking the agreement of Canadians to bear the expenses.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider what is going on at the international level, we realize that within the framework of NATO, for example, now holding a conference of ministers from which Canada is practically absent, the voice of our country therein is not predominant, we have tried once again to play a part which was not ours. Let us compare Canada with its 19 million inhabitants with France which has 50 million and Germany which has 60 million. If we realize, on the other hand, that we are more than 3,000 miles away from that military field, we must honestly admit that our part in the circumstances is extremely limited.

This afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) criticized the attitude of France and of its president, General de Gaulle, towards NATO, especially France's decision to withdraw temporarily its support to NATO. Mr. Speaker, I feel that to blame France in that specific case is a mistake because we Canadians are hardly in a position to judge the circumstances which prevail at the present time on the European continent. We must recognize that Europe has been rebuilt, that it is powerful and that it wants to play its own role, without being controlled or directed by another power located about 1,000 miles from its territory, a power we all know, the United States. We must admit that, up until now, NATO has been the tool or instrument of the United States and that only the Americans have been able to impose their views concerning the decisions and the action taken. If France now intends to assert itself and to speak out against decisions which, to a certain degree, are taken unilaterally by the United States, she has the right to do so, and we would be ill-advised to criticize the position she has decided to take.

I believe that NATO's role in future years will be just as important as it was in the past but it will be determined by the countries concerned, that is Belgium, France, Germany, Italy and the neighbouring countries, in accordance with their military needs.

Everybody admits that the military situation is changing. Mr. Speaker, we must admit it and, as I suggested to the minister this afternoon, we should take advantage of this opportunity to renegotiate immediately, even before it expires, the agreement we signed, so that after 1966 we will be able to make changes in this field, as we ought to, that is our role will be symbolical and psychological rather than practical. I mean that if we admit that the CF-104 squadron, for instance, which is now based in Europe, will be outmoded within five years, we will have to admit that, after that date, Canada will not have much to say in this field and will have to submit to the decisions taken by the authorities of those countries directly concerned by the European military problem.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to deal with another problem, Cyprus. I shall have a few questions to raise, especially the part played by Canada in the U.N. force. We decided, probably with a certain haste due to circumstances, to send a military force to try and maintain peace on the island where there is now a kind of civil war. I feel that as a French Canadian, I have a few questions to ask. I did not do it at the time that decision was taken, because I did not want that point to be questioned. But I wonder now why it was decided that it would be a group of French speaking Canadians that would try and maintain peace on Cyprus when the majority of French Canadians are accused of being incompetent to hold high positions in industry and the federal civil service. How is it that it was deemed advisable to send French Canadians to Cyprus to try and maintain peace on that island which was under British control for perhaps centuries, an island where the languages usually spoken are Greek, Turkish and English and where practically not a single word of French is spoken. How is it that French Canadians of the 22nd regiment were selected?

Please note, Mr. Speaker and Mr. Minister of National Defence, that I am not against it. On the contrary I am proud, to a certain extent, of the fact that French Canadians were asked to carry out a task that was recognized by everyone in this house as a very delicate one. But since it was admitted that French Canadians could play a delicate and difficult part in a land utterly unknown to them, how is it then that there are in Canada Canadians who refuse to acknowledge the fact that French Canadians can actually contribute to the building and development of this Canada of ours?

And at this stage I should like to call earnestly for an acknowledgement of the part played by the French Canadian group in this Canadian force. I am against those who want Quebec to secede from confederation because I feel that French Canadians are able to play a role not only on Cyprus island but also in Canada, not only in Quebec but also in Vancouver and in Halifax.

I think we have a right to aspire to play that role. We have the competent men required. It was recognized that we had competent men in the military field, and I think that some day Canadians, whatever part of the country they come from, will have to agree that we also have the right and the capability to fully assume that role in every field.

Having said that Mr. Speaker, I feel that, as Canadians, we must accept that all Canadians, from Halifax to Vancouver, be treated on an equal footing so that wherever they carry on their activities they may benefit from all the advantages they are entitled to. As a matter of fact, since we have proved that we were able to play a part on the Dieppe beaches, the Normandy coast and even on the island of Cyprus, I believe that we have the right to demand that we be allowed to play our part in any sphere of activity, be it economic, social, political or cultural, on our own soil.

Reference was made this afternoon to the special defence committee. That committee was set up last year and it was my privilege to be one of its members. However, like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), I deplore the fact that it was not set up again sooner during the present session.

Certain circumstances have probably prevented the leader of the house or the Minister of National Defence from bringing forward that project, but I feel the house has thereby lost a certain opportunity, because during the last two months we could have examined more thoroughly the government's defence policy and especially the white paper tabled by the minister.

Furthermore, we could probably have made an even more useful contribution to the present debate, because, personally, I have no feeling of animosity towards the previous administration or the present government. They did what they considered to be the right thing; they are doing what they think is the proper thing to do now, and I am of the opinion that time alone will tell whether they were right or not.

There is one very special case I should like to bring to the attention of the house tonight. It concerns certain soldiers who will be discharged soon or who have already been discharged. As a matter of fact, I have already submitted some of those cases to the Associate Minister of National Defence, and that has made me wonder about the efficiency of the training and technological courses being given in our military camps.

The case of certain servicemen who returned to civilian life after five years of service was called to my attention. After exerting their efforts in a particular field in which they had acquired a practical and technological experience, after leaving the army, navy or air force, they were deprived of the right to use their knowledge in civilian life, because the military training they had received did not meet the requirements of the various departments throughout the country. Besides, the minister is well aware of what I am talking about, because I told him recently about the problem of young men who had left the navy after five years of service. They had worked as electricians, operators of boilers and stationary engineers, they had obtained some certificates attesting that they were qualified to practise their trade. But after their discharge, they were not even accepted as apprentices in their trade. After having spent five years to learn a certain trade, these young people could not, after their discharge, exercise the trade which they had learned while they were in the navy or other divisions of the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a certain anomaly which the Department of National Defence should undertake to correct immediately, in order that those young people may take advantage of their knowledge acquired during their service on their return to civilian life. In fact, when these young people complete their military service, they should be able to obtain evidence of the skills they have acquired which will allow them to practise the trade they learned, exactly as their fellow citizens practise a trade or a profession in civilian life.

When we invite our young people to join the navy, the army or the air force, we lure them with all the benefits involved in acquiring technical knowledge which will be useful to them later on. Now, I believe that if we wish this propaganda, this publicity to be true to reality, arrangements should be made with the provincial authorities in order that knowledge and skills acquired be recognized by the various departments, so that these Canadian citizens may honourably earn their living, when they are pensioned off or when they end their service in the Canadian forces.

Mr. Speaker, evidently, I may be wrong, but I am of the opinion that the special committee on defence did last year a very good job, and I think we can admit, without bias, that the group forming the committee which was established last Friday will also proceed in the same direction.

Of course, this committee should study several areas, but I believe that in the light of the study made last year, a very particular point on which its members should dwell is the economic repercussions which disarmament may have in future, since we today recognize it as a need.

Disarmament is advocated by many organizations, by several groups, economic, social as well as political, and I believe that the committee should pay a great deal of attention to the economic results of future disarmament on the Canadian economy in particular. May this disarmament come as soon as possible.

The committee should thoroughly consider this matter in order to submit definite recommendations to the government so that it may establish the necessary machinery which would prevent disarmament from becoming the source of economic changes which would create a crisis such as the one we knew in the thirties.

If you study the statistics published by the United States, you come to the conclusion that Canadians will just have to consider that particular point. As a matter of fact, I read recently a report on that subject and I must tell you that it is disquieting to note that the American experts cannot see at the present time what solutions could prevent disarmament from plunging the country in economic chaos, which would probably push the United States, and certainly Canada, indirectly, in a crisis which surely nobody wants.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is spending huge sums for national defence. Sometimes, in our constituencies, people are asking for what purpose exactly such sums are spent. When people are giving us sound arguments, we find it very difficult to justify the spending of a billion and a half figuring in the national defence budget.

As a very influential person put it, not only should we consider the possibility of "freezing" the national defence budget at its present amount, but we should even consider reducing it and use the money thus saved in a more profitable field.

We want to spend a billion and a half to defend ourselves against a hypothetical enemy. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Canadian people would welcome the spending of part of that money in the field of national health, where a true danger exists, where we are threatened by two enemies, cancer and heart disease.

When we consider the amounts allocated every year to research and case-finding in connection with these two illnesses, we come to the conclusion that we have lost completely the sense of responsibilities and values.

I think that if we apportioned a larger amount to research, to the detecting of those two plagues, and to methods of fighting them, the Canadian people would readily agree to pay the taxes required to pay for research in those two areas because it would bring a solution to a problem which is not hypothetical but really factual, since recently, a colleague of ours was struck down by one of those two diseases.

I think that in that field, Canada could make a much more valuable contribution which would be readily accepted by everybody since it would be valuable, not only for Canada, but also for all nations in the world which could benefit from it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I think that when the committee on defence resumes its discussions on military problems in Canada, it should necessarily take into consideration those two points I just mentioned and some others which may have been pointed out by previous speakers.

I feel sure that if we give careful consideration to those matters, we will while playing a part in the military field, do our share to safeguard peace, because it is in that direction that we should channel our efforts.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with what I had in mind to say tonight, I should like to make a few comments on what the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) said here some half hour or more ago. To begin with, I should like to say I have no objection to the gold bowler concept, as it is called in the United Kingdom, of giving a certain amount of lump sum compensation to servicemen retired before their normal time of retirement arrives. However, I think two mistakes are being made in regard to this, and I would like to put them before the two ministers for consideration.

In the first place it is grossly unfair to charge income tax on these lump sum payments. The minister mentioned something tonight about some amelioration so far as that is concerned, but I honestly believe income tax should not at all be charged on these lump sum payments. The fact that they are lump sum payments connotes that they are paid to people to compensate them for the lack of leave and pension they would have earned if they had gone on to their normal retirement time.

If the two ministers have undue difficulty with their colleague in the finance department and in the treasury board, I would suggest that the very least that could be done would be to spread these lump sum payments over three or four years so far as income tax purposes are concerned, so that the income tax would not be assessed all in one year, or even two years.

The other point I would like to make in connection with this is that from my experience in the Department of National Defence I found there were always a considerable number of people who wished to retire before their time was up because opportunities had presented themselves in civilian life. I believe there is a considerable number of people in the armed forces in that situation at the present time, and I think they should be allowed to retire and be given the same pension benefits as though they were compulsorily retired. In this way the department would find it unnecessary to retire as many people compulsorily as otherwise would be the case, and also the general morale of the armed services and of the personnel in them would be considerably better than if the plan which is proposed is carried through.

I know, of course, that quite often people in the services who want to retire are people who the authorities consider are occupying key positions, and that it would impair the efficiency of the services if they were let out. But we must always remember that nobody is indispensable in the armed services, just as this applies anywhere else. I believe these people who are prepared to leave voluntarily at present, even though it is thought they are occupying key positions which it would be difficult to fill, should be let go. This would ease the situation considerably and produce better results than the plan that is evidently in prospect.

To address myself to the bill which is under consideration, Mr. Speaker, my remarks on it will be relatively brief, for the very good reason that the bill provides really only one thing, and that is the legal basis on which unification of command in the armed services can take place. It provides for the abolition of the positions of chief of staff of each of the services, and the substitution of a defence chief of staff for the present three individual chiefs.

I believe that the minister's remarks in this debate on Friday, together with the white paper which he previously issued, confused two quite different things, namely unification of command and integration of the armed services. The point was made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on Friday—and I think it needs to be reiterated and emphasized—that these are two quite different things; but the minister's speech and the white paper tend to blend and confuse them, and thus make for confusion in the minds of the general public and of members of this house.

There are probably very few students of military affairs at present who will not agree that in war, at least, unification of command is desirable if not essential. The reason for this is that in the future most military operations are likely to be of a combined character, in other words, an army-air force operation, an army-navy operation, a navy-air force operation, or an operation involving all three services. This being the situation there is no question but that unification of command is something which should be put into effect.

Actually this was started several years ago right here in the Canadian services. For several years now we have had a unified naval-air force command on the Atlantic coast, and a similar one on the Pacific coast—the maritime command—in which the admiral in each case was the maritime commander of that coast and the air force officer was his deputy commander, and they operated a combined force of ships and aircraft. Undoubtedly this is the pattern of the future. This is the sort of thing which we are going to have more and more of, and I do not think anybody can seriously quarrel with or complain about the proposition of unified command. It is chiefly a matter of whether or not it is put into operation effectively.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the point that unification of command does not necessarily mean integration of the services. These are two quite different things. The United Kingdom and various other countries have instituted unification of their commands, but they have not instituted integration of their services. I hope that in his future statements with regard to this matter, perhaps in his remarks when he closes the debate, the minister will make it clear that these are two different things, not try to give the impression he did at the very beginning of his remarks on Friday that this change which is proposed—and I read from Hansard at page 3065—> —is the first and perhaps the most important move in the integration of the armed forces under a single defence staff.

That statement may be correct but it gives rise to a wrong impression and it tends to confuse people's minds on this subject.

As to integration itself, I think the chief difficulty is that we have had no hard information with regard to the integration of the armed forces on the basis of which we could determine what is being planned, or come to any reasonable judgment with regard to the matter. We have not been told what the word means. The word "integration" has been used to a considerable extent by the minister and it appears in the white paper but its meaning has not been defined, and what the hon. gentleman intends to do with regard to integration has not even been hinted at so far. At the present time, then, we are debating this particular matter in a vacuum. I think this vacuum should be filled as soon as possible in order that we may have an actual idea of where we are going as far as the integration of the services is concerned.

No doubt integration of the armed forces of the navy, the army and the air force can and should take place. It has been going on, in fact, to a certain extent for a number of years. I presume what the minister has in mind is a considerable speeding up of a process which has been in effect in certain areas for a long time. For example, the dental needs of the three armed forces have always been met by the Canadian army dental corps. The medical services and the chaplain services were integrated several years ago. The pay scales of the three services were put on the same basis some time ago; the supply of food to all three services has been looked after by the Royal Canadian Army Service Corps. These are all examples of what has taken place already in the field of integration of armed service administration. I should like to sound a word of warning in connection with this matter. I think considerable care needs to be exercised to ensure that what has always been the objective, as far as the integration of armed service administration is concerned, is met. The integration of the medical services and the integration of the chaplain services did not meet our expectations in this regard. In other words we did not secure the savings in manpower and, thus, the general savings, which it was hoped these moves would bring about. However, I do not think there is any doubt but that the integration of these administrative functions is highly desirable. It ought to be put into effect and it should be put into effect as rapidly as possible.

However, I am afraid, from what I have seen in newspapers and from my impressions of conversations with members of the general public, that most people in Canada have an idea that integration of the services means that all servicemen will be in one vast organization—that they will all wear the same uniform, that they will all be interchangeable and that the whole military organization as we have known it will disappear. This idea is, of course, a highly erroneous one. It is not practicable and it is not possible. Individual units in our armed services at the present time are highly specialized. If we are to have an effective military organization, they must remain so. It is impossible, for example, to move an artillery officer to the command of a destroyer or to move an army service corps officer and make him the flying officer of a transport plane. All the units which exist at the present time in the army, the air force and the navy will, in effect, have to continue being the same type of units as they are at the present time. This is something that should be made clear to the general public. I have run into this idea time after time, talking to people in casual conversations as I go about this country. This idea, as the minister I know recognizes, is not a practical one, and the sooner the general public can forget this impression of what integration may mean, the better.

I really have nothing else I wish to say in regard to the bill under consideration but I should like to make a few comments in connection with the white paper. The white paper put out just before Easter deals chiefly with broad generalities. It ends by saying, on page 30:

> In this paper no attempt has been made to set down hard and fast rules for future policy and development. Flexibility, not rigidity, has been the keynote. The paper is a charter, a guide, not a detailed and final blueprint. The policy outlined in it is not immutable. It can be altered or adapted to meet the requirements of changing circumstances, national and international.

I think it was very wise of the minister to put in that broad escape clause. But the point I want to make is that this white paper, regardless of the escape clause, raises far more questions than it answers. It deals, as I said, with broad generalizations and it gives us none of the definite information we need in order to exercise sound judgment on the plans the government has in mind. In fact it does not disclose what the policy is to be. It is so broad in its approach that it really does not mean very much at all. I am sorry to have to say this, but I think it can be characterized largely as what might be called a publicity stunt designed to present a good image of the minister and of the government to the Canadian people. Rather than being a real white paper giving us clear answers with regard to defence policy it is simply a piece of publicity. The first half of the white paper, approximately the first 15 pages, deals with the objectives of defence policy and the historical development of policy since 1945, together with an exposition of the international situation which determines the threat we may have to meet. I defy anyone in this house or in this country to find anything in those 15 pages that I did not say myself during the period when I was minister of defence or that my predecessor General Pearkes did not say. Those 15 pages are a straight restatement of what one might call the basic facts of defence, as they have been recognized by everybody who has had to deal with them or study them during the last ten or 15 years.

Mr. Churchill: They stole them from you.

Mr. Harkness: That is the situation, and any idea that this is something new is totally without foundation. These pages deal with broad defence policy and there is nothing in them which has not been said time and time again. In fact, I got so tired of saying it in speech after speech that it became difficult to keep on reiterating it. But people did not seem to grasp it, and I suppose the greatest proof that they did not grasp it is that when this statement of defence policy came out a great many people hailed it as new, and there was nothing new in it at all.

An hon. Member: Don't forget the horses on the payroll.

Mr. Harkness: I am not at this time, because I have not time to do it, going into the broad questions of defence policy which are by and large dealt with in the first 15 pages of this report. However, there are a few things in the last 15 pages of the report particularly on which I would like to comment briefly. For this purpose I will take the sheet which the minister issued with the report and which is called "Highlights, white paper, 1964". I have not too much time, Mr. Speaker, so I will deal with this very briefly. The first thing mentioned here is the ten year plan, and then in brackets it says "First such long term defence plan". I defy anybody in this house to go through that white paper and see any reference to a ten year defence plan. It is just not there; there is no ten year defence plan, and there is not even a ten year defence plan mentioned in the white paper. Nevertheless the minister puts this out for the use of the newspaper people, of course. The first item on it is, as I have said, "Ten year plan (first such long term defence plan)". If the minister has a ten year defence plan, let him give it to the House of Commons; let him give it to the country. We have not heard of any ten year defence plan; we do not know of any single item in it. As a matter of fact, this is one of my chief criticisms. The minister has done a lot of things of which I approve and with which I agree, but one of my chief criticisms is the sort of business along this line. He tries to sell this like a ten-ring circus and gives a totally false impression to the people of Canada in regard to defence measures, which in my opinion are much too serious to be dealt with in that way.

The next is flexibility, and the next is mobility. If the minister will go back and read the speeches I and my predecessor made in this house time after time, to say nothing of those made throughout the country, he will see that flexibility and mobility have been stressed year after year after year. It has been the objective of defence policy and the objective of equipment policies to give the greatest degree of mobility and flexibility to our armed forces.

The minister mentions integration and the unification of our forces. I have dealt with that. The next is "Deputy minister's powers increased". This, if course, has reference to the Glassco commission report. I think some of the recommendations of the Glassco commission in this regard are extremely sound, and the sooner they are put into effect perhaps the more effective and efficient will be the Department of National Defence. I have no quarrel with that item. The next thing we see here is "Management system for defence programming to be introduced". If we look at page 20 of the white paper we see the following statement in this regard:

> It is intended to introduce into the Department of National Defence a management system for planning and controlling major defence programs at the departmental level. This system will display various components of the long term defence program in suitable detail over a significant time period. The system will provide a means of expressing various force structures, weapons systems, logistic arrangements and other military activities in terms of their immediate and long term costs.

I have read that paragraph at least a dozen times now. I have had many years of experience in regard to these military matters, and it does not mean a thing to me. It is the greatest gobbledegook I have ever read. I think it is a disgrace that nonsense of that sort should be put into a white paper and presented to people as though it were a reasonable thing. If anybody in this chamber can get any real sense out of that paragraph, I would like to see them and I would like to have them explain it to me, because I think I have had perhaps as much experience as anybody here in regard to these things, and that paragraph just means nothing and is nonsense of the worst kind.

I would hope that in future statements and future white papers the minister would be wise enough to eschew things along that line, a bunch of words that means nothing and which it is hoped will impress the uninitiated; and perhaps it does, but certainly anybody who knows anything about the subject will look at it and the sort of expletive that will come to one's mind is not that which can be used in this chamber.

The next thing I see here is "Many Glassco commission recommendations to be implemented". That is fine, but which are they? We do not know which are to be implemented and which are not. The white paper does not tell us, and the minister has never told us, which of the Glassco recommendations as far as defence is concerned are going to be put into effect. That is the sort of hard information we should be given here, instead of these broad general statements which do not mean anything. The next is "Future air squadrons to be in direct support of ground forces". What is that, except a pious hope, Mr. Speaker? I think anybody would subscribe to the fact that this would be desirable, but in the white paper or in anything the minister has said at any time there is absolutely nothing to back this up as to when it might happen, if it will happen, and so on. It is just a statement such as saying, "I am against sin". Everybody agrees with that, but what does it mean?

Next is "Air truck fleet being extended; sea lift being augmented". If the air truck fleet is being extended, this is a highly desirable move and I commend the minister and the government for it. I understand from the newspapers they have given orders for another 12, I think it is, Hercules air transports. We bought four of them several years ago for the purpose of experimenting with them, evaluating them and seeing what use they would be. They proved extremely successful. Of course, the idea was that the number of these Hercules aircraft would be increased if we found them satisfactory, and I am glad this is being done. I would hope that more Caribou aircraft would also be purchased along that line.

Now we have the sea lift being augmented. Looking back into this matter it seems that what the minister has in mind is to buy some of what we might call cargo vessels or the equipment in order to carry army personnel from point A to point B, or something along this line. I would hope this would receive a very careful second look and going over, because I think it would be a complete waste of money. You can, as the first and second world wars demonstrated, always hire civilian sea transport for transportation purposes, and for us to spend defence dollars on ships which would be very, very costly in comparison with ordinary cargo ships, in order to have the capability of lifting a certain number of personnel by sea from one point to another would, I think, be a very, very bad waste of defence dollars and I hope nothing along that line will be done.

The next thing here is "A study under way to determine best, cost-effective anti-submarine equipment for future". That is fine. Studies are always good; I have nothing against studies. But a study is no substitute for ships actually in being or under construction. This is the only thing the minister has to substitute for the frigate program which he destroyed and for the ships which he has taken out of commission or has sold as scrap or put into mothballs. All he has to substitute for all these ships which have now disappeared, and the future ones which will not be delivered to the navy when it was planned that they would be delivered, is just a study of the program. As I said, that is not good enough. The actual effectiveness of the navy has been severely cut down and their future effectiveness, as far as we know at the present time, is going to be almost destroyed in the course of time because no program for the rebuilding of ships has been put into effect or is even far enough along so that the minister can make a promise about it, let alone anything else. They are a few of the matters in the white paper, although I do not wish to comment on them at this time.

I should like to end by saying that my chief criticism of the minister and the government from the defence point of view is that the defence capability of this country is being steadily reduced. Nothing is definitely going ahead to replace the equipment which is being laid up or taken out of commission. What this amounts to is really a unilateral decision on our part to reduce the contribution which we had agreed to make to the north Atlantic alliance, and is also a diminution of our ability to meet any commitments which the United Nations may make upon us. This is my main criticism as far as defence is concerned. The minister has been knocking off this, slashing away at that, decommissioning something else, and putting nothing in their place except a lot of big promises. After a year in office it is now time for big promises to come to an end and for the minister to tell us definitely that certain things are going to be done, and to state our program and policy. To date we have had nothing except promises.

Mr. Reg. Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) it was quite apparent that he was dealing with specifics. It is not my intention this evening to do that. However, before actually launching into what I have to say, may I say that I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) on the constructive aspects of his speech, but the drivel he produced in the middle of it was beneath his dignity as a member, and I found it very difficult to listen to. Surely he does not think that that kind of inflammatory talk will improve relations between the two founding races. Surely he knows that the Royal 22nd regiment was a stand-by battalion and was designated to perform any task such as that of Cyprus which might arise. If it had not been sent on that task I am sure that he, as a French Canadian, would have been one of the first who would have most vociferously objected to the fact that it had been bypassed.

On Friday afternoon, near the beginning of his address, the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) said, in essence, that he could see no savings in the suggestion of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), although the minister claims there are. The budget tells us that we spent on defence in the year 1963-64, last year, the enormous sum of $1,699 million. It is true that some economies are shown for the year 1964-65, and I give the minister full credit for introducing them. But his expenditures in the year 1963-64 were $99 million more than the previous year, 1962-63. This year he will save a bit more than this—actually $109 million. Without intending to be sacrilegious, this seems a case of "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away".

In fact, in spite of all the ballyhoo of the minister's white paper, the cuts in defence spending for 1964-65 do little more than return us to the level of Conservative spending. The previous government did its task in keeping defence expenditures down to what I think was a legitimate level, and it was very much misunderstood in some parts of Canada as a consequence of its sensible attitude. It was the Conservative government which, in attempting to keep expenditures to the minimum, cancelled that absurdly expensive scheme for the Avro Arrow plane. That is past history now, but I do not think we should forget it. It was something like a $700 million "lemon"; a plane which we were led to believe could fly for only 15 minutes on its fuel supply and whose cancellation brought to an end the remarkable profit-making of a firm which had parleyed in a few short years a small investment into assets of many millions, mostly acquired from business done with the taxpayers of this country. If anything needed to be done it was this cancellation; and it was the previous prime minister of this country, the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who had the courage to do it.

It was the leader of this party too who had the courage and the good sense to refuse the Bomarcs, those nuclear weapons which are rapidly being outdated and which the military mind wanted, but which I am quite sure the average citizen did not. Let us not be so foolish as to say that there was a commitment to accept them. Surely none of us has so soon forgotten how at Nassau President Kennedy in a few short words cancelled the development program which his country was undertaking for Britain on an air-to-air missile, and forced Britain to take Polaris submarine missiles instead, thus making useless in a minute a plane which had cost her millions of pounds to develop or, if you like, tens of millions of dollars. Mr. Kennedy did not hesitate to put his country's national interest first, ahead of a so-called commitment made earlier but which he felt time and changing circumstances had modified and eliminated.

So it is with us. Surely we are not so securely tied to the tail of the American kite, no matter how friendly it flies, that we cannot put our own national interest first. Time and circumstances had changed the Bomarc from a possibly valuable weapon to one which would be useless, a weapon program which the United States secretary of defence, so he said, would not have introduced and would not spend a nickel on, if he had to do it over again. But the Liberal government installed them, and by so doing put us unwillingly into the nuclear club. We did not have to accept them and we should not have accepted them.

This saving is only a small part of what should be done to reduce our national expenditure on defence. We cannot, as other hon. members have said, afford to spend approximately 25 per cent of our total budget on defence when we have deficits of the order of $455 million forecast for the coming year. I should like to quote in this regard from the budget white paper, page 91, under the heading "defence expenditures". It says:

> Expenditures of the Department of National Defence and defence expenditures of the Department of Defence Production are again in the largest category of government budgetary expenditure. The total of $1,699 million for 1963-64 is approximately 25 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures of the government for the year and is $99 million more than the total of $1,600 million for 1962-63 when they were 24 per cent of total expenditures.

In a growing and developing country which desperately needs large amounts of capital for use in productive ways, particularly when we have a finance minister who is clearly antagonistic to the use of foreign funds, we cannot divert to useless and non-productive defence expenditures the huge sum of, in round figures, $1,700 million annually.

There is no use saying we cannot reduce our defence budget. It can be done, and it should be done. In addition, it seems to me that much of our present military establishment is based on concepts of how war was fought in the second great war. Even the modifications which the defence minister is proposing seem to be based on the same premise. Such beliefs are as out of date as the Spanish galleon of the great armada when it met Drake's sloops in the English channel or, to use a more modern illustration, as the Maginot line was to the German panzer columns. An imaginative approach to defence problems will enable us to phase out much that is no longer vital and concentrate where it seems more worth while.

I believe the minister is trying, but I suggest he has not been imaginative enough. In a couple of years, we should be able to bring our defence expenditures to a more reasonable proportion of our total spending and so eliminate our deficits. This will be possible if, of course, conditions do not change in the world to such a degree as to require more elaborate and expensive defence expenditures, a condition to which we are always subject. Even more important is the fact that by making reductions in our defence spending we will be giving a lead to other and greater nations. We will be adding our little bit to a growing tendency toward disarmament and so to the alleviation of tension in the cold war. It is an appropriate time to take such action.

May I quote from an editorial in the Journal of the United Nations for March-April, 1964 headed "Disarmament has Begun". I quote:

> A remarkable thing has happened. After failing, in years of discussion in disarmament conferences, to agree on how to start disarming, the two superpowers have begun to disarm without an agreement. As U Thant has commented, the United States and the Soviet union "seem to have come to the conclusion that no progress towards ending the arms race will be made unless and until they slow down themselves."
> Within three weeks of assuming office President Johnson announced that 33 U.S. military bases, seven of them abroad, would be closed down or put on a stand-by basis, and that more cuts were coming. Shortly afterwards, Chairman Khrushchev, announced a reduction in the 1964 Soviet military budget of $600 million. A few weeks after that Johnson cut the new U.S. military budget by $1 billion, and announced a 25 per cent reduction in the production of fissionable materials, with the closing down of four plutonium piles. Earlier, the Soviets had put out feelers to call off, or slacken, the race to the moon.

In this kind of international climate, it seems to me Canada could do her bit to accelerate disarmament. As the months pass it becomes clearer and clearer that the policy of the leader of my party of preparation of the weapon systems for nuclear arms, but refusal of the arms unless or until an emergency arose, was the sensible, intelligent decision. Indeed, it was a decision which would have made it easy for us to give the lead in banning the bomb and leading in and encouraging disarmament. I urge this government, this government with its almost fatal tendency to rush into precipitate action without full consideration of the consequences, to consider this greatest of all ambitions, a peaceful world. I urge them to accelerate economies in defence and to couple these economies with a reorientation of our whole defence policy so that we may once again lead the world towards peace.

[Mr. Cantelon.]

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): I should like to enter this debate very briefly, as I am deeply interested in the subject of defence and would like to make one or two observations. First, I wish to congratulate the minister upon the introduction of the resolution to again set up the defence committee. Perhaps I would not be amiss at this particular point if I congratulated the chairman of that committee during the past session, who is now the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé); the vice chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and also the members of the staff of the House of Commons who served that committee. I feel the committee did an exceptionally fine job, a vital job, during the last session and much is due to these gentlemen.

I am making one criticism at this point of the setting up of the committee. I feel this move has been made too late in the session. Of course, Mr. Speaker, any committee is only valuable, and can only be valuable, if it is given a job to do. I contrast the committees that we have in this parliament with those in the United States where so much of the work that is done in the congress and in the senate is done by committees. The committee chairmen are considered to be the most important members of the congress and senate. Before I leave last year's committee, I should like to say I feel that not only did it do a valuable job, but it was a credit to the House of Commons.

There were 24 members on this committee who, first of all, had an opportunity of listening to experts in the field of defence. They heard the chiefs of staff for air, navy and army, as well as the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. They heard some who were experts and some who were not experts. Later, the members of the committee had an opportunity to go to NORAD headquarters at Colorado Springs and to North Bay to see the installations there for the air defence of North America. In addition, committee members had an opportunity of going to Europe to talk to the leaders of Great Britain in the field of defence, including the Hon. Peter Thorneycroft, and the leaders of France, West Germany, Denmark and at supreme headquarters of the allied powers in Europe, as well as NATO headquarters. I feel that the members of that committee came back with an excellent knowledge of the problems of this country in defence, as well as the problems of the whole world in this particular field.

On Friday, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity of spending a day in camp Gagetown. This particular military establishment is the largest and finest in the commonwealth. It contains over 420 square miles of training area and, at its peak in the summer, has 12,000 troops. A new city has been built beside the camp to serve those who are stationed there. I feel that the area commander of New Brunswick and the brigade commander of the camp are to be commended, because they brought in 150 citizens of New Brunswick who watched the training and observed the troops in action. We had an opportunity of seeing field firing by the Royal Canadian Dragoons, the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery and the Black Watch. They are all fine units of Brigadier Wilson-Smith's brigade. We had an opportunity to examine how a camp of this size functions.

In the months of July and August of this year we expect 12,000 troops in that area. I was suggesting to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) earlier, and possibly he thought I was joking, that it would be a good thing if during the summer—if we are in session here, and we quite likely will be—an opportunity could be provided for members of the House of Commons to go to camp Gagetown to watch the Canadian army at its best in its training. Perhaps hon. members would gain some knowledge of how the defence dollar is being used and would come back with an appreciation of this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) discussed the reduction in the armed forces as a result of this integration policy. This is a subject in which the men and women of the armed forces are deeply interested. I have not had an opportunity of discussing this reduction to any great extent with members of the permanent forces. However, I do know that members of the militia in this country are very unhappy indeed.

We know that a few years ago the previous Conservative administration was bitterly criticized because the role of the militia was changed. It was said that instead of having their machine guns, mortars and other weapons they were given sand buckets and stirrup pumps. What has happened to the militia today is that for the most part they are being almost wiped out. I would tell my personal friend, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), and the associate minister, that the militia of the country are deeply concerned about what is happening to them.

I noticed the other day that the minister mentioned there was a need for more recruits, even with a reduction in the total strength. He said that there was no better career for a young man in this country than to enter the armed forces. That, of course, is very true. One of the roles of the militia has been to be a feeder for the permanent forces. It has been in the past and I think it can be again in the future a base for the mobilization of the armed forces if we do find ourselves in another war. Let us hope, of course, that we will never find ourselves in a nuclear war under any circumstances, but if we did the militia could again play its part there.

Recently I put some questions on the order paper directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin). I asked whether he could advise how many civilian employees would be released as a result of integration. The minister gave an answer, which I accepted of course because I thought it was reasonable, that this could not be determined at this particular time. But I would ask the associate minister to give this matter some thought and to see if he cannot allay the fears of the civilians who work for the Department of National Defence. There are a great many men and women, some 40,000 altogether I believe, who are concerned in this particular instance.

We cannot put illustrations on Hansard. I sometimes wonder, though, whether it would not be a good idea. I am going to send to the Minister of National Defence a cartoon done by Chambers. Perhaps he has seen it. It shows a kilted soldier waving his claymore —he is a very rugged fellow indeed—while three others are trying to remove his kilt. Standing to one side is the Minister of National Defence holding a uniform and at the top are the words: "Some things are better left alone, Mr. Hellyer". Perhaps the minister has seen the cartoon, but if he has not I will send it to him. It is one that is really worth framing.

There is a point I should like to bring up. I raised this matter when we were in Europe last fall and I make no apology for raising it at this particular time because I am deeply interested in the dependants of the men who serve in the armed forces—the women and children. I am concerned about the matter of education. We know only too well, of course, that in this country we have 10 systems of education and the children who feel the brunt of this more than any others are the youngsters whose fathers are in the armed forces.

I suggested to Colonel Dick, in Soest last year that it would be a very fine thing for the army to have special classes in the summer months so that the more gifted children could advance more rapidly than by simply remaining in their ordinary grades. I have another suggestion in this regard. I have noticed that at camp Gagetown a high school teacher will have youngsters in his class who have gone to school in half a dozen or more of the provinces. I remember one teacher who took only 15 or 20 minutes for lunch and spent the rest of the lunch period working with students who perhaps had never had the subject he was teaching at all—in this case it was French—or had had a very sketchy education in the subject.

Possibly I have not made myself entirely clear but I can explain the matter more fully to the minister personally. I believe that special classes would be an exceptionally fine thing for these students at Soest, Zweibrücken and other schools overseas in order to help these youngsters who in many cases suffer from the point of view of education because their fathers serve in the armed forces.

There is another matter I should like to raise at this time. It has to do with a rather strange subject known as "Nudets". I put a number of questions on the order paper earlier in the session reading as follows:

1. Are there any units of the nuclear detection and reporting system—

That is abbreviated to "Nudets"—

—presently being constructed in Canada and, if so, who is constructing these units and at what locations are they being constructed?
2. What is the cost...?
3. What is their purpose?

The answers were:

1. No units are presently being constructed.
2. Not applicable.
3. The Nudet reporting posts are designed to determine the location at ground zero of a nuclear explosion, the height of the burst and approximate yield of the weapon.

Then I asked a second question in these words:

Have any discussions been held with the Pentagon relative to the construction in Canada of units of the nuclear detection and reporting system and, if so, what conclusion was reached as a result of these discussions?

Here was the answer:

Discussions have been held between Canadian and United States officials on matters of mutual concern relating to civil defence on a confidential basis. In consequence, the publication of any results of such discussion would require the consent of both the Canadian and United States governments.

The result was that I was given practically no information at all. So many times when questions are asked on the order paper or on the orders of the day the person asking the question already knows the answer. In this particular case I knew the answer and it does not agree with the one I was given. I wish to quote very briefly from the Saturday Evening Post of December 7, 1963 which contained an article by Stewart Alsop, a highly reputable writer. He said:

As a gentle reminder of the weirdness of the world we live in, and a small warning against excessive complacency it seems worth while having a look at a peculiar product of our times called Nudets. Nudets is Pentagonese for nuclear detection and reporting system. The Nudets system is being built by the General Electric Company at an estimated cost of $25 million at 52 sites in the United States and southern Canada.

[Mr. MacRae.]

Perhaps the minister can see what I am driving at. Here we are told in one place that they are being built in Canada and in another place we are told that they are not being built in Canada. Perhaps the minister is right but if he is I do not feel it is proper that articles like this should go unchallenged by the Department of National Defence or the Canadian government when we are brought into the picture, if in fact such is not the case.

I have only one very brief point to make before I sit down. This year of 1964 is an anniversary year in many ways for those who have served in Canada's forces in the past. It is 50 years ago that world war I began; it is 25 years since the beginning of world war II, and 100,000 men have given their lives in defence of this country. If it should happen that we should go to war again, let us hope that our forces are completely and fully equipped. War is no longer a feasible or sensible method of settling international disputes.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—REDUCTION IN NORTHERN ALLOWANCES AND ISOLATION PAY

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In accordance with provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that this house do now adjourn. The hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I directed a question to the Secretary of State and asked him, in view of the drastic reductions which have been announced with respect to northern allowances and isolation pay, due to the rising costs of living and the drastic reduction in take home pay for many of the civil servants in the north, would he consider a full investigation and possible reconsideration of this action.

I regret that the Secretary of State is not in his place this evening. However, I would sincerely hope that the Acting Secretary of State would be able to give the house some answers with respect to this very important question. It is a very important subject and is of great concern to the civil servants and the members of the armed forces who may be affected.

During a recent visit to northern Manitoba I was contacted by a number of civil servants and some members of the armed forces who complained bitterly about this announcement. Some of these people have been advised that as of October there will be a drastic reduction in their take home pay, in some cases as much as $60 to $95 per month.

Many of these people have been in the area for a year or more, but in some cases less than a year. I believe they went there with the understanding that these allowances could be expected for the duration of their tour of duty. The ones who have been there a year have now gained a considerable experience of working with the people in the area, and are becoming very valuable to their departments. If reconsideration is not given to this policy, then I suppose it becomes a matter that these civil servants, and possibly members of the armed forces, will be entitled to ask for a transfer, just at a time when the money that has been spent on them to date in northern allowances and isolation pay is producing results.

If there had been a significant lowering of the cost of living, a move of this nature could be understood and would probably be justified. However, we all know the cost of living has gone up, but their take home pay is to be reduced. With regard to the cost of living I would like to refer very briefly to an article in the Montreal Star of April 9 which says:

> Higher clothing, transportation and housing costs helped increase the country's cost of living index from 134.5 to 134.6 in March, the bureau of statistics reported yesterday.
> The index, based on 1949 prices of 100, was 1.9 per cent higher than in March of last year.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, there were certain stipulations and requirements for the receiving of northern allowance. I do not know all the details but I believe various departments had different requirements. In some cases civil servants in places north of the 55th parallel that had no road connections with the outside world, and in some places which did not have rail line service, automatically became eligible for isolation pay or northern allowance. With respect to the people who have complained to me, the situation in their case has changed very little, and in some cases not at all.

Most of the places along the Hudson bay line in northern Manitoba and other places such as the mining town of Lynn Lake have no road connection, even though they do have rail connection. I may say that under the provisions of the roads to resources program and in co-operation with the government of Manitoba a road will shortly be built to Thompson, Manitoba, where many of these civil servants are located. However, that road has not, as yet, been built. Indeed, I think that in any case this is a factor which should not be taken wholly into consideration because in many of these areas which are now getting the benefit of road connections the cost of living has increased; rents have gone up in many cases. For these reasons I shall be interested to hear someone on the treasury benches explain why this policy has been adopted and made known to civil servants. There are in effect northern allowances, rates of isolation pay, and cost of living rates. These reductions, apparently, have taken effect with regard to isolation pay and I should like to hear—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): The general question raised by the hon. member is of wide interest and I understand his concern about it. I must say, from the observations he has made, that there is obviously considerable need of explanation, because the point is not well understood. There are some 453 posts involved where isolation, remoteness allowances, are granted in addition to regular pay. The general increase in the cost of living does not have any effect because this is taken care of in the salary adjustments which are made from time to time. We are dealing here with an additional item paid by reason of remoteness. With respect to some of the isolated posts there has been no change at all in the allowance paid. In respect to others, the allowance has been increased, and there are some with respect to which allowances have been reduced. It is obviously those cases where the allowances have been reduced which have been brought to the attention of the hon. member.

The present method of determining isolation and remoteness allowances was developed in 1958 as a result of a survey started in 1956 to correct unsatisfactory situations which had been found to exist under the former regulations. What is being done now is to carry out an adjustment within the regulations on exactly the same basis, using exactly the same tests as applied when they were originally set up in 1958. The points considered to determine the allowances in this elaborate rating system include remoteness, transportation, population, medical services, climatic conditions, entertainment available, schools, the availability of religious services and the provision of water and electricity, as well as the supply of goods available for purchase. These are taken into account in an elaborate point rating system and it is the review of these factors which has brought about a change in the allowances paid. Changes in transportation facilities or, in one or two cases, of telecommunications services and other services have resulted in an alteration in the rates and as a result some posts receive lower allowances —although, as I said, some will receive higher allowances while others will remain at the same level. There is more which could be said but since my time has expired I shall probably have to keep it until another occasion.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—APPLICATION OF AVAILABILITY TEST

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, May 8, as reported in Hansard at page 3059, I sought to put to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) this question:

> In view of many complaints regarding the onerous application of the availability test for unemployment insurance benefit, has the minister had discussions about this matter with the unemployment insurance commission? Is any relaxation of the application of this test in prospect?

The Chair felt there was not sufficient urgency to this question for me to expect an answer to it on orders of the day. I may say that I do not mind waiting until tonight, but I hope the answer will be a good one. I regret that the Minister of Labour is not here, but if the parliamentary secretary comes up with a good answer, we will give him full marks for it.

I am sure all hon. members of the house are aware of what has happened. Persons who are in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits, and in some cases those who have not yet started to draw them, find themselves called upon to answer certain questions. In particular they are asked what kinds of employment they would take and what rates of pay they would accept. Many of these persons, trying to be helpful, will list certain occupations they would take and certain rates of pay for which they would settle, and a little while later they find they receive a notice from the unemployment insurance commission to the effect that they have restricted their availability for employment and therefore unemployment insurance benefit is either cut off or denied them. That is a simple and direct clarification of what I meant by the phrase "onerous application of the availability test for unemployment insurance benefit". It has been drawn to the attention of the government several times during the course of this session, and in the view of many of us who have received complaints from insured workers about this matter, this test should be relaxed. I hope that the answer is a favourable one; that the minister has had discussions about this matter with the unemployment insurance commission, and that we can anticipate a relaxation of this test at an early date.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has re-read his question so I think it is unnecessary for me to repeat it. Suffice it to say that up to that moment the minister had not had discussions which would lead to the relaxation of this test as suggested by the hon. member. However, that is not to say that the hon. member's representations will not be considered. But in defence of the officials of the commission I think I should say a few words. The applicable section of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 54(2)(a), provides:

> An insured person is disqualified from receiving benefits in respect of every day that he fails to prove that he was capable of and available for work.

The hon. member will note here that the onus of proving availability is on the claimant. In doing so he must show that he is genuinely ready and willing to accept suitable employment immediately; that is, at the time he applies. Also, there must be a reasonable expectancy of obtaining the kind of employment that he is, by his own admission, willing to accept. I am sure my hon. friend does not quarrel with this as an insurance principle.

The hon. member is no doubt aware, also, that there is a wide misconception that unemployment insurance benefits are a matter of right based solely on having established the fact that premiums have been paid. Because of this misconception the commission often finds that a claimant will, in the initial application, indicate that he or she is not interested in obtaining employment. Such person will subsequently change the statement, although having been given a copy of it at the time. It will be on record and the officer must, of course, take cognizance of that fact.

Over the last four years the number of enforcement officers has been appreciably increased, I believe something like 70 in number. The net result has therefore been that a closer check has been made and the administration of the act tightened up. We have no doubt come across a number of people who are really not available for work, and as a consequence they have been disqualified. If the hon. member has any specific case—

Mr. Knowles: Yes, I have.

Mr. Byrne: —which he wishes to bring to the attention of myself or the minister or the commissioner, then we will be pleased to look into them to determine whether there has been any unfairness in the administration of the act.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MARITIMES—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REVISION OF MAINTENANCE OPERATIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 8 I posed a question to the Minister of Transport. I do not see him in his seat tonight and I understand he is out of town and unable to be present. However, I assume he has a stand-in. This question was with reference to the plans of the C.N.R. to revise its maintenance of way methods in the maritime area. These new methods are scheduled to commence on June 1. On Friday last I suggested that this will cause great disruption and hardship among the employees, with ultimate unemployment for a large number. The minister stated in his reply that the new methods they are planning to put into effect will not result in any decrease in employment until such time as there are retirements of existing employees who may not be replaced. But ultimately there is going to be unemployment as a result of this, and that is a play on words by the minister.

I followed up this question by asking the minister whether he was aware that many of these employees of the C.N.R. would be uprooted from their homes and would have to be moved to other areas, as a result of which great disruption would be caused. He advised me that he would refer the matter to the management of the C.N.R.

This is not the first time this question has been brought up. The junior member for Queens brought it to the attention of the minister on April 7 and the hon. member for Pictou mentioned it as well. Again the matter was going to be drawn to the attention of the C.N.R. The hon. member for Cape Breton South also brought the subject to the attention of the minister and suggested that any revision in the maintenance of way methods be delayed until at least the railway committee met or the estimates were studied; and the minister said that he would bring the question to the attention of the C.N.R. On Friday, as I said, he was again going to bring my question to the attention of the C.N.R.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are not getting any information. I understand from the union officials that this is going to affect 32 section foremen who will be reduced to the position of sectionmen, and then ultimately 74 sectionmen positions will be abolished. Not only that, but it will lengthen the sections which are to be maintained, and therein arises a safety factor. I hope that this matter is going to be looked into. It affects railwaymen from Sydney to Centreville, New Brunswick. This is a rather urgent and serious matter and I am hoping for some other type of reply than the one we have been receiving.

So we find, Mr. Speaker, that the C.N.R. continues drastically to reduce their working force in the maritimes, putting more men on the unemployment roles. The claim is always that they are economizing and at the same time increasing their efficiency. I suggest that the C.N.R. is top-heavy with economists, so-called specialists, and even inspectors to inspect the inspectors, and I suggest that this is a false economy. There is an old Chinese proverb which goes something like this: "There is no economy in going to bed early to save candles if the result be twins". I suggest that the "twins" in this case are the increased unemployment which will result. I appeal to the minister, or whoever represents him tonight—and I realize it is impossible for him to be here—to make immediate representation to Mr. Donald Gordon, the president of the C.N.R., to take another look at this question and to delay the implementation of the proposed revision at least, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South has requested and suggested, until the railway committee has a chance to study this matter.

We are finding cut-backs not only on the Canadian National but in the Departments of National Defence, Northern Affairs, Transport, Public Works, and so on. As a result, we have increased unemployment. I hope the representative of the minister here tonight will have something more encouraging for the men who are going to be so drastically affected.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the minister is out of town tonight on official duty. Last Friday the minister assured the hon. member that he would bring his statement to the attention of the management of the Canadian National.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He keeps saying that.

Mr. Cantin: It must be remembered that the Canadian National is a crown company and the minister will not interfere with its administration. However, a report has now come to the minister and the management advises that because of improvements that have been made in recent years to the railroad structure, the railway has for some time been studying the possible reorganization of railroad maintenance forces and procedure. This proposal will be extended to all regions and not restricted to the Atlantic region.

The management goes on to say that, generally speaking, this reorganization, which contemplates the extension of territories currently worked by track forces, decreasing the number of gangs and increasing the size of some crews, will ultimately result in a reduction of staff requirements. However, in the Atlantic region, the hon. member will be glad to know it is not contemplated that this will cause any lay-offs of employees, as it is the intention to reduce the forces over a period of time through normal attrition.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—LACK OF BILINGUAL REPORTERS IN HOUSE COMMITTEES

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege affecting all hon. members.

It has to do with the lack of bilingual parliamentary reporters, especially for the committees of the house. The Laurendeau-Dunton commission should inquire about that deplorable situation existing right here in parliament before travelling all over Canada.

I then ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to empower the Laurendeau-Dunton commission to act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, instead of spending half a million dollars to make investigations, the government should assume its responsibilities and take positive action by providing the committees of the house with a bilingual reporter.

An hon. Member: What did you do for six years?

Mr. Pigeon: We had some.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege. If it is anything it is a complaint.

CITIZENSHIP DAY

OBSERVANCE ON FRIDAY, MAY 15

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house to an event which has particular significance to all of us in Canada at this time. I refer to the observance of Citizenship day, which will take place on Friday, May 15, and which, in some of the larger centres, serves as the climax of what has come to be known as citizenship week.

Since 1950 Citizenship day has provided a special opportunity for all Canadians to consider the advantages that we enjoy as citizens in a great and free democratic country. Perhaps even more important, it serves to remind us of the responsibilities that rest upon us all as we strive to make Canada even stronger and more united in the years that lie ahead.

Citizenship day has not been regarded as a public holiday or an occasion for festivities. It is rather a day when special ceremonies and exercises may be conducted in our communities and schools; when we can reassess what it means to be Canadian.

As citizens of Canada we can all take pride in our evolution as an independent state; we can take pride in the role we are able to play in international affairs, and in the contributions that we have made and are making toward the maintenance of peace and security in the world.

In 1867 the British North America Act united four provinces into one federation. Confederation was an "act of faith" that grew out of compromise. The founders, English speaking and French speaking, foresaw a great new nation stretching "from sea to sea". This faith in Canada, held a hundred years ago by the fathers of confederation, has now been realized geographically. It remains for us now to realize it in every other way. As we approach Citizenship day all Canadians, whatever their traditions, languages and cultures, will wish to recall the purposes of our forebears, to create a nation broad in outlook, strong in unity and purpose, every one of whose inhabitants will be able to say with justifiable pride "I am a Canadian citizen".

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the concluding words of the Prime Minister there will be general agreement. I should like to see citizenship week celebrated during the later part of the month of June, so that on July 1 we might actually celebrate our citizenship and all that it means. Certainly Canadians deserve to be made Canada conscious and Canada proud, and to have the pride of Canadians not only in our heritage but also in our destiny. Throughout the years I think it has been said of Canadians that we have been notoriously calm about our country, in lacking that spontaneous attitude of pride and expressed pride in its greatness.

When I was prime minister we endeavoured to bring about one day in the year on which Canadians might join in celebration and on July 1, 1957, and each year since then there has been the celebration on parliament hill. In addition we also provided for the changing of the guard, a course that has brought to Canadians a pride in our country and to our visitors a knowledge of what Canada stands for, which is so necessary.

The Prime Minister said that at confederation the dream was the building of a nation from sea to sea. In my opinion that concept of one Canada is all the more necessary today than ever before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As we approach the one hundredth anniversary of our country we must not do anything which will divide Canadians into two classes. Canadians first class and Canadians second class. That is a message I believe Canadians as a whole hold dear, and rather than a message of fear they would like one of faith.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party would like to associate themselves with both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in commending the recognition of Citizenship day and all that this implies in our rich heritage.

We hope that the celebration of citizenship week will help all of us to realize the great privilege we have in living in a country made up of people of different ethnic backgrounds and various cultures, and that we should realize what a great opportunity is ours, to live in a country which supports the ideals of freedom and justice, a land in which we have great opportunities for the flowering of the human spirit. We trust too that the celebration of citizenship week will help us realize we cannot have opportunities without responsibilities, and that this is an excellent time for all of us to think of the responsibility which is ours to build a united Canada.

We live in a shrinking world in which nations are coming closer together. On the old continent of Europe nations which have lived in a state of bitter enmity for centuries are now working out a modus vivendi. Surely if these ancient enemies can live together in a spirit of harmony we here in Canada of the two great founding races can work out our difficulties satisfactorily.

I trust that as a result of citizenship week, and of giving some thought to this problem throughout the year, we in Canada shall be able to learn to live together in a spirit of mutual understanding, mutual forbearance and mutual respect. I trust citizenship week will inspire all Canadians to work to that end.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is with much pleasure that we in our group join with the Prime Minister and the spokesmen for the other groups in the house to give our support to what has been said and what is represented in citizenship week, and particularly in Citizenship day on Friday. One of our greatest needs in Canada today is to realize and appreciate just what Canadian citizenship means, not only the privilege it brings to each one of us but the responsibilities it carries as well.

This means being proud to be a Canadian. I think it would be well to pay tribute at this time to the Rotary clubs of Canada for the tremendous work they are doing in developing citizenship, and in bringing representatives from right across the country to Ottawa for citizenship week, in their program "Adventures in Citizenship". As we meet these young people, many of them from our own constituencies, I think it can be a lesson for each of us as members of parliament. Certainly it is well to remind ourselves that the privilege of being a Canadian carries with it the responsibility of acting like ones as well. As we give this witness in the international aspects of our responsibilities abroad, may it reflect back to us in every aspect of our Canadian way of life.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we in this corner of the house gladly join with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in drawing attention to Canadian Citizenship day.

The Prime Minister stated that as Canadian citizens we could be proud indeed on many accounts. We are proud of our development as a state, but it is the independence of that state which we would like to celebrate on Citizenship day. However, when we know that we cannot make a single move without the permission of our neighbour to the south, I wonder what we can normally call an independent state.

We have often heard high sounding words on holidays or celebrations of one kind or another.

The Prime Minister also said: We can be proud of the role we can play in international affairs to maintain peace and security in the world. That is true. But, for a small nation I think we have done even more than our share in that respect. When the government tells us that to maintain peace in the Congo—that world peace which we will celebrate on Citizenship day—Canada had to disburse $12,460,000 for the upkeep of its troops in that part of the world, it forgets to add that out of that amount the United Nations owe us $6,369,000 and has no money to repay us.

Since the creation of the UNEF and up to March 31, 1964, in order to help maintain peace and security in the world, Canada has contributed the staggering amount of $46,005,000. The UN are supposed to pay us back $15,950,000 but it does not have the money to do so.

In my opinion that is a rather substantial contribution to the cause of peace and security in the world on the part of Canada. We have nothing against that. If I mention this, it is only to give an example of the assistance we can give throughout the world for the maintenance of peace. In the light of that example, I feel it would also be necessary to ensure peace and order in Canada so that we can celebrate Canadian Citizenship day.

Whether or not confederation was an act of faith that grew out of compromise, as the Prime Minister stated, the founders, both French speaking and English speaking, envisaged the establishment of a great new nation. Now, I claim that if the other provinces besides Quebec had treated their French speaking minorities the same way we treated our English speaking minority and others, the celebration of Canadian Citizenship day would be better understood throughout the country.

However, that does not stop us from celebrating with the others that great day dedicated to confederation and Canadian citizenship.

I contend that as long as French speaking minorities in the other provinces do not enjoy the treatment given to English speaking Canadians in Quebec, there will be people, not only in Quebec but throughout the country, who will doubt the usefulness of having a Canadian Citizenship day.

In any event we hope that this Citizenship day will be understood better. To be a Canadian does not mean to be a man settled in an ivory tower, impervious to other elements of our Canadian society.

We wish for a more united and a stronger than ever Canada, as the right hon. Prime Minister said. But let us begin by taking action at home that will give us that unity which will enable all ethnical groups in our country to have a share and a place in our Canadian confederation.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. Under the new orders, is it only the leaders of the parties who can comment on a matter like this, or can a private member make a comment? I ask for your decision.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it does seem to me that the business before the house is pressing and urgent. If we were to allow 265 members to make comments, even on Citizenship day, it would require a considerable amount of time. I hope in that rather disjointed answer the hon. member has received the proper interpretation.

Mr. Winch: I understand, then, that under these regulations once the party leaders have spoken nobody else can rise to say a word? I ask for your guidance.

Mr. Speaker: The answer is yes.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister relating to his statement about "citizenship Friday." In view of the interest of the Prime Minister in this matter I should like to ask him whether he would be prepared to ask the Department of Citizenship and Immigration why people who had been accepted for citizenship by the court over three months ago have not yet received their citizenship papers. Also I have knowledge of three members of the armed forces who after six months have not received their citizenship papers. Finally, why have they not received any answer to the various letters which have been sent to the department of citizenship? Would the Prime Minister look into this matter for Citizenship day?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into this matter at once; and if my hon. friend would give me the details of the cases he has in mind it would help me.

Mr. Winch: They are already in the hands of the minister.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question to to Prime Minister relating to the situation in the Alberni valley. The occurrence took place on March 27, and six weeks have gone by. I should like to ask him whether he would cut through the red tape, the political differences and the hassle between this government and the British Columbia government and do something immediately on behalf of these people. Is the federal government going to make a contribution to the Alberni valley disaster fund?

This is an emergency matter and the people are waiting for action. They have even gone so far as to say that "the politicians should shut up; it is time to put up." I wonder if the Prime Minister would be able to give these people a message of early action.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will ignore the out of order and offensive form in which the right hon. gentleman put his question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: The question was put in an offensive form, but I will ignore that.

Mr. Monteith: Conduct yourself as Prime Minister.

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to conduct myself as Prime Minister if the right hon. gentleman would ask his questions in the form in which a former prime minister should ask them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Petulance is no substitute for action.

Mr. Pearson: I would reply to the right hon. gentleman by telling him that he has his facts wrong. We have been trying to get from the government of British Columbia for a good many weeks details of damage without which it would not be possible for the federal government to make a decision on this matter. We have now received information—it came a few days ago—telling us the aggregate amount of the damage incurred. We have not yet received details. Nevertheless we are inclined not to wait for these details but to take action in this matter, and I hope to be able to announce tomorrow or the next day the amount of money which the federal government will be able to contribute to the victims of this disaster.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that the Prime Minister has substituted some information for petulance, may I ask him whether it is intended to make a donation to this disaster fund, aside altogether from the division of responsibility as between the federal and provincial governments?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, it is the intention of the federal government to make a donation, but surely the right hon. gentleman will realize that before a decision can be made on the amount of the donation we are entitled to have all the details with regard to the damage incurred.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I had wished to address an urgent question to the Minister of Labour but in his absence, and since I do not know who is the acting minister, I address it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that longshoremen at St. John's, Newfoundland have been on strike for almost three weeks, is the government prepared to intervene in some way to help bring about a settlement of this dispute?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to take up this matter with the Minister of Labour.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HOLLAND—REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO CANADIAN VOICE OF WOMEN PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been drawn to the fact that Mrs. C. B. Macpherson, national president of the Canadian Voice of Women, was denied entry to Holland. I understand she has since been notified she can return and that she is now planning to go back to that country. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government has any information why a law abiding Canadian citizen, particularly the president of a national Canadian women's organization, should be denied entry to a friendly state; and if the right hon. gentleman can tell the house whether the barring of Mrs. Macpherson and other women was requested by the NATO authorities.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The only information I have on this matter is what I read in the press. When I read that report I asked that an inquiry be made into the incident.

Mr. Douglas: Will the Prime Minister give a report to the house when he gets this information?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I shall be glad to do that.

CYPRUS—NUMBER OF TROOPS UNDER U.N. COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Oxford asked a question regarding the composition of the military force in Cyprus, and in particular the number of troops at present in the United Nations peace keeping force. That number is 6,363. The hon. member also wished to know whether any British troops had been withdrawn from Cyprus. The answer is that the total number of British troops withdrawn as of May 6 was 781.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a breakdown showing, by numbers, the military and police forces in Cyprus divided among the seven countries providing military forces and the five countries providing police forces. With the consent of the house I would be glad to have this printed in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOUTH VIET NAM—U.S. REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FROM NATO COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say whether there is any basis of fact in a press suggestion to the effect that the United States has asked for assistance among NATO nations to meet the threatened situation in South Viet Nam? Has there been any request made to Canada in that connection, and if so would the Prime Minister take the house into his confidence and let us know exactly what is the position in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge no such request has been made of the Canadian government. Whether the matter has been raised today or was raised yesterday at the NATO council meeting, I have not yet had a report. The secretary of state was in Ottawa about 10 days ago and he discussed various matters with me, including the situation in Viet Nam. At that time he made no request of any kind for Canadian assistance. He did pay tribute to the work of the Canadian representative on the three power commission in Viet Nam. He said he understood that our representative on that commission was being replaced, as he had been called back to Ottawa, and he hoped that the replacement would get to Viet Nam as quickly as possible. That is the only matter which was discussed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I wonder whether on the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs from the NATO ministerial meeting it would be possible to arrange an early debate on international affairs.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope so. On the estimates, perhaps; or when the Columbia river treaty matter is finished in the committee it might be possible to initiate a debate in the external affairs committee. But at one place or the other I hope we will have an early discussion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SITTING ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that our national holiday on Monday next ties in with citizenship week, which is this week, is it the intention of the government to make Monday a holiday for members of this house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): After discussions with representatives of the other parties during which I think agreement was reached on this matter, it has been decided to place a resolution on the order paper today which I hope will satisfy the hon. gentleman and other hon. members of the house and which does, I believe, provide for a long week end.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REMISSION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell the house if it is true that criminals sentenced to the lash and held in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary do not have to receive that penalty, and this without the knowledge of the judges who passed the sentence.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question. Just before coming into the house I received information to the effect that sentences such as the ones which include the lash are carried out at St. Vincent de Paul, but that, in certain cases, the parole board has granted remissions, so that some sentences have not been carried out.

The sentence is always carried out unless the parole board recommends a remission.

However, I shall be pleased to obtain further details in this connection.

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the national parole board have the right or not to remit those penalties or to change the sentences?

Mr. Favreau: As I have just said, I did not have time to inquire personally, but I shall try to obtain further information and report to the house.

URANIUM

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO KEEP MINES OPERATING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he tell the house whether a final decision has been taken in respect of Elliot Lake and Bancroft mines, that is will they continue to operate or will the government definitely permit that the plants which produce uranium be closed down because it has decided not to buy or stock uranium in Canada any longer?

Could the house obtain a clear answer in this connection?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In regard to stockpiling, the decision was made public in the house a week or so ago, I think, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who indicated that it was not the intention of the government to continue stockpiling. It will be recalled by hon. members that when the decision to stockpile was reached a year ago and announced to the house it was made perfectly clear to the house, to the country and to all the communities affected that this stockpiling would go on for one year only, and that in the course of that year efforts would be made to help the communities against the ending of stockpiling and the closing of certain mines.

Since the decision was reached not to continue stockpiling, in other words to maintain the decision arrived at a year ago, efforts have been made and are being made both to assist the mines, or some mines, to continue; also to assist the communities affected. When there is any concrete announcement to be made on this matter, and I hope it will be before long, I shall be glad to make it to the house.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister if the commitment which was made to send people from the Department of Labour into these communities to make arrangements for training and placement has been carried out?

Mr. Pearson: Yes; representatives from the Department of Labour have been in the communities to that end, and other steps are being taken in connection with retraining which I hope to be able to announce shortly.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I would ask the Prime Minister whether the province of Ontario has agreed to undertake this training.

Mr. Pearson: We are in consultation with the government of the province of Ontario with respect to ways and means of establishing facilities which will be of help in this situation.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BENEFITS TO CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES COMPULSORILY RETIRED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Will the government give favourable consideration to the request made by the civil service federation to the effect that special benefits be paid to the civilian employees of the Department of National Defence who will be compulsorily retired as a result of changes announced by the minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This whole matter is under consideration.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR FREE VOTE OF MEMBERS ON DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman give an assurance that when the design for the proposed new national flag is presented to parliament all members of this house will have a free vote, and that the defeat of the design would not be considered a vote of non-confidence in the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): When the time comes to submit the decision of the government in this matter to the House of Commons I would hope every member of the house would vote as his conscience dictates, and that there would be no question of confidence or non-confidence in a party sense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Another retreat.

Mr. Coates: Does the Prime Minister not feel that if members were not bound to vote along party lines their constituents could more usefully inform them of their views, and they might vote as representatives of their constituencies rather than as supporters of the Liberal party?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister on the same subject. I am under the impression that it is contrary to the usages of this house to display symbols, even the national flag of Canada, on your desk. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, because I cannot ask Your Honour, what foreign symbols or flags are displayed on the desks of some hon. members to our left?

An hon. Member: Monstrosities.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

A while ago the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) rose on a question of privilege as to the emblems we have on our desks this afternoon. Now, I believe the words he used were not very respectful toward the members who brought with them a miniature flag, which has certainly caught the attention of some members and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) likes very much, for he has been looking at it ever since he came into the house.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that a member has the right to insult anyone in this house.

[Text]

Mr. Coates: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the one I could not ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. Coates: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, by order in council passed in 1945 the red ensign is Canada's national flag, and I see no reason or justification for any other symbol but that flag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mandziuk: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Mandziuk: —until this parliament legislates the abolition of the red ensign as the national flag of Canada, we have no right to display just any rag in here.

Mr. Bell: Three flag Jack.

Mr. Hellyer: Same old bunch.

Mr. Mandziuk: You've said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that I should tell all hon. members what is the general practice in the house. It is not customary to display flags, apples, tins of honey or other things on the desks of hon. members, except perhaps flowers on the birthday of the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition. On the other hand I do not think it behooves the Speaker to act as a schoolmaster on all occasions; he has plenty of opportunity without overstressing the fact. I do think it is up to all hon. members to use their own best judgment and to act in accordance with their conscience as members who have taken the oath of allegiance.

Mr. Prittie: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, as a teacher I wish Your Honour would be more careful in your language.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since the minister presided at the inauguration ceremonies of the second microwave system, would he tell the house whether he will use this communication system to sell to the Canadian people the idea of having six flags?

[Text]

FINANCE

CANADIAN ATTENDANCE AT MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to our genial and long suffering Minister of Finance on a series of meetings that have a particular fascination for me at this time. Is the government or the Bank of Canada sending a representative to a meeting of the international monetary fund which is to be held in Tokyo this fall, to receive a report on methods to deal with international gold reserves, the international liquidity position as a result of co-operation, and the increasing problem of anticipated inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE TAX REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In order to stimulate the Canadian economy, does the minister intend to comply with the wish expressed by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Roy Crabtree of Montreal, who asked recently in Calgary for a reduction of the fiscal burden similar to that applied by the United States government? In addition, I know that such is also the wish of all Canadians.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is an involved question which should be put on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, with your leave I should like to raise this subject after ten o'clock.

[Text]

FISHERIES

PACIFIC COAST—LEGISLATION RESPECTING LICENCE LIMITATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is consideration being given to legislation with regard to licence restriction or limitation for commercial fishermen on the Pacific coast?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, although the matter has been referred to me there is no intention of taking action at this time.

AGRICULTURE

INTEREST RATE ON FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is there any truth in the current statements that the government proposes to increase the interest rate on farm credit corporation loans from 5 per cent to 6 per cent?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my estimates will be up on Friday, and at that time we shall be able to discuss this question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CONSULTATION WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS BEFORE DAIRY POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us whether the farm organizations have been consulted before the announcement of the new farm policy was made in the house, on April 29 of this year, that is a few hours prior to the implementation of that new policy?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe we met with all the farm organizations including the federation of agriculture, which comprises many of the farm organizations. Since that time we have also met with many of the people interested in manufacturing dairy products. I think we are still prepared to meet people at any time they have anything to discuss with us.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether he intends to make some amendments to the policy announced on April 29 last?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I did not quite follow that question. Would the hon. member repeat it?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Does the Minister of Agriculture intend, in view of those representations, to amend the policy announced on April 29 of this year?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: No, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that many students are now beginning to plan their course of studies for next year, could the minister give the house some information as to when he is likely to bring down the legislation providing for student loans?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an exact date, but the government is anxious to proceed with this legislation as soon as we can.

TRANSPORT

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can give the house some indication of when the government will be introducing its legislation with regard to amendments to the Railway Act based on the MacPherson report. This question is rather urgent because there are a great many people who would like to appear before the committee, and they would like to have some indication as to when they should schedule this.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, notice of the resolution preceding that legislation will appear on today's notice paper. I hope we can get on with it just as quickly as the timetable of the house permits.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

REASON FOR ABOLITION WITHOUT PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production, if I can have his attention. Why has he abolished the Canadian Commercial Corporation without asking permission of parliament beforehand?

[Text]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Commercial Corporation has not been abolished.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house how it happens that he deprived Mr. Lamoureux, the chairman of that corporation, of all powers and that he makes such decisions himself, even using for patronage purposes that crown corporation which does not exist any longer for all practical purposes?

[Text]

TELEVISION

REMOVAL OF FREEZE ON PERMITS FOR CABLE TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. Could the Minister of Transport advise the house when he intends to remove the freeze that was placed upon the issuing of permits for the installation of cable television, as he announced last December 21?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there was not a freeze, of course, on all these installations, only on certain types of them. I hope it will be possible in the next week or two to reach a decision as to what is the advisable long term course in this matter, and to advise the house as soon as a decision is reached.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which is prompted by a news report I noticed this morning, which suggested that the premier of Quebec is going to consult his legislature before dealing with the question of a constitutional amendment on which the pensions legislation may be founded. Has the Prime Minister received letters from premiers of other provincial governments which suggest that they in turn will not be giving any consideration to this issue until they have consulted with their legislatures?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but it is my impression that the other provincial governments have already agreed to a constitutional amendment. Whether they consulted their legislatures at the time I am not sure.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister intends to table the answer he has received from Premier Lesage on fiscal arrangements. Apparently this letter was tabled yesterday in the Quebec house, and I wonder whether the Prime Minister is ready to table it here.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but it was not an answer; it was a letter from the premier of Quebec, and I should like to table it along with my reply, which I hope will be going off this afternoon.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN VETERANS LAND ACT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is consideration being given to amending the Veterans Land Act so as to increase loans for V.L.A. farmers in line with the proposed increases under the Farm Credit Act?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPLACEMENT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Monday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hellyer for the second reading of Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act.

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the matters covered in the white paper I should like to comment very briefly on the question of early retirement of officers and serving soldiers as a result of the intended reorganization. There were some things in the statements of both the minister and the associate minister which I found rather disturbing, and I hope their attitude is not a hard and fixed one.

As reported at pages 3139 and 3067 of Hansard the associate minister and the minister respectively referred to compulsory retirement and selection as though people were going to be forced out of the services against their will. Other countries have had to face this problem, and as the hon. member for Calgary North said last night no person is indispensable or irreplaceable. Therefore it would seem to me that the emphasis in this matter ought to be on election and choice rather than on selection and compulsory discharge.

In that regard I would like to cover one age group which will be particularly affected, namely those people who have had upwards of 20 years of service and are around 40 years of age. We all know it is very difficult for a person over 45 years to become employed, or to seek a new job, particularly because of their difficulties in getting into plants which have established pension plans. I am thinking particularly of warrant officers, N.C.O.'s and privates in their late thirties or early forties, who now want out of the service but are being kept in it involuntarily. Special encouragement should be given to them so they can get out of the service and get themselves established before they reach an age where they become practically unemployable.

Yesterday the minister was answering my question about the Veterans Land Act. As I understand this act, it provides that a soldier coming within two years of the end of his normal service can make application under it and build his house. It would be a very wise provision if this were extended to cover all the people who will be voluntarily and involuntarily discharged due to the reduction in the armed forces. It would give many people some incentive to get out of service, and would probably lower the cost of the reduction of the services.

I also think—and perhaps this may have been covered by the minister yesterday—that special preferences should be given to the men who are being discharged and who wish to enter the civil service. I commend to the minister and his officials a study of some of the plans that have been used in other countries where this problem has been met. I believe they would find there are improvements which still could be made in what we are proposing to do in reducing the services.

Last year I was a member of the special committee on defence, and I welcome the reconstitution of that committee. However, I hope there is no significance in the very late start that is being made this year. It would be a great disappointment to me if I found that the committee, instead of being a committee of investigation as it was last year, is now to become a committee of justification, as I believe the Suttie committee may become. The white paper on defence was promised to us a long time ago, and at that time I made the forecast that the flowers would be blooming in the spring before we would be dealing with it. My prophecy has been borne out. I played some part in preparing the special defence committee report, and my part was chiefly directed toward making the language more understandable and removing a lot of the redundancies. If someone on the minister's staff had performed the same function with the white paper it would have been a much better white paper. I believe it was too long, confusing and contradictory, and made too much use of cliches which obscure the true meaning. In fact I venture to suggest that those who have been loudest in its praise and loudest in its condemnation have not read the document very carefully, if at all.

Many people are very confused concerning the objectives to which it may lead and, as some writers have suggested, I believe these people are only left with hope because the document itself is pretty much lacking in positive assurances as to what is going to happen. The first 12 pages or so are substantially a recitation of history. The twelfth page starts dealing with NATO. Of course it is a self evident truth that in a country the size of Canada our defences have to be in alliances with other countries. But in the present state of affairs we wonder whether a very serious look should not be taken at, and a reappraisal made of, our role in NATO, not only in relation to its military aspects but also in relation to its other aspects, because in NATO today we find some very disturbing things.

The focus of NATO activities and worries has moved from Berlin to the Mediterranean, and we have the unhappy situation in Cyprus where two NATO partners are contending with each other with a third, the United Kingdom, intervening between them. We have the dispute between Israel and the Arab states, and while this does not directly affect NATO countries it certainly involves the United States and will involve Britain. We also have the unhappy situation in Yemen which again involves the very structure of NATO.

Having regard to the rapidly shifting positions of the various NATO countries one wonders whether we are maintaining a sufficient independence of movement and freedom of action within our forces. The end of page 12 of the white paper indicates that the government has adopted as Canadian policy the doctrine of graduated or flexible response. This is a very dubious doctrine. It is not accepted by the French. It is accepted with much reservation by some of the other NATO countries. From my experience on the defence committee I understand its chief proponents are some Americans and the Germans.

What is the doctrine of flexible response? To me it means that any attack by conventional, non-nuclear forces would be met by conventional, non-nuclear forces; that an attack by battlefield nuclear weapons would be met by similar battlefield nuclear weapons of slightly greater power, and so on. This doctrine causes doubt in a person's mind, because if you have a bigger weapon surely the attractions of the strength of that weapon are going to be irresistible and you are going to use it. It seems the doctrine is likely to accelerate very quickly into an all-out nuclear war and, to make such a doctrine workable, it means the early release of the control of nuclear weapons to battlefield commanders. If a crisis is hotting up and nuclear weapons are likely to be used, very quickly somebody is going to be authorized to use them, and this authorization would stretch down the chain of command, thus disseminating the control.

There are various propositions propounded as to how these weapons are to be controlled, theoretically and mechanically, but I am afraid none of them are very convincing. It is frightening to think of a comparatively low ranking military commander having complete control of a nuclear weapon, however small, and in my opinion it only increases the chance of mistake, error or use in panic.

One of the great promises of the Liberal party in the 1963 election campaign was that Canada would immediately enter into negotiations to get away from using nuclear arms. To my mind the last paragraph on page 12 of the white paper obviously abandons this claim, because there it is stated that an adequate force through a wide spectrum is essential to the deterrence of war, and that we have to have the maximum flexibility and the widest possible deployment. If we are going to have the widest possible spectrum of forces, that can only mean that we are going to have nuclear weapons and are going to keep them.

On the following page of the white paper there is reference to the nuclear club, which is defined as being composed of those countries having the means to manufacture nuclear weapons. The nuclear club goes much further than that now, because if the theory of flexible response is accepted in all its aspects it obviously means that the physical control of nuclear weapons is going to be disseminated more widely, and people who do not have the means to manufacture them are going to have control over them in certain circumstances. This is a frightening possibility.

What should be our role in NATO? I hesitate to say because of the rapidly changing circumstances but there are certain things that I think are going to be forced on us. I think the first principle we should be governed by is that the forces we contribute to any alliance should as nearly as possible be self contained and completely self sufficient so that we can maintain in Canada or through the Canadian government the widest possible choice as to their use. Having regard to the uses to which Canadian forces have been put since the end of world war II and which one can contemplate, I think that as far as possible they should be non-nuclear forces.

Too often, both within and without the forces, there are those who argue the nuclear problem from an emotional attitude. They advocate nuclear weapons because they are perhaps subconsciously affected by the emotional motive. I have seen this in newspaper editorials; our boys should have the best; our boys should not have to fight machine guns with peashooters. These people do not realize that in many circumstances nuclear weapons are not the best and in some circumstances can be a positive hindrance in the operation of our forces. The best example of that which comes to mind is the equipping of our brigade in Europe with Honest John nuclear rockets. We have seen demonstrations and have heard discussions concerning these weapons, and it is my opinion that instead of helping our brigade in Europe they limit its utility and effectiveness.

With regard to our forces in NATO, I think the main reasons for stationing any of our troops in Europe on a more or less permanent or semi-permanent basis are political rather than military, and in my opinion the political reasons are three. The first is the effect on the morale of our European allies by the continued stationing of Canadian and United States troops in Europe. As an aside, I also think they have a considerable economic effect in the areas in Europe where they are stationed. They constitute a rather good industry.

The second reason is the necessity of assuring the West Germans that their eastern borders will be kept intact. The third reason, perhaps one that is not much discussed but which may be more important than some of the others, is the stabilizing effect on the domestic political situation within West Germany by the stationing of British, Canadian and United States forces in that country.

So far as the defence of Canada is concerned, the white paper restates some obvious facts; namely, that our over-all defence must inevitably be linked with the United States and that NORAD, of course, is the basis of this link. I think too it is not only the politicians in the heat of election campaigns but also at times other experts who have made statements concerning the kind, size and utility of various weapons which have not been and cannot be borne out subsequently by events.

The main contribution to our defence is the radar system that extends throughout the north. I venture to suggest that the northern approaches to the United States are much better protected by the radar screens and warning system than some of the southern approaches are or might have been. As long as there is some chance of a bomber attack you will get various opinions from people. Those in the field of flying, such as the air force fighter plane pilots, tend to put the chance of a bomber attack rather high while others tend to set it much lower. It is hard to gauge the situation accurately, but as long as that threat continues I think we will have to have weapons of the class of the Bomarc and the Voodoo. It is regrettable for many reasons that the Voodoo squadron should be withdrawn from North Bay. Perhaps the Voodoos are more useful in the defence of Canada and to world peace than the Starfighters we have in Europe.

There is one statement in the white paper which is absolutely mystifying to me. On page 14 there is reference to anti-I.C.B.M. defence, commonly known as Nike, I believe, and the statement is made that we cannot do anything about passive air defence and fall-out protection until we find out whether we are going to get an anti-I.C.B.M. weapon. It would seem to me that until we do get an effective anti-I.C.B.M. weapon great stress should be put on passive defence and fall-out protection, because if a major war were to break out when we were still not effectively defended by anti-I.C.B.M. weapons it might very well be the task of Canada to try to survive. As we would be on the periphery of the heavy attacks it might be Canada's duty to continue the thread of western civilization. I do not agree with those who say that if war breaks out the outlook will be hopeless and we should throw up our hands. As long as there are two civilized western people alive, provided they are of the appropriate sexes, I think it is our duty to try to survive, to maintain what we have and to rebuild. For that reason I think that as long as we are undefended from I.C.B.M.'s we should put greater emphasis on passive defence and survival. I hope that factor of our national defence is being taken into consideration by the Suttie committee which is now sitting, since our passive defence is largely dependant upon the militia.

The next point is again a recitation of history. The second duty of our defence forces is to occupy our land masses and the sea lane approaches to them. It is a matter of regret to me that we are reducing the physical presence of our troops in northern Canada. I feel the northern bases should be maintained by the military. There was no real saving in this change. I feel that the cost of maintaining these bases under the Department of Transport will be greater than the cost of maintaining them under the Department of National Defence. This was purely a bookkeeping entry to make the Department of National Defence look good, and I think we have lost something of our prestige.

The white paper is largely silent on the matter of patrolling our vast seacoasts and the protection of the sea lanes into Canada. I would have liked to hear something about air-sea co-operation. I would have liked to hear something about whether we would build a simplified cruiser or patrol vessel which would work in conjunction with air cover from our very fine patrol planes.

Since we are on the subject of national defence generally I should like to mention the Bobcat that was scrapped several months ago. I hope when the minister replies he will tell us how the deliveries of the M-113's are coming along; when they are going to be delivered, and how satisfactory they are. When I was last advised on the subject I understood that the Starfighter was completely unarmed and as useless as a Piper Cub for what it was doing. In fact it was more useless, because that plane was being used for training and it is a difficult plane in which to train men. I hope the minister will be able to tell us these planes have been armed and are fully operational. I hope they will not be left sitting useless on the airstrips of Europe for another six or nine months.

While dealing with the Starfighter I should like to bring up the matter of cliches and misleading phrases. This is a very good example of it. The Starfighter, I believe, is described in terms of the trade as a strike-reconnaissance plane. Now, if one looks at the Starfighter one realizes it is a low level offensive bomber. If the Department of National Defence and the people associated with it started calling a spade a spade and giving rather more accurate descriptions, even though they may be unpalatable to people who hear them, it would give us a better understanding of national defence.

The other point upon which we are waiting to hear from the minister relates to what sort of forward transport is going to be provided for our mobile brigade. What sort of forward transport is going to be provided for our brigade in Europe? Are we going to get helicopters? What type of close support plane is going to be provided for an operation such as the one in Cyprus? These are things we need to know.

Of course the white paper is largely silent on the navy. I would not want to disagree with my hon. friend from Calgary North, but there is one type of transport ship we need in small quantities. These could become the joint responsibility of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport and could form the nucleus of a deep sea fleet. Britain and the United States are both adopting this scheme. They are building a very fast freighter which has a limited capacity for carrying a certain number of troops. In normal times it can be used as a cargo vessel and have special devices built into it, such as a hard nose for going into difficult places. Its loading and unloading equipment is self sufficient and can be used without modern docks. I think between the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence there ought to be an investigation of this type of vessel, because it would make a modest start on a deep sea fleet. It would also provide a training base for sailors on the ocean rather than on the great lakes.

I think I have made my objections to the Suttie committee rather clear. The minister indicated yesterday that it was economics that dictated these cuts in the militia. I hope this committee will not be a committee of justification but is undertaking a real study of the problem.

I come now to a consideration of the bill itself which is the subject matter of this debate and which relates to a reorganization of the cabinet defence committee. I believe we should have a more complete explanation from the minister as to what is going to be the role of the cabinet defence committee. What is going to be the role of the defence council? How is it going to be made up? What authority is it going to have? Yesterday the minister said something that indicated it would only provide an interchange of views. Who are going to be on the defence staffs, and how are they going to be designated? It is true that some of these details cannot be given now, but I am wondering whether we are proceeding in an orderly fashion or if we have started on this reorganization to make a showing without any clear idea of what is going to come next.

I was pleased to hear that there is going to be a program analysis department. This is a completely American idea. Mr. McNamara has it and it is headed by Mr. Enthoven, who is a very distinguished mathematician. In the United States these people are called the "whiz kids", and I am wondering if their Canadian counterparts might be called "Hellyer's hellcats".

Another matter on which I should like to touch briefly is the position of the Associate Minister of National Defence. I have found the associate minister knowledgeable, competent and courteous. I do not want him to think I am trying to get him out of the job. I do not believe I would succeed in any event, because a couple of Sundays ago I was watching television and I saw the minister being interviewed by the Liberal party's favourite part time commentator, Mr. Fisher. At that time the minister indicated that he was about ready to move out of the Department of National Defence and clean up the mess in finance.

Mr. Hellyer: That is not a fair interpretation.

Mr. Smith: The position of associate minister has been nebulous and irregular. There is provision for three associate ministers to be appointed for six months at a time, in times of extreme emergency.

Then, in 1953, there was some change. It was at the time of the Korean war and the government of the day brought in an amendment to the defence act to provide for an associate minister. I believe Mr. Campney had been associate minister under the old regulation and that he was then appointed under the new. Mr. St. Laurent said at that time, as recorded at page 1524 of Hansard, that the need was for an associate minister at a time of emergency, which was something less than a national emergency; he did not say, fortunately, a military emergency. After Mr. Claxton left the department I do not think any associate minister was appointed until the middle of 1957, and I think the emergency which occurred at that time was political rather than military. After the election of 1957 the office again fell into disuse and I do not think there was any appointment until late 1958 or early 1959. All this leads me to the conclusion that the abilities of the associate minister would better be employed in the discharge of another portfolio, and that it would lead to the more orderly disposition of business if we had only one Minister of National Defence.

As I have said, and as other speakers before me have said, I hope the defence committee will be given adequate time in which to study this bill and related defence matters. The steps now being contemplated are likely to have an effect for a long time. They will have wide economic repercussions in this country and their impact on the military structure cannot yet be estimated. I see in the newspapers today that some NATO countries are disturbed about the course which national defence may take, consequent upon this white paper. I hope the delay in setting up this committee does not mean we are expected to be a rubber stamp or that we will not be given sufficient opportunity to discuss the subject of defence in all its aspects.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I will try to be fairly brief in talking about defence matters but I do wish to put a few of my views on the record, since I have not had an opportunity to do so for some time.

I am sure we are all agreed in this house that the only real defence of this country and, in this day and age, of any country, is the maintenance of peace. If we follow that line of thought logically, I think it is apparent that the greatest chance of maintaining peace, the greatest force we now have available for that purpose, is the United Nations. We shall therefore be protecting ourselves in the best possible way if we bend all our efforts toward building up the power and prestige of the United Nations. I suggest this is more than just the job of the Department of External Affairs. I believe the peace keeping role of the United Nations could be greatly expanded. The possibility of a permanent force under the control of that body contains the hope that it could some day become the only really powerful force in the world.

I suggest that the role which Canadian defence policy could best fulfil would be to make sure that our forces are so constituted that they could be most readily of use to the United Nations—that they should be so flexible and so unitized that they could be made available to that world body on an ever stronger basis as time goes on. If there were a feeling that we were proceeding along those lines there would be an atmosphere of confidence in the country. We should not take years and years to get to this stage. There is no doubt that any major conflict which might develop at this time could result in the annihilation of everyone on earth or, at least, in the complete destruction of civilization, and it is all too frighteningly possible that this could happen now. For this reason I suggest that our first line of defence is to do as speedily as we can all those things which would help build up the United Nations and bring nearer the possibility of an effective peace keeping force.

I get no feeling of security when I look at what is supposed to be the present defence policy, and even less when I regard those people in whose hands our defence policy now resides. I remember only last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), talking about the acquisition of nuclear arms, making it clear in his speeches that he thought this was a real mistake. In fact, on June 7 he made it very clear that in his view taking nuclear arms was a mistake. Yet we have got them. He admitted on June 7 that we could not get them without entering into another agreement, and there was still time to get out of signing another agreement. But hon. gentlemen opposite went ahead and made another agreement to acquire nuclear arms; in other words, they carried out a policy about which they were unhappy—a mistaken policy which they really wished to avoid. Certainly, this is no reason for placing confidence in the government.

I sometimes find a little incredible the lengths to which government spokesmen will go in an effort to persuade the people of Canada that the only reason for pursuing such a stupid defence policy is that they were committed to it. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), speaking at Christmastime on television, made a statement which, to me, sounded incredible, in an attempt to give some reason why we should have Bomarcs. This was when he said the principal threat still comes from manned bombers. I thought all responsible people had reached the conclusion at least three or four years ago that the manned bomber was no longer the principal threat. All of us who were in the armed forces during the last war and who were stationed overseas can remember the V-2 rockets. We had never heard of a sputnik, but suddenly V-2 rockets aimed from a considerable distance were reaching their targets with fair accuracy. That was 20 years ago, and it is 18 years since the first atomic bomb was dropped. The combination of the two has been a preoccupation of the military planners ever since and has led to the investment of billions of dollars in scientific research and development in the intervening period.

The position, then, is that 20 years of intensive research have been spent on the development of that original V-2 rocket. Rockets have been built powerful enough to send vehicles into space and circle the moon. We now have sufficiently advanced technology to station satellites out in space and keep them there. The power of modern rockets is almost unlimited. In addition, starting a number of years ago, there have been many demonstrations of their accuracy. As to the possibilities of destruction, we have some knowledge of the size and capability of nuclear explosions. We have learned of the H-bomb, the cobalt bomb and so on which make the bombs of Hiroshima seem like toys. Yet, in the face of all this evidence, in the face of a technical capacity and power of destruction never known before, the minister appears on a national television hook-up and tells us that the manned bomber is still the principal threat. It sounds idiotic and it certainly does not give anyone in this country any confidence that the government knows what it is doing.

Mr. Hellyer: It is the truth, but you would not believe it.

Mr. Nugent: I may say it is not the first time I have heard the minister of defence make statements which were not particularly accurate. When he was in opposition he was so talkative that I am sure he covered all the ground on both sides to such an extent that today he can turn round and say he has said everything on both sides of all questions. So that he can tell us, whenever he is wrong, that he has also made a statement that is right. I imagine it is a state of mind that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is in as well. I cannot for the life of me understand why this government still persists in its policy of nuclear arms. I cannot understand why the government has not been taking some fast action to get out of the policy which the Prime Minister admits is stupid. This is incredible. I cannot understand why we have aeroplanes sitting over in Europe when I think it is by now obvious to most people that a nuclear role for the 104's is probably unsuitable. It certainly would be much more advantageous for Canada to have those aeroplanes in a dual capacity role, a conventional weapons role, whereby they would be able to take advantage of French airfields and whereby the air force itself would be useful to the United Nations if called upon by the United Nations. I think it would be much more useful if we could make that sort of progress toward building up the kind of United Nations force that we want. I cannot see that the Honest Johns equipped with nuclear weapons are doing us any good. It is obvious from the studies of the defence committee that they are not helpful to that brigade and that they should go to another unit.

I think Canadians have had to take a loss of sovereignty in order to acquire nuclear weapons, and they have not added to our defence but rather have only complicated it. With the threat always being there that a spark could set things off, I cannot emphasize too much the fact that our greatest defence is to accelerate the speed with which we can ready our armed forces, make them flexible and useful to the United Nations; to accelerate our efforts to gain for the United Nations ever greater support and power so that it will become a real peace keeping unit. I think the more we press along this line, the more vigorously are we actually engaging in the defence of Canadians.

I would hope that some time in the not too distant future the Prime Minister will make the announcement in this house that he has finally decided to keep his election promises and get Canada out of the nuclear weapons field; get nuclear weapons off Canadian soil, so we will regain our sovereignty. His statements at the United Nations with regard to a permanent peace keeping force seem to be bending in the right direction and it sounds as though he is interested in it. If this announcement is made, perhaps the people of Canada will then get the feeling that this government is interested in the defence of this country rather than in the political show they can make by dramatic announcements of the money they save. While speaking of the money being saved, Mr. Speaker, I must say I am sure most people in this country are very happy to think we can save something on defence. They would be quite happy to see defence spending cut very drastically, and I think it could be cut very drastically if we had some careful planning and a policy that precluded nuclear arms; a policy that envisaged Canada's best role as that of conventional forces available to the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to refer to just a couple of things brought out in the defence committee report of last year, because last June 7 the Prime Minister gave as one of the reasons for our taking nuclear arms the fact that we spent a billion dollars on this equipment. I think this idea has been spread around the country and the Liberals have tried to sell the idea that unless we take nuclear arms, all that money is wasted. I just wanted to point out that the evidence given before the defence committee which studied this subject—and I think the government made available to them the best information there was—does not sustain that argument in any manner. The Bomarc is more useful, they said, with a nuclear warhead, if bombers are the threat; and I say they are not. The Voodoo is more effective with a nuclear warhead, they said, but that is as far as it really goes. Its usefulness has not been demonstrated. The F-104, with some modifications, can have other than a nuclear role. So there is no justification, no honesty, to the argument that all this equipment would be wasted. I think, in fact, that we must consider the complications that arise out of our attempting to get into a nuclear role and our unsuitability for this. We must also consider the fact that many small and neutral nations in the world would have much more confidence in Canada if we were out of the nuclear field and we would be making more friends, and this is always a good line of defence.

I trust that we may in the very near future, Mr. Speaker, have our Prime Minister come into the house and confess that the government has abandoned its nuclear policy, that they are getting out of it, so they will be able to give us some honest statements on defence policy instead of political statements.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the discussion of Bill No. C-90 to amend the National Defence Act gives us an opportunity to express some ideas and discuss some principles which, I think, are directly related to the general philosophy on which our governments have always based their justification, or rather, their attempts at justifying their various defence policies.

Having returned from a week end trip where, with a group of other hon. members, we visited several military establishments, it was very difficult for us not to think of the enormous amounts that have been spent on defence. I honestly wonder whether we have not started on a wild race toward death and destruction of our civilizations.

In 1961, as well as in 1962, the defence budget in Canada was over $1.5 billion a year. And this is only for two years. If we calculate the interest at 6 per cent, which we had to pay for defence alone, it means $180 million. That is to say, in the last ten years we paid more than $1 billion in interest alone, without considering the large spending for war purposes.

I shall linger a few minutes on this point. We are in favour of passive defence. We also favour a good defence organization. We agree on acquiring all the latest instruments which exist or may yet be conceived.

But we also know that expenses for war purposes are not active capital. They produce no dividend.

We also know that our people must make enormous sacrifices for our defence to be maintained. If the general public has to make such huge sacrifices, I wonder why those who are in control of credit should not make the same sacrifices, which are imposed on the people, because all capital required for defence comes out of the taxpayer's pocket and is borrowed from high finance at interest rates which, I think, vary from 5 to 6 per cent.

Now, it is impossible for a country like Canada, with a population of about 19 million people, to keep up such expenses when these amounts can no longer be found in the taxpayers' pockets nor to be obtained by borrowing at exorbitant interest rates.

War has always existed among men. It was brought about in the course of history under all possible and imaginable excuses: conquest, right, might, honour, for God, for freedom, for civilization. There are, apparently, just and unjust wars.

Finally, in the living world, there is a universal order of which the great rule is the law of preservation of the individual. Up to now, war has only partially violated that rule, maybe not at all since the human species has managed to survive, but when the very existence of the species is jeopardized, when extermination is hanging over the species, war is violating the law of preservation of the universe.

Universe, man and the human species, have the same finality. This basic unit must be preserved and we must avoid a new war which would bring about disruption.

The conflict between capitalism and communism must be overcome and transposed to a superior plane. Inhuman to each other, both civilizations are surely not inhuman to the same degree or in the same way, but it is not true that one represents good and the other evil. It is not true that we must necessarily choose one against the other. Any propaganda on that basis already means war. It is a mobilization of mind and spirit which leads to plain mobilization.

Capitalism may despise man but the fact remains that, in western countries, man has the freedom to protest against such contempt. No doubt this freedom is relative, but man's conscience can nevertheless make itself heard.

Even if he is penniless, a man can speak, write, express his thoughts and his rebellion, unite with other men, denounce a system and fight against it.

Freedom, up to now, has been powerless, but it may not always be so. In any event, it remains the best weapon in the hands of men.

Despised, man in the western world can voice his complaint. Despised, man in the U.S.S.R. cannot even do that, because his masters have muzzled him. But woe unto the satellite nation that would even attempt to throw off the yoke.

If we are compelled to make a choice between two civilizations, we must choose capitalism, but only as a lesser evil and for only one reason: man in the western world has a little more freedom. We still have freedom of speech, but we are under the yoke of a financial dictatorship which delays progress and prevents economic, scientific, cultural and natural development, since it even prevents human beings from being born and undermines the vital foundations of the economy.

Because of its monstrosities, the one way capitalist system has made a great number of victims. The financial dictatorship spreads more ruins and hate and it has made more victims than the most devastating war.

The conscientious objector who refuses to go to war, not because he does not want to defend his country, but simply because he will not kill, is logical when he does not admit the present system, because that system kills and treats men like animals.

That conscientious objector is infinitely more human than the herds that accept to be led to the slaughter-house. What could the masters of the world do in the face of a general conscientious objection? A first step can and must be made in that direction. Let the non-atomic nations unite to notify the others of their intention to refuse the massacre, and before that tremendous force of three billion men, unarmed but determined, and they shall not dare.

Mankind is more and more conscious of the unity of its destiny. It is not possible it should accept to be driven to suicide. Therefore, all men must unite to prevent it. Since we are condemned to live in peace, we must seek as a solution to organize peace. Now, the only way to organize peace is to replace material values by moral values, to submit all men and all nations to a basic law of respect for each and everyone.

Any analysis, an analysis of the universe, of man and of the modern world, lead to the same conclusion: to live and to survive, mankind must give onto itself that law as soon as possible. That moral law, which Social Crediters have sworn to defend, is in fact the law of respect for life and conservation of man and mankind.

It is unthinkable that the law of mankind, stated or not, written or not, is a law of destruction of man, of the species. Man will have to accept a law of conservation and respect. It will be neither superstition, nor compulsion, nor slavery; in the last report, it will be the condition of his true liberty, so dear to the human being. The building of the new world will require time, courage and perseverance, but it will be a reality only when all the protectors of society will take their true responsibilities, and will not let the life of our women, men and children be shortened in this way.

And what about the moral results? The hardships imposed on our families by unpayable debts and by the excesses of a financing system and unpayable interests that take away the normal purchasing power of families; abundance calls aloud for vengeance as Abel's blood called out against Cain, and those murders are committed at home, in this Canada of ours, in our provinces, and it does not seem to disturb the sleep of the keepers of society.

On the doors of those offices where killing orders are issued, the commandment that is violated the year round: Thou shall not kill, should be engraved. And on the doors of ministers and members of parliament who legislate for the country: Thou shall not let kill.

So, the murderer is the money system. Those who support and defend it, support and protect a murdering system, those who make it legal, make legal a murdering system, if governments make legal and support the money system which deprives human beings of the necessities of life, those governments are party to a suicidal system.

Financial dictatorship assassinates our men, our women, our children, and puts our governments into slavery. During the war, there were tears and blood, because error took the place of truth. It is the lack of charity which kills people, which leads men, brothers by nature, to fight one another, and not only on the battlefields.

Thanks to technological progress, we should live in a garden of Eden; God has showered its blessings and gifts on earth and yet how many people do not have enough to live.

When science and finance work hand in hand, what can stop man? How many things can man do when financial obstacles are removed. Financial nonsense is brushed aside for war, but it is restored afterwards, and once again economic chaos prevails.

By way of solution, I would suggest to the government that there is only one thing to do, which is its bounden duty to do; to correct and revive our economy, the credit of the nation should be made available, and then we will be assured of a market for our products.

What we are now doing to create instruments of destruction might tomorrow serve to create a greatness such as the world has never known, provided we have the intelligence and ethics to recognize that there is enough for everybody in this new world.

Mr. Speaker, before ending my remarks, may I say that we are not opposed to the bill amending the National Defence Act, nor to the opportunity of voicing some ideas and discussing certain principles which, to my mind, are directly connected with the general philosophy on which our governments always based their justification, or, rather their attempts at justifying their various defence policies in the house.

Moreover, though we do not always tacitly accept the priority given to defence problems, we are ready to face those problems and to discuss them, so that possible decisions might better express the feeling of the Canadian people which we all represent here, in this house.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I cannot but voice some anxiety with regard to the results of this bill, if it is passed. For my part, I met several veterans who expressed worries similar to mine in this respect.

Each one of us here recognizes the greatness, the value of the Canadian forces. Indeed, our soldiers have always been a credit to their country, on the beaches of Normandy as well as in the Loire valley, in the swamps of Korea or in windy Sweden. Our armed forces have never failed to do their job, and every Canadian worthy of the name can be proud of that.

The value of Canadians has been the object of many testimonials. Our soldiers have fought to safeguard freedom and democracy, which are part of the great values on which is based our way of life.

It should never be forgotten that there is no one without a beloved friend or relative buried in Europe. And those who did come back deserve a great deal of consideration. That is why I am particularly afraid that the changes brought about by the passing of the bill now before us will unjustly affect, in certain cases, the members of our armed forces.

With the modern equipment and the new tactics, it must truly be difficult for many of our soldiers to adjust themselves to the new military life. It is the duty of national defence officials to provide programs likely to enable our soldiers, if not to adapt themselves to new procedures, at least to adjust easily to civilian life and to the ever-changing conditions on the labour market in our country.

Mr. Speaker, there is a last point I should like to emphasize. I ask the Minister of National Defence to look closely into it, in order to take the necessary measures. I refer to the exodus of many of our young people, who after an intensive training as technicians or for some other trade in our armed forces, after the country incurred considerable expenses to enable them to have a career and learn a trade, emigrate to the United States to accept civilian jobs which are better paid than in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to render justice to our veterans and to take the necessary arrangements so that every Canadian who has been a member of the armed forces, where he spent part of his life, who has ruined his health to defend Canada, be treated properly, because he certainly deserves all the advantages to which he is entitled. In fact, there should be no shabbiness when our gallant soldiers who defended us so well are concerned.

[Text]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the remarks I will make will be very brief because I see no reason for repetition and many of the points I wish to stress have already been emphasized by previous speakers. Though I say I will be brief in order to avoid repetition, I also wish to point out that it is not because I concern myself with the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) refers to anything over three minutes as a filibuster.

Quite often members have been inclined to say that because a debate may be prolonged in this house it is obstruction. This was the accusation made by one of the backbenchers on the government side just a week ago. However, I would like once again to stress the words of the Prime Minister who, on April 19, on a national television broadcast referred to the fact that so far as he was concerned the house had not done badly in terms of work in the preceding 44 days leading up to that time. I firmly believe the house has been progressing somewhat better since then.

The white paper brought down by the minister has come in for a lot of comment. I notice he has been quite busy with the pencil when someone puts what he considers an important question. I only hope he will come up with some important answers because, as was stated by previous speakers, the white paper does not give information to the satisfaction of the house, but poses many questions that need answering. As previous speakers have said, what it contains has been pointed out on any number of occasions in the last few years. I am somewhat concerned about the attitude of the government and I have one very pointed question I wish to put to the minister, a question to which I think the house deserves an answer. I hope he will consider it important enough to take out his pencil and make a note of it. Where is the minister getting his advice? From whom is he getting it?

Very thorough briefs were presented by the three services to the special committee. The minister attended the committee meetings on a number of occasions and no doubt he has studied these briefs. But there were many questions left unanswered. I think particularly of the thoroughness of the brief presented by Admiral Rayner of the navy and the concern of the navy with regard to its future role in the defence of this country. Yet only about half a page is devoted by the minister to the navy in the white paper.

The minister has tried to leave the impression, which has caught on in most places, that tremendous savings have been achieved. In fact, on the same telecast of April 19 to which I referred the Prime Minister implied that if anybody studied the white paper he would see the economies that had been brought about. I should like to refer for a moment to what the white paper actually does say. If the Prime Minister or anybody on the government side of the house can show me where Canadian taxpayers are going to be saved any money by this move then I should like to know where it is. The white paper states:

> The total savings to be effected as a result of such reductions will make available funds for capital equipment purchases, and eventually make possible more equitable distribution of the defence dollar between equipment and housekeeping costs. Sufficient savings should accrue from unification to permit a goal of 25 per cent of the budget to be devoted to capital equipment being realized in the years ahead.

As previous speakers have indicated, this is a matter of taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another, and there is no merit in the statement of the Prime Minister on the television broadcast of April 19 that integration is going to bring about economy. There has been much said about integration and since answers have not been forthcoming I assume that the minister looks upon integration as simply a matter of putting everybody in the same uniform. Up to now this is about the only clearcut explanation we have had. Everybody will be wearing the same uniform. But there has been no explanation whatsoever as to the method by which integration is going to be brought about.

Speaking of integration, I would point out that the question of the necessity for two ministers with defence portfolios has been brought up. Previous speakers have indicated that they have no wish to see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) replaced by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) or vice-versa. However, I will be a little more specific and a little more blunt. I have heard it said by servicemen and by some Liberal backbenchers and others, and I firmly go along with it, that the background of the Associate Minister of National Defence qualifies him to take over as minister, that this would do away with the necessity of two portfolios in the defence department and that integration should start at that level. When the question of unification and integration was brought before the committee—Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully ask you to remind the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) that you have recognized me and that I have the floor. If he has something to say on the subject of national defence I am sure everybody on this side of the house would appreciate hearing him speak when his turn comes. In the meantime, since I have been recognized, I ask the hon. member to abide by the procedure followed in the house and to rise and make his remarks when the time allotted to me has expired.

Once again I emphasize that it has been said in certain quarters that the background of the Associate Minister of National Defence qualifies him far better for the position of minister than the hasty boy who now holds that office. When I say "hasty" I am not reflecting in any way on his ability to drive a motorcycle, but I do point out that the minister has been very hasty on other occasions. When he was in opposition he saw fit to rush things. He rushed them to the point where we could read his views in the newspapers before he had actually uttered them.

He seems to be following the same trend in the integration of the forces. His policy is rush, rush, rush, with no plans and no answers for the questions that will develop in such an undertaking. Integration has taken place in the upper echelons of the government. We only have to look at the Department of Agriculture to see it is being done. We also see it is not working out very well there, so possibly the minister should take a second look at what is going on there and then make a thorough study of integration and unification of the services before he rushes headlong into this matter.

The minister who today professes to be saving Canadian taxpayers $100 million is the same gentleman who only a few short years ago wanted millions of dollars spent on the Avro Arrow for the sake of establishing a Canadian air speed record. Of course, when he spoke in those days he spoke, as the original natives of the country used to say, with a forked tongue. Why do I say that? I entered into no obligation not to bring up this matter and the minister will recall the occasion. This same minister is fully aware of the fact that the government of which he was a member decided that the Avro Arrow was to be cancelled. This was a decision taken by the St. Laurent government of which he was a member, and this evidence was brought out by General Charles Foulkes.

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that allegation is not true. It is without any foundation whatsoever. I deny it categorically. The subject was never considered by the government before the election of 1957.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the rules provide that I have to accept the minister's word. But this only proves something else. When the general was testifying before the defence committee and made that statement the minister failed to tell him at that time that it was a lie. It is all right to get up in the house on a question of privilege and say this is not so and that it never took place. Why did the minister not get up and tell General Foulkes, who I understand was once reaching for a Liberal nomination, that his statement that the government of Mr. St. Laurent had decided to cancel the Avro Arrow but to postpone it because of the election was not true? Why did the minister not deny it at that time? Instead he gets up in the House of Commons on a question of privilege and denies what I have said, but he did not take the opportunity to deny it when the general was before the committee. He also never took the opportunity to deny the press reports of the general's statement, but he rises here on a question of privilege and says it is not so. I said before, Mr. Speaker, that the rules dictate I have to accept his word but I do so only because of the rules.

I have referred to the haste of the minister in announcing his integration policy. I have referred to the submissions made by the representatives of the three services when they were before the defence committee. I point out to the minister that when the representatives of the services were questioned on the matter of integration, they were all of one opinion. It is recognized by all hon. members that one of the touchiest operations the government has in the defence department is to satisfy the demands made by the three services. This was quite clearly brought out in the committee. It was felt by all members of the upper echelon who appeared before the defence committee that possibly the unification of the services would stop this competition that goes on amongst the three services. They said, and at the time I believe everyone agreed or at least there was no denial of it, that this would be the effect.

However, what does the white paper say on this matter of eliminating competition amongst the services? I believe the word "jealousy" was used at that time. I refer to page 19 of the white paper, the third paragraph, where I read:

> The sailors will press for more ships, the soldiers for more tanks and the airmen for more planes. This is as natural as breathing. Competition will not be lost but it will be contained at the service level.

The fact remains that the understanding we received was that unification of the services would eliminate competition. In the white paper the minister now claims that competition will be contained at the service level. Nevertheless, the sailors will press for more ships, the airmen for more planes and the soldiers for more tanks. The understanding given to us was that the reason the services would go along with partial integration was that it would eliminate this competition. This causes us to ask once again, where is the minister getting his advice? Who is advising him? I am quite sure from what has been said previously that the service chiefs have not had their way. Here again we get back to the basic fact that competition has been contained possibly at the service level.

I should like to say one more word on the matter of the approach of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). As was stated by the previous speaker for this party, reference has been made to the nuclear role Canada has played and the reason this government undertook it. Reference was made also to the fact the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) considered it stupid; but the Minister of National Defence has taken so many different positions that no matter what is said in this argument he can say he said the same thing earlier. I would ask him to bear in mind that his own party has been breaking promises. Although we had a newspaper advertisement here outlining the party's promises to a community, the Prime Minister denied them and the result has been that the community involved has just gone down the drain. The promise meant nothing.

The Liberals were going to renegotiate out of the nuclear role. I am not saying for one moment that the Canadian forces should not have the latest and best equipment available. I do say the Liberals led the people of Canada to believe they were going to honour the commitments made by the previous government, and then renegotiate out of the nuclear role. Here we have the Bomarc sites in Canada armed with nuclear warheads, and they were not armed with nuclear warheads two weeks before the United States cancelled two of the six bases. There were supposed to be 32 bases constructed, but six were built. The moment Canada armed herself with nuclear warheads, the United States announced that two of these bases would be cancelled. I do not care whether the minister says it is the Bomarc A or the Bomarc B, the fact is the United States considered they were good enough to put into operation; but the moment Canada armed herself with nuclear warheads the United States cancelled two of these bases. In other words, we are filling in for them.

I feel it is about time this government finally realized there are a few election promises that they should carry out. As I have said, the minister has raced headlong into many problems. We have seen examples of this before. If the minister wishes to deny a statement made by General Foulkes, I would invite him to do what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) did, that is impose himself on the C.B.C. and tell the nation that General Foulkes lied before the committee. In essence, this is what the minister is saying when he denies what General Foulkes said. He may as well go out and tell the nation that the man lied. I probably should go a little deeper into this question, but when I consider this is the Minister of National Defence who, on occasion, has asked us to forget what he has said about national defence, I ask the minister how he can expect this nation to reply upon anything he has to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; it being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READING—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. S-12, respecting Allstate Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Ryan.

EVANGELINE SAVINGS AND MORTGAGE COMPANY

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (for Mr. Regan) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-15, to incorporate Evangeline Savings and Mortgage Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the incorporation of a loan company which, in all respects, will be governed by the Loan Companies Act. It has significance because the company is being organized by a group of Nova Scotians with the purpose of providing an opportunity for people in that province to participate more actively in this important field. It is expected also that the new company, because of its local ownership and knowledge of the province, will be able to engage locally in areas not presently covered by other companies. In particular, the need exists for more mortgage lending in the smaller centres of Nova Scotia and in the rural areas. It is the hope that this service can be extended by the proposed company.

The group of organizers of the company is headed by Mr. G. Gordon F. Hughes, a successful businessman in Windsor, Nova Scotia, and the other incorporators are well known in the province. It is not proper on moving second reading to enter upon any detailed discussion of the affairs of the proposed company but, of course this information will be available at the committee stage.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ACCEPTANCE OF LOCAL CURRENCIES

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-24, to amend the Bank of Canada Act (reserve).

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-24 I am introducing today is a bill to amend:

1. Subsection (2) of section 23 of the Bank of Canada Act is amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) and the following paragraph immediately after the said paragraph (c):

(d) The lawful currency of any other country whatsoever, whether or not the same is convertible into gold, provided that the total value of all such currencies held does not exceed five hundred million dollars. The quantity of any such currency or currencies that may be so held, and the valuation thereof, shall be subject to such regulations as the governor general in council shall from time to time prescribe.

Under section 23, the bank is permitted to hold certain categories of foreign exchange as a reserve against its note and deposit liabilities. These are primarily U.S. dollars and pounds sterling, and other currencies convertible at a fixed price into gold. As a matter of fact, the amount held in that way by the Bank of Canada was $49,906,875 in pounds sterling, and United States dollars, and $252,030 in other currencies, that is a total of $50,158,905 in foreign currencies.

However, a developing world shortage of gold and convertible currencies particularly in the hands of nations which offer potential markets for Canadian exports, is proving a hindrance to Canada's overseas trade. This amendment would accordingly permit, within certain well defined limits, the Bank of Canada to accept non-convertible local currencies as part of its foreign exchange reserves. In this way, Canadian sales on foreign markets could be made for local currencies and the foreign currencies so acquired could be made available either for purchase of foreign products, or for investment in or aid to the countries concerned.

I have found justification for this bill precisely in the speech from the throne of the twenty sixth parliament, as shown on page 6 of Hansard for May 16, 1963, where I find the following statement:

> It is equally important to pursue active policies for the economic development of the newer nations, for the expansion of trade in primary commodities at reasonably stable prices, and for the improvement of international payments.

At the present time, our international payments balance is a constant nightmare for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and at the same time it makes our foreign trade subject to constant restrictions.

Furthermore, in the speech from the throne published on February 18, 1964, I read on page 2 this sentence:

> My ministers will negotiate for the expansion of markets for Canadian exports through the liberalization of world trade.

So, we have there a means of liberalizing these exchanges.

How many countries in the world would like to do business with us on an equal footing? For what they want is not charity. One of the more serious problems in the world today is that production is wrongly divided, wrongly distributed, in an international circuit bristling with national selfishness, taxes, customs, in a tenacious and mercantile confusion between needs for consumer goods and capital goods, the whole linked by a debt-greedy monetary system.

In short, it is a blockade applied to international trade through the obligation of using only convertible currency.

At the present time, our unfavourable balance is partially corrected because the government decided to trust communist countries and to sell them wheat amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

But we could also do a lot more business with a great number of other countries.

In fact, on July 2, 1963, the Minister of Finance stated, and I quote:

> Canada suffers of chronic deficits in its current account payments with other countries and that the only means of reducing such chronic deficits is to diversify our exchanges and to increase the number of our clients.

On the other hand, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) stated on July 5, 1963, as recorded on page 1901 of Hansard:

> I am also aware of the great difficulties of doing business in those countries—

The discussion was about South America.

> —and about the importance therefore of having credit facilities to enable those countries to go on purchasing goods from abroad.

Already our country allows long term credit to several foreign countries because we trust them. Why not, then, trust their currency?

This is the core of the problem, and the proposed amendment will make possible an advantageous deblocking, since it will result in thousands of new positions in our Canadian businesses through an increase in our exports.

International trade in itself is only a barter of products. The part played by money is only incidental. After all, once the exchange has taken place, we find that what the countries exchanged were goods and services. The balance of payments expresses and summarizes this trading. Money is only a medium and its intervention tends to balance operations.

In order to attain the objective of Bill No. C-24 parity has to be established between the currencies of the various countries with which we conclude agreements. Parity does not mean the par of exchange as in foreign exchange dealings. Between two nations, there is parity of exchange, when the rates are similar on both markets, when, for instance, the French franc is bought with Canadian dollars at the same price as when Canadian dollars are bought with French francs. There is parity when the exchange rate on both markets is expressed by the same figures.

Mr. Speaker, I find the spirit of this legislation again in the Havana charter, which was signed by the representatives of 56 countries—with the exception of Russia—after discussions that lasted from November 21, 1947 to March 24, 1948, to develop international trade by ridding it as much as possible from all barriers paralysing the international exchange of goods.

On the other hand, the Quebec Le Soleil, of April 10, 1963, published the following:

Great Britain and the European countries begin to ask for a monetary reform in order to relieve the dollar from international pressures, to eliminate the dangers which threaten that currency, as well as the inadequacies of the present international payments system.

I know some large firms which are capable of exporting 80 per cent of their production in 140 different countries by accepting the currency of the nations concerned, and who are developing a considerable business. The fact that private firms can do business in this way, by accepting the currency of foreign countries, indicates that such transactions are easy and that the Bank of Canada would have no difficulty in doing so.

On May 31, 1963, Mr. Reginald Maudling, the British chancellor of the exchequer, announced that an Anglo-American agreement had just been signed between Great Britain and the United States, agreeing to mutually accept their currencies, which meant a barter agreement to reinforce the value of the dollar and the pound on the international market. Under that agreement, the central banks of the two countries agreed to grant each other credit for $500 million.

Therefore, besides the exchange operations through the international monetary fund, we shall have a free sector which will liberalize our trade. One of the most knowledgeable economists in the world, Mr. Jacques Rueff, president of the Institut de France, and former deputy governor of the Banque de France, who has just been made a member of the académie française, stated last year that:

The whole monetary system of the free world was based on a heresy—

and recently wrote in his "Discourse on credit", page 49:

I regret that the main purpose of the discussions which marked the Vienna session of the international monetary fund, in September 1961 was to extend the existence, therefore the damages, of the gold standard and that they practically completely ignored the only real problem, which is to do away with it.

The strangest thing in the present Bank of Canada Act is that only currencies convertible in gold are accepted, when those currencies are never really converted into gold.

On February 25, 1964, I put question No. 184 on the order paper of the house in order to know the amount of foreign currencies convertible into gold which was in fact converted into gold during the last five years, and from what countries came those currencies. It took almost two months and a half before I received an answer, and that answer was so involved that in fact it did not answer the question I had put.

The gold standard for international trade is a joke, because there is no actual movement of gold from one country to the other. Gold certificates are used, and they are just as good.

For instance, we recently exported locomotives to Mexico and Brazil, by providing a federal loan guaranteed by the governments of those countries. And they will have to pay us in U.S. dollars. But we buy coffee from Brazil and pineapples from Mexico and, because of our requirements, they also demand U.S. dollars. However, there is never an exchange of bank notes, but only bank transfers. And yet, Brazil and Mexico do not issue U.S. credit. Neither does Canada.

It is easy to understand why the main countries, including ours, have a deficit position with the United States. It is the cause of the blockade of international trade.

I should like to quote a resolution introduced by the Brazilian delegation at the 51st interparliamentary conference held in Brasilia, Brazil, where I had the honour to represent Canada in October 1962. It reads as follows:

That they should give a stimulus to the development of international trade, even through the adoption of a policy of commercial relations with every nation, in order to enable the producing countries to sell their products directly to the consuming markets.

Mr. Speaker, before 1940, our Canadian paper money was convertible into gold and, since then, that paper money has become non-convertible. Does that mean that Canadians have lost confidence in their money? The same thing applies on the international level. The non-convertible currency of a foreign country is just as good as a convertible currency. The fiduciary currency circulating in most countries of the world is non-convertible, the same as ours. Its value is based solely on the confidence people have in it. The money we have now may be defined as a claim to social assets. It is purchasing power liberated either by the public authorities or the bank issuing it.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a statement made yesterday morning by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a statement which is so much in accord with this measure that I shall take it upon myself to quote it. Here it is:

First, the trade negotiations committee has recognized explicitly that Canada is a country with such a commercial and economic structure that negotiations restricted to a simple formula of uniform tariff reductions would not produce mutual advantages.

It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. And even if we would now succeed in reducing tariff barriers, if we do not accept foreign currency, how can we sell to other countries, since, as I said earlier, we always ask for American dollars? I hope finally that the government will not try to kill this bill which would promote the development of Canadian economy and would enable us, in addition, to cope with part of the unemployment, owing to the great economic activity which could be induced by our exports abroad.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have appreciated what the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) had to say concerning the responsibilities of the Bank of Canada.

The explanatory note concerning Bill No. C-24, the object of which is to amend section 23 of the Bank of Canada Act, stipulates that the Bank of Canada should hold only a reserve of 25 per cent against its outstanding notes and deposit liabilities, whether in gold, in foreign bills of exchange, or in foreign securities.

If I refer to the 1962 Canada Year Book, and more particularly to the chapter concerning the Bank of Canada, which is repeated each year, I find on page 1089 the following:

> Section 23 of the Bank of Canada Act provides that the Bank shall maintain a reserve of gold equal to not less than 25 per cent of its outstanding notes and deposit liabilities. This requirement was suspended in 1940 when, under the terms of the exchange fund order, the bank's gold holdings were transferred to the exchange fund account to form part of Canada's official gold and United States dollar reserves.

In other words, that means gold held by the Bank of Canada in 1940 was transferred to the United States dollar reserves.

And I continue:

> The Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act passed in 1952 provides that, notwithstanding section 23 of the Bank of Canada Act, the Bank of Canada is not required to maintain a minimum or fixed ratio of gold or foreign exchange to its liabilities unless the governor in council prescribes otherwise.

All this means that monetary control in Canada was, in fact, transferred to the Americans in 1940, and further, that we are now unable to make our own decisions, in short, that at this point, we are not even able to effect a commercial transaction with any other country without being duly authorized by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, there are some countries in the world which never believed in the myth of gold as a reserve or monetary basis. It is difficult for us to do business with them today, precisely because of the monetary control of the United States over Canada.

I refer to the regulations of the Bank of Canada, and, on page 1089 of the Canada Year Book for 1962, we find this:

> The bank may accept deposits that do not bear interest from the government of Canada, the government of any province, any chartered bank or any bank to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies. The bank does not accept deposits from individuals and does not compete with the chartered banks in commercial banking fields.

The matter is probably not exactly related to the question of gold reserves, but it, nevertheless, raises certain questions which the Minister of Finance will some day have to answer.

Indeed, why does the Bank of Canada pay no interest to the Canadian government, while charging the government some? Why should the bank not pay any interest to the provinces, when they have to pay interest to the bank? Why this absolute control on the economic life of a nation like ours, which needs to proceed with its development?

The purpose of Bill No. C-24 is to amend that part of the act which maintains the Bank of Canada under foreign control.

We cannot accept such a control over the Bank of Canada, because it is essential that our country transact business with other countries of the free world, whether or not there is gold.

Gold does not increase the value of the dollar or currency of any country in the world. What gives value to a currency is a country's production.

It is the production of goods and services that counts for any country, and when Americans or others tried to have us believe that gold was essential to do business with each other, they lied barefacedly and they definitely misled us.

Mr. Speaker, it is about time that the Bank of Canada Act be amended in order to make it more efficient, not only with regard to our foreign trade, to our trade or industrial relations with the other countries of the world, but also to make it more flexible, so that Canadians may develop their country and have a better organized production, allowing Canada to put on the international market Canadian products which will be a credit to our country, in short, to give to our monetary system the necessary flexibility.

Mr. Speaker, the suggested amendment is along those lines. There will be also other amendments with regard to the Bank of Canada in order to make it more efficient, more suited to the economic situation, and also to place it at the service of the whole Canadian population, at the service of physical possibilities that we have to make Canada greater and more prosperous, and able to co-operate further with the other nations of the world.

[Text]

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, despite the rather vehemently and strongly worded assertions of the previous speaker on the subject of amending the Bank of Canada Act, I must say that I can find no justification for the conclusions he has drawn. I believe that in Canada we have the framework, the backbone if you like, of one of the soundest banking systems in the world. I agree that nothing is perfect, and no organization which this government at Ottawa attempts to establish will ever attain perfection. There is constant need for improvement. But when you attack the fundamental principle upon which the system rests, thereby irresponsibly destroying confidence in something which is good, then you invite severe and direct response to such an attack.

Mr. Caouette: You do not even understand it. You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Lloyd: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the irresponsibility extends to the point where the advocate of such a policy as that now before the house would even deny those who disagree with him the right to offer some kind of comprehensive answer—and he shall get it.

As explained by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté), this bill proposes that the Bank of Canada should be able to hold the currency of other countries, and particularly countries in need of financial assistance. It is also proposed that the Bank of Canada will accept the currencies of these countries up to half a billion dollars.

There has been nothing offered to the house by way of explanation as to where the half billion dollars will come from. To the hon. gentleman who just said that I did not know what I was speaking about, may I ask him to share with me an examination of the balance sheet of the Bank of Canada, and to take a good hard look at it. If he does he will find that the Bank of Canada, at the end of 1963, held government of Canada securities to the extent of over $3 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I invite the same respect for my remarks as I gave hon. members of the house when they were speaking. To the hon. gentleman who had so much to say in criticism, and who is so quick to accuse others of not knowing what they are talking about, I ask does he realize that in order to provide this half a billion dollars, under existing arrangements the Bank of Canada would have to liquidate a half billion dollars of Canadian government securities, and to that extent dry up from the Canadian economy a half billion dollars of purchasing power with its resulting downward effect on the purchasing power of Canadians?

If you read the balance sheet of the Bank of Canada you can see how it operates. The bank obtains its capital from its true shareholders, being the government of Canada. It receives it in the form of deposits of the chartered banks of Canada and, in addition, it has in circulation to the general public over $2 billion as at the end of 1963. If this serves no other purpose but to illustrate that we do know what we are talking about, at least it is that much to the good, and I hope the hon. gentleman who offers this criticism will himself be able to say so after this debate.

If you take a look at the operating statement of the Bank of Canada you will find that its income from investments in 1963 totalled $127 million, and that these investments are mostly government of Canada bonds. You will find that the expenses of operating the bank were only $10 million, and the net amount paid to the Receiver General of Canada was $116 million. To the extent then that this reduces the investments in government of Canada bonds held by the Bank of Canada, it reduces the earnings of the Bank of Canada, and therefore it reduces the revenues of the Receiver General of Canada by that amount. To make this up he has got to find it by way of taxes or other ways.

I am sure the hon. gentleman has gone through this exercise on many occasions, and that he is fully aware that except for the $10 million of expenses that appears in the Bank of Canada's statement for operating expenses, the government of Canada borrows from those who hold notes some $2 billion at a mere expense of $10 million a year. If, on the other hand, you take these investments in government of Canada bonds and you proceed to invest them in currencies, convertible or not, of other countries, which are non-interest bearing, you thereby reduce the income of the government of Canada by that amount, and it has to make it up in some other way.

Furthermore, the Bank of Canada must in turn liquidate half a billion dollars of its government of Canada securities to be able to invest in these proposed currencies, and what it invests in these currencies dries up the savings of Canadians to that extent. It subtracts from the credit capability of the Canadian banking system to that extent, and with the multiplier effect on the economy, the bill would have the opposite effect to what it proposes to do. This is the shocking fact you have to face when you sum up the claims made by hon. gentlemen opposite, namely that it will do the opposite to what is proposed.

We should not forget that the Bank of Canada has a function to perform in managing the debt of the country and in maintaining stability of the value of our dollar. There are no two ways about that; but the bank does not perform the function of providing financial aid to foreign countries. This is done by the external affairs department of the Canadian government, and when we propose foreign aid to stimulate a development in another country we bring it to the house for an appropriation of funds. This must be done if we want to have democratic responsibility retained in House of Commons, unless you want to give it away to some department.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lloyd: I suppose the hon. gentleman opposite must have read that famous dissertation of a Dutch delegate when speaking to an American delegate at Bretton Woods, when he said it is better to have loaned and lost than not to have loaned at all. Perhaps it is on that kind of philosophy that this bill is based, but there is no need for us to take such a chance.

The international monetary fund provides a means for expediting the need for exchange of countries that are developing, if they have any capability at all. Second, we have the world bank, and its purpose is to assist those countries in need of capital financing. The world bank is supported by the leading nations of the world, in fact practically by all the nations of the world with any financing ability at all.

As one writer put it, the record of the world bank, or the international bank for reconstruction and development, is one of quiet success.

> It has contributed modestly to the flow of international investment since the war and the volume of its transactions is increasing. Its loans, totalling $5,181 million, have made a contribution towards alleviating the dollar shortage.

It seems to me it would be more desirable to focus attention on this mechanism, through which to work and try to encourage improvement in the operations of this international banking system, rather than introduce some tinkering with the value of the Canadian dollar.

> Its loans, totalling $5,181 million, have made a contribution towards alleviating the dollar shortage and have enabled a considerable number of projects in small and backward countries to be undertaken which, because they are only indirectly productive or profitable, would not have been undertaken without the bank's aid. It has become a specialized institution to deal with such projects and its usefulness cannot be judged solely by the statistical record of its loan operations. A notable feature of the bank is that it has gained the respect and confidence of business and financial interests, being itself run as a business by bankers in close collaboration with Wall street and financial interests throughout the world.

Mr. Marcoux: Would the hon. member give the name of the book he is quoting, and also the name of the author?

[Mr. Lloyd.]

Mr. Lloyd: The book from which I just quoted at page 240 is a work by W. M. Scammell, entitled "International Monetary Policy", published by the MacMillan company, 1962. I believe that is the information the hon. member requests. I might say that an extensive reading of this work might prove useful to the questioner. Incidentally, some of the other quotations were made from Mr. Rasminsky's presentation to the royal commission on banking, in which he set forth the fact that the Bank of Canada is not responsible for the operation of Canada's foreign exchange control funds. Since 1939 this has been the direct responsibility of government, and decisions regarding the determination of the exchange rate and the conduct of official foreign exchange operations are government decisions.

To abandon the facilities available to us through the international monetary fund, to ignore the world bank and to abandon the device of special votes of parliament for foreign aid programs when they are needed—to ignore all these things and then propose that we could do them all through an amendment to the Bank Act whereby we would take the non-convertible currencies of other countries would in my opinion simply destroy all the common sense in international finance that we have managed to achieve since the end of world war II.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

If he listened to me well, he must know that I did not say that we must repudiate our agreements with the international monetary fund; I said that parallel to the international monetary fund we would set up a free zone.

My words should not be twisted; I think that the hon. member is getting away from the matter under consideration.

Mr. Dupuis: That is not a question, it is a clarifying statement.

[Text]

An hon. Member: He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Lloyd: You will recall that there were two spokesmen on that subject, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). The hon. member for Villeneuve was the one I said was most vehement and most extravagant in his condemnation of the existing banking system. In all fairness I would also say to the hon. member for Chicoutimi that he distinguished himself from the hon. member for Villeneuve by the reasonableness of some of the observations he made.

My criticism is mainly directed toward the spokesman who attempted to defend the bill of the hon. member for Chicoutimi with far more extravagant exaggeration than one would hope would ever be expressed in this house. There was a wealth of generalization, unfounded on any sound hypotheses and certainly not based on anything that one could accept as valid. The hon. member for Chicoutimi, who introduced the bill, did confine himself to an explanation that it would supplement the efforts of the world bank, the efforts of the international monetary fund and the foreign aid programs of the government of Canada. But I must say to him in all fairness that it will not supplement those efforts. If anything it would hinder them, unfortunately, for the reasons I have given.

In short, the Bank of Canada would have to sell government of Canada securities to provide the funds with which to produce the half billion dollars. There is no doubt about that. It would have to sell government of Canada securities to provide the funds and in so doing it would dry up savings in Canada for that purpose and divert them from the Canadian economy. When you consider the multiplying effect of such a transaction the objective of the bill would not be attained. On the contrary, you would lessen the capability to give assistance through federal aid programs by way of appropriations made by this house and by way of assistance to the international monetary fund and to the world bank. I believe that the motives of the promoter of the bill are certainly to be highly commended but the method he has chosen is highly impractical and would, indeed, worsen rather than ease the situation.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on the bill because I wanted it to come to a vote, but the previous speaker has distorted and misconstrued its intent so badly that I think I should take about three minutes to attempt to remove some of the confusion from his mind with respect to what its intent is. I think he misses the point completely when he talks about the Bank of Canada having to sell other securities in order to have as part of its reserves the currencies of other countries. Surely there is a valid argument that can be made for changing the law so that Canada is not obliged to accept only the currencies of the United States and the United Kingdom or gold.

The suggestion made by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) that the Bank of Canada could hold for exchange purposes an amount not exceeding $500 million in other currencies surely would expedite trade so that we could deal directly with these countries. At the present time some other agency must be employed. Their currencies must be converted to the currency of the United States or the United Kingdom. We think that Canada has reached a position in the world today where we should be able to deal directly through the medium of their currencies and ours. This is the point that the hon. member for Chicoutimi was trying to make. Considering the volume of Canada's trade with all these other countries in the world, he put a reasonable limit on the amount, and surely the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) should accept and recognize the intent of the bill without trying to draw an interpretation that was not intended at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, some hon. members are grumbling because I want to talk about the Bank of Canada. Of course, in the last 14 months, I have heard quite a number of them talk about that same subject without knowing anything about it and I suppose that after hearing the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd), they will realize that if there are, on this side of the house, members who talk about the Bank of Canada, it is because they are familiar with the matter under consideration.

An hon. Member: We have been studying it for the last 14 months.

Mr. Chrétien: Bill No. C-24 introduced by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) proposes to amend the Bank of Canada Act. In short, the hon. member for Chicoutimi would like to change the definition of the words "foreign currency" in order to allow the Bank of Canada to hold non-convertible foreign currencies.

In short, this change means that the Bank of Canada will hold local currency which will allow it to deal only on the markets of the countries concerned. In my opinion, this would have no practical value since Canadian currency is now in great demand on international markets. Anyhow, why change our Canadian money for foreign currencies of lesser value.

Moreover, according to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) on November 14, 1963, the purpose of the Canadian policy is to help those countries to purchase in Canada by giving them funds to make the necessary transactions. I wonder then what would be the practical purpose of the measure introduced by the hon. member for Chicoutimi, since we now offer these countries the funds they need to make transactions with us.

From the technical point of view, the bill is useless since section 23 of the Bank of Canada Act is not in force at present, because section 25 (2) of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, chapter 315 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, provides that the Bank of Canada is not required to maintain a minimum reserve of gold and foreign exchange and suspends the application of section 23.

Obviously my hon. friends opposite are somewhat annoyed to see that I can deal with this question because for months they told the electors of Quebec that it was useless to understand the meaning of this since, they said, the important thing is to print money and that is what we are going to do.

However, the Porter commission which has just completed its hearings has examined those problems thoroughly and has made recommendations, especially in chapter 15 of its report.

Now, before introducing any bill I think that our hon. friends should examine the report of the Porter commission. I have begun to study this voluminous report; of course, it is not easy, but as I am a responsible member I am reading this book completely before talking about it in a decisive manner.

The first impressions I get from this report lead me to believe that it is a very conservative one, in that it does not favour sufficient intervention from the state into those financial fields.

At the present time, if we want Canada to maintain its particular identity, the government will have to take its responsibilities as regards the banking and financial institutions and not leave everything to free enterprise as the Porter commission seems to suggest.

Another point struck me when I read the Porter commission report, a point which was also commented by the press. It is the fact that the commission did not concern itself enough with the constitutional implications of its recommendations. We are already reading in the press that certain recommendations will create problems—

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are not considering the Porter commission but Bill No. C-24. Consequently, I would ask the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche to revert to the subject under consideration.

Mr. Chrétien: Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite in order to speak of the Porter commission, because it had been asked by the previous government to look into banking problems in Canada.

We are now discussing the problems of the Bank of Canada and if my remarks are out of order, I wonder when they will be in order, since I am now speaking about a matter dealing with bank problems in Canada.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member. Could he explain to the house why the recommendations set forth by the royal commission on banking appointed in 1944 have not yet been put into practice? If we have to wait that long to put into practice the recommendations of the Porter commission, it will certainly take considerable time for the Liberal party to implement them.

Mr. Chrétien: I am pleased to answer this question of the hon. member for Shefford. A commission can make recommendations that the government may find unacceptable. And when we have responsible government like the one we then had, it is possible that it decided not to accept them in the political climate that prevailed at the time.

The last commission which studied the problem was the MacMillan commission and, unless I am mistaken, it did so in 1933, not in 1944. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the bill introduced by the hon. member for Chicoutimi—

Mr. Vincent: Would the hon. member allow me a question? In the few minutes remaining before the bill is put to a vote, could the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche explain why his party supported Social Credit on the question of interest free and exchange free money?

Mr. Chrétien: The point is that I was not in the house when that proposal was made. However, even suggestions made by members of the opposition may be considered acceptable at times, and if it was deemed acceptable at that time—

Mr. Dupuis: No, that is false.

Mr. Chrétien: Maybe, but unfortunately, I was not here at the time; I stood as a candidate in 1963 only. Evidently, our people understood that the policy of free money was not very serious and they decided to re-elect as they used to, a Liberal member.

Anyhow, I commend the hon. member for Chicoutimi for having considered that question. He made a serious speech. I do not agree with his conclusions, but I find there is a great contrast—I regret the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is not in his seat—between the seriousness of his speech and the usual idle talk of the hon.

member for Villeneuve. You will agree I would have made my speech, even in the presence of the hon. member for Villeneuve, for I suppose that everyone in the house has listened to the speeches made by him, when he wants to revolutionize everything and "start the money press rolling."

Mr. Rondeau: Could the hon. member tell me when the hon. member for Villeneuve said to "start the money press rolling"?

Mr. Chrétien: All over the province of Quebec, during the election campaigns of 1962 and 1963.

Mr. Rondeau: I wish to tell the house—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; I think it might be just as well if hon. members returned to a discussion of the bill before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Hence, Mr. Speaker, I think that, at the present time, the bill moved by the hon. member for Chicoutimi will not attain the very praiseworthy objectives it was meant to achieve. We have at present a Canadian currency with a fairly good value on the international market and the Bank of Canada Act and other related acts provide that the bank shall hold foreign currencies. We are holding here monetary securities other than Canadian securities, in this case American and British securities, because the pound sterling and the American dollar, just like the Canadian dollar, are very stable securities on the money market, and I think it is quite reasonable that we should hold, in the Bank of Canada, the best monetary securities on the market.

But if, at any time, other securities are more stable than the American dollar or the pound sterling, then it would be in our interest to amend the Bank of Canada Act so as to authorize the bank to hold securities other than the ones held at present.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock, the hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the exact duties of the Secretary of State; the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, the establishment of a secretariat for federal-provincial relations; the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox, cheese, inquiry as to export assistance.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPLACEMENT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hellyer for the second reading of Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? I must caution the house that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The Associate Minister of National Defence has already dealt with some of the questions raised by hon. gentlemen opposite. Tonight I should like to take this opportunity to deal briefly with a number of other questions which have been raised and elaborate on them a little.

Both the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) were critical of the fact that I limited my opening remarks to the terms of the bill now before the house rather than give a general review of defence matters. While in no way limiting the range of debate as far as hon. members are concerned, I considered that since a detailed statement on defence policy was contained in the white paper tabled less than two months ago, sufficient background was available and that any comments from me would have been repetitious in the circumstances.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) raised some general objections to the white paper. He said it was too generalized, that it lacked detail and that the first few pages contained little that is new. Well, the first part is a historical review. It was put in deliberately to give some of the background leading up to the changes in policy which we now propose for the decade that lies ahead. The balance of the paper is devoted to a general statement of policy—a general outline of the structure proposed by the government for the coming decade. Allegations have been made that white papers in the past have contained too much detail and too little about general policy—that too much space was devoted to lists of equipment and statistics and not enough to the outlining of future policy. I thought there was some validity in those allegations and for that reason in preparing a policy document we decided that the most important content of the present white paper must be the portion devoted to policy, and that once the policy had been laid down the staff work could go forward on the basis of that policy. The statistics relating to hardware and so on could be produced—as soon as the detailed staff work has gone forward on the basis of the general requirements as laid down in the white paper. This seems to me to be a proper and logical way in which to proceed—first, the general policy and then the details based on that policy.

The hon. member for Calgary North referred to the sheet which accompanied the publication of the white paper listing highlights, including the fact that there were a number of Glassco commission recommendations to be implemented. He asked what those recommendations were. Apart from the integration of the forces and increased responsibilities for the deputy minister as outlined in the white paper, many of these additional recommendations are in fact now being implemented, including the re-organization of the information services of the armed forces for the purpose of cutting down the total number of people involved and thus promoting economy, the preparation of estimates on the basis of programs of activity rather than on the basis of standard objects of expenditure, and so on. This, too, was mentioned in the section of the white paper which the hon. member found some difficulty in interpreting. I cannot at this time list in detail the various actions being taken by the department with regard to finance, personnel management, purchasing and supply, but I can assure the hon. member that the progress we have made is considerable.

The hon. gentleman said that two of the words used in the white paper, "flexibility" and "mobility", are old words which have been used on many occasions before. I agree they have been used on both sides of the house. What we need to do now is to get on with the action to provide the mobility and the flexibility to allow our forces to cope quickly and adequately with any situation which may require their attention anywhere in the world.

The hon. member seemed confused between the unification of the high command and the integration of the armed services. The white paper makes the point crystal clear on page 19. It says this:

> ...the integration of the armed forces of Canada under a single chief of defence staff and a single defence staff...will be the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

I think it follows logically that once the high command has been unified and once the armed forces of Canada are organized on a functional basis rather than along traditional service lines the complete integration of the armed services will follow as a natural evolution from this change in organization. There will, of course, always be soldiers, sailors and airmen. We may also, some day in the future, have spacemen. But the duplication between two or more of the traditional forces is increasing and the overlapping is increasing; there are at the present time dozens of similar trades required by two or more of the armed forces of Canada, and there will be savings, and there will be economies and there will be a better use of manpower, once the forces have been organized on a functional basis, more particularly as integration proceeds.

The hon. member said an artillery officer could not command a destroyer. That may be so, but I suspect that an artillery officer might find himself quite at home with a naval gun after a brief familiarization period. Certainly many of the basic skills involved are the same. I think there should be no doubt left in anyone's mind as to what is intended: This unification of the command of the three armed forces is, as stated in the white paper, intended to be the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

The question of civil control has been raised. Two or three hon. gentlemen have referred to the article by Brigadier Malone. I can assure the house that there is no problem in this respect. There will in fact be much better civil control in the future than has been possible in the past. The single defence staff will present its findings to the minister through the defence council, and before they are considered by the defence council they will be analysed fully by the appropriate section of the deputy minister's staff; that is, all proposals involving policy or the expenditure of public funds will be analysed by the civilian staff before they are considered by the defence council and before decisions are taken in respect of them. In addition, by using the defence council as—if I may use this term—a cabinet of the Department of National Defence, it will be possible to get a complete and full expression of opinion from both the senior civil advisers and the senior military advisers, so that all of the best opinion, advice and information available will be discussed and considered before decisions are taken. This will permit, I believe, a more thorough examination of policy and of projects than has been possible in the past. It will permit a stronger civil control than has been the case, and it will also permit a better civilian direction in the sense that it will be possible to implement more closely defence policy as laid down by the government.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) as usual made a very interesting contribution to the debate, and I appreciate his remark that his party will support Bill No. C-90. His main subject, however, was related to NATO strategy and his opposition to tactical nuclear weapons being employed in Europe. He suggested—and he can correct me if I am wrong—that more reliance should be placed on strategic nuclear weapons. There I disagree, since I consider that too much reliance on strategic nuclear weapons poses a far greater threat to peace.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question? The minister has suggested that I should correct him if he is wrong. I should like to correct him right now, if I am in order in so doing.

Mr. Hellyer: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker, because I remember what the hon. member said. He suggested that reliance, for example, should be placed on Polaris seaborne missiles as an alternative to tactical nuclear weapons on the central front in Europe. Is that not correct?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the minister is now asking me a question. What I suggested was that the strike reconnaissance role could be more effectively carried out by Polaris weapons on submarines which were not vulnerable, rather than by strike reconnaissance aircraft, as at the present time.

Mr. Hellyer: That is exactly what I thought the hon. gentleman had said.

Mr. Brewin: It is the same type of weapon.

Mr. Hellyer: It is with that, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to take issue, because first of all there is a difference in scale between seaborne or submarine Polaris missiles, for example, which are clearly in the strategic category, and tactical weapons such as those carried by tactical aircraft in the strike role.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit one other question? Does he not agree that the distinction between strategic and tactical weapons lies in the target, and if the target is a military one it can be properly defined as a tactical weapon; if, on the other hand, the target is behind the lines, as it were, civilians, cities, industries, and so on, then it becomes a strategic weapon at that stage?

Mr. Hellyer: I agree that this is a distinction. I think the hon. gentleman should know, however, that the difference in degree of accuracy between seaborne and submarine-borne missiles such as he suggests, and those which would be carried by strike aircraft, makes all the difference in this case between strategic weapons and tactical weapons. Whereas a tactical strike aircraft can deliver with almost unbelievable precision its bomb or lethal load, whatever it is, to a military target, you could not possibly take that sort of a chance with a shipborne or submarine-borne Polaris missile, where the degree of accuracy is not adequate to permit its being used against a military target that happened to be, for example, in proximity to some urban or built-up area. There is quite a real and sharp distinction between these two systems. It is for this reason that I think considerable reliance must be put on tactical weapons as against strategic weapons, because strategic weapons are a weapons system of last resort. They are, in fact, directly related to the doctrine of massive retaliation which the hon. gentleman rejects.

Mr. Brewin: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: The choices, if one relies solely on strategic weapons, are surrender or annihilation, and surely this is not what the hon. member really wants. The advantage of having tactical nuclear weapons is to provide a deterrence at a lower threshold than strategic retaliation. The NATO alliance does not have sufficient strength to deter aggression on the central front without tactical nuclear weapons. If our object is to deter war, we must face the reality of the situation. A greater reliance on strategic weapons would be the most dangerous and most provocative strategy that we could in fact employ.

In so far as Canada's contribution is concerned, we have already indicated in the white paper that the strike role will be reduced substantially in the years ahead. We have also decided to give our aircraft a second, non-nuclear capability. This gives the squadrons a greater flexibility under a wider variety of circumstances. This is directly in line with the policy set out a year ago. The hon. gentleman has mentioned several times what he refers to as intervention forces. In my opinion that is exactly what we are building up. Our forces are to be highly trained, mobile and flexible intervention forces, and I cannot really draw any distinction between the intervention forces that the hon. member suggests and those that are proposed in the white paper on defence. I think it is a question of semantics. If there is a distinction, I would like to know what it is, because I am not familiar with any distinction which might be in the mind of the hon. gentleman. He does not suggest that we should withdraw all our troops from Europe. What does he suggest as an alternative that we should do with those of our forces in Europe which are there for training, or other purposes, as part of our intervention forces? If he can suggest anything more practical and useful than what they are doing now, I think he has a responsibility to do so.

The question was raised on the other side of the house this afternoon as to the distinction between strike and reconnaissance roles. I may say that it was the previous government which put the strike and reconnaissance roles together as a single entity. In the white paper we tried to clear up this anomaly and be more precise by defining them as strike roles and reconnaissance roles, because in fact they are different and should be divided. The CF-104's which we have in Europe are now to be employed both in the strike and in the reconnaissance roles.

Mr. Willoughby: And bombing.

Mr. Hellyer: The strike role, as we have often said, is a bombing role; there has been no question about that. I think this distinction should have been made long ago so as to avoid some of the confusion which has arisen in the minds of some people.

In respect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), may I say that what we have proposed at the present time is really a change which is designed to solve what was in fact for us a problem. It had previously been the plan to have some reconnaissance aircraft in each squadron. Under the new arrangement we are concentrating the six squadrons in the strike role in Germany and concentrating all of the aircraft which are engaged in the reconnaissance role in the two squadrons in France. In addition, as I have already said, all of these eight squadrons will have a second non-nuclear attack role. This is not a perfect solution but it is the best one we could devise in the present circumstances.

I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson), who in general supported the purpose of Bill No. C-90 and stressed the need for a strong, modern and completely mobile and efficient force.

The hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) gave his qualified support for the bill, but perhaps I might correct one part of his statement. He referred to the main headquarters being in Colorado Springs, and that the naming of a chief of the main headquarters would not alter the fact that this headquarters was outside Canada. Actually the headquarters at Colorado Springs is the joint command for North American air defence. The headquarters of the Canadian armed forces is, of course, in Ottawa. It is true that the deputy commander at NORAD is a Canadian. It is also correct that after many years of distinguished service Air Marshal Slemon is retiring shortly from this position, to be replaced by another distinguished Canadian, Air Marshal Dunlap, the present chief of the air staff.

The hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) also made certain allegations with regard to television repairs being carried out by service personnel of R.C.A.F. station, Uplands, in Ottawa. I do not in any way underestimate the seriousness of his charges, but I am sure that he will understand that if such charges are to be investigated more specific details will be required. I should therefore like to ask him if he would communicate with my office and furnish specific details to support his allegations. I can assure him that if he does so a thorough investigation will be made.

The hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Temple) referred to remarks made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) as to the percentage of the defence budget allocated to capital expenditures. The hon. member for Greenwood quoted from the report of the special committee to the effect that in the year 1963-64, 23 per cent of the budget was for new equipment. However, as the hon. member for Hastings South pointed out, this figure of 23 per cent did not relate solely to capital expenditures. The committee rightly said that 77 per cent of the total budget for 1963-64 is allocated for operations and maintenance, but the balance of 23 per cent includes not only equipment, but construction, NATO infrastructure and industrial applied research as set forth in the tables printed in the committee's report. The correct figure for equipment is approximately 13 per cent for this year, and it is this figure that we are out to correct in reducing headquarters strength and the consequent operation and maintenance costs.

The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) made reference to expenditures by NATO countries on defence, and in particular referred to the average of 8 per cent of the national budget of NATO members devoted to this purpose. He then went on to say that this compared to 25 per cent of the national budget spent by Canada. I think the hon. gentleman is confusing two things here, since in the former case it relates to the percentage of the gross national product, while in the latter, in so far as Canada is concerned, the figure of 25 per cent is with regard to the annual financial budget at the federal level. To relate Canada's contribution to the 8 per cent of the gross national product of NATO countries, the figure given to the committee on defence for Canada was 5.1 per cent, placing Canada a shade below the middle of the scale among NATO nations.

The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) made reference to two questions which he had on the order paper concerning what are known as "Nudets". These are nuclear detection and reporting stations. His question asked whether there were any of these units presently being constructed in Canada, and the answer given on the order paper was in the negative. He then referred to an article in the Saturday Evening Post of December, 1963 by Stewart Alsop, in which it was stated that a Nudets system was being built at 52 sites in the United States and southern Canada. May I say that in view of the wording of the question by the hon. member we had no alternative but to give the answer as stated, since in fact no such units were presently being constructed in Canada. However, I should like to assist the hon. member in any way I can in this regard.

First of all, this Nudets system referred to by Mr. Alsop does not relate to Canada. What has been done here is that in June, 1960 the government approved the construction of a number of nuclear detonation and reporting posts, known as N.R.P.'s around several target cities in Canada. A total of 25 such reporting posts were constructed under this program, with the Canadian army being the construction authority, at a total cost of $150,000. The United States Nudets system is designed for a similar purpose but is a far more sophisticated one than the Canadian reporting posts, and although there has been some suggestion that it would be advantageous to locate some United States Nudets in Canada, no such arrangement has been agreed to.

A number of general questions have been asked about our peace keeping operations in Cyprus. I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) will wish to make a statement following his return to Ottawa and I will leave discussion of this most important subject until then. One question which I should like to deal with, however, is this: Why was a French speaking unit sent to Cyprus? The reason is this. Le premier bataillon du royal vingt-deuxième Régiment was for three years up to and including the time of the Cyprus crisis the stand-by battalion for UN requirements. In addition it was considered to be one of the best fighting units in the world. To deny this excellent unit its right to represent Canada would have been an injustice to the unit and to Canada.

One other question was raised with respect to peace keeping operations, and this was the suggestion that we do what some of the Scandinavian countries are now doing in putting together a special force for peace keeping operations. May I remind hon. gentlemen that at the present time all of the Canadian armed forces are on active service, and any part of the Canadian armed forces can be used for United Nations or other activities at any time. This does not require special legislation as is being proposed in one or two other countries.

We have forces available. We have used them on various occasions, and it is possible to use them on very short notice because they are trained and equipped for a wide variety of activities.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the minister in this connection, why did he and his colleagues require a resolution of this house to send a force to Cyprus?

Mr. Hellyer: Actually, Mr. Speaker, a resolution was required because of an undertaking on the part of the government to get such a resolution from parliament. It was a question of regard for the sovereign power of this House of Commons, something which my hon. friend raises from time to time.

Mr. Lambert: The minister knows it could have been done easier in two other ways.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) raised the problem of the relationship of defence expenditures to industry, particularly in so far as they would be affected by disarmament. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no fear in this regard, and if he can achieve a multilateral arms control we will be happy to grapple with the economic consequences.

The most serious charge that has been laid is the suggestion that our defence capability has been steadily reduced. This suggestion is simply not true. One by one, our defence systems which were not operational are becoming operational. Our air defence system is far more effective than it was a year ago. As soon as the Genie rockets are available for our interceptor squadrons there will be another qualitative jump in effectiveness.

Six squadrons of our air division will soon become operational, and the two reconnaissance squadrons a few months later.

The acquisition of the M-113 armoured personnel carrier will dramatically increase the effectiveness and survivability of the Canadian army, and the brigade group in particular. This acquisition was long overdue. The first vehicles will be available later this year, and production in quantity will be available early next year. The acquisition of additional Caribou and Hercules aircraft increase substantially our flexibility and capability in air movements.

The navy's antisubmarine capability has never been higher, and the early paying off of some world war II ships in order to make additional funds available for new equipment is a forward move. There has been steady improvement in the capability of all arms and this improvement will continue in the months ahead.

No, Mr. Speaker, the white paper was not a publicity stunt. It is a broad policy chart for the next decade. It sets the foundation for the detailed planning and staff work which must go forward. It relates defence policy to foreign policy, and prescribes roles suited to the Canadian experience and personality. It predicts an organization which will permit the implementation of a co-ordinated, mobile and flexible force. It puts Canada in a position of leadership in military organization.

It is a good paper. This bill is a tool required to get on with the job. It is worthy of the support of this house.

Mr. Winkler: The minister has suggested approximate times when some of the weapons will be available. Is it the government's intention to acquire these immediately they become available, or in what period of time thereafter?

Mr. Hellyer: Would the hon. gentleman say which weapons?

Mr. Winkler: In the last few words of the minister's statement he suggested that a year from now such and such would be available, particularly for the air force. Is the government going to acquire these immediately they become available?

Mr. Hellyer: Everything I have referred to is already ordered and on its way. The M-113, for example, the contracts have been let, the first models will be available this year and the balance of the production run early in the new year. This will provide the mobility and protection required for the brigade group overseas. It is similar with the aircraft. I think the Caribou are almost immediately available and some may have been delivered. The delivery of the Hercules aircraft will start about year's end and continue through the early part of next year. All of these things I have referred to are firm decisions which are already in the works and which should provide a considerably increased capability in the very near future.

Mr. Winkler: In regard to the acquisition of a nuclear capability could the minister say when this might become available for our current air force?

Mr. Hellyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I expect that both the air division overseas in the strike role and the air defence squadrons in Canada will be operational this year.

Mr. MacEwan: I have just a short question for the minister. I did not hear all his speech and I may have missed his reference to this matter. Can he advise the house if there will be any naval shipbuilding program brought forward during this fiscal year?

Mr. Hellyer: As my hon. friend knows, the reconversion program to improve greatly the capability of the existing destroyer escorts is going ahead, and the study on the cost effectiveness of the anti-submarine system is due for completion in July. As soon as that is completed, I would hope we could get to the question of deciding on our future shipbuilding requirements as expeditiously as possible, and then let the orders as soon as possible after that.

Mr. Winkler: Supplementary to the question I asked before, can the minister say is there any current plan to negotiate out of the present arrangements with the United States government in regard to nuclear capability or supply?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman's question. If he is referring to the air defence squadrons and the Bomarc squadrons, there is no plan to change these commitments in the immediate future. This is all set out in the white paper, and they will be used as long as required. The future effectiveness of the anti-bomber systems is to be reviewed in the light of developing circumstances. That too is set out in the white paper and I recommend to my hon. friend that he take it home with him and study it this evening.

Mr. Winkler: I have.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on defence.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, would you put the yeas and nays on that question now?

Mr. Churchill: Too late.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. gentleman said on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Well, it was carried on division.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Guy Favreau (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committe to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations on or after the 1st day of April, 1964.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the resolution we are considering is concerned with a bill which will require a selected list of federal crown corporations to pay provincial retail sales taxes, gasoline taxes and motor vehicle licence fees. The result of this direction will be that the crown corporations of each senior level of government will, directly or indirectly, by paying all of the major kinds of sales taxes imposed by the other level of government. The present situation is that many federal corporations are not paying provincial sales taxes, whereas provincial corporations have generally had to bear the full weight of the federal sales tax, which is an indirect tax passed on to them by their suppliers. This bill, therefore, will place the federal and provincial governments on a similar footing in a major area of intergovernmental relations. In submitting to provincial licence fees for motor vehicles, the federal government would actually be going beyond what a strict interpretation of reciprocal sales taxation would call for, since provincial automobile licence fees are not in the nature of a sales tax. I believe and hope that the provinces will appreciate this action.

The crown corporations which would be affected by the bill were selected following a careful review of all branches of the federal government. Some 27 bodies have been chosen and they are listed in the schedule to the bill. They consist of 22 of the 25 corporations listed in schedules C and D of the Financial Administration Act, plus five unlisted corporations, Bank of Canada, Canada Council, Canadian wheat board, industrial development bank and the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. Three corporations listed in schedule C of the Financial Administration Act have been excluded from the schedule to the bill. These bodies, Canadian Arsenals Limited, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and Defence Construction (1951) Limited, differ from the 27 bodies to which the bill would apply in that they operate almost entirely to provide what might be described as internal services for federal government departments. The bodies listed under schedules A and B of the Financial Administration Act have been excluded for a number of reasons, one of which is that they are defined as departments by section 2(f) of that statute.

It is intended that the payment of the provincial taxes by federal crown corporations will commence with the 1964-65 fiscal year. I do not have a very precise estimate of what the annual cost to the federal government of the measure contained in this bill will be. Our calculations indicate that it would be in the vicinity of $3 million to $3½ million. However, the total annual cost to the crown corporations listed in the schedule of paying these provincial taxes would be considerably greater than this amount, since many of these corporations, particularly those with substantial commercial operations, already have authority to pay one or more of the taxes concerned, and tax payments of considerable magnitude have been made.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this measure is deserving of our support. The legislation provides additional evidence of this government's desire to maintain sound and harmonious relations with the provinces.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the statement by the parliamentary secretary has given us some information as to the ambit of this measure in connection with which I might advise hon. members that negotiations and proposals therefor were initiated some years ago by the former administration. It was definitely proposed at that time that this would be carried out. As a matter of fact, I believe a measure appeared on the order paper in 1962.

There is one matter about which the parliamentary secretary might give us some information. Is there any information about the extent of the exemptions from sales tax that are granted to the provinces for the construction of hospitals, child caring institutions and one or two other similar types of institutions, if my memory serves me correctly, where refunds are made as a result of special circumstances? Is it the estimate of the Department of Finance that the two amounts will roughly balance? Is it expected that the amount to be paid by crown corporations under the federal government by way of provincial sales tax will more or less equal the amount now paid by the provinces under the federal sales tax levy?

This is a relatively simple measure. I know it will cure a lot of ill will that has existed. There was definitely a rub. I do not know whether the measure may lead to some sort of sales tax havens in this country. There are two provinces which do not have sales taxes at the present time and it may be that crown corporations will suddenly begin to do their business primarily in those two provinces. I do not know whether the provinces will then start, as some may suggest, to impose tariff barriers. Just what are we going to get out of this? There are still means whereby this measure can be circumvented, although it may be that the provinces will come to some agreement about sales tax equalization or there will be some method devised whereby purchases destined to another province will be subject to sales tax even though there is no sales tax within the province of destination. In any event, Mr. Chairman, we will be interested in seeing the bill and it is the conclusion of the official opposition that we will support this resolution.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be best if I were to deal with the questions raised by each speaker as we move along. We could perhaps facilitate consideration of the resolution in this manner. The hon. member for Edmonton West has raised the question whether or not the amount of sales tax crown corporations operated by the federal government will pay the provinces will balance with what is paid by the provincial agencies to the federal government. I really do not think any figures are available in this regard. What we are doing in this resolution and in the bill which will be submitted to the house in due course is to achieve a balance as between the two senior levels of governments. Thus the present situation can continue whereby provincial departments are free of federal sales tax, and federal departments are free of provincial sales tax. On the other hand, the present situation where crown corporations and agencies of the provinces are bearing the federal sales tax but federal corporations are not paying the provincial sales tax will be changed. The result will be that crown corporations controlled by the federal government will be treated by the provinces in the same way as we treat corporations controlled by the provinces.

I do not think that the other question the hon. member raised with regard to tax havens is a very serious problem, because I really do not see this government or any federal government locating or carrying on the business of a crown corporation in a particular province in order to save the amount of sales tax that might be involved. I might at this point mention the fact that one can take the alternative view that all crown corporations, whether operated by the provinces or the federal government, should be excluded from the sales tax.

I do not believe this is really a fair view to take, in that many of these crown corporations are actively competing with ordinary business organizations, and therefore I believe that crown corporations operating on this basis should have their financial result comparable to ordinary business concerns which are carrying on the same kind of business.

Mr. Douglas: The legislation which has been outlined by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance has been long overdue. There have been very strong feelings for years on the part of provincial governments that they have been required to pay federal sales taxes and many other federal imposts, whereas the federal government has not paid provincial sales taxes or gasoline taxes. What I think has been even more irritating has been the fact that the federal government has not even paid truck or car licence fees. Truck and car licence fees are not taxes in the ordinary sense, but they are a charge for using public thoroughfares. Heavy vehicles doing damage to the roads make no contribution either through gasoline taxes or through car and truck licence fees, and this has really caused a great deal of feeling. It is a matter which has been discussed at every federal-provincial conference that I recall since 1945, and probably was discussed long before that.

I am very glad that the government has decided to introduce legislation to make it possible for certain crown corporations to pay provincial sales taxes, gasoline taxes and car licence fees. When we have a look at the schedules, we will have a better opportunity to ascertain what crown corporations are affected and which ones have been exempted. I feel the day is coming when all government departments, as well as crown corporations, ought to pay taxes to both the federal and provincial governments. I believe this would be a much fairer thing for everyone concerned. I know many of the provincial governments feel strongly, for instance, about the fact that military equipment, which is extremely hard on highways when moving over provincial and municipal roads, makes no contribution whatever towards the maintenance of those roads. However this is another question which will be dealt with in due course.

At the present time the government is taking the first important step towards rectifying what is felt to be a very serious injustice in respect of federal-provincial relations. I am sure that most of the provincial governments will be delighted with the introduction of this legislation. They will feel that they are now going to get some revenue to which they are entitled for the services which they give. This will place them on an equal basis with the federal government.

The other point which I feel has to be recognized is that, with the passage of time, there is more intervention by governments in the economy of the country. In spite of all the talk about pure free enterprise, the fact is that every government in Canada, federal and provincial, is doing a great deal more about public ownership than was done 30 years ago. I think this trend will tend to increase rather than diminish. If governments are going to go into business of any kind, either on a federal-provincial basis or on a shared basis with private corporations, then those crown corporations and government business enterprises should pay the same taxes as are paid by private companies to put them on a fair and equitable basis. I think the fact the federal government is going to pay these taxes now will place them on all fours with private companies, and will make crown corporations much more welcome to provincial governments than they have been in the past, when provincial governments felt they were going to supply all the services and were not going to get any of the revenue to which they were entitled. I congratulate the parliamentary secretary upon the introduction of this legislation on behalf of the government, and the members of this party will support it.

Mr. Benson: I should like to deal with one or two questions raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I am very pleased to learn he is supporting the government in respect of this particular piece of legislation. He mentioned the question of truck and car licences. They are included in this piece of legislation and we will be paying truck and car licences.

Mr. Douglas: But only for crown corporations.

Mr. Benson: For crown corporations; I should like to point out also that in the schedule which will appear when the bill comes along, very soon I hope, all crown corporations are included except those that are really considered to be departments of the federal government.

With regard to whether or not all departments of federal and provincial governments should pay sales taxes to one another, I might say this question is under consideration at each of the provincial conferences that comes along. There has been no unanimity to date amongst the provinces as to whether they would like to see legislation to this effect.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, in the name of our group, I would like to say that we are favourable to this resolution providing for payment of some provincial fees and taxes by crown corporations, which up to now, were exempt from such dues. In so doing, I perhaps behave a little more nicely than people have towards my bill this afternoon; however, I should emphasize that it is indeed a return of rights to the provinces.

This is perhaps a consequence of the last federal-provincial conference and even perhaps of the previous one, and of the firm attitude taken by the government of the province of Quebec—which I want to congratulate on this occasion—and it may be due to one of the leaders of that government, Mr. Lévesque, who advocates for Quebec the status of an associate state. In fact, all provincial states are associate states, and I share such opinion.

The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) spoke about reciprocity between federal and provincial taxes. I hope these fees and taxes remitted by crown corporations will be higher than those already paid by the provinces. I do not know how much provincial corporations paid up to now: we may perhaps know it some day.

I am glad to see that institutions like the industrial development bank and the Bank of Canada will pay their share of taxes in the various provinces. I hope that, before too long, a branch of the Bank of Canada will be established in Chicoutimi, and will pay taxes to the province of Quebec.

It appears from all this that, in the long run, it is always the taxpayer who has to pay the taxes because, whether or not they come from the provincial government, it is still the Canadian people who have to pay the taxes, when they are overtaxed and despoiled, as I have explained before. I hope that one day we shall see the end of this formula which crushes the Canadian taxpayer more and more.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: If I may deal with each of the hon. members' questions as they arise, the hon. member for Chicoutimi raised the question of whether or not this legislation is the result of the strong position Quebec took in the last federal-provincial conference. I should like to assure him that it is not. This matter has been under consideration by the federal government for a number of years and this is the first opportunity which the present government has had to bring this bill forward; we have done so as soon as we could.

It is virtually impossible to tell exactly what taxes have been borne by provincial agencies and corporations in the past because the federal sales tax is a tax imposed at the manufacturers level and is included in the price of goods acquired by the provincial agencies. It is therefore not feasible for the federal government to calculate what share of our total sales tax revenue is borne by provincial agencies and corporations.

The hon. member raised the question of the Bank of Canada. I can assure him that although the Bank of Canada is included in the schedule, the present bill will not affect that institution because the Bank of Canada has already been paying all of these taxes. It is included in the schedule so that we may have all the crown corporations on the same basis.

The hon. member also raised a question with respect to the tax burden imposed on individuals. I really do not believe that this particular legislation affects the total tax burden on individuals. It allows the crown corporations owned by the federal government to make payments to the provinces of moneys which the provinces would otherwise have to raise from their own citizens by means of various taxes.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, this resolution tells us very little about the provisions which will be contained in the bill, because we have been given only piecemeal information about what the Minister of Finance intends to put in the legislation.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) told us that this matter had been well thought out and that it had been started by the previous government. On the other hand, the parliamentary secretary claims that plans to that effect were already being made way back in 1950, 1952 and 1957.

One thing is certain. In spite of the fact that the parliamentary secretary claims that the payment of taxes to provincial governments will not necessarily bring about an increase of federal taxes, this proposal will be costly for the taxpayers because the crown corporations involved all have deficits, whether it be the C.N.R., Air Canada—

Mr. Lambert: It is not true.

Mr. Caouette: —or Polymer. All government agencies show deficits, and who but the Canadian taxpayer will have to foot the bill.

The secretary to the minister cannot make me believe that raising duties or taxes paid to the provinces will not somehow raise general taxes, because the bureaucracy will need new employees and will have increased expenditures, and that will solve absolutely nothing.

[Mr. Benson.]

It makes no difference whether the matter was raised at a federal-provincial conference, at another conference, or not at all.

Mr. Chairman, I think that what should have been proposed to the house is exemption from sales tax for organized or public bodies, such as municipalities and school boards.

Last year, there have been, in every field, claims from various parochial organizations, with regard to the purchase of church equipment, for which federal and provincial sales taxes had been charged. For various obscure considerations—in some cases of a political nature—the sales tax is not collected, and I am asking why? I know that the law provides for the sales tax to be paid by every organization.

To my mind, the resolution put forward should not so much state that the federal government will pay the provinces a sales tax, but that the provinces, the municipalities, the school boards will be exempt. Then, considerable amounts would be saved and the whole population would benefit, while people would not be forced to pay higher taxes, at this time, when they have not the means of doing so.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I could deal briefly with the matters raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve. He pointed out that up to now he has been given no particulars about the contents of this bill. I can assure him that if we move quickly through the resolution stage he will very soon be able to look at the bill itself which is prepared and ready for him to examine.

The hon. member also said, erroneously I think, that all these crown corporations operate at a deficit. Thinking, offhand, of the 27 corporations involved here I could mention a number of them which operate at a profit and which do very well. For example, there is the Bank of Canada, Canadian Overseas Telecommunications, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Eldorado Mining and Refining, industrial development bank and Polymer Corporation. Then, T.C.A. showed a profit last year. These are names which occur to me, without looking at the financial statements of all the crown corporations.

The hon. member spoke in favour of the abolition of all sales taxes and of a general redistribution of tax revenue in the country, but I do not think these questions come within the scope of the particular bill we are now discussing. We are merely trying to create a situation of equality between federally-owned crown corporations and those which operate as agencies of the provincial governments.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I would have a few words to say and a question to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

First of all, I must say that I support without reservation the legislation providing that certain dues and taxes be paid by crown corporations to the provincial governments. However, I would like to hear from the parliamentary secretary that this would not be a Greek gift, for, at this time the crown corporations are asked, and even forced, to pay provincial taxes. Now, next year the federal government should not say to the provinces: The crown corporations are paying taxes to the provinces and the provincial corporations will have to pay taxes from now on to the federal government.

An hon. Member: They do.

Mr. Vincent: I would like to have the parliamentary secretary tell the house that the government does not intend to do that, because there are in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, corporations like Quebec hydro which do not pay taxes on corporation income.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: In reply to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska I would point out that at present there is no imposition of tax involved in this legislation. It is not the intention of the federal government through this legislation or in any other way to my knowledge, to impose any additional tax on agencies of the provinces. The position has been that the provincial crown corporations or agencies have been paying the federal sales tax because it is included in the prices charged to them for goods and services by their suppliers, whereas federally owned crown corporations were not paying corresponding provincial taxes. This piece of legislation is merely intended to enable the crown corporations which are not paying the sales tax, the gasoline tax and motor vehicle licence fees to pay those taxes to the provinces.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Favreau (for Mr. Gordon) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-95, respecting the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Judges Act

JUDGES ACT AND EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF EXCHEQUER COURT

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act to authorize the appointment of, and the provision of salary for, one additional judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the present resolution precedes a bill the purpose of which is to appoint an additional puisne judge to the exchequer court. The object of this bill is also to amend the Judges Act so as to authorize the provision of salary for this additional judge.

It will be remembered that during the last session the house passed a piece of legislation which appears as chapter 10 of the 1963 Statutes of Canada, the short title of which is as follows:

Dissolution and Annulment of Marriages Act.

It will also be remembered that the purpose of this act is to authorize the Senate to dissolve a marriage by means of a simple resolution, in the cases where parliament dissolved marriages in the past. This legislation also makes it possible for parliament to review the resolution which provides for the dissolution of a marriage.

The bill which will follow this resolution seeks simply the authorization to confer on an additional judge of the exchequer court the powers of the divorce commissioner, an officer of the Senate whose appointment is provided for in chapter 10, as I said a moment ago, and who holds office at the present time.

In other words—and that was the objective of the house in passing chapter 10—it is important, as long as that matter of divorce remains in the hands of the legislative body—in this case, the Senate—that it be disposed of in the most objective, the most judicious and, I would say, the most "judicial" way possible.

It is important also, Mr. Chairman, that the man entrusted with this exacting mission, full of responsibilities, should see his prestige recognized by having the status of a judge of a superior court.

What the proposed legislation wants to do is to enable the Speaker of the Senate to appoint one of the judges of the exchequer court to perform, in the future, all the commissioner's functions as provided for under chapter 10 of the statutes of 1963.

I also want to point out to the house that this legislation will not change in any way the effect and scope of chapter 10 I have just mentioned and will not give the exchequer court jurisdiction in divorce matters; this jurisdiction will remain solely in the hands of the Senate and the functions of the judge of the exchequer court who will have thus been appointed by the Speaker of the Senate will just have to hear witnesses, get evidence and report to the Senate in exactly the same way as the present commissioner.

Mr. Chairman, I think it should be noted that, besides the prestige given to the function and the guarantee that legal experience will be brought to the examination of the evidence, there will be the additional advantage that, in case of death, inability to act or illness on the part of the commissioner, it will be quite easy to replace him. All the Speaker of the Senate will have to do will be to designate, among the other judges of the exchequer court, one who will take over the duties of the commissioner.

I respectfully submit once again that this legislation will in no way change what the house decided during the last session, that it adds prestige to the function and that it facilitates, in case of illness or some other impediment, the temporary or permanent replacement of the official who will thereby be responsible for hearing the evidence and for reporting to the Senate.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the Minister of Justice for his explanations about this resolution.

Everybody knows that the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland are the only ones without divorce courts under their jurisdiction and that it is the Senate and the House of Commons which have always dealt with divorce cases from both provinces.

I should like to ask the following question of the minister: As a matter of courtesy, did he consult the provincial as well as the religious authorities of both provinces concerned about the appointment of an exchequer court judge who will look after their divorce cases?

The minister knows that the province of Quebec especially is jealous of its jurisdictions and privileges, that it is very touchy on this subject and, even though the minister gave the necessary assurances, it would not want this to be a means, not right now maybe, but in a few years from now, to force those two provinces to establish divorce courts.

I should also like to ask the minister whether this bill is entirely consistent with the Canadian constitution, that is, if under the constitution, the government is obliged to consult the provincial authorities of Newfoundland and Quebec. I would also ask him if, as a matter of courtesy, he consulted the religious authorities of those two provinces who are firmly against any extension or change in the procedure to be followed in divorces originating in those two provinces but coming under federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member's question is well put and I am grateful to him for having asked it.

Having taken part in the drawing up of that legislation, whose last clause was agreed to not at the very last minute but on the last day of the previous session, I can assure the hon. member, and the house also, that we made the consultations, at least the unofficial ones, which we felt were necessary.

The fact remains, however, that under the legislation which was passed and which is chapter 10 of the statutes of 1963, jurisdiction is again held solely by parliament, or rather by one of the two houses, that is the Senate, with some kind of right of appeal to parliament, that is the House of Commons and the Senate.

There were some difficulties in the wording of the bill, in the sense that the judge, to the extent where he will exercise his responsibilities, will be an official of the Senate, responsible to, if you like, the high officials of the Senate or rather to the Senate itself.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm like all other hon. members interested in that matter may rest assured that we are quite conscious that at present, as regards divorce cases coming from Quebec and Newfoundland, jurisdiction is assumed by parliament alone.

If there is ever some talk of establishing—I am not predicting or announcing that—divorce courts, I think, as Minister of Justice, that one of the essential conditions would be to consult with the provincial governments of Quebec and Newfoundland and also with the religious authorities who, under the circumstances, may be interested.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me, I should like to ask the minister one last question. Could the minister categorically state in this house that this bill is not in any way contrary to the Canadian constitution?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I shall reply, but always with this reserve and in expressing this fear that maybe, in so doing, I would give a legal opinion, but if I am asked for my personal opinion, not as Minister of Justice, but rather as a citizen and a lawyer from one of the provinces affected, I must say that in my heart and soul, I am satisfied that the bill which will follow this resolution, if it is accepted, does not at all infringe upon the constitution.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are again happy to be able to support this bill, and we do so for several reasons. In my study of the field I would think that the former speaker had little to worry about because the constitution is clear on this matter of marriage and divorce. In the constitution it is stated that the federal government shall be responsible for marriage and divorce, and solely responsible. When a provincial government becomes involved with these matters it must pass legislation which endorses the legislation of the federal government.

It seems to me that the Senate was very unfair a year ago in refusing to pass a similar resolution, to be followed by a bill, to make the commissioner an exchequer court judge. I say this because of the fact that the Senate has had, or had at the time, the opportunity to examine the functions of this particular official and how they should be conducted. They have, of course, now had more time and are probably in a better position to assess the situation and allay any fears which they had. The Senate reports will indicate that by April 20 there had been introduced 218 resolutions, and to my knowledge none of them was rejected in any particular, or certainly on any major point. The Senate divorce committee have felt that none of the resolutions had been handled in a way in which they would not have been happy to handle them, had the law remained as it was in the past.

I believe that this present resolution is absolutely necessary, and for several reasons. First of all, we have asked the commissioner, who is a man of great legal knowledge, of good reputation and diligence, to accept an office which is a new one, and which would be objected to, it was felt in many quarters. He has accepted this office at the cost of his law practice. Therefore I believe he should receive the assurances and the pension which go with the office of an exchequer court judge because of the duty which he is performing, as well as in view of the fact that under present circumstances he might find himself without a job, should there be a change of government. This might not come about and we hope it does not; but in the past other officials who were commissioners and appointed by one government were not always maintained in their office by the succeeding government. In this case it would mean a severe loss, and I do not think we should ask anybody to assume this responsibility on this basis.

I should like to go a little further than the minister went, because it is my hope that when exchequer court sees fit to allow one of its members to act as a commissioner of divorce under the control of parliament and outside of the normal legal jurisdiction exercised by the exchequer court this would allow for a rotation system. I say that because I can see nothing worse than sentencing a man of the intelligence of the present commissioner to 15 or 20 years of hearing divorce cases four days a week at the rate of eight a day. This seems to me to be a sentence we should impose on no individual. I should like to see us arrive at a system which would allow for a rotation in the Senate, or at least a spelling off of the duties involved from time to time. It may be that as time goes by his duties may not require such an arduous schedule and that the exchequer court will be the beneficiary of this commissioner, and he will be able to handle other matters. It would also mean that in case of death of the commissioner it would be very easy to replace him with another commissioner under the same type of arrangement at the request of parliament.

Therefore, for these reasons I believe the house should give favourable consideration to this resolution. I hope the government has conferred with some of their confreres in the other place and that this bill will get speedy passage there as well. I am happy to note that because the former leader of the other place could not pass a similar measure we now have a new leader, and I hope the situation has improved. I believe this is a forward step. I have watched the operations of the commissioner. It is a new field. I have discussed on a number of occasions some of the problems which he has and I find that these problems are not much different from those we faced ourselves. I think this is an opportunity for parliament, and should be an opportunity for parliament, to examine the operations of that office periodically, at which time we should be prepared to make further recommendations in the whole field of matrimony and divorce.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words only on the resolution under consideration. It is understood that there is no question of discussing chapter 10 of the statutes of 1963, since it was passed last year.

I think that it is a good thing that the commissioner concerned be a judge or becomes a judge of the exchequer court, and that, for the various reasons given a minute ago by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau).

In my opinion also, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) put forth worthwhile arguments in favour of the commissioner being a judge of the exchequer court. I think this is also the view of the members of our party.

Mr. Chairman, as I do not wish to take any more time, I should just like to know whether the additional judge will be the divorce commissioner, whether any of the present judges of the exchequer court may at times be appointed divorce commissioner or whether the Speaker of the Senate may freely choose one or the other according to circumstances or the recommendations made to him by the government or the Senate committee.

Be that as it may, I feel that the efficient application of the provisions of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1963 requires that the commissioner be a judge of the exchequer court. If it ever becomes necessary to change the procedure for the granting of divorces, the question could be examined at the proper time but, for now, I share the opinion expressed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, to answer the question raised by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux), I think that it would be somehow concealing things from the house not to admit that to our mind, the first one appointed to that post will be the present commissioner.

With regard to the supplementary question asked by the hon. member, I must say that it is quite clear that under any circumstances, the Speaker of the Senate will always be able to designate another judge from the exchequer court to complete a role already begun, or if one may say so, to help accelerate the pace when disposing of the cases.

Moreover, there may be several motives which will prevent the first designated judge from sitting on certain occasions, and the proposed substitution will constitute an additional advantage, already noted by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, by avoiding any hiatus or undue delay in divorce cases, under the present act.

Mr. Rondeau: A few words only, Mr. Chairman, to say that we are supporting the resolution to appoint another judge from the exchequer court to hear divorce cases.

Some hon. members have aired their views earlier today with regard to the province of Quebec. Indeed, it is a well-known fact the people at home are pleased about the questions and problems of divorce having been referred to the federal authorities, as the provincial authorities do not want to have anything to do with them. This being so, it must be admitted that the federal government should assume its responsibilities. That is the obvious reason for which the house is now considering the resolution, and when we shall have the bill itself before us, we shall certainly be better informed than we are now.

Now, if one day the province of Quebec feels aggrieved, if certain problems should crop up which the provincial authorities would like to solve in a way other than that already decided by the federal government for the future, I believe Quebec will always be entitled to make representations in due course. But from now until then, we should not worry too much, since the province of Quebec is being freed, one way or the other, from its responsibilities, especially in the field of divorce.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, we support the resolution, because we know there are presently many divorce cases which should be heard. We want in no way to delay the business of the house, because we know we must expedite things and help the Senate committee to which are presently entrusted divorce problems and which wants help through the appointment of an additional judge of the exchequer court. This is why we support in principle the resolution under study, pending the possibility of discussing shortly the substance matter of the bill.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Favreau thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I may tell hon. members that although the bill has not been circulated they may take my word for it that it is verbatim, with not one iota of change from the text of Bill No. C-133 which was adopted by this house on December 21, 1963. In the light of that statement maybe the house would give unanimous consent and agree to second reading now, so that it could go as quickly as possible to the Senate.

Mr. Churchill: We would like to accommodate the house leader, but under the circumstances we are doing very well.

An hon. Member: Obstruction.

Mr. Churchill: Our expectation tonight is that we might pass the amendments to the Estate Tax Act, and go on with this bill tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time—next sitting of the house? Agreed.

ESTATE TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-94, to amend the Estate Tax Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, at the resolution stage I gave a rather full explanation of the resolution which is enacted in this particular bill. There are five main parts to the resolution and to the changes that we are proposing in this bill.

The first of these is that the estate tax will now be reduced by 75 per cent in provinces that levy their own succession duty, as was agreed at the federal-provincial conference here in Ottawa last year, provided they do not choose to take a payment equivalent to the additional 25 per cent instead. The second main point with respect to this bill is an amendment whereby the limit of $1,500 of funds which are available to beneficiaries from any one bank account is increased to $2,500. The third is a proposal that certain settlements under the Quebec civil code be treated similar to settlements of the same kind in the other provinces of Canada. The resolution stated this fact and it is enacted in the legislation.

The fourth point was that dispositions of community property in the province of Quebec be treated in the same way as they are treated by the succession duty act in the province of Quebec. The final item was to close a loophole with respect to a single premium annuity coupled with a life insurance policy whereby certain individuals, taking advantage of the provisions of the Estate Tax Act as it existed, were evading estate tax.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of omissions in the statement by the parliamentary secretary. If we look further into the bill we see there is also a clause dealing with penalties about which we have not heard anything. I should like to have an explanation of that clause. I am referring to clause 4 on page 5 of the bill. If the parliamentary secretary will consult his adviser I think he will be able to come up with the reasons why this change is being introduced.

I should like a full explanation because my experience with taxing statutes is that we have to be extremely careful about the penalty sections. Too often because of a sort of administrative zeal we get rather wide, sweeping provisions concerning penalties. Even as a result of innocent omissions or quite inadvertent errors in returns by taxpayers it is proposed that, notwithstanding bona fides on their part, they shall be subject to penalties for filing the wrong type of return. I must say I object to this. I think that very definitely there should be penalties where there is intent to deceive or conceal, but where the action by the taxpayer has been inadvertent I say it is wrong to impose additional penalties for failure to include certain things in returns. In my view this applies not only to the Estate Tax Act but to other taxing statutes which come under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Revenue.

I should also like to get some explanation, for the record in any event, with regard to why the amendment contained in clause 2 was included. I realize it must have come about as the result of some hard case where a really bona fide gift to charity was made with a right of encroachment and yet it was not possible to get renunciation in time before the death of the person who had the right of encroachment. I am not going to say too much about this provision included in the act. I have objected in the past that I thought that within certain limits there should be a right of encroachment on some of these gifts to charities, and that they should still be deemed to be gifts to charities perhaps to the extent that the encroachment was limited to a certain sum or a certain percentage of the charity.

I do not think it is quite fair to leave a widow for instance, to make a gift to a charity at a certain specified time, because she may be in necessitous circumstances or there may be a dependant child who will become subject to some misfortune and might have the right to encroach, and once that is cleared away that the gift be turned over to the charity and therefore become exempt from the estate tax.

Otherwise we have had a rather full explanation at the resolution stage. I presume that only time and experience will tell whether the language of these amendments will carry out the intent. I know that lawyers can engage in some very fine hair splitting on these matters and I certainly do not wish to comment on the language. I think it is reasonably straightforward, or as straightforward as language can be in a taxing statute. But I should like to have explanations as to the penalties and other matters.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, if I may deal with the questions raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West, first of all I say thank goodness I am not a lawyer and therefore I cannot enter into legal arguments with him with respect to the wording, and whether or not it will carry out the intention as stated in the resolution which was discussed at some length. Clause 4 on page 5 was not included in the resolution and, as mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West, it is a penalty clause. It is a clause which is similar to section 56(2) of the Income Tax Act and it is designed to prevent gross negligence in the filing of returns with respect to estate tax. Perhaps I should read the wording of the clause into the record. It reads as follows:

> Every person who, knowingly, or under circumstances amounting to gross negligence in the carrying out of any duty or obligation imposed by or under this act, has made, or has participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, a statement or omission in a return, statement or answer filed or made as required by or under this act or a regulation, as a result of which the tax that would have been payable if the tax had been assessed on the basis of the information provided in the return, statement or answer is less than the tax payable, is liable to a penalty of 25 per cent of the amount by which the tax that would so have been payable is less than the tax payable.

The intention of this clause is not to penalize the person who has innocently made a mistake or omitted something in filing a return. Anyone who prepares an estate tax return can inadvertently omit something. But just as section 56(2) of the Income Tax Act is designed to penalize those people who knowingly try to avoid paying the tax legally due to the Receiver General of Canada, so this section is inserted in the Estate Tax Act to provide similar penalties so as to prevent people from committing what really is fraud with respect to their taxes.

The other question raised had to do with clause 2 of the bill, and here I might perhaps quote an example. Let us take the example where a charitable gift is made by the husband with power to the widow to encroach and the widow does not renounce this gift within two years but dies within the two years without renouncing the right. The law will nevertheless allow a deduction in respect of the gift to the charity made by the deceased husband. It is a relieving provision in the act, and it is a beneficial amendment to the beneficiaries of the particular estate.

Mr. Lambert: I am glad the parliamentary secretary has referred to sections 56 and 54(2) of the Income Tax Act. I know at the time these changes were made some years ago I was particularly insistent myself that in the framing of those sections they be limited directly to fraudulent intent or gross negligence. The original intention had been to include negligence, and of course we must never have that.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? Now by leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I think we should now call it ten o'clock and have the business announced for the rest of the week.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, beginning tomorrow we will proceed with second reading and committee stage of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act. We will then proceed with the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act, to extend by one year the authority of the banks to do business in Canada. Then, we will take the resolution preceding the bill to amend the National Housing Act, following which we will deal with the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, which will be followed by the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act.

I may tell the house that it is the intention of the government that on Friday we will continue with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Churchill: Would you not want to take the second reading of the crown corporation bill and the exchequer court bill tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, and this goes to prove that I am not an egoist. I thank the hon. member for reminding me of my own bill to amend the Exchequer Court Act. We will proceed with second reading of that bill and the second reading of the bill authorizing crown corporations to pay certain provincial fees and taxes.

Mr. Churchill: Those two bills will be taken first, and then the others that you announced?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, thank you.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY—DUTIES OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is that this house do now adjourn. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on April 28, I asked the Prime Minister a question that I shall repeat today in order to get a reply.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) was chosen by the Prime Minister as lieutenant of the Quebec Liberals, could the Prime Minister tell the house what will from now on be the exact duties of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) in that field?

Mr. Speaker, the recent appointment of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) as lieutenant of the Quebec Liberals is in my humble opinion, an insult to the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) who, as everyone knows, has devoted himself so much to his party, especially while his party was in opposition, because he was the one who was deciding his party's centralizing policy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Minister of Justice stands as an official lieutenant of the Quebec Liberals and that the Secretary of State stands as a non-official one; moreover, according to comments made by certain newspapermen—

Mr. Prud'homme: Is it Mr. Balcer who wrote that?

Mr. Pigeon: The Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) stands as a semi-non-official lieutenant.

Mr. Prud'homme: Did Mr. Balcer say that?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like you to ask the hon. member for St. Denis to be more polite in the house and to stand up whenever he wishes to ask a question.

Besides, he is not even in his seat. He should learn the rules of the house before interrupting.

When the Prime Minister appointed the Minister of Justice, the Quebec people thought they had finally an official spokesman for the claims and rights of Quebec. But the Prime Minister preferred the theory of co-operative federalism to that of autonomy. Everyone knows what Mr. René Lévesque, minister of natural resources, thinks of it because not long ago he disallowed co-operative federalism, saying that it was a sort of plaster on a wooden leg.

The Minister of Justice disappointed the province of Quebec when he advised the Quebec people to stop claiming their rights and talk rather of their responsibilities.

The people of Quebec are grumbling more and more since the Minister of Justice told his compatriots to stop talking about their rights and to think only of their obligations. As I said a moment ago, you have only to read over what Mr. René Lévesque thinks of the theory of this new Quebec leader.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is Mr. Balcer.

Mr. Pigeon: Such being the case, Mr. Speaker, we do not know what to think. The people of the province of Quebec are without a spokesman at this time, because you have the Secretary of State, who seems to have more power than the others, the Minister of Justice, who refuses to take his responsibilities, and the minister of forests, who said recently, in front of witnesses, that he was the one chiefly responsible for the masterful agreements reached with the province of Quebec.

We would greatly appreciate an answer, and we regret that the Prime Minister is not in the house now to furnish it himself.

I would at least ask one of the two parliamentary secretaries to do it. If need be, I grant them permission to share the three minutes to try and give us an adequate reply so that we may finally know what the situation is.

Mr. Prud'homme: Demagogy.

Hon. Yvon Dupuis (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon)—the inevitable member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—who spoke of official leader, non-official leader, semi-non-official leader and, who—and it is a habit with him—tried to confuse things which are indeed quite clear in the minds of all the people in the province of Quebec.

Instead of speaking of men of the calibre of the person who holds the position of Secretary of State today and of men of the calibre of the person who is Minister of Justice—

Mr. Pigeon: Minister of Forestry.

Mr. Dupuis: —I would advise the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to think of the precarious future of Sir Georges Étienne Balcer.

Mr. Speaker, to impress further the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who is surely blind I will tell him that since the Liberals came to power the function of Secretary of State has become one of the most important in the federal administration. I will remind him—

Mr. Pigeon: That is a compliment—

Mr. Dupuis: I have the floor.

I should like to remind him that during the Conservative administration the secretary of state had very limited responsibilities and that when Mr. Dorion was secretary of state this was said to him at the time his estimates were being considered: Stay in your office and sit tight, Dick Bell will answer for you.

Things have somewhat changed since then.

Mr. Pigeon: It is the Minister of Transport who is piloting the redistribution bill.

Mr. Dupuis: I will explain to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm the duties of the present Secretary of State who is a French Canadian from Quebec and who does honour to his province and to his country.

The Secretary of State is the keeper of the great seal and Registrar General of Canada; he is responsible for Canada's official documents and is entrusted with the application of the Companies Act. He must answer for the national printing bureau and acts as official election reporting officer before the house. In addition, he must look after copyrights, trade marks and patents. The bureau for translations comes under him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I regret to have to interrupt the minister—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was saved by the bell.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SECRETARIAT

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the other day I put a question to the Minister of Justice based on a few words I had heard in the morning before the afternoon sitting.

The question I directed to the minister was as follows:

Did the minister say yesterday in Montreal that the federal government has set up in the privy council office a secretariat which will look after federal provincial relations?

The minister answered:

Mr. Speaker, I do not usually interpret my speeches but for more security I shall be pleased to send a copy thereof to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to point out that I have not asked for an interpretation; I merely asked for an answer and I hope that the minister, this evening, will understand my feelings in those circumstances.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I have read the speech of the minister in both official languages of this country.

[Text]

And having asked the minister if he had declared in Montreal the day before I posed the question whether or not he said the government had established a secretariat for federal-provincial affairs under the direction of the Prime Minister in the privy council offices, I then looked at the minister's speech, and I quote from his speech in Montreal in which he said:

In this respect I deem it a source of great hopes that a federal-provincial affairs secretariat is now established—

And I underline the words "is now established"

—within the privy council office under the jurisdiction and direction of the right hon. Prime Minister.

I asked the question because today, as always, federal provincial relations are of great importance. Having read the minister's speech I then made an inquiry in the privy council offices, and what did I find? I found that one official in that office is, today, responsible for federal-provincial relations. This official is already occupied as an assistant secretary to the cabinet; therefore he can only devote a small part of his time to important questions of federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Speaker, along with other hon. members in this house, when I think of a secretariat for federal-provincial affairs, I think of a more sophisticated type of secretariat, the type that we might find in the resources field; a fully staffed secretariat, not reporting to one member government but to the council of ministers. The minister says the federal government has established a secretariat for federal-provincial affairs. No wonder he did not want to answer my question. What do I find? I find there is one part time official under the right hon. Prime Minister's direction in the privy council offices. No wonder Mr. René Lévesque in the province of Quebec is becoming disillusioned by the spirit of co-operative federalism displayed by the federal government, whose centralizers persist in talking about co-operative federalism but do not practice what they preach. Again I say, Mr. Speaker, that upon investigation after the minister's declaration in Montreal, I find there is only one part-time official working on federal-provincial affairs in the privy council offices. The minister says the federal government has established a secretariat for federal-provincial affairs, and I have quoted from his speech.

Today federal-provincial relations in Canada are worse than they have ever been before in the history of our country. We must improve co-ordinating bodies. I have suggested time and time again the immediate establishment of a secretariat for federal-provincial affairs at the Prime Minister's and premiers' level. I am not arguing the case for provincial rights or more centralization; I am only underlining the need for consultation. The minister states that a secretariat has been established, but in fact one has not been established. When will this government learn its lesson? Its whole economic program has foundered on the rocks, because they talk of consultation and sophisticated consultative bodies but do absolutely nothing about it. No wonder people like Mr. Lévesque think that co-operative federalism is just a myth that will not work. He must realize that here in the government the centralizers have surrounded the Prime Minister and they do not mean what they say about co-operative federalism. How else could the minister have said that a secretariat has been established when, again I repeat, only one part-time official is working on the problem. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that the government must put this problem—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as is well known, the present government attaches great importance to federal-provincial relations. One way to facilitate these relations is to establish a joint secretariat. This matter was raised at the earliest possible moment; it was raised at the November meeting with the provinces here in Ottawa, and it was discussed again at the recent federal-provincial conference in Quebec city. There it was felt that this matter should be approached a step at a time; each province should set up its own group. The Prime Minister indicated at that time that the federal government would also establish its own secretariat immediately. It has now been done, and a small unit comprised of several full time officials—

Mr. Grafftey: That is wrong. There is one part-time official.

Mr. Davis: —and known as the provincial relations secretariat is being formed in the privy council office. It reports to the Prime Minister himself. This new secretariat, in addition to advising the Prime Minister, will perform a co-ordinating and servicing role, not an executive one or an operational one. It will not displace such units as are responsible for those aspects of federal-provincial relations which fall clearly within the jurisdiction of the different departments.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference of this unit and I will simply skim through them. They are as follows:

1. To keep in touch with, review, and bring to the attention of the Prime Minister, ministers or departments any aspects or implications of present or proposed government policies which would be of interest or concern to the governments of the provinces;
2. To participate in departmental or interdepartmental consultations and studies;
3. To provide a point of co-ordination and information on activities of the various federal government departments responsible for particular aspects of federal-provincial relations;
4. To provide a central point of contact to the provinces;
5. To assist in federal-provincial consultation and negotiations, as directed by the Prime Minister from time to time;
6. To provide a secretariat for cabinet and interdepartmental committees on federal-provincial relations; and
7. In relation to federal-provincial conferences:
(a) to co-ordinate preparations and to provide the secretariat for federal-provincial conferences;
(b) to develop procedures, in consultation with other departments concerned;
(c) to attend ministerial or other federal-provincial conferences;
(d) to assist other departments in respect of other arrangements and preparations for federal-provincial conferences and meetings.

It is hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces individually will make similar arrangements. The province of Quebec established a department of federal-provincial affairs in 1960.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the parliamentary secretary as his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE—CHEESE—INQUIRY AS TO EXPORT ASSISTANCE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, the reason I rise this evening is owing to the incident yesterday with regard to a question asked on agriculture. I see the Minister of Agriculture is not in the chamber, being I suppose unavoidably absent, but I note that his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Peel, is present and I will direct my remarks to him.

The question reads as follows, as reported at page 3117 of Hansard:

With regard to his change in policy whereby the Minister of Agriculture has withdrawn the 30 cent subsidy paid by the government to the producers of cheese milk, will it now become compulsory and statutory that the cheese factories pay the cheese milk producers the 30 cents per hundredweight, since the government now proposes to pay the cheese factories a subsidy of 3.6 cents per pound for first grade cheddar cheese?

When that announcement was made by the Minister of Agriculture on April 29 that was the first thought which came to my mind, representing the interests of the cheese milk producers in my area. This also applies to similar areas of production represented by members of this house. This is a matter about which the government should be alarmed. That is why I asked in my question why the government does not make this compulsory and statutory so as to ensure that the farmer will still receive the same amount of subsidy, and therefore the same price, for his 100 pounds of milk as he did under the former administration and under the measures followed thus far by this government.

I am asking this question for further reasons. First of all, a factory which produces the average grade, which runs from 75 to 85 per cent No. 1 cheddar cheese, will receive 3.6 cents for the first grade. This would enable the factories to pay the farmer—and mathematics must rule in this case—scarcely 25 cents a hundred bonus for his milk, because only a part of the milk purchased is producing No. 1 cheese.

If they continue to pay the farmer 30 cents the factory would then be losing money on this arrangement. Second, a factory retailing ungraded cheddar cheese—and we have them in this country, particularly in eastern Canada—is not helped to receive the 3.6 cents per pound from the government because its cheese is not graded, and so this factory cannot pay the farmer any bonus for his milk. Therefore the change of policy announced by the minister indicates to me that he is leaving the farmer high and dry.

The minister says to the cheese factory: "We will pay you 3.6 cents per pound for all the No. 1 cheese you can produce, and you pay the farmer whatever deal you can make with him." That is the interpretation which is being placed on the minister's announcement.

The cheese industry is as nearly competitive with all other facets of the dairy industry as it has ever been, and many of the other interests in this industry would like to see cheese cheaper. Many of these other interests in the dairy industry would like to see cheese selling at a lower price. There is this friction between these interests in the industry, and cheese should not be used as a barometer nor as a lever. Once the government abandons one good measure of assistance, the cheese-milk producer and the small cheese factory sink that much more into oblivion, and this cannot be allowed to happen.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

If I have any more minutes left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak of the cheese subsidy which has been so successfully employed to build up our export business in the last couple of years. One thing we should remember in our export policy is that high production and high prices very seldom coincide. For the last four years, total exports of cheese have increased and prices have advanced four cents per pound. This is a most unusual condition in the marketing of any type of merchandise. Removal or reduction of the export subsidy could adversely affect this trend.

Also, in respect of a small section of our dairy industry—and I refer to the Ontario cheese producers association, this section of the dairy industry which is still farmer controlled—the Canadian cheese marketing board has done a good job in the exporting of cheese, and it is only because it has done a good job that their supports are endangered and may be reduced. On the other hand, if they had not done a good job it is possible a seven cents subsidy might be required at the present time to export surplus cheese.

Larger production of cheese has been forecast for Canada during 1964, and to throw this production on the English market at a higher cost would jeopardize the future of the export business. The export subsidy is only on that part of cheese production that is exported, but the subsidy on butter is for the total production. The export subsidy as it exists at present must be maintained.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the hon. member introduced two questions, the first being as to why the government does not make it statutory that the assistance of 3.6 cents per pound on cheese now being paid be paid direct to the producer. I suppose I would be justified in saying it would be a matter of government policy as to whether or not it would become statutory and, if it were to become statutory, it would be announced in due course.

In defence of the policy that has been announced, which indicates we will pay 3.6 cents on No. 1 cheddar cheese, it must be understood that you get approximately nine pounds of cheese out of 100 pounds of milk. If you multiply 3.6 by 9 you find it comes to something like 32.4 cents per 100 pounds of milk. This was more than was paid last year, so in fact nothing was taken away from the farmers. The assistance to the milk producers has always been paid through the milk suppliers, and this assistance will be paid by the distributors in exactly the same way.

The hon. member has also raised a question with regard to export assistance on cheese. I think I should make it clear that this was never intended to be a subsidy on the export of cheese, but rather government assistance for the export of cheese which would enable our exporters to compete on foreign markets from the point of view of price. I have a statement to present at this time.

Up until 1961 export assistance was not paid on cheddar cheese. Rather the board, when the price of cheese dropped to the support level, took physical possession of the cheese and then or later, depending upon market conditions, offered it for export or to the domestic market at what was considered to be the best price obtainable. The difference between the support level and the price at which the board offered it for export could be considered to be the measure of export assistance. At the same time the Ontario cheese producers marketing board was subsidizing cheese into Great Britain through the use of funds provided by a levy of 1 cent per pound on all cheese marketed in Ontario.

In 1961 the level of Canadian cheddar cheese prices in Great Britain was such that the Ontario cheese producers marketing board was having difficulty financing, with its own resources, the export of cheese. The agricultural stabilization board then owned fairly large quantities of cheese bought under the support program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RONDEAU—FRENCH TRANSLATION OF REMARKS OF MEMBER FOR MARQUETTE

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a matter which constitutes an insult to all members and to the House of Commons.

Yesterday, members of our group came in the house with miniature flags. And as reported in the newspapers, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) cried out that we had no right to display such rags in the house. Everybody here heard perfectly the hon. member at that time.

My question of privilege is to the effect that in yesterday's Hansard, on page 3317 of the French edition, in the right-hand column, the statement of the hon. member for Marquette has been changed and the word rag replaced by the word flag. I feel that the hon. member should have the courage to maintain his stupid remarks, since he had the odious courage to make them.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the hon. member concerned the matter will have to be put aside or delayed. In any event, I do not see any question of privilege here. If anything it is a complaint.

QUESTIONS

AMATEUR SPORT COMMISSIONER

Question No. 307—Mr. Beaulé:

1. Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare intend to appoint a commissioner for amateur sport in Canada?

2. Does the minister intend to defray all the expenses incurred by the Canadian Olympic teams representing this country aborad?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. It is not the intention to appoint a commissioner for amateur sport in Canada.

The Fitness and Amateur Sport Act provides for a national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport of 30 members to advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With the advice of this body the minister works in co-operation with and aids fitness and amateur sport groups but does not attempt to control their activities. Any regulatory official for sports would have to be appointed by the sports bodies concerned.

2. Under the fitness and amateur sport program, assistance is provided to help finance the cost of sending Canadian teams to Olympic games. Grants are made only to the Canadian co-ordinating agency which, in the case of Olympic games, is the Canadian Olympic association, with the amount given not exceeding one half of the travel expenses of approved team personnel at economy rates, one half of reasonable living expenses while outside of Canada, and the cost of necessary transport for sports equipment.

The Canadian Olympic association has received $123,000 under the program to assist in sending Canadian teams to the 1964 Olympic winter and summer games, as well as $63,000 to assist in sending Canadian teams to the 1963 Pan American games. In addition, the national sports governing bodies being represented at these games have received financial assistance to hold national championships and pre-Olympic trials leading to these international games.

PRODUCTION OF F-104 PLANES FOR GREECE AND TURKEY

Question No. 816—Mr. Brewin:

1. Are 120, or any similar number of F-104's being (a) produced, or (b) assembled at Canadair Limited, Montreal for delivery to Greece and Turkey under any mutual aid program for NATO allies in Europe?
2. What is the cost to Canada of its share in the program for delivery of such planes to (a) Greece (b) Turkey?
3. What are the numbers of planes to be delivered under any such program to (a) Greece, and (b) Turkey?
4. What is the anticipated date of delivery of the planes to (a) Greece (b) Turkey?
5. What is the range in miles of such planes?
6. For what type of armament are the planes to be fitted?
7. Is such armament conventional or nuclear?
8. Are there any limitations or means of control of the employment of such planes by Greece and Turkey respectively?

Mr. Hellyer: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

On June 12, 1961, Canada and the United States concluded an agreement under which F-104G aircraft, support equipment and spares to the value of U.S. $200 million were to be procured in Canada. Of the total costs, the U.S. government was to pay $150 million and the Canadian government $50 million. It was agreed that the aircraft produced under this arrangement would be used to meet Canadian mutual aid contributions to NATO and U.S. military assistance program requirements. According to most recent estimates, it is expected that this sum will cover the production of approximately 140 aircraft; the figure of 120 was an earlier estimate. Delivery of aircraft from the production line is still in its early stages, and it is not expected that production will be completed until October 1965.

In late 1961, the Canadian government agreed that title to all aircraft produced under this program should be vested in the United States. An understanding was reached whereby the U.S., having title, would decide the allocation of the aircraft, taking into account Canadian views. Arrangements have since been made for the total production to be divided into two categories; aircraft purchased in Canada for the United States military assistance program, and aircraft produced for presentation to NATO countries as a joint Canada-United States program of assistance to NATO countries. Such aircraft as have been delivered to date all fall into the former category. No decision has as yet been taken concerning the countries which will receive F-104G aircraft under a joint Canada-United States program of assistance to NATO countries.

The technical specifications of these aircraft are classified military information.

8. In the event that it is decided to allocate to Greece and Turkey any of the aircraft produced under the latter program, the normal conditions attached to Canadian mutual aid would apply, viz., that recipient countries will use any materiel they receive to strengthen the capacity of NATO to deter or resist aggression.

RETURN OF CITIZENSHIP FEE TO MRS. JOSEPH BUCKIE

Question No. 1029—Mr. Howard:

With respect to the answer given on May 4 to starred question No. 721, are any steps being taken to return the $1 fee paid by Mrs. Joseph Buckie under section 10 (3) of the Canadian Citizenship Act and, if so, what are those plans?

*CLOSING OF R.C.E.M.E. WORKSHOP, REGINA

Question No. 1,039—Mr. Pascoe:

Following the government's decision to close the R.C.E.M.E. workshop in Regina, what policy has been established for displaced civilian personnel in regard to (a) re-employment elsewhere (b) possible benefits from the retirement fund into which the workers have contributed (c) severance pay for classified civil servants and for hourly paid workers?

Mr. Cardin: (a) Before separation every effort is made to place those affected in vacancies which are available in the immediate area or in other areas. The services of the civil service commission and the national employment service are used in an attempt to obtain alternative employment for the employees. If the employees are placed on lay-off the national employment service and the civil service commission make every attempt to place them in a suitable position of the same class or an equivalent class with the same maximum salary. The department may also pay up to $500 removal assistance if a suitable position is located outside the designated area of lay-off and the transfer meets departmental regulations.

(b) Employees on lay-off who are aged 50 or over and who are contributors to the public service superannuation account with five or more years of pensionable service are eligible to apply for an actuarial equivalent of the deferred annuity to which they would ordinarily be entitled at age 60. Employees aged 60 or over are entitled to an immediate annuity payable under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

(c) Classified civil servants on lay-off are entitled to retiring leave or gratuity equivalent to one week of salary or leave for each complete year of service. Prevailing rate employees have no entitlement to retiring leave or gratuity.

Question No. 1,041—Mr. Coates:

Has the Minister of Fisheries been informed of the substantial lobster trap losses in the Northumberland strait as a result of ice conditions and, if so, what action has his department taken to assist in this regard?

*SAVINGS UNDER DAIRY POLICY

Question No. 1,044—Mr. Ricard:

Has the dairy policy established by the government in April, 1963 had the effect expected of it, namely, a saving of $6 million?

Mr. Beer: The dairy policy established by the government in April, 1963, has had the following results:

(a) Has increased producer returns. The dominion bureau of statistics reports that the farm cash income from dairy products for 1963 showed an increase of $15,301,000 over 1962.

(b) This policy brought consumption and production essentially into balance; thus during the support year butter production in Canada totalled 352 million pounds while disappearance totalled 357 million pounds.

(c) This policy resulted in estimated government expenditures, other than those associated with the accumulated surplus, of $45 million compared with $56.8 million for 1962-63.

*FRENCH AND ENGLISH LESSONS FOR CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 1,045—Mr. Ricard:

As of April 16, 1964 (a) how many French speaking civil servants were taking English lessons, and (b) how many English speaking civil servants were taking French lessons; the lessons in both cases being those given under government auspices in an effort to increase civil servants' knowledge of the two languages?

Mr. McIlraith: As of April 16, 1964, there were 39 French speaking civil servants attending English language courses sponsored by various government departments, and 421 English speaking civil servants attending French language courses. These courses are being expanded to meet the increasing requirements of the service.

Answer: The whole matter of sealing operations, including the use of aircraft, is presently under serious consideration and it is expected that before the opening of the 1965 sealing season more restrictive regulations will be in effect.

2. What invitations, if any, were extended by C.B.C. to the said Marcel Chaput to present his views to the radio network (English) and the television network (English), by whom and when?
3. Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, motion for the production of papers No. 119 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservation that information relating to the affairs of individual taxpayers cannot be disclosed.

I understand that motion for the production of papers No. 120 is to be withdrawn.

Lack of Bilingual Committee Reporters

DISALLOWANCE OF CHARITABLE DONATION RECEIPTS, QUEBEC

Motion No. 119—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams received by the Minister of National Revenue or his employees concerning charitable donation receipts disallowed during 1963 in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF C.B.C. BUILDING, MONTREAL

Motion No. 120—Mr. Valade:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the federal government, the authorities of the city of Montreal, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the administrative authorities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation since April 1, 1963, concerning the construction of the buildings of that corporation in the eastern part of the city of Montreal.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LACK OF BILINGUAL COMMITTEE REPORTERS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to paragraph (1) of standing order 26, I move the adjournment of the house to discuss an urgent and extremely important matter for the Canadian people.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, a committee of this house appointed to study a matter referred by the house itself met twice without being able to examine the matter. Twice, the committee on privileges and elections had to adjourn on account of a serious deficiency in the administration of this committee. I refer to the lack of French reporters. I do not want, in any way, to hold responsible for this lack of reporters the administration of committees whose staff is qualified and devoted, but I believe that the blame falls on the government which did not assume its responsibilities in due time.

If we are confronted today with a real bilingualism crisis in a committee of the house—and not the least, since the committee on privileges and elections is the first designated in the first paragraph of standing order 65—if we are confronted with such a crisis, I say that, in my opinion, it is due to the carelessness and inefficiency of this government which refused or neglected to find French reporters.

Mr. Speaker, it is not for you or me to go out into the street and ask passers-by if they are qualified as French official reporters; however, I think—and the house undoubtedly feels the same way—that someone in the administration branch of our parliament and our government must be responsible for recruiting personnel needed by the house and its services.

That situation is not new, however. Last year that same committee on privileges and elections had to face a similar situation when the French official reporters were taken away while a serious matter was being discussed. And all the committees, last year as well as this year, are now without the services of French official reporters.

However, Mr. Speaker, the government approved recently the establishment of a commission which, by spending hundreds of thousands of dollars, conducts an inquiry on bilingualism across the country, while parliament itself is unable to establish bilingualism in its own house.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, should it not be decided whether the motion is to be put before the hon. member speaks to it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was giving reasons why the house should be adjourned under standing order 26. I understand he was just concluding his remarks.

Mr. Knowles: What a precedent.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Parliament itself is unable to establish bilingualism in its own house.

The committees of the house are part and parcel of the house and they are entitled to the same treatment as the house. In my opinion, bilingualism has the same rights during the meetings of committees as during the sittings of the house.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume), that this important matter be referred immediately to parliament and that the house adjourn its normal business to consider at once the problem of bilingualism in the committees, especially the lack of official French reporters.

I learned from the chairman of the committee that he has secured the services of a reporter, on a temporary basis, but I do not think that this will improve the present situation since three committees are sitting at the present time and two standing committees of the house, which should have bilingual reporters, are without them.

[Text]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that I have been distinctly alluded to in the comments of the hon. member may I say, as chairman of the committee, that if there is fault I accept the fault. I feel it is part of my responsibility as chairman, and if there has been a fault I accept it willingly.

Mr. Churchill: That does not cure it.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): On the hon. member's motion, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), the so-called embryo leader of the French Canadian wing of the Conservative party, both voted against a motion to adjourn that committee until such time as French reporters could be found.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the reason we voted against the motion was that the motion was just a manoeuvre to use the scarcity of reporters in the French language to save the Liberal organizer from a very embarrassing position.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the time for debate until such time as the Chair either accepts or rejects the motion. May I point out that we are not dealing with the internal problems of the committee. We are dealing with a motion to adjourn the house under standing order 26.

Now, if I can have a little attention I will do my best to reach a decision on this motion. One of the criteria under standing order 26 is the urgency of debate. The matter has to be so important and the urgency has to be so great that the ordinary business of the house should be set aside in order to debate it.

I am well aware of what took place in the committee, though I would point out it was not brought to my attention until an hour after the committee had started to sit. I do think the Chair and the staff of the house are entitled to reasonable notice, and we could perhaps avoid similar incidents in the future.

In any event, the difficulty of getting qualified reporters is great, and certainly is well known to all members of the house. Steps have immediately been taken as of yesterday to secure two qualified reporters for the meeting of the said committee this afternoon. One has been graciously furnished by the other place, and the other has been secured by the Chair for this particular committee. But we recognize, of course, that this is a long term problem and steps are being taken, and have been taken, to ensure that if any slip has taken place in the past it will be attended to immediately and will be corrected in the future. At the same time this whole problem has been referred to the committee on procedure and organization.

May I point out that during the last three years, with the increase in the number of parties in the house, with the tremendous increase in the use of French—and I am very glad to see it—in the House of Commons and in the committees, we are in the midst of changing conditions requiring different methods of treatment.

I am very much indebted to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for bringing this to the attention of the Chair even though the Chair is well aware of the problem, and I can assure the house that steps have been taken as of yesterday, and will be taken immediately, to correct what obviously is a flaw in our general committee set-up.

I do not think that we should take any more time of the house to debate this matter and in the circumstances, although I thank the hon. member for bringing this to the attention of the house, nevertheless I do not think the ordinary business of the house should be set aside at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have only one question to ask. Is it your intention to submit this very important problem to the Secretary of State, who is responsible for this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) is in error, which happens to him pretty often, because the employment of parliamentary reporters is not the responsibility of the Secretary of State but rather of the House of Commons.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, following the comment just made by the Secretary of State, I wish to remind him that this matter and this responsibility were assumed by his predecessor, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill).

I think Your Honour was quite right in pointing out that he was not given much time to remedy the situation which occurred yesterday in the committee on privileges and elections. On the other hand, Your Honour will recall that, on October 8 of last year, the then secretary of state, who is now the Minister of Transport, in reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency on that very matter, that is if bilingual reporters were to be assigned to the committees of the house, made the following statement—

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am about to call orders of the day. Perhaps the hon. member could ask a question on the same subject, if it is pressing and urgent, at that time.

Mr. Martineau: Your Honour, I believe it would facilitate and expedite the business of the house—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that the motion has not been accepted and we have not anything before the house except the regular, ordinary business; so I am going to call orders of the day.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, with the greatest respect to the Chair, that you came to the conclusion that the motion was out of order without giving any hon. members of this house a chance to discuss whether or not this was an urgent matter. Surely some hon. members would have liked to have set forth an argument to assist Your Honour in coming to the conclusion at which you did arrive this afternoon. It would seem that we were closed off in debate.

Mr. Valade: Grit arrogance again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Acting on the very good suggestion of my learned friend, may I read standing order 26, subparagraph 1:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance must be asked after starred questions on Wednesdays and on other days after the ordinary daily routine of business, standing order 15(2), has been concluded.
> (2) The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and states the matter.
> (3) He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than 20 members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

In reply to the hon. member for Bow River, several hon. members did have the opportunity to speak. I did not notice the hon. member take that opportunity when others were speaking. But in any event the decision has been rendered, and I do not think we are justified in spending more time on the matter.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Secretary of State rose and stated that this was no concern of his. I think we should have the right—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martineau: —to answer that particular assertion; and if Your Honour had allowed me the time, I had just about finished my statement.

An hon. Member: You are out of order, anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must take its own responsibility, and the Chair has rendered a decision, good, bad or indifferent. The Chair is not disposed to change that decision. What the Secretary of State says is his responsibility, but in so far as the Chair is concerned, the matter is terminated. Orders of the day.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the motion raised—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must realize that to enter into a constant debate is against our standing orders and against the custom and practice of the house. I am calling for the last time, if I can put it that way, orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Your Honour has just mentioned that several hon. members have had the opportunity to speak on this matter. I was trying to say a few words before you gave your decision but we did not have the opportunity to express even briefly our opinion.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this demonstrates the fact that when a ruling has been given it should be accepted by the house; or if not accepted, it should be put to a vote. I do not see that anything is to be gained at this time by continuing this discussion. The point of the necessity for more French speaking reporters has been clearly made. The reply has been to the effect that every endeavour will be made to secure extra reporters, and there I think the matter should rest. Orders of the day.

Mr. Grafftey: We have been told this for years, and nothing has been done about it.

An hon. Member: What about the six years you were in office?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Grafftey: It does not make any difference; it is not a party question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the statement made yesterday in Paris to the NATO ministerial meeting by the Secretary of State for External Affairs means or is intended to signify or imply that Canada is about to recognize the government of communist China. Would the Prime Minister say whether the interpretation that has been given to the remarks of the minister is in accordance with the facts?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the statement was made yesterday at The Hague at a confidential session of the NATO council.

Mr. Woolliams: How can it be confidential?

Mr. Pearson: I have seen press reports of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs is supposed to have said, and they vary. I have also had the benefit of a report from The Hague as to what he said. I can assure my right hon. friend that in his statement in regard to the policy of this government with reference to China, the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not go beyond what was stated in this house in answer to a question on October 2, 1963, what he said in the house on November 28, 1963, and what he said in reply to two questions asked and answered on March 2 and March 23, 1964.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, for a completely secret meeting the report certainly was complete, even to the extent of quotation marks. I ask the Prime Minister whether this was just a case of kite flying, or does it represent a change of viewpoint on the part of the government of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, it does not represent a change of viewpoint.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So it is kite flying.

NATO—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING MULTILATERAL FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the NATO conference which is now going on at The Hague. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman could tell us whether the question of setting up a multilateral force is on the agenda and if he can give the house some assurance that Canada will make no commitment with regard to such a force without consulting parliament.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Our policy with regard to this matter is well known, and it will not be changed as the result of any discussions at the current NATO council meeting.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC—DEPORTATION OF HOLDER OF CANADIAN PASSPORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last Monday the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) put the following question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration:

Is the minister aware that a person holding a Canadian passport has been deported from the Dominican Republic and, if so, what does his department intend to do in that respect?

As this question primarily concerns the Department of External Affairs, as acting minister of that department I take the liberty of providing an answer.

When the report published in the Globe and Mail of May 11 came to the attention of the Department of External Affairs, telegrams were sent to the Canadian ambassadors in Lisbon and Santo Domingo, asking them to investigate. When the department receives a report on this investigation I shall be pleased to give a more detailed answer to the question of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency.

HOLLAND—REFUSAL OF ENTRY TO CANADIAN VOICE OF WOMEN PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked if I had any information about the situation regarding a Canadian lady who was refused admittance to the Netherlands.

I am informed that the NATO authorities had nothing whatever to do with Mrs. Macpherson being denied entry to the Netherlands. The right of visa and entry, of course, lies completely within the jurisdiction of the country being visited. On this occasion the government of the Netherlands refused admission because it was ascertained by them that Mrs. Macpherson and other ladies were entering the Netherlands to take part in a political demonstration, which, in the view of the Netherlands government might lead to a breach of the peace during the NATO council meetings.

When our embassy in The Hague heard about this they intervened on behalf of Mrs. Macpherson and Mrs. Shapiro, another Canadian lady, and the two ladies know about the intervention in question. However, since that time the government of the Netherlands has changed its decision on this matter and these two ladies and the other ladies have been admitted to the Netherlands by that government.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to make a statement with reference to the government's assistance to the victims of the tidal wave disaster in the Alberni valley. Will the Prime Minister tell us what is now the estimated total of the damage, and what percentage of this the federal government is prepared to put up as compensation to the victims?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received the details of the damage, but I hope to be able to make a statement tomorrow as to the amount that will be made available by the federal government to the sufferers in this disaster.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the government has received the sum total of the damage? Has the federal government yet decided what percentage of the agreed amount they will be prepared to meet?

Mr. Pearson: I will make a statement tomorrow which will clear this matter up.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say whether it is the intention, in addition to prorating the expenditures between the federal and provincial governments, of his government to give assistance by way of a contribution to the emergency fund? That is a matter aside from the pressing matter which is being discussed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government, as I said yesterday, to make a contribution to the emergency fund, and I will be able to announce the amount tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROVINCIAL STUDY OF INDEPENDENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question, which might perhaps seem a bit funny but which is really very serious under the circumstances.

Does the Canadian government propose to express its views before the parliamentary committee of the Quebec legislature, the creation of which was announced in the newspapers yesterday and today and which is going to make a comprehensive study of the repercussions of Quebec's independence?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Important though the question is, I think it is one for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question in the same subject area as that raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve which you ruled out of order; and of course you have the right to pass judgment on my question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is considering taking any immediate public position with regard to the official endeavour of the Quebec legislature in studying factors relating to the separation of Quebec from Canada.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the same conditions apply. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: I would ask to have it transferred for debate.

[Later:]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman been in communication with Premier Lesage of Quebec since a member of the latter's government officially rejected the concept of co-operative federalism on behalf of the government of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: The question is important and it is very interesting, but I do not see what urgency attaches to it. Under our standing orders, as the hon. member well knows, a question may be asked only in respect of a matter of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer. Consequently, perhaps the hon. member would put his question on the order paper.

FINANCE

PROPOSED ALTERATIONS IN WORLD MONETARY SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a special and urgent question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister any information of immediate interest and concern to the members of this house with respect to the participation by the Canadian government in the search for international monetary liquidity, stability and agility?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think in reply to a question from my hon. friend the other day I stated that Canada has been participating in the studies that have been conducted by the so-called group of ten are under the auspices of the international monetary fund. I said in answer to a question that Mr. Plumptre, the assistant deputy minister of finance, had been representing Canada. I hope to attend a meeting that will be considering this matter in June. At the annual meeting of the international monetary fund and the world bank in Tokyo in September —I think the dates are from the 7th to the 11th—I hope Canada will be represented by myself, by the governor of the Bank of Canada and by Mr. Plumptre.

PROCEDURE RESPECTING REFUNDS OF SALES TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Can the hon. gentleman now tell the house when his department intends to issue a statement regarding simplified procedures in applying for refund of the 8 per cent tax on building materials used in the construction of educational institutions? I should like to ask him, further, whether the refund will now apply also to churches.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put his question on the order paper?

Mr. Pascoe: With all deference, when I last asked this question the minister promised to give an answer soon.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I am happy to be able to relieve the anxiety of the hon. member by telling him that the regulations were amended yesterday and the instructions for obtaining refunds under the new formula in connection with educational institutions are being distributed today. As to the second part of the question, I do not believe it is possible, though

I shall have to check my answer, for the Minister of National Revenue to make the change in the law which would be required; it is covered by statute.

Mr. Pascoe: Where can we obtain copies of this simplified form?

Mr. McIlraith: I would be happy to provide one to the hon. member and to any other hon. members who may wish to have them.

TRADE

COMMUNIST CHINA—EXPORT TO CANADA OF TEXTILE PRODUCTS FOLLOWING WHEAT SALE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. With regard to the new sale of wheat to communist China under the second long term agreement, could the minister tell us whether it is correct that Canada will receive, each year, $7 million worth of Chinese textiles?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the new sale of wheat to China which I announced the other day is within the framework of the long term agreement which I announced in the house on August 2, 1963. Under that agreement there are no Canadian undertakings about the volume of Chinese textile sales to Canada. It was recognized, and I stated at that time, that it is in our mutual interest to provide the Chinese state trading corporation with an opportunity to maintain and develop their market in Canada for various items, subject to appropriate safeguards to avoid market disruption. In this connection the Chinese state trading corporation—not the Canadian government but the Chinese state trading corporation—have undertaken to limit their exports of sensitive items, including textiles to Canada to a total limit of $7 million annually.

WHEAT—PROBABLE CONTINUATION OF SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask whether his attention has been drawn to a statement made by deputy chairman Mikoyan of the Soviet union to a group of Canadian businessmen that sales of wheat to Russia would likely continue for many years. If so, have the Russians indicated that the flour content of such sales would be maintained?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing this interesting information to my attention. I have not as yet received any indication such as has been given to the businessmen of Canada that the Russians are about to buy more wheat. I hope it is true, and I hope they buy more flour.

[Later:]

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has his department taken or is it taking any immediate action to check on the accuracy of the reported statement of Mikoyan to see what enlarged scope there may be for greater sales of Canadian wheat in the interests of the wheat growers of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is a question for the order paper.

CANADIAN FLAG

NUMBER OF DESIGNS SUBMITTED TO GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, or more exactly on April 17 last, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked how many flag designs had been submitted to this government since it came to power. I shall answer him that we received 624 designs from April 22, 1963 to April 24, 1964.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State a supplementary question. Could he tell the house whether it is true that the choice of two flags was discussed and decided in the Liberal caucus today?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Speaker.

DELAY IN TRANSLATION OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the committee on external affairs has been sitting for almost a month and a half in order to study the Columbia river treaty, and since the proceedings of several sittings have already been published in English, would the Secretary of State tell us why we do not receive those documents in French?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I said on several occasions, the work of the bureau for translations has increased considerably, especially in the last few months. We are now making all possible effort to get more staff, and I am sure that the present staff is doing all it can to supply translations as soon as possible.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Can he tell us whether the salary scale offered by the federal government in the field of bilingual reporters, translators and interpreters can be the cause of the delay in the efforts of his department to solve this problem? Can he also tell us whether the salaries offered by the federal government are higher than those offered by private industry?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is a question which the Secretary of State could hardly be expected to reply to in detail on short notice. As the hon. member well knows, all these salaries are under careful consideration at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I ask that this question be discussed at ten o'clock, after the adjournment of the business of the house.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell the house whether he will place all the facilities of his department at the disposal of Mr. Speaker in order to ensure the presence of French and English reporters at the meetings of the committees of the house, as promised by his predecessor on October 8 last?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat my statement of a few minutes ago, which in no way contradicts what my predecessor said on October 8 last. I wish to repeat that the employment of reporters is not a responsibility of the Secretary of State but of the House of Commons. However, I am convinced that if the House of Commons requests the services of the Secretary of State, we shall be happy to co-operate to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In order to help clear up the situation, and in the interest of the House of Commons, would the Secretary of State tell us whether he intends to invite the Laurendeau-Dunton commission to conduct an inquiry here in parliament, first of all, so that we may have integral bilingualism?

An hon. Member: A silly question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is completely out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Does he intend to treat our interpreters more humanely, in order at least to keep those we have now, by providing them with an air conditioning system in their booths?

PUBLIC SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is based on a report in the paper that President Claude Edwards of the civil service federation had written to the Prime Minister asking that benefits similar to those announced for members of the armed forces be provided for civilian employees of the Department of National Defence who are prematurely retired because of the reorganization in that department. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has received the communication, if he has answered it, and whether he could indicate the nature of his reply.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received the communication and I am in process of preparing a reply to it.

SHIPPING

LAKE HURON—SUGGESTED METHOD OF RAISING WATER LEVEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. Would the minister give consideration to an experiment to raise water levels in lake Huron by sinking two obsolete lake freighters on either side of the channel leading to the St. Clair river?

Mr. Speaker: Certainly this question is important but not necessarily extremely urgent.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. He is well aware of the serious situation in northwestern Quebec and more particularly in the field of justice.

The superior court of that region has had cases pending for over five years. Now we hear rumours to the effect that the Minister of Justice will appoint a third superior court judge. Does the minister intend to make such an appointment as soon as possible so that the cases can be heard in our region?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have received certain representations from the attorney general of the province of Quebec, not necessarily concerning northwestern Quebec as a particular region, but rather concerning the addition to the number of judges of the superior court. It gives me pleasure to inform my hon. friend that I have the matter under consideration.

PUBLICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I wonder whether the Prime Minister can give us the latest news about legislation respecting periodical publications after today's government caucus.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not on orders of the day.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GASPE—REPORTED INTENTION TO CONDUCT ECONOMIC SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Since he is not in the house at the present time, I hope that one of his colleagues will answer on his behalf.

Under the ARDA program, natural resources, social and economic conditions in that part of the province of Quebec including the lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspe peninsula and the Magdalen islands will be the subject of a comprehensive study, does the term "lower St. Lawrence" include Charlevoix county?

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. I will bring it to the attention of the minister, and I am sure a reply will be forthcoming.

STORMS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from an answer given earlier by the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in respect of the disaster at Port Alberni.

On June 30, 1963 a hurricane devastated part of Abitibi West, in the province of Quebec. Did the Prime Minister decide at that time to contribute to the disaster fund established to help victims of that region of the province of Quebec, as it is being done for Port Alberni, according to the answer he gave a moment ago to the Leader of the Opposition?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am being asked about a fund covering a disaster which occurred nearly a year ago and I am unable, of course, to reply offhand.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCOME TAX ON BENEFITS TO RETIRING PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): On May 11, in reply to a question, the Prime Minister undertook to look into a suggestion that the income tax on the special benefits paid to retiring personnel of the armed forces be spread over a period of three or four years. The suggestion was perhaps made because of a belief that the benefits would be treated for income tax purposes as ordinary income, or perhaps in the mistaken belief that the serviceman would be thereby raised to a higher income bracket for tax purposes.

Such is not the case. The special benefit to a member of the Canadian armed forces is treated as if it were a gratuity payable under the pay and allowance regulations. It is not treated as normal income, and does not place him in a higher tax bracket. The actual tax paid on this benefit is applied to only 85 per cent of the amount of the benefit, and is calculated on the basis of the tax payable on the serviceman's normal income. This method of computing income tax on lump sum payments to servicemen has been in effect for many years.

To give an example, an army captain with 16 years service, married, with two children, would be entitled to a maximum special benefit of $6,350. The income tax payable on the special benefit would be $582.93, and the lump sum paid to him would be the difference, or $5,767.07. If the special benefit had been simply added to his annual income the income tax on his special benefit would be not $582.93 but $1,206.50. It will be apparent, therefore, that the method of computing income tax on these lump sum payments results in a much lower tax than that which would apply if the benefit were merely added to income for tax purposes.

JUDGES ACT AND EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF EXCHEQUER COURT

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-96, to amend the Judges Act and the Exchequer Court Act.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is one point on which I should like a brief explanation. I did not want to intervene last night. Can the minister tell me whether in the future there is to be no position of commissioner of divorce in the other place? When the present incumbent retires or if he unfortunately ceases to hold office prior to the expiration of the 10 year appointment I take it that nominations from then on will be from the exchequer court bench at the instance of the Speaker of the Senate, but I should like to know what control the president of the exchequer court will have.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say it is the government's intention that once a member of the exchequer court has been appointed in addition to the present members, and once one out of the six puisne judges has been designated by the Speaker of the Senate to fulfil the duties of the commissioner, then from that time there will not be a commissioner functioning at the same time as the judge exercising these functions. I will admit that we thought about the question of the intervention of the chief justice. The reason why the bill was drafted in this way is that this person will act as an officer of the Senate and for that reason we believe it is essential that the Senate, through its Speaker, have full control over the choice of the person who will act in lieu of the commissioner; but it is assumed and has always been taken for granted that this will be done in conjunction with the president of the exchequer court.

My learned friend will agree that the difficulties have been considerable in drafting this very special type of legislation and this is the reason why we have expressed it that way. Quite frankly, I must say that the reason why the designation is left to the Speaker of the Senate is precisely to retain the quality of the person acting as an officer or in lieu of one of the officers of the houses of parliament, and to make it clear that he will not thereby be discharging any function as a judge of the exchequer court as such.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a word to say with regard to this bill. After we passed the resolution last night the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) said, as found on page 3200 of Hansard, that "although the bill has not been circulated they", referring to members of the house, "may take my word for it that it is verbatim" with one that was before the house last year, and he asked us to give unanimous consent to second reading then. I objected and said that we would like to go on with the bill today, and at that point some member shouted "obstruction".

Far from there being any obstruction, the bill was not circulated last night and it was not circulated this morning. When I came into the house at 2.30 I looked on my file of bills to see if it had been placed there by the pages, but we only received it at 3.30. I would point out that far from there being any obstruction last night we were very properly performing our duty as an opposition in asking to see the printed document before the house passed it. When the Minister of Justice told us that the bill had not yet been circulated I suggest that he should have said that the bill had not yet been printed in sufficient numbers to be circulated.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I hope I have been well understood. I never implied, because I did not know, that the bill had been or had not been printed, but one sure thing was that it had not been circulated. I must say that in my capacity as government leader in the house I am certainly not complaining about the conduct of the opposition or any of the parties. There was a good deal of co-operation yesterday, which I am sure will continue, because the mood is there; and I was quite pleased. I would ask my hon. friend to recall that I did not persist in my request as soon as he made the statement which he made last night.

Mr. Churchill: We were very co-operative last night, but who was the undisclosed member who called out "obstruction" last night? Why does he not stand up and identify himself?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were on second reading of Bill No. C-90. We are told today that copies of the bill are available. Where are they? We do not have them.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, a little while ago, I sent a note to each leader of opposition parties in the house telling them that the bill had just arrived. I understand, and I am not blaming him, that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was absent for a few minutes, only at that time, and that is probably why he was not informed. It is fortunate that the bill is now available. This will enable us not only to discuss it immediately, but also to follow the order indicated last night.

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the said judge will come under the jurisdiction of the Senate and the exchequer court, will there not be some confusion should there be a change of government? Will that judge fall under the sole jurisdiction of the exchequer court or will he remain always under the jurisdiction of the Senate?

It is said that the Speaker of the Senate changes when a new government comes into power; therefore, will there not be some confusion?

Mr. Favreau: In so far as the political factor might be undesirable in the case of someone who would hold a public office of that kind—

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the Minister of Justice, but perhaps I should mention that we are debating second reading of this bill. It is not the usual practice as I understand it, to have an exchange of questions and answers such as we have had in the last few minutes. We can have speeches or contributions from hon. members which may be answered by the minister as a sort of summary which would close the debate. Detailed questions might be asked in the committee, if that is the wish of hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I should not like the house to go into committee now if members of the house are of the opinion that it is still necessary to ask some more questions. Perhaps we have not given you enough time to take your seat at the head of the table.

[Text]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) and I think he realizes the problem raised in my question.

I believe we have here a rather delicate structure based entirely on a cordial agreement between the Speaker of the Senate and the president of the exchequer court. As a matter of fact, I do not see how the Speaker of the Senate could, given a mandate, appoint a puisne judge of the exchequer court without the consent of the president of the exchequer court. He cannot pick his judge at random. An agreement will have to be entered into between the president of the exchequer court and the Speaker of the Senate.

Now, on the other hand, could judges of the exchequer court refuse the invitation or the request of the Speaker of the Senate to act, for a rather long period, as Senate divorce commissioner?

I suggest to the minister and the government to consider that matter, for I feel that a more effective formula would be desirable in the future.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to ask once more the question which I asked before the house went into committee. Could the minister tell us whether there would not be any risk of a conflict of authority between the Speaker of the Senate and the chief justice of the exchequer court, when the duties of the judge who will act as divorce commissioner have to be determined?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, this question is quite appropriate. Of course, I say again that this situation is new and I admit it before the house. We thought about it very carefully before introducing the bill. The authority which has the power to establish the position of divorce commissioner, namely parliament, at the same time has the power to amend or modify the Exchequer Court Act and to enact specific provisions governing the rights and duties of the judges of the exchequer court, even outside their ordinary duties as members of the court.

There will be no conflict because we were very careful to put in the words which would make it quite clear that, once he has been designated, that judge will in effect be on loan to the Senate. His duties will be exclusively that of an officer of the Senate, that is to say the same as those assigned to the officer of the Senate.

To make sure that the Senate would keep the required control, we felt that the Speaker of the Senate himself should designate the particular judges who would thereafter perform those duties. However, in reply, not to the objection, but to the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), which, in my opinion, is also well taken, I suggest it would be possible to reconcile those notions by adding, after the words "of the present section", that is the second line in subclause 6A, words such as, for instance: "after consultation with the president of the court".

I think that would solve the problem brought up by the hon. member for Edmonton West. If so, for my part, I am willing to recognize the merits of his question. It would at least be an improvement on the text in its present form and I would be ready to ask one of my colleagues to propose an amendment to that effect.

Mr. Lambert: Well, Mr. Chairman—

[Text]

Mr. Olson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There have been a number of discussions going on amongst hon. members as to what will be the next order of business after this bill relating to the Exchequer Court Act. I should like to ask the house leader if he is going to follow the order of business announced last night, or will there be substitutions made?

Mr. Favreau: If I may be allowed to answer that intervention, which is appropriate, I may say the reason we did not start in the order which I had announced last night was that Bill No. C-96, which we are now discussing and Bill No. C-95, had not come back from the printers, to our great dismay and surprise. The Clerk of the house has been kind enough to advise us that Bill No. C-96 has come from the printers. I am pleased to advise there are a few copies of Bill No. C-95 here, and we are ready to call that bill after the bill under discussion has been passed, if that course is agreeable to hon. members.

The Chairman: I understand there are about two dozen copies of the bill available.

Mr. Favreau: There might not be enough copies, but our intention was to proceed with this one and subsequently to take the legislation providing for the extension of the authority of the banks to do business after July 1, first because it is printed, and second, because it is rather urgent and is of relatively little difficulty from the point of view of discussion. We were then proposing to deal with the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Mr. Olson: We are now on Bill C-96; following that we will take Bill C-95, and then the bill to extend the Bank Act. Is that the sequence?

Mr. Favreau: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Last night we understood the third item today would be the Income Tax Act. What has happened to that?

Mr. Favreau: I will continue being frank with hon. members, as I have always been. It seems there are quite a few hon. members who desired to debate the matter of the Income Tax Act, but who are not present in the chamber at the moment for reasons which I am told are acceptable, and I think it would be to the benefit of parliament if they be given the opportunity to be present so that we can have a fuller discussion. Therefore, we are going to call it as the first item tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the minister's attention on the abnormal situation which results from the hasty introduction of bills as is the case here, even if the legislation is relatively short or contains but a few sections.

This question was considered by the house some time ago and it seems to me that there was sufficient time to have the bill printed and submitted to the house. In fact, I submit that all hon. members should have had a copy of Bill No. C-96 a long time ago. It seems to me that the procedure followed concerning legislation is rather strange.

Coming back to the bill itself, section 3 reads as follows:

> A judge of the court designated by the Speaker of the Senate under this section and to whom the governor in council has granted for this purpose leave of absence—

Mr. Chairman, will the Speaker of the Senate, under this section, be able to change, day after day, the judge in question who would become commissioner for annulment of marriages in Canada?

Under the bill, there are six puisne judges in the exchequer court. So, if the Speaker of the Senate is the only one authorized to appoint a judge, will the appointee continue in office for a certain period, or could the Speaker of the Senate ask one of the five other judges of the exchequer court to look after cases of marriage annulment? To be more precise, will only one of the six exchequer court judges be appointed to hear marriage annulment cases, or will the Speaker of the Senate, at his discretion, select one of the six exchequer court judges, after this bill is passed?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, as I said yesterday, the purpose of the bill now under consideration is to ensure that the man entrusted with those duties will see his prestige recognized by the public by having the status of a judge of the exchequer court, so that he will be known to show objectivity, fairness and legal knowledge in the determination of factors preceding the reports to be submitted to the Senate.

In principle, it is clear that on termination of the leave granted by the governor in council, the Speaker of the Senate could appoint another judge. But if we were to include in the legislation the restriction I referred to earlier, which the hon. member for Villeneuve might also have in mind, namely the consultation with the chairman of the exchequer court prior to the appointment of the judge or commissioner involved, even the possibility of such a danger would be removed.

On the other hand, in practice, it is clear that the purpose is to enable the Speaker of the Senate to designate, among the judges of the exchequer court, one who would be sufficiently specialized in those matters to hear the cases submitted to him by the Senate. Surely, we can take it for granted that the Speaker of the Senate will act with all the required wisdom and retain, so to speak, the services of the same judge for all the hearings.

As I pointed out yesterday, one of the advantages of the new legislation—once it is passed, it goes without saying—will be to make the present system much more flexible. Should the judge be ill or unable to act, for any reason whatever, because he is away on a trip or what have you, then, if many cases are outstanding, the Speaker of the Senate, with the assistance of the president of the exchequer court, will at least be able to designate another judge in the meantime, if the governor in council grants him leave, as provided in the clause, to hear the said cases.

For my part, I think we can all assume that this discretion will be exercised in the same way that other authorities exercise their own, that is so as to achieve the very purpose of the legislation, which is to ensure a responsible, impartial and legally sound settlement of those cases which nevertheless remain under the jurisdiction, if you wish, of one of the two houses of parliament, in this case, the Senate.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a few questions which are closely related to what has just been said.

First of all, I want it clearly established whether all the judges of the exchequer court will be available or will be able to get that commissioner position and furthermore whether those judges of the exchequer court, in view of the new legislation, will also be able to sit on the divorce court. In addition, will their decisions be final, will they be necessarily imposed on the Senate, or will the Senate be able to reject the decisions suggested by judge having heard the case?

I would also like to get the assurance that the appointment of a new judge to the exchequer court will be made on the basis of his legal competence, even if his field of action is going to be rather restricted, and not on the basis of his political merits.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being disapproved, but in order to reassure the house, because I consider it my duty to do so, I must say that as far as I am concerned, in my capacity as Minister of Justice, it is my intention to recommend to the governor in council the appointment, as additional judge of the exchequer court, the present divorce commissioner who was praised so much yesterday in the house for his qualifications and experience.

Of course, without any prejudice to the decision to be taken by the Speaker of the Senate, it seems clear to me that he is the one the Speaker of the Senate will appoint as the first judge to try those cases.

But it is also clear that, for the reasons I gave earlier, other judges of the exchequer court will be eligible. But my own interpretation, which may be wrong, of the wording to be submitted, is that in the spirit of the act only one judge of the exchequer court will have to be appointed to that office at any time.

That is why we recommend the appointment of only one additional judge of the exchequer court. Because it will not reduce the work of that court and the same amount of work will have to be done.

I think that even if the Speaker of the Senate appointed more than one judge, first, if we admit the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the president of the court himself would see to it this did not happen; and second, the governor in council would not grant leave of absence to release one more judge.

Practically, I think we can all consider as an established fact that the judge to be appointed will have special qualifications in that field and that second, only one judge will be appointed at any time to discharge the duties of commissioner.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am very appreciative of the remarks the Minister of Justice has made, and I would like to see the amendment he suggested a few moments ago, to assure consultation between the president of the exchequer court and the Speaker of the Senate. I may be setting up a straw man, but I think there may be difficulty in the event that there should not be agreement by the president of the exchequer court with regard to releasing a judge of that court. I have no qualms about the present president of the exchequer court, but our legislation must also take care of the future.

I refer to the English version of the bill, line 20, and wonder whether we might not have an amendment to provide that after the granting of leave of absence by the cabinet the judge shall exercise and perform these duties. In other words, if there is disagreement between the Speaker of the Senate and the president of the exchequer court, then the governor in council, or the cabinet, may step in and say, "Yes, this man shall perform these duties". You have to cut the Gordian knot somewhere. In this way there would be direction by the governor in council. I am putting this forward to the minister as a suggestion for his consideration. It may be that it goes too far and the minister would not like to have the governor in council step in. However, I think the minister realizes the potential problem that I have set up.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I understand perfectly the problem which has been raised. I personally would not agree that a person extraneous to the president of the exchequer court, under whose jurisdiction fall the puisne judges, should make this appointment. I do not think that after the Speaker of the Senate has intervened, another group, the governor in council, which is also extraneous to the exchequer court, should in a mandatory fashion have to appoint the commissioner.

My reason for not agreeing with this suggestion is that it would be bypassing, in my view, in too complete a fashion the authority of the president of the exchequer court, who is after all the chief justice of that court. This is why we have drafted the bill in this way, to make it possible, feasible and lawful for a member of the exchequer court to discharge functions which normally would be discharged by an officer of another body, namely the Senate. This is why I personally would much prefer, if my hon. friend from Edmonton West would agree, an amendment which would bring together the president of the exchequer court and the Speaker of the Senate for the purpose of consultation. In view of the purpose of the bill and the reason one additional judge is being added to the exchequer court, I am quite sure that if we had the misfortune of losing the president of that court it would always be easy for the Speaker of the Senate and the president of the exchequer court to reach agreement.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps I was being a little too pessimistic.

Mr. Favreau: No, you were just being prudent.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, without being too insistent, I would like to revert to a question which I asked a moment ago.

The bar association to which I belong passed a resolution last year and reaffirmed its wish this year that the administration of justice be entrusted to persons whose qualifications take precedence over political considerations.

I wonder if this would not be a good idea—which I am now suggesting—that it be included in the bill itself—even if it is there only as a matter of form—for that appointment, as the minister said a while ago—of course, in the present case, the appointment will be made according to the qualifications, but we have to anticipate other appointments also—this is why I ask, as I said a moment ago, even if it is there only as a matter of form, whether it would not be a good idea to include in the bill that future appointments should be made according to qualifications and not for political considerations.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I understand the objectivity of my hon. friend in making his suggestion, but I think that it would probably be an indication—I say so frankly—of non-confidence in those who make appointments.

As for myself, I may say that as far as the present divorce commissioner is concerned—and I must say that I have recommended him—I do not know, and I hope that all the hon. members will take my word for it, what his political affiliations are.

Second, if you want to go by the recent appointment of the president of the exchequer court you will surely see that I am convinced that competence is the only thing that should be taken into account.

But I think—and that is why I would be against including this in the legislation—that it must be taken for granted, even if it is necessary to criticize him in the future for failing to do so, that the Minister of Justice in his recommendations to the Prime Minister about appointments to the posts of president or chief justice which the governor in council will make, will always be convinced, as he must be, that the man he is recommending is competent.

I say that this is tacitly included in the act and that it is preferable not to write it, because this would create difficulties in the future by giving the impression that certain judges might be appointed for other reasons than for their competence.

There may have been such appointments in the past but I know—this is perhaps selfishness on my part because I want to consider my own responsibility only—that during my short term of office, there has been no appointment for other consideration, and I hope that nobody will be able to say later on that there has ever been.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this matter, but I do think the point raised by the hon. member for Sherbrooke is an excellent one. We have some very bad judges. I say that as a non-lawyer, therefore having no axe to grind one way or the other. But there are some very bad judges, and political appointments are not always the best. I think, however, it should be borne in mind that the minister is very well aware of the considerations and circumstances under which the commissioner was appointed. His choice has been a good one and I would say, as a third party, it has been a non-political one. There is, of course, something to consider when this appointment has eventually to be remade, and if the insinuation of some hon. members is correct and only one judge should be designated for a long period of time in this particular field, we will have to be overly cautious about how the appointment is made. I should not like to see the Prime Minister making this appointment on the basis of who was or who was not friendly in the last election; much more is at stake than that.

I think the minister is right in saying that there are other safeguards which have been written into the bill, not the least of which would be the rules that the Senate exercises in its committee, and the role which I see the Speaker of the Senate playing in this appointment. It is not likely that all the exchequer court judges would be incompetent, although some might be. When the chief of the exchequer court makes his choice and the request is made by the Senate for a specific officer, then it is very likely that there will not be an opportunity to avoid what the hon. member for Sherbrooke thinks might be the fact. However, I believe that this discussion in this regard is worth while, and that as people look back at the history of this debate they will perhaps find that the minister has pretty well assured—and I think as long as he is minister of this department he will be able to give us the assurance—that competency will be the major criterion in the choosing of a commissioner, and that some of the other factors which have played a part in the appointment of judges will not apply in this case. If it were otherwise then the government would have to go much further than it has at the present time to solve the whole problem, so that we would not be dependant on so many people for their good will.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I have just one point of clarification for the minister. This additional judge who will be appointed will be empowered, will he not, to try other cases which are referred to the exchequer court, or will he be limited only to the duties set out in clause 3?

Mr. Favreau: The intention is to limit him during the leave of absence given by the governor in council to the disposal of these cases. However, it is also the intention, whenever there are any cases to be disposed of, to cancel the period of leave and, at the request of the president of the exchequer court, to make available a judge, even if only for a few days or weeks, to dispose of court business and to assist his colleagues.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I asked earlier whether the commissioner's decision was final. I know that it is the Senate which finally decides in divorce matters. But what is the determining factor to establish whether the Senate must approve or reject the commissioner's recommendations?

Are certain rules to be applied in some cases when the commissioner's decision would not be accepted by the Senate? What are those rules? I imagine that at a given time the judge or commissioner will be the only one to make decisions to grant divorces for the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec.

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry I forgot to answer that question when it was put to me along with a few others.

Naturally, I am not saying this to criticize the hon. member, but that question would rather apply to the amendment or to a discussion of chapter 10 of the statutes of Canada for the year 1963, which we passed during the last session and which enacted this legislation. The measure now before us is not meant to amend the statute in any way, but simply to add a judge and to enable him to perform the duties defined in chapter 10.

However, for the purpose of this discussion and with no intention of prolonging it, I might say that the Senate, as such, remains the master and that it finds itself today, as far as the recommendations of the commissioner are concerned, in the situation the Senate divorce committee was in previously.

For all practical purposes, what we are aiming at is that such recommendations be made by someone able to set down his own jurisprudence and, above all, who would be wise enough to judge to detect fabricated evidence—for such a thing has happened—and who could guarantee that his recommendations, when the time comes for the Senate to accept them, have been thoroughly considered. But the Senate remains the master, because we are not tampering here with chapter 10, unless an amendment is brought forward. However, it must be assumed that if the Senate were to set aside the commissioner's recommendation, it would only be because new evidence had been uncovered or for some other very serious reason. In principle, the commissioner will not be empowered to make recommendations in cases other than those already recognized by federal legislation and by the bill previously passed by the house.

I feel therefore that nothing is subtracted from the Senate's jurisdiction. The present bill changes in no way the duties of the commissioner. Its purpose is merely to allow a judge to carry them out.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF PROVINCIAL TAXES AND FEES BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-95, respecting the payment of certain provincial taxes and fees by crown corporations.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Lambert: There is one question I should have liked to ask last night. What about the position in the case of those provinces which do not levy a sales tax? Their provincial corporations, if any, have to pay federal sales tax. I presume the federal government will now direct its crown corporations to pay sales tax to those provinces which levy it, on what one might call an exchange basis. Is the government not prepared to give any relief to the two provinces which do not impose a sales tax?

I do not know whether the minister is trying to encourage those provinces to levy sales tax. It is true the crown corporations will have to pay the gasoline tax, and the same is true of motor vehicle licences. But I am concerned about the sales tax.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member for Edmonton West has raised an interesting question. When provinces do not levy a sales tax, the crown corporations do not have to pay a sales tax to them. This would apply to Manitoba and Alberta. I might point out, also, that there is a considerable difference in the rates of sales tax imposed by the various provinces, from a high of 6 per cent to a low of 3 per cent. In the case the hon. member has in mind, the crown corporations would not be paying sales tax but they would be paying licence fees and gasoline taxes.

Mr. Lambert: If I recall rightly, the minister indicated in the budget that the crown corporations would be paying these taxes from April 1, 1964, onward and I take it they have been doing that. My other question is this: Is the minister satisfied that in the event that provinces which do not now have sales taxes embark into the field known as turnover tax, no amendment would be necessary and the wording of this clause and following clauses would be sufficient to cover it? It seems to me the tax referred to is a tax as listed in clause 3, and it says:

Any retail sales tax of general application payable on an ad valorem basis by the purchaser—

No. It does not cover the turnover tax.

Mr. Benson: The answer to the first point is that crown corporations which were not previously paying sales tax have not, as yet, begun paying the tax in the absence of enabling legislation. When this legislation is passed, they will begin to pay the tax.

As to the question of the turnover tax, a tax which, so far, has yet to be imposed, this would of course have to be dealt with by amendment to the legislation, should any province see fit to levy such a tax. This provision applies to existing sales taxes and I believe legislation could not go so far as to anticipate all the various types of taxes which might be levied in the future.

Mr. Olson: Has any consideration been given to making cash payments to those provinces which do not levy sales tax, in lieu of tax revenue from these corporations?

Mr. Benson: No consideration has been given to this matter. It would be extremely difficult to calculate how much revenue would have been realized had a sales tax been imposed, or at what rate it might have been imposed.

Mr. Olson: At the risk of being accused of taking a purely provincial stand on this question, may I say that in my opinion this is another measure by the federal government which is grossly discriminatory against Alberta. May I recall that in calculating the amount of equalization grants made to the provinces by the federal government, revenue from natural resources is taken into account and under this formula the province of Alberta is prevented from receiving large sums of money which would otherwise be due? Alberta does not become eligible to receive this money for the simple reason that the province manages its natural resources in such a way that well over $100 million of provincial revenue is derived from royalties and so on—income which does not represent taxation at all, but rather a share in the natural wealth which is being developed. I say the present system is unfair because other provinces have the right to do the same thing as Alberta; they also own the natural resources in their provinces, or most of them, and they have the right to collect royalties and to manage their affairs in the same way as Alberta does. Residents of the province of Alberta will be paying their fair share of income tax, corporation taxes and all the other taxes, such as excise tax, which the federal government imposes. Yet the refund, the means of returning some of this money to the provinces, is to be made in such a way that Alberta will be excluded from benefit.

I do not know whether there is anything we can do about this if the government is determined to go ahead. At the same time, I can cite a number of instances where a province which did not wish to enter into financial arrangements with the federal government on a certain basis was granted a cash payment in compensation. I have in mind particularly university student grants and family allowances in respect of children of the ages of 16 and 17. At least one of the provinces objected to the federal government making these payments. However, the federal government decided that if this province wished to administer its affairs in a particular way it was prepared to make a cash payment available. I think we are dealing, now, with another situation in which the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba have a legitimate claim for some cash compensation in lieu of sales tax.

Mr. Benson: In answer to the hon. member for Medicine Hat, all I can really say is that Alberta will share in the receipts from motor vehicle licences and the gasoline tax, although fortunately in Alberta the gasoline tax is the lowest in Canada. As I understand the situation, it is 12 cents a gallon; Alberta is in the very happy position of having a lot of oil.

I really do not think that in this particular bill we can delve into the whole problem of equalization. I might add that we have not received any formal representation from the province of Alberta in respect of this bill expressing the opinion that the province is unfairly treated by this legislation.

Mr. Olson: Well, the province of Alberta is noteworthy for the attitude it has always taken toward federal affairs. It has not complained about many things. As for the hon. gentleman's observation that Alberta has a lot of oil, I would like to remind him that the province of Ontario enjoys a production of nickel alone whose dollar value is in excess of all the oil produced in Alberta annually. They have the right to recover royalties if they choose to do so. If you add up all the other mineral production in the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec you find that it exceeds in total the value of oil production in Alberta. Therefore I do not accept this as a reason.

As the parliamentary secretary pointed out, the province of Alberta also happens to have the lowest fuel oil tax in Canada. This, of course, is the result of the good administration of their natural resources, so that they get a lot of revenue from them. If you add all these things up, even the things to which the parliamentary secretary has just referred, it seems to me that it only adds to the total impact of the discrimination that is being practised in this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Bélanger: Mr. Chairman, I am not used to congratulating the government but, this once, I think that the measure under consideration is certainly a progressive one.

Even if I do not give it all the importance that the members on the other side of the house seem to give it, I think that it makes amends, to a certain extent, for the injustice committed in the past when crown corporations were allowed to compete unfairly with private enterprise.

I think that this measure will benefit not only the province of Quebec but some municipalities in particular since, as you know, the sales tax was set recently at 6 per cent and the municipalities will get back 2 per cent thereof, according to their population.

Therefore, in that way, the people of some municipalities will again be helped. Moreover, I think that the government intended, through this legislation, to distribute the purchasing power, and that is why I take the liberty of saying that, in my opinion, it does not go far enough in that direction. As a matter of fact, it should also consider the possibility of exempting from the 11 per cent sales tax the municipalities which purchase building materials for public works, because I fail to see the usefulness of imposing an 11 per cent sales tax to increase the budget and then help the municipalities by giving that money back to them. I think that it would be much more logical to abolish that 11 per cent sales tax on building materials bought by municipalities for public works.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make, in order to point out that situation to the Minister of Finance and in particular to the Minister of National Revenue, so that they might think about abolishing the sales tax on building materials that are bought by municipalities for public works.

For the last few years, under the winter works program, the municipalities have been forced to engage in expenditures they would not have incurred were it not for that program.

In so doing, we may be getting the municipalities into debt at a fairly rapid rate, by forcing them to buy materials to carry out projects while the federal government is not contributing to the cost of those materials. By abolishing the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials bought by municipalities, we would assist at the same time the unemployed and in general the economic activity all over the country.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

[Mr. Olson.]

On clause 2—Payment of tax or fee by corporation listed in schedule.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance on the confidence he is showing in his parliamentary secretary by allowing him to pilot this measure through the house, and to say what an admirable job he is doing. I want to ask him two questions with regard to the schedule of crown corporations. What crown corporations have been omitted from the list? Second, would he tell the committee what crown corporations do about municipal taxes? Do they pay municipal taxes as assessed by the local municipality in the same way as any other company?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, to deal with the first question first, in my general statement at the resolution stage yesterday I indicated that the corporations which are included here consist of 22 of the 25 corporations listed in schedules C and D of the Financial Administration Act—

Mr. Douglas: What are the three that are omitted?

Mr. Benson: —plus five unlisted corporations, Bank of Canada, Canada Council, Canadian wheat board, industrial development bank and the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. I went on to say:

> Three corporations listed in schedule C of the Financial Administraton Act have been excluded from the schedule to the bill. These bodies, Canadian Arsenals Limited, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and the Defence Construction (1951) Limited—

Mr. Douglas: What was the third one?

Mr. Benson: Defence Construction (1951) Limited.

> —differ from the 27 bodies to which the bill would apply in that they operate almost entirely to provide what might be described as internal services for federal government departments.

I might also point out at this time that when we reach the schedule the Minister of Finance will move that one additional crown corporation be added which was inadvertently omitted.

To deal with the second question raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I would say that crown corporations generally do pay grants in lieu of municipal taxes to municipalities, and this applies to the question which was raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix. While it is true that on most municipal undertakings the municipalities pay our sales taxes, crown corporations in turn pay to the municipalities grants in lieu of taxes, as do the departments of the federal government.

Mr. Douglas: Are they paid in all cases? For a while there was a formula whereby the grant was only paid where the total amount of taxes in a certain city exceeded a certain amount. Has that formula been discarded and is it now paid generally across the board?

Mr. Benson: I would say almost but not entirely, Mr. Chairman. There are a good many crown corporations and there are special circumstances in the case of some of them where the full amount of what the taxes might be on the basis of assessment is not paid. However, the bases on which these crown corporations are paying municipal taxes are all under review at present.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct only one question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

If I refer to clause 3 of this bill, here is what I see:

> Any retail sales tax, generally applied, payable by the buyer according to the value of goods subject to the said tax relating to consumption or use of said goods.

It is understood that in the province of Quebec which is more prosperous than the others, we have a uniform sales tax of 6 per cent. Will the federal government pay this uniform tax of 6 per cent, in the province of Quebec, on all its properties or those belonging to crown corporations or will they be exempt? Will these properties continue to be exempt, as was the case in the past, or will the provincial tax of 6 per cent be paid to the province of Quebec, as do all other private companies doing business in the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Benson: The purpose of the bill is to provide the right to crown corporations to pay sales tax which they do not pay at present, the amount in the case of the province of Quebec being 6 per cent. The main purpose of the bill is to provide the authority for them to pay the sales tax.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I noted just now that the parliamentary secretary, in answering a question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, appeared to draw an analogy between payments in lieu of taxes now made to municipalities and the bill now before us. It seems to me they are entirely different.

Mr. Benson: That is right.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): One is in the form of a grant, perhaps bearing some relationship to taxation, if you like, but this is the actual payment of taxes. I would suggest that if that distinction is kept clearly in mind the objections of the hon. member for Medicine Hat fall to the ground, because this is merely the payment of a tax and if the province of Alberta does not choose to impose a tax it would seem to me that is their business. I do not think the two things should be confused.

Mr. Benson: I should point out, perhaps, the only reason I brought that analogy in at all was that the hon. member for Charlevoix said we should exempt municipalities from the 11 per cent sales tax. I was merely pointing out these crown corporations do pay grants in lieu of taxes to the municipalities.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, coming back to the point raised a moment ago, I understand that the department or the crown corporations will pay their 6 per cent sales tax in the province of Quebec.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) raised a very logical point a while ago. There is no provincial sales tax in Alberta. Therefore, the minister or the parliamentary secretary to the minister are hardly afraid that there might be confusion or charges of discrimination on both sides, because the crown corporations will pay more provincial tax in the province of Quebec than in the other provinces.

I suggested yesterday that everyone should be freed from those taxes. Would not that be more logical? Indeed, if the federal tax was abolished by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), it would cost less to the crown corporations as well as to the provinces and the municipalities.

In my opinion, it is unfair to place the provinces which are better administered than the province of Quebec, in a situation where they are liable to lose a great deal of money when dealing with crown corporations.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: I do not have a list of the crown corporations that will be paying these taxes. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if Canadian National Railways will be one of them?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Canadian National is one.

Mr. Caouette: Which ones are making money?

Mr. Benson: The hon. member for Villeneuve wants to know which ones are making a profit. The Bank of Canada is making a profit; the Canada Council is making a profit; the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication is making a profit; Canadian Patents and Development Limited is making a profit; Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is making a profit; Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited is making a profit; Export Credits Insurance Corporation is making a profit; industrial development bank is making a profit; Northern Canada Power Commission is making a profit; Northern Ontario Pipe Line is making a profit; Northern Transportation Company Limited is making a profit and Polymer Corporation Limited is making a profit.

Mr. Caouette: Is the parliamentary secretary in a position to tell us if the total of these profits equals the total deficit to the other crown corporations?

Mr. Benson: I really have not an adding machine mind, but in glancing down the list I would say they pretty well balance out.

Mr. Caouette: Is this why we have a national deficit this year as shown by the minister's budget?

Mr. Benson: I really do not think this has anything whatever to do with it.

Mr. Lambert: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we might see it as being five o'clock.

May I take this opportunity of repeating what I said a few minutes ago, namely that the situation which prompted me not to have the income tax bill called will not exist as of tomorrow, and tomorrow the first order of the day will be the income tax bill, to be followed by the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Bank Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Shall we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION FOR ACCESS TO VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the federal government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge or tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond for the purpose of assuring uninterrupted access to the Vancouver international airport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps all hon. members are not familiar with the Vancouver international airport, but they are familiar with the international airports at Dorval and Malton, the two busiest and largest airports in Canada. I should like them to imagine the situation if Dorval and Malton were served simply by a two-lane swing bridge over a channel, and this bridge opened for tug boats and barges as they passed. You can imagine what traffic confusion would result at these two busy international airports, and if the situation occurred in Montreal or Toronto I am sure we would have heard a great deal about it in this house. However, that is the situation which exists in Vancouver.

According to the figures released on May 5 by the Department of Transport, the Vancouver international airport is the third busiest in the country. The metropolitan area of Vancouver, with 800,000 people in it, is the third largest in the country, but in Vancouver we have this very serious problem of access to the airport.

Vancouver international airport is situated on an island, Sea island. The bulk of the population of the metropolitan area lives on Burrard peninsula, in the city of Vancouver, the municipality of Richmond, the municipality of Burnaby, New Westminster and other places. At the present time there is no direct access from Vancouver and the surrounding municipalities to Sea island where the airport is located.

In order to get to the airport, traffic must cross a bridge to Lulu island and from that island it crosses the Moray channel bridge, which is the two-lane swing bridge I have mentioned. This bridge is open very frequently, and at such times traffic to and from the airport is stopped. The bridge opens for traffic moving along the channel, and there have been times when it has been kept open because of mechanical failure. At least this is inconvenient, and at worst is downright dangerous.

This is certainly very inconvenient if you are trying to get to the airport to catch a certain flight, but it is dangerous when you consider the question of mercy flights arriving at Vancouver international airport, and quite frequently these flights come from all parts of the province, from the interior, Vancouver island, and up the coast. When they land, ambulances have to be there to transport the patients quickly to the Vancouver hospitals. In that sense the very narrow bridge which is the only connection from the island to the mainland is a positive danger.

I think everybody will agree that the access is certainly inadequate. There is a problem there and, as always, the question is what do you do about the problem? Hon. members may wonder how the federal government becomes involved in this. At first glance it may seem to be a purely local problem, but this is not the case.

Vancouver airport is owned by the federal government in the name of the Department of Transport. Sea island is now 75 per cent under federal government ownership, the bulk of the land being used by the Department of Transport and by the Department of National Defence. The R.C.A.F. station on Sea island is closing, but the land is being transferred to the Department of Transport and, as I say, 75 per cent ownership of the island is in the name of the federal government. The remaining land is occupied by two subdivisions, some industrial properties and some farms. The federal government investment in the airport is quite great, and it is to be increased. Construction of a new air terminal building, at a cost of $20 million, will start this year and is scheduled for completion in 1967.

I would also submit that the federal government is involved in this respect, in that the body of water which separates Sea island from the Burrard peninsula—the north arm of the Fraser river—is a navigable water under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

However, I do not accept the point of view that the entire cost of this new crossing should be borne by the federal government. I think there is room for co-operation here between the federal and the provincial governments. There was formerly a crossing in the place where we want one now, an old wooden bridge, and the provincial government in British Columbia has in part recognized that it has some responsibility here.

Speaking in the British Columbia legislature in February last, the minister of highways of that province said—and I am quoting from a news story in the Vancouver Province:

> The minister said Ottawa asked him to share the cost of a study—which may range from $30,000 to $50,000—of a possible new route to the Sea island airport.
> Whether or not a new structure would be built would depend on federal co-operation, he said.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, I put a question on the order paper, question No. 969, to confirm this point. It read as follows:

> Has the Department of Transport or any agency of the federal government requested the department of highways of British Columbia to share in the cost of a study concerning the advisability of building a new bridge or tunnel to connect the city of Vancouver and Sea island, the site of the Vancouver international airport and, if so, who has been commissioned to carry out the study and when is a report expected?

I received the reply today from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), and the reply is as follows:

> At the request of the department of highways of British Columbia the Department of Transport has agreed to share in the cost of a study of traffic and technical problems involved, and have commissioned the firm of Phillips Barrett and partners to undertake this study and a report is expected in about six months time.

There seems to be a little conflict there with what the minister of highways of B.C. said. He said the federal government asked him to participate in this study, and the Minister of Transport says the department of highways of B.C. asked his department to participate in it. However, quite apart from that, I am pleased that the two governments have agreed on this study and that the study is under way.

As you would expect, Mr. Speaker, quite a number of local organizations have interested themselves in this matter over the years, among them the council of Richmond, the chamber of commerce of Richmond, and the Sea island community association. Just recently the Vancouver board of trade, certainly a very influential body in that city, added its voice to those asking for this crossing. In a letter to the Minister of Transport, dated May 1, 1964, they submitted quite a long resolution, the operative part of which reads as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that the federal government be urged to proceed immediately with the development of a direct crossing between Sea island and the Burrard peninsula, preferably a tunnel, to serve the Vancouver international airport with a view to completion by 1969.

I am sure that the people of Richmond who have been looking for this for a number of years are greatly encouraged by the support which the Vancouver board of trade has given to the project. I myself am very much encouraged by the amount of support there appears to be for it.

This is not the first time the project has been discussed in this house. It was brought up in 1962 under similar circumstances in private members' time by my predecessor from Burnaby-Richmond, Mr. John Drysdale, a Conservative party member. During that debate all of the Conservative members, but one, spoke in favour of the motion. The only one who had any words of dissent was the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who just managed to get in a few words before six o'clock. However, as he is not here today I am sure all other Conservative members will support it.

At that time the spokesman for the Liberal party was the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, and he had this to say, as recorded at page 2632 of Hansard for April 9, 1962:

> Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be grateful to the hon. member who has introduced this resolution which concerns a problem of acute importance, I am sure, to those who live in the great metropolis of Vancouver. The resolution invites the federal government to give consideration to the advisability of constructing either a bridge or a tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond, which municipality I take it forms part of the hon. member's constituency.

Later on Mr. Chevrier, in order to expedite things, had this to say:

> In order not to delay the resolution and also to give others an opportunity to speak, I will sum up my remarks—

I will not continue the quotation from that point. So it is encouraging that there was support from other parties in the house when Mr. Drysdale presented this resolution two years ago. In the meantime something has been done. The provincial government and the federal government have decided to cooperate in carrying out a study for a new crossing. The type of crossing which I think most people would like to see is a tunnel. I think this is the most practical method, and this will be borne out by the engineering studies.

I hope the engineers who have been commissioned will report within the six months period and that the federal government will take the initiative in meeting with the government of British Columbia in order to work out a plan of action for this project. If they start very soon, perhaps the new tunnel from Vancouver to Sea island might be ready shortly after the new Vancouver international airport opens in 1967.

[Mr. Prittie.]

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I enter into this debate this afternoon because I am a member from a Vancouver constituency, and one which is really only a few city blocks from the Sea island airport which lies in the constituency of my hon. friend, the member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie). As the hon. member and myself must go to that airport each time we leave Vancouver, and arrive there on our way back, we are both very interested in it and are interested in the progress the federal government is making in regard to the construction of an international airport on Sea island.

My hon. friend has described how the Fraser river, coming down through the Fraser valley and moving westward to the sea, fans out into a delta. In the mouth of that delta is one very large island, Lulu island, comprised of low farmland, and further to the sea, on the seaward side, there is a small island, Sea island, divided from Lulu island by a channel called the Moray channel. Forming the water on the north or Vancouver side of these islands is a channel called the north arm of the Fraser river. This north arm of the Fraser river is used extensively by fishing boats and it is also used for booming logs up and down the Fraser. It is a very important channel, although a relatively narrow one.

On the south side of the islands, or the American side, is the main channel up and down which ships pass on their way to and from New Westminster. Sea island has for a long time been a municipal airport and in very recent times it was purchased by the federal government for a federal airport under the Department of Transport. I understand that an international airport there is now in process of planning and development. One of the great problems facing the airport at Sea island, as my hon. friend has noted, is the question of access to it. This has been, as my hon. friend has pointed out, the subject of considerable discussion.

I want to add to what has been said here today by referring to a memorandum dated November 22, 1962, from the chief engineer, development engineering branch of the Department of Public Works. This memorandum is entitled, "Background information on link between Vancouver and Sea island". The chief engineer says:

> Access from the city of Vancouver to Sea island over the north channel of the Fraser river was provided for—

—that is, was first provided for—

> —by a swing bridge called the Marpole bridge built in 1901 and rebuilt in 1925.

This, as everyone from the Vancouver area remembers, was a bridge which had encountered so many disasters from tugs and barges knocking against it that it had become a quite ludicrous spectacle, a farce to Vancouver, and it was the subject and butt of many jokes over the years. A request was made in April, 1953, by the province of British Columbia for the federal government to participate in providing access to Sea island because of the air force base which was located on the island. It was estimated at the time that this structure would cost $1,200,000; hence, the federal government's participation, which had been agreed upon as being one third of the cost, would have been a maximum of $400,000. A proposal was put forward in 1956 by a consulting firm for a tunnel access to Sea island across the north arm of the Fraser river. That was roughly the same project as we are talking about today.

The province, however, decided that it was their intention to proceed with the construction of the Oak street bridge, as my hon. friend will remember, between the city of Vancouver and Lulu island, and the Moray channel bridge between Lulu island and Sea island. This was to be built under the B.C. toll authority, and they requested the federal government to contribute to these two bridges in lieu of their previous commitment for the replacement of the Marpole bridge. But the federal government felt that the Oak street bridge was an integral part of the highways system of British Columbia, and as such did not feel they should contribute to that structure. They agreed, however, in 1956 to pay one third, up to a maximum of $400,000 toward the Moray channel bridge after the province proposed to operate it on a toll free basis. Payment of $400,000 was made to the provincial government in March of 1958. Mr. Regier, the predecessor of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, asked in the house in July, 1958 the following question of the minister of public works, then Mr. Green:

> Could the minister bring the house up to date on the situation with regard to the Oak street bridge or the only bridge connecting Sea island and Lulu island? Has a settlement ever been arrived at with the government of British Columbia, and if so what was it?

Mr. Green replied:

> There was a payment provided in last year's estimates of $400,000 which was to be applied to the cost of the bridge over the Moray channel, and that has been paid to the provincial government.

Mr. Regier asked:

> It has been paid?

Mr. Green's answer to that question was "Yes". After the construction of the Oak street bridge, the Marpole bridge was closed to highway traffic and its swing span remained open. It has since been a hazard and impediment to navigation in the very busy north arm of the Fraser; therefore the north Fraser harbour commissioners, who are responsible for that area, are most anxious indeed to have the old span removed. Several requests were made by interested parties to have the federal government provide financial assistance toward the cost of the Oak street bridge in order to make it toll free, but the government's answer has remained, as I have said, that they did not feel they should become involved in this provincial structure.

In March of 1961 the residents of Sea island were informed of the closing of the old swing bridge between Sea island and Lulu island, which at that time was called, as my hon. friend knows, the Eburne bridge. This bridge was closed and then Sea island had access only to the Moray channel via the two-lane swing bridge, which from time to time closes off access to Sea island, a very busy international airport.

I want to discuss for a moment just how busy is the Vancouver international airport, and how very essential it is, in view of the growth of Vancouver, that adequate access be provided on a continuous basis to Sea island. The new Vancouver international airport terminal will be built on that side of Sea island closest to the city of Vancouver or closest to the north arm of the Fraser river, which is the water body the crossing of which we are discussing. On June 3 of last year treasury board issued a minute approving in principle the cost of constructing a new international airport at Vancouver on Sea island. These were the rough costs which they approved at that time, so as to give the house some idea of the size of the project. The main air terminal building, $11 million; heating plant and services, $1 million; aprons and taxi ways, $2.5 million; miscellaneous services, including water, sewage system, parking, lighting, land lines, consulting services, and so on, $5,400,000; making a total estimated cost as approved by treasury board of $19,900,000.

The Department of Transport responsibility, I am told, ends at the airfield—that is to say, they are not responsible for access roads to the airport; their responsibility ends after it has been built—and so it becomes a matter for other jurisdictions to take an interest in the question of access roads. However, the federal government has allocated a sum of $50,000, as my hon. friend has indicated, for a survey which is underway to determine the best possible means of access, either by high level bridge suitable to clear the north arm of the Fraser river so as to permit passage of tugs, barges, fishing vessels and the like, or alternatively by means of a tunnel which would go under that relatively narrow passage and provide continuous access and complete freedom for traffic both in the channel and for traffic to and from Sea island. While this survey does not implicate the federal government, it certainly indicates their considerable interest in the question of access roads to the airport.

While on the subject of this new international airport and its approaches, I discovered this afternoon while looking up some material the rather interesting sidelight that Department of Transport officials plan to hold a meeting in Vancouver on May 26 to discuss with restaurant operators who may wish to bid for restaurant concessions at the airport the problem of providing restaurant facilities. If the department can choose a concessionaire in advance and while the airport is in the planning stage, that concessionaire would be given considerable latitude in planning the facilities which he would operate. That is an indication of the extent to which planning is going ahead, and how urgent it is that planning go ahead in respect of the channel crossing which will be required just as quickly, I am sure, as the restaurant is needed.

Vancouver airport by nature is changing, and this is important when reviewing figures relating to Vancouver airport. Recently a satellite airport was built by the Department of Transport at Pitt Meadows, in the Fraser valley, to take care of light aircraft operating in the area, training aircraft, and so on. The removal of light aircraft from Vancouver international airport has substantially reduced the number of landings and take-offs from the airport and has left more room for the heavy volume of commercial traffic.

Vancouver is the hub of the largest network of scheduled commercial aircraft flights in western Canada. During the summer there will be three round trips a week to Hong Kong and Japan. There will be one flight a week to New Zealand, with an extension each fortnight to Australia. There will be two flights a week to Mexico and South America and another two to Honolulu. There will be three weekly flights over the polar run to Europe. Almost all of these flights are performed today with DC-8 jet aircraft. In addition there are dozens of flights each day to British Columbia and points in the Yukon, to eastern Canada and across the Canada-United States border to points in the United States.

The number of flights going into and out of Vancouver has increased remarkably in the last decade and seems likely to continue in the next. There were 51,000 such flights in 1953, and I am now talking about flights into and out of the city of Vancouver, not touch-down flights or local flights on and off the airport. This number grew to 73,000 in 1963, and the average aircraft size at the same time has become considerably larger. In the next 10 years a further increase of another 50 per cent is expected, according to statisticians of the Department of Transport, and the size of aircraft will again increase considerably. Only Toronto and Montreal today rank ahead of Vancouver in airport operations. Ten years ago, in 1953, there were approximately 430,000 scheduled passengers using Vancouver airport. In 1963 this number had almost doubled to 830,000. A further growth to approximately two million passengers is expected by 1975.

Let us now consider the ground traffic problem which this growing air traffic creates. I am told by Department of Transport officials that there is a general slow but steady growth in the number of private automobiles using airports in Canada. The tendency of the Canadian people is not to travel more and more by bus and commercial facilities to airports, but to take their own automobiles. Therefore the number of private automobiles using the airports of this country is rising in proportion. Airport parking facilities are becoming larger and larger. Consider this in regard to the new Toronto airport, with which we are all familiar. At the new international airport at Toronto there are 2,402 stalls in the main building for the parking of cars. In addition there are 432 stalls in the administration building and a further 800 for employees which are located closer to the cargo area. That is a total of over 3,600 parking stalls in and around the Toronto terminal.

So that when we look at this problem, Mr. Speaker, we begin to get an idea how vitally important it is that access on a permanent basis and without interruption by swing bridges is provided to Sea island, with its envisaged growth on the basis of the figures I have given. It is, therefore, for this reason that I am glad indeed to see this resolution which has been moved today by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, and to have had an opportunity of bringing these figures before the house.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the very interesting statistics which the two hon. members who have just spoken have placed before the house, and in particular I noted that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) read into the record a press clipping to the effect that the minister of highways for British Columbia has already agreed to, and suggested that the government of British Columbia would be willing to go ahead with some consideration of this project, in collaboration with the federal government.

If hon. members will look at the order paper they will note the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond put down his notice of motion on February 18, and after listening carefully to what he said I suggest that what he is asking for in the notice of motion is, in fact, already under way. It seems to me, therefore, that any discussion of this motion, or even its passage, would be superfluous. He said the British Columbia minister of highways made it publicly known that his government was prepared to participate in an undertaking to improve this bottleneck in access to the international airport at Vancouver. Now we are told that today the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond received a reply from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) to the effect that the federal government, also, has agreed to undertake a survey and make a study.

The notice of motion clearly states that the government should give consideration to the advisability of doing just this. The first consideration, one would expect, is that a survey or study would be undertaken in order to find out what will be the best type of construction to meet the need. The hon. member who spoke before me indicated that $50,000 had been appropriated by the federal government to pay its share of this survey. He intimated it was necessary to find out whether a high level bridge would best meet the need or whether a tunnel would be more suitable. I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond that he ask the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw his motion under the terms of standing order No. 49 on the grounds that what he is requesting is already being done.

Mr. Prittie: I would not agree to withdraw the motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must advise the house that if the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond speaks he will close the debate.

Mr. Olson: Perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond could speak on a point of order. I believe there is provision in our rules that a motion on the order paper should not call for something which has been done or which is being done, and perhaps, on a point of order, the hon. member could indicate whether he is willing to withdraw his motion so that we could get on to the discussion of some of the other motions which are on the order paper.

Mr. Prittie: On the point of order, I submit that what I am seeking has not as yet been satisfied. If this motion were passed the government would be accepting some responsibility. So far, the government has agreed to make a joint study with the government of British Columbia, and neither of the two governments has accepted any responsibility. Therefore, I would not agree to withdraw the motion, although, by unanimous consent, if the rules of the house permit, I would not object to debate ceasing at this point, provided the motion could maintain its place on the order paper.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): First, I should like to make it clear that I am speaking as the member for Coast-Capilano, Coast-Capilano being the second most populous riding in British Columbia and probably the one which makes the greatest use of the Vancouver international airport. It includes the municipalities of west Vancouver, north Vancouver and the district of north Vancouver.

West Vancouver has the highest per capita income of any municipality in Canada and the district of north Vancouver is in the first half dozen. These people, in the main, are people in the high income brackets—people who are executives with corporations; people who often work in branch offices in western Canada. Frequently they travel not only up and down the west coast but also across Canada, and they are particularly interested in communications and in the improvement of our transportation facilities. Time is often of the essence, so any reduction in the amount of travelling time which could be brought about as a result of better access to Vancouver airport is an important matter as far as they are concerned.

We have this large airport in the Vancouver area. We have a new terminal under construction. We are now concerned with more direct access from downtown Vancouver, and it is possible by building a tunnel or a bridge across the north arm of the Fraser river to reduce the travelling time to, possibly, 20 minutes. This is a remarkably short time when we consider that it takes at least an hour to travel from most of our Canadian cities to the principal airports serving them. There have been many discussions in recent years about the ridiculous situation which is evolving with respect to air transportation. We can now travel from Vancouver to Toronto in about four hours. We can cross the Atlantic ocean in five hours, and when even faster aircraft are developed this time may be halved or cut to one third. In other words we will be able to travel thousands of miles in a matter of minutes, certainly in less time than two hours. In these circumstances it is ridiculous that we should not be making provision to reduce travelling time between the principal centres of population and the airports. Many studies have been made with respect to using aircraft for this purpose—moving people out to the airports by helicopter, for example. But it has been found that the use of helicopters for this purpose is uneconomic and that the tariff which the individual would have to pay is many times more than the cost of the conventional limousine.

Referring again to the remarkable reduction in travelling time which has taken place in recent decades, let us think back to the late 'thirties when Trans-Canada Air Lines first began to operate a regular service across this country. It used to take 24 hours to travel from Montreal to Vancouver. After the war, as a result of the great improvements in aircraft, the speed of air transport moved up from 100 to 250 miles an hour, and in the last few years that speed has been doubled with the arrival of the large jets. Travelling time has been shortened in another way, too, because more people are travelling by air an increasing number of aircraft are being scheduled on long distance runs without intervening stops. Therefore, instead of spending 24 hours on a cross country flight, as was the case before the war, or a dozen hours in the late 'fifties, the time taken is now only four or five hours.

Looking ahead and as a result of the immense investment in supersonic aircraft, we can envisage machines which will fly at speeds of 2,000 miles an hour, capable of covering the distance between Vancouver and Montreal in a matter of, perhaps, one and a half hours. So it would seem ridiculous that we should still be taking an hour to get from downtown Vancouver to the international airport. Obviously we need to devise faster and more efficient services, particularly local services, to carry people to and from our airports.

I have a preference. I would like to see the most direct route used to the Vancouver airport. Speaking again in terms of my own personal preference, I would also like to see a tunnel built under the north arm of the Fraser river. Many of those who have travelled from the airport to Vancouver have encountered difficulties with the bridge over the Moray channel. As recently as three weeks ago the bridge stuck part way open. I happened to be in one of the limousines which were unfortunate enough to be delayed until the bridge was repaired. We sat there for several hours waiting for the repairs to be made and for the bridge to be closed. So that bridges themselves present a handicap and in my view tunnels are preferable.

We have an excellent operating example within a dozen miles of the Vancouver international airport, a much larger tunnel project under the main stem of the Fraser river. This tunnel has been very successful and in my opinion a similar development would be appropriate at the south end of Granville street, one of the main arteries leading out of Vancouver, which would take traffic in a straight line from the hotel Vancouver right out to the new Vancouver international airport that we will have in 1967 or thereabouts.

If I may refer briefly to the new air terminal itself, I trust it will be of a design that is characteristic of the west coast, that it will be constructed of materials typical of our great forest and other resources, that it will be imaginative and that advantage will be taken of the new engineering and material producing techniques which will not only reduce costs but will also make it a wonderful facility that will be a joy to the eye and convenient to operate.

I should also like to say a word about the evolution of our great transportation centres. In the era of the railway, hotels and many of the principal businesses began to congregate around the railway stations. The station area became the focal point for considerable investment in hotel, commercial, business and other facilities. This is beginning to happen in respect of our great international airports. It is beginning to happen, for instance, around the Montreal airport. One can also see the new motel-hotel accumulations taking place around Malton airport. Visitors passing through can be met at or near the airport by their business confreres or their friends. Meetings can be held conveniently and these people can then board an aircraft again and move on.

This means that many people will be commuting to airports or the areas adjoining our great airports to hold business meetings and social gatherings. Therefore access to airports becomes of great importance not only for people who will be travelling by air, but for other people who will be meeting them for business purposes or to hold social or other gatherings.

At Vancouver international airport we have numerous developments, several of which are quite remarkable. There is the headquarters base for the operations of Canadian Pacific Airlines, Canada's other great international air line. This company is very important to Vancouver not only because its headquarters and principal maintenance depot are there but because it is now providing very effective links across the northern Pacific to Japan, across the southern Pacific to Hawaii, the south Pacific islands and Australia and also south along the west coast of North America into South America. It reaches across the pole to northern Europe. It crosses Canada, and on to Madrid and Rome.

This great air line has its base at Vancouver. It is important that it continue to thrive, and one of the ways in which we can be sure it will thrive is to ensure easy access to and from Vancouver international airport. At that airport we also have the world's foremost helicopter operation, Okanagan Helicopters, a pioneer venture which earned its wings, so to speak, in the great Kitimat development but which is now pioneering many other activities, including the installation of power lines not only in Canada but in other countries such as Mexico and elsewhere. We also have Pacific Western Airlines, the regional air line which transports people who arrive on the large jets to local areas in British Columbia, northern Alberta and down the Mackenzie river. Its operations are also based on Vancouver and the Vancouver international airport.

I have looked at the resolution and I must say that substantially I agree with its content. I agree that the federal government should give every consideration to the provision of easier access in the form of a bridge or tunnel to the Vancouver international airport. However, I should also like to emphasize the fact that the federal government is in fact giving considerable consideration to this matter and is participating in a joint study with the province of British Columbia in respect of this facility. Personally I hope that a tunnel will be built and that it will be built soon. I am convinced that this is a necessary step and I am prepared to argue that the federal government should participate financially in later stages, including the construction phase of this all-important project.

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make about this motion. First of all, I congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) for introducing it.

In the first place, I ask the government to consider the advisability of building this bridge and tunnel between the city of Vancouver and Sea island. But, at the same time, I suggest that the government should extend its study to other similar projects in Canada.

There is no shortage of manpower in Canada. We are well aware of the number of unemployed in the country. Technicians or architects are not lacking either; there are many of them. Moreover, we have all the building materials available for that purpose. Then, why is the government waiting to act? Once again we shall be told: It is money.

Why then does the government not use the facilities of the Bank of Canada to create credit so that development may take place in our country?

The Bank of Canada is there, at the service of the people. And as long as the people put their confidence in that institution, the government should use it to promote the welfare of French Canadians and all Canadians across the country, especially when it comes to gigantic projects such as the building of bridges and tunnels.

It is a shame to see, after hundreds of years, in the province of Quebec that not a single bridge spans the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and Quebec.

It is about time to build bridges and tunnels between the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence river—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Quebec West, but the Chair feels that he is moving too far away from the motion now before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, I am referring again to the matter of bridges and tunnels. I understand, from the notice of motion, that it is only a question of building a tunnel or a bridge between Vancouver and Sea island. But we, from the province of Quebec, are up against such problems; we only have a small bridge. That is why I got carried away, a while ago, and now I am going back to the beautiful province of Quebec where the government would have so much to do.

An hon. Member: Make a motion accordingly.

Mr. Plourde: Now, what pleases me in this motion is the spirit which the sponsor put into it. I hope that before six o'clock the hon. members will be well disposed towards that spirit and will approve that building project.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) is to be congratulated for bringing to the attention of the house this resolution urging the federal government to construct a bridge or tunnel across the north arm of the Fraser river between the city of Vancouver and Sea island in the municipality of Richmond, for the purpose of assuring uninterrupted access to the Vancouver international airport.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) the Department of Transport has this project under active consideration. Hon. members appreciate the importance of air travel. I wish to point out that according to figures released by the Department of Transport there has been a tremendous increase in the number of people using the airways in preference to any other mode of transport. Despite a slight drop in traffic, Toronto international airport was Canada's busiest for the fifth straight year in 1963. A few days ago the federal Department of Transport revealed that 86,012 take-offs and landings were clocked, compared to 89,376 in 1962. These figures do not include strictly local traffic remaining under tower control, such as planes making practice landings.

Montreal international airport placed second for the fourth consecutive year with an 80,821 aircraft movement compared to 82,541 in 1962. However, Montreal with its heavy overseas traffic saw the largest number of giant jet airliners. Its air traffic controllers handled 15,025 movements by aircraft with a gross take-off weight of more than 200,000 pounds. Toronto international airport recorded 12,676 such movements.

Ranking third and lower, but all maintaining their 1962 standings, in non-local traffic were Vancouver international airport, with 72,881 take-offs and landings, 67,237 in 1962; Winnipeg international airport was fourth with 64,763 and 61,740 in 1962.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder whether or not the hon. member is aware of the fact that hon. members of the house have already been given this information in a press release issued by the Department of Transport?

Mr. Badanai: I am aware that some press releases containing these figures were given out, but I have no doubt there are some members of the house who are not aware of them. Of course, the hon. member has kept close check on the figures, and I believe that they bear repeating because of the importance of the subject.

As I was saying, Ottawa airport ranked fifth with 61,555 take-offs and landings and 58,469 in 1962; Calgary was sixth with 57,674 and 51,915 in 1962; Edmonton industrial airport, formerly municipal, was seventh with 49,489 and 46,810 in 1962; Cartierville, a suburb of Montreal, was eighth with 44,277 and 39,235 in 1962; Toronto island was ninth with 35,448 and 36,563 in 1962 and Victoria was tenth with 30,964 and 31,295 in 1962.

The decline in aircraft movements, Mr. Speaker, at some airports is attributed to the increased use of larger planes in commercial traffic and to a decrease in local flying. This is especially true of Vancouver international airport, which was relieved of most of its small plane traffic by the department's new satellite airport at Pitt Meadows.

Mr. Rapp: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour will recall that you called private members' notices of motions ten minutes before five o'clock. It is now ten minutes before six o'clock and would Your Honour consider calling it six o'clock? I am not implying to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond that we are tired of listening to the debate, but I thought I should bring this to Your Honour's attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; I recognize that the house did proceed to the consideration of private members' business ten minutes before the regular hour. However, I can only call it six o'clock now by unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. MacNaught: I think it would be the desire of hon. members if you would now call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent to calling it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader put on the record the business for tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by the house leader for the official opposition, I wish to state—and this only repeats what I said earlier this afternoon—that the first item of business to be called tomorrow will be the second reading, and the committee stage of course, of the Income Tax Act amendment. Then we will be calling the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Bank Act and also the Quebec Savings Bank Act. As our third item we will deal with the resolution preceding the bill which will call for certain amendments to the National Housing Act. That will be followed by the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, following which we will take the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act.

On Friday, as announced earlier, we will be taking the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. By unanimous consent this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

TRANSPORT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING BRANCH LINES, GRAIN FREIGHT RATES, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the implementation of certain recommendations of the royal commission on transportation with respect to the rationalization of branch lines of railways and passenger train services and the fixing of freight rates under and consistent with a national transportation policy suited to modern transportation conditions; to establish a branch line rationalization authority and a branch line rationalization fund to be continued for fifteen years to assist in the establishment of an orderly program for the improvement of the efficiency of railway branch lines; to provide authority for public funds to be used where assistance of a type similar to that provided by the branch line rationalization fund may be required after such 15 year period; to provide for payments out of the consolidated revenue fund on a reducing scale for a period of five years commencing with 1964 to compensate railways under the jurisdiction of parliament for passenger train deficits incurred in Canada during such period; to authorize payments to maintain the prevailing level of freight rates on western grain moving by rail to export positions; to permit the lapsing of the subsidy (known as the "bridge" subsidy) now provided for the maintenance of the trackage of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company between Sudbury and Fort William and the corresponding trackage of the Canadian National Railway Company between Capreol and Fort William and between Cochrane and Armstrong; to authorize agreements relating to the carriage by rail of Her Majesty's mail, and members of the Canadian forces and police travelling on Her Majesty's service and to provide further for other matters consequential upon or related or incidental to any of the foregoing.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the NATO ministerial council meeting the Prime Minister said yesterday that whatever statement was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was made at a confidential session. I would ask him whether he has reviewed his statement of yesterday in that connection, particularly when it is considered alongside the fact that secretary Rusk of the United States authorized the state department to make available to the press a complete transcript of his remarks. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he would table in the house the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs so that the house will be in a position to judge whether the report by Mr. Duffy in the Globe and Mail, a considerable portion of which is in quotation marks, represents in fact what the minister said respecting recognition of communist China?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the meeting was a confidential one but as very often happens at confidential meetings of this kind certain delegates do give out their own statements to the press afterwards. As this has been done by certain delegates in this instance, I can see no objection to the tabling of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I will be glad to see that it is done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister have it available now?

Mr. Pearson: I do not have it available at the moment but I will table it tomorrow and I will be glad to send a copy to my right hon. friend this afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to thank the Prime Minister. I will then be in the same position as the press.

CYPRUS—SUGGESTED SETTLEMENT BY NATO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The newspapers report the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) as having stated that the Cyprus problem should be settled by NATO. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether this is indeed the view of the government and, if so, how the Canadian government believes NATO can settle the Cyprus question?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer the last part of my hon. friend's question. So far as the first part is concerned, I think it is undoubtedly a matter of concern for NATO and that NATO has a definite responsibility in view of the fact that two of the governments directly concerned—indeed three, if you include the United Kingdom—are members of NATO. I have no doubt that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in his place he will be making a report on the council meeting and will be able to deal with the points raised by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister: in view of the fact that the United Nations is already attempting to settle this dispute, does the government believe it should withdraw in favour of NATO taking over this duty?

Mr. Pearson: No, but surely it is possible for NATO, which is concerned with this dispute, to see what can be done within the ambit of that organization to make a solution easier to find.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has the Prime Minister worked out in his own mind how a mediator such as the secretary general of NATO could operate alongside a mediator appointed by the United Nations? That is a difficulty which I see in the statement made by the minister.

Mr. Pearson: I do not know whether that is the difficulty to which the hon. member for Calgary North was referring. But I do appreciate the difficulty of the position mentioned by the right hon. gentleman. While I am not familiar with all the details of the appointment which was just made, I believe that this appointment of Mr. Galo Plaza the former president of Ecuador as mediator was intended to take some of the burden off the commander-in-chief of the United Nations forces who had been asked to intervene in certain situations which could be turned over to a civilian representative of the United Nations. If that is the situation, I think Mr. Galo Plaza's appointment will be a helpful one. It is not meant, I understand, to replace the task entrusted to the mediator, the former prime minister of Finland.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the mediator appointed by the United Nations, the former prime minister of Finland, been consulted in connection with the proposition advanced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there should be a NATO mediator as well?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think it is a question of appointing a NATO mediator. The suggestion made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the NATO council meeting was, as I understand it, that the NATO members particularly concerned should get together and see what they could do to ease the situation in Cyprus. Of course, it would not be desirable for them to intervene in such a way as would cut across the work of the mediator appointed by the United Nations.

CYPRUS—REPORTED INADEQUACY OF TRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister seen reports which appeared in yesterday's La Presse by one of their correspondents in Cyprus to the effect that some officers have some reservations as to the type of training which our forces sent to Cyprus have received in regard to the role they are actually discharging; that their United Nations standby training is not adequate for the type of job they have been assigned?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can continue these courtesies with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition by answering a question he raised the other day regarding the situation in the Alberni valley and the federal government's relationship thereto. I hope I will be forgiven, Mr. Speaker, if the answer is a little longer than normal.

As soon as the news of the damage caused by the tidal wave in the Alberni area was received the government, as the house knows, made an offer of assistance to the government of British Columbia, subject to the usual condition, namely that the federal government be given details of the extent of the damage and an indication that the cost of meeting the damage was beyond the means of the local municipalities and the provincial government. We have not yet been given the report of the experts appointed by the province to assess the damage but we have been informed, as the house knows, by telegram from Premier Bennett that the net depreciated loss suffered by private citizens amounts to approximately $1.5 million.

While Premier Bennett has not, of course, maintained that this sum is beyond the financial capacity of his province, he did propose that the federal government should provide one half of the amount. As my right hon. friend knows, I think, it has not been the practice in the past for the federal government to meet 50 per cent of the loss sustained in a local disaster where the scale of the damage was well within the capacity of the provincial government. In the present instance, therefore, the government has concluded that it would be preferable to make a substantial grant to the disaster fund than to follow the policy proposed by the government of British Columbia. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the government has decided to make a grant of $250,000 to the Alberni valley disaster fund.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, has mentioned the general rules that have applied in the past with regard to assistance on the part of the federal government, and with his statement in that regard I am in entire agreement. Might I suggest, however, that the amount that is being provided by the federal government as a grant, while substantial, is considerably less than members generally would have expected in view of the loss suffered by so many private people.

Is there any possibility—and I can go no further—that there would be a reconsideration given to increasing that amount? I think that Canadians as a whole would have felt the situation would have been met had the amount been at least double that which has been provided. I ask the Prime Minister, is there any possibility of giving reconsideration to this? I know the difficulties, and I am not trying to place him in an embarrassing position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I see him looking at the Minister of Finance who, apparently, is also interested in this question. I think that the general question I have asked is a reasonable one under the circumstances.

Mr. Pearson: I am quite sure the right hon. gentleman would not wish the government to retreat from a decision which has been made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Naturally, when the Leader of the Opposition makes a request of this kind for reconsideration the government is always happy to reconsider. I cannot give him any assurance the result of the reconsideration will be any change in policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would say to the Prime Minister that in this case I would not call it a retreat; I would simply call it a realistic reappraisal.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): While I do not believe the members of the house would ask the Prime Minister to make a retreat, they would like him to advance on this matter. In view of the fact this sum is only one sixth of the estimated cost of the damage, a relatively small contribution, is the government still keeping open the possibility of acquiescing to Premier Bennett's request to put up one half of the total damage estimated at $1.5 million, when the details of that damage are available to the federal government?

Mr. Pearson: There have been certain principles laid down for federal participation in relief measures of the kind that I have been talking about. I think those principles are reasonable ones, that when the locality and the province can deal with a disaster then they should accept that responsibility because it is their primary responsibility. When they make a request to the federal government, the federal government should acknowledge that request and do what can be done in the circumstances.

I think in these circumstances that exist today, Mr. Speaker, that a grant of $250,000 to the fund is not an unreasonable one, having regard to the practice and principles of the past and the undesirability of creating a precedent in future, by which the federal government will have to take primary responsibility for all disasters, however local they might be.

Mr. Douglas: I am sure the Prime Minister will recall the precedent set in the Rimouski fire, which could hardly be considered a national disaster, yet assistance was given in that case although it was not beyond the capacity of the province. Are we to take it from his statement that the request of the government of British Columbia for half of the cost of the damage is now being rejected?

Mr. Pearson: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is as I have told the right hon. gentleman, that I will re-examine the situation.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the gap which now remains between the amounts suggested by the provincial government as its contribution coupled with that which he has announced, he would at least consider taking some steps at the federal government level to assist the voluntary committee in furthering their appeal for voluntary contributions, so that the gap, not only between the figures on this depreciated net value but the much larger gap between these amounts of the total required suitably to re-establish the victims, can be met?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to take that into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us if the fact that a contribution of a quarter of a million dollars as assistance to the victims of the disaster that occurred in British Columbia could impair the autonomy of that province?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order please. It seems to me this question is more by way of a general statement. If it was intended to be a question, it is far too wide to ask at this time.

[Mr. Pearson.]

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROHIBITION OF STRIKES UNDER B.C. POWER BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a very proper question of national significance reaching into the future. It is based on an act to establish the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority passed by the British Columbia legislature on March 10 this year. It is further based on section 53 of that act which reads:

> Notwithstanding any specific provision in any act to the contrary, except as otherwise provided by or under this act, the authority is not bound by any statute or statutory provision of the province.

Further, in view of that fact that section 56 makes it illegal for employees of the authority to strike, would the minister give this bill very careful consideration when it comes into his hands to make sure there is no violation of the bill of rights and to arrest the development of czardom in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course this bill will also be given full and careful consideration, like all the other bills submitted to the Department of Justice for the purpose provided by law.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—CLOSING OF RADAR STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. I would like him to tell us what is the policy of his department concerning those places where the radar stations are to be closed shortly.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to avail myself of provisional standing order 39A and transfer this question for debate at ten o'clock, if you please.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, if he will listen to me.

Could the minister tell the house what the government intends to do in order to assist families who are in a critical situation following the decision of the government to close the radar station at St. Sylvestre, in the county of Lotbinière?

Mr. Choquette: That is exactly the same question I have already asked.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: May I raise that question again after ten o'clock tonight?

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—INQUIRY AS TO EXPORT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I have a question of great importance to the dairy industry to address to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister yet in a position to inform the house what export assistance is to be offered to producers of cheese?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): The stabilization board announced this morning that they would be supporting the export of cheese by two cents a pound. This is one cent less than a year ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Does that mean two cents less per pound than two years ago, when the Conservative government was in office?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Yes, it was four cents a year ago. We reduced it by one cent and, this year, in line with the current export market situation, we thought it should be reduced another cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hays: The producers of milk will still receive more for their milk than they did under the previous administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to hon. members that if the questions are to be as political as this we must use a little control. But if these are inquiries for information, then by all means proceed.

Mr. Thomas: I was about to ask the minister if he could explain briefly the reasoning behind this action by the board.

Mr. Hays: I will be very pleased to do this, Mr. Speaker. In 1961 the price of cheese in Great Britain was the equivalent of 29 cents a pound. The government of the day thought that this price should perhaps be supported by four cents a pound by way of export subsidy. Subsequently the price of cheese increased. In Great Britain it is now over 33 cents a pound, which is quite a bit higher than the 29 cents when the four cent subsidy was required, so it is now considered in the best interests of all that this subsidy should be reduced by a further one cent per pound.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether he has received a request signed by the cheese producers of central Quebec areas regarding that new policy he announced to the house on April 29 of this year? If so, has the minister any comments to make?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is very important, I admit, but nevertheless it is not so pressing as to demand an immediate answer. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, may I transfer that question for debate at ten o'clock this evening?

[Later:]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Could the minister tell us whether it would be possible for fluid milk producers to obtain a subsidy on cheese manufactured with surplus fluid milk in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to raise the question after ten o'clock tonight.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, because of the announcement of the Minister of Agriculture a few minutes ago that there has been a further reduction of one cent per pound on the export subsidy on cheddar cheese, I wonder whether the minister would express his view as to what effect this will have on the cheese producers' board selling our cheddar cheese to overseas markets.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question, though important, has not that sense of urgency that is required under the rules as given me by the house. Would the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Webb: It is very important, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, I transfer this question for debate at ten o'clock.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS OF COMMITTEE ON DAIRY INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell us whether the committee of 16 members set up in February, 1963, composed of representatives of the dairy industry in Ontario and Quebec and representatives of all three governments, to study the problems of the dairy industry has met since the date it was set up?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether they have met regularly. If it is the committee to which I think the hon. member is referring, it has been meeting quite often.

CANADIAN FLAG

TORONTO—RESOLUTION RESPECTING RETENTION OF RED ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister had any conversations, either directly or over the telephone, on or since last Sunday with the mayor of Toronto concerning the proposed recommendation of Toronto city council for the retention of the red ensign as Canada's national flag; and in particular with respect to questions of federal and municipal jurisdiction in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State?

Would he be able to tell us today, or in the near future, when he intends to create a committee of inquiry in respect of the C.B.C. and what kind of committee will be created for that purpose?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to make a statement next week.

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FRENCH REPORTERS FOR HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. Has he made arrangements to have French reporters at the committees? We have borrowed French reporters for the committee on privileges and elections, a very important committee, but it now seems that we are going to lose one of them. Surely during the next few days the Secretary of State will be able to assure us that French reporters will be supplied so that we can proceed without the undue delay which we had the other day.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear yesterday that this question does not come under my own responsibility.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice but in his capacity as house leader and commissioner of internal economy. Is the minister prepared to recommend to that committee that money be made available for French language reporters, so that committees may carry on their work in the House of Commons?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker; but this matter as the house may know, is under consideration by the committee at the present time.

REQUEST FOR REPLIES IN FRENCH TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue?

Yesterday, in reply to question 1,045 the Minister of National Revenue stated that 421 English speaking civil servants were attending French language courses. Could the minister urge his own department's officials to attend those courses so that they can provide answers in French to the questions put by us on the order paper?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have always followed the practice of giving a reply in French to a question which is asked in French.

HOLIDAY WEEK END FOR STAFF

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister which fills the two basic requirements: urgency and national interest.

Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether the secretaries, in short, all the staff of the House of Commons is going to benefit from the coming long week end?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think they will, Mr. Speaker, but this matter is really in your hands.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE RESPECTING COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he say when we may expect from the government a report on the work being done by the committee set up to investigate the possibility of collective bargaining between the government and the public service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had an interim report which I think I gave to the house some weeks ago. I will make inquiries to see whether I can get a second progress report, and if so I will be glad to make it available.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister know whether the government will be in a position to bring in legislation on this matter at this session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the committee is not expected to complete its work until the autumn. We will be glad to include it if there is room on the parliamentary program, but I suspect it will be difficult to have this matter dealt with legislatively during this session.

TRANSPORT

FLASHING DOME LIGHTS ON LOCOMOTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence perhaps the acting minister could answer it or take it as notice. Is consideration still being given to representations made by individuals or organizations from central Alberta concerning the installation of distinctively coloured flashing dome lights on locomotives in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I do not have much doubt about suggesting that this question be put on the order paper.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Speaker, it concerns every person in Canada.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STATUS AS AN ASSOCIATE STATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he tell the house whether he shares the opinion expressed by a minister of the Quebec government, namely Hon. René Lévesque, to the effect that he drew his inspiration from Mr. Pearson when he stated that Quebec should be an associate state?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is obviously out of order.

Mr. Pigeon: It is very serious.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, a week ago yesterday I asked the Prime Minister whether it would be possible for him to outline at an early date the program of legislation which it is desirable that the house deals with prior to a summer recess. The Prime Minister promised to make a report at an early date and I am wondering whether he expects to do so fairly soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the early date will be tomorrow, when I hope to be in a position to give the house a list of the legislative enactments which it is hoped will be dealt with in this session, either before or after the summer "long week end".

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister is making his report to the house, would he also let the house have a record of the number of returns which have not been brought down from the last session, and also for the present session, so that we will have a complete record?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will do even more than that, Mr. Speaker. I will give the right hon. gentleman a return of the record number of questions which have been answered and orders which have been tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am interested in those which have not been revealed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that there are still over 400,000 unemployed in Canada, could the minister tell us what plans he has to provide jobs to Canadians who wish to work, and who at one time believed that the Liberal promises were going to be fulfilled?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the statistics released yesterday by the dominion bureau of statistics show a progressive reduction in unemployment—

Mr. Ricard: It is still 400,000.

Mr. MacEachen: —indicating the lowest unemployment figure since 1957. It is our expectation that the continuing application of the policies of this government will effect a further reduction in the unemployment level.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Since the minister was in the Atlantic area yesterday, may I ask him what plans he has to counteract the still high unemployment in the Atlantic area, which I believe is around 12 per cent.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the present unemployment of the Atlantic provinces is considerably below that of the best year of the former government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Labour tell us whether the statistics published yesterday and concerning the number of unemployed in Canada include only those registered jobless people who are drawing unemployment insurance benefits, or whether they also include people out of work who draw social assistance benefits and who are not on the list of unemployment insurance benefits at the present time?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the statistics released yesterday have been developed as the result of the studies of an interdepartmental committee appointed some years ago to establish a uniform method of measuring unemployment in Canada. That interdepartmental committee was chaired by the former deputy minister of labour and its results were accepted by the former government in 1960. This survey is the monthly labour force survey conducted by the dominion bureau of statistics. It is conducted on a uniform basis throughout the whole of Canada and has been, since the acceptance of this report, regarded as providing the official statistics on unemployment. These official statistics on unemployment are issued monthly in a joint statement to the press, produced by the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics. If my hon. friend wishes to secure a copy of this report from the Department of Labour, he will find in it a full explanation of the difference between this official measurement of unemployment and the figures of those registered from time to time at the national employment service offices.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I feel that the Minister of Labour has not answered the question at all. I asked him whether official statistics on unemployment include only those who receive benefits or whether they also include all unemployed, even those who do not get such benefits.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the official statistics are the result of a sample survey conducted, and represent an attempt to secure a measure of persons willing and able to work and seeking jobs. The statistics in the national employment service offices for unemployment insurance purposes and for registering unplaced applicants are an entirely different matter and give different results. To get a full explanation of these differences and the different purposes for which each of these sets of statistics is kept, I refer my hon. friend to the report prepared in 1960, which is still the basis for the issuance of these unemployment statistics.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Labour aware that those statistics concerning unemployment insurance are I would say, almost false?

I request that this matter be considered after the house adjourns at ten o'clock tonight.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that if further details and questions are necessary in regard to the statistics being right or wrong, if such questions could be put on the order paper I am sure detailed answers could be given. Then, if the answer is not satisfactory, the matter should be raised again.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the proposal of my hon. friend to refer this matter to the evening adjournment debate, I wish to rise on a point of order and suggest that in light of the fact that my hon. friend asked no question at the time, it is quite improper for him to refer a subject matter of this kind to the adjournment debate.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question having to do with the statistics being right or wrong. Knowing the minister's pride in the statistics for the rest of the country, could he tell the house what his plans are to bring the terribly high unemployment figures in the Atlantic region somewhere close to those which apply nationally?

Mr. MacEachen: It is apparent to the government, and to most observers in the country, that unemployment at present in Canada is largely an area or regional problem and is greater in certain areas of the country. I am sure my hon. friend is pleased to note that in the past year there has been a significant reduction in the very high unemployment levels that prevailed in previous years in the Atlantic provinces. We hope that the application of the area development agency, the special tax concessions provided by the Department of Finance, and the work of the newly capitalized Atlantic development board will have a significant effect in reducing unemployment in that area.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In reference to the minister's answer, may I ask him whether he has now had a reply from the last mentioned board, the Atlantic development board, on the matter of the very high unemployment in the Pictou county area, which was referred to the minister in a question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) several months ago? Has he received a reply from the Atlantic development board in connection with the study to be undertaken?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to draw this matter to the attention of the minister reporting for the Atlantic development board.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, a short while ago the minister referred to action taken by his colleague the Minister of Finance. Was the minister referring to the 11 per cent tax?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker; I was referring to the special tax concessions, which have had the effect of providing substantial, new industries in high unemployment areas.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Does the legislation which is now before the provincial legislature of Newfoundland, which would change the name of that province from Newfoundland to Newfoundland and Labrador, require an amendment to the British North America Act?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this also is a question for the order paper. Perhaps that last wise decision of mine should be qualified slightly in that the question asks for a legal opinion.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Churchill: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I made some general comments on the various paragraphs of the resolution which preceded this bill and I think it is unnecessary to repeat these at this stage. I shall, of course, be glad to give a detailed explanation of any clause on which members may have questions as the committee deals with the clauses of the bill in turn.

The bill is based very closely on the resolution approved by the committee of ways and means on April 28. As I indicated at that time, the bill contains a few amendments not specifically referred to in the resolution but these are generally of a technical nature.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister's colleagues who have access to his microphone would please conduct their conferences outside. We cannot hear a thing he is saying.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to support that suggestion. As I indicated at that time, the bill contains a few amendments not specifically referred to in the resolution but these are generally of a technical nature or designed to correct sections of the law which have been found over the years to have results not originally intended.

The bill contains 25 clauses but a number of these are consequential upon amendments to other clauses. The explanatory notes in the bill itself will indicate the nature of each amendment and I shall be glad to add to these where requested. The interval since the bill was given first reading on April 28 has given those interested in its application a chance to examine all its provisions carefully.

Again this year the Canadian tax foundation arranged to have members of the legal and accounting professions come to Ottawa to examine the bill and as usual this careful scrutiny by expert practitioners in the tax field has proven to be helpful. All suggestions for changes in the bill have been carefully examined and some of these suggestions have been marked for further study before next year's legislation is presented. When the committee reaches the relevant clauses I propose to move one or two amendments based on suggestions we have received which I believe will clarify the meaning of the proposed legislation.

As indicated in the resolution, the bill contains an amendment concerning the deduction to be allowed in 1964 to parents of children age 16 and 17 in respect of whom the new allowances will be paid. It also contains an amendment to modify the definition of a child qualified for family allowance, which is consequential upon payment of the new allowances. When these parts of the resolution were under consideration in committee a number of members asked questions about the administration of the new allowances and the comparison of the position of parents of children age 16 and 17 in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

It was apparent that some members were reluctant to deal with the income tax changes related to the new allowances until more information was available about the allowances themselves. Legislation will be required to provide for payment of the new allowances and also to authorize an additional income tax abatement or equivalent compensation from the federal government to the province of Quebec equal to the amount which the federal government will save because it will not be paying allowances to children age 16 and 17 in Quebec. Since this legislation will have to amend the Income Tax Act in any event to adjust provincial abatements I believe it would be much easier for hon. members to deal with all these changes at one time. In this way members will have before them the details of the administration of the new allowances, the arrangements for fiscal compensation for Quebec and the related income tax changes, and they may then be considered together. For this reason I propose to ask the committee when we reach that stage to consider amendments to delete two portions of the bill which relate to the new allowances. I shall place these amendments before the committee when the relevant clauses are reached.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister concludes, in order to assist the house would he set out in general terms the amendments he intends to move when we get into committee? I think that would shorten the debate on second reading greatly.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to do that. The first change is a technical one to clause 5. I do not know whether hon. members have the bill before them. The amendment is to lines 37 to 39 on page 5 and it adds the following words: "at the time the outlay or expense was incurred and at the end of the second taxation year following the taxation year in which the outlay or expense was incurred". I think it might be easier if I gave the explanation of the proposed technical amendment when we come to that point. On page 6 of the bill an amendment is proposed to lines 12 and 13 of clause 5 which would add the following words: "on the first day of the third taxation year". Again it is a technical amendment suggested by the tax foundation.

Mr. Lambert: These do not have any relationship to the family allowance question at all.

Mr. Gordon: No. The next amendment is to clause 7 (3) and its purpose is to strike out subclause 3.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Subclause 3?

Mr. Gordon: Yes. That is the explanation I gave a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that it will be dealt with more easily, I think, when we come to the legislation dealing with the whole subject. Similarly, in clause 24 there is a consequential change in subclauses 2 and 3. The proposed amendment will delete the redefinition of a child qualified for family allowances.

Mr. Monteith: What is that last one?

Mr. Gordon: Clause 24. Those are the only changes.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the second reading of a bill the rules of relevancy demand that we discuss the principle, and immediately there comes to mind the question, what is the principle of this bill? One could say that we must discuss certain amendments to the Income Tax Act. However, there comes to mind some other principles. Are there not any principles of revisionism or retreat from that so-called bold experiment of last year?

Let us look at what there is in this regard. We have today an amendment to the increased withholding tax which was imposed last year which returns us to the position prior to last year's budget. If we look at paragraph 12 of the resolution, we find some changes with regard to depreciation incentives. There are more revisions in the matter of designated areas, and all that is related to that question. Then, we have possibly one of the most complicated clauses that I have ever seen. I refer to paragraph 16 of the income tax resolution in which we are getting practically a book on the definition of Canadian ownership, in order to plug loopholes that have become apparent in only a few months of administration. Last year it was pointed out very clearly to the minister by speaker after speaker in this house, and by writers outside, that he was starting out on very tricky ground in connection with Canadian ownership. Events have proven that to be so, even from the legal point of view. Later on, I am going to come to the question of whether there has been any change in the equity holdings of Canadians in corporations as a result of this. Certainly, I would appreciate any information the minister can give us in this regard.

We have spoken about the revisions. Now, we come to the extensions. Of course, there shall always be extensions of certain principles in amendments to the Income Tax Act. We have the one dealing with part-time students. It is an extension of the exemptions that have been granted to full-time students a year or two earlier by the previous administration. We have an extension of the exemption granted to a taxpayer for a brother or sister over 21 who is also completing his or her education. Then, we have the particular items dealing with pension plan provisions, which are extensions either in amount or in ambit of the present provisions of the act.

Finally, we come to new departures. These are very limited indeed compared to last year. We have, first of all, contained right in the very first clause of the bill, provision for allowance for legal costs in respect of an appeal against an assessment. At a later stage in the deliberations I certainly want to go into the complexities of the drafting and what is apparent on the face of the bill before us, and what the minister has had to say during discussion at the resolution stage. I will go into the complexities of this because, somehow or other, it seems to me the cart has been put before the horse.

First of all, the act says that you shall add to income the legal costs awarded to you by a court. Then, somewhere else, and you have to go looking for the section, the act allows legal expenses. At the moment I have the 1962 consolidation and the 1963 amendments, so I find it difficult to find this provision, but I will find it if it is there. Then, what confused me no end when I was reading the minister's remarks at the resolution stage, for which I was not present, was the fact he indicated there would be allowed solicitor and client costs including the expenses of a solicitor coming to Ottawa if he accompanied the taxpayer. If you read section 1 of the act it says, "Legal costs awarded to him by a court on appeal", and that shall be added into income. As I say, at first sight this is somewhat confusing and it only points out the difficulties I indicated to the minister at the time of the budget debate.

When you get into these legal costs, what is the yardstick that the department is going to apply? I realize that, in so far as the rule of relevancy is concerned, this has to do with the administration of the Department of National Revenue. I feel the minister might consult with those who administer the act because the administration of the act is just as important as the implementation of the act. What is the yardstick they are going to apply, for instance, to solicitor and client costs? It may be that one solicitor may charge a moderate fee. On the other hand, one may run into what you might call high priced counsel. What is going to be the criterion for determining the adequacy or otherwise of legal costs? There must be some limitation or some yardstick that can be applied to all taxpayers. We know that solicitors' costs vary from province to province as do accountants' fees vary from province to province. There are regional differences, so what is going to be the criterion? I should like to have an answer from the minister.

I was a little surprised when the minister did suddenly retreat, it seems to me, from a very dangerous position on the matter of family allowances. After all, there are pages and pages of discussion at the resolution stage primarily concerning the differences in the allowances to parents in the nine provinces other than Quebec, as compared with a person who is a taxpayer in Quebec, when the children are qualified for family allowances. We will come to that discussion, the minister says, at some date in the future when, I presume, the amendments to the Family Allowances Act will be introduced, along with corresponding amendments to the Income Tax Act. I must say that I would have thought the minister and his colleagues, after the experience of last year, would have learned a lesson to stay out of this type of situation whereby he is trying to make one group of taxpayers in one part of the country subject to one consideration, and the vast bulk of the taxpayers in the rest of the country subject to another consideration.

I for one cannot see why there should be any distinction with regard to education in respect to this proposal for family allowances. After all, so far as the older age groups are concerned, family allowance does provide that they must be attending a school. It would be so simple to propose an amendment to the Family Allowances Act and leave it at that.

If the province of Quebec does already pay an allowance to students in the age groups of 16 and 17 years, provided they are going to school, well, more power to the province of Quebec for doing so, so long as they find the money for it. If they find they have the money to do it, then all very well; but if we say federally we cannot do it because they are already doing it, therefore we are setting up two classes of taxpayers in this country, and to me this is unacceptable.

We are all taxpayers in Canada, all in the same category. Because I happen to live on one side of the Ottawa river as against the other, I can see no difference at all in regard to family allowances. The point is that the children in Quebec shall be treated the same as children in other parts of Canada. They will derive the same benefits from the same source. I can see no cause for complaint.

The act does say that they shall be attending school, and makes provision if they are infirm or otherwise. There are some modifications. Certainly we do not pay family allowance to a child aged 14 or 15 anywhere in Canada, if that child be working. He must be attending school, so why create this distinction after the age of 16 and 17 years?

As a matter of fact, I am very pleased to see the minister withdrawing this nonsense from his income tax bill. To me it is absolute nonsense that we have this distinction. I know some of my colleagues are going to have some more things to say about it and, though the minister has indicated he is withdrawing it, it is still part of the bill and therefore we can discuss the matter. I hope that what the government will hear during this debate will serve as guide lines to it for amendments in the future.

We have seen the three categories of amendments that are being brought forward. Be that as it may, the discussion is not going to be as extensive this year as a year ago. Last year we had difficulty keeping up with the changes and the various versions. There have been no changes this year except the one we have just heard of, and the one contained in paragraph 17 of the resolution concerning the rate of abatement, which arose out of the Quebec conference between the federal government and the provinces.

Going back to the things about which I have spoken, and dealing first with the withholding tax, I would consider this amendment to the withholding tax a confession of abject failure on the part of the government. I am sure this has been forced on it by the criticisms which came from abroad, particularly from the United States, in the investment field, and I more than suspect from government level. The criticisms have come from domestic sources here in Canada in the investment field. They came in this house, and actually they followed the predictions made in this house last year by both the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and my colleague, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan).

This withholding tax and its combination with the provisions last year, which attempted to induce a greater degree of Canadian control of our corporate entities, has not worked out at all. I do not think you will ever use a stick to force Canadianization, certainly not to the degree the minister was hoping for.

Now, let us turn to the depreciation incentives which were set up under resolution No. 4 and are covered by certain of the clauses in this bill. I am concerned as to why there is presently introduced into the legislation a distinction of fair market value as against capital value of the goods, if 95 per cent of the goods to be used must be new. If they are new, why is there this disparity between fair market value and the capital value? This deserves a full explanation, because last year the minister clearly indicated that this, being by way of an incentive, could not cover used equipment and capital goods. They had to be new in order to induce production.

I can see the philosophy behind that reasoning, but there must be some specific reasons why this distinction of fair market value as against capital value is now introduced, and I hope the minister is able to furnish us with those reasons.

Dealing with clause 13 on page 10 we have here introduced the word "owned" as against "leased", while last year the amendment as introduced spoke only of "leased". Now we come to a further distinction, or the introduction of the word "owned", and again we would like to have a full explanation.

Then we go along to further changes in the depreciation incentives as to designated areas. Paragraph 5 of the income tax resolution, with its amendments in the act show that the minister is actually incorporating into the act a provision to deal with a problem I raised with him last year and about which he, as I remember, rather casually told me, "Oh well, that would naturally follows".

This deals with what the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) has indicated regarding a certain area that is a designated area; but as a result of administrative changes or, shall we say, an improvement in economic conditions it no longer retains that status of designated area. But someone has started to build under this particular provision, and the question arises, does that company or individual lose the advantages of the depreciation incentives? The answer, of course, is no. They continue as though the area had continued to be a designated area. But now the minister is asking us to incorporate it in the act, and I am glad his advisers have seen the light of day in this regard and have not said, quite so casually: Oh, that would follow.

Then we come to the extension of these depreciation incentives to March 31, 1965. This is a two year extension. I recall that last year during the debate on this subject hon. members advised the minister that the period originally set was too short to enable companies to assess the situation, carry forward construction and get into business. I am glad to see these provisions are being extended for two years, but I would issue a word of warning: The minister had better make this the terminal point, otherwise this theory of depreciation would become permanent, and I do not think the hon. gentleman's taxation program could stand it.

I think the minister will agree that as a result of the fixing of the original time period some people have certainly been prejudiced. Many a businessman must have looked at the situation and said: I cannot possibly do anything in two years, so it is no use my going ahead and attempting anything in these designated areas, because we shall not be able to comply with the requirements of the act. If the act had originally included the date March 31, 1967, I feel there might have been more activity under this section. If the minister has any information with regard to the number of firms which have taken advantage of these provisions, or indicated that they are taking advantage of them, we would certainly like to have it. I believe there was some discussion of this on the resolution stage.

I should like to pass, now, to the matter of the degree of Canadian ownership as dealt with in paragraph 16 of the resolution—a subject which occupies a great many of the pages of the bill before us. This is almost a book, and I am wondering, frankly, just to what extent this whole experiment has meant any achievement. I have here an article written by the financial correspondent of one of the Toronto newspapers. The heading is: "No Need for Fanciest Footwork Outside of Dallas Courtroom—One Cent Shares, Other Tax Dodges Averted by Gordon Budget Shift". It is incredible, to me, that some of these things should not have been present in the mind of the minister and his advisers. After all, the minister himself comes from a milieu where corporate financing is an everyday affair, and his so-called advisers last year were supposed to be real experts in this field. They were the whiz kids. Yet these very obvious subterfuges have come to light left, right and centre, the net result of them being that the measures introduced last year did not change Canadian ownership one iota. The corporations concerned were qualified for certain privileges. They were qualifying for withholding tax benefits and they were qualifying for other incentives when, in fact, there had not been one iota of change in the so-called Canadian ownership content.

I come back to this point: I still do not think the minister's provision of last year meant one single thing when it comes to true Canadian control. Canadian residence is the easiest thing on earth to acquire. Being a resident of Canada does not mean one is a Canadian. It was easy to defeat the hon. gentleman's stipulations and it will continue to be easy to defeat them. I will say that the provisions contained in that act respecting the degree of Canadian control, coupled with the withholding tax, have done nothing except show a certain degree of ultranationalism which has created only ill will. It was a most inept way of proceeding.

Now I should like to turn briefly to the principle of paragraph 6 of the resolution, dealing with research. One of my colleagues intends to deal, later, with research in Canada and research elsewhere, and with the rationale behind the amendment to the Income Tax Act brought down by the previous administration in order to encourage research in Canada. This was the essence of the representations which have been made year after year by industry, by the universities, and by various other organizations. It was that we should encourage the carrying out of research in Canada and thereby retain many more highly skilled people in this country. Here we are dealing with research outside Canada. I know we have always had provision of some kind for allowances in respect of research undertaken outside this country, provided it could not be done here in Canada. I agree with that. But this goes beyond such a provision. What interests me most is this: Why was the year 1962 chosen? Why go back? Is there a particular class of taxpayers who are affected? This is retroactive legislation recalling those expenses which were to be given to certain oil concerns last year in the budget. The minister saw the light of day and made them effective from the date of his budget but, again, I should like to have an explanation why the year 1962 has been chosen. If there is a particular group of taxpayers who are affected by this measure, we should know, because a provision of this kind appears to me to be a singular one.

A number of clauses in this bill deal with student expenditures and we shall have something to say about them when we reach those clauses in committee. I come now to my final point. There are certain consequential amendments which are of such a technical nature that I think we had better reserve our comment until we get into the bill itself and are able to deal with them one by one.

I hope the minister has noted the points made at this time both by myself and my colleagues, because we should like very full explanations of a lot of the matters dealt with in the bill. We have followed in the course of reasonable debate amendments to the Estate Tax Act, to the Customs Tariff, and now this particular Income Tax Act. As I said at the opening of my remarks, I think the debate this year is going to be somewhat shorter than last year, and I think the minister will be quite relieved that we will not be quite as tempestuous because, quite frankly, the budget contains nothing much compared with last year. It contains nothing of a radical nature with the exception, as I have said, of the way the government proposes to handle family allowances. Now that matter is being pulled back away from us, so we will have to defer our discussion on it until a later date.

As I said, he is correcting some of the errors of last year, and I think this shows that the minister is a much wiser man this year. However, whether the country has benefited at all from his excursions into income tax provisions, planning and administration is very much open to question.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in the debate on second reading of this bill, but there is one point which I would like to draw to the minister's attention and I am afraid that if I do not do it now I might be out of order at a later stage.

The point to which I wish to refer concerns an omission from the bill. The minister will recall that last session I drew to his attention the need for a new look at the provision in the Income Tax Act regarding the deductibility of trade union dues for income tax purposes. I pointed out to the minister that although this provision is there—indeed, it has been there for a number of years, having been inserted when Mr. Abbott was minister of finance—in the view of many of us it does not go quite far enough. There are many aspects of trade union dues which are prohibited from being included by the provisions of the section in the act covering this point.

When I drew this question to the attention of the minister during the last session he said that he was putting it on the list of the matters he was studying with a view to dealing with them at a later date, and I had hoped that this time the budget would include this provision. After all, there is so little in the budget as it is; here is the chance for the minister to put something in which would at least be noted. Since he proposes to introduce some amendments to the clauses of the bill as we go along, I hope that even yet he might consider bringing in at this session an amendment to make it possible to deduct the full amount of legitimate trade union dues for income tax purposes. As the minister knows, that same heading includes dues to professional and other associations, and I think that same consideration applies to this whole range of dues. I hope that the matter will yet be considered favourably by the minister at this session.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of clarification with the minister. Does a student attending a trade school get this allowance? Another point I should like to raise is this. Supposing we have a disabled child of 16 years of age who has been tutored in the home; does this child get the family allowance?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising to a point of order?

Mr. Gordon: I was only going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when we go into committee it would be easier to deal with these specific questions as we deal with each clause.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is the very point which the Chair wanted to bring to the attention of the hon. member, that if the minister answers these questions he would automatically be closing the debate. Therefore it might be preferable to have these matters brought up and discussed when we reach the committee stage.

Mr. Lambert: With this exception, Mr. Speaker. If a certain matter is not in the bill then it cannot be discussed on the committee stage. This is the only time—either on the resolution stage or now on second reading—to draw attention to the fact that certain matters are not in the bill. Therefore I respectfully suggest that if hon. members wish to make points in that regard they should make them at this stage and not defer them. Otherwise they will have to hold their peace.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What the hon. member says is obvious. I was just referring to the particular remarks made by the hon. member who was asking specific questions of the minister, questions which should be asked at the committee stage.

Mr. Rynard: I respect your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think that this matter is included in the bill, because I referred it before to the parliamentary secretary and I do not believe he answered it at the time.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention another matter which is not covered by the bill. I believe I brought this question up when the national revenue estimates were before the house last time. This has to do with the question of income tax deductions for contributions made to political parties, and I just throw out this idea to the minister, who perhaps might consider it at some time.

There is a private member's resolution on the order paper in the name of one of the hon. members for Halifax which is due to be discussed next Wednesday concerning this very subject. Some reform in connection with the payment for elections is a matter which has been talked about before; indeed, I believe it was part of the Liberal party's platform. I would suggest that at least modest amounts should be exempt for income tax purposes. It seems to me that this would be a very easy step to take and that some measure of reform should be instituted in this rather vexed question of campaign expenses. I make that suggestion now for the minister's consideration and I hope that he and his colleagues in the cabinet will discuss this matter before very long.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion to make to the minister before he rises to speak, regarding the deduction of the cost of the equipment used by the workers, especially the loggers.

I would have liked to see in those amendments something which would have made it possible for bush workers to deduct from their net income the cost of the equipment which they use.

In my opinion, this is a gross injustice toward the small wage earner. While all the big companies are allowed to deduct the cost of their equipment, there is absolutely nothing in the legislation to do justice to the small wage earners, allowing them to deduct the cost of their own equipment.

About ten years ago, in the forest industry of our area people were not as hurried as we are now and equipment was less costly. But now, things have reached a point where a bush worker has to spend substantial sums of money—between $500 and $600—to be suitably equipped, and that before starting to work in order to earn about $1,000. He is required under the Forestry Act to buy a power saw, special clothing and so on. So that a bush worker has to contract a debt of $400, $500 or even $600 before he starts to work.

That is why I am asking the minister to put in an amending clause that would enable the bush worker to deduct the cost of that equipment.

Some might say: Well, that equipment enables bush workers to earn more.

If the cost of production or the price of a cord of wood had increased because of this equipment, we would not insist so much. But the price of a cord of wood is still the same as it was 10 years ago, yet the heavy burden of this modern equipment is being imposed on our bush workers. I think this is a glaring injustice. I again ask the minister to provide an amendment along those lines.

The situation has become urgent. Even last winter, when salaries were supposedly decent, there were lumbermen who left the forest to collect meagre unemployment insurance benefits, because that was more than they were getting cutting wood in the forest.

I hope that the minister will take note of that situation.

I should like to raise another point with regard to equipment, that is the farmer's equipment.

I fail to understand why an amendment could not be introduced to assist the farm people in this regard. That is a very efficient method of assisting the farmer, by allowing him to deduct from his income the cost of the new and modern machinery he needs.

I think that such an amendment would be extremely important also as far as farming is concerned. I ask the minister to consider the matter and to introduce some measure which would bring a few extra benefits to our farmers, the same as we do very generously in the case of the big companies.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will take these points into serious consideration.

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I was anxiously waiting for the day when I could express my ideas against this Income Tax Act. As a piece of legislation, it is the worst mess one could find. One cannot make head or tail of it. It seems to me that the laws of a country should be written in short, simple terms, in order to be understood and obeyed. But today our legislation is so muddled and complicated that only a lawyer can understand it. In my opinion, the Income Tax Act is one of the most discriminatory and ambiguous acts we have in this country. And yet if the people complain and shout "enough", the government is taken aback.

To avert such misunderstandings, I would suggest that the government revise this act as soon as possible and make it clearer by using very plain but precise terms, without forgetting to grant, for charitable donations, a uniform exemption throughout Canada; whether it be of 10 or 8 per cent does not matter, but let it apply to all Canadians without anybody having to show receipts for his contributions.

Those in charge of charitable organizations should be left alone once and for all, and the pestering of parish priests should be stopped by means of a new and better legislation. No member of this house would tolerate the inconvenience imposed upon our parish priests who are very busy and already overworked, and who are asked to do this free of charge, of course.

The best solution would still be to grant a $3,000 exemption to single people and a $5,000 exemption to married people. This would eliminate a lot of red tape and save on stationery. I think that in the end, the government would not lose so much and taxpapers, as well as the clergy, would be very grateful. Why require receipts if officials are to decide the amount to be accepted, on orders from the deputy minister of national revenue or from any other authority?

On the basis of all the complaints I have received from my riding, that of Quebec West, I have come to the conclusion that the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue has accepted the $100 deduction as a standard, regardless of the income. I am speaking of the people who are in that category, those whose total charitable donations were not allowed. It seems to me that the department has been more strict in the case of single people, as if the latter did not have to think about their future or give to charity.

I should like to give you just a few examples to illustrate the complaints I have received from my riding. There is the case of a bachelor, Mr. Dollard Wiseman, 310 Marie de l'Incarnation st., Quebec city 8, who on April 11, wrote me as follows:

Two days ago, I received by mail from Ottawa, a notice of assessment informing me that, after examination, my claim for charitable donations had been reduced to $200. In my federal income tax return for 1963, I claimed a $424 deduction from a salary of $4,240.

[Mr. Plourde.]

Hon. members, charity is a personal matter. However, what I do not understand is that a Canadian government bureaucrat, who happens to be your employee, since you are a member of the House of Commons—and since you are unquestionably the boss, being a servant of the people—takes the liberty of managing his business without your consent.

It is true that I am single, but, good heavens, I do not have to pay the piper. We are allowed to deduct 10 per cent for charitable donations, and I find that the law is not adhered to in my case.

Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers can see that the government does not even abide by its own legislation; then, why would you have them observe such legislation? Why they, and not the government?

I hope that you will do your best in order that I may be granted my 10 per cent. I am sending you the notice and the said cheque.

After consideration, your claim for charitable donations has been reduced to $200.

The following is extracted from another letter which he wrote me.

Charitable donations can be made to religious institutions as well as to parochial or other organizations. I would like you to tell me why I am deprived of my right, that is 10 per cent for charitable donations. My question can be summed up as follows: Is every Canadian denied his 10 per cent and is the amount claimed reduced to $200, as in my case? If so, I have proof to the contrary. This confounded red tape in Ottawa about single persons in Quebec must stop.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. For the last few minutes, I listened with much interest to the speech of the hon. member for Quebec West.

I know he has a point to bring before the house and we all listened to him with much interest, but I think his observations are not directly relevant to the matter the house is now asked to pass.

He must relate his comments to one specific point, that is to the bill now under discussion. Besides, that is the usual practice in the house. It is not only a matter of making comments generally related to the field of taxation or national revenue. Comments must be specifically related to the bill we are discussing.

It is a bill amending another act, and the speech of the hon. member must relate to the bill amending the act, and not to the act which is amended.

Consequently, I request the hon. member to relate as much as he can his remarks to the bill now under study.

Mr. Plourde: I understand that I am infringing the rules of the house with my claim concerning the income tax. I have taken this opportunity to put forward the rights of my voters because I wonder when the opportunity will be given to me to raise a grievance against the Department of National Revenue or to make new suggestions which would enable it to take action along those lines.

However, I will not say more about it today. I shall resume my remarks some other time, but I could not let Bill No. C-91 now under study pass without exposing the way in which our people are treated by the income tax office.

Consequently, I move, seconded by Mr. Gauthier:

That Bill No. C-91 be not now read a second time but that it be decided that in the opinion of this house, an investigation should be ordered regarding the doing of the inspectors of the Quebec city office of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If no additional comments are forthcoming with regard to whether or not the proposed amendment is in order the Chair is prepared to make a ruling. I feel that the proposed amendment is out of order because it is not relevant to the matter now before the house. I would simply refer hon. members to May, sixteenth edition, page 554, where it says that an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill. This amendment deals with matters relevant, I suggest, to the administration of the Deparment of National Revenue and not relevant to the bill now before us. With regret I must therefore say that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak only briefly on the bill. It is not my intention to delay the minister in presenting his arguments. However, since holding his present portfolio I believe the minister has been toying with the possibility of discouraging foreign investment in Canada. Instead of discriminating against foreign investment I believe he should reconsider his views and do what he can to encourage capital investment from any country. Certainly we in Nova Scotia have seen considerable expansion in industrial growth due to capital which has been brought into our province from the United Kingdom, and especially by Swedish interests. I should like to leave the thought with the minister that he should not worry too much about where capital comes from because once it is invested in Canada these companies generally become good corporate citizens.

I believe further that we need to encourage Canadian investment in common stocks. According to recent reports Canadians today have something like $800 million or more in their savings accounts. This is a larger amount in reserve than ever before in the history of the nation. If we are to encourage the release of this capital we must make investment in Canadian common stocks more attractive to Canadians.

At the present time investors are allowed to deduct 20 per cent of the amount of their dividends from common stocks when paying their income tax. This encourages Canadians, of course, to participate in buying the common stocks of Canadian companies. But if we are to release the great fund of money at present resting in savings accounts I suggest that the minister should give some thought to increasing the percentage of dividends on common stocks, which is deductible for income tax purposes. I believe it could well be increased from the present 20 per cent to 30 per cent or even 33⅓ per cent. If this action were taken it would provide a greater incentive for Canadians to participate in the economic growth of this country.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in a very few words I should like to add a British Columbia voice in support of a proposal put forward a few minutes ago by a speaker from a Quebec constituency. He and I would both like to have the minister give serious consideration to an amendment to the income tax regulations which would permit the deduction from income of the moneys which have to be spent by producers such as loggers, fishermen and farmers on special equipment, tools and clothing in order to carry out their functions. I believe that such deductions are already allowed in the United States. I can see no reason why we should have one set of rules enabling the operators to make such deductions for income tax purposes, and yet the actual workers involved in the same industries do not have this benefit. I strongly urge that real consideration be given to such an exemption. There are many thousands of workers in British Columbia who would benefit from it and who now lose because of the lack of it.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, there are a few comments I should like to make in this debate. First of all, I would be prepared to commend the minister, at least in some respects, upon his aims and objectives. No doubt every government that has ever undertaken to govern this country has tried to do its best for the citizens and so far as possible, to provide equity as between citizens. I take it that this budgetary effort is no different from others in this regard.

Now, of course, the job of the opposition is to find weaknesses in these budgetary efforts. We find in this one some areas in which we have no difficulty at all in finding some glaring weaknesses. One area of the budget which we can commend is the deduction of tuition fees for full-time students, as well as for part-time students. This I believe is a provision that will meet with general acceptance across this country and will be of considerable assistance to our university students, as well as to our high school and technical school students.

The favourable adjustments in the depreciation allowances to encourage the establishment, development and expansion of industry in areas where unemployment still persist is also a move in the right direction and should be commended. Anything that can be done to create more job opportunities in Canada certainly should be done, and I think will meet with ready acceptance by all citizens. The adjustment of the depreciation on heavy machinery at this time will be good news to many of our contractors and we must admit that contractors across Canada are having their difficulties at this time. This machinery is given a terrible beating and it wears out very rapidly. The increase in the rate of depreciation from 30 per cent to 50 per cent will, I am sure, be very welcome news to many of the people in the contracting business.

There is not much in the budget anywhere for agriculture. These amendments are no exception. I should like the minister to give serious consideration to one item which, as it is presently applied, is not fulfilling the purpose for which it was intended. I refer to the depreciation allowances provided for agriculture. One of the expenses on farms across Canada which is expressly prohibited from being disallowed, is the expense associated with clearing brush. In the newer areas of the country, the clearing of brush is done for the purpose of plowing up that land. The Income Tax Act treats this as a capital expenditure and, in some respects, I would agree it may be capital expenditure. In so far as the older parts of Ontario are concerned, however, where the land was cleared 100 years ago and has grown up a number of times with succeeding crops of thorn bushes, the clearing of those thorn bushes is not a capital expenditure. It is, in effect, the clearance of a weed crop although it is only undertaken every year or two, whereas weeds may need to be dealt with every week.

The eradication of thorn bushes in southwestern Ontario is a current expense of the agricultural industry in that area. It may only be done once a year or twice a year, or one might not cut these bushes for five or ten years, but it is a continuing current expense on these farms in southwestern Ontario.

I feel that where expenditures are made for that purpose, certainly the intention of the act is that a deduction should be permitted for income tax purposes.

We come now to the provisions that are being made for educational assistance to our 16 and 17 year old students. We have been warned by the minister that this problem may be dealt with in a different way. We have been warned that certain amendments will be made to the act. I consider this very welcome news. This is a thorny problem and it was debated at length during the resolution stage of this legislation. Since we do not know what will be contained in the amendment, since we cannot possibly know, I see no alternative but to make our wishes known at this time during second reading of the Income Tax Act bill.

The discussion of this problem the other evening was extended and most interesting. It seems that the government is undertaking to mix two things. This point was brought out during the discussion the other evening. It is the intention to provide educational assistance for boys and girls during their 16th and 17th years. Normally, during those years they are in high school and the expenses for keeping them in high school are great. This legislation fits in very well with other efforts, the scholarships, student loans and other financial measures that are being taken to assist our students.

But when we try to deal with this project as educational allowances, immediately we run into constitutional difficulties. The minister has admitted this, and it is generally admitted. We are faced, therefore, with alternative policies. We can continue or attempt to continue with this project to provide educational grants. We can keep trying to get around all of the constitutional difficulties involved, or we can take the simpler way, which is to extend family allowances from the present level of 16 years of age to the level of 18 years of age.

As was so well pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) the other evening, the Family Allowances Act already provides that allowances may only be paid to children who are in regular attendance at school. The act reads as follows:

> The allowance shall cease to be payable if the child does not regularly attend school as required by the laws of the province where he resides, or does not receive training that, in the opinion of the competent educational authority designated by such province—

—and so on. It goes on to deal with Indians and Eskimos, and other special cases, but it is not the intention of the legislation to pay family allowances to children who should be in school and who are not in school, and it is the intention of the proposed project for providing assistance to children aged 16 and 17 years that they should not receive any assistance unless they are going to school.

It therefore follows that only school children can be paid family allowances under the Family Allowances Act, and if we expand the act to take in boys and girls in their 16th and 17th years it would accomplish the very same thing in a general way, that the proposed educational grants would accomplish. I will try to make this point clear. If we extend family allowances to the 18th birthday this will cover children who possibly will always be dependant, crippled children who would not attend school, and retarded children. However, the same regulations which now apply to boys and girls aged 14 and 15 years, namely that they must be in school, would apply to boys and girls 16 and 17 years of age.

We would get almost exactly the same effect by an extension of family allowances as we would get through educational allowances, and I believe the cost will not be significantly greater. It would be approximately the same, and we would get away from all of the constitutional and other difficulties, and from the confusion into which the educational grants proposal is leading. I think this has been admitted by all concerned, and I would make a plea to the minister and the government to stay away from the educational grant concept and make a straight, simple extension of family allowances to the 18th birthday. We will then have the parents all across Canada, the children all across Canada and the taxpayers all across Canada treated in exactly the same way. I am sure this would be much more satisfactory to all concerned and would be well received by all concerned.

So far as the program which is now being carried on in Quebec is concerned, a similar program might be carried on in any other province which wishes to undertake it, but I want to say that an allowance of $20 for high school students aged 16 and 17 years is not too much, and other provinces may wish to supplement the family allowances if they are increased to the extent proposed, of $10 per month for children aged 16 and 17 years. The proposed allowance is not too much, even if it were doubled by some of the provinces.

The family allowance method is a much simpler way of dealing with this problem, and I hope the minister and the government will stay away from these proposed educational grants and give a straight extension of family allowances to the 18th birthday.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I will not take more than a few minutes to call to the minister's attention a problem which is very close to my heart. It concerns the little people who, because they get a few hundred dollars interest a year on capital they saved the hard way, are penalized by having to pay income tax on that amount.

We admit that, since the minister assumed his post, we have noticed his very definite intention to give Canadians the possibility to regain control of the country's economy or at least to take an active part therein. In that light, I would be inclined to believe that it would benefit Canadians to exempt from income tax the interest paid on the savings of small people up to—I take the liberty of giving a figure—$250 or $300, for instance.

There is, of course exemption of 20 per cent on Canadian corporations dividends but, in my opinion, it is not enough to stimulate savings as we should stimulate them.

Economists are always preaching thrift, putting it as a desirable virtue. I think they are right; looking back upon the past, I notice that countries like France may have avoided, at times, economic disasters precisely because of the small savers, especially the French farmers.

In my opinion, this is a most appropriate opportunity to ask the minister whether it would not be advisable to consider granting the small savers certain tax exemptions on the interest they receive.

We talk about investments. I can well understand that it is difficult, if not impossible, for Canadians to make investments if they are not encouraged to save their money.

I honestly believe that, there, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) would really have something to encourage workers and farmers to save, those people, as I said, to whom savings would come in handy.

I do not wish to stand up for capitalists who are paid such a tremendous amount of interest on their equally tremendous investments. I want to speak for people who have but a little sum of money put aside and who, in my opinion, deserve to be encouraged.

Before returning to my seat, I also wish to say that I am in complete agreement with the requests made by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) in respect of the exemptions which should be granted to certain workers such as farmers and bush-workers, especially as regards the purchase of special tools and equipment.

I feel that those citizens are now suffering an injustice. It may well be that the problem now facing them has never been considered. That is why I think the time has come to deal with this particularly delicate and interesting problem which workers and farmers are up against.

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I cannot but echo the opinions of my fellow citizens in the county of Charlevoix, and I would say, throughout Canada who are dissatisfied with the present Income Tax Act.

As the Minister of Finance announced his intention to introduce a few amendments to this legislation, I might submit a few myself.

To my mind, the present act has become obsolete, in respect of deductions, for instance. Admissible deductions for single and married people, which are $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for married people, are no longer justified at such a low rate. The reason I raise this point is that the exemption was set about 20 years ago; at that time, it had been estimated that the amount of $2,000 was the absolute minimum to support a family and that it should not be taxed.

But since, the cost of living is probably three times, if it is not four times, as high, yet we still have the mere exemption of $2,000 for a family and $1,000 for a single person.

That is blatant injustice, nonsense which should be rectified as soon as possible. Such a move would certainly be well received by the Canadian people, and this government would certainly gain a great number of followers.

I also would like to mention another point, already raised by other hon. members who preceded me. As a former workman, who had the opportunity of seeing what happens in plants and factories, I was able to establish that there was some discrimination with regard to tax deductions for tools.

A doctor, or any other professional man who buys the tools needed in his profession is allowed quite important deductions. Yet, a workman who has to get a tool chest in any plant, which often costs him $200, $300, $400, $500 and even $1,000—and I must say that today, you do not get a very good tool chest for $1,000—is not allowed any tax deduction for that equipment.

This proves that the act, which might have been good 20 years ago, is now quite incomplete in this field, which results in serious discriminations. And I would like the Minister of Finance to think of those discriminations when he introduces his amendments.

I would like to point out another very serious injustice arising from the present Income Tax Act. I am speaking of succession duties. These are most unfair, because they only affect small businesses. Big businesses do not pay succession duties, for they do not die, they are passed along from shareholders to shareholders. On the other hand, small family industries are handed down from father to son and suffer immensely from the estate tax, so much so that sons are often obliged to sell the family business in order to pay the tax.

That is particularly unfair. Especially when people had the courage and the ability to build an estate to hand down to their children when they pass away, they do not deserve to be treated that way or, at least, they should be spared just as are the big businesses.

I only wanted to make those few remarks because as far as the bill itself is concerned, as I have just stated, I have nothing much to say, for it does reduce taxes. As long and as often as the government will propose tax reductions, it may be assured of my support.

[Text]

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have no intention of taking up much time or of delaying the progress of this measure but I should like to repeat, as the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) has pointed out, that there is opportunity in this legislation for discrimination. I direct the minister's attention to clause 3, which has to do with the end of the taxation year and the period within which payment may be made into a registered pension fund or plan. An employer is now to be permitted to make payments into these funds 120 days rather than 60 days after the end of the taxation year, whereas the ordinary individual is limited to 60 days. It seems to me that under this provision there is a chance of discrimination taking place, and I direct the hon. gentleman's attention to it although I am abundantly certain that this was not his intention.

Mr. Monteith: May I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions for papers, private bills and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MAPS SHOWING ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

The house resumed from Thursday, May 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martineau:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all maps drawn up or deposited with the chief electoral officer or the representation commissioner pertaining to the proposed redistribution of electoral boundaries in Canada.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Speaking in support of this motion, and as one who seconded the motion, I may say frankly, at the outset, that I should like to be a little better prepared than I am this afternoon. We have in the last few days been busy in the committee on privileges and elections.

Nevertheless, I should like to say a few words in relation to these documents—some call them maps; others call them mathematical exercises—and in so doing I wish to refer to the provisions of the Representation Commissioner Act which was passed in 1963 and assented to around December 21, 1963 just before the Christmas recess. I doubt that even when another related bill, the bill dealing with redistribution, was before the house—and it passed second reading—many hon. members realized just what that bill said, for that matter, what the Representation Commissioner Act said. Section 8 of that act is right to the point:

> As soon as possible after the completion of any decennial census, or in the case of the census taken in the year 1961 as soon as possible after the coming into force of this act, the commissioner shall prepare maps showing the distribution of population in each province and setting out alternative proposals respecting the boundaries of electoral districts in each province, and shall thereupon supply such maps to the appropriate electoral boundaries commission.

Thus, the act provides that the representation commissioner shall provide maps referring to electoral districts and, in particular, maps related to the year 1961. There have been a great many words spoken about these maps. In fact, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had this to say—and I know we are not supposed to quote from Hansard during debate if an hon. member objects. However, if he will waive the rule I will read the exact words which were used by him on April 30, as reported at page 2780:

> I am told there are no maps so far.

This was said in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden).

> Therefore one cannot say he has seen the maps. However, in response to the suggestion that was made I have seen some of the sketches that are referred to as transparencies, consisting of lines drawn on transparencies that are put over old maps.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a very meticulous man in the use of his language. He has set out that he has absolute confidence in the representation commissioner, as I think we all have, as far his duties are concerned, provided those duties are free from any political bias or prejudice, or from any influence exercised by any minister by whom he takes his directions. So that when hon. members come before the house and say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the house, that there are no maps, then I do not know what kind of argument they are prepared to present. The hon. member says in one breath that he has seen something. To me he is just mincing words. I know that on many occasions the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gets very pious, particularly on this subject. He is one who has said down through the years that he wants to take redistribution out of politics. I think there is one thing about which this party can be proud, and that is that we have stood for that for a long time. The reason—and I might as well make this point now—is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must point out to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) the very narrow limits of the debate at the present time. The question we have to decide is whether or not the maps in question should be tabled.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the rules and the narrowness of debate, Mr. Speaker, but I read the debate thoroughly at noon, and with the greatest respect the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as reported at page 2778 of Hansard, took up two pages, if that can be translated into time, dealing with taking redistribution out of politics. I am just answering his argument. He having opened up the subject I am sure, in all fairness to the Chair, that you would not want me to narrow the debate beyond the limits of the debate at the present time.

Throughout the years the Conservative party has stood for independent redistribution and for taking the matter out of politics. The reason of course is that either in 1953 or just before, the province of Saskatchewan lost one, if not two constituencies, including that of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who was the only Conservative member of the house at that time outside of Calgary in western Canada. So we have had some experience of this kind of gerrymandering, and when we have to rely on the minister who is piloting the particular act in question, and who is behind the drafting of these maps, we are naturally a little suspicious as to what might occur in the future, and have to look into the matter very carefully.

Coming back to the point about the maps, I say that there are maps and that every hon. member in the house who has seen these sketches, or whatever my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre wants to call them, he himself, as I say, having seen them, will say that they are maps; make no mistake about that. If they are not maps, then the taxpayers of Canada are paying the representation commissioner money for something he should not be doing, because clause 8 of the bill requires that maps be drawn.

The next question is this. If these maps are going to be withdrawn, what is the secret behind it? Why did the minister in the last debate and during the debate on the redistribution bill, when asked whether there were maps, become white hot? Why does he lose his temper on so many occasions? He loses his temper because he has something to hide, and that is why he is opposing this motion at the present time.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I would be pleased to answer it.

Mr. McIlraith: In the hon. member's last reference to losing tempers, is he speaking for himself?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I am speaking for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), the man who was secretary of state but was demoted. He is the man I am speaking about. I am not speaking about the member for Bow River or about the minister who has just interrupted me.

Many of us have seen these maps. I should like to ask who hired the staff of the representation commission? Was there any influence exercised by the Minister of Transport, the former secretary of state, in that regard? Did he recommend these people as staff? Is this matter above politics? These are questions we would like answered. There are also other questions I should like to ask. I have been interested in the attitude of certain newspapers with regard to their suspicions about these maps, and I will read from an editorial in that regard in a minute or two. Why are these maps being hidden? Why are we suspicious? The answer is that about 65 to 75 per cent of the constituencies of this country are going to be affected, some more than others.

I have not had an expert go over these maps, and that is why I want them placed before the house so that experts can take a look at them. It would be a strange thing if we were to see that the constituencies of the frontbenchers of the Conservative party have either been wiped out or so altered that they cannot be recognized. One perfect example in this regard is the constituency of Perth, which is an old, historical riding. Would it not be strange if that constituency were wiped out?

What makes it so strange is the sales job which has been done by the former secretary of state who was demoted to Minister of Transport. He keeps telling the newspapers of this country: "Oh, don't worry; we believe in a tolerance". This tolerance, Mr. Speaker, is a lot of tommyrot. I say that, because it may be as low as 1 per cent, or as high as 20 per cent, or as low as 20 per cent, or be a decimal point of 1 per cent, or exist not at all. I am dealing with just one map, in spite of what my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has said, and I suppose he will want to hear what I have to say.

The fact is that there are maps. I looked up the word in the dictionary, and it means a geographical area with boundaries. Maps show boundaries, places and populations. They show geographic descriptions of various parts of the country, including mountains, and I will have something to say about mountains later.

What about the constituency of Perth? The constituency of Perth is populated by about 70,000 people, so you would not expect it to have been changed at all. But when we ask about this the government say they have either applied the metropolitan method, whatever method that is, or the other method. The other method is the urban method or the corporation method.

Mr. Rapp: The corporate method.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, the corporate method; I thank my hon. friend from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. But whatever method it is we want it described. Why are the members of this house denied this information? I think the Liberal members of this house would also be most interested in that question, and I trust that they will raise it at their caucus. If they have not been permitted to see the maps their opinions might change. Many hon. members have seen them. Why should I have the privilege of seeing them, when you are denied that privilege?

An hon. Member: I don't want to see them.

Mr. Woolliams: If you don't want to see them, you may be very fortunate. I do not know the details of the riding you represent. The riding of Perth has the exact population; many of these ridings have the exact population. I have always taken this position. Certainly there are many places which have a population as low as 15,000 or 20,000. Highly populated constituencies exist in the city of Toronto and in the city of Montreal, while some of our farm communities and some of our rural communities in Ontario and Quebec are less highly populated. If you want to change the situation to bring the formula closer to representation by population, why change those constituencies which fit into the formula? How strange it is that these constituencies happen to be represented by the front bench members of the Conservative party.

That is the reason I ask the ex-secretary of state, now the Minister of Transport, to produce these maps. I say to him, what has he to hide? I am sorry he is absent today—in fact, many of his colleagues seem to be absent—because I would have liked him to explain to the house at this time what he is hiding. How can we believe that this redistribution is above politics, prejudice and bias? I know the newspapers say that no one will question Mr. Castonguay. That may be very true. But in all fairness to that Canadian—and I have expressed my views about Mr. Castonguay, and there is no question that he is above reproach—the fact is that he has a job to do and under the act he is to be paid $25,000 a year. What influence may be brought to bear on him? What influence has the Minister of Transport, formerly the secretary of state, exercised in this regard? Who influenced the hiring of the staff in that respect? Who decided whether we would apply the metropolitan or the corporate method when bringing about a redistribution in this country? What consideration has been given to the historical value or the historical facts of these constituencies?

Mr. Speaker, let me go back to the constituency of Perth, the place where the plays of Shakespeare are to be relived on this continent. Even the United States, including Hollywood, is looking to that area in which to relive Shakespeare's plays. My colleague represents that constituency. If its borders are correct; if it has the proper population; if it fits into the formula, why wipe out that constituency? What influence has been exercised in this regard? Let us take into account the factors of geography. One may say these ten commissions which are to be set up will be above prejudice and bias and will solve the matter; but the fact is that there will be no hearings before those commissions until judgment is rendered.

I have the greatest respect for members of the judiciary. As a member of two bars in this country I have respect for judges of this country, but surely when the matter comes before them and somebody steeped in the atmosphere of redistribution, who understands the subject, lays on their desks maps drawn and prepared without proper scrutiny, or at least the scrutiny necessary to find out what influence might have been exercised, they are going to be mere rubber stamps. Therefore we say they may not even take into account the geographical features involved.

Let us consider my own riding. The newspapers say one must not mention his own riding. This is said by the Calgary Albertan. This newspaper says one must not mention his own riding because a member has a personal interest in the matter. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a personal interest in the matter and I have a personal interest as far as all members of parliament are concerned who agree with my point of view, because I do not think this matter is above politics at the present time.

One map includes Jasper, stretched right out to the constituency of the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner). The centre of Bow River is the city of Calgary. If an election was called in the winter, the only way you could get into Jasper from Calgary, Alberta, or any other part of Bow River, would be by helicopter; and we have not those fat electoral sums of money that other parties appear to have and boast about in this regard. Therefore the only way I could get into my own riding to electioneer or process the work I have to do would be to drive to Edmonton, and then through Edmonton come into Jasper through the back door. I say, Mr. Speaker, these maps should be subject to scrutiny and laid before parliament so we may look at them.

Supposing the commission set up in Alberta does not understand the geography of certain ridings? No one man in any province can understand all these things. They have hired a group of university students in the city of Ottawa. When I asked two or three of them if they had university degrees, they said they had no particular training. They just took a group of people living in a certain spot—they did not care whether you had to cross the Cascade mountains—and the idea was, "There are so many people living in this area. Go to it". If this is the kind of redistribution we are going to have, one may well ask whether it is above politics.

I have the greatest respect for some newspapers of this country. I am not saying that about all of them, and I am going to attack particularly some of the western newspapers which have not yet grasped what is involved in this question. I read an editorial which appeared on May 6, 1964 with reference to this particular subject. It said, "Mr. Woolliams protests too much". I intend to protest on this subject today and tomorrow and continually, Mr. Speaker, if necessary, because it affects not only my riding but, I repeat, probably 85 per cent of the ridings in this country. The main thing for which they spanked me in the editorial was this. They said that surely if the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is to appoint one member to the commission to look at these maps, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is to appoint one member to the commission to look at these maps, the member from Bow River and other Conservative members will be protected. The Calgary Albertan does not even know we have been supporting that section of the bill and we are opposed to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), so how can they be unprejudiced and unbiased? They are very quick to come to the support of the former secretary of state, now the devoted Minister of Transport, but they wrote this editorial without knowing the facts. Everything I read here in reference to this matter shows they are not in possession of the facts.

Mr. Knowles: How about reading the editorial?

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to take the time to read it. You can go into the reading room and read it for yourself. It is an editorial in the Albertan of May 6, 1964. It says that members of parliament will be looked after because the member for Bow River and the other Conservatives will have a member appointed to the commission by the Leader of the Opposition, and the Liberals will be looked after because the Prime Minister will appoint a member to the commission. We support that; but that is not the section of the bill about which we are concerned and which the government, having reversed their position, are now supporting.

Mr. Knowles: Read the last two sentences.

Mr. Woolliams: I have not time to read them. You can read them later, if you wish. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised this problem. Why has he put his finger in the pie? I know why he is so anxious to rush this thing through. It is because, if I may use the word, they have stolen the best part of the constituency of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and put it in his constituency. It is that area that might perpetuate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre's right to sit in this House of Commons. That is just how comfortable he is.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me point this out, Mr. Speaker. There were 85,000 people in the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre. That is greater than the 70,000 required; it is probably even greater than the tolerance figure. Why was this constituency so readjusted? They changed it from west-east to north-south.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, a few observations only on the motion for papers now before us, to say that I agree with the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) that we should be made aware of the true facts concerning the sketches or drafts being made in relation with the boundaries of electoral districts in every province.

It goes without saying that the purpose of having those maps tabled in the house is precisely to enable hon. members to have a better idea of what will be the new boundaries of the districts. I also agree with those who would like to know why this redistribution will entail changes in the boundaries of certain ridings. But, between that and the fact that the changes I had the opportunity to see in the offices located on O'Connor street have to be made, there is certainly something that is not conformable to the situation of certain districts.

Moreover, the idea of following only mathematical systems is completely ridiculous, and we should adhere to the existing circumstances in economic areas.

Mr. Speaker, I particularly studied one district that concerns me, my own district of Chapleau, which is the second largest in the province of Quebec. According to the sketches or the maps I have seen, it is the intention to cut out a large slice right in the middle of the riding so as to leave only the two ends to the riding of Chapleau.

Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, the one who prepared those plans might have had good intentions, but I think he does not know anything about the region for which he made a sketch, and he should have asked for advice or obtained information on the spot, in order to know what it was all about.

I should also like to refer to an observation made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) two weeks ago, that is on April 30, when he indicated that those maps would not be used when the provincial commissioners would be called upon to make a final decision. Therefore, I wonder why that work has been done, if it is not to be used? Why were requests made to prepare plans or sketches if the commissioners who will set the boundaries of electoral ridings do not use them?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that if they do not know what to do with the chief electoral officer, they should merely pay him a holiday. That would not upset the applecart as it is said that the work he was requested to prepare will not be used.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that those maps will have a considerable influence on the decision of the commissioners, and that is why I support the motion of the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue to the effect that those maps should be placed at the disposal of the hon. members, so that each may see them and know not only where we stand but also what will be the result.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) who requests the production of these maps, and I feel that the opposition, especially, is rightly concerned about this matter, because we do not want any kind of discrimination in respect to the redistribution of electoral ridings.

We have full confidence in Mr. Castonguay, who has shown his ability and who renders services to all members, at election time, when we or our organizers phone him to ask some information concerning the administration of the election act.

Mr. Speaker, I learned that during a Liberal caucus, several government members complained and raised a strong protest to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) in respect to redistribution; it is said that following those repeated pressures, the Minister of Transport gave up and permitted those maps to be circulated among members of the Liberal caucus, to enable those members to consult them and bring forward their suggestions. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Transport is believed to have said: state your suggestions, your recommendations, we shall take them into consideration, so that—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Justice has a point of order.

Mr. Favreau: I shall ask the hon. member whether he allows me to put a question, and if not, I shall raise a point of order.

Can the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm tell the house at which caucus such indiscretion is supposed to have been committed and from whom he holds such information?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reply to the Minister of Justice that the caucus was held a month ago and it was a Wednesday caucus; I know it from a reliable source and I wish the minister would not oblige me to tell from whom; besides, I am not going—

Mr. Habel: Innuendo.

Mr. Pigeon: —to mention anybody.

In other words, it was reported that members on the government side were told: "Make your choice, make your recommendations." So that the opposition members would take what remained after the members on the government side had helped themselves.

That is one of the reasons why the Minister of Transport refuses to produce those maps before the House of Commons; simply, he is afraid public opinion in Canada may revolt against the attitude taken by the government, who would apparently discriminate against opposition members.

On this side of the house, we have reason to worry, because we know the kind of politics practised by the Minister of Transport. Moreover, this bill, which should normally be sponsored by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) is being sponsored by the Minister of Transport.

We are aware of this kind of petty politics in which the latter so often indulges even in the house. This is why, it would be in the public interest if these maps were produced, in order to prove once for all to the Canadian people that we, on this side of the house, are justified in being concerned and asking questions in connection with the redistribution bill.

It is not without reason, as I said earlier, that the Minister of Transport refuses to produce these maps in the house; there is some kind of agreement between members on the government side. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) and even the Secretary of State have admitted that the Liberal conventions are packed. But we, on this side of the house, do not want the redistribution to be made at the expense of the opposition.

Mr. Habel: Union Nationale.

Mr. Pigeon: We want it to be made with justice and fairness. That is why we ask that the maps be produced in the house, in order to prove to the Canadian people that we were justified in wrangling over this matter and in asking for the production of those maps.

Mr. Habel: Union Nationale.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to caution the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm against his source of information.

The charge that he made a moment ago in the house is certainly one of the most serious which can be brought in this place, where the hon. members, who represent the people of our country, fulfil their duties and perform their functions daily. He accused the government of having introduced a piece of legislation while offering in caucus, that is secretly, to his members to choose their ridings or their limits. This means that the government would have proposed to the members to use a measure passed in the public interest in order to cheat the Canadian people and to abuse their own privileges.

I say that this, connected later on with the name of the Minister of Transport, becomes a charge that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has no right to maintain, unless he tells the house that he assumes the responsibility for it.

Now I assert as a member of the Liberal caucus of Canada and as a minister of this government that such a proposal or such an offer has never been made to the Liberal members of Canada or to any Liberal group. I say that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm must take my word for it and I tell him that the person who gave him that information—

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Favreau: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the Minister of Justice deny that all members of his caucus have not seen these maps and are well aware of them?

Mr. Favreau: I do deny that. I just want to assert that those who informed the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) of this have uttered a falsehood, a lie, and that he must take my word for that and now withdraw.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My word is surely as good as the word of the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Habel: Never.

Mr. Pigeon: I will not give the names of the two Liberal members who made allusions to that matter.

Some hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Pigeon: I will not name them, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: I am not at all surprised at what happened at the government caucus, because I know very well the habits of the Minister of Transport since he has been sitting here.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot see the good it will do to keep up this debate any longer. I think that hon. members will accept as true the words of the hon. member, whether he is a minister or not, whether he sits on one side of the house or the other. I am sure that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will follow the judgment of the house.

[Text]

Pursuant to provisional standing order 47, subsection 2, I must advise hon. members that the time allotted for consideration of this motion has expired, except for two five-minute periods, one for a minister speaking on behalf of the government, and one allocated to the mover of the motion who will close the debate.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): This debate on the motion for the production of these papers has now gone on for two hours and thirty-three minutes and under the rules I am allocated a very limited amount of time to deal with the subject. Since a minister has spoken earlier in the debate, I will confine my remarks to some of the points raised today.

In so far as the remarks made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) are concerned, I am sure all hon. members who heard them or who will read them tomorrow when they appear in Hansard, will dismiss them at once with the contempt they deserve. He did not deal with the subject matter before the house, but purported to put out, on his responsibility, the procedures in caucus—

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order. Surely, the distinguished minister is not implying that the word of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) must be accepted and the word of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm cannot be accepted. Is he implying that one rule should be applied because one member graces the front benches and another rule should be applied because an hon. member does not grace the front benches?

Mr. McIlraith: There is no such implication in my remarks, if they are read. If the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) will pay me the courtesy of listening to my remarks, he will get the point in a moment.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm took his time purporting to disclose matters that took place in the Liberal caucus. He was, of course, completely inaccurate and irrelevant because he was talking about something about which he knows nothing. This would be readily apparent to anyone.

The hon. member for Bow River did make a speech and, as usual, used excessive language in reflecting on an officer of parliament. I want to remind him that the officer to whom he referred is an officer of this parliament, and not an administrative officer under the direction of the government. This is a distinction he completely failed to realize. His 30-minute campaign to create the impression that that officer was subject to influence was indeed a reflection that he ought not to have made, unless he had the documentation to back it up.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the minister would permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: I have only five minutes, and I should like to reply.

Mr. Woolliams: Are you going to be like the rest of the members on your side, and like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and deny that there are maps in existence?

Mr. McIlraith: I will say that I have been told. I have not seen them, and there obviously can be no maps until the bill that is before the house is passed. I should like to use the time allotted to me, since I have only five minutes.

The hon. member took the time of this house to reflect upon an officer of parliament in a way that simply will not be accepted by those people who know that officer, the representation commissioner.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. McIlraith: You raise your point of privilege at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: I was very careful on this and on another occasion to say that I have absolute confidence in the representation commissioner; that I was not reflecting on his personal integrity. The hon. member is putting words in my mouth or putting the wrong interpretation upon my words. I did not impute motives to the former secretary of state who was demoted to Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), and I stand by that remark.

Mr. McIlraith: It is contrary to the rules to impute motives to any hon. member of the house, but I will not raise that point of order now.

All I wanted to say was that there are obviously no maps, within the meaning attributed to that term by the hon. member for Bow River, in existence, and I hope that these sketches will not be produced. It is obvious that there cannot be maps prepared until this independent commission we hope to have set up, is set up.

Mr. Woolliams: How can you say that?

Mr. McIlraith: They cannot be set up until the independent commissions are created or appointed under the legislation before the house; that is the point of my argument.

Mr. Woolliams: Have you seen those sketches?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. McIlraith: I hope the hon. member will observe some of the courtesies of the house for a moment. Since there are no maps, how can he ask that they be produced? The documents that he does ask to be produced are documents that I have not seen myself, but I am told they are some kind of sketches.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a good thing it is hearsay, because your tongue would get thick—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that I have to interrupt the minister but his time has expired. If the mover of the motion speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have only a few remarks to make at this time. First of all, it has been established by action which we took when we were on the government side, that we stand clearly for independence in redistribution. We were the ones who placed a resolution on the order paper calling for the establishment of an independent commission to deal with this very important matter. If today we ask for the production of these maps, it is because we want to make sure that redistribution is independent and, second, that the judgment that we exercise on this matter as legislators will be a well informed judgment. There is no other purpose for calling for the production of these maps.

Speaking to this motion two weeks ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) adopted what I would call a most fantastic line of reasoning. First of all he said there existed no maps. These were his words in reference to them, as recorded at page 2775 of Hansard for April 30:

> —virtually, mathematical exercises which could not conceivably bear any relationship to the ultimate disposition—

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the representation commissioner who has been appointed by this house has other things to do than engage in activities that, if we are to believe the Minister of Transport, have absolutely no bearing on the subject with which he is treating. I think that that does not stand up at all.

Those who have seen the so-called exercises—and I am one of those, although I had not seen the maps when I called for their production—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, I am not afraid to say it. I was called in to have a look at them, and I will treat with that particular subject in a few minutes. I have seen these so-called exercises and I am satisfied they can be described in no other word than maps. In any event, Mr. Speaker, the representation commissioner—

Mr. Lloyd: On a point of order; it has been made abundantly clear to the house that the documents which are being referred to are nothing more than the working papers of an officer of the house—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Lloyd: —and they cannot be described—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. The hon. member is making an argument. There is no point of order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I will move to the second fantastic statement by the Minister of Transport. This is what he said in this house, and I would ask you to listen carefully to his words. In his speech he said:

> —an offer was made, through my mouth, by the representation commissioner, to all parties in the house that they—

—whoever "they" referred to—I believe it was hon. members—

> —could choose a few of their members to look at these maps and have them thoroughly explained—

Since when have we the right as members, all duly elected members, to make distinctions as between members and members? The absurd result that would directly flow from such an action would mean that when the redistribution bill is placed before the house some members of parliament would be in a better position, would be better informed than others, and therefore some of them would be able to make the right judgment and others would not.

As members of this house we are called upon to judge the issue, and the issue is to know whether or not the 20 per cent tolerance is the tolerance that should be accepted as a criterion for the determination of the new constituencies. I submit that in order to be able to make an informed judgment on that tolerance we should not be denied all the evidence and information that it is possible to obtain, and the best information that can be obtained is the production of these maps.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Port Arthur, Quebec-federal participation in provincial study of independence; the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, fraudulent bankruptcies in housing construction;

the hon. member for Chapleau: reduction of tax load.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I do wish there were more members present on the government benches to hear the solid words of wisdom I am about to utter. However, I suppose their absence is understandable. Unfortunately the attitude of the government has been one of not paying too much attention to the opposition. I do not have too many remarks to make concerning Bill No. C-91. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) dealt with the principle of the bill this afternoon very adequately and at some length. I propose to be reasonably brief but I believe there are some things that should be said at this stage.

When we get to the committee stage it will be necessary to examine many of the clauses of the bill in great detail and I say this for many reasons. To use the words of one speaker this afternoon he said, if I am correct, that it took a man of law to understand the Income Tax Act, and I assume he also meant the amendments now before us. He said that it was discriminatory and confused. I agree completely and wholeheartedly with that statement. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, the same hon. member said some things this afternoon with which I did not agree, but with that particular portion of his speech I must agree because it is so completely and absolutely true.

I have spent several hours studying the amendments, and their application to the act as it existed after the amendments of 1963. I am afraid I spent most of the time checking cross-references and so forth. To me the Income Tax Act has become almost completely impossible to understand for anybody but—

Mr. Carter: A chartered accountant.

Mr. Monteith: No, not even a chartered accountant. I doubt whether the minister knows too much about the act and its application. This is my point. I had been going to ask the minister earlier if he had received many representations from individuals, corporations, associations, organizations and what have you, concerning the terms of Bill C-91. I had intended to do so prior to second reading, but in his opening statement on second reading he said there had been and that there had been some consequential amendments. I wonder whether enough of the suggestions that may have been made in the interval since the bill received first reading have been listened to.

At the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) the minister outlined this afternoon the amendments he proposes to make as we progress through the committee stage. I have no quarrel with the amendments he has suggested will be presented, and which will undoubtedly be accepted, but I am wondering whether he has gone far enough. He referred to two amendments to delete references to family allowances. The minister suggested that as a result of the debate on the resolution stage the house seemed to be of a mind that the family allowance amendments, certain fiscal arrangements with the province of Quebec which are necessary, and the matter of income tax application should be taken up later and at one time. I agree with this step, because taking them up in a disjointed way does not give one the whole picture of the application of each segment of the suggested extension of family allowances. I hope when the minister closes the debate he will intimate just when he contemplates the additional family allowances suggested in the budget speech will be effective. I think it is very important that we should know this.

I know there are amendments to the act, or there were, that will have the effect of adjusting exemptions for people receiving family allowances for part of this year, and that sort of thing. However, I am interested in the three categories the minister mentioned which were going to be brought in together at some future date. I am assuming that this entails amendments to the Family Allowances Act and whatever other legislation might be necessary to bring about the abatement for the province of Quebec. I am wondering when he is going to introduce these measures, and also when the family allowances are actually going to have effect. When are the people with children in school going to be able to receive these additional allowances?

The minister mentioned also that there were some further representations which were going to be given study between now and next year. I think the minister might well take a leaf out of his own book and go back to what happened to the budget of 1963. I am not going into past history, but we all remember distinctly that there were retractions, modifications and changes all the way along the line. Are we simply going to take these representations that have been made since Bill No. C-91 reached the floor of the house and deal with them at some future date? I feel we should give very close attention to all of these things at this time.

Earlier I intimated I had spent several hours studying Bill No. C-91 and the application of these amendments to the present act. At one time both the minister and I made our livelihood as practising chartered accountants. I ask him today, in all frankness, could he go back to practice as a chartered accountant today and interpret this act so he could advise clients exactly what they should do, without having to charge the clients an unholy amount of money? I do not think I could, and if the minister could he is brighter than I am.

Mr. Gordon: What do you call "unholy"?

Mr. Monteith: I said an unholy amount of money. My point is that this act has become so complicated that neither a chartered accountant nor some of these lawyers we have in this house could understand the act without giving it so much attention that it would make it almost prohibitive for a client to ask us to interpret the act.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Mr. Pugh: If you had two lawyers, they would be on opposite sides.

Mr. Monteith: As I said, I doubt if I could go back to practising today and do an honest job for a client at a reasonable fee. As a matter of fact this act is getting completely out of hand.

I did mention earlier, I believe, that I would not deal with any specific provision in the bill. However I believe there is one point that I might mention. I am going to refer to the item having to do with research. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) mentioned this this afternoon. I recall an experience of my own during my term as minister of national health and welfare. We tried to encourage pharmaceutical firms to do their research in Canada. I admit that very few did. However, these new amendments will encourage firms to have their research done at a head office in the United States, or wherever it may be. I believe we should examine this provision very closely at the committee stage.

I should like to refer to an article in the Globe and Mail of May 6, 1964. This article was written by one Ronald Anderson and he is quoting Stuart D. Thom of the Toronto legal firm of Osler, Hoskin and Harcourt. I could not be more wholeheartedly in agreement with what Mr. Thom has had to say in this article, in many respects. He says that the language of Bill No. C-91 has become "tortured and involved." I think those words describe it very well. This has been done in the hope of plugging all possible loopholes, and it will take weeks to trace all its implications. This is my concern. Anything to do with income tax does seem to take longer and longer. I am sure the layman would not have a hope if he were trying to study the Income Tax Act with any idea of ascertaining how it might affect his business. Mr. Thom says that—> —the government has been unwilling to trust the courts to interpret general terms.

The minister has gone overboard in tinkering in an effort to try to plug up all the loopholes. I am not in favour of taxpayers getting away with anything. I have had to fight some taxpayers in the past who have attempted to get away with things. I am not in favour of that.

I do believe there is some way this act could be revised at this stage. I believe the last complete revision was in 1949. At that time we thought we had a simplification put in front of us. Since then it has grown like Topsy. I will mention one section, section 139, and say that if anyone without experience tries to trace his way through all the consequences and cross references connected with this section he will be completely lost.

I like this particular term used by Mr. Thom. He goes on to say that the minister has attempted to define each term in specific gobbledegook. I believe that is self-explanatory. He says that the draftsmen have dug themselves deeper and deeper into something. This is my chief concern, Mr. Speaker, the whole business of the Income Tax Act and these amendments, how they will affect the act and so on. I think we are getting this legislation into such form that nobody really knows how discriminatory it might be.

He also mentions section 23 of the act, and we will be coming to that in due course. Mr. Thom mentions, in connection with trusts in which all beneficiaries must be residents of Canada, that it would be impossible in the case of any long-standing trust to apply this test. This is only an example of what people who are practitioners think of the clause in this bill and of the application of the act as a whole. Possibly this is a rather strong term, but he also adds:

> I hope the idiocy of this section will be recognized before the bill is passed.

Incidentally, there is another article here. I do not believe it is by Ronald Anderson but it may be. It is entitled, "Banana-Republic Image Laid to Gordon Policies," and it gives a statement by Mr. A. G. Davies, taxation controller of the Rio Tinto-Zinc Corporation. He says:

> Finance Minister Walter Gordon's attempts to put curbs on foreign investment have caused some foreign commentators to class Canada among the banana republics.

This is what he told the international corporate tax conference, and he added:

> There are plenty of people in England, France and other countries who are extremely sceptical of the role of foreign capital in their economies—

But he goes on to point out that the rules should be made clear before the foreign investment comes in, so that those who provide it would know what they were doing.

The rules should not be changed in midstream, as the minister attempted to do in his budget of a year ago; and unfortunately he has not completely retracted in this budget. Rather than discriminate against foreign investment I believe there should be incentives for Canadian investment in Canadian securities.

Mr. Speaker, I said I would be brief, and I shall be. I would like simply to summarize my own conclusions concerning the minister's approach to the Income Tax Act and how it applies to Canada. I think the minister loves to tinker. He has indicated he is trying to do a tidying up job. That is fine. Tidying up to a degree is acceptable, but I still think he is preserving all the last vestiges of discrimination that he can. I hope and pray he will soon cease trifling and tinkering with the laws which have so much to do with the welfare of our citizens. To me this approach is simply not understandable, and I hope before another year passes, in fact even before we conclude the debate on the committee stage of this bill, the minister will have some change of heart.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the minister being in such a hurry, because it seems to me he loves the limelight and he could have had it all to himself for eight or nine minutes tonight before some of his colleagues came in to back him up. Therefore I hope he will not mind staying in it for a bit longer. He has more support now and should do very well.

Mr. Benson: Where are your colleagues?

Mr. More: I don't need any when I am speaking; I am getting along fine. I do not want to take up the time of the house just to delay this bill, but it is one that has to do with principles concerning income tax, and with perhaps a wider scope of general principles that concern taxation as a whole.

The statements made by the speaker who preceded me had a lot of merit because people across the country are becoming convinced more and more that rather than having a new era, under a new minister who has seen a new light, we are simply having a practising tinker. This word gobbledygook I think is very applicable. Those people who paid tribute to the minister and built up the stature he seemed to enjoy before he came into the house, did it on the basis of a book he wrote, but in the light of the practices he is following today it seems to me that book was a bunch of gobbledygook, and it is no surprise that this term is being applied to the bill which he has presented to the house.

In his short term in office he has tinkered with so many features of the economic field in Canada that nobody really knows in which direction we are going. I am not one of those who have great concern about friendly foreign investment in Canada. The efforts the minister made in that direction were pretty terrible, and it will take us a long time to overcome the results.

I would be far more receptive to the minister and his policies if he showed some concern about the thieving inflation that is taking place in the country. The cost of living continues to jump, and I notice that the report we got today from the dominion bureau of statistics shows it is going up and up across the country. The answer the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) gave yesterday to a question about the rising cost of living, that certainly there would be inflation in this buoyant economy of ours, did not reassure anybody, especially when one considers that there are still over 400,000 unemployed in the country.

I see a misdirection in some of the policies he put forward and in some of the things contained in the general income tax measures being brought before the house. Much of what I had in mind to say on this subject has already been said, and therefore I do not believe it will carry any more weight by repetition, but in case I am not here when we come to deal with certain of the clauses in the bill I wish to pose a question which I hope the minister can answer. It has to do with provincial income tax.

As I understand it, a resident pays income tax on the basis of his residence as of December 31. It has been brought to my attention that there are differences in the provincial income taxes, in some provinces the surtax charge being 17 per cent and in others 23 per cent. Even though a man might have earned eleven twelfths of his income in one province where the 17 per cent is applicable, if he is living in another province on December 31 where the 23 per cent is applicable, he has to pay the 23 per cent on his total earnings for the year. To me this is not right. I suppose it works both ways, but I still think it is an imposition on many individuals.

When a man reports that he has earned eleven twelfths of his income in a province where the 17 per cent applies, and only one twelfth in a province where the 23 per cent applies, I am wondering why he cannot pay the 17 per cent on the eleven twelfths he earned in the first province, and the 23 per cent on the remaining one twelfth?

I was not bright enough to do this. I paid the 23 per cent. I do not quarrel about it, because I live in the most wonderful province in Canada. If we did not have so many laws made down here placing us in a discriminatory position we would have a flowering economy, but I hasten to add that, despite what happened there recently, it will continue to flower in Saskatchewan.

I would like the minister to explain why a man has to pay 23 per cent on his total earnings, if eleven twelfths of them, or ten twelfths were earned in a province where there is only a 17 per cent charge. Why should discrimination of this sort continue to exist? To an average taxpayer, $46 represents a considerable amount. I would be obliged if the minister would turn his attention to this problem.

[Mr. More.]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, while we are discussing Bill No. C-91, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, I should like to expound a few ideas which, I am sure, should hold the attention of all members. We are living in an economic structure which is strangling the Canadian taxpayer at whatever financial level he may find himself.

I should like to begin by giving the house some statistics concerning the revenue of the Canadian government from taxes of all kinds, for the fiscal year 1962-63.

For instance, the general sales tax brought in the sum of $1,044,557,000; the tax on alcoholic beverages, $206,277,000; the tax on tobacco contributed $367,386,000 to the national revenue. The tax on automobiles yielded $25,270,000, the estate tax, $84,579,000—

An hon. Member: Dispense.

Mr. Latulippe: Other taxes combined brought in some $25 million in revenue.

What do those figures indicate? To a lesser or greater degree, each of those taxes is paid by the consumer, the individual.

Let us now compare the amount of taxes paid by companies, on the one hand, and private individuals, on the other. In 1962-63, companies contributed $1,302,179,000 to the federal treasury, as against $2,051,606,000 for individuals. In other words, individual taxpayers have paid $749,427,000 more than the companies.

Now take indirect taxes and add them to the figures I just gave you; you will see that, proportionally, Canadian taxpayers paid in taxes almost twice as much as the corporations. On the other hand, corporations' profits increased, always proportionally, much more than private income. Evidence that the standard of living is decreasing as far as collectable taxes are concerned is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had to increase her department's budget by more than a billion dollars this year.

On the other hand, in Quebec, 9 per cent of the population are unemployed whereas, in 1962, the unemployed made up 6 per cent of the labour force; in mid-January this year, 466,000 people were out of work in Canada, that is 7 per cent of the labour force, and needless to say that taxable income, under the terms of the Income Tax Act, is decreasing.

And as budgets increase, taxes in the present situation do not decrease; and it is the workers who, already overburdened, have to take in the increases through government surcharges, at all levels of government, federal, provincial or municipal.

In addition, whoever considers carefully the legislation introduced in any Canadian province, as well as in this house, will readily realize that generally, companies and corporations are getting the most out of them. These companies may be the backbone of the Canadian economic structure but no need to say that the individuals are its blood and that a transfusion will soon be necessary. If the Canadian government is its nervous system then it should give the required impetus.

What is important, therefore, is to legislate with the people in mind and to fully review our position with regard to them.

The family is the basis of our society. It is therefore to the family that the greatest advantages should be granted. Let us take the head of family in the first place. Since everything nowadays is based on interest, from the financial point of view, I suggest that the government should pay interest on taxes collected from taxpayers. This would encourage people to file their income tax return, while reviving the purchasing power, and it would also help to cover, through the additional amounts collected, the administration costs and part of the interest.

I also advocate that the exemptions be increased to $3,000 for single persons and $5,000 for married people and also that a 10 per cent exemption be granted for charitable donations.

We, members of the house, seem to forget that 55 per cent of taxpayers do not earn $4,000 a year and that 34 per cent earn less than $3,000. Therefore, the number of those who pay taxes is rather small compared to the total number of Canadian taxpayers.

This 34 per cent of 4½ million persons represents approximately one million and a half, and if we add to this figure the two million people who paid no income tax at all, if we add their wives and children, unemployed, old age pensioners, disabled persons, widows, small farmers, fishermen with a very low income, there is no doubt that a revision is called for.

We believe that tax cuts should benefit lower and average income groups, who would use this artificial supplement to buy consumer goods and thus help indirectly to maintain a balanced economy.

I wish to make it clear that my suggestion to pay an interest, in the present context of the financial system, is not what the Social Credit party advocates. What we advocate is to give more freedom, to give all the necessary initiative, so that everyone, either at the level of the individual or of the corporations, will be able to develop. According to Social Credit technique, taxation would apply only to capital surplus which are prejudicial to the public weal, by balancing the volume of money and the volume of production. By a dividend originating from the Bank of Canada, the present balance of the gross national product, which is not consumed, would go into the economy, would be distributed, either by a discount offset by a drop in prices or by the dividend as outlined a moment ago. Then, we would not have to overburden individuals or companies, as long as they do not hinder the collectivity. The purchasing power enjoyed by each individual would ensure a sounder administration, quickly remove accumulated debts, give us all kinds of controls and, for once, permit all Canadians to work freely for the development of their country.

Also, the government should insist on the fact that family allowances be paid, even in Quebec, for children 16 or 17 years old, on the basis used previously. It would be up to the Quebec government to increase those allowances in the case of older students. No matter whether it is a joint program or not, we must first think of the welfare of the people; that is our primary duty.

On several occasions, attempts were made to put old age pensions in line with the cost of living. It is also important to adjust family allowances to the cost of living. The government can afford it.

If you consider that at the end of April 1963, therefore a year ago the stocks listed on the stock exchanges were valued at $54,837,791,829 and that a month earlier, they were valued at $52,503,742,402, it goes without saying that the increase of $2 billion was profitable to the companies.

Our financial organization should provide for a participation of the people, to various extents, to any economic growth, whether it comes from the government or private enterprise.

Corporations do not pay succession duties. They are taxed only after reserves and depreciation. They have therefore considerable more advantages over the individuals.

It is essential that the government introduce legislation which looks after the interest of the people in the first place. And if they do not want to cut down taxes, as in the United States, they should at least make sure that there is a fair redistribution or that the whole community pays equal taxes on a proportional basis.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should caution the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to deal with some of the points which were raised.

If I do not deal with them all I hope hon. members will realize they will be dealt with when we come to the respective clauses in the committee stage. I have already suggested to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that some of the points he brought up can, I think, better be dealt with by me when we come to the committee stage.

With regard to some of the points of principle which were brought up, it was proposed that the Income Tax Act should provide for deductions from income of union dues, workmen's tools and equipment, particularly in the case of loggers, farmers' equipment, and all other forms of expenditure which are necessarily paid out in order to earn income. I agree that this is a question of principle and an important one. It is a difficult one to deal with on an individual basis or on an item by item basis. It is a very complex question, difficult to determine, and it is my hope that it will be one of the important subjects with which the royal commission on taxation deals carefully, with the benefit of their research staff. I am rather inclined to think that if we tried to deal with it ourselves hurriedly we would find that we might solve one or two particular situations, but that others would remain to be dealt with. Therefore I would prefer to deal with these various questions, and others like them, in a more general way after receiving the report of the royal commission.

On the question of charitable donations I think I stated in the budget speech, and I think I may have mentioned it again during the resolution stage, that the government has given a lot of attention to the very difficult and irritating problem which several hon. members have mentioned. However, with the staff at our disposal, we were unable to come up with a solution which we thought would be satisfactory, and therefore the late Mr. Garland, the former minister of national revenue, with the approval of the government and after discussions with myself as Minister of Finance, referred the matter to the royal commission and asked them to give it their attention and the attention of their research staff. That is being done.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) raised the question whether contributions to political parties should be allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes. This is an intriguing idea, Mr. Speaker, but I am not sure whether it is a good one. However, I certainly find it intriguing.

Mr. Pigeon: Ask Mr. Davey.

Mr. Gordon: I understand there is a bill on the order paper which advances this suggestion and I think we might leave it until that bill comes up for debate.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Several hon. members referred to the fact that the Income Tax Act is very complex and difficult to understand. This is a complaint which I certainly share. I think it is extremely difficult. However, I would remind hon. members that with every exception which we add, with every change that we make, and with the implementation of each good idea suggested by hon. members, the act becomes just that much more complex. You can single out any section of the act and say it is more complex than some of the others; but the truth of the matter is that as a whole it is a very complex and difficult piece of legislation.

When we are faced next year with the extremely difficult task of rewriting the tax laws of this country, following upon the royal commission report, I do not know whether we will be any more successful than some of our predecessors in producing a simple, workmanlike, understandable piece of legislation. I hope we succeed; but I think we all know that income tax legislation in other countries is also very difficult and complex. While it is a good thing, I think, to remind ourselves as often as we reasonably can of the increasing complexity of these matters—it is probably good for our souls to have this fact rubbed in now and again—and while I think we should continue to strive for simplicity, I fancy that we will find next year when we are drafting new tax legislation that this is easier said than done. I say that because it is very easy to make funny remarks about the complexity of the drafting of the Income Tax Act.

The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) referred to a friend of mine, Stuart Thom, who rather delights in making remarks about how difficult the Income Tax Act is to understand. I might say that Mr. Thom is an excellent tax lawyer; I used to retain him myself at one time when I was operating in another sphere. I would remind hon. members—and perhaps Mr. Thom will also be reading Hansard—

Mr. Monteith: I wonder.

Mr. Gordon: —that I have on occasion invited anyone who felt so inclined, and practically all the practitioners in the income tax field, to make suggestions for meeting the stated objectives of the government in various fields in simple language which would not be full of loopholes. I do not remember having received any constructive suggestions from my hon. friend's friend, Stuart Thom. I have received, since issuing this invitation, many suggestions from many lawyers and accountants who practise in the field of taxation, and their suggestions have been included in some of the amendments that are now incorporated in this bill.

Mr. Monteith: I imagine the minister means "some" of their suggestions.

Mr. Gordon: I am referring to their constructive suggestions. Those who just said, "Don't do anything" or, "Don't do anything you set out to do" I have not taken too seriously. As I think by this time some hon. members may realize, it is my hope and it is the objective of this government to see that Canadians gradually acquire a greater share of the resources, the assets and the equities of this country. We believe this will be a good thing. We do not think it can be done without a certain amount of controversy; we do not think it can be done easily, but I can assure my hon. friend that we are not going to be deterred from that objective.

Mr. Monteith: No matter what the penalties are on foreign capital.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a little off-stage noise from my friend the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith).

Mr. Monteith: I admit that I did not stand up to make my statement.

Mr. Gordon: However, Mr. Speaker, there are not any penalties that I know of. I do not know whether I would be out of order if I referred to the question that was asked me about the extension of family allowances. I think an hon. member raised the question as to when this particular piece of proposed legislation would become effective. I can assure my hon. friend that, while it is not incorporated in this bill and therefore perhaps it is not appropriate to deal with it, the government has every intention of proceeding with this legislation just as fast as we can. I think if he and other hon. members will wait until tomorrow, perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) will have something to say about that subject.

That is perhaps all I need say at this stage, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps when we go into committee other hon. members will have questions that they wish to raise, and I will do my best to answer them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Legal costs.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, clause 1 deals with the classification as income of legal costs which may be awarded to a taxpayer by a court of appeal in relation to an assessment of tax. This must be related to clause 3, paragraph five, which appears on page four. I had some difficulty this afternoon—and I wish to thank the parliamentary secretary for his assistance in this connection—in relating the wording of the proposed amendment at line 15, paragraph (w), when in actual fact section 11(1) of the Income Tax Act prior to this year has contained a paragraph (w).

As I said this afternoon, though, I have some difficulty in understanding why there is not any clearcut indication as to just what level of fees or expenses may be incurred by a taxpayer in "instituting or prosecuting an objection to, or an appeal in relation to, an assessment of tax" under subparagraph (w) on page four. I raised a number of questions this afternoon and it is not my intention to repeat them; but I think we must understand that from an administrative point of view there must be some yardstick whereby the Minister of National Revenue will be able to measure whether or not fees are reasonable. I would hope this would not be another area of the Income Tax Act where indirectly the discretion of the Minister of National Revenue is brought into play.

After all, we do know that assessments vary in amount, and of course fees are related to the importance of the problem being taken before the taxing authorities. There are matters which have to be considered, such as the distances that have to be travelled, the number of appearances that have to be made, the calibre of counsel or the accounting firm who may be retained, or the specialist tax adviser. All these matters have to be considered. After all, Mr. Chairman, the business community of this country and all taxpayers are entitled to know, with a reasonable degree of certainty, what they may be allowed. I am not sure that on the face of what is contained in this bill there is any indication of this. There is no provision within the wording of the clauses that regulations may be promulgated in regard to this question. True enough, there are general provisions within the act for the making of regulations, but this matter has worried me considerably, because in my own profession as a lawyer I would like to be able to advise my clients that if they prosecute an appeal and are successful certain of their costs will be allowed, and I should like to know the extent to which such costs are allowed. The cost involved often determines whether a man thinks it is worth the candle to proceed with an appeal. There is no point in his spending hundreds and hundreds of dollars to save a lesser amount of tax if he has to spend a large sum of money prosecuting an appeal which may be disallowed by the Minister of National Revenue in the administration of this clause. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I should like clarification from the minister in regard to this question.

In addition I would like to know whether this provision will be implemented with regard to reassessments of taxation for years prior to 1964. Will they have anything to do with assessments for the year 1963 which are now being worked out, or will they have relationship only to assessments in connection with the taxation year 1964? Those are the two prime questions that I put to the minister in this regard.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, to answer the second question first, they will apply to any expenses incurred in 1964, whether they apply to the year 1964 or prior years. As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, we are dealing with an item in clause 1 that is related to another item in clause 3. The reason they are taken in this order is that it is customary in these amendments to follow the order of the act. With the consent of the committee perhaps I might be permitted to deal with the two clauses together.

The purpose of allowing expenses in connection with appeals or objections is essentially to give the smaller taxpayer the same break that most large taxpayers have anyway. In the case of many large taxpayers the fees they pay to the hon. member for Edmonton West and other tax lawyers, and to the hon. member for Perth and other tax accountants, are not always broken down and itemized according to each individual service that is performed. Frequently the annual fees that my hon. friend receives as auditor for a company may include an amount which covers all services of this kind and they are allowed as a deduction for tax purposes. Similarly, my legal friends frequently receive retainers which cover a variety of things and for the most part they are allowed as deductions and do not have to be itemized in detail.

But if smaller taxpayers, and sometimes a large one, feel they have not been treated fairly by the income tax authorities and want to appeal they may be in a position where they are afraid it will cost them a lot of money in the form of fees to carry through an appeal, and that the expenses in the form of the fees they incur will not be allowed as a deduction against their income. I think all hon. members really believe that we should, wherever we can, provide for appeals. I remember that last fall some of my hon. friends opposite felt that in another section there was not sufficient provision for appealing from certain rulings. I agreed that this should be rectified and an amendment was introduced which met the wishes of my hon. friends across the aisle.

[Mr. Lambert.]

What we are trying to do here is to give taxpayers as reasonable a chance as we can to appeal assessments that in their opinion are unfair and to put all taxpayers on the same basis. In the case of large companies as I have said, I suspect that most of these fees are allowed as deductions without question. My hon. friend asked if there was going to be some sort of regulations or set of rules which would stipulate the amounts that members of his profession should charge their clients in connection with these appeals. I think that the members of the committee would hesitate before they found it necessary to lay down rules as to what the fair charges should be by a taxpayer's advisers in the field of taxation. By and large I think most lawyers and most accountants who succeed over the years try to charge what they think is a fair fee for services rendered. If they charge too much the chances are they will lose the client or the client will refuse to pay.

I would remind my hon. friend that the taxpayer has a real sanction over the amount of the fees that he is going to pay. It is he who has to pay them. It is true that under the proposed amendment he will be allowed to deduct those fees from his taxable income but if he is in the 50 per cent bracket, for instance, he still has to pay half the fees. When I was in practice I did not find many taxpayers who were prepared to pay me more than I was worth just for the good of my health. I think this will be a pretty good check.

I would also remind my hon. friend that if the income tax authorities felt in any particular case that any expense, including any legal or accounting fee, was unreasonable they could invoke section 12(2) of the act which provides that in computing income no deduction shall be made in respect of an outlay or expense otherwise deductible except to the extent that the outlay or expense was reasonable in the circumstances. That is not a new section. It is there now and it gives the Minister of National Revenue discretion to disallow any expense, including any fee, that he may consider was not reasonable in the circumstances. Presumably if he disallowed some legal fee the taxpayer might appeal again, but that is his right and I think it is a good right to retain.

To come back to clause 1, if under this amendment a taxpayer is allowed to deduct from his taxable income any fees that he may pay in connection with an appeal, it is only reasonable that if he is awarded what are known as costs by the court those costs should be included in his income. Otherwise he would be getting a double break. While I am sorry for taxpayers as a rule I think we have got to be reasonable about this thing, and he should only get one break and not a double break. That is the purpose of clause 1 in providing that any recoveries in this way should be brought back into income.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Compensation by Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, has the minister any estimate of the extent of the payments or indemnities that may be received in this regard? I ask purely for purposes of information. I think every member of the house is in sympathy with the aim of the amendment, but is there any extensive payment under this plan or does it simply involve a relatively isolated number of cases?

Mr. Gordon: We are almost certain it is just a relatively small number of cases where there has been a feeling of injustice. These people were victims of persecution. They are being paid a small amount as compensation for that persecution, if it is possible to measure persecution in terms of a monetary payment, and it was felt they should not be taxed on it. But as far as we know it would not apply to very many people.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with what the minister has said. This provision is to apply to 1960 and subsequent taxation years. Were there any such payments in prior years? Has any attempt been made to tax them in prior years? Why is this being brought forward at the present time?

Mr. Gordon: My understanding is that there have been representations on this point for some time. There may have been some cases prior to 1960 where they were taxed. As my hon. friend knows, under the act it is not possible to go back more than four years. In some cases the records are not available, and that is why 1960 was taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what group exerted pressures or made representations to him to have this clause inserted in the act. Was it a special, well-defined group, a racial or social one? Was it an imposing group? Could the minister give us some indication of the number of Canadians affected by the amendment and the approximate amount of income that has entered Canada and will be protected by this amendment to the Income Tax Act?

I seem to detect here a very special intention to have a very particular group benefit therefrom. I have no preconceived idea against anybody, but I would really like to know how did a group of individuals succeed in having amendments brought to the Income Tax Act in order to protect them?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, this group would include people who came from Germany to Canada and who, prior to or during the war, were persecuted in Germany. Following the war, the courts awarded them compensation in the form of certain capital sums. In some cases, they were awarded lump sum payments which have not been taxed, and in other cases instead of lump sum payments the amount was paid over a period of years. These representations were made to the department by certain individuals and also on behalf of other groups by the Canadian Jewish congress.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: I appreciate that the minister does not have all the figures at hand, but could be give some indication of the number of people who will be affected by the amendment and of the amount involved? Would it be $100 million, $100, $200 or $200,000? He must certainly have some idea of the amount and I am sure that, with the help of his assistants, he can give us that information.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I would judge somewhere between 100 and 200 people. I am not in a position to make a guess as to the amount, but it would be a modest sum. Certainly, it would not be anything like the figure my hon. friend mentions. I do not like to guess because I might be quite a bit out.

Mr. Lambert: There is one explanation I should like with regard to the last phrase of this particular subparagraph. It reads:

> —where no tax is payable in respect of that payment under a law of the Federal Republic of Germany that imposes an income tax.

As I interpret this phrase it means that a payment made by the Federal Republic of Germany to this particular class of people shall not be subject to tax where no tax is payable under German law. If a tax is payable under German law, then a tax would also be payable here in Canada. I do not know whether there is a tax convention between the two countries and therefore if a payment is subject to tax in Germany, then obviously it may be subject again to taxation in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: There is a tax treaty with Germany, so if it is subjected to income tax in Germany there would be a tax credit here.

Mr. Rhéaume: I have one brief question for the minister, and perhaps he could have his advisers give us an explanation. Subsection (2) says that this section is applicable to the 1960 and subsequent taxation years.

An hon. Member: The minister has already explained that.

Mr. Rhéaume: I am sorry; I was distracted.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I come back again to that point because I find it is a little strange that, for about 200 people, whatever their present social or economic status in Canada, the Income Tax Act should have been amended so that they may get benefits refused to other Canadian taxpayers.

Representations have been made here for many years by various groups which want to benefit to a greater extent from the Income Tax Act; and I notice that special consideration is given to the case of 100 or 200 people, immigrants who came to Canada. I am of the opinion that they do not deserve more than Canadians because if, on the one hand, those people are in need, they are no worse off than those who come under social assistance, like thousands of other Canadians who are dependant on it.

On the other hand, I am surprised that the minister should be willing to accept such a tax exemption which will represent a loss of revenue. Indeed, he claims that he needs more money and he refuses to grant similar advantages to other groups of Canadians who submit requests which are just as justified as those.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I could give some further explanation which may indicate that these people are not in the same class as others. These people suffered persecution in the concentration camps in Germany. They lost everything they had. This is a payment that the government of the Republic of West Germany is making to them as compensation for the loss they suffered. These payments are not coming to them in the form of income. I have felt, and I think others have felt, that it was quite improper that payments of this kind should be treated as income for tax purposes. I can assure hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that if there were a similar situation applicable to Canadians, which thank God there is not, these payments would not be treated as income.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us the nationalities of the persons who were admitted to Canada since the last world war and who will get this tax exemption?

[Mr. Rhéaume.]

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I would hope most of these people are now Canadians. Most of them arrived here after the war. I am sure that most of them have received their Canadian citizenship since then.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): They were Germans.

Mr. Gordon: They were Germans or Poles, or other people who were caught up in these atrocities during the war and were placed in concentration camps. I dare say some of them would find difficulty in proving just where they came from, and some might be French.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Employer's contribution to pension fund.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with regard to subparagraph (i) of the amendment, there is reference to 120 days as against 60 days. I believe this afternoon the hon. member for Lambton-Kent raised the question as to why there was a distinction between payments made by an employer for his employee into a pension plan and the individual himself making a payment into a registered retirement plan. The individual is limited to 60 days. Undoubtedly, there is a valid explanation, but we would like to have it.

Mr. Gordon: I made inquiries, Mr. Chairman, after this point was raised during the debate on the resolution. I do not believe any representations have been received on behalf of individuals in this connection. I do not think there will be any hardship against any individual. If there is, I would be only too pleased to bring in an amendment next year. But it is desirable in the case of people who know where they stand and, so far as I know, all the individuals affected do know that they should make up their minds to file their claims within two months. I do not believe this is difficult for individuals, and I do not think it will result in any hardship.

In the case of some of the company profit sharing plans, there has been more difficulty because they have not had their books audited by the end of two months, and this is intended to meet that problem.

Mr. Lambert: If this were so, Mr. Chairman, would it not be by reason of the fact that corporations are now required to file their returns by April 30, if the fiscal year is ending December 31; and I believe I am correct, as a result of last year's amendments the income tax return of a corporation whose fiscal year ends December 31 must now be filed by April 30—

Mr. Gordon: May I—

Mr. Lambert: All right—the payment by them. If their books are closed at the end of 120 days they are able to deal with this problem, but why was the figure of 120 days taken? Is this merely an arbitrary figure?

Mr. Gordon: It is just an arbitrary figure, because we received a lot of complaints that 60 days were not enough. Maybe 90 days or 150 days would be better, but I think 120 days will probably meet the problem.

Mr. Monteith: I know that during the resolution stage the minister gave some explanation concerning this but I have just been reading clause 3(2) paragraphs (ii) and (iii). I am afraid I am not just up to it at this stage of the night, of appreciating the full import of this. Could the minister give a brief explanation?

Mr. Gordon: Well, the change is in the number of days.

Mr. Monteith: That is the first one.

Mr. Gordon: I beg your pardon. I think the best thing I can do is read the explanatory note that is printed in the bill, because we took some trouble over it and I think it as clear as I can make it:

> This amendment provides that a deduction for amounts contributed into a pension plan in respect of services rendered by an employee in previous years while he was not a contributor shall not exceed an amount equal to $1,500 times the number of years in which the employee rendered services while he was not a contributor. It also provides that an amount shall not be deducted under the subparagraphs being amended if it was deductible in the immediately preceding year under section 11(1)(u) of the act which refers to a transfer of contributions from a registered pension plan or a deferred profit sharing plan to a registered retirement savings plan or to another registered pension fund or declared profit sharing plan. This amendment also allows an employee to deduct an amount contributed to a pension plan in respect of services in past years while he was a contributor even though he may also claim a deduction in the same year in respect of services in past years while he was not a contributor.

To summarize the situation, the amendment makes three changes. It closes a loophole existing under the present wording. It provides that an amount may not be deducted twice, and it implements paragraph 8 of the income tax resolution which we discussed at the resolution stage. The maximum amount that anybody can obtain under this is $3,000.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, this clause is very long and involved, and even after reading the explanatory note on the opposite page it is not completely clear. I would like to recite a particular case to the minister and ask him how this clause would apply to it.

For example, there is an employee who has been working a number of years—20 years—for a company that has had a pension plan. Now, for some of those years while deductions for a pension plan were valid as deductions from income, naturally he used them. But then his employment was terminated and he was given a refund of what he had paid into the pension plan plus that portion of the company's contribution which, under the terms of the pension plan, were recoverable by him, and of course the income tax department deducted that portion. They took taxes to make up for that portion that was deducted from taxable income during those years when this was part of the law.

Now he has been reinstated and he has had to pay a lump sum back in, being the total amount he received from the pension plan when his employment was terminated. He was allowed to deduct the maximum of $1,500 from income tax as a contribution to a pension plan and in this case, after his employment was reinstated, the amount of his current contribution to the pension plan was subtracted from the maximum of $1,500, and that amounted to something like $1,200. The income tax department has refused to acknowledge or to make provision for the other amount over and above this $1,200. They have refused to accept this as a deduction in future years. I would like to ask the minister if amending the Income Tax Act in a case such as this will allow for the residue of the sum total he paid back to the pension plan to be carried on in future years until the total is used up?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am not in the tax practitioner business any more, and I find this a very complicated case. My suspicion is that my hon. friend's friend is in a better position than he was before, on two counts. First of all, I think this amendment will help him, and second, he will be able to pay a fee to some lawyer in an effort to help him solve this problem with the income tax department. But I cannot give a decision or ruling off the top of my head.

Mr. Olson: When we are in the process of passing amendments to the Income Tax Act, respecting contributions to pension plans, I think it would be well for us to understand what the effect of them will be. Does this allow for carrying forward the residue of payments that have been made, when the aggregate of those payments exceeds the maximum of $1,500? Does it allow him to carry the unclaimed balance forward until it is used up?

Mr. Gordon: He is allowed to do that.

Mr. Lambert: I have discussed briefly with the deputy chairman a little matter of procedure with regard to these clauses of the bill which are long and which deal with different subject matters. It would seem simpler to deal with them subclause by subclause. For example, clause 3 has eight subclauses dealing with unrelated matters and I think it would help if we were able to proceed with the consideration of these long clauses on that basis.

The Chairman: I assume that this will be the desire of members of the committee. Without, perhaps, actually carrying the different subclauses we might, for the sake of order in discussion proceed from one subclause to another.

Mr. Lambert: We have finished two.

The Chairman: We have completed consideration of subclause 2.

Mr. Lambert: On page 3, subclause 3, subparagraph (iii) deals with allowances for tuition of part-time students. I have read the remarks which the minister made on the resolution stage and I agree with him there has to be an arbitrary figure somewhere, and perhaps the figure of $25 is a suitable one. However, does the minister feel that within the terminology of the amendment he will cover all the educational groups or institutions which are frequented by part-time students? We know about institutions beyond high school level. That is in subparagraph (i). Then there are schools operated by or on behalf of Her Majesty or in the public field. After that, there are high schools or secondary schools providing courses leading to a secondary school certificate or diploma required for entrance to a college or university. Is this list exclusive, or do other establishments qualify if they meet these same conditions? What about the position of a full-time student who is attending a high school or secondary school where fees are being paid? For example, one of my sons attends a high school where tuition fees have to be paid. He is a full-time student. Presumably, under this measure, I shall have to continue to pay tuition fees. But if I read subclause 3 (iii) correctly, if he were a part-time student at this school which awards a secondary school certificate which is a prerequisite to entrance to a college or a university, I would be entitled to deduct the tuition fees. I am a little surprised at the ambit of this amendment. It had been my feeling that all tuition had to be at the post secondary school level, rather than within the high school level, so as to qualify.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Gordon: That used to be the case but it would not be so under this amendment.

Mr. Lambert: Therefore the part-time student has an advantage over the full-time student with regard to high school education.

Mr. Gordon: This clause applies to students and obviously it would apply to a full-time student.

The Chairman: Has subclause 3 been dealt with?

Subclause 4? Subclause 5?

Mr. Thomas: On subclause 5. This paragraph has apparently to be read in conjunction with clause one which provides for the reduction of legal costs. Is that right?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Thomas: The question I should like to ask is this: Is there any chance that under this amendment a taxpayer can claim twice? This new paragraph provides that the amount paid by a taxpayer in relation to an objection to an assessment or an appeal from an assessment can be set off against tax. Suppose a taxpayer incurs $300 expenses to go to Ottawa with counsel. This money is paid. Then, after his case has been heard some weeks later, a judgment is rendered and his costs are allowed. Now we have these two amounts—the amount he has paid and the amount he was awarded by the court. What happens in such a case?

Mr. Gordon: The amount he paid is allowed as a deduction from his taxable income. The amount awarded by the court under the heading of costs is included in his taxable income. One offsets the other.

Mr. Martineau: Would that include accountant's fees as well as legal fees, and does it also include travelling expenses?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Mr. Martineau: Is there any limit to the amount which may be claimed?

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Thomas: The way this reads, unless I am all mixed up, which is quite possible, is that the costs awarded by the court may be deducted for tax purposes in addition to the amount that is paid, which may also be deducted.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I can help the hon. member. I gave an explanation of this matter when we were discussing clause 1 but if the hon. member was not here he would not have heard it. However, I will willingly repeat it. I will have to begin with clause 3(5). Under the provision there set out, a taxpayer is entitled to deduct from his taxable income the expenses he has to meet in the form of fees paid to his lawyer or his accountant, and those other expenses incidental to filing an appeal from or objection to an assessment. Those expenses are deductible in the year in which they are incurred. If, following an appeal, the court awards costs—I gather this legal expression means he is reimbursed by the court or by the crown for part of his expenses—the part he gets back will not be considered as free of tax, because he has already been allowed to claim those expenses as a deduction. They are regarded as taxable income.

Mr. Thomas: Can the minister point out the place where that is stated in the bill?

Mr. Gordon: Clause 3(5) refers to subsection 1 of section 11 of the act, which sets out the items which can be deducted in computing the taxable income, which include —and then comes the new paragraph (w), which reads——amounts paid by the taxpayer in the year in respect of fees or expenses incurred in preparing... an appeal—

That is where that item would come in the act. If the hon. member refers back to clause 1, reference is made to section 6, which is the section of the act which specifies the items which must be included in taxable income and which will now include these amounts which are recovered through awards of the court.

Mr. Baldwin: Just one brief question. I suppose in the case of a lawyer or accountant, if either one ever gets to paying any tax, and he takes an appeal or an objection, the use of the words "amounts paid" would preclude a lawyer or accountant from being able to claim an exemption under this clause 3(5); am I correct in that?

Mr. Gordon: I think so. After all, if a lawyer or an accountant, instead of working for a client and earning income, takes a few days off to fight his own claim, that is his privilege.

Mr. Hales: In view of what the minister has said tonight in connection with section 5 and the related section 1, I think we are passing some legislation here which is not necessary. I think this piece of legislation is going to jam up our courts of appeal. There are already more appeals and objections being filed than the department can handle, and we are now going to make it possible for those appealing to have their costs paid, and there is no limit on the costs. This is a real bonanza for the lawyers and others in the profession. I think we are introducing legislation here which is not necessary and that in a year or two we will be sorry it was ever put on the books.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I should make the speech I made earlier on clause 1 when some of my hon. friends were not here.

Mr. Hales: I heard it.

Mr. Gordon: Then if it was not convincing I see no point in repeating it.

The Chairman: Shall we now move on to subclause 6?

Mr. Lambert: Subclause 6 is related to clause 6 of the amended act. I find the principle rather startling. I should like the minister to correct me, but I think that in accepting this amendment we are accepting the principle that there can be a loss in the disposition of a capital asset in the nature of a depreciable property. For example, suppose I own a house which I have rented or I own an apartment block which I have rented, and which is subject to depreciation. It is still a capital asset. Then I sell it with either a mortgage back or on the basis of an agreement for sale. Then a year or two later I need some cash so I am prepared to sacrifice this mortgage or agreement for sale at a discount. To the extent that the proceeds of this mortgage or this agreement for sale are less than the face value of this contract of mortgage or agreement for sale, I am entitled to claim that loss, which is a capital loss, as a deduction from income.

To me, Mr. Chairman, this is a departure, because if, on the other hand, I hold another capital asset on which I suffer a loss on disposition, I am not entitled to deduct the loss from income in that taxation year; I am given the contra-privilege that if I sell it at a profit I am not charged income on the excess. It may be that I misunderstand the principle underlying this amendment, but I should certainly appreciate getting from the minister the rationale. I realize this will also be related to clause 6, because I think clause 6 is a related amendment.

Mr. Gordon: First of all, Mr. Chairman, dealing with the principle of the paragraph itself which is amending the section, if a taxpayer has a depreciable property and he sells it for more than its written down value, he pays tax on it.

Mr. Lambert: On the recapture.

Mr. Gordon: If he sells it for less than its written down value then he can claim the loss against his other income if it is the only asset in that particular class for depreciation purposes. This is the law as it stands. All that this amendment does is to extend the section to include agreements for sale and put them on all fours with mortgages or hypothecs relating to land.

Mr. Lambert: Am I correct in my re-examination of this matter that the sale refers not to the disposition of the mortgage or the agreement for sale at a discount but to the actual sale of the property in the initial instance at a figure below the depreciated value of the capital asset?

Mr. Gordon: There is just one more step here. If it is a depreciable property and a man sells it under an agreement for sale for $10,000, this gives him a profit over and above the written down value of, say, $2,000, so he pays tax on that.

Mr. Lambert: On the $2,000.

Mr. Gordon: Yes. Now, if he subsequently does not collect the $10,000 under the agreement for sale—say he only gets $7,000 for it—he can then recover the $3,000.

The Chairman: Shall we go on to subclause 7?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall we go on to subclause 8?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Unpaid amounts.

Mr. MacNaught: I move:

That Bill C-91, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by striking out lines 37 to 39 on page 5 and substituting therefor the following:

"dealing at arm's length at the time the outlay or expense was incurred and at the end of the second taxation year following the taxation year in which the outlay or expense was incurred, is unpaid at the end of that second taxation year, either" and that the said bill be further amended by striking out lines 12 and 13 on page 6 and by substituting therefor the following:

"(ii) that person shall be deemed to have made a loan to the taxpayer on the first day of the said third taxation year in an amount equal"

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would just give us a summary of the effect of this amendment? It all seems pretty complicated to me.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the effect of the proposed amendment—not this amendment to it—is that the taxpayer shall deduct an expense in the year it becomes owing even if it is not paid in that year. Those taxpayers will not be able to postpone the deduction of expenses involving payments between persons at arm's length to obtain a tax advantage. That was the purpose of the main clause. When the tax foundation examined the proposed bill, they thought that the addition of the words that have been read out in this proposed amendment would tie it down a little more tightly. This particular amendment does not alter the substance of the proposed legislation, but it was suggested by the representatives of the tax foundation, and we agreed with them, that these changes in wording would remove the possibility of uncertainty concerning the interpretation of the new provision.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think clause 6 deals with the particular problem which I raised, although it was related to clause 3 subclause (6), that in this instance the instrument, the agreement for sale is sold at a loss. I presume this is in order to achieve the same end, that if a taxpayer has paid the tax on recaptured depreciation, and then sells the agreement for sale at less than the actual depreciated value of the property, he will be able to get an adjustment with respect to that particular loss.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member is quite right, Mr. Chairman. It does exactly the same thing as did the other clause, but in this case it relates to the situation where the transaction occurs in the one year. There is no delay.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, when this question was discussed the last time in the house some time ago, along with other hon. members I raised several points which I asked the minister to clarify. At that time the minister, in order to expedite the business that evening, suggested that we wait until we were at the committee stage after second reading, and at that time he would answer quite a few specific questions that had been raised in relation to family allowances. I am well aware that the rules and regulations under the Family Allowances Act are quite a different matter; none the less—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if my hon. friend would permit me to point out that, as suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West, perhaps we might deal with these clauses which contain quite a number of subparagraphs, one subparagraph at a time. I think the point my hon. friend is raising is found in clause 7(3).

The Chairman: Shall clause 7, subclause (1) carry?

Subclauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 7(3).

Mr. Gordon: With regard to clause 7(3), it is moved by Mr. MacNaught:

That the said bill be further amended by striking out subclause (3) of clause 7.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to clause 8, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether this provision should not actually be incorporated into the appropriate act. If I remember rightly, this provision has been in existence for about eight years. It deals with children of immigrants in respect of whom an allowance is paid during their first year of residence in this country, since under the Family Allowances Act a year's residence in this country is required before a child may qualify for family allowance. How will this provision affect those children who may now be 16 and 17 years of age? Are they going to receive the same compensation on the basis of the proposed increase under the Family Allowances Act? If they happen to live in the province of Quebec, how is this provision going to be administered?

As it is ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister might ponder on this little problem for consideration and clarification at the time we deal with the amendments to the Income Tax Act and the Family Allowances Act dealing with the extension of family allowances.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask about the business for next Tuesday, if the acting house leader can tell us.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, the business for next Tuesday will be as outlined by the house leader last night.

Mr. Churchill: That is, the bill to amend the Income Tax Act?

Mr. MacNaught: Yes; and tomorrow we will take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—QUEBEC-FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROVINCIAL STUDY OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with provisional standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is that this house be now adjourned. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, my question was: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is considering taking any immediate public position with regard to the official endeavour of the Quebec legislature in studying factors relating to the separation of Quebec from Canada? We remember well, Mr. Speaker, that as the propaganda build-up reached its crescendo before the last election the Liberal party claimed two points above most others. First, they had a leader who would lead, not procrastinate, who would make decisions, not postpone them. Second, aside from other inherited virtues such as administrative genius, the Liberal party through history and in present support was the chosen vehicle, probably by act of God himself, to bind the French and English speaking people of Canada together.

I remember in the last campaign an article beneath a picture in the Toronto Liberal twinkle explaining the significance of the affable platform togetherness of Mike and Jean. What a "combo". At last a man and party in Ottawa to match and understand the new Liberal hero in Quebec. At last someone who really understood the aspirations of Quebec.

We have had that party and that leader for 14 months. I ask any member of the house to answer this fairly: Have the relations between French Canada as represented by Quebec and English speaking Canada improved? Of course they have not. The responsibility for the drift, the indecision, the wavering, the howeverish, maybeish, on the otherhandish approach is, it seems to me, the inanition of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

If anyone in English speaking Canada comments unfavourably on this or on the quiet revolution and its course, he is labelled as destructive and as an English speaking separatist. The Prime Minister perambulates saying that English speaking Canada must realize that if we lose Quebec we will slip down the slope into the United States. It would seem to me that the new dispensation this government has given us overlooks the national spirit and loyalty to a Canadian concept of English speaking Canada in its apparent willingness, if you follow the cliches of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), to decentralize. Quebec, they say, and many of us agree, is not a province like the others. Then they go on to glorify and support a decentralization that must destroy the Canada that many of us thought we had. It is the Prime Minister and no one else who has the policy that will fragment Canada and lead to American absorption.

The question raised in the house is a case in point. What a reflection, when you think of it, that it had to be asked. Can you imagine presidents Kennedy or Johnson or even Eisenhower remaining mute at the decision of a state in the American federation through its state legislature to study and report on the separation of that state from the union?

The situation revealed by the Quebec legislature's intention is covered very well in the discursive report in yesterday's Montreal Star. Listen to it and you will see why I ask the question and why it never should have had to be asked, why the Prime Minister should have given a statement on the attitude of the government toward this intention. I am not suggesting for a moment that the Quebec legislature should not go ahead with this kind of study, but surely I as a citizen of Canada should not feel that I may have to turn to the premier of Ontario to get someone who will go into Quebec, deal with these people and see if we cannot turn aside from the direction in which we seem to be going because the federal government cannot seem to do anything about stopping it. The story reads as follows:

> On the surface, at least, nobody has any real quarrel against the study that will be undertaken in the next few weeks by a group of experts to find out what possible repercussions separatism might have on the people of Quebec.
> Interviews with prominent legislature members and high civil servants showed that the move is welcome in all quarters. One member of the legislature—who asked that his name be kept secret—said he did not think the separatists themselves would be "angry" because the government is actually "recognizing a fact of life".
> He added that the group of experts—still to be appointed—will, in fact, feel the pulse of the population and report on the real implications that would face the people should Quebec secede from confederation.

The Prime Minister has told us that he does not intend to preside over the dissolution of Canada. I suggest that it is about time he took a more positive stand than his present lack of any comment on this matter would seem to indicate.

> Yesterday, the parliamentary committee on the constitution decided to ask a number of specialists to try to find out what "possible repercussions the independence of Quebec would have on the economic, political, social and cultural realities of the problem."

I suggest there is one point that they missed in their study—what these economic, cultural and social repercussions would be on the rest of the country. It is a rather dreadful irony that at the very time the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism is peregrinating across the country, especially in English speaking Canada, asking for English speaking Canadians to consider a move toward some greater understanding that we have this particular move within the province of Quebec and no real reply to it. What an irony that these two commissions are going on at the same time.

I continue to quote from the story, Mr. Speaker:

> But the main problem is not what the group of experts will find out, most sources say. Rather, it is what the committee on the constitution is ready to accept as a fact and thus recommend to the legislature.
> This, they say, is the major point. No matter who takes an active part in the study on separatism, their conclusions will influence the policy of the government for years to come.

This is rather obvious, yet we do not even have a statement of the position of the federal government except from those federal cabinet ministers who go into Quebec and appeal to the people not to talk about separatism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to challenge your ruling but I was watching the clock and I thought I started at three minutes after ten.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is a time keeper at the table who recorded when the hon. member for Port Arthur started. I have been informed he started at 10.01 and it being now 10.08 the hon. member's time has expired.

An hon. Member: He did not start then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will realize I do not want to become embroiled in a controversy. If the hon. member feels he should go on for another minute, I certainly would not want to deprive him of that. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: I continue quoting:

> Cabinet ministers, on the whole, are behind the idea of a study on separatism. They say—although none of them would like to be quoted here—that they will be glad when the findings of the inquiry have been made public.
> They also say a cool analysis of the "revolution in Quebec" will profit the party in power, because it will give it a tool against the opposition, already trying to woo the separatists.

Should the movement prove itself economically and emotionally profitable, a cabinet minister told me yesterday afternoon, then there would be no alternative for the government but to separate from the rest of Canada.

I just put that on the record, Mr. Speaker, to indicate what I think is the seriousness of the possible result of this study if the national government, and I assume we still have a national government, does not take some kind of public position on what contribution it is going to make to this question.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the position of the Prime Minister on this matter has been made abundantly clear. Separation is unthinkable. Let me quote from the Prime Minister's speech in the budget debate which appears on page 2145 of Hansard for April 14, 1964. I quote:

Every province must be in a position to exercise its right and discharge its responsibilities, and Quebec in these matters has a special position. But equally it must be accepted and established that Canada is above all the provinces, embracing all the provinces, respecting provincial division and provincial responsibility, but that Canada, as a nation, is greater than its parts or the sum of its parts. French speaking Canada must play a proud and equal part in that nation, must feel that it belongs to Canada and that Canada from sea to sea belongs to it.

Canada is a very proud name in the world today and has been over the years. Our country need not and must not become balkanized—

Farther along I read this:

We must do nothing, either by provocation or by weakness or by stubborn unawareness of the basic nature of our federalism or by words or actions based on prejudice or fear, to bring about that weakening or disappearance.

I think those quotations, Mr. Speaker, should answer the question raised by the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—QUEBEC—FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES IN HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) a question which I would like to repeat tonight to the house:

At the request of home builders of the province of Quebec in particular, does the government intend to amend the Bankruptcy Act in order to stem the present wave of fraudulent bankruptcies in the field of housing?

May I say that French Canadians had nothing to do with 86 per cent of commercial bankruptcies in Canada and 72 per cent of those which occurred in the province of Quebec in the first quarter of 1964. This was shown by the economic development council in its bulletin: Le Laissez-passer canadien-français.

On the other hand, if I refer to a report from the dominion bureau of statistics, here is what it says:

In 1963, there were 3,678 commercial bankruptcies in Canada (3,190 in 1962). Their total liabilities amounted to $193,771,000 ($149,440,000).

In the housing field, there were 714 bankruptcies in the total amount of $40,137,000.

Mr. Speaker, while Hon. Mr. Fulton was minister of justice, he had instituted, in 1962, I believe, an inquiry on bankruptcies. I am wondering why this government has not continued the excellent work undertaken by the minister of justice?

In my opinion, it is important and urgent—in fact nationally urgent—to amend the Bankruptcy Act so as to prevent as many frauds as possible. There are in Canada people of good faith who lose large amounts of money because the Bankruptcy Act is too vague.

Mr. Speaker, there is another important point I should like to stress concerning bankruptcies. The 11 per cent tax on building materials contributes to the financial difficulties of contractors and subcontractors. It should not be forgotten that a housebuilder's margin of profit is only 10 per cent, according to statistics; therefore, it is not surprising that bankruptcies are on the increase in Canada.

It seems to me that it is necessary and even essential to amend the Bankruptcy Act if we are to prevent as much as possible those frauds which involve great losses for private enterprise.

[Text]

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question raised by the hon. member I must say I am unable to accept the premise contained in it. His question affirms that there is at present a wave of fraudulant bankruptcies in Canada, particularly in the field of housing. I have made inquiries of the officials in the Department of Justice, in particular of the officials charged with the administration of the Bankruptcy Act, and they inform me there is no evidence in the department that would support the premise alleged by the hon. member that there is a wave of bankruptcies involving fraud at the present time.

Very often we read in the newspapers and hear statements that fraud exists to a great extent in bankruptcy proceedings, but on investigation these prove to be rumours, surmises and not borne out by the facts.

We have had, of course, many representations from responsible people to the effect that the Bankruptcy Act should be amended, particularly in relation to fraud. I am sure the hon. member will realize that there is a conflict of jurisdiction here. The federal government has exclusive jurisdiction in the field of bankruptcy, but the provincial government is charged with the responsibility of the administration of the criminal law, and the line here is rather close and difficult to define. For that reason much care must be given to this subject. I want to assure the hon. gentleman that the problem of amending the Bankruptcy Act is receiving very careful study at the present time.

FINANCE—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE TAX REDUCTION

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday, that is on May 12, 1964, I put the following question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon):

> In order to stimulate the Canadian economy, does the minister intend to comply with the wish expressed by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Roy Crabtree of Montreal, who asked recently in Calgary for a reduction of the fiscal burden similar to that applied by the United States government?

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that our southern neighbours have decided to reduce the fiscal burden by $11 billion this year, in order to stimulate the expansion of their economy.

I am in perfect agreement with the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and I think that if a tax cut were implemented in Canada, our economy would benefit greatly.

Taxes are designed—I suppose that the Minister of Finance is aware of that—not to take money where there is not any but to remove financial surpluses. But what happens now, under our fiscal system, is that money is being taken where there is not enough and that creates problems for the Canadian consumers. If they are deprived of part of their income, Canadian consumers cannot buy in stores, keep their business going or spur the economy. That increases unemployment and does not reduce in any way the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Finance should listen attentively to the requests of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and of all Canadians.

We know that last year, when the minister levied a new tax or rather when the 11 per cent tax on building materials came into effect, there was an outcry of protests from house builders as well as from Canadian manufacturers.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

In my opinion, the minister would be quite popular with Canadian taxpayers if he granted a tax reduction to get business rolling in Canada and to keep it under our control, so that what is now left to us will stay in our hands.

This tax burden which we have to bear has for effect to put a greater part of our business undertakings, of our industries and of our trade under American control.

On February 24 last, Mr. Maurice Huot, editor of the newspaper Le Droit stated in an editorial:

> One of the results of the rising government expenses coupled with increasing taxes is to place more and more the country under foreign control.

Mr. Huot also recognizes that this tax load allows foreigners to take over the trade and the business undertakings of the country.

I feel that the minister, even though he had a very busy day with the discussion of the Income Tax Act, should lend a sympathetic ear to those claims and announce a tax cut for all Canadians.

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question I should first of all like to remind my hon. friend that in the budget speech I gave certain comparisons of the taxes payable by Canadian individuals and by corporations compared with their counterparts in the United States after the United States cuts have gone into effect. Those comparisons showed that in almost all cases except those in the high income brackets the Canadian taxpayer will still be paying less income tax than his counterpart across the line.

I would also remind my hon. friend that in the budget speech I forecast a deficit for this current fiscal year of some $455 million. Since then and following the federal-provincial conference in Quebec the federal government has proposed that very substantial transfers be made from the federal government to the provinces, which will mean quite substantial reductions in the federal government's revenue not in this current year but in the future.

I did notice the proposals of the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. He has been making these same proposals for some time. I saw him shortly after he made his speech in Calgary. I also saw him in Vancouver, but on that occasion it was my turn to make the speech. I pointed out at that time that the Canadian economy is going ahead at a very encouraging rate; that the pick-up over the corresponding situation a year ago is very marked and encouraging.

This is a fact with which I think we can all be delighted. I am not suggesting the situation is as good as any of us would like to see it in every single section of Canada, but taken as a whole the improvement is very encouraging, particularly as the near term prospects are equally good.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. minister. Pursuant to special order made earlier this day this house stands adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 15, 1964

The house met at 10 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. THOMPSON—ANNIVERSARY OF NORWEGIAN DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of personal privilege. The purpose of my point of privilege is twofold. The first is to draw to the attention of the members of this house and the nation the fact that on Sunday, the day after tomorrow, our good friends, citizens of the free, independent, indivisible and inalienable nation of Norway, celebrate the 150th anniversary of their constitution and declaration of independence.

The Norwegian constitution is one of the oldest existing constitutions of the world and its worth and fundamental, democratic basis have withstood the test of time with only minor change. In fact it stands as an outstanding document guaranteeing the basic human and civil rights, freedom of speech and press and the just rule of law. The constitution of Norway had a dramatic birth on May 17, 1814, in the shadow of events centring around the fall of Napoleon, the result of European power politics, democratic currents of enlightenment and national awakening.

This historic milepost in the history of Norway and democratic parliamentary government will be of much interest to Canadians as we look forward to our own centennial in just three years, and even before that time the repatriation of our constitution to Canadian soil. This being Citizenship day, I am sure the thousands of loyal Canadian citizens of Norwegian stock, a number of whom are in this house, share my own keen interest.

Actually the history of Norway's government goes back more than a thousand years, the country having been unified under a monarchy about 900 A.D. This brings me to my second point. During recent months the veteran Norwegian explorer, Dr. Helge Ingstad, has unearthed definite evidence that the first European settlers on this continent were the Norwegian Vikings, the best known of whom is Leif Ericson, who some 500 years before Columbus settled on the northern tip of Newfoundland. The "Vinland" of those early settlements described in Nordic history has now been verified to have been near the fishing village of L'Anse aux Meadows, near Belle Isle. The foundations of the first buildings, their design, the metal tools and nails have provided archaeological proof that the first colonists of Canada arrived here approximately 550 years before the first French or English colonists. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, having regard to these historical facts, I suggest that the government give consideration to declaring May 17 a national holiday to be known as Leif Ericson day.

Mr. Speaker: Out of respect to the origin of many of our fellow compatriots I did not stop the hon. member, but I have serious doubts that this is the proper time for that type of question of privilege.

MR. FAVREAU—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a question of privilege involving the conduct and reputation of all hon. members.

Yesterday, during a speech on a motion introduced by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon)—

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask whether, a statement having been made last evening, the minister can rise now on a question of privilege which should have been raised at the time. I have had this same order made against me on occasion. In other words, a question of privilege cannot be the result of afterthought with a full night to think it over.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Surely the hon. gentleman is entitled to raise a question the morning after a statement is reported as having been made to this house. This is the first opportunity he has had to read Hansard which would confirm what he believed had been said in the house. Surely to prevent a question of privilege being raised so soon after the statement was made would be stretching the rules indeed.

Question of Privilege

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in this regard I would draw your attention to an occasion in the parliament of 1962-63 when a point of privilege arose under circumstances similar to those relating to the one being raised now. The then minister of justice raised a point of privilege and the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) immediately got up and interjected that the then minister of justice had had an opportunity a half hour earlier of raising a point of privilege and, therefore, he was too late. This was the opinion expressed by the present Minister of Transport when he was a member of the official opposition, and it was accepted by the Chair and accepted by the government of the day. I would put it to Your Honour that a point of privilege on a statement made in this house, and heard by the members in this house, must be raised at the time and not the next morning.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to set forth my views on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau). Mav I point out to Your Honour that the minister was in the house yesterday when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) made his statement and that he even protested, but he did not rise on a question of privilege or propose a motion.

Therefore, I submit to the house that it is too late—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the hon. member had referred to Hansard this morning, he would have realized that a question of privilege could not have been raised yesterday, that it could be raised only this morning.

At page 3276 of Hansard we see that, right after the incident about which I am raising a question of privilege the Deputy Speaker announced that the time allowed for the debate then taking place had expired.

I refer to page 3276 of Hansard of May 14, 1964, right hand column, at the top of the page:

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to provisional standing order 47, subsection 2, I must advise hon. members that the time allotted for consideration of this motion has expired, except for two five minute periods, one for a minister speaking on behalf of the government, and one allocated to the mover of the motion who will close the debate.

[Mr. Pearson.]

[Translation]

It is obvious that the first opportunity when an hon. member affected by the charge made yesterday by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm could rise, was at the beginning of this morning's session, and that is what I did immediately—

Mr. Lambert: Not at all.

Mr. Favreau: —all the more so, since it is when reading over the text of yesterday's official report that it can be seen that if he had not misunderstood the meaning of some words, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, having had the opportunity to read over what he had said, would probably have withdrawn his remarks, which is what I intend to ask him to do after I have given the following explanation—

Mr. Lambert: No, no, Mr. Speaker, not at all. I rise on a point of order—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister cannot go on like that, Mr. Speaker, because we have raised the objection that privilege cannot be raised at this time. He has answered himself. He was in the house. He rose on a point of order. If he does not know the rules, he should. It is too late now to have a second thought and a second point of privilege, and I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is almost elementary that the Chair has at least to hear the reasons put forward by any hon. member as to why he thinks he has a question of privilege before the Chair can reach a decision. That is why I was listening to the minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I very seldom rise to suggest that Your Honour give reconsideration to a matter, but the minister says he has a question of privilege. That question of privilege he had last night. He now admits that. He says he was present but he did not have an opportunity to raise it. A reading of the record indicates that he had the opportunity; and certainly questions of privilege, as Your Honour has pointed out very strongly and definitely, are not to be moved unless they come strictly within the rules.

There is no rule that allows anyone in the house, having looked the matter over and considered it for several hours, having been in the house last evening between eight and ten o'clock, and having been present when the statement was made, to have a night to think it over and now say he rises on a question of privilege. I am asking Your Honour to make a ruling as to whether you are going to decide that matters of privilege can be raised by anyone who, being in the house, does not challenge the statement at the time by privilege, and then subsequently decides he is going to do so.

That is the essence of the matter. To allow the minister to go ahead and place his statement before the house would be in effect to allow him to present his whole argument, and then have Your Honour determine whether or not it is a question of privilege. My point is that there cannot be a question of privilege raised at this time, and I am asking a ruling on that.

Mr. Pearson: On that point, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that questions of privilege have been raised—and some were ruled out of order—dealing with statements that sometimes have been made days before in the house, and in view of the fact that this question of privilege may require a motion to be made which could not have been made before, surely you are not going to prevent the minister explaining his point of privilege.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct Your Honour's attention to a precedent of only a couple of weeks ago. On Monday, April 27, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) made a statement in the house, of which I think all hon. members are generally aware. Shortly after he had made that statement I, being in the house at the time, said this:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to enter a caveat, because after we have had a chance to read what was contained in the statement made by the hon. member for Labelle, some of us may want to raise a question of privilege tomorrow and move the kind of motion which was just suggested.

The next day, April 28, I rose at the opening of the house on a question of privilege and referred to what had been said the day before, which I had by then had an opportunity to read, on the basis of which I moved a motion for reference to the committee on privileges and elections which was allowed, debated and passed unanimously.

I submit that though there is a slight difference in that the Minister of Justice did not enter a caveat last night, there is great similarity between the two cases, and what the hon. gentleman is seeking to do today is exactly what I sought to do on April 28; that is, to raise a question of privilege at the first moment after there has been an opportunity to read the actual words which had been uttered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister told us there was no opportunity to raise this matter last night, and he referred to the half hour between 10 p.m. and 10.30 p.m. taken up by special questions. I call his attention to the fact that the allotted 30 minutes was not completely taken up last night, and that the house rose at 10.25 p.m. Had the minister been present he would have had an opportunity in those remaining five minutes to raise this question of privilege. As to the hon. gentleman's statement that time was not available, he would not have known about it because he was not present after ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I think at this stage I might clear up the point which has just been raised by saying that the period allotted between 10 p. m. and 10.30 p.m. is for the purpose of dealing with three questions raised by three hon. members. If those hon. members do not utilize the full time of 30 minutes, the remaining time lapses. The 30 minute period does not allow for the raising of other points.

Mr. Bell: Is Your Honour ruling that we cannot bring up a question of privilege between 10 p.m. and 10.30 p.m.?

Mr. Speaker: That particular question is not before the house. We have plenty to deal with at the present moment.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to make two comments on the point of order. First, with respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, may I say I feel he has proved the very point I was trying to make. In the case to which he has referred there was a caveat entered. At the very moment when the incident occurred the possible question of privilege was drawn to the attention of the house. It was afterward followed up, as I think the rule really intends. Furthermore, what the minister raised last night was point of order. If he had felt there was a question of privilege he could have raised a question of privilege. Instead, he apparently felt at that time it was only a matter of procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, about this question of privilege, I should like to draw your attention to page 3276 of Hansard where you will find that just after the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said this:

I am not at all surprised at what happened at the government caucus, because I know very well the habits of the Minister of Transport since he has been sitting here.

I got up from my seat in order to raise a question of privilege. The Deputy Speaker did not even give me time to put my question of privilege and called me to order. It was my intention, therefore, to rise immediately on a question of privilege yesterday afternoon.

[Text]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): The subject which the Minister of Justice is attempting to raise, Mr. Speaker, was a matter of debate yesterday. At that time charges were made and denials were made by the Minister of Justice. If a question of privilege is allowed on this issue we will be faced in the future with subsequent questions of privilege following debates in this house, where we are quite accustomed to charges being made and denials being offered. The Minister of Justice had every opportunity, and took it, yesterday in the debate to speak against the statements made by the hon. member who had the floor at that time. As I have said, he took that opportunity, and surely he cannot now raise a question of privilege on something on which he has been reflecting overnight.

If this is permitted, Mr. Speaker, there will be no end to questions of privilege based on previous debates. It is during the debate that answers are given to statements made. If the Minister of Justice had wished a withdrawal at that time, he could have asked for it. As I read Hansard the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm made a certain statement and the Minister of Justice denied that statement. This happens all the time in debates in this house, and the matter rests at that point.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, there is just one other point I should like to raise further to the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. It is that the Deputy Speaker who was presiding over the deliberations last night has already ruled on this question. I have before me the French report, which reads as follows:

[Translation]

I cannot see the good it will do to keep up this debate any longer.

[Text]

Now, "sous cet aspect" was referring precisely to whether there had been a breach of the rules by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. The Deputy Speaker went on to say that each hon. member had to accept the word of another, and that was the end of it. So that the matter, having already been ruled upon, becomes chose jugée, or res judicata, and I think that is another reason why the minister's question of privilege is not receivable at this time.

Mr. Fisher: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I may say so, this question is not without a certain amount of difficulty, for the Chair at least. I have to decide whether this is the proper time to raise a question of privilege and I should like to make reference to two authorities; first of all to our standing orders of the house, wherein we find that standing order 17 says:

Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

Then I refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 104, paragraph 5, which is probably well known by this time. It says:

As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity. If he is not so satisfied he may allow the member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out.

It was obvious this morning that, not having been in the chair at the time the vote was taken, I had to listen to at least a short explanation from the Minister of Justice. On the other hand, I understand the matter was debated fully yesterday, a vote was taken by the house and the matter was disposed of. The minister, I am informed this morning, was in the house last night and did have the opportunity to raise a question of privilege immediately, but did not do so.

I regret very much being obliged to come to the conclusion that the motion should not be made or received at this time. In view of standing order 17 and the fact that the matter was discussed fully yesterday and a vote was taken, I must say that in my opinion there is no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, and not on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Justice. On several occasions since the session started, there have been questions of privilege put by hon. members on the government side, as well as from the Conservative and New Democratic parties. They had the opportunity of voicing their opinions on those questions of privilege. The question I am raising today is to the effect that we, in this corner of the house, have tried to air our views, and that it seemed as if a barrier had been erected at a certain spot up to which opinions were considered, while this consideration did not reach down to our benches.

I wanted to submit this question because it has happened repeatedly since the session started.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Yesterday afternoon, between five and six o'clock, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) raised a question during the discussion, implying that the Liberal members had an opportunity to look at the location maps during their caucus.

I submit to Your Honour—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was absent when the hon. member made his statements.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the same point. In my opinion the hon. member has no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was absent when the hon. member made his statements—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has ruled against the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated the other day to hon. members that today I would be in a position to make a statement about government business. In this statement I intend to indicate, Mr. Speaker, what items of business the government hopes to get completed before the house can give consideration to the possibility of a summer recess. The list I have to give is somewhat long, but I hope we can make progress with these measures in the house in a way which would enable us to have a summer vacation somewhat longer than the present week end.

First there is consideration to be given to the estimates. It is certainly not reasonable to try to finish consideration of the estimates before any summer recess, but it would be very undesirable, of course, to have a number of departments waiting until the autumn when half the financial year would have been completed. Motions to go into supply will be made as is appropriate for bringing forward the estimates, and I expect that this will mean one more such motion before summer. Interim supply will, of course, be asked for in the ordinary way. Also in the financial field the government gives high priority to the amendments to the Income Tax Act implementing the budget proposals.

I am hopeful, indeed I expect, that we will soon be able to introduce a motion for an address to the Queen for an amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act in order to provide for supplementary benefits to widows and orphans in our pensions legislation. Legislation itself cannot be introduced until this constitutional amendment has been made. We also hope that it will be possible to take the preliminary stages of the legislation—that is the pension legislation—before summer so the bill will then be available for public discussion and for the special committee which will be set up.

We hope that amendment of the National Defence Act will be completed in this house after consideration by the committee. The bill on the law of the sea dealing with the 12 mile fishing limit is another with which we should like to make early progress; also, of course, the bank charter extension act. Then there is the legislation on the extension of family allowances and on the revisions of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which have already been announced. One of the early measures to be proceeded with will be the amendments to the National Housing Act which have been on the order paper now for some time. The resolution relating to the Columbia river treaty is one that it is essential to decide on before the autumn.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I would refer to a group of measures relating to agriculture. The resolution on increasing the volume of farm credit is on the order paper. We also wish to bring forward legislation on farm improvement loans; we want to establish the department of forestry and rural development, and to improve federal provisions regarding crop insurance.

The resolution in my name relating to periodical publications is another important measure that we hope to proceed with as soon as possible. Legislation relating to retirement from the Senate is waiting. And I must remind hon. members that this house is in a real sense in default of its duties if we fail to set in motion the redistribution that is now long overdue, in accordance with the census which is now three years old. The government will return to this legislation, it is hoped, as soon as ever we have any reason to hope that in doing so we will not delay for a long time other important legislation.

Other measures which we regard as of priority importance are the legislation for a minimum wage and other labour standards; the legislation to provide student loans, and the amendment of the Railway Act. This last Railway Act amendment is too complex a measure for us to expect to complete it before the autumn, but we would at least hope to have it, like the pension bill, ready for the committee stage before then. We also hope to proceed with two other railway matters; the C.N.R. financing bill, which is an annual one, and a measure on the capitalization of the C.N.R.

Three measures already on the order paper are the extension of export credits, important to our expanding trade; the amendment of the Post Office Act; and the amendment of the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. the government is also anxious to proceed with the amendment of the citizenship act to ensure equality of status for all citizens. In the field of administration we attach great importance to the reconstitution of the treasury board as a separate department of government with more broadly defined and modernized functions.

In addition we have waiting several more routine but important measures. We wish to ratify I.L.O. convention No. 111 dealing with discrimination in employment, and the Geneva convention of 1949 for the protection of war victims. Then there is legislation to establish the Roosevelt-Campobello international park; the harbour commissions legislation; amendments to the Companies Act; the revised statutes bill; revision of the Interpretation Act; the Quebec bridge bill; and the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. Speaker, this pre-summer list is not necessarily in the order in which the legislation in question will be introduced into parliament. The business for as many days ahead as is possible will be announced at the end of each day in the customary way and will be determined in the ordinary way by circumstances. But this list does give a priority importance to the present legislative program and an indication generally of the way in which the government would like to proceed and the progress we hope to make before summer. Any later proposals to the house for a summer recess will be made, naturally, in the light of that progress which we are able to make. We have to act, of course, with a certain degree of flexibility according to changing circumstances, and the most important of these circumstances that we cannot altogether foresee is the rate at which debate in the house will proceed.

There is one other observation, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make. Circumstances or developments may make it necessary or desirable to add to the list I have given, and the additions may require priority over existing items either now on the order paper or on the list I have given.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that what I just said will give the house a pretty definite idea of the work before it. I know we are all anxious to get ahead with that work as quickly and as effectively as possible. The government pledges its co-operation with opposition parties to that end, and I am confident that, subject always to their duty and obligation as an opposition, those parties will give the same co-operation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the concluding paragraph of the statement read by the Prime Minister the opposition is, of course, in full agreement. The discharge of its responsibilities will be a consideration always before it, while desiring at all times to expedite the business of the house.

The list that has been given by the Prime Minister is of such a length—I have said this before and I repeat—that it would give parliament an idea of the meaning of eternity. Indeed, as I look over the order paper I find that after 64 days all that the government has on the order paper are the following items, and I think they should be referred to: the electoral boundaries commission measure, which has been before the house for some time; the bill to amend the Income Tax Act, which is also in the same position, of course; the bill respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada, which I am sure will not take much time at all; the measure concerning a comprehensive program of old age pensions which will not come before us, of course, until after the amendment to the constitution. This measure involves not only the original plan but twice revised versions. The government has not been able to make up its mind on that matter until very recently. The harbour commission bill is not a matter that will take much time. Then there is the resolution regarding the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act and another resolution concerning the Aeronautics Act. As I recall there was no reference to them, although the Prime Minister may have said that all matters on the order paper will receive attention. Then there is the resolution to set up a joint committee on the pension plan. There are also amendments to the Bank Act and amendments to the National Housing Act, which are of great importance, of course. There is also a measure respecting the postal rates on periodicals. It has been before the house and strong feelings have been expressed by various members. Then there is a measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. This matter will receive immediate support from the house generally in that it simply represents an expansion of the policies which we introduced. The extension and expansion of the Farm Credit Act is another matter that I am sure will not take long. Finally there is the very large and important matter involving recommendations of the royal commission on transportation.

I mention these matters because when you look at the order paper you see that there is very little on it. Before the government can expect parliament to act it has to make up its own mind, and it has not been able to do so in regard to several questions. There is one, for instance, about which I am not going to say more at the moment. However, the press today contains information, apparently leaked, regarding the flag question. According to the press this matter is going to receive the attention of parliament before the 1st of July. This is a matter of significance, and it is timely for me to mention it today because the press contains lengthy statements in this regard.

All of us are desirous of doing everything we can to expedite the business of the house, and we have done so by agreeing in the last few days to a reduction by one in the number of supply motions. That is a very material concession for us to make. We are most desirous of getting ahead, but the government must first get things on the order paper before they can be considered by parliament. That should be made clear and definite, and I want to emphasize that at this time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has outlined a very formidable list of legislation. As a matter of fact I think more legislation was announced this morning than was contained in the speech from the throne. But if this is legislation which must be dealt with by the summer recess, then I think members of the house must tackle this problem. I think all of us in the opposition have a responsibility, and the government also has a responsibility. One of the ways in which the government can discharge its responsibility is to get some of this legislation on the order paper so that members will have an opportunity to study it. We have had no opportunity to see or examine most of the legislation announced by the Prime Minister this morning, and it seems to me it would expedite the work of the house a good deal if legislation were placed on the order paper at a much earlier time.

I suggest that some thought should be given by the house leaders of the various parties to the allocation of the time for the various items which are to come before us. If we are going to cover this very heavy agenda it can only be done adequately if there is some allocation of time in regard to the respective legislative matters. If some agreement could be reached to set a limit on debate at various stages I think this would help to expedite matters a great deal.

We in this party have been advocating for a long time that in view of the heavy agenda which parliament now has we should abolish the resolution stage altogether and allow legislation to come in by having a bill introduced. This would give members an opportunity to study the bill in plenty of time for a full debate on second reading and in committee of the whole. I hope the committee on procedure will give some thought to this and make a recommendation to the house soon in this regard. If we are going to get this amount of work done at this and succeeding sessions I think we are going to have to say goodbye to the slow process of having an additional debate on resolutions preceding the introduction of legislation.

The press has been speaking of legislation regarding a flag. The Prime Minister did not mention that this morning, but he did say there was other legislation which might take priority over what he had announced. It does not make it very easy to plan the work of the house if at any time other legislation which we have not even seen or heard about can be given a higher priority. While we in this party are interested in having a distinctive national flag for Canada, I want to say that we think it is much more important that we give to this country a sense of purpose and an economic climate over which we will be proud to have a flag fly. Instead of the government using a great deal of energy worrying about a flag, we hope that first of all they will deal with some of the important items of legislation which have been announced by the Prime Minister rather than spending, as we undoubtedly would, a week or two debating a flag, which is something that can quite easily be postponed until later this session or to next session.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the amount of legislation that has been outlined to us by the Prime Minister hardly justifies making a statement of any length at this time. However, I support some of the remarks that have just been made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam with regard to bringing into play procedures which will speed up the business of the house. I trust that the special committee on procedure will take the amount of business before us as a very special reason for placing their suggestions before the house soon, and I hope we will all take the hint and give them the support they need to bring in such measures, at least on a trial basis.

Without in any way taking away from the importance of other measures, I would remind the Prime Minister that there are a few very basic and important items which he announced that must be taken care of in the immediate future. One of these is the extension of the bank charters. If we do not get the legislation passed by June 30, the banks of the country will close their doors on July 2. The Columbia river treaty likewise is something we must get through before the recess. There are the supply motions as well, and the importance of redistribution calls for early action. I would remind the Prime Minister also that there is another piece of legislation about which there has been a great deal of discussion and which has been on the order paper. I refer to the legislation regarding publications. The situation as it is developing can hardly continue and we must, therefore, face this thing clearly and act quickly.

So far as we are concerned in this party, we will give complete, constructive co-operation to the other groups in this house to work out the very best way of speeding up the work in the house. Certainly, whether or not we agree that all these things can be done before the summer recess, it does point out to us that there is a real job to be done, and the only way it will be done is to get down and do it.

[Mr. Douglas.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are quite happy, in this corner of the house, to see that the government introduces enough business for parliament to justify its role and pass the legislation which may be necessary for the welfare of the country.

It is quite clear that during the discussions on such legislation, there will not always be complete agreement. There will be discussions and that is the role of the opposition.

As far as we are concerned, we intend to be as constructive as possible in our criticism, to bring forward suggestions and solutions which could help to deal with Canadian problems if they were taken into serious consideration by the government.

As far as we are concerned, if that legislation has to be passed, we are prepared to extend the hours of sitting of the house and accept longer sittings in the morning and evening. We are ready to sit as long as is necessary, until July, August or September. But, one sure thing is that the Canadian people expect action from parliament.

Today, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) gave us a list which may seem quite long and substantial. But I think the time has come to present the lists of legislation, to introduce the measures themselves so that they can be passed, especially if they deal with the welfare of the Canadian people.

Unfortunately, practically no legislation has been completed since the beginning of this session. There was, of course, a bill introduced by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) to change the name of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and another short bill. We feel that, half the session being over, it is high time that the house should get down to business. If the hours of sittings are too short, let us lengthen them; if we have to sit by shifts, let us do that, but let us get on with our work.

We have been discussing the establishment of a pension plan but at the rate we are going it will never be passed. We are to consider legislative amendments concerning Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and agriculture. We are supposed to set up a department of rural development—indeed we have been considering that for two years here—or a department of agriculture for eastern Canada, call it whatever you wish, it is the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that this has to be brought to a conclusion eventually and we are ready to work as long as necessary in co-operation with the other members of the house.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the list of work he gave us this morning. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman could give us another statement outlining what parliament will have to do after the summer recess.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes. There will be an equally long list of very important proposals, including the revision of the Bank Act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF STATEMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER TO NATO COUNCIL

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to table, as promised, the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the NATO council at The Hague. This is the statement with only one or two small omissions. These omissions relate only to the foreign policy of other members and foreign personalities of the council. There are no omissions in the section concerning far eastern policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These were just interpolations while he was speaking?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister regarding a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the NATO meeting, when he said:

> While we have no intention in Canada of doing anything which would add to the difficulties of our friends, the realities of the situation nevertheless may require some modification of our position following the 19th session of the United Nations.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister what modifications the government has in mind with reference to our relationship with mainland China.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I ought to permit the Secretary of State for External Affairs to interpret his own statement; he will be here on Tuesday. One thing he might have in mind when he talks about the realities of the situation is that there is the possibility, at least, of a vote favourable to the seating of mainland China at the United Nations irrespective of Canada's stand on that issue.

Mr. Douglas: I was aware of the realities of the situation. It was the phrase "some modification of our position" which interested me. I take this to mean a modification of Canada's position vis-à-vis mainland China. I assume the Prime Minister was consulted before this statement was made, and I wonder if he could indicate to us what modification in our policy there would be.

Mr. Pearson: If there was a vote, in favour of transferring a seat at the United Nations to the Peking government, then the Canadian government and other governments would have to make up their minds whether or not to recognize the consequences of that change.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROVISION FOR RECOGNITION AS CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-97, to provide for the British North America Act to be known also as the constitution of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to make it legal, so far as parliament can provide, to call our constitution either the constitution of Canada or the British North America Act. It does this by providing that in the parliament of Canada or in any of our courts, our constitution may be referred to as the constitution of Canada. This would facilitate the widest possible use of this more appropriate title pending the day when the constitution of Canada might be our own document in every sense.

If the house and the government would like to facilitate early enactment of this bill so that the pending amendment regarding certain aspects of the Canada pension plan might be an amendment to the constitution of Canada, I would be quite willing for this to be done.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the plight of the tidal wave disaster victims on Canada's west coast who now, more than six weeks after the event, still find themselves without any prospects of proper re-establishment in the light of the totally inadequate sum of $250,000 specified yesterday by the Prime Minister as the total federal contribution to the disaster fund, which has resulted in the disaster committee having to commence making payments in the amount of only 75 per cent of the net depreciated uninsured appraised loss, an amount which has no realistic relationship whatsoever to replacement and reconstruction costs.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the situation of these Canadian citizens has now become so insufferable that the parliament of Canada, through the voice of the members of this house, should have the immediate opportunity of making clear to the government that this is no time to boggle over the niceties of federal-provincial relationships and responsibilities, but that human need should be paramount and should be met immediately by a payment of the order of $1 million from the federal treasury to the duly constituted disaster fund committee for disbursement to those whose loss requires restitution.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the pitiful contribution already announced by the government is recognition of the public importance of this matter. I submit the urgency of debate stems from the fact that no other opportunity of debate in the early future is possible under the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I have to determine whether the business of the house should be set aside under standing order 26 to discuss a matter of national importance, sudden urgency or great need. May I refer the hon. member to Beauchesne, citation 100, subsection 8, about the middle of the paragraph, where it seems to me we find the governing words in respect of this matter. I quote:

> What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs.

In the circumstances, therefore, as this matter has been under discussion in the house, and since the government, I understand, has acted in relation thereto, the matter, although extremely important and of great—

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Before Your Honour makes a ruling, may I just submit to Your Honour that the matter which the hon. member is seeking to raise is specifically the government's action yesterday in setting a sum which he feels is totally inadequate. There was no way to deal with that action until the action was taken. The action was only taken yesterday; therefore the hon. member had no opportunity to raise the matter.

If the government proceeds on the basis of that action it will be too late to raise it later on, so it seems to me this is the only opportunity that presents itself. It also seems to me it is urgent, because unless the matter is dealt with today the government will have proceeded along the line it indicated yesterday and this, to the hon. member and the rest of us, is completely inadequate.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for giving me the benefit of his advice, which I appreciate. Nevertheless I must point out that the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam seem to be more in the nature of a grievance than in support of the argument of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and regretfully, perhaps, I must come to the conclusion that the general business of the house should not be set aside, under standing order 26, at this time to consider this proposed motion.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED APPROVAL OF DESIGN BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the information allegedly coming from his office which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning, and over the C.B.C., that the government has decided on the abolition of the red ensign and the substitution of a flag with three maple leaves thereon, and blue borders to the right and left, is correct; and is this the decision of the government? I think parliament should know and have the fullest information in this regard.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has taken no decision on this matter. The government is bound by the commitment which it has accepted, and which was made some years ago by the party which the government represents, to introduce into this house a design for a distinctive national flag within two years of April, 1963. No decision has been taken, Mr. Speaker, about the design or the time of the introduction of the resolution in question. I certainly would not wish to take any responsibility, either personally or on behalf of the government, for some of the designs that have been appearing, or indeed for the drawing that appeared in the newspaper this morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the Prime Minister whether he does not agree that the changing of national symbols, which after all represent the emotions of the people, cannot be brought about unless there is reasonable unanimity in the country. Otherwise greater disunity than ever will take place in this nation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I expect that the government, and I hope parliament, will take its responsibility in this matter as the elected representatives of the people. I hope that when that responsibility is discharged by the government, all members of parliament, including my right hon. friend, will take their responsibility in regard to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the Prime Minister, does he take responsibility for this emblem that appears in the paper today and which has received widespread dissemination in our country; indeed, which finds itself on a postage stamp, with tremendous explanations about to be made by the Postmaster General that this represents the unity of Canada? Is this what the government has in mind or is it not?

Mr. Pearson: I have already told the right hon. gentleman only a moment ago that no decision has been made by the government as to what design will be submitted to parliament. When that decision is made it will be submitted to parliament. The members of parliament will have a chance to make their own decision and, as I have just said, I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will make that decision in a responsible way, as I am sure they will.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I express the hope that the government will take such action as its responsibilities demand, but will the Prime Minister answer this very definitely. Does this emblem with three maple leaves represent at the moment the viewpoint of the government, or does what we hear have no foundation, that this information came from his office?

Mr. Pearson: I have already answered that question twice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the reports are correct that the government intends to introduce legislation regarding a flag for Canada before July 1?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have already said that no decision has been taken in regard to the timing of the introduction of any such legislation. We are bound by the commitment that it is to be done within two years of our taking office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You made a lot of other commitments that you did not carry out.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Middlesex West.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in connection with the flag issue, but in view of the discussion which has taken place I think I will leave it until a later date.

REDISTRIBUTION

SHOWING OF NEW ELECTORAL MAPS TO LIBERAL MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he tell the house whether or not the Liberal members had an opportunity of looking at the new electoral maps during a Liberal caucus where they would have taken a decision themselves on this matter?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely false; a lie that was uttered when this was said.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly take his seat. That question has been answered.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If it is on the same question, the question was illegal in the first place, and there is no supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. As members of the house we must make common cause with one another. A minister has laid a charge of falsehood against a member of the opposition. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), that the whole matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the matter is now settled.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will be very glad to rule on that question of privilege. There was no question of privilege; the hon. member misinterpreted the words of the Minister of Justice.

NEWFOUNDLAND

REPORTED INTENTION TO CHANGE NAME OF PROVINCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on another subject for the Prime Minister. Has the government been consulted by the government of Newfoundland concerning its intention to change the name of that province to Newfoundland and Labrador? My question arises from a report that a bill to that effect was introduced into the Newfoundland legislature.

Mr. Cashin: That was asked yesterday. Wake up.

Mr. Speaker: I do not see the immediate urgency of this question. I am informed it was asked yesterday, but in any event would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

REPORTED DISPUTE WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING LABRADOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister prompted by the pungent utterances of Premier Smallwood yesterday. Have the good offices of the right hon. gentleman been requested to conciliate in the unfortunate territorial controversy between the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland with respect to Labrador?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No. I am not aware of any dispute of that kind.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WEEK END VISITS TO HOMES BY PENITENTIARY INMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Since we seem to be in the mood for a week end recess, if not for a summer recess, could I ask the Minister of Justice how far the plans, outlined twice recently by the commissioner of penitentiaries for week end visits home by prisoners to their families, have gone, and when will this be coming into effect.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROVISION OF FURTHER INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice when the next interim supply bill will be introduced, in view of the fact that government will soon be running out of money.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Some time next week, possibly Wednesday; but I will be more definite about this, possibly at the end of today's sitting.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY RESPECTING "DO NOT SHIP" LIST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps I should have communicated with the Minister of Labour before asking him now if he is in a position to answer a question which was raised some weeks ago before the new rules came into effect, namely whether he has, since that question was asked, been able to ascertain whether a "do not ship" list is still in existence. I do not wish to say anything in this regard to add to the question which was asked, but the information I have is that people are being denied employment on the basis of this list, and being denied it by Mr. McLaughlin.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): When the matter was raised on an earlier occasion I was in touch with the chairman of the board of trustees, who assured me there was no such list in existence. He also gave me an assurance that every effort would be made to right any wrong which had been done to any seaman as a result of the operation of this list. As I recollect, the board of trustees proposed to re-examine the procedures which might be necessary in order to carry out the policy they had in mind. However, I will be glad to make further inquiries and bring the matter up to date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder if the minister when looking into this will examine the case of Jacques Savard?

Mr. MacEachen: I will bring the matter to the attention of the trustees.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

Mr. Hays: In the debate on my estimates on April 24, and again on May 7, the hon. member for Yukon made a serious accusation against me concerning a certain milk contract in the Edmonton area. I told the house several times that the hon. member's claims were entirely without foundation, but he persisted in pursuing this matter. I regret that I must now take up more time of the house on this subject, because I think our time would be much better used in a positive way.

I think it is pretty well known—if not on the other side of the house, at least on this side—that I have no interest whatsoever in political patronage. I agreed to run for parliament because I thought I might be able to make some contribution to my country. I am interested only in doing the best job I can for Canadian farmers. But unfortunately tactics like those of the hon. member for Yukon just cannot be ignored.

The hon. member has accused me of interfering with a contract which the Purity Dairy Company of Edmonton held for the supply of dairy products to the army station at Griesbach and through it, also, to the R.C.A.F. station at Namao. When one strips the statements of the hon. member for Yukon of his practised insinuations and innuendos, they amount to two accusations. One of these claims was that I had instructed that the contract be cut. The other claim was that Purity Dairy had been threatened that if the contract was not cut my department would make it hard for Purity. To be precise, the hon. member, as recorded at page 2570 of Hansard, said this:

> The information I have leads me to believe in the absence of a satisfactory explanation that the minister has personally interfered with the full term of a contract for the supply of milk and ice cream to an R.C.A.F. station.

The hon. member at first said an official of my department in Edmonton, a Mr. McKay, had gone to the manager of Purity, Mr. Jacob Trach and "inferred or said" he was acting under my direction or the direction of officials of my department and suggested that the six months' contract be cut in half. The hon. member went on to say, again as recorded on page 2570 of Hansard:

> In the conversation to which I have referred not only was the suggestion made to Mr. Trach that the contract be halved but he was informed that unless he was tractable in this regard some method would be found to have his product declared below the standard acceptable at the stations.

That is the end of the quotation. By May 7 the hon. member had taken the trouble at least to determine that the contract was with the Department of Defence Production and that Mr. McKay is an employee of that department and not of the Department of Agriculture. But the hon. member again persisted in accusing me of having tried to interfere in this contract. As reported on page 3019 of Hansard he said:

> We should hear from the Minister of Agriculture who is directly involved because if the information I have disclosed is true it indicates that the Minister of Agriculture directly interfered with Mr. McKay an employee of the Department of Defence Production and made threats, as I put it in the vernacular of the west, to put the manure fork into the cream can.

That is the end of the quotation.

First let me make two categorical statements. At no time did I or any member of my staff or my department make any request to any employee of the Minister of Defence Production or to any officer of Purity Dairy that the contract with Purity should be interfered with. Neither I nor any member of my staff or department suggested to any employee of the Minister of Defence Production, or to any officer or employee of Purity Dairy, that if the contract with Purity was not cut the Department of Agriculture would make it difficult for that firm. Together with my colleague the Minister of Defence Production I have investigated these charges carefully to be completely sure that we had full information on this whole matter. We can find nothing to substantiate the insinuation that the dairy was threatened with some kind of revenge action. I deny it categorically.

Our investigations also confirmed that neither I nor my officials requested that the contract be interfered with. I have, however, since May 7 learned of a matter which I did not know on that date but for which I, as the minister, take full responsibility. This in no way changes any earlier statement, but I want to be sure the committee has all the facts before it. The only acquaintance my department had with this matter at all arose out of communications from Alberta on behalf of other diary interests in the area as to the basis for letting contracts of this kind and why the contract in question had been let to Purity. My office communicated with the Department of Defence Production asking for the information necessary to send an appropriate reply. These communications were requests for information and nothing more; the normal kind of inquiry which members of parliament are always receiving and replying to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, will the minister tell us the dates of those communications, please?

Mr. Hays: I can give the dates later. The final reply from the Department of Defence Production concerning this matter was received by my office and the information contained in it passed on to Alberta by my office after April 1. By this time, of course, the contract had already run its full course from October 1, 1963 through March 31, 1964. There was absolutely no suggestion in any communications from my office that the contract should be interfered with; and indeed it should surely be obvious to everyone by now, even the hon. member for Yukon, that the contract was not interfered with in any way. It must also be obvious, therefore, to any responsible person that there could have been, and in fact were, no threats about anything.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what do all these innuendos and insinuations of interference and threats by me or my officials, presumably initiated from Purity Dairy and taken as fact by the hon. member for Yukon, finally boil down to anyway? They boil down to nothing more than a simple inquiry from Alberta to my office and a follow-up by my office in the normal way to provide the factual information for a reply. It seems to me that in view of all this any fair minded, responsible person would admit that the information of the hon. member was incorrect.

Mr. Chairman, if the committee would agree I should hope they would listen to the Minister of Defence Production, who would clear up the other half of this matter by giving a statement at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, so that the record will be complete, would the minister give the dates for which I asked, and also table the correspondence to which he made reference? I refer to correspondence from these various dairies regarding the Purity Dairy contract.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I quoted from no correspondence. I said we had received an inquiry from Alberta in connection with these contracts. It seems to me it would serve no useful purpose to table that correspondence. The rest of the correspondence would be interdepartmental, which I understand is never tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say now that this was interdepartmental correspondence? A while ago he said it was correspondence received from complaining dairies in Alberta. I understood him to say it was from other competing dairies. Having referred to that correspondence, I am sure it would serve a useful purpose if it were tabled; and whether it would serve a useful purpose is not for the minister to judge. I would ask him to give us the dates of the correspondence, and I again request that he table it. I do not ask that he table the interdepartmental correspondence, but correspondence from complaining dairies.

Mr. Hays: I can see no reason for tabling the particular correspondence to which the right hon. gentleman refers. Most of the inquiries, I understand—not necessarily in connection with this matter—are made on the telephone, and that sort of thing. I do not know whether there is very much correspondence as far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will be satisfied, Mr. Chairman, as long as the minister will say that he will table any correspondence there is on this question.

Mr. Hays: We will be glad to table any correspondence we have with private individuals.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee I should like to add a few remarks to what has been said by the Minister of Agriculture, as the allegations made by the hon. member for Yukon were in fact directed against an employee of the public service in my department.

Late in September, 1963, a short time after the contract was awarded to Purity Dairy for the period October 1, 1963, to March 31, 1964, my Edmonton regional purchasing office received representations direct from the trade to the effect that the contract period should be reduced from six months to three months, thereby giving the dairies an opportunity to participate every 15 months rather than every 2½ years. This representation was made by a spokesman for a number of the Edmonton dairies. At approximately the same time similar representations were being made in Ottawa on behalf of the dairies, and on October 2, 1963, my regional branch head office asked Mr. McKay to provide a summary of the current milk situation in Edmonton.

As a result of these inquiries, and to be in line with the general policy now being followed in most areas of Canada, Mr. McKay was asked to discuss the matter with Purity Dairy and determine if they were agreeable to having the current contract, October 1, 1963 to March 31, 1964, reduced from six months to three months. Mr. McKay explained that as all the dairies in that area were now on the same basis, further contracts would be rotated every three months. Purity Dairy was not agreeable to this suggested cut-back, so the contract ran to completion on March 31, 1964.

On April 25 Mr. McKay became aware for the first time of the insinuations which had been made regarding this matter when he read in the Edmonton paper an account of the statements made in this committee on April 24 by the hon. member for Yukon. That statement implied that some threat had been made to Purity Dairy that their milk would be found unsatisfactory if they did not agree to terminate the contract.

On April 27, two days later, Mr. McKay called the army barracks at Griesbach to inquire whether they had made any complaint about Purity milk, this being the only source, in his opinion, from which such a complaint might have come. He was informed that no complaint had been made. He then called Mr. Trach at Purity Dairy to inquire the reason for the statement. Mr. Trach admitted that no threat or complaint had been made, but that he had assumed that if he did not agree to terminate his contract some such action would follow.

The reference in the press to a misunderstanding on the part of my Edmonton official is somewhat misleading. There was some confusion in the interpretation of the relationship between the provincial price control in the Edmonton area and the Edmonton municipal licensing control. Purity Dairy, when it first applied for listing in my Edmonton office, possessed a provincial licence for the Edmonton area but did not have a municipal licence to deliver milk within the city of Edmonton.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to deal more specifically with the allegations made before the committee by the hon. member for Yukon in the official report of the House of Commons Debates for May 7, 1964, the hon. member stated, as is reported at page 3017 of Hansard:

> —when Mr. Trach was requested to cut his contract, that is his contract to supply milk and ice cream to stations Namao and Griesbach, he was told there were certain elements and certain people who stated that if Trach did not agree to the contract being reduced from six months to three months—

Here the hon. member quoted the exact words that Mr. McKay was alleged to have used, and I quote them again as they appear in quotation marks in Hansard:

> "That the Department of Agriculture could make it very difficult for us".

I have gone into this extensively with the officials concerned, and particularly with Mr. McKay, and I can say that this statement is completely false.

Further along on the same page the hon. member went on to say:

> Mr. McKay, at this particular interview of which I spoke, the employee of the Minister of Defence Production, then referred to the federal Department of Agriculture at Ottawa and particularly to the minister, that is the Minister of Agriculture; and Mr. McKay stated that he had instructions that the minister, that is the Minister of Agriculture, wanted the contract cut.

I say again that this statement is false and without foundation.

> Mr. Trach, I am informed, told Mr. McKay that in his opinion the Department of Agriculture could not break the contract nor could the Department of Defence Production, since it was in writing and properly executed. But Mr. Trach was then informed by Mr. McKay, according to my best information, that there was a group of lawyers in Ottawa looking into the validity of the contract.

Mr. McKay, during his telephone conversation with Mr. Trach, simply advised him that if he was not agreeable to shortening the contract period he, Mr. McKay, would have to refer the file to Ottawa as the question of reducing or terminating a contract was actually a legal matter and was not within his area of purchasing jurisdiction. As I have already mentioned, this contract ran to its normal completion date of March 31, 1964 and it was not reduced or terminated; and as the hon. member first made reference to this contract on April 24 of this year, it is quite apparent that there was little substance to the fears which were apparently or allegedly expressed by Mr. Trach.

Then as reported at page 3018 the hon. member went on to quote a statement which Mr. McKay was alleged to have made to Mr. Trach, which reads as follows:

—"we can, in accordance with instructions from Ottawa, find something wrong with your product".

Mr. McKay did not make any such statement, and anyone who says he did is guilty of telling untruths.

Again at the same page the hon. member stated that Mr. McKay was alleged to have said the following words to Mr. Trach, and these words are in quotation marks in Hansard:

—"I do not like to bring this up in reference to having your products declared unfit, but it is my superiors and the Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa that I take my instructions from".

This likewise is not only false but patently false. Mr. Trach knows that Mr. McKay is an employee of the Department of Defence Production. Mr. McKay knows that he is responsible to the Minister of Defence Production, and he knows he is not responsible to, nor does he take instructions from, the Minister of Agriculture. I say again that this alleged statement is not only false, it is manifestly false.

On May 7, Mr. Chairman, I stated that I would be quite prepared to get an affidavit from the Department of Defence Production employee concerned. I now have that affidavit dated May 8, 1964 from Mr. McKay. One of the paragraphs in this sworn statement I will now quote. It is the concluding paragraph, which is as follows:

After seeing the report set out above I was in touch with Mr. Trach and referred to the said report and Mr. Trach, on the telephone, admitted to me that I had never made such a statement to him or in any other way threatened him and that the report arose from the fact he—

—that is referring to Trach—

—assumed that steps might be taken by the department to have the approval of his establishment rescinded.

That is the end of the quotation from the affidavit. The report to which he makes reference is the Canadian Press report appearing in the Edmonton Journal of April 25, 1964 of a statement made in the House of Commons.

At the time of the earlier discussion, Mr. Chairman, I asked the hon. member for Yukon, who I regret to say is not in the house today, to produce some kind of evidence to substantiate that Mr. McKay had made these statements. I now have the sworn statement of Mr. McKay that he made no such statement, and I challenge the hon. member for Yukon to produce an affidavit from Mr. Trach to the contrary effect. I regret that he has been unable to do this, and perhaps in the light of his inability to do so he will withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements by the Minister of Agriculture and by the Minister of Defence Production this morning, and in view of the absence of the hon. member for Yukon, I should like to make one or two requests. The first is that the Minister of Defence Production table in the house the affidavit of Mr. McKay. Second, I ask we hold this matter in abeyance until the hon. member for Yukon is back in his place in the house. I think the gravity of the situation can be measured by the fact that we have so many ministers in the house here today. I for one, as an ex-minister of the department, would hope that the Department of Agriculture keeps free from any type of action which this country has been trying to move away from for several years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that I can speak for the whole house when I say to the Minister of Agriculture that we have a feeling that he has tried to resist any efforts to bring patronage into his department, but that we also have a feeling that there is great pressure being applied to him; and I do not know whether he will want to speak about this pressure.

I should like to mention one matter to illustrate the type of thing which concerns me, because I have been told about some of these activities in connection with Farm Credit Corporation lawyers; and it is very clear that the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation has not advised this sort of thing.

Now I should like to ask the minister whether he received a letter from a Mr. Nichols from the town of Indian Head, Saskatchewan, dated April 22 last, dealing with a similar type of matter which has concerned his department. I think that to keep the matter clear on the record I should read the letter, and I simply want to know what the minister has done about the letter, which was sent to him, a copy being forwarded to me. The letter is as follows:

Dear Sirs,

It has recently come to our notice that the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, has called for tenders to supply a one ton truck to the experimental farm at this point.

We understand that some 12 to 14 dealer names were listed for tender, but only one dealer in Indian Head, namely Campbell Sales and Service, was given the opportunity to tender.

General Motors Sales manager phoned us today, asking why we were not required to submit a tender, and the only answer we could give was that Campbell, a practically new dealer here, was a very active supporter of the Liberal party.

We have been motor dealers in this town and district for the past 47 years. Our pay roll supports a staff of seven employees and their families, averaging 16 years continuous employment. We have not required any employee to claim unemployment insurance benefits by reason of lay off in the trend of our business, and this is the first time in our recollection that discrimination has been shown in the matter of who shall, or who shall not, be privileged to tender on purchases for the government farms at Indian Head.

Yours very truly,

Nichols Garage.
Per D. L. Nichols.

My request here, Mr. Chairman, is simple. We are very anxious in this committee to make certain that the Department of Agriculture is not used to dispense patronage. There is so much trouble in many areas of farm economy that this cannot be tolerated. I am sure the minister joins me in this opinion. I have heard enough to know that he has been resisting these pressures, and I want him to know that we are backing him in this resistance. This is a case which I am sure is very small, but it does indicate that in an area where villages are small and there are not enough people in and around them to do any more than barely to keep alive merchants, car dealers, and so on, under no circumstances can the politics of a particular company influence such transactions as I mentioned. I happen to know that with this particular company its politics are one way one election and another way the next. Therefore I suggest that great care be taken to see that in the rare cases when a truck or car is to go up for tender for an experimental farm in an area such as this, all the merchants in the town are given a chance to bid. Usually, of course, the lowest tenderer wins. But in view of the statement which the minister has just made I should like to ask him whether he has dealt with this letter which was sent to him on April 22 and how he has dealt with it.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I have a faint recollection of this letter. I will look into the matter but if I recall correctly the statement is not exactly correct in that a number of people tendered on this particular truck and the lowest tender received the business.

To get back to the other question, I certainly believe that the government of Canada and all governments as a matter of fact would be better off if they did not deal with patronage. Nevertheless, we all know that this has been going on for years. I think the time has come when responsible people should realize that we are working for the people of Canada, that everything should be based on merit and that we just do not need to do these things to have good government.

I am a little surprised, however, that the hon. member would raise this question. When I became Minister of Agriculture I may have got off to a fairly slow start but I can tell the hon. member I am going to end up with a pretty good department, and the farmers will say the same thing. On the 10th day of June, 1957, the Progressive Conservative government was elected and on the 21st day of June they took office. I think the hon. member should know that my investigations have revealed that action was taken 35 days later which resulted in 72 lawyers from coast to coast in Canada receiving no more farm loan board work. I found the same situation through my department.

I have seen several personal and confidential letters, but I will not table them in the House of Commons because if I have to be a member of parliament under those circumstances I do not want to be here. I do not think this should be done. I can assure the hon. member that we are working for the Canadian farmer. This is one of the reasons why we called in all the branch managers of the Farm Credit Corporation and explained to them that we were going to cut 10 days off the time it takes to service loans, 48 to 38 days. I think we have to do this. I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that the sooner we get the business of government on this sort of basis the better it will be for everybody in Canada.

Mr. Hamilton: I should like to follow this point a little further. Did I understand the minister to say that when he took office he found there had been dismissals of lawyers doing farm loan board work? Is he not aware that there was a change from the farm loan board to the Farm Credit Corporation? If he is prepared to enlarge on this situation, is he not prepared to say what has taken place since the government changed in 1963? I am going to ask him now to give us the names of all barristers who have worked for the Farm Credit Corporation, the date they were appointed and the names of those who are still doing this work.

I think the minister will find that the pressure I have been talking about, which I am sure the minister has resisted, has resulted in quite a number of changes. In my opinion the accusation should not be focused on the Minister of Agriculture but right on the department of the Minister of Justice from where the pressure has been coming. In my defence of the minister I do not want, as he does not want, to try to stop any move to improve the situation but I suggest to the minister that if he is going to go into the Farm Credit Corporation he had better open up the whole bag. If he does open up the whole bag the record will not be too good. I am talking about the time before an attempt was made to try to straighten out the situation. I am just saying that before the minister starts making these suggestions about the Farm Credit Corporation he should know what he is talking about.

With regard to the letter from Mr. Nichols, which was addressed both to him and to me, I am glad to table it. The minister says he has only the faintest recollection of the letter, but then he went on to say something was done about it. I want to know what was done about it and whether the truth is that he has no recollection or that he did do something about it.

Mr. Hays: I am quite familiar with the situation regarding the farm loan board and the Farm Credit Corporation. The farm loan board was replaced in part by the Farm Credit Corporation and the 72 people to whom I have referred were employed to service the farm loan board from coast to coast. I am referring to the whole bundle, all of them.

With regard to the second question, as to lawyers that are working for the Farm Credit Corporation I would point out that information giving their names, addresses—everything—was tabled in the house about two weeks ago.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I wonder whether the minister would answer a question regarding the change from the farm loan board to the Farm Credit Corporation. I know that at that time the situation in Manitoba was that city lawyers were handling the business under the Farm Credit Act and changes were made so that lawyers in the rural areas would be used for the convenience of farmers who were borrowing money. This has worked out extremely well and I hope the minister will not change this policy.

Mr. Hays: I do not think we intend to. All I suggested was that these lawyers were all given notice that they were no longer required.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, before we interrupt the sequence I would remind the committee that the Minister of Agriculture agreed to table certain correspondence he had received in connection with the suggestions made by the hon. member for Yukon and I am wondering whether the Minister of Industry would also do the same. He made reference to correspondence he had received directly from the trade and he certainly referred to and read from an affidavit. He was asked to do so by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and we have not had an answer. Under the rules of the house is it not necessary for him to table this document which has now become a public document and from which he has quoted one paragraph?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I challenged the hon. member for Yukon to produce an affidavit supporting the allegations he made and I said I would in turn produce an affidavit supporting my denials. I would be delighted to table the affidavit I have when the hon. member for Yukon produces his.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rhéaume: The Minister of Industry read from a document which he alleges is an affidavit supporting his position and I insist, and I think the committee has a right to insist, that the minister table it rather than saying that if the hon. member for Yukon will step outside they will settle the matter. He read a paragraph from an affidavit which he says he has and we want to see the whole document.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, while I recognize that the hon. member for Yukon cannot produce his affidavit I will be glad to table mine and end this discussion.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the Minister of Agriculture said that he plans to try to keep patronage out of his department. I should like to ask him one question. If there is no patronage, why was Mr. Lucien Blanchette, who was on the advisory committee and who lives in La Présentation, county of St. Hyacinthe, replaced by a man by the name of Lamoureux from St. Denis Sur Richelieu? I cannot give you the first name. For what reason was he replaced, and who recommended Mr. Lamoureux for such a position?

Mr. Hays: I cannot reply at the moment, but I will have an answer for the hon. member in a few minutes.

In reply to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, may I say that we will get a copy of the instructions that went out. These instructions, of course, went out to all people of our department. So far as I am concerned, they were to the effect that all automobile dealers were to be asked to tender for vehicles. This is the information I have at the moment, but I will probably have a copy of the instructions within the next few minutes.

Mr. Cardiff: May I ask the minister to tell me how many lawyers for the Farm Credit Corporation in the county of Huron have been changed since his government took office?

Mr. Hays: I cannot give the exact number, but I will be glad to look it up. I believe this information was given to the house a few weeks ago when the names of all lawyers right across Canada were tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, to continue the remarks I started last week when we were considering the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I am pleased to point out that the riding of Lotbinière I have the honour to represent is basically agricultural and typically rural. I am proud to take this opportunity to speak on behalf of the farmers of my riding.

The federal riding of Lotbinière includes the provincial county of the same name and several parishes of the provincial riding of Nicolet which are well known to my hon. friend for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent). By its essentially rural and agricultural character, the district of Lobinière-Nicolet-Yamaska is a typical area of the province of Quebec. Mr. Chairman, certain parishes of my riding are very prosperous but others are faced with very serious economic difficulties. For instance, out of a total number of 2,571 farms, 1,869 are economical and 702 are marginal.

According to the definition given at the time of the 1961 census, an economical farm is one which provides an income of at least $1,200.

Mr. Chairman, there are 1,869 economical farms in the county of Lotbinière and 1,100 of them bring a gross income of less than $2,500. That is indicative of the alarming situation of farmers in Quebec, and in Lotbinière in particular, because, as everybody knows, $2,500 or less is a very small gross income indeed, considering the heavy responsibilities of farmers.

Farm mechanization and farm maintenance entail quite heavy expenditures. In addition, farm credit charges and all other charges farmers must meet require a much higher income than what they are receiving now.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I think that, as I pointed out earlier, it would be better if, instead of accusing our hon. friends opposite, the Conservatives, of having shown negligence, incompetence and inertia, while they in turn examine the statistical data of 1963-64, to compare them with figures of the previous years, and then tell us that the present government has also shown itself to be negligent in the performance of its duties, it would be better if, with one accord, in harmony, we were to consider objectively the farm problems in the province of Quebec, because it is becoming more and more crucial.

Mr. Chairman, during the past several years, thousands of farms have been abandoned. I think that, from 1931 to 1961, more than three million acres of land have been abandoned. The rural population has been reduced by many thousands, which explains the certain lack of interest we have now towards agriculture. Today more than ever, it is important to restore farm land and agriculture, because our young people especially seem no longer interested in those areas and farming can no longer attract them at all. And that is precisely because of the very low income the farmers are receiving.

It seems obvious, Mr. Chairman, that the present government could model itself on the pattern of the provincial government of Quebec, which has appointed a committee, a member of which is the deputy minister of agriculture, Mr. Chagnon, who is well known for his ability and experience, to study the marketing of farm products.

Mr. Chairman, that committee applied itself to inventory the total farm resources of the province of Quebec and to determine to what extent they could be marketed, because the problem facing Quebec agriculture is one of productivity and marketing.

It is known that the province of Quebec is unable to produce enough pork, beef, lamb, potatoes or tomatoes to meet the needs of its own consumers. Therefore, if our farmers were given a better leadership, if they had an appropriate stimulant resulting from a dynamic policy, they could increase their production so as to meet the requirements of the Quebec market, because, as I said, in several fields, production is not up to consumption within the province of Quebec.

Some thought should be given to eastern agriculture in particular because since western farmers are favoured by bumper wheat crops and enjoy many more advantages due to their fertile lands, eastern farmers often find themselves in an inferior position.

Mr. Chairman, without any intention of flattering the government, I must point out that the present administration has taken a very wise step in favour of eastern farmers by appointing a minister of rural development under a measure that will, I hope, soon be passed by the house, in order to create officially the office of minister of rural development. I believe that our achievements have exceeded our promise in that regard. As a matter of fact, we had promised during the 1963 election campaign to appoint an associate minister of agriculture. But what could an associate minister have done more than the associate deputy minister of agriculture?

We, the members from Quebec, asked the Prime Minister during a caucus to give us two ministers of agriculture. We wanted more than what we had promised in our electoral platform, and I think that the fact of having appointed a French speaking minister of rural development who, even if he is not minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, will be in a position to deal more closely with problems of agriculture in eastern Canada, because rural development is precisely the primary problem in Quebec, a great step forward.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that ARDA should be put into operation in Lotbinière constituency and be successful. I intend to see to it that the farmers of my riding may take advantage of ARDA.

I referred a while ago to the number of farms in the constituency of Lotbinière and I said that some were economical while others were marginal. There is in Lotbinière some thriving parishes such as St. Edouard, St. Pierre les Becquets—with which the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) is well acquainted—and St. Antoine.

On the other hand, we have other parishes where lands, without being completely uncultivated, are poor. At Val Alain, Joly and St. François, it would be possible, through ARDA, to give a new direction to farming and help farmers who live in those parishes and whose income is clearly insufficient. I feel that if a well suited program were applied, under ARDA, those parishes could enjoy greater prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, we could also use another method to restore the economy of rural regions; that method is part of our political platform.

We advocated the industrialization of those rural regions and there cannot be a better time for me to urge the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) to make all necessary efforts so that an industry may be established in St. Sylvestre, where the radar station will be closed. That would be in perfect agreement with the electoral program we put forward.

St. Sylvestre is another rural area and if an industry could settle there, it would make up for the losses resulting from the future closing down of the radar station that had brought a measure of economic activity to the region.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture in Quebec is affected by another very important matter, that of the exorbitant prices of feed grain and mixtures. There again, the new minister of rural development will be able to make his influence felt and show his efficiency in view of the fact that the storage of feed grain will come under his jurisdiction. And everyone knows that the problem of feed grain is closely linked to that of agriculture in Quebec.

The Quebec farmers want to pay the same price as the western farmers for feed mixtures and feed grains. Let the government pay the freight from Fort William up to the province of Quebec, so that our farmers can pay the same price as the western farmers for feed mixtures. That is legitimate.

But, Mr. Chairman, it would be necessary to hold an inquiry into the speculation which takes place. In fact, for a long time now, the Catholic farm union has been asking for a grain agency in eastern Canada. It also requests that speculation regarding the sale of feed mixtures and grains to Quebec farmers be restrained and that since a claim from the Catholic farm union comes within this problem, another problem affecting the eastern farmers, that is on every dollar of farm production, on a generalized and average basis, 58 cents only go into the farmer's pockets while 42 cents are going somewhere else, maybe in the pockets of the middlemen, speculators, in short of those who probably want to take advantage of the farm people. I am told that in the United States, the government is considering the setting up of an inquiry in order to study that striking spread between the farmers' income and the total cost of production.

As I said, the spread is 42 cents in the province of Quebec. The government should certainly look into the situation and carry out an investigation if necessary, to find out the reason for such a wide margin.

Mr. Chairman, the dairy industry is admittedly Quebec farmers' largest industry. Mr. Georges-Henri Vermette, president of the Quebec industrial dairymen's association, who is also the reeve of the county, lives in the riding of Lotbinière. Like the Vermette plant, the farmers of Lotbinière do business with the Coopérative de Granby, another institution that does us credit, since it processes as much as 33 per cent of all dairy products in Canada and produces approximately 40 million pounds of cheese, that is one third of Canada's total production. As you can see, in the province of Quebec the dairy industry is really the corner stone of agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I am informed that Mr. Vermette, president of the Quebec industrial dairymen's association, submitted a request to the Department of Agriculture. I would like to take this opportunity to support his request as strongly as I can.

In view of the fact that the dairy industry accounts for half of the farm income in the province of Quebec, I feel that Mr. Vermette was justified in requesting the Department of Agriculture to increase the number of bilingual employees in its dairy products division. I am making this representation without any paltriness, pettiness or narrow-mindedness. The director of the dairy products division is not bilingual and I make it my duty to strongly request the minister to appoint a bilingual assistant director of the dairy products division. I submit this request in view of the fact that the dairy industry plays a major role in the province of Quebec and, consequently, for farmers of that province.

Mr. Chairman, I pointed out earlier that the gross annual income of a large number of farms in Lotbinière is under $2,500. In fact, 60 per cent of the farms in the province of Quebec have a net annual income which is lower than $2,500. Consequently, the restoration and reorientation of agriculture is imperative, and in order to permit the farmers of our province to have direct relations with the authorities of the Department of Agriculture we must intensify our drive for bilingualism so that the farmers of the province of Quebec may be understood and feel at home when they have to consult with the authorities of the Department of Agriculture.

I would not like to extend my remarks unduly. I just wanted to submit those few problems which closely affect the people I am representing here.

Mr. Chairman, a rather critical situation prevails in the province of Quebec; it is, somehow, an ideological storm in which our people are struggling. Yesterday, I heard the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) a question in which he expounded in thunderous words the somewhat dramatic situation of which we are well aware.

Indeed, several people in this country are trying to give to the policy of this country a trend which is not acceptable to us. The advocates of an ideology which would tear up Canada might, one day, resort to the same strategy as a man like Castro who also upheld agrarian reform?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is hardly dealing with agriculture.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I am dealing with agriculture when I say that it is vital to restore our farming industry and that there have been people like—

Mr. Habel: Castro nationalized all the farms.

Mr. Choquette: The people of the province of Quebec, and more particularly our rural population, are stable and do not want tremendous revolutions. But who knows, perhaps, some day a dictator not unlike Castro, by means of a farm policy similar to his, might advocate an agrarian reform due to the fact that our farming industry is, at present, in a sorry state. It might happen, Mr. Chairman. A dictator, a rabble-rouser could raise prejudices and tell the farmers who are poverty stricken: We are going to bring you land reform measures.

That is what we want to avoid. But, if agriculture is continually losing ground in Quebec, if our farmers are constantly complaining that their revenues are insufficient, we must anticipate that at that time, rabble-rousers like the ones across the floor of this house, will stir up people's passions and will attempt to tear the country apart when we are trying to unite it.

Mr. Ricard: We will talk to Mr. Lesage about it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, it gives me pleasure to rise immediately after the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). He was beginning to flare up, but he always came back to the same old rabble-rousing tactics, a charge which he frequently levels at other people. In any case, I do not wish to go along with that kind of jesting and I shall discuss more serious matters concerning agriculture because there are too many serious problems in that field. When you know farming and when you are a farmer's son, I can assure you that it is very amusing listening to a small town lawyer discuss that matter.

When I take a look at the amount of $140,124,800 that the house will have to vote for the Department of Agriculture, it is quite natural for me, as a member from the province of Quebec, to wonder what part of that amount will go to my province, in comparison with the others.

Being the second largest province in confederation, Quebec will be called upon to pay its large share of the taxes required for the administration of that budget. Will it share proportionately in the few advantages that this budget, if it is well administered, could bring to the various provinces?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Roberval is reading his speech verbatim. I am amazed to see a man such as he who pretends to know farming so well, being unable to make a speech without reading it, while a lawyer who is not supposed to know agriculture can make his observations without having to read them.

I ask that the hon. member for Roberval be called upon to order and stop reading a speech written by someone else. He should simply consult his notes as he proceeds, as I did myself.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall accept any abuse from this little braggart; but when the member for Lotbinière says I had my speech written by somebody else, I shall ask him to retract his words.

Mr. Choquette: I am ready to withdraw my words, Mr. Chairman, if the member for Roberval will stop reading his speech, so as to prove to us that it is really his own text he is reciting and not somebody else's.

Mr. Gauthier: Let the member for Lotbinière come and see my notes, Mr. Chairman, and he will find they are in my own handwriting. He himself refers to notes. I have here all necessary books to support my remarks. I have always spoken with notes. Everybody here, and even yourself, Mr. Chairman, speaks from notes. The remark made by the member for Lotbinière is only intended to pull down the members of the house and increase his own stature. It is not by trying to crush others that a man proves his greatness. It is through his own intellectual qualities that a man shows what he is worth. Now, I see that the hon. member for Lotbinière is lacking in this respect.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Roberval is well aware that the rules of this house do not permit him to read a speech. But if he is using notes to remind him of the things he wants to say, I would think he is quite in order and I would invite him to continue with his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I shall now be able to continue my remarks on agriculture.

Will the distribution of various services and subsidies be fairer to the province of Quebec than it was in the previous years? Those are urgent questions that we must ask during the discussion on these estimates. If we look at the last 30 years, they were not a success for the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, the only increase we find in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture is the one in respect to taxes.

That is why in the last 30 years the income of Quebec farmers has been dwindling, to reach its lowest level last year.

So, we will demand more concrete action on the part of this government in order to correct a situation which constitutes rank discrimination against Quebec farmers.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) stated, and rightly so, that Quebec should enjoy a status different from other provinces in the confederation. Now that should apply especially to Quebec's agriculture.

That is why we were dismayed when they confined to oblivion the setting up of a department of agriculture for the east, the only thing that might have given back to Quebec this status that the Prime Minister admitted it should have.

I can tell you that I am greatly disappointed with the general and vague steps taken by this government in the field of agriculture.

Far from keeping his word, and living up to his promises, the Prime Minister has been even more remiss in his duties, since he gave the administration of ARDA, established for the development of farm lands, to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé).

The member for Lotbinière has spoken earlier about a department of rural development merged with the Department of Forestry. It is still expressed in general terms, and does not indicate at all that any direct action will be taken for the province of Quebec.

What we need, is an organization strictly for Quebec; it does not matter whether we are given a department for eastern Canada, an associate minister or even a joint program for eastern Canada. What we need is an organization that will make a direct contribution to the economic and agricultural life of Quebec. That is why we expected in the past years the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada.

Today the government seems to be playing upon words. But as far as we are concerned, the issue is very clear. We need an agency of our own. Let it be called a joint program. Besides, all other provinces do have specific joint programs for their particular fields. Thus, we would be satisfied with a joint program, although we are usually against such programs.

Instead of renovating Quebec farm lands, I think that the new legislation will help to renovate forests and to develop our rivers.

We had a magnificent instance of it when the ARDA legislation was discussed during the last few days, and we dealt with every waterway in Canada instead of the rehabilitation of the land.

Instead of going back to the farm or to the land, I have a feeling that, tomorrow, we will return to the bush. Anyway, as ARDA is no more part of the Department of Agriculture—but as I do not want to be out of order, I shall come back to that famous legislation when the estimates of the forestry department are introduced, as it is today the only way to get around to the land.

In spite of all these gropings on the part of the government in the field of agriculture, I shall try to salvage a few crumbs from that plentiful budget, for the benefit of my province, by calling the minister's attention to two main points.

The first one is the creation of joint specific schemes for the province of Quebec, as we hardly can hope to get rid of those policies, which always aimed at helping the provinces which were poor once, but are poor no longer.

Second I am asking the government to amend the Farm Credit Corporation Act, in order to adjust the federal loans to the economic structures of farming in Quebec, which is not at all similar to farming in the west, and consequently cannot be subjected to the same rules.

If we consider the joint programs of the last few years, we find that 80 per cent of that joint planning was meant for the western provinces.

More particularly in the last two years, we have been begging the successive governments to put an end to those famous schemes and give back taxation powers to the province of Quebec, so that it may revive its own farm economy.

The budget shows us that the federal government gives two kinds of grants to the provinces. First of all, by applying general programs to all provinces without distinction, second, by resorting to specific programs for each given province.

In the first case, we find that the programs are set up in very broad terms, and thus cannot efficiently apply to Quebec; and in the second case, with regard to specific schemes for particular provinces, almost every province has had its share, except Quebec, which was left out.

To convince yourselves, you should read carefully the 1962 report on these famous joint projects. I outlined the main aspects thereof in a recent speech to the house, and I then thought I had succeeded in opening the eyes of the present government, with a view to the preparation of its present estimates. To my great disappointment, nothing has yet been done, and nothing will be done this year, since the same errors appear again in the new estimates.

You have only to glance at the various items under vote No. 5 on research, amounting to $29,344,400. What will this vote bring to the province of Quebec? Taxes. As for vote No. 35, concerning fruits and vegetables, in the amount of $25,762,200, I am afraid the province of Quebec will not get the least advantage therefrom this year, in view of the dilatoriness of the provincial government in its projects for the construction of potato warehouses and cold storage.

Votes 55 and 60 prove what I said in my introductory remarks, namely that specific joint projects with some provinces or areas are the most fatal to us, and that nothing has changed in this respect.

Mr. Chairman, if we look at votes 55, 60 and 65, for which we are asked to allow an amount of $42,463,600, we can read for instance in vote No. 55:

Irrigation and water storage projects—Bow river irrigation project—St. Mary's irrigation project—South Saskatchewan river project—Buffalo Pound lake reservoir—

Those are ARDA projects.

Mr. Chairman, if you refer to page 37 of the estimates, you will see the following breakdown of the various grants.

Community pastures—$1,375,000.
Irrigation projects, southwestern Saskatchewan —$243,000.
Re-settlement and land use.

We could get something out of that also, but the amount indicated is nil.

Supply, equipment and service depot—$728,000.
Bow River irrigation project—$976,000.
St. Mary's irrigation project—$357,000.
South Saskatchewan river project—$1,274,000.
Buffalo Pound lake reservoir—$90,000.

That was only meant to give you an idea of what the province of Quebec gets since the implementation of those famous joint plans.

To supervise the good administration of this act, the department appointed what they call credit advisers, supervisors and all kinds of inspectors or assessors.

It seems to me that some do not do the job for which they get paid by the minister. According to the act, the credit advisor must try to find out the best solution, in order to enable a farmer to live better on his farm, to give the proper advice which will enable the farmers who own one, two or even three farms to stay on them.

I do not think it is the responsibility of the loan adviser to tell a farmer who owns a herd of 40 or 45 milkers or three lots of the best possible farm land, to sell his farm and move to the city.

I do not know whether some employees of the department act thus through lack of local knowledge, a wrong interpretation of the act or a partisan preconceived policy, but I was amazed by some decisions or some procedures taken by those employees of the corporation.

Therefore, I am asking the Minister of Agriculture to make a serious survey in the province, and especially in the riding of Roberval, in order to find out what is wrong, whether it is the personnel in charge of the administration of the act or the act itself.

For the time being, I will not accuse anybody in particular, but I would like the minister to personally look into this specific case and to make a survey in my constituency, with the help of people who have nothing to do with those who work there today. You are bound to admit that the main purpose of the corporation is to make loans so that more farmers will keep or buy lands on which they will be able to lead a decent and secure life.

For that purpose, your department appoints credit advisers to determine the possibility of granting loans to farmers who wish to modernize their equipment. Now, in my constituency—for I do not know what is going on in other ridings—it seems that the inspectors endeavour to find reasons not to loan money to farmers.

Do you want evidence? Out of almost 1,500 projects, barely 100 were accepted.

We pay a staff of four or five people or even more, to turn farmers down.

I wonder if the department watches the work closely enough. I shall say nothing of the touristic trips of some small appraisers, of some high officials and even of people from the Quebec office who go about their business accompanied by their wives. If a farmer does not own a modern house, he is denied a loan; again, some farmers have friends who wish to buy their neighbour's land to extend their farms and, consequently, advise those farmers, who have been established for 50 years to leave their land. I have to press, once more, for serious investigation to be made in my riding where you might discover some pretty sights.

To conclude, I wish to point out that the general work of the investigators does not help at all the development of agriculture as a whole.

They tell us: Yes, but it is better than in previous years when barely a hundred loans were made throughout the province. If you consider the increase in salaries paid today in that field, it makes you wonder if 1,500, 1,600 or even 2,000 farm loans in Quebec represent even a step forward, because in the small province of Saskatchewan only, more than 2,500 loans are granted each year.

Mr. Minister, some of your employees, when they are working, are satisfied with very little in the field of agricultural direction. And some even have the nerve to tell us, when some farmers, who are tired of waiting, complain to us: a member has no business here, he should stay in his office.

I feel that the first duty of a member of parliament is to make sure that the funds put at the disposal of each department are properly used. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I would be greatly remiss if I did not keep my eyes open in my riding.

It is also the responsibility of a member to look for any waste even on the part of the Department of Agriculture officials and to wage a relentless war on patronage both bureaucratic and political. No one can blame a member of parliament for doing that.

If the elected representative of the people does not have the right to seek justice for a farmer wronged by employees who are not always true to their duty, who will do it, I wonder. Mr. Chairman, I have waited a long time, I have waited patiently for months, after having been myself in certain offices in my riding, but all to no avail. As a matter of fact, it is always the same type of protectionist gimmick. That is the reason why I ask that an inquiry be held as regards the Farm Credit Corporation.

If the legislation is wrong, if it is not suitable to the province of Quebec, the minister should amend it. If the men there are inefficient, let us dismiss them and replace them by more responsible ones.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure for me, coming from such an agricultural riding, to have the opportunity to make some remarks on these estimates. I have appreciated listening to the complaints about the state of agriculture in rural Quebec. In the last day or two I spent some time looking at taxation statistics, and the records as they are available for 1960 and 1961 do reveal a dreadfully low state in that, in this huge province of Quebec, with all its cultivators and farmers, the actual taxes they pay are much less than are paid in the small and rather sparsely covered province, in terms of population, of Manitoba. Certainly I would add my pleas and those of my colleagues to encourage the minister to do something about this situation.

I want to concentrate mostly on some remarks the minister made on May 7 last in reply to what I thought was a well documented presentation in the sense that I understand documentation. The information was obviously recognizable to me and I am sure it was true. It was to the effect that, engendered by the Liberal party organization and working through the hon. member for Rosedale, the attempt is being made to ensure that in the field of legal patronage all government departments and agencies are forced to meet the requirement that friends of the government be favoured to the exclusion of others.

I want to put it to the minister that in replying to these comments of the hon. member for Yukon he did not in my view really get to the nub of the matter other than to give a general assurance that he wanted to cut out patronage in his department. He referred to the quality of the service and went on to say, as found on page 3025 of Hansard:

> If the lawyers do not service them immediately and they have not got a real good excuse, then they are to be replaced. Everyone who has been appointed as a lawyer handling Farm Credit Corporation loans has been instructed to do the work quickly. These are my instructions, and it must be done on merit, regardless of politics. My instructions are that no matter what a lawyer's politics are, if he cannot cut the mustard and service these loans for the farmers, then he is to be replaced. This will continue to be our policy.

That is excellent. I would say the minister would get almost unanimous support for that statement, except perhaps from some of the Neanderthal or dinosaur areas of the country. But this statement does not say a thing about the original appointments or whether there is a list of the appointments. It does not say anything about the trend I have heard remarked upon, and I think I can see it in my own area, the tendency for legal work of government agencies—I am not shocked that it is handled on a partisan basis—to be assigned more and more into fewer hands and for there to be a concentration in the cities and larger towns rather than in the smaller places. The minister should tell us whether his instructions are that lawyers are to be hired on the spot on the basis of their known ability rather than their political affiiation. I should like to know whether that is the overriding consideration. Otherwise it seems we are just going to get, if the minister carries out what he says he intends to, a long competing succession of inefficient Liberal lawyers being replaced by other Liberal lawyers.

It has always seemed a travesty to me that the legal profession, which takes such tremendous pride in its accomplishments and what it can do, is in a sense the last bastion of patronage in this country and in a sense it provides the skeleton, if you will, for political parties.

Now, it seems to me that the tie that binds the lawyers to patronage is a very simple one. It is money. It is a gross material interest. I am not going to condemn them for that. However, they have a special position. One of the things that bothers me is that very often what prompts a lawyer to be partisan is that when the party gets into power he gets these sinecures, in a sense, cinch money for carrying out the little chores provided by government agencies.

One of the ironies I have always felt, and I know some of my colleagues who are lawyers are going to object, is that it seems to me it is usually the poorer lawyers of the community who feel it is necessary to get these sinecures, who become the party hacks and so, after an election when the party has been successful they get into that long line-up for judicial appointments and appointments to commissions of inquiry. The minister, in this particular area, sounded to me like a real gust of fresh air. I am delighted that he has this attitude. I want to know a bit more about how he is going to set about doing it. I should like him to be a bit more candid about the difficulties he faces. I should like to know if he has the authority from the Prime Minister, and those people who stand around the Prime Minister as advisers, such as the head of the national Liberal organization, to go ahead so we can get rid of patronage in this department and proceed on the basis of talent and competition. This is what we would like to know.

I have heard repeatedly ministers of this government and the one before, and in my reading I have seen records of other government members, get up and give assurances they were going to start things new and clean. They were not going to go along with all these old traditions.

Mr. Benidickson: You have seen the Saskatchewan record.

Mr. Fisher: What about the Saskatchewan record? Are we talking about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benidickson: You have seen the Lloyd record?

Mr. Fisher: I have just discovered that Ross Thatcher has a pal here. I did not think he had many over on that side of the house. It is a good thing to know he has one.

My point is that, in so far as government agencies that have legal work are concerned, it seems to me that this work should be allotted to lawyers on the basis of talent and competition, and that there should be a scrutiny for the purpose of being sure there is talent at work. This is the promise the minister gave us. However, just as he gave the promise, the hon. member for Yukon read into the record a communication indicating that there is an inherent policy on the part of the government—I do not say the official government but I am thinking of the Liberal party as the government—to ensure that there is complete domination by Liberal partisans of the legal work done for government agencies.

It seems to me the minister needs to tell us a bit more about where he stands in this case. I am sick and tired of the Liberal party taking the stance in this country that it is the party of administrative genius and purity, especially when we get this kind of evidence. I am willing to accept the fact that the minister is untainted by these practices. I want to know that he has the authority to do something about it. I was told by a Manitoba member that all the P.F.A.A. inspectors in Manitoba were replaced by Liberals after the election. As a matter of fact I have an informant in Manitoba who told me the same thing.

Mr. Hays: I can assure the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that this is not true.

Mr. Fisher: That is not true; I am delighted to have the minister put that on the record.

Mr. Pigeon: Same old bunch.

Mr. Robichaud: The same with the information of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Benidickson: Remember the Saskatchewan record.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, if I could just rise above Ross Thatcher's buddy over there, I should like to say that the Minister of Fisheries interjected, "The same thing with the information of the hon. member for Yukon". I just want to say that the hon. member for Yukon indicated he possessed a letter and a record of some correspondence entered into by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice affecting these agencies that come under the minister. The minister never denied that this correspondence took place. He did not say that he did not know anything about it, as I recall.

We are not innocents here. I have not heard the hon. member for Rosedale issue any denial. The hon. member for Rosedale who, the Lord knows, uses his mouth well enough at other times, has not rushed in to tell us this is wrong, that he did not send those letters. We have to assume that these are the facts, and that he did. Knowing the hon. member for Rosedale, and despite that magnificent talent of his that seems to be recognized so much by the party, I cannot believe he did this on his own authority. I know a parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice is important, but I do not believe he is that important. Obviously, this was the result of some kind of instructions from someone higher up.

It would seem to me that this being the case, we have an instance where there is a policy on the part of the Liberal party, as the government, which is in contradiction to the position the minister has given. I say, more credit to him. I was very pleased when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle went out of his way to compliment the minister upon his new broom approach to things. I should like to ask the minister, despite in a sense the clarity and cleanliness he may bring to this position through not having a past history in politics, how far he thinks he is going to get in really creating an efficient department and doing the things he wants to do, if the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice is doing this kind of thing?

I have taken too long, Mr. Chairman, in elaborating this point but it is a worth while one and it has not been answered. I think the Minister of Agriculture might make a great name for himself in this nation just on this one point because, although I hate to try to speak in the name of the Canadian people, I am convinced they want to see an end to this petty, bootlicking, niggling patronage with which some of the parties try to go along and which seems to find a special attraction amongst the members of the legal profession who adhere like leeches to the Liberal party.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: The Union Nationale.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) is addressing remarks to the house from his seat. Now if there is anyone who is often guilty of breaches as regards the patronage he has been referring to, I think he is one.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, a while ago I saw the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) making signs like this, and I could not help thinking of the Union Nationale.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: In reply to the questions asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I may say that the only way in which these things can be answered and proven is through the passage of time. You can only be known by your deeds.

So far as the Pearson cabinet is concerned, I can assure the hon. member I never worked with a group of men so dedicated towards doing a good job for the Canadian people. I can only say that time will probably indicate whether we are doing some of the things that we suggested we would do, and some of those things are now in progress.

The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot asked a question as to why we had changed one of the members of the Farm Credit Corporation advisory board. This board has ten members appointed on a rotational basis, some members holding office for one year, some for two and some for three years. The replacement we made was of Mr. Blanchette by Mr. Lamoureux, and we invited farm organizations to list a certain number of names of people who could serve on the corporation. This was suggested by the president of the U.C.C., and the appointment was made on that basis. I have not met the gentleman but I understand he is of outstanding ability.

May I point out to hon. members of the committee that this is the eighth day the estimates of the Department of Agriculture have been under discussion this session. This is the third day so far as the main estimates are concerned, and we spent five days dealing with the supplementary estimates. I know hon. members do not have to do this, but since we have so much on the order paper dealing with agriculture I wonder would they be agreeable to moving along so that we can go through the various votes of the department.

There is so much farm legislation on the order paper that there will be ample opportunity again to discuss farm problems. We have the Farm Credit Corporation amendments, the farm improvement loan amendments, crop insurance legislation and, in addition to this, within the next few days we hope to put the new farm machinery bill on the order paper. It seems to me this is the sort of legislation that hon. members will want to deal with fairly soon and with some dispatch, because it is important. It will be good for the farmers, and might I prevail on hon. members to help me get along with my estimates since we have already discussed agricultural estimates for eight days this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the remarks just made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). First of all, he should not be allowed to leave the impression that this is the eighth day allocated to consideration of Department of Agriculture estimates since it is only the third day. True, we have examined supplementary estimates, but we had good reasons to do so under the circumstances since, as the Minister of Agriculture knows very well, that brought to light things that we might never have learned otherwise.

Moreover, neither the minister nor I were in the house in 1961. But I have been told that in 1961, item 1 as well as the other items of the Department of Agriculture's estimates were discussed for 12 days. This means that in 1961, the estimates for the Department of Agriculture were studied for 12 days, while we have now only devoted three days to them.

Before dealing with my subject this afternoon, I would like, first to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) whose riding is next to mine and who has somewhat established the basis of my remarks this afternoon. However, I would like to answer a few points.

For example, when he stated that during the election campaign last year, the Liberal party promised to the province of Quebec an associate minister of agriculture, this is not what I read in the political platform of his party, it is not what the farmers heard and that is not what was on the order paper of the House of Commons last year when, from May 20 to the adjournment, there appeared a resolution providing for the creation of the office of minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. Some hon. members and ministers even stated that the minister of agriculture for eastern Canada would be on the same footing as the present Minister of Agriculture.

Moreover, I should like to point out to the house, as well as to the hon. member for Lotbinière, that what we gained with the new Liberal government was simply the loss of a parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last year or two years ago, we had a full time minister of agriculture, a minister of forestry, a parliamentary secretary to the minister of agriculture and another parliamentary secretary to the minister of agriculture.

At the present time, we only have one parliamentary secretary; he may be worth two men, but he represents only one riding in Canada. All we have gained with the new Liberal administration is the loss of a man representing the minister of agriculture and all the members in the House of Commons.

The hon. member for Lotbinière raised another point. He said that during the years the Conservative government was in power, carelessness, inefficiency and apathy prevailed. I would not like to dwell on that this afternoon, because I would spend 30 minutes and even more relating everything which was done by the Conservative government, from 1957 and 1962. However, I shall ask the hon. member for Lotbinière to refer to a speech which I made in this house on September 28, 1962, when I had the opportunity to do exactly what he did last year, that is second the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is not exactly what I said.

[Mr. Vincent.]

On the contrary, here is what I said, and it will please the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent). I said that the Liberal members had a tendency of accusing the Conservative government of inertia, inefficiency and negligence, and that the Conservatives, in turn, were accusing the Liberals of doing nothing.

Now, what I wanted to suggest is that we cease to accuse and blame one another; that we go hand in hand in order to establish an agricultural policy in Canada, and particularly in the province of Quebec. I am sure that all the members will agree on that.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the remarks made by the hon. member for Lotbinière at this time, but I am somewhat disappointed to see that when the Conservatives were in office, those remarks could have been applied to the members sitting on this side of the house. I recall, for instance, that during the last election campaign they came and told Quebec farmers: "If you vote for the Conservatives, subsidies on milk and consumer goods will be stopped. All measures passed by the Conservatives themselves will be rescinded." The very opposite happened. The Conservatives are now in the opposition and the Liberals are in office. We see that subsidies on milk, lime and butter are disappearing gradually, and that is not done to help farmers, but to save money for the federal treasury.

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Vincent: Immediately after.

Mr. Choquette: Only one question?

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska has the floor.

Mr. Vincent: I should like, at this stage, to make a few comments on the remarks of the hon. member for Roberval. It is not my intention to take the government's defence, but when the hon. member for Roberval speaks about the farm credit corporation, I should not like him to create the impression that there is no farm credit for the farmers in the province of Quebec. He said that 2,500 loans had been granted in Saskatchewan by the farm credit corporation, while only 1,500 had been granted in the province of Quebec.

In the province of Quebec, we benefit from the provincial farm credit board that makes loans, or made loans at least at the time when another party was in power in the province, up to $30 million a year.

Now, I would like to deal, this afternoon, with a very important subject. The hon. member for Lotbinière admitted himself that the dairy industry is the basis of agriculture in eastern Canada.

On last April 29, the Minister of Agriculture made a statement in the house about a new program concerning the dairy industry and the production year opening on May 1, 1964, that is only a few hours before the institution of this new program.

Some time before, I had asked the Minister of Agriculture to announce this program early enough to give milk producers and dairies the opportunity to make representations if they could not accept it.

We realize that last year the government could not make that announcement before April 29 because, at that time, the Liberal party had only been in power for seven days, but this year the Minister of Agriculture should have made that announcement much earlier.

By referring to previous years I noticed, for instance, that the support price programs were announced for the years 1958 and 1959 on April 7, 1958, three weeks before the beginning of the new year. The program for 1959-60 was announced on April 23, that is a week before the start of the new year. In 1960-61, the program was announced on April 13, 1960, 17 days before the start of the dairy year. For the year 1961-62, the program was announced on April 20, again 10 days before the start of the new year. In 1962-63, it was announced on March 22.

Even though the then minister of agriculture was ill at the time, this program was announced in the house on March 22. And may I be allowed to point out that this program provided for a subsidy of 12 cents per pound to the consumer. It was a complete program as regards dairy products. This program was revised on April 9 and April 27, following the representations made by farmers.

This year, the program was announced only a few hours before the beginning of the new dairy production year.

What will be the effects of this new dairy program as regards our producers? It will surely not increase the already very low income of our eastern farmers.

We are already getting complaints and requests and reading in the country's farm newspapers editorials against that new dairy program which, I say it again, was announced at the very last minute to take the dairy producers by surprise and put them in an embarrassing situation.

In 1964-65, the producer who sends milk to the processing plant for butter will get 13.3 cents per pound of fat instead of getting, through the manufacturer and the federal government, 14.5 cents. That means that the producer will suffer a loss of 4¼ cents per hundredweight of milk, which will be made up by an increase of 1 cent per pound in the price of butter to the consumer. Therefore, the consumer will have to pay a basic price of 53 cents per pound for butter. That new policy will result in the Canadian consumer paying $3.5 million more, without the dairy producers getting one additional penny.

In the case of cheese, the 30 cent subsidy per cwt. of milk for cheddar cheese has been removed. This loss of several million dollars will be compensated by a payment of 3.6 cents per cwt. of milk for premium quality cheese.

The other day I heard the parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Agriculture tell us for instance, that nine pounds of cheese were being produced with 100 pounds of milk. I agree. Those figures are a bit more accurate than those given to us last year on another matter by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin).

But in the province of Quebec, only 86.8 per cent of the cheese is rated first grade, while 90.3 per cent in Ontario is first grade. The remainder of the cheese production does not benefit by this premium of 3.6 cents per pound.

Mr. Chairman, I received recently, just like the Minister of Agriculture, a petition signed by cheese producers of the constituencies of Nicolet-Yamaska, Drummond-Arthabaska and of St. Maurice-Laflèche. For the information of the house, I will read a few excerpts thereof:

> We have examined the new policy concerning grants for cheese production.
> We submit that to comply with the regulations established on May 1, 1964, while providing to the consumer the product which he wants, that is a fresh cheese, the price would necessarily be increased by 4 cents a pound, or the price to the farmer would be reduced by 30 cents per cwt. of milk. In either case, this would obviously be prejudicial and could entail very serious economic consequences.

Mr. Chairman, the federal government promoted the establishment of cheese factories. For instance, the first signature on the petition is that of Mr. Marcel Descôteau, of St. Grégoire. Mr. Descôteau obtained a grant from the federal government to set up his factory, and he retails all his cheese on the local market without having it classified or graded in Montreal. Since this cheese will not be classified, because the consumer insists on getting a fresh product, and Mr. Descôteau sells 893,000 pounds of cheese per year, this represents a heavy loss for him.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Descôteau had to boost his retail price by 4 cents a pound this week, in order to pay the farmers the price he received last year. And if you take into account the increase of 4 cents per pound in the retail price of cheese, this can only mean a lower consumption. In fact, we may wonder where we are going, since last year 1963-64, in Canada, the consumption of cheddar cheese was 99.9 million pounds, as against 102 million pounds in 1962-63. This means that last year, the Canadian consumption of cheddar cheese went down by 2.1 million pounds—

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member where he got these figures from.

Mr. Vincent: These figures were sent by the Department of Agriculture to La Terre de Chez Nous.

Mr. Hays: Are they d.b.s. figures?

Mr. Vincent: I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that when the d.b.s. figures are better than those of the Department of Agriculture, the government uses them. The government used to give the d.b.s. figures, but when they found that the figures of the Department of Agriculture were better, they gave those figures. This is what happened last year with regard to the price of milk. I got all the figures on the price of milk from the Department of Agriculture, and the figures are not the same as those of the d.b.s. Therefore it is only a way of saying: "Well, these figures are better and we are going to use them". I shall come back to this in a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the price of grain in Montreal. I shall speak about that later.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, this is a petition signed by cheese producers who sell their production on the local market. Mr. Marcel Descôteau retails 893,000 pounds on the local market; Mr. Paul-Émile Dionne, 68,000 pounds; the Société coopérative agricole of St. Germain de Grantham, in the Drummond-Arthabaska riding, 800,000 pounds; the Lemaire cheese factory, of St. Cyrville, 319,251 pounds. You also find the names of Mr. François Richard, of Kingsey Falls; Mr. Gérard Grenier, of Victoriaville; Mr. Henri Provencher, of Princeville; Mr. Félicien Lemaire, of my parish.

[Mr. Vincent.]

Their total production adds up to 3,202,884 pounds of cheese retailed on the local market and not classified.

This means that if the price is raised by 4 cents a pound, the consumer will have to pay an extra $128,155.36, because of the new support policy of the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, reactions are being felt everywhere. This morning, I received an issue of the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous, the official publication of the U.C.C. The editorial was entitled:

The price support program of dairy products.

And I also read this:

Would thousands of young cattle on highway 17 be more eloquent than our leaders?

Mr. Chairman, the writer of the article does not keep the exclusivity of this headline. As a matter of fact, he says:

Even if I cannot claim I thought first of the suggestion concerning the walking of young cattle on route 17, I submit it anyway.

In regard to the new price support policy, which should be designed to help farmers, instead—as too often stated by the Minister of Agriculture—of saving money for the federal treasury, here is what the editorial of the newspaper in question says, and I quote:

The firm and optimistic tone of the first sentence of the statement made by the Hon. Harry W. Hays, federal Minister of Agriculture, lead us to expect that dairy producers will be better off during the dairy year just begun.

Mr. Chairman, I thought we were the only ones in the house to realize that the Minister of Agriculture always begins his statements by a bombastic tirade which never leads to anything.

And further—

Even if the compound index for goods and services used by eastern producers in the country moved from 232.3 to 242.5 from January 1963 to January 1964.

Mr. Chairman, the minister never mentioned the fact that the prices paid by producers for goods and services increased by some ten points from January 1963 to January 1964.

As for cheese, a few days ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether the organizations concerned had been consulted before the announcement of this new policy. I do not question the words of the minister, but I simply read the editorial article, and I quote:

The producers have not been consulted, but their claims are ignored.

And still speaking of cheese, this is what the editorial says:

Here, we do not at all agree with the minister. In order to hand out to its patrons the equivalent of 30 cents for a hundredweight of milk, a factory should have an average production of 8¼ pounds of cheese for every hundred pounds of milk, which means that the net would have an average fat content of nearly 3.3 per cent and more to be classified 100 per cent, Canada, first grade. If we recall that during the 12 months of 1963, the province of Quebec succeeded in having 86.8 per cent (in Ontario 90.3 per cent) of its cheese classified as first grade, and further that, during the heavy production months, the average fat content of our vats is nearer 3.2 per cent than 3.3 per cent, we have to infer that in case of conditions similar to that of 1963, the producers-suppliers of the cheese factories will be forced, on the whole, to accept a cut of 5 cents in their delivery price, in comparison to last year's price.

And the editorial also deals with the bonus for cheese exports to the United Kingdom. As a matter of fact, it should be kept in mind that, last year, the farm organizations in Canada asked for the reinstatement of that 4 cent bonus not only for the cheese exported to the United Kingdom, but for all kinds of cheese.

This premium was again cut by another cent, so that the way things are going, two years hence the Liberal party will have taken away completely what the Conservative government had granted during its term in office.

Mr. Chairman, I believe my time is running out, and I wish—

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. member a question. In view of the fact that the hon. member is discussing an important phase of agriculture, and in view of the fact that I understand there are 129 elected Liberals in this parliament and only nine of them are here now, would the hon. member consider requesting the Chairman to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again when there are more government members present?

Mr. Benidickson: You are pretty thin over there too.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, last year, I had noticed, and was getting used to it, that whenever we were talking about agriculture the minister was not in the house. I have noticed it, at least on one occasion. But on several occasions, I found that in sittings of committees we were 13 or 15 Conservatives as against one or two Liberals. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) even told me that Liberals were not interested in taking part in an attendance contest, but only in discussing agriculture.

That is why I was not surprised this year to find only a handful of Liberal members, perhaps eight or ten, out of 129 present in the House of Commons.

When I spoke of feed grain last March 30, I stated that the government should introduce legislation enabling eastern farmers to set up a feed grain board. The same evening the Minister of Agriculture replied that price stability was an accomplished fact.

The next day, that is on March 31, I asked a question on the orders of the day. I had to wait, one month, one week and a few days before I got a reply that I already got the day before.

Once again, I do not question the statement made by the parliamentary secretary on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture to the effect that, for instance, barley was selling for $2.30 in September, $2.48 in October, $2.45 in November, $2.42 in December, $2,46 in January, $2.41 in February and $2.43 in March. I do not challenge those figures because they were probably secured from the federal bureau of statistics, as they look better than the figures of the Department of Agriculture. If the latter had been more favourable, they would have been used.

The parliamentary secretary was speaking of the price per hundredweight paid by retailers to wholesalers for barley and oats. I have here a price list which was sent to Mr. Louis Roy, a merchant in St. Perpetué, county of Nicolet, by a Montreal wholesaler whose telephone number is 931-1881, if anyone wants to check. According to that list, on September 7, 1963, barley was selling for $2.23½ per hundredweight as compared with $2.27 in October. I myself phoned a wholesaler in Montreal on January 8, 1964, to ask him the price of barley; I was told that it was $2.59½, that the price of oats was $2.55 to $2.59¾ and the price of No. 5 wheat $3.35½.

And those are price lists that retailers received from the companies which sell oats or barley and those retailers had to pay those list prices.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that the time allocated to him has expired.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I should first like to express to the minister our great satisfaction that he, with generous assistance from the official opposition, was able to resist the pressures of his cabinet colleagues in what was apparently an attempt to split the Department of Agriculture right down the middle and to relegate that department to a minor role in the affairs of the nation. I refer, of course, to the orders in council which were intended to strip the minister of his authority and which would have had the effect, had they not been rescinded, of destroying the effectiveness of one of our great departments of government. There was too much involved in this strange manoeuvre for either the official opposition or, to his credit, the Minister of Agriculture to stand idly by and see this happen. Because the Department of Agriculture has in the past played a very important part in bringing to the farming communities of the nation leadership, a measure of stability and assistance in times of stress, we believe it should continue to do so, provided it is given the opportunity by the government.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, up to now the government has not shown the vigorous action that the Prime Minister in the election campaign promised if he were elected his government would take on behalf of agriculture. In that regard I should like to read into the record a short paragraph from an article in the April 9 issue of the Family Herald written by their Ottawa correspondent. He says in part:

> It is still not clear what Mr. Pearson intends to do with the farm department—
> Undoubtedly this delay is partly the cause for the Liberals' faltering record in agriculture. Since they took office, not a single piece of farm legislation has been passed by parliament. The measures that have been taken were by cabinet orders in council and these were few in number.

It may be that there is a glimmer of hope that the government can no longer ignore its responsibilities to agriculture in that we have finally had some farm legislation put on the order paper. I refer to the amendment to the Farm Credit Act.

We were also pleased to note that the minister indicated in a statement to the committee that he hoped to strengthen the liaison between the research organization of his department and the communities in which they are located. Everyone agrees that there is continuing need to stress the importance of good public relations between the scientists responsible for research and the general public. But research, to be most effective, must be made available to those individuals and commercial enterprises which can make practical use of it. Research is no more valuable anywhere than that carried out by our research stations and the experimental farms, where experiments are done under local conditions and where they can be of great benefit to the communities concerned. I think most of us will agree that our agricultural scientists are the equal of any in this field in the world, and any additional efforts which the department can put forward toward assisting our farmers in the improvement in the quality of their cereal grains, special crops and livestock is a step in the right direction. There is no doubt that this is a specific area where we can improve our competitive position in the markets of the world.

The other day the minister, in answer to a question I posed to him, assured us that the government intended to bring in legislation to reinsure the provinces against losses in their crop insurance programs. We certainly welcome this assurance because until such time as the provinces are reinsured they are hesitant about extending their programs in that regard beyond a regional or experimental stage. I had hoped that this legislation would also be put on the order paper in order to assure the provinces that they would be covered for the current crop year. Perhaps the minister can give us further assurance that this will be done.

Another problem I wish to bring to the attention of the committee is of vital importance to the western economy and of great concern to the farmers of the three prairie provinces. Since it comes under the jurisdiction of the minister and is part of his duties and functions I should like to impress upon him and the committee the prime importance of the matter of railway branch line abandonment in relation to the future well-being of agriculture. I hope that as the minister responsible he insists that a long, hard look be taken at any abandonment and that it is established beyond any shadow of doubt that the public interest is protected before consent to such abandonment is given.

Because of the widespread concern in the province of Manitoba caused by the proposed abandonment by the C.N.R. of practically all their trackage south of their main line between Winnipeg and Brandon, together with additional abandonments contemplated in that area by the C.P.R., a branch line association was set up last fall which has now become province wide and has made this particular problem a part of their concern. In fact, the statement issued by the association at that time reads as follows:

> The recent announcement regarding abandonment of railway branch lines is causing concern in may sections of Manitoba and concern on the part of the many interests which will sooner or later be affected by such abandonment. A part of the anxiety is due to the extent of branch line abandonment which has been indicated to date and the importance that is attached to abandonment as a solution to the problems of the railways, especially in western Canada. It goes without saying that abandonment of branch lines should be subject to a thorough study and investigation from the standpoint of the costs of such abandonment to the individuals, municipalities and communities concerned.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Lisgar but I am having some difficulty relating what he is saying now to the first item of the agriculture estimates.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): With great respect, Mr. Chairman, I am glad you brought this to my attention because the abandonment of branch lines throughout western Canada is going to impose a severe strain on agriculture, particularly the great grain growing areas of the three prairie provinces. Aside from what I have already said, it is my intention to relate my remarks directly to the agricultural community. I have no intention of bringing in commercial enterprises or others that may be affected by such a move.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I think it should be made clear at this time, when the hon. member for Lisgar is making these remarks, that railway line abandonment has been put under the Minister of Agriculture in so far as the committee on organizing rational abandonment is concerned. Therefore I suggest that anything in connection with railway line abandonment can be properly discussed under item 1.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether I could be heard on the point of order. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle stated that the Minister of Agriculture has responsibility over rail line abandonment. If he will check more carefully I think he will find that the legislation has not yet been dealt with by the house and the Minister of Agriculture does not have that responsibility. It has been announced that he will have it after the legislation is passed.

What in effect is happening is that the hon. member for Lisgar in his remarks is attempting to anticipate the content of the railway legislation to be based on the resolution now on the order paper. That is the nub of the difficulty and, as the hon. member will appreciate, it is improper to answer him or discuss this subject because to do so would be to disclose the content of the legislation to the committee before it has been presented to the house. I am aware of the keen interest of the farmers of western Canada in this subject, but for that reason I suggest, with great deference, that this stage of these proceedings is not the place to discuss this very important subject, and that it is a matter for discussion under item 16 of the order paper.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think this should be said. I would probably agree with the minister that we should not go into too great detail. However, from time immemorial in this country the Crowsnest pass rates have been one of the basic foundations and cornerstones of the prosperity of western farmers, and I think it is notorious that the briefs presented by most of the agricultural associations and bodies of western Canada have pointed out how deeply affected individual farmers will be, because by reason of branch line abandonment many of the benefits that flow to them will be lost or at least seriously diminished in that railway line abandonment will add to the costs of the farmers. Consequently I submit with great respect that at least to the extent of a general application a member who discusses the possible effect of branch line abandonment at this time falls well within the ambit of item No. 1 and has the right to do so.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I was not attempting to anticipate legislation. What I was attempting to do was to bring to the attention of the minister responsible the very serious effects—I am sure that as a westerner he will agree with me—that the indiscriminate abandonment of branch lines is going to have on the farming community. However, I will shorten my statement in that regard to meet the wishes of the committee. I should like to continue only to the point where I can tie in rail line abandonment with the problems it creates for the farmers. Branch lines have been, and at least for the foreseeable future, will continue to be an integral part of our transportation system. Here is where I relate the matter to agriculture. The grain handling facilities made possible by their existence contribute to one of the most efficient marketing complexes now in operation. If lines are abandoned, naturally the railways will get the grain anyway at larger centres, but by doing so they are shifting the responsibility and the cost of marshalling the grain for export to the taxpayers of the provinces and the municipalities, who will have to assume the added burden and responsibility of building and maintaining highways and roads, and particularly to the farmers who will be faced with extra storage and delivery costs.

Earlier I mentioned there was no doubt that the railways would get this grain anyway at the larger centres. However, in so far as the farmers are concerned, what is lost sight of is the fact that grain can be transported to smaller elevators from the field, in almost any type of truck or trailer. Each truck or trailer can be handled just as quickly in these small local elevators as in the larger ones. Perhaps only a farmer or an elevator operator can possibly imagine the congestion at large centralized elevators during the harvest period. I assure you that even under the best of conditions, grain delivery would be practically eliminated during the harvest time, when time is of the essence. Under these circumstances, the farmer can expect not only higher delivery costs but added storage costs as well. I hope the minister will give us his assurance that before any action is taken in regard to branch line abandonment the public interest will be the first consideration.

In his opening statement to the committee, the minister was enthusiastic in his appraisal of the agriculture economy over the past year. This is understandable on the part of one whose department is deeply involved in the affairs of that industry. The rest of us would be more inclined to share that enthusiasm if there had been some action on the part of the government since they were elected that would show they understood the problems of agriculture, and that they had policies designed to meet them. Since the last election the farmers of this country have been benefiting from the groundwork laid by the former government for a long term program to assist agriculture, a long term program that was brought into being to help the farmer obtain his rightful share of the nation's economic well-being. There has been little done by way of furthering this aim by the present government over the past year, nor have any of the promises that were made to agriculture by the Prime Minister been kept. Whether or not this has been by accident or design remains to be seen, but time is running out on the election promises of this government such as the two price system for wheat and a floor of $2 for that grain. These promises, plus regional support prices for eggs and hogs are just some of the things the farmers were led to expect from the Prime Minister's statements at that time.

We know the minister has had these promises hanging over his head, and this has been enough to discourage any minister of agriculture, particularly in view of the fact he has had little assistance from his colleagues. I would point out to the minister, however, that it was he who promised something would be done about higher machinery prices. The committee set up by the former government was unable to complete its work on this problem but much valuable information was gathered which may be of assistance to the minister. No one suggests there is any easy solution, but the cost of equipping the average farm today can run as high as the price of the land itself. This makes it difficult for our future farmers to get an initial start. We will be waiting with interest anything in the way of a solution which the minister has to offer. We hope also he will be able to persuade his colleagues that the problems of agriculture are not static, but must be continually reviewed in the light of the changing needs of the industry. He can expect our full support in this regard.

I listened with interest to the debate that took place this afternoon concerning political patronage. I am one of those who believe that the minister is perhaps sincere in his desire to eliminate this vulgar, nasty proposition from his department. I am referring to the Minister of Agriculture, not to some of the other ministers who I have reason to believe are more politically minded. If this is the case, I can assure the minister the full support and confidence of the official opposition.

I, myself, would be quite happy to see political patronage eliminated. During the time I have represented my area I have not once played politics with anybody. When it comes to appointments of P.F.A.A. inspectors, and I have received something like 60 requests in one year, I refer them to Regina and I do not even ask the people for whom they voted. I sincerely trust that in the minister's handling of the affairs of his department, in my constituency at least, he will leave the situation that way.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Earlier this morning during the deliberations of the committee, the Minister of Industry wished to table a document. Does the house now give permission to the President of the Privy Council, on behalf of the Minister of Industry, to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if the business remains unchanged as announced?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the business will be the same as announced, but with the following exception. Now that I know an act respecting the territorial seas of Canada has come back from the other place I must advise the house that it is our intention to have it dealt with as the third item, that is, after the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act.

Otherwise the order of business will be the same as announced but, as I said earlier this morning, there will be a supply motion next week, probably on Wednesday; and on next Friday the estimates which we will take will be those of the Department of Public Works, which will be followed by those of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles: When the minister said a supply motion on Wednesday I assume he meant interim supply, which does not require a motion.

Mr. Favreau: Interim supply.

Mr. Barnett: Might I be permitted to ask the Minister of Justice, in reference to the bill concerning the territorial seas, whether it is the intention of the government to have this bill referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries following second reading?

Mr. Favreau: We will be in a position to advise the house of that on Tuesday, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Pursuant to special order of yesterday, this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday next.

It being five minutes after two o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED PRESENTATION OF DESIGNS BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, now that he has returned to Ottawa from the fields of prophecy, whether he would tell the house why the announcement as to the alternative designs he had in mind was not made in the House of Commons. Second, are these designs his own particular persuasion or have they been submitted to the cabinet? There are other questions that naturally arise, but I will commence with those two.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my statement to the Royal Canadian Legion on Sunday night the only reference I made to the design of a Canadian flag was as follows:

I believe most sincerely it is time now for Canadians to unfurl a flag that is truly distinctive and truly national in character—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson:

—and as Canadian as the maple leaf which should be its dominant design.

How the maple leaf is to be reflected in the design, which will be brought before parliament in due course, remains for decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now may I refer to the press conference which was to explain what up to that moment had been inexplicable. I ask the Prime Minister this. Did he place before the press conference two designs? Did he express a preference for one or the other and, if so, has either of those designs been considered by the cabinet, or are they simply an emanation of his own desire to bring about an even greater disunity in Canada than he has succeeded in doing thus far.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: My purpose in the pursuit of this policy, contrary to what the right hon. gentleman has said, is to bring about a greater degree of unity in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. MacNaught).]

Mr. Pearson: In that objective I hope—I am sure—I will get the support of the right hon. gentleman and of every other hon. member of the house, though we may differ as to the means by which that objective can be achieved.

As far as the press conference is concerned, the press asked me whether we had made any decision about this maple leaf design and I said no final decision had been made. I showed the press some of the great many designs which have been submitted to the government, especially three to which I was attracted, but no decision has been made as to the design which will be put before the house. The cabinet has been discussing the matter this morning and as soon as a decision has been made, and it is possible to do so, we shall put our policy in all its details in the form of a resolution and submit it to the House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the objective which the right hon. gentleman says he has in mind I am in agreement. But I am certainly in disagreement when he says that what he is doing will do other than work division.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now ask this. Will the Prime Minister table these several designs which he placed before the press conference, or referred to there, in order that parliament may have at least as much information on this matter as outsiders have?

Mr. Pearson: As I believe I have stated, a great many designs have been received. In a short time—in a very short time—I hope the government will have made a decision with regard to a particular design, and this design will be placed before parliament for the decision of parliament in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question I asked was whether these three designs would be tabled—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there not a degree of unity across the way yet as to which it should be? They cannot agree among themselves, and I can understand why they cannot agree anywhere else. I ask the Prime Minister this. How is the design which is ultimately determined upon to be presented to the house? Will it be by resolution or by bill, or does the same degree of disunity in the thinking of the government exist in this regard as in so many other matters?

Some hon. Members: Listen.

Mr. Pearson: I am happy to inform the right hon. gentleman that there is a very great degree of unity in the party I have the honour to lead. For the sake of the country I hope there will be the same degree of unity among hon. gentlemen opposite. I have received, personally, dozens and dozens of designs. I do not think it would be appropriate or desirable to table one or two of those designs. In due course, and it will not be long now, the design the government has agreed on will be submitted to the House of Commons for decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I point out that the Winnipeg Tribune shows two designs and states—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that the blue border flag was the favourite of the Prime Minister. I ask him, will he place on the table of the house these two flags, the designs of which he put before the press conference; or is he going to continue to deny parliament its rights?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to deny parliament its rights. This is the first time, in Canadian parliamentary history, I believe, that a matter of this kind has not been decided by order in council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That is accurate, Mr. Speaker. We are going to refer to this parliament for its decision a design which the government, discharging its own responsibility, has seen fit to put before parliament as a design suitable for submission and, we hope, for decision.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, does the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister mean that the government will accept responsibility for the design which it is going to bring before parliament?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker; as the government has accepted now for a good many months—indeed, for two years—the policy which will be embodied in that design.

Mr. Nowlan: I was not speaking of the policy; I was speaking of the design. Let us not evade the question any longer. We are now told that the government is going to put a design before parliament. Does the government accept responsibility for it?

Mr. Pearson: I do not intend to evade the question, Mr. Speaker. The government will indeed take responsibility for the design which it submits to the House of Commons.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister how he reconciles his statement to the house on Friday, that the matter of the design of the flag would be open to a free vote, with his statement to the press conference in Winnipeg that the government would resign if the proposal it made to parliament was turned down?

Mr. Monteith: Answer that.

Mr. Douglas: I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he considers a free vote to be one in which the members have an election pointed at their heads like a gun.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the members have had an election pointed at their heads like a gun in respect of every decision that has been made in this house on policy matters since we took over the government. I have pointed out, and I think I should make it quite clear, that when the government submits to parliament a matter of policy—and this is certainly a matter of policy—the government must stand or fall on the result of the decision of the house. But we have gone out of our way, and I have gone out of my way personally, to let the members of this party know that in a question so personal, so close to their conscience, so deep in their emotions, as a flag, a member of the Liberal party, in voting against the design submitted by the government, would not be read out of the party for so doing.

Mr. Douglas: I take it, Mr. Speaker, we are not to have a free vote.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the Prime Minister whether he would agree that it would be common courtesy to parliament, instead of peddling various designs around the country, if these designs were submitted to a parliamentary committee—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: —where they could be given full examination.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the suggestion that designs have been peddled around the country, and I would remind my hon. friend that when this issue was before parliament some years ago designs were submitted to a committee, some 1,700 were received, and no action of any kind was taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: An order in council was made.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I had not finished the point I was making.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario was on his feet for at least a minute before the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of what he has said, and in view of the howling from the Liberal benches today to questions on this matter, is it the intention of the government to pick a design and then ram it down the throat of parliament and the people of this country?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether it is not true that the committee to which he referred, which was chaired by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, did make a recommendation and that the government of that day, which was a Liberal government, did not act upon it?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it took that committee a very long time indeed to come to any decision in regard to a design because of the number of designs submitted. If we set up a committee for this particular purpose I am afraid that action would be postponed indefinitely, and we desire to take our responsibility in this matter as a government, which we indicated in two election campaigns we would be happy to be able to do.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate to parliament some of the dates he has in mind. That is to say, would he like to comment on whether he could accomplish all the steps which are needed to be able to submit a design to parliament before July 1?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very difficult to do this on the orders of the day, but we could have a supply motion next Monday, and if hon. gentlemen opposite are critical of the procedure of the government in this matter they could move a vote of no confidence on this question and that would give the house an opportunity to debate it fully.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would there be a free vote on that too?

Mr. Pearson: I hope my right hon. friend, who feels so deeply in this matter, will take advantage of the opportunity of a supply motion next week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has decided to bring in a red herring, may I ask him this. Will this motion on Monday next, this amendment, be a free vote?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, tell my hon. friend the form of the motion that he should produce; but if he produces a motion condemning the action of the government in this matter he can draw his own conclusions.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Does the Prime Minister not think it would be a good thing for the government to invite Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, during her visit to Canada, to come and raise on the mast of the parliament buildings the flag which the Canadian people will give itself this coming summer, in order to dampen the extremist ideas of both groups?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the present plans for the royal visit to Canada include a visit to Charlottetown and Quebec. I do not think it would be desirable to change those plans at this time; nor do I think it would be possible to do so even for the purpose to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has brought up this question in answer to a question, may I ask him this. Is it not a fact that under our parliamentary system of government, whatever the Prime Minister recommends to the crown or to the representative of the crown in Canada must be accepted?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am not a constitutional expert like my hon. friend—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate that.

Mr. Pearson: —but I think his statement is strictly accurate. I do agree, and I am sure he will too, that there are certain royal prerogatives which even as a matter of courtesy should be taken into consideration in these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But does the Prime Minister realize that this is not one of the royal prerogatives which still remains unused, even though usable?

Mr. Pearson: I agree with my right hon. friend that this is not one of the active royal prerogatives; I was talking of taking royal prerogatives into consideration as a matter of courtesy in these matters.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether, in line with the current public interest in the flag question, the government would consider, before bringing in a design to parliament, first of all giving the people of Canada a free vote on this question through a plebiscite at the next federal election, worked along the lines: "Do you favour the red ensign or a distinctive Canadian flag?"

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question, and I realize its importance. In a sense every election is a free vote, and in a sense this particular policy was part of the last two election campaigns. It certainly was part of the policy of the party which now forms the government. But I do not think it would serve any useful purpose to have a national referendum at an indeterminate date on this matter. I think it would be better for the government to take its responsibility in the matter by submitting a particular proposal to parliament and then letting the members of parliament, as the representatives of the people, decide it.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government intends to tie in the anthem "O Canada" with the bill concerning the adoption of a distinctive flag, so that this anthem may get official recognition at the same time as the distinctive flag?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this government is also committed to the policy of asking parliament to approve officially of "O Canada" as the national anthem and I think it should be done during this session of parliament.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in all temerity and humility may I address a question to the Prime Minister, and perhaps through him to all members. Important as the flag issue may be, are not the conditions of the people and the country over which that flag flies more important? As the matter of the flag will come up for debate officially at a future time, can we not now get down to the bread and butter business of the people, the business of parliament?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which is closely related to the previous question. My question arises from the dominion bureau of statistics release on Friday last indicating that the cost of living in Canada has gone up 2.7 points in the last year. Has the government taken action to deal with this alarming increase, the greatest in five years?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put that question on the order paper.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I give notice that I wish to debate this matter at ten o'clock tonight.

POWER

PASSAMAQUODDY—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN U.S. PRESIDENT AND PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister but on a different subject. Does the Prime Minister favour the proposal that a summit meeting on the Passamaquoddy project be held at Campobello in June between himself and the President of the United States? If so, will he say whether the government will initiate such a meeting?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time this matter has been brought to my attention in the terms referred to by my hon. friend. I will be glad to take this matter under consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SASKATOON, SASK.—SUGGESTED NAME FOR NEW VETERANS HOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister but it is not of a provocative character. With reference to my previous question pertaining to the naming of the veterans home in Saskatoon after the late Harry F. Jones, can the Prime Minister now inform the house whether a decision has been made on this matter and, if so, what will be the official designation of this veterans home

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the mayor and municipal council of Saskatoon, and after receiving a report from them confirming a previous somewhat informal approach, the Minister of Veterans Affairs and I discussed the matter and decided it would be, we thought, a well deserved and worthy tribute to the late member for Saskatoon if the veterans home in Saskatoon were named after him and called the Harry F. Jones memorial veterans hospital. Although I speak subject to correction, I think a notice has gone to Saskatoon from the minister to that effect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. It concerns the statement made yesterday at the Royal Canadian Legion convention in Winnipeg by the Minister of Veterans Affairs that before any veterans hospitals are transferred from federal to provincial or local control there will be consultation with the veterans organizations. Will the Prime Minister assure the more than one million veterans of this country that if the veterans organizations do not concur following consultation with them, no transfers of veterans hospitals will be made?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss that question with the minister and give the hon. gentleman a reply. I think the minister will be back tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COUNCIL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has returned from his trip to the NATO council meeting at The Hague I should like to ask him whether any decisions or developments took place at that meeting which would affect Canada's military or political contribution in NATO.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question as phrased is yes. I would propose that an opportunity be given at the earliest possible moment when a full report on this meeting might be made to the house. The acting house leader is arranging with the other parties, I believe, for discussion of the external affairs estimates on Friday, when I would hope to have the opportunity of making the report in which my hon. friend is interested.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any decision was reached with reference to a multilateral nuclear force, and whether Canada made any commitment in this regard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There were no decisions with regard to the multilateral force, which is a proposal made not by NATO but by the United States. There was no discussion of this particular project as such.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are any of the NATO countries supplying weapons to Portugal for use in Angola, where I understand wholesale massacres are taking place; and are any Canadian weapons being supplied to Portugal which could be used for this lamentable purpose?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, Portugal is a member of NATO, and whatever assistance is given to that country by Canada is only in respect of her obligations as a member of NATO. Whatever assistance is given is on the distinct understanding that it is not for the kind of venture to which my hon. friend directs my attention.

LAOS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he in a position to indicate in any way the government's attitude or actions in respect of the situation in Laos, where there is considerable Canadian involvement?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Laos has taken a serious turn. Over the week end there have been discussions among the countries represented on the truce commission, Canada, Poland and India, and there have been discussions with the United States and the United Kingdom.

I can only say that I regret to tell the house that in respect of the functions of the commission, the Polish delegate has not cooperated in the endeavours of the commission in recent weeks. I have therefore made representations to the Polish government urging it to assist in the maintenance of stability in Laos by fulfilling the obligations which they, together with Canada and India, undertook when the Geneva agreements were signed in 1962.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In what particular has the situation deteriorated in Laos as a result of the failure of Poland to discharge its share of the duties of the commission?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I said the situation had deteriorated because of the reluctance of the Polish member of the commission. The situation has deteriorated because the neutralists and the forces of the right are being actively pursued by the Pathet Lao. The refusal of the Polish delegate to agree to inspection in certain areas of Laos constitutes, in the judgment of the Canadian government, a failure to fully comply with the undertaking given in the agreement of 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If there had been compliance on the part of the Polish representative, what has the minister to say as to whether the present condition would be as it is?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe I can answer that, Mr. Speaker.

THE VATICAN—ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that, during the week end the Knights of Columbus gathered at a convention requested that Canada appoint an ambassador to the Vatican, is it the government's intention to consider that matter so that this year an ambassador be appointed to the Vatican?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter has been under consideration during the last year, and it was under consideration for the five years previous.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, and the flag was, too.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Could he tell us whether discussions are still going on between his department and Quebec authorities with a view to handing over the administration of Eskimo affairs to the Quebec government?

Could he also tell us what progress has been made in the negotiations and when will the administration of Eskimo affairs be transferred to Quebec authorities?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question, while very important, requires a detailed answer. May I suggest that it be put on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I give notice that I wish to discuss this matter on adjournment tonight?

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

JERICHO BEACH, VANCOUVER—TRANSFER OF LAND TO CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister recently conferred in Ottawa with the mayor of Vancouver regarding the early transfer to his city of land now occupied by the army at Jericho Beach? If so, what were the results of the discussions?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

FINANCE

REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I had a question for the Minister of Justice, but perhaps I may direct it to the Minister of Finance. My question arises from a recent release indicating that 3,678 businesses in Canada went bankrupt last year, an increase of 15 per cent. Has the minister caused inquiries to be made as to the causes for this increase in bankruptcies?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I shall be glad to consult with the Minister of Justice on his return tomorrow or the next day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

WESTVILLE, N.S.—PROPOSED REMOVAL OF STATION AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has received a telegram from the mayor of the town of Westville requesting his support in connection with the proposed removal of the Canadian National agent from the station in that community, thus placing it on a caretaker basis. If so, would the minister request the board of transport commissioners to postpone such action until the legislation standing on the order paper in the name of the minister is passed by this house?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Mr. MacEwan: I give notice I wish to debate this matter at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL PARKS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF RECREATIONAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgent demands arising from Canada's expanding tourist industry and the increasing recreational needs of our own people, can the minister inform the house when action will be taken to implement the recreational parks program endorsed by the house last June 26?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is certainly a question for the order paper.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister on a subject which, I assure him, is much more important in the minds of the people of the Alberni valley at the moment than the question of a new Canadian flag.

I should like to ask the minister whether, in the course of his meditations during his quiet week end, he was able to give reconsideration to the question of the size of the federal government's grant to the disaster fund and to come up with a suitable answer to that question.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me and to the government, having regard to the measure of the damage—and I do not depreciate that—and having regard to the responsibilities of the provincial government and the resources of the provincial government, that the federal contribution of a quarter of a million dollars is fair in the circumstances, and is in accord with the principles which have been followed in the past.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 14, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 8.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, it was suggested by some hon. members last year, and particularly I think by the hon. member for Edmonton West, that this particular provision should be made a permanent part of the act instead of an annual enactment in the bill from year to year. I wish to assure hon. members that this suggestion was very carefully considered. However, other legislation affecting special allowances for children will be proposed this year, and until it is put in final form it would not be known exactly how a permanent provision for this act should be drafted, or whether such a provision will be necessary after 1964.

In these circumstances it seemed better to continue the annual provision in its usual form for at least one more year. I wish to assure hon. members of the committee that this matter has been very carefully considered, and I for one think as soon as the time is appropriate it should be incorporated in the act permanently.

Mr. Monteith: The other day the minister announced that he was withdrawing two or three of the sections having to do with family allowances. Is he proposing to give reconsideration to this particular annual re-enactment at that time, or a year hence?

Mr. Gordon: The provision dealing with the extension of the principle of family allowances will be incorporated in a special bill to be presented, I hope, in the very near future. I am suggesting it would be better to extend this particular provision for one year, and I hope by that time we can incorporate it in the act finally.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the minister going to make a further statement with regard to clause 9, which increases the abatement by the additional 2 per cent? He intimated, I think during his budget speech, what this might cost the treasury, and I wondered if he could amplify the situation with regard to this proposal at this time.

Mr. Gordon: In the full calendar year 1965, including equalization, the extra two percentage points will amount to somewhere around $65 million.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, the other night I posed a question to the minister, and I think this is the proper clause on which to mention it again. Under the abatements arrangements some provinces have different charges from others, and I am wondering what the minister's reaction is to my question.

Mr. Gordon: I can assure my hon. friend that I did not overlook it. I have not examined all its implications with my officials, and I would like to defer taking any action on what, on the face of it, is a very interesting and sensible proposal until the full question has been investigated.

Mr. Nowlan: Following the dominion-provincial conference the Prime Minister announced that a committee was being set up, representative of the ten provinces and the federal government, to deal with the reapportionment of tax revenues vis-à-vis the Canadian government and the provinces. Following that announcement we now have this legislation brought before us, which increases the abatement given to provinces over a period of two successive years. I am not quarreling with this at the moment, although it is a matter which could be debated one way or the other. However, I am wondering whether the committee has been constituted and what it will be doing in this connection.

Further, in view of the fact that the Carter commission has been working for a long time on the matter of taxation, and that the minister hopes it will be reporting before the end of the year, it is desirable to discuss what action should be taken in this direction at this time. It may be that neither the minister nor anyone else knows what the royal commission will recommend, but that commission may be making extensive recommendations vis-à-vis changes in the Income Tax Act. I would like the minister to speak for a moment or two on the situation respecting the committee which was announced by the Prime Minister.

Has the committee been constituted? Is it carrying on an investigation at the moment? What is expected to flow therefrom? Following the announcement regarding the setting up of this committee, why has this rather drastic action been taken of making a change in the middle of the golf course?

Mr. Gordon: I am not sure about the simile about making changes in the middle of the golf course.

Mr. Baldwin: In the bunker.

Mr. Gordon: I don't think anybody found themselves in a bunker or even lost their ball in the rough. As hon. members know, this proposal to increase the abatement to the provinces was made at the time agreement was reached upon a uniform Canada pension plan. At the time this announcement was made the so-called tax structure committee was proposed. I do not know if that is the name which will eventually be used for it, but it is the name that has been used so far. The committee has not yet been set up, although it is the intention of the government to go ahead with the idea.

The committee will include representatives of the provincial governments and of the federal government, and I mean representatives at the cabinet level. It will review the whole question of tax fields and the shares that are available to the federal and provincial governments respectively. I think my hon. friends will agree that this does not come within the terms of reference of the royal commission on taxation.

It was understood, when this tax structure committee was being discussed, that its members, before they reached any final conclusions, would have the benefit of the reports of the royal commission on taxation, as well as the reports of certain provincial royal commissions on taxation, especially the ones in Ontario, Quebec and one of the prairie provinces.

Major changes that might be contemplated in the tax structure of the country will obviously be taken into account by the tax structure committee in trying to arrive at suitable divisions of responsibility, suitable divisions of tax fields as between the federal and provincial governments. In the meantime this proposal that is incorporated in clause 9 has been very well received by the provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: Naturally. Did you ever see anybody kick about getting money?

Mr. Gordon: I can only repeat that it seems to have been very well received not only by the provinces, but enthusiastically by hon. gentlemen opposite. I certainly did not notice any objection to this.

Mr. Nowlan: Was it as enthusiastically received by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Gordon: I will let that question pass, Mr. Chairman. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. Monteith: As I understand it, the 21 per cent of the basic tax in respect of the 1965 tax year applies to the calendar year.

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Mr. Monteith: I also understand this first increase from 19 per cent to 21 per cent is going to cost something like $65 million, and the increase from 20 per cent to 24 per cent in the 1966 tax year is going to cost something like an additional $135 million, so that in round figures by the 1966 tax year the provinces will be receiving something like an extra $200 million. Can the minister give us any breakdown as to how this will affect the government's fiscal period? In other words, what is going to be the extra amounts for the years ending March 31, 1965 and March 31, 1966? How much additional money will have to be raised in taxes, or by how much will this increase the deficit?

Mr. Gordon: This year's figures, for the year ending March 31, 1965, will be affected by approximately $6 million because while it is $60 million to $65 million for a full 12 months, the dates when the collections are received make a big difference as to the amount which will fall into this calendar year. The calendar year 1965-66 will be affected, as closely as can be estimated, by about $68 million and the calendar year 1966-67—and here the calculation becomes much more difficult—would be affected to the extent of about $145 million or $150 million.

Mr. Nowlan: Since the minister is dealing with estimates, I should like to ask him a question which will certainly require an estimate. He has referred to the fact that these abatements have been part and parcel of arrangements made vis-à-vis the proposed pension plan. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to say what will be the effect of a pension act on the floor upon which national revenue taxes are imposed? I presume that contributions made to the pension scheme will be deductible for income tax purposes. Millions of Canadian taxpayers will, I take it, be making contributions to the scheme and as a result the tax base will be reduced by so many millions of dollars. The minister has just told us how the abatements will affect his revenue. I wonder if the hon. gentleman is now in a position to advise the committee what the impact of the pension scheme is likely to be upon income tax collections? I realize this is likely to be difficult, but at the same time I assume intensive studies are being made in this field by officials in the Department of Finance and in the Department of National Revenue, whose ability in these matters is well known to me.

Mr. Gordon: I will do my best to answer this question. As the hon. gentleman knows, officials in both the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue are very loath to speculate in the unknown fields of the future. Unquestionably these contributions will be deductible for tax purposes, so on the face of it tax revenues receivable will be reduced correspondingly. On the other hand, the funds paid into the Canada pension plan will be invested and those investments will be put to productive use. This in turn will generate greater activity in the economy, so it is quite possible that in the long run revenues will be increased rather than diminished.

I am not in a position to give a specific answer to the hon. gentleman today. In any case, it will depend on the date on which deductions are to begin. The government is anxious that this should take place as soon as possible in order that the pension plan may go into operation at the earliest possible date, but we have to wait until the legislation is before the house; until it has been passed by the house. In the meantime I think it would be unwise, even if it were possible, to speculate about the exact effects upon any one year's budgetary receipts.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, section 8 of the legislation now before us, contains—

[Mr. Gordon.]

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: I am sorry; section 9 which is now under consideration contains an amendment which, it seems to us, is of great consequence. I am not speaking of the amendment made but of the provisions which are not changed.

Hon. members will remember that approximately 13 months ago, the Quebec government delivered an official ultimatum to the federal government, claiming 25 per cent of the individual income tax, 25 per cent of the corporation tax and 100 per cent of the estate tax. Since then, there has been some change concerning the estate tax. The provinces now get 75 per cent of such revenues instead of the 100 per cent which were requested. However, nothing has been done yet with respect to corporation income tax.

Under section 9, the federal government will give the provinces 21 per cent of the tax in 1965, that is one year from now, and 24 per cent in 1966, two years hence, whereas Quebec asked for a minimum of 25 per cent immediately. Therefore, the federal government is taking a heavy responsibility upon itself by retaining those taxation fields which the provinces want and are entitled to.

It must not be forgotten that direct taxation was the prerogative of the provinces and that the latter rented and lent those fields to the federal government so that it could cope with the emergency situation which arose during the last war. Now, the war has been over for 20 years and the federal government still controls direct sources of taxation which, in effect, should come under each provincial government.

In view of the restlessness existing in the province of Quebec, as well as in other provinces which also insist on their rights, a small 2 per cent increase was granted, bringing the abatement to 21 per cent in 1965 and 24 per cent in 1966. Mr. Speaker, I contend that it is not enough, that the requests from the ten Canadian provinces or, at least, from several provinces, insisting on an immediate 25 per cent, should have been granted immediately. Furthermore, the income tax percentage should be raised still higher, within a short time, and brought up to 100 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, clause 9 which is now under discussion is the main problem. It also touches a sore point, because the claims put forward by the provinces and by the Quebec citizens, indeed create a difficult problem.

Over the week end, there was great excitement everywhere especially in Winnipeg—and I want to commend the Prime Minister for his courageous stand on that occasion, when he was not afraid clearly to present the case for a distinctive national flag for Canada. While there was much excitement in Winnipeg, the same situation prevailed in various places in the province of Quebec, in Montreal, St. Lazare and other localities. A bomb was even placed under Victoria bridge.

Everything hinges on the following point: should the federal government centralize everything or award a greater autonomy, or even full autonomy, to the provinces? That is the core of the matter, which summarizes everything. What the province of Quebec wants is fully and completely to recover all its direct taxation sources. Quebec has begun to express its views strongly, and I can assure you that the adoption of a distinctive national flag will not be enough to satisfy Quebec.

A distinctive flag is only an outward sign. The roots of the evil lie deeper; they are to be found in the fact that French Canadians want an autonomous state which will be able to administer itself and, therefore Quebec must recover its sources of taxation. And when Quebec has recovered its sources of taxation, it will be possible to have an agreement between the governments of Ottawa and Quebec. But as long as that is not a fact, and more particularly, as long as the taxation sources are not handed back to the province, the agitation will continue, and the province of Quebec will never be satisfied.

What is needed is amend clause 9 of the bill before us in order to give back to Quebec 100 per cent of what it has been claiming for a long time. That is the main problem at this time.

Shall we simply go on making fine speeches about national unity? Shall we go on making fine speeches on Canadian nationalism in the face of the clear requirements of Quebec in matters of fiscal autonomy?

Mr. Chairman, as we are now dealing with the taxation field, I shall refrain from mentioning other clauses and only discuss fiscal autonomy, as this is the point under consideration.

Quebec wants to recover its taxation sources, and I think that the federal government would be well advised to adopt a plan which would give back to the province of Quebec the sources of revenue it needs to develop from a cultural, political, economical and social point of view before it is too late.

Quebec needs its sources of revenue, and the central government should work out a plan to remit to the province 25 per cent of its direct and indirect taxation sources this year, 50 per cent next year, 75 per cent in two years, and 100 per cent in 1967. There, Mr. Chairman, is one of the formulas which might make it possible for the agreement to survive in Canada. When what divides us is divided, we shall be better able to agree wherever agreement is possible.

The problem of fiscal distribution is a continual source of division between the federal and the provincial governments. Therefore, why not remit to the province of Quebec the sources of revenue to which it is entitled under the 1867 constitution? It is because the latter has been violated too many times that it is less acceptable today. It is because the provisions, too often, were broken—

The Chairman: Order. I venture to interrupt the hon. member to point out that while the comments he is making are extremely interesting, they are not quite relevant to the clause under discussion. I do not think that under the circumstances, he is free to make general statements on national unity or fiscal autonomy to which he made reference.

The hon. member knows that at the committee stage, we must strictly limit our remarks to the clause under discussion, and I suggest that he should limit his observations to the very specific points now before us.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think that when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) introduced the amendments in the house, he said they were for the purpose of strengthening national unity, and that is why I think the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe are quite to the point.

The Chairman: Without wishing to enter into a discussion with the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue, even if the right hon. Prime Minister made those comments, I am sure he did not intend to encourage the members of the committee to make speeches dealing with policy statements on every clause submitted to the committee.

Such comments might be relevant on clause 1, but I doubt that they are on clause 9 which is now under discussion.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for having said that my remarks were very interesting. I am sure they will be interesting indeed for the future.

However, I am surprised that you should call me to order on that, because the previous legislation provided that 19 per cent of the basic tax would be turned over to Quebec in 1965 and 21 per cent in 1966. And now, that is being changed to 21 and 24 per cent. Why? Surely, we must analyze the reasons why that is being done. It is because Quebec requested it. Once the reason is known, the problem can be studied. And now we know the reason for those changes. They are the result of the continuous and strong requests not only of the provincial government but also and especially of the Quebec members who sit in this house, as well as those of the Quebec people. We now know the whys and wherefores. And why are those changes to clause 9 substituted for the amendment which had been provided in 1960, I believe? Why will 21 per cent of the basic tax be deducted in 1965, instead of 19 per cent, and 24 per cent instead of 21 per cent in 1966? It is in order to try to give to the provinces a larger source of revenue, so that they may be in a better position to develop from the economic and cultural standpoints.

It is also because it has been recognized that the provinces have priority requirements. If the act as it existed before has been amended, it is because it was recognized that Quebec has priority needs. By this change, it is recognized that provincial governments have priority needs, and the federal government states that these needs—

Mr. Pepin: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand at all the interruptions of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin). If he has something to say or a question to put, let him stand up and I will be pleased to answer him. But he is too far for me to hear what he has to say at this time.

So, Mr. Chairman, if changes were made, it is because one thing became clear; this amendment to the act acknowledges the priority needs of the provinces, and especially those of the province of Quebec.

However, Mr. Chairman, I must add that the changes made at this time are not sufficient. It is too little, and much too little. What should be done, is to give back 100 per cent of direct taxation sources to the provinces. If the other provinces do not want them, they only have to leave them to Ottawa. But Quebec wants them. A stop should be put to the violation of the 1867 constitution, as it is violated now, and Quebec should get back 100 per cent of its sources of revenues, as it requests it.

Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that the fact of amending clause 9 and changing the rates 21 per cent and 24 per cent to 25, 50, 75 and 100 per cent, in order to give back to Quebec, by 1967, its sources of taxation, that will be much more important for national unity than any speech the Prime Minister can make before the Canadian Legion in Winnipeg.

I do admire the action taken by the Prime Minister but, unfortunately, it came too late. As this matter has been dragging for years, it comes too late; it will not be enough to satisfy the claims from Quebec. In my opinion, it is still time, today, to amend this clause 9 and provide that by 1967 the provinces will be handed back 100 per cent of their indirect and direct sources of taxation.

Mr. Pepin: You are sick.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, once more, I did not catch a single word of the jabbering from the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska. If he wishes to ask a question, let him rise and ask it.

Mr. Pepin: I simply say that you are mad. Mr. Chairman, if you allow me, I shall ask the member for Lapointe this question. If the central government gives to the provinces 100 per cent of the taxation powers, what will remain for it? How will the central government continue living?

An hon. Member: It is very easy to answer that.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to answer that question. But before so doing, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said I was mad. Now, I want to assure him I am of dangerously sound mind, and I think that the mad people are those who change their opinions or ideas as soon as they move from one side of the house to the other. One can see then that their ideas are not sound, which is an indication that they are not of sound mind.

Mr. Pepin: I never changed sides. I have always been on this side.

Mr. Martineau: You changed your mind.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, to change sides or change one's mind outside the house and in the house is even more serious. To say something before the election and something else afterwards, is still more serious.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. member for Lapointe to withdraw his remarks.

The Chairman: I do not believe that the hon. member for Lapointe made any unparliamentary remarks. I understood the hon. member for Lapointe to say that a certain member might change his mind. I do not feel it is unparliamentary to say that a member might change his mind.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that I changed my mind to get a better view of things.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is not difficult to answer the hon. member, because it is known that he does not speak in the same way in the house as outside the house. In fact, it is known that the hon. member makes fine statements outside the house and when he is given a dressing down by his leaders, he sits down and does not say a word.

The Chairman: Order. I ask hon. members to come back to the section now under consideration.

Mr. Grégoire: Very well, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked that question which, by the way, is quite fair and logical: if we give back to the provinces the entire field of tax resources, what is the federal government going to do?

At the moment, Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in order, because I intend to bring in an amendment to section 9, and I want to justify my amendment.

What is the federal government going to do if we give back the taxation resources to the provinces? Well, it will take care of its own business. It will withdraw from the fields of education, road construction, hospitalization, agriculture, forestry, and all those joint programs which all encroach on the provincial field.

It is clear enough, Mr. Chairman, and I wonder why the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is opposed to the federal government's withdrawing from the fields of education, hospitalization, roads, etc., since they are provincial fields that should come solely under the provinces' jurisdiction.

But no, true to the Liberal party's policy, the federal government persist in levying more and more taxes and entering all other fields, even those which, under the constitution, belong to the Quebec government. We would like the federal government to mind its own business and stop interfering in fields which come under the provincial government. It is quite simple. Deprive the federal government of its sources of revenue, and it will have to mind its own business.

Mr. Choquette: Well, let the province of Quebec withdraw from confederation.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is suggesting that Quebec withdraw from confederation. He may be a fanatic extremist for wanting to get Quebec out of confederation, but I will be more logical and more intelligent than he is: I suggest that confederation be rebuilt so that it will be made up of two associate states, each staying within its own sphere and leaving to the other the fields which come under its jurisdiction.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Lapointe once again, but it seems to me that he is wandering still further from the matter under consideration.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for calling me to order and I will thank you even more when you call the backbenchers to order—I have not found another word to describe them more vividly—who keep interrupting me. Their interjections are taking us away from the subject. I do not mind at all wandering from the subject, but I must say it is the interruptions from those few hon. members sitting almost in the curtains—

Mr. Choquette: At least we are in office. I would rather be in office and sit in the rear—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Lotbinière says he would rather be in office. That sentence might help the committee on privileges and elections to realize what advantage there is in being with the party in office. It would seem that the hon. member for Lotbinière has a fair idea.

Mr. Pigeon: He belongs to the government of Her Majesty the Queen.

The Chairman: Order. I would remind hon. members on both sides of the house that we are now examining a very serious matter.

Mr. Grégoire: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member for Lotbinière persists in interrupting, I would ask that he be expelled because, many times, since the beginning of my remarks, he disregarded your rulings to keep quiet. Mr. Chairman, if you are unable to reduce him to silence, I would give you some advice: go and get his whip; he knows how to keep him quiet.

Mr. Chairman, to conclude, I would like to make a suggestion to the federal government. At the present time the government seems to direct its efforts towards unity or at least towards good will and harmony in our country. My suggestion is precisely that we take advantage of section 9 of the bill which we are considering at present to make arrangements for giving back to the provinces 100 per cent of the taxation fields before 1967.

Consequently, supported by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), I move:

That, for 1964, the words "25 per cent" be substituted for the words "21 per cent" in section 9 which deals with subparagraph (iv) of the act, and that in subparagraph (v), the words "50 per cent" in 1965, "75 per cent" in 1966 and "100 per cent" in 1967 be substituted for the words "24 per cent".

An hon. Member: Question.

The Chairman: Unless members of the committee wish to make some comments on the merits of the amendment moved by the hon. member—

Mr. Choquette: It is out of order.

The Chairman: I am ready to give a ruling on that point. In my opinion, there is absolutely no question but that the interesting amendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe is out of order, since it constitutes a new proposal which only a minister of the crown can introduce.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, continuing the line of questioning which has been put by my colleague the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, is the minister satisfied that between now and 1967 there will not be any further erosion so far as the abatement is concerned? In other words, is this amendment to be the final one? We have seen a change last year; further concessions were made, if I recall aright, last autumn. Then the same thing happened in March, or subsequent to March, of this year. I am wondering whether the minister can tell us that there is to be finality, or is this again subject to future conferences between now and January 1, 1967?

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Chairman, in the first place perhaps I should point out that despite the eloquence, or I should say the misdirected eloquence, of the hon. member for Lapointe the proposals in this section apply to all of Canada and not to any particular province. I might also be permitted to remark, before I answer my hon. friend, that under the Canadian constitution the federal government has the power to levy any kind of taxes, including direct taxes; and the federal government was in the field of direct income taxes long before any of the provinces. I can assure my hon. friend that the federal government has no intention of abdicating its responsibilities, as I suspect it would have to do if it were to follow the suggestion of turning all these tax fields over to the provinces.

In reply to the direct question of the hon. member for Edmonton West as to whether there will be any other changes between now and 1967, I can only say that there are no changes at present in contemplation. But in the affairs of men changes do occur from time to time, as he very well knows.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister of Finance tell the house what direct connection there is between provisions of section 9 and the agreement reached in respect of pensions, for one is collateral to the other?

Since the minister was directly concerned in the discussion which were held, it would be interesting for the committee to obtain further information in this matter.

As I understood the logical argument put forward by the minister when he brought down his budget, he had reached a certain conclusion on the income tax abatement which should be granted to the provinces, that is what should be shared between the federal government and the provinces.

The minister should tell us at this point why he changed his mind in this regard.

I should also like him to tell us—and I think this matter is most relevant—whether, as suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), we should expect further claims from the provinces, especially from the Quebec, premier, since concessions granted do not meet with his minimum requirements. I think the minister should tell us today if further abatements will be considered and if he is prepared to comment on the possible status of associate state for the province of Quebec, at least in the taxation field.

Finally, I would like the minister to tell us what kind of activities the federal government will engage in to make up for the decrease in revenues resulting from the last agreement; because, as everyone knows, with the increased abatement, the minister will be compelled to choose one of the following alternatives: either the government will withdraw from certain activities, thereby reducing its expenditures; or else, it will impose new taxes to make up for the loss in revenue.

Before this item is carried, it is very important for the committee to know which of these alternatives the minister prefers at this time. I, therefore, resume my seat so that he may answer these few questions.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to answer as best I can, Mr. Chairman. I think that all those who attended the federal-provincial conference in Quebec on the 31st of March came away feeling depressed and disappointed. At that conference we had not reached agreement either on a uniform pension plan for Canada as a whole or on the means of financing the very urgent requirements of all the provinces, especially in the field of education. I say that I think there was a general feeling of disappointment that agreement had not been reached on these broad questions.

So, as my hon. friend knows, the government made one last final attempt to reach agreement with the provinces on these two very important questions and the attempt was successful. I suppose that in recent times no decision has been so well received as the agreement with the provinces, which was worked out subsequent to the conference, that we would have a uniform pension plan for the whole country—

Mr. Martineau: May I—

Mr. Gordon: If you will let me finish—the benefits of which will be the same across the country, which will be fully portable throughout the country and which, following agreement upon a constitutional amendment, will provide for survivor benefits.

I also think that the other agreements reached at the same time, including the decision to increase the tax abatements provided for in this clause for the years 1965 and 1966, met with general approval across Canada. On the second question—

Mr. Martineau: Before the minister goes on to the second question, may I ask him a supplementary question? Did the agreement on pensions hinge on agreement in regard to greater tax abatements in the income tax field?

Mr. Gordon: As I have said, these were the important matters that were discussed at the conference. Subsequently agreement was reached on both of them. I cannot go further than that. We succeeded in arriving at a solution which solved both of these problems at least to a very large degree.

Second, my hon. friend asked me whether the reduction in federal revenues that will follow these changes will result in the federal government either retiring from certain present programs and reducing its expenditures to that extent or, failing that, what the effect on the government's revenues and budgetary position will be. I am not in a position to indicate the budgetary position for the year 1965-66 or for the year 1966-67 at this time. When decisions of this importance, which are obviously decisions of government policy, have been arrived at, they will be announced in the house in the ordinary way.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, it is all very well for the minister to say that decisions on these matters of policy will be announced in due course, but we are now studying a specific amendment to the Income Tax Act and we want to know the motives for the change. The minister says the motives will be announced in due course. I know he cannot discuss his budgetary dispositions for future years, but at this stage he certainly can discuss the policy of the government if it pertains to the particular clause we are studying. I think the minister should give us an answer.

Mr. Gordon: There is nothing further I can add. The proposal in this clause is to make certain additional abatements in the personal income taxes available to the provinces. The amount of these abatements I have estimated and have supplied to the committee. As I see it, that is the only question before the committee in discussing this particular clause. If it is the wish of the committee to approve the proposals of the government in this respect, that is one thing; if it is the wish of the committee to oppose them, that is another.

Mr. Martineau: That is arrogance.

Mr. Gordon: But I suggest it would be quite impossible for any minister of finance in introducing amendments, even important amendments, to the Income Tax Act to go on and give an indication of how the budgetary problems of next year or the year after will be dealt with. Quite obviously no one can estimate what the total expenditures and revenues will be, beginning a year from now, until there has been an assessment of the condition of the country and the prospects for the immediate future. That cannot be done very accurately a year or two years ahead of time.

Second, when these estimates have been prepared the government, as a matter of policy, will be confronted with three choices. The first one was referred to by the Prime Minister when he first announced these proposed changes. He pointed out that if the federal government makes certain additional tax fields available to the provinces, and if the federal government's revenues are reduced by a proportionate amount, then the government will have to consider when the time comes to prepare the next budget whether it will, in the interests of the country impose more taxes and obtain in this way some other source of revenue.

The second choice, and one that I can assure my hon. friends the government is engaged upon now, is another review of all government expenditures and all the various programs that are under way to ascertain if there are any items of expenditure that can be eliminated or reduced without damaging either the Canadian economy or the welfare of the Canadian people.

The third choice, obviously, is to consider, in the light of the fact that additional revenues are being made available to the provinces and therefore that their deficits would be reduced below what they otherwise would be, whether in these circumstances a higher federal deficit may be justified. This is something no one can tell until the economic conditions a year from now are known. I cannot, therefore, answer my hon. friend's question any more specifically.

Mr. Martineau: I thank the minister for making this additional effort. He certainly has proven he could have gone farther than he did at the outset. I am thankful for the statement because it does give some indication of the problems that are involved in this change in the rate of federal abatement.

I do not see why the minister should be so coy because he has already stated publicly, in other forums, that the government necessarily will have to raise more taxes to make up for these revenues that are being lost. If that is the minister's intention, I do not believe he is revealing any of the secrets of future budgets by so declaring. At least we know that the government is studying some of these things. I am satisfied he has gone as far as he can go under the circumstances.

I do not know if the minister can answer this question, but according to a speech he delivered in Winnipeg, I believe, the other day he seemed to think the only way to make up the lost revenue would be to impose additional taxes. I am wondering if he is still of that opinion.

Mr. Gordon: I did not give that impression, I believe, in a speech I made in Vancouver, not Winnipeg. I gave the three choices that I have just outlined to my hon. friend and I think, I can almost say I am certain, that I did not indicate which of these the government was following.

Mr. Martineau: Perhaps once again, he has been misquoted by the press.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think so.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, just a word to say that there is dissatisfaction at the present time among Canadian provinces, since they need further financial resources in order to provide for their educational, economic and social services. I would even say that Canada is now experiencing a political crisis, and I am asking the minister whether he agrees with Messrs. Lévesque, Gérin-Lajoie and Pierre Laporte, ministers of the province of Quebec, who hope and advocate that in the near future Quebec will become an associate state. If those responsible ministers use such terms, it is surely because they are not satisfied with the policy of the federal government towards the provinces, and more especially toward the province of Quebec.

I therefore ask the minister whether he thinks it would be in Canada's interest that the province of Quebec become an associate state, as advocated by those three ministers?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: I would be very pleased to know the opinion of the Minister of Finance on this matter.

The Chairman: The minister may give his opinion on the subject, but I am afraid that the question, as asked, even though the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) seems on the point of expressing an opposite view, goes beyond the limits of the item now under discussion.

Mr. Martineau: I was going to suggest that if the Minister of Finance is unwilling to answer, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) might give a reply.

Mr. Pigeon: I have asked that question because there is unrest at the present time within the provinces and more particularly in the province of Quebec as regards the taxation basis sharing plan, as the provinces are not satisfied. Taxes are constantly increasing. The sales tax has reached 6 per cent and it is levied on a uniform basis in the province of Quebec. The provinces need sources of income. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, when responsible ministers of the provincial government, friends of the Minister of Finance, speak about an associate state, it means that they are not satisfied—

The Chairman: I presume that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm rose on a point of order. I realize that perhaps the Minister of Finance is ready to give an answer to the original question.

Mr. Pigeon: He was ready to answer my question.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I am not quite clear as to the connection between certain alleged statements by certain provincial ministers and this particular clause. Perhaps there is a tenuous connection, I do not know. In any event, I am not prepared to comment on what the ministers of another government, even the government of Quebec, might have said on some other occasion.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 and 11 agreed to.

On clause 12—Special tax rate.

Mr. Lambert: I know that at the resolution stage and on second reading, Mr. Chairman, I raised some question about the motivation for this return to the 15 per cent. Actually I would call this amendment the yo-yo amendment because in 1962 the rate was 15 per cent. Last year, over the protests of members on this side of the house and many other people, it was increased to 20 per cent. Now, we are back to 15 per cent. Perhaps the minister could give us an explanation as to why the rate is now being returned to 15 per cent.

Mr. Gordon: This is a consequential amendment, of course, Mr. Chairman. If my hon. friend recalls, this tax rate was increased from 5 per cent to 15 per cent in December of 1960, I think it was. It has remained at 15 per cent ever since. It was proposed that if the rates of withholding tax on dividends in general went to 20 per cent, as it was at one time contemplated would take place on January 2, 1965, then in the interests of uniformity and common sense, if I may say so, this tax rate should also go to 20 per cent. The intention is that it should be the same as the rate of the withholding tax which applies generally. As I indicated in the budget speech, if as a result of certain proposed reductions in the rates of United States tax, it is no longer considered necessary to increase the withholding tax to 20 per cent in January, 1965, then the tax on N.R.O. companies should be brought into line. It also did not come into effect.

Mr. Lambert: This is all very fine but, as my colleague indicated, this is in the nature of a bedtime story because it was a very convenient action by the United States government which allowed the minister this out. This is part of the big stick that was waved last year.

Mr. Martineau: Could the minister tell us how successfully this 20 per cent was in operation or whether, in practice, it was applicable?

Mr. Gordon: Is my hon. friend referring to clause 12 which we are now considering?

Mr. Martineau: Yes.

Mr. Gordon: It was never in effect.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Manufacturing or processing business.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, may I remind you of the procedure we had the other night, that while we do not pass the subclauses, yet we discuss them in order. I have nothing to add so far as the definition of manufacturing or processing business is concerned, but I would like to refer to subclause (3). I have made my comments with regard to subclause (2) as to the extension of time, but I am wondering why this change was introduced concerning "owned" as against "leased"? As it is, paragraph (a) referred to leased buildings and machinery, and I am asking why this concept of ownership is introduced at this particular time? Would there not have been, on the other hand, a particular paragraph dealing with properties and which were owned, because in the ordinary contemplation of drafting and the making of regulations one considers that assets are owned rather than leased? This is a minor amendment but to some degree it is enlarging the concept. Why was the change made?

Mr. Gordon: I was confused in my own mind too when I first saw the way this was presented with the words "owned or" underlined. The reason I am given for underlining these words is that they did not appear in exactly that form in the original section, but I should make it clear that the purpose of this is not to make any change between properties that are owned or leased. The purpose is quite different. It is in the qualifying test. It is to take into account the current value of properties rather than their written down book value. This is just to plug up a loophole that has been foreseen, and in the addition of the words "owned or leased" there is no significance at all.

Mr. Lambert: Then this raises the further question I had raised on second reading. With regard to the machinery and equipment, if it is to be 95 per cent new, why then do you have to introduce this distinction between fair market value and its actual capital cost? We are not considering goods that may be written down in value because they then will not be new, nor can buildings be new if they have already been subject to some write-offs for depreciation purposes. It may be a very narrow area.

Mr. Gordon: It is. I will see if I can give a capsule explanation and, if I cannot, I will read the full explanation that I have here. It is to avoid a situation where most of the machinery or equipment was old machinery or equipment written down to, say, a dollar on the books of the parent company, and then the new manufacturing or processing business would go out and buy a few typewriters and desks and perhaps an automobile or two, or some relatively small amount of new assets, and because the great bulk of the assets were written down to a dollar, 95 per cent of the book value would be represented by the price of the new typewriters and the new desks, and this, that or the other thing. It is just to see, in that kind of test, that the assets written down to a dollar in the books would be taken into account at fair market value.

Mr. Lambert: In order to arrive at 95 per cent for new machinery and equipment?

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Mr. Hales: On this point of owned or leased buildings, equipment and machinery, in the starting up of an industry in a designated or depressed area I am wondering why we want to put in "leased." It is conceivable that a company could lease a building, could lease some machinery, go into a designated area and get the incentives now spread over a period of three years and, at the end of three years, it could pull out and, because everything was leased, there would not be the same interest or same amount of capital at stake.

In fairness to the promotion of a designated area I think they should own their property, their buildings and equipment, rather than be allowed to lease them.

Mr. Gordon: That is a point of view, Mr. Chairman. However, I think that from the standpoint of getting a new business going in the lower St. Lawrence region, on the Gaspé coast, or some place like that which badly needs something new, it does not make very much difference in an economic sense whether the people who are embarking on that new enterprise succeed in raising all the capital they need to finance a new building, or whether they finance it under some leasing arrangement. The building will be there. It is something that is physical and, in drafting this, we did not think we should make it more difficult for some moderate sized concern to get under way in some of these designated areas. That is the only purpose of the words "or leased", because in quite a number of cases this is a normal way of financing.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, in the French text of clause 13(3)(a), it says:

"situés dans la région désignée qui avait été possédés ou loués par la personne—

In the English text, there is consequently no possession; it says "owned", that is ownership.

In my opinion, the way that text is drafted could give a certain loophole to companies that would come into those underdeveloped areas. As a matter of fact, a company may very well be in possession of some machinery or equipment, while that equipment or machinery is not owned by it. Thus, they could, by alleging possession, defeat the intent of the act which provides that 95 per cent of the machinery must be leased or owned by the company settling in that area.

Perhaps it would be proper for the minister to read again the French text in order to eliminate that loophole.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: If there is a difference between the French and English texts they should obviously be brought into line. I was just consulting my favourite translator here, to see what might be done. I am not yet clear as to the difference which the hon. gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. Martineau: The difference is between ownership and possession. The French text would enable a company "possessing" 95 per cent of the equipment to benefit from the provision, but I think the intention is that the company owning or leasing it should benefit.

Mr. Gordon: I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing this to our attention and we shall see that the change is made.

The Chairman: Do I understand it is the intention to let this stand while we go on to the other matters dealt with in this particular clause?

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if we could carry on with the English text, which does reflect what is intended. Then we might ask the translation service to make sure that the French text is corrected so as to be on all fours with the English text.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: The minister is not suggesting that the English version is more official than the French version, is he?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: No, it simply implies that with my limited abilities in this field it is the only one I am sure about.

Mr. Monteith: Before we leave the subject of designated areas, may I ask whether the allowance extends beyond the three year period, that is, the allowance applicable to a designated area?

Mr. Gordon: All new businesses establishing themselves in designated areas must come into commercial production within the three year period, that is, the period before March 31, 1967. The benefits they receive apply to a three year period from the time they come into commercial production. So the benefits would apply either from March 31, 1967, for three years, or—if a company had come into operation a year earlier—from March 31, 1966.

Mr. Monteith: Would the fact that a certain area which had been considered a designated area was no longer included in that category affect the situation?

Mr. Gordon: This amendment in subclause (5) is intended to take care of the situation to which the hon. member has just referred. If a designated area is—I almost said "desegregated"—if an area ceases to be designated, companies could be left high and dry. This provision provides a formula under which their interests and rights are protected.

Mr. Monteith: For the three year period.

Mr. Gordon: Yes. But if they had only said they intended to establish a business in the area and had not got on with the job before the cessation of designation, they would lose their right to benefit.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the French text should be revised?

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: I can point out that the words "étaient possédés" appear several times in the text, and if a revision is made, they should be changed every time they are used. "Were owned" has been translated by "avaient été possédés". I recommend that the words "qui avaient appartenu" be substituted for the words "qui avaient été possédés".

[Text]

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, and again I thank the hon. member for the close way in which he is watching these amendments.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know whether any other members of the committee wish to speak on clause 14. The hon. member for Edmonton West was called to the telephone a few moments ago. I know he wished to speak briefly on it and I wonder whether we could pass it by for a minute or so and then return to it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we defer consideration of clause 14 for the time being?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 15.

Mr. Monteith: I want to ask one question about this. I am assuming that a pension plan which becomes adjusted at the time old age security benefits become payable cannot be registered now; is that so?

Mr. Gordon: It could as far as old age security is concerned but, of course, it cannot be registered as far as the Canada pension plan is concerned.

Mr. Monteith: Well, the explanation reads:

> The new rule will permit registration of a retirement savings plan which provides for the annuity payable under the plan to be reduced by an amount not in excess of payments under the Old Age Security Act.

So I am assuming this applies to old age security benefits which amount at present to $75. I know that certain plans have, in the past, provided for the reduction of benefits once a recipient is eligible to receive old age security payments. I gather, from the wording of the explanation, that these are only now being allowed to register.

Mr. Gordon: Prior to this provision being made a plan could be registered, but the amount of the reduction in the payment from the plan had to be exactly the amount the recipient received in old age security benefits. There was no flexibility attached to it. Now it can be reduced by any sum up to that amount.

Mr. Monteith: I see.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps we could go back, now, to consideration of clause 14. I see my hon. friend is in his place again.

On clause 14.

Mr. Lambert: The other day I raised the subject of allowances for research in a number of questions which I put to the minister, and what prompted me to do so was the emphasis placed here on the year 1962. Moreover, I am wondering if we are not doing something which, in effect, undoes the incentives which were provided in years past. This applies primarily to work done outside the country. The main motivation for increasing the incentives in respect of research done within Canada has been provided in briefs submitted by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, research groups, universities and others interested.

This was in an effort not only to develop research in this country but to try to retain so many highly trained research personnel who were, frankly, finding no outlet and no encouragement for their abilities here in Canada. For that reason we were placing the emphasis on the encouragement of research facilities in Canada. I remember the former minister of finance, Mr. Fleming, placing a great deal of emphasis on the encouragement of research facilities in this country even going to the point of granting a 150 per cent allowance in this regard. I fully subscribe to that. Also, I subscribe to incentives being granted to a firm in Canada which has to go outside the country to do some rather specialized research because facilities do not exist in Canada. The research involved may be in connection with a field so narrow that it is not possible to set up laboratories and obtain the personnel for this work. I agree that we should grant such firms incentives in this regard; perhaps not to the same extent, but at least to the extent of 100 per cent.

However, why at this stage do we say that for the taxation year 1962 and onwards we are going to make allowances for research for the benefit of the business of the taxpayer, whether the research is carried out in Canada or elsewhere? I frankly confess some difficulty in understanding this provision and am just wondering whether it is not to benefit some particularly narrow class of taxpayers, and whether they are being given some form of retroactive bonus in this regard because they have made specific representations to the minister. I would like as much detail as possible in this regard.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has raised two questions. First, why go back to 1962, and second there is the question of whether expenditures made by a business in Canada for research outside Canada should be allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes. When the amendment was introduced it applied to the year 1962 and subsequent years. It provided that if research expenditures were made in Canada, the taxpayer could claim 150 per cent of those expenditures in computing his taxable income. I do not know what went on in the minds of the then ministers, but I am quite sure from what I have heard from my hon. friend for Edmonton West and my hon. friend for Digby-Annapolis-Kings over the past year that there was no thought of using the carrot and the stick approach; that the only approach my hon. friends would have indulged in was the carrot approach and there was no idea at all of penalizing people who for one reason or another were making expenditures in another country for research which they felt was of very great value to their own businesses.

I suggest that inadvertently the wording of the section was such as to preclude altogether any deduction of any kind for expenditures on research except those made in Canada. Have I made myself clear to the hon. member?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Gordon: Since the amendment was passed by the then government Canadian businesses have had the advantage of a 150 per cent deduction for any expenditures made in Canada, but because—and I understand it was by inadvertence—of the wording of the amendment, since 1962 they have been penalized or have not obtained any benefit in computing their taxable income for expenditures on research in other countries, some of which research they have been carrying on for many, many years. Representations to this effect have been made, to my knowledge not by any particular taxpayer, not by any particular class of taxpayer, but by people like the tax foundation and the joint committee of accountants and lawyers, who have been saying that they think there is an anomaly here; they think there is a mistake here; they think something was done by inadvertence that was not intended. I do not know if that is true, but they think there was no intention to wield a big stick; that there was certainly no intention on the part of hon. gentlemen then in the government to penalize these firms for carrying on in the way they had always carried on. In fact, they think a mistake was made.

Therefore, in assessing these representations the present government came to the conclusion that the incentive introduced in 1962 of granting a 150 per cent deduction for any research expenditures made in Canada, over a certain base, should stand, but that companies which for one reason or another get very valuable research assistance in other countries should not be penalized. In some cases it would be impossible to get the same facilities in Canada. I am sure there are examples of where these arrangements have been entered into under contract, and in many cases Canadian industry benefits to a very considerable extent from the access that it has to research in the United States, Great Britain, European countries, and so on, and is prepared to pay for them.

It is not suggested that these payments should be allowed as a deduction to the extent of 150 per cent. It is suggested that, like other expenditures that are laid out for the purpose of earning income, they should be allowed to the extent of the amounts paid; that is to say, there should be no incentive, but it should be just to the extent of the amounts paid. If we do not do this, what we would be doing in effect would be saying, "If you carry out your research in Canada, fine; you will get a bonus to the extent of a 150 per cent write-off. But if you cannot, and you take advantage of research facilities in other countries, then, while we will allow you any other type of expense that is necessary for the purpose of earning income, we will not allow you this particular item of expense". Those who have made representations, the lawyers, accountants and professional people of that kind, thought this was an anomaly; they thought it was a mistake. They convinced the government that it should be corrected or, if it was not a mistake, that it should be changed. I think it was perhaps done inadvertently.

When the hon. member says, why do we go back to 1962, the answer is very simple. The amendment applied to the years 1962 and thereafter. Those years have not yet been finally assessed, and it was thought that the fair thing to do would be to go back to the date when the change was made in the first place.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I realize what the minister is trying to get at but I am not too sure that he is altogether correct in his assessment of the situation. I would ask, how can he deal with the following situation? We know that this applies generally across Canada, where we have so many subsidiaries of foreign firms operating in this country. How can he guarantee that there is not an overloading on to the books of the Canadian subsidiary of the cost of research conducted by the organization as a whole? Let us assume, for argument's sake, that there are five plants or subsidiaries in the United States and one or perhaps two in Canada, and that they have research facilities. The cost should be apportioned out over the whole organization, but because of the various profit positions of the company a business decision is made that because the Canadian operations have been highly successful a higher proportion of the cost of research for that year shall be charged on the books, which means merely making a bookkeeping entry; whether it be a branch or a controlled subsidiary it is a matter of book entries, and therefore flexible.

I agree with the minister that a taxpayer in Canada who is deriving benefit from research should pay his fair share and regard it as an expense of doing business. But what control has he—this may be a matter for the Department of National Revenue—over seeing that what is being charged for is a fair price for research properly attributable to the operations of a Canadian subsidiary?

Mr. Gordon: Of course, Mr. Chairman, this is a broad question which applies to a lot of other charges made by parents to subsidiaries, quite apart from the question of charges for research. It makes the problems of the Department of National Revenue that much more difficult, as my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings knows very well. There is the difficulty of knowing whether the subsidiary company is paying too much for the goods it buys. There is also the question of all kinds of intercompany charges that the officials of the Department of National Revenue have to examine very carefully. In the last analysis the assessors of the Department of National Revenue must be satisfied that charges of all kinds—and there are many other charges which are made besides those for research—made by parent companies to their subsidiaries are reasonable and that they are not being used to transfer profits, free of withholding tax and free of income tax in Canada, from such subsidiaries to the parents.

I think the article in the Canada-United States reciprocal tax convention dealing with this matter is article IV which deals with "diversion of profits to a parent corporation." It is one of the things which the assessors must look into company by company and case by case; but I can assure my hon. friend that as far as I know there is no more difficulty in doing this in the case of research expenditures than in a wide variety of other intercompany charges.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Sale of accounts receivable.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister explain what is the reason for clause 16? It simply amends the former section to include the sale of obligations in the money lending business. Was there some particular case which arose which made this clause necessary. What is the background to it?

Mr. Gordon: This was one of those things which was taken pretty seriously by the joint committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Chartered Accountants Association. They thought there was a loophole here, or if not a loophole then an omission, and they felt very strongly that it should be coopered up. I was convinced that there was something in it; it did not seem too serious so we thought we should go along with it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 17 and 18 agreed to.

On clause 19.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister just explain the meaning of clause 19?

Mr. Gordon: The provision being repealed provided a special 5 per cent tax on increased dividends to prevent companies which did not intend to acquire a degree of Canadian ownership paying extra dividends before the end of 1964 in anticipation of the coming into force of the 20 per cent non-resident withholding tax on January 1, 1965. Any company which may have paid the tax imposed under part IID will be eligible for a refund.

Mr. Monteith: I am assuming that the minister admits that he was not correct in bringing forward the increase to 20 per cent in last year's income tax amendment.

Mr. Gordon: On the contrary, Mr. Chairman. As I explained before, the only reason for reducing the amount from 20 per cent to 15 per cent is the changes in the rates of tax in the United States. After all, we are all agreed now, I think, that this carrot and stick business introduced some time ago by my hon. friend opposite in connection with research charges is something for the past.

Mr. Martineau: Does that mean, Mr. Chairman, that the fiscal policy of the government will depend in large measure on what is being done below the border?

Mr. Gordon: Certainly not, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Mr. Martineau: May I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is now my duty to leave the chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE FORM OF BANK NOTES

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-26, to amend the Bank of Canada Act (form and material of notes).

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing Bill No. C-26, an act to amend the material of notes issued by the Bank of Canada, I simply wish to change the obsolete wording on our bank notes. For that purpose, I propose that subsection 4 of section 21 of the Bank of Canada Act be hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

> The form and material of notes shall be subject to approval by the minister, but such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public as to the true nature thereof, or of the obligations incurred by the bank in issuing them and all notes shall be printed in both the English and the French languages.

As stated therein, the purpose of this bill is to provide that bank notes shall not be inaccurate and misleading as they are at the present time because they bear the words:

> "Will pay to the bearer on demand".

These Bank of Canada notes being legal tender, such words printed on them are misleading. To replace those words, I suggest that the following words be printed: Legal value. It will be more consistent with the facts.

Why are the words "Will pay to the bearer on demand" inaccurate and misleading? Precisely because at one time, our notes were secured on a gold reserve amounting to 25 per cent of the value of notes in circulation. And if a Canadian wanted to exchange his notes against gold coins, he could legally do it. In fact, it almost never happened.

However, since 1940 there has been no gold in the Bank of Canada to guarantee legal Canadian currency. In fact, to a question I asked the Minister of Finance in October 1962, I got the following reply:

> The Bank of Canada maintains no gold reserve whatever.

Here is what we find at page 1089 of the Canada Year Book, 1962, and I quote:

> This requirement was suspended in 1940 when, under the terms of the exchange fund order the bank's gold holdings were transferred to the exchange fund account to form part of Canada's official gold and United States dollar reserves.

At the time of the motion preceding the first reading of this bill, I noticed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) showed his agreement by a nod. I believe it is not presumptuous to conclude that the Minister of Finance unreservedly approves this bill.

Moreover, the Ottawa newspaper the Citizen, under date of December 5, 1963, published a short news item concerning this bill, which I shall quote in the original language.

[Text]

> M.P. Reads His Money, Wants Words Changed.
> A Social Credit M.P. maintains that Canadian paper money is "inaccurate and misleading" because it bears the words "Bank of Canada will pay to the bearer on demand" (the value of the bill). Maurice Côté, a follower of Socred leader Robert Thompson, from Chicoutimi, Quebec, introduced a private members bill in the Commons Wednesday which would replace the words with the simple statement: "Legal value". Côté said the old words are now misleading and inaccurate because money is no longer guaranteed by gold. A Bank of Canada official asked what the bank would give a "bearer" who presented a dollar bill and demanded a dollar for it replied: "Another dollar". He agreed with Mr. Côté that the words were a hangover from the days when you could get payment in gold or other metallic substance for your money. Nowadays they just meant you could trade old notes in for new.

[Translation]

We must consider that the value of our bank notes proceeds nowadays from a social fact, that is the purchasing power given to it by the members of the social group by virtue of a practice of long date. That value comes from an act of faith, a collective trust, the assurance that 100 monetary units, called dollars, enable and will enable to pay taxes, merchandise, services, debts up to 100 monetary units, whatever the material support of these units may be.

We must also consider the fact that if our Canadian currency could be converted into gold during many years, this same currency has not been convertible since 1940 and that it never ceased to have the confidence of all Canadians.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, when I have in my pocket a nice $20 note, I am very pleased because I know I can buy Canadian products anywhere in Canada.

The bond which linked our notes to the gold standard gradually lost its importance.

Nowadays, the bank note or dollar bill is evidence of indebtedness which has a value of its own independent of that of the metal on which it was secured in days past.

That is why our bank notes have become a true currency. They play the characteristic functions of currency in that they are an instrument of barter, a standard by themselves and a reserve of value for the future.

Consequently, the words "will pay to the bearer on demand" have become useless and are misleading for the public. Indeed, the man in the street never bothers about them. I must say that nowadays millions of Canadians seldom see the colour of money, because they have none on account of our debt-ridden financial system.

On the other hand, 98 per cent of the money in circulation is credit money, issued or created by chartered banks; it is bank money, account or figure money, because 2 per cent of the cash deposited is sufficient for banking institutions to pay unforeseen withdrawals.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I think it is most important that the 2,220 million bank notes in circulation on May 6, 1964 reflect faithfully the truth. I hope that all members realize the legitimacy of this bill and that they will gladly support it.

[Text]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté), the proposer of the bill, and I must commend him on the background material he has introduced relating to the operation of the gold standard and the circumstances under which Canada suspended operations under the gold standard and the conversion of its currency into gold. It also seems to me that his remarks concerning the factors that really determine the value of a currency are eminently sensible and I would not disagree with them. I am concerned about some aspects of the bill because I think the bill as drafted makes some assertions which I for one find difficult to accept. I quote from the wording of the proposed bill:

> —such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public as to the true nature thereof, or of the obligations incurred by the bank in issuing them—

With his scrupulous and literal regard for the truth, the hon. member proposing the bill felt that the words should be changed. The words to which the hon. member objects are that the Bank of Canada will pay the bearer on demand. I do not know whether there is any significance, but it seems to me that every time there is a reprinting of these notes these words appear a little smaller. Certainly they were more conspicuous on the notes that were in circulation during the forties.

It seems to me that if the intention of the hon. member is to correct an injustice, then he has not proven anyone has been deceived or that there is any injustice to be rectified. He himself said that he is quite happy to receive the currency of the realm and his only regret is that he cannot have more of it in his pocket, a regret which I am sure all of us share. If the hon. member is thinking in terms of reform legislation, he should go much farther than he does. I have before me selections from the recommendations of the royal commission on banking and finance which deal indirectly with this matter.

The commission recommends:

> For example, sections 22 and 23, which provide for the redemption of Bank of Canada notes in gold and the maintenance of a gold ratio, have both been suspended for many years and should be removed from the act.

In other words, the commissioners would go farther than the proposer of this bill in clearing up this wording that some people might perhaps regard as an anachronism that serves no useful purpose.

The commissioners go on to say:

> The basic integrity of our currency does not depend on gold but on the skill and wisdom with which it is managed.

This, of course, is in line with modern thinking, and I am sure very few hon. members of the house would disagree. The basic problem here, it seems to me is, what are we trying to do? Are we concerned about the wording? Does any hon. member really believe that anyone who accepts our currency is deceived or misled? Does anyone who receives his pay at the end of a week worry about the soundness of the currency or does he feel that this fine print somehow or other deceives him? It seems to me it is the very heart of our constitutional usage of our democratic traditions, that we in parliament go through certain legal fictions. While the form is maintained, the content changes. In this way we maintain a certain continuity in our institutions, which has a very beneficial purpose. This continuity which is contained here by a reference to the gold standard does not really bother me, Mr. Speaker, to the extent that it appears to bother the hon. member, who feels he has to introduce a piece of legislation to correct it.

I should like to call the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, to a few instances in which we have maintained certain forms and traditions and where the wording, while maintaining a certain semblance of continuity with what has gone before, does not conform any more than the wording to which the hon. member refers calls to mind the actual situation. When we are discussing measures there are certain forms that you, Mr. Speaker, and the chairman of committees follow. I note that on April 17, at the end of the debate in committee on redistribution, the form used by the chairman was, "Shall the committee rise and report progress?" It is eminently clear to those who examine the report of that debate that there was no substantial progress to report as a result of that debate. The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) referred to the fact that, perhaps, with the passage of time the members of the press gallery may develop a more objective style of reporting. This is a certain term which does no particular harm, and it is one with which I would not disagree.

I offer these as illustrations of certain fictions in the forms connected with our procedures in this house and the other place which we have maintained over a long period. This suggestion that someone is somehow deceived or misled or injured when we use such language or such forms is one which it is very difficult for me to accept as a member of this house. There are many other examples of the way in which the use of language has been traditionally carried over from situations that have prevailed for long periods of time. There is the message that the Governor General himself delivers in the name of Her Majesty at the opening of a session. There are certain legal fictions in connection with the passage of legislation through parliament. Certainly the role of those who have responsibility for giving advice is played down in our procedure in connection with the action that is taken in the name of the sovereign by the Governor General. This deceives no one in terms of literal meaning, but it preserves a certain form and meaning in our institution, and should not be taken literally the way the hon. member who is proposing this bill apparently takes this matter.

I recall another exercise in semantics not very long ago of a slightly different nature in this house. We had a private member's bill before us to change the name from the Old Age Security Act and Old Age Assistance Act, and the hon. member proposing the bill wanted to substitute the euphemism of the senior citizens security act and the senior citizens assistance act. One hon. member quite rightly pointed out that a mere change in name, a mere change in form, does not make anyone a day younger, does not change the content of what we are doing or trying to do. I would submit that the same kind of consideration has to be borne in mind. We have preserved certain wordings on our bills of exchange. This wording is now hallowed by usage. It has been continued for many decades in Canada.

There is, I submit, no harm in this language. No one is deceived, no one is injured. There is no one who believes that our currency is any worse because of the language which is printed upon it. So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there is no one who really feels there is an obligation on this parliament to give precedence to measures which deal largely in a semantic way with the problems with which we are trying to deal.

As one member of this house, I have tried to argue that the wording of this bill, which has been so well developed by the proposer of the bill itself, is related to the days in which we had a currency that was convertible into gold. This was suspended in 1928 and there followed the measures which were adopted during depression years, the foreign exchange control board in the war years, all of which brought about a usage which was, on the face of it, at variance with the wording which was preserved on the currency. However, in this period the management of our currency compared very favourably with that of any other nation in the world. In this period there was the development of the Bank of Canada, the practices of the Department of Finance in working out the instruments of monetary and fiscal policy in Canada, which brought about certain practices which, in turn, have modified the original framework within which the legislation was drafted.

If we are to make changes we should not do it piecemeal and in this way. We should look at the entire context of the legislation which will be before the house when the recommendations of the Porter royal commission are implemented by the government. At that time we should look at those sections of the Bank of Canada Act and the legislation dealing with foreign exchange, and remove those particular sections which perhaps no longer are in keeping with our modern philosophy of monetary management.

But I think there is no great urgency to change the wording regarding the paper currency, which has been accepted as legal tender in Canada for some considerable time. If, at the time of revision of the act, it is the decision of the authorities to change it then I for one would be the last to oppose them, but I do not believe it is a good principle for hon. members of this house to propose legislation which is couched only in terms of semantics, which deals only in terms of wording, and which does not deal with policy and substance. For these reasons I hope the house will not give favourable consideration to the hon. member's bill.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I rise on this occasion, Mr. Speaker, to support my deskmate, the estimable member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté). I do not regard this bill as the most earth-shaking one that has been before this parliament, and I must say I was impressed by the moving plea from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) to retain legal fictions no matter whether they are couched in a misleading form or not. He said, as any true and trusted Tory lawyer might well have said, "Let us retain these legal fictions," but I suggest that the hon. member for Chicoutimi has made a good case for his bill.

The hon. member has pointed to words on this currency which are misleading, and it is no help for the hon. member for Carleton to say that well informed persons are not likely to be misled, because after all this currency comes into many hands. There is already enough confusion and difficulty about matters of currency without the parliament of Canada perpetuating what is clearly a misleading statement, especially when the hon. member for Chicoutimi has given us an opportunity to express ourselves to the contrary.

Nobody believes for a minute that if he went to the Bank of Canada and asked to be paid gold coins for the money he presented, or asked to be paid anything for the money he presented, that he would be treated as anything but mildly erratic.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) not table the document to which he has just referred?

[Text]

Mr. Brewin: The document which I was looking at and reminding myself about is a purely personal document which I would prefer to retain. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish any members of the house to be misled. Much as I admire, and much as I enjoy the friendship of my deskmate, I do not mean to suggest that by supporting this particular bill I have been persuaded to adopt all of the economic and political theories which he espouses. I am trying, of course, to persuade him to adopt some of the economic and political theories that I espouse, but so far I do not know that either of us has been able to make much progress in that direction.

But even if this bill is a little one, let us deal with it. Let us not adopt this futile and unsatisfactory procedure of talking it out. If the hon. member for Carleton and other hon. members feel that this bill is unnecessary, then let us vote against it and throw it out. If, on the other hand, we are persuaded by what to me were the very cogent reasons advanced by the introducer of the bill, then let us pass it and not condemn ourselves to the continued futility of a debating chamber that never arrives at a solution on any particular problem.

The hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), speaking from the government side, gained a great deal of well deserved credit for a bill he presented which was purely semantic in nature. The hon. member for Carleton seems to think this house should not deal with such matters; yet we dealt with them then, and in my experience that is the only bill that has passed through in the private members' hour.

Let us have the courage of our convictions. Let us either support this bill or throw it out. For myself, I hope that before long we will change the procedure in this house which requires members to spend hour after hour, day after day, week after week debating motions that everyone knows will not be passed. I doubt if a high school debating society would tolerate the continuance of such a futile and senseless procedure. I hope our committee on procedure will work out something whereby, if a private member's bill comes before the house, it will be dealt with.

Let the government of the day do one of three or four things. Let it say, "We do not want to support the bill." Then the bill will probably be defeated. Or let it refer the bill to a committee, in which case it can be looked into by other members of the house. Or let it say, "We accept the bill because we think it is a sound bill and we want to see it pass." But let us not go on month after month, year after year, with this futile procedure known as talking out bills. I am told this has a useful value in that it enables certain backbenchers on the government side to exhibit their rhetorical skill, but I doubt if that in itself is adequate reason to take up the time of the house.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. gentleman is making recommendations to amend procedure. He is not talking about the bill.

Mr. Brewin: I am not talking about the bill, but I am urging the house to change the procedure as a whole to deal with this bill in a manner consistent with the statements I am making. I say this is a little bill. It is not a very important bill. It is a semantic bill, but it is one which should commend itself to all those who prefer to call a spade a spade, and prefer not to say that money will be paid to the bearer when in fact there is no intention of paying money to the bearer.

I urge that instead of expanding this debate we proceed to vote on the bill. If we do, I know some of my colleagues will disagree with me. I speak for myself in this matter, and I for one am delighted to support the bill introduced by my friend and neighbour.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to congratulate my hon. friend from Chicoutimi for having introduced this bill. In reply to the comment made by the previous speaker, the N.D.P. member sitting next to the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté), I entirely agree with him that our standing orders should be changed so that, from time to time, an acceptable bill could be passed.

There is one I had the opportunity to introduce and to have approved; I feel we took a step forward there. But, as regards the bill put forward by the hon. member for Chicoutimi, I should like to make a few comments and to point out to him that, even if I agree with the principle of his bill, it is clear that there is no possibility whatever at the present time, even if it is written on the dominion bank notes, "will pay to the bearer on demand", to go and exchange them for gold—even if this could be so prior to 1934. In spite of that, I think it is perhaps useless to change the wording which now appears on the dollars themselves.

On the other hand, I take the liberty of suggesting to my hon. friend not to put that bill aside because there are, in the report of the federal commission on banking and finance, that is the Porter commission, recommendations of that nature, particularly in chapter 22. Therefore, I think we should wait before studying that bill as well as all the other recommendations made by the Porter commission.

I am surprised, however, that while we are talking about the Bank of Canada, the hon. members for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), who should make it their duty to be here, are absent.

Mr. Bélanger: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I would like to point out that the hon. member for Villeneuve is absent because he is in the hospital.

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pigeon: The other one, the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Chrétien: I realize that there are only three members of the Ralliement Créditiste to discuss such an important matter.

Mr. Bélanger: Three against 12 Liberal members.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should associate ourselves with the hon. member for Chicoutimi, but, under the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to be kind enough to withdraw his bill until the recommendations of the Porter commission are discussed.

To come back to what the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis), said to the effect that it was unimportant if changes were made in the wording of legislation, I think that, in some cases, it is necessary. And I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we had a bill concerning a change of name from Trans-Canada Air Lines to Air Canada.

In view of the unanimous approval of that bill, I think that it was a step towards Canadian unity. I am saying this today, because, ever since the members of the house passed it, about two months ago, I had no opportunity to express my satisfaction in this house.

What surprised me most was to see the pleased comments in the press following the passing of that bill. That is why I do not intend to delay the business of the house any longer and I would like to give other members an opportunity of airing their views. I would not like to be accused of trying to kill this bill, to use a popular expression in this house, since I am in full agreement with it.

[Text]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Perhaps it is advisable and necessary once in a while to pass an hour just as we are passing this one. However, I am not being facetious when I say that, to me, it seems extraordinary we should be spending one hour tonight to discuss the changing of some words on our currency which 99.999999 per cent of the people of Canada do not even know about—words that do not make any difference.

Until the next House of Commons pay day I have three bills in my pocket.

An hon. Member: Will you table those documents?

Mr. Winch: One is a five dollar bill issued by the Bank of Canada. The second is a ten dollar bill issued by the Bank of Canada and the third is a twenty dollar bill issued by the Bank of Canada.

An hon. Member: A lot of money.

Mr. Winch: In the course of his remarks, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) made some statement about currency being printed in French and English. The bills I have in my hand are all in French and English. We are, now, at $12,511 an hour, discussing this subject. With my very powerful glasses I can now find in a little corner, under "Bank of Canada" the following words: "Will pay to the bearer on demand". What is the importance of what that means? I am amazed that anyone who maintains he knows the principles of social credit and banking should ask that a change be made now. It appears that if you give five dollars to the Bank of Canada they will give you five dollars back. Well, turn a five-dollar bill in, and they will give you the five dollars back if you want it.

What is the importance of money? It is a medium of exchange and, as such, it is based on trust and confidence in our country. It means that if you give a service and are paid something, whether in paper or in metal, you can use it to buy shoes or pay rent, to buy clothing and to buy food. Money is not a question of infinitesimal words such as "payable on demand". It represents the trust felt by people that, having given a service and received something in paper or metal, they can turn round and get services or commodities back with it. Whether it is backed by gold here or in Fort Knox or in England or in Russia means nothing. Everything depends upon the confidence of the people in the paper they are given. Therefore, to make a change in infinitesimal words to the effect that if I turn in five dollars I get five dollars back does not mean a thing when it comes to the economics of Canada. Immediately the trust of the people fails, then, no matter what the wording is, our currency falls and deflation appears. Currency is based upon trust in our country, in its resources and in ourselves. The actual wording on a piece of paper, be it one dollar or five dollars or a hundred dollars or a thousand dollars, means nothing. If our country were to collapse you could have all the wording you wanted on the currency and it would still be gone. It is the stability of our country, of its economy and of its people, which means everything. This is why I rose this afternoon. I could not understand a member of the Social Credit party thinking that a change made in infinitesimal words would make any difference to the currency or banking situation of our country.

Of course, what really brought me to my feet was that my colleague from Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) should have risen to support such an asinine proposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: Currency is not a matter of wording. Currency is trust. That is the basis of currency, whether it is gold or paper, or wampum as it used to be in British Columbia many years ago, or shells, as it was until a few years ago in Africa. What counts is the basis of trust in your exchange; it is not the wording, especially when you cannot even read the wording without the aid of a magnifying glass. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that as a result of the study that was made in the past two or three years by the royal commission on banking and finance, and as a result of studies which I know will be made by either special committees of the House of Commons or the Senate or, I hope, by a joint committee, that we will in the not too distant future get down to a real understanding of the meaning of money. I repeat, it is not gold taken out of one hole and buried in another; it is not infinitesimal wording on paper, but it is the confidence of the people in their country, its resources and, God help me, their government. That is the security of currency.

Under the previous government our money was completely devaluated with regard to international exchange, and it has been maintained at the same devaluation by the present government. But, sir, the wording of our currency, so infinitesimal, did not result in the people of Canada losing trust in their own money. I know I am repeating myself, but I do want to say that money, exchange, currency valuation does not depend on whether it is backed by gold or by silver; the valuation of money is trust in one's own country, its resources, and oneself. Therefore I cannot understand why a Social Crediter thinks he can change the world or change Canada by infinitesimal wording which, I say again, sir, 99.99 per cent of the people of Canada do not know is on the paper; because when they receive a dollar for their services, they anticipate a dollar's return—and that is the only true meaning of money.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I want to support without any reservation the bill introduced by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté), and I believe it should be passed by this house right away. We should not wait for the government to take measures following the report of the Porter commission, because it does not have to accept a commission's recommendations.

What the hon. member for Chicoutimi means is that if we go to a bank, it is impossible to get gold pieces, and I think that, in principle, he is right, and that these words on our currency should be removed.

However, this does not mean that I agree with—

[Text]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member where on a bank note does he find that you can get gold; and if he cannot get it, why does he want it?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, when the first bank notes appeared or were put in circulation in Canada, many years ago, if they carried such an inscription, it is precisely because it was possible to obtain bank notes in exchange for gold or vice-versa. But today it is impossible to get gold in exchange for bank notes upon request. Consequently, I feel that the hon. member for Chicoutimi is right in principle.

However, that does not mean I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) when he says that to delete those words could be harmful to our dollar and be interpreted as a lack of confidence in its soundness.

Mr. Speaker, our dollar is sound at home and it is recognized as a strong currency internationally. It was devaluated last year when we were in office, and the present government has maintained that devaluation which proved to be profitable for the Canadian economy, because when an European comes to America to buy products he will pay a dollar in the United States, but in Canada he will pay only some 96.5 cents for his purchases.

I think that the hon. member for Chicoutimi is right. However, we should not wait for the government to take action in line with the Porter commission recommendations, since the government can ignore that commission's suggestions, as I said earlier. But if the government does not want to take immediate action, it should at least show some responsibility and accept that this bill be referred to the committee on banking and commerce for consideration.

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, precisely because I do not want to be accused of trying to kill the bill. However, I cannot do otherwise than stand up and say that I support the bill now before the house.

At the very beginning of my remarks, I should like to mention the observations made by the member for St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) merely to tell him that, at the present time, about 8 per cent of Liberal members are present in the house, when my party has 25 per cent.

And to revert to the matter under study may I mention that the main argument of those who are against the bill is that even if the words "shall pay to the bearer on demand" are in very small print, even if the type is very small, that is unimportant.

Mr. Speaker, when a lie is small, it remains a lie all the same. In fact, a lie remains a lie everywhere there is one. Furthermore, I call the attention of those who are against the bill to the fact that germs are very small, but sometimes also very dangerous.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) is quite right in claiming the cancellation of those words on our bank notes because, in the final analysis, they are a lie, which may become big, for I am convinced that if the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) became suddenly a bank clerk and was asked a dollar in gold for the dollar somebody would present him, because the bank said it would pay it to the bearer on demand, he would be rather confused and would really not know what to do. Of course, he could always propose, as suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) a while ago, to exchange a dollar against another dollar; but the dollar he would give in exchange would still be marked "will pay to the bearer on demand", and this could go on indefinitely.

Mr. Speaker, this inscription on our banknotes is nonsense. Moreover, I would like to tell the house that this incorrect writing on our bank notes probably reflected the out and out falsity of our present monetary system, and that is perhaps the reason why the public does not understand it. At least, in a general way, the public at large does not understand the monetary system, no more than it understands the writing on our bank notes.

The purpose of this bill is to point out something wrong on our bank notes. Whether or not the public understands does not change anything. The principle is there; it deserves to be pointed out.

The hon. member for Carleton stated that this should be left on our bank notes, in order not to break with tradition.

I think that, during the past few years, we have been breaking with traditions. Now, that one is absolutely useless from a point of view of efficiency and simply misleads the public generally, at least those who ponder on the matter.

That is why I heartily congratulate the member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) for having raised the question. Even if someone tried a while ago to make us believe that the hon. member was a true Social Crediter and that we were not, I can tell the one who made that insinuation that ours is a Social Credit group, just as much as the other one.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) on his excellent idea of submitting such an amendment to the house. However, if the bill comes to a vote, I must admit that I shall vote against it, not because of the principle on which it is based, but on account of the rather disquieting wording of the amendment. After due reflection, one realizes that it does not convey the meaning intended by the hon. member. It reads as follows:

> The form and material of notes shall be subject to approval by the minister, but such notes shall not contain any wording which is misleading or which might deceive the public—

This might give the impression that the Minister of Finance is a counterfeiter. It is said that the notes shall be subject to his approval, but inasmuch as they do not contain any misleading wording.

I am convinced that the wording of this bill is rather disrespectful towards any minister of finance and I am sure that the hon. member for Chicoutimi did not intend, for nothing in the world, to show disrespect towards authority.

In my opinion, this wording is ambiguous and confusing and, for that reason I will not accept the bill as worded.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the idea embodied in this proposed amendment is excellent. The bill goes on to say:

> —which might deceive the public as to the true nature thereof, or of the obligations incurred by the bank in issuing them and all notes shall be printed in both the English and the French language.

The intent is quite generous; in fact, it is in accordance with the policy of the present government which has become the great advocate of bilingualism and biculturalism throughout Canada. Indeed, I should like to point out to the hon. member for Chicoutimi that it was under a Liberal administration, that of Mackenzie King, that currency became truly bilingual—

Mr. Pigeon: No.

Mr. Choquette: I see the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) getting up. We will again have droppings from the pigeon. I wish to prevent him from rising on a point of order, because he is going to say that it is Bennett who approved the principle of bilingual currency. Yet, it was Mackenzie King who gave us bilingual bank notes. Under Bennett, there were two kinds of currency, one English and one French, which was more or less a hiatus. But Mackenzie King rectified the situation, so that we have a currency which is truly and essentially bilingual.

Mr. Pigeon: It is the principle which was hard to get accepted.

Mr. Choquette: Especially when you are a Conservative and an imperialist, the application is difficult, Mr. Speaker. What I want—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: The Bennett government accepted the principle of bilingualism for our currency. Once bilingualism is accepted in principle, it is easy to apply.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on with my observations, since I only have a few minutes left. I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that we are now intensively considering the matter of a distinctive Canadian flag and I think the great majority of the Canadian people agree—

Mr. Bélanger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: —on money—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member for Charlevoix rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order?

Mr. Bélanger: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to point out that the hon. member for Lotbinière is now discussing the matter of a national flag which is in no way related to the subject now under consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: He is often off the track.

Mr. Choquette: I am simply making a comparison. I am coming back to money. I do not want to hurt anyone's feelings. I respect traditions, whether they come from our English speaking or our French speaking friends. On the other hand, I have always had the deep conviction that, living in Canada, we want to be Canadians everywhere, in practice as well as in theory. That is why I think that with regard to our Canadian money, another form of bank notes could be found, according to the principle stated by the hon. member for Chicoutimi, and without offending Her Majesty. Why should we not have money that is fundamentally Canadian in substance and form? That is what I wanted to say in the debate on that very interesting bill, to which I cannot agree, however, because of its crushing phraseology.

[Text]

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate for a member to draw attention to the wording of Canada's currency as issued by the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Will you table that?

Mr. Lloyd: There is no question whatsoever that the particular wording is in need of revision. Indeed, the royal commission on banking and finance says so.

Because of the time factor I should like to explain why I think this bill should not pass. It refers to amending section 21 of the Bank of Canada Act, whereas at page 556 of the report of the royal commission on banking and finance we find these words:

> There are a number of points in the Bank of Canada Act which call for amendment besides those noted earlier in this chapter. For example, sections 22 and 23, which provide for the redemption of Bank of Canada notes in gold and the maintenance of a gold ratio, have both been suspended for many years and should be removed from the act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière: impending closing down of radar stations.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska: request made by the cheesemakers of central Quebec.

[Text]

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, action taken by the government to deal with the increase in the cost of living.

The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee adjourned at five o'clock we were considering clause 19.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity during the recess to consult with the law clerk about the very interesting point that the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue raised concerning the differences between the English and French texts. The law clerk agrees that there was an error in the translation and if the committee will agree he will undertake to see that this is corrected before the bill is reprinted for third reading. I think that might be a satisfactory way to deal with it.

Mr. Martineau: I think that the suggestion made by the minister is quite acceptable.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, with respect to clause 19 the minister said this afternoon that the reason why part IID of the act is being repealed is that the situation in the United States has changed because of the tax reduction assented to by the United States congress which will come into effect on the 1st of January next. I was a bit perturbed about the line of reasoning of the minister because I think it is dealing rather loosely with the situation when legislation adopted by this parliament depends on legislation being adopted in another jurisdiction, which legislation, of course, is subject to change without notice.

I do not understand how the minister can use the excuse of a tax reduction in the United States to justify his retreat from the withholding tax provision. Last year he increased the withholding tax from 15 per cent to 20 per cent for those corporations not meeting the minimum requirement of Canadian participation or equity ownership. That same situation exists today. If the minister still wishes to encourage greater Canadian participation, and he still does according to what he says, I do not know how he can hinge that objective upon the fact that lower taxes are being paid by United States corporations. I think the real reason for his dropping the provision, and he was well advised to do so, was simply that he found it was unworkable in every way. It was a provision that had not been thought out at all.

He mentioned carrots and sticks before supper. In the minister's heyday, when he was just assuming the responsibility which he now exercises with considerably greater sober second thought, he thought that by waving a big stick at the United States they would dutifully respond to his desires and give equivalent tax concessions. But things have not worked out that way and today we seem to have to depend on what is being done south of the border to know what sort of imposition we will adopt here.

Already thoughtful people have pointed to the real danger lurking in such an attitude, and which can only defeat the minister's own objectives. Perhaps the minister has already read the article by Peter Newman, who I understand is a good friend of those on that side of the house, in MacLean's of May 16, 1964. Mr. Newman had this to say:

During a Commons question period last summer, opposition leader John Diefenbaker thundered that as a result of the events of July 18-21—

Which he described as the great money panic and which, incidentally, was provoked in part by the action taken by the minister himself in his budget of June 13 last year.

—the U.S. "now has a veto with regard to the expansion of Canada's economy, which is something not in keeping with the sovereignty of this nation."

He went on to say that this certainly could well be the fact. If so it has sprung in no small way from the unconsidered action of the minister in shaking the big stick.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to say something. I am sure he would not want to give an incorrect impression. He must know that the secretary of the treasury of the United States made it very clear on more than one occasion that the announcement of the proposed equalization tax had nothing to do with anything that the Canadian government might or might not have done.

Mr. Martineau: The secretary of the treasury was certainly perfectly right in saying what he wanted to say, just as we are also perfectly within our rights in interpreting events, both national and international, according to the way in which we see them.

There remains the fact that the President of the United States has the right to exempt new Canadian securities from the application of the equalization of interest act. However, the act does not say he has to do so. The health of Canadian money markets will depend greatly on how he exercises this power. Certainly, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is a very disturbing situation.

Here we have the minister backing up from a provision which was considered in his judgment to be one of the major elements of his program to win back for Canada ownership of its own industry, a provision which was introduced with a great deal of fanfare last year. This is bad enough, Mr. Chairman, but the minister goes further and attempts to justify that withdrawal by stating that events in the United States, which are completely beyond his control, led him to adopt this attitude. I am asking the minister, will we have to change our fiscal policy every time the United States government adopts a certain policy? I should like the minister to come out very frankly and tell us, if such is the case, that this withholding tax has proven to be impractical and has been withdrawn for that reason.

We can understand this because, from the outset, we urged the government to abandon the policy. During the short time this tax was in force, I should like the minister to tell us exactly how it worked, and whether the minister's officials were able to administer that tax. These are the basic factors in an examination of the clause to which we are directing our attention.

Mr. Gordon: I think my hon. friend is overlooking one or two points. In the first place, the tax to which he refers does not come into effect until January 1, 1965, which is still some time ahead, so that the department had no difficulty in administering it. I think perhaps that is the simple way to explain the difficulty my hon. friend seems to have been up against.

Mr. Martineau: Surely the officials of the department must have made some provision for the administration of the tax. They must have received inquiries from Canadian subsidiaries, and that would certainly be an administrative matter.

Mr. Gordon: The tax would have been administered very simply and very easily. Instead of deducting 15 per cent as a withholding tax, there would have been a deduction of 20 per cent.

Mr. Monteith: And we would not have had a recriminatory withholding tax of 30 per cent imposed by the United States?

Mr. Gordon: My hon. friend is thinking in terms of the treaty which, under certain circumstances, would have lapsed, and in which case we would have had a new set of circumstances. We are getting hypothetical.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister if, in his negotiations at Washington to which he went in such haste when the equalization of interest act was introduced, there was any mention of this withholding tax? Was any agreement made to exempt Canada on the say so of the president, provided we took certain actions regarding the withholding tax?

Mr. Gordon: No, there was no discussion at that time at all and no conditions were made. I think it became clear to the United States authorities that they had overlooked the effect their rather startling action would have on money markets in Canada. I believe that they were probably as upset—perhaps "shocked" would not be too strong a word—as we were to learn that within 24 hours of the announcement of the proposed tax, which incidentally has not yet become law and which some people believe never will become law, there was a greater withdrawal from the Canadian foreign exchange reserve than in any similar period, even during the difficult days of the spring of 1962.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister have preferred to have an exemption clause as part of the act rather than have it left to the discretion of the United States president?

The Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Mr. Martineau: I have asked the minister a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would have a few questions to ask on clause 20.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but we still are on clause 19.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: I think the minister wanted to give an answer.

Mr. Gordon: I was asked about certain negotiations in July, 1963 with the secretary of the treasury respecting the proposed interest equalization tax. I have answered my hon. friend's question, that the question of the Canadian withholding tax, to my knowledge, did not come up at the time. He then asked whether Canada would have preferred complete exemption from the proposed interest equalization tax, rather than leaving the question to the discretion of the President. Of course, we would have preferred it. Here, we were confronted with a situation, as was the United States treasury, where a detailed proposal had been made to congress that a bill should be passed along certain lines. The secretary of the treasury, Mr. Dillon, after consultation with the President, decided that the best thing they could do over that week end, a very difficult week end, would be to say that they would recommend this exemption for Canada within the discretion of the President. It seemed to us at the time that since that was as far as they thought they could go, that would allay the fears in Canadian financial markets. Of course, when the announcement was made, those fears were allayed and Canadian markets have progressed to greater heights.

I can assure my hon. friend that, to my knowledge, there has seldom been more confidence in Canadian markets than there is at the present time. I am sure he will be delighted with this.

Mr. Martineau: I thank the minister for his information. I understand that in the haste of that memorable week end, that was all the Canadian government could obtain in the way of concessions. I wonder if since that time there have been further attempts made to have the exemption form part of the act?

Mr. Gordon: I do not know whether I can usefully pursue this line of questioning much farther, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, as my hon. friend knows, the Canadian government, particularly myself as Minister of Finance, are in touch with the United States treasury officials. My great concern at the moment is to find out what is going to happen to this proposed interest equalization tax. I have been trying to find out, ever since it was first announced, when, if ever, it is going to be passed, so we will know where we stand and Canada will not be up against the uncertainties with which we have been living for the last nine months.

Mr. Monteith: Ever since June, 1963.

Mr. Gordon: Oh, I would not go back that far; just nine months. In another field, of course, at the end of that period of time there is usually a solution of one kind or another. But we are still faced with a situation where we do not know whether this proposed tax will be passed by the United States senate before it adjourns for the elections that will be held some time next fall.

When I last spoke to him about two or three weeks ago, the secretary of the treasury was confident that this proposed tax would be dealt with by the senate before it adjourned in July. I cannot say anything more about it. I would remind my hon. friend that this particular clause 19 merely deals with the rescinding of a tax that has never been applied, and that becomes unnecessary because of the reduction in the rate of withholding tax that otherwise would have been increased next January.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman—

[Text]

Mr. Nowlan: Could I ask the minister this—

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order. Is the hon. member rising to deal with clause 19?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is with both clause 19 and clause 20, since there is surely an indirect connection between the two.

I merely wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question concerning the special taxes on profits and dividends of non-residents which were decreed during the last year, to encourage Canadians to invest more and more in order to take over part of their economy, or a percentage at least of the shares of companies established in Canada. Could the minister tell us if, in addition to the special tax imposed to achieve his objective, he took other steps to have Canadian investments replace the American investments which were being indirectly discouraged by special taxes for non-residents?

[Text]

The Chairman: The minister may want to reply to this question, but it seems to me it goes beyond the scope of clause 19 which, as was pointed out a moment ago, deals exclusively with the rescinding of a specific tax which actually was never applied.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, with regard to that clause or the other one, there is a very close relationship between the two, since they both deal with special taxes applied to non-residents, and I am of the opinion that the answer can be given with regard to one clause or the other, in view of the fact that I informed the minister that it was related to clauses 19 and 20 both. Therefore, the answer can be more elaborate.

But, in any case, I am ready to wait until the next clause to get an answer from the minister, although I think it is not in order.

The Chairman: I think it would be better to wait until we are dealing with clause 20 before the minister answers.

[Text]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 20.

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to answer my hon. friend on that. In the first place I should explain that if a withholding tax is levied on dividends payable by a Canadian company to a United States parent company, a large proportion of the withholding tax, or at least a substantial proportion, is allowed as a deduction from the taxes payable by the United States parent to the United States treasury.

While the amounts vary considerably, depending on the total amount of profit earned by the United States parent, and the total amount earned by the Canadian company, and whether the United States parent has other overseas subsidiaries in other countries, and with the amount of taxes payable by them. It is a fair generalization, however, to say that a withholding tax at the rate of 15 per cent has about the same net effect, when the top United States corporation income tax is about 48 per cent, as would a Canadian withholding tax of 20 per cent when the top United States rate is 52 per cent.

There are some minor variations, but that is essentially it. Therefore when the United States congress—as I explained in the budget speech—reduced their rates of tax, effective for 1964 and 1965, we concluded that the effect we had wished to achieve would be achieved with a 15 per cent Canadian tax, once the United States rate becomes 48 per cent, which will be on January 1, 1965, it would have about the same effect as would a 20 per cent tax in Canada when the United States rate was considerably higher.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Another question, Mr. Chairman, to obtain further particulars.

The Minister of Finance can perhaps try to make us believe that a 15 per cent tax is equal to a 20 per cent tax, but there is just the same a mathematical factor involved and 15 per cent is less than 20 per cent, since there is a difference of 5 per cent.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if, while reducing by 5 per cent the tax levied on non-residents last year, the Minister of Finance is taking at the same time some measures which would enable Canadians to regain control of their economy, of their industries, of their manufactures and of their natural resources to a greater extent than at the present time?

I therefore ask the Minister of Finance whether he can tell us what are those measures taken by his department to compensate for the tax reductions appearing in his budget this year.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I think we may be straying a little off the subject but, as I said in the budget speech, the government intends to introduce amendments to the Insurance Companies Act, designed to encourage those great accumulators of the savings of the Canadian people to place a greater proportion of those accumulations into investments in the equities and natural resources of the country. I have been working with my officials on the form of these amendments which will be presented in due course and, while it would be improper for me to indicate in advance what the proposed changes will be, I think they will have the effect that I have indicated, over a period of years.

I might say that since beginning to work on this, the royal commission on banking and finance has brought down its report, and has supported the views of the government that the present restrictions on the kind of investments that insurance companies may make should be eased. That will be done when the amendments to the act are presented to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have another question for the Minister of Finance. Does he intend to consider the advisability of having the Bank of Canada finance the constant deficits of the Canadian government, so that they would no longer be financed by the investments of the Canadian people? It is a known fact, at the present time, that the government issues bonds or obtains loans to finance its deficits and that the savings of Canadians are directed towards the national debt, whereas they would serve a much better purpose if used for the expansion of the country and the development of industries, so that the aim—

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me that in discussing the matter of deficits and of the Bank of Canada, he is straying to a certain extent from the section now under study.

Mr. Grégoire: Think about it, Mr. Chairman, and you will realize that I am not getting away from the clause under consideration. In this section, we are asked to reduce from 20 to 15 per cent the special tax on non-resident which was levied specifically to give an advantage to Canadians who wish to invest their savings. The Minister of Finance now wishes to repeal that tax and we are at present discussing the provisions which will replace it. I feel my remarks are quite relevant, Mr. Chairman; perhaps they may seem out of order to a layman or to one who is not too familiar with the question, but the idea expressed is quite relevant.

As the Minister of Finance stated a while ago, the purpose of the tax established last year was to help Canadians achieve greater control of their economy. Now, this year, hardly a year later, the Minister of Finance makes amendments.

We wish to suggest to the Minister of Finance some systems, means and solutions in order to enable Canadians to obtain exactly what was anticipated by the objective set by the Minister of Finance last year, from which he is retreating this year.

That is why I am asking the Minister of Finance whether, in order to enable Canadians to regain control of their economy, to do what he himself proposed last year through the levying of a new special tax, he intends to facilitate for Canadians the taking over of their economy by directing their savings and investments toward industry and the development of the country's economy and balancing the deficits of the federal government through the Bank of Canada rather than through the savings and investments of Canadians, thus enabling them to get back control of their economy, such objective having been set last year by the Minister of Finance himself.

The Chairman: Order. I wish to point out to my hon. friend from Lapointe that even if I am only a humble layman, I listened to him with attention and I consider, despite the observations he made, that what he has said during these last few minutes refers the effects of the tax under discussion but is not directly related to the tax itself.

On the other hand, if the Minister of Finance wishes to make a brief answer to the argument presented, I am sure the committee will agree.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

On clause 21—Tax non-payable by non-resident person.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Since the Minister of Finance did not want to answer my question concerning the non-resident special tax, I must conclude that on the matter of the non-resident special tax he is retreating, and he is not bringing any solution to the existing situation: he is retreating on this point and has no solution to offer so as to place the economy under Canadian control.

I believe that the silence of the minister in this respect is most significant.

Clauses 22 and 23 agreed to.

On clause 24—Child qualified for family allowance.

Mr. Gordon: On this clause, clause 24, I shall ask my colleague the President of the Privy Council to move, seconded by the Solicitor General:

That the said bill be further amended by striking out subclause (1) of clause 24, by renumbering subclause (2) of clause 24 as subclause (1) thereof, and by striking out subclause (3) of clause 24 and substituting therefor the following subclause:

(2) This section is applicable to the 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. McIlraith: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 25.

Mr. Nowlan: This clause is so long as to be unspeakable. There is nothing one can say about it except to point out that it covers pages 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 of the bill and continues halfway down page 25. All the lawyers and all the accountants are looking forward to the enactment of this clause with the highest degree of anticipation because, this time, the minister has done the reverse of what he usually does; instead of relying upon a general amendment he has become so specific that he has provided holes wide enough to drive a good many horses through. We could spend a whole evening on this clause but I do not think that would be advisable. It is something the courts will have to interpret. I think, frankly, that the clause is altogether too long; that it goes into altogether too much detail, and that it is likely to necessitate a good deal of interpretation by the courts. This, after all, is the policy of the government, and I simply say in passing that I do not think this clause is in keeping with the practice which should be followed by parliament. However, the minister is putting it forward and I do not intend to spend any more time in the committee tonight dealing with it.

Mr. Lambert: As my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings has just said, this clause is an extremely long one. Frankly it amounts to locking a number of doors after so many horses have been stolen. I am concerned because, the ingenuity of man being what it is, by next year we may be faced with a similar problem.

The minister is trying to block certain loopholes in connection with the concept of Canadian ownership put forward in accordance with what I felt last year was a somewhat dubious plan fraught with all kinds of difficulties. One can readily understand what the hon. gentleman is trying to do. What we should do, I suppose, is ask the minister to explain this clause carefully to us—and I am sure it would take him half an hour to do so. However, since there are so many matters which should be dealt with, I shall limit my questions to subclause 4 and when we get to that subclause I will ask my questions.

The Chairman: Is there any discussion on subclause 1?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, following the remark of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), I think I should also like to mention that this clause 25 contains a sentence worth pointing out. This sentence, which begins on page 19, fills all of page 20 and ends at the bottom of page 21.

The Americans may detain some world records, but to our Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) goes the honour of having made the longest sentence in the world, filling two pages and a half without a single full stop. I believe that this is a thing worth stopping for, and commending the Minister of Finance and his experts. I think that to build up a sentence two pages and a half long without a single period, needs men of genius, men of talent, experts in the art of syntax, and more particularly in the art of confusing others.

This is not the first time that we blame the Department of Finance for its somewhat overpowering phraseology. I admit that the Minister of Finance is not here to write poems or novels, but this is certainly worthy of the stream-novel, when there are sentences two and a half pages long.

I wonder whether the Minister of Finance —he was asked to do so last year, and we are asking him again this year—whether in future he might not ask his experts, writers or legislators to try expressing themselves in normal, more simple sentences and not to consider the taxpayer a mere nonentity, in brief not to write legislative texts only for the legislator himself, leaving the taxpayer entirely out of the picture, since he will never understand anyway.

Imagine the companies which will have to pay accountants or lawyers to interpret this sentence two and a half pages long. I think the minister should look after that.

That sentence contains many sections and subsections. The Minister of Finance should at least try to insert a period at the end of each section or subsection. It would then be easier to understand. The more so that we sometimes receive from departmental officials letters concerning income tax and referring to section 1, subsection 2 of paragraph (a) of subparagraph I.

Then, part of the sentence is missing. Suppose paragraph A is missing, and we do not have the other part of the sentence. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have to insist on that. I think the Minister of Finance should realize that it does not make sense to have such long sentences and that the wording used should be improved in order that the act may be better understood, since the taxpayers have a hard enough time as it is to understand it. Those who draw up the bills should be reminded to write sentences in such a way that legal texts may be understood, and not to write such incomprehensible sentences.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend paid me a compliment for this effort in the art of long sentences and fooling others. Coming from my hon. friend, I recognize this comes from an expert—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: —and I thank him for his intended compliment. He asked me a few minutes ago, on another clause, whether the government had in mind doing anything to encourage Canadians to acquire a greater interest in the resources and the companies of our country. While I am sure he would not expect me to give him a detailed reply on all the things that are being done in this field, I can assure him that this is very much in the mind of the government. When this new piece of legislation was introduced last year—it was not passed until December 4 or 5, if I recall correctly—the government invited the lawyers and the accountants who practise in the tax field to assist, with their suggestions, the staffs of the departments of finance, justice and national revenue in making sure that certain loopholes which had developed, and which could not have been foreseen, I would suggest, would be dealt with in an amendment as soon as possible.

The amendments in this clause which my hon. friend questions on the ground that they are very complicated—and they are—are the result not only of the deliberations of the staffs of the government's own departments, but also of the suggestions made by many, many tax practitioners. The government is in considerable debt to these gentlemen for the way in which they tackled this very difficult problem and for coming forward with suggestions for closing these loopholes. I do not pretend to be, and I know my hon. friend does not believe that I am, the draftsman of this legislation. I think it would be wrong for any minister to try and draft his own legislation. I think it is up to me, as the Minister of Finance, to ask the officials of the government, coupled with any other help I can get, to see that the section is drafted so that people cannot get around it.

While I am not suggesting for a minute that this provision is absolutely foolproof, I do suggest that to my best knowledge quite a considerable number of people who practise in this field feel it will now do the job that we want it to do. While I agree that it is very complex legislation, I would remind my hon. friend that this is not one of those sections in which the ordinary member of the public has any great interest. Corporate finance and corporate organization nowadays is getting more and more complex, and understandably, and necessarily I suppose, any tax laws that one wants to be foolproof are necessarily rather complex too. This clause will be used, or noticed, by a relatively few people in this country—the skilled tax practitioners. They are the ones who will be using this clause; they will be the ones who I hope will be advising their clients that this is the kind of legislation that they cannot get around.

I would like to take this opportunity to say that the intention of this clause, complicated though it is, is to prevent companies controlled outside of Canada from receiving very substantial benefits indeed unless they comply with certain conditions, and one of the conditions is that they make at least 25 per cent of their equity stock available to Canadians.

Subclause 1 agreed to.

Subclauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On subclause 4.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Perth and I are intrigued with subclause 4 as to why, in line 45, the figure 8 per cent is used. We are wondering whether this is an arbitrary figure, or what is the explanation for the use of 8 per cent? On page 24, line 8, the figure 10 per cent is used. I note that there is a classification of interest here, but why these two figures?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I can assure my hon. friend that I am delighted if at any time I can intrigue him and my hon. friend the member for Perth. This has made my evening. As to the questions, certainly these amounts are arbitrary. The figure of 8 per cent which was used in the first place was relatively high; I cannot think of many rates on a preferred share in excess of 8 per cent. With regard to the other example put by my hon. friend, this is the percentage which would apply in the form of a premium on a winding up, and I think there are examples where it could go to 10 per cent. Perhaps some would go higher, but I think they should be excluded.

The Chairman: We will now go to subclause 5.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the 8 and 10 per cent, what relation have these figures, if any, to the 10 per cent mentioned under (B) near the top of page 24? That is the 10 per cent; I follow. Then 8 per cent is mentioned again on page 25 under (A) and (B).

Mr. Gordon: That is the same. It is the highest rate which would be allowed on a preferred dividend.

The Chairman: Shall we go to subclause 6?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Subclause 7?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Subclause 8?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, because this is the last subclause in the bill I wonder whether the minister, either now, on the title or on third reading, would answer the question I put to him when we were on second reading. He will recall that I asked him what had become of his consideration of the proposal to extend the provision regarding trade union dues.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I did answer that question the other day. I said that I had been impressed last year and again this year during discussion of these income tax bills by the points raised by hon. members with regard to permitting deductions for logging equipment, some forms of farm equipment, such items as union dues and other expenses from income before arriving at the income which was subject to tax. I said that I felt that unless a complete examination were made of the whole problem, including all the different items of expenditure which should be considered in any serious examination of this question. I was afraid that if we dealt with one item, such as union dues, or one of the other items which other hon. members have mentioned, such as the cost of logging equipment or, in the case of a university professor, the cost of books, we would end up finding that we had done a rather cursory job. Therefore I felt that before recommending what should be done in this whole field I should like the benefit of the research which has been going on for the past two years under the auspices of the royal commission on taxation. For that reason I was not prepared to recommend a change at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Then we might hope for something next year.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before completing third reading of this bill, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would see to it that the Income Tax Act, like any other legislation, be applied as such, and not according to the good pleasure or the will of some income tax inspectors who violate the law as voted by this house and as proposed by the Minister of Finance.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept the allegation which has just been made by my hon. friend. I think that anyone who has anything to do with the Canadian civil service would not believe that the assessors of the income tax department would administer the law on the basis of caprice. It is a very difficult act to administer. I think all of the officials of the Department of National Revenue and the minister do their very best to apply the act fairly. I think that if the hon. member has anything further to say on this subject he might better raise it when the estimates of the Department of National Revenue are under review.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I merely want to refer to a comment the minister just made. He said the act was a very difficult one to administer. Then, since we are dealing with Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act, why does the minister not consider this to be the proper time to make it easier for those who have to look after the administration of this Income Tax Act, so that the tax inspectors—and I am not talking about the civil service as a whole, as the Minister of Finance would have us believe—who do as they please (and I challenge even the minister to investigate) could have their task made easier?

It may well be that the act is difficult to administer, but then it is up to the minister to make an effort to have the act amended so it could be made easier to administer, and thereby prevent the officials responsible for its administration from being able to act to the prejudice of the people rather than to the satisfaction of the Canadian people who, in the end, are paying the taxes and suffering the vexations of the income tax. Maybe the act was poorly prepared. All the minister has to do, then, is to amend the act to eliminate those vexations suffered by the people.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? Now, by leave?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I had understood that there was some discussion this afternoon vis-à-vis some difference between the English and French translations, and I thought that was to be reconciled on third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house? Agreed.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act to extend by one year the authority to carry on business for the banks to which these acts apply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I do not need to remind hon. members of the importance of the decennial revision of the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act. This provides members of parliament with an opportunity to review the whole financial machinery and structure of the country. It is one of the very important tasks which we face and which we are preparing to deal with.

As I have stated on another occasion, the government did not believe it would make sense or be helpful to consider the revisions of these two acts prior to the publication of the report of the royal commission on banking and finance which has been studying for the past two years the financial machinery of Canada, its workings, its strengths and its weaknesses. The report of that commission was published on April 24. It is detailed and lengthy and its recommendations cover a wide field and go to the very heart of the financial system of the country.

Mr. Fisher: Do you mean it is pretty good?

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member is trying to hurry me.

Mr. Knowles: He has written a column about it.

Mr. Gordon: He may have written a column about it but I cannot help him with his moonlighting operations on a matter of this importance.

Mr. Fisher: You already have.

Mr. Gordon: A report of the very great importance of this royal commission requires a great deal of careful study and thought on the part of the government and, indeed, on the part of all hon. members. Undoubtedly the government will be receiving representations from interested parties respecting the recommendations of the commission. But apart from that the government itself is giving the most careful consideration to the recommendations. We have already begun to hold meetings preparatory to reaching conclusions as to the kind of revisions that the government will wish to introduce. Much work has already been done in the Department of Finance and this will proceed during the summer months. Following this the government will be in a position to determine the kind of revisions to the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act it wishes to present to parliament.

I am hoping these revisions can be made in time to be incorporated in bills which would be presented to the house some time next fall. I would hope and expect that the bills would be referred to the banking and commerce committee. If this course is adopted the banking and commerce committee will be in a position to hear witnesses and to consider the proposed bills in detail. I would hope that following such public hearings the bills would be referred back to the house and passed by parliament at its next session.

There will, of course, be ample opportunities, when the resolutions preparatory to the revision of these two acts are introduced, in the committee and after the committee makes its report, for hon. members to express their views upon the adequacy or otherwise of our banking system and ways in which in their opinion it may be improved to meet the needs of the Canadian people. If I may say so, I think it would be premature to embark on that kind of discussion until we have had the opportunity to study the royal commission report and until the necessary work has been done. In the meantime the banking business of the country must be continued.

It is therefore suggested that the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act be amended to extend by one year the authority to carry on the business of the banks to which these acts apply. That is the whole purpose of this resolution. Without such an extension, of course, the chartered banks and the Quebec savings banks would have to cease operations by July 1 of this year. As I say, the extension proposed is for one year only.

I could go on to mention that there are precedents for this kind of action, the extension of the provisions of these two acts for a period of a year. This was done in 1911, 1912 and 1933 and there was another extension of three months, I think, in 1944. I think that is all I need to say, Mr. Chairman. It is a very simple resolution. The purpose is merely to extend these acts for one year from July 1, 1964.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I know the committee has listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of Finance, and I can say that in so far as we in the opposition are concerned we are in entire agreement with him that some such action must be taken. Otherwise the banks would all have to cease operations on July 1, and that might be a matter of inconvenience to some hon. members at least and to a great many other people in the country as well.

We have a decennial revision of the Bank Act, but on this occasion a royal commission was appointed to consider the banking and financial problems of the country generally. That commission reported only a few weeks ago. I think it has made a very exhaustive study of the financial problems confronting this nation. Frankly I am not in a position, and I doubt that anybody else is, to comment on its recommendations at the moment. Those of us who have seen the report know that it is a very heavy legal tome of about 500 pages and that it requires a great deal of study. Obviously this could not be done in time for parliament to deal adequately with all the problems between now and July 1.

Therefore I think it is perfectly satisfactory that this resolution should be adopted and that a year's extension should be given. As the minister said, possibly by next fall we can enact the necessary legislation. Quite properly he is allowing some cushion there for discussion and debate, so that we have a year in which this matter can be dealt with by parliament. After all, the Macmillan commission in the early 30's was the last one to make a really thorough and intensive study of the problems of the banks of this country, and it is high time that we gave careful consideration to their problems again. This is what is proposed by the minister, and as far as we in the opposition are concerned we approve entirely of the procedure he has set forth.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, we in this party also heartily approve of the action of the minister in extending the time, because it is obviously necessary that it should be done. In considering the decennial revisions of the Bank Act it is interesting, as one looks back, to note the differing themes of each decennial revision indicating each time, I think, an increase in the knowledge of the operations of our monetary and banking system, and it is perhaps to be hoped that we shall also improve our knowledge this time. On the occasion when I had the privilege of taking part in the revision of the Bank Act some 10 years ago the proceedings almost took the form of a seminar in monetary and banking matters, which I know was extremely educative to me and I think to many other members of the committee. I am hoping it will be that way again.

There are some questions I would have liked to ask the minister. There are three bank charters that either have been before one section of parliament or are on the way, we are told, and I wonder whether the government has considered not granting any new charters until the decennial revision is completed. There are some very interesting developments there which will bear watching. There is the question of the position of a provincial government with regard to banking. I, myself, think it is rather a good development. My only misgiving is that it comes from my own province and I have some doubts about the personalities that will be involved.

I suspect that this type of decentralized banking, if it is agreed to by the government, will not stop with the province of British Columbia. It may well be that if it is established on a sound basis, and if these banks are supervised as carefully as the present chartered banks are by the inspectorate, they may very well make a great contribution to the country at this time. They may perhaps help to solve some of the financial problems that provincial governments have today, because they are struggling to get a larger share of the tax revenues, as we heard this afternoon. They will at least have this effect, that the deposits made by the citizens of the various provinces, particularly the western provinces, will then be available as a basis for extending credit for economic development in those provinces rather than, as has been the case, forming the basis for extending credit in the highly industrialized central part of Canada. This, I think, is a very useful role for them to play. It would be interesting to know whether the government is going to put all these applications on ice until the revision has taken place or whether they will consider going ahead with granting the new charters.

There are two other new charters for which application will be made. One is a private group seeking a bank charter in western Canada. The other is a strange application to transfer a small loan company into a chartered bank, or at least have it associated with a chartered bank. This is a proposition I find very intriguing, and I should like to know just what is behind it.

In so far as the Porter commission report is concerned I, like every member of the house, glanced at that heavy tome and staggered back, and have only been able to deal with a very small portion of it. I have come across some rather disturbing suggestions which I hope the minister will view with some alarm and misgiving, such as taking the lid off interest rates on bank loans and the suggestion that trust companies and other financial institutions that do not now enjoy the privileges of chartered banks be accorded bank status. This seems to be, in effect, the recommendation. Perhaps this might be a little confusing, and I hope these suggestions would receive very serious consideration before being accepted by the government of the day.

I believe that is all I have to say at this time, Mr. Chairman, on this extension of the time limit for chartered banks and for the bank of Quebec. Like many other members in this house, I hope to be a member of that committee. I am looking forward with great interest to the hearings before the committee on the revision of the Bank Act.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the proposal which the minister has placed before us concerns the renewal of the necessary authority for our banks to carry on their business for the next year. It is our intention for several reasons to support this recommendation by the government. First of all, as has already been mentioned, the Porter commission has dealt in much detail with banking and finance, and it is only fair that we should have the fullest opportunity to study the report of this commission. It is only fair, likewise, that there should be an opportunity for extended debate on those parts of the report the government intends to implement. Obviously, this cannot be done in a matter of weeks, and that is all the time that is left before the authority of the banks runs out.

However, Mr. Chairman, this whole question of the banks and the basis upon which our banks operate, is not just as simple as the few words which we have before us in this resolution tonight would lead one to believe. We have many economic problems to face in Canada. In fact, I think that the greatest problem we have to face in this house relates to the place of banking, so far as the economy is concerned. It is one of the most important aspects of the work of this house, and at this particular time, as this ten-year period in which the bank charters are valid comes to an end. I am convinced that the whole problem within our economy is closely related to this question of banking.

I will just mention three points that I think are fundamental in this regard, because it is our intention to carry this debate to greater lengths at the second reading stage. Our first problem, I think, is this problem of a continually mounting debt. This applies not only to personal debt but also to corporation and governmental debt as well. It comes back to this basic issue, that we operate under a debt system. In fact, the only money that we use today, apart from the change which might happen to be in our pockets, is money which comes into existence because someone incurred a debt. This is closely related to the functions of banks as they carry on the business of banking as we understand it today. We, in the Social Credit party, are not opposed to private banks in any way. We believe they perform a very important function in dealing with money. It is far more efficient, and certainly desirable, that private enterprise continue to carry on this very important function as it relates to distribution. On the other hand, we believe that there are very serious flaws in our system today that need to be adjusted and which relate to this whole question of debt, to the structure of our economy as it is related to debt.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The second problem we have in Canada that is tied very closely to this question of banking is the matter of international exchange and our economic relations with the outside world. This relates to foreign ownership in, and control of, our industry as well as the associated problems of our trade balance not only with the United States but with other countries. This question, therefore, enters into the whole picture of banking and into this whole picture of money as well. Unless this problem is solved, Canada is going to be placed in a most serious situation. Negotiations, such as those conducted at the conference that took place at Geneva during the past few weeks, are never going to deal with the matter in an effective way.

The third problem in our economy which relates definitely to this question of banking is based on this whole problem of automation and which is associated with the question of unemployment. These questions are now recognized as the most serious challenge to our present economic system and also to our banking system.

So, Mr. Chairman, not to delay the debate at this resolution stage I would say it is our intention to deal with these problems as they relate to the question of banking on the second reading of the bill, not because we want to delay this matter of renewing for one year, on a temporary basis, the licence under which the banks operate but because we regard it as very basic to these three problems I have outlined. Thus we are very happy to let the resolution pass on this understanding, again emphasizing the very great importance that the banking system plays in our general economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would be inclined to succumb to the temptation of preventing the passing of any resolution or bill that would allow the study of or amendments to the Bank Act to be extended or delayed for a year so that, as indicated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), the chartered bank operations or banking operations would be stopped as of July 1. I am strongly tempted to do that, because I anticipated that would happen then.

If the Minister of Finance would stop and think about it, he might come to the conclusion that it would not be such a bad thing to suspend all banking operations after July 1, not necessarily for an undetermined or indefinite period, but for a specified length of time.

Suppose that, this evening, the house votes against this resolution or still later votes against the bill, what would happen?

Unavoidably, those who have money in the bank would hasten to withdraw their deposit. If you had $500, $1,000 or $1,500 in the bank, you would withdraw it. But as concerns the individual who would owe the bank, who would have a note which would become due in three, four or six months, the bank would not be entitled to claim its payment immediately.

When banking operations would stop on July 1, if a note was due on July 5 or 10, the bank having ended its banking operations would not be able to claim the note from the borrower. What would happen then?

What would happen would be very simple: All Canadians with savings would become panic-stricken. They would say: After July 1, since there will no longer be any banking operations, I shall withdraw my savings.

There are supposed to be savings of about $12 billion in bank accounts. When I say $12 billion, I do not take into account the day to day operations, the clearing, or any cheques that might be deposited one day to be withdrawn from another account two days later. Therefore, there would be $12 billion deposited in bank accounts, and the Canadian people as well as companies, panic-stricken due to the fact that banking operations would stop on July 1, would hurry to withdraw their savings.

That is where the situation would become odd. Since there are only $2,300 million in currency and that, out of this amount, banks have only a reserve of about $900 million, it is obvious that when 8 per cent of the depositors would have withdrawn their savings, the other 92 per cent would come up against closed wickets, because there would be no more money in the banks. Such is the situation that would be created.

Since the passing of the Bank Act, in 1934, the federal government committed itself to supply chartered banks with monetary reserves needed to face urgent situations. Then, as soon as 8 per cent of Canadian depositors will have withdrawn their savings in banks, chartered banks, under their chart, would be entitled on July 1 to compel the Canadian government or the Bank of Canada to supply them all with the required reserves in legal currency to refund all depositors besides the first 8 per cent who would like to withdraw their deposits.

What would happen then? The Bank of Canada would have to supply reserves of legal currency to chartered banks. But it would do so by advancing its reserve, by lending to them or gradually paying off the debt of Canada against a remittance of the reserves in legal currency to chartered banks.

In this way the Canadian government would be in a position to pay about 70 or 75 per cent of its debt. We are aware that the debt of the Canadian government is the burden of this government, which has to pay $1 billion and almost $100 million interest on its debt this year. If we could get rid of 70 or 75 per cent of our debt, the government would have in its budget additional liquid assets of about $550 million, since it could pay back about three quarters of its debt.

Now, some will say: Yes, but at this time, since there will be a lot more money in circulation, a lot more currency, it might cause inflation.

To this I shall answer that there would be maybe more legal money in circulation, but the money supply in circulation would not be increased since, instead of having money from credit, we would have legal money. Since banking operations would not be allowed, the chartered banks could not multiply by 11 or 12 the legal money put in circulation by the Bank of Canada, so as to allow the chartered banks to meet the demands of their depositors.

At that time, there would not be any inflation and the depositors would not lose anything since the Bank of Canada would guarantee the deposits.

That is the absurdity of the present banking system; the chartered banks pay high interest rates but the Bank of Canada guarantees the deposits.

Should such a situation arise, the Canadian government would be able to decrease its debt by 75 per cent. That would increase the cash reserves but would not increase the money supply by one cent, because bank credit would be replaced by legal currency and the chartered banks would not have the right to multiply those amounts of money by 12, because there would not be any banking operations, unable to operate the banks, would also be unable to create new credit.

Under such circumstances, who should be pitied? The depositor? No. The depositor cannot lose a penny, because deposits made in chartered banks are guaranteed by the Bank of Canada.

Who would be the loser? Those who borrow from the banks? Not at all. We would only have to delay procedure until after July 1, and a great many people deeply involved in debts would at last be over the hump in their businesses.

You will tell me that someone, on the other end, will lose by it, but who? How many companies are forced to shut down, because the chartered banks stop supplying funds. How many firms go bankrupt because chartered banks too suddenly demand reimbursement of the loans incurred by those companies? Will the borrowers from the chartered banks lose by it? No, because the banks, having stopped their banking operations, will not be able to demand reimbursement of the loans granted by them to various companies and individuals.

Who then will be the loser? Only one class of society, because the bank shares will drop. It is obvious that a share, which, today, is worth $40, $42, $48, or $50, will drop to $1, but what would this mean in the whole structure of financial operations in Canada?

It is known that the capital subscribed and paid to a bank is quite insignificant in comparison to its deposits, or loans, hardly 3 per cent in most cases. But, the holders of bank shares—since everybody should be protected—would have been served in 95 per cent or even 99 per cent of cases, because they held an amount of shares substantial enough to enable them to obtain loans; those loans would be frozen, even if they were losing on their shares. In that case, who else could lose? Nobody would lose anything, except for a time, while we would have no banking system.

If banking operations were suspended, let us say for a month as from July 1, everything could be started again, a more logical system could be built up, and nobody in Canada would lose.

As I have explained, nobody would lose, since the government guarantees such deposits to borrowers, and they would not lose, since the banks would stop their banking operations and could not claim those loans. The banks would cease to exist and the shareholders would not lose, since they would gain on the loans they themselves had obtained from the banks. The government would take this opportunity to pay three quarters of its debt by supplying reserves to the banks.

Nobody would lose, and this would allow us to find out immediately that our banking system is stupid, when we see companies, such as chartered banks, getting rich from the guarantees given by the Bank of Canada and the Canadian government.

This would allow us to find out that, for a credit of $13 billion, there is in the banks only $2,300 million in circulation. This would allow us to find out that money is not there, that only the credit is there, and that the credit is not controlled by society, as it should be, but that it is controlled by a handful of individuals, a handful of capitalists who have profit as their sole aim and objective.

While money should play a social part towards economic expansion and industrial and commercial development, while we should have a logical and sensible economic system in this country, while money should not be there like a wall or a brake in the way of all development, but should assist progress and service, and check distress in the midst of plenty. Therefore, let us again put an end to banking operations. That will make us realize that money, that the monetary system now existing, is a system designed in terms of the profits of some individuals at the expense of the whole society, while the monetary system should be the reflection of the economic growth, of the development of the country's resources.

Money does not play the role it should because it is monopolized by some capitalists for their own profit, so that they can maintain the people in hardship when they wish to do so and they can prosper in wartime when guns have to be produced. There is an opera aria which says:

Le veau d'or est encore debout
Et l'on sent sa puissance d'un bout du monde à l'autre bout
Perché sur son piédestal
Satan conduit le bal.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) is not familiar with such opera excerpts. It is Mephisto who sings that aria:

Et perché sur son piédestal
Satan conduit le bal

That is still the situation today. The golden calf is still standing. Finance still controls the Minister of Finance and the government, because when you have deficit after deficit, as there has been for several years and from the very beginning of confederation, they have to crawl before financial interests, in order to obtain credit, because that credit is controlled by chartered banks and is not produced by the work of the people. This credit is not created by the work of the people, the production of our industries, the result of our trade, of our development and of our natural resources.

How is it that everything is left in the hands of a few who take for themselves the profit of a whole society, by the creation of credit that the government must place at the disposal of the society? We have in the monetary system perhaps the major source of income, and that is strange indeed, since it is a credit which cashes in on the work and production of other people—

Mr. Winch: Don't you lose your train of thought when you talk so much?

Mr. Grégoire: Better to talk too much than not at all.

[Translation]

There is one who asks me whether I shall not lose my point by talking too much. There are some people who are slow learners and to whom the same thing must be repeated over and over again. Finally, there are others who will never understand. It is useless to sow carrots on a rocky soil, because they will never grow.

We repeat the same ideas, because we hope that among the authorities in Canada, there are some who have enough logic to understand that our monetary system is illogical and defective and who have enough determination to organize and reform that system and provide us with a better one.

Mr. Chairman, at this time, we are asked to accept a piece of legislation extending for a year of banking operations. It seems to me that this legislation will be passed with or without our help, since in this house the majority approves those banking operations as they exist at the present time.

Now, a one year extension will allow us to scrutinize our system in order to make the necessary reforms.

The Minister of Finance was talking about referring the whole matter to the committee on banking and commerce. I should like the minister to tell us when that committee on banking and commerce will convene to study and analyse the documentation that will be submitted to it, among which the Porter report and other documents, in order to make a serious and detailed examination of our monetary system, so as to improve it as much as possible to meet the wishes of the Canadian people.

It would therefore be a good thing to know when that committee will meet, to try and finish the work on time, so that next year we shall not be faced with another request to delay the matter for one more year, because this has got to be done as quickly as possible. We, of the Ralliement Créditistes, have very timely and logical suggestions to make to that committee, for the overhauling, the reform of the Bank Act, so that the government might regain the control of what is perhaps the most important thing in Canada, because it includes everything else, that is the control of credit, which is the sign of the national wealth of our production and our work.

Mr. Chairman, we shall wait and see the text of the bill which will follow the passing of the motion for second reading, and I am asking the Minister of Finance to see to it that the sentences are not longer than a page if possible. Two pages and a half for a single sentence is really too long. One page would be an improvement, and if the minister could succeed in making his sentences half a page long, he would be congratulated; this would be something that would be unusual. When this bill would come up for consideration, we could more easily make our suggestions.

Mr. Chairman, by concurring in the resolution or the bill which will follow, it is realized that chartered banks are given an extension of a year, because if the bill were not concurred in, the chartered banks would cease to operate on July 1, and this would mean losses for certain big capitalists.

But if we said: "All right, you will be allowed to go on for a year, but Social Crediters ask that you keep 100 per cent liquid assets. That makes sense maybe. In the year allowed to you, we will not go as far as 100 per cent, as required by Social Crediters, but try to keep 25 per cent of liquid assets. It would only be a quarter of what they ask, but try to do it".

Then, the Bank of Canada could make up the difference between 8 and 25 per cent, that is 17 per cent. The Bank of Canada would take the place of chartered banks and, rather than going out of business, they would be glad to continue their banking operations with only 75 per cent of their privileges, instead of 92 per cent, as at present.

Consequently, if the Minister of Finance wants to allow the banks to carry on their banking operations for a year, I suggest to him that he should impose certain conditions which would be to the advantage of the Canadian government, letting the Bank of Canada perform certain duties which are discharged at the present time by the chartered banks.

As an illustration, I could point out the financing without interest of public developments, the building of schools, of universities, hospitals, bridges and roads.

And during that extension of one year granted to the chartered banks, the Bank of Canada might be able to take over and to finance without interest those public works, because its objectives would be to make a profit like the chartered banks.

When the time comes to pass the bill in its final form, it is impossible then that the tests we are suggesting will have shown themselves very beneficial to the Canadian people and will have made it possible to save not only the Canadian economy but also the Department of Finance which is getting bogged down in debt it will never be able to repay under the present system, a debt on which the interests keep piling up and which must give an unremitting headache to the Minister of Finance, since the interest on the national debt is much higher than the budget deficits and hurts our country's expansion.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to take my remarks into consideration before introducing the motion preceding the second reading of his bill to give a year's delay to the chartered banks. In fact, they are given a year's grace. Instead of closing them down completely, we give them a year's grace. Before granting them a new charter, and after close consideration, we should make some tests that might benefit the Canadian people.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before the committee tonight is to grant an extension of one year to the charters of the chartered banks in Canada. This house has been led to believe that the reason for this extension is that the Minister of Finance, together with other members of this house, wants to take into consideration the findings and recommendations of the royal commission on banking and finance before we review and amend the Bank Act. I want to say to the Minister of Finance at this resolution stage that the report of the royal commission on banking and finance has some recommendations and suggestions in it that are completely unacceptable to this party. I want him to know, also, that there are a number of suggestions in the report that are in fact new, that we have not seen before and that we think would be of advantage to the country if adopted.

I think it is therefore valid for members of the committee to centre their remarks around what is contained in this report, because up to this point at least the reason the bank charters are being extended at all is that the Minister of Finance and others wish to have time to give consideration to what is contained in the report. On page 8 of the report the commissioners say this:

> A creative financial system is one which does not just passively accommodate the usual—instead, it is one in which active and inventive efforts are constantly being made to meet the sound requirements of lenders and borrowers, regardless of how untried and unusual such needs may be.

They go on to say:

> A spirit of vigorous, restless innovation in the financial system—of devising new ways to do new things rather than of justifying why they should never be done at all—can ordinarily best be achieved in conditions under which the participants are not prevented from responding to changed opportunities, in which price and other competition is too intensive to be comfortable, in which there is relative ease of entry for honest men with ideas and imagination, and in which different classes of institution can compete with each other on an equitable and open basis.

That is, I suggest, rather multiple, but at the same time I am happy to see that the commissioners who inquired into the financial and monetary system of Canada have at last come back to parliament and recommended at least, if nothing else, an idea that will allow this country to use the physical limits of its resources as the basis of our standard of living and prosperity, rather than using the old, worn out, antiquated financial system that has consistently tried to tell us why we cannot do certain things. So it is refreshing, if nothing else, to see that the commission have come back to parliament and recommended, if I may quote again:

> A spirit of vigorous, restless innovation in the financial system—of devising new ways to do new things rather than of justifying why they should never be done at all—

In the view of those in the Social Credit party, Mr. Chairman, this is a new departure that ought to be considered by this parliament and ought to be promoted, particularly when we think of Canada and know that it is a country with perhaps more natural resources per capita than any other country or any other area in the world. I said that while there are some good suggestions in this report I think I should draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance that one or two other suggestions that have been made—and recommendations, I may add—would lead a reader to believe that perhaps the commissioners have not gotten out of the age that has gone by. However, Mr. Chairman, before coming to that point I would point out that the commission also argues that the pattern of government regulation in relation to the banking and monetary system is no longer well suited to the country's needs. I could not agree more.

So that the Minister of Finance will be familiar with those matters that we are going to raise at a later stage when the bill is before us, I would like him to—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate at this point to interrupt the hon. member for just one moment. The question I have in mind now is whether the hon. member at this point, by going into the details of the royal commission report, is not anticipating future debate. To my mind what we are now considering is simply the extension of the Bank Act for a period of one year, and it seems to me we are going beyond the terms of that act when we study in detail the report to which the hon. member has alluded. I quite agree with him that there is nothing wrong in making some references to this report. However, I do not think it is relevant at this stage in any event, or perhaps not even at a later stage, to go into the details of the report of the royal commission.

Mr. Olson: On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Chairman, I would remind you that this resolution would not need to be before parliament had the government taken its responsibility to review and amend the Bank Act within the mandatory 10 year period. The reason we have been given by the Minister of Finance and the other members of the government—I am not suggesting it is not a valid one—is that they were waiting for the report of the royal commission on banking and finance, which commission was appointed, I believe, on October 18, 1961. Therefore the whole basis of the resolution before us tonight arises from what is in the report and the desirability, if I might call it that, for members of parliament to consider what is in the report. I would bow to your ruling but I think there is nothing more central to the basis of the debate than what is in the report.

The Chairman: I am inclined to disagree with the hon. member to some extent. Perhaps it is not necessarily because of the report that we have delay. It is because there is a report which has been made which I assume the government wants to study. I feel, and my opinion has not changed, that if at this stage we went into the details of the report and if all hon. members chose to study the details and recommendations of the report in the course of debate, such procedure would be irrelevant so far as the resolution before the committee is concerned.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I hope I will not be prevented from drawing to the attention of the minister some of the findings and recommendations contained in the report, those with which we agree and those with which we diametrically disagree. Whether we do this in this debate or at a later stage, I cannot help feeling that the whole reason for having the debate at all is because the report is before us. If we are not going to use the report as the basis for this debate, then I think it is almost senseless to extend the bank charters for one year. Because if we were now prepared to go ahead on the basis of reviewing the bank charters and amending the Bank Act without taking this report into consideration, we could probably get on with it and we would not need this delay at all. Our party has agreed not to prolong the debate at this stage. However, we intend to go into this matter more deeply at the second reading stage. I will not go further into the report at this stage, but I should like to have it made perfectly clear that for the reasons I have outlined the members of this party will not be prevented from making reference at a later stage and I might add detailed reference, to some of the findings and recommendations in the report.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member will agree with me that I can deal only with what is before me and before the committee at the moment, and that is a particular resolution. I cannot give him the blanket undertaking or commitment that he will be allowed to discuss anything he chooses when we reach second reading stage of the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, will your ruling out of order any reference to the Porter report at this stage be used as a precedent when we come to the motion for second reading of the bill to be introduced following this resolution?

If that is the case, I feel it would be worthwhile to discuss the whole matter to determine whether it is connected to the motion for second reading of the bill because we also intend to quote from the report on second reading, considering that that will facilitate the suggestions we wish to make concerning the amendments to the act.

The Chairman: I can only repeat what I have just said to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), that I can only make a ruling on the subject under consideration.

We are now dealing with a resolution to amend the Bank Act and the Chair cannot rule on anything which may happen later, in the house or in committee. At this time, the Chair can only rule on present proceedings.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I hope you will think this matter over before we get to second reading of the bill and the committee stage. It seems to me that the suggestion you have made is completely untenable. If I understood the Chair correctly, you suggested that the royal commission report on banking and finance is something about which the government will probably be bringing down legislation at a later date, and the whole report can be discussed at that time. That is an assumption which is not warranted. This committee is concerned only with the matter before it, which has to do with extending the present bank charters. In discussing that question the whole matter of banking is surely open for debate. Certainly the Porter commission report, which is a public document, can be quoted by members and discussed by members in reviewing the whole question of banking legislation. I hope Your Honour will not cling to this as a ruling, because I think it will become a much more extended matter when we get into the legislation itself.

The Chairman: If I were to make a ruling at this moment with regard to something which was to come up for consideration at a later stage, that ruling would have no validity. The only thing the Chair can do is to rule on something before the committee at the moment, and the ruling I was attempting to make was simply that at this particular stage we should consider, by virtue of standing order 59(2), strictly what is before the committee. My opinion was that at this stage, without committing the Chair as to what might be decided or ruled upon later, we should try not to go into detailed study of the report.

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I stated we had agreed to allow the resolution stage to go through tonight, but apparently there is some controversy as to whether the scope and latitude allowed in subsequent stages of this debate will be broad enough so that we can dicuss the Porter report. Therefore on the basis of that I should like to call it ten o'clock, because at least on resolution stage one has a wider latitude than when discussing the bill. Therefore I should like to call it ten o'clock.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader for an outline of the business for the next three days.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will take second reading of Bill No. S-17, an act respecting the territorial seas and fishing zones of Canada. Then we will take the resolution preceding a bill to amend the National Housing Act. On Thursday we will consider interim supply. When the consideration of interim supply is completed we will go on with the items not concluded tomorrow. Then we will consider the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act and the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Farm Credit Act. On Friday we will take up the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I had a question to ask. Does that mean that we will not start tomorrow—

[Text]

Mr. MacNaught: There is one exception. Tomorrow we will start with the resolution we were on this evening.

Mr. Churchill: And the third reading of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. MacNaught: And the third reading of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act.

[The Chairman.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

NATIONAL DEFENCE—QUEBEC—CLOSING OF RADAR STATIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, the federal government established a radar station in the riding of Lotbinière, in St. Sylvestre, to be more exact. I wish to commend the present government for having decided to cut defence expenditures because, as everybody agreed, they were excessive and needed to be drastically reduced.

Under the new policy of the Department of National Defence, which is based on Canada's new needs, several radar stations have been closed down and among them is the station at St. Sylvestre, in the riding I have the honour to represent here.

Mr. Grégoire: There is also the station at Parent.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to put a question to the hon. member for Lotbinière?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, when I am through with my statement, I will be glad to give an answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Pigeon: Is it true that the Prime Minister has forbidden the hon. member for Lotbinière to deal with this question?

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has for some time made all kinds of assertions without any definite source of information.

Mr. Grégoire: That is true.

Mr. Choquette: He builds his assertions on idle hypotheses and I should like to ask him to be more serious and to show himself worthy of his title of member of parliament.

Mr. Pigeon: My source of information is accurate.

Mr. Grégoire: The member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is talking through his hat.

Mr. Choquette: I have never received orders from anyone and much less from the Prime Minister, for if there is a man in this country who respects democratic liberties, he is none other than the Prime Minister, who asks that everyone should express their views frankly and clearly.

Mr. Pigeon: God save the Queen.

Mr. Choquette: Yes, I agree perfectly with the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm: God save the Queen, also, God save Canada as essentially Canadian and not as colonialist, Mr. Speaker.

Now, here is what I want to say concerning the St. Sylvestre's radar station that has been closed—

Mr. Grégoire: And also the one in Parent.

Mr. Choquette: —following the decision of the Department of National Defence. Consequently—

Mr. Grégoire: Do not forget the radar station in Parent.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, would you, please, call to order the hon. member for Lapointe who always makes futile and unfruitful remarks which lead nowhere. I should like to make myself heard in a peaceful atmosphere.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I just want to remind the hon. member for Lotbinière that it is also proposed to close the radar station in Parent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Lotbinière wants to go on with his remarks I would suggest him to make them right away, because he has only seven minutes left.

An hon. Member: Long live the Queen.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I see there are strong partisans of Her Majesty the Queen in the house.

The radar station of St. Sylvestre, as in the case of other stations in the country—

Mr. Grégoire: Now what.

Mr. Choquette: —following a decision made by the Department of National Defence, will be closed presently.

That radar station in Lotbinière county no doubt revitalized local economy and favoured local prosperity. And now, after ten years of a relative prosperity resulting from the establishment of that radar station which had attracted many outsiders to settle down in St. Sylvestre thus contributing to the local economy, pursuant to a warranted decision, I will admit, because military expenditures have to be cut down, the local economy of St. Sylvestre will be greatly affected—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Choquette: —I feel it is my duty to intervene on behalf of my constituents to ask the Minister of Industry—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I now put a question to the hon. member for Lotbinière?

Mr. Lambert: Let him come to the point.

Mr. Choquette: I would ask the Minister of Industry whether he has a special policy to announce concerning the people of those localities which had benefited tremendously from the radar stations installed there.

In our election platform, as well as during the election campaign, we strongly advocated the industrialization of rural areas both in Quebec and in Canada as a whole—

Mr. Fisher: And Ontario too.

Mr. Choquette: —and particularly the province of Quebec. We must industrialize them.

As a representative of a rural constituency, I am in a position to see the crying need to restore our agriculture and to stimulate the economy of our rural areas.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I ask—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Lotbinière—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière has the floor and he should not be interrupted.

Mr. Choquette: —consequently, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we have a Department of Industry that has actually been set up by this government, and for which it deserves warm congratulations, and if it is in a position, as I am sure it is, on account of the ability and great experience of the man who is heading it I think that the federal Deparment of Industry—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him is now up.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think that I spoke seven minutes, because I was constantly interrupted—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret, but the time allotted to the hon. member is now up.

Mr. Choquette: I wonder whether, with the unanimous consent of the house, I could proceed with my remarks for two minutes.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to allow the hon. member for Lotbinière to go on heaping praise on the Minister of Industry, because he deserves it. We agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: On condition that the hon. member for Lotbinière will allow me a question.

Mr. Grégoire: No, no questions allowed.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wants to ask me a question about a distinctive flag for Canada, I shall allow him to do so later.

Mr. Pigeon: It is about the Queen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm please resume his seat? Would the hon. member for Lotbinière do likewise? I must remind hon. members that during this debate, the length of their remarks is strictly limited. If we were to allow an extension of the speeches and the remarks made in the house either by the members who have questions to ask or by the ministers who answer them, in my opinion, we would go against the very substance of this debate.

I think that the hon. member for Lotbinière has used up the seven minutes granted to him under the provisional order and I would now ask the Minister of Industry to rise.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I asked for the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Grégoire: Granted.

Mr. Pigeon: Granted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry but the hon. member did not get the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Choquette: But nobody objects to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: Only the Queen is against it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can say to the hon. member that I hear dissenting voices near me.

Mr. Choquette: I do not think there were any, Mr. Speaker, I have the impression—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: —that the acoustics are bad, because there were not any dissenting voices. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the hon. members to resume their seats. It was suggested that the hon. member could continue if he had the unanimous consent of the house; he did not get it and I must now ask the Minister of Industry to reply to the hon. member.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has drawn the attention of the house to what in the view of the government is a very important question. As all hon. members are aware, a considerable number of large installations are in the process of being closed down by the Department of National Defence.

With a view to ensuring that the transition from national defence operations to some other useful purpose is as rapid and smooth as possible, the government has charged the area development agency, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Industry, with the responsibility of canvassing all the possibilities there might be of making effective use, in the national interest, of these installations which are being closed down.

The radar station at St. Sylvestre is one of these to which the area development agency has, since it learned the Department of National Defence was closing it down—and I add parenthetically it has not been closed yet—directed its attention to exploring the best possible uses to which it can be put.

To this end a canvass is made of all the federal government departments. Subsequently a canvass is made of all the relevant provincial government departments. Third, a canvass is made of municipal efforts or municipal organizations, and finally private industry. In the case of St. Sylvestre it has been determined to date that there is no federal government utilization that could be made of these facilities.

Discussions have been under way for some two weeks with the government of the province of Quebec with a view to canvassing the possibilities of using the radar station at St. Sylvestre for institutional or other purposes. I am glad to tell the hon. member that we have not yet exhausted all these possibilities.

Finally there does remain a possibility, which the area development agency is exploring, of making use of these facilities by private individuals, or a private organization, for recreational purposes in the general interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to interrupt the minister to tell him his time has expired. The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska.

AGRICULTURE—CHEESE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT POLICY

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question:

> Mr. Vincent: Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether he has received a request signed by the cheese producers of central Quebec areas regarding that new policy he announced to the house on April 29 of this year? If so, has the minister any comments to make?

The new policy was announced by the Minister of Agriculture last April 29 and it came into force a few hours later. As I stated last Friday, it should have been announced at least 15 days before the new year. Following that announcement, Canadian producers, especially those of the eastern part of the country, had to send petitions and requests to the Minister of Agriculture in connection with the new policy. That request, which deserved the immediate attention of the federal authorities, was signed by producers who sell a total of 3,202,884 pounds of cheese on the local market.

Because of the new policy, they had to raise the retail price of cheese by 4 cents a pound on the local market; this constitutes an increase of $128,155.36 for consumers.

The following people signed the request:

Marcel Descôteau, of St. Grégoire de Nicolet, Paul-Émile Dionne, the farm co-operative society of St. Germain, Drummond county, Marcel Lemaire, of St. Cyrille, Drummond county, François Richard, of Kingsey Falls, Gérard Grenier, of Victoriaville, Henri Provencher, of Princeville, and Félicien Lemaire of Ste. Perpétué, who have sold, as I said, a total of 3,202,884 pounds of cheese on the local market. Allow me to read this request:

Mr. Minister:

We are all cheese producers of the central part of the province of Quebec, more particularly in the counties of Nicolet-Yamaska, Drummond-Arthabaska and St. Maurice-Laflèche.

We are informed of the new policy concerning the subsidy on the production of cheese.

We submit that in order to conform with the regulations established on May 1, 1964, while at the same time providing consumers with the fresh cheese they are looking for, we would necessarily have to increase the price of cheese by 4 cents a pound or reduce by 30 cents per cwt. the price paid to farmers.

In each case, there would be an obvious prejudice which could entail very serious effects on our economy.

Consequently, we ask you to reconsider the matter in order to find a fair solution. In fact, we add that this problem is really urgent, which is quite evident.

Yours truly.

In my opinion, the Department of Agriculture should give favourable consideration to this request. I do not intend to refer to all the points I brought up last Friday, but I should like the Department of Agriculture to announce officially that the request has been received, considered and that the department will allow cheese producers who sell their products on the local market to benefit from a subsidy of 3.6 cents per pound with respect to first class cheese.

At present, these producers have to keep the cheese for a period of eight to ten days then send a piece of about 20 pounds for grading in Montreal. If they were allowed to sell this cheese immediately, while it is fresh, provided they kept a 20-pound piece in storage for a period of ten days, to be sent later for grading, I think it would be possible to do so. This would also enable those producers to benefit from this 3.6 cents a pound subsidy on grade "A" cheese and they would not be forced to raise by 4 cents a pound the retail price of cheese because efforts should tend to increase and not to discourage consumption.

Mr. Speaker, it is in this aspect of the new government policy that I am particularly interested and that is why I am asking the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Beer), to answer my question tonight, as I know that this question has been carefully examined by the department's authorities. Therefore, I hope that this answer will favour the producers-manufacturers of my constituency.

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question, which I think might be divided into two parts: First of all, did the Minister of Agriculture receive a request from certain manufacturers of cheese in the province of Quebec, and second the hon. member asked for some clarification of policy. This petition was received by the Minister of Agriculture and was appropriately—

Mr. Vincent: Discarded.

Mr. Beer: —discussed and dealt with. I think it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to clarify the fact that we are dealing with cheese made from pasteurized milk, where the policy is that the cheese must be held for eight days; it is then graded, and if it grades 94 a premium of two cents is available; if it grades 93 a premium of one cent is available. The question, of course, has to do with the sale of fresh, or green cheese. If the manufacturer of cheese wants to dispose of his cheese prior to the eight days, of course he immediately forfeits the premiums that are available. But arrangements have been made whereby if an amount of cheese is held by the manufacturer until a grader arrives, then all the milk from which the cheese was made will be eligible for the 3.6 cents per pound assistance. I believe that is a clarification of the policy which the hon. member wished, and I think it is probably a tribute to the alertness of the department officials that this matter was taken into consideration even before the petition was received.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to raise concerns the alarming increase in the cost of living index as indicated in a dominion bureau of statistics release of last Friday, May 15. I want to begin by urging that we must not get too involved in emotional issues, such as the flag, to notice what is happening to our national economy. The bulletin that was issued last week indicates that within the last year there has been an alarming increase in the cost of living index.

To go back over the last five years, there has been a gradual increase in the cost of living. Perhaps I may give these figures briefly, Mr. Speaker. In April, 1959 the cost of living index was 125.4 points up .2 point over the previous year; in 1960 it increased 2.1 points; in 1961 it increased 1.6 points; in 1962, 1.2 points; and in April, 1963, 2.0 points. The current increase is 2.7 points, all based on the 1949 index. This is the greatest increase during the last five years. There were two previous indexes, in the years 1956 and 1957 which were slightly higher. The figure for 1956 showed an increase of 4.3 points over that of the previous year, and in 1957 the increase was also 4.3 points over the previous year. Before that there had been an increase in the cost of living index as high as 10.5 points in 1951 and 5.1 points in 1952. There has been a gradual increase, but this year it is rather alarming and I think the government should be, and probably is, quite concerned about this very great increase.

The anomaly of this situation is that in the very release which indicates that the food index has increased—that is, the cost to the householder—the price index for farm products is down. The farmer got less for his product but the householder paid more. For example, the price of beef given in the current release shows that it went up .5 points, or half a point, in one month, from March to April 1964, but in the same period the price paid to farmers for beef went down 1.3 points. This is a recurrence of the great complaint we had in 1955 and 1956 of a price spread between the farmer and consumer, and we certainly hope this is not a return of this problem which during the years of the previous government diminished so rapidly.

I do not want to make comparisons, but it is a fact that this increase has been brought about by the inflationary policies of the government and the expansion of the money supply at a greater rate than the gross national product has increased. There are a lot of other forces at work here. I think the large spending program for non-productive activities that the government has undertaken in the last year has contributed to the inflation.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a clipping from the Toronto Telegram of December 12, 1963, the heading of which is: "Bold plan by P.M. hits living costs". We should like to hear of this bold plan, because if it hit the living costs it certainly did not hit very hard. In December of last year the cost of living index was 134 and it is now 135. It has gone up one point, which is almost as much as it went up during a whole year in previous years. I should like the assurance that the government is giving very serious consideration to this problem of the cost of living, and general inflationary policies.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will reply rather briefly to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka who raised this question about the increase in the cost of living. The government is, of course, always concerned at increases in the cost of living. However I should like to point out that while in the years 1957 to 1960 the cost of living did not increase, during the same period unemployment increased in this country rather tragically.

There are three main points I should like to make in reply to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. First of all, increases in consumer prices have been moderate and in line with the experience of the past few years. Second, they are only fractionally higher than those of the United States, even though the Canadian economy has been absorbing the effects of devaluation of the Canadian dollar. Third, the moderate increases in Canadian consumer prices are well below those of most European countries and Japan, which have been experiencing substantial price increases. Consequently, Canada's international position has not deteriorated; if anything it is improving, and this has been proved by the strengthening of our trade balance.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.
