DRESSMAKING. MRS. JAMES CORMACK begs to inform the ladies of Miramichi, that she is prepared to attend to any orders in the above line with which she may be favored.

She has associated with her her sister, Miss Mayberry, who has had an experience of several year at the business in Boston, and is confident of being able to satisfy patrons in both styles and and prices.

SOUVENIRS.

How often do we hear the bereaved exclaim :—
"Oh, if I just had his likeness; if I only had her Photograph I would not take a fortune for it!" Let such be a warning to those enjoying life and health. Go while the lamp of life holds out, while the bloom of physical perfection adorns the cheek, go to J. A. Stevens, Photographer, opposite the Canada House, Chatham, and get one of the best pictures ever taken. Get a dozen Photographs beautifully infiahed in card or cabinet size, or else some of those Tintypes that he is making at such very low prices.

Don't put it off any longer but come at once.
The Subscriber keeps a good stock of mouldings that he will make up to any size frame.

CHATHAM, - - - SEPTEMBER 16, 1880.

The Work of Lumber-Driving. Through some mismanagement, or vant of good management, there are now about 20,000,000 feet of logs "hung up" in the Miramichi River, and, owing to the failure of those controlling them to have them driven, nearly all the mills are shut down, or running only occasionally. If these logs had failed to reach the booming ground owing to any very unusual difficulties in the way of driving, it would not appear so bad, but when their being hung up is due to neglect that has grown out of a vicious practice in the business, the occasion is an opportune one for enforcing the lesson it teaches. There is no equitable arrangement put into practice under the law by which lumber can be driven, the result being that those who are most anxious to get logs to market, are frequently obliged to drive both for themselves and others on account of drives being mixed. It seems that each operator interested in the 20,000,000 now hung up, depended on one or more of the others doing his work for him. They all discovered, however, when too late, that the "lie and wait" game had failed them. To make the matter worse. the water has been lower all summer than for many years, and has remained so later than usual. If the experience gained will lead to the principal men engaged in the lumber trade moving practically in the matter of organizing a lumber-driving company, it will, perhaps, be a gain in the end. It is conceded that after logs reach the main giver, so that drives from that a few monopolists in other provindifferent branches and streams get mixed up, they should be taken hold of fit to support the present Dominion and forwarded with all expedition to the rafting ground. The general interests of the trade demand such an arangement, and no time should be lost be lessened and the idleness of mills when they should be at work, obviated.

When publishing some Miramichi trade returns recontly we remarked :-"There is a gratifying increase of business in favor of 1870 shown in the above returns—all due to the improvement of the lumber trade in Great Britain and

Married in Spite of Himself.

BY MRS. SUMNER HAYDEN. There was the widow Smith; sh would go out house keeping sometimes, although she didn't care to go where there was very hard work, having herself to look out for, which means that she must provide herself with another husband, since her first husband had died and left her without any money. Everybody said that the widow Smith would play her best cards to catch the widower Brown, for whom she was to

But the wise little woman kept her own counsel, as all wise women do.

And, according to promise, she went one Monday morning to the house of the widower in the capacity of housekeeper and maid of all work.

To be sure, you wish to know who Brown is. I'll tell you. He was a farmer, middle-aged, and quite well off. His wife had died quite unexpectedly a few months before he saw the widow Smith, and spoke to her about keeping house for him. He had two grown-up children, a son and a daughter. John Henry, the son, was an old bachelor, close-fisted and grasping. Sarah Jane, the daughter, was about of the same style, only more Their greatest g.ief when their poor mother died, was because there was no one left to do the housework, inasmuch as Sarah Jane was too everlastingly lazy to wait upon herself, even to the making of her own bed or dusting her

With Mr. Brown it had been differed to his wife, he mourned her loss most dutifully ; and when John Henry and Sarah Jane declared that no other woman should ever come into the family to take their dead mother's place, he willingly consented to the arrangements they made for doing the housework between them. The fact was John Henry was afraid that his father would marry again, and thus entitle his second wife to a share of the property, which would otherwise be equally divided between himself and his sister. He communicated his fears to his sister, and they decided to do the work between themselves rather than place temptation before

"He'll be just as likely as can be to marry any housekeeper we may get here," said John Henry. "He has no eye for beauty, and if we get a young girl to do the work, and he gets married to her, there's no knowing how many shares the property will be cut up into. Shares enough, no doubt.

" And there'll be nothing left for us, John. But we'll fix him! the scheming old man'that wants to get married before our dear mother getscold in the ground whined Sarah Jane.

"Who says he wants to get married? I'm for fixin' things so that he shan't want to marry again. He hasn't said anything about it, and if you know which side of your bread's buttered you won't put any sich notion into his head,' replied this dutiful son.

Mrs. Brown had been a superior housekeeper, and dying, left her house in excellent condition, Consequently, the housework was not very hard, for awhile, and John Henry and Sarah Jane managed to get along nicely with it for a few weeks: but after a while the closets became dirty, and the paint showed the marks of dirty fingers, and the dust was gathering in quantities everywhere The spring farming was coming on, and John Henry must be out of doors and at work. Housekeeping was getting to be an old story to Sarah Jane, also, and retiring within her old pretence of illness, she allowed household matters to take their own course.

The consequence of all this was that a day came when Brown had nothing cooked for dinner, and no clean clothes to put on.

"What are we going to do, Sarah Jane?"asked Mr. Brown, who had suffered much from seeing the house in such disorder, and sadly missed the bountiful meals so regularly prepared by the departed. "Do? Why as everybody else does, get somebody to do the work. I've worked myself sick now trying to save the expense of a housekeeper." This was enough: and after a dinner of crackers and milk, Mr. Brown proceeded to look up a housekeeper. ceeded to look up a housekeeper.

He chanced to be fortunate enough to hear of the widow Smith, and having hear of the widow Smith, and having awful the matter, and dad's enamost never heard of Samuel Weller, the Elder, nor his advice to his son Samivel, he at once went to the house, and engaged her to do his housework, and come upon the following Monday.

We have seen how she kept her appointment, and if ever a house took a thorough cleaning, it was Mr. Brown's farm-house, after the widow Smith came

There was no more cold victuals or milk dinners for Mr. Brown after that. and it really seemed as if the old reign of order and neatness prevailed, and he was getting to be quite contented and quietly happy again, when a new source of commotion arose. Asked John Henry one day: "Sarah Jane, have you thought anything about father and the widow Smith ?"

"Yes, What?" was the intelligent answer.

"Pshaw! I mean have ou thought that the old man may be had a notion of gettin' married again-"

What?" screamed Sarah Jane-"what? my father marry that good-for- pair of black gloves to wear to the nothin' widow Smith! We must not allow it, John Henry! Marry her, indeed! I tell you, John, there'll be precious little peace for me if the widow Smith once gets the reins; why, she told me to-day that I should have to wait | Sarah Jane. upon myself or go without being waited on if I was her daughter; and she just the same as told me to go down cellar and get my own luncheon or go without. If father should marry her, I would not stay home another minute."

"I don't know who'd want you, if you mean to be as lazy as you are now right along," growled John Henry.

phatic answer. brother?"

"Yes, you said you would-" "You know father's sister, Aunt Jenima?"

pricked my ears often enough, when I was a child." "She's a master hand at makin' a match or breakin' up one, either" "Wouldn't it be a jolly idea to get her to come here a visitin', and set father against the widder?" "First rate, John Henry, only we for nothin', more than a couple of weeks, prepared for her. should we John. "If she's as smart as she used to be, it won't take her that time to fix things o's the widder won't have no chance at all. Meanwhile we mustn't be idle. whole farm. I like her!" We must tell her the farm is mortgaged, send for Aunt Jemima." "Send her a strong message, John went to the kitchen." The widow Smith was paring apples me, sister Jemima?"

for the next day's baking, and Mr. Brown sat near her, looking wonderful- father; and folks do say that she's who looked unusually smiling.

Mr. Brown arose and left the room, the coast clear, Sarah Jane commenced: "Mrs. Smith, couldn't you take off a little from your wages this season?" "Take less than two dollars and a here? I'd sooner put on half a dollar."

was the cheering reply. "But Mrs. Smith, you cannot understand our circumstances. We are poor. The farm is covered with mortgages, and we can scarcely get a living off the farm. Father is worried to death by bills to pay, and he can scarcely afford me a new dress twice a year. We are really very poor, Mrs. Smith." "Why don't you go to work, then, and save the expense of hiring help at all? Your father would appreciate sympathy of this kind, and you could Mrs. Smith.' carn a new dress four times a year.

of the widow. And flying at her, she would have put her threat into instant execution had not the widow calmly set down the basin of apple-parings, and taking Sarah Jane by the shoulders, shook her until she was glad to ask her to let her off.

"Just to show you what your father's econd wife might do, my dear," smiled the widow, opening the doors and pushing Sarah Jane into the sitting-room, where John Henry sat, reading over the etter he had written to Aunt Jemima.

"She almost killed me, John Henry!" wailed Sarah Jane, with an attempt to act like a grieved child, although the was thirty-five years old that very day. And she went on to relate the story of Mrs. Smith's abuse: "Let her act; Aunt Jemima'll fix her, when she comes," was the consoling
