

BOYS AND GIRLS

a Pause in the Day's Occupation.

AT BEDTIME.

The little room in fading light. The little beds all sweet and white; The little prayer at mother's knee...

consciousness that somebody—his teacher, brother, sister, father, mother or friend—believes in him.

Of Alice in her Wonderland, Of Cinderella's ball so grand; The bear and poor Red Riding Hood, And those dear children in the wood...

When into the life of such a boy there comes the loving assurance that somebody has discovered him, has seen in him possibilities undreamed of by others, that moment there is born within him a new hope.

Without, the dark tumultuous night, Within, the peace of fading light, The years may come, the years may go...

If you believe in a boy, if you see any real ability in him (and every human being is born with the ability to do some one thing well), tell him so; tell him that you believe he has the making of a man in him.

EFFECT OF CONFIDENCE.

There is nothing which quite takes the place in a boy's life of the confidence...

"Oh! you are. You're—" "Shut up, Charles! You forget mother prohibited that even more decidedly than 'Sin' for little Beas there." So now, cousin Hilda, having, as I said, made the introduction in full form, will you kindly favor us in return with your own familiar cognomen?"

to make friends with those remaining, she turned to Molly, and said—"Have you got a garden of your own? I should like to see it; I like gardens."

"Why, Hilda, of course—by my real name," said Hilda quickly, adding with a dignified air, "I was christened Hilda Petersham, but of course as Petersham is a surname I can not call it. I only sign it in letters."

"What no fruit trees at all! No plums or cherries, or apples, or apricots, or anything! Why not? What are Falkland Island trees like, then?"

"No, no, Gordon, Strawwelpete!" broke in Katie, her eyes dancing with fun. "She wouldn't mind that, would she, Hilda? It's such a nice name—"

"There aren't any at all," said Molly; "not one in the whole place. I think papa says it is the wind that won't let them grow. None of us have ever seen a tree except Gordon and I, and I was too little when we came here to remember them properly. I wish I did; because then I could tell Totie about them better. I don't think she quite knows what a tree is."

"I shouldn't like either," she said, very stiffly. "My Aunt Lily always said that ricknames were very stupid vulgar things, and that only vulgar people used them; and I think it will be very rude of you to call me one."

"Yes, I do, 'know,'" said Totie promptly; "an's green fings in pictures. I does know, sisten." As for Hilda, she was speechless. Not a single fruit tree or tree of any kind in all the islands! Not even a common apple to be got for love or money! What a dreadful place it must be to live in! She could scarcely believe it.

"Why, Hilda, of course we won't if you don't like. Gordon was only joking," Molly said eagerly, but Gordon was too much taken aback for apologies. He was like Hilda, indeed, in having a somewhat high opinion of himself and being quick to take offence, and had no idea at all of submitting to be lectured by a little cousin whom he was graciously condescending to joke with and tease; so he simply turned on his heel and marched out of the room, pausing at the door to say—

"It was to be an out-door feast, of course; for during the short Falkland summer (and the summers in those far southern regions are much shorter and colder than in England).

"I say, Charlie, it's no good our wasting our holidays indoors. I'm going for a ride." Molly and Katie ran after him to protest and coax, but got snubbed. It wasn't a boy's place to amuse girls—they must do it for themselves; and he walked off resolutely, though not without informing Charlie, in a voice that was audible to his sisters at any rate, that "the air of St. Petersburg was too icy for him!"

"And I'll make some biscuits," she said. "Cook will give me some flour and sugar, I know, and a feast is nicer when one cooks everything for it oneself; but perhaps," remembering herself with a generous impulse, "you would like to do them, Hilda. You may if you like."

"You're a bad girl to call Dorcy rude, in Totie won't love you." "I didn't say he was rude. I only said it was rude of anyone to call names," Hilda answered, rather glad of an opportunity of explaining herself, for she too was feeling much disappointed at the retreat of the boys, and did not find half as much consolation as she had expected in the reflection that she had only been "perfectly right" herself, but had administered a lesson in good breeding to her cousins. If they went away and left her every time she tried to improve them her position would be a very uncomfortable one; and, beginning for the first time to wish

For a moment Hilda felt quite delighted at the prospect, but the next minute the unfortunate idea entered her head that making cakes was "servants' work" after all; and that Parsons might say she was "demanding" herself if she took pleasure in doing it, instead of exhibiting that superior refinement with which she had determined to impress her cousins. She put on a grand little manner, therefore, and said in a tone of surprise—"Does your mamma let you go into the kitchen? Mine never did. She said it was the last place young ladies ought to like to be in, listening to servants' talk and all that."

CHAPTER V.—META MAKES UP HER MIND—DROWNED IN THE KELP-WEED. The feast planned by Molly in honor of Hilda's arrival met with general favor, and as Gordon did come back to dinner, being indeed rather ashamed of having lost his temper so easily, the children set to work that same afternoon to plan all the details of the entertainment while Hilda was in the drawing-room, taking a very tearful farewell of her friends Mr. and Mrs. Barclay.

every fine bright day was spent as much in the open air as possible, and with the exception of Molly's cakes and a contribution of vegetables from each of their gardens, it was to consist of what Charlie called "Falkland Island things;" the only pity being that it was not later in the summer, when all the wild berries which grow so plentifully in the islands would have been quite ripe, and provided them with a grand dessert.

"I don't know how," said Hilda. "Some friends of mine in London used to make toffee in their school-room. They did it with brown sugar in the lid of a biscuit tin over four candles. It always tasted so candle-smoky, and I don't think you could cook cakes that way. Besides, wouldn't the flour make a mess?"

Molly and her sisters had gone in the meanwhile to Captain Crawford's house, which was built of wood, painted white, and stood in the centre of the soldiers' quarters; and were eagerly describing to Meta, what the long-expected cousin was like, in whose honor the picnic was to be given. Now, I do not think myself that it is ever very wise to be in a hurry to describe people whom we know very slightly to someone else who does not know them at all; for everyone has two sides, a good as well as a bad, and it is very seldom that anyone is clever enough to see all sides at once.

"Why, you can play at feasts with real vegetables of your own!" she said; on which Molly, with eager hospitality began to plan one immense, and, having pulled up one of her potato plants to see if the tubers were large enough for eating, and replanted it again, after a somewhat dubious inspection, decided on fixing the feast for the day but one following, when Meta Crawford could also be invited to it.

"I don't know how," said Hilda. "Some friends of mine in London used to make toffee in their school-room. They did it with brown sugar in the lid of a biscuit tin over four candles. It always tasted so candle-smoky, and I don't think you could cook cakes that way. Besides, wouldn't the flour make a mess?"

Was Weak and Run Down WOULD VERY OFTEN FAINT AWAY Mrs. J. H. Armstrong, Port Elmsley, Ont., tells of her experience with MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS. She writes: "It is with gratitude I tell how your Heart and Nerve Pills benefited me." "I was very weak and run down, had headaches nearly every day and very often would faint away, in fact, my doctor said that sometime I would never come out of the faint. It was through one of your travelling agents that I was induced to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and after taking three boxes I am glad to relate it has been a number of years since I had a fainting spell and scarcely ever have a headache. Too much cannot be said in praise of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, for in me they have effected a perfect cure." Price 50 cents per box or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or The T. How to Live. Do not be discouraged at your faults; bear with yourself in correcting them as you would with your neighbor. Lay aside this aridness of mind, which exhausts your body and leads you to commit errors. Accustom yourself gradually to carry prayer into all your daily occupations. Speak, move, work in peace as if you were in prayer, as indeed, you ought to be. Do everything without excitement by the spirit of grace. As soon as you perceive your natural impetuosity gliding in, retire quietly within where is the kingdom of God. Listen to the leadings of grace, then say and do nothing but what the Holy Spirit will put in your heart. You will find that you will become more tranquil; that your words will be fewer and more effectual, and that with less effort you will accomplish more good.—Penelon.

Perosi's New Oratorio. Dom Lorenzo Perosi, the famous musical composer of the Vatican, has just finished a new oratorio, entitled "The Soul." It will probably be presented for the first time in Rome next spring. Dom Perosi, a native of Turtona, studied music at the Milan Conservatory and in Haberl's Domhererschule at Regensburg. He was admitted to orders during the course of his studies. In 1897 he produced "La Passione di Cristo," a sacred trilogy which won him great favor with Italian masters of sacred music. A year later he was made honorary maestro of the Papal choir. Perosi's other compositions include "La Transfigurazione del nostro Signore Gesu Cristo," "La Instruzione di Lazaro" and "Il Natale del Redentore."

Episcopal Approbation.

Archbishop of Montreal

FREEMASONRY IN ENGLAND

French freemasonry is notorious for its atheistic and anti-religious character and policy, and the present situation in France is but the latest illustration of the power of the lodges.

After speaking of the satisfaction which such a goodly gathering of his brother freemasons gave him as a witness to the fact that "the cornerstone of English masonry is the belief that 'the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.'"

That this was no mere unsupported rhetoric the dean went on to prove by quoting the words of M. Viviani, which, he said, were so awful that a Celsius or a Julian would scarcely have dared to use them.

scribed "these grave and awful acts to the influence of the powerful order of the freemasons." From all this it was easy for the preacher to draw a lesson and a warning to his brethren of the craft...

McCLURE'S INSULT TO CATHOLICS.

McClure's Magazine, which circulates quite extensively in Canada, has, in its September number a statement made by its staff correspondent George Kennan, who has been in San Francisco for some time for the purpose of obtaining material in connection with an article entitled "The Fight for Reform in San Francisco," which appears in the above publication.

Catholics make up a goodly proportion of McClure's readers, and we trust that those here in Canada, and we know those in the United States will display their common-sense and justice in dealing with this matter, and show that they cannot be insulted with impunity by McClure and Kennan.

IRISH EMIGRATION.

The Melbourne Age is not generally friendly toward the Irish cause. Writing, however, on Mr. Birrell's Irish Council Bill, it is as outspoken as if it were an Irish-Australian organ. The Age declares that the present position is most disappointing to Australian Liberals. Ireland, says the writer, is the only part of the Empire in which depopulation continues, and he quotes the following significant figures as the most piquant illustration of his statement:

Table with columns: Year, Ireland, Scotland. Data for years 1841, 1861, 1881, 1901, 1905.

England, says the Age, has never given any answer to the indictment contained in those figures, though she had made repeated efforts in her liberal laws to give greater stability to the rural population.

dictates of the grater so long will they have to grind in order to make ends meet. How, in the name of common sense, is the man with limited means going to provide the common necessities of life?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

J. A. Froude, in his fifth lecture, New York, 1872, said: "Ireland was one of the poorest countries in Europe, yet there was less theft, less cheating, less house-breaking, less robbery of all kinds than in any country of the same size in the civilized world."

Rome, the excellent weekly edited in the Eternal City by "Vox Urbis," in a recent issue said: "If you read the continental papers during these days you may be led to believe that on this fourth anniversary Rome is in an orgasm of excitement over the religious crisis.

Alcide Ebray, formerly French consul-general at New York, has issued a long open letter at Paris explaining the causes for his retirement from the diplomatic service.

In his open letter M. Ebray declares that he abandoned a diplomatic career because he, believing "in the solidarity of interests between France and Catholicism," could not defend the government's unjust attitude toward the Church.

In the death of the Rev. John Alister Macdonald, S.J., the Jesuit order has lost a cultured and distinguished member; and those to whom he ministered a disinterested and valued friend.

With a view of ascertaining the progress of the temperance movement since it was inaugurated some time ago, His Grace Archbishop Brocheux has addressed a circular to all the parish priests of his diocese, in which he questions them as to the movement, its progress and results.

Lord Charles Beresford, the British admiral, so well known to Americans, has given his consent for his daughter's conversion to the Catholic faith.

Our Quebec Letter.

(Received too late for last week's issue.) Quebec, Sept. 1st. On Thursday evening last, while the greater number of the citizens of Quebec were eagerly discussing incidents and results of the annual Quebec Turf Club meet, which had been held during the day, dreadful news reached the city which eventuated every other topic and petrified with horror the entire populace.

The scene of the calamity lies a few miles above Quebec, at a point on the river where two natural abutments of rock project themselves out into the stream, forming a gateway about three thousand feet wide. Here it was decided to bridge the St. Lawrence River and the enterprise was inaugurated five years ago.

In these columns quite recently we recorded Prince Charles of Loewenstein, Germany's wealthiest and most prominent Catholic nobleman, and his renunciation at the advanced age of 72 years, of his titles and estates in order to become a humble Dominican lay brother in a convent in Holland.

Where the responsibility for this terrible disaster rests is still unknown. It was stated at first that the seventy-five ton shoes on the pier, the plans for which took a draughtsman six months constant work to make, were defective, but this was subsequently refuted.

An Affecting Scene.

Tobacco Culture in Ireland.

Tobacco culture was introduced in Ireland by Sir Walter Raleigh during the reign of Elizabeth. County Cork can boast of being the first part of the country in which the plant was cultivated.

The monetary loss sustained, however, is the heartbreaking pity of the loss of so many citizens in the flower of young manhood. For every one of the seventy dead, five more from the nature of his work have been young and able-bodied.

Hopeful Outlook for Church in France.

M. A. Janne, of the "Croix," is making an inquiry concerning the reorganization of the Catholic Church in France. Several of the interviews he has had with Bishops have already been published.

In reply to a question concerning the Denier du Culte, Mgr. Delamain showed that, though he required for his diocese more than $40,000 a year, it was forthcoming.

Mgr. Touchet, Bishop of Orleans, explained to M. A. Janne that each presbyter organized the collection of the Denier du Culte in the manner he thought most advantageous.

cured through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to give them a trial. After taking four boxes of the pills I felt greatly improved, so continued their use for some time longer and they fully cured me.

Frequent Holy Communion.

It is a very bad sign when a young man begins to shirk the duty of monthly confession and communion which, as a boy, he fulfilled as a matter of course.

A GREAT SECRET.

In a small town in the Midlands there is a rich congregation, which is not characterized by lavish liberality.

A shrewd Scotchman who had recently come to the place and joined the church was not long in noticing this state of affairs, and a remedy soon suggested itself to his practical mind.

CHAPTER V.—"That Girl."

Ronaldsburg was the nearest station to Kenwood, on the railroad line which brought Katharine from St. Lawrence to the city. At the last moment, Mrs. Sherwood had remembered that her Browning Society would meet, and she had merely sent the carriage to Ronaldsburg, and not even her own carriage, for she needed that herself, but an equal neighbor—Mrs. Percival—had offered to drive her.

said, standing near the step. He passed with the vinaigrette in his hand. Katharine saw at once that she wanted to know her name. Her face glowed and her eyes lighted up, for she had never had the privilege of seeing an English-American country gentleman in the attire he assumes when he rides over his estates.

After that he went off to dress for dinner, leaving Wirt to wonder what he meant.

"That sort of thing is very vulgar. I hope you'll not laugh at decent manners before that girl," said Mrs. Sherwood. "I'm sure she'll disgrace us in some way."

GOOD BLOOD WILL SHOW ITS QUALITY, SO WILL BAD BLOOD.

The one in a healthy body and ruddy complexion, the other in ill-health, blotches, pimples, boils and sores, and frequently in interior forms as ulcers, abscesses, erysipelas, salt rheum, etc.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS

which neutralizes the various poisons and restores the vitalizing power of this all important fluid.
