Street Manners.

Whole No 1007

Many a man who is courteous in his place of business and in the drawing-room seems to forget the comfort of others while in the street, especially when he is in haste.

By failing to observe the simple rule, "Keep to the right" great confusion and discomfort follow-dodging about meeting another face to tace, frequently a collision in getting by, and a mixing up of the two currents in a crowded street which prevents the easy flow of both .---"Keep to the right, as the law directs," is as applicable to streets and sidewalks as to bridges. When we are passing through a crowded street with just time to get to the depot by walking fast, let us not get angry with those in front of us who are not going to the depot, and think they are walking slowly just to hinder us, or that they purposely walk near the edgestone so that we cannot pass them without going into the street. They do not know we are behind them, what time our cars go. Do not justle them as if you han the sole right to the way .---Better for us to take a back street if we are short of time, rather than lose our temper and knock men, women and children into the gutter in our headlong haste.

If as you are a lady, do not get angry with a gentleman who treads upon your dress, for you are justly entitled to only such a portion of the walk as your hoop skirt would cover. A trail encroaches upon the space of others.

If you carry an umbrella open, do not run blindly against a man coming toward you, or run the ends of the sticks into his eves as he passes you. If you carry an umbrella or cane under your arm, do not project it horizontally behind to impale those who crowd up in the

The General Council.

The invitation addressed by His Holiness the Pope to Protestants, to unite in the approaching a great deal of excitement, and called into active General Council, has called forth out-spoken comment in the leading Journals both of Europe and America. Of course it is well understood that the invitation amounts simply to an announcement of the great joy it would occasion churches to renounce their present heretical usually earnest. The visit of Mr. Reverdy Johnson to Liverpool has been attended with those results which all who have watched the tope of the English people towards their American brethren during the last twelve months, might safely have predicted. There was an easy frackness in the speeches of Mr. Johnson and Lord Stanleysomewhat new, it must be confessed, to those who believe in the Metternich type of diplomacy -which went straight to the heads and hearts of their hearers. If Liverpool was the focus of the sympathy which was felt in this country in favour of the seceding states, the reception given o Mr. Johnson is very significant of the change of feeling which has now taken place there towards the United States of America. M. Johnson himself, in a quaint, delicate bit of sarcasm worthy of Nathaniel Hawthorne, was not forgetful of this; for in thanking the people of Liverpool for the friendly feeling shown towards his country, he said that there was nothing to be wondered at that such sentiments should be expressed " now that the unity of my Government is established beyond the bagard of future interruption." The Kitten's Complaint. I am a kitten just six months old, A regular beauty, I've often been told. You may search through all the country 'round Bat a fiver kitten will not be found : And though it is true, as posts sing, That beauty isn't the principal thing, It surely is nothing more than right To be glad one wasn't born a fright. I think I must have had a mother, Bat before I could tell one paw from the other, Somebody took me out of the hay. Carried me miles and miles away, Saying, coolly, " I thought that, may be, You'd like a kitten to please the baby." Piease the baby ! just think of that-What a horrible fate for a cat! Mean, little wretch, what his mother can see Lovely in him, is a wonder to me ! He clutched at my throat till I gasped in des

He jerked at my whiskers and pulled at my hair ;

He poked his fat fingers straight into my eyes, And laughed with delight at my pitiful cries. Once when he dragged me about by my tail, And nobody came at my sorrowful wail, I gave him a scratch in his face so red-And what do you think his mother said !--Beat me, and called me an ugly old cat ! Called him her lamb, and such nonsense as that. Now I should really like to know, If there's any reason that you can show, Why a baby that can only creep and cry, Has a better right in the world than I? I've made up mind that the case is clear, Tast if somebody doesn't interfere. And take me away from that horrible child, My cruel tortures will drive me wild ; Somebody surely'il find me lying, One of these mornings, dead or dying, And then, if your heart has ever known pity, Pray say : " Here lies an unfortunate kitty, (Wno might have lived to be known to fame,) Killed by a baby !-what a shame !" - The Little Corporal.
