THE FAITHFUL FRIEND.

In a very humble cot
In a rather quiet spot,
In the suds and in the soap,
Worked a woman full of hope,
Working, singing all alone,
In a sort of undertone:
"With a Saviour for a friend,
Who will keep me to the end."

Sometimes, happening along,
I have heard the semi-song,
And I often used to smile,
More in sympathy than guile,
But I never said a word,
In regard to what I heard,
As she sang about her friend
Who would keep her to the end.

Not in sorrow, nor in grief,
Working all day long was she,
As her children—three or four—
Played around her on the floor;
But in monotone the song,
She was humming all day long:
"With a Saviour for a friend,
He will keep me to the end."

Just a trifle lonely she;
Just as poor as poor could be,
But her spirits always rose
Like the bubbles in her clothes,
And, though widowed and alone,
Cheered her with the monotone
Of a Saviour and a friend
Who would keep her to the end.

I have seen her rub and scrub
On the wash-board in the tub,
While the baby sopped the suds,
Rolled and tumbled in the duds,
And was puddling in the pool,
With old sudsors stuck in spools;
She still humming of her friend
Who would keep her to the end.

Human hopes and human creeds
Have their hopes in human needs;
And I would not wish to strip
From that washer-woman's lip
Any song that she could sing,
Any hope that she could bring,
For the woman has a friend
Who will keep her to the end.

Have their hopes in human needs;
And I would not wish to strip
From that washer-woman's lip

"Ah," said Mr Jenifer, "things generally come too late. Now, if this had happened when I was ten years younger, what a difference it would have made to me!"

"But your friend's life was a very valuable one to many, was it not?" said the Vicar. "From all I have heard of him I should think that even now there will be plenty of people to say that the end came ten years too soon, rather than too late."

"Why, he was nearly ninety!" said Jenifer, as if the fact was rather a reproach to the old man. Then he hastened away to make his preparation for leaving.

The Vicar's wife came in as the curate went out. She found her husband gazing rather sadly into the dull street.

"Mary, my dear," he said, "it is my belief that after the miracles of the loaves and fishes there were some among the five thousand who complained that the bread was stale and the fish not so fresh as it might have been."

Meanwhile Clement Jenifer was speeding on to London to see his lawyer. He found there was one condition which he must fulfil before he could call himself master of house and income. Mr Dacre had only willed Waterdell Hall to pass one night in the hall entirely alone.

Mr Jenifer laughed when this clause was read to him.

"That's not a very hard thing to do," said he. "Was Mr Dacre's brain softening when he made his will?"

"Not at all," answered the lawyer, shortly. "Anyone who saw Mr Dacre in his last hour will tell you that the dear old man's mind was as clear to the end as in his best days. When you go to Waterdell you will not please your poor neighbors there if you suggest to them that the man who was so universally beloved and revered was crazy. I have no doubt this letter, which he instructed me to deliver to you personally, will explain the matter."

This was, however, not the case. The note was but a short one, and gave no reason for the testator's will, except that he had inherited Waterdell Hall under the same stipulation—that he had ever been thankful for having carried it out, and hoped that though his friend Clement Jenifer was older than he himself had been when he came into the property ("for," he wrote, with a touch of his ordinary humor, "I have been, like Charles II., an unconsentaneous time a-dying"), yet, that a solitary night passed in his future house would prove as great a blessing to him as it had been to the writer, and so, without further explanation, signed himself his affectionate friend, Thomas Dacre.

That was all. Clement Jenifer never liked being made ridiculous, and he thought this will very near that possibility. Yet he could not lose his inheritance for fear of being absurd; so, after certain business instructions from the lawyer, he went to his hotel for that night and next morning started for Waterdell. He put up at a little inn in the nearest market place of the rest of the house; but instead of settling himself (as he felt tempted to do) by the fire, he again went to look over the surrounding property. Behind the ground rose abruptly, and was bounded by a closely-growing espice, through which a narrow path seemed to strike in the direction of the village. The person climbed the hill, leaving the espice on his left, and standing on the precipitous portion of the meadow, looked across the low hedge at the last pageant of the sunset. Some clump-trees were silhouetted against the sky, athwart which lay bars of rosy flame, tender and evanescent. One moment the dying light leaped up brighter and then thrubbed through all the burning heaven and then suddenly it died away, and the day was not.

Jenifer turned and looked at the hall. Already it seemed to be losing itself in the darkness which gathered round it, hiding in the recesses of the gables, drawing curtains of mist over the twisted chimneys. The silence, entire and absolute, struck almost with oppression on the mind of this man, accustomed to city noises; but even as he thought to himself, "How still it all is," there sounded in the coppice close behind him a long, moaning, sobbing cry, which rose and fell, and rose again, and then ceased.

Clement Jenifer was not a particularly tender-hearted or compassionate man, but that sudden cry filled him with a vague fear of some cruel deed just perpetrated—some awful mystery to be brought to life; and after a moment's hesitation he turned in the direction whence it had seemed to come, and found himself on a long path, with a thick yew hedge on either side. Far ahead in the dim twilight he could descry a figure walking slowly away from him; he could hear a moaning sound, as of someone in pain. Mr Jenifer hastened his pace in order to come up with the sufferer, and as he gained on him and could see him more distinctly it seemed to him that there was something familiar in the gait and bearing of the Unknown. And as he thought so the figure turned, and, facing him, advanced with slow uncertain footsteps, wringing his hands as he came. What was it that struck Mr Jenifer as so well known to him? What was it that filled him with sudden horror, and sent the blood back to his heart? All the tales of ghosts and haunting noises at which he had scoffed so lately recurred to his mind, and yet there was nothing unearthly in the aspect of the man who was approaching him. And now they two stood close together, and Clement Jenifer saw that this—he knew not what to call it—bore the face which he himself had borne twenty years ago, and he knew—though how he could not tell—that he was standing face to face with the ghost of his own dead past.

Then ensued a conversation—strange unnatural—between these two, who still were one; but whether the words were uttered on the evening air, or whether the knowledge of what was in the mind of each was mutual to both, it was hard to say.

"Why do I hate you?" said the double of himself, gazing on him with reproachful eyes. "Do not murdered victims haunt their slayers, and have you murdered that which was the best part of me? Where are the promises of your young days? Where are the aspirations, the desires after a higher life, the noble purposes with which my soul was filled? Dead—dead and buried beneath a crust of selfishness!"

"Youthful follies," answered Jenifer; "gone the way of all such early fancies. Why do you persecute me? Have I sinned, or murdered, or lived uncleanly? Have I not kept to my work and done it thoroughly, distasteful as it is?"

"It is true," said the other, "the commandments you have not broken; but where are the hearts you have helped to bind up? How many have you helped by your example? Rather have you not, by daily carelessness, by drowsiness of spirit, by perfunctory performance of your duty, quenched the light that was, ay, God knows it was in me? And in doing so you have wounded many another. There are sinners who slay the body, but you have slain your own soul; and you be to him of whom this can be said."

Jenifer laughed in scorn.

"When I was what you are all these would have had its terrors for me; now I am not to be frightened with false fire. I know what you are, who think to scare me thus—an illusion of the brain, a disturbance in the nervous system. Come daylight, and this will be as if it had never been."

But the other, with the sad and youthful eyes, looked at him in sorrow, and said:

"Even in your bitterness you speak the truth; for when you were as I am, ere the world had dimmed your sight, you would have stood on the precipice upon which you stand. Oh, brother of me, though so degraded! give up your dreams of a self-happiness; turn back while yet you may; use the wealth that has come to you, not for your own only, but for others. Redeem the time that is left to you, and bring to a happier second life the promises, the aspirations of your youth."

"Begone!" said Jenifer. "If not an illusion, then you are an accomplice in some conspiracy to betray me in some way. Did you and the old man who is in his grave plan it between you who are your foolish dupe? Away from me! I do not hope to work your will. I have inherited, and I will enjoy it!"

"Nay, then," said his double, "see to what an end your enjoyment shall bring you. I, whom you have destroyed, am what you were! See now what you shall be."

Then for one awful moment the person knew that not only he himself stood there with the spirit of his pure and earnest-hearted youth beside him, but a third and dreadful shape himself as he should be, if no hand of grace stay of his downward course. The lightning flash of awakened perception showed him his own old age, where that which he had called economy had grown to avarice, where callousness had become cruelty—discontent, covetousness, impurity. He saw himself degraded, mean, despicable, bad, without affections, without tenderness, without hope, and as the horror of it swept over him with resistless force, Clement Jenifer—the icy crust of years of life for self broken at last—fell upon his face, with the agonized cry of the apostle of old, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

When he came to himself he was in the quaint old sitting-room in his new home. The fire had burned low, and only dimly illumined the room, but as he gazed into the glowing embers a hitherto unkindled log broke into flame, and as it leaped and flickered the scroll which he had before remarked and failed to decipher caught and threw back the yellow light, and Mr Jenifer read in letters of gold the poet's words—

"Nor deem the irrevocable past
As wholly wasted, wholly vain,
If rising its wrecks, at last
To something nobler we attain."

He sank on his knees, and there in contrition of spirit and anguish of soul dedicated anew to his Maker the years that should be granted to him, the wealth that he had inherited—himself, body, soul, and spirit, for evermore.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JAN. 13, 1888

The annual meeting of the Council began on Tuesday last at the Court House, Kentville. We have decided to wait this year till the session is through before publishing the report, and consequently next issue will contain the proceedings in full.

Under the Municipal Act the centralization of municipal affairs becomes easy of accomplishment and every step in that direction tends to bind the interests of the county together and to lessen taxation. On the contrary, every matter which is treated of in a sectional manner only tends toward the opposite. The members of the Municipal Council, although elected by different wards, are, or ought to be, interested in the welfare of every ward in the county as well as in the particular ward in which they have been elected. The practice, however, generally adopted is for each councillor to control every appointment and appropriation made in his own ward, often allowing appointments and appropriations to be made in other wards that his better judgment disapproves, excusing himself for his non-interference on the ground that each councillor should exercise the patronage of his own ward without interference from any other. The practice, however, agreeable to members of the Council, is often productive of evil as it not infrequently happens that an unwise appointment or appropriation is allowed simply for the reasons above mentioned.

From the reports of the different boards of overseers of the poor in this Municipality there appears to be a considerable improvement under the present system over that of the past. The poor are better kept and the expenses are lessened. Yet the local objection is here apparent as well as in other matters, each striving to get the best of the bargain when any business is to be transacted between townships. The difficulty could easily be overcome by amalgamating the three townships under one management and thereby destroying all sectional jealousies which now exist. An asylum should be provided for our insane insane, which now have to be sent to the Provincial Hospital for the Insane at Dartmouth at a heavy expense to the county. The number of insane paupers appears to be largely on the increase from year to year, and the expenses for the past year will nearly amount to the interest on sixty thousand dollars. This sum would be lessened by fully one-half that amount had we suitable accommodation for them here. The support of our poor and the protection of our insane are matters of vital importance and should receive that consideration which their importance demands.

Since writing the above we learn that Mr. Church, Commissioner of Mines and Public Works, telegraphed the Council on Wednesday regarding the necessity of this Municipality providing suitable accommodation for the harmless insane. The matter was discussed by the Council yesterday.

For several years past the need of a policeman and lock-up has been manifest in Wolfville. The matter has often been discussed and sometimes it has appeared as though our hopes in this direction were about to be realized. Last winter a petition was presented to the Council asking that Wolfville be set off as a police district and authority be granted to assess ourselves for an amount sufficient to defray expenses. This was received by the Council and a committee was appointed to set the bounds for the district. The committee have performed their work, and reported to the Council in due form. But in the meantime some of our people have been "counting the cost," and a second petition has been circulated asking the Council not to grant the prayer of the first. This petition was unanimously signed, we believe (though we have not seen it), by the citizens of Wolfville, and as a result the whole matter has been laid over till the April session of the Council, with the prospect of the first petition being then disallowed. We are sorry that the matter is assuming this form, but not very much surprised, and if the people of this town prefer the present state of affairs to exist it is not for us to complain. The state of affairs in Wolfville for the past few months has been a disgrace on the previous record of the place. We have hesitated to record the rookery that has prevailed, hoping that in a short time the people would see the need of making a change. It seems however that the fact that it will cost a few dollars is sufficient excuse for no attempt being made to prevent property being destroyed and our mothers, wives and sisters being openly used on the street.

NOSES.

BY JACOB HOLLIE

There are a great many different ways of judging a man. Some people take the eyes, some the hand, some the countenance, and some the face in general. But there is only one way laid down in the laws of nature for the rich and poor alike, for the ignorant and the unlearned, for the philanthropist and the miser, the throb—one really scientific method of judging the character of the human family. As you judge a tree by its fruit, so the nose is the symbol by which the character of a man can be discerned.

Noses differ in shape, size and color, the most diversity being in the first quality. It is one of the laws of nature to be different. There are no two blades of grass, no two leaves of a tree, no two men's characters, and consequently no two noses exactly alike. The word "nose" is derived from the Latin naso, signifying to acquire a knowledge of, from the fact that from a man's nose one can acquire a thorough knowledge of a man's character.

Here is a nose that is only too common. This is a hard nose to suit. You can't tell the carrier of it nose anything that he or she don't know. This is a capricious, fault-finding, pragmatic, dictatorial, lever-to-be-sued nose. Never marry a woman with a nose like this. (Illustration of a nose)

Here is a nose that we all like to see. It isn't very pretty, but it's better to look at than the last. Our judges and lawyers as a general thing don't wear this kind of a nose; neither do our M.P.'s or councillors. This is an honest nose. When a man walks into your office and wants to subscribe for the ACADIAN for a year and hasn't the tin, don't hesitate to trust him—if the security is good. He'll pay you if he ever gets the money.

But don't work on the same terms with this kind of a nose. He can't read and he'll never pay you. This scoundrel object will always give way to any proposition you may make, and will agree with you on every point. But all the time he is looking at you and saying that what you say is just exactly what he thinks, he is trying to establish a plan whereby to effect your ruin. All the very bad men of this and all previous generations were this kind of a knob. Steer clear of him as you would the father of lies. You find this style most abundantly around Prats' corner and the wharves on Sunday.

Here is a nose not very pretty, neither is it very agreeable. When you see a man who wears a bill like this you may depend on the fact that he'll have his own way. Unlike the one above, he will never agree with anyone. This is the give-me-liberty-or-give-me-death nose. The chief qualities of it are determination and inflexibility. When you meet a man with a nose like this, give him his own way. Our loyal old grandfathers who come over from the Revolution all wore noses much resembling this in shape. They generally have their share of this world's riches, but their children always go bare-footed to school—when they go—and eat bread-and-milk for breakfast, dinner and tea. There is nothing that will increase the population of a town more than the influx of a large number of these noses, but I wouldn't care to live in such a town.

It takes all kinds of people to make a world, and so the drummer has to be there. Here he is. People rarely want to see this kind of an antenna. This kind belongs to agents in general. Never trade horses with a man whose nose is shaped like this, unless yours is spavined on three legs and has the distemper in the other one. He hasn't enough courage to lie, but he'll tell you a good many things that are not true, which amounts to the same thing in the end. When a man with a nose like this wants you to take a paper, subscribe at once, or he'll talk you to death. Never plan on going to heaven with a man with this make of nose; if you do you'll get disappointed.

This kind of nose, again, is different from any I've yet mentioned. They are quite common in Wolfville. I saw one of the Sunday teachers driving a large herd of these noses down the street the other day. They are found in large numbers in the Back on Saturday afternoons and in the Baptist church on Sundays. As a general thing they are fond of caramels and young men. This is the nose that our grandmothers were when they went to singing-school, but as they changed in other respects, their noses changed with them. It's a great pity that this cast of nose don't stay any longer than it does, but that is the way with all beautiful things. The autumn leaves stay with us but a few weeks, and so it is with all our summer flowers. But as the next year's flowers take the place of those of the preceding year, so do the noses of the next generation grow up to take the place of those of the present one, and as we all know, very often to excel them in beauty.

There are other kinds of noses I might mention, but you have heard enough for one day.

From Gravesend to Hampton Court. (CONCLUDED.) Associated with the Abbey is the Westminster School in the front of which is an elegant memorial, 70 feet high, to Lord Raglan and other Westminster boys who fell in the Crimean War. On the right bank of the Thames is the St. Thomas' Hospital, erected at a cost of $2,500,000 and having accommodation for 600 patients.

Lambeth Palace, built in 1200, is largely associated with the persecution of the Lollards. It is the town residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Lambeth will ever be famous because of its being the place where the wood and gunpowder were stored by Guy Fawkes prior to it being ferried across the river and secreted in the cellars of the Parliament Houses. The Bridge we crossed at Westminster was 1160ft. long by 85ft. broad; is constructed of iron, and was built by Page at a cost of $2,000,000. The Albert Embankment, stretching from Westminster to Vauxhall, on the right bank, was erected to the memory of Prince Albert at a cost of about $5,000,000. The places of greatest interest in our journey from this point are Battersea with its sub-tropical gardens, covering an area of 185 acres and costing $1,500,000.—Chelsea, Kew, and Hampton Court. Chelsea has been rendered famous by its hospital or home for old soldiers, who are known as Chelsea pensioners. This home was established by Charles II. and accommodates about 500. A large number of flags taken by the English in various battles are preserved in the chapel connected with the hospital. With Chelsea and Cheyne Walk will ever be associated the name of Carlyle.

In the remainder of our journey we shall see on both banks of the river the magnificent mansions "the stately homes" of England's nobility. Kew, our next stopping place, contains the finest Botanical Gardens in the world. They cover seventy-five acres and the pleasure grounds in connection therewith contain about 300 acres. There are several large conservatories; the largest, the Palm-house, being 360 feet long, 90 feet wide and 60 feet high; erected at a cost of $1,500,000. The Temperate House is 212 feet long, 137 feet wide and 60 feet high, with two wings. Besides these there are numerous other buildings, three of which are fitted up as a Botanical Museum. The beds of flowers are exceedingly numerous and beautiful.

In leaving Kew we pass in quick succession Richmond, Twickenham, Teddington, and Kingston. Richmond is a nestle in the hill can boast not only of the famed "lass o' Richmond Hill," but of the finest scenery of the Thames. Twickenham is associated with the names of Pope and Walpole. Teddington or Tedlington is the last place up the river where the tide is felt—hence its name. It is sixty miles from the mouth of the Thames and the lower course of the river is connected with the upper by a lock.

It is not long after leaving this place that you reach Hampton Court and enjoy the pleasures of its palace and park. This palace was built by Cardinal Wolsey and presented by him to Henry VIII. Considerable alterations and additions have been made to the building since that time. In the State Apartments is an extensive collection of valuable pictures and relics of bygone kings and queens. The Grand Staircase is beautifully painted in allegorical subjects. The view from the central window of the east front is very fine. Three avenues of trees, each about three-quarters of a mile long, stretch away at different angles in such a manner that they can all be surveyed from this spot at the same moment. Some portions of Lord Nelson's Flagship Victory have been removed from an outbuilding and are now placed in the Queen's Guard Chamber. In the Gardens the flower-beds vie in beauty with those at Kew. The viney is an attraction to visitors as it is nearly 150 years old. The average weight of grapes per annum is from nine to ten hundred pounds, although it has often borne twice that quantity. At the lower end of the grounds is the maze, which is a source of much amusement. Much time is frequently spent in endeavoring to thread through its devious windings to the centre, and when the desired goal is reached, as much time and often more is required to get out. The chief attraction of the Park is a beautiful avenue of chestnut-trees, nearly a mile long, planted by William of Orange.

Hampton Court is pregnant with historic associations as well as scenic beauty, and visitors will find in either or both of these ample to repay a visit to its antique shades.

A Live Town.

(Correspondence to Acadia.)

Perhaps, and on the strength of this "perhaps," a word from the coal centre of Cumberland will interest your readers.

The town covers the western side and summit of the mountain of the same name. Spring Hill is over a thousand feet above the level of the sea, overlooking the far-away Bay of Fundy, and facing in the distance the blue Sheepody mountains.

Half a million tons of black diamonds annually is a crop that far outstrips the apple crop of your valley in value. But the beauty is on your side.

Though human nature may be the same, yet living is quite different in different places. Such a large number of one class of men gives a distinctive social status to the town.

Telephone posts are now up, electric light projected, and a company for bringing water into the town is being organized.

Telephone posts are now up, electric light projected, and a company for bringing water into the town is being organized.

Your member elect, Mr Rand, paid us a short visit: he left a favorable impression on all that met him, a terrible grit but a genial gentleman.

With the expectation of some 500 houses being built next summer, an increased output of coal, and the completion of the Pugwash railway, the future of Spring Hill has a solid outlook, financially for the next six years at least.

Berwick. Berwick High School is still gaining popularity. It has twelve students from outside, as follows: 1 from Granville, 2 from Mount Handley, 2 from Middleton, 1 from Williamstown, 1 from Brookfield, 1 from Somerset, 1 from Waterville, and 1 from Dartmouth, Halifax Co.

Rev. E. O. Reid's church and congregation made him a donation visit during holidays, and left at the parsonage a substantial token of their high esteem for himself and family.

A social was also held at Mr F. A. Clark's, to add to vestry fund. Mr Eibert Reid, of Wolfville, has recovered his health, and returned to Acadia College.

MARRIED. BAINES—CLEVELAND.—At Casperston, Dec. 28th, by Rev. M. P. Freeman, Mr Geo. W. Baines, of Canimig, and Miss Ada Blanche, daughter of Mr Mariner Cleveland, of Casperston.

Thoughts in Season.

Acadia, country of my birth.

Acadia, my Nova Scotia was formerly called, may not be known to fame, yet how interesting it is to look over the records of her earlier history, through the years 1780-90, and learn of men who worked in her interests.

Apropos of this I have just heard a good thing which may tell how well (?) we are known, where, at least, we should be better known: An English missionary board sent out two young missionaries to Nova Scotia, and they knowing the nature of this country, prepared for the work.

"19 January, 1779, to be sold an able negro wench about 21 years of age." "Twenty dollars reward. Run away, a negro man servant. Whoever will secure him will secure the above reward."

In 1780 the war of the Revolution was still going on. Many privateers were fitted out in the Province, while the call for recruits drained the country of its laborers, and the American privateers on our coast settlements. Engagements were frequent. In 1781 thirty rebels in a shallop came up the Bay of Fundy and took a schooner laden with goods.

On the 28th August two schooners with eighty men took Annapolis by landing half the men at night and entering the block house. At dawn every house was surrounded and the inhabitants made prisoners. They then plundered every house, leaving nothing— even taking the buckles from the ladies' shoes.

June 6th, 1783. From Jan. 15th, 7000 refugees had arrived in this province. These were followed by 3000 of the provincial forces and others.

Shelburne in this year received its name, it being a new town and settled by American loyalists.

In September 14000 loyalists were expected to come. From Nov. until July, '84, over 13000 arrived. Thus they came by hundreds, settling in our thinly settled Province, and added strength to our loyal land.

In 1783 the laws prohibiting Roman Catholic worship were repealed and a friendly feeling between them and the Protestants existed.

This was a hundred years ago. We have much to be grateful for, much to be proud of, much to expect of the near future.

Wolfville Baptist S. S. (Reported by one present.) The annual report of the above school was presented on Sunday, 1st inst.; from it we gather the following facts: The year was a year of triumph for the school.
