"I do not," slipped from her lips before she could stop it. Arol looked at her thoughtfully. "Well, now that you've said that, I don't mind saying that I don't like him very much. He smiles so much, doesn't he? And he is so pale. Is he ill, Constance?" "No--I don't know," she answered. "Don't let us talk any more about him, as we don't either of us like him, dear." She drove on, and presently they reached Mrs. Marsh's. The marquise's horse was tied to the garden rail, and the marquise herself was leaning over, smoking a cigar, and talking with an infantile Marsh. His smile as he turned to welcome Constance, seemed to her like sunshine after rain--the dawn of a bright day after a murky night. "Well, dearest," he said, coming and bending over her, his eyes full of love, dwelling upon her face. "Ah, you look all right now."

"Yes, I am all right now," she said gently, and she felt changed in his presence. "You have just come in time," he remarked. "This little one was on the point of crying because I had not brought the 'booby lady' with me; and going to the railings he handed the mite over and placed it laughingly as Constance's feet. "Halloo!" he exclaimed, picking something up from the bottom of the phaeton. "What's this--a plover's feather?" Constance's face flushed and she bent over the child.

"Yes," said Arol, busily engaged in hunting among the varied contents of his pockets for a sixpence for Master Marsh, which appeared to comprise everything from a piece of string to a donkey's shoe. "Yes; guess how we got it, Uncle Wolf?" "Flow up and caught one by the tail," suggested the marquise. "Well, I've heard you call Constance an angel, but I've never seen her fly," retorted Arol, extracting a sixpence from the indescribable heap in his lap. "No, you'd never guess--would he, Constance, dear?" It was given to me by Mr. Fenton."

The marquise nodded. "Ah, yes, I saw him with a gun." "Yes, he gave me a wing for my cap, but Constance didn't think it suited me, so I threw it away." "What base ingratitude," remarked the marquise, absently, as he leaned against the side of the phaeton, and watched the lovely face of his darling. "Well, perhaps it was," admitted Arol. "But you see we didn't either of us like Mr. Fenton, so--"

The marquise looked up with a laugh. "In--deed! Dear me! Oh, you neither of you like Mr. Fenton; is that so, Constance?" Constance raised her head, but with downcast eyes, and was silent a moment. Then it flashed upon her that now was the time to tell him all. She looked up with a half-finger, half-appealing expression in her lovely eyes. "No, Wolf--" she began, then suddenly Mrs. Marsh's voice crooned behind them. "So you be come to see me, my lord! And the pretty young lady too. Hah, hah!" and she chuckled and shook her head. "That weren't such a bad guess 'o mine, after all, Lord Wolf. Bless her sweet face! Ah, my lord, you've got a prize, you've, begging the dear young lady's pardon. But there, the Brakepare's 'ud always have the best wherever it was to be found, and you be a true Brakepare, Lord Wolf."

"Thank you for both of us, Mrs. Marsh, he responded, laughingly. "You must come and dance at our wedding, remember." "Ay, that I will," crooned the old lady. "But you must make haste about it, or I'll be getting too old. And here's some milk for the young lord, lookin' as well and rosy as a pippin; say, and we all know who to thank for that," with a courtesy to Constance. "I am so sorry I put them in," he said. "You are not angry, Constance, dear?" and he nestled up to her. She put her disengaged arm around him. "No, no, dear," she murmured, the tears springing to her eyes. "Why should I be? But I--I don't like to see you wanting the fasteners."

"I didn't know," he said. "Perhaps you don't like Mr. Fenton?" its reflection startled her as she saw it in the glass, startled and warned her. One glance at the pale face would tell Rawson Fenton that she was afraid of him. She could not endure that. At all cost she would meet him--unflinchingly, to outward show, at any rate. So while she dressed she schooled herself into something that looked like self-possession and indifference. After all, she asked herself over and over again, what had she to fear? Was it likely that Rawson Fenton would go to the marquise and say, "I loved the woman you are about to marry, and I have persecuted her?" No, he could scarcely be mean enough to avow his own unmanliness. Besides, he had some object in view in cultivating the marquise's friendship--this political business he was pursuing; he would scarcely turn aside from it to wreak his spite against her. He must know that she was now lost to him forever, and she accepted the fact. Yes, she was wrong in being afraid of him, and would be doubly wrong in letting him see it. She dressed herself with more than usual care to-night, and had the satisfaction of seeing that her face was less pale as she threw a last glance at it before descending. He should not detect by a ribbon awry how much his presence affected her. The guests had not arrived, and the marquise was alone in the drawing-room when she entered. "Did I tell you that Ruth was coming, dear?" she said, placidly, looking up at the tall, graceful figure with loving admiration. "How well you're looking, to-night! Wolf almost thought of putting them off." "I am glad he did not," said Constance, crushing down the exactly opposite thought. "Oh, yes, I am quite well. No, you did not tell me that Lady Ruth was coming."

"Well, Constance, dear," she exclaimed, bestowing a pecking kiss upon them both. "Quite recovered? What a sensation you created last night. I'm afraid you didn't see it all, aunt." "I heard of it," said the old lady, with a smile. "Quite a triumphant progress, I assure you. All the rest of us 'paled our intellectual fires' before her. By the way, dear, I must congratulate you upon a most distinct conquest." "Yes?" said Constance, without looking up from some flowers she was arranging in a vase. "Yes, quite a case of 'I came, I saw, I conquered.' I never saw a man so badly hit, really. He scarcely took his eyes off you while you were there, and seemed quite disconsolate when you had gone." Constance smiled coldly. "May one ask the name of the unfortunate man, Ruth?" asked the marquise, serenely. "Oh, yes; it was Mr. Rawson Fenton, who is going to dine here to-night," she replied. "Can I help you with those flowers, dear?" and she moved to the table. Constance had not schooled herself in vain, and her eyes, as she raised them to the sharp ones bent on her, were perfectly calm and steady. "No, thank you; it is done now." "You don't appear to be much moved by the tidings of your victory," said Lady Ruth. "Really, I think you are the least vain of any girl I know, my dear."

"Constance is certainly not vain," remarked the old lady, placidly. "And it is to be hoped that Wolf has outgrown his jealousy," said Lady Ruth with a laugh. "Do you remember how fearfully jealous he used to be as a boy, aunt?" "Wolf has changed very much--for the better," said the marquise, glancing at Constance with tender gratitude. "Ay, yes, of course. Love is an excellent schoolmaster. But, still, I don't think he had better tell him of poor Mr. Fenton's disaster."

Constance looked at her for a moment. Did anything deeper than mere chatter lie behind Lady Ruth's words? She put the vague suspicion away from her as too groundless and improbable, and the entrance of the duchess at a couple of men whom the marquise had invited to make the party more complete put an end to the discussion. Her grace, looking nonchalantly at the for her last night's dance, was all good temper and amiability, and Constance heard her laughing and talking with Wolf more loudly than duchesses are popularly supposed to do. "All here, mother?" he asked, turning to the marchioness, presently. She looked round. "No, dear. Mr. Rawson Fenton." "Great men are privileged," said the duchess, with a good-natured smile. "One waits for royalty, opera singers, and financiers always." "I've been so long out of the world," said the marchioness, with her gentle, deprecatory smile, "that I don't know who is great nowadays."

"Well, Mr. Rawson Fenton is, at any rate, dear," said her grace. "He is one of those as whose spite monarchs grow cheerful, and whose frown their souls depress." "Dear me," remarked the marchioness, that's very poetical, my dear, but I don't in the least know what you mean." "Because he tends, or refuses to lend them money, dear," replied the duchess. "Mr. Fenton goes in for foreign loans, and all that kind of thing you know." "My mother doesn't know in the least," said the marquise, laughing. "Be content, mother, with the fact that Mr. Fenton is enormously rich, and that he is, in consequence, enormously powerful."

The marchioness looked perfectly content as she murmured, placidly, "Dear me." "Yes," said the duchess. "He has taken a small shooting-box near us; he talks of buying Aspell Court if he wins the election. And they tell me that since he has been down here they have had to put on an extra head at the telegraph office. I think of that!" she laughed. "Wonderful!" said the marquise, much amused. "Mc--clerk I suppose--come posting down from London, sometimes two or three times a day, to see him, exactly as if he were a prince or an ambassador and they queen's messengers," continued the duchess. "Do I exaggerate, Norman?" she demanded, laughingly turning to one of the gentlemen. Constance stood beside the marchioness listening silently, and Lady Ruth touched her on the arm.

"You really ought to be proud of your latest conquest, dear," she whispered. "Mr. Fenton," exclaimed the footman solemnly. He entered the magnificent room, more striking even by its indescribable air of refinement and rank than its magnificence, as calm and self-possessed as if it were the one room in a but in the bush, notwithstanding the sudden silence which told plainly that they had all been talking about him. "I beg your forgiveness for my unpunctuality, Lady Brakepare," he murmured, as he bent over her hand. "But I met with an accident on the road." "An accident!" exclaimed two or three voices in chorus. "Yes; nothing of any consequence," he said, quietly. "Indeed, it was rather amusing than otherwise. The wheel came off my brougham. It was one I had hired at Berrington, and the worthy owner seemed to consider that a new coat of paint was all that was necessary to keep it together."

"And you walked--from where?" asked the duchess. "It turned over just outside the lodge gates," he said, looking round the room as he spoke. Then he saw Constance, and went up to her. "I trust you have recovered from your last night's fatigue, Miss Graham?" "Nothing could have been more conventional than the words or the tone in which they were spoken, and no one noticed that she barely let her fingers touch his, or that the simple words, "Yes, thank you," dropped like ice from her lips. In the marvelous fashion which only women can understand, the guests were paired off and marched into the dining-room. Constance's heart sank as Rawson Fenton approached and offered her his arm. The marchioness had assigned her to him! "What a beautiful place this is!" he said as the marquise said grace, and they spiced themselves. "I had an opportunity of seeing it to advantage as I walked up the avenue; the moon was shining." "Yes," said Constance, looking straight before her. "I suppose it would be impossible to find a more typical English mansion anywhere," he continued, in the tone of a man endeavoring to amuse his chance neighbor at dinner. "I do not know," said Constance. "You should see Glenlivet, the marquise's place in Scotland," said Lord Norman, who sat next to Constance. "Indeed I more beautiful than this?" asked Rawson Fenton. "Well, in a way, yes. It is built entirely of stone, and is a century and more older. They say it is the most perfect specimen of castle architecture left. You haven't seen it, Miss Graham?" Constance shook her head. "The marquise was not one to boast of his possessions. Beyond alluding to it once casually as 'the place up north,' he had not spoken of it."

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 10, 1896.

Editorial Chat.

On July 1st, the great American novel-ist, Harriet Beecher Stowe, passed to her rest. The memory of Mrs. Stowe, perhaps more than that of any other American woman, the people of the United States have occasion to revere. She did for the United States what Wilberforce accomplished for England. By her "Uncle Tom's Cabin" she accomplished more for the liberty of the negro and the honor of her country than any statesman of the United States ever achieved.

It is reported that New York is soon to be extensively fortified. Fortifications supposed to exceed Gibraltar in strength will be built at Wadsworth and Sandy Hook, at an estimated cost of $50,000,000. After fortifying some of her important cities in such a terrible fashion as this, it will hardly be profitable for the U. S. to trouble herself much with international arbitration.

We are glad to see a move being made towards the providing of a watering cart for the town. At present this is one of the most pressing needs, and we hope the matter will not be unnecessarily delayed. Our people have had already this season ample opportunity of seeing the need fully demonstrated. The suggestion made at the council meeting that we should trust to Providence for showers to settle the dust is hardly to be entertained in a progressive town like this. Don't become moss-grown, gentlemen.

Peter Wheeler has made a statement to the Halifax Herald reporter in which he confesses his awful crime. He states that he is a native of Mauritius, that the crime was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock instead of 6; and that after the victim had been knocked down with a cudgel her throat was cut, on her own request. From reading the confession it is readily seen that little confidence can be placed in the truth of the assertions. Its only use is to confirm the justice of the jury's verdict, and to deaden the sympathies which are naturally aroused for one condemned to die.

Though other universities in the Dominion have been endowed with legacies of late and Acadia has seemed to have been neglected, her time was glad to note, has at length arrived. Mr. G. P. Poyzant, the late president of the Commercial Bank of Windsor, a gentleman who has ever been a most loyal and benevolent supporter of the Baptist denomination, has most handsomely remembered the University in his will. When Mr. Poyzant's will was filed on Friday morning it was announced that "Acadia" had fallen heir to $100,000. This large legacy will be of untold benefit to the University and will greatly aid it in holding its place among the great educational institutions of the country.

Major McKinley, the Republican nominee for the presidency, declares his policy to be the securing of a sound currency, so sound that every coin shall pass for its face value throughout the world. This is somewhat vague. His policy on the trade question, however, is more clear. He is a pronounced protectionist.

On Wednesday the Liberal-Conservative regime of eighteen years duration ceased to be. Immediately after the resignation of the ministry a messenger was dispatched to Antebasco to summon Wilfred Laurier to the capital. Hon. W. S. Fielding, D. C. Fraser, and Dr. Borden are all mentioned as possible members from Nova Scotia. Mr. Laurier's majority in the next House is not yet positively known. The third party members, and the racial and denominational nature of the School Case are features which render the life of the next ministry precarious.

A Valuable Work.

The report of the twelfth annual convention of the Provincial Educational Association, a copy of which has reached our table, is a most important addition to educational literature in this Province. The gathering at Truro last summer was the most representative of the kind ever held in the Maritime Provinces, not only the common school, but the high schools, academies and colleges being largely represented. As a convention it was a great success, and its doings are faithfully and fully chronicled in the report before us. The report contains over 200 pages, and is handsomely printed on fine paper, and fully illustrated. All the papers read before the convention are published in full and suitably embellished with half-tone portraits of those who contributed them, as well as many others who took an active part in the deliberations. We notice among other the portraits of Inspector Ross and Prof. F. R. Haley, and Mr. A. McLeod, of Kentville Academy. The papers deal with subjects which are important both from the educational and civic standpoints, and the discussion are of a decidedly practical nature. There is no department of public work and no kind of public question in which the people are so much interested as in education, and as this pamphlet marks an epoch in the educational history of the Province and furnishes information of the most valuable character from those who are intimately acquainted with the subjects whereof they speak, it ought to be very widely distributed. To pay for the large bulky reprint necessary in its production the report is sold to those who are not members of the Association at 25 cents a copy, and it should at least be in the hands of every teacher.

Halifax Notes.

Our City is now beginning to receive its usual influx of summer tourists. They are chiefly from among our neighbors across the border, to whom the wholesome climate of our Maritime Provinces is one grand inducement for their march seaward during the reign of mid-summer heat, which oppresses and debilitates those whose homes and business are situated in the larger American centres. Provincialists also claim for their country attractions that seldom fail to allure and satisfy the peculiar longings of such as travel for rest, recreation and pastime.

Nova Scotia is historically connected with many important events of lasting interest to many people, who although now living under a different nationality pride themselves not a little in being able to claim with us a common ancestry. Monuments of these world-renowned events, which made the lives of our forefathers illustrious, are still to be found by the interested visitor in almost every quarter of our Province. Were the many things that tend to lead captive the heart and mind of travellers, wanting in our Province, still its unrivalled scenery cannot fail to leave its impress upon the souls of men and women, susceptible to capture by such surroundings. This temporary increase to our population is something now anticipated annually by our people and the presence for a few months in our midst of these men and women with bright faces, earnest manners and keen ideas, is beyond question a great benefit every way. Let us therefore extend to all comers a cordial greeting and accord one and all a quid pro quo.

Great and untold advantages have recently dawned unexpectedly upon our Provincial institutions by the liberality of some of our well known countrymen. Sometimes these wind-falls, so to speak have happened along at most opportune times, and have thus proved themselves double blessings. Recently the Wesleyan College at Seckville, was very substantially benefited by the magnificent gift of the late Mr. Massey, of Toronto. And now the Baptists of these Maritime Provinces can rejoice that their beloved "Acadia" is made the donee of a sum large enough to inspire her children with added enthusiasm and greatly increase her present efficiency and enable her to maintain her foremost position among the higher institutions of learning in Canada. It can hardly be said that this princely legacy of the late Godfrey Pavzant was quite a surprise, for rumors for some time past were abroad of his noble intentions towards our institutions at Wolfville and our Baptist enterprises, but no one for a moment anticipated its grand magnitude. Surely no one will ever be able to calculate the good such munificence will accomplish in the years to come. A lasting monument indeed, has this man of heart and heart erected to his own memory, more enduring than stone or marble. Acadia had just reached a crisis in her history. Her needs were very apparent and more money to meet her requirements seemed never a more absolute condition precedent to her continuing her prestige among similar institutions of our land. The "Child of Providence" has in this latest act of beneficence, been given a new lease of life, with possibilities ahead for greatly increased usefulness.

The Governor now will not feel their hands shackled in arranging for future leadership. The appointment of a new President can now be considered with a view to obtaining the best man and the question of economy, will not be to them so much an element in determining this very important matter, concerning our institutions "on the hill" and our Baptist denomination. Let the President for the future be a worthy successor to those who have so ably filled that position in the past.

The annual examinations for grade certificates in the Public Schools of this County are being held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week. The present heated state of the atmosphere will not tend to make these searching (if might add scorching) examinations any the less tedious to those undertaking them.

A Newspaper Helps.

The effort of any newspaper to build up a town is practically nullified unless it is backed up by the business men. A stranger turns from the news columns of a paper to its advertising pages, and if he fails to find there the business cards of the merchants and professional firms, he comes to the conclusion that the publisher is not appreciated, in which case it is a good place for him to keep clear of. No town ever grew without the active assistance of its newspaper. Nor can papers grow and build up their localities, without the assistance of the town. Business men should realize this, and remember that in giving support to the newspaper they are not only building up their own business, but help to support that which is steadily working for the growth of the whole town.—Franklin Transcript.

A call has been issued by a provincial conference of prohibitionists, to be held in Toronto July 16 and 17. The circular issued says:—"The time has come for us to secure practical results, and it is now our right and duty to demand a fulfilment of the pledge given by the Ontario government of two years ago."

According to the most likely interpretation of the recent decision of the highest court in the realm, the Federal and the local legislatures can prohibit, restrict, regulate, or tax the liquor business. The world is therefore invitingly clear.

Town Council.

The July meeting of the town council was held on Tuesday evening. The Mayor and all the councillors except Councillor Haley were present, with the recorder.

The various standing committees reported. The following bills were read and ordered paid: J. W. Selfridge $2.00, J. A. Anslow 5.00, Town Clerk 2.41, Harry Spinyer 3.50, Township of Horton 42.33, F. W. Woodman 11.84, Acadia Edison Electric Co. 39.49.

Application was made by J. L. Franklin for free water for motor for manufacturing rattan goods, etc. C. R. H. Starr also applied for water for manufacturing canned goods and fruit products. On motion water was granted in both cases, with the provision that the supply be not drawn on so as to interfere with the domestic supply, subject to the water committee, for the term of seven years at a nominal rental of $1.00 per annum.

Mr. G. H. Franklin was given leave to address the council re school taxes on property in Cornwallis, and after hearing his statement it was resolved that the amount, $18.00, be remitted.

The question as to the providing of a watering-cart was introduced by Com. Porter and spoken to by other members of the council. After some discussion a special committee consisting of Com. Harris, Borden and Porter, was appointed to procure estimates of cost of same and report at a special meeting at an early day.

Funny Things Come to Pass.

Perhaps the idea of wearing wooden socks might seem ridiculous, but it is just what some people in Germany are doing, and very nice socks they are too. The wood is reduced to a long silky fibre and made into a yarn out of which the socks are knit making a warmer, more durable and just as soft protection as the woolen ones. In a similar way the pure spruce fibre is made into the interlining called Fibre Chamoi, which provides for clothing an absolute protection against raw air and cold winds, because it is a complete non-conductor of heat and cold, keeping in the natural heat and keeping out every breath of cold. This fabric has also been made waterproof so that the rain never penetrates it, and is so light in weight and inexpensive that a layer of it provides the same of comfort for all outdoor clothing.

The congregation of Charles street Methodist church, Halifax, on Friday evening gave a farewell meeting to their pastor, Rev. A. C. Borden, formerly of Wolfville, who is to leave for mission work in Japan. The meeting was a most inspiring one and expressive of the kindly feeling existing between pastor and people. The following resolution was read and unanimously passed:

Moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Dr. Dobbins. "It is with sincere regret that we part with our beloved pastor, who by his untiring energy and faithfulness has been the chief means of bringing the circuit to its present state of efficiency in both spiritual and financial matters."

The Secretary of the Exhibition Association of St. John has already received a very considerable number of entries from Manufacturers, Farmers, Stockmen and others, and feels quite certain that the demands for space will be much greater than last year. Among those who have already made their entries are a number of persons who refused to exhibit in 1895. To insure space for Manufacturers the allotment in the Industrial Buildings will not be made until a reasonable time has been afforded for the receipt of Manufacturers' entries. The rule will be applied of "first come, first served."

Of Interest to Teachers.

A special six weeks course will be open at Wadsworth & Poyzant's Commercial College, beginning Monday, July 6th. This will afford teachers an unequalled opportunity to obtain a practical knowledge of Book-keeping, Short-hand and Typewriting.

Hantsport and although the day was rainy, they had a very good time. The ladies of the Episcopal church held a tea meeting and strawberry festival in the rink which was patronized by the excursionists. The Springhill band accompanied the party and favored us with some excellent music. They left Hantsport at 7 o'clock, giving three cheers for the town and its hospitality. The Baptist Mission Band held a very successful ice-cream and strawberry social on the lawn of Dr. DeWitt, on Wednesday afternoon.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 19, 1896.

Local and Provincial.

We are now able to have the morning papers from Halifax for breakfast.

Public schools closed for the summer vacation on Friday last. The Wolfville schools will have eight weeks recess.

The communion of the Lord's Supper will be dispensed at Chalmers' church, Lower Horton, next Sunday afternoon.

Mr R. E. Harris has had the east side of his store neatly lettered this week, indicating to the public in bold letters the lines of goods in which he deals.

The members of "Lily of the Valley" Division, Port Williams, are to hold a strawberry and ice cream social in their hall this evening. A good time will no doubt be had by all who attend.

The band were out for a sail on the Nymph on Wednesday evening. Their music sounded very nice on the water. We should like to hear them occasionally on land. The summer is passing.

The auxiliary of the Woman's F. M. Society in connection with the Wolfville and Lower Horton Presbyterian congregations held its annual meeting on Tuesday afternoon. The society contributes $25.00 as a second contribution during the year.

Mr W. S. Wallace, our genial tailor, is about to enlarge his business. He has secured the services of Mr H. Layton, of Truro, an experienced and skillful cutter, and will be able to guarantee satisfaction to his customers. Mr Wallace's enterprise is deserving of a liberal patronage.

The new time-table of the Dominion Atlantic railway, which went into effect on Friday last, will be found in another column. The radical changes in time of the different trains caused some confusion at first, but the public is gradually becoming accustomed to the new order of things.

Capt. Gilmore, who has one of the best gardens in town, and makes a point of easy gardening, furnished the editor with enough new beans for a dinner, on Dominion Day. They were well grown and were much appreciated. This week we have been favored with new beans, onions and carrots from the same garden. The captain is ahead so far as we have heard.

A strawberry and ice-cream social was held by the ladies of the Methodist church on Tuesday evening. It was intended that it be held on the grounds of the church, but owing to the rain it was held in the vestry. There was a good attendance and the refreshments provided, which were of the best, were done simple justice to. The net sum of $39.00 was realized, and a most pleasant time was had.

During the past week we had the pleasure of visiting "Fair View" orchards the property which has been recently bought by Mr J. E. Smith, from the late occupant, Mr X. Z. Chipman. This place which is one of the finest in the county, is now in a most prosperous condition. Mr Smith, though accustomed to city life, and now just embarking on an agricultural career, is an enthusiast in this line. The supervision of his farm evinces a most comprehensive grasp of the art of farming scientifically. He informs us that his purchase is such a property as he has been seeking after for the last six years.
